2. FAMILY HEALTH INTERNATIONAL

(Special consultative status granted in 2002)

PART I. Introduction

Family Health International (FHI) is dedicated to improving lives, knowledge, and understanding worldwide through a highly diversified program of research, education, and services in family health. Since 1971, we have worked with national governments and local communities throughout the developing world to meet the public health needs of some of the world's most vulnerable people, supporting lasting improvements in the health of individuals and their families. Through a broad range and depth of expertise, FHI has the ability to examine key issues from multiple research perspectives and deliver results that have global impact. Our staff – in nearly 40 offices serving 78 countries – and our network of partners in research and services give us the local understanding and capacities needed for high quality, comprehensive responses and sustained impact. It is this combination of resources that has enabled FHI to make meaningful contributions to the ambitious objectives of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), and the United Nations Millennium Development Goals.

There have been no significant changes in FHI's organizational vision and functions in terms of its orientation, its program, or the scope of its work during the current reporting period covered by this quadrennial report.

PART II. Contribution of FHI to the work of the United Nations

Participation in the work of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies

1. WHO “3 by 5” Global Partners Meeting, May 11-12, 2004, Geneva, Switzerland. FHI attended and supported the WHO “3 by 5” initiative.
2. International AIDS Conference, 2002, Barcelona, Spain. FHI supported the activities of the first “Youth Force,” raising youth awareness of the importance of involving young people in HIV/AIDS prevention and treatment.

Cooperation with United Nations bodies and/or specialized agencies in the field and/or at Headquarters

Space allowed for the quadrennial report does not allow for a full accounting of FHI cooperation with United Nations bodies and specialized agencies in the field. Suffice it to say that over the past four years, FHI has worked cooperatively with UN agencies, including WHO, UNAIDS, UNFPA and UNICEF, in more than 200 instances. The examples that follow provide a flavor of that cooperation.

- FHI works collaboratively in an on-going relationship with the WHO office in Geneva to help strengthen the global response to HIV/AIDS and other STIs by providing expert technical advice and support through the contributions to the development of revised WHO algorithms for STI treatment.
- FHI also works closely with WHO on a number of family planning and reproductive health initiatives. For example, since 2002, FHI has had staff seconded to WHO to facilitate the development of evidence-based family planning guidance in the WHO Department of Reproductive Health and Research (RHR). FHI assists WHO with the Continuous Identification of Research Evidence (CIRE) system which identifies, synthesizes, and evaluates new family planning scientific evidence as it becomes available.
- FHI has collaborated with a number of United Nations agencies during the reporting period on youth-focused efforts, including the development of a five-part toolkit for peer education. Initially produced for the Youth Peer Education network (Y-PEER), a project coordinated by UNFPA in Eastern Europe and Central Asia, the toolkit is now being distributed globally.
- Since February 2004 FHI/Senegal and WHO/Senegal have worked very closely on a special task force to revise and revitalize the Country Coordinating Mechanism (CCM) - 2003 – ongoing.
- In Indonesia, FHI worked with WHO and UNAIDS locally to assist in training of staff, logistics, and monitoring implementation of ART as part of “3 by 5” follow-up - 2004.

- In Russia, FHI worked with WHO to improve TB programming in Kaliningrad, including training health care workers and developing an new monitoring and surveillance system on TB and HIV – 2002.
- In China, FHI works with the WHO office in China to help strengthen the national response to HIV/AIDS, including participating as a core technical partner in WHO-sponsored technical sponsored technical consultative meeting for improving the quality of implementation of care and ARV treatment.
- On an on-going basis, since 2002, FHI, as a founding member, has continued to participate in the Implementing Best Practices (IBP) Initiative, established in 1999 by the World Health Organization's Reproductive Health and Research Unit (WHO/RHR). The primary goal of the IBP is to improve access to and quality of reproductive healthcare through a systematic approach focused on developing and supporting strategies that introduce, adapt, and apply evidence-based practices in reproductive health.

Initiatives undertaken by FHI in support of internationally agreed upon development goals, in particular, the Millennium Development Goals

FHI contributed to the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) in the following four geographical regions: Central America, South America, Africa, and Asia. Major actions have been undertaken with regard to Goal 6, Combating HIV/AIDS, Malaria, and Other Diseases, specifically with regard to Target 1, aimed at reducing the spread of HIV/AIDS by half. During the first half of 2006, FHI and its partners worldwide:

5. MEDICO INTERNATIONAL

(Special consultative status granted in 2002)

Introduction

i. Purpose and activities: Medico International is a medical relief, development and human rights organization whose general objective is the improvement of health conditions in Africa, Asia, Middle East and Latin America. Taking a preventive stand for the benefit of health, the organization considers health as a political affair which highly depends on nutrition, housing conditions, income, the social fabric, and culture. Inspired by the World Health Organization (WHO), Medico International works to strengthen the idea of public health care (PHC) particularly for displaced people, refugees, and victims of war. The organization also works to carry forward the understanding between nations by informing on the reasons for injustice, misery and underdevelopment.

