Nineteenth progress report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire

I. Introduction

1. By its resolution 1826 (2008), the Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) and the French Licorne force until 31 January 2009, and requested me to report on the situation in Côte d'Ivoire and provide benchmarks for a possible phased drawdown of the troop levels of UNOCI, taking into consideration the electoral process and the situation on the ground, in particular the security situation. The present report covers major developments since my report of 13 October 2008 (S/2008/645) and presents the findings of a technical assessment mission that visited Côte d'Ivoire from 10 to 14 December 2008.

II. Security situation

2. The overall security situation in the country has remained generally stable. The successful dismantling of the zone of confidence, which was completed in July 2008, has restored the freedom of movement of people, goods and services throughout the country and contributed to the overall improvement in the security situation. However, other factors, such as the continued existence of armed militias and violent youth groups, the incomplete cantonment of former combatants of the Forces nouvelles, the difficulties encountered by the Government to pay allowances to the cantoned Forces nouvelles former combatants, as well as the continued control by the Forces nouvelles zone commanders of local administration in the north, including revenue collection, still draw attention to the fragility of the security situation in the country.

3. Frequent demonstrations by military units demanding payment of allowances were reported in both areas controlled by the Forces nouvelles and areas controlled by the Government. Furthermore, on 24 November, alleged supporters of a former Forces nouvelles zone commander, Zakaria Koné, attacked the newly installed Forces nouvelles leadership in Séguéla. In another incident, on 6 October in Abidjan, unidentified armed elements attacked the residence of the Minister of Construction, Urbanization and Habitat, Marcel Amon Tanoh, and fled following an exchange of fire with the guards. Disruptions of the identification of the population and voter registration operations were also reported, including on 10 October, when youths from the Student Federation of Côte d'Ivoire ransacked three registration sites in Abidjan and confiscated the equipment.

4. Inter-community clashes over land issues between returning internally displaced persons and local communities were reported in Abidjan district, Bondoukou, Yocoboué and several villages in the Bas Sassandra region, and resulted in at least 19 persons killed, 43 injured and 400 displaced. Other security incidents that were reported included roadside robberies, killings, ambushes, burglaries and sexual violence, including rape. Efforts by law enforcement agencies to curb criminality continued to be hampered by logistical, financial and human resource constraints facing the national security institutions and the proliferation of arms in the country.

III. Status of implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement

5. The Ouagadougou Agreement, signed on 4 March 2007, sought to resolve the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire by removing the zone of confidence that had divided the country; re-establishing State administration throughout the country; dismantling the militias and disarming combatants and enrolling them in a civic service programme; merging the Forces nouvelles and the national defence and security forces; streamlining and accelerating the identification of the population in order to facilitate the registration of those eligible to vote; and organizing a free, fair, open and transparent presidential election. Two supplementary agreements were signed in November 2007: one designating SAGEM, a French private company, as the technical operator for the identification of the population and voter registration, and the other setting new timelines for implementing the remaining key tasks, namely unification of the armed forces; disarmament and reintegration of combatants; restoration of State authority; identification of the population; voter registration; and elections. A further supplementary agreement was signed on 22 December by President Gbagbo and Prime Minister Soro, facilitated by the President of Burkina Faso, Blaise Compaoré. The supplementary agreement clarifies the modalities and timeline for conducting, before the elections, the disarmament of the former combatants of the Forces nouvelles and the dismantling of the militias, for launching the process of reunification of Ivorian defence and security forces, and for completing, by 15 January 2009, the effective redeployment of State administration throughout the country, including the corps préfectoral (local authorities), the judiciary and the fiscal and customs administrations.

6. On 10 November, the Facilitator of the Ivorian peace process, President Compaoré of Burkina Faso, convened, in Ouagadougou, the fourth meeting of the Permanent Consultative Framework, which was established under the Ouagadougou Agreement to address any issues arising in the implementation of the Agreement. The Consultative Framework, which comprises President Gbagbo, Prime Minister Soro, the President of the Rassemblement des républicains party, Alassane Ouattara, and the President of the Parti démocratique de Côte d'Ivoire, Konan Bédié, determined that it was no longer feasible to hold presidential elections on 30 November 2008, owing to the accumulated logistical and technical delays. It requested the Independent Electoral Commission to establish, before 31 December 2008, a precise timeline for the identification of the population and voter registration, on the basis of which the parties would agree on a new date for the first round of the presidential elections.

