COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS
Fifty-first session
Item 20 of the provisional agenda

RIGHTS OF PERSONS BELONGING TO NATIONAL OR ETHNIC, RELIGIOUS AND LINGUISTIC MINORITIES

Written statement submitted by Human Rights Watch, a non-governmental organization in consultative status (category II)

The Secretary-General has received the following written statement which is circulated in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1296 (XLIV).

[28 December 1994]

Minority rights in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

Statement of the problem

1. With international attention focused on the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) - particularly the regime of Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic - has increased repression of civil and political rights in its own country. Repression against Albanians in the province of Kosovo in southern Serbia and Muslims in the Sandzak region that straddles Serbia and Montenegro has been most severe.
2. Since the late 1980s, systematic human rights abuses have been taking place in the province of Kosovo, where Albanians comprise approximately 90 per cent of the population. The autonomy enjoyed by Kosovo during Tito's reign was revoked by the Serbian Government and the predominantly Albanian provincial Government was dissolved in 1989 and 1990. Kosovo was placed under Belgrade's direct rule in 1990, and the civil and political rights of Albanians have been systematically repressed since then. Serbian authorities justify their action by pointing out that Albanians in Kosovo refuse to recognize the Serbian government's authority in Kosovo.

3. Since the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina began in April 1992, Muslims in the Sandzak region of the FRY have been brutalized by the police, arrested and tried for political reasons and some have disappeared.

Relevant international law

4. Article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) provides that members of ethnic minorities shall have a right "to enjoy their own culture" and "use their own language". Police brutality and abuse in detention violate articles 6 and 7 of the ICCPR and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. Such abuses also contravene the United Nations Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, the United Nations Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, and the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners. Arbitrary arrests contradict article 9 of the ICCPR. Restrictions on freedom of expression and the press violate article 19 of the ICCPR and restrictions on freedom of association violate articles 21 and 22 of the ICCPR. Unwarranted raids on and searches of houses violate article 17 of the ICCPR, which states, "No one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his privacy, family, home ...". The denial of a fair trial and other due process guarantees violates articles 9 and 14 of the ICCPR.

Human Rights Watch/Helsinki's experience and findings

5. Human Rights Watch/Helsinki has been monitoring human rights abuses in the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (SFRY) since the early 1980s and within Serbia and Montenegro following the break-up of the former SFRY. We have had a constant presence in the FRY since 1991 and have collected scores of testimonies from victims of, and eyewitnesses to, human rights abuses in Kosovo, Sandzak, Vojvodina, Montenegro and Serbia proper. Indeed, Human Rights Watch/Helsinki has been the only international human rights group functioning within the FRY since mid-1993 following the expulsion of a human rights monitoring mission of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE), denial of requests by the Commission's Special Rapporteur on the former Yugoslavia to establish an office in or conduct a mission to the FRY, and denial of visas to Amnesty International to visit Kosovo. Since 1991, we have published reports and issued letters documenting and protesting police repression against peaceful demonstrators, restrictions on freedom of expression, association and the press, violations of due process during trials of alleged "war criminals", police brutality and discrimination against Albanians in Kosovo, political trials of Muslims in Sandzak, paramilitary violence against Hungarians, Croats and other non-Serbs in Vojvodina, and refoulement of Bosnian refugees.

6. Although paramilitary violence against non-Serbs in Vojvodina - primarily Hungarians and Croats - has decreased in recent months, systematic abuses of human rights continue without respite in Kosovo. Police raids on Albanian homes and marketplaces have been marked by brutality and excessive use of force. Albanians have been arbitrarily arrested, interrogated and subjected to torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment in detention. Their political trials are marked by violations of the rights of the accused, including denial of the right to counsel and denial of the right to a fair and open public hearing by a competent, independent tribunal without unreasonable delay. In recent weeks, Serbian authorities have arrested at least 150 Albanians who had been dismissed from the Serbian police force and have been accused of forming a paramilitary Albanian police force. Many of those arrested have been beaten and tortured. At least one victim died as a result of police beatings and another victim was sent to the intensive care unit of the Pristina hospital because of severe injuries sustained while in detention. In the first 10 months of 1994, thousands of Albanians were summoned for "informative talks" with the police and many were beaten during their interrogation, over a dozen Albanians were killed, and over 200 remain in custody for political reasons.

7. Police in Sandzak have used the same tactics as their counterparts in Kosovo: raids on homes, arrests, and beating as part of ostensible searches for illegal weapons. Serbian authorities have clamped down on the predominantly Muslim Party of Democratic Action (SDA), arresting dozens of its activists. Some of those arrested were taken to Bosnian Serb-held territory in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where they were tortured until they signed "confessions" stating they had planned an armed rebellion. For weeks, even though some had serious wounds from the beatings, the authorities refused to grant them access to either defence counsel or medical treatment. By October 1994, the defendants had been tried, found guilty and sentenced to prison terms ranging from one to six years. Since 1992, Muslim leaders in Serbia have been silenced while other Muslims have been displaced and thousands have fled the country. Through these repressive and coercive practices, the Yugoslav authorities have effectively crushed the Sandzak Muslims' participation and future voice in Yugoslav politics.

Recommendations

8. Human Rights Watch/Helsinki calls on the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to:

(a) Press Member States and international negotiators to encourage the FRY to improve its respect for the civil and political rights of non-Serbs within Serbia, particularly Albanians in Kosovo and Muslims in Sandzak;

(b) Press Member States and international negotiators to consider the Serbian Government's abusive human rights record within the FRY before United Nations sanctions against that State are further eased or lifted;

(c) Press Member States to encourage the Government of the FRY to allow international human rights observers to enter and travel without impediment throughout the country.
