Foreword

NO ONE who looks closely at the pattern of relations among nations can rationally question the necessity of international organization. Much of what each country needs can be obtained only in co-operation with others. What each country does within its borders may affect the lives not only of its neighbours but also of peoples on the other side of the globe. This reality, which expanding technology brings ever closer to home, obliges nations to turn to one another to discuss their problems.

There are countless institutions where people with common concerns exchange ideas, draw up plans, reach agreements. Many are successful because they benefit the special interests of limited groups of more-or-less like-minded nations or organizations brought together by regional, economic or social ties. To the extent that these institutions act without harming others, they may help not only their own members but also those outsiders whose activities they touch.

But there is an ever-growing part of human life where there can be no outsiders. The nuclear peril endangers all humanity. Economic links may be most extensive between countries of similar systems, but the earth's resources are distributed so unequally that no single grouping can be self-sufficient. There may be different ideas about the content of human rights, but some standards are applicable to all human beings. It may be more comfortable to associate with those having the same political values, but the realities of coexistence oblige us to understand and to co-operate with all nations, not only our immediate friends.

It is this requirement for universality which the United Nations was established to serve. Yet the very diversity of its membership gives it the most difficult role of all. The United Nations must strive to limit and reverse the arms race; it must seek to resolve political conflicts which neighbours cannot settle; it should deal with economic imbalances that extend beyond single regions; it must endeavour to establish universal standards of law and justice in a world where many individuals cannot be sure of justice even at the local level.

However intractable the problems, the efforts to resolve them will continue as long as humanity has hope. The United Nations remains an expression of that hope. This latest volume of the Yearbook of the United Nations offers a continuing record of those efforts.

Using this edition of the Yearbook

The Yearbook of the United Nations covers the main activities of the United Nations during a calendar year (Part One) and those of each related organization in the United Nations system (Part Two).

The 1981 edition, subject-oriented like previous editions, has been redesigned to help the user find information more readily. Part One (United Nations), containing 50 chapters, is divided into five major sections: political and security questions, economic and social questions, trusteeship and decolonization, legal questions, and administrative and budgetary questions.

Each chapter is divided into a hierarchy of topics, with each level having a heading of distinctive appearance, as shown in the following example from the chapter on international trade and finance:

International trade

---

Commodities

Individual commodities

Fibres

Hard fibres. (within-paragraph heading)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. A within-paragraph heading such as this identifies a body or other entity dealing with a topic.

Related topics are adjacent to one another. For example, "Hard fibres" is preceded by "Cotton" and followed by "Jute"; "Individual commodities" is preceded by "Common Fund for Commodities". The assignment of headings implies no editorial judgement about the relative importance of a topic.

Structure and scope of articles

Presented under each topical heading is a summary of pertinent United Nations activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities, and the views of States in written communications and debate. At the end of each article are a list of documents, linked by numerical indicators to references in the text, and the text of relevant resolutions and/or decisions by the principal United Nations organs. The Yearbook covers the following:

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and subsidiary bodies, including sub-commissions and sub-committees, are summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council, with information on their adoption, are reproduced under the relevant topic. Where an article refers to a text reproduced elsewhere in the book, the documentary notes give the resolution or decision number and page reference for the text.

Major reports. Most 1981 reports of the Secretary-General on which a United Nations body took action during the year, along with selected reports from other United Nations sources such as seminars and working groups, are summarised briefly under the relevant topic(s). The document symbols of all reports cited in an article appear in the documentary notes.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For all major activities financed outside the United Nations regular budget, information is given on contributions by individual countries and on expenditures. Financial data are obtained from the audited accounts prepared for each fund, and cover the 1981 calendar year unless otherwise specified.

Views of States. Each written communication sent to the United Nations by a Member State and circulated separately as a document of a principal organ has been summarized under the topic where it is most relevant.

All substantive statements by States in the principal organs have been analysed by Yearbook editors, and their main points can be found under the pertinent topics. For example, the views of States on an arms embargo against South Africa, expressed in the General Assembly's debate on apartheid, are summarised under the topic "Arms embargo". Covered in this volume are debates in the Security Council, plenary and Main Committee meetings of the General Assembly (except for the general debate in plenary meetings and the discussion of the United Nations programme budget for 1982-1983), and plenary meetings of the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council, as reported in the official verbatim or summary records. Debate summaries concentrate on the main trends of a discussion; users wishing details on the position of individual States should refer to the official meeting records, identified by symbol in the documentary notes.

Related intergovernmental organizations. Part Two of the Yearbook describes the 1981 activities of each specialized agency and the International Atomic Energy Agency, based on information prepared by them for the Yearbook. Included are data on budgets, contributions by member States and principal officials.

Documentary notes

Documents on each topic are cited by symbol at the end of the article. A numerical indicator links information in the article with the documentary reference. The list of documents is arranged in three groups: (1) reports, resolutions and decisions, proposals that were not adopted and other documents which are sources for information in the article; (2) references to previous editions of the Yearbook; and (3) meeting records, and documents not mentioned in the article, such as publications and statements of administrative and financial implications. The items in the last group do not have numerical indicators.

Meeting records are cited by symbol together with the range(s) of dates between which the meetings occurred. Italicized numbers refer to meetings at which a topic was specifically discussed (usually when a proposal relating to it was being examined); other numbers indicate all other meetings at which a broader discussion took place on an agenda item or range of items encompassing the topic.

Texts

The Yearbook reproduces the texts of all resolutions and decisions adopted in 1981 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. These texts, at the end of the pertinent articles, are preceded by: the resolution/decision number, vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining), meeting number and date of adoption; information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, with document symbols of drafts, approved amendments and committee reports; the title (if any) of the resolution or decision; and a list of sponsors. Details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole follow the text.

Terminology

The terminology used in subject headings and the subject index largely corresponds to the subject descriptors used by the United Nations Bibliographical Information System (UNBIS) and published in the UNBIS Thesaurus (United Nations Publication: Sales No. E.81.I.17). As these terms are also used in the indexes to United Nations documents published by the Dag Hammarskjöld Library, including the periodical United Nations Documents Index (UNDOC) and the indexes to the documents and proceedings of the principal organs, the Yearbook may be used in conjunction with those indexes as a reference guide to the entire body of United Nations documentation.

Formal titles of bodies, organisational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution texts, and in the subject index under the key word of the title.

Short titles may be used in subsequent references. They employ key words, usually not capitalized, from the formal title, such as "Committee on colonial countries" for "Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples". Capital letters are used when the only difference between full and short title is the omission of a term such as "Ad Hoc", "International", "Special" or "United Nations" ("Committee against Apartheid", for "Special Committee against Apartheid"). These short titles have no official standing.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The 1981 edition has been designed to enable the user to locate information on United Nations activities in a number of ways.

By subject: Broad subjects may be located in the table of contents. Each chapter opens with an introduction highlighting the main developments and giving page numbers where details or resolution texts may be found. Where a topic is sub-divided, shorter introductions may precede a series of articles. Cross-references in the articles give page numbers for related information. The subject index may be used to locate individual topics and specific references to the bodies dealing with each.

By body: Although the Yearbook is oriented by subject rather than by body, surveys of the work of many bodies appear under the topic of their main concern. For example, the introduction to the environment chapter lists the topics considered by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, with page cross-references. For the principal organs, APPENDIX IV gives the 1981 agenda for each session, with references to the relevant Yearbook pages. The members, officers, and date and place of sessions of each body are given in APPENDIX III. The subject index lists bodies by the key word(s) of their formal title: "Apartheid, Special Committee against".

By resolution and decision number: A numerical list of all resolutions and decisions adopted in 1981 by the principal organs, with page numbers for their text or other Yearbook reference, appears in the final pages of the book.

Each resolution and decision text is at the end of an article summarizing it and giving the circumstances of its adoption. Where a resolution contains paragraphs on a topic dealt with separately in the Yearbook, such as a paragraph on the Namibia question in a resolution on independence for colonial countries, information on those paragraphs, including voting results and explanations of vote, is contained under the topic of the paragraph, cross-referenced in the article on the resolution as a whole.

Other information: The annual report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization in 1981 is reproduced, beginning on page 3. A list of Member States, with their dates of admission to the United Nations, comprises APPENDIX I. The Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice, is in APPENDIX II. A personal name index follows the subject index.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

Documentary notes at the end of each article in Part One of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1981 on the topic, arranged by type of document—drafts not adopted, letters and notes verbales, publications (with titles), reports, resolutions, statements of administrative and financial implications, meeting records, etc. Items in these notes are linked by numerical indicators to the article text, as described on page xii. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/36/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the thirty-sixth session, beginning with A/36/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number: in 1981, A/ES-8/- (eighth emergency special session). A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1981/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1981 sessions, beginning with E/1981/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/C.1/-, E/C.2/- and E/C.3/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, the First (Economic), Second (Social) and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees, respectively; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/CN.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses; beginning with resolution 1 (1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals, e.g. resolution 2171(XLVII) of the forty-seventh session. The Council's decisions are not numbered.

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special series symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Co-ordination
CERD/-	International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ID/-	United Nations Industrial Development Organization
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme
UNITAR/-	United Nations Institute for Training and Research

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbol series. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/CEPAL/-	Economic Commission for Latin America
E/CN.14/-,
E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECWA/-	Economic Commission for Western Asia
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated as "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two Arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an Arabic numeral(s) indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.81.IX.5; E/F.R.82.II.E.8; E/F.S.81.XVII.11.

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the text of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly and dated 12 September 1981.<sup>(2)</sup> The Assembly took note of the report on 17 December.<sup>(1)</sup>

I

The past year has brought new crises and few encouragements. The pattern of world affairs has shifted in unexpected and at times ominous ways, creating fresh strains in international relations and tending to aggravate many existing problems. It is right and appropriate to view this situation with concern. We would be well advised, however, to bear in mind that change and stress are inevitable in human affairs; indeed, one of the major functions of the United Nations is to provide the institutional framework through which the nature and implications of these stresses may be identified and considered in a civilized and peaceful way, so that timely concerted steps may be taken to deal with them effectively before they grow out of control.

The main features of the international landscape as it has evolved over the past year are all too well known. Relations between East and West have once again become severely strained. The arms race, especially the competition in nuclear weapons, continues unabated, representing not only a perennial risk to human survival but also an inordinate waste of human and other vital resources. A number of key disputes, dangerously interconnected with the fragile structure of world peace, remain unresolved and continue to give rise to violence and frustration. The effort to devise global economic solutions suitable to present realities remains deadlocked, while poverty and economic disaster threaten large segments of the world's population. Violence and various forms of terrorism have taken an increasing toll.

This is a dark picture and one of which Governments are very much aware. Indeed, there is no shortage of proposed solutions for one or another of the problems in question, and never before has humanity been in possession of such a variety of means to deal with its problems. It is evident, however, that we are still far from reconciling our differences as to the approaches to be used and the solutions to be chosen, especially since these problems are in many cases tied to severe conflicts of interest which require the most intensive efforts of creative statesmanship if they are to be overcome in a concerted and generally acceptable manner. For the United Nations, therefore, the basic question, is whether we shall be able to take advantage of our awareness and knowledge to act together and in time before our problems overwhelm our capacity for dealing with them in an orderly and peaceful manner.

II

Looking back over the nearly 10 years I have served as Secretary-General of the United Nations, there have unquestionably been advances in many fields, and some specific crises, including humanitarian emergencies, have in fact been resolved. The main problems, however, have persisted and even become more acute, although there have been successes in preventing some of these problems from escalating out of control.

Ten years ago, the international situation was dominated by the destructive war in Indo-China, which seemed to defy efforts at a negotiated settlement and could not be dealt with in the framework of the United Nations. That war, moreover, poisoned relations between the great Powers and adversely affected many other aspects of international life. In the south Asian sub-continent, war was imminent, and a major humanitarian crisis had developed. The most populous country in the world was still not represented in the United Nations. On the problems of the Middle East, Cyprus, Southern Rhodesia and Namibia, efforts to find basic solutions were continuing with little apparent prospect of early success, while in two of these situations the actual area of conflict was being controlled by deploying United Nations peace-keeping operations. A wide variety of efforts were continuing on various aspects of disarmament. The world economic situation and the relationship of developed and developing countries-known as the North-South dialogue-were major fields of effort and anxiety.

Since that time there have been many fluctuations in the world situation and its component parts. The People's Republic of China at last assumed its rightful place in the Organization. Great hopes were pinned on the process of detente. The war in the south Asian sub-continent was followed by improved relations in the area and the growing effectiveness of the immense United Nations relief operation in Bangladesh.

In 1973, the Middle East war, apart from significantly changing the Middle East balance itself, put East-West relations to a severe test which they in the end survived, contributed to radical changes in the world economic situation and demonstrated beyond question the value of the United Nations as a mechanism for crisis management and conflict control. It also gave a new basis and momentum to United Nations peace-keeping operations. The Middle East has remained a central anxiety and preoccupation of the international community throughout the period.

In 1974, the coup in Cyprus and subsequent events radically changed the situation in the island without in any way solving the problem. The United Nations has remained at the centre of the peace-making and peace-keeping effort in Cyprus ever since.

In 1975, the war in Indo-China came at last to an end, leaving behind it a wasteland of political, humanitarian and economic problems, many of which are still with us.

Since the civil war in 1975, developments in Lebanon have been a major and tragic feature of the international scene. The United Nations became more closely involved with Lebanon in 1978, when the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) was created in the aftermath of violence in the area, culminating in the military intervention of Israel in southern Lebanon. The situation in Lebanon has remained a major preoccupation of the Organization up to the present time.

In 1979, events in Indo-China, and particularly in Kampuchea, created new tensions which, despite all efforts through the machinery of the United Nations, still remain to be resolved. A further problem, giving rise to the most serious repercussions on the broader international scene, developed in Afghanistan. The issue of the United States hostages in Iran presented the world community with a new and unprecedented crisis, which was finally resolved in January of this year.

The war between Iran and Iraq, which began in September 1980, has resisted to this day the efforts of the United Nations as well as other groupings of Governments to find a peaceful solution.

The accession to independence of the Portuguese colonies in 1974, and that of Zimbabwe in 1980, brought the process of decolonization near to a conclusion. The major outstanding problem remains the achievement of independence for Namibia, which has been and is the subject of intensive efforts to find an internationally acceptable settlement.

The effort to make progress on disarmament has continued during the period, reaching a peak at the tenth special session of the General Assembly in 1978. These efforts have been paralleled by bilateral and multilateral negotiations outside the United Nations, such as the strategic arms limitation talks (SALT). Nevertheless, this most difficult and vital of problems remains a central preoccupation of the international community and looms above all others as an obstacle to our transition to a new and less dangerous scheme of international relations. Indeed, there have been set-backs in the search for arms control agreements, although efforts seem at present to be under way to find a new basis for the resumption of the SALT process, and of negotiations on theatre weapons systems.

On the humanitarian side, the United Nations system has led the struggle to deal with a number of massive emergencies—Bangladesh, the Sahel, the refugees of Africa and Indo-China and the critical situation in Kampuchea, to name only some of the major challenges. Countless human lives have been saved by these endeavours, which for all the difficulties they faced have strikingly illustrated the capacity of the international community to bring relief and hope to the victims of war and disaster.

The effort to translate the human rights principles laid down in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights into binding obligations has constituted a major innovation in defining the area of legitimate international concern. The international community has displayed a growing interest in the protection of human rights. Individuals and peoples all over the world have looked to the United Nations to act effectively in securing the realization of human rights and in taking measures against violations of these rights. The good offices of the Secretary-General have also become an essential and valuable complement to the organs and procedures for the promotion and protection of human rights.

The relatively new role of the United Nations in concentrating information and expertise on new global problems resulting mainly from technological change has intensified since the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment in 1972. Population, food, water and energy have been among the subjects of world conferences since that time, while intensive efforts have also been made on the rights and status of women and children.

tional Economic Order, adopted in 1974, created a new and exceedingly complex target for the efforts of the international community to arrive at satisfactory economic arrangements for the new world that has come into being since the Second World War.

On the important complex of questions relating to the law of the sea, an immense effort has been deployed, with extraordinary though not yet conclusive success, to arrive at a comprehensive treaty. This is a subject of capital importance to the economic aspirations of mankind and, as we have recently been reminded, to future peace and order. I hope that the difficulties that have prevented the completion of this treaty will be speedily overcome.

I have given a cursory review of some of the main points of the preceding decade as a reminder of the complexity and variety of the issues we face and of the encouraging fact that, though many problems remain obdurate, we do advance and make innovations, in spite of all the frustrations and obstacles of which we constantly complain.

III

Aside from the specific problems of our time to which I have referred, there are certain unique factors which confront humanity and which must be taken into account if we are to maintain direction and make progress in the immense task of building some reasonably acceptable degree of world order. These factors are to some extent the result of the scientific and technological revolution, which has altered the human condition in ways which we are still only beginning to comprehend. Over the past decade, the United Nations has played a crucial role in focusing attention on them.

The first of these factors is the existence of weapons of mass destruction capable, in far less than their present quantities, of destroying our society and civilization.

The second is the population explosion which, in putting immense strains on the environment and on the structures of society, could well in the next generation fatally damage both. Allied to this problem is the fact that in the industrial age we have become dependent on irreplaceable raw materials which are being consumed at a reckless speed before adequate substitutes have been devised.

A third factor is the effect of the revolution in communications which has thrown together, in an accelerated time-frame, nations and peoples living in an interdependent world with little compatibility or practice in existing together. One of my predecessors referred to this situation as the one world that has been imposed upon us before we were ready for it.

I shall revert later in more detail to some aspects of these phenomena. All of them point, and urgently so, to the necessity of a vastly greater and more decisive effort to make international institutions work before we stumble into an irreversible trend to disaster.

How does the United Nations measure up to these great challenges of our time? I have to say that, for all our efforts and our undoubted sincerity, the Organization has not yet managed to cut through the political habits and attitudes of earlier and less hurried centuries and to come to grips decisively with these new factors of our existence. We talk about and express our anxieties and our good intentions, but we have yet to act upon the clear indications of what we are really up against.

All too often there is a tendency in some quarters to regard the United Nations as a side-show, while the real business of international relations and politics goes on elsewhere. This is, in my view, an extremely short-sighted attitude. The realists who set up the United Nations did so in the aftermath of a world disaster and in the knowledge that that disaster had come about from a failure to learn the lessons of the past. They knew, and we should remember, how quickly the fair weather of peace-time can be overtaken by unexpected and violent storms, particularly now when modern technology has speeded up the chain reaction of cause and effect. We need, now more than ever, the institutional shelters and defences that will protect our fragile society from such storms, and the restraint and accommodation that will be required to manage our planetary resources prudently and fairly. Until now the United Nations, with all its weaknesses, represents the best available structure for this purpose. We need to develop and strengthen the United Nations, not to undercut and deride it. It has already done an immense service in facilitating the process of geopolitical change, in absorbing much of the friction and heat of that process, in diagnosing global ailments and in devising remedies for them.

As it is, in matters of peace and security the Organization tends to come into its own mainly in times of acute international crisis. Then briefly, and simply because there is no other alternative, the determination to co-operate in averting disaster temporarily overcomes scepticism about international institutions. We urgently need, in this and other fields, to develop the Organization into a far more systematic, orderly, day-to-day means of improving and regulating the different aspects of international relations. Only then will interdependence and the new irreversible compression of human society into one world become a constructive rather than a negative force in human affairs.

IV

As I stated at the outset, the past year has been predominantly one of tension and severely strained relationships. The setbacks to East-West relations and a number of unresolved regional conflicts are a dangerous combination. The main thrust of the efforts of the United Nations has therefore been devoted to attempts to resolve or to contain such conflicts.

The situation in the Middle East with all its complexities and ramifications continues to be of central concern to the entire international community, containing as it does an explosive potential of conflict endangering world peace. Regrettably, the past year has seen few signs of progress towards the comprehensive settlement that ultimately can ensure a peaceful and just future for all the nations and peoples of the region. In fact, the already complex situation has been further complicated by a series of grave and often violent developments. The heightening of tension between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic, the Israeli attack on the nuclear facility in Iraq, the continuing cycle of violence in and around Lebanon, which recently escalated with tragic consequences, have all underlined the dangers inherent in the absence of progress towards a comprehensive settlement.

The ongoing tragedy of Lebanon is a telling reminder of the absolute necessity of embarking on the path of negotiation, however steep and difficult it may prove. The recently arranged cease-fire provides an opportunity that must not be missed, for it will not easily recur. No cease-fire, peace-keeping operation or other expedient for containing the conflict can, in the end, prevent new outbursts of violence as long as the basic elements of the problem are not tackled in negotiations involving all the parties concerned. I wish here to pay tribute to the officers and men of UNIFIL who have played, with great courage and devotion, a vital role of conflict control in southern Lebanon in exceptionally difficult circumstances.

With the acquisition of ever more sophisticated offensive weapons, each succeeding outburst of violence will inevitably become more destructive and at the same time more difficult to contain. It is only realistic to note that the spectre of nuclear weapons already looms over the area.

The United Nations has since 1948 been engaged in a practical way in operations designed to control conflict in the Middle East. Without these efforts, the situation would undoubtedly be infinitely more dangerous and destructive than it actually is. The Organization is also a universal forum in the framework of which efforts to evolve a peaceful settlement may in the end best be pursued. Such efforts will require not only the participation of all concerned, but their active determination to succeed. The issues are well known and include the right of all States in the area to live in peace, within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force, the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to self-determination, and withdrawal from occupied territories. In this context, the question of Jerusalem remains of primary importance. We need urgently, in the interests of world peace as well as of the peoples of the Middle East, to take every possible step to encourage the will to negotiate and to settle on a solution to the central and obdurate problem of the Middle East.

A source of deep concern to the international community is the continuing conflict between Iran and Iraq. Besides causing great human suffering and material loss, the war carries the danger of far-reaching and unpredictable consequences in a very sensitive area of the world. It is imperative for the preservation of international peace and security that the fighting should come to an end and that an agreed settlement is reached, as soon as possible, in conformity with the principles of justice and international law and with due respect for the legitimate rights of both parties.

In an effort to resolve the dispute by peaceful means I offered my good offices to Iran and Iraq and appointed Mr. Olof Palme, former Prime Minister of Sweden, as my Special Representative. The Islamic Conference and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries have shown similar concern and have also sent missions to the area. I have been kept informed of these efforts.

It has become clear that the issues underlying the conflict are complex and that a solution will not be reached easily. My Special Representative has discussed a comprehensive settlement involving a cease-fire and the withdrawal of forces as well as appropriate procedures for the peaceful resolution of the issues under dispute. In that context, he has also discussed possible measures which would enable the commercial ships of different nationalities, which became immobilized by the conflict, to leave the area. Although agreement on the overall issues is yet to be reached, the continued support for the mission of my Special Representative, shown by both parties, has encouraged the continuation of our efforts.

Efforts to move forward to a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem have continued throughout the year as part of the good offices mission entrusted to me by the Security Council. Meanwhile, the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus continues its essential function of preserving calm in the island. The difficulties in the way of a political solution of this problem are well known and need no further exposition here. I feel strongly, however, that a settlement is long overdue. The intercommunal talks still appear to be the best available means of negotiating a solution of this highly intractable problem which, during the past few weeks, has entered a new stage with the submission of comprehensive proposals encompassing both the territorial and constitutional aspects. This development has led to renewed hope that the negotiations may now enter a more constructive phase. To take advantage of this situation, I and my Special Representative may find it necessary to make special efforts and present some new ideas, as appropriate, to sustain the momentum of the negotiating process. I hope that any such moves on my part will be accepted in the spirit in which they are offered, as tools of the negotiating process for the purpose of facilitating progress towards an agreed solution. It bears repeating that continued delay in this effort only serves to consolidate the status quo, which both parties have found to be unsatisfactory.

The crisis over Afghanistan, which has caused great tension and anxiety throughout the world community in the past year, presents a somewhat different kind of challenge. The General Assembly has pronounced itself on the principles involved and the action required. Many efforts have been made to facilitate negotiations among the parties concerned with a view to achieving a fair political solution which will ensure that the Afghan people will be able to determine their own destiny, free from foreign intervention and interference. To this end I have designated a Personal Representative, Mr. Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, who has made two visits to the area and will continue to follow up all possibilities for a peaceful resolution of the problem.

The situation in South-East Asia remains a matter of grave concern. Peace and stability have not yet come to that tortured region and the situation remains precarious, especially with regard to the Kampuchean problem.

Following extensive consultations, the International Conference on Kampuchea, called for by the General Assembly in its resolution 35/6, was held in New York from 13 to 17 July 1981. I have also continued my efforts in the exercise of my good offices and I have been kept informed of consultations that have taken place among the countries of the region as well as other States. Regrettably, these efforts on many levels have not so far been able to bridge the gap which exists between the positions of the parties and States concerned, and real progress is yet to be made towards achieving a just and lasting settlement of this complex problem. Urgent efforts must be made by all concerned to achieve such a settlement with full regard for the principles of the Charter and the decisions of the General Assembly in order to resolve a serious situation which continues to deny peace and prosperity to the people of Kampuchea and indeed of the entire region. In this connection, I note with satisfaction that the programme of assistance to the people of Kampuchea undertaken by the United Nations system has been successful in averting the worst of the famine and devastation that had been feared, although grave uncertainties and problems still lie ahead. Evidently, however, it is only with the achievement of a comprehensive solution of the underlying political and military issues that a fundamental solution to the humanitarian problem can be found.

The continuing stalemate over Namibia is extremely harmful to the interests of the people of Namibia as well as to the peace, security and development of southern Africa as a whole. It is indeed now affecting international relations on an even wider scale. The recent massive South African incursion into Angola, resulting in heavy casualties and destruction, tragically underscores the urgency of a solution to the problem of Namibia, for which territory the United Nations has a unique responsibility.

In my concern to break the impasse, which has regrettably lasted far too long, I took a series of initiatives culminating in the meeting at Geneva last January. When, at that meeting, South Africa stated that it was not yet prepared to sign a cease-fire agreement and proceed to the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978), a great opportunity was missed. As a result, the bloodshed and violence continue, frustration and bitterness increase, and the future has to wait. In spite of various bilateral efforts since that time, no breakthrough has as yet been achieved. As I have said repeatedly, resolution 435(1978) must remain the basis for the attainment of Namibia's independence. I cannot emphasize too strongly the necessity of moving forward and away from the present impasse. The recently concluded debate at the eighth emergency special session of the General Assembly reflects the deep and widespread concern felt by the international community on this matter. Renewed and concerted efforts are essential so that we can proceed without further delay to the solution envisaged in resolution 435(1978), which has already been extensively discussed and agreed upon in principle.

Another, and major, concern in Africa is the persistence of the policy of apartheid in South Africa which has created so much bitterness and strife. Over the years we have seen its tragic consequences. The various races have been separated through a network of legislation which has denied the vast majority their basic human rights. It has uprooted large numbers from their homes and has compelled many others to live in so-called homelands against their choice. All the people of South Africa must be enabled to participate on an equal footing in guiding the destiny of their country. Otherwise, violence will persist. Moreover, a continuation of the present racial policies of the Government of South Africa can only cause further strains on its relations with other members of the international community.

It is therefore understandable that, with growing impatience, there is increasing demand for additional steps to secure the elimination of apartheid. It was for this reason that the General Assembly recently convened in Paris the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa.

Another urgent question for which an early solution must be found is that of Western Sahara. The situation remains tense, and every effort must be made to resolve it in keeping with the principles of the Charter. In this respect the General Assembly has made clear its position and has reaffirmed the right of the people of the Territory to self-determination.

This is a matter to which the Organization of African Unity (OAU) has given its utmost attention. In this connection, I wish to pay tribute to the African leaders whose dedicated efforts have led to the recent agreement within OAU, under the chairmanship of President Moi of Kenya, on a peaceful solution of the problem. I had an opportunity of meeting recently with President Moi in Paris and discussing the role envisaged for the United Nations in the implementation of the OAU decision to organize and conduct a referendum in the territory and maintain a cease-fire. I expect further discussions to take place on this matter when the Chairman of OAU visits United Nations Headquarters towards the end of September.

As concerns the role of the United Nations in the practical arrangements for the solution of this problem, the appropriate organs of the United Nations will no doubt be requested to take the necessary decisions.

In Latin America, political and economic models are being adjusted to meet the expectations of societies in which traditional values are in a state of evolution and change. New circumstances and changed approaches have led to varying perceptions of each nation's political, economic and social requirements. In Central America, these changes have created a convulsive situation which has caused considerable concern and anxiety. The situation is further complicated by a self-perpetuating process of charges and countercharges of foreign intervention.

I have consistently maintained that these problems require political solutions, arrived at with full regard for the individuality and sovereignty of each Latin American nation. It is also necessary to increase international co-operation to improve the social and economic conditions which prevail in the area, and which constitute, in the last analysis, the underlying reason for the current political turmoil. I welcome in this respect the joint efforts of Canada, Mexico, the United States and Venezuela, announced in the Bahamas, to help in the social and economic development of the Central American and Caribbean countries.

It is encouraging to note that the Latin American countries have continued to follow their tradition of settling their international disputes by peaceful means. On other occasions I have expressed my preoccupation about the dispute between Argentina and Chile over the Beagle Channel. These countries sought the mediation of His Holiness Pope John Paul II, whose continuing efforts have averted the danger of a military confrontation. In the same spirit of adherence to the principle of peaceful settlement of disputes, the Governments of Ecuador and Peru decided to engage in negotiations after a series of armed skirmishes early this year. By their positive attitude these Governments were able to arrest an escalation of hostilities. I hope that similar means will be used to settle other bilateral conflicts which have unfortunately arisen in the region.

V

Events in the past year have combined to focus the attention of the world community once again on one of the central problems of our time—the arms race, which has continued practically unchecked almost since the end of the Second World War, and its infinitely ominous extension into the sphere of nuclear weapons.

What is called the problem of the arms race is in reality a complex of problems. The largest single factor fuelling the world-wide arms build-up has for a long time been the hostility between East and West. After a period of relative relaxation, the relations between the super-Powers are again going through a period of tension, and there are clear indications of a sharply intensified upward spiral in their arms build-up.

This development, with its evident risks for the future of all mankind, would be enough to justify the increased concern of the world community. But it is now becoming increasingly clear that the arms race, in all its fundamental irrationality and with all its attendant risks, shows signs of - extending to the entire world. While the overwhelming bulk of military spending is still incurred by the two major blocs, defence expenditures in other countries in real terms have nearly doubled in the past decade, and the upward trend is continuing. All countries, large and small, cite legitimate security needs to justify their participation in the accelerating arms build-up. However, in addition to being inherently dangerous, the tensions generated in this manner may trigger destabilizing tendencies, with the risk of escalation in the event of competitive big-Power involvement. Furthermore, the arms race tends to drain away, more rapidly than ever, resources desperately needed for development.

From their first appearance in history, the existence of nuclear weapons added a new and frightening dimension to the potentialities for world catastrophe. While the Governments concerned have rightly expressed their extreme aversion to using such weapons, their very existence in the tense context of great-Power relationships constitutes an unprecedented threat to human society and civilization. In international affairs, confusion, confrontation and emotion cannot accurately be foreseen, forestalled or controlled, and a nuclear war would be both devastatingly quick and conclusive. If the present nuclear-arms race among the most powerful States is the greatest potential danger threatening mankind, a similar race between additional nuclear States will add immeasurably to that danger and to the risk of the actual use of nuclear weapons.

For many years now, a major objective of the international community has been to promote the peaceful uses of nuclear energy while preventing or deterring its military applications. A most important measure in this context is the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to which 115 States are parties. Progress towards promoting the universality of that Treaty and the generalized acceptance of International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards would go far to allay anxieties that the spread of nuclear technology and material might open the door to potential military capabilities. It is also important to give urgent consideration to ways of ensuring that advanced technological means will not be used to circumvent the safeguards system.

Another highly significant development is the growing consideration being given to nuclear-weapon-free zones, of which the Treaty of Tlatelolco already provides a successful example. Besides being significant measures of non-proliferation, nuclear-weapon-free zones would also represent important steps towards regional nuclear disarmament.

International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards are an essential element in verifying the compliance with obligations undertaken with such agreements. These safeguards must provide the maximum possible confidence that the agreement is adequately implemented and are therefore basic to its effectiveness. Various international co-operative schemes, such as the joint storage of irradiated fuel or separated plutonium, are under consideration to strengthen the safeguards system and supplement it by institutional arrangements in order to enhance international confidence. It is also of great importance that agreements be reached between supplier countries and potential recipient States on conditions for supply of nuclear material, equipment and know-how, which not only promote non-proliferation but also help to establish a reliable supply market.

Recent events illustrate how important it is that all States should adhere to effective non-proliferation safeguards, be it through the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons or through a nuclear-weapon-free zone, or bilaterally submit their entire nuclear effort to the safeguards system of the International Atomic Energy Agency, and that, if any State is concerned that the system may not give timely warning of a suspected event, it should make use of the international procedures inherent in the system to ascertain the factors in the case.

The recent debate on the raid on the Iraqi nuclear installations raised a number of questions which could not at the time be adequately answered. On such matters which directly affect not so much the future as the question of whether there is to be a future, I feel that the international community should have the best and most authoritative expert advice. I therefore think it might be wise to reactivate the Scientific Advisory Committee, which served the United Nations with distinction and effectiveness in the development of activities and conferences on the peaceful uses of atomic energy. This Committee of most distinguished and respected scientists gave unique guidance and authority to those early efforts. If reconstituted at a similar level, following consultations with the International Atomic Energy Agency, it might, I believe, play a new and highly constructive role in problems such as the one I have just described.

I have drawn attention in the past to the close relationship between the arms race and the desire of States to ensure their security against what they perceive as concrete external dangers. Real progress towards a genuinely disarmed world must depend to a large extent on the development of confidence among nations and the removal of at least some of the sources of mistrust and hostility.

For this reason, I hope that the negotiations on strategic arms limitations will be resumed at the earliest possible date and carried forward to a successful conclusion. I also hope that the forthcoming meeting between the foreign ministers of the United States and the Soviet Union will constitute a new beginning in the efforts to restore dialogue and resume constructive negotiations. Recent proposals to convene summit meetings on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis in the Security Council are a natural extension of this renewed effort to maintain dialogue and communication, and deserve careful consideration.

The maintenance of dialogue is an essential, part of the effort to remove the causes of suspicion and hostility between nations which fuel the current world-wide arms race. It must be recognized that the search for absolute security can, in fact, breed further insecurity. History demonstrates that there are times when an arms race can acquire a momentum of its own, quite independent of the political causes which initially provoked it, and lead inexorably to disaster.

It is the duty of the international community to attempt to break, at every possible point, the deadly cycle which leads from suspicion and hostility to increased armaments and from increased armaments to a further heightening of suspicion and hostility. At the same time, a renewed and concerted effort by the international community, conducted at every level, including the very highest, to deal directly with the threats posed by the arms race in all its forms seems to me in order.

In 1978 the General Assembly held a special session at which it laid the groundwork for sustained and meaningful progress towards disarmament. Unfortunately, the hopes embodied in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session have not yet been realized. Preparations are now in progress for a second special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held in the spring of 1982. That session will provide an appropriate occasion for a renewed and concerted effort to deal directly with the awesome threats posed by the arms race.

VI

Disarmament, in a nuclear age, is a matter of survival. Economic and social order in an age of interdependence and technological change is a matter of survival with decency and self-respect.

In spite of attempts to adjust national policies and strengthen international co-operation, the world economy is still encountering very serious difficulties, and a vastly greater effort is needed if lasting results are to be achieved. A generally low level of economic performance persists, affecting countries in all regions. Industrial output is practically stagnant and the expansion of world trade has slowed down. Payment imbalances have increased dramatically, unemployment and underemployment are worsening and, in spite of some recent progress, inflation is still at unacceptably high levels.

The international setting has had an adverse effect on the efforts of developing countries to accelerate their growth and restore their payments position. In 1980 there was an actual decline in the per capita incomes of a large majority of the developing countries, and a further year of decline in 1981 cannot yet be ruled out. It is ironical that, at a time when there is greater awareness than ever before of the need for development and for the ordering of the world's economy, there is, if present trends persist, a prospect that by 1990 the number of persons on the globe living in absolute poverty could exceed 800 million.

Such a situation of stagnation or increasing poverty is absolutely unacceptable. It contains the seeds of widespread tension and unrest which constitute, in the final analysis, a threat to world peace and stability.

In such a situation it is deeply disturbing to witness an actual weakening of international co-operative effort and an erosion of the system of multilateral co-operation. There has been an increasing trend towards unilateral measures which shift the burden of economic adjustment onto trading partners or onto the rest of the world. There is also a further danger of retaliatory measures, creating a vicious circle in which all countries will eventually find themselves worse off, as happened in the period between the two world wars.

The major industrial countries find it increasingly difficult to allocate resources to meet pressing economic and social needs at a time of slow growth, increasing inflation, changing monetary values and a general loss of economic dynamism. The competition for existing resources by a variety of interests has also made it difficult to take action to curb inflation. At the same time, military expenditure absorbs more and more resources without in the end enhancing international security. This year $500 billion is being earmarked for armaments at a time when development assistance, which makes a very important and fundamental contribution to international stability, is marking time. Only 5 per cent of that sum would suffice to reach the target for official development assistance set in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

At the international level, it has also proved difficult to take timely and necessary decisions.

Progress is too small and too slow, as was evident, despite the constructive spirit in which it was undertaken, at the eleventh special session of the General Assembly. The international dialogue has not in recent months produced the impetus necessary for the implementation of the International Development Strategy adopted by the General Assembly, apart from notable progress in the official multilateral financing of balances of payments. On the contrary, unilateral measures have increased uncertainty and added to the factors militating against the success of the Strategy.

In particular, there are disturbing shortfalls in critically needed voluntary resource allocations to those international organizations which have a vital role to play in achieving the objectives of the International Development Strategy. Recently, for example, the suspension of some operations of the International Development Association deprived low-income developing countries of irreplaceable investment resources. At the same time, severe resource constraints are threatening the support which the United Nations Development Programme envisages rendering to the developing countries. This unfortunately also comes at a time when organizations of the United Nations system, most with years of experience, have a highly refined but underutilized capacity to provide development assistance.

The international community has a common and urgent interest in reversing the present adverse trends. A strengthening of international support in the key areas of food, energy, raw materials, finance and trade would do much to change the present economic situation in the interests of all countries. There is a compelling need to treat these problems in an integrated and coherent manner with the participation of all groups of countries.

I regret that to this day Member States have been unable to reach an agreement which would enable them to begin the process of global negotiations, the principle of which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1979. I sincerely hope that the misgivings or mistrust which persist in various quarters, as well as the substantive differences, can soon be overcome by the necessary political decisions.

Meanwhile, the forthcoming meeting of some heads of State or Government from the North and the South in Cancun may provide a renewed political impetus for achieving a meeting of minds conducive to the subsequent initiation of concerted actions affecting all Member States.

Within the United Nations, the Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy agreed last month on the Nairobi Programme of Action to promote the development and utilization of selected alternative energy sources. While the problems encountered by the Conference serve to measure the complexity of the energy situation confronting nations, the Programme of Action is a tangible achievement representing a basis for constructive and co-operative effort in a significant area that includes certain energy sources of critical importance, in particular to developing countries. The Programme of Action by itself is not a panacea but a beginning. Its effective implementation will depend on the continuing commitment of Governments and the supporting efforts of the United Nations system. A broader focus will eventually be needed, including, in due course, a realistic look at areas and types of energy sources not so far covered.

The United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris early this month, drew attention to the plight of countries whose standard of living was already at unacceptable levels and which faced further deterioration if international action was not forthcoming. The Conference emphasized the need for special measures, including concessional assistance, for such countries, in the context of the overall effort for development.

These meetings provide opportunities for tackling, at the highest level and from different angles, the most pressing economic and social problems of the world and the obstacles which until now have inhibited our progress. In our time, international economic problems are inextricably linked with the maintenance of peace and stability and affect both the domestic and the external policies of countries. The complexity and scope of these problems demand statesmanship and political leadership of the highest order, for in the settlement of these problems lies the essential key to a stable and prosperous future, as well as to a satisfactory life for all the people of this earth. Only a new and bold approach, and vitally required resources, can remedy the present tendencies towards fragmentation, dispersal of effort and unilateralism, which are in the end policies of weakness, lack of confidence and despair.

VII

The Charter speaks, in Article 55, of "the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations...". In fact, the United Nations has tried to go a good deal further along this road than its founders had foreseen. The effort to come to grips with problems affecting hundreds of millions of people across the whole spectrum of the human race is a testimony to a growing sense of humanity and responsibility.

The General Assembly proclaimed 1981 International Year of Disabled Persons, with the theme "Full participation and equality". The call of the Assembly has evoked a response on a much larger scale than had been anticipated. Over 100 Governments have established national committees to co-ordinate activities in support of the disabled; and the general public has reacted enthusiastically and, above all, so have the disabled themselves. At the international level, the secretariat of the International Year of Disabled Persons has arranged a series of seminars and symposia and has formulated a long-term plan of action to deal with this world-wide problem. I hope that the momentum generated by the Year will be sustained through practical measures equal to the needs of the situation.

In 1982 the problems of the elderly and the aged will be considered by a world assembly.

Sometimes the focus of international compassion is compelled to centre on a particular humanitarian tragedy of our time. In April of this year, the International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, sponsored by the United Nations in close co-operation with OAU and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, recognized in a dramatic fashion the fact that Africa, with 5 million refugees, now accounts for more than half of the total world refugee population. This immense burden, falling upon some of the least developed countries of the world, is far beyond the resources of the countries of asylum which none the less, with their traditional hospitality, have done their best to care for their hapless guests. Ninety-nine Governments took part in this Conference, at which a large number of non-governmental organizations were also represented. The Conference achieved considerable success in focusing attention on the plight of African refugees, in mobilizing practical support for their help and in assisting the countries of asylum to bear the burden. A total of $560 million was pledged. This was a remarkable and timely international response and a convincing message of hope in answer to a desperate cry for help.

In Kampuchea and Thailand, as a result of developments in the former country, the international organizations concerned—the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the World Food Programme (WFP) and the International Committee of the Red Cross—under the co-ordination of the United Nations, continued to provide humanitarian assistance. The basic objective of preserving life in Kampuchea has been secured up to the present time, but prospects for the rest of 1981 are dependent on the outcome of the current monsoon and are, at best, very uncertain. On the border between Kampuchea and Thailand, UNICEF, WFP and the International Committee of the Red Cross, with the assistance of several voluntary agencies, are providing basic rations for some 200,000 Kampuchians who are assembled in camps at the present time. Security, in the usually accepted sense of that word, is non-existent in the area; several political groups are strongly opposed to each other and there is a continuous toll of dead and wounded. This unfortunate situation is unlikely to be satisfactorily resolved unless a political solution to what has become an international problem can be found. Progress has been made by UNHCR in dealing with refugees in holding centres; the programme of resettlement is proceeding steadily and action has been initiated which could lead to the voluntary repatriation of a significant number of other Kampuchians now in these centres. Just under 100,000 Thai villagers affected by the influx of refugees from Kampuchea are receiving assistance from WFP, UNICEF and the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Another extremely serious refugee situation is the influx into Pakistan and Iran of more than 2 million refugees from Afghanistan. The High Commissioner is making all possible efforts to assist in alleviating the plight of these refugees.

In my last annual report I mentioned the problem of security, which sometimes arises in humanitarian emergencies. Unfortunately, we have not as yet found any satisfactory solution to this problem, which not only affects on occasion the effectiveness of relief and humanitarian operations, but also endangers the safety and the lives of the international and local personnel taking part in these operations.

VIII

In the contemporary world, the interrelationship between human rights and questions of peace and security is emerging into sharper focus. The purposes and principles of the Charter are mutually supporting and interdependent. Thus, it is increasingly clear that peace and development are necessary for the full realization of human rights. At the same time, in the absence of respect for human rights, peace and development lose much of their meaning. It is essential, therefore, that the efforts of the United Nations and its Member States to promote and protect civil and political as well as economic, social and cultural rights should be accorded the highest importance. The wide-ranging activities of the United Nations may be considered as integral parts of the efforts to promote and protect human rights. After all, the fact that millions of human beings are plagued by poverty, disease and lack of fulfilment of basic human needs constitutes one of the most extensive violations of human rights in the world today.

It is incumbent upon the United Nations to tackle all forms of violations of human rights which are deliberately inflicted upon human beings, such as apartheid and racial discrimination, political assassinations, torture, arbitrary arrest and detention, enforced or involuntary disappearances, slavery and slavery-like practices. These and other serious violations of human rights which affect large numbers of people cannot be tolerated or excused, whatever the circumstances and wherever they occur, and the United Nations would be failing in its essential mission if it proved unable to deal with such violations in an effective manner.

I therefore welcome the consideration now being given by the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, to ways and means of responding urgently to situations of gross violations of human rights. Various forms of action have been taken to deal with certain situations of this kind, including public debate, contacts with Governments concerned, the appointment of special rapporteurs, envoys or representatives, the designation of working groups of experts and the dispatch of appeals. Consideration has also been given to confidential procedures to deal with some situations. It is my hope that these efforts will be continued and strengthened.

For my own part, I have continued to work with the Commission on Human Rights in its efforts to deal with situations of gross violations of human rights and, at the Commission's request, I have on numerous occasions initiated contacts with Governments. I have also continued to exercise my good offices on humanitarian grounds whenever I consider that my efforts may be of help to the victims concerned.

As regards the setting of standards, work is currently under way in various areas such as the prohibition of torture, the rights of the child, of minorities, of migrant workers and of non-citizens as well as the protection of prisoners and detainees and religious freedoms. I welcome the advances which have been made towards the adoption of a declaration on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief.

IX

The Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea opened its tenth session last March under the shadow of the untimely passing of its President, Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe, an architect of the vast negotiating process that had led to the present draft Convention.

Despite the significant advance achieved over the last seven years, the hope that the work of the Conference would be concluded during 1981 did not materialize. It was with deep regret that I had to acknowledge that reality on the occasion of the opening of the tenth session.

At its resumed tenth session, the Conference was able, however, to find more generally acceptable solutions to some of the problems that had heretofore presented great difficulties. These include a new formulation on the delimitation of maritime boundaries between States with opposite or adjacent coastlines, as well as decisions on the sites of the future International Sea-Bed Authority and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. Moreover, the Conference decided to formalize the text of the draft Convention and agreed to a timetable for its adoption.

I hardly need to emphasize once more the effect that the outcome of this Conference will have on the perceptions of Governments regarding the capacity of the United Nations to serve as an instrument for finding multilaterally negotiated solutions for global problems. Nor do I find it necessary to restate that there is no better alternative to a generally acceptable convention in which all matters pertaining to ocean space will be treated as a whole. The Conference agreed to hold its decision-making session during the spring of 1982 and to schedule the signing of the Final Act at Caracas early next autumn. In this connection, I appeal to the Governments concerned to make a final concentrated effort to compose the remaining differences, including those that have emerged recently.

X

In preparing my programme budget proposals for the biennium 1982-1983, my overriding concern was to preserve as effectively as possible the level of programmes approved by the Member States while recognizing the world-wide climate of economic and financial constraints. As long ago as the thirty-third session of the General Assembly, I reaffirmed my long-standing commitment to a policy of strict budgetary restraint. Continuing efforts to reduce budget growth in line with that policy have made it possible to present a zero real growth budget. I wish to emphasize here that this policy, which is basically effected through redeployment of staff resources, will in no way weaken, curtail or pre-empt programmes for support of economic and social development in developing countries.

In my report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session, I referred to the importance of rationalizing the substantive activities of the Organization to ensure that their orientation, content and delivery are timely and relevant to the priority needs of Member States. I can report that some progress has now been achieved in such a rationalization, aiming at the identification of activities which have little chance of making an effective contribution to the international community collectively and to Member States individually, and concentrating on activities which can make such a contribution. This search for greater relevance and effectiveness should be pursued through the setting of explicit priorities among United Nations programmes, new approaches to the formulation of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989, and the further development of procedures for programme evaluation.

The Organization has had for several years a system for setting priorities among its programmes, but this system was hampered by a number of technical difficulties. A reformulation of these procedures has been proposed which would result in the phased introduction of a new system of priority-setting over the next few years. The purpose is to ensure that high-priority programmes receive appropriate resources either through fresh allocations by the General Assembly or through redeployment of resources from lower priority activities. This system of priority-setting would apply to all activities covered by the regular budget, except for activities undertaken pursuant to decisions of the Security Council relating to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The size and relative complexity of our Organization have to be reckoned with, and it has become necessary to decentralize many financial activities. In recent years, Member States have expressed concern that such decentralization should not in any way diminish the role of the central financial and programming services. To meet this concern, the Organization's programme planning and financial policies are being further reviewed. Particular attention is being given to the administration and control of the regular budget, the management of the cash resources of the Organization, and the acceptance and management of extrabudgetary resources.

XI

Ensuring the vitality and viability of the international civil service is a continuing and complex task. The difficulties in maintaining the principles and objectives of the Charter with respect to the concept of an independent international civil service are a matter of legitimate concern, from their different viewpoints, to Member States, the administration and the staff. There is now, I believe, a greater awareness on all sides of the complexity of the day-to-day functioning of an international secretariat that must operate under conditions dissimilar to those obtaining in any national civil service, and even different from those prevailing in the early years of the Organization.

The very diversity of the international Secretariat inevitably creates stresses and strains which have to be accommodated if the system is to work. This is a challenge for all concerned, whatever their particular interests may be. We cannot ignore these obvious realities, but we must try unceasingly, as the Charter requires, to concentrate on enhancing the efficiency, competence and integrity of the international civil service and to ensure respect for the exclusively international character of its responsibilities.

As we experience and try to cope with the dilemmas of the international Secretariat, we are constantly challenged from a number of directions. There are those who rightly insist that the letter and spirit of the Charter relating to the international civil service must be scrupulously observed. There are the legislative intergovernmental bodies of the Organization which from time to time initiate various proposals for the reform or improvement of the service. These proposals include specific directives concerning such matters as equitable geographical distribution, a more balanced distribution of nationalities in the units of the Secretariat, equal opportunities between the sexes, and reform of various aspects of our personnel policies. There is also constantly expressed the vitally essential viewpoint of the dedicated international civil servants who carry out the day-to-day tasks of the Organization.

As regards directives from intergovernmental bodies, efforts are under way to bring about as effectively and practically as possible the reforms and changes required. Nevertheless, it must be borne in mind that the pace of reform and change is unlikely, in the present circumstances, to be as rapid or as comprehensive as would ideally be desired. In this regard, I feel that it would be prudent to bear in mind that there are certain areas of administration where, of necessity, the Secretary-General must continue to have proper discretion and responsibility in order to fulfil his tasks in accordance with the Charter.

As far as the members of the Secretariat are concerned, there is no doubt that, as a result of the strains and stresses mentioned above, the rank and file of the staff is sometimes disillusioned. As we go through the inescapable process of adjusting to the new international environment and circumstances, many staff members may wonder whether circumstances at times compel a departure from the principles set out in the Charter. I fully understand such anxieties and, for my part, I am determined that the principles of the Charter will at all times be upheld. However, we must also take account of realities. Member States are increasingly concerned about the high cost of international organizations, of which the largest part is for staff costs. In addition, those who bear the bulk of these costs expect their share of the financial burden to be adequately reflected in the composition of the Secretariat. Obviously, such approaches sometimes have an impact on career development prospects as well as recruitment policies and are therefore of concern to the international staff. On the other hand, due regard must be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible. In these circumstances, it is important to ensure that the interests of the international civil servants be preserved while recognizing the concerns of Member States.