A. Reunifying the country

7. The Ouagadougou Agreement and its supplementary agreements tasked the integrated command centre to police the former zone of confidence and secure the peace process, including the redeployment of State administration throughout the country. The Agreement also tasked the integrated command centre with the responsibility of unifying and restructuring the defence and security forces of Côte d'Ivoire, including by setting up mixed police units. While the mixed police units have been deployed by the integrated command centre into the area formerly covered by the zone of confidence, the unification of the national defence and security forces and the Forces nouvelles remained stalled until the signature of the fourth supplementary agreement on 22 December, mainly owing to continued disagreement on the ranks and numbers of the Forces nouvelles personnel to be integrated into the new national army. Under the fourth supplementary agreement, 4,000 Forces nouvelles personnel are expected to immediately, but temporarily, join the Ivorian police and gendarmerie to provide security during the electoral process, while 5,000 Forces nouvelles elements are expected to join the unified army within the next two years. UNOCI and the Licorne force continued to maintain a support capacity within the integrated command centre, comprised of military, police and civilian personnel, to provide logistical support and assist the centre in its planning and coordination activities.

8. As at 15 December, the strength of the integrated command centre was 518 military personnel drawn from Government forces and the Forces nouvelles, with 260 elements based in Yamoussoukro and 258 elements deployed in the former zone of confidence. Although the centre's communications capacity and mobility improved somewhat, its operations continued to be hampered by financial and logistical constraints. In a new development, in the framework of securing the identification and voter registration operations, over 220 Government forces were deployed to the north, while Forces nouvelles elements, deployed to the south, returned to their bases in the north on 3 December 2008.

B. Disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants and dismantling of militias

9. Progress in regrouping and demobilizing former combatants of the Forces nouvelles and in dismantling militias has been slow. During the reporting period, only 405 Forces nouvelles combatants were registered and demobilized in Bouaké, bringing the total number of registered ex-combatants to 11,769, of whom 7,704 have opted for reintegration. The fourth supplementary agreement provides for the disarmament of Forces nouvelles former combatants and pro-Government militias at least two months before the elections, with payment by the Government of a $1,000 demobilization package to those declared eligible by the integrated command centre.

10. The national institutions in charge of the reintegration and reinsertion of former combatants and militias continued to face financial and logistical constraints. The national Programme for reinsertion and community rehabilitation received only $10 million from the Government out of the $32.5 million expected for 2008 and no direct contributions from donors, which considerably hampered its activities, while the national civic service programme had to postpone its main reinsertion projects to 2009. As a result, the two programmes provided for the reinsertion of only 675 and 329 former combatants respectively. In order to assist the parties to overcome these shortcomings, UNOCI, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), launched 98 microprojects, which benefited 842 ex-combatants during the reporting period.

11. Meanwhile, a joint assessment between the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), UNOCI and UNDP, focusing on militias in Liberia, concluded that between 1,500 and 2,000 Liberian ex-combatants were still present at the border with Liberia and needed to be closely monitored.

C. Restoration of State administration throughout the country

12. While substantial progress was made in redeploying civil servants to the north, progress in restoring the operational capacity and full authority of redeployed officials was limited, owing to the reluctance of the Forces nouvelles zone commanders to hand over control of the local administration and to financial and technical constraints. Meanwhile, law enforcement, justice and corrections institutions are still not functional in the north, with only one magistrate designated so far for 10 districts. The fourth supplementary agreement foresees the total restoration of State administration throughout the country by 15 January 2009, including the judiciary and fiscal administration, with the support of UNOCI in terms of provision of security.

13. Dire prison conditions continued to pose a threat to public safety in spite of the rehabilitation of 18 correctional facilities within the country. In a series of three major prison breaks during the reporting period, more than 70 inmates escaped from prisons in Man, Séguéla and Bouaké. This trend underscores the urgency of redeploying the judiciary and correctional services to the north. Meanwhile, in the Government-controlled south, a mutiny at Abidjan's central prison on 13 December reportedly resulted in two deaths and six severely injured inmates.

D. Identification of the population, voter registration and electoral process

14. The identification and voter registration process launched on 15 September 2008 gradually expanded to Abidjan on 29 September, Bouaké on 18 November and 57 additional districts by mid-December 2008. On 14 December, the process was completed in Abidjan district, where 2,078,000 people were identified. Nationwide, approximately 2.8 million people were identified and about 3,000 sites had opened by late December. The process continued to be marred by significant logistical, financial and procedural obstacles. UNOCI contributed to addressing the logistical challenges by providing, at the request of the Independent Electoral Commission and the National Institute of Statistics, substantial logistical airlift capacity and transportation of identification agents and materials through a project called "operation transport".

15. The inventory of 351,888 civil registers identified so far, including those lost or destroyed during the crisis, was published on 15 December. The reconstitution of the registers is scheduled to conclude in February 2009, to allow those concerned to enrol on the voters list before the end of the voter registration operations.

