PROGRAMME BUDGET FOR THE BIENNIUM 1996-1997

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses

Report of the Secretary-General

SUMMARY

The Charter of the United Nations vests in the General Assembly the authority to approve the United Nations budgets. The Assembly's biennial resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses makes provision for the Secretary-General, under certain conditions, to enter into commitments for activities of an urgent nature without reverting to the General Assembly for approval of the required resources.

The present report addresses the need to respond to the increased financial commitments of the Organization in relation to the activities in the area of preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and post-conflict peace-building. It also discusses the problems of the time-lag between decisions of the Security Council on peace-keeping operations and the granting of the commitment authority by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to the Secretary-General to enter into commitments prior to approval by the General Assembly of the peace-keeping budgets.

In the present report, the Secretary-General reviews and clarifies the use of the General Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses and recommends that the Secretary-General's own authority be increased to $7 million for activities related to peace and security so as to avoid situations whereby the Secretary-General is prevented from taking prompt action because of financial constraints. It is also recommended that the Secretary-General be granted authority to incur expenditures up to $3 million without the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee for the immediate requirements of the start-up phase of peace-keeping operations or for unforeseen extensions of mandates by the Security Council.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. In the light of the increase in demand for the Secretary-General's good offices and peacemaking capacity, as well as the expansion of peace-keeping operations, the level of commitment authority granted to the Secretary-General to incur expenditures, as authorized in the General Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, has increased on a number of occasions (see annex I). The resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses is intended to enable the Secretary-General to incur expenditures of an urgent nature, under certain conditions, without reverting to the Assembly on the matter. The most recent one, Assembly resolution 48/229, is reproduced in annex II.

2. In the present report, the Secretary-General reviews the application of the procedures related to that resolution and proposes modifications in an effort to avoid situations whereby the Secretary-General is prevented from taking prompt action because of financial constraints that the resolution was intended to avoid.

II. CURRENT PROCEDURES

3. The current procedures for meeting expenses to implement unforeseen activities are summarized below. Unforeseen activities may be classified in five categories: (a) upon certification by the Secretary-General that the activities, to be undertaken at his own initiative, relate to peace and security; (b) for implementation of decisions of the Security Council for activities related to peace and security other than peace-keeping; (c) for implementation of immediate requirements of the start-up activities for a peace-keeping operation established by the Security Council; (d) unforeseen activities not related to peace and security; and (e) unforeseen activities approved by the General Assembly. Table 1 illustrates the various uses of the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses. As indicated in that table, the Secretary-General's own authority (shaded areas), up to a total of $5 million per year, is currently utilized for (a), (b) and (c). Actual requirements in respect of activities relating to the maintenance of peace and security are reported to the General Assembly in the context of the annual performance reports on the biennial programme budgets.

A. Unforeseen activities upon certification that they relate to peace and security

4. The Secretary-General is authorized to enter into commitments, without the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, of up to $5 million per year for activities certified by him as relating to the maintenance of peace and security, in accordance with paragraph 1 (a) of the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses. Such activities, occurring on an ad hoc basis throughout the year, are primarily based on the Secretary-General's own initiatives. This commitment authority has been used principally for the appointment of special envoys for peacemaking activities, fact-finding and advisory missions (e.g. in 1994-1995 to Chad, Georgia, Guyana/Venezuela, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Mali, Sierra Leone and Yemen; political offices for El Salvador and Somalia). The Secretary-General informs the Security Council of the appointment of such envoys and missions.

B. Decisions by the Security Council regarding activities related to peace and security, other than peace-keeping

5. When the Security Council decides on activities related to peace and security, other than peace-keeping (e.g. International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Such Violations committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, Commission of Inquiry in Burundi), the Secretary-General seeks the concurrence of the Advisory Committee, under paragraph 3 of the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, to enter into commitments for start-up activities prior to the preparation and submission of a budget for approval by the General Assembly. The Advisory Committee, on a case-by-case basis, can concur in the Secretary-General's request to enter into commitments of up to $10 million per Council decision. If, however, the nature of the start-up requirements of such activities is so urgent that the Secretary-General does not have the time to make a presentation and await the concurrence of the Advisory Committee (as was necessary for the dispatch of an advance team for the Rwanda Tribunal), the Secretary-General's own commitment authority, under paragraph 1 (a) of the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, is exercised, provided the requirements can be met from the balance remaining of the $5 million per year.