The security of international civil servants is of increasing concern to staff members and should also be of major concern to all Member States. The Secretariat has reason to be concerned that the commitments made under the Charter and the relevant conventions regarding the inviolability of the international civil service are not being fully complied with. I strongly urge all Governments to maintain these commitments in regard to the international civil service and, if problems arise, to discuss them in full frankness with the Secretary-General and the administration.

The health and viability of the international civil service depend primarily on the quality of its staff. This is why I and the executive heads of the various United Nations agencies and programmes continue to make all possible efforts to ensure the recruitment into the service of men and women who meet the standards set out in the Charter. At the present time, we are, to some extent, going through what might be called a generation crisis. After more than three decades, those who joined the United Nations Secretariat at the outset have left or are leaving the service. These dedicated men and women have made an outstanding contribution and have been the very foundation of the international civil service as we know it today. Their spirit of devotion and service is being passed on to the new generation of staff members, who will certainly bring their own contributions to the development of an international institution on which so much will depend in the future.

XII

Since public support and understanding are indispensable to the effectiveness and development of our Organization, the problems of public information are of perennial—and often daily—concern to the Secretary-General. It is natural and desirable that a growing, and to some extent experimental, political system such as the United Nations should be subjected to continuous comment and criticism. And, since the Organization belongs to all the peoples of the world, that comment and criticism should come from as wide and varied a constituency as possible.

What concerns me far more is the starting-point and context of much of the criticism of the activities of the United Nations. Our experience in this century has shown beyond the shadow of a doubt that a world organization must be developed without delay and with the widest possible participation to enable us not only to deal with the effective maintenance of international peace and security, but to bring order into many other aspects of human activity, which, owing to the technological revolution, are now closely and vitally intertwined. In other words, we are living in one world whether we like it or not, and we have to develop institutions capable of regulating and guiding that world. Criticism which starts from this premise is welcome and constructive, however harsh it may sometimes be, though I think it is important to recognize that the United Nations is not a supranational government, but an organization of sovereign States. The other kind of criticism, which starts from the assumption that international organizations and co-operation are unnecessary, undesirable and unrealistic, strikes me as, at best, short-sighted and, at worst, dangerous for the future.

I cannot claim that we have been very successful so far in explaining to a world-wide public the nature, the problems and the basic necessity of the United Nations. All too often people seem to think that the Organization is no real concern of theirs or is even a threat to their own interests. As we get further away from the Second World War, more and more people seem unaware that devastating storms can suddenly darken the more or less tranquil skies of peace-time. I never cease to wonder at the equanimity with which many people appear to accept the implications of nuclear weapons and their steady and fantastic development. One witnesses with amazement the calm and almost academic public discussions of the growth and possible use of the vast new arsenal of sophisticated weapons, as if the whole system of destruction were perfectly safe because it was meant for deterrence and would therefore, in reality, never be used. In history there are very few instances of weapons which, once invented, remain permanently in the store-room.

People need to be constantly reminded that, if the instruments of peace set up to universal acclaim after the Second World War are properly used and developed, there is an alternative to this nightmare. It is, admittedly, an alternative which will, especially in the early stages, require great courage, vision and self-confidence, but the blueprint is there in the Charter.

The economic and social challenges of our time are, in their different ways, almost equally compelling. Again, we have a choice—to accept the present uncertainties and inequities and the privations and misery of a large segment of humanity, with all of the threat to world stability which they constitute, or to persevere in devising the better system which we know can be devised. Again, the second alternative will require courage, vision and an immense amount of hard work, not to mention public support at every stage. But can any reasonable person be in serious doubt as to the choice?

These basic choices are the context in which we must endeavour to gain public support and understanding for this very complex Organization. The daily activities of the United Nations, its difficulties and shortcomings as well as its achievements, will then be seen in a more realistic perspective. It is unrealistic to expect universal approval and enthusiasm for all of the works of an Organization as diverse and as complicated as the United Nations. But it should be possible to gain increasing understanding of its place in the world and of its vital purposes.

In these days when communications and the media, as never before, are so much an integral part of political life and power, we have to learn to use new methods, not to proselytize a reluctant public but to give that public a serious and informed basis on which to judge and to act in its own real interests. Those interests, for better or for worse, are now intimately bound up with the interests of all the other peoples of the world.

I hope very much that Member States will make every effort to assist us in the Secretariat in making our Organization better understood, not only through their participation in the General Assembly or in the Committee on Information, but also in the day-to-day political life of their countries.

XIII

At the outset of this report, I gave a somewhat bleak assessment of the past year. I do not believe, however, that we have any basic reason for despair. We have tremendous problems, some of them the product of our own ingenuity. But we also have great assets and great possibilities if we are prepared to work together in taking advantage of them.

I feel strongly that a more positive approach to many of our problems would do much to overcome what now appear to be stalemates or insuperable obstacles. Such a positive approach must be related primarily to hopes for the future rather than to the grievances of the past.

It is only natural that the great historic changes of recent decades have generated serious conflicts of interest among nations, compounded at times by clashing conceptions of the past and incompatible visions of the future. These conflicts are genuine and often spring from the operation of factors inherent in the political, economic and social dynamics of the contemporary world. In earlier periods, tensions resulting from such situations would almost inevitably have led to hostility and possibly war. The danger of this happening again is still very much with us, and indeed the risks of confrontation have become immeasurably greater because of the development of ever more sophisticated means of destruction. What is different about the present is precisely that in the United Nations we now have an instrument to deal with these stresses in a rational manner. This instrument, however, is only as good as we make it. If properly used, it should enable us to substitute civilized and peaceful consideration of serious problems for hostile confrontation and the resort to violence with all their appalling dangers.

It would be idle to claim that Governments have in all cases learned to take full advantage of the United Nations as an instrument placed at the disposal of the international community to help solve, or at least to control, some of its intractable problems. To do so requires the steadfast application of political will, as well as a positive approach to the problems involved. This is particularly true of the great economic and social challenges of our time and especially of what is now referred to as the North-South range of problems.

For the great political issues which we face, a new attitude and a more positive approach might also pay unexpected dividends. While the problems are difficult, there can be movement towards solutions that would take due account of the interests and aspirations of all concerned. We know, for example, that the problems of the Middle East are made deeper and more complex on all sides by past events and the memory of those events. Seen in the context of the future, however, that region with its abundance of human and other resources should be a particularly promising and favoured part of the world. Similarly, if the present stalemate could be overcome and bitterness and violence be allowed to abate, an independent Namibia could become the catalyst of a radical improvement of relationships in the whole region of southern Africa, another area of great promise and potential. The same considerations apply to other problem areas mentioned in this report.

I need hardly add that a positive approach to the relationships of the greatest Powers would perhaps be the greatest boon of all.

I know that it is easier to counsel such an attitude than to adopt it, and that virtually all Governments have difficulties, often of the most serious kind, in choosing the shortest and most rational route to solutions. But I am increasingly impressed by how little advantage any party derives in the long run from, and how great is the loss engendered by, the perpetuation of a problem, not only for those directly concerned but also often for the international community as a whole.

One of the great advantages of the United Nations is that its help and its services as an intermediary can be accepted without loss of face by all concerned since it is an Organization that belongs to all its Members. I urge that its facilities be used more intensively and more along the lines laid down in the Charter to solve the great perennial problems of our time.

As anyone who works in the United Nations knows, there are few, if any, short cuts to a more just, better organized and more peaceful world. I believe, however, that the path mapped out in the Charter 36 years ago is still the best route for a world of sovereign nations, which is the reality of our time. Indeed, the possible alternatives do not bear serious consideration. In many respects we have gone further along the way than—especially in moments of anxiety or frustration—we tend to believe.

I hope that in the coming year we may see, and take part in, further steps forward both on particular issues and towards the general goal of a more peaceful and more equitable world community. I also hope that it will be a year both of efforts and of results on the international scene and that, in the months before us, the United Nations will be used in constructive ways to promote peace and to solve problems.

To bring this about will require understanding and statesmanship of the highest order. It will also require a realization that, while humanity must find the capacity and the will to tackle its difficulties, it has no real alternative for survival.

Chapter 1

Disarmament

International tensions and the continued arms race had an adverse effect on disarmament negotiations and deliberations during 1981, and as a consequence there were few tangible results in the field of disarmament. Various aspects of arms limitation, disarmament and the consequences of the arms race were considered by the Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States; the Committee on Disarmament, a 40-nation negotiating body meeting at Geneva; and the General Assembly and its First Committee.

The Disarmament Commission, meeting at United Nations Headquarters from 18 May to 5 June,<sup>(7)</sup> adopted a consensus recommendation restating some general principles in favour of nuclear and conventional disarmament (p. 21), and considered other matters without making substantive recommendations (p. 29). The Commission proposed to continue work in 1982 on unfinished business.

During much of the year, the Committee on Disarmament (p. 30) was the only active forum for interregional disarmament negotiations, since several sets of bilateral or trilateral talks outside the United Nations framework were in suspense. By the end of the year, the General Assembly was able to welcome the commencement, on 30 November, of negotiations between the USSR and the United States on medium-range nuclear forces in Europe.

The Committee met from 3 February to 24 April and from 11 June to 21 August, and submitted a report to the General Assembly.<sup>(4)</sup> Four of its ad hoc working groups met during the year, dealing respectively with security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, radiological weapons, chemical weapons and a comprehensive programme of disarmament. The Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons framed 18 draft articles or elements of an international convention to ban such weapons (p. 69). However, the Committee failed to agree on proposals to establish subsidiary bodies on a comprehensive nuclear-test ban or on cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament.

Work continued at two sessions in New York (4-15 May and 5-16 October) of the Preparatory Committee for the Second Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament,<sup>(8)</sup> as a result of which the Assembly decided to hold the special session in New York from 7 June to 9 July 1982.<sup>(13)</sup> Also, the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research completed in 1981 its first full year of operation (p. 106).

The General Assembly, at its regular 1981 session, discussed 20 disarmament items, some of them embracing more than one issue. Under those items, it adopted on 9 December a record number of 49 resolutions on specific disarmament questions. These resolutions were recommended by the First Committee, devoted to disarmament and related international security questions, following a general debate on disarmament at 24 meetings of the Committee (15 October-4 November). In addition, on 27 October,<sup>(12)</sup> the Assembly requested a report by the Secretary-General suggesting obligations and measures to protect nature from the pernicious effects of the arms race, and to limit and prohibit the types of military activity presenting the greatest danger for nature.

Aspects of disarmament negotiations and machinery were dealt with in four resolutions initiated under the collective item on implementation of the recommendations adopted at the 1978 special session of the General Assembly on disarmament.<sup>(62)</sup> The Assembly urged States to intensify efforts to conclude negotiations taking place in the Committee on Disarmament and other forums,<sup>(40)</sup> and called on States to observe the principles of its 1979 Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament<sup>(10)</sup> and to refrain from action that could hamper disarmament negotiations.<sup>(31)</sup> Noting that the Disarmament Commission had been unable to conclude consideration of its agenda, the Assembly requested the Commission to continue its work.<sup>(29)</sup> The Assembly urged the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations on priority items and to complete the elaboration of a comprehensive programme of disarmament (p. 22) in time for consideration by the Assembly at its 1982 special session.<sup>(33)</sup>

In other resolutions concerning disarmament bodies, the Assembly renewed the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference,<sup>(27)</sup> which held two brief sessions in 1981 without being able to agree on when such a conference might be held;<sup>(6)</sup> and it recommended completion of the first review of the membership of the Committee on Disarmament during the 1982 special session.

On nuclear disarmament, the Assembly adopted several resolutions. By one, noting that the Committee on Disarmament had not reached agreement on a basis for negotiations on nuclear disarmament, the Assembly called on the Committee to continue consultations concerning the establishment of an ad hoc working group on the question.<sup>(32)</sup> By another, the Assembly urged the United States and the USSR to pursue negotiations towards achievement of substantial reductions and significant qualitative limitations of strategic arms, and invited them to keep it informed of the results.<sup>(55)</sup>

The Assembly adopted three resolutions concerning non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war. By one, it urged all nuclear-weapon States and others to submit their views, proposals and practical suggestions for ensuring the prevention of nuclear war, for consideration at the 1982 special session.<sup>(14)</sup> By another, it declared again that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, and that the use or threat of use of such weapons should be prohibited, pending nuclear disarmament.<sup>(36)</sup> In a Declaration on the Prevention of Nuclear Catastrophe, the Assembly proclaimed that States and statesmen first to use nuclear weapons would be committing the gravest crime against humanity, and that doctrines allowing for such use were incompatible with moral standards and United Nations ideals.<sup>(61)</sup>

The Assembly adopted seven resolutions on the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones and related matters. Concerning Africa, it reiterated its call on all States to respect that continent as a nuclear-weapon-free zone and called on States, corporations and others to terminate military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, including the provision of electronic equipment and related technology;<sup>(21)</sup> and it reaffirmed that South Africa's nuclear plans and capability endangered peace and security.<sup>(20)</sup> With regard to Latin America, the Assembly, noting that the United States had ratified Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America, reiterated its invitation to France to do likewise.<sup>(17)</sup>

In three resolutions related to a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, the Assembly requested that its 1980 resolution urging steps to implement the proposal for such a zone<sup>(11)</sup> be transmitted to the 1982 special session;<sup>(22)</sup> it stated that the Israeli attack in June 1981 on Iraqi nuclear installations (p. 275) adversely affected prospects for establishing the zone and declared it imperative that Israel place its nuclear facilities under safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency;<sup>(23)</sup> and, after receiving a report by a Group of Experts on Israeli nuclear armament,<sup>(2)</sup> it requested the Security Council to prohibit all nuclear co-operation with Israel and to institute enforcement action to prevent that country from endangering peace and security by its nuclear-weapon capability.<sup>(59)</sup> The Assembly also reaffirmed its endorsement in principle of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.<sup>(24)</sup>

Further, with the object of making the Indian Ocean a zone of peace, the Assembly requested the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean to make every effort to accomplish preparatory work for a Conference on the Indian Ocean, including consideration of convening the Conference by the first half of 1983.<sup>(26)</sup> The Committee held four series of meetings at United Nations Headquarters in 1981<sup>(5)</sup> but was unable to harmonize views on convening the Conference.

With regard to other nuclear disarmament issues, the Assembly adopted seven resolutions, calling for the Committee on Disarmament: to elaborate an agreement on the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on territories where there were none at present;<sup>(51)</sup> to continue negotiations on security guarantees for non-nuclear-weapon States with a view to elaborating a convention;<sup>(42)</sup> to explore further efforts to reach a common formula on such guarantees which could be included in a legally binding international instrument;<sup>(43)</sup> to start negotiations on a conventions prohibiting neutron weapons;<sup>(38)</sup> to initiate negotiations on a treaty to prohibit nuclear-weapon tests as a matter of the highest priority<sup>(19)</sup> — a request that was coupled in another resolution with a call for a halt to all nuclear-test explosions by the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States;<sup>(18)</sup> and to pursue at an appropriate stage the question of a verified prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices.<sup>(53)</sup>

In the field of non-nuclear weapons, the Assembly adopted two resolutions on chemical weapons prohibition: by one it urged the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations on a chemical weapons convention and to re-establish its Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons for this purpose;<sup>(44)</sup> and by the other it urged similar action and also called on States to refrain from producing and deploying binary and other new types of chemical weapons.<sup>(45)</sup> In a separate action,<sup>(46)</sup> it extended the mandate of the Group of Experts to Investigate Reports on the Alleged Use of Chemical Weapons, which presented an initial, inconclusive report in November.<sup>(9)</sup>

The Assembly also requested the Committee to intensify negotiations towards an agreement to prohibit new weapons of mass destruction<sup>(25)</sup> and to continue negotiations for the early conclusion of a treaty prohibiting radiological weapons.<sup>(48)</sup> Regarding a possible arms race in outer space, it adopted two resolutions, one favouring the negotiation of effective and verifiable agreements, starting with one on anti-satellite systems,<sup>(49)</sup> and the other the conclusion of a general treaty against the stationing of weapons in space.<sup>(60)</sup>

In the sphere of conventional weapons, the Assembly urged States to sign and ratify the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects,<sup>(41)</sup> which was opened for signature in April together with three annexed Protocols covering such devices as incendiary weapons and land-mines. It requested the establishment of a group of experts to prepare a study on conventional armaments and disarmament,<sup>(47)</sup> and referred to the special session on disarmament a 1980 study on regional disarmament.<sup>(54)</sup>

In two resolutions on military budgets, the Assembly appealed to States to exercise restraint in their military expenditures while the Disarmament Commission considered principles for freezing and reducing them,<sup>(15)</sup> and recommended that all Member States report their military expenditures annually to the United Nations, using a form devised by an expert panel in 1980.<sup>(16)</sup> On the link between disarmament and international security, it called for action by States to render Security Council decisions effective as a spur to disarmament negotiations.<sup>(57)</sup>

In addition to the study on Israeli nuclear armament (mentioned above), five studies on aspects of disarmament were completed in 1981 and submitted to the Assembly, which took note of them in separate resolutions. The topics were disarmament and development,<sup>(34)</sup> disarmament and international security,<sup>(58)</sup> confidence-building measures,<sup>(52)</sup> institutional arrangements for disarmament<sup>(50)</sup> and a World Disarmament Campaign.<sup>(30)</sup> A study on a proposed international agency for satellite monitoring of compliance with international disarmament agreements was submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the 1982 special session (p. 104). The Assembly noted with appreciation a report on the work of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies.<sup>(39)</sup>

Finally, with regard to information and training of personnel on disarmament questions, the Assembly decided to continue the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament,<sup>(28)</sup> requested an annual compilation of a table listing the States parties to multilateral disarmament agreements,<sup>(35)</sup> and invited views concerning a proposed world-wide collection of signatures in support of disarmament.<sup>(37)</sup> The United Nations continued to issue two serial publications on disarmament activities: Disarmament: A Periodic Review by the United Nations<sup>(1)</sup> and The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook.<sup>(3)</sup>

General aspects of disarmament

General disarmament issues

DISARMAMENT COMMISSION ACTION. During its 1981 substantive session (New York, 18

May-5 June), the Disarmament Commission, as in previous years, considered various aspects of the arms race, with the aim of elaborating a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament. In its recommendations, adopted by consensus on 5 June and set out in its report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Commission noted with grave concern that it was meeting at a critical moment of deterioration in international relations and that the arms race, particularly in its nuclear aspect, had escalated to new levels. The Commission expressed the conviction that the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, ran counter to efforts to relax international tensions, that progress in disarmament would benefit the strengthening of peace and security and the improvement of international relations, and that all nations had a vital interest in nuclear and conventional disarmament.

The Commission referred to the special responsibility of nuclear-weapon States in achieving nuclear disarmament, and added that States with the largest military arsenals had special responsibility in pursuing conventional armaments reduction.

The Commission considered nuclear disarmament to be the most effective security assurance against the use of nuclear weapons (p. 34) and that, pending its achievement, the nuclear-weapon States should give effective assurance to non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of such weapons (p. 58). The Commission recommended the strengthening of the existing nuclear-weapon-free zone in Latin America (p. 48), the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in other regions and the establishment of zones of peace.

The most recent agreements on strategic arms control between the two most heavily armed nuclear-weapon States remained unratified, the Commission noted (p. 37). Further, it deplored the continuing increase in military expenditures (p. 89), largely in the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, and it emphasized the need to release such resources for international economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries (p. 96).

The Commission noted with profound regret that, although there had been limited progress in certain areas, there continued to be a marked lack of progress in others. Accordingly, it urged all States, particularly the nuclear-weapon States, to intensify the search for a common approach to disarmament, especially in areas with the highest concentration of armaments, including Europe. To that end, it was urgent to initiate or intensify negotiations, particularly multilateral negotiations on questions vital to both nuclear-weapon and non-nuclear-weapon States.

The United States reserved its position on the Commission's recommendations, noting that they were based on a working paper introduced in the closing days of the session and observing that the Commission's deliberations had been insufficiently detailed to permit the development of considered judgements on the important and complicated issues covered.

Comprehensive disarmament programme

CONSIDERATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON DISARMAMENT. Work on a comprehensive programme of disarmament continued at the 1981 session of the Committee on Disarmament<sup>(1)</sup> on the basis of an outline adopted in 1980,<sup>(4)</sup> providing for an introduction or preamble and chapters on objectives, principles, priorities, measures, stages of implementation, and machinery and procedures.

The Committee's Ad Hoc Working Group on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament, meeting between 19 February and 17 August, completed a preliminary examination of all chapters except the introduction or preamble, whose form and substance could not be determined pending completion of substantive chapters. The Group considered a number of working papers, containing the views of various delegations on the programme.

At the conclusion of its work in 1981, the Group reported to the Committee that, although it had made progress towards elaboration of the programme, several important and complex issues remained unresolved, particularly those relating to measures, stages and the nature of the programme. It had used a four-stage programme as a working hypothesis and had then discussed which disarmament measures should be included in the first stage, but different views had been expressed on specific measures and on time-frames for implementation. The Group recommended that it resume work in January 1982.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In a resolution of 9 December on the report of the Committee on Disarmament,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly requested that body to complete, during the first part of its 1982 session, the elaboration of a comprehensive programme of disarmament and to submit the programme in time for consideration and adoption by the Assembly at the second special session devoted to disarmament, in June/July 1982 (p. 27).

Discussing in the First Committee the work done on the programme, Mexico remarked that views still differed on three points: whether to establish the number of stages in the programme, whether to determine their duration and what the content of those stages should be.

A number of countries, such as Algeria, Chile, Egypt, India, Malaysia, Nepal, Pakistan, Somalia and Yugoslavia, stated that the programme should specify disarmament priorities to be achieved within certain time-frames. Ghana thought the document should be legally binding. India recalled that in 1962 both the USSR and the United States had presented draft treaties on general and complete disarmament which were to have been implemented in their entirety within a decade or so.<sup>(5)</sup> In China's view, the programme would facilitate disarmament by providing for specific measures by stages.

Austria and Finland, however, expressed doubts about the advisability of rigid time-frames for the various stages, but favoured regular review conferences to monitor and direct the implementation of the programme. The need for review was also stressed by the Federal Republic of Germany, which added that the credibility of the programme would be judged on the basis of how realistic its goals were. Belgium believed that the task of reviewing implementation could be entrusted to the Disarmament Commission. Sweden remarked that the programme's impact would be completely dependent on the will to implement it through multilateral negotiations.

Bangladesh suggested that the programme might also envisage parallel progress in dispute settlement and in building a United Nations interregional security and peace-keeping capability.

Czechoslovakia observed that the socialist States of Eastern Europe saw the programme as a practical instrument for a comprehensive revitalization of disarmament negotiations in all necessary directions. The German Democratic Republic considered that calls to alter disarmament priorities in the name of realism, especially regarding such issues as verification and "transparency", were actually appeals to sit still and must therefore be rejected. Poland suggested that, apart from specific priorities, the programme should reaffirm the principles of disarmament negotiations, such as the sovereign equality of States, undiminished security for all at the lowest possible level of military force, and a balance of rights and obligations.

Implementation of the resolutions of the tenth special session

By a resolution of 9 December 1981<sup>(3)</sup> on implementation of the recommendations and decisions of its tenth special session—the first such session devoted to disarmament, held in 1978<sup>(4)</sup>—the General Assembly expressed concern about the arms race and constantly growing military budgets, and called on States to promote international security and disarmament. It urged States to intensify efforts to bring to a successful end the negotiations in the Committee on Disarmament and other international forums, and to proceed to or resume negotiations on disarmament agreements in priority areas. It recommended that the Committee on Disarmament concentrate on substantive and priority items with a view to achieving tangible results (p. 31). Calling on States to refrain from actions which could have negative effects in regard to disarmament, the Assembly invited all States engaged in disarmament negotiations outside the United Nations framework to keep it and the Committee on Disarmament informed of results, and to implement the results so as to create conditions for further progress.

This resolution, sponsored by 28 States, was adopted by the Assembly without vote, after the First Committee approved it in similar fashion on 20 November, on the basis of a draft revised by its sponsors. It was introduced by Yugoslavia, which stressed that, despite the significance attached by all to implementation of the measures set out in the Final Document of the 1978 session,<sup>(2)</sup> there was deep concern that many aims of the session had not been attained. Accordingly, the sponsors felt that implementation of the decisions taken at that session would be the best way to halt the arms race and create conditions conducive to disarmament.

The sponsors' revisions to the draft reflected parts of an earlier draft resolution by the German Democratic Republic and Mongolia, entitled "Obligation of States to contribute to effective disarmament negotiations".<sup>(1)</sup> By that proposal, the Assembly would have expressed alarm about escalation of the arms race and conviction that disarmament negotiations must be conducted without pre-conditions. In addition to urging intensified negotiating efforts, it would have called for preservation and expansion of the existing system of disarmament agreements, and recommended that special attention be attached at future Assembly sessions to continuous review of such negotiations. In the light of the ideas incorporated in the 28-nation draft, of which it had become a sponsor, the German Democratic Republic decided not to press the proposal to a vote.

The United States, which joined in the consensus, stated that, although it strongly supported the call for genuine progress in arms control, it was concerned that the resolution failed to acknowledge the importance of verification, balance and mutual restraint.

During the First Committee debate on disarmament, several States referred to the issue of verification of compliance with disarmament agreements. The USSR stated that verification should proceed from a clear-cut agreement on arms limitation and disarmament measures, should be commensurate with the scope and form of the obligations established by agreements on arms limitation and disarmament, should not infringe on the sovereign rights of States or allow interference in their internal affairs, and should not be used for a hostile and slanderous campaign by one State against another or serve as a means of complicating international relations. The United Kingdom held that, in most disarmament negotiations, the problem of verification would be near the heart of the discussion; efforts for the conclusion of disarmament agreements built on confidence must be redoubled, and confidence could develop only if there was a willingness to move away from secrecy towards a freer exchange of information.

France also stressed the importance of verification provisions as necessary conditions for mutual confidence in disarmament agreements, while Belgium stated that verification mechanisms, if they were to be credible and effective, must be strictly adapted to the material to be verified. New Zealand believed that greater openness in the provision of information and flexibility in considering verification proposals, especially on the part of States which had shown reluctance to co-operate in those areas, would contribute substantially to disarmament prospects.

Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Having reviewed the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 34/83 C of 11 December 1979, 35/46 of 3 December 1980 and 35/152 E of 12 December 1980,

Reaffirming the importance of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which constitutes a comprehensive basis for further efforts towards promoting international security, halting and reversing the arms race, and the achievement of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Considering it imperative to achieve genuine progress in all negotiations dealing with disarmament issues,

Convinced that the success of disarmament negotiations, in which all peoples of the world have a vital interest, would be achieved through the active participation of Member States in such negotiations, thereby contributing to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament,

Deeply concerned about the continuing arms race and, in particular, the nuclear-arms race, which constitutes a growing threat to international peace and security,

Mindful of a growing awareness among States and peoples of the dangers of the continuing arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and of the need to eliminate the danger of the outbreak of a nuclear war,

Calling attention to the tasks set forth in the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, which demand intensified efforts to be taken in the Committee on Disarmament and other appropriate forums,

Stressing the need to promote the development, strengthening and intensification of international co-operation designed to achieve general and complete disarmament, as defined by the General Assembly at its tenth special session,

Noting with concern the lack of tangible progress with respect to the implementation of the measures set forth in the Programme of Action in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that at its second special session devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982, the General Assembly will undertake a review of the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the first special session on disarmament,

Conscious of the need to contribute to the success of the second special session through concrete accomplishments in the field of disarmament, thereby maintaining and further intensifying the momentum generated by the first special session,

1. Expresses its deep concern about the continued arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and about the constantly growing military budgets, which bear negative consequences and pose a growing threat to international peace and security as well as to the development of States, particularly developing countries;

2. Urgently calls upon all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other major military Powers, immediately to take steps in order to promote international security and lead to the effective halting and reversing of the arms race and to disarmament;

3. Urges those States also to intensify their efforts to bring to a successful end the negotiations which are currently taking place in the Committee on Disarmament and other international forums and to proceed to or resume negotiations on effective international agreements on items of the highest priority as laid down by the first special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

4. Recommends that the Committee on Disarmament should concentrate its work on the substantive and priority items on its agenda with a view to achieving tangible results in order to contribute to the success of the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament and to the accomplishment of the tasks set forth in the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade;

5. Calls upon all States to refrain from any actions which have or may have negative effects on the implementation of the relevant recommendations and decisions of the first special session devoted to disarmament;

6. Invites all States which are engaged in disarmament and/or arms limitation negotiations outside the framework of the United Nations to keep the General Assembly and the Committee on Disarmament informed of the results of such negotiations in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

7. Also calls upon States engaged in such negotiations outside the framework of the United Nations to implement the results achieved, so as to create favourable conditions for further progress;

8. Recommends that the General Assembly should keep under review at its forthcoming sessions the implementation of its recommendations and decisions on disarmament issues.

International co-operation for disarmament

In a resolution adopted on 9 December 1981 on international co-operation for disarmament<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly called on all States to observe the principles of its 1979 Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament<sup>(2)</sup> so as to secure a constructive mutual dialogue aimed at limiting armaments, particularly nuclear weapons. It called on Member States to be guided in all disarmament negotiations by the generally recognized principles of international law; to submit and constructively consider disarmament proposals; to refrain from action that could hamper, complicate or render impossible disarmament negotiations, particularly by discussing unrelated issues; and to disseminate widely the principles of international co-operation to achieve disarmament.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 116 to none, with 26 abstentions, following First Committee approval on 23 November by a recorded vote of 95 to none, with 25 abstentions.

Sponsored by 28 States, the resolution was introduced by Czechoslovakia, which stated that the principal aim of the text was to encourage co-operation among States aimed at the implementation of disarmament objectives, especially those emanating from the 1978 special session of the Assembly on disarmament.<sup>(4)</sup> Such co-operation should be based on clear principles, reflecting a political will to find acceptable, practical solutions.

The United Kingdom, explain in the abstention of the European Community (EC) member States in the vote, stated that the proposal added nothing to the principles of such international instruments as the Charter of the United Nations or the 1978 Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly.<sup>(1)</sup> Finland, Mexico and Turkey also abstained, recalling their reservations on the 1979 Declaration.

China, while favouring the concept of co-operation for disarmament, did not participate in the vote, since it regarded as ambiguous the phrase suggesting that "unrelated issues" should not be raised in disarmament negotiations.

Pakistan voted in favour but found difficulties with a preambular paragraph stating that a new round of the arms race would jeopardize international stability; Pakistan's view was that the increasing use of force led to international tension, of which the arms race was one manifestation.

International co-operation for disarmament

The General Assembly,

Stressing again the urgent need for an active and sustained effort to intensify the comprehensive implementation of the recommendations and decisions unanimously adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, as contained in the Final Document of that session,

Convinced that, to this end, effective, constructive and continuing co-operation among all States at all levels, including the highest, on the basis of mutual confidence and political will, is essential.

Deeply concerned over the growing danger of a new round of the arms race, which would seriously jeopardize international stability and increase the danger of a nuclear catastrophe,

Convinced that the halting of the arms race and adoption of effective disarmament measures, particularly in the field of nuclear disarmament, would release considerable financial and material resources to be used for the economic and social development of all States, in particular developing countries,

Taking into consideration the central role and primary responsibility of the United Nations in combining efforts and in supporting and developing active co-operation among States aimed at the solution of disarmament problems,

Recalling in this context the Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament, of 11 December 1979,

Noting that that Declaration may play a positive role in concerting efforts for the achievement of effective measures in the implementation of the goals set forth to this end in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

1. Calls upon all States to observe the principles and make active use of the ideas contained in the Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament so as to secure a constructive mutual dialogue aimed at limiting armaments, particularly nuclear weapons, through the conclusion of agreements, keeping in mind the ultimate objective of general and complete disarmament under effective international control:

2. Calls upon Member States to be guided in all disarmament negotiations by the generally recognized principles of international law and to submit and constructively to consider, with full responsibility and in the spirit of co-operation, proposals and initiatives aimed at promoting speedy progress in disarmament negotiations and facilitating the achievement of mutually acceptable concrete disarmament measures;

3. Calls upon Member States to refrain from any action that could hamper, complicate or render impossible the disarmament negotiations which are under way, the opening of new negotiations or the achievement of specific disarmament agreements and, in particular, not to hinder possible progress in negotiations on disarmament by the discussion of unrelated issues;

4. Recommends that the Preparatory Committee for the Second Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament should make active use of the Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament in the preparations for the special session;

5. Calls upon Member States to disseminate widely, in connection with Disarmament Week, the principles of international co-operation designed to achieve the goals of disarmament.

Proposed World Disarmament Conference

AD HOC COMMITTEE ACTIVITIES. The Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference held two sessions in 1981, consisting of two meetings on 6 and 8 April, and three meetings between 6 and 10 July.

In its report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee stated that, through its Chairman, it had maintained close contact with representatives of the nuclear-weapon States so as to remain currently informed of their attitudes.

According to the report, the USSR believed the Assembly should take a decision that would contribute to the realization of previous recommendations for convening such a conference, which could adopt specific decisions on halting the arms race and realizing disarmament.

The four other nuclear Powers maintained their reservations on the practicability or value of a conference. China's position remained unchanged: it had previously maintained as pre-conditions for a conference that the major nuclear Powers undertake not to be the first to use nuclear weapons and that they end all forms of their military presence in other countries. France stated that the international situation was not conducive to real progress on such an initiative, and that account should be taken of the achievements of the Assembly's 1978 special session on disarmament<sup>(3)</sup> and the conclusions that would emerge from its second such session, in 1982 (p. 27). The United Kingdom maintained that, in the light of the deteriorating international situation in the past two years, it was not useful to continue to consider, for the time being, the idea of a world disarmament conference. The United States continued to believe it premature to set a date and begin preparations for a conference; insufficient political agreement on the issues would probably hinder rather than assist efforts to reach concrete and verifiable arms control measures.

For its part, the Committee reiterated that the idea of a world disarmament conference had wide support among the United Nations membership, though with varying degrees of emphasis and differences regarding conditions and certain aspects relevant to its convening, including the deteriorating international situation. It was also evident that no consensus on convening a conference under current conditions had been reached among the nuclear-weapon States, whose participation was widely deemed essential. The Committee suggested that the Assembly might decide that, after its 1982 disarmament session, a conference would take place as soon as the necessary consensus was reached.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In a resolution on the World Disarmament Conference,<sup>(2)</sup> adopted without vote on 9 December, the General Assembly renewed the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee, requested it to maintain close contact with nuclear and all other States in order to remain informed of their attitudes, and asked it to report to the Assembly at its special session on disarmament as well as at its 1982 regular session. The 10-nation text, introduced by Sri Lanka, was approved by the First Committee on 25 November, also without vote.

Albania dissociated itself from the consensus, stating that the proposal for a world disarmament conference had been made by the USSR for propaganda purposes and that holding such a conference would adversely affect the significance of other United Nations disarmament activities. The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, doubted whether further meetings of the Ad Hoc Committee at the current stage would lead to the convening of a conference. The United States assumed that any expenditure flowing from the resolution would be made without prejudice to the United Nations zero-growth budget policy.

A number of Eastern European States and others, including Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam, emphasized the importance they attached to convening a conference following the 1982 special session. Bulgaria felt that the Assembly should play an active part at that session in speeding up talks on urgent disarmament questions, thus paving the way for a conference. Poland considered that the projected comprehensive disarmament programme (p. 22) must envisage the convening of a world disarmament conference at an early date, and the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Zambia viewed the special session as a step towards convening the conference. Zimbabwe held that such a conference would be in the interest of peace and security.

World Disarmament Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2833(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2930(XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3183(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3260(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3469(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/190 of 21 December 1976, 32/89 of 12 December 1977, 33/69 of 14 December 1978, 34/81 of 11 December 1979 and 35/151 of 12 December 1980.

Reiterating its conviction that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that all States should be in a position to contribute to the adoption of measures for the achievement of this goal,

Stressing anew its conviction that a world disarmament conference, adequately prepared and convened at an appropriate time, could provide the realization of such an aim and that the co-operation of all nuclear-weapon Powers would considerably facilitate its attainment,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference,

Recalling that, in paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it decided that, at the earliest appropriate time, a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

Recalling that, in paragraph 23 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, the General Assembly considered it pertinent also to recall that in paragraph 122 of the Final Document it had stated that at the earliest appropriate time a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

Recalling further that the subject of the possible convening of a world disarmament conference has been included in the draft agenda for the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982,

1. Notes with satisfaction that in its report to the General Assembly the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference stated, inter alia, the following:

"Having regard for the important requirements of a world disarmament conference to be convened at the earliest appropriate time, with universal participation and with adequate preparation, the General Assembly may wish to decide that, after its second special session devoted to disarmament, a world disarmament conference would take place as soon as the necessary consensus on its convening has been reached";

2. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to maintain close contact with the representatives of the States possessing nuclear weapons in order to remain currently informed of their attitudes, as well as with all other States, and to consider any possible relevant proposals and observations which might be made to the Committee, especially having in mind paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to report to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament and at its thirty-seventh session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "World Disarmament Conference".

Preparations for the second special session of the General Assembly on disarmament (1982)

In 1981 the General Assembly endorsed recommendations on the agenda and dates (7 June-9 July 1982) for its second special session on disarmament. The decision to convene the session in 1982 had been taken by the Assembly in 1978<sup>(5)</sup> following the first such session—the Assembly's tenth special session—held at United Nations Headquarters from 23 May to 1 July 1978.<sup>(9)</sup> The Preparatory Committee for the Second Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, which began work in 1980,<sup>(10)</sup> held its second and third sessions in 1981, at which it made recommendations that the Assembly endorsed in December.<sup>(7)</sup>

sions and recommendations would be prepared at its next substantive session (in 1982).

PREPARATORY COMMITTEE ACTIVITIES. AS a result of two sessions held in 1981 at United Nations Headquarters, from 4 to 15 May and from 5 to 16 October, the 78-member Preparatory Committee for the Second Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament recommended in its report to the Assembly<sup>(3)</sup> that the special session be held at United Nations Headquarters between 7 June and 9 July 1982. It recommended also that every effort be made to ensure that, in so far as possible, decisions on matters of substance would be adopted by consensus at that session; that Member States should be represented at the highest possible political level; that the session have a committee of the whole, a working group on the comprehensive programme of disarmament and as many open-ended groups or subsidiary organs as necessary; and that non-governmental organizations and peace and disarmament institutions be accorded the same facilities at the 1982 session as at the previous disarmament session in 1978.

The Committee recommended a provisional agenda for the session, to include the following substantive items: review of implementation of the decisions and recommendations adopted at the 1978 disarmament session; consideration and adoption of the comprehensive programme of disarmament (p. 22); implementation of the Assembly's Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, adopted in 1980,<sup>(6)</sup> and consideration of proposals by Member States; enhancing the effectiveness of disarmament machinery and strengthening the United Nations role in that field, including the possible convening of a world disarmament conference; measures to mobilize world public opinion in favour of disarmament; and adoption, in an appropriate format, of the document or documents of the session. There would be a general debate, including a review and appraisal of the international situation in the light of the pressing need for specific, generally agreed measures to eliminate the danger of war, halt and reverse the arms race, and achieve substantial progress in disarmament.

The Committee also recommended that it hold one further session, from 26 April to 14 May 1982, to continue its preparatory work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution on preparations for the second special session devoted to disarmament,<sup>(7)</sup> the General Assembly endorsed the report and recommendations of the Preparatory Committee and invited Member States to submit to the Secretary-General, by 31 March 1982, further views on substantive issues. In addition, the Assembly requested all Member States engaged in bilateral, regional or multilateral negotiations on disarmament issues outside the United Nations framework to submit information on such negotiations to the Assembly before the special session. The Assembly adopted this resolution on 9 December without vote, following similar approval by the First Committee on 25 November of a 43-nation draft introduced by Yugoslavia.

In a resolution on the activities of the Disarmament Commission,<sup>(8)</sup> also adopted on 9 December, the Assembly requested the Commission to submit at the special session a substantive report on its work.

Greece, one of the sponsors of the resolution on preparations for the special session, believed that the debate at the session should be detailed and should focus on all forms of disarmament and on concrete proposals to ensure their verification. Lebanon hoped States would be represented at the highest possible political level and recalled its 1980 suggestion that heads of State should attend.

In the view of Bangladesh, the special session should help achieve an increased awareness by the public and Governments of the need to halt and reverse the arms race and of the urgency of progress towards disarmament. Uganda also stressed the role of the session in focusing public opinion on concrete action for disarmament.

Brazil said the session could be meaningful only if States, particularly the nuclear-weapon Powers, acknowledged the widespread concern for positive steps to replace procedural haggling, the empty rhetoric of declaratory resolutions and worn-out accusations of blame. The Byelorussian SSR stated that the session could be successful if all States attended with a serious desire to make honest and constructive attempts to solve the problems of restricting the arms race, and if they relinquished intentions to distract the Assembly from making such efforts. Chile thought success would be possible only by creating a climate of peace and harmony and achieving greater stability in international relations. In China's view, the session should find the root cause for the continued intensification of the arms race and the lack of progress in disarmament, so as to set a correct course for future efforts.

The German Democratic Republic hoped the session would provide fresh impetus for opening, resuming or continuing disarmament talks. The Federal Republic of Germany thought the session could lay the conceptual groundwork for future world-wide disarmament negotiations and play a part in bringing them to a conclusion. Zambia saw it as giving new impetus to negotiations on specific urgent problems.

France said it was important for the Assembly to take cognizance at the special session, if not of any far-reaching results, at least of clear and concrete signs of a willingness to act for disarmament. Ghana warned that the session's significance would be lost unless delegations, particularly of the super-Powers and their allies, showed a greater commitment to disarmament than in the past. In the view of Italy, the session's success would be measured by its ability to channel efforts into an agreed and dynamic framework which took account of the legitimate security requirements of States. Jamaica hoped the session would generate a new momentum towards general and complete disarmament.

Nigeria hoped the session would be used to reassess the attitudes of all States to disarmament, revamp disarmament machinery and adopt concrete instruments and measures. In Romania's opinion, the session could restore confidence in the possibility of disarmament; its goal should be to crystallize guidelines for action that would radically change the world situation. Togo thought the session should emphasize that nations and peoples could benefit immediately from disarmament.

Commenting on the activities of the Preparatory Committee, Argentina observed that it had engaged in sterile discussions which, though finally producing a draft agenda for the special session, had prevented members from preparing for the work of the session.

The USSR, in a letter to the Secretary-General dated 27 April from its Minister for Foreign Affairs,<sup>(1)</sup> considered that the special session should provide further stimulus for arms limitation and disarmament talks and serve as a landmark on the road to convening a world disarmament conference.

Preparations for the session

The General Assembly,

Recalling section III of its resolution 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, in which it decided to convene a second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament in 1982 at United Nations Headquarters in New York,

Having considered the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Second Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament,

1. Endorses the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Second Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament and the recommendations contained therein for the session to be held in New York from 7 June to 9 July 1982;

2. Endorses a/so the recommendation of the Preparatory Committee to meet in New York from 26 April to 14 May 1982 in order to continue consideration of substantive issues related to the session, including the implementation of the decisions and recommendations adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, for incorporation in the document or documents to be adopted at the second special session devoted to disarmament, and any remaining organizational and procedural matters;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the members of the Preparatory Committee for their constructive contribution to its work;

4. Invites Member States to submit to the Secretary-General, not later than 31 March 1982, further views on the substantive issues related to the second special session devoted to disarmament, including the implementation of the decisions and recommendations adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session;

5. Requests all Member States engaged in bilateral, regional or multilateral negotiations on disarmament issues outside the framework of the United Nations to submit appropriate information on such negotiations to the General Assembly, in accordance with paragraph 27 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the Assembly, before the second special session devoted to disarmament;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to render to the Preparatory Committee all necessary assistance for the completion of its work.

Disarmament Commission

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMISSION. The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, held its 1981 substantive session from 18 May to 5 June at United Nations Headquarters. Its agenda included two items carried over from previous sessions on which it adopted recommendations that were included in its 1981 report to the General Assembly:<sup>(1)</sup> aspects of the arms race (p. 21), particularly the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament (p. 34), with the aim of elaborating a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament; and reduction of military budgets (p. 89). It considered for the first time a matter pertaining to South Africa's nuclear capability (p. 46). New items appearing on the Commission's 1981 agenda concerned plans for a United Nations study on conventional weapons (p. 85) and preparation of the Commission's report for the 1982 special session of the Assembly on disarmament (p. 27).

At an organizational session on 10 and 11 December 1981, the Commission reviewed the draft resolutions then before the Assembly having a bearing on its work, and discussed its schedule and agenda for 1982.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution on the report of the Disarmament Commission, adopted without vote on 9 December,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly noted that the Commission had not been able to conclude consideration of the items on its agenda. The Assembly requested the Commission to continue its work and to meet for up to four weeks in 1982. The Commission was also asked to submit a substantive report at the Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament. The First Committee approved the text on 20 November, also without vote.

The resolution was sponsored by Barbados, Egypt and Uruguay. Introducing it, Egypt observed that, while important deliberations had taken place in the Commission on a number of items, further deliberations were required before that body could make substantive recommendations.

After approval of the resolution in Committee, Brazil expressed confidence that the Commission would complete discussion of the guidelines for a study on conventional weapons (p. 85), while the Federal Republic of Germany thought the Commission's 1982 session should be kept shorter than usual in view of the Assembly's special session.

In the Committee's debate, Australia said care should be taken to ensure that the Commission did not become another defunct United Nations body, meeting year after year without achievement or purpose. Austria suggested that the scope of the Commission's activities be discussed at the special session on disarmament. Nepal also thought the Commission's mandate should be reviewed at the Assembly's special session, as a repetition in the Commission of the First Committee's debate served no useful purpose. Believing that the Commission had not found a proper identity, Spain thought it necessary to examine whether the Commission's existence met a definite need. Yugoslavia said it could not agree with attempts to push the Commission to the sidelines and prevent it from dealing with substantive issues.

Several States expressed dissatisfaction with developments at the Commission's 1981 session. Brazil said the non-aligned, neutral and other States had not been given a fair chance to discuss the substance of items and to have their opinions taken into account. Guyana expressed concern about what it saw as the efforts of some States to obstruct the Commission's work, and said it could not agree to leave disarmament negotiations to a small directorate. Nigeria complained that a few members of the Commission tended to exercise the semblance of a veto when consensus was sought on issues such as the nuclear capability of South Africa. Peru saw certain practices and the positions of some States as incompatible with the holding of proper negotiations. Venezuela stressed that the consensus rule should not become a tool used to advance the interests of the major Powers.

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,
Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Emphasizing again the importance of an effective follow-up to the relevant recommendations and decisions adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Considering the important role that the Disarmament Commission has played and the significant contribution it has made in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions of the tenth special session.

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, 34/83 H of 11 December 1979 and 35/152 F of 12 December 1980,

1. Takes note of the report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Notes that the Disarmament Commission was not able to conclude its consideration of the items on its agenda;

3. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to continue consideration of the items included in the agenda of its session in 1981 and, to that end, to meet for a period not exceeding four weeks during 1992;

4. Requests the Disarmament Commission to submit a substantive report on its work to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the report of the Committee on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the thirty-sixth session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that it may require for implementing the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

Committee on Disarmament

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE. The 40-member Committee on Disarmament met at Geneva from 3 February to 24 April and from 11 June to 21 August 1981. Holding 49 formal and 45 informal plenary meetings, it discussed substantially the same agenda items as in 1980,<sup>(2)</sup> concerning a nuclear-test ban (p. 64), cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament (p. 35), security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States (p. 58), chemical weapons (p. 69), new types of weapons of mass destruction (p. 77) and radiological weapons (p. 79), a comprehensive programme of disarmament (p. 22), and adoption of its report to the General Assembly.<sup>(1)</sup> It also dealt with the Israeli attack of 7 June on Iraqi nuclear installations (p. 53) and discussed the question of its own membership (p. 33).

On 12 February the Committee re-established the three ad hoc working groups set up in 1980, on security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, chemical weapons and radiological weapons. All three groups met in 1981, as did the Ad Hoc Working Group on the comprehensive disarmament programme, also established in 1980. In addition, the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events continued its work in relation to a prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests.

The Committee was unable to reach agreement on the establishment of further subsidiary bodies, such as a working group on a nuclear-test ban. In this connection, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sweden and Yugoslavia submitted a paper for consideration at the 1982 session whereby the Committee's rules of procedure would be amended to ensure that the rule of consensus would not be used to prevent the establishment of subsidiary bodies.

Comments on the results of the Committee's work in 1981 were submitted in August in papers by China, a group of socialist States and the "Group of 21" (Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire). The group of socialist States said that even in the difficult international situation they had maintained an approach aimed at constructive negotiations and were convinced of the importance of intensifying efforts to limit the arms race. The Group of 21 considered it imperative to initiate negotiations to reduce international tensions and halt and reverse the arms race, especially the nuclear-arms race.

Introducing the Committee's report in the Assembly's First Committee, the representative of Indonesia, as its current Chairman, noted that the Committee on Disarmament and its subsidiary bodies had held 258 meetings in 1981, as compared with 185 in the previous year. He cautioned against judging the work of the Committee solely on the basis of concrete results and suggested that it be assessed on the basis of the proposals considered and the ongoing discussions, which could give a clearer picture of the complex nature of the problems and of the obstacles in the path of progress.

Work programme of the Committee on Disarmament

In a resolution of 9 December 1981 on the work of the Committee on Disarmament,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly urged the Committee to continue or undertake substantive negotiations in 1982 on priority issues on its agenda, providing its existing ad hoc working groups with appropriate negotiating mandates and establishing groups on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and on the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests. The Committee was requested to complete the elaboration of a comprehensive disarmament programme (p. 22) and to submit at the Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27) a report on the state of negotiations on the questions it was considering. The Assembly invited Committee members involved in separate negotiations on specific disarmament questions to intensify their efforts and submit to the Committee a full report on the status of negotiations and the results achieved.

The Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 136 to none, with 9 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 115 to none, with 8 abstentions.

In another resolution of 9 December,<sup>(5)</sup> on implementation of the recommendations and decisions of its tenth special session, held in 1978,<sup>(6)</sup> the Assembly recommended that the Committee on Disarmament concentrate on substantive and priority items with a view to achieving tangible results in order to contribute to the success of the 1982 special session on disarmament and to the accomplishment of the tasks set forth in the Assembly's Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, adopted in 1980.<sup>(2)</sup> In a third resolution of the same date, on prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests, the Assembly urged Committee members to bear in mind that the consensus rule should not be used in such a manner as to prevent the establishment of subsidiary bodies.<sup>(3)</sup>

mittee and its working groups had worked intensively and striven for progress, they had not been able to achieve concrete results or even to begin substantive negotiations on the highest priority items on the Committee's agenda, concerning nuclear disarmament. Three and a half years after the Assembly's first special session on disarmament in 1978, at which the decision was taken to establish the Committee,<sup>(1)</sup> there was resistance on the part of some of its members, including some nuclear-weapon States, to negotiate in that body on specific issues or to establish working groups for that purpose.

The USSR, although voting in favour, considered that the work and mandates of the Committee's subsidiary bodies were its own prerogative; further, the content, volume and character of information on negotiations conducted outside the Committee fell within the competence of States parties to such talks. Australia, which also voted in favour, believed similarly that instructing the Committee how to conduct its work constituted unwarranted interference by the Assembly, while Belgium, France and the United States abstained for similar reasons; the United States added that the Committee was not the only forum for disarmament negotiations and its involvement at an inappropriate stage could even jeopardize other negotiations. Turkey, voting in favour, regarded the resolution as procedural and thought the Committee could not object to requests that it speed its work.