IV. Deployment of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire

A. Military component

16. As at 15 December, UNOCI's military strength stood at 8,020 personnel, including 7,741 troops, 191 military observers and 88 staff officers, against an authorized strength of 8,115. The mission's military personnel included 103 women. Licorne, with a strength of 1,800 personnel, continued to maintain a quick-reaction capability to support UNOCI. The currently ongoing redeployment process of UNOCI troops at 24 camps is scheduled to be completed in February 2009. Two camps are under construction, in Divo and Issia, in addition to the one completed in Adzopé in December. However, the recently concluded technical assessment mission has recommended, as outlined below, a more concentrated battalion deployment posture. With the lifting of the green line, the force increased its mobility to better contribute to securing the implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement, including the electoral process. In addition to conducting joint and synchronized patrols with UNMIL along the border with Liberia, UNOCI held coordination and liaison meetings with authorities from Burkina Faso, Ghana and Guinea, with a view to strengthening border security arrangements in preparation for the elections.

B. Police component

17. As at 15 December, UNOCI's police strength stood at 1,137 personnel against an authorized ceiling of 1,200, including 387 officers and 750 personnel in six formed police units. Of these, 20 were female officers. The police component continued to assist Ivorian police forces operationally throughout the country and to provide strategic advice and overall security for the peace process. The 600 Forces nouvelles auxiliary personnel, trained by UNOCI in 2006, were further assisted in conducting investigations in the northern part of the country. In cooperation with all stakeholders, 30 capacity-building projects for Ivorian law enforcement agencies were initiated, including in the areas of forensics and crowd control.

V. Humanitarian situation

18. The humanitarian community in Côte d'Ivoire decided not to embark on a conventional consolidated appeal process for 2009, but rather to update the humanitarian strategy and identify gaps that require increased resources, in particular for the protection and reinsertion needs of internally displaced persons in the west and for the nutritional status of vulnerable populations in the north. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat reported that, while approximately 76,000 internally displaced persons had voluntarily returned to their villages in the west, as at December 2008 some 45,000 internally displaced persons were still living with host families and requiring assistance. Humanitarian actors and Ivorian authorities continued to work closely to encourage and support the sustainable return of some 120,000 internally displaced persons in the western part of Côte d'Ivoire, including by addressing the lack of social cohesion and resolving protracted land disputes. Meanwhile, in response to the impact of the food crisis in the north, the Central Emergency Response Fund allocated $1 million to the World Food Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund at the end of October, for therapeutic and nutritional care projects for children. Finally, in an effort to strengthen integration, joint United Nations sub-offices were opened in Guiglo and Korhogo, intended to facilitate the planning and coordination of the transition from emergency relief to early recovery and development.

VI. Human rights

19. Acute violations of human rights persisted and included attacks against civilians by armed individuals. Several such attacks occurred on the Duékoué-Bangolo and Guiglo-Tai axes in the west and in cities controlled by the Forces nouvelles. In many instances, the perpetrators ambushed public transport vehicles on the highway, raided private homes and raped women and girls, thereby violating the basic rights of citizens to life, physical integrity, safety, freedom of movement and property. Meanwhile, violations reported in areas controlled by the Forces nouvelles included racketeering, unlawful killings, arbitrary arrest, incommunicado detention, torture and ill-treatment, as well as infringement of the rights to property and to freedom of expression and opinion. Forces nouvelles elements also committed serious human rights violations against demobilized elements in Vavoua, Séguéla, Korhogo and Bouaké, amid clashes between rival factions.

20. Violence against women, including rape, forced marriage and human trafficking, occurred, in particular in the western part of the country and in the Vavoua region. The low rate of prosecution of perpetrators of various forms of violence against women remained a major challenge. The continued use of excessive force, torture and ill-treatment against civilians in the maintenance of law and order on the part of law enforcement officials also continued to be a cause of concern in the south.

21. In October, an attack by members of the Student Federation of Côte d'Ivoire against a university teacher in Abidjan was reported as were demonstrations that resulted in injured persons, destruction of property and the closure of schools in the Daloa prefecture for several days. While the new leadership of the Student Federation advocates a policy of non-violence, extremists from this and the Young Patriots movement continued to cause disturbances at universities and schools in different parts of the country. UNOCI received for the first time a visit from the leadership of the Student Federation on 14 November 2008, who confirmed the commitment of the Federation to support constructively the Ivorian peace process. UNOCI intends to maintain its dialogue with the Federation and other youth groups.

VII. Gender

22. In compliance with Security Council resolutions 1325 (2000) and 1820 (2008) on women and peace and security, UNOCI continued to mainstream gender into its policies and programmes and provided training on gender issues to military, police and civilian personnel. The mission also provided training and technical support to women's groups that advocate for the participation of women in elections and supported national institutions during the 16-day campaign on violence against women. It also cooperated with the Forces nouvelles women's association, which identified 569 female Forces nouvelles ex-combatants to benefit from reinsertion opportunities.

VIII. Child protection

23. In application of Security Council resolutions on children and armed conflict, including resolution 1612 (2005), UNOCI continued to mainstream child protection concerns across the mission. From January to December 2008, UNOCI conducted 204 training and sensitization sessions targeting a variety of partners within Côte d'Ivoire and benefiting 6,068 UNOCI personnel. In line with the provisions adopted by the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict concerning Côte d'Ivoire, UNOCI intensified its advocacy with the parties to the conflict to move forward on measures to address sexual violence against children in the country, including the adoption of a national action plan for children in armed conflict.