C. Decisions by the Security Council for peace-keeping operations

6. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/233, the Secretary-General may, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, enter into commitments of $50 million for each decision of the Security Council for the start-up and expansion requirements of a peace-keeping operation, pending the preparation of a full budget for review and approval of the budget by the General Assembly. This concurrence of the Advisory Committee is sought on the basis of preliminary cost estimates submitted by the Secretary-General. Given the level of detail required by the Advisory Committee, the process requires several weeks to complete, particularly when information has to be obtained from an established mission that is to be expanded.

7. In some cases, owing to the urgency of establishing the peace-keeping operation, advance teams of military observers or other personnel have been dispatched before the preliminary cost estimates are prepared and submitted to the Advisory Committee for its concurrence in the Secretary-General's request to enter into commitments for the start-up phase of the operation (e.g. United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH), United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT)). In such instances, the Secretary-General's authority to enter into commitments, under paragraph 1 (a) of the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, without the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee must be invoked, subject to the ceiling of $5 million not having been reached.

8. When the Security Council takes a decision to continue, but not expand, a peace-keeping operation, as was the case for the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL), for which authority to incur expenditures was not previously provided by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General may seek the concurrence of the Advisory Committee, under paragraph 3 of the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, to enter into commitments of up to $10 million for each Council decision, prior to Assembly approval of a maintenance budget and subsequent appropriation.

D. Other activities not related to peace and security

9. In cases where unforeseen activities are not related to peace and security, the Secretary-General is authorized, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, in accordance with paragraph 1 of the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, to enter into commitments for expenditures for which provision has not been included in the approved programme budget and for which the Secretary-General cannot await the approval of the Assembly. The request for concurrence of the Advisory Committee sets out the justification for incurring such expenditures (which have included those related to decisions of the Economic and Social Council) and for not deferring them to the following year. These requests have been few in number (see annex III).

E. Decisions by the General Assembly on unforeseen activities

10. In those cases when a Main Committee of the General Assembly adopts a resolution to implement unforeseen activities, a statement to the programme budget implications of that decision is presented by the Secretary-General if those activities cannot be met through existing resources. Since the Assembly at the same session can take a decision on the funding of those additional activities, the question of financial authority through other means normally does not arise (e.g. United Nations International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH)).

III. ISSUES FOR CONSIDERATION

A. Enhanced peacemaking activities of the Secretary-General

11. In the Supplement to an Agenda for Peace on the occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations, 1/, the Secretary-General drew attention to practical problems in the area of preventive diplomacy and peacemaking, including those related to the establishment and financing of field missions for these purposes. There has been an increase over the years in the use of the Secretary-General's good offices, which involve the fielding of a more substantial group of mission staff than in the past, with greater local operating costs.

12. As noted in annex III, the commitments made with the Secretary-General's authority for activities related to peace and security have increased in the last few years. In 1994, the Secretary-General's own authority to incur expenditures for unforeseen activities related to peace and security amounted to $4.7 million by mid-November that year. In 1995, the ceiling of $5 million was reached in October. For the remainder of the year, it will be necessary for the Secretary-General to seek the concurrence of the Advisory Committee for commitment authority whenever additional unforeseen expenditures become necessary, no matter how immediate the activity may be.

B. Immediate requirements of the start-up phase of peace-keeping operations prior to concurrence by the Advisory Committee

13. Another issue that requires urgent action by the General Assembly is that of the immediate requirements of the start-up phase of new or expanded peace-keeping operations, when there is an immediate need to incur expenditures for emplacement of an advance team of observers or other personnel prior to the preparation of cost estimates for the Advisory Committee to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments. Following the decision of the Security Council, it takes a few weeks to prepare the preliminary cost estimates on the basis of which to seek the concurrence of the Advisory Committee. While the Assembly, in its resolution 49/233, addressed the question of increased scope and level of peace-keeping operations and authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for costs of start-up and expansion activities up to $50 million, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, the issue of immediate start-up activities that cannot await the concurrence of the Advisory Committee was not addressed. A way must be found to allow the Secretary-General to take urgent and prompt action while awaiting the appropriate financing authority.

14. The case of UNMOT serves to illustrate the question of the immediate requirements of the start-up phase. The Security Council, on 16 December 1994, decided to establish a United Nations peace-keeping mission of observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT). Prior to the preparation of the cost estimates for obtaining the concurrence of the Advisory Committee to enter into commitments for the start-up costs, the Secretary-General needed authority to incur expenditures amounting to approximately $3 million for the immediate requirements of the start-up phase. However, the Secretary-General's own authority, under paragraph 1 (a) of the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, could not be invoked for the remainder of 1994, since the amount of $4.7 million had already been committed by November.