The organization provides financial and technical support to health related projects of grass-root initiatives, local Non Governmental Organizations (NGO) and governmental departments in Africa, Asia and Latin America. The exchange of local and regional knowledge and the development of health related concepts and strategies are supported by intensive international networking, emphasizing a South-South approach. The organization is actively involved in advocacy, human rights and international public campaigns, such as the Nobel Peace prize winning “International Campaign to Ban Landmines”, co-founded by the organization in 1991. The organization is also active in education for development, present in the World Wide Web, distributing material and information, organizing national and international conferences, hosting workshops and seminars for politicians, development experts and the public in general.

ii. While there have been no significant changes of the organisation’s aims, purposes and its organisational structure during the reporting period, Medico International together with four other German NGOs (“Bread for the World”, “Misereor”, “German Agro Action” and “terre des hommes”) formed an alliance in order to co-ordinate their public relation activities in cases of major disasters such as the Tsunami. iii) Activities in Support of Global Principles

During the reporting period the organization has given special emphasis to programmes aiming on peace-building in war-torn societies. Thus, community-based reconciliation projects were supported in the KwaZulu-Natal area around Durban in South Africa. Although complex and time-consuming a noticeable reduction of hostilities between families of different ethnic groups could be achieved. The lessons learned in KwaZulu-Natal helped to set up similar programmes for victims of violence in Sierra Leone. Promoting a “South to South” networking, psychosocial experts trained in the organization’s projects in South Africa went to Freetown and organised workshops for child-soldiers, handicapped people and sexual abused girls and women. The activities performed in Sierra Leone accompanied the UN-initiated “Truth and Reconciliation Process” that has been held in Sierra Leone between 2002 -2004, and successfully contributed to the over all aim of peace-building. Strengthening the UN-efforts to conflict-resolution Medico international also supported peace-building activities in the areas of Ixil, Ixcán, San Martín, and Rabinal in Guatemala. Specific emphasis was given to raising public awareness to the fact that restoring peace requires integrated activities, time and therefore long-term commitment.

Medico International has been heavily engaged in defending humanitarian aid against its misuse in the context of political and military interests. On March 28 and 29, 2003 the organisation took charge of the Frankfurt symposium “Rethinking the Power of Aid”, that was highly covered by the media and attended by German and some European NGOs (Heinrich Böll Foundation/Germany , Physicians for Human Rights/Israel, Médecins sans Frontières/Germany, Caritas International/Germany, Friedrich Ebert Foundation/Germany, German Agency for Technical Cooperation/Germany, Health Action International/Amsterdam, WEED-World Economy, Ecology & Development/Germany, the European NGO-Network Voluntary Organisations in Cooperation for Emergency, VOICE “/Brussels). The organisation’s executive director promoted to perceiving aid in the context of human rights rather than in the context of private charity. In that sense the organisation took the World Human Rights Day in 2003 as an occasion to strengthen the public awareness of the UN - “International Covenant of the Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights”. In lectures, articles, and a preface to an internationally distributed booklet on Human Rights published by the Frankfurt Book Fair, the organisation supported the concept of realising and protecting Human Rights as an obligation of the global society.

Besides the responsibility of individual states, also the United Nations and its bodies should be in the position to properly respond to the needs and rights of refugees, victims of war and natural disasters. The importance of international institutions such as OCHA was highlighted when the world has been confronted with the devastating impact of the Tsunami in 2005.

Also in 2005 Medico International supported the international NGO-network “Peoples Health Movement” to publish the first civil-society based “Global Health Watch”, also strengthening the health related paragraphs of the “International Covenant of the Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights”. The organisation promoted the right to health care and, particular, to essential drugs as basic for the improvement of global health conditions.

At the end of the reporting period Medico International together with Medicines Sans Frontiers, Oxfam, Consumers International and others started to lobby the member-states of the World Health Organization (WHO) for the need for a new political framework that assures essential health research and development. As a result of these activities an “Intergovernmental Working Group” on Public Health and Innovation was established, that will contribute to fulfilling MDG Goal 6.

In November 2005 Medico International jointly with the United Nations in New York organised an art exhibition on landmines. The exhibition was shown in the UN-Building, the opening ceremony attended by the then Under-Secretary-General Jean-Marie Guehenno and the executive director of Medico International