Explaining their abstention in the vote on the resolution concerning a nuclear-test ban, Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece and Japan considered that the text challenged the basic principle of consensus in the Committee on Disarmament. The USSR also had reservations concerning the text's reference to matters within the Committee's exclusive prerogatives.

In the First Committee's debate, Nigeria said the Committee on Disarmament should be able to justify its existence through its ability to function according to the machinery it had set up or wished to set up, including the establishment of ad hoc working groups, particularly on nuclear disarmament and a nuclear-test ban. Egypt, commenting that the consensus rule had been used in such a way as to prevent the Committee from realizing even procedural progress, said the Committee should consider freeing the establishment of subsidiary bodies from the application of that rule. India contended that the rule had been intended to apply to substantive questions, not procedural ones, and hoped it would not be used to obstruct the establishment of working groups.

what they saw as a trend to change the consensus rule into a type of veto; Uganda added that, if the Committee could not take decisions, steps should be studied to ensure that its rules were not used to prevent it from conducting negotiations. The need to allow the Committee to function autonomously was also mentioned by Madagascar. Also critical of the Committee's inability to take decisions even on procedural matters, Jamaica said it should be more responsive to Assembly directions.

Algeria ascribed the absence of progress in the Committee largely to the determination of some Powers to reduce its role to that of a registry of accords negotiated in private clubs. Noting that not a single agreement had emerged from the Committee since its first session, Malaysia saw the lack of progress as testimony that the two super-Powers were unwilling to negotiate in good faith. Nepal stated that the deadlock in the Committee was due basically to the relations between the USSR and the United States; it was sceptical about any increase in membership and thought the Committee devoted too much time to procedural questions. Sweden said the Committee had achieved so few successes due to the fact that the leading military Powers, particularly the two super-Powers, had not demonstrated readiness or willingness to exploit its potential because of the way they interpreted their own security needs and interests. Venezuela expressed concern that in priority areas, where the Committee could accomplish useful work, its efforts had been obstructed by some Powers which were trying to divert attention to non-priority subjects.

The USSR asserted that the United States had blocked the establishment of working groups, and Mongolia said the Committee's lack of progress was due to the fact that Western States were blocking its substantive consideration of priority issues.

Austria and Finland thought ways to increase the Committee's effectiveness, including a review of its membership, should be discussed at the special session on disarmament. While improvements in organizational and procedural aspects would help, Indonesia stated, an improved international political climate and a genuine will to negotiate remained the key to successful performance.

No one believed the Committee could take over the role of all bilateral arms control negotiations, said Australia, but its work was crucial to future negotiations. Poland, while disappointed with the results, lauded the Committee as the only working disarmament body whose representative character had made it possible for the representatives of all the nuclear-weapon Powers to remain on speaking terms in disarmament matters.

Report of the Committee on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 B of 11 December 1979 and 35/152 J of 12 December 1980,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Disarmament,

Affirming that the establishment of ad hoc working groups offers the best available machinery for the conduct of multilateral negotiations on items on the agenda of the Committee on Disarmament and contributes to the strengthening of the negotiating role of the Committee on Disarmament,

Regretting that, despite the expressed wish of the great majority of members of the Committee on Disarmament, the establishment of ad hoc working groups to undertake multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament and on prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests was prevented during the session of the Committee in 1981,

Expressing its deep concern that the Committee on Disarmament has not thus far been able to achieve concrete results on disarmament issues which have been under consideration for a number of years,

Convinced that the Committee on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should play the central role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament and on the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Stressing that negotiations on specific disarmament issues conducted outside the Committee on Disarmament should in no way serve as a pretext for preventing the conduct of multilateral negotiations on such questions in the Committee,

1. Urges the Committee on Disarmament to continue or undertake, during its session in 1982, substantive negotiations on the priority questions of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and the other relevant resolutions of the Assembly on those questions and, in order to reach that goal, to provide the existing ad hoc working groups with appropriate negotiating mandates and to establish, as a matter of urgency, ad hoc working groups on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and on the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests:

2. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to complete, during the first part of its session in 1992, the elaboration of a comprehensive programme of disarmament and to submit the programme in time for consideration and adoption by the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982;

3. Also requests the Committee on Disarmament to intensify its negotiations on priority questions of disarmament, so that it may be in a position to contribute, through concrete accomplishments, to the success of the second special session devoted to disarmament:

4. Invites the members of the Committee on Disarmament involved in separate negotiations on specific priority questions of disarmament to intensify their efforts to achieve without further delay a positive conclusion of those negotiations for submission to the Committee and, at the same time, to submit to the Committee a full report on their separate negotiations and the results achieved in order to contribute most directly to the negotiations in the Committee in accordance with paragraph 1 above;

5. Further requests the Committee on Disarmament to submit to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament a special report on the state of negotiations on the various questions under consideration by the Committee and also to submit a report on its work to the Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Belorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, United Kingdom, United States.

Membership of the Committee on Disarmament

During a discussion at the 1981 session of the Committee on Disarmament on the question of its membership, many members considered the current membership to be adequate and representative of the world community, while some others favoured a small increase. Still another view was that any eventual change in membership could take the form of expansion, reduction or rotation of members within the respective regions or groups. Proposals on an improved functioning of the Committee were also discussed, and the Committee agreed to continue considering them in 1982.<sup>(1)</sup>

By a resolution on a review of the Committee's membership,<sup>(3)</sup> adopted on 9 December, the General Assembly recommended that the first review be completed during its 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27), following consultation among Member States. The Assembly also reaffirmed that States not members of the Committee should, at their request, continue to be invited by the Committee to participate in its work. The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 134 to none, with 12 abstentions, following its approval by the First Committee on 24 November by a recorded vote of 118 to none, with 10 abstentions.

Introducing the 19-nation resolution, Turkey remarked that, while the sponsors understood the tendency of the members of the Committee on Disarmament to conserve its present composition, they felt such an approach did not comply with the wish expressed in the Final Document of the 1978 special session on disarmament that the Committee's membership should be regularly reviewed.<sup>(2)</sup> The sponsors did not request the inclusion of the membership review issue in the agenda of the Assembly's next regular session, on what they considered the somewhat optimistic assumption that a satisfactory solution would be found at the 1982 special session.

Explaining their abstention in the vote, Hungary and the USSR stated that the Committee's membership was a question for the Committee on Disarmament itself and that many socialist, non-aligned and other members did not favour reviewing the membership during the next few years. Greece, while recognizing the delicate nature of the membership question, voted affirmatively in the hope of encouraging the Committee to adopt measures aimed at facilitating participation in its work by States outside its membership.

In the First Committee debate, Finland and Norway expressed interest in joining the Committee on Disarmament as full members. Portugal felt that all States which so desired should be able to participate in disarmament bodies and hoped that procedures would be worked out to enable interested States to exercise that right.

Review of the membership of the Committee on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations,

Recognizing also that all States have the duty to contribute to and the right to participate in disarmament negotiations, as acknowledged in paragraph 28 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling, to that effect, its resolutions 33/91 G of 16 December 1978 and 35/156 I of 12 December 1980,

Noting that under section IX of the rules of procedure of the Committee on Disarmament non-member States have been invited to participate in the work of the Committee,

Recalling also that the membership of the Committee on Disarmament is to be reviewed at regular intervals in accordance with paragraph 120 of the Final Document,

1. Takes note of the relevant part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament on its session in 1981, in which various options and different views were stated;

2. Recommends that the first review of the membership of the Committee on Disarmament should be completed, following appropriate consultation among Member States, during the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

3. Reaffirms that States not members of the Committee on Disarmament should, upon their request, continue to be invited by it to participate in the work of the Committee.

Nuclear weapons

Nuclear disarmament

DISARMAMENT COMMISSION ACTION. In its recommendations to the General Assembly adopted on 5 June 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> the Disarmament Commission, in the context of its consideration of the arms race and disarmament (P. 21), stated that the threat of destruction as a result of nuclear war was among the greatest perils facing the world. The special responsibility borne by nuclear-weapon States entailed respect for the security concerns of non-nuclear-weapon nations, refraining from action to intensify the nuclear-arms race, and the pursuit of concrete measures of nuclear disarmament.

The Commission regarded nuclear disarmament as the most effective assurance of security against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. Pending that, the nuclear-weapon States should give effective assurance in that regard to non-nuclear-weapon States (p. 58). The Commission recommended the strengthening of the existing nuclear-weapon-free zone (in Latin America) and the establishment of other such zones, as well as zones of peace.

CONSIDERATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON DISARMAMENT. No consensus was reached in 1981 by the Committee on Disarmament<sup>(1)</sup> on a proposal by the Group of 21 (p. 31) for the establishment of an ad hoc working group on cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, or on a proposal by a group of socialist countries for the establishment of an ad hoc working group on prohibition of the production, stockpiling, deployment and use of nuclear neutron weapons (p. 62).

In its paper, the Group of 21 stated that doctrines of nuclear deterrence, far from being responsible for the maintenance of peace and security, were at the root of the continuing escalation of nuclear armaments, and that the competitive accumulation of nuclear arms could not be condoned on the ground that it was indispensable to national security. China, in a working paper, asserted that the race between the two super-Powers for nuclear superiority accounted for lack of substantive progress in disarmament, and that those countries should take action in advance of others to halt the nuclear-arms race.

Two different approaches were advocated in the Committee's discussion. Several members, expressing grave concern over the nuclear-arms race, the risks inherent in nuclear deterrence doctrines and the danger of nuclear war, urged the Committee to initiate negotiations on nuclear disarmament as a matter of urgency. Others, while emphasizing their belief in the need to reduce the level of nuclear confrontation, believed that the existence of nuclear weapons had been a critical factor in preserving stability in much of the world for many years and considered that negotiations on nuclear disarmament should be undertaken initially by the nuclear-weapon States concerned.

The proposal for a working group on nuclear disarmament, reiterated by the Group of 21 in February at the start of the 1981 session, was discussed at informal meetings in March. A formal proposal by the Group was submitted to the Committee for decision on 14 July, but the Chairman announced that there was no consensus in favour of it. Following further consultations conducted by the Chairman at the suggestion of a group of socialist States, he announced that the members who did not agree to setting up a working group were willing to consider the establishment of a contact group to deal with the questions raised by the proposal. The Committee agreed to the Chairman's suggestion that further consultations be deferred until the beginning of its 1982 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution on nuclear weapons in all aspects,<sup>(3)</sup> adopted on 9 December, the General Assembly said it believed that negotiations on cessation of the production of nuclear weapons and on gradual reduction of stockpiles, up to and including total destruction, must be initiated as a matter of high priority. The Assembly deemed it appropriate that the Committee on Disarmament begin by considering stages of nuclear disarmament and their tentative content, including the content of the first stage. Within the framework of discussion on first-stage measures, it would be appropriate to consider the cessation of development and deployment of new types and systems of nuclear weapons. The Committee on Disarmament was called on to continue consultations on the establishment of an ad hoc working group, with a clearly defined mandate, on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and on nuclear disarmament.

This 12-nation resolution, sponsored mainly by Eastern European States and introduced by the German Democratic Republic, was adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to 18, with 5 abstentions, after the First Committee approved the text on 23 November by a recorded vote of 83 to 17, with 8 abstentions. In Committee, the sponsors revised it in writing and also orally, the latter change deleting a preambular paragraph that would have had the Assembly express concern about intentions to gain strategic superiority and to resort to the first use of nuclear weapons.

Belgium, explaining its negative vote, said the text was polemical, took a unilateral view of the problem of nuclear weapons, and failed to mention the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which condemned the threat or use of force in international relations and confirmed just as solemnly the right of States to self-defence. Greece abstained for similar reasons.

Austria voted in favour in the belief that all approaches which could lead to progress in the nuclear area must be explored, even though it considered the preamble to be burdened by a number of sweeping and unbalanced elements concerning strategic doctrines and the intentions of nuclear-weapon States. Finland, which rejected all concepts of limited nuclear war, cast an affirmative vote as its expression of concern about all doctrines which might bring nearer the possibility of a nuclear war. Also voting in favour, Sweden emphasized its opposition to all formal doctrines as well as measures taken by the nuclear-weapon States to develop and deploy weapons, but said it would have preferred the text to give an accurate and balanced description of the nuclear postures of the major nuclear-weapon States.

In the First Committee debate, most States continued to emphasize the primacy of the task of halting the nuclear-arms race and moving towards nuclear disarmament.

Among the nuclear Powers, China stressed the need for the super-Powers to take the lead in nuclear disarmament, after which the other nuclear countries, including China, would join them in reducing nuclear weapons until they were completely eliminated. France declared that it could not envisage any commitment regarding its nuclear forces unless, following reductions agreed among the major Powers, the massive disproportion between arsenals was to change; in the mean time, it was compelled to maintain its effectiveness at the levels required to ensure their deterrent effect, bearing in mind the quantitative and qualitative increase in the most important arsenals. The USSR expressed its readiness to discuss, for example in the Committee on Disarmament, possible stages for nuclear disarmament and their approximate content, including as a first step the question of putting an end to the design and deployment of new types and systems of nuclear weapons. The United States said the profound changes that had taken place during the past decade in the strategic environment had required it to review its arms control policies and take steps to restore its deterrent capability.

Austria, urging negotiations to achieve quantitative and qualitative limitations of nuclear arsenals, said both super-Powers had shifted to a doctrine emphasizing the targeting of military and nuclear installations; the result was greater pressure on decision-makers in time of crisis, increased risks of nuclear conflict through human error or technical malfunction, a premium for preemptive nuclear strikes, and the emergence of dangerous illusions that nuclear war could be limited and winnable. Brazil said the world must be satisfied that negotiations between the two super-Powers did not aim at perpetuating the nuclear threat by a handful of nations, thus freezing a power structure based on possession of the means to dictate one's will and make the law.

Chile cited two additional reasons for seeking nuclear disarmament: nuclear weapons gave the Powers possessing them the greatest destructive capacity ever seen, and within a few years many States would have the capacity to use nuclear energy for military purposes. Nuclear disarmament would be achieved, according to Denmark, not by augmenting nuclear stockpiles or creating new variations of nuclear arms, but by strengthening existing treaties and negotiating new ones. India stated that the concept of an arms balance between opposing camps had not helped cap the nuclear-arms race, and the doctrine of deterrence could not avoid war because a nation using nuclear weapons would invite its own annihilation. If a nuclear war was ignited, said Jordan, fear alone would make certain that all arsenals and peoples throughout the world would become involved. The Netherlands held that high priority should be given to de-emphasizing the role of nuclear weapons, with the aim of substantial reductions and eventual elimination of those arms.

The Byelorussian SSR told the Committee that more than 50,000 nuclear weapons had already been accumulated world-wide and that their destructive force was estimated to be enough to decimate more than 1 million cities the size of Hiroshima. Ireland remarked that the two super-Powers had more than 15,000 strategic nuclear warheads—three times as many as in 1970. In Nigeria's view, the accumulation of nuclear weapons bore no direct relevance or proportion to the realistic defence requirements of the States possessing them.

The Eastern European States urged that priority be given to nuclear disarmament in current international negotiations, including those in the Committee on Disarmament. The German Democratic Republic, stressing the dangers of a qualitative nuclear-arms race, considered that, among measures in the first stage of nuclear disarmament, prohibition of the development of new types and systems of nuclear weapons and their non-deployment should play a significant role. The Ukrainian SSR held the United States responsible for instigating every new round of the nuclear-arms race, including more recently the deployment of cruise missiles and the invention of the neutron weapon, while the USSR and other socialist States had consistently tried to do away with nuclear weapons.

Italy argued that nuclear disarmament could not be treated in isolation; it should proceed in parallel with conventional disarmament to maintain a balance compatible with the principle of undiminished security. Similarly, Portugal stated that it was unrealistic to concentrate on the nuclear element in disarmament efforts, since such a selective approach would create an imbalance that would weigh more heavily on some States than on others.

Bangladesh regarded arrangements to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons as only an interim measure, stating that the ultimate goal should be the destruction of all nuclear weapons; it also urged serious consideration for proposals to reduce nuclear weapons by 50 per cent and to impose a freeze on the introduction of new or improved nuclear weapons. Pakistan, reiterating its commitment to nuclear non-proliferation, stated that peaceful nuclear programmes in several developing countries, including its own, had become a target of false and politically motivated propaganda.

The Byelorussian SSR and Poland, as well as a number of other States, favoured the establishment by the Committee on Disarmament of a subsidiary body on nuclear disarmament.

Nuclear weapons in all aspects

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once again that nuclear weapons pose the most serious threat to mankind and its survival and that it is therefore essential to proceed with nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming also that all nuclear-weapon States, in particular those which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility for the fulfilment of the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament,

Stressing again that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons alone are more than sufficient to destroy all life on earth, and bearing in mind the devastating results which nuclear war would have on belligerents and non-belligerents alike,

Recalling that at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it decided that effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war had the highest priority and that it was essential to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race in all its aspects in order to avert the danger of war involving nuclear weapons,

Recalling further that, in its resolution 35/152 B of 12 December 1980, it noted with alarm the increased risk of a nuclear catastrophe associated both with the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and with the adoption of the new doctrine of limited or partial use of nuclear weapons giving rise to illusions of the admissibility and acceptability of a nuclear conflict,

Noting with alarm that this dangerous doctrine leads to a new twist in the spiral of the arms race, which may seriously hamper the reaching of agreement on nuclear disarmament,

Noting, in this connection, an urgent need for the cessation of the development and deployment of new types and systems of nuclear weapons as a step on the road to nuclear disarmament,

Stressing again that priority in disarmament negotiations should be given to nuclear weapons, and referring to paragraphs 49 and 54 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, 34/83 J of 11 December 1979 and 35/152 B and C of 12 December 1980,

Noting that the Committee on Disarmament, during its session held in 1981, discussed the question concerning the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and, inter alia, the establishment of an ad hoc working group for negotiations on the subject,

Taking note of the proposals and statements made in the Committee on Disarmament, both during its formal and informal meetings, on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, and, inter alia, on prerequisites for the conduct of negotiations on nuclear disarmament,

Noting with regret that the Committee on Disarmament, during its session held in 1981, was not able to reach agreement on a basis for multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament or on prerequisites for such negotiations,

Convinced that the Committee on Disarmament is the most suitable forum for the preparation and conduct of the negotiations on nuclear disarmament,

1. Believes it necessary to initiate, as a matter of high priority, negotiations on the cessation of the production of nuclear weapons and on the gradual reduction of their stockpiles up to and including their total destruction, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

2. Notes the decision of the Committee on Disarmament to resume intensive consideration, at its session in 1982, of the item on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament;

3. Calls upon the Committee on Disarmament, as a matter of priority and for the purpose of an early commencement of the negotiations on the substance of the problem, to continue consultations in which to consider, inter alia, the establishment of an ad hoc working group on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and on nuclear disarmament with a clearly defined mandate;

4. Deems it appropriate, as envisaged in paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, that the Committee on Disarmament should proceed, as a first step, to the consideration of stages of nuclear disarmament and their tentative content, inter alia, the content of the first stage;

5. Also deems it appropriate to consider, within the framework of the discussion on the content of measures to be carried out during the first stage, the question of the cessation of the development and deployment of new types and systems of nuclear weapons;

6. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to report on the results of those negotiations to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Melts, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Strategic arms limitation talks

By a resolution on the strategic arms limitation talks between the USSR and the United States,<sup>(2)</sup> adopted without vote on 9 December 1981, the General Assembly noted that the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT II), signed in 1979, had not been ratified. The Assembly urged a continuation of the process begun by the 1972 SALT I Treaty and signature of the SALT II Treaty, and urged the two States to negotiate towards an agreement for substantial reductions and significant qualitative limitations of strategic arms. The Assembly welcomed the commencement of nuclear-arms negotiations at Geneva on 30 November 1981 between the USSR and the United States, trusted that the negotiations would facilitate the enhancement of stability and international security, and invited the two Governments to keep the Assembly informed of results. It stressed the need for both parties to bear in mind that the vital interests of all peoples were at stake.

The text, revised by its 12 sponsors, was approved by the First Committee on 4 December without vote. It included an oral revision dropping the word "control" from a reference to the object of the latest bilateral negotiations.

Introducing the text, Mexico noted that it was similar to the 1980 resolution on the question,<sup>(1)</sup> due to the unfortunate fact that the Assembly's exhortation asking the two major nuclear Powers to ratify the SALT II Treaty had remained a dead letter. The Assembly's interest in the SALT question, Mexico added, dated back to the origins of the SALT negotiations in 1969; since 1972, it had been reflected in an uninterrupted series of resolutions.

The USSR said it favoured the immediate resumption of talks with the United States on strategic arms limitation, which should be based on everything constructive and positive that had already been achieved. However, the United States had suspended the dialogue initiated in the 1970s on a number of questions relating to military detente, including limiting strategic arms and the arms trade, anti-satellite systems, banning chemical weapons and nuclear tests, and a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean.

The United States, calling the resolution forward-looking, stated that the two major Powers must look forward to negotiations which would result in substantial and militarily significant reductions in strategic arms, which the United States referred to as the strategic arms reduction talks (START). However, the United States goal was deterrence and a second-strike capability, whereas the USSR aimed not at stability but at threatening the survivability of the United States strategic forces.

The Byelorussian SSR remarked that the United States had blocked the SALT process, thereby giving the go-ahead for the unrestrained development of the most devastating weapons. The United States was not seeking a military-strategic balance, said the German Democratic Republic, for a balance already existed; rather, it was concerned about so-called strategic superiority and the capability to strike first. Hungary and other Eastern European States, as well as Democratic Yemen and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, urged the early ratification of the SALT II Treaty by the United States.

Austria stated that the SALT negotiations had become the backbone of the entire detente process, and that a breakdown of the process would have disastrous consequences for international security. Similarly, Zambia feared a major disaster if the talks failed, including intensification of disputes, greater instability and the diminution of peaceful exchanges throughout the world.

Canada, Guyana, Norway, Pakistan and Turkey hoped the bilateral talks would be directed towards reducing rather than merely limiting nuclear missiles. The Bahamas trusted that the super-Powers would become more flexible and less preoccupied about which was the more powerful in terms of nuclear weapons. India stated that neither SALT I nor SALT II had done more than to define the parameters for USSR-United States competition in strategic armaments. Nigeria, appealing for continued negotiations, observed that it had taken 10 years for the super-Powers to agree to negotiate SALT I, while SALT II had taken another seven years before it was signed. In Rwanda's view, the spirit of negotiations must change; the good faith and readiness of the other side must be recognized, because it was not true that all evil was on one side and all virtue on the other. The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community members, said the encouraging prospects of a renewed dialogue between the USSR and the United States on strategic arms limitation was in keeping with the responsibility of the super-Powers to take the first steps in nuclear disarmament.

Albania dissociated itself from the consensus, on the ground that the two Powers had continued to expand the arms race and were acting in bad faith in dealing with strategic arms limitation.

Participants in the debate also commented on prospects for USSR-United States negotiations on medium-range nuclear-armed missiles, also called intermediate or theatre nuclear forces, which began at Geneva on 30 November.

Welcoming these talks, Denmark said efforts were needed to reduce nuclear arms in Europe, thereby limiting the trend towards an increasing nuclear build-up with new and terrible weapons systems. The Federal Republic of Germany said the aim of the talks, as seen by the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), was to limit medium-range missiles at the lowest possible level on both sides, ideally at zero; if no agreement was reached by the autumn of 1983, when Western intermediate land-based nuclear missiles were to be deployed, the Federal Republic would honour its NATO commitment to take necessary measures for the security of itself and its defence alliance. Italy said the NATO decision was aimed at restoring the balance in theatre nuclear forces that had been seriously altered by the deployment of a steadily increasing number of highly precise, mobile, multiple-warhead SS-20 Soviet missiles. According to the United States, the USSR sought to prevent NATO from adopting countermeasures to the USSR deployment of 250 SS-20 missiles targeted at Western Europe and increasing at the rate of one missile every week.

Finland hoped these talks would be guided by fundamental political considerations and not be obsessed by technical data about military forces. Ireland stated that a serious approach to the negotiations by both sides, together with restraint in the development and deployment of new weapons, could increase confidence and improve the climate. Romania suggested that the Assembly speak out against the stationing and development in Europe of new nuclear medium-range missiles and in favour of starting negotiations among all European States to eliminate such missiles and nuclear weapons in general. Sweden rejected the argument that balance had to be achieved in each category of weapons; the objectives must be to reduce drastically the number of long-range nuclear theatre systems such as the Soviet SS-20 missiles, to avoid the deployment of the new NATO missiles and to negotiate a drastic reduction or even abolition of tactical nuclear weapons in Europe.

The German Democratic Republic, protesting against plans to deploy Pershing-2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe, said such a move would force the socialist States to take appropriate steps to restore the balance. The Byelorussian SSR regretted that doubt had been cast on the USSR proposal for a moratorium on the deployment of new medium-range missiles by NATO and the USSR. In Czechoslovakia's view, it was in the interest of world peace to preserve the existing approximate parity in Europe, preferably at the lowest possible level.

Strategic arms limitation talks

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2602 A (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, 2932 B (XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3184 A and C (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3261 C (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3484 C (XXX) of 12 December 1975, 31/189 A of 21 December 1976, 32/87 G of 12 December 1977 and 35/156 K of 12 December 1980,

Recalling that the SALT I agreement—which bears the official title of “Interim Agreement between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on certain measures with respect to the limitation of strategic offensive arms”—entered into force on 3 October 1972 following more than two years of bilateral negotiations,

Recalling that the SALT II agreement—which bears the official title of “Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms”—was finally signed on 18 June 1979, after six years of bilateral negotiations, and that its text, together with the texts of the Protocol to the Treaty and of the Joint Statement of principles and basic guidelines for subsequent negotiations on the limitation of strategic arms, both signed on the same date as the Treaty, and that of the Joint Communique, also issued on 18 June 1979, were reproduced as a document of the Committee on Disarmament,

Reaffirming once again its resolution 33/91 C of 16 December 1978, in which it, inter alia:

(a) Reiterated its satisfaction at the solemn declarations made in 1977 by the heads of State of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in which they stated that they were ready to endeavour to reach agreements which would permit starting the gradual reduction of existing stockpiles of nuclear weapons and moving towards their complete and total destruction, with a view to a world truly free of nuclear weapons,

(b) Recalled that one of the disarmament measures deserving the highest priority, included in the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, was the conclusion of the bilateral agreement known as SALT II, which should be followed promptly by further strategic arms limitation negotiations between the two parties, leading to agreed significant reductions of and qualitative limitations on strategic arms,

(c) Stressed that in the Programme of Action—it was established that, in the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament, all nuclear-weapon States, in particular those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility,

Reaffirming that, as stated in its resolution 34/87 F of 11 December 1979, it shares the conviction expressed by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in the joint statement of principles and basic guidelines for subsequent negotiations on the limitation of strategic arms that early agreement on the further limitation and further reduction of strategic arms would serve to strengthen international peace and security and to reduce the risk of outbreak of nuclear war,

Recalling that, at its first special session devoted to disarmament, it proclaimed that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons alone were more than sufficient to destroy all life on earth, that the increase in weapons, especially nuclear weapons, far from helping to strengthen international security, on the contrary weakened it, and that the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race posed a threat to the very survival of mankind, for which reasons the General Assembly declared that all the peoples of the world had a vital interest in the sphere of disarmament.

Recalling also that in the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, annexed to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, it recommended that special priority be given to the ratification of the SALT II Treaty,

1. Notes that the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT II) has not yet been ratified;

2. Urges that the process begun by the SALT I Treaty and signature of the SALT II Treaty should continue and be built upon;

3. Trusts that the signatory States will continue to refrain from any act which would defeat the object and purpose of that process;

4. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, with reference to resolutions 34/87 F and 35/156 K, to pursue negotiations, in accordance with the principle of equality and equal security, looking towards the achievement of an agreement which will provide for substantial reductions and significant qualitative limitations of strategic arms;

5. Welcomes the commencement of negotiations at Geneva on 30 November 1981 between representatives of the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on nuclear arms in accordance with the joint communiqué issued by Secretary of State Haig and Foreign Minister Gromyko on 23 September 1981, and trusts that such negotiations will facilitate the enhancement of stability and international security;

6. Stresses the need for both parties to bear constantly in mind that not only their national interests but also the vital interests of all the peoples of the world are at stake in this question;

7. Invites the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to keep the General Assembly appropriately informed of the results of their negotiations, in conformity with the provisions of paragraphs 27 and 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Strategic arms limitation talks".

Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war

Prevention of nuclear war

Expressing alarm at the threat which the existence of nuclear weapons posed to the survival of mankind and labelling as matters of highest priority the prevention of nuclear war and reduction of the risks of such war, the General Assembly, in a resolution adopted without vote on 19 December 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> urged all nuclear-weapon States and all other Member States that so desired to submit to the Secretary-General, for consideration at its 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27), their views, proposals' and practical suggestions for ensuring the prevention of nuclear war.

The revised draft resolution, sponsored by 17 States, was approved by the First Committee on 25 November, also without vote. The text incorporated the essence of amendments submitted by Mexico,<sup>(1)</sup> according to which all Member States rather than just nuclear-weapon States were urged to submit their views and proposals. The revised text also included a preambular paragraph proposed by Mexico, reiterating the vital interest of all peoples in disarmament. Mexico withdrew its amendments after the draft resolution was revised.

Introducing the draft, Argentina asserted that the Powers possessing nuclear weapons must state clearly, in writing and in detail, their views and proposals for preventing nuclear war, after which non-nuclear States had the right and duty to assess those positions and make their own proposals. The latter States could not delegate to others the quest for solutions.

In the First Committee debate, some countries, such as Nigeria and the USSR, rejected the idea of a limited or winnable nuclear war as either suicidal and adventuristic or lacking in validity and evidence. With the quantity and quality of weapons spread throughout the world, said Cuba, it was illusory to believe that a nuclear war could be concentrated in a given territory. Mauritius stated that, while the world's leaders might not envisage a nuclear war by design, no human activity could be accident-free, as evidenced in a report by the Armed Services Committee of the United States Senate that, four times in 18 months, nuclear bomber crews and intercontinental ballistic missile units had been ordered to be ready for action as a result of alarms that later proved false.

In an appeal of 23 June from the Supreme Soviet of the USSR to the parliaments and peoples of the world, transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter from the USSR dated 24 June,<sup>(3)</sup> legislatures were urged to support negotiations, without preliminary conditions or attempts to dictate a point of view, to prevent a new phase of the nuclear missile race. Support for a proposal by the USSR for the establishment of an international committee of scientists for the defence of mankind from the threat of a nuclear catastrophe was expressed in a Declaration of the General Assembly of the Bulgarian Academy of Sciences, adopted at Sofia in May and forwarded in a note verbale of Bulgaria dated 25 June.<sup>(2)</sup>

Prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Recalling that removal of the threat of a world war—a nuclear war—is the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Reiterating that it is the shared responsibility of all Member States to save succeeding generations from the scourge of another world war,

Recalling the provisions of paragraphs 47 to 50 and 56 to 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, regarding procedures designed to secure the avoidance of nuclear war,

Considering that prevention of nuclear war and reduction of the risks of nuclear war are matters of the highest priority, which should be considered by the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament,

Reiterating the vital interest of all the peoples of the world in disarmament,

Aware of the special responsibility of nuclear-weapon States,

1. Urges all nuclear-weapon States to submit to the Secretary-General by 30 April 1982, for consideration at the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, their views, proposals and practical suggestions for ensuring the prevention of nuclear war;

2. Invites all other Member States that so desire to do likewise;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament a report containing the views, proposals and practical suggestions referred to in paragraph 1 above, as well as those received from other Member States.

Non-use of nuclear weapons

On 9 December 1981, by a resolution on the non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly declared again that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, and that the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons should therefore be prohibited, pending nuclear disarmament. The Assembly urged consideration, at its 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27), of the question of an international convention on the non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war, or some other agreement on the subject.

The Assembly took this action by a recorded vote of 121 to 19, with 6 abstentions. The text, sponsored by 30 States, was approved by the First Committee on 23 November by a recorded vote of 99 to 18, with 5 abstentions.

India, in introducing the text, emphasized that the nuclear-arms race had acquired a new momentum, both quantitatively and qualitatively, and there was greater apprehension than ever that a nuclear war, with all its catastrophic consequences, might break out. Thus; States shared the collective responsibility to undertake all possible measures to reduce such a threat. Although the United Nations Charter permitted self-defence, it would be a mockery of the Charter to suggest that, in pursuing its security concerns, a State might jeopardize the survival of all, and that a State's choice of weapons and means of warfare, even in the exercise of individual and collective self-defence, was not unlimited.

Ireland, though opposed to any use of nuclear weapons, voted against the resolution because of misgivings about the approach it adopted. Greece abstained in the vote because of the proclamatory nature of the text and because it thought the paragraph declaring the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons a violation of the Charter, and prohibiting such action alone, left a serious vacuum and a vagueness of interpretation. While agreeing with the objectives of the text, Sweden abstained because it thought the resolution's interpretation of the Charter was not legally correct. The German Democratic Republic, which voted in favour, remarked that among those which had voted against were nuclear-weapon States and their allies, whose co-operation was essential in the endeavour to prevent nuclear war.

Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind and to the life-sustaining system posed by nuclear weapons and by their use, inherent in concepts of deterrence,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament is essential for the prevention of nuclear war and for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Recalling its declaration, contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and which would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, Recalling its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979 and 35/152 D of 12 December 1980.

Taking note of the Comprehensive Study on Nuclear Weapons prepared by the Secretary-General with the assistance of a group of experts,

1. Declares once again that:

(a) The use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity;

(b) The use or threat of use of nuclear weapons should therefore be prohibited, pending nuclear disarmament;

2. Urges the consideration, at the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, of the question of an international convention on the non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war or some other agreement on the subject, taking into account the proposals and views of States in this regard;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war".

Declaration on the #### Prevention of Nuclear Catastrophe

In recognition that all the horrors of past wars and other calamities would pale in comparison with what a nuclear catastrophe could bring to humanity, the General Assembly, on 9 December 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> proclaimed on behalf of United Nations Member States: that States and statesmen that resorted first to the use of nuclear weapons would be committing the gravest crime against humanity; that there would be no justification or pardon for the decision to be the first to use such weapons; that any doctrines allowing first use of nuclear weapons were incompatible with moral standards and the ideals of the Organization; that the leaders of nuclear-weapon States had the duty to act so as to eliminate the risk of nuclear conflict; and that nuclear energy should be used exclusively for peaceful purposes.

This Declaration on the Prevention of Nuclear Catastrophe was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 82 to 19, with 41 abstentions. The twice-revised text, sponsored by Angola, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia and the USSR, was approved by the First Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 67 to 18, with 37 abstentions. The sponsors incorporated an oral amendment proposed by Mexico, adding to a reference to negotiations on the nuclear-arms race, contained in paragraph 4, a phrase specifying that the ultimate goal was the complete elimination of nuclear weapons.

The Declaration was originally proposed by the USSR which requested in a letter of 22 September<sup>(1)</sup> that an item on this subject be put on the Assembly's agenda at its 1981 session. The request was endorsed by the General Committee on 6 October<sup>(3)</sup> and added to the agenda by the Assembly on the same day.

The USSR stated in its letter that the United Nations should adopt the proposed text so as to exert a restraining influence on the dangerous development of world events. In the First Committee, the USSR said the task of preventing a nuclear catastrophe commanded the highest priority in international relations, particularly because the United States, banking on force as an instrument for achieving political goals, continued to strive for a position of military supremacy. Further, by a letter of 21 October,<sup>(2)</sup> the USSR transmitted to the Assembly the text of a statement by Premier Leonid I. Brezhnev, given to a Pravda correspondent, rejecting the concept of a winnable nuclear war and expressing hope that the United States President would also reject as criminal the idea of nuclear attack.

Several States, particularly from Eastern Europe, voiced strong support for the USSR initiative. Bulgaria saw it as having a moderating influence in the face of mad notions of a limited nuclear war or a pre-emptive attack. In the view of the Byelorussian SSR, the Declaration would remind statesmen involved in the use of nuclear weapons that each of them bore personal responsibility for the fate of humanity. The proposal expressed the vital interests of all peoples, said Hungary, against the background of an intensified arms race generated by those who advocated the acceptability of nuclear war. No country could oppose such a declaration, said the Lao People's Democratic Republic, unless it nurtured the illusion of victory in a limited or widespread nuclear conflict. Mongolia viewed the proposal as a serious warning to those who could not give up the times of the "cold war" and the doctrine of a pre-emptive strike. Such a declaration was needed, said the Ukrainian SSR, because of the unprecedented build-up of nuclear arms, the whipping-up of war psychosis and the reliance on force in international relations.

Explaining its favourable vote, Cyprus warned that the concepts of a limited nuclear war and of victory resulting from a first strike brought the world closer to a nuclear conflagration. Also voting in favour, Jordan expressed surprise that there had been so much polarization on an issue on which all were agreed— that any resort to nuclear war was a crime against humanity.

Some Western States, however, questioned the value and motivation of the proposal. The Federal Republic of Germany found it inconsistent with various statements of Soviet military doctrine, and thought that, by implication, it sanctioned non-nuclear warfare and could force States to choose between violation of an accepted international obligation and unconditional surrender. The Netherlands also pointed to what it regarded as inconsistencies with earlier USSR commitments, and added that the right of self-defence included the right to determine what level of force was needed to dissuade the aggressor. The United States said the proposal fell into a pattern of propaganda initiatives by the USSR dating back to the mid-1950s, aimed at masking its own weapons build-up and forestalling the development of deterrent countermeasures by the Western alliance; meaningful arms control was prudently feasible only when all States refrained from the threat or use of force against the territory or political independence of other States.

China said the aim of the proposal was to give full advantage to USSR superiority in conventional weapons, allowing it to threaten neighbouring States which could do no more than submit to its superiority in that area. France opposed the Declaration for three reasons: it would benefit a State that used force in international relations by guaranteeing that nuclear weapons would not be used for defence; it deprived the principle of non-use of force of its highest place among the obligations of States; and it would deprive the nuclear component of its deterrent effect. Portugal said it could not support such vague, purely declaratory and unrealistic proposals. The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community members, said they could not support vague proposals such as those for no first use of nuclear weapons, which were unrealistic, unenforceable and declaratory; disarmament would come about only through negotiation of concrete agreements on measures to limit and reduce armaments, taking account of the principles of parity and equality. Zaire stated that the suggestion for preventing the first use of nuclear weapons solved nothing, since some States saw it as tantamount to exposing their flanks.

Egypt expressed the view that the most effective way to eliminate the threat of nuclear war, pending the achievement of nuclear disarmament, was to prohibit the use or threat of nuclear weapons—not the first use alone.

Responding to the argument that the Declaration would enable the members of the Warsaw Treaty Organization to make use of their superiority in conventional weapons, Czechoslovakia called this a false allegation and recalled that the Warsaw Treaty members had proposed to their counterparts in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization the conclusion of an agreement to prohibit the first use of conventional as well as nuclear weapons. Poland noted in this regard that the USSR had previously made other proposals on the non-use of force in international relations. The German Democratic Republic, responding to another argument by opponents of the Declaration, said the threat of use of nuclear weapons could never create stability, but only fears of an unprovoked preventive strike.

Several of those voting for the resolution—India, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sierra Leone and Sri Lanka—stressed that prohibition of the first use of nuclear weapons was only one aspect of the larger issues of a total ban on their use and of nuclear disarmament in general.

Abstaining in the vote, Argentina, Austria, the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Brazil, Finland, Ireland, Kenya, Malaysia, Senegal, the Sudan and Sweden expressed a number of reservations: that the Declaration did not deal with the more general problem of banning the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons and the use of force in international relations (Austria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Kenya, Malaysia, Senegal); that the two sides were too deeply divided over the proposal (Argentina, Bahamas, Finland, Ireland); that the matter should have been studied more closely before a declaration was pressed (Bahamas, Sudan); that the problem must be dealt with by arms limitation and reduction agreements, not by declarations (Austria, Ireland); that the subject was dealt with adequately in other resolutions (Senegal); and that it was incongruous to talk of first strike in a committee dedicated to disarmament (Bahamas).

Albania did not participate in the vote, stating that the proposal was aimed at diverting attention from the substance of the problem, which was the divide-and-dominate policies of the two super-Powers and China.

Declaration on the Prevention of Nuclear Catastrophe The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the foremost task of the United Nations, born in the flames of the Second World War, has been, is and will be to save present and succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

Recognizing that all the horrors of past wars and all other calamities that have befallen people would pale in comparison with what is inherent in the use of nuclear weapons capable of destroying civilization on earth,

Reaffirming that the universally accepted objective is to eliminate completely the possibility of the use of nuclear weapons through the cessation of their production, followed by the destruction of their stockpiles, and that, to this end, priority in disarmament negotiations should be given to nuclear disarmament,

Convinced that, as the first step in this direction, the use of nuclear weapons and the waging of nuclear war should be outlawed,

Solemnly proclaims, on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations:

1. States and statesmen that resort first to the use of nuclear weapons will be committing the gravest crime against humanity.

2. There will never be any justification or pardon for statesmen who would take the decision to be the first to use nuclear weapons.

3. Any doctrines allowing the first use of nuclear weapons and any actions pushing the world towards a catastrophe are incompatible with human moral standards and the lofty ideals of the United Nations.

4. It is the supreme duty and direct obligation of the leaders of nuclear-weapon States to act in such a way as to eliminate the risk of the outbreak of a nuclear conflict. The nuclear-arms race must be stopped and reversed by joint efforts, through negotiations conducted in good faith and on the basis of equality, having as their ultimate goal the complete elimination of nuclear weapons.

5. Nuclear energy should be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and only for the benefit of mankind.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones

As in previous years, the General Assembly adopted resolutions in 1981 on the proposed establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in Africa (see below), the Middle East (p. 49) and South Asia (p. 55), as well as on Latin America (p. 48) –the only region where such a zone had been established by treaty. It also took action with respect to a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean (p. 94).

Aside from these regions, support for the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Nordic area was expressed by Finland and Sweden, with the latter asserting that such arrangements would have to include concrete commitments by the USSR and the United States. The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia and the USSR supported the establishment of such zones in northern Europe and in the Balkan region, as well as zones of peace and co-operation in the Mediterranean and South-East Asia. Hungary also favoured the creation of nuclear-weapon-free zones in the Balkans and the Mediterranean, and Bulgaria and Romania supported the establishment of such a zone in the Balkans.

By a letter of 11 November,<sup>(1)</sup> Bulgaria transmitted a speech of 20 October by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of its Communist Party and President of its State Council, proposing a 1982 meeting in Sofia of the leaders of the Balkan States to discuss the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Balkans.

Africa

Implementation of the 1964 Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa

By a resolution of 9 December 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly reiterated its call on all States to consider and respect Africa-including surrounding islands and Madagascar—as a nuclear-weapon-free zone. It requested the Secretary-General to assist the Organization of African Unity (OAU) towards the realization of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, adopted by OAU in 1964, and it condemned nuclear collaboration with South Africa as frustrating the objective of that Declaration. Most of the text dealt with nuclear weapons and South Africa (p. 46).

The resolution, sponsored by 29 African States, was adopted by a recorded vote of 132 to none, with 12 abstentions, after approval by the First Committee on 24 November by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 113 to none, with 11 abstentions. Paragraph 4, calling for the termination of military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, was adopted by a separate vote.

The text was introduced by Nigeria, which said the objective of a denuclearized Africa remained fundamental to the continent's efforts for collective self-defence, and hoped that all nuclear and non-nuclear countries would refrain from any action or inaction which might frustrate the objective of a nuclear-weapon-free Africa.

Portugal and the United Kingdom, explaining their abstentions in the vote, cited difficulties with provisions on South Africa (p. 47). A number of States which voted in favour—Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bolivia, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Japan, Norway, Spain, Sweden and Turkey—expressed general agreement with its main thrust but objected to some language as intemperate or overly polemical. Albania voted in favour but maintained its reservations with regard to nuclear-weapon-free zones.

In the First Committee debate, Chad and Madagascar said that only a treaty on the denuclearization of Africa, whereby African States undertook not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons, could guarantee the security of those States, prevent nuclear proliferation and channel the savings to development. Liberia opposed having nuclear weapons of any kind in Africa.

Implementation of the Declaration

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling its resolutions 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 32/81 of 12 December 1977, 33/63 of 14 December 1978, 34/76 A of 11 December 1979 and 35/146 B of 12 December 1980, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa, comprising the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling also that in its resolution 33/63 it vigorously condemned any attempt by South Africa to introduce in any way whatsoever nuclear weapons into the continent and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent of Africa or elsewhere,

Reaffirming that the nuclear programme of the racist regime of South Africa constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States,

Noting with concern that South Africa has persistently refused to conclude adequate and comprehensive safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency with a view to preventing the diversion of nuclear materials from peaceful uses to the manufacture of nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices,

Taking note of the report of the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa on ways and means of making the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa more effective, in particular its recommendation that all forms of nuclear collaboration with South Africa should cease, and the report of the international Conference on Sanctions against South Africa, held at Paris from 20 to 27 May 1981,

Gravely concerned over the possibility that South Africa has acquired nuclear weapons,

Convinced that the acquisition of such weapons by South Africa would endanger the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa as well as the maintenance of international peace and security,

Expressing its indignation that certain Western countries and Israel have continued to collaborate with South Africa in the nuclear field despite the risk of proliferation of nuclear weapons which the South African nuclear programme represents,

Recalling its decision taken at the tenth special session, devoted to disarmament, that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa,

1. Once again reiterates its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa, comprising the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

2. Reaffirms that the nuclear programme of the racist regime of South Africa constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States and increases the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

3. Condemns any form of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist regime of South Africa since such collaboration frustrates, inter alia, the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Organization of African Unity to keep Africa a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

4. Calls upon such States, corporations, institutions and individuals, therefore, to terminate forthwith such military and nuclear collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa, including the provision to it of such related materials as computers, electronic equipment and corresponding technology;

5. Requests the Security Council, in keeping with the recommendation of its Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa, to prohibit all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa in the nuclear field;

6. Demands that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations to inspection by the international Atomic Energy Agency;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to render all necessary assistance to the Organization of African Unity towards the realization of its solemn Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania,

Nuclear weapons and South Africa

DISARMAMENT COMMISSION CONSIDERATION. The question of South Africa's capability to produce nuclear weapons and the related issue of nuclear collaboration with South Africa were discussed in the Disarmament Commission at its May/June 1981 session,<sup>(1)</sup> primarily under an agenda item concerning a letter from the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid transmitting to the Commission the report of the United Nations Seminar on Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, held in London in February 1979.<sup>(11)</sup>

The Commission first studied a working paper submitted by Cuba on behalf of the non-aligned countries, asserting that evidence pointed to South Africa's achievement of nuclear capability through the active collaboration and collusion of certain countries. On the basis of that document, an informal working group produced a working paper which stressed, among other things, the need to prevent further acquisition of arms or arms technology by racist régimes, especially through strict adherence by all States to relevant Security Council decisions. No agreement was reached in the Commission, however; the two papers were annexed to the Commission's report to the General Assembly.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. In a report issued on 3 September,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that he had given maximum publicity, as requested by the General Assembly in December 1980,<sup>(5)</sup> to the report he submitted in September 1980 on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field.<sup>(12)</sup> He had identified no further information on South Africa's nuclear developments to add to his 1980 report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 9 December, under its agenda item on the denuclearization of Africa, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the nuclear capability of South Africa<sup>(6)</sup> by a recorded vote of 129 to 4, with 10 abstentions.

Deploing the massive build-up of South Africa's military machine and reaffirming that the régime's nuclear plans and capability gravely endangered peace and security, the Assembly requested the Security Council to intensify its efforts to prohibit all forms of nuclear co-operation and collaboration with South Africa and to institute effective enforcement action so as to prevent that régime from endangering peace and security through acquisition of nuclear weapons. The Assembly called on States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, including the provision of such materials as computers, electronic equipment and related technology. It demanded that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

The text, sponsored by 27 African States and Qatar, was approved by the First Committee on 24 November by a recorded vote of 108 to 4, with 9 abstentions.

In a resolution, also adopted on 9 December,<sup>(7)</sup> on implementation of the 1964 OAU Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Assembly condemned nuclear collaboration with South Africa by any State, corporation, institution or individual. This resolution, like the 28-nation text, included provisions reaffirming that South Africa's nuclear programme was a grave danger to peace and security, calling for an end to military and nuclear collaboration, requesting the Security Council to prohibit such collaboration and demanding that South Africa submit to IAEA inspection. Paragraph 4 of the text, containing the call for termination of military and nuclear collaboration, was adopted in Committee by a separate recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 101 to 6, with 16 abstentions.

Under the agenda item on apartheid and South Africa, the Assembly, on 17 December, condemned specified Western States and Israel for nuclear collaboration with South Africa, and urged the Security Council to take mandatory measures to ensure the immediate cessation of any military and nuclear collaboration with that régime.<sup>(9)</sup> On the same date, it urged the Security Council to strengthen the arms embargo against South Africa and called on States to ensure the cessation of all military relations with that country.<sup>(10)</sup>

In a resolution of 9 December on strengthening peace and security, the Assembly called on the Security Council to promote the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger posed by South Africa's nuclear capability to the African States as well as to international peace and security.<sup>(8)</sup>

Introducing the resolution on South Africa's nuclear capability, Nigeria felt it unacceptable that the glitter of gold or other geopolitical or geostrategic interests of South Africa's supporters should become a more convincing consideration than the lives, liberty and well-being of Africans. The sponsors also regarded as ominous the use of the veto in the Security Council by certain States on southern African issues, and stressed the Council's duty to promote peace and security.

Several States explained their vote against the resolution on South Africa's nuclear capability and their abstention on the other resolution on the denuclearization of Africa. Israel recalled that it had voted for the Assembly's 1978 resolution on denuclearization of Africa<sup>(4)</sup> but observed that it had been singled out by name in later resolutions for alleged nuclear collaboration with South Africa, although such accusations were unfounded and false. The United Kingdom emphasized that it did not collaborate in any way with South Africa towards that country's development of a nuclear-weapon capability. The United States felt that the two resolutions, with their intemperate language and unproved allegations, would discourage South Africa from implementing a non-proliferation policy rather than serve their intended purposes; also, it rejected efforts to include all high-technology items under the arms embargo against South Africa.

France, which voted against the nuclear capability resolution, and the Netherlands, which abstained, said the two texts failed to distinguish between peaceful and military uses of nuclear energy; France also regarded the Assembly request for enforcement action as at variance with the Charter and the criticism of vetoes in the Security Council as a breach of the principle of respect for the sovereignty of States.

Canada abstained on both texts, stating that they contained questionable assumptions and unsubstantiated allegations; further, it doubted the appropriateness of requesting the Security Council to institute enforcement action. Australia abstained on the resolution on nuclear capability, objecting to the tendentious naming of States and the failure to distinguish between military and peaceful uses of nuclear energy. New Zealand did likewise, finding the text less accurate and more tendentious than in previous resolutions. Portugal abstained on both texts because it considered the global condemnation of any nuclear co-operation with South Africa excessive; condemnation should cover only military co-operation.

Many delegations, while voting in favour of both resolutions, expressed reservations regarding various paragraphs. The reservations of Austria, Bolivia, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Norway and Spain concerned the request to the Security Council, which these States did not regard as in keeping with the respective functions of the Assembly and the Council under the Charter. Austria, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Norway, Spain, Sweden and Turkey objected to preambular provisions in both resolutions referring to continued support and collaboration by certain Western countries and Israel. Finland also regretted the lack of reference to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>(3)</sup> and Ireland was concerned about the failure to distinguish between peaceful and military nuclear uses.

