Annex I

Summary of the panel discussion on children and armed conflict

Participants. The participants in the panel were Olara Otunnu, Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict (Chairperson); Jean-Marie Guéhenno, Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations; Gencer Oswaldo Cerón Santamaría, youth representative of the Colombian Children's Movement for Peace; María Marta Valladares, founding member of the Farabundo Martí National Liberation Front (El Salvador) and Deputy to the Central American Parliament; and Roger Laloupo, Director of Legal Affairs, Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS).

The panellists' interventions as well as those of the audience addressed a broad range of issues concerning the protection of children's rights in conflict situations, peace processes and post-conflict scenarios. The following key points were raised:

Child soldiers. The recruitment or use of children by armed forces or groups should be considered a war crime and a crime against humanity, and abduction should be considered a gross violation of humanitarian law. A call was made to release all child combatants and to hand them over to child protection agencies for their disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. Rehabilitation of child soldiers was identified as a key long-term task in that regard.

Inclusion of children's rights in peace negotiations, peace accords and peacekeeping operations. The rights and specific protection needs of children should be addressed in peace agreements and peace accords, as well as in peacekeeping mandates. The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations proposed the creation of an informal inter-agency working group to evaluate lessons learned on child protection and child rights in peacekeeping operations — including their mandates and staffing tables — and to discuss how the efforts of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations in those areas could be supported in the future, particularly at the peace negotiation stage. A former armed group leader and peacemaker from El Salvador noted that children's rights had not been explicitly addressed throughout El Salvador's peace process or in the accords. As a result, respect for children's rights remained a challenge in the post-conflict period.

Regional organizations. The meeting heard from the representative of ECOWAS about concrete measures to integrate issues of children's rights into the conflict prevention and resolution activities of ECOWAS; its work should be further supported and imitated.

Participation and involvement of youth and local communities. The youth representative in particular stressed that young people should be involved in decision-making processes, in efforts towards reconciliation and coexistence, and in peace negotiations. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General stressed that there was a need to work together with local communities to strengthen the protection of children in conflict situations.

Education. Education needs to be mainstreamed into emergency response programmes and should be recognized as a measure to prevent the recruitment of child soldiers. Quality primary education should be made compulsory and available free to all, as stated in the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Displaced children. It was recognized that displaced children are most exposed to the risks of abuse and that special attention should be paid to their specific needs. The importance of tracing and reuniting unaccompanied children with their families was also stressed.

The girl child. The particular situation of girls, who are specifically affected by armed conflicts and more exposed and vulnerable to violations of their rights, was underlined. Rape, sexual exploitation and gender-based violence during times of conflict should be addressed as well as the rehabilitation of girl soldiers and sex slaves.

Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict. Eighty States have to date signed the Protocol, yet only five have ratified it; at this rate, the goal of the 10 ratifications necessary to bring the Protocol into force in time for the special session of the General Assembly on children will not be met. States were urged to ratify the Protocol and to set 18 as the minimum age for voluntary recruitment.

Numerous governmental delegations pledged political and financial support for actions on behalf of war-affected children and for increased attention to the plight of children being targeted in conflict situations. Non-governmental organizations and youth representatives referred to the importance of including strong provisions for the protection of children in conflict situations in the outcome document of the special session.

Summary of the panel discussion on the commercial sexual exploitation of children

The Chief of the Child Protection Section of UNICEF, Karin Landgren, moderated the panel. Introducing the panellists she noted that, despite international legal consensus on the illegality of commercial sexual exploitation of children, the problem was serious and growing.

Vitit Muntarbhorn highlighted the gap between the existing legal instruments and their implementation, which is weak. He said that while it is essential to criminalize the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child victims should not be penalized, and should be provided with child-friendly facilities.

Nandi Msezane called for the full involvement of young people in combating the commercial sexual exploitation of children; she referred to projects involving networks of young people and the Declaration of a conference held at Manila in May 2000 in this connection.

Cherry Kingsley described different types of vulnerability in children. She emphasized the importance of the participation of children in the efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children as it also provided a healing process for them.

Claire Brisset described the situation in France and regretted that Europe did not speak with one voice on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. She emphasized the need to address the non-commercial aspects of sexual exploitation, primarily within families.

Makiko Arima, personal representative of the Prime Minister of Japan, outlined the arrangements for the Second World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, to be held at Yokohama, in December 2001, and the preparatory steps including the participation of children and young people. She invited the delegations to Yokohama.

Ambassador Akasaka of Japan took the floor to reaffirm the invitation to Yokohama. The representative of Cameroon referred to poverty and the breakdown of parental authority as main reasons for the commercial sexual exploitation of children and emphasized the importance of training young people on the issue. The representative of Sweden stressed the need for cross-border cooperation to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and introduced the Swedish project in the framework of Baltic States, as well as a project on trafficking in cooperation with Thailand and the Philippines. The youth representative from Norway spoke about sex tourism and asked that the same values be applied to children in developing countries as to children in developed countries. A representative from Morocco introduced the Casablanca regional meeting on the commercial sexual exploitation of children to be held after the special session.

Ms. Landgren thanked the panellists and the delegations for their contributions and commitment to this issue. Many speakers on the list were unable to take the floor for lack of time.