IX. HIV/AIDS

24. UNOCI continued to mainstream HIV/AIDS awareness within its activities. In the present reporting period, 4,071 mission personnel received sensitization training; 219 new peer educators were trained to conduct sensitization activities within their respective battalions; and 2,137 mission personnel received voluntary counselling and testing services. Within the framework of a joint UNOCI and United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) prevention project targeting commercial sex workers and Ivorian armed forces, a needs assessment of the health infrastructure in the Ministry of Defence was undertaken and training on sexually transmitted infections and gender-based violence was carried out. UNOCI also continued to collaborate with UNDP and UNFPA in implementing a joint project on HIV/AIDS in the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration.

X. Economic recovery

25. The economy of Côte d'Ivoire continued to recover, with real gross domestic product (GDP) projected to increase by 2.9 per cent in 2008, driven mainly by an increase in oil output and foreign investments. However, annual average inflation is projected to rise to 6 per cent by the end of 2008, reflecting sharp increases in international prices for food and energy. While high commodity prices in the first half of 2008 contributed to a current account balance surplus forecast of 4.7 per cent of GDP in 2008, the recent price decline is expected to cause a gross budget deficit of 1.7 per cent of GDP in 2009. The poverty rate has risen from 38.4 per cent in 2002 to 48.9 per cent in 2008. The economic forecast for 2008/2009 remains dependent on the political outlook and the probable negative impact of the global financial crisis. Further structural reforms, including in the areas of governance, taxation and revenue collection, are urgently required. Also, swift progress in the prospects for clearing payments arrears are needed to boost the hitherto limited economic recovery, including by triggering further donor support and reaping dividends from decreased debt-servicing obligations.

XI. Personnel conduct and discipline

26. UNOCI intensified its efforts to prevent misconduct and continued to follow up on cases of alleged misconduct. In order to raise awareness on measures to prevent sexual exploitation and abuse, UNOCI organized a workshop for local non-governmental organizations and the United Nations country team and conducted a fact-finding mission to the sectors that assisted in implementing risk-mitigating measures. Consultations with UNOCI staff continued with regard to my bulletin on the prohibition of discrimination, harassment, including sexual harassment, and abuse of authority (ST/SGB/2008/5).

XII. Media monitoring and public information

27. The mission's radio station, ONUCI-FM, continued to support the peace process, including through sensitization on the identification and voter registration operations. UNOCI continued its public outreach activities through town hall meetings, workshops and a caravan of artists which travelled to 15 locations countrywide to sensitize the people of Côte d'Ivoire on the protection of human rights, a culture of peace and social cohesion, among other themes. The mission also supported civil society and non-governmental organizations in their sensitization efforts against gender-based violence.

28. Access to State media continued to be a source of concern, in particular with regard to the national television broadcast station, Radio télévision ivoirienne, which continued to provide unbalanced coverage of activities of the presidential camp and of the opposition. Furthermore, despite repeated commitments, there was little progress, among the Ivorian media, to adhere to a code of conduct during the electoral process.

XIII. Safety and security of personnel

29. As indicated above, the overall security situation in the country is assessed as generally stable. However, various incidents and demonstrations, as described in paragraphs 2 to 4, underscored the volatility of the situation. Although the United Nations was not specifically targeted in these incidents, their violent nature sporadically affected the operations of United Nations personnel and programmes. Security measures for United Nations staff continue to be strictly enforced.

XIV. Financial implications

30. The General Assembly, by its resolution 62/254, appropriated the amount of $475.4 million for the maintenance of UNOCI for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009. Should the Security Council decide to extend the mandate of UNOCI beyond 31 January 2009, the cost of maintaining the mission until 30 June 2009 would be limited to the amounts approved by the General Assembly. As at 30 September 2008, unpaid assessed contributions to the special account for UNOCI amounted to $231 million. The total outstanding assessed contributions for all peacekeeping operations at that date amounted to $4,014.1 million. Reimbursement of troop and contingent-owned equipment costs has been made for the period up to 30 November 2008 and 30 June 2008 respectively.

XV. Technical assessment mission

31. At the request of my Special Representative, a technical assessment mission led by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Edmond Mulet, and comprising representatives from the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Department of Political Affairs, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Department of Safety and Security, visited Côte d'Ivoire from 10 to 14 December to review UNOCI's role in the peace process in the light of the Security Council's intention to review by 31 January 2009 the mandates and troop strengths of UNOCI and the French forces.