Although voting in favour of both resolutions, Argentina did not agree with some of their language and voiced reservations with regard to nuclear safeguards requirements. Japan voted for the resolution on the denuclearization of Africa but thought conclusive evidence was lacking for some of its assertions.

In the First Committee debate, many States reiterated their concern about 'the nuclear plans and capability of South Africa which, in their view, could constitute a serious threat to peace and security and increase the danger of nuclear-weapon proliferation. A number of African States said their fears had been reinforced by the 1980 report of the Secretary-General and the possibility that South Africa might indeed have acquired nuclear weapons.

Nigeria, referring to the Disarmament Commission's discussion of this subject, said a few of the Commission's members tended to exercise the semblance of a veto when consensus was sought on substantive issues such as this.

Nuclear capability of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/76 B of 11 December 1979 and 35/146 A of 12 December 1980.

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, which was held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling that, in its resolution 33/63 of 14 December 1978, it vigorously condemned any attempt by South Africa to introduce in any way whatsoever nuclear weapons into the continent and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent of Africa or elsewhere.

Alarmed by the content and growing sophistication of South Africa's military and nuclear programme,

Alarmed also at the fact that South Africa's nuclear programme has enabled it to acquire nuclear-weapon capability enhanced by the continued support and collaboration which certain Western countries and Israel have given to it,

Noting with grave concern that South Africa's capacity to produce nuclear weapons has been established, inter alia, by the content of its nuclear programme, as well as by the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field following the reported detonation by that country of a nuclear device on 22 September 1979, and that it might indeed have acquired nuclear weapons,

Taking note of the report of the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421 (1977) concerning the question of South Africa on ways and means of making the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa more effective, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Security Council resolution 473(1980).

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 9 September 1980, as well as his report of 3 September 1981, submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 35/146 A on the nuclear capability of South Africa,

Noting with concern that South Africa has persistently refused to conclude adequate and comprehensive safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency with a view to preventing the diversion of nuclear materials from peaceful uses to the manufacture of nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices,

Gravely concerned that South Africa, in flagrant violation of the principles of international law and the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, has continued its military attacks against independent States of southern Africa, in particular Angola, and has increased its acts of subversion aimed at destabilizing those States,

Equally concerned that the acquisition of military equipment and nuclear-weapon capability by the racist regime of South Africa, with its abhorrent system of apartheid and its record of violence and aggression, poses a serious danger to international peace and security,

Recalling its decision taken at the tenth special session, devoted to disarmament, that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa,

Expressing its indignation at the fact that some Western countries, by a ready recourse to the use of the veto, have continually frustrated every effort at the United Nations to deal with the question of South Africa,

1. Deplores the massive build-up of South Africa's military machine, including its frenzied acquisition of a nuclear-weapon capability for repressive and aggressive purposes and as an instrument of blackmail;

2. Reaffirms that the racist régime's plans and capability in the nuclear field constitute a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardize the security of African States and increase the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

3. Requests the Security Council to intensify its efforts to prohibit all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa in the nuclear field and, in particular, to institute effective enforcement action against that régime so as to prevent it from endangering international peace and security through its acquisition of nuclear weapons;

4. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate forthwith all military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime, including the provision to it of such related materials as computers, electronic equipment and corresponding technology;

5. Demands that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to follow closely South Africa's evolution in the nuclear field and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa".

Latin America

By a resolution adopted on 9 December 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly, noting with satisfaction that the United States, on 23 November, had become a party to Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco), expressed regret that France had not done so although it had signed the Protocol in 1979. The Assembly noted that non-sovereign territories could receive the benefits of the Treaty if the States internationally responsible for them adhered to the Protocol, and it recalled that the Netherlands and the United Kingdom had previously done this.

The resolution was adopted by a non-recorded vote of 138 to none, with 5 abstentions, following its approval by the First Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 121 to none, with 3 abstentions (Cuba, France, Guyana). The text was sponsored by the 21 Latin American/Caribbean States parties to the Treaty.

Introducing the resolution, Mexico, the Treaty's depositary Government, expressed hope that France would ratify the Protocol by the time of the Assembly's 1982 session.

France rejected the thrust of the text, stating that it called into question that country's responsibility although the Treaty had not been ratified, or even signed, by all the States in the region it covered; France maintained that it was not for the Assembly to interfere in the treaty ratification procedures of States. Guyana considered it incomprehensible and contradictory that a treaty seeking to make Latin America a nuclear-free zone should arbitrarily deny Guyana's membership through a discriminatory clause (specifying that no decision could be taken on the admission of a political entity involved in a territorial dispute).

The United States, while voting in favour, regretted that the resolution singled out one country rather than calling on all eligible States to sign and ratify. Argentina, which also voted in favour, expressed reservations on the preambular paragraph mentioning the adherence of the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, since it related to a fundamental question of territorial sovereignty.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 35/143 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2288(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 3262(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3473(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 32/76 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/58 of 14 December 1978, 34/71 of 11 December 1979 and 35/143 of 12 December 1980 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco).

Taking into account that within the zone of application of that Treaty, to which twenty-two sovereign States are already parties, there are some territories which, in spite of not being sovereign political entities, are nevertheless in a position to receive the benefits deriving from the Treaty through its Additional Protocol I, to which the States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for those territories may become parties,

Recalling with satisfaction that the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Netherlands became parties to Additional Protocol I in 1969 and 1971, respectively,

Noting with satisfaction that the United States of America likewise became a party to Additional Protocol I on 23 November 1981, when its instrument of ratification was deposited,

1. Regrets that the signature of Additional Protocol I by France, which took place on 2 March 1979, has not yet been followed by the corresponding ratification, notwithstanding the time already elapsed and the pressing invitations addressed to France by the General Assembly and which it reiterates with special urgency in the present resolution;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 36/83 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

Middle East

Proposal for a nuclear-weapon-free zone

COMMUNICATIONS. In a letter dated 26 February 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> Egypt informed the Secretary-General that on that date it had ratified the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;<sup>(8)</sup> annexed to the letter was a statement issued on the occasion by Egypt's Ministry of Foreign Affairs, stating that Egypt's commitment to non-proliferation should not impair its right to develop and use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes in conformity with the Treaty. In a further letter dated 20 April,<sup>(3)</sup> Egypt suggested that a study exploring the modalities for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East might be undertaken to help facilitate the realization of that goal.

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 9 June<sup>(5)</sup> and a similar letter to the Security Council President dated 15 June,<sup>(6)</sup> Israel requested all States in and adjacent to the Middle East to indicate during 1981 their consent to holding a preparatory conference to discuss the modalities of a conference aimed at negotiating a multilateral treaty on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East; Israel also welcomed the Egyptian proposal for a study and suggested that it be undertaken by experts from the States in the region, including Israel. In a subsequent letter dated 26 October,<sup>(7)</sup> Israel stated that, without prejudice to any political or legal claim by the States of the region, it behooved them, for the sake of their common future, to take concrete steps towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone.

Israel, in a letter dated 27 May,<sup>(4)</sup> responded to a Pakistani letter of 3 February<sup>(11)</sup> which stated that Pakistan's nuclear research and development programme was entirely geared to peaceful purposes, and quoted a February 1980 news report to the effect that Israel had carried out a nuclear explosion in 1979 off South Africa's coast and with its co-operation. Israel replied that there was abundant evidence indicating that Pakistan aimed at producing nuclear weapons; as to the purported explosion, Israel cited a comment to the press by its Prime Minister on 24 February 1981 rejecting newspaper reports concerning the event.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 9 December, the General Assembly, in a resolution<sup>(10)</sup> sponsored by Egypt and adopted without vote, requested the Secretary-General to transmit to the Assembly at its 1982 special session on disarmament mament (p. 27) the text of the 1980 resolution<sup>(9)</sup> by which it had urged all parties directly concerned to consider taking practical and urgent steps to implement the proposal for a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. The resolution, revised by its sponsor, was approved on 25 November 1981 by the First Committee, also without vote.

Egypt's initial draft would have had the Secretary-General appoint a special representative to ascertain the attitudes of parties in the Middle East on procedures for establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone. Qatar submitted amendments<sup>(1)</sup> to this proposal which would have replaced the paragraphs on a special representative with a request to the Secretary-General for a report, and added references to Israel's attack of 7 June on Iraqi nuclear installations (p. 53). When Egypt revised its proposal to include only a request to transmit the 1980 resolution to the special session, Qatar did not press its amendments.

Introducing its original proposal, Egypt stated that the appointment of a special representative of the Secretary-General would maintain the momentum for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East and transmute the theoretical concept into a practical one without infringing on basic positions. The proposal for a special representative was endorsed by Lebanon.

Many countries expressed support for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East as a practical approach towards enhancing the security of States in that region. Supporters included the United States, which offered to assist the States of the region to resolve problems in regard to such a zone. Oman stated that the Middle East must become a nuclear-weapon-free zone. The Syrian Arab Republic said it was ready to implement such a zone if Israel made such a commitment, but it held no hope that an entity which had violated international law would commit itself to a resolution in opposition to its strategy of expansion.

A number of Middle Eastern states—including Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and the United Arab Emirates—expressed deep concern that the development of nuclear weapons by Israel (p. 51) would constitute a serious threat to regional security and jeopardize the effort to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone. Some advocated that, pending establishment of such a zone, all parties in the region should pledge to refrain on a reciprocal basis from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices. Iraq remarked that, in discussing a nuclear-weapon-free zone for the Middle East, it was not valid to make a comparison with Latin America, as the Zionist entity had not signed the non-proliferation Treaty and had refused to place its nuclear facilities under international control.

Commenting on the initial Egyptian proposal, Israel remarked that it omitted reference to the indispensable negotiating process and did not deal realistically with a number of fundamental and practical aspects; a committee of experts could generate a more realistic momentum than could the itinerant efforts of a special representative.

The Sudan stated that Israel, which already possessed a nuclear-weapon capability, had ulterior motives in supporting a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East; it should first demonstrate its readiness to abide by international instruments and resolutions and adhere to the non-proliferation Treaty.

Explaining their positions, Finland, the United Kingdom (for the European Community members) and the United States said they would have supported Egypt's original proposal and regretted that it had not been possible to consider a text that would have dealt with the matter substantively. Iraq noted that the original text had failed to take into account the Israeli attack on Iraq's nuclear installations; while it regarded the revised text as unsatisfactory, it had gone along with the consensus.

Adopted without vote Meeting 91 9 December 1981

Approved by First Committee (A/36/747) without vote. 25 November (meeting 44); draft by Egypt (A/C.1/36/L.34/Rev.1); agenda item 46.

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979 and 35/147 of 12 December 1980 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit General Assembly resolution 35/147 to the Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

Nuclear weapons and Israel

REPORT BY THE GROUP OF EXPERTS. The Group of Experts to Prepare a Study on Israeli Nuclear Armament, appointed by the Secretary-General in accordance with a 1979 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(3)</sup> submitted its study to the Secretary-General on 19 June 1981<sup>(1)</sup> and he transmitted it to the Assembly in September. The five-member Group held four sessions: one in 1980<sup>(5)</sup> and the rest in 1981- 19 to 30 January and 20 April to 4 May at United Nations Headquarters, and 15 to 19 June at Geneva.

The study consisted of an introduction, four main chapters—on Israel's nuclear development, its nuclear-weapon potential, factors affecting its nuclear policy and international reports concerning its nuclear armament—and conclusions.

The experts observed that Israel had failed to adhere to the non-proliferation Treaty<sup>(2)</sup> and to submit all of its nuclear facilities to international inspection, and had also appeared to undermine the credibility of the nuclear safeguards supervised by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), particularly by the bombing of an Iraqi nuclear reactor which was under IAEA safeguards (p. 53).

The report stated that although Israeli authorities had not supplied information on the major part of Israel's nuclear programme and activities, there was no doubt, given its technical skills and infrastructure, that the country had the technical capability to manufacture nuclear weapons and possessed the means of delivering such weapons to targets in the area. Whereas Israel could be moved by a number of cogent arguments to refrain from acquiring nuclear weapons, various considerations might be thought to prompt it to acquire them. Israel's apparent posture of deliberate ambiguity in that regard might contribute to instability in the region and could be an obstacle to creating the confidence necessary for a political settlement there.

The Group of Experts stated that, on the basis of available authoritative information, it was not able to conclude definitively whether or not Israel currently possessed nuclear weapons. However, the experts did not doubt that, if Israel had not already crossed the threshold, it had the capability to manufacture nuclear weapons within a short time. The Group believed that it would contribute to avoiding the danger of a nuclear-arms race in the Middle East if Israel should renounce the possession of or any intention to possess nuclear weapons and agree to submit all its nuclear activities to international safeguards.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In a resolution on Israeli nuclear armament,<sup>(4)</sup> adopted on 9 December by a recorded vote of 101 to 2, with 39 abstentions, the General Assembly expressed deep alarm that the Secretary-General's report (to which the study by the Group of Experts was annexed) had established Israel's technical capability to manufacture nuclear weapons and its possession of means of delivery. Expressing concern that Israel had undermined the credibility of IAEA nuclear safeguards, the Assembly reaffirmed that Israel's attack on Iraqi nuclear facilities and Israel's capability were a serious destabilizing factor in the Middle East. It requested the Security Council to prohibit all nuclear co-operation with Israel and to institute enforcement action to prevent it from endangering peace and security by its nuclear-weapon capability, and called on States and others to terminate such co-operation. It demanded that Israel renounce any possession of nuclear weapons and place all its nuclear activities under international safeguards.

The text, sponsored by 18 Arab and other States, was approved by the First Committee on 24 November by a recorded vote of 93 to 2, with 32 abstentions.

Before acting on the text as a whole, the Assembly took a separate recorded vote on operative paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, on nuclear co-operation with Israel and Security Council enforcement action, and adopted them by 89 to 21, with 30 abstentions. The same paragraphs were approved in Committee by a recorded vote of 82 to 17, with 25 abstentions.

Introducing the proposal, Iraq remarked that it was based principally on the report of the Group of Experts and was a culmination of efforts to condemn Israeli nuclear armament.

Israel, voting against the resolution, described it as one-sided and hypocritical. The resolution establishing the Group had been discriminatory in selecting Israel alone for study, and the terms of reference, referring to "Israeli nuclear armament", had been prejudicial. The Group consisted of four political scientists and only one nuclear physicist, who happened to be an Arab. Iraq's insistence in forcing resolutions condemning Israel was inspired by the contingencies of inter-Arab rivalry and the need to divert attention from its own frenetic nuclear activities.

The United States, also voting against, said that targeting one country for sanctions was not an appropriate approach to the goal of non-proliferation, and objected to any attempt to engage the Security Council in what it called an unbalanced and politically motivated activity.

Several States which abstained in the vote, namely Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, New Zealand, Portugal and Sweden, regretted the formulations of the three paragraphs put to a separate vote. The objections were that the text failed to respect the division of responsibilities between the Assembly and the Security Council (Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, New Zealand, Sweden); did not differentiate between military and peaceful applications of nuclear energy when it called for an end to nuclear co-operation (Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Portugal); did not adequately reflect the conclusions by the Group of Experts (Belgium, Federal Republic of Germany); and referred to a question—the Israeli attack on Iraqi nuclear facilities—that had no bearing on the nuclear capability of Israel (Belgium). The Ivory Coast said it had abstained because nuclear disarmament, regional or world-wide, required a balanced approach.

Other States which supported the resolution as a whole—Argentina, the Bahamas and Spain—also expressed reservations regarding some of the language of the three paragraphs, on which they abstained; Argentina also recalled its reservations regarding the non-proliferation Treaty, as did Spain regarding the leeway given to States to choose whether to adhere to that Treaty.

Egypt, which abstained in the Committee vote but voted in favour in the Assembly, said the recent attitude of certain Arab countries could jeopardize efforts to put an end to any nuclear armament in the region. Voting in favour, the USSR stated that IAEA safeguards were sound and effective, and that Israel's bandit-like attack on the Iraqi nuclear centre could not be taken as an indication of their inadequacy.

Mexico, Panama, Peru and Venezuela, though they voted affirmatively in the vote on three paragraphs, stated that if there had been a separate vote on each paragraph they would have abstained on paragraph 7, requesting Security Council enforcement action against Israel.

In the First Committee debate, Iraq asserted that the report of the Group of Experts had confirmed that the Zionist entity had enough political reasons to produce nuclear weapons so as to annex further Arab territories and establish Zionist settlements; it possessed nuclear weapons and had established a nuclear alliance with Taiwan and South Africa. Somalia believed Israel should not be afforded the benefits of nuclear or military co-operation while it continued to flaunt its contempt for international law. According to the Sudan, available information about Israel's reactor at Dimona confirmed that Israel possessed nuclear weapons of the capacity of the bomb dropped on Nagasaki, Japan, in 1945, as well as the capability of producing more bombs and developing delivery systems.

Israeli nuclear armament

The General Assembly.

Recalling its relevant resolutions on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also its resolutions 33/71 A of 14 December 1978 on military and nuclear collaboration with Israel and 34/89 of 11 December 1979 and 35/157 of 12 December 1980 on Israeli nuclear armament,

Alarmed by the increasing evidence regarding Israel's attempts to acquire nuclear weapons,

Noting with concern that Israel has persistently refused to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons despite repeated calls by the General Assembly and the Security Council to place its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Recalling Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981,

Recalling the resolution adopted on 12 June 1981 by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency and resolution GC(XXV)/RES/381 adopted on 26 September 1981 by the General Conference of the Agency, in which the Conference, inter alia, considered the Israeli act of aggression as an attack against the Agency and its safeguards regime and decided to suspend the provision of any assistance to Israel.

Recalling its repeated condemnation of the nuclear collaboration between Israel and South Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General transmitting the study of the Group of Experts to Prepare a Study on Israeli Nuclear Armament,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report on Israeli nuclear armament;

2. Expresses its deep alarm at the fact that the report has established that Israel has the technical capability to manufacture nuclear weapons and possesses the means of delivery of such weapons;

3. Also expresses its deep concern that Israel has undermined the credibility of the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, in particular by the bombing of the Iraqi nuclear facilities which were under Agency safeguards;

4. Reaffirms that Israel's attack on the Iraqi nuclear facilities and Israel's capability constitute a serious destabilizing factor in an already tense situation in the Middle East, and a grave danger to international peace and security;

5. Requests the Security Council to prohibit all forms of co-operation with Israel in the nuclear field;

6. Calls upon all States and other parties and institutions to terminate forthwith all nuclear collaboration with Israel;

7. Requests the Security Council to institute effective enforcement action against Israel so as to prevent it from endangering international peace and security by its nuclear-weapon capability;

8. Demands that Israel should renounce, without delay, any possession of nuclear weapons and place all its nuclear activities under international safeguards;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to give maximum publicity to the report on Israel nuclear armament and to distribute it to Member States, the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, so that the international community and public opinion may be fully aware of the danger inherent in Israel's nuclear capability;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to follow closely Israeli military nuclear activity and to report thereon as appropriate;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to transmit the report on Israeli nuclear armament to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Israeli nuclear armament".

Israeli attack on Iraqi nuclear facilities

In the Committee on Disarmament,<sup>(1)</sup> many members condemned the Israeli air attack of 7 June 1981 against Iraq's nuclear facilities near Baghdad (p. 275). The Group of 21 (p. 31) said the attack challenged the inherent right of States to develop nuclear technology for peaceful purposes; the Group rejected the idea that peaceful nuclear energy programmes in developing countries inevitably led to nuclear-weapon proliferation. A group of socialist States called for a halt to nuclear assistance to Israel and urged examination of the question of strengthening international provisions for the protection of civilian nuclear installations against military attacks.

On 13 November, the General Assembly condemned Israel for a premeditated and unprecedented act of aggression, warned Israel to cease its threats and commission of armed attacks against nuclear facilities, reiterated its call that States cease providing arms which enabled Israel to commit aggression, and requested the Security Council to investigate Israel's nuclear activities and the collaboration of others in those activities.<sup>(4)</sup> Also, in an 11 November resolution on IAEA,<sup>(3)</sup> the Assembly described the attack as a serious threat to IAEA safeguards and to the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, and called on all States to refrain from armed attacks on nuclear installations.

On 9 December, by a resolution<sup>(6)</sup> introduced by Iraq on behalf of the Arab Group under the item on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East (p. 49), the Assembly stated that the Israeli military attack on Iraqi nuclear installations adversely affected prospects for establishment of such a zone. The Assembly declared it imperative that Israel forthwith place all its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards. The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 107 to 2, with 31 abstentions.

When Iraq introduced the 9 December resolution at a plenary meeting, it asserted that the resolution on a Middle East zone which the Assembly also adopted on that date<sup>(5)</sup> was purely procedural and did not take due account of the dangerous developments in the region, particularly the unprecedented Israeli act of aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations. That assault had grave effects on the non-proliferation Treaty<sup>(2)</sup> and on the IAEA safeguards system. Israel, having taken the law into its own hands, should not be allowed to repeat such destructive actions or to dictate its own formula as to the proper modalities for establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region.

Israel, which voted against the resolution, viewed the proposal as a revival of the amendments Qatar had submitted to the Egyptian draft resolution on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East; since no zone would be established without consensus, Iraq's action raised doubts about its intentions. The United States, also voting against, considered the Iraqi text to be improper and disruptive; harping on a subject already dealt with at length in the Security Council served no good purpose.

Argentina did not participate in the vote, stating that it did not share the aim of the text to impose full-scope safeguards on a country by means of an Assembly resolution. India, while condemning the Israeli attack, abstained in the vote because of its opposition to discriminatory agreements such as the non-proliferation Treaty and to nuclear safeguards deriving therefrom.

Canada, though condemning the attack, abstained in the vote as it did not believe that the incident should be allowed to affect either the future of the non-proliferation Treaty or the prospects for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East—a view shared by the United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community members. Costa Rica, which supported the establishment of the zone, abstained because it did not believe the Israeli attack was the only threat to non-proliferation in the region. Finland felt that the attack made the establishment of the zone more urgent, but that the Iraqi proposal did not contribute to that objective.

Albania voted in favour in order to condemn the attack, but reaffirmed its continuing reservations in respect of nuclear-weapon-free zones and the non-proliferation Treaty. Austria voted affirmatively in the conviction that adequate safeguard arrangements for all nuclear installations in all States of the Middle East would greatly facilitate the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone. Brazil, while supporting the text and its condemnation of the attack, remarked that the non-proliferation Treaty could not constitute the basis for serious steps to achieve the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones.

During the First Committee debate on establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, Austria, Japan, Malaysia, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Somalia and Tunisia regarded the Israeli attack as a challenge to or as undermining the IAEA safeguards system, while Mauritania and Oman asserted that the incident demonstrated the ineffectiveness or failure of that system. Ireland saw it as an attack on the effort to consolidate an international regime against nuclear proliferation. According to China, the assault had created new difficulties for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. Poland saw the attack as hindering efforts to draft a treaty banning radiological weapons.

Austria said that any unilateral military action to prevent nuclear activities of other countries posed a severe threat to the regime of the non-proliferation Treaty and might even provoke regional nuclear-arms races. Belgium stated that when a verification mechanism existed, as was the case under the Treaty, it could not accept calling into question the validity of controls such as those exercised by IAEA.

107-2-31 (recorded vote) Meeting 91 9 December 1981

Draft by Iraq (A/30/L.53); agenda item 46.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, in particular paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981,

Taking into consideration the resolution adopted on 12 June 1981 by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency and resolution GC(XXV)/RES/381 adopted on 26 September 1981 by the General Conference of the Agency,

Recalling further the report of the Secretary-General concerning Israeli nuclear armament,

Realizing that adherence to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons by all parties of the region will be conducive to a speedy establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Deeply concerned that the future of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons in the region has been gravely endangered by the attack carried out by Israel, which is not a party to the Treaty, on the nuclear installations of Iraq, which is a party to that Treaty,

1. Considers that the Israeli military attack on the Iraqi nuclear installations adversely affects the prospects of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

2. Declares that it is imperative, in this respect, that Israel place forthwith all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament.

South Asia

In September 1981 the Secretary-General submitted a report,<sup>(1)</sup> as requested by the General Assembly in December 1980,<sup>(2)</sup> on the proposed establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia. He said he had been in contact with States of the region and that there had been no request by them for his assistance regarding the subject. In the course of those contacts, a view had been expressed that he should continue to be available for that purpose.

On 9 December 1981, the Assembly reaffirmed its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.<sup>(3)</sup> It again urged States in the region and interested neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States to continue to make all possible efforts to establish such a zone and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to that objective. Also by this resolution, adopted by a recorded vote of 93 to 3, with 44 abstentions, the Assembly called on nuclear-weapon States to respond positively to the proposal and to co-operate in efforts to establish the zone.

The First Committee approved the text on 25 November by a recorded vote of 82 to 2, with 38 abstentions.

The resolution was sponsored by Pakistan, which asserted that South Asia was a distinct region, fully qualified to pursue the objective of establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone. Moreover, as countries of the region had more than once unilaterally declared their commitment to nuclear non-proliferation, it should be possible to translate those commitments into a joint declaration.

India cast a negative vote, stating that the proposal did not meet internationally recognized principles for the creation of nuclear-weapon-free zones, particularly in that the initiative must come from the States of the region; in its view, South Asia was a contiguous and integral part of the Asia-Pacific region, where foreign bases were being maintained and different countries had different perceptions and security concerns. Also voting against the text, Bhutan stressed the importance of consultation to bring about an agreement among all the States concerned, which even after eight years had not been achieved.

Among States which abstained in the vote, the Bahamas and Sweden cited the lack of agreement among all States of the region, although the two States accepted the concept of a zone in principle. Australia and Brazil considered it essential that all States of the region participate on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at and negotiated among themselves; Australia believed that the zone should respect accepted principles of international law and be fully verifiable, while Brazil added that there should be a commitment among the nuclear Powers not to interfere in the negotiations.

Bangladesh, which voted in favour, stated that contacts and consultations must take place among the States concerned in order to ensure unanimity on the issue, including such aspects as defining the limits of such a zone. Sri Lanka, which also supported the text, believed the zone could be viable provided that it had the consent, support and co-operation of all countries in the region. Japan and the United States reiterated their support of nuclear-weapon-free zones initiated by the States concerned, and considered that under appropriate conditions the zone could contribute to both non-proliferation and the promotion of peace and security. The Netherlands, supporting the proposal, called on the States in the region and other interested States to start consultations on arrangements to ensure that nuclear explosions were ruled out, and to refrain in the mean time from action contrary to that goal; but it wondered whether requirements such as geographical delimitation and full participation by the States concerned could be met under current circumstances.

During the First Committee debate, Democratic Kampuchea declared that the situation resulting from the Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea and the USSR invasion of Afghanistan prevented the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979 and 35/148 of 12 December 1980 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures which can contribute most effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will strengthen the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Recalling that in the above-mentioned resolutions it called upon the States of the South Asian region and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as might be interested to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective.

Further recalling that, in its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX),

31/73 and 32/83, it requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting for the purpose of the consultations mentioned therein and to render such assistance as might be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia.

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as may be interested to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective;

3. Calls upon those nuclear-weapon States which have not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to extend the necessary co-operation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render such assistance as may be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament as well as at its thirty-seventh session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Burundi, Canada, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: Bhutan, India, Mauritius.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, Indonesia, Israel, Italy, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Mozambique, Norway, Poland, Samoa,<sup>a</sup> Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

Non-stationing of nuclear weapons

Expressing regret that little progress had been made in the Committee on Disarmament, the General Assembly, by a resolution adopted on 9 December 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> again requested the Committee to proceed without delay to talks with a view to elaborating an international agreement on the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there were no such weapons. The Assembly called on all nuclear-weapon States to refrain from further action involving the stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of other States. This resolution, sponsored by 19 States, was adopted by a recorded vote of 84 to 18, with 42 abstentions, following its approval by the First Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 67 to 17, with 38 abstentions.

Introducing the resolution, Hungary stated that the conclusion of an international agreement on the non-stationing of nuclear weapons would strengthen the nuclear non-proliferation régime and could contribute to the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones and to reducing the danger of nuclear war. Recent decisions to deploy nuclear weapons in States where there were none and to deploy additional nuclear weapons in States where they already existed had increased the importance and timeliness of the question. As the Committee on Disarmament had been unable to deal appropriately with the question, efforts must continue towards the elaboration and conclusion of an international agreement.

Belgium explained its negative vote on the ground that the text would prevent States from exercising the right of collective self-defence as provided for in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations. Japan also cast a negative vote, asserting that the measures proposed might destabilize the international military balance and thereby prove detrimental to the maintenance of peace and security.

Of the States which abstained, Brazil observed that the proposal failed to include the specific requirement of withdrawal and elimination of nuclear weapons from the territories of States where such weapons already existed. Brazil, Peru and Yugoslavia considered that an international agreement such as the one contemplated in the resolution could, therefore, confer legality on the existence of nuclear weapons on the territories of countries that already possessed them. Peru thought the right approach was the creation of nuclear-weapon-free zones. Greece felt that the subject of the resolution should be dealt with in a broader, global context, founded on the sovereign right of every country freely to decide on questions concerning its own collective or individual defence. Ireland wished to avoid taking sides on strategic issues between the two alliances. Sweden considered that the question of non-stationing could not be dealt with in isolation, since it was related to the world military situation and security arrangements; also, a serious problem of credibility and consistency arose when the USSR co-sponsored a resolution against the stationing of nuclear weapons on new territories after a Soviet submarine, in all probability carrying a nuclear warhead, had recently violated Swedish territorial waters and penetrated into a militarily restricted area.

Albania did not participate in the vote, as it considered the resolution to be part of the rivalry between the two major nuclear Powers, aimed at securing advantages over the adversary.

India stated that its affirmative vote was without prejudice to its consistent support for the total elimination of all nuclear weapons, wherever deployed; consequently, it viewed the proposal as only one aspect of the problem of achieving nuclear disarmament and not as an end in itself. Similarly, the Sudan declared that its support should not be construed as acceptance of the existence of nuclear weapons currently on some territories or acceptance of any attempt to legalize such existence. Finland, while voting in favour, took exception to the request that nuclear-weapon States refrain from stationing nuclear weapons on the territories of other States and to a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly expressed alarm at nuclear weapon build-ups in other States; those clauses, it said, were intended to prejudice the Geneva talks on intermediate-range nuclear forces in Europe. The Niger said its affirmative vote did not diminish its resolve not to accept foreign dictation on the means of ensuring its security.

In the First Committee debate, Czechoslovakia supported a USSR initiative for an agreement not to increase the number of nuclear weapons where such arsenals already existed. Also endorsing this idea, the German Democratic Republic said the introduction of additional foreign nuclear weapons in States which already had some on their territory would do great harm to confidence and stability, and undermine the security of the areas of deployment. The USSR said the 1980 General Assembly call for the beginning of talks on the question<sup>(1)</sup> had not been heeded owing to the obstructionist position of a number of Western States and China.

Non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present

The General Assembly,

Conscious that a nuclear war would have devastating consequences for the whole of mankind,

Recalling its resolution 33/91 F of 16 December 1978, which contains an appeal to all nuclear-weapon States to refrain from stationing nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present, and to all non-nuclear-weapon States which do not have nuclear weapons on their territories to refrain from any steps which would directly or indirectly result in the stationing of such weapons on their territories,

Recalling further its resolution 35/156 C of 12 December 1980, in which it requested the Committee on Disarmament to proceed without delay to talks with a view to elaborating an international agreement on the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present,

Noting with regret that this appeal by the General Assembly remains unheeded,

Considering that the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present would constitute a step towards the larger objective of the subsequent complete withdrawal of nuclear weapons from the territories of other States, thus contributing to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons and leading eventually to the total elimination of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind the clearly expressed intention of many States to prevent the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territories,

Deeply alarmed by plans and practical steps leading to a build-up of nuclear-weapon arsenals on the territories of other States,

1. Requests once again the Committee on Disarmament to proceed without delay to talks with a view to elaborating an international agreement on the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present;

2. Calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to refrain from further action involving the stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of other States;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the discussion of this question by the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

4. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to submit a report on the question to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present: report of the Committee on Disarmament".

Security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States

CONSIDERATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON DISARMAMENT. In 1981, the Committee on Disarmament<sup>(1)</sup> considered an agenda item entitled "Effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons", both in plenary meetings and in an Ad Hoc Working Group re-established for that purpose on 12 February.

The Ad Hoc Working Group on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons held 23 meetings between 17 February and 13 August. It decided to concentrate on the substance of assurances and followed a two-stage approach: (1) identification of the various features of assurances; and (2) consideration of possible alternatives which could be explored in the search for a "common approach" or "formula".

In the conclusions and recommendations of its report, which the Committee adopted on 20 August, the Working Group reaffirmed that non-nuclear-weapon States should be effectively assured by nuclear-weapon States in this regard. However, negotiations on the substance of effective arrangements had revealed differing perceptions by some nuclear and non-nuclear-weapon States as well as the complexities involved in finding a common formula. The Group recognized that adequate consideration must be given to the security interests of non-nuclear-weapon States, and regarded the efforts devoted to the search for a common approach or formula as a positive step towards agreement on the question of security assurances.

Against that background, the Working Group recommended that a similar group be established at the beginning of the Committee's 1982 session to explore alternatives and seek a common formula which could be included in a legally binding international instrument.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 9 December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions concerning security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States. By the first, it called for declarations by nuclear-weapon States as a first step towards an international convention; by the second, it recommended continued negotiations to find a common approach or formula.

The call addressed to nuclear-weapon States in the first of these resolutions<sup>(2)</sup> was that they make declarations on the non-use of nuclear weapons against States having no such weapons on their territories, as a first step towards an international convention. The declarations, if they all met their objective, would be approved by the Security Council. Meanwhile, the Committee on Disarmament was requested to continue negotiations on the subject, and participating States were called on to make efforts for the elaboration and conclusion of a convention.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 115 to 17, with 12 abstentions. The text was approved in the First Committee on 23 November by a recorded vote of 93 to 16, with 14 abstentions. It had 10 sponsors and was introduced by Bulgaria.

By the second resolution,<sup>(4)</sup> the Assembly appealed to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate the necessary political will to reach agreement on a common approach, and particularly a common formula which could be included in a legally binding international instrument. The Assembly recommended a further search for such a common approach or formula, including continued negotiations in the Committee on Disarmament, taking into account the widespread support for an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals having the same objective.

This resolution, sponsored and revised by Pakistan, was adopted by a recorded vote of 145 to none, with 3 abstentions, following its approval in the First Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 121 to none, with 4 abstentions.

When Bulgaria introduced the first of these resolutions, it stated that total nuclear disarmament would be the most effective and credible security guarantee to non-nuclear-weapon and all other States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. Pending attainment of that objective, banning the use of nuclear weapons concurrently with the renunciation of the use of force in international relations would be a radical solution to the problem of strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States.

Pakistan, introducing the second resolution, stated that interim assurances were needed pending the total elimination of nuclear weapons. In the effort to arrive at a common formula for such assurances, the strategic doctrines of the major nuclear Powers had thus far presented insurmountable obstacles. Their unilateral declarations expressed their narrowly conceived security concerns, whereas effective assurances would have to be unconditional and legally binding. Pakistan thought the most reasonable modality could be the adoption of an international convention, and disagreed with the suggestion that incorporating the existing unilateral declarations of the major nuclear Powers in a Security Council or General Assembly resolution could serve as the effective arrangement sought by the non-nuclear-weapon States.

Turkey voted against the resolution calling for declarations by nuclear-weapon States; referring to a preambular paragraph expressing concern at plans for stationing nuclear weapons on other States' territories, it said provisions relating to the defence posture of the two alliances were alien to the concept of security assurances.

Explaining its abstention in the vote on this resolution, Austria said the Working Group's difficulties in finding a common approach stemmed from placing too much emphasis on the security concerns of the nuclear-weapon States. Austria and Ireland, which also abstained, objected that the resolution favoured the idea of an international convention, which seemed to imply further obligations for non-nuclear-weapon States. Sweden abstained for similar reasons, remarking that most non-nuclear-weapon States had adhered to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons<sup>(2)</sup> and there was no reason for them to undertake further obligations. The Niger said that merely calling for declarations from the nuclear-weapon States did not offer all the necessary guarantees that would be contained in the text of a convention recommended by the Committee on Disarmament.

Among those which voted for the resolution, Argentina none the less had doubts about the value of either unilateral declarations or a Security Council resolution and said that, had separate votes been taken on the paragraphs referring to such concepts, it would have abstained in those votes. Brazil reiterated that the reference in the text to non-stationing of nuclear weapons on territories of States where none existed should not be understood as legitimizing the presence of such weapons in States where they already existed.

Austria voted for the resolution calling for continued negotiations towards a common formula because it found the reference to the idea of a convention more balanced and moderate than in the other text or in past Assembly resolutions. Sweden supported the resolution for similar reasons. Canada and France also voted affirmatively, though they feared that some provisions could prejudice the responsibility of the Committee on Disarmament for determining its own procedures. While voting in favour, Japan voiced reservations about the resolution's references to a specific modality of security assurances. Finland voted for both resolutions in the conviction that all approaches to non-use assurances—also referred to as “negative security guarantees”—should continue to be explored, including unilateral declarations and multilateral agreements. The Ivory Coast, which abstained in the First Committee vote but voted in favour in the Assembly action on security assurances, asserted that the best guarantee lay in disarmament itself.

In the First Committee debate, a number of non-nuclear-weapon States were critical of the assurances which nuclear Powers had given or might be willing to give in future. Algeria remarked that negotiations on this topic were focused on the extensive restrictions most nuclear Powers intended to impose on non-nuclear-weapon States rather than on the assurances to be given to those States. Finland asserted that the current unilateral assurances fell short of the goal of effective international arrangements, not to speak of legally binding instruments, and that they were functions of the respective military doctrines and diluted by political and legal reservations. Pakistan said it could not accept any proposition which provided the illusion rather than the substance of security assurances while attempting to secure additional obligations on the part of non-nuclear-weapon States. Observing that the Working Group of the Committee on Disarmament had been trying to reconcile the unilateral declarations of the major Powers with the just demands for security of the non-nuclear-weapon States, Venezuela remarked that, if different viewpoints were to be reconciled, it must be realized that all States had the right to security and not just a few because of their military power.

Since many non-nuclear-weapon States were facing a serious nuclear threat, said China, the nuclear-weapon countries should unconditionally guarantee not to use or threaten to use such weapons against any such State. France, however, was of the view that, in the absence of nuclear disarmament, assurances of the non-use of nuclear weapons could be granted only to States which did not possess such weapons, especially those in nuclear-weapon-free zones. Norway, arguing that existing guarantees were not sufficient for non-aligned States, held that such States which had been asked to renounce their own option to acquire nuclear weapons had a legitimate claim to guarantees against nuclear attack, and that the nuclear-weapon States bore a special responsibility for finding a solution.

Regarding the form and legal character of security assurances, Egypt, Kenya, Lebanon, Nepal, Qatar and Uganda emphasized the need for unconditional guarantees that would be unequivocal and legally binding. Austria asserted that only co-ordinated, binding commitments free of conditions and escape clauses would have the desired confidence-building effect; however, it had reservations on the idea of a convention. Italy and New Zealand confirmed their interest in identifying a common formula to be incorporated in a binding international instrument; Italy preferred this approach to either individual declarations by nuclear Powers or a single international juridical instrument embodying such declarations. The Netherlands noted that it had proposed such a formula for a Security Council resolution; while some non-nuclear-weapon States favoured a more ambitious approach, it was better to be satisfied with what was obtainable rather than reach for the impossible. Sweden suggested that the Assembly consider urging the Council to embody existing negative assurances in a resolution so as to make them legally binding.

Poland stated that consideration should be given to the adoption, as an interim measure, of identical declarations by the five nuclear Powers, confirmed by the Council. This approach was supported by Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Nepal. The German Democratic Republic remarked that some nuclear-weapon States obviously did not want to admit any restriction on their options to use nuclear weapons.

The USSR continued to hold that, in the absence of nuclear disarmament, the most effective means to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States would be a convention to assure the non-use of nuclear weapons against States which had no such weapons on their territory; States which made their territory available for the deployment of nuclear weapons undermined their own security, because they could not guarantee that a nuclear strike would not be launched from their territory, possibly provoking nuclear retaliation. The Byelorussian SSR remarked that the emphasis placed by certain Western Powers on the supposed impossibility of drafting a convention reflected a lack of desire and political will to give clear-cut guarantees. Mongolia regretted that the Committee on Disarmament had been unable to reach agreement on such a convention because of the negative position of certain Western nuclear Powers.

Romania and the United Republic of Cameroon called for action in 1982 to work out international arrangements for a system of guarantees covering all non-nuclear-weapon States.

Conclusion of an international convention on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons
The General Assembly,

Convinced of the need to take effective measures for the strengthening of the security of States and prompted by the desire shared by all nations to eliminate war and prevent nuclear conflagration,

Taking into account the principle of non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and reaffirmed in a number of United Nations declarations and resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the desire of States in various regions to prevent nuclear weapons from being introduced into their territories, including through the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned, and being anxious to contribute to the attainment of this objective,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Mindful of the statements made and views expressed by various States on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States,

Concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the increased danger of recourse to the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Deeply concerned at the plans for further stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of non-nuclear-weapon States that could directly affect the security of non-nuclear-weapon States,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 33/72 of 14 December 1978, 34/84 and 34/85 of 11 December 1979, 35/154 and 35/155 of 12 December 1980 and the relevant provisions of its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980,

Noting the consideration by the Committee on Disarmament in 1981 of the item entitled "Effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons" and the setting up of an Ad Hoc Working Group to continue the negotiations on this item,

Recalling the drafts of an international convention submitted on that item to the Committee on Disarmament in 1979 and noting with satisfaction that the idea of concluding such a convention has received widespread international support,

Taking note of the report of the Committee on Disarmament, including the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons,

Wishing to promote an early and successful completion of the negotiations on the elaboration of a convention on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting further that the idea of interim arrangements as a first step towards the conclusion of such a convention has also been considered in the Committee on Disarmament, particularly in the form of a Security Council resolution on this subject, and recalling the recommendation made in that respect by the General Assembly in paragraph 6 of its resolution 35/154,

Mindful of the second special session devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982, at which the General Assembly will review the progress achieved in the field of disarmament, including the implementation of paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

1. Welcomes the conclusion of the Committee on Disarmament that there is continuing recognition of the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Committee on Disarmament there is once again no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention on this subject;

3. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to continue the negotiations on the question of strengthening the security guarantees of non-nuclear-weapon States during its session in 1982;

4. Calls upon all States participating in these negotiations to make efforts for the elaboration and conclusion of an international convention on this matter;

5. Calls once again upon all nuclear-weapon States to make solemn declarations, identical in substance, concerning the non-use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States having no such weapons on their territories, as a first step towards the conclusion of an international convention, and recommends that the Security Council should examine such declarations and, if they all meet the above-mentioned objective, should adopt an appropriate resolution approving them;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Conclusion of an international convention on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Approved by First Committee (A/36/755) by recorded vote (121-0-4), 25 November (meeting 44): draft by Pakistan (A/C.1/36/L.17/Rev.1); agenda item 54.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization.

Deeply concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Taking into account the principle of the non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned about the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolution 3261 G (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, Further recalling its resolution 31/189 C of 21 December 1976,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Recalling its resolutions 33/72 of 14 December 1978, 34/85 of 11 December 1979 and 35/155 of 12 December 1980,

Further recalling paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, in which it is stated, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted, therefore, by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement, and to submit agreed texts, where possible, before the second special session devoted to disarmament, on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Committee on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Working Group on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item, Noting the proposals submitted under that item in the Committee on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note of the decision of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Eleventh and Twelfth Islamic Conferences of Foreign Ministers, held at Islamabad from 17 to 22 May 1980 and at Baghdad from 1 to 5 June 1981, respectively, calling upon the Committee on Disarmament to elaborate and reach an agreement on an international basis to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Further noting the support expressed in the Committee on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Committee on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate the political will necessary to reach agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula which could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including in particular those considered during the session of the Committee on Disarmament held in 1981, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends that the Committee on Disarmament should actively continue negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Proposed prohibition of the neutron bomb

CONSIDERATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON DISARMAMENT. During the 1981 session of the Committee on Disarmament,<sup>(1)</sup> the question of the nuclear neutron weapon, also known as the enhanced radiation weapon, was raised in connection with the agenda item on nuclear disarmament. A group of socialist countries proposed the establishment of an ad hoc working group on prohibition of production, stockpiling, deployment and use of nuclear neutron weapons, to negotiate a draft convention. The United States and other Western countries saw the enhanced radiation weapon as part of the general problem of nuclear disarmament; there was no reason to give it special treatment. Members of the Group of 21 (p. 31) emphasized the need for a working group on nuclear disarmament (p. 35).

Following consideration on 20 August of the proposal for a working group on the neutron weapon, the Chairman announced that there was no consensus for its adoption.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 9 December on prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly requested the Committee on Disarmament to start without delay negotiations in an appropriate organizational framework with a view to concluding a convention on prohibition of the production, stockpiling, deployment and use of nuclear neutron weapons. In adopting this text by a recorded vote of 68 to 14, with 57 abstentions, the Assembly further requested the Committee to report on the question to the Assembly in 1982.

The First Committee approved the 18-nation resolution on 23 November by a recorded vote of 58 to 13, with 40 abstentions.

Introducing the text, the German Democratic Republic said the idea that a qualitatively new type of weapon was to be added to an arsenal of the most dreadful weapons had prompted many Governments to call for its prohibition. The effects of that weapon were especially cruel and inhumane, and its production and deployment would aggravate the arms race and considerably increase the danger of a nuclear war. The sponsors viewed the decision to produce such weapons as a reflection of the doctrine of limited nuclear war.

Among those which voted against the text, France held that, since the weapon was part of the overall problem of nuclear disarmament, there was no reason to give it special consideration or provide for a special convention. The United States, calling the text misguided and hypocritical, declared that its own motivation to begin assembling the weapon lay in the massive USSR arms build-up, sustained over many years, which had turned the European military balance against democratic societies; contrary to what the resolution implied, the reduced-blast weapon, rather than making nuclear war more thinkable, would make aggression less so by adding to the credibility of deterrence and thus reducing the likelihood that nuclear weapons would be used in a conflict.

Albania did not participate in the vote because it felt the proposal was an attempt to use the neutron weapon in polemics or bargaining which had nothing to do with real nuclear disarmament; neither the resolution nor a convention would serve any useful purpose, since neutron weapons were already part of the super-Powers' nuclear arsenals. Also not participating, China stated that the USSR's motive for giving separate prominence to the neutron weapon, instead of including it in overall negotiations on nuclear disarmament, was the fear of losing military superiority in Europe and a favourable position in future disarmament negotiations; further, China viewed past USSR proposals on prohibition of a particular type of weapon as attempts to camouflage its own development of that weapon.

Cyprus and Indonesia explained their affirmative votes as reflecting their support for any measure that would help prevent the development and production of another weapon of mass destruction. India, which voted in favour in line with its opposition to all nuclear weapons, said it was up to the Committee on Disarmament to determine the best means of dealing with the subject. The Niger, which supported the text in the First Committee but abstained in the Assembly vote, remarked that all nuclear weapons, whether they were termed offensive or defensive, represented the same danger for humanity.

Denmark and the Netherlands, which abstained in the vote, said that, while they would not accept the weapon on their soil, the resolution was politically inspired and sought to split the Western alliance. Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Egypt, Greece, Ireland, Pakistan, Peru, Sweden, Venezuela and Yugoslavia, which also abstained, found essentially that the resolution's approach in singling out one type of nuclear weapon did not serve a useful purpose and that the matter should be dealt with in the general context of nuclear disarmament. For similar reasons, Senegal did not participate in the vote.

In the First Committee debate, Afghanistan demanded that the United States reverse its decision to begin large-scale production of the neutron weapon. The Byelorussian SSR, Cuba and Poland stated that the weapon was unacceptable because it dangerously lowered the nuclear threshold and made nuclear war more likely. The Ukrainian SSR recalled that the socialist States of Eastern Europe and Mongolia had presented to the Committee on Disarmament in 1978 a draft convention to prohibit the production, stockpiling, deployment and use of neutron bombs.<sup>(3)</sup> The USSR said it was ready to conclude an agreement prohibiting the manufacture and deployment of the neutron weapon, and favoured the adoption of a resolution to ban that weapon, not out of fear that the United States would come to possess it but because its introduction would open the door to a new spiral in the arms race; the USSR would not begin to manufacture the weapon if other States did not possess it.

Rwanda said the neutron bomb must be banned, because it was certainly no gift to mankind. Sweden stated that there was every reason to denounce the decision to produce the neutron bomb, designed specifically for use in Europe.

Prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 47 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that nuclear weapons pose the greatest danger to mankind and that it is essential to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race in order to avert the danger of war involving nuclear weapons,

Stressing that the termination of the qualitative arms race and the use of scientific and technological achievements solely for peaceful purposes are in the interest of all States and peoples,

Sharing the world-wide concern over the production and intended deployment of nuclear neutron weapons expressed by numerous Member States and by many non-governmental organizations,

Considering that the introduction of the nuclear neutron weapon in the military arsenals of States escalates the nuclear-arms race and significantly lowers the threshold of nuclear war, thereby increasing the danger of such a war,

Aware of the inhumane effects of that weapon, which constitutes a grave threat, particularly for the unprotected civilian population,

Recalling the proposals for the prohibition of the production, stockpiling, deployment and use of nuclear neutron weapons,

Desiring to contribute to halting the arms race, particularly in the field of weapons of mass destruction.

1. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to start without delay negotiations in an appropriate organizational framework with a view to concluding a convention on the prohibition of the production, stockpiling, deployment and use of nuclear neutron weapons;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the discussion of this question by the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

3. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to submit a report on this question to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session an item entitled "Prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia.

Prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests

CONSIDERATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON DISARMAMENT. No consensus emerged in the Committee, on Disarmament during 1981 on proposals by the Group of 21 (p. 31) and by a group of socialist States to establish an ad hoc working group on a nuclear-test ban. Several Western members expressed a preference for leaving the topic to tripartite negotiations among the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, which had begun in 1977 with the aim of formulating a treaty prohibiting nuclear-weapon tests.

During an initial discussion in February, many Committee members supported a 1980 proposal to establish a working group.<sup>(6)</sup> At subsequent informal meetings, the Group of 21 submitted on 24 April a proposal for the establishment of an ad hoc working group to negotiate provisions relating to the scope, verification of compliance and final clauses of a draft treaty. In a statement on 13 July, a group of socialist States, including the USSR, advocated the early conclusion of a treaty on the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests and the establishment of an ad hoc working group, with the participation of all nuclear Powers, to elaborate a draft. Of the other participants in the tripartite negotiations, the United Kingdom reaffirmed its view that those talks offered the most realistic way forward, while the United States said it could not agree to the establishment of a working group because it was reviewing its policy concerning nuclear testing, including the question of negotiations on a test ban.

The Group of 21 proposal was put formally to the Committee on 14 July, and the proposal by the group of socialist States on 23 July. On both occasions the Chairman noted a lack of consensus. Five members of the Group of 21 subsequently proposed that the consensus rule in the Committee's rules of procedure not be used to block establishment of subsidiary organs (p. 31).

In its report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee, recognizing that this item was of highest priority, expressed its intention of pursuing efforts at its 1982 session towards the conclusion of a nuclear test-ban treaty. The United States reserved its position on this point, observing that it was not in a position to say what its intentions might be in 1982.