15. Therefore, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/233, the Secretary-General prepared preliminary cost estimates for the Mission and submitted them to the Advisory Committee on 17 January 1995, requesting the concurrence of the Advisory Committee to enter into commitments for expenditures for the period from 16 December 1994 to 6 March 1995. The Advisory Committee decided on 3 February 1995 that, since considerable expenditures had already been incurred during the period from 16 December 1994 to 2 February 1995 ($1.8 million) through the emplacement of military observers, prior to its review of the cost estimates, those expenditures should be met from within the existing authority of the Secretary-General under paragraph 1 (a) of General Assembly resolution 48/229 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1995.

16. That decision created a dilemma since expenditures that were incurred by the Secretary-General's own authority under paragraph 1 (a) of the General Assembly resolutions on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses had, by February 1995, already amounted to $2.6 million. The need to resort to the Secretary-General's own commitment authority for activities related to a peace-keeping operation, namely $1.8 million for UNMOT, left the Secretary-General with just $600,000 short of the ceiling of $5 million authorized for the entire year. It was clear that, by applying the Secretary-General's own authority under paragraph 1 (a) of Assembly resolution 48/229 to immediate requirements of the start-up phase of a peace-keeping operation, the Secretary-General was left with reduced authority to meet unforeseen expenditures for good offices, preventive diplomacy and peacemaking, until those amounts were restored following approval by the General Assembly of the related peace-keeping budgets.

17. In the light of the above, the current procedures need to be revised so as to avoid situations whereby the Secretary-General is prevented from taking prompt action because of delays and/or financial constraints that the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses was intended to avoid. The Secretary-General must be able to respond, often with advance notice of only days or hours, to rapidly evolving situations and potential crises with minimum delay. The Secretary-General's authority to enter into commitments that he certifies relate to the maintenance of peace and security provides him with an essential measure of financial flexibility. It is noted that the Chairman of the Advisory Committee, during the review by the General Assembly at its resumed forty-ninth session of the UNMIH budget, recognized the difficulties related to delayed action resulting from the need to prepare preliminary cost estimates for seeking the concurrence of the Advisory Committee and indicated that a formal proposal should be submitted for the consideration of the Advisory Committee. 2/

IV. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

18. As explained above the nature of the responsibilities and work of the Organization are such that expenditures, for which provision has not been made in the approved budget also arise when neither the General Assembly nor the Advisory Committee is in session. By adopting a resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, the General Assembly recognizes the urgency with which the Secretary-General is called upon to act and provides the Secretary-General with the financing authority to assume additional responsibilities that arise during the course of a year, the expenditures for which cannot wait for Assembly approval.

19. With the increased use of the Secretary-General's good offices and the expansion of activities in the area of preventive diplomacy and peacemaking, including, more recently, the establishment of political offices after completion of the peace-keeping operations, the Secretary-General's authority to incur expenditures for the maintenance of peace and security up to an amount of $5 million per year, without the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee is proving to be inadequate. As mentioned above, the ceiling of $5 million for 1995 was reached in October. With regard to the immediate requirements of the start-up phase of peace-keeping operations, the urgency and speed with which the Secretary-General is required to act on decisions of the Security Council, without awaiting the concurrence of the Advisory Committee, make it necessary to increase the commitment authority of the Secretary-General.

20. In order to avoid situations whereby the Secretary-General is prevented from taking prompt action for peace and security owing to financial constraints, it is therefore proposed to increase the ceiling for unforeseen expenses related to the Secretary-General's peacemaking activities and also to establish a separate facility for unforeseen expenses related to the immediate requirements of the start-up phase of peace-keeping operations.

21. In the light of the above, the Secretary-General recommends that the General Assembly decide that the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses should in future reflect the following:

(a) The commitments in any one year of the biennium that the Secretary-General certifies relate to the maintenance of peace and security, under paragraph 1 (a) of the resolution, will be increased to $7 million;

(b) The Secretary-General will be authorized, without the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, to enter into commitments not exceeding $3 million in any one year for the immediate requirements of the start-up phase of peace-keeping operations in order to implement decisions of the Security Council.

22. The actual requirements in respect of activities of the Secretary-General relating to peace and security under the commitment authority up to $7 million in any one year would be reported to the Advisory Committee in the context of the annual budget performance report. The amounts to be authorized up to the ceiling of $3 million for the immediate requirements of the start-up phase of peace-keeping operations would revert to the relevant peace-keeping budgets when the commitment authority is granted by the Advisory Committee or when approval is given by the General Assembly.