32. The assessment mission received detailed briefings from UNOCI, the United Nations country team and the French Licorne force and consulted a wide spectrum of national and international stakeholders, including President Gbagbo, Prime Minister Soro, the leaders of the opposition (Mr. Bédié and Mr. Ouattara), the chiefs of staff of the defence and security forces of Côte d'Ivoire and of the Forces nouvelles, the Chairman of the Independent Electoral Commission, the diplomatic community (including representatives of the African Union, the Economic Community of West African States and the European Union), civil society and the private sector. The assessment mission also consulted with the Facilitator of the Ivorian peace process, President Compaoré of Burkina Faso, in Ouagadougou on 13 December, and with senior French officials in Paris on 15 December.

A. Electoral process

33. All Ivorian parties reiterated to the assessment mission their commitment to hold elections as early as possible in 2009. They stressed the need to ensure that the necessary conditions for a credible and transparent electoral process were met before determining a new date for the presidential election. In that regard, all interlocutors pointed to the responsibility of the Government and the Independent Electoral Commission to expedite the deployment of identification and voter registration teams throughout the country before the end of December in order to complete the process before the end of February 2009. The Chairman of the Commission informed the assessment mission that the prospects for completing the voter registration process by the end of February 2009 would depend on the ability of the Government to immediately disburse $15 million, required to deploy the remaining 4,000 identification and voter registration teams throughout Côte d'Ivoire.

34. The assessment mission was informed that, at the end of the identification and voter registration process, the Independent Electoral Commission would produce a provisional list of voters, tentatively by the end of February 2009, following which the new election date would be set. Regarding the publication of the final list of voters, while the Commission intended to allow 30 to 45 days for reviewing appeals, Prime Minister Soro considered that it would be preferable to maintain the three-month timeline provided in the Ivorian Constitution for reviewing appeals between the publication of the provisional and the final list of voters, to enhance the transparency and credibility of the process. That extended timeline would also allow for the completion of the redeployment to the northern part of the country of the judiciary, which is expected to play a crucial role in reviewing the appeals, as provided for in the fourth supplementary agreement, as well as the establishment of a unified and integrated national police and gendarmerie deployed throughout the country. Once the Commission had produced the final list of voters, all stakeholders assessed that an incompressible period of two to three months should be added to the election timeline for the production and distribution of identification and voter cards.

35. Against this background, the assessment mission determined that, while all parties remained committed to holding elections before the end of the first half of 2009, additional delays in the Ivorian elections could not be excluded. In the light of the fourth supplementary agreement, which provides for the disarmament of former Forces nouvelles combatants and the dismantling of militias to be completed two months before elections, managing the electoral timetable appears to have become even more challenging.

36. UNOCI will impress upon the Independent Electoral Commission the importance of sharing, as soon as possible, and considering the provisions of the fourth supplementary agreement, a new, realistic electoral timeline with the Ivorian parties and the international community. The timeline should outline all stages of the process, including the completion of identification and voter registration operations, the publication of the provisional and final list of voters, the production and distribution of identification and voter cards throughout the country and the election date itself, as requested by the Security Council in its presidential statement of 7 November 2008 (S/PRST/2008/42). UNOCI stands ready to assist the Independent Electoral Commission in developing an integrated master plan for the conduct of the electoral process and to provide technical and logistical assistance to the Commission and the technical operators involved in the electoral process in order to avoid new delays in the electoral process.

37. UNOCI will monitor compliance by the parties with the code of good conduct for the elections signed, in my presence, on 23 April 2008, and encourage other stakeholders in the peace process, including the media and civil society groups, to develop similar mechanisms that would help to anchor a stable political environment during the electoral period. The mission will support civil society organizations in holding national consensus days in early 2009. Furthermore, in order to address the concerns expressed by many stakeholders related to security in the aftermath of the elections, the United Nations will continue to support initiatives that help to preserve the inclusiveness of the peace process.

38. Meanwhile, UNOCI's main focus will remain safeguarding the peace process and the result of the elections, through my Special Representative's certification mandate. The assessment mission confirmed in that regard that all stakeholders accepted and underlined the importance of my Special Representative's certification role in guaranteeing the credibility and transparency of the electoral process, including the voters list and the results of the elections. In this connection, UNOCI will pursue its efforts to sensitize all parties and sustain the consensus on the nature and implementation of the certification mandate.

39. Finally, the mission will mobilize the donor community to provide financial support for the efforts of the Government of Côte d'Ivoire to implement the remaining tasks leading to the holding of credible and transparent presidential and legislative elections in 2009, especially the completion of the identification and voter registration operations. UNOCI will keep advocating for the Government to disburse the funds needed by the Ivorian institutions involved in the electoral process in a timely manner, including for the crucial operation of reconstitution of lost or destroyed civil registers launched by the Ministry of Justice in May 2008 but delayed by funding shortages. UNOCI will also continue to assist the Ivorian parties to develop an integrated security plan for the elections, delineating the responsibilities of the defence and security forces of Côte d'Ivoire, the Forces nouvelles and the impartial forces.