Also in connection with this item, the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events held its eleventh session from 3 to 12 February 1981 and its twelfth from 3 to 12 August. The Group's Chairman reported that it had started to assess a number of national investigations into the international transmission of seismological messages. On 10 March and 18 August, the Committee adopted the largely procedural recommendations contained in the Group's two progress reports.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 9 December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests.

By the first,<sup>(4)</sup> sponsored by 11 nations, the Assembly urged members of the Committee on Disarmament to support the establishment of an ad hoc working group to start multilateral negotiations on a treaty to prohibit all nuclear-weapon tests. It also urged Committee members to bear in mind that the consensus rule should not be used to prevent the establishment of subsidiary bodies (p. 31). Further, the Assembly called on the depositary States (USSR, United Kingdom, United States) of the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>(2)</sup> to halt without delay all nuclear-test explosions, either jointly or unilaterally.

The resolution as a whole was adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to 2, with 23 abstentions, after its paragraph 5, calling for action by the three depositary States, was adopted by a separate vote of 95 to 2, with 42 abstentions. The First Committee, on 23 November, approved paragraph 5 by a recorded vote of 84 to 2, with 38 abstentions, before approving the text as a whole by a recorded vote of 103 to 2, with 21 abstentions.

By the second resolution,<sup>(5)</sup> sponsored by 22 nations, the Assembly called on the three negotiating nuclear-weapon States to resume negotiations, exert their best efforts for early success and report on the state of the negotiations in time for the Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27). It requested the Committee on Disarmament to take the necessary steps, including the establishment of a working group, to initiate substantive negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban treaty as a matter of the highest priority. The Committee was asked to determine, in the context of those negotiations, the institutional and administrative arrangements necessary for establishing, testing and operating an international seismic monitoring network and an effective verification system.

This resolution was adopted by a non-recorded vote of 140 to none, with 5 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 24 November by a recorded vote of 121 to none, with 5 abstentions (Argentina, China, France, United Kingdom, United States).

The 11-nation resolution was introduced by Mexico, which observed that the non-nuclear-weapon States in the Committee on Disarmament had exhibited impatience, not to say justifiable indignation, at the inexplicable reluctance of some of the nuclear-weapon States to respond to the Assembly's repeated appeals.

When Australia introduced the 22-nation resolution, it expressed deep disappointment that, despite the Assembly's request in 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> the Committee on Disarmament had not begun consideration of the question nor had the trilateral negotiations been resumed. Australia looked for a treaty leading to the cessation of all nuclear-test explosions, for both military and peaceful purposes.

The United States voted against the first resolution on the ground that it contained a number of unacceptable provisions, in particular a call for an unverified moratorium.

Explaining its abstention in the vote on this text, the Federal Republic of Germany felt that no useful purpose was served by singling out some nuclear-weapon States for accusation. New Zealand objected that the text called for negotiation by the Committee on Disarmament of a treaty for the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests rather than a comprehensive test-ban treaty, and advocated only a partial moratorium rather than one covering so-called peaceful nuclear explosions as well. Samoa remained opposed to any explosions of nuclear weapons in any environment, and felt that the resolution condoned, by omission, test explosions of nuclear weapons by some States in some environments. Australia, Fiji and Japan abstained for similar reasons. France thought the proposed measure was not a step towards nuclear disarmament and would consecrate the qualitative and quantitative advantages already enjoyed by the two major nuclear Powers. Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece and Japan considered that the text challenged the basic principle of consensus in the Committee on Disarmament.

India and the USSR voted for the resolution as a whole but abstained on paragraph 5 because of the selective nature of the moratorium requested; the USSR also had reservations concerning the text's reference to matters within the Committee's exclusive prerogatives.

The United States, which abstained in the vote on the second resolution, considered it inappropriate for the Assembly to suggest how the Committee on Disarmament should handle its agenda items. Similar reservations were voiced by two States that voted in favour: Belgium, which also feared that the resolution could be used as a pretext to prevent progress towards limited solutions falling short of a global solution; and the USSR, which also had misgivings about the appeal to the three Powers for a report on negotiations which were not currently taking place.

Argentina abstained in the belief that the text left a shadow of doubt about the right of nations to access to peaceful applications of nuclear energy. Brazil, although voting affirmatively, stressed the importance it attached to a multilateral treaty on the prohibition of further testing of nuclear weapons; such a treaty should contain an unequivocal commitment to nuclear disarmament and promote freedom of access by all nations to nuclear technology for peaceful purposes. Bulgaria, also voting in favour, felt that the resolution could have been improved if a clear distinction had been drawn between the positions of the nuclear Powers as to their willingness to negotiate and conclude a treaty.

In the First Committee debate, China viewed a nuclear-test ban as an integral part of disarmament, to be linked with other measures such as a ban on the development, production and use of nuclear weapons and their reduction and destruction. France believed that a prohibition of tests could not be isolated from, or precede, nuclear disarmament. The United States contended that international conditions were not propitious for immediate action; moreover, for a test ban to be effective, it must be verifiable and be concluded under conditions which would enhance rather than diminish international security and stability.

The USSR remarked that the trilateral talks had produced agreement on most provisions for a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon testing, yet no treaty had been concluded, due not to the difficulty of resolving outstanding issues but to lack of political will and readiness on the part of the United States. The Lao People's Democratic Republic and Mongolia held that obstructionism and negativism on the part of certain nuclear Powers and their allies was the main reason for continued failure. The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Ireland, Japan and Mongolia appealed for a resumption of the talks without delay. Afghanistan did likewise, and added that a one-year moratorium on all nuclear explosions by all nuclear Powers would prove helpful.

Asserting that more than 1,200 nuclear tests had taken place, Japan stressed the importance of universal adherence to the partial test-ban Treaty of 1963, particularly by China and France, the two nuclear-weapon States which had not done so. Ireland stated that 783 nuclear tests had taken place since 1963 as compared with 488 between 1945 and 1963, and that 49 nuclear-test explosions had been carried out in 1980 alone; it favoured a moratorium followed by a comprehensive test-ban treaty. Also endorsing a moratorium, Guyana said that if negotiating efforts were genuine, there should be no hesitation in agreeing to an immediate halt to all nuclear-weapon testing, pending the conclusion of a comprehensive treaty.

Commenting on efforts in the Committee on Disarmament to establish a working group on a nuclear-test ban, Mexico noted that the United Kingdom and the United States had been the only members of that Committee to oppose its creation. Brazil was puzzled by the two Powers' argument that the Committee should not set up a working group because of the trilateral negotiations, as those negotiations had not led to concrete agreements. The Byelorussian SSR, Nepal and the Netherlands favoured the establishment of such a working group with the participation of all nuclear Powers. Cuba accused the United Kingdom and the United States of imposing a double veto on the Committee's work. India argued that the negotiations should be entrusted to the Committee on Disarmament, the sole multilateral negotiating body. Negotiations in the Committee were also urged by a number of other States, including Ecuador, the German Democratic Republic and Malaysia.

Nigeria rejected the notion that the trilateral negotiations constituted the only valid basis for a comprehensive test ban, as nuclear disarmament was a concern of all nations. Pakistan said it was unlikely that the tripartite negotiations could produce a generally acceptable treaty while seeking to impose an unequal arrangement on non-nuclear-weapon States; multilateral negotiations on an equitable and universally acceptable treaty should commence without delay.

Spain, while understanding the objections of some nuclear Powers to the creation of a multilateral working group, said they should demonstrate that their procedure was the more effective method. Sweden noted that the tripartite talks had been suspended since mid-1980 and added that certain States were using the consensus rule to deny the Committee its right to start negotiations in a working group.

Several States, including Canada, Japan, the Netherlands and Spain, saw encouragement in the work of the Group of Scientific Experts and particularly in its trial exchange of seismic data. In this connection, Finland observed that it had an unparalleled seismic detection capability in its part of the world, due to its technical capability and location. Commenting on another aspect of verification, India remarked that the trilateral negotiators envisaged one set of verification provisions applicable only among themselves and another set for other States parties.

Austria stated that the link between disarmament and non-proliferation lent urgency to the conclusion of a test-ban treaty as a logical first step towards nuclear disarmament. Similar remarks were made by Australia, Denmark, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Italy, Jamaica, New Zealand and Norway.

Cessation of all test explosions of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, which has been examined for more than twenty-five years and on which the General Assembly has adopted more than forty resolutions, is a basic objective of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament, to whose attainment it has repeatedly assigned the highest priority,

Stressing that on seven different occasions it has condemned such tests in the strongest terms and that, since 1974, it has stated its conviction that the continuance of nuclear-weapon testing will intensify the arms race, thus increasing the danger of nuclear war,

Reiterating the assertion made in several previous resolutions that, whatever may be the differences on the question of verification, there is no valid reason for delaying the conclusion of an agreement on a comprehensive test ban,

Recalling that since 1972 the Secretary-General has declared that all the technical and scientific aspects of the problem have been so fully explored that only a political decision is now necessary in order to achieve final agreement, that when the existing means of verification are taken into account it is difficult to understand further delay in achieving agreement on an underground test ban, and that the potential risks of continuing underground nuclear-weapon tests would far outweigh any possible risks from ending such tests,

Recalling also that the Secretary-General, in his foreword to the report entitled "Comprehensive nuclear-test ban", reiterated with special emphasis the opinion he expressed nine years ago and, after specifically referring to it, added: "I still hold that belief. The problem can and should be solved now",

Noting that in the same report, which was prepared in compliance with General Assembly decision 34/422 of 11 December 1979, the experts emphasized that non-nuclear-weapon States in general have come to regard the achievement of a comprehensive test ban as a litmus test of the determination of the nuclear-weapon States to halt the arms race, adding that verification of compliance no longer seems to be an obstacle to reaching agreement,

Taking into account that the three nuclear-weapon States which act as depositaries of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water undertook in that Treaty, almost twenty years ago, to seek the achievement of the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and that such an undertaking was explicitly reiterated in 1968 in the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Recalling that in its resolution 35/145 A of 12 December 1980 it urged all States members of the Committee on Disarmament to support the establishment by the Committee from the beginning of its session in 1981, of an ad hoc working group which should start the multilateral negotiations of a treaty for the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests,

Deploing that the Committee on Disarmament, as stated in paragraph 44 of its report to the Assembly, was prevented from responding to that exhortation owing to the negative attitude of two nuclear-weapon States,

1. Reiterates once again its grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing continues unabated against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon-test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the highest priority and constitutes a vital element for the success of efforts to prevent both vertical and horizontal proliferation of nuclear weapons and a contribution to nuclear disarmament;

3. Urges all States that have not yet done so to adhere without further delay to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and, meanwhile, to refrain from testing in the environments covered by that Treaty;

4. Urges likewise all States members of the Committee on Disarmament:

(a) To bear in mind that the consensus rule should not be used in such a manner as to prevent the establishment of subsidiary bodies for the effective discharge of the functions of the Committee;

(b) To support the establishment by the Committee, from the beginning of its session in 1982, of an ad hoc working group which should start the multilateral negotiations of a treaty for the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests;

(c) To exert their best endeavours in order that the Committee may transmit the multilaterally negotiated text of such a treaty to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982;

5. Calls upon the States depositaries of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, by virtue of their special responsibilities under those two treaties and as a provisional measure, to bring to a halt without delay all nuclear-test explosions, either through a trilaterally agreed moratorium or through three unilateral moratoria;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Cessation of all test explosions of nuclear weapons".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 35/145 B The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on a comprehensive nuclear-test ban, in particular resolution 32/78 of 12 December 1977, paragraph 51 of resolution S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, resolution 33/60 of 14 December 1978, section IV of resolution 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, resolution 34/73 of 11 December 1979 and resolution 35/145 B of 12 December 1980,

Reaffirming its conviction that it is in the interest of all people that nuclear-weapon testing by all States in all environments should cease, as this would be a major step towards ending the qualitative improvement, development and proliferation of nuclear weapons, a means of relieving the deep apprehension concerning the harmful consequences of radioactive contamination for the health of present and future generations and a measure of the utmost importance in bringing the nuclear-arms race to an end,

Recalling that the parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons expressed their determination in those treaties to continue negotiations to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time,

Expressing the belief that, to be effective and capable of attracting the widest possible adherence, a treaty prohibiting nuclear testing should include provision for an effective verification system,

Recognizing, accordingly, the importance to such a treaty of the work assigned by the Committee on Disarmament to the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events on a global network of stations for the exchange of seismological data,

Deeply concerned about the fact that the three negotiating nuclear-weapon States have not resumed their negotiations on a treaty prohibiting nuclear-test explosions in all environments and its protocol covering nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing the urgent need for a complete cessation of the testing of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing the indispensable role of the Committee on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive test-ban treaty capable of attracting the widest possible international support and adherence,

Expressing regret that it did not prove possible for the Committee on Disarmament to commence negotiations on such a treaty,

Convinced that the proceedings of the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982, would benefit substantially from positive progress towards the conclusion of such a treaty,

1. Reiterates its grave concern that, despite the express wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States, nuclear-weapon testing continues unabated;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon-test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the greatest urgency and highest priority;

3. Expresses the conviction that such a treaty constitutes a vital element for the success of efforts to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race and the qualitative improvement of nuclear weapons and to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons to additional countries;

4. Calls upon the three negotiating nuclear-weapon States to resume their negotiations and to exert their best efforts to bring them to an early successful conclusion and invites them to prepare a report on the state of negotiations in good time for submission to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament;

5. Reiterates its conviction that the Committee on Disarmament has an indispensable role in the negotiation of a treaty prohibiting nuclear testing;

6. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to take the necessary steps, including the establishment of a working group, to initiate substantive negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban treaty as a matter of the highest priority at the beginning of its session in 1982;

7. Also requests the Committee on Disarmament to determine, in the context of its negotiations on such a treaty, the institutional and administrative arrangements necessary for establishing, testing and operating an international seismic monitoring network and an effective verification system;

8. Further requests the Committee on Disarmament to exert all efforts in order that the draft of such a treaty may be submitted to the General Assembly at the earliest possible date;

9. Urges all members of the Committee on Disarmament, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, to co-operate with the Committee in fulfilling its mandate;

10. Calls upon the Committee on Disarmament to report on progress to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament and at its thirty-seventh session;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session an item relating to implementation of the present resolution.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons

By a resolution of 9 December 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly, considering that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices would help prevent their proliferation, requested the Committee on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage, to pursue the question of an adequately verified cessation and prohibition of production of fissionable material for such weapons and devices.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 125 to 14, with 6 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 24 November by a recorded vote of 99 to 13, with 6 abstentions.

The 19-nation resolution was introduced by Canada, which recalled that the Assembly had made similar requests to the Committee on Disarmament each year since 1978. The subject was one of the most significant areas for nuclear disarmament and agreement on it would underwrite, support and guarantee other agreements on nuclear-weapon control.

The USSR voted against the text, declaring that the problem of prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes could not be separated from that of cessation of all nuclear-weapon production and the gradual reduction of stockpiles. Mexico, although voting in favour, observed that two objectives would have to be pursued: cessation of the production of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, and cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes.

In the First Committee debate, Australia saw an agreement on this subject as an important brake on nuclear proliferation, since it would help restrict the production of existing types of nuclear weapons, limit nuclear arsenals to approximately their current size and so contribute to scaling down the arms race. Ireland stated that since the production of fissionable material would henceforth be for civilian purposes only, the same International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safeguards could be applied to all States, thus helping to make the non-proliferation regime more attractive to those States which had so far chosen to remain outside it. Making a similar point, Norway stated that such a ban, by requiring nuclear-weapon States to accept much the same IAEA safeguards as non-nuclear-weapon States, would eliminate an important element of discrimination between the two categories of States. The Netherlands observed that the safeguards system could provide verification for an agreement on this subject. New Zealand, while not expecting early progress, urged the Committee on Disarmament to keep the question under review.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/91 H of 16 December 1978, 34/87 D of 11 December 1979 and 35/156 H of 12 December 1980, in which it requested the Committee on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to consider urgently the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

Noting that the agenda for 1981 of the Committee on Disarmament included the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects" and that the Committee's programme of work for both parts of its session held in 1981 contained the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament",

Recalling the proposals and statements made in the Committee on Disarmament on these items,

Considering that the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

Considering that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices also would be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

Requests the Committee on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Nuclear safeguards

In a resolution on IAEA adopted on 11 November 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly commended the Agency for its continuing efforts to ensure the safe and secure use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. The Assembly noted with satisfaction the steady improvement of the Agency's safeguards system, and welcomed its conclusion that nuclear material under those safeguards remained in peaceful activities or was otherwise adequately accounted for. States were urged to continue to support IAEA endeavours to improve the effectiveness of safeguards.

Addressing the General Assembly on 10 November at the start of its annual discussion of IAEA, the Agency's Director-General said that more than 95 per cent of all nuclear material outside the nuclear-weapon States was under IAEA safeguards.

Non-nuclear weapons

Chemical weapons

Proposed prohibition of chemical weapons

CONSIDERATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON DISARMAMENT. Negotiations towards a multilateral instrument on the total prohibition of chemical weapons, called for by the General Assembly in December 1980,<sup>(2)</sup> continued during 1981 in the Committee on Disarmament. Much of the work was conducted in the Committee's Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons, which was re-established on 12 February. The Group held 23 meetings from 18 February to 22 April and from 17 June to 17 August, as well as additional informal consultations, during which time it formulated and discussed for the first time wording for 18 future articles or elements of a convention on chemical weapons.

The Working Group began its 1981 activities with a detailed examination of the issues involved in negotiating a multilateral convention. It then considered draft elements of a chemical weapons convention suggested by its Chairman, who later submitted revised versions on the basis of delegation comments. The Group's report, which the Committee adopted on 20 August and incorporated into its own report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> set out the Chairman's text and various comments, including dissenting views. Some delegations did not wish to discuss certain elements, including those relating to verification, until general agreement had been reached on the scope of the prohibitions to be verified.

Among the elements suggested by the Chairman for inclusion in a chemical weapons convention were the following:

Chemical weapons would be defined to include harmful chemicals and their precursors intended for hostile or military purposes, and the munitions and devices which released such chemicals. States parties to the convention would be prohibited from transferring such weapons to anyone. They would have to declare any stocks of chemical weapons in their possession, and undertake to destroy those stocks or divert them to permitted uses, along with means of production. A 1,000-kilogramme limit would be placed on any State's stock of super-toxic lethal chemicals for non-military uses. International co-operation for peaceful and protective uses of chemicals would be encouraged, and a substantial part of any savings resulting from chemical disarmament would be allocated to economic and social development, particularly of the developing countries.

National and international measures would be taken to verify compliance with the convention. Recommendations and guidelines for the functions and organization of national verification systems would eventually be annexed to the convention. Deliberate concealment to impede national verification measures would be prohibited. States parties would consult one another when problems arose, and States suspecting violations could request clarifications from those concerned. An expert body known as the Consultative Committee, with one member from each State party, would be established to monitor the situation and undertake on-site inspections, in consultation with the State to be inspected; that State could decline to be inspected if it considered that its supreme national interests would be jeopardized.

The convention would enter into force after 20 States ratified or acceded to it. A review conference would be held at least every five years.

The Working Group informed the Committee that despite the convergence of views on many issues emerging from its work in 1980 and 1981, some important divergencies of opinion still existed. The Group recommended that it be re-established in 1982 with a revised mandate that would enable it to resolve differences and achieve agreement on a convention at the earliest date.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. Two resolutions calling for continued negotiations on a convention to prohibit chemical weapons were adopted by the General Assembly on 9 December 1981. By the first of these,<sup>(3)</sup> the Assembly urged the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations on a multilateral chemical weapons convention as a matter of high priority, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives, and to re-establish its Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons with a revised mandate enabling the Committee to achieve agreement on a convention at the earliest date. The Committee was requested to report on the results in 1982.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 147 to none, with 1 abstention. The First Committee approved the text on 24 November by a recorded vote of 127 to none, with 1 abstention, following the approval of paragraph 3, on the Working Group, by a recorded vote of 101 to 2 (Canada, United States), with 19 abstentions. This paragraph was approved in the form of a 10-nation amendment introduced by Sweden. It added to the original 37-nation text, whose sponsors were from both East and West, the phrase urging the re-establishment of the Working Group with a revised mandate so as to achieve agreement on a convention at the earliest date.

By the second resolution on this topic,<sup>(4)</sup> the Assembly reaffirmed the necessity of the earliest elaboration and conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction. In a provision with the same wording as the amended paragraph of the first resolution, the Assembly urged continued negotiations in the Committee on Disarmament and the re-establishment of the Working Group with a revised mandate. It called on the USSR and the United States to resume bilateral negotiations on the subject at the earliest possible date, and to submit their joint initiative to the Committee on Disarmament. The Assembly called on all States to refrain from action which could impede negotiations and specifically to refrain from production and deployment of binary and other new types of chemical weapons.

The resolution, with 13 sponsors from Eastern Europe and elsewhere, was adopted in the Assembly by a recorded vote of 109 to 1, with 33 abstentions. The text, as revised by its sponsors, was approved by the First Committee on 24 November by a recorded vote of 95 to 1, with 30 abstentions.

The first resolution was introduced by Canada, which believed that the text took into account the views of those who wished to see the Assembly give more precise direction regarding the Working Group's mandate, as well as the wishes of those who hoped to see a stronger statement on the resumption of bilateral discussions. Sweden, introducing the amendment, recalled the efforts of many Committee members over the past two years to obtain a mandate for the Working Group that would enable it to carry out genuine negotiations, and their disappointment at the failure of those efforts so far.

The second resolution was introduced by the German Democratic Republic, which described the two texts as complementary and said that having multilateral and bilateral negotiations at the same time might enhance the effectiveness of both. It added that the production and deployment of binary chemical weapons would greatly worsen prospects for achieving a prohibition of chemical weapons and tend to promote their use.

The United States voted against the amendment to the first resolution because it could not support any infringement on the authority of the Committee on Disarmament, which was authorized to decide its own internal procedures. Canada voted against because the specificity of the amendment was not acceptable to all delegations.

While not disagreeing with the aim of the amendment, Japan and Poland abstained in the vote out of concern that its wording would hinder consensus on the resolution as a whole. Finland also mentioned the importance it attached to consensus in explaining why it had abstained. Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the USSR, all voting for the amendment and the text as a whole, shared the reservations expressed by Canada. Regret that the amendment had made it impossible to achieve consensus on the resolution was expressed by several States which voted for both—Belgium, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom, the last speaking for the members of the European Community (EC).

In explanation of its negative vote on the second resolution, the United States declared that it had unilaterally ceased production of chemical weapons in 1969 and that its only production facility was inactive, while the USSR maintained and operated at least 14 such facilities and had a much larger chemical warfare organization in the armed forces; accordingly, the United States saw the proposal as one-sided, superfluous and an attempt to inhibit countermeasures required by the Soviet programme.

Japan abstained in the vote, arguing that the call to States to refrain from certain actions could have a detrimental effect by prejudging the outcome of the negotiations on chemical weapons prohibition in the Committee on Disarmament. Democratic Kampuchea did not participate in the vote on this resolution because, it said, those who were massacring its people were among the sponsors.

During the debate in the First Committee, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the USSR and Viet Nam saw a link between delays in reaching a negotiated agreement and the growing military chemical arsenals of the United States and other countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, as well as the launching of large-scale production programmes for such weapons. The German Democratic Republic stated that while refusing to continue bilateral negotiations with the USSR on a chemical weapons ban, the United States was allocating $6 billion for the production of binary weapons over the next five years; the introduction of such weapons made verification more difficult because their components hardly differed from those used for chemical products for civilian use. The USSR asserted that the United States continued to develop chemical weapons, including binary weapons, and possessed some 400,000 tons of lethal poisonous substances in its arsenals. Afghanistan also mentioned the allocation of funds for chemical weapons by the United States.

Austria, expressing concern about reported actions by some States to upgrade and increase their chemical warfare capabilities, appealed to all nations to refrain from any activities incompatible with efforts to reach agreement in the negotiations.

Responding, the United States said that, while the USSR had given chemical-warfare training to 100,000 of its troops and its military doctrine provided for large-scale employment of offensive chemical weapons, there had been no allocation for such weapons in the United States military budget since 1969; also, binary weapons, which became toxic only on launching, were designed to protect the personnel handling them as well as the environment.

Australia saw a need for international machinery to investigate allegations of the use of chemical weapons and to test or confirm denials of such use. Finland observed that since 1972 it had worked on a project aimed at developing a national chemical-weapons-control capacity and had periodically presented reports to the Committee on Disarmament. The Federal Republic of Germany attached particular importance to reliable verification provisions in a chemical weapons convention. India observed that verification measures would necessarily be imperfect, as the purpose of a ban on chemical weapons was not to regulate the production of lethal and even super-toxic chemicals, many of which had legitimate peaceful uses, but rather to prevent their diversion for chemical weapons; collective security would be better served by an immediate ban on such weapons with the means of verification currently available.

Japan saw the question of on-site inspections as one of the more difficult problems awaiting solution; attempts to establish too strict a verification system would make it too complicated and difficult to implement and lessen the chance of universal consent. Kenya thought there could be no mutual confidence in the convention without an international verification mechanism. Poland thought that verification should combine national control measures and international procedures, through a mechanism that would be both effective and consistent with the scope of prohibition.

While noting that appropriate verification was essential, Norway observed that the political costs of breaking away from an internationally agreed ban on chemical weapons should not be underestimated. Portugal asserted that the difficulties encountered by the United Nations Group of Experts to Investigate Reports of the Alleged Use of Chemical Weapons (p. 74) gave a striking illustration of the drawbacks and dangers inherent in omitting verification machinery in disarmament agreements, and that consultations should start on the creation of effective verification machinery for the obligations entered into under the 1925 Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare. The Ukrainian SSR stated that the convention should be written so as not to impinge on the peaceful activities of States.

China stated that, since prohibition of the use of chemical weapons was at the heart of the question, the Committee on Disarmament should proceed with negotiations on a convention on the complete prohibition and total destruction of those weapons, including a ban on their use. Hungary, on the other hand, asserted that the main stumbling-block to achieving more substantial progress had been the insistence of some countries on including in the convention a ban on the use of chemical weapons, which Hungary considered was already fully covered by the 1925 Geneva Protocol. In Sweden's view, the effectiveness of the convention would be significantly improved if loopholes that would allow maintenance of a chemical warfare capability were closed.

The United Kingdom, speaking on behalf of the EC members, remarked that good progress had been made in the Committee on Disarmament during the past year in the negotiations on a verifiable convention on the prohibition of chemical weapons. Many delegations, including those of Austria, Belgium, Egypt, France, Japan, Romania, Sweden and Venezuela, supported the proposal by the Working Group on Chemical Weapons that its mandate should be revised in order to permit negotiations in 1982 on the text of a convention.

Bulgaria, Hungary, Japan, the Netherlands and Poland urged the USSR and the United States to reopen their suspended bilateral negotiations at an early date.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 2454 A (XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2603 B (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, 2662 (XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2827 A (XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2933 (XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3077 (XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3256 (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3465 (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/65 of 10 December 1976, 32/77 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/59 A of 14 December 1978, 34/72 of 11 December 1979 and 35/144 B of 12 December 1980, relating to the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and to their destruction.

Reaffirming also the necessity of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, Having considered the report of the Committee on Disarmament, which embodies, inter alia, the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons.

Taking note of the recommendation in the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons that the Committee on Disarmament should re-establish, at the beginning of its session in 1982, the Ad Hoc Working Group with an appropriately revised mandate, which would enable the Committee to build upon the areas of convergence and to resolve the differences of views which were identified by the Group during its sessions held in 1980 and 1981, so as to achieve agreement on a chemical weapons convention at the earliest date.

Considering it necessary that all efforts be exerted for the resumption and successful conclusion of the bilateral and multilateral negotiations on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the work of the Committee on Disarmament during its session held in 1981 regarding the prohibition of chemical weapons, in particular the progress in the work of its Ad Hoc Working Group on that question;

2. Expresses its regret that an agreement on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction has not yet been elaborated;

3. Urges the Committee on Disarmament to continue, from the beginning of its session in 1982, negotiations on such a multilateral convention as a matter of high priority, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives, and in particular to re-establish its Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons with an appropriately revised mandate enabling the Committee to achieve agreement on a chemical weapons convention at the earliest date;

4. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to report on the results of its negotiations to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982, and at its thirty-seventh session.

General Assembly resolution 36/96 B

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in paragraph 75 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it stated that the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and their destruction represented one of the most urgent measures of disarmament.

Convinced of the need for the earliest conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, which would contribute to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Taking into consideration the work done in this area in the Committee on Disarmament as well as in the bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which regrettably had been suspended and did not take place in 1981.

Deeming it desirable for States to refrain from taking any action that could delay or further complicate such negotiations.

Expressing profound concern over the production of new types of chemical weapons and other actions that would intensify the chemical arms race and compromise international efforts on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction.

1. Reaffirms the necessity of the earliest elaboration and conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

2. Appeals to all States to facilitate in every possible way the conclusion of such a convention;

3. Urges the Committee on Disarmament to continue, from the beginning of its session in 1982, negotiations on such a multilateral convention as a matter of high priority, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives, and in particular to re-establish its Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons with an appropriately revised mandate enabling the Committee to achieve agreement on a chemical weapons convention at the earliest date;

4. Calls upon the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to resume at the earliest possible date bilateral negotiations on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction and to submit their joint initiative to the Committee on Disarmament;

5. Calls upon all States to refrain from any action which could impede negotiations on the prohibition of chemical weapons and specifically to refrain from production and deployment of binary and other new types of chemical weapons, as well as from stationing chemical weapons in those States where there are no such weapons at present.

Alleged use of chemical weapons

Several Governments sent communications to the United Nations in 1981 alleging that chemical weapons had been used in recent or current armed conflicts. The Group of Experts to Investigate Reports on the Alleged Use of Chemical Weapons presented, for submission to the General Assembly, what it described as an inconclusive report. The Assembly, in December, decided to continue the Group's mandate.

COMMUNICATIONS. Letters and notes verbales included 14 communications from Democratic Kampuchea, 2 from the United States, 2 from Viet Nam and 1 from the USSR.

The letters from Democratic Kampuchea concerned instances of what it called the use of toxic chemical weapons by the Vietnamese aggressors to massacre the Kampuchean population. Specific instances, including the firing of poison gas shells, the spreading of toxic chemical products, the addition of toxic substances to water supplies and the poisoning of food, were cited in letters of 26 January,<sup>(1)</sup> 17 February,<sup>(2)</sup> 9 March,<sup>(3)</sup> 6 April,<sup>(5)</sup> 14 April,<sup>(6)</sup> 27 April,<sup>(7)</sup> 8 June,<sup>(10)</sup> 9 November,<sup>(11)</sup> 13 November<sup>(12)</sup> and 3 December.<sup>(14)</sup> The incidents were said to have occurred between December 1980 and November 1981.

Annexed to a letter of 27 March<sup>(4)</sup> was an open letter, dated 22 March, from the people of Kampuchea addressed to the international community, asking the United Nations to send its Group of Experts to collect on-site evidence of the use of chemical weapons by Viet Nam, so that measures could be taken in time to save the nation and its people. A letter of 5 May<sup>(8)</sup> annexed a statement of 30 April by a Ministry of Foreign Affairs spokesman protesting the escalation of chemical warfare by Viet Nam. A Ministry of Public Health statement of 10 April, annexed to a letter dated 14 May,<sup>(9)</sup> placed the number of Kampucheans killed by chemical weapons at more than 1,100 since April 1980, out of 2,900 victims. On 24 November,<sup>(13)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a 20 November statement by its Foreign Ministry spokesman supporting a call for an international conference aimed at preventing Viet Nam and the USSR from pursuing chemical warfare.

In a note verbale dated 14 September,<sup>(16)</sup> the United States reiterated its concern over reports that lethal and incapacitating chemical weapons were being used in the conflicts in Laos and Kampuchea and, since the USSR invasion in December 1979, in Afghanistan; urged the Group of Experts to visit refugee camps and the areas of reported attacks in order to obtain first-hand information and evidence; and informed the Secretary-General that analysis of vegetation obtained from the site of a chemical attack in Kampuchea had revealed evidence of the use of lethal mycotoxins (poisons associated with fungi). Analyses of additional samples from areas of reported chemical attacks in Laos and Kampuchea were presented in a United States note verbale dated 12 November,<sup>(17)</sup> in which it was stated that test results and eyewitness testimony supported the judgement that trichothecene mycotoxins had been used as chemical warfare agents in those countries.

In a statement of 17 September, transmitted by a letter of 22 September,<sup>(18)</sup> a spokesman for the Foreign Ministry of Viet Nam asserted that the United States was conducting bacteriological warfare against Cuba, supplying toxic chemicals to the reactionaries in Afghanistan and elsewhere, and trying to cover up its use of chemical warfare for more than 10 years during its aggression against Viet Nam. Responding to United States allegations, Viet Nam transmitted, by a letter dated 9 October,<sup>(19)</sup> an article written by a Vietnamese scientist stating that the American campaign of slander against the USSR might be designed to cover up United States efforts to increase its chemical weapons stockpile.

The USSR, in a letter of 3 December,<sup>(15)</sup> said irresponsible references and a noisy propaganda campaign by the United States on alleged USSR participation in the use of chemical and toxin weapons in South-East Asia and Afghanistan were inherently absurd, lacked physical evidence and did not stand the test of elementary scientific analysis; the United States itself had resorted to the widespread use of chemical weapons in South-East Asia, while in Afghanistan chemical weapons prepared in the United States had been used against civilians by American-backed bands of Afghan counter-revolutionaries.

ACTIVITIES OF THE GROUP OF EXPERTS. The Group of Experts to Investigate Reports on the Alleged Use of Chemical Weapons, composed of four experts, submitted a report<sup>(20)</sup> in response to a December 1980 request by the General Assembly for an impartial investigation to ascertain facts pertaining to reports regarding the alleged use of chemical weapons and to assess the extent of the damage caused by such use.<sup>(21)</sup> The Group held three sessions in New York during 1981: 20 to 24 April, 13 to 28 July and 20 October to 19 November. The third session included a visit (31 October-10 November) to holding centres for Indo-Chinese refugees in Thailand, for on-site collection and examination of evidence.

The report of the Group, submitted to the Secretary-General on 19 November, included background to the problem of the alleged use of chemical weapons and sources of information on which the investigation was based, general observations on such weapons and parameters of the investigation, evaluation of written submissions, a section on mycotoxins, a section on on-site collection and examination of evidence, and conclusions. The Group concentrated on submissions by Canada in respect of Laos and by the United States in respect of Afghanistan, Kampuchea and Laos; it noted charges by Viet Nam of United States use of toxic chemicals in Kampuchea, Laos and Viet Nam but said it felt unable to investigate on the territories of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam in view of communications from those Governments indicating that they would not co-operate with the Group.

The Group described its report as inconclusive, stating that, from the submissions it had received, and in assessing the individual cases presented to it, it had been unable to reach a final conclusion as to whether or not chemical warfare agents had been used.

The Group pointed out that, despite its expressed desire to carry out investigations on the territories where chemical attacks had allegedly occurred and where alleged victims and eyewitnesses of such attacks were being hosted, it had only been able to visit some refugee camps in Thailand. During that visit, the Group had unsuccessfully sought to meet individuals mentioned in submissions by the United States.

While the medical personnel interviewed in the refugee camps claimed they had not come across cases attributable to chemical warfare agents, refugees related stories similar to those appearing in the submissions by Canada and the United States. However, all those interviewed had related alleged chemical attacks occurring several months earlier, and the Group had been unable to detect signs and symptoms suggestive of exposure to chemical warfare agents; further, routine blood biochemical, haematological and urine analyses obtained by the Group had yielded no significant abnormalities. Although the Group had received some samples for analysis by qualified and impartial laboratories, it could not base final conclusions on the results of such analyses since it could not ascertain the source of the samples.

The Group stated that any investigation designed to lead to definitive conclusions regarding the alleged use of chemical weapons and to an assessment of the extent of damage caused by such weapons would require timely access to the areas of alleged use in order to establish the facts. Such an exercise had so far been impossible.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In a resolution of 9 December,<sup>(22)</sup> the General Assembly took note with appreciation of the Secretary-General's report annexing the findings of the Group of Experts. Noting that the Group had not completed its investigations, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue his investigations, with the Group's assistance, and to report back to the Assembly in 1982.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 86 to 20, with 34 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 4 December by a recorded vote of 74 to 18, with 30 abstentions.

The resolution was sponsored by Australia, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Spain and Turkey. Introducing the text, New Zealand expressed appreciation to the Group of Experts for the objectivity of its inquiry and the integrity of its conclusions. It added that, as certain aspects of the investigation had not been completed, the Group should receive additional time.

This view was supported by Canada, China, Fiji, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Nigeria and Senegal. Canada and France, in particular, observed that the resolution was procedural and non-polemical and did not imply any accusation; rather, it reflected the great importance attached to the 1925 Geneva Protocol banning the use of chemical and bacteriological weapons. The United States viewed the resolution as one of the most important-perhaps the most important-adopted at the 1981 Assembly session; the United Nations, with further evidence accumulated, had again accepted the responsibility to conduct an immediate, impartial investigation of the use of chemical weapons.

Other States did not share this view. Czechoslovakia felt the need to close the chapter on the Assembly's activities on the matter, and thereby release resources for solving more important and real issues, such as the conclusion of a convention on prohibition of chemical weapons and destruction of their stockpiles. In its opinion, the investigation of so-called reports of the alleged use of chemical weapons detracted from the main issue by creating an atmosphere of uncertainty, suspicion and propagandistic hysteria, and played into the hands of those who opposed the prohibition of chemical weapons. Similar views were expressed by Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam, none of which saw need or justification for extending the Group's mandate. The USSR stated that the report of the Group, as well as other documents, facts and events, led to the conclusion that none of the Governments or competent international organizations possessed any data that could confirm the United States assertions about the alleged combat use of chemical substances in Kampuchea, Laos and Afghanistan. Viet Nam said chemical weapons were not currently being used in the three countries, and that the determination of the resolution's sponsors to institutionalize investigative machinery amounted to an illegal revision of the 1925 Geneva Protocol.

New Zealand rejected the notion advanced by several opponents of the text that the Group of Experts had been appointed to reach certain definite conclusions, or that it had not reached the expected conclusions; the international community had an obligation to try to ascertain the facts, and the resolution contained a simple request that the Group complete its work to the best of its ability.

Bangladesh, China, Fiji, the Ivory Coast, the Niger, Nigeria and Senegal, which voted for the resolution, shared the view that the Group should be allowed to continue its work so as to assess the facts and complete its mandate; China added that no one should be allowed to obstruct the Group's investigations. Guinea, Mexico, Peru and Yugoslavia stated that they had abstained, as in 1980, because in general they regarded the text as containing confrontational or inconsistent elements which they could not accept. Afghanistan and Mozambique, which voted against, considered the proposal to be insincere and saw no reason to renew the mandate, as the Group had found no evidence of the use of chemical weapons.

In the First Committee debate, Afghanistan said the United States provided chemical ammunition to bands of mercenaries in that country. Cuba asserted that United States imperialism had unleashed an undeclared biological war against Cuban territory, seriously affecting its cattle, tobacco and sugar-cane crops, and people. The United States, said the Lao People's Democratic Republic, was the only country that had used chemical weapons on a massive scale. Viet Nam declared that the United States had used more than 100,000 tons of chemical toxins in almost all the provinces of South Viet Nam, causing the death of 3,500 people and affecting 2 million others; it was, therefore, ironic and revolting that the United States should whip up a campaign of slander against the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the USSR and Viet Nam with regard to the use of chemical weapons.

The United States termed the Cuban and Vietnamese charges totally false and without foundation, adding that it had destroyed all of its biological weapons stocks; it also said that for five years lethal chemical weapons had been used against unsophisticated and defenceless people in Laos and Kampuchea, and more recently in Afghanistan. Democratic Kampuchea said Vietnamese military deserters had corroborated their use of toxic gases and other chemical weapons against civilian and military targets in Kampuchea; the atrocious death of tens of thousands of Kampuchians caused by Vietnamese-USSR chemical weapons could not go unpunished.

Singapore remarked that there could be no final word on the question at the moment and that it would be futile to make charges and countercharges which only reduced the issue to a propaganda war.

The sub-item relating to the Secretary-General's report was included in the agenda by decision of the Assembly on 18 September, after the General Committee, on 16 September, rejected a motion of the USSR to delete it by a vote of 18 to 4, with 2 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/144 C of 12 December 1980 in which, inter alia, it decided to carry out an impartial investigation to ascertain the facts pertaining to reports regarding the alleged use of chemical weapons and requested the Secretary-General to carry out such an investigation with the assistance of qualified medical and technical experts,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, to which is annexed the report prepared by the Group of Experts to Investigate Reports on the Alleged Use of Chemical Weapons,

Noting that, as indicated by the conclusions of its report, the Group of Experts has not yet completed the investigation called for under paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 35/144C,

Noting also the views of the Group of Experts concerning the importance of prompt on-site investigations of allegations of the use of chemical weapons and the need to devise appropriate procedures for impartial collection and analysis of samples that may be obtained in the course of any such investigations,

Considering, accordingly, that the Group of Experts should continue its investigations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General,

2. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Group of Experts to Investigate Reports on the Alleged Use of Chemical Weapons, to continue his investigation pursuant to General Assembly resolution 35/144 C and to report to the Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Proposed prohibition of weapons of mass destruction

CONSIDERATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON DISARMAMENT. On 30 June 1981, the Committee on Disarmament,<sup>(1)</sup> acting on a proposal by Hungary, agreed by consensus to hold informal meetings on the question of new types of weapons of mass destruction, with the understanding that it was a normal practice for every delegation to have the right to utilize experts at any time. In the three informal meetings that followed, experts from some member States made statements concerning possible areas of new weapons development and gave an account of their potential in certain fields. No new weapons were reported to have appeared and the possibility of their development remained a matter of controversy.

No consensus was reached on a proposal for a group of governmental experts to keep the question of new weapons of mass destruction under continuing review. Another proposal was for the General Assembly to establish a group of experts to review recent trends in scientific developments, to identify any possible new weapons of mass destruction and to recommend the most appropriate means to prevent their emergence. It was also proposed, as another alternative, that the Committee hold annual informal meetings with experts. The Committee felt that the question should be kept under continuing review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 9 December,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly requested the Committee on Disarmament to intensify negotiations, assisted by governmental experts, with a view to preparing a draft comprehensive agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, and to draft possible agreements on particular types of such weapons. The Assembly again urged States to refrain from action which could adversely affect talks aimed at working out agreements on this subject. It also called on the permanent members of the Security Council, as well as other militarily significant States, to make identical declarations, to be approved by the Council, on the refusal to create new types and systems of such weapons, as a first step towards a comprehensive agreement.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 116 to none, with 27 abstentions. The text was approved in the First Committee on 23 November by a recorded vote of 95 to none, with 27 abstentions.

Introducing the 28-nation draft, the Byelorussian SSR stated that it took into account both approaches to the problem, namely, preparation of a comprehensive agreement to prohibit the development and manufacture of all new types of weapons of this kind, and the drafting of agreements on particular types of such weapons.

On behalf of the European Community members, the United Kingdom explained their abstention on the ground that specific, verifiable agreements were necessary for an effective prohibition of new weapons and their technologies; that the special importance given in the proposal to negotiation of a single blanket prohibition did not appear warranted; that a comprehensive agreement could not distinguish between peaceful and military-oriented research; and that the proposed Security Council action would not be a step towards a comprehensive agreement or an effective measure to prevent such weapons from emerging.

Among the others abstaining, Japan considered it inappropriate for the Committee on Disarmament to negotiate on a comprehensive agreement whose scope and application was far from clear and presented difficulties in such areas as verification; moreover, an approach based on declarations by militarily significant States was unrealistic. Portugal also questioned the comprehensive agreement approach, noted that the resolution failed to mention verification and remarked that the concept of weapons of mass destruction had not been sufficiently defined. Sweden recalled its doubts about a general prohibition and its continuing support for the elaboration of specific agreements relating to such weapons as were identified.

India stated that its affirmative vote did not signify support for the establishment of a working group of governmental experts in the Committee on Disarmament, since the means of dealing with the question was a matter for that Committee to decide; India also had reservations on the call for interim measures. Of the others which voted in favour, Argentina stated that it would have abstained had a separate vote been taken on the paragraph calling for declarations by militarily significant States, in view of its position concerning unilateral and non-verifiable declarations. Finland supported the proposal in the belief that all approaches should be explored.

In the First Committee debate, many Eastern European and other States called for the conclusion of a comprehensive treaty on the prohibition of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction. Czechoslovakia said there was an urgent need to prevent the emergence of such weapons in view of the United States decision to manufacture the neutron bomb. The USSR suggested that the militarily significant States, as a first step towards a comprehensive agreement, should make similar or identical statements renouncing the development of new types and systems of such weapons, to be approved later by the Security Council. This idea was endorsed by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and the Ukrainian SSR.

The Byelorussian SSR said that, as a result of the position of certain States, the Committee on Disarmament had not even begun talks on the subject. Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR and Mongolia stated that it would be helpful if that Committee made it possible for a group of governmental experts to work on the problem. Hungary and the Ukrainian SSR thought such a group should work on a comprehensive agreement as well as special agreements on individual weapons.

Afghanistan and Uganda expressed concern at the lack of progress in such an important area. Bhutan stated that the diversion of tremendous resources to such purposes as the production of more sophisticated weapons of mass destruction would diminish the already inadequate resources available for combating poverty in the developing countries.

The United States, on the other hand, described the proposed treaty as a meaningless proposal which addressed undefined and non-existent weapons and which would be impossible to implement or verify; such a propaganda ploy should not mask the build-up of the USSR offensive threat against the United States.

Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3479(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/74 of 10 December 1976, 32/84 A of 12 December 1977, 33/66 B of 14 December 1978, 34/79 of 11 December 1979 and 35/149 of 12 December 1980 concerning the prohibition of new types of weapons of mass destruction,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraph 39 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, according to which qualitative and quantitative disarmament measures are both important for halting the arms race and efforts to that end must include negotiations on the limitation and cessation of the qualitative improvement of armaments, especially weapons of mass destruction, and the development of new means of warfare,

Recalling the decision contained in paragraph 77 of the Final Document to the effect that, in order to help prevent a qualitative arms race and so that scientific and technological achievements might ultimately be used solely for peaceful purposes, effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction based on new scientific principles and achievements, and that efforts aimed at the prohibition of such new types and new systems of weapons of mass destruction should be appropriately pursued,

Expressing once again its firm belief, in the light of the decisions adopted at the tenth special session, in the importance of concluding an agreement or agreements to prevent the use of scientific and technological progress for the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Noting that in the course of its session in 1981 the Committee on Disarmament considered the item entitled "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons",

Noting with satisfaction that in the course of its session in 1961 the Committee on Disarmament held informal meetings on this item with the participation of qualified governmental experts,

Convinced that all ways and means should be utilized to prevent the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Taking into consideration the part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament relating to this question,

1. Requests the Committee on Disarmament, in the light of its existing priorities, to intensify negotiations, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, with a view to preparing a draft comprehensive agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, and to draft possible agreements on particular types of such weapons;

2. Once again urges all States to refrain from any action which could adversely affect the talks aimed at working out an agreement or agreements to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;

3. Calls upon the States permanent members of the Security Council, as well as upon other militarily significant States, to make declarations, identical in substance, concerning the refusal to create new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, as a first step towards the conclusion of a comprehensive agreement on this subject, bearing in mind that such declarations would be approved thereafter by a decision of the Security Council;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

5. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to submit a report on the results achieved to the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-seventh session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Committee on Disarmament".

Radiological weapons

CONSIDERATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON DISARMAMENT. In dealing with its agenda item on "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons", the Committee on Disarmament<sup>(4)</sup> re-established on 12 February 1981, for the duration of the 1981 session, its Ad Hoc Working Group on Radiological Weapons. The Group's mandate remained the same as in 1980: to seek agreement on a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons.<sup>(5)</sup> The Group held 21 meetings between 20 February and 14 August 1981, in addition to informal consultations. The subject was also discussed in the Committee.

The Group reported at the conclusion of its 1981 work that divergences still existed, particularly on the scope of prohibition, the definition of radiological weapons, the procedure for verifying compliance, peaceful uses, and the relationship of the proposed treaty with other international agreements and disarmament measures.

Concerning the scope of prohibition, some members thought that, while the development of specific radiological weapons was a remote possibility, any treaty should deal with the real danger of mass destruction from dissemination of radioactive substances resulting from attacks on nuclear facilities. Others considered that the possible threat of radiological weapons should be dealt with before they came into existence, and that an attempt to deal in the same negotiations with radiological weapons and the protection of nuclear facilities could lead to confusion.

In regard to definition, differences persisted over whether the proposed agreement should exclude nuclear weapons. With regard to peaceful uses, some felt that the treaty should recognize the right of all States to develop and apply programmes for the peaceful use of radioactive materials, while others considered that provisions on peaceful uses should not be too detailed, given the main purpose of the treaty and the goal of preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons. As to verification of compliance, there were different views as to whether the Security Council should deal with complaints of violations and some countries wished to see provisions for on-site inspection.

On 20 August, the Committee adopted the Working Group's report. There was no consensus, however, on the Group's recommendation that its work be resumed in 1982.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 9 December on conclusion of a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons,<sup>(3)</sup> adopted without vote, the General Assembly called on the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations with a view to early conclusion of the elaboration of a treaty, in order that it might be submitted if possible at the Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27).

The First Committee approved the text in similar fashion on 20 November, after its sponsor, Hungary, accepted an oral amendment by Argentina-supported by China, India and Yugoslavia- to add the words "if possible" to the paragraph on submission of a treaty in 1982.

Introducing the resolution, Hungary stated that, as a consequence of the spread of nuclear power production, material which could be used in radiological weapons was now found in many facilities and in many countries. Thus, prevention of the appearance of a new type of weapon of mass destruction-radiological weapons-had become timely and important. Hungary added that the proposal was practically a reproduction of the Assembly's 1980 resolution<sup>(2)</sup> and was of a procedural nature, designed to enable the Committee on Disarmament to continue its work on radiological weapons in 1982.

India, while joining the consensus, noted that serious divergencies still existed, particularly concerning the scope of the future treaty and the definition of radiological weapons; hence, adoption of the resolution should in no way be used to upset existing priorities in the Committee on Disarmament.

During the First Committee's debate, the USSR stated that prospects were good for the early conclusion of negotiations on this topic, under way since 1979 in the Committee on Disarmament. The United States said it was prepared to participate in that Committee with a view to completing negotiations on a radiological weapons convention.

The idea that negotiation of a draft agreement should be concluded in the near future was supported by Bulgaria, France, Hungary and the Ukrainian SSR. However, Hungary conceded that serious difficulties continued to exist on vital questions.

Sweden remarked that the USSR-United States proposal on major elements of a treaty, presented to the Working Group in 1979,<sup>(4)</sup> totally lacked substance as it failed to include a ban against attacks on civilian nuclear installations. Egypt, Finland, Japan, Pakistan and Somalia believed that, the Swedish proposal had been rendered more relevant by the Israeli attack in June on Iraqi nuclear facilities (p. 53). Poland, on the other hand, believed the two-Power document remained a good starting point.

Belgium suggested that the principles contained in the Swedish proposal be embodied in the convention, along with a commitment to negotiate later a legal instrument covering all possible implications. Expressing hope that negotiations on radiological weapons would be completed in 1982, France suggested that the difficulties raised by proposals aimed at settling in that convention questions alien to its true purpose might be considered in another framework.

