Written statement* submitted by the Pax Romana (International Catholic Movement for Intellectual and Cultural Affairs and International Movement of Catholic Students), a non-governmental organization in special consultative status

The Secretary-General has received the following written statement which is circulated in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31.

[30 August 2015]

^{*} This written statement is issued, unedited, in the language(s) received from the submitting non-governmental organization(s).

Nepal: freedom of religion or belief should be protected in the most recent draft bill of the constitution

Nepal is in the process of adopting a new constitution as the most recent draft is submitted to the second Constitution Assembly (CA). Pax Romana and its' 75 partner civil society and faith-based organizations in Nepal¹ would like to welcome the finalization and the adoption of Nepal's Constitution. However, we draw an urgent attention of this Council towards the continuing issue of religious freedom and belief remains one of the most contentious issues throughout the Constitution-making process. Section 26-3 of the proposed constitution bill criminalizes "any act to convert another person from one religion to another". This provision denies the fundamental human right freedom of conscience.

We urge this Council's attention to this section of the Constitution considering its possible adverse impact on the multicultural Nepalese society². We firmly believe that the right to freedom of religion or belief, as defined by international

Though the Interim Constitution (IC) 2007 has identified Nepal as Federal Democratic Republic, this and the structure of Federalism will only be institutionalized once the new constitution drafting is complete. Until then the IC 2007 is the key legal instrument. IC 2007 has declared the nation as a multi-ethnic, multi-lingual, multi-religious, multi-cultural This statement accepts the identity of more than one religion. Further the national census 2011 also reports the presence of various religious groups standards, is a wide-ranging right covering a large number of distinct yet interrelated issues. We draw the attention of this Council that the proposed New Constitution should be in harmony with the international standards and the international legal instruments as Nepal is party to 20 international human rights conventions³, and ask pertinent questions to the Government of Nepal about compliance of those international legal instruments in Nepal.

We remind this Council that there are no legal registration procedures for minority religious groups in Nepal thus restricting them from legally owning land and properties of other forms including burial sites. Religious minority groups such as Christian have to register their Churches as NGOs. While in other hand majority, religions such as Hindu can register their temple as religious trusts (Guthi). Having no legal registration also prevents minority religious community to get funding and other form of supports from the state. Furthermore, members of non-Hindu religious groups lack representation in top political and government positions. Mostly priorities in government appointments is given to Hindus. And we have also received the reports that people of religious minorities such as Buddhist monks or Muslims are harassed by the police and bureaucrats due their appearance, language, dress, etc. In addition, Civil Servants (Nepal Army and Police) are not allowed to observe the religion of their choices, but forced to participate in Hindu religious ceremonies/functions thus compelling them to voluntarily resign and many times opting for not getting employed in them. Disregarding of the Constitutional declaration of Nepal as a secular state, discriminatory laws against minority religions are still enforced.⁴

There are some recent incidents where the authority has shown its ignorance or serious human right violation against minority religious groups:

- In March 2012, police detained two Buddhist/Hindu Tamang youths in Lalitpur for slaughtering a cow and locals vandalized their home. In fact, Tamangs eat Cow by their ethnic culture.
- In June 2014, Pastor Mahesh Thanju along with 39 members of his Church was arrested and taken into custody for 3 days in Sundarijal for baptizing 24 adults who voluntarily wished to become Christian
- On February 26, 2014: Mrs. Dil Shova, a Christian social worker running an orphanage and an oldage home, was accused of sexually exploiting the people under her care and converting the orphans to Christianity.⁵
- In August 2015, a group of religious minorities organized a peaceful rally in Butuwal town of southwest Nepal, with banners, demanding secular state. The photograph of two women holding a banner in the front row were edited by Photoshop and were accused as if they are demanding for prostitution business in the name of Church by Hindu Yuwa Sangh. Photo was published on Facebook. However, no action was taken even after filing complain.
- At night on 25 August 2015, a Christian group of Thrau; one of the oldest tribal groups in Terai region of Nepal, together with their Pastor Chaudhary were badly beaten by the security forces. Local Churches in Kailali remained under terror created by the government at the moment.

mainly Christians 1.42%, Islam 4.39%, Kirat 3.05%, Buddhist 9.04% and Hindu 81.34%. As a large portion of the population is Hindu the other religions represent the minority. These minority religions stand at a critical crossroad concerning the freedom to express and to propagate ones religion or faith.

³ Nepal is the co-signatory of International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), the Article 18 of which clearly states "ones freedom to practice ones religion". The article 18.4 of the ICCPR gives parents and legal guardians the liberty to ensure religious and moral education to their children in conformity with their own faith. However, the managers of orphanages and children homes run by Christians and other minority religious groups are often accused of proselytizing the children for teaching them to pray and participate in religious functions. Nepal thus commits in theory to promote religious freedom in the country, yet the protection of this very fundamental right is not guaranteed equally to all citizens of Nepal. And the contentious issue of Freedom of Religion or Belief was not deliberately reported from the Government of Nepal during the first Universal Periodic Review (2011), although many treaty bodies had given intentional recommendations on the issue.

A/HRC/30/NGO/51

We would like to remind this council, there are evidences to suggest that heavy restrictions imposed upon freedom of religion and expression encourages serious instability in society by encouraging radical elements of dominant religious groups to marginalize and persecute members of religious minorities.

We further ask the UN Human Right Council to call upon the government of Nepal:

- To ensure Nepal as a secular country where the state maintains equal treatment to religious groups,
- To make sure the amendment of clause 26 of our new constitutions allows everyone to have:
- a. Freedom to choose any religion or belief of his/her choice,
- b. Freedom to voluntarily convert from one faith to another,
- c. Freedom to manifest one's faith (worship, observe, practice and teach) individually or collectively, both in public or private,
- To provide legal procedures to have minority religious community to profess, practice and to possess own properties,
- To acknowledge the religious institutions that are in the country practices,
- To invite Special Rapporteur of Freedom of Religion or Belief to monitor the situation