B. Security-related issues

40. All national and international stakeholders shared the view that the parties should take advantage of the postponement of the elections to expedite the disarmament of former combatants and the dismantling of the militias in a credible and transparent manner, and launch the reunification and restructuring of the Ivorian defence and security forces, including through the reintegration of eligible elements of the Forces nouvelles. So far, 34,678 elements of the Forces nouvelles have been profiled, out of which only 11,769 have gone through the cantonment exercise. Efforts to dismantle militias in the west have been mainly symbolic, and both the Forces nouvelles and the militia remain operational.

41. The assessment mission emphasized that it was necessary to institute effective mechanisms to control the weapons surrendered by former combatants. Both the third and fourth supplementary agreements, as well as the terms of reference regarding the supervision by the impartial forces of the cantonment sites, storage of weapons and dismantling of the militias, agreed upon by the chiefs of general staff of the defence and security forces and of the Forces nouvelles and the UNOCI and Licorne force commanders, need to be swiftly implemented. In this regard, it should be recalled that the Forces nouvelles and the national defence and security forces are required to submit comprehensive lists of weapons to the integrated command centre. A more comprehensive framework governing the future of the security sector in Côte d'Ivoire, including guarantees for the accountability, transparency and oversight of security institutions, needs to be developed. Such a framework would generate the requisite confidence in the security architecture and security governance mechanisms by all stakeholders.

42. The signing of the fourth supplementary agreement should help to overcome some of the obstacles to the disarmament of former combatants, the dismantling of the militias and the reunification of the two former belligerent forces. However, the assessment mission confirmed that the operational capabilities of the Ivorian institutions responsible to plan and implement these processes, namely the integrated command centre, the national programme for reinsertion and community rehabilitation and the civic service programme, will also depend on enhanced support from the Government of Côte d'Ivoire and international partners to help them to overcome their structural and financial deficiencies. The ability of the Government of Côte d'Ivoire to raise the funds for the payment of demobilization packages provided for in the fourth supplementary agreement will also be key to the success of these processes, especially in the light of the reluctance of international partners to support cash payments which, in themselves, have often proven to be neither sufficient nor conducive to the sustainable reintegration of ex-combatants.

43. As regards the integration of former Forces nouvelles combatants into the security services, the assessment mission noted that 300 Forces nouvelles elements assigned in mid-November to the mixed police units to provide security for the identification and voter registration process in Abidjan returned to Bouaké on 3 December citing non-payment of their allowances by the integrated command centre. In addition, the 600 police auxiliaries trained by UNOCI have been neither integrated into the national security services nor equipped to assist in securing the north of the country. The signing of the fourth supplementary agreement, which provides for the immediate integration of these 600 police auxiliaries into the Ivorian police and gendarmerie, should help to expedite this process.

C. Recommendations regarding the role of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire in supporting the implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement

44. All stakeholders were of the view that current UNOCI capabilities should be retained in order to enable the mission to contribute to maintaining a secure environment for the full implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement, in particular the electoral process. The completion of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, the disarmament and dismantling of militias, the full restoration of State authority, the completion of identification and voter registration operations, the holding of a credible and transparent presidential election, the reunification and restructuring of the defence and security forces of Côte d'Ivoire and progress in the human rights situation, were identified as crucial for the return of normalcy in the country.

45. At the same time, the assessment mission and UNOCI agreed that it would be possible, without prejudice to the overall capability of the mission to provide security for the peace process, to adjust the troop level and posture of the UNOCI force. The proposed adjustments would take into account the following potential security threats: the continued existence of armed militias and violent youth; the absence of effective disarmament of former combatants; the uncompleted redeployment of State administration; the risk of localized clashes in the north and the west; the limited freedom of movement due to continuing checkpoints and roadblocks; and the fact that elections could be a catalyst for violence in Côte d'Ivoire, in particular if they are perceived as lacking transparency and credibility.

46. The assessment mission proposed that the UNOCI force could be reduced by one battalion during the next rotation, from 8,115 to 7,450 troop personnel, on the understanding that the force's mobility will be enhanced with adequate air capabilities, including additional utility helicopters, and taking into account the continued support of the French forces to UNOCI in terms of quick reaction capabilities. Under the proposed adjustment, the UNOCI force would be positioned in fewer but more concentrated positions, from which sufficient troop numbers could be rapidly deployed as airborne quick reaction detachments.

47. The assessment mission also determined that the prevailing threats, the challenges ahead and the uncertain pace of the electoral process rendered it difficult to consider a more substantial drawdown of UNOCI's force until progress was made in carefully benchmarked areas and in security conditions on the ground. In that connection, the assessment mission proposed the following key benchmarks as preconditions for a more substantial drawdown of the force: (a) completion of credible disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants and dismantling of militias; (b) successful completion of the elections; (c) commencement of security sector reform, in particular confidence-building measures within a broader framework for democratic governance and oversight of the security sector, reunification of the army and establishment of functional and republican Ivorian armed forces and security services; and (d) restoration of State authority throughout the country.

