PART I

The American Society of Criminology (ASC) has about 4,000 members, including about 500 international members from 40 countries. Roughly 70% of members are university professors, 10% are employees of public and private research agencies, and 20% are students. Main ASC objectives are to strengthen the role of research findings in the formulation of crime and justice policy; to encourage cooperation among those engaged in criminology and criminological research on a national and international basis; to accumulate, integrate and systematize scientific knowledge; and to publish and distribute reports on criminology and criminal justice. The ASC holds a meeting in North America every November during which approximately 2,500 persons from some 30 countries participate in approximately 600 panels and plenary sessions on a wide range of crime related topics. The ASC publishes two journals (Criminology and Criminology & Public Policy) and a newsletter. The ASC has five specialized divisions, including the Division of International Criminology (DIC) which has taken a leading role in United Nations activities.

Section B. The ASC provided technical and financial assistance to the Secretariat of the Crime Commission in the production of the documentary “Making Standards Work: 50 Years of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice”, shown at the 11th Crime Congress. The ASC also collaborated with the UN Office on Drugs and Crime to archive the proceedings of 50 years of UN Congresses on the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders (Congresses 1 – X, 1955-2000) on CD-ROM. The ASC has donated copies of thirty years of ASC-sponsored professional journals to the library of the Crime Commission’s Secretariat in Vienna.

Section C. Members of the ASC are increasingly involved in the production of scholarly research in the areas of prime interest to the United Nations (trafficking in human beings, corruption, drug trafficking, terrorism, money laundering, rule of law). The annual meetings of the ASC have devoted a substantial number of sessions to these topics, thereby increasing the awareness of the importance of these issues, as well as sharing relevant expertise among American and non-American researchers and policymakers. Every ASC annual meeting since 2002 has had specific UN-focused panels, workshops, and informational sessions open to interested ASC members. An article was written for the ASC Newsletter The Criminologist (Vol.28, No.6, November/December 2003) to stimulate interest among ASC members in contributing their expertise to UN crime and justice-related concerns. The Newsletter of the Division of International Criminology routinely includes extensive discussion of UN-related crime and justice activities.

CONCLUDING STATEMENT

Numerous ASC members have been active in crime-related UN activities for a long time. Most notably, Professor Gerhard O.W. Mueller who served as chief of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch from 1974 to 1982, and who also was executive secretary to U.N. congresses for the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders in 1975 and 1980, remained an active ASC member until shortly before he passed away in April 2006. ASC members have been involved in other crime and justice-related NGOs, participated in meetings of International Scientific and Professional Advisory Council of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme (ISPAC) as observers or speakers, and contributed as independent experts in UN-related institutes [e.g. European Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations (HEUNI), United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI), and United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC)]. For many years the ASC has functioned as a rich source of expertise to ECOSOC and other UN bodies. The experience of the first four years (2002-2005) as a NGO with Special Consultative Status has further reinforced the ASC’s recognition of the importance of sharing knowledge and expertise to deal with matters of transnational and international crime and rule of law. In addition to the activities listed in this report, ASC members have provided expertise to officials and experts encountered in national and international meetings, and provided liaison to connect ASC experts with officials and agencies seeking research input. Through its meetings, publications, websites, and other venues, the ASC has helped to move international crime and rule of law to a higher place on the research agenda of many individual scholars as well as of public and private research institutes in both the US and abroad. The American Society of Criminology looks forward to continue its work as a NGO with special Consultative Status with ECOSOC.