23. It is the intention of the Secretary-General to provide the Advisory Committee post facto with a quarterly report on the use of the Secretary-General's own commitment authority, in addition to the annual reporting on the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses to the General Assembly.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

1. The Charter of the United Nations vests in the General Assembly the authority to approve the United Nations budgets. The nature of the responsibilities and work of the Organization is such that expenditures for which provision has not been included in the approved budget also arise when the General Assembly is not in session. To be consistent with the Assembly's responsibility for financial matters, procedures were established for the proper authorization of such unforeseen and extraordinary expenses; this took the form of an annual, and later biennial, resolution adopted by the Assembly on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses. The latest one, General Assembly resolution 48/229, is reproduced in annex II.

2. Effective 1947, General Assembly resolution 68 (1) of 14 December 1946 authorized the Secretary-General, without the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, to enter into commitments of up to $2 million for certain specified categories of commitments, principally those that the Secretary-General certified as relating to the maintenance of peace and security. At that time, $2 million was equivalent to 7.1 per cent of one year's regular budget expenditures. Other categories for which the Secretary-General was authorized to enter into commitments have included commitments that the President of the International Court of Justice certified as relating to certain expenses arising from the activities of the Court. In addition, the General Assembly resolution authorized the Secretary-General, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, to enter into commitments to meet other unforeseen and extraordinary expenses.

3. In the absence of any other procedure, to meet the substantial expenses ($40 million) of the United Nations Operation in the Congo (ONUC), in response to Security Council resolution 143 (1960) of 14 July 1960, the Secretary-General obtained the concurrence of the Advisory Committee to enter into commitments pending financial action by the General Assembly at its fifteenth regular session (1960). This procedure prompted the Assembly at that session to request, in its resolution 1585 (XV), the Advisory Committee for a review of the terms of the annual resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses.

4. On the basis of recommendations by the Advisory Committee in its report (A/4715), the General Assembly, at its resumed fifteenth session in 1961, decided upon a phased and controlled delegation of authority. The Assembly authorized the Secretary-General (a) to meet, without the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, the very first requirements within the $2 million authority (which had by then fallen to the equivalent of 2.1 per cent of one year's regular budget expenditure) and (b) to request, as a result of decisions of the Security Council, the concurrence of the Advisory Committee in commitments up to a total of $10 million without referring the matter to the Assembly at its next or special session. The General Assembly also decided that, if, as a result of a Council decision, commitments relating to the maintenance of peace and security should arise in an estimated total exceeding

$10 million, a special session of the Assembly should be convened by the Secretary-General to consider that matter.

5. In 1989, the Secretary-General recommended an increase in the levels of commitment authority granted to the Secretary-General and to the Advisory Committee, in the light of the expanding role of the Organization in peacemaking and peace-keeping. On the recommendation of the Advisory Committee, the General Assembly increased the commitment authority of the Secretary-General to $3 million (equivalent at that time to 0.3 per cent of one year's regular budget expenditure). At the same time, the General Assembly also decided to grant authority to the Advisory Committee to concur in the Secretary-General's request to incur expenditures up to an amount of $10 million for each decision of the Security Council. Beyond that, the matter would revert to the General Assembly for approval.

6. In 1993, in response to the proposal of the Secretary-General in his report on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the biennium 1994-1995 (A/C.5/48/52) to increase the limit for commitments in any one year of the biennium that he certifies relate to the maintenance of peace and security, the General Assembly decided to increase the Secretary-General's authority to $5 million, equivalent to 0.4 per cent of the regular budget for one year. Commitments entered into under provisions of resolutions on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses from 1988 to 1995 appear in annex III.

7. As regards the start-up costs of peace-keeping operations, the procedure to obtain up to $10 million for each peace-keeping operation, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, worked adequately when there were few operations with limited initial start-up requirements. With the growth in scope and complexity of peace-keeping operations (10 operations in 1990 and 18 in 1994 and 1995), the level of expenditures required for start-up costs or expanded activities in recent years had increased to such an extent that an increase in the commitment authority, without having to convene a special session of the General Assembly, became necessary. Accordingly, on the basis of a proposal by the Secretary-General, the Assembly decided in its resolution 49/233 that, if a decision of the Security Council relating to the start-up phase or expansion phase of peace-keeping operations resulted in the need for expenditure, the Secretary-General would be authorized, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, to enter into commitments not to exceed $50 million per decision of the Security Council; the cumulative total of outstanding commitment authority, in respect of the start-up or expansion phase of peace-keeping operations, should not at any one time, exceed $150 million.