48. In the meantime, UNOCI will continue to focus on helping the Ivorian parties to surmount the challenges and minimize the risks identified above, including by: (a) supporting the Ivorian parties and the Facilitator in their efforts to keep the peace process on track; (b) contributing to a secure environment for the elections, including by advancing the agendas for the effective disarmament of former combatants and dismantling of militias, inter alia, by monitoring the cantonment of former combatants and the storage of the weapons collected; (c) providing technical and logistical support for the electoral process and monitoring the progress made in the various processes leading to credible and transparent elections; (d) contributing, through my Special Representative's certification role, to enhancing the credibility of the electoral process; and (e) supporting the economic recovery process pursued by the Government of Côte d'Ivoire.

49. In order to contribute to a secure environment for the elections, and considering the proposed adjustment in its size and posture, the military component of the mission will continuously review and adjust its concept of operations to the evolving situation on the ground. It will work closely with the Licorne force to assist the Ivorian parties in the provision of security for the elections, for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, for the disarmament and the dismantling of the militias, for the reform of the security sector, in particular the reunification of the defence and security forces of Côte d'Ivoire, and for the restoration of State authority.

50. The mission will help to enhance the riot control capabilities of the Ivorian police and gendarmerie. In this regard, the fourth supplementary agreement prescribes that 4,000 Forces nouvelles elements, including the 600 police auxiliaries trained by UNOCI in 2005, will immediately be involved in the security arrangements for the elections, together with elements from the national police and gendarmerie and under the supervision of the integrated command centre.

51. The mission will also assist the Ivorian parties in their efforts to devise plans for the reunification of the defence and security forces, including the police and gendarmerie, and provide, as stipulated in the fourth supplementary agreement to the Ouagadougou Agreement, the necessary mentoring and basic training to the Forces nouvelles elements eligible for reintegration in the defence and security forces.

52. In order to maintain a robust and deterrent posture during the elections, UNOCI will consult with UNMIL on inter-mission arrangements and explore, without prejudice to the implementation of UNMIL's mandate and ongoing drawdown, the possibility of flexibly deploying reinforcements for a limited period of time immediately before, during and after the elections, in the form of military and air capability support.

53. The mission will work closely with the Facilitator in order to ensure that the parties agree on effective arrangements for the control of the weapons placed in storage, in keeping with the supervisory role entrusted to UNOCI and the Licorne force under the Ouagadougou Agreement and its supplementary agreements, and to offer options to the parties that both suit the Ivorian context and meet international standards of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration processes. UNOCI will encourage the Ivorian parties to clarify the role of the national programme for reinsertion and community rehabilitation and the civic service programme in the new reintegration scheme. It will involve the donor community in designing this process. Furthermore, the mission will assist in formulating a plan for completing the dismantling of the remaining militia in the west and in Abidjan, and will support the development of an effective programme, including a funding strategy for the long-term reintegration of former combatants. Finally, UNOCI will work closely with the Facilitator and the Ivorian parties in exploring bilateral partnerships that can assist the Government of Côte d'Ivoire in reforming its security institutions.

54. UNOCI will support the authorities of Côte d'Ivoire in their efforts to complete other critical tasks, such as the redeployment of State administration and the restoration of State authority, including the judiciary, corrections and the rule of law, throughout the country. The mission will also continue to work with the United Nations country team, the World Bank and other international partners to promote social cohesion and community reconciliation and to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance and support for recovery, in particular in northern and western regions of the country. It will promote the peace process through its public information capacity. UNOCI and partners will carry on their activities to monitor the human rights situation in Côte d'Ivoire, focusing in particular on women and children, while also building the capacity of national institutions and civil society to promote and protect human rights.

D. Financial support to the implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement and supporting the economic recovery process

55. As indicated above, the assessment mission noted that most of the key processes under the Ouagadougou Agreement, including the electoral process, remained plagued by considerable funding gaps and that this jeopardized the progress already made. Despite considerable earnings from the cocoa and oil industries in the south, the Government is not yet able to collect revenue from the northern part of the country, which constitutes a substantial loss for the Government's budget. Furthermore, the Prime Minister informed the assessment mission that the Government's clearance of debt arrears to international financial institutions, amounting to $440 million in the past year, in addition to the $400 million earmarked for the national "programme de sortie de crise", had absorbed more than 20 per cent of its $4.4 billion total budget. The Prime Minister confirmed his Government's determination to mobilize international support to facilitate a relief of its $14.3 billion debt through the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. UNOCI will continue to assist the Government of Côte d'Ivoire to mobilize donors while addressing structural deficiencies of the Ivorian institutions in charge of the peace process. UNOCI will also assist in ensuring effective donor coordination. The United Nations will also continue to work closely with the Government of Burkina Faso to secure financial support for the facilitation of the peace process.