Nepal supported the view expressed in the Committee on Disarmament by the Group of 21 (p. 31) that the definition of radiological weapons should not include an exclusion clause with respect to nuclear weapons.

Adopted without vote Meeting 91 9 December 1981

Approved by First Committee (A/36/756) without vote, 20 November (meeting 38); draft by Hungary (A/C.1/36/L.6), orally amended by Argentina; agenda item 55 (g).

Conclusion of an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling the resolution of the Commission for Conventional Armaments of 12 August 1948, which defined weapons of mass destruction to include atomic explosive weapons, radioactive material weapons, lethal chemical and biological weapons and any weapons developed in the future which have characteristics comparable, in destructive effect to those of the atomic bomb or the other weapons mentioned above,

Recalling its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969,

Recalling paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that a convention should be concluded prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons,

Reaffirming its resolutions 34/87 A of 11 December 1979 and 35/156 G of 12 December 1980 on the conclusion of such a convention,

Convinced that such a convention would serve to spare mankind the potential dangers of the use of radiological weapons and thereby contribute to strengthening peace and averting the threat of war,

Noting that negotiations on the conclusion of an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons have been conducted in the Committee on Disarmament,

Taking note of that part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament which deals with these negotiations, including the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Radiological Weapons,

Recognizing that divergent views continue to exist in connection with various aspects relating to a convention prohibiting radiological weapons,

Noting with satisfaction the wide recognition of the need to reach agreement on the text of a treaty prohibiting radiological weapons,

1. Calls upon the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations with a view to an early conclusion of the elaboration of a treaty prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons, in order that it may be submitted if possible to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982;

2. Takes note, in this connection, of the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Working Group, on Radiological Weapons, in the report adopted by the Committee on Disarmament, to set up at the beginning of its session in 1982 a further ad hoc working group, under an appropriate mandate to be determined at that time, to continue negotiations on the elaboration of a treaty prohibiting radiological weapons;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the discussion by the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session of the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons".

Prohibition of weapons and prevention of an arms race in outer space

In 1981, concern was expressed during the General Assembly session that rapid advances in science and technology had made the extension of the arms race into outer space a real possibility, and that new kinds of weapons were still being developed despite the existence of international agreements such as the 1966 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,<sup>(2)</sup> which prohibited nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction from being placed in orbit or elsewhere in space.

On 9 December 1981, the Assembly adopted two resolutions aimed at preventing an arms race in outer space: one by Western European and other States asking the Committee on Disarmament to consider the question of negotiating effective and verifiable agreements, starting with an agreement on anti-satellite systems; and another by Eastern European and other States requesting that body to embark on negotiations on an international treaty against the stationing of any weapons in space. The latter resolution resulted from an initiative by the USSR to place the subject on the Assembly's agenda as a separate item.

By the first of these resolutions on prevention of an arms race in outer space,<sup>(3)</sup> the Assembly requested the Committee on Disarmament to consider, from the beginning of its 1982 session, the question of negotiating effective and verifiable agreements in that regard, taking into account all existing and future proposals. As an important step towards that end, the Committee was asked to consider as a matter of priority the question of negotiating an effective and verifiable agreement to prohibit anti-satellite systems. This resolution, sponsored by 17 Western European and other States, was adopted by a recorded vote of 129 to none, with 13 abstentions, following its approval in the First Committee on 23 November by a recorded vote of 110 to none, with 14 abstentions.

By the second resolution, on the conclusion of a treaty on the prohibition of weapons in outer space,<sup>(4)</sup> the Assembly expressed the view that it was necessary to take effective steps, by concluding an international treaty, to prevent the spread of the arms race to outer space. It requested the Committee on Disarmament to embark on negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on the text of such a treaty. The Assembly adopted the resolution, sponsored by 13 Eastern European and other States, by a recorded vote of 123 to none, with 21 abstentions, after the First Committee approved the text on 23 November by a recorded vote, requested by the Netherlands, of 105 to none, with 20 abstentions.

Italy introduced the first of these resolutions, stating that a much broader involvement of the international community was desirable on an issue likely to affect the future security of the whole world. Noting the complexity of the subject, Italy recommended that priority be accorded to elements such as anti-satellite systems designed to impair the functioning of, interfere with, damage or destroy satellites of other nations. The comparatively early stage of development of such capabilities presented an opportunity to negotiate a realistic and verifiable agreement.

The item entitled "Conclusion of a treaty on the prohibition of the stationing of weapons of any kind in outer space" was inscribed in the 1981 Assembly agenda on 18 September, at the request of the USSR. That country, in a letter of 10 August to the Secretary-General,<sup>(5)</sup> stated that no existing international instrument excluded the possibility of stationing in outer space weapons not covered by the definition of weapons of mass destruction; consequently, the danger of militarizing outer space still existed and had recently been increasing. A nine-article draft treaty annexed to the letter would prohibit objects carrying any kind of weapons from being placed in earth orbit, on celestial bodies, on reusable manned space vehicles or anywhere else in space.

Introducing the resolution submitted under this item, Mongolia remarked that, as there were varying approaches to the problem and in view of its complexity, the sponsors proposed that the Assembly should, without prejudging the content of an agreement, request the Committee on Disarmament to embark on negotiations.

A number of countries, particularly from Eastern Europe, welcomed the USSR initiative, asserting that increased production of so-called "potential" weapons, especially by the United States, made it important to secure general approval of the draft treaty. Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR and Hungary referred to the possible military use of the United States reusable manned space vehicle Columbia (known as the space shuttle) and the potential use of laser and particle beams as weapons in space. Poland, noting that the proposal to bring the question to the United Nations had been made by a nation with considerable technological capability in space, said its readiness to forgo part of that capability should be emulated by those with a comparable capability.

The Ukrainian SSR observed that existing agreements did not exclude the placement in space of weapons which were no less destructive than the weapons of mass destruction already banned from outer space. In a similar vein, Czechoslovakia viewed the proposed treaty as a device to fill the gaps in the system of norms and principles governing the conduct of States in space.

The Netherlands, while welcoming the draft treaty, criticized it for failing to prohibit the testing, production or use of space weapons under certain circumstances, for lacking a clear definition of the term "weapon" and for leaving verification to exclusively national means. A similar view was put forward by Sweden, which felt that the USSR draft omitted some aspects of the militarization of outer space which were as important as those it covered, and that it needed additional provisions on verification, complaints and review.

Sweden, supported by Argentina, Ghana, Nigeria and Sri Lanka, suggested that the two proposals be amalgamated so as to avoid having two different resolutions on the same subject, two sets of instructions to the Committee on Disarmament and two items on the same subject in the provisional agenda of the Assembly's 1982 session. Both Italy and Mongolia, although agreeing to consider the suggestion to consult before the vote in the Assembly, maintained that each resolution had its own identity and approach, and was therefore appropriate for discussion as a distinct item.

India, Mexico, Nigeria and Yugoslavia voted in favour of both resolutions but with the understanding that consideration of the subject in the Committee on Disarmament would have to be determined in the light of existing priorities. India further stated that measures to prevent an arms race in outer space should cover both the deployment and the testing of weapons of any kind in that environment, and that demilitarization of outer space should not become a pretext for preventing developing countries from deriving the full benefits of space research. Sierra Leone, while supporting the text introduced by Italy, feared that requesting the Committee on Disarmament to consider the question rather than immediately embark on negotiations could mean that the item might be shelved indefinitely.

Argentina declared that its support of both resolutions did not mean concurrence with all the language used or acceptance in advance of certain priorities in the consideration of items or treaty texts which had not yet been studied in depth. Egypt, which also voted for both resolutions, stated that it concurred with their objective but did not think it advisable to be specific on either the draft treaty or the issue of priority for anti-satellite systems. The Philippines supported both texts, as it favoured all proposals aimed at keeping outer space for peaceful purposes for the benefit of all mankind.

China voted in favour of both proposals, which it regarded as basically procedural; it was concerned about the increasing military rivalry between the super-Powers in outer space and therefore supported any effort which might lead to the peaceful use of that environment and against its militarization.

The USSR abstained on the proposal introduced by Italy on the ground that it over-emphasized the prohibition of anti-satellite systems and thus tended to shift the focus away from the general problem of preventing an arms race in outer space, and because the preamble erroneously suggested that the USSR-United States talks on limiting anti-satellite systems were in progress although they had been broken off by the United States and the prospects of their resumption remained unclear.

The United States supported the resolution introduced by Italy as an adequate basis for consideration of the question in the Committee on Disarmament; but it abstained in the vote on the proposal introduced by Mongolia, stating that primary emphasis in outer-space arms-control discussions would have to be placed on the threat posed by the USSR anti-satellite system, as that country was the only one which had already deployed a weapons system for destroying satellites.

Albania did not participate in the vote on either text and stated that it would not support the idea of concluding a treaty based on the USSR proposal; it questioned the sincerity of the proposal and said that outer space had been turned into an arena of military competition between the USSR and the United States.

In the First Committee debate, Austria regarded development by both super-Powers of space-stationed anti-satellite and anti-ballistic-missile technology as threatening a wasteful and destabilizing arms race. Egypt warned that space technology would provide greater reliability and accuracy to strategic weapons, with the result that existing strategic doctrines would be replaced by more aggressive ones. India stated that demilitarization of outer space should not become a pretext for perpetuating an exclusive space club or preventing developing nations from deriving the full benefits of space research. Nepal said it would support any proposal for an effective and verifiable control mechanism to stop the militarization of outer space.

Several States urged the prompt resumption of the anti-satellite talks between the USSR and the United States, suspended since 1979. Finland, Ireland and the Netherlands, while acknowledging the need for agreement between the two major space Powers, saw a parallel role for multilateral negotiations in a body such as the Committee on Disarmament. Canada, Mongolia and the Ukrainian SSR also thought that Committee should start work on a draft convention. Norway expressed the view that a treaty prohibiting anti-satellite weapons would have a stabilizing influence on super-Power relations and enhance the possibilities of verifying disarmament treaties. Also urging the conclusion of an anti-satellite-weapons treaty were Bangladesh and Italy.

Brazil argued that, by entrusting negotiation of the proposed treaty to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, the General Assembly would allow the Committee on Disarmament to concentrate on the priority items already on its agenda, while ensuring that the question of the militarization of outer space was handed over to a body which had adequate representation as well as technical and legal expertise. Chile saw the need for both Committees to study the military aspects of the use of outer space, where 80 per cent of all human activities had been for military purposes. The Netherlands, on the other hand, did not believe it appropriate or opportune to refer the matter to the Committee on outer space in view of that body's heavy work programme and because a decision to bypass the single multilateral disarmament body would involve a serious question of principle.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,
inspired by the great prospects opening up before mankind as a result of man's entry into outer space,

Believing that any activity in outer space should be for peaceful purposes and carried on for the benefit of all peoples, irrespective of the degree of their economic and scientific development,

Recalling that the States Parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, have undertaken in article III to carry on activities in the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding,

Recalling also article IV of the Treaty,

Recalling further paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that, in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Noting the important and growing contribution of satellites both for civilian purposes and the verification of disarmament agreements and aware of the possibilities of their use to promote peace, stability and international co-operation,

Mindful of the widespread interest expressed by Member States to ensure that the exploration and use of outer space should be for peaceful purposes, inter alia, in the course of the negotiations on and following the adoption of the above-mentioned Treaty, and taking note of proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session, devoted to disarmament, and at its regular sessions and to the Committee on Disarmament,

Aware of the need to prevent an arms race in outer space and in particular of the threat posed by anti-satellite systems and their destabilizing effects on international peace and security,

Convinced that further measures are needed to prevent outer space from becoming an area of military confrontation, contrary to the spirit of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Considering it necessary for the international community to give attention, in the Committee on Disarmament, to specific measures regarding the question of anti-satellite systems,

Bearing in mind that the restraint of anti-satellite systems has already been a subject of negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America,

1. Considers that further effective measures to prevent an arms race in outer space should be adopted by the international community:

2. Urges all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space and to refrain from any action contrary to that aim;

3. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to consider, as from the beginning of its session in 1982, the question of negotiating effective and verifiable agreements aimed at preventing an arms race in outer space, taking into account all existing and future proposals designed to meet this objective;

4. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of negotiating an effective and verifiable agreement to prohibit anti-satellite systems, as an important step towards the fulfilment of the objectives set out in paragraph 3 above;

5. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to report on its consideration of this subject to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this subject by the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session an item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space and prohibition of anti-satellite systems".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Conclusion of a treaty on the prohibition of the stationing of weapons of any kind in outer space

The General Assembly,

Guided by the goals of strengthening peace and international security,

Expressing the common interest of all mankind in the further 'exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes for the good of all States and in the interest of developing friendly relations and mutual understanding between them,

Conscious of the danger which would threaten mankind if outer space became an arena for the arms race,

Desiring not to allow outer space to become an arena for the arms race and a source of strained relations between States,

Taking into account the draft treaty on the prohibition of the stationing of weapons of any kind in outer space, submitted to the General Assembly by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the views and comments expressed during the consideration of this item at its thirty-sixth session,

1. Considers it necessary to take effective steps, by concluding an appropriate international treaty, to prevent the spread of the arms race to outer space:

2. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to embark on negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on the text of such a treaty;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Conclusion of a treaty on the prohibition of the stationing of weapons of any kind in outer space".

Conventional weapons and forces

Convention against excessively injurious conventional weapons

The first international arms regulation agreements negotiated at a special United Nations conference, the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and its three annexed Protocols, concluded in October 1980,<sup>(8)</sup> were opened for signature on 10 April 1981. These instruments provided new rules for the protection of military personnel, civilians and civilian objects from injury or attack by means of incendiary weapons, landmines, booby traps and other devices, as well as fragments that cannot be readily detected in the human body by X-rays.

The Convention was signed by 34 States on the day it was opened for signature and by a total of 46 countries as at 31 December 1981: Afghanistan, Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of,

Greece, Hungary, Iceland, India, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Switzerland, Togo, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

In communications to the Secretary-General, five signatory States—Belgium<sup>(1)</sup> (28 May), the Federal Republic of Germany<sup>(2)</sup> (22 April) Ireland<sup>(3)</sup> (18 June), Italy<sup>(4)</sup> (10 April) and the Netherlands<sup>(5)</sup> (23 April)—pledged to continue efforts for the establishment of measures and mechanisms to ensure implementation of and compliance with the Convention.

A report of the Secretary-General,<sup>(6)</sup> as depositary of the Convention and Protocols, contained the list of signatories as at 31 August 1981, along with the declarations and reservations submitted by France, Italy and the United Kingdom.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution adopted without vote on 9 December,<sup>(7)</sup> the General Assembly urged States to sign and ratify the Convention and its Protocols as early as possible so as to obtain its entry into force and ultimately its universal adherence. The Assembly noted that, under the Convention, conferences might be convened to consider amendments to the Convention or its Protocols, to consider additional protocols relating to further categories of conventional weapons, or to review the scope and operation of the Convention and its Protocols. The First Committee approved the text on 23 November, also without vote.

The resolution was introduced by Nigeria on behalf of 26 sponsors from all geographical regions. Although the Convention and Protocols were not disarmament measures, Nigeria observed, they were useful for their humanitarian considerations. As they had not come into force, nothing should be done at the current stage to disturb the delicate balance achieved during negotiations; any proposals or amendments could be considered later.

Democratic Yemen was among several States welcoming the conclusion of negotiations on the Convention. Ecuador viewed its adoption as proof that the United Nations could reach agreements which not only strengthened humanitarian international law but also encouraged arms control and disarmament. Sweden, appealing for signatures and ratifications, favoured the outlawing of all incendiary weapons and the international regulation of small-calibre weapons.

Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, New Zealand, Sweden and the United Kingdom, the last speaking for the European Community (EC) members, stressed the importance of establishing a mechanism for investigating alleged breaches of the Convention, while China hoped that inadequacies such as the failure to provide for control and verification could be rectified. Ireland and the United States reiterated their support for the establishment of a consultative committee to investigate facts if doubts arose about compliance.

United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977, 33/70 of 14 December 1978, 34/82 of 11 December 1979 and 35/153 of 12 December 1980.

Recalling the successful conclusion of the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, which resulted in a convention and three protocols, adopted by the Conference on 10 October 1980, namely, the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of incendiary Weapons (Protocol III),

Reaffirming its conviction that the suffering of civilian populations and of combatants would be further significantly reduced if general agreement could be attained on the prohibition or restriction for humanitarian reasons of the use of specific conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General, in which indication was given that many States have already signed the Convention, which was opened for signature in New York on 10 April 1981,

1. Urges those States which have not yet done so to exert their best endeavours to sign and ratify the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and the Protocols annexed thereto as early as possible so as to obtain the entry into force of the Convention, and ultimately its universal adherence;

2. Notes that, under article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to consider amendments to the Convention or any of the Protocols annexed thereto, to consider additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing annexed Protocols, or to review the scope and operation of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to consider any proposal for amendments to the Convention or to the existing Protocols and any proposals for additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing annexed Protocols;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Convention and the three Protocols annexed thereto, to inform the General Assembly from time to time of the state of adherence to the Convention and its Protocols;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Study on conventional disarmament

DISARMAMENT COMMISSION CONSIDERATION. On 28 May 1981, the Disarmament Commission established an informal open-ended Working Group to elaborate the general approach, structure and scope of a study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on conventional disarmament—a task entrusted to it by the General Assembly in December 1980.<sup>(3)</sup> Working papers were submitted by China, Denmark, the German Democratic Republic and India. The Working Group also considered two papers by its Chairman containing suggested guidelines, which were later annexed to the Commission's report to the Assembly.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Chairman's suggested guidelines, which some delegations were ready to accept as a mandate for the study, listed several provisions and principles to underlie its general approach, including the need of States to protect their security, the objective of promoting or enhancing stability at a lower military level, the need for verification in agreements on reduction of armed forces and armaments, and the need to take account of both global and regional aspects. Among the elements suggested for the scope and structure of the study were identification of the main causes of the conventional arms race, a factual account of the arms build-up, the nature of military alliances, international conventional-arms transfers, use of conventional arms against States, the impact of technology, a description of social and economic consequences, and the contribution of confidence-building measures. The experts who were to assist the Secretary-General in carrying out the study, as stipulated in the 1980 resolution, would be asked to assess the effects of the conventional arms race on prospects for disarmament and to identify areas in which measures to curb the race were most urgent and feasible.

After five meetings of the Working Group between 28 May and 5 June, the Commission concluded, in a text adopted on 5 June, that a significant divergence of views prevented it at that stage from discharging the responsibility assigned to it by the Assembly. It recommended that Member States consider the matter further with the aim of reconciling the differences.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution on the study on conventional disarmament,<sup>(4)</sup> adopted on 9 December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to establish a Group of Experts on All Aspects of the Conventional Arms Race and on Disarmament relating to Conventional Weapons and Armed Forces. It asked the Disarmament Commission to complete in 1982 its consideration of the general approach to the study, its structure and scope, and to transmit its conclusions to the Group of Experts. The Assembly agreed that the Group should pursue its work after the Disarmament Commission met, taking into consideration such conclusions as the Commission might submit and, if necessary, its 1981 deliberations. The Secretary-General was requested to submit a final report in 1983.

The Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 114 to none, with 26 abstentions. The text, sponsored and revised by Denmark and incorporating an amendment by Brazil, was approved in the First Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 98 to none, with 21 abstentions.

The initial draft resolution would have had the Assembly request the Secretary-General to initiate the work of the Group, taking the Commission's 1981 deliberations as guidance, and to submit a progress report in 1982 prior to the final report in 1983. As the sponsor, Denmark, explained it, this would have meant that the Group would begin work as soon as the resolution was adopted. After objections by some States that the Disarmament Commission should be given another chance to agree on the mandate, the text was revised by Denmark to allow the Commission to complete its consideration of the matter before the Group met. The revised text was further altered to incorporate a Brazilian amendment inserting the words "if necessary" before the reference to the Commission's 1981 deliberations.

Commenting on the original Danish draft, Brazil, India and Peru saw it as eroding the competence of the Disarmament Commission, to which the Assembly had assigned responsibility for working out the general approach, structure and scope of the proposed study. Emphasizing their support for enhancing the Commission's role, these States called on others to avoid actions that might adversely affect that role. Brazil and India recommended that the draft resolution be withdrawn so that the Commission could give further consideration to working out generally approved guidelines for the study.

Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Spain and the United Kingdom, the last speaking for the EC members, supported the original Danish proposal. The United Kingdom said the Assembly should not impose upon the experts detailed guidelines on every aspect of their work, and that delaying action on the study and referring the matter back to the Commission could detract from the standing of that body. The Federal Republic of Germany thought that, in deciding on its organization of work and mode of operation, the Group would find useful and sufficient the guidelines that could be derived from the list of topics presented in the Commission; a later substantive input to their work by the Commission was not ruled out. Spain commented that returning the question to the Commission would be tantamount to preventing the study from being carried out.

Explaining their positions on the revised text, a number of States which voted in favour, including the Bahamas, Ecuador, Pakistan and Peru, agreed that it had removed the preoccupations which the initial version had created regarding the Commission's mandate to work out the general approach to the study. Italy expressed confidence that, if the Commission experienced difficulties, the Group of Experts would be in a position to pursue its work. The United States assumed that expenditures in connection with the proposed study would be made without prejudice to the zero-growth budget policy of the United Nations.

India, which abstained in the vote, felt that, although the revised text addressed some of its preoccupations, the study should be undertaken only after the Commission had fully discussed and agreed on guidelines. The USSR also abstained, stating that the proposed guidelines given in the Commission's report were one-sided in that they emphasized such questions as the nature of military alliances, political doctrines, data collection and questions related to the qualitative aspects of the conventional arms race, instead of focusing on the task of promoting disarmament.

Several States commented favourably on the potential usefulness of the study. Nepal, for example, believed that it could form the basis for efforts to control international conventional-arms transfers. Egypt said the study must recognize that nuclear disarmament took priority; it should take into account the root causes of the conventional armaments race and it should not be used to infringe the rights of peoples and States to self-determination, sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence. Norway attached special importance to the recommendations for compilation and dissemination of data on the military use of human and material resources and military transfers.

In the First Committee debate, many States supported a limitation of the build-up and transfer of conventional weapons. In general, Western States continued to see conventional arms control and disarmament as an important question that should be pursued simultaneously with nuclear disarmament, while developing countries largely regarded it as important but secondary to nuclear disarmament.

Italy saw a direct relationship between the nuclear and conventional arms races, since the growth of conventional arsenals of one side could provide an impetus for the other side to expand its nuclear arsenals. Belgium voiced a similar concern, holding that the uncontrolled growth of conventional weapons could lead to a risk of nuclear proliferation. Austria, the Netherlands and Spain regretted that the United Nations had not devoted sufficient attention to the problem.

A number of arguments for conventional disarmament were advanced. Chile remarked that 80 per cent of military expenditures was devoted to the production of conventional weapons, while Ireland said that 25 million people had been killed by conventional weapons since the Second World War, most of them in the third world. China, stating that conventional disarmament should proceed in conjunction with nuclear disarmament, observed that all the wars of aggression launched directly or indirectly by the super-Powers had been fought with conventional weapons. Singapore, remarking that conventional arms had been used in several invasions of small countries by their bigger and stronger neighbours, said there could be no certainty that a third world war would not have broken out if the balance of nuclear terror had not existed.

Guyana recognized that States must equip themselves for defence but said some which faced no obvious external enemy or threat had made preparations which far exceeded the normal requirements of legitimate self-defence. New Zealand, observing that all States were entitled to maintain armed forces for defence, said that while this had a restraining effect in some cases, conventional armaments and armed forces sometimes increased the potential for conflict, with the risk of great-Power involvement. The Philippines contended that increased acquisition of conventional arms could raise the level of fear and threat in the minds of neighbours and possible adversaries, encouraging them to take steps to eliminate the perceived dangers. Zambia saw the conventional arms race, especially in developing countries, as threatening world peace and security.

The Byelorussian SSR observed that only the USSR had declared its readiness to adhere to a ceiling on the armed forces and conventional armaments of the permanent members of the Security Council, as called for by the Assembly in 1980<sup>(2)</sup>

Several States stressed the socio-economic advantages that would accrue from conventional disarmament. Greece expressed a widely shared view that progress in this area would have favourable consequences on the economies and development efforts of all countries, especially the smaller ones.

Support for the limitation of international arms sales and other types of transfers of conventional weapons was expressed by a number of States, including Chile, the German Democratic Republic, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Rwanda, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United States. Sweden cited figures showing that the international arms trade had reached a value of $35 billion a year, of which 75 per cent represented imports by developing countries.

Several developing countries, including Barbados, Bhutan, Jamaica, Lebanon, Mauritania, Nigeria and Rwanda, deplored transfers of armaments to developing countries, in particular because they consumed resources vitally needed for development and provided opportunities for regional mistrust and conflict. With regard to the Middle East, Iraq, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic believed that United States arms transfers to Israel threatened peace and security, while Israel contended that Arab States were engaged in a costly programme of arms acquisition aimed at Israel. Viet Nam condemned United States arms transfers to certain Asian countries, arguing that they encouraged subversion and destabilization, particularly in South-East Asia. Cuba and Nicaragua similarly deplored United States arms supplies to certain Latin American countries, and Cuba denied allegations that weapons it had acquired from the USSR for its defence had been redistributed in Latin America.

The United States contended that the USSR surpassed any other country in the transfer of weapons to developing countries, having signed arms sales agreements with such countries in 1980 worth $15 billion. The USSR stated that the United States, in 1978, had unilaterally broken off talks with the USSR aimed at limiting conventional arms transfers.

Several measures proposed in previous years were reiterated during the 1981 debate. These included proposals by the Federal Republic of Germany to establish a United Nations register of conventional arms exports and imports, by Warsaw Treaty Organization members to freeze the conventional armaments and armed forces of the permanent members of the Security Council and their military allies as the first step towards reduction, by Italy for a United Nations body to monitor and control the international arms trade, and by Turkey to control arms sales by private companies with the aim of countering terrorist activities.

India reiterated its view that nuclear disarmament must not be based on progress in conventional disarmament and that the nuclear Powers and their allies, bearing primary responsibility for the conventional arms race; had to take the first step towards conventional disarmament.

Study on conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/156 A of 12 December 1960 in which it approved, in principle, the carrying out of a study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces, to be undertaken by the Secretary-General with the assistance of a group of qualified experts appointed by him on a balanced geographical basis,

Recalling the discussions at the substantive session of the Disarmament Commission in 1981 on the general approach to, and the structure and scope of, the study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to establish the Group of Experts on All Aspects of the Conventional Arms Race and on Disarmament relating to Conventional Weapons and Armed Forces, in accordance with the provisions contained in paragraph 1 of General Assembly resolution 35/156 A;

2. Requests the Disarmament Commission, at its substantive session in 1982, to complete its consideration of the general approach to, and the structure and scope of, the study and to transmit the conclusions of its deliberations to the Group of Experts;

3. Agrees that the Group of Experts should pursue its work after the above-mentioned session of the Disarmament Commission, taking into consideration such conclusions as the Commission may submit to it, and, if necessary, the deliberations at the substantive session of the Commission in 1981, in particular those reflected in paragraph 21 and annex III of the report on that session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with paragraph 4 of resolution 35/156 A, to submit a final report to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session.

Study on regional disarmament

By a resolution adopted without vote on 9 December 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit at its 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27) the study on regional disarmament completed in 1980 by a group of governmental experts established at the Assembly's request.<sup>(3)</sup> The Assembly requested similar treatment for a 1981 report by the Secretary-General containing views on the study presented by 32 States.<sup>(1)</sup> This resolution, sponsored by 31 States from all geographical regions, was approved by the First Committee on 20 November, also without vote.

Introducing the resolution, Belgium noted that the views which States had submitted revealed broad areas of agreement on some essential points: first, security requirements, were most easily perceived at the regional level; second, States in a region would have to take the initiative for regional disarmament; and third, as the region should not be dissociated from the global context, relations with third States should be closely examined. Belgium added that a number of topics had been identified as particularly suitable for regional action, notably the creation of denuclearized zones, cessation of the conventional arms race and implementation of confidence-building measures.

India stated that it would have abstained had a vote been taken, as it believed that partial disarmament measures had a rationale only as integral components of general and complete disarmament on a global basis.

In the First Committee debate, Chad remarked that regional disarmament would prove useful only within a framework leading towards general and complete disarmament; the disarmament of some parts of the world while others continued to accumulate weapons would not serve the cause of peace and stability. France suggested that potential confrontations might be mitigated through the establishment of a regional or subregional system for the evaluation of military forces, or by concluding agreements, backed by control and verification measures, on the self-limitation of armaments in a regional framework. Portugal said that two elements were essential for regional disarmament: verification of compliance and the agreement of all States concerned. Israel suggested the establishment of United Nations regional disarmament commissions, composed of all States in the region, which would concentrate on two aspects: limitation of military budgets and confidence-building measures.

Eastern and Western European States emphasized the importance of the Vienna Talks on Mutual Reduction of Forces and Armaments and Associated Measures in Central Europe. Austria hoped they would lead to at least a first-phase agreement for reducing USSR and United States troop strength in the area. The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom, the latter speaking for the EC members, saw the goal of the Vienna Talks as mutual reductions in conventional forces in the region to improve military stability and rid central Europe of the fear of possible surprise attack, starting with reductions in the level of USSR and United States forces. The German Democratic Republic said it should be possible to agree on a proposal by the socialist States of Eastern Europe for the simultaneous withdrawal of 20,000 USSR military personnel and 13,000 United States military personnel, while other parties froze the strength of their troops pending a further agreement. Nigeria noted the universal interest in the Vienna Talks and said it would help build confidence if the rest of the international community was periodically briefed on their status.

Nations of both Eastern and Western Europe voiced support for the idea of convening a conference on disarmament in Europe and noted that the mandate for such a meeting was under discussion at the session at Madrid, Spain, of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. Poland said it would shortly confirm its readiness to offer Warsaw as the site for beginning such a conference, and Romania also favoured a conference on strengthening confidence and disarmament in Europe. Finland hoped that, while the conference would begin by examining concrete confidence-building measures, attention would later focus on a comprehensive view of arms control and disarmament in Europe. Similarly, Yugoslavia stated that negotiations at such a conference should concern disarmament and not only confidence-building.

France mentioned the proposal it had made at Madrid for a two-stage conference, dealing first with militarily significant confidence-building measures and later with the reduction of conventional weapons. Turkey saw this proposal as providing an opportunity to deepen the military dimension of detente, through such measures as advance notification of military manoeuvres and troop movements, and mutual military visits to build trust. The United Kingdom, for the EC members, renewed their support for the French proposal as a means of negotiating confidence-building measures binding on the whole of Europe up to the Urals. The proposal was also supported by Denmark and Norway.

Study on all the aspects of regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/156 D of 12 December 1980 concerning the study on all the aspects of regional disarmament,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General containing the views of Member States on the study:

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the Study on All the Aspects of Regional Disarmament and his report containing the views of Member States to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament, so that it may consider their substance and any action on them that may be required.

Military budgets

Reduction of military budgets

DISARMAMENT COMMISSION CONSIDERATION. In 1981, the Disarmament Commission continued to consider two aspects of the reduction of military budgets: (a) harmonization of views on concrete steps to be undertaken by States regarding a gradual, agreed reduction of military budgets and reallocation to economic and social development of resources currently being used for military purposes; and (b) examination and identification of effective ways of achieving agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures in a balanced manner, including adequate measures of verification.

Romania and Sweden presented a working paper calling for moderation in States' military expenditures until agreements were concluded on the freezing and reduction of military budgets; the savings would be reallocated for economic and social development.

The Commission established a working group on the subject, which met three times between 28 May and 4 June. In addition, the group's Chairman conducted consultations and, at the request of the group, compiled a background paper containing some principles and ideas put forward by delegations on the freezing and reduction of military expenditures. The paper dealt with such points as the right of States to security, the special responsibility of nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, release of resources for economic and social development, reporting procedures, verification and the role of the United Nations.

The discussion revealed that no agreement could be reached at that stage on the content of the background paper. Consequently, the Commission agreed to recommend<sup>(1)</sup> to the General Assembly that it be allowed to continue consideration of this question in 1982, with a view to identifying and elaborating the principles that should govern further actions of States in regard to freezing and reduction of military expenditures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution adopted without vote on 9 December,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly reaffirmed the need to reinforce action regarding reduction of military budgets, and reiterated its appeal that States, in particular the most heavily armed States, pending agreement on reductions, exercise self-restraint in their military expenditures with a view to reallocating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for developing countries. The Assembly requested the Disarmament Commission to continue consideration of this question in 1982, keeping in mind the possibility of embodying in a suitable document the governing principles for the freezing and reduction of military expenditures. The First Committee approved the text on 20 November, also without vote.

The resolution, sponsored by 14 States, was introduced by Romania, which believed that self-restraint in regard to military budgets would create a favourable climate for negotiations on the subject and would support efforts for economic and social development and international assistance to developing countries. Subsequently, Romania orally revised the first preambular paragraph of the text by deleting the word "unprecedented" before the phrase "growing military expenditures".

The United States expressed a reservation about the resolution, stating that the need for verification had regrettably been relegated to a position of lesser importance by being placed in the preamble. India explained that it would have abstained had a vote been taken on the text, as it did not believe concepts such as military balance and so-called parity could serve as the basis for measures of arms limitation or disarmament, and they were equally untenable as the basis for reduction of military budgets. Brazil, which supported the resolution, shared the view of India that the reduction of military budgets was first and foremost incumbent on the nuclear-weapon States, which accounted for the bulk of global military expenditures.

In the debate, Bangladesh attached importance to any proposal that would lead to savings from disarmament which could be reallocated for development. Egypt urged the super-Powers, when they resumed their bilateral talks on arms limitation, to consider freezing and then cutting their military expenditures by an agreed amount. Italy believed it would not be excessively difficult to reduce defence expenditures if States could rely on the absolute reciprocity of neighbouring countries, or at least of those countries from which they perceived a potential threat. Nepal supported the development of an international instrument to monitor the reduction of military expenditure, while ensuring verifiability and comparability. Romania urged the immediate conclusion of an agreement to freeze military budgets at the 1981 level, and the adoption by the Assembly, at its 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27), of a declaration of principles governing actions by States to halt and reduce military expenditures. Zambia believed that unilateral reductions of military budgets would contribute to disarmament.

Chile, on the other hand, believed that military budgets could not be reduced as long as international tension persisted and super-Power confrontation became more acute because of the need to curb USSR imperialism. Portugal, while supporting efforts to elaborate principles that could guide States in this area, remarked that effective action which could have a lasting effect on the rise of military expenditures must be directed against the causes that impelled States to increase their military budgets. The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, said the approach to military budget reduction should be based on generally accepted procedures providing for adequate comparability and verification, while safeguarding the right of States to individual and collective self-defence.

In several statements during the Assembly session, the United States criticized what it regarded as a unilateral Soviet arms build-up of great proportions in the 1970s, said its own military expenditures had declined in real terms by 25 per cent since 1968, and called on the USSR to publish data on its military budget and equipment in order to establish a basis for enduring agreements. The USSR, for its part, maintained that by inflating the myth of the Soviet military threat as an ideological underpinning for the build-up of its defence potential, the United States was sharply increasing military appropriations and intended to spend $1.5 trillion for military purposes in the next five years.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the ever-spiralling arms race and growing military expenditures, which constitute a heavy burden for the economies of all nations and have extremely harmful consequences for international peace and security,

Reaffirming the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, according to which gradual reduction of military budgets on a mutually agreed basis, for example, in absolute figures or in terms of percentage points, particularly by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, would be a measure that would contribute to the curbing of the arms race and increase the possibilities of reallocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Reaffirming that it is possible to achieve continued and systematic reductions in military budgets without affecting the military balance to the detriment of the national security of any State,

Recalling its resolution 34/83 F of 11 December 1979, in which it considered that a new impetus should be given to endeavours to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain, in a balanced manner, military expenditures, including adequate measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned,

Recalling also the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, which provides that during this period renewed efforts should be made to reach agreement on the reduction of military expenditures and the reallocation of resources thus saved to economic and social development especially for the benefit of developing countries,

Recalling further its resolution 35/142 A of 12 December 1980, in which it requested the Disarmament Commission to continue at its session to be held in 1981 the consideration of the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets" and, in particular, to identify and elaborate on the principles which should govern further actions of States in the field of the freezing and reduction of military expenditures, keeping in mind the possibility of embodying such principles into a suitable document at an appropriate stage,

Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission on the work accomplished during its session in 1981 and taking into account the proposals and ideas submitted by Member States concerning the principles which should govern further actions of States in the field of the freezing and reduction of military expenditures, and which are contained in the working document annexed to the Commission's report,

Aware of the various proposals submitted by Member States and of the activities carried out so far within the framework of the United Nations in the field of the reduction of military budgets,

Considering that the identification and elaboration of the principles which should govern further actions of States in the field of the freezing and reduction of military budgets and the other current activities within the framework of the United Nations related to the question of the reduction of military budgets should be regarded as having the fundamental objective of reaching international agreements on the reduction of military expenditures,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reinforce the endeavours of all States and international action in the area of the reduction of military budgets, with a view to reaching international agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures;

2. Reiterates the appeal to all States, in particular the most heavily armed States, pending the conclusion of agreements on the reduction of military expenditures, to exercise self-restraint in their military expenditures with a view to real-locating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries;

3. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue at its session to be held in 1982 the consideration of the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets", taking into account the provisions of General Assembly resolution 35/142 A as well as those of the present resolution and other relevant proposals and ideas, with a view to identifying and elaborating on the principles which should govern further actions of States in the field of the freezing and reduction of military expenditures, keeping in mind the possibility of embodying such principles into a suitable document at an appropriate stage;

Reporting procedures for military budgets

In August 1981, the Secretary-General submitted the first of a series of annual reports,<sup>(1)</sup> requested by the General Assembly in December 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> containing information from States on their military expenditures. Of the 21 reporting States, 16 filled out a table, in matrix form, based on a standardized reporting instrument devised in 1980 by the Ad Hoc Panel on Military Budgeting.<sup>(5)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 9 December, by a resolution on the reporting system on military expenditures,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly stressed the need to increase the number of reporting States with a view to the broadest participation from different geographic regions and budgeting systems. It reiterated its recommendation that all Member States make use of the reporting instrument devised in 1980 and report their military expenditures to the Secretary-General by 30 April of each year. It requested him to examine ways of making the collection and assembling of such data an integral part of the United Nations statistical services, and to arrange and publish the data according to statistical practice.

The resolution was adopted by a non-recorded vote of 120 to none, with 19 abstentions, following the First Committee's approval of the text on 20 November by a recorded vote of 102 to none, with 15 abstentions (Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Mozambique, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam, Zambia).

In introducing the resolution, sponsored by 19 States, Sweden stressed the urgent need to reach agreements on the freezing and reduction of military expenditures, asserting that such agreements could be concluded without affecting the military balance to the detriment of any State's security. Sweden further believed that agreements on such measures would have the advantage of imposing constraints, not only on certain kinds of weapons but on all kinds of military activities. However, without generally accepted procedures for comparing military expenditures, it would probably be difficult to arrive at long-lasting and substantial agreements to limit expenditures.

India explained its abstention on the resolution by stating that the reduction of military expenditures could not be based on untenable concepts such as military balance, and that the international reporting system needed further refining before all States could accept it. The USSR, recalling that it had initiated the 1973 Assembly resolution aiming at a 10 per cent reduction of the military budgets of the permanent members of the Security Council and the allocation of part of the savings to developing countries,<sup>(2)</sup> abstained as it believed the abstract research conducted in recent years by the United Nations was removed from reality and did not serve the cause of reducing military budgets.

Among those voting in favour, the United States said that a certain openness as well as means of verification were necessary in regard to military expenditures and, ultimately, disarmament. Yugoslavia stated that the recommended action could be useful and efficient only if all States used the reporting instrument.

In the First Committee debate, the Federal Republic of Germany reiterated its proposal for a United Nations register of each industrial country's per capita expenditures on armaments and on development assistance, and regretted that no Eastern State had answered the questionnaire on military budgets. The same regret was voiced by the United Kingdom on behalf of the EC members. Italy mentioned the problems of comparability and verifiability. Portugal, while attaching importance to the principle of the openness of military budgets, pointed out that comparability entailed many practical problems, not only between States having different political and social systems but even between States with similar systems.

Brazil held that nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States should take the lead in utilizing the reporting instrument, thus showing their willingness to reduce their arms expenditures. Egypt remarked that, since the Assembly's 1973 recommendation that the permanent members of the Security Council reduce their military budgets by 10 per cent, global military expenditure had increased tremendously while the Assembly remained engaged in a marginal exercise in accounting and reporting; reductions in military budgets should not depend solely on the comparability of military expenditures.

The socialist States of Eastern Europe did not share the positive assessment of United Nations efforts to set norms for military budget cost accounting; in their view, that exercise tended to obfuscate what they considered the true cause of the continued arms race, namely the lack of political will on the part of some States to undertake genuine disarmament measures. Poland viewed as unfounded the contention that the lack of information about the military efforts of States was one of the main factors contributing to the arms race; it added, on behalf of a number of socialist States, that efforts in the United Nations to collect data on military expenditures and elaborate a military spending comparability system were being used by some to cover up their unwillingness to agree to the reduction of their military expenditures.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the arms race, its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security and its deplorable waste of human and economic resources,

A/armed by present tendencies to increase further the rate of growth of military expenditures,

Considering that gradual reductions of military expenditures on a mutually agreed basis would be a measure that would contribute to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities of reallocating resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Convinced that such reductions could and should be carried out on a mutually agreed basis without affecting the military balance to the detriment of the national security of any state.

Reaffirming its conviction that provisions for comparability and verification will have to be basic elements of any agreement to reduce military expenditures,

Recalling the fact that these matters are being studied by the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets, established in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 35/142 B of 12 December 1980, and that this Group is expected to submit its report before the second special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982,

Recalling further that a standardized system for international reporting of military expenditures has been recommended for use and that the first national reports have been received this year,

Emphasizing the value of a full implementation of such a reporting instrument and of its further refinement as a means to increase confidence between States by contributing to greater openness in military matters, which is particularly important for arriving at international agreements to reduce military expenditures,

Reaffirming also its conviction that the reporting of military data and the examination of problems concerning comparability and verification have the fundamental objective of making possible the conclusion of international agreements to reduce military expenditures,

Taking note with appreciation of the first report of the Secretary-General on these matters,

Considering that the activities related to the reporting of military expenditures as well as to the questions of comparability and verification and other current activities within the framework of the United Nations related to the question of the reduction of military budgets should be regarded as having the fundamental objective of reaching international agreements on the reduction of military expenditures,

1. Stresses the need to increase the number of reporting States with a view to the broadest possible participation from different geographic regions and representing different budgeting systems;

2. Reiterates its recommendation that all Member States should make use of the reporting instrument and report annually, by 30 April, to the Secretary-General their military expenditures of the latest fiscal year for which data are available;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to examine ways and means to make the collection and assembling of data on military expenditures, reported by States on the basis of the reporting instrument, an integral part of the regular United Nations statistical services and to arrange and publish these data according to statistical practice;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to include these matters in his next annual report on military budgets to the General Assembly.

Indian Ocean as a zone of peace

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE INDIAN OCEAN. In 1981, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean held two sessions, from 17 February to 6 March and from 1 to 19 June, as a preparatory committee for the projected Conference on the Indian Ocean; a regular session from 17 to 28 August; and additional meetings between 21 October and 16 November to conclude its work for the year. All 50 meetings were held at United Nations Headquarters.

At its preparatory sessions, the Committee sought unsuccessfully to harmonize views on issues related to the convening of the Conference on the Indian Ocean and the political and security climate in the region. In its report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee stated that two broad views had emerged during the debate on dates for the Conference, which the Assembly had decided in 1979 to convene during 1981.<sup>(5)</sup> A large number of Committee members favoured convening the Conference in 1981 as scheduled. While conceding that further harmonization of views was preferable, they felt that complete harmonization of views was not essential since the Conference itself would be a stage in the process of reaching the objective of making the Indian Ocean a zone of peace, and that the grave deterioration of the political and security climate in the area compelled the urgent convening of the Conference. Other members, however, considered it premature to set the dates, believing that adequate progress had to be made on the harmonization of views before a Conference could be convened. These members felt that a Conference convened in the current adverse political and security climate in the area would be unlikely to succeed and would therefore jeopardize the eventual realization of the concept of a zone of peace there.

The Committee concluded that, while there was agreement on the need to hold the Conference, the question of setting a new date was open. It was also noted that the Committee's mandate should be maintained unless there was a consensus for changing it. Some members did not believe that this estimation accurately reflected the range of views expressed in the Committee.

Following discussion at its regular session in August, the Committee approved on 16 November a draft resolution for adoption by the Assembly, proposing the renewal of the Committee's mandate and requesting the Committee to make efforts to accomplish the preparatory work for the Conference, including consideration of convening it not later than the first half of 1983 (p.94).

On the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly President, on 5 March, appointed Thailand, which had applied for membership the previous year, as the forty-sixth member of the Committee. The Committee reached no consensus on membership applications from Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Hungary, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Swaziland and Viet Nam.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 9 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote the resolution recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean. By this text, the Assembly expressed regret at the lack of consensus on the dates for the Conference on the Indian Ocean and emphasized its decision to convene the Conference. It requested the Committee to continue work on the harmonization of views on remaining issues related to convening the Conference and to make every effort to accomplish the preparatory work for the Conference, including consideration of its convening not later than the first half of 1983. Renewing the Committee's mandate, the Assembly requested it to hold six weeks of meetings in 1982, including a meeting outside New York at a place to be decided. The First Committee approved the text on 25 November, also without vote.

In a resolution on strengthening international security,<sup>(5)</sup> also adopted on 9 December, the Assembly reiterated its support for its 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,<sup>(2)</sup> expressed hope that the Conference would be held no later than the first half of 1983 and called on all States to contribute to the Conference's success.

The First Committee debate saw a reiteration of the divergence of opinion between those who thought the Conference should be convened as soon as possible, without awaiting further harmonization of views, and those who believed that the political and security climate in the area militated against the early convening of the Conference.

Among those which favoured an early Conference, India said it would have preferred a resolution more appropriately reflecting the concerns of the littoral and hinterland States of the area but joined the consensus in the hope that the Ad Hoc Committee would be able to complete preparations to convene the Conference well before the first half of 1983; setting pre-conditions with regard to harmonization of views or the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area were merely pretexts to kill the proposal for a conference. Seychelles expressed reservations with regard to the paragraph mentioning 1983; it felt that arguments about the need to harmonize views and faulty and outmoded declarations harboured ill-intentioned manoeuvres, and that the Conference should be held during the first half of 1982.

Sri Lanka observed that the non-aligned countries did not expect the Conference to establish overnight a viable and effective zone of peace in the Indian Ocean; they could not understand the argument that insecurity and instability in the area necessitated postponement. Support for an early Conference was also voiced by Afghanistan, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Indonesia, Oman, Uganda and Yemen.

Madagascar, stating that complete agreement need not be achieved before the Conference, asserted that its joining the consensus on the resolution did not signify its acceptance of the argument that the Afghanistan situation justified postponement; it added that 30 positive replies had been received to its invitation to a summit meeting in Tananarive to draw up a convention on the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, as a complementary measure to the projected United Nations Conference. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Uganda supported the Madagascar initiative. Democratic Yemen mentioned that it had taken an initiative at the beginning of 1981 to convene a summit conference for the Gulf, the Horn of Africa and other concerned countries, to discuss measures to dismantle foreign bases.

Afghanistan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam said the United States and its allies were impeding the work of the Ad Hoc Committee and working against the convening of the Conference. Iran questioned why States which did not fully agree with the Ad Hoc Committee's mandate or which blocked its work were participating in that body. Pakistan believed the Committee should start substantive discussion on the principles of agreement to be adopted at the Conference, in elaboration of the 1971 Declaration. Rwanda called for an end to the presence of a foreign military force in the area which had promoted manoeuvres that had prevented the convening of the Conference. The Sudan said the manoeuvring in the Ad Hoc Committee was not in keeping with the security interests of the countries in the region or with their need for peace, free from the threats posed by the bases and fleets of the world Powers. Yemen stated that the pre-conditions set by certain Western countries for convening the Conference were an attempt to impose a fait accompli and make the area a field for military rivalry.

China favoured the earliest possible convening of the Conference but said such action was being impeded by the hegemonism, aggression and expansion practised in the region by the super-Powers, one of which had occupied a hinterland State of the Indian Ocean and thus undermined the climate of trust necessary for convening the Conference. Malaysia, while stressing the need for a spirit of compromise between the super-Powers to narrow the divergence of views, called on the littoral and hinterland States to exercise restraint and responsibility and act in a manner consistent with the spirit of the Declaration on the Indian Ocean. Nepal felt that the current military build-up and rivalry in the area could only worsen the situation.

Afghanistan said the peoples of Asia were being endangered by stepped-up militaristic activities of the United States, including the building of facilities for the rapid deployment force and the expansion of the naval and air force bases on Diego Garcia. Iraq called on the major Powers to dismantle their military bases in the area, particularly the Diego Garcia base, and referred to threats by successive United States administrations to use so-called rapid deployment forces, particularly against the oil-producing countries of the area.

Oman hoped that foreign forces which had invaded land near the Ocean would withdraw and that foreign military presence and the desire for hegemony would be ended. Somalia said that regional instability had been increased by a super-Power's military intervention in a local conflict in the Horn of Africa, its introduction of surrogate forces there, its establishment of naval bases and a strong military presence in a littoral State, and its military occupation of Afghanistan.

Canada, Japan, the United States and the EC members questioned the validity of the existing concept of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, and called for a change in the Ad Hoc Committee's mandate to enable it to explore elements for a zone of peace and facilitate co-operation within the region as well as with outside Powers. The United States pointed out that it had never accepted the 1971 Declaration, which it regarded as faulty and outmoded, inconsistent with the right of States to individual and collective self-defence, and difficult to reconcile with freedom of navigation; the United States future participation in the Ad Hoc Committee would be guided by the ability of that body to continue to operate on the basis of consensus. France and the United States also cited their reservations about the reference to the Declaration when explaining their position on the 9 December resolution on strengthening international security.

The suggestion for widening the established concept of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace was supported by Canada, Japan and the Netherlands. Canada saw a need for accompanying measures designed to improve regional trust and confidence, as well as a broader framework that would contribute to removing such causes of tension as poverty, lack of mutual comprehension and inequality of individual rights. The Netherlands suggested that provisions for economic co-operation and assistance should complement a declaration setting down rules of conduct between States of the region and others, based on non-interference in internal affairs.

Australia found it difficult to imagine how a conference on the Indian Ocean could succeed when a non-aligned hinterland State of the region had been invaded and continued to be occupied by the military forces of a major Power whose co-operation would be essential to creating a zone of peace. Similarly, Japan and the United Kingdom, the latter speaking for the EC members, considered it inappropriate to convene a conference while Afghanistan continued to be occupied by foreign troops and in the absence of any real progress in the harmonization of views on many fundamental issues. France hoped the Ad Hoc Committee would make substantive progress in 1982, particularly in harmonizing views on the Conference's goals, so that its convening might not be deferred indefinitely.

Ethiopia and India disagreed with objections to the zone of peace concept for the Indian Ocean, remarking that the 1971 Declaration reflected the interests and aspirations of the littoral and hinterland States.

Czechoslovakia supported the efforts of the regional States to establish a zone of peace and liquidate foreign military bases. The German Democratic Republic held that the Conference would ease tensions and opposed attempts to prevent its convening. The USSR, asserting that States should refrain from imposing pre-conditions for convening the Conference, said the United States was using the events in Afghanistan as a pretext to justify introducing its military, naval and air forces into the region; the USSR was ready to discuss, in international negotiations, the situation around Afghanistan, either together with the problem of ensuring security in the Gulf area or separately.

Albania dissociated itself from the consensus on the resolution and reiterated its disapproval of the concept of zones of peace, on the ground that there could not be islands of peace in an ocean of armament and war practices resulting from super-Power policies.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/88 of 14 December 1976, 32/86 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/68 of 14 December 1978, 34/80 A and B of 11 December 1979 and 35/150 of 12 December 1980, and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling a/s/o that at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it stated that the establishment of zones of peace in various regions of the world under appropriate conditions to be clearly defined and determined freely by the States concerned in the zone, taking into account the characteristics of the zone and the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and in conformity with international law, can contribute to strengthening the security of States within such zones and to international peace and security as a whole,

Recalling further the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean,

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Recalling its decision, taken at the thirty-fourth session in resolution 34/80 B, to convene a Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo during 1981,

Recalling further its decision, at the thirty-fifth session in resolution 35/150, to make every effort, in consideration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area, particularly recent developments, as well as the progress made in the harmonization of views, to finalize, in accordance with its normal methods of work, all preparations for the Conference, including the dates for its convening,

Recalling the exchange of varied views in the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and noting that, while progress has been made, a number of issues remain to be resolved,

Noting the exchange of views on the adverse political and security climate in the region,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee has failed to reach consensus on the dates for the convening, during 1981, of the Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo,

Convinced that the continued military presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean area, conceived in the context of their confrontation, gives urgency to the need to take practical steps for the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,

Considering that all other foreign military presence in the area, whenever it is contrary to the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, gives even greater urgency to the need to take practical steps towards the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration,

Considering a/s/o that the creation of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean requires the active participation of and full co-operation among the littoral and hinterland States, the permanent members of the Security Council and major maritime users to ensure conditions of peace and security based on the purposes and principles of the Charter as well as the general principles of international law,

Considering further that the creation of a zone of peace requires co-operation and agreement among the States of the region to ensure conditions of peace and security within the area, as envisaged in the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, and respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the littoral and hinterland States,

Calling for the renewal of genuinely constructive efforts through the exercise of the political will necessary for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,

Deeply concerned at the danger posed by the grave and ominous developments in the area and the resulting sharp deterioration of peace, security and stability which particularly seriously affect the littoral and hinterland States, as well as international peace and security,

Convinced that the continued deterioration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area is an important consideration bearing on the question of the early convening of the Conference and that the easing of tension in the area would enhance the prospect of success being achieved by the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and the exchange of views in the Committee;

2. Regrets that the Ad Hoc Committee has failed to reach consensus on the finalization of dates for the convening, during 1981, of the Conference on the Indian Ocean;

3. Emphasizes its decision to convene the Conference at Colombo as a necessary step for the implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, adopted in 1971;

4. Emphasizes a/s/o, in pursuance of this decision and in consideration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area, its decision to request the Ad Hoc Committee to continue its efforts for the necessary harmonization of views on the remaining issues related to the convening of the Conference;

5. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to continue its work on the necessary harmonization of views on the relevant issues, including those set forth in paragraph 4 above, and to make every effort to accomplish the necessary preparatory work for the Conference, including consideration of its convening not later than the first half of 1983;

6. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee as defined in the relevant resolutions;

7. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold further sessions in 1982 of a total duration of six weeks, including the holding of a meeting at a venue outside New York to be decided upon;

8. Requests the Ad Hoc committee to submit to the General Assembly, at its second special session devoted to disarmament and at its thirty-seventh session, reports on its work and on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records.

Disarmament and development

STUDY BY THE GROUP OF EXPERTS. The Group of Governmental Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, appointed by the Secretary-General at the request of the General Assembly at its 1978 special session on disarmament,<sup>(4)</sup> submitted its study<sup>(1)</sup> on 3 September 1981. The 27-member Group held 10 sessions between September 1978 and August 1981, of which all three sessions in 1981 were held at Geneva: 19 to 30 January, 21 April to 1 May and 17 to 28 August.

In presenting the study to the Assembly, the Secretary-General pointed out that, while the observations and recommendations contained in the report were those of the experts, he considered it to be an important attempt by the international community to investigate thoroughly the proposition that a balanced and generally acceptable pattern of global economic and social development was inextricably related to disarmament.

The study contained six substantive chapters: framework and scope of the relationship between disarmament and development; present-day utilization of resources for military purposes; economic and social effects of a continuing arms race and of the implementation of disarmament measures; conversion and redeployment of resources released from military purposes through disarmament measures to economic and social development purposes; possible institutional measures for international reallocation of resources from armaments to development; and summary, conclusions and recommendations.

The Group argued that the arms race had developed into a threat to the security of nations and that failure to control it was likely to be associated with a vicious circle of confrontation and mutual denial, with declining prospects for mutually advantageous economic co-operation and shrinking options for all nations.

The Group stated that steadily high or increasing military outlays were likely to have a depressing effect on economic growth, directly through displacement of investment and indirectly through constraints on productivity resulting from insufficient research and development in the civilian sector. While identifying inflation-stimulating and employment-depressing consequences of military expenditures in the developed countries of East and West, the experts observed that the developing countries were the worst affected victims of an adverse strategic environment dominated by the seemingly endless arms race. On the other hand, diversion to developing countries of a part of any resources released by disarmament would substantially improve their gross domestic product, industrial employment and capital stock, and provide significant economic gains for all regions, including the most developed.

In the experts' view, the opportunity to apply science and technology more directly and systematically to economic and social problems was one of the most important dividends of disarmament. They saw a need to plan for conversion from military to civilian production by thinking through the problems that would be faced by workers, industries and communities.

The Group of Experts unanimously adopted nine specific recommendations. It called on Governments to: assess the nature and magnitude of the economic and social costs attributable to their military preparations; identify and publicize the benefits to be derived from reallocating military resources, in a balanced and verifiable manner, to address national and global economic and social problems; compile and disseminate systematically data on the military use of human and material resources and military transfers, so as to avoid having excessive secrecy and the arms race reinforce each other; facilitate the conversion to civilian purposes of resources freed by disarmament; and consider making available to the General Assembly the results of their experiences and preparations for solving conversion problems.

The Group also suggested: incorporation of the disarmament-development perspective into the activities of the United Nations system, with the help of co-ordination initiatives by the Secretary-General; consideration of the establishment of an international disarmament fund for development; and increased emphasis by United Nations organs and agencies, in their disarmament-related public information activities, on the social and economic consequences of the arms race and the corresponding benefits of disarmament.

Introducing to the First Committee the report of the Group of Experts, its Chairman, Inga Thorsson, Under-Secretary of State in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Sweden, said the study documented the fact that at least 50 million people were directly or indirectly engaged in military activities world-wide, including some 25 million in armed forces, 10 million in paramilitary forces, an estimated 500,000 scientists and engineers in research and development for military purposes, and at least 5 million workers directly engaged in the production of weapons and other specialized military equipment. She added that, according to conservative estimates, global industrial production for military purposes in 1980 amounted to more than $127 billion, 95 per cent of which was in industrialized countries; that some 20 per cent of the world's scientists and engineers were engaged in military work, at a cost of some $35 billion in 1980; and that virtually all such research and development took place in the industrialized countries, 85 per cent in the United States and the USSR. World-wide military expenditures by 1981 would exceed $520 billion, representing 6 per cent of world output, roughly equal to the value of all investment capital in the developing countries.

Mrs. Thorsson cited the Group's estimate that the international arms trade comprised more than $35 billion annually, 75 per cent of which represented imports by developing countries. Five Middle East countries had accounted for over one third of all major weapons imported by developing countries in the period 1977-1980. On the supplier side, the United States, the USSR, France and the United Kingdom had accounted for 80 per cent of the cumulative value of arms exports in 1974-1978.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution on the study on the relationship between disarmament and development,<sup>(6)</sup> the General Assembly commended the report, its conclusions and recommendations to the attention of all Member States and invited them to submit their views. The Assembly also decided to transmit the report for action at its 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27) as well as to the Committee on Disarmament, and recommended that it be taken into account in future disarmament negotiations. Governments were asked to distribute the report widely, having it translated into their national languages where appropriate, and specialized agencies and national and non-governmental organizations were invited to use their facilities to make the report widely known.

The Assembly adopted the resolution on 9 December without vote. The First Committee approved the text in like manner on 24 November.

Sponsored by 31 States, the resolution was introduced by Sweden, which pledged to cooperate in efforts to establish a public and governmental awareness of the relationship between disarmament and development so that action could be taken at the proper moment.

Brazil asserted that the study was the subject of innumerable reservations by some of the major Powers, which did not agree with the report's treatment of the pressing issues of disarmament. Belgium, France and the Federal Republic of Germany indicated that they had reservations on some methodological shortcomings and on some of the substance of the study, though France hoped the study would help promote the French proposal for a disarmament fund for development. The United Kingdom regretted that the study had not been produced on a consensus basis, that the Group had voted on amendments to the text and that the report failed to give a clear picture of the Warsaw Pact countries due to insufficient data. Japan believed a number of the report's suggestions should be considered in depth and said it would be pleased if more resources could be released through disarmament resulting from the collective will of all States.

Poland-speaking also for Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR-stated that the report drew correct conclusions but it underestimated the positive significance of agreements on strategic arms limitation, should have tied any international disarmament fund for development to military budget reductions and contained the unfounded contention that lack of information about the military efforts of States was a main factor in the arms race. The USSR regretted that its expert's viewpoint had not been duly reflected in the report because the members of the Group had been given little time to study the final draft and propose amendments.

In the First Committee debate, many developing countries noted with special satisfaction that the study had projected the disarmament-development relationship as being of mutual benefit to both developed and developing countries. Algeria described the study as a timely reminder of the tragedy of a world working on its own destruction through unacceptable waste of resources while blind to any serious solution for its socio-economic problems. Bangladesh noted with satisfaction that the Second Disarmament Decade had been proclaimed almost simultaneously with the declaration of the 1980s as the Third United Nations Development Decade. Ghana viewed the study as confirming that disarmament and the reallocation of released resources to socio-economic development was no longer just a moral issue but an inescapable international obligation.

The Congo remarked that $20 billion of the $550 billion spent annually for military purposes would be enough to resolve most of the world's economic and social problems. Making a similar point, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya observed that 5 per cent of the world's annual military expenditure would have been sufficient to attain the official development assistance targets set forth in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (1980-1990).<sup>(5)</sup>

Angola noted that even developing countries which could least afford it were building arsenals beyond their legitimate defence requirements and at the expense of their people's need for food, education and employment. Nigeria remarked that the pattern of conventional arms transfer to the third world and the consequent lopsided distribution of scarce resources to armaments constituted a disservice to the order of national priorities and a flight from realities. Rwanda observed that arms producers and merchants had found a fertile field in exporting to third world countries weapons far in excess of their needs.

In Canada's view, the study had shown that military spending wasted resources, did not generate capital assets and promoted inflation. Ecuador, too, spoke of the economic effects of arms expenditure at the rate of more than $1 million a minute, including inflation, international trade disturbances and distortion of economic principles. Kenya remarked that the arms race did not provide more jobs; in fact, there was ample evidence that it prevented more jobs from being provided. Noting that the military spending of developing countries had nearly doubled during the past decade, Ireland said it was tragic that scarce resources were squandered on increasingly sophisticated weapons when a fraction of the cost could achieve so much if diverted to alleviating hunger and disease. The world could arm itself to death, said Trinidad and Tobago, or it could use resources in more productive and beneficial directions; it could not do both.

The United States said that during the entire quarter of a century from 1954 to 1979, the USSR had disbursed only $8 billion in economic assistance to developing countries, while the United States had extended approximately $100 billion; further, the USSR recognized that much of its political influence in the developing countries derived from its role as an arms peddler.

CONSIDERATION BY OTHER UN BODIES. At its 1981 session (New York, 23 March-1 April), the Committee for Development Planning declared<sup>(2)</sup> that the rising levels of armaments expenditures not only threatened the security of mankind but also represented a serious economic burden, by increasing inflationary pressures and the burden of public expenditure at a time when less inflationary forms of public expenditure—which generated more employment and contributed directly to community and family welfare—were being sharply cut back. The Committee considered it the duty of all nations to seek ways of reducing the tensions and distrust which occasioned that disastrous course.

The Group of Governmental Experts to Study the Institutional Arrangements relating to the Process of Disarmament (p. 105) recommended in July that the Secretary-General submit, at the Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27), proposals on possible institutional implications for the United Nations in regard to the relationship between disarmament and development.

The Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), after hearing a statement by the UNCTAD observer at the meetings of the Group of Experts on disarmament and development, decided on 9 October<sup>(3)</sup> to consider at its twenty-fifth (1982) session the future UNCTAD activity in this area in the light of the recommendations of the 1982 special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament.

Study on the relationship between disarmament and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 94 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it decided to undertake a study on the relationship between disarmament and development and requested the Secretary-General to carry out the study with the assistance of a group of qualified governmental experts,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General containing the study,

1. Welcomes with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General and the study contained therein;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General and to the Group of Governmental Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, as well as to the Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations that have rendered assistance in the preparation of the report;

3. Commends the report, its conclusions and its recommendations to the attention of all Member States;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the reproduction of the report as a United Nations publication and to give it the widest possible distribution;

5. Invites all Member States to inform the Secretary-General, not later than 15 April 1982, of their views regarding the report and, in particular, its recommendations;

6. Decides to transmit the report to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament for its substantive consideration and appropriate action;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the report to the Committee on Disarmament and recommends that it be taken into account in future disarmament negotiations;

8. Notes with appreciation that arrangements have been made for the preparation of a short version of the report aimed at a mass audience;

9. Recommends to all Governments the widest possible distribution of the report, including, where appropriate, its translation into their national languages, so as to acquaint public opinion in their countries with its content, and invites specialized agencies and national and non-governmental organizations to use their facilities to make the report widely known.

Disarmament and international security

STUDY BY THE GROUP OF EXPERTS. The Group of Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and International Security, consisting of 10 persons appointed by the Secretary-General pursuant to a 1978 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(5)</sup> submitted the results of its three-year study on 6 November 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> The Group held nine sessions between June 1979 and November 1981, the last four of which were in 1981: at Geneva, 30 March to 10 April and 29 June to 17 July, and New York, 17 to 28 August and 2 to 6 November. The Chairman was Carlos P. Romulo, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Philippines.

The study consisted of seven chapters, on the following aspects: the detrimental consequences of the arms race; analysis of the interrelationship of disarmament and international security; the process of disarmament and international security; detente and international co-operation as means of strengthening international security and promoting disarmament; the relationship between specific disarmament measures and international security; disarmament, international security and the role of the United Nations system in the maintenance of peace and the implementation of the system of international legal order and security; and conclusions.

The study stressed the importance of consolidating and expanding detente, strengthening international co-operation in all aspects, making decisive progress towards the elimination of underdevelopment and oppression, creating more equitable international relations, and achieving just and peaceful settlements of outstanding conflicts.

Stating that ways had to be found for States to protect their security without engaging in an arms race, the Group suggested two interrelated approaches, to be pursued in parallel, for achieving security without reliance on armaments: agreements among States for mutual regulation, limitation and reduction of armaments and armed forces; and collective arrangements, such as a system based on United Nations organs and bodies, primarily the Security Council with its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and its mandate for taking enforcement action if necessary.

The study also pointed out that, in order to create an effective system of collective security, the United Nations system should be used more consistently than in the past and that it was important to increase the confidence of States in the readiness of the Security Council for effective and prompt action.

One member of the Group, Zenon Rossides, from Cyprus, submitted what he termed a complementary set of conclusions and recommendations on the study.<sup>(2)</sup>

Also on the question of disarmament and international security, the Secretary-General submitted a report,<sup>(3)</sup> in compliance with a 1980 Assembly recommendation<sup>(6)</sup> that United Nations organs responsible for peace and security should consider requirements for halting the arms race and developing modalities for the effective application of the system of international security provided for in the Charter of the United Nations. In the report, he stated that he had seized every opportunity to reiterate the need for halting the arms race and developing modalities for applying such a security system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 9 December 1981,<sup>(7)</sup> the General Assembly called on States to act promptly in implementing its 1980 resolution on disarmament and international security,<sup>(6)</sup> which would render effective the decisions of the Security Council and thereby be conducive to meaningful disarmament negotiations. The Assembly deemed it necessary that the Council take measures towards implementing Chapter VII of the Charter (on threats to the peace, breaches of the peace and acts of aggression), which would reinforce the foundations of peace, security and order through the United Nations and avert the growing threat of nuclear conflagration. The Assembly took this action by a recorded vote of 132 to none, with 11 abstentions, following approval by the First Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 114 to none, with 9 abstentions.

By another resolution adopted on the same date,<sup>(8)</sup> the Assembly noted with satisfaction the study prepared by the Secretary-General with the assistance of the Group of Experts, commended it to all Member States and invited them to inform him of their views. The study and the views of States would be transmitted to the Assembly at its 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27). This resolution was adopted without vote following its approval by the First Committee in similar fashion on 24 November.

The first of these resolutions was sponsored in the First Committee by 12 States after an original draft submitted by Cyprus had been revised, mainly in its preamble, to gain wider acceptance. Before the vote, the draft was further revised orally by Cyprus on behalf of the sponsors, so that paragraph 2 referred to the implementation of Chapter VII of the Charter as a whole rather than of Article 43 only, as had been the case in the original version. (Article 43 concerns agreements for making available to the Security Council armed forces and facilities for the maintenance of peace and security.)

Introducing this resolution, Cyprus stated that the sponsors were convinced that progress on arms reduction required first a halt to the arms race, which could not be done while the doctrine of deterrence and strategic balance were regarded as the sole means of security. The alternative was to develop the measures and modalities for collective security mandated by the Charter. The resolution was aimed at stimulating co-operation among Security Council members, particularly the permanent members, in implementing the Charter system of international security.

The second resolution, on the study, was sponsored by Cyprus, Ecuador and the Philippines. Introducing the text, the Philippines referred to a parallelism between disarmament and international security, observing that most members of the Group of Experts had endorsed the view that there could not be substantial progress in one area without progress in the other. It had been recognized that, as a first step towards the parallel achievement of substantial measures of international security and of disarmament, progress would be required in the development of detente and confidence-building measures.

Canada and Japan, while voting in favour of the first resolution, objected to the fifth preambular paragraph, which stated that the arms race could not be stopped as long as the concepts of balance of weapons or of deterrence continued to be regarded as the sole means of security; Canada remarked that arms reduction agreements could be negotiated while maintaining prudent deterrent capability. Italy abstained because of this paragraph.

In the view of Cyprus, the study's conclusions were incomplete and inadequate, and did not reflect the two essential elements for peace and security and their interrelationship, identified in the Final Document of the 1978 special session on disarmament:<sup>(4)</sup> genuine and lasting peace could be created only through effective implementation of the security system provided for in the Charter and the speedy and substantial reduction of armaments and armed forces.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community (EC) members, asserted that some points in the report might not be entirely satisfactory to those States; their position would be communicated to the Secretary-General in accordance with the terms of the resolution. The United States said it had not had time to analyse the study.

Commenting on issues of disarmament and security, the Philippines warned against four false assumptions: that increased armament meant increased security, that delaying negotiations in order to build more military strength would result in a better outcome, that disarmament would in itself provide security, and that States would disarm without a workable and proven system for maintaining peace and security. Lebanon hoped the Assembly would take up at its forthcoming special session the proposal Lebanon had submitted at the 1978 special session - that small States whose stability was affected by external rivalries should have their neutrality internationally guaranteed and should be protected by a permanent United Nations peace-keeping force.

Disarmament and international security

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 34/83 A of 11 December 1979 and 35/156 J of 12 December 1980.

Alarmed by the present grave state of international affairs characterized by marked deterioration in the relationship between the major military Powers, which seriously jeopardizes the process of detente and results in the flaring up of new, and in the continuation of old, conflicts in various parts of the world,

Deeply concerned over the long stagnation in the disarmament process, the intensification of the arms race, both quantitative and qualitative, and the increased threat of a nuclear conflagration,

Convinced that to achieve progress on the reduction of arms and armaments, the arms race must first be stopped,

Convinced further that the arms race cannot be stopped as long as the concepts of balance of weapons or of deterrence continue to be regarded as the sole means for the security of nations,

Aware that the best hope for arresting the pernicious spiral of the arms race is by the provision of alternative means of security for nations rather than through reliance on the balance of armaments or of deterrence,

Aware further that the rational alternative means for such security is to move towards a halt in the arms race by developing in a parallel way the measures and modalities for collective security as mandatorily required by the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling paragraph 13 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that genuine and lasting peace can only be created through the effective implementation of the security system provided for in the Charter and the speedy and substantial reduction of arms and armed forces by international agreement and mutual example,

Considering that it is of essential importance to create a climate of confidence in the United Nations which will open the way to co-operation among Member States, in fulfilling the common and basic obligations under the Charter,

Noting with satisfaction the references to statements made by representatives of a number of Member States, including the two major Powers, in the First Committee during the current session of the Assembly, indicating positive attitudes towards effective use of the United Nations in improving the international situation and preventing war,

Reaffirming its resolution 35/156 J, adopted by consensus, in which, inter alia, it recommended that the main organs of the United Nations responsible for the maintenance of international peace and security should give early consideration to the requirements for halting the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, and developing the modalities for the effective application of the system of international security provided for in the Charter,

Reiterating its request to the permanent members of the Security Council to facilitate the work of the Council towards carrying out this essential responsibility under the Charter,

1. Calls upon all States to take prompt action for the implementation of General Assembly resolution 35/156 J, which would render effective the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the charter of the United Nations and thereby be conducive to meaningful disarmament negotiations;

2. Deems it necessary, as a first step in this direction, that the Security Council take the required measures towards the implementation of Chapter VII of the Charter, which would reinforce the foundations of peace, security and order through the United Nations and avert the growing threat of nuclear conflagration.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In Favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Study on the relationship between disarmament and international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/87 C of 12 December 1977, in which it requested the Secretary-General to initiate a study on the relationship between disarmament and international security,

Recalling also paragraph 97 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of consultant experts appointed by him, to continue the study on the relationship between disarmament and international security,

Recalling further its resolutions 34/83 A of 11 December 1979, by which it took note of the progress report of the Secretary-General, as well as resolution 35/156 E of 12 December 1980, in which it requested the Secretary-General to submit the final report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General transmitting the study prepared by the Group of Experts between Disarmament and International Security,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the study on the relationship between disarmament and international security;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the Group of Experts which assisted him in the preparation of the study;

Confidence-building measures

STUDY BY THE GROUP OF EXPERTS. The Group of Governmental Experts on Confidence-building Measures, consisting of 14 experts appointed by the Secretary-General in response to a 1979 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> submitted its unanimously adopted study to the Secretary-General on 14 August 1981.<sup>(2)</sup> Of the four sessions the Group held in 1980 and 1981, two were in 1981, in New York from 26 May to 5 June and at Geneva from 3 to 14 August. Gerhard Pfeiffer of the Federal Republic of Germany chaired the Group.

Among the issues considered in the study were the characteristics of and opportunities for confidence-building measures, a historical survey of their evolution, principles to be considered in the establishment and implementation of such measures, various approaches to negotiating and eventually implementing them, and the role of the United Nations in the process.

A foreword by the Secretary-General defined the aims of confidence-building measures as strengthening peace and security and fostering a climate of trust and international co-operation in order to facilitate progress in disarmament. An illustrative list in the report divided such measures into two categories: military and security-related measures (including information exchange and publication, notification of military activities, reduction of military budgets, personnel exchanges and visits, consultation, establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace, verification, improved communication and dispute settlement) and broader political, economic and social measures (including respect for State sovereignty and territory, termination of aggressive and colonialist policies, respect for human rights and for sovereignty over natural resources, international economic co-operation and joint economic development projects).

The Group stated that measures for building confidence and facilitating disarmament negotiations were urgently needed in the light of a serious deterioration in international relations. The study emphasized measures related to military concerns, as these made up the bulk of proposals made by Governments. Among causes of mistrust and fear, it noted, were a lack of reliable information on the military activities of States and matters related to mutual security.

However, the Group recognized that international confidence could not be achieved through the building of military confidence alone and that political, economic and social efforts were also needed. Moreover, confidence-building measures could not replace disarmament and hence should not be used as a pretext for avoiding real progress in arms control or even legitimizing a continuing arms build-up. Although all experts agreed in principle on the need for an exchange of information on military activities and mutual security matters, there were differences of view concerning the degree of openness necessary for building confidence.

The experts concluded that the United Nations could help promote governmental and public awareness of the value of confidence-building measures for the strengthening of peace and security. It might be useful if the Secretary-General kept a voluntary register of the types of such measures applied around the world. The Group hoped that the United Nations might build on the study, focusing more on non-military approaches.

By a letter of 23 November,<sup>(1)</sup> Austria submitted a working paper on measures to improve the reliability and objectivity of military information. Stating that the inadequacy of reliable information often led Governments to initiate arms programmes on the basis of "worst-case" estimates, which further escalated the arms race, Austria suggested that confidence-building through dissemination of reliable information could be promoted through such steps as a refined standardized reporting instrument for military expenditures and the establishment of an international satellite monitoring agency.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 9 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote a resolution on confidence-building measures<sup>(4)</sup> by which it took note of the Secretary-General's study and recommended that further efforts be made, within and outside the United Nations, to widen the scope of such measures to include non-military approaches. The Assembly believed that the promotion of confidence-building measures, where appropriate conditions existed, would significantly contribute to facilitating disarmament, and invited States to consider the possible introduction of confidence-building measures in their regions.

The First Committee approved the proposal on 25 November, also without vote. The text was sponsored by 32 States and was revised twice before its adoption.

Introducing the resolution, the Federal Republic of Germany said it presented the concept of confidence-building measures as a useful approach in reducing and eventually eliminating potential causes for mistrust and misunderstanding, thereby helping to facilitate disarmament.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, said that one essential element of confidence-building measures was transparency in military matters, which could effectively reduce or eliminate miscalculations or misapprehensions that might lead to the creation or exacerbation of tensions. Yugoslavia supported the basic thrust of the text while pointing out that confidence-building measures could not replace real disarmament measures. India, which shared a similar view, also stated that, because it had not had the opportunity to study the report carefully, it would have preferred a procedural resolution taking note of the study and referring it to States for further consideration. Japan, while supporting the idea contained in the resolution, remarked that, in the light of the situation in the region to which it belonged, it did not consider conditions to be ripe for the introduction of specific confidence-building measures there.

Cuba indicated that, had the text been put to a vote, it would have abstained because the list of sponsors included the United States, which it regarded as the originator of the deteriorating international situation. Albania would not have participated if there had been a vote, as it maintained that the root causes of the arms race and wars lay not in misunderstandings but in the nature of imperialism and social-imperialism.

In the First Committee debate, Canada expressed disappointment that the study had stopped short of recommending an open door to military activity, planning and doctrine, which Canada viewed as the only way to reduce fear and suspicion about the military intentions of potential adversaries. France and the United Kingdom stressed the importance of verification provisions as necessary conditions of mutual confidence in disarmament agreements, while Nigeria said that the impregnable margin of information disadvantage of a certain State was not conducive to the generation of mutual confidence necessary for disarmament.

The Netherlands subscribed to the Group's recommendation that the United Nations and States should encourage further exploration of ways in which confidence-building measures could strengthen peace and security. Peru thought such measures should be seen as encompassing all rules of inter-State behaviour.

Ecuador hoped the guidelines emerging from the study would serve as a basis for the negotiation of concrete regional, interregional and international measures. The Federal Republic of Germany suggested that regional organizations concern themselves with confidence-building measures, with a view to setting up negotiating mechanisms or other arrangements that could stimulate practical steps.

Confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/91 B of 16 December 1978, in which it invited Member States to submit their views and experiences regarding confidence-building measures,

Noting with satisfaction that numerous Member States responded to that invitation and provided the Secretary-General with substantive information,

Recalling also its resolution 34/87 B of 11 December 1979, in which it requested the Secretary-General to carry out a comprehensive study on confidence-building measures with the assistance of a group of qualified governmental experts appointed by him on an equitable geographical basis,

Expressing its concern about the deterioration of the international situation and the further escalation of the arms race, which both reflects and aggravates the unsatisfactory international political climate, tension and mistrust,

Desirous of strengthening international security and, at the same time, creating and improving conditions conducive to further measures of disarmament,

Mindful of the fact that, while confidence-building measures cannot serve as a substitute for disarmament measures, they play a very significant role in achieving disarmament,

Convinced of the usefulness of confidence-building measures freely arrived at by the States concerned and agreed upon, taking into account the particular conditions and requirements of the regions concerned,

Expressing its conviction of the need for the exchange of pertinent and timely information on military activities and other matters pertaining to mutual security, which would contribute to an improved climate of trust and confidence among States, and the conviction that agreement can be reached on measures to this end,

Noting with satisfaction the encouraging results of some confidence-building measures agreed upon and implemented in some regions,

1. Takes note of the comprehensive study on confidence-building measures, prepared by the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the Group of Governmental Experts on Confidence-building Measures which assisted in the preparation of the study;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the reproduction of the study as a United Nations publication and to give it the widest possible distribution;

4. Recognizes that confidence reflects a set of interrelated factors of a military as well as of a non-military character and that a plurality of approaches is needed to overcome fear, apprehension and mistrust between States and to replace them by confidence;

5. Recommends that, building on the experience gained from the application and development of confidence-building measures, further efforts should be made, both within and outside the United Nations, to widen their scope, so that account is also taken of non-military approaches;

6. Regards the concept of confidence-building measures as a useful approach in reducing and eventually eliminating potential causes for mistrust, misunderstanding, misinterpretation and miscalculation;

7. Believes that the promotion of confidence-building measures where appropriate conditions exist will significantly contribute to facilitating the process of disarmament;

8. Invites all States to consider the possible introduction of confidence-building measures in their respective regions and, where possible, to negotiate on them in keeping with conditions and requirements prevailing in each particular region;

9. Decides to submit the study to its second special session devoted to disarmament, to be held from 7 June to 9 July 1982, for further consideration.

Proposed international agency for monitoring disarmament agreements

The Group of Governmental Experts on the Question of the Establishment of an International Satellite Monitoring Agency submitted a report to the Secretary-General on 10 June 1981<sup>(1)</sup> containing the results of a study requested by the General Assembly in 1979.<sup>(2)</sup> The report was transmitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Second Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, prior to its submission to the Assembly at the 1982 special session (p. 27). The unanimous report was prepared during four sessions of the Group between February 1980 and February 1981, and was adopted at the final session, held at Geneva from 16 to 20 February 1981. Hubert G. Bortzmeyer of France was Chairman of the 13-member Group.

The report dealt with the technical, legal and financial implications of establishing an international agency that would use satellites to monitor compliance with international disarmament agreements—an idea originally placed before the General Assembly by France in 1978.

The Group concluded that observations from satellites to gather information related to verification of compliance with treaties and for crisis monitoring was technically feasible. Satellites and other technical facilities might be acquired in three stages, comprising: first, an image processing and interpretation centre; second, stations to receive data from national satellites; and finally, a number of satellites belonging to the agency. Regarding legal aspects, the Group stated that there was no provision in international law that would prohibit an intergovernmental organization from monitoring by satellite.

As to the financial implications, the Group said a number of technical options were possible, with a broad range of cost estimates. An image processing and interpretation centre might cost $8 million to acquire and $25-30 million a year to operate. A 10-station ground-receiving network might require an initial investment of $60-80 million and entail annual operating expenses of $20 million. Launching three satellites for area monitoring might cost $900-1,200 million, with $50-200 million needed each year to manage the system and replace the satellites every two or three years. Launching and operation of a single low-altitude manoeuvrable satellite for "close-look" might cost approximately $1,500 million, spread over 10 years. Even the most expensive phase, the experts noted, would cost, well under 1 per cent of the total annual expenditure on armaments.

Study of institutional arrangements

STUDY BY THE GROUP OF EXPERTS. The 20-member Group of Governmental Experts to Study the Institutional Arrangements relating to the Process of Disarmament, appointed by the Secretary-General in accordance with a 1979 General Assembly request,<sup>(2)</sup> held four sessions in 1980 and 1981, the last two of which were in New York, 19 to 29 January and 22 June to 2 July 1981. The study was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 2 July by the Group's Chairman, Carlos Ortiz de Rozas of Argentina.

In the study,<sup>(1)</sup> the experts stated that, however adequately the United Nations serviced disarmament efforts, it was ultimately the will of States to make the best use of them and their readiness to negotiate which would determine the extent of progress. Some of the important measures that had followed the Assembly's 1978 special session on disarmament,<sup>(4)</sup> such as the re-establishment of the Disarmament Commission and the enlargement of the Committee on Disarmament, had offered wider opportunities for deliberations and negotiations. The Group did not wish to express an opinion on those bodies.

The Group considered that the United Nations Centre for Disarmament, despite its limited resources, had satisfactorily coped with the additional responsibilities arising from the increasing length of sessions of the deliberative and negotiating organs. It found, however, that a clearer co-ordination of functions was desirable between the Centre and the Department of Public Information as regards dissemination of information on disarmament.

In view of the central role of the United Nations and its primary responsibility in disarmament, the Group thought the Secretary-General's co-ordinating responsibility for disarmament activities in the United Nations system should be clearly reaffirmed. The most appropriate official for that role was the Assistant Secretary-General in charge of the Centre for Disarmament, who should strive to ensure better use of limited human and material resources, avoid duplication, and thus improve the effectiveness of efforts in such a multidisciplinary sphere.

The Group recommended that the Secretary-General consider possibilities for strengthening the Centre with an appropriate number of additional staff, within existing United Nations resources, to meet anticipated growing needs. Other recommendations concerned the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (p. 107), possible institutional arrangements in regard to the relationship between disarmament and development (p. 99), and disarmament training and fellowship programmes (p. 108).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 9 December, by a resolution on institutional arrangements relating to disarmament,<sup>(3)</sup> adopted without vote, the General Assembly took note of the study on this subject and invited Member States to transmit their comments. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to transmit the study to the Committee on Disarmament and decided to transmit the report and States' comments to the Assembly at its 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27) for consideration and action. The First Committee approved the resolution, sponsored by 24 States, on 20 November, also without vote.

Introducing the resolution, Argentina said the basically procedural text was aimed at ensuring that Governments gave the study the consideration it deserved.

During the Committee debate, Mexico reiterated a position first expressed in 1980 that the Centre for Disarmament should be changed to a Department headed by an Under-Secretary-General, and that after a few years the United Nations should consider whether to establish a specialized agency for disarmament. Egypt and Nigeria also favoured the idea of a disarmament department, while France favoured a review of the Centre's status within the Secretariat. Austria, Greece and Sweden saw merit in the proposed creation of a United Nations disarmament agency, to reflect what Greece referred to as more ambitious goals and priorities, and the Netherlands recalled its 1978 proposal on an international disarmament organization.<sup>(5)</sup> On the other hand, India said the Centre was adequately equipped and fully competent to carry out both a promotional role with respect to disarmament and preparatory work in support of disarmament activities; it saw no need for a separate United Nations disarmament organization.

Italy thought consideration should be given to entrusting the United Nations with specific new functions in such areas as verification of compliance with disarmament agreements. Austria, Canada, France, Nepal and New Zealand also hoped the United Nations would have an increasing role in verification.

Israel considered that the United Nations should create regional bodies to negotiate on reducing the scale and speed of a regional arms race (p. 89); it questioned whether organizational proliferation had influenced the substance of disarmament negotiations.

Institutional arrangements relating to the process of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/87 E of 11 December 1979, in which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, to carry out a comprehensive study assessing current institutional requirements and future estimated needs in the United Nations management of disarmament affairs and outlining possible functions, structure and institutional framework that could meet those requirements and needs, including legal and financial implications, and formulating recommendations for possible later decisions on the matter.

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General transmitting the study prepared by the Group of Governmental Experts to Study the Institutional Arrangements relating to the Process of Disarmament,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the study of the institutional arrangements relating to the process of disarmament;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the Group of Experts which assisted him for the efficient manner in which the report was prepared;

3. Recommends that all Member States should study the report;

4. Invites all Member States to transmit to the Secretary-General by 31 March 1982 their comments on the study and its conclusions and recommendations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the study to the Committee on Disarmament;

6. Decides to transmit the report and the comments of Member States to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament for substantive consideration and the adoption of appropriate decisions;

7. Further decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session an item entitled "Institutional arrangements relating to the process of disarmament".

Research and studies

Seven United Nations studies on various aspects of disarmament were completed in 1981. Six of them were presented to the General Assembly and dealt with the following topics: Israeli nuclear armament (p. 51), the relationship between disarmament and development (p. 96), the relationship between disarmament and international security (p. 99), confidence-building measures (p. 102), institutional arrangements relating to the process of disarmament (p. 105) and a World Disarmament Campaign (p. 109). The seventh study, dealing with the implications of establishing an international satellite monitoring agency (p. 104), was submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Second Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament.

One study in progress during the year dealt with the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures. In addition, a study on conventional disarmament was initiated by the Assembly in 1981 (p. 86).

ACTIVITIES OF THE ADVISORY BOARD. In 1981 the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies held its sixth and seventh sessions at United Nations Headquarters, from 4 to 15 May and from 28 September to 9 October. According to a report on its activities which the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Board considered proposals for new studies, its own mandate and functions, the work of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR), and a proposal for a study of a new philosophy on disarmament.

Regarding possible new studies, the Board said it continued to attach importance to three topics which it had identified as suitable for study in the near future: zones of peace and co-operation, the verification problem, and cessation of the production of all types of nuclear weapons and means of delivery and of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes.

The Board devoted a substantial part of its 1981 sessions to consideration of its mandate and functions, in view of the fact that institutional arrangements relating to disarmament (p. 105) were to be discussed at the General Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27) and since the terms of appointment of the Board members expired at the end of 1981.

Board members generally agreed that its original mandate as laid down by the Assembly in 1978,<sup>(2)</sup> which was to advise the Secretary-General on various aspects of United Nations disarmament studies, left sufficient flexibility to cover additional activities. The Board believed that, since it was in the unique position of discussing and formulating conceptual aspects in the disarmament field, it could be requested by the Secretary-General and the Assembly to give advisory opinions.

It was generally felt that the Board's name did not adequately reflect its range of activities, which included: initiation and recommendation of studies; elaboration of a comprehensive programme of studies; advising the Secretary-General on planning and executing studies; rendering advice, on request, to delegations intending to submit study proposals; co-ordination of study activities; recommendation of ways to provide greater efficiency and cost savings in conducting studies; promotion of the work of UNIDIR; and assisting the Secretary-General regarding the World Disarmament Campaign.

The Board held an exchange of views on a proposal for the elaboration of a new philosophy on disarmament—a topic on which it had submitted its advice in 1979<sup>(5)</sup> as requested by the Assembly in 1978.<sup>(3)</sup> The Board recognized the subject as vast, complicated and at times nebulous, and concluded that it could not, within the time at its disposal, complete a fruitful discussion on the subject. It therefore recommended to the Secretary-General that continued consideration be given to the question.

The Group of Governmental Experts to Study the Institutional Arrangements relating to the Process of Disarmament, in a report for the General Assembly adopted in July 1981 (p. 105), called for development of the co-ordinating role of the Advisory Board. It also suggested five factors to be borne in mind in considering proposals for new studies: the extent to which the study would help the conclusion of disarmament agreements, the opinion of the Board, the studies already available in that area, the assistance which United Nations bodies could give and the estimated cost.

ACTIVITIES OF THE UN INSTITUTE FOR DISARMAMENT RESEARCH. The initial work programme of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, established in 1980,<sup>(6)</sup> was approved in 1981 by the Institute's Advisory Council, which held two sessions during the year. The programme consisted of: the compilation of a repertory of disarmament research (completed in 1981); a general conceptual analysis of the disarmament field; and projects entitled "Security of States and the lowering of the levels of armaments", "Prevention of accidental nuclear war", "Science and technology for disarmament", "Disarmament data base", "Disarmament and development: continued research on various aspects of the problem in the light of the report of the Group of Experts on Disarmament and Development" and "Negotiating disarmament".

The Institute organized at Geneva, from 16 to 18 November, a conference of directors of disarmament research institutes, with the objective of strengthening international co-operation on disarmament research. The aims were to make better use of resources, avoid unnecessary parallelism and duplication, and strengthen the impact of research on government policies, deliberations and negotiations. More than 50 officials of national and international institutes participated.

The Group of Experts on institutional arrangements for disarmament recommended that the future status of UNIDIR should be decided at the 1982 special session on disarmament.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 9 December 1981, by a resolution on the programme of research and studies on disarmament,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly took note with appreciation of the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Advisory Board and requested him to submit the report to the Assembly at its 1982 special session on disarmament for further consideration. This resolution was adopted without vote following its approval by the First Committee in similar fashion on 23 November.

In introducing the resolution, also sponsored by Argentina, Canada, the Philippines and Poland, Pakistan noted that the text was purely procedural and that the Assembly, at its special session, was already scheduled to review institutional arrangements relating to disarmament.

Programme of research and studies on disarmament

The General Assembly,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies in 1981, Requests the Secretary-General to submit that report to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament for its further consideration.

Disarmament fellowships

The Secretary-General, reporting to the General Assembly on the third year of operation of the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament,<sup>(1)</sup> stated that 20 fellows, selected from among 39 nominations received from Member States, participated in the 1981 programme from 29 June to 30 November.

The programme included lectures, seminars, observation of the proceedings of disarmament bodies, submission of research papers, a four-day course at the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna (25-28 August), and study visits to the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary and Sweden. The major portion of the programme took place at Geneva and in New York.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution on the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly decided to continue the programme and requested the Secretary-General to make adequate arrangements for 1982 in accordance with guidelines approved by the Assembly in 1978.<sup>(3)</sup> It also requested him to submit to the Assembly at its 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27) an assessment of the programme since its inception in 1979.<sup>(4)</sup>

The resolution was adopted on 9 December without vote. The First Committee approved it on 20 November in similar fashion. Nigeria introduced the text on behalf of 23 sponsors and, when the resolution was adopted, expressed its understanding, as did Turkey, that 20 fellowships would be awarded in 1982, as in 1981.

United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament
The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision, taken at the tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament,

Recalling also its resolution 35/152 A of 12 December 1980, in which it requested the Secretary-General to make adequate arrangements relating to the programme for 1981 in accordance with the guidelines approved by the General Assembly at its thirty-third session,

Expressing its satisfaction at the fact that Governments, particularly those of developing countries, have continued to manifest serious interest in the programme,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament for 1981,

1. Decides to continue the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to make adequate arrangements relating to the programme for 1982 in accordance with the guidelines approved by the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament a report containing an assessment of the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament since its inception in 1979;

4. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has been conducted;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary and Sweden for inviting the fellows to their capitals to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme, as well as providing additional information sources and practical knowledge for the fellows.

Status of multilateral disarmament agreements

The General Assembly, by a resolution adopted on 9 December 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> requested Member States depositaries of multilateral disarmament agreements to furnish the Secretary-General with information regarding their status by the beginning of each of its regular sessions. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to prepare for each of its regular sessions a composite table of signatories of and parties to such agreements with a view to enabling the Assembly to take up the question of their status if it deemed it appropriate.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 115 to none, with 23 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 23 November by a recorded vote of 91 to none, with 22 abstentions.

The resolution was sponsored by Bulgaria, which recalled that the Assembly, in the Final Document of its 1978 special session on disarmament,<sup>(3)</sup> had stated that universality of disarmament agreements helped create confidence among States. Bulgaria hoped the information to be supplied each year would be a reminder that the participation of States in such agreements was important for the attainment of their objectives and might help in achieving their universality.

In explanation of vote, China stated that since it had different views regarding certain disarmament agreements, it had not participated in them and, accordingly, it could neither agree with the resolution nor participate in the vote. Brazil abstained, asserting that the text did not take into full account the sovereign right of

States to decide whether to adhere to agreements and dealt only with the quantitative aspect of participation while leaving aside the more important aspect of the absence of compliance by the nuclear-weapon States with provisions of agreements to which they were parties. India abstained because it continued to maintain that the Treat on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons<sup>(1)</sup> was discriminatory and therefore unacceptable.

Guinea, which voted affirmatively, announced that it would have abstained had a separate vote been taken on paragraph 1, reaffirming the importance of the provisions of the 1978 Final Document concerning the universality of multilateral disarmament agreements; Guinea believed that States parties to agreements should persuade other States to join them. Mexico voted in favour because the text reaffirmed the importance of universality of multilateral agreements, although Mexico did not consider the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques<sup>(2)</sup> to be universally acceptable.

Status of multilateral disarmament agreements

The General Assembly,
Recalling the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Having in mind that a number of multilateral disarmament agreements have been concluded so far,

Considering that the participation in the above-mentioned agreements of as many States as possible is of special importance to the attainment of their objectives,

Taking note with satisfaction of the special supplement to the United Nations Disarmament Yearbook, entitled Status of multilateral arms regulations and disarmament agreements, as well as of the information on this matter included in the yearbooks,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the provisions concerning the question of the universality of multilateral disarmament agreements contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in particular paragraph 40;

2. Requests Member States depositaries of such agreements to furnish the Secretary-General with information regarding their status by the beginning of each regular session of the General Assembly;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare for each regular session of the General Assembly a composite table of signatories of and parties to such agreements with a view to enabling the Assembly to take up the question of their status, if it deems it appropriate.

Study on a World Disarmament Campaign

STUDY BY THE GROUP OF EXPERTS. The Group of Experts on the Organization and Financing of a World Disarmament Campaign under the Auspices of the United Nations, established in pursuance of a 1980 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> submitted a unanimously adopted report to the Secretary-General on 26 August 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> The report was prepared at two sessions held at United Nations Headquarters, from 3 to 6 March and from 22 to 26 June. The six-member Group, appointed by the Secretary-General, included three United Nations Secretariat officials. Its Chairman was Ingrid Lehmann, Political Affairs Officer in the United Nations Centre for Disarmament.

The Group stated in its report that the objectives of a World Disarmament Campaign would be to inform, to educate and to generate public understanding and support. Although the Campaign would be universal, the Group suggested that particular and sustained attention should be paid to certain constituencies, including elected representatives, parliamentarians and public officials, information media, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), educational communities and peace research institutes.

The experts considered the United Nations system to be a major source of initiative, materials, co-ordination and guidance, using to the fullest its network of information centres and other field offices. Further, Disarmament Week, observed each October (p. 112), could provide an annual focus for the Campaign.

The Group suggested that the Campaign be placed under the overall guidance and co-ordination of the Secretary-General, who would report annually to the General Assembly; that a voluntary fund for the Campaign be established to finance the increased activities; and that pledging conferences could be held, starting at the Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 9 December, by a resolution on the World Disarmament Campaign,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly commended the study by the Group of Experts and invited Member States to transmit to the Secretary-General suggestions and comments for implementing its recommendations. The Secretary-General was requested to transmit to the Assembly at its 1982 special session on disarmament both the study and the opinions of Governments, so that decisions might be taken at that time to launch the Campaign, including a pledging conference at the initial stage of the special session.

The resolution, revised by its sponsors, was adopted by a recorded vote of 143 to none, with 2 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 20 November by a recorded vote of 119 to none, with 3 abstentions.

The resolution had nine sponsors: Cuba, Mexico, Nigeria, Panama, Romania, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Sweden and Yugoslavia. It was introduced by Mexico, which stated that the benefits of the Campaign would be felt equally in all parts of the world, irrespective of political, economic and social systems.

Some States which voted affirmatively—Australia, Canada and the United Kingdom, the last speaking for the European Community (EC) members—as well as the United States, which abstained in the vote, found it difficult to support the idea of a pledging conference at the initial stage of the special session. Canada felt that the organization of the Campaign should be considered prior to such a conference, as did Japan, which abstained in the Committee but voted affirmatively in the Assembly. The United Kingdom reserved the right of the EC members to comment later on the recommendations contained in the study, including the idea of a pledging conference.

France and the Federal Republic of Germany, which voted in favour, stated that a World Disarmament Campaign could be of value only if it was based on balanced, objective and relevant information, and if there was a free flow of information world-wide. The United States said it could not accept a financial burden for an impractical public-opinion initiative that would inevitably focus only on free societies, since it would have no effect on public opinion in closed societies. Responding to this point, Mexico noted that information dissemination on disarmament was a concept adopted by consensus in 1978 in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> and that a World Disarmament Campaign would be guided and co-ordinated by the Secretary-General, through United Nations information centres around the world.

The USSR, which voted for the resolution, was gratified at seeing demonstrations in various parts of the world, including Europe, against the threat of nuclear and other types of weapons; it thought detailed consideration would have to be given to the study and to other proposals regarding the Campaign.

In the Committee's general debate, Chile saw a need to disseminate information about the horrors of a war waged with available means of destruction, so that world public opinion would back disarmament measures. Cuba thought the World Disarmament Campaign should assemble convincing proof of the dangers of war, the cost of the arms race and the great harm which could be done by the war-mongering campaign waged by imperialist spokesmen. Understanding the intricacies of the arms race was crucial, Lebanon felt, if public opinion was to influence policy. Romania suggested that the Campaign take into account the special role that could be played by scientists, who were well aware of the destructive force of modern weapons. Sierra Leone's view was that the Campaign should provide objective information on the arms race and disarmament to Governments, NGOs and individuals, for the purpose of building a world-wide disarmament constituency. If world opinion was fully aware of the many aspects of competition in weapons production, said Venezuela, that could be of invaluable assistance in promoting disarmament.

World Disarmament Campaign

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it stressed the importance of mobilizing world public opinion on behalf of disarmament.

Recalling its resolution 35/152 I of 12 December 1980, in which, for the achievement of that purpose, it requested the Secretary-General to carry out a study on the organization and financing of a World Disarmament Campaign under the auspices of the United Nations, Having examined the study transmitted by the Secretary-General as an annex to his report of 17 September 1981.

1. Notes with satisfaction the contents of the study on the World Disarmament Campaign and commends its conclusions:

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the experts who assisted him for the prompt and effective manner in which the study was prepared;

3. Invites all Member States to transmit to the Secretary-General, not later than 15 April 1982, the suggestions and comments which they deem appropriate to formulate for the implementation of the recommendations contained in the study;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament both the study on the World Disarmament Campaign and the opinions thereon received from Governments, in order that the Assembly may take the decisions it considers advisable for the solemn launching of the Campaign, including a pledging conference to take place at the initial stage of the special session.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenade, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Israel, United States.

Proposed collection of signatures in support of disarmament

On 9 December 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly invited Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions concerning a world-wide collection of signatures in support of measures to prevent nuclear war, to curb the arms race and for disarmament. It requested him to report, at its 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27), on a format and methods of carrying out such action under United Nations auspices.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 78 to 3, with 56 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 24 November by a recorded vote of 68 to 3, with 46 abstentions.

The resolution was sponsored by Bulgaria, Cuba and Mongolia. Introducing the text, Bulgaria noted the recognition given by the Assembly at its 1978 special session on disarmament to the potential influence of world public opinion and to the importance of Disarmament Week (p. 112) for promoting public awareness of arms and disarmament issues.<sup>(1)</sup> Bulgaria added that the sponsors of the resolution felt it was more important than ever that the peoples of the world clearly expressed their will to foster implementation of practical disarmament measures.