XVI. Observations

56. Nearly two years after the signing of the Ouagadougou Agreement, in March 2007, significant progress has been made in implementing the Agreement, but much remains to be done. The Ivorian parties remain committed to implementing the Agreement and the people of Côte d'Ivoire continue to enjoy relative peace and stability. The progress made in the identification of the population, which lies at the heart of the Ivorian crisis, is very encouraging. The parties are to be congratulated for the steady progress and the high turnout witnessed in Abidjan, where 2,078,000 people were registered in less than three months. I also welcome their sustained commitment to supporting the expansion of these key processes to the rest of the country. Going forward, it will be essential to maintain the prevailing calm and determination so far witnessed by the Ivorian people in completing identification of the population and voter registration.

57. I welcome the consensus reached by the Ivorian parties on modalities to resolve key outstanding military and security issues, as formalized by the fourth supplementary agreement to the Ouagadougou Agreement. As these issues had earlier impeded tangible progress in the disarmament of former combatants and dismantling of the militias, I encourage the signatories of the Ouagadougou Agreement to swiftly implement the provisions of this supplementary agreement, while ensuring at the same time that the modus operandi agreed upon by the parties is both suitable for the Ivorian context and consistent with established international standards for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants and militias. The timely implementation of the fourth supplementary agreement is critical in order to avoid any further delays to the presidential elections, which the Ivorian parties have now linked to the successful completion of the disarmament of the former combatants of the Forces nouvelles and the dismantling of the militias.

58. In order to safeguard the considerable gains achieved by the parties so far, it will be necessary to address expeditiously and transparently the accumulated technical and logistical delays that led to the postponement of the presidential elections previously scheduled for 30 November 2008. I urge the Independent Electoral Commission to make public, as soon as possible, a new and realistic electoral timeline that defines critical milestones. Once it has been endorsed by the parties and the Facilitator, this new timeline should be strictly adhered to, so as to ensure that no further extension of the electoral process is required. Meanwhile, my Special Representative, in implementing his certification mandate, will continue to support the electoral process in order to ensure that it remains both inclusive and transparent.

59. UNOCI, together with other United Nations entities and international partners, will continue to provide expertise and technical assistance to the Ivorian institutions responsible for implementing the critical remaining tasks under the Ouagadougou Agreement and will endeavour to mobilize financial support from the donor community to advance the disarmament of the former combatants, the dismantling of the militias, the reunification of the Ivorian defence and security forces and the redeployment of State administration and restoration of State authority. While the country currently enjoys increased stability, the delicate electoral process, including the post-electoral period, and the implementation of the remaining tasks of the peace agreement require that UNOCI maintain its core capabilities and a deterrent posture to respond to anticipated risks.

60. UNOCI will continue to monitor and investigate human rights violations, with a view to helping the efforts to end impunity, with particular focus on violence against women and children, as well as any incidents that have an impact on the security of the electoral process. I call on the Ivorian parties to develop the necessary confidence-building measures to prevent human rights violations, in particular electoral violence that could undermine the credibility of the results.

61. Considering the positive developments witnessed in Côte d'Ivoire, while also taking into account the remaining tasks under the Ouagadougou Agreement and the possible risks identified in paragraph 45 above, I recommend that the mandate of UNOCI be extended for a period of six months, until 31 July 2009. I also recommend that UNOCI's troop level be reduced by one battalion and that the force's posture and configuration be adjusted as elaborated in paragraphs 46 to 54 above. The proposed adjustments would enable UNOCI to provide support to the Ivorian parties for implementing the remaining tasks of the peace agreement, while also maintaining the capability to respond to possible security challenges. I further recommend that the Security Council approve the benchmarks for the further drawdown of the UNOCI force, as described in paragraph 47. These benchmarks were developed based on a careful analysis of the situation in the country and an assessment of the preconditions for the restoration of normalcy in Côte d'Ivoire. Should the Council approve the above proposals, I intend to provide regular updates on the status of reconfiguring the UNOCI force and on progress made by the Ivorian parties in accomplishing the benchmarks.

62. As described in paragraph 52 above, temporary reinforcement of UNOCI, through inter-mission cooperation with UNMIL, may be necessary during the period immediately before, during and after the elections, in the form of military and air capability support within the framework of Security Council resolution 1609 (2005).

63. In conclusion, I would like to thank my Special Representative for Côte d'Ivoire, Young-Jin Choi, and all UNOCI military, police and civilian personnel for their continued commitment to supporting the peace process. I am also grateful to the Facilitator of the Ivorian peace process, Blaise Compaoré, President of Burkina Faso, and his Special Representative in Abidjan, Boureima Badini, for their tireless facilitation efforts. Finally, I thank all troop- and police-contributing countries, the Economic Community of West African States, the African Union, the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, humanitarian organizations and multilateral and bilateral donors, as well as international and local non-governmental organizations, for their important contributions to the return of peace and stability to Côte d'Ivoire.