The Byelorussian SSR and Czechoslovakia supported the idea of a world-wide collection of signatures, as did the German Democratic Republic, which recalled that an NGO-sponsored campaign in that country two years earlier had yielded 13 million signatures in favour of arms limitation and disarmament. Guinea shared the view that the resolution would promote, in a dynamic way, the task of informing world opinion. Hungary believed the proposal would also contribute to the Second Disarmament Decade (1980-1990) and the World Disarmament Campaign in mobilizing world public opinion on behalf of disarmament. Mexico voted affirmatively on the understanding that the Assembly, at its 1982 special session on disarmament, would act to prevent duplication of activities under the World Disarmament Campaign (p. 109).

Among those which abstained in the vote, Austria regarded it as highly problematical to involve Governments in a practice designed to facilitate input into the political process from the grass-roots level; at the same time, it doubted whether the proposed measure could usefully contribute to disarmament. The Netherlands called the resolution redundant and propagandistic, and stated that mass demonstrations in Western Europe provided evidence that public opinion there was not in need of government guidance to be mobilized for disarmament. Finland and Pakistan considered that the proposed action could have been more appropriately dealt with in the context of the World Disarmament Campaign; Finland added that the proposed action fell within the compass of NGOs. Also believing that this was a matter for private organizations, China did not participate in the vote.

Japan, which voted in favour, similarly stressed that such matters should be left to private initiative, and recalled in this connection the voluntary effort made at the time of the 1978 special session on disarmament by Japanese NGOs which had brought to United Nations Headquarters some 20 million signatures in support of nuclear disarmament. Brazil voted against the resolution, believing that it was not incumbent on the United Nations to engage in such activities.

World-wide action for collecting signatures in support of measures to prevent nuclear war, to curb the arms race and for disarmament

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned over the growing threat of a nuclear war and the continuation and escalation of the arms race,

Conscious of the need to mobilize world public opinion on behalf of disarmament, as called for in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament.

Considering that world-wide action for collecting signatures in support of measures to prevent nuclear war, to curb the arms race and for disarmament would be an important manifestation of the will of the world public and would contribute to the creation of a favourable climate for achieving progress in the field of disarmament.

Considering also that it is desirable to carry out such world-wide action under the auspices of the United Nations and with the active participation of non-governmental organizations and other public institutions.

1. Invites Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions concerning world-wide action for collecting signatures in support of measures to prevent nuclear war, to curb the arms race and for disarmament:

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the most appropriate format and methods of carrying out such world-wide action under the auspices of the United Nations, taking into account the views and suggestions of Member States, and to submit it for consideration to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament.

Disarmament Week (24-30 October)

Disarmament Week 1981 was observed at United Nations Headquarters on 26 October at a special meeting of the First Committee, where messages were read on behalf of the President of the General Assembly and the Secretary-General, and statements were made by the representatives of regional groups. The President said that disarmament could be accomplished only if States that were devoting so much effort to the arms race decided to stop. The Secretary-General appealed to Governments to help make the Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament (p. 27) the start of a new and productive phase of disarmament negotiations.

By a resolution of 9 December on international co-operation for disarmament, the Assembly called on Member States to disseminate widely, in connection with Disarmament Week, the principles of international co-operation designed to achieve the goals of disarmament.<sup>(2)</sup> The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly the replies received from 10 Governments concerning their activities in connection with Disarmament Week.<sup>(1)</sup>

Chapter II

Peaceful uses of outer space

By two resolutions adopted without vote on 18 November 1981, the General Assembly made several recommendations on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space<sup>(3)</sup> and on preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82), scheduled for August 1982 at Vienna.<sup>(4)</sup> Both resolutions were approved by the Assembly's Special Political Committee (SPC), also without vote, on 30 October 1981. Most of the Assembly's recommendations were based on the work of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its two sub-committees.

The Committee on outer space held its twenty-fourth session at United Nations Headquarters from 22 June to 2 July. Of the 14 meetings held, four were devoted to the Committee's functions as Preparatory Committee for UNISPACE-82. In accordance with a 1980 Assembly resolution,<sup>(2)</sup> the membership of the Committee was increased from 47 to 53. The Committee's two subsidiary bodies, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and the Legal Sub-Committee, met prior to the Committee's annual session.

The Assembly's resolution on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space was sponsored by 42 States in SPC, where it was introduced by Austria. By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the report of the Committee on outer space<sup>(1)</sup> and requested it to continue its work and to report in 1982 with its views on which subjects should be studied in future. The Assembly decided on the continuation of United Nations work on scientific and technical aspects (p. 114) and on legal aspects (p. 118) of the peaceful uses of outer space.

In connection with its consideration of disarmament issues, the Assembly requested negotiations to elaborate a treaty on the prohibition of the stationing of weapons in outer space.<sup>(5)</sup> Nearly all speakers in the outer space debates, in both the Committee on outer space and SPC, expressed concern about the increasing militarization of outer space, and a number of delegations proposed that an item on ensuring the use of outer space exclusively for peaceful purposes be included in the provisional agenda of the 1982 session of the Committee on outer space.

International co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/14 of 3 November 1980,

Deeply convinced of the common interest of mankind in promoting the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to all States the benefits derived therefrom, as well as the importance of international co-operation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming the importance of international co-operation in developing the rule of law in the peaceful exploration and use of outer space,

Taking note with satisfaction of the progress achieved in various national and co-operative space projects, such as the launch of the Ariane rocket by the European Space Agency, the flight of the United States Space Shuttle Orbiter Columbia and the completion of the first stage of the Voyager II mission, the Salyut Soyuz orbital research programme of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the successful outer space missions by the first Mongolian and Romanian cosmonauts, the successful launching of the Rohini II and Apple satellites by India and the placing into orbit of a group of three satellites with a single carrier rocket by China,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on its twenty-fourth session,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

2. Invites States which have not yet become parties to the international treaties governing the use of outer space* to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to those treaties;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the progress in the preparation of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, to be held at Vienna from 9 to 21 August 1982, achieved by the committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and by its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, acting as Preparatory Committee for the Conference and Advisory Committee to the Preparatory Committee, respectively;

4. Notes that the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at its twentieth session:

(a) Continued its efforts to formulate draft principles relating to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space;

(b) Continued its efforts to complete the elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting;

(c) Continued its discussion of matters relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind, inter alia, questions relating to the geostationary orbit;

(d) Considered the possibility of supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space and established a working group in connection with this item;

5. Decides that the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at its twenty-first session should:

(a) Continue on a priority basis its detailed consideration of the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles relating to remote sensing;

(b) Continue its consideration of:

(i) The possibility of supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space through its working group;

(ii) Matters relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind, inter alia, questions relating to the geostationary orbit, and devote adequate time for a deeper consideration of this question;

6. Decides to convene the twenty-first session of the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at Geneva from 1 to 19 February 1982, with the possibility of extending that session to 26 February 1982;

7. Decides that further attempts to complete the elaboration of a draft set of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting shall be made by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space during its twenty-fifth session;

8. Decides to consider at its thirty-seventh session the adoption of a draft set of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting;

9. Notes that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at its eighteenth session continued:

(a) Its consideration of questions relating to remote sensing of the earth by satellites;

(b) Its consideration of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system;

(e) Its consideration of questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space;

(i) Preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space as Advisory Committee to the Preparatory Committee;

10. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at its nineteenth session should:

(a) Consider the following items on a priority basis:

(i) Consideration of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the co-ordination of outer space activities within the United Nations system;

(iv) Use of nuclear power sources in outer space;

(b) Consider the following items:

(i) Questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space;

(ii) Examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit;

11. Endorses the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1982 as proposed to the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee by the Expert on Space Applications:

12. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint a new Expert on Space Applications without delay, taking into account the important role of the Expert in the preparation of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

14. Requests the specialized agencies and other international organizations to continue their co-operation with the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and to provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

15. Requests the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to continue its work, in accordance with the present resolution and previous resolutions of the General Assembly, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities and to submit a report to the Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, including its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

Scientific and technical aspects

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its eighteenth session from 2 to 13 February 1981 at United Nations Headquarters. As in 1980, the Sub-Committee gave priority consideration to the United Nations Programme on Space Applications (p. 115), co-ordination of space activities in the United Nations system (p. 118), technical aspects of remote sensing (p. 116) and the use of nuclear power sources in outer space (p. 116). It also considered space transportation systems and their implications for future space activities (p. 117), and examined the technical attributes and physical nature of the geostationary orbit (p. 117). In addition, it acted as Advisory Committee to the Preparatory Committee for UNISPACE-82 (p. 125).

The views and recommendations of the Sub-Committee were set out in its report to the Committee on outer space,<sup>(2)</sup> considered by the Committee at its June/July session.<sup>(1)</sup> By its resolution on the peaceful uses of outer space, the Assembly noted the work of the Sub-Committee and endorsed the Committee's recommendation that the Sub-Committee continue to consider the same items at its 1982 session, again giving priority to remote sensing, use of nuclear power

sources in space, UNISPACE-82 preparations, co-ordination of United Nations activities and the Programme on Space Applications.<sup>(3)</sup>

UN Programme on Space Applications

Programme for 1981

Activities of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1981, described in a December report of the United Nations Expert on Space Applications to the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee,<sup>(1)</sup> included three regional seminars and one international seminar on remote sensing applications and satellite communications for education and development, in preparation for UNISPACE-82 (p. 124). The seminars for the regions of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific were held, respectively, at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 11 to 19 March,<sup>(2)</sup> at Buenos Aires, Argentina, from 7 to 14 April,<sup>(3)</sup> and at Jakarta, Indonesia, from 18 to 25 November.<sup>(4)</sup> The seminar for developing countries from various regions was held at Toulouse, France, from 21 to 25 April.<sup>(5)</sup>

The Programme also sponsored two training courses to provide participants with practical exercises in applying remote sensing techniques to development needs. The Sixth United Nations International Training Course on Remote Sensing Applications to Pasture and Rangeland Development, conducted in co-operation with the Government of Italy and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), was held at Rome from 27 April to 15 May.<sup>(6)</sup> A Joint United Nations/FAO Regional Training Seminar on Remote Sensing Applications to Land Resources, mainly for the benefit of developing countries in the Economic Commission for Western Asia and Mediterranean regions, was held at Sofia, Bulgaria, from 16 to 26 September.<sup>(7)</sup> In addition, Austria and Italy provided fellowships, and the Netherlands and Sweden offered grants of $25,000 each in support of the seminars.

The General Assembly, by its resolution of 18 November on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space, expressed appreciation to the Governments and organizations which had assisted in regard to these seminars and workshops.<sup>(8)</sup>

Programmes for 1982 and future years

The Programme on Space Applications for 1982, as set forth in a December 1980 report of the Expert on Space Applications,<sup>(2)</sup> included three regional seminars on remote sensing applications and space communications for education and development, an international seminar on the applications of remote sensing to development, and international training seminars on applications of remote sensing to agriculture and to meteorological problems associated with arid lands and desertification.

In response to the Assembly's 1980 request for a preliminary list of activities further to assist Member States in applying space technology to development,<sup>(4)</sup> the Expert recommended that the Programme provide technical advisory services, administer a programme of practical training in developing countries, and serve as a clearing-house for information on technological developments and on training and education.

In considering the Expert's report at its 1981 session,<sup>(3)</sup> the Sub-Committee noted the preliminary character of the list of future activities and requested the Secretariat to submit a detailed proposal, including financial implications. It reiterated its view that the Programme should be expanded to accommodate the needs of developing countries better.

At its June/July session,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee on outer space endorsed the Programme for 1982, noting a statement by the Secretary-General of UNISPACE-82 that the rest of the Programme for 1981 and 1982 would be reoriented to focus on the Conference. It also expressed satisfaction at Italy's decision to increase its financial contribution to the training courses held at FAO headquarters in Rome, and appreciation to the USSR for its readiness to hold United Nations training seminars on remote sensing regularly.

On 18 November, the General Assembly endorsed the 1982 Programme and recommended that the Sub-Committee give priority consideration to the Programme on Space Applications at its 1982 session.<sup>(5)</sup>

During discussions in the Special Political Committee and the Committee on outer space, a number of delegations remarked that it would be increasingly difficult to provide significant services under the Programme within the limited funds available. According to the Chairman of the Committee on outer space, the budget for 1980-1981 had been cut by 30 per cent, instead of remaining stable in real terms. Several delegations, including Egypt, India, Indonesia and Yugoslavia, urged that the Programme be broadened and strengthened. Bangladesh suggested that the United Nations organize long-term academic programmes in addition to the existing short-term training activities. Pakistan called for increased funding and repeated its suggestion, supported by Bangladesh, for the establishment of an international space agency.

Resolutions: GA: <sup>(4)</sup>35/14, para. 10, 3 Nov. 1980 (YUN 1980, p. 129); <sup>(5)</sup>36/35, paras. 10 (a) (i) & 11, 18 Nov. 1981 (p. 114).

Expert on Space Applications

In the report on its 1981 session,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee on outer space expressed gratitude to Ahmed D. Padang, the United Nations Expert on Space Applications from 1 November 1979 to 1 April 1981, for having directed the Programme on Space Applications and it recommended that the Secretary-General appoint a new Expert as soon as possible. On 18 November, the General Assembly requested that the Secretary-General fill the post without delay, taking into account the importance of the Expert's role with regard to preparations for UNLSPACE-82.<sup>(2)</sup> Adigun Ade Abiodun was appointed with effect from 16 November.

Scientific and technical aspects of remote sensing

During 1981, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee continued its priority consideration of remote sensing of the earth by satellites and measures to promote international co-operation in this area.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Sub-Committee encouraged the establishment and strengthening of regional remote sensing centres in order to create an indigenous capacity within developing countries and urged the United Nations to continue co-operating with such centres. It noted with satisfaction the activities of the Programme on Space Applications (p. 115) and other United Nations efforts to assist developing countries in applying remote sensing techniques. It also noted a catalogue of remote sensing applications, appended to the report of the Expert on Space Applications,<sup>(2)</sup> and recommended steps to improve the compilation of future catalogues through preparation of a detailed outline for the information to be sought from Governments and organizations and the format to be followed.

At its 1981 session, the Committee on outer space endorsed the Sub-Committee's view that the United Nations should continue to co-operate with regional remote sensing centres.<sup>(1)</sup> On 18 November, the Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendation that its Sub-Committee continue in 1982 to give priority consideration to remote sensing.<sup>(4)</sup>

During discussion in the Special Political Committee, most developing countries stressed the importance of remote sensing applications in the discovery and exploitation of natural resources, environmental monitoring and the maintenance of an effective communications system. They expressed hope that more technical assistance in using remote sensing techniques would be provided. In this regard, the importance of regional training centres was emphasized by a number of delegations, including Bolivia, Egypt, Nigeria and Yugoslavia.

Chile hoped it would be possible to continue to increase the information that States submitted on national activities in the field of remote sensing, and that the range and distribution of data could be defined more clearly. Japan criticized the notion that data be classified according to degree of resolution, stating that criteria for classification were not clear and that classification was not necessary.

Australia pointed out that the failure of launching States to make their systems compatible would seriously restrict the ability of other countries to benefit from remote sensing information; also, many countries tended to disregard the value of more conventional and normally less expensive data due to inflated expectations as to the benefits to be gained from outer space. Bangladesh noted that compatibility of satellite systems and ground segments was especially important to developing countries, where large investments on the ground could not be repeated to accommodate changes in space segments.

The legal implications of remote sensing were discussed in the Legal Sub-Committee and the Committee on outer space (p. 120).

Use of nuclear power sources in outer space

REPORT OF THE WORKING GROUP. The Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, established by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee in 1979,<sup>(4)</sup> held its third session at United Nations Headquarters from 2 to 6 February 1981. The Group continued its consideration of technical aspects and safety relating to the use of nuclear power sources, specifically radio-isotopic generators and nuclear reactors, in outer space.

In its report, the Group stated that the risks inherent in a particular project should be assessed in terms of both the probability of failure or malfunction and the severity of the consequences. It felt that the launching State should be responsible for minimizing adverse effects on the environment and population, and that the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection should be followed in that regard. It outlined measures to be taken in the event of possible re-entry or malfunction of a spacecraft carrying a nuclear power source, including notification and search and recovery procedures in areas that might be affected.

Emphasizing that every effort should be made to determine the technical feasibility of early notification to affected States and to the Secretary-General when there was the risk of re-entry of radioactive materials to earth, the Working Group formulated a format of notification specifying the information to be provided about re-entering space vehicles containing nuclear power sources that might give rise to radiological hazards. With regard to orbit predictions, the Group noted that accuracy could be improved by the implementation of additional degrees of control and by co-operative use of tracking stations and communications lines.

According to the Group's report, some delegations believed that agreed standards of safety should be defined, while others considered this impossible because of the great differences between spacecraft used by different countries.

The Group reaffirmed its conclusion, first stated in 1979, that nuclear power sources could be used safely in space if all necessary safety requirements were met. It encouraged Member States to continue studies concerning the uses of nuclear power in space. The report of the Working Group, annexed to the report of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, was adopted by the Sub-Committee on 11 February.<sup>(2)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. At its 1981 session, the Committee on outer space noted the conclusions of the Working Group, endorsing the Group's request that its work be suspended and that any material on nuclear power sources in space be circulated among Member States by the Secretariat, as well as its recommendation that the use of nuclear power in space be retained as a priority item on the Sub-Committee's 1982 agenda.<sup>(1)</sup> This recommendation was also endorsed by the Assembly in its resolution of 18 November on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space.<sup>(3)</sup> sources were discussed by the Legal Sub-Committee and the Committee on outer space (p. 122).

Legal aspects of the use of nuclear power

Resolution: <sup>(3)</sup>GA, 36/35, para. 10 (a) (iv), 18 Nov. (p. 114). Yearbook reference: <sup>(4)</sup>1979, p. 116.

Space transportation

At its June/July 1981 session,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee on outer space noted the progress achieved in operative and planned space transportation programmes as reported by China, France, India, Japan, Mongolia, the USSR, the United States and the European Space Agency, and endorsed the request of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, contained in its February report,<sup>(2)</sup> that the Secretariat update its 1979 study on the international implications of new space transportation systems. During the Sub-Committee's consideration of this subject, some delegations noted the importance of large-scale activities in outer space and the consequences to the environment due to increased use of these systems. The Committee's recommendation that the Sub-Committee continue consideration of this item in 1982 was endorsed by the Assembly on 18 November.<sup>(3)</sup>

Geostationary orbit

In discussing questions related to the geostationary orbit at the 1981 session of the Committee on outer space<sup>(1)</sup> and its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee,<sup>(2)</sup> a number of delegations indicated the growing concern of developing countries with regard to the manner in which the orbit was being used and the urgent need to avoid its saturation. Others noted that constructive efforts were under way through existing mechanisms to ensure fair and efficient use of the orbit. Most delegations elaborated on views expressed in 1980<sup>(4)</sup> concerning methods of avoiding saturation and assuring the most effective use of the orbit, including establishment of compatibility criteria for satellite networks, application of interference-resistant methods of transmission and use of quasi-stationary orbits and geosynchronous orbits with small inclinations.

The Sub-Committee noted that a comprehensive study on the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit, undertaken by the Secretariat with the assistance of the International Astronautical Federation, would be presented as a background paper to the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. It requested that the Secretariat's 1978 study on the subject be updated as required. It also decided to continue consideration of the geostationary orbit in 1982—a decision which was endorsed by the Committee and by the Assembly's resolution of 18 November.<sup>(3)</sup>

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit were discussed by the Legal Sub-Committee in regard to the definition of outer space (p. 123).

Resolution: <sup>(3)</sup>GA, 36/35, para. 10 (b) (ii), 18 Nov. (p. 114).

Co-ordination of outer space activities in the UN system

Noting the progress achieved in co-ordinating outer space activities among organizations within the United Nations system, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, at its 1981 session,<sup>(2)</sup> stressed the need to ensure continuous and effective consultations and co-ordination. It expressed satisfaction at plans for a third Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities (Vienna, 14-16 September).

The Committee on outer space, at its mid-year session,<sup>(1)</sup> concluded that the reports submitted by United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and other international organizations had assisted the Committee and its subsidiary bodies in fulfilling their role as a focal point for international co-operation in the application of space science and technology.

On 18 November, the General Assembly endorsed the Committee's decision that co-ordination of outer space activities be among the topics given priority consideration by the Sub-Committee in 1982.<sup>(3)</sup>

Legal aspects

The twentieth session of the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space, held at Geneva from 16 March to 10 April 1981, marked the conclusion of two decades of the Sub-Committee's work in the development and codification of the law of outer space. At that session, the Sub-Committee continued its priority consideration of draft principles relating to remote sensing (p. 120) and to the use by States of satellites for direct television broadcasting (see below). It also considered the possibility of supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space (p. 122) and continued studying matters relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit (p. 123). Working groups, open to all Sub-Committee members, were set up to consider legal aspects of nuclear power source use and the two priority items.

The Sub-Committee's report,<sup>(2)</sup> and the annexed reports of the three working groups, were considered by the Committee at its June/July session.<sup>(1)</sup> As the Committee could not agree on the agenda for the Sub-Committee's next session, the decision was deferred to the General Assembly's 1981 session. On 18 November,<sup>(4)</sup> the Assembly decided that the Committee should attempt again in 1982 to elaborate draft principles for the use of direct-broadcast satellites and that the Sub-Committee should continue to consider the three other items, giving priority to the legal implications of remote sensing. The Assembly fixed the dates of the Sub-Committee's 1982 session at 1 to 19 February, with a possible extension to 26 February.

During discussion in the Special Political Committee (SPC) in October, Canada stated that serious consideration should be given to streamlining the work of the Sub-Committee, including shortening the time allowed for its meetings. Australia believed that the Sub-Committee would not need more than three weeks in 1982, since the item on direct television broadcasting had been removed from its agenda. On the other hand, Czechoslovakia and Mongolia emphasized the importance of the Sub-Committee's having four full weeks for the successful continuance of its work. After the approval in Committee of the resolution on the peaceful uses of outer space, the USSR stated that it did not agree with the provision for a three-week session, since it would reduce the effectiveness of one of the most productive United Nations bodies. Also by its resolution of 18 November, the Assembly invited States to consider ratifying or acceding to the five treaties on outer space concluded under United Nations auspices between 1966 and 1979.<sup>(3)</sup>

Draft principles for the use of direct-broadcast satellites

CONSIDERATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON OUTER SPACE. The Working Group established by the Legal Sub-Committee to elaborate draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting met from 17 March to 7 April 1981. Discussions in both the Group and the Sub-Committee were based on the incomplete text of draft principles as it appeared at the end of the 1980 session-containing square brackets around provisions on which agreement had not been reached. The Group discussed the principles relating to State responsibility and to consultation and agreements between States, but it reached no consensus. Other principles to be finalized by the Group concerned the duty and right of States to consult, dispute settlement, programme content and unlawful or inadmissible broadcasts.

During preliminary discussion of the principles on State responsibility and consultation and agreements between States, the main point of contention centred on the problem of reconciling the sovereign rights of States, particularly non-interference in their internal affairs, with the right to freedom of expression, including the right to seek, receive and impart information and ideas, regardless of frontiers. Since contrasting views remained essentially the same as those set out in the 1980 report of the Working Group,<sup>(7)</sup> the Group adjourned its meetings in favour of informal consultations open to all members of the Sub-Committee, with the hope of resolving the remaining differences. Following these consultations, which failed to yield consensus, a negotiating text intended as a basis for concluding elaboration of the principles at the 1981 session of the Committee on outer space was submitted as a working paper by Argentina, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Kenya, Mexico, the Niger and Venezuela. It was annexed, together with the report of the Working Group's Chairman, to the Legal Sub-Committee's report.<sup>(2)</sup>

The report of the Sub-Committee, including the recommendation that the Committee on outer space decide whether further progress could be achieved in elaborating the draft principles, was considered by the Committee at its June/July session. Taking note of the negotiating text, which some members did not consider suitable as a basis for further work, the Committee established an informal working group in an effort to complete the draft principles. The working group, which held a number of meetings between 24 June and 1 July, focused on the remaining outstanding issues, relating to the preamble and the principles on purposes and objectives, State responsibility, and consultation and agreements between States. Several informal proposals were submitted and Nigeria, the Philippines, Romania and Uruguay became co-sponsors of the negotiating text. However, the group did not reach agreement. At the final meeting of the Committee, Sweden submitted a working paper presenting an alternate version of the principles that attempted to take into account the discussions of the informal working group. Some delegations expressed reservations on this text, however, and it was not discussed for lack of time. It was annexed to the Committee's 1981 report to the Assembly.<sup>(1)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 18 November, by its resolution on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space,<sup>(6)</sup> the Assembly decided that the Committee should attempt to complete the draft in 1982 and that the Assembly would consider later that year the adoption of a draft set of principles for the use of direct-broadcast satellites. Accordingly, the item was not listed for the agenda of the Legal Sub-Committee.

During discussion in SPC, a number of delegations, including Hungary, Indonesia, Mongolia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Viet Nam, stressed the necessity of concluding an agreement that would preclude interference in the internal affairs of sovereign States. The main provision of this approach, that broadcasting to another State should be carried out on the basis of agreement or consultation with that State, was endorsed by Argentina, the Byelorussian SSR, Chile, China, Ecuador, Kenya, Nigeria and Uruguay. Colombia, Iraq, Pakistan, Romania and Venezuela also supported this provision, some of them making the point that the 16-nation negotiating text ensured a balance between the rights and duties of States. Support for this text as a sound basis for arriving at a compromise solution was also voiced by China and Madagascar.

Cuba hoped that the principles would also establish the international responsibility of States which violated the principle of consent. Czechoslovakia proposed that, after formulating a set of principles which respected the sovereignty of States, the Committee on outer space should draft a legally binding convention based on the principles. According to the USSR, an approach that did not respect the sovereignty of States would be a serious attack on the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (Outer Space Treaty), adopted by the Assembly in 1966.<sup>(5)</sup>

Bulgaria stated that principles governing direct television broadcasting should aim at regulating the exchange of information and encouraging mutual co-operation. The German Democratic Republic said new technology must not be allowed to become a vehicle for misinformation in the hands of the media monopolies of certain Western States. The Ukrainian SSR emphasized that direct television broadcasting should be used solely to promote peace and friendship and raise the educational level and cultural awareness of the largest number of people. No State, said Viet Nam, had the right to broadcast to another State, against its will, television programmes that were contrary to that country's political, economic and cultural interests.

Concern for the legitimate aspirations of developing countries in elaborating the principles was expressed by Chile, Peru and the Philippines. Mali noted that such broadcasting, when conducted with strict regard for State sovereignty, could revolutionize information dissemination.

Italy and Japan believed that the principle of free flow of information should serve as the corner-stone for elaboration of the principles. Along with the Netherlands, they thought the principles should be based on technical regulations drawn up by the International Telecommunication Union. Belgium, in support of this view, urged that the principles be firmly linked to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights<sup>(3)</sup> and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.<sup>(4)</sup> Spain saw two principles as relevant—freedom of information and a State's right to preserve its informational identity. The United States, emphasizing that consensus could never be achieved by departing from the fundamental right of freedom of expression, stated that it was prepared to work towards a set of non-binding principles. France advocated a régime sufficiently flexible to take account of the concerns of receiving countries.

China considered that unilateral emphasis on freedom of communication, without taking account of the sovereignty, interests or specific conditions of States, would lead to disputes. Other delegations maintained that freedom of information should not be allowed to prevent States from protecting their national interests (Brazil); be used as a pretext for political propaganda (Greece, Kenya); endanger another State's values (Madagascar); violate international law (Romania); or infringe the rights of others (Uruguay). Colombia was not convinced by the argument that efforts to protect States from the monopoly, propaganda and advertising of transnational corporations was contrary to freedom of information. If all co-operated, said the Syrian Arab Republic, it would be possible to prevent direct television broadcasting from becoming a means of intervention in a State's affairs.

Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay believed that if consensus could not be reached in the Committee on outer space, the Assembly should act. The value of consensus, particularly with regard to legal matters, was emphasized by a number of delegations, including Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Spain, the United States and Venezuela, many of which felt that progress on the principles had been achieved.

Legal implications of remote sensing

WORKING GROUP CONSIDERATION. From 17 March to 3 April 1981, a Working Group established by the Legal Sub-Committee continued considering draft principles governing the remote sensing of earth from space. It reviewed each of the 17 draft principles as they had appeared at the conclusion of the Sub-Committee's 1980 session, with the exception of principles II through X, on which tentative agreement had already been reached.

In the debate on principle XIII, concerning notification by the State conducting remote sensing activities to the States whose territory would be covered (sensed States), delegations supported one or a combination of the following approaches: prior notification of the general nature and geographical coverage of the remote sensing programme, notification after commencement of the programme, or notification that primary data had been received. Since some delegations insisted on some sort of prior notification and others would not accept such an obligation, no consensus was reached.

The remaining seven principles, together with notes and brackets indicating the need for further consideration, were left unchanged, since each of the texts posed problems which the Working Group could not resolve. A new approach to the definitions of "remote sensing of earth", "primary data" and "analysed information" contained in principle I was introduced by Colombia in a working paper that took into account the distinction between macroscopic and microscopic remote sensing and the existence of information collected by sources other than satellites. While some delegations agreed with the basic approach of the Colombian proposal, others felt it complicated matters or went beyond the Sub-Committee's mandate in attempting to regulate activities that were not space-related.

Some delegations felt that principle XI, on international responsibility for remote sensing activities, was unacceptable to the extent that it went beyond the provisions of the Outer Space Treaty,<sup>(3)</sup> while others stressed the importance of retaining the principle and applying it to the activities of non-governmental organizations.

Although members of the Group agreed that sensed States should have timely and non-discriminatory access to primary data on reasonable terms, as stated in principle XII, no consensus could be reached on the time element and the necessity of the sensing and sensed States agreeing on terms of access.

Some delegations felt that principle XIV, concerning consultation with a sensed State at its request, should be deleted or the language streamlined, since similar ideas were contained in other principles. Others felt it premature to decide on deletion before agreement on other principles.

Opinions were again divided in respect to principle XV, concerning the approval by sensed States of dissemination of information on their natural resources. Some delegations, in support of restricted dissemination, preferred the concept underlying a USSR proposal of 1979, which introduced spatial resolution (degree of detail) as a criterion to determine the types of data whose dissemination should be subject to consent. Others favoured a system of unrestricted dissemination and also argued that spatial resolution would not provide a reliable standard reference because of practical difficulties in establishing the spatial resolution in each instance. New language for the principle was proposed in the working paper by Colombia. Since the paper also provided for the consent of sensed States, some delegations found it unacceptable.

With regard to principle XVI, stating that remote sensing should respect a State's permanent sovereignty over its natural resources, some delegations advocated deletion on the ground that its meaning was unclear and that no consensus had been achieved in other forums where the concept was being discussed. Others supported retention of the principle as a natural complement to other principles.

In discussing principle XVII, relating to dispute settlement, some delegations thought the text gave undue preference to prompt consultations between disputing parties as the only means of settlement; others felt that the application of this principle should not be restricted to legal disputes.

During a preliminary exchange of views in the Group on a working paper submitted by Mexico, which contained a revised version of all 17 principles, a number of delegations supported the paper in principle, reserving the right to comment in detail at the 1982 session of the Legal Sub-Committee. This working paper, as well as that submitted by Colombia, were appended to the report of the Chairman of the Working Group, which was annexed to the report of the Legal Sub-Committee on its 1981 session.<sup>(2)</sup>

The work of the Legal Sub-Committee and its Working Group on remote sensing was noted by the Committee on outer space at its June/July session.<sup>(1)</sup> Scientific and technical aspects of remote sensing were discussed by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee (p. 116).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 18 November, the General Assembly decided that the Sub-Committee should continue its consideration of the legal implications of remote sensing on a priority basis with the aim of formulating draft principles.<sup>(4)</sup>

During discussion in SPC, a number of delegations, including the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia and Viet Nam, stressed the necessity of making the dissemination of all data and information subject to the approval of the State whose territory was affected by remote sensing, as a corollary to the principle of State sovereignty. In support of this view, Cuba added that data which did not relate to any particular State should be disseminated promptly among all States, giving priority to those which might be affected, in order to eliminate restrictions impeding access of developing countries to data. The need to facilitate access of developing countries to remote sensing data was also emphasized by Bangladesh, Bolivia, Malawi, Sierra Leone and Sweden.

Romania and other delegations held that States whose territory was the object of remote sensing had the right to receive the results. Of those expressing this view, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Kenya, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Venezuela and Yugoslavia added that those results must not be given to third parties without the sensed State's consent, while France and the Philippines said such prior consent should be a prerequisite to releasing certain kinds of data.

Supporting the prior consent view, Ecuador claimed that only the United Nations should be empowered to compile and disseminate data received from outer space, and Yugoslavia suggested that, in future, the United Nations set up its own system for analysis and dissemination.

Iraq, Kenya, Peru, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uruguay and Viet Nam emphasized that, in addition to the rights of sensed States with regard to priority access and dissemination of information, principles governing remote sensing activities should also stipulate that prior authorization for sensing must be obtained from the sensed States. Although Greece believed prior consent was desirable, it was willing to consider compulsory prior notification. Chile, Indonesia and Madagascar, supporting the principles of prior notification, transfer of data and consent of the sensed State before dissemination, emphasized that these questions could be resolved only by respecting the sovereignty of States and the needs of developing countries.

Italy cautioned against hasty restrictions on the beneficial applications of remote sensing technology or on the principle of free flow of information. Sweden noted the need for international co-operation so that data could be freely accessible to countries not possessing their own satellite, and suggested that developing countries be assisted in interpreting and using data.

The USSR, remarking that remote sensing should benefit the sensed State rather than a third party, opposed the notion that dissemination of data was not part of space activities and could therefore be incorporated in the so-called free market. Expressing a similar view, Czechoslovakia warned against the increasing endeavours on the part of private capital in some Western countries to commercialize outer space activities, while Romania asserted that countries engaged in space exploration often required payment of a sizeable proportion of the expenditure as a precondition for the use of satellites and access to data, which would lead to a new form of economic and political domination.

Bulgaria expressed the view that remote sensing should be carried out only on the basis of the broadest international co-operation and respect for the rights and interests of all States. The Ukrainian SSR believed speedy completion of draft principles would do much to promote the use of remote sensing to strengthen peace and security and enhance the living standards of all peoples. Egypt and Nigeria hoped that difficulties in the classification and dissemination of data could be overcome without infringing the sovereignty of the sensed States.

Legal aspects of the use of nuclear power sources in outer space

The Working Group established by the Legal Sub-Committee to consider the possibility of supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space met from 16 March to 9 April 1981. The main issue discussed in the Group was the adequacy of established international law with regard to the safe use of such power sources. Some delegations felt that existing international regulations were relevant but needed to be supplemented; others believed that there was already an adequate framework of international rules on the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

The Working Group noted that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee's Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, in its 1981 report, had again concluded that such power sources could be used safely provided that all necessary safety requirements were met (p. 117). Emphasizing that the safety of people and the environment should be given the necessary weight, some delegations felt that nuclear power sources should not be used in outer space if an alternative energy source could be utilized; others considered that the choice should be made on technical grounds based on the design and operational features of a specific mission.

The Group discussed a working paper by Canada, based on a paper presented by that delegation in 1980,<sup>(4)</sup> suggesting requirements to be met by launching States and others in regard to information on the use of nuclear power sources, notification prior to re-entry, assistance to States and radiation exposure levels. During the session, a similar working paper was submitted by Venezuela and a working paper containing comments on sections of the Canadian paper was submitted by Italy.

The Sub-Committee annexed the Group Chairman's report, as well as the Canadian working paper, to its report to the Committee on outer space.<sup>(2)</sup> The Committee, after considering these documents, expressed the view that the Sub-Committee's consideration of the subject should provide a constructive basis for continuing work in the Sub-Committee 1982.<sup>(1)</sup> On 18 November, the Assembly decided that the Sub-Committee should continue to consider this item through its Working Group.<sup>(3)</sup>

During discussion in SPC, a number of delegations, including Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, India, the Netherlands and Uruguay, advocated the elaboration of principles to supplement existing norms of international law governing the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. Supporting this view, Italy added that nuclear power sources should be used only when they were irreplaceable, and prior notice of their use should be given. Nigeria emphasized the need for notification prior to re-entry, as well as the responsibility of the launching State for any damage resulting from the disintegration of a nuclear-powered object. Cuba remarked that any regional or international set of rules on this topic should establish as a priority principle the use of nuclear power sources for peaceful purposes. Peru stressed the need to study the possible danger caused by the use of outer space for the transfer or storage of radioactive wastes produced on earth.

Canada and Japan expressed hope that the Legal Sub-Committee's Working Group would soon be able to submit guidelines that would ensure adequate protection for humans and the environment. Sweden, strongly supporting the idea of pre-launch information and notification prior to re-entry, believed that safety standards should include the general principles devised by the International Commission on Radiological Protection and should be based on the work of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee's Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, as proposed in the paper submitted by Canada. Support for the Canadian working paper was also voiced by Indonesia, while the Netherlands and the Philippines regarded it as a useful basis for discussion.

Although Austria believed that the Canadian paper was a valuable starting point, it felt safety aspects should be considered on a more general and comprehensive level. Madagascar thought the paper should be supplemented by a provision obliging launching States to give immediate assistance to developing countries in case of accident. Venezuela emphasized that the principles should also mention the responsibility of States for damage caused when objects equipped with nuclear power sources returned to earth, as noted in its own working paper.

Definition of outer space and legal aspects of the geostationary orbit

LEGAL SUB-COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION. The definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, including questions relating to the geostationary orbit, were discussed by the Legal Sub-Committee in April 1981.<sup>(2)</sup> Opinions continued to differ as to whether a definition or delimitation of outer space ought to be established.

Members of the Sub-Committee who considered the definition and/or delimitation of outer space a necessity stated that the legal regime applicable to airspace differed from one applicable to outer space, particularly in matters related to State sovereignty. Some of these members believed that a conventional boundary, established by agreement between States, was the most appropriate method for delimiting outer space. A number of delegations supported the view that the boundary between outer space and airspace be placed at an altitude not higher than 100 to

Other Sub-Committee members argued that no practical difficulties had arisen from the absence of a definition or delimitation of outer space and that there was no scientific or technical justification for designating a particular altitude as a boundary. They believed the establishment of such a boundary would be premature and would create difficulties in the transit of a space object over States during launch or descent.

In regard to the geostationary orbit, which was also discussed by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee (p. 117), some members of the Legal Sub-Committee observed that the orbit was a limited natural resource of a unique character and maintained that a satellite should be stationed in such an orbit only with the consent of the underlying State. Others saw no basis for national claims to sovereignty over the orbit, stating that the geostationary orbit was an inseparable part of outer space.

Some delegations thought that a definition of outer space and the geostationary orbit question should be considered in a working group of the Sub-Committee, but others disagreed. The question was referred to the Committee on outer space, where divergent views were again expressed and no consensus was reached.<sup>(1)</sup> On 18 November, the Assembly decided that the Legal Sub-Committee should continue to consider the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind questions related to the geostationary orbit, and should devote adequate time for deeper consideration.<sup>(4)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION. During discussion in SPC, Brazil took the view that delimitation of the boundary between outer space and airspace was necessary to avoid conflict on the application of two distinct régimes. Czechoslovakia said a definition was needed to determine the spatial scope of space treaties already concluded.

The USSR, stressing the importance of a definition as a basis for elaborating the remaining concepts concerning outer space, reiterated its 1979 proposal that the definition be based on altitude. This proposal was supported by a number of others, including Hungary, Madagascar, Mongolia, Poland and Uruguay. Peru, stating that the Committee on outer space should establish the scientific basis for an international instrument on delimitation, believed that consensus should be reached on an altitude accepted by the majority. Venezuela observed that, whatever criterion was to be followed, any definition must be acceptable to all States and take into account their sovereignty and security interests.

India believed the definition and limits of outer space had to be discussed further in the Committee on outer space in order to achieve consensus.

Chile stressed the need to establish by a convention the limits of outer space and promote a more efficient and rational use of the geostationary orbit in the interest of all States. Austria stated that it was prepared to join any consensus on a definition of outer space that was linked to the question of the geostationary orbit. Continued consideration of the two topics as one item was also supported by Ecuador, Japan and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Indonesia emphasized the need for precise regulations governing the use of the orbit that safeguarded the interests of all countries and recognized the special rights of underlying States. Kenya, noting the view of the equatorial States that their sovereignty extended to the segment of the orbit located above their territories, emphasized the urgent need to avoid saturation of the orbit. Concern that the orbit would become saturated if steps were not taken to regulate its use was expressed by several other countries, including Argentina, Colombia, Peru and Venezuela. Brazil stated that appropriate criteria must be found to preserve access to orbital positions on an equitable basis, taking into account the interests of the equatorial countries. In Peru's opinion, equatorial countries should have a preferential right to use it.

Madagascar believed that the United Nations should play a role in regulating use of the geostationary orbit. Nigeria, supporting the rights of African countries to the orbit, suggested that its management be assigned to a specialized body in the United Nations system. The Philippines believed that a special legal regime should be established for the orbit that would ensure its utilization for the benefit of all States, particularly the developing countries. The Syrian Arab Republic warned against monopolization of the orbit by a minority of States.

Colombia, stating that the needs of equatorial and all developing countries were complementary, supported, along with Ecuador, the idea of drafting an additional protocol to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (Outer Space Treaty)<sup>(3)</sup> to make good its omission with regard to the definition of outer space and the geostationary orbit.

Iraq and Pakistan favoured the elaboration of legal principles to regulate the exploitation of the orbit in a just manner so as to protect the interests of all States equally. Australia, while agreeing that no country should be precluded from utilizing the benefits provided by the orbit, held the view that claims of sovereignty over the orbit had no scientific or legal basis and would conflict with the Outer Space Treaty.

Preparations for UNISPACE-82

Work continued in 1981 on plans for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82), scheduled for Vienna from 9 to 21 August 1982.

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 18 November 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> approved recommendations made in July by the Preparatory Committee for the Conference. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to complete by 31 December the appointment of officers responsible for Conference preparations, invited Member States to promote awareness of the Conference through their national mass media, and requested the Secretary-General of the Conference to mobilize further assistance from the United Nations Department of Public Information, other services of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations in disseminating information on the Conference.

This resolution was adopted without vote, after having been similarly approved by SPC on 30 October. The draft was sponsored by 44 States and introduced by Austria.

The recommendations approved by the Assembly were made by the Preparatory Committee at its third session, held at United Nations Headquarters from 22 June to 2 July.<sup>(2)</sup> The Committee, made up of the same members as the Committee on outer space and meeting during that body's 1981 session, approved draft provisional rules of procedure and a meetings schedule for the Conference, agreed on the number and geographical distribution of Conference officers, and approved the outline for the draft final report of the Conference. It requested the Conference Secretary-General to prepare a draft of the final report for consideration in 1982. The Committee also noted that a number of countries and organizations had offered to maintain exhibitions during the Conference and that matters related to preparatory work had been or would be considered by regional seminars held in 1981 and scheduled for 1982 under the United Nations Programme on Space Applications (p. 115).

The Preparatory Committee was assisted by an Advisory Committee, made up of the members of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee. Meeting at its second session, from 2 to 13 February at United Nations Headquarters,<sup>(1)</sup> the Advisory Committee made a number of recommendations that were endorsed by the Preparatory Committee in July. Noting the contributions to the Conference planned by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the Advisory Committee suggested that other specialized agencies and organizations be invited to contribute further to Conference activities. It also recommended that a number of pre-Conference publicity activities be carried out as far as possible within the financial ceiling approved by the Assembly, and that arrangements with Member States and international organizations interested in implementing in-Conference publicity be co-ordinated by the Conference Secretary-General.

Reporting on Conference preparations to SPC in October, the Secretary-General of the Conference, Yash Pal, stated that national papers on space activities had been received from 56 States, with more expected. It had been necessary to delay final preparation of the draft report of the Conference, since it would be based primarily on an analysis of those papers and others provided by specialized agencies. Although preparations were proceeding satisfactorily, the Secretary-General regretted the strict financial constraints and the delay in appointing some senior officials of the Conference secretariat. Since budget allocations for the six regional seminars to be held in connection with the Conference had been inadequate, he had approached a number of Governments to raise more funds. The Conference secretariat was doing its best to implement the numerous public information activities recommended by the Preparatory Committee—including a newsletter, exhibitions, and poster and essay contests—within the $50,000 allocated for the purpose.

During discussion in SPC, States expressed support for the Conference as a forum for international co-operation in outer space. Some were concerned that all necessary secretariat appointments had not yet been made. Most delegations emphasized the importance of the Conference as a means of increasing scientific and technical exchanges between industrialized and developing countries to lessen the technological dependence of the latter. In this regard, Cuba hoped that the number of scholarships and seminars on space activities would be increased so that developing countries might participate actively in the Conference, and Colombia expressed the view that the Conference should not be confined to consideration of scientific and commercial aspects but should study the urgent legal problems created by technical advances. Venezuela hoped that it would tackle the problems of developing countries and not be converted into a trade fair or a battle of words about outer space feats. Finland regarded the Conference as part of the North-South dialogue.

The United States reiterated that it would be unable to take part in the Conference unless appointments to the Conference secretariat were made in accordance with a formula that preserved the integrity of the United Nations personnel system. Czechoslovakia remarked that delegations which made their participation in the Conference contingent on irrelevant technical or organizational questions seemed to be using those questions to obscure their unfavourable attitude towards the Conference.

Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/16 of 10 November 1978, 34/67 of 5 December 1979 and 35/15 of 3 November 1980 concerning the convening as well as the preparation of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, to be held at Vienna from 9 to 21 August 1982,

2. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for the holding of regional seminars related to the preparation of the Conference, as well as to all the Governments that have acted as hosts to these seminars;

3. Expresses its concern at the fact that all the officers necessary for the preparation of the Conference have not yet been appointed;

4. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make all the necessary appointments without further delay, and in any case not later than 31 December 1981, in order to ensure the efficient preparation of the Conference;

5. Invites Member States actively to promote, to the extent possible, public awareness of the Conference through their national radio and television networks, as well as through the efficient use of other mass media;

6. Requests the Preparatory Committee and its Advisory Committee to continue the preparatory work for the Conference;

7. Commends the Secretary-General of the Conference for the satisfactory arrangements for the Conference;

Requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to continue fulfilling his mandate and to mobilize further assistance from the Department of Public Information of the secretariat and other relevant services of the United Nations system as well as from the non-governmental organizations in disseminating effectively information on the Conference to ensure world-wide awareness of the Conference and its objectives;

9. Requests the Conference to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Register of launchings of space objects

In 1981, four States and an intergovernmental organization supplied information to the United Nations on the launching of objects into orbit around earth or farther into space, in accordance with a 1961 General Assembly resolution<sup>(6)</sup> and the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space.<sup>(7)</sup>

Nineteen notifications of objects launched during 1981 and the latter part of 1980 were received and distributed as United Nations documents. Information was submitted by India on 2 launchings,<sup>(1)</sup> by Japan on 2 launchings,<sup>(2)</sup> by the USSR on 71 launchings,<sup>(3)</sup> by the United States on 17 launchings<sup>(4)</sup> and by the European Space Agency on 3 launchings.<sup>(5)</sup>

The Netherlands and the Republic of Korea became parties to the Convention on registration during 1981. There were a total of 30 States parties as at 31 December 1981, as follows:

Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Mexico, Netherlands, Niger, Peru, Poland, Republic of Korea, Seychelles, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Chapter III

Law of the sea

The 1981 session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, its tenth, ended in August with the issuance of an official draft Convention on the Law of the Sea. The draft Convention,<sup>(1)</sup> covering most human uses of the oceans, incorporated the results of negotiations at the tenth and previous sessions.

The Conference recorded substantial agreement on most issues, but several problems remained outstanding. They included participation in the Convention by national liberation movements, the establishment of a Preparatory Commission, the protection of pioneer investments in sea-bed mining and drafting issues.

A new timetable approved at the close of the tenth session envisaged a concluding session in 1982 for the purpose of signing the Convention. This schedule was approved by the General Assembly in December 1981.<sup>(4)</sup>

The 1981 session was held in two parts: from 9 March to 16 April at United Nations Headquarters and from 3 to 28 August at Geneva.

The mandate of the Conference, assigned to it by the General Assembly in 1973, was to draw up a convention dealing with all matters relating to the law of the sea.<sup>(5)</sup> The decision to convene the Conference was taken by the Assembly in 1970<sup>(2)</sup> and its first session was held in 1973.<sup>(5)</sup>

Conference on the Law of the Sea

Organizational aspects

Tenth session (1981)

A total of 158 States and the United Nations Council for Namibia participated in the tenth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea: 155 attended the first part and 146 the resumed session. Two Territories, 11 specialized agencies or United Nations-related bodies and 15 intergovernmental organizations participated as observers. (For participating States and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

Dates and meeting places

Since the goal of adopting a convention was not reached at the first part of the Conference's tenth session, held in New York from 9 March to 16 April 1981, the Conference reconvened at Geneva from 3 to 28 August, following informal consultations by delegations from 29 to 31 July. The decision to reconvene the session was approved by the General Assembly without vote on 11 May,<sup>(1)</sup> on a revised draft by Singapore, in accordance with a recommendation adopted by the Conference on 16 April, transmitted to the Assembly by a letter of 20 April from the Conference President.<sup>(2)</sup> The Assembly also approved the convening of the Drafting Committee at Geneva from 29 June to 31 July (p. 129).

Sierra Leone, speaking after the Assembly took its decision, expressed concern that once again a session of the Conference might be spent without profit while waiting for one delegation to resume serious negotiations.

General Assembly decision 35/452

Adopted without vote

Draft by Singapore (A/35/L.60/Rev.1) agenda item 20.

Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea

At its 113th plenary meeting, on 11 May 1981, the General Assembly, in the light of the recommendation of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, which met pursuant to Assembly resolution 35/116 of 10 December 1980:

(a) Approved the reconvening of the tenth session of the Conference at Geneva from 3 to 29 August 1981 with a possible one-week extension if the Conference should so decide:

(b) Approved also the convening of the Drafting Committee of the Conference at Geneva from 29 June to 31 July 1981;

(c) Recommended that the Secretary-General should provide the necessary facilities for informal consultations from 29 to 31 July 1981 to delegations participating in the Conference, in particular for the announced consultations of the Group of Seventy-seven.

Organization of work

As at previous sessions, the work of the Conference in 1981 was largely carried on at informal meetings and was based on negotiating texts issued by the Conference's collegium, consisting of its President and the chairmen of its three main committees, working as a team with which the Chairman of the Drafting Committee and the Rapporteur-General of the Conference were associated. The results of the informal negotiations were reported to the Conference at formal meetings, at which delegations were given an opportunity to make statements on the work done and the questions which remained.

On 13 March, the Conference elected Tommy T. B. Koh (Singapore) as its new President, to succeed H. Shirley Amerasinghe (Sri Lanka), who had died in December 1980. In addition, Sri Lanka replaced Singapore as one of the Conference's Vice-Presidents.

For the first part of the session, work was based on a draft Convention on the Law of the Sea (informal text) issued in August 1980.<sup>(3)</sup> A work programme for the two weeks ending 27 March was approved by the Conference on 17 March, based on recommendations of the collegium which were transmitted by the President to the General Committee in a note of 16 March.<sup>(4)</sup> The Conference agreed on 30 March to continue with this programme through 13 April. On 10 April, it decided to wind up all substantive work of the New York portion of its session on 16 April while allowing the Drafting Committee to continue through 24 April, the originally scheduled concluding date for the session.

In accordance with this programme, the Conference dealt with three outstanding matters: an article-by-article review of the draft Convention in order to reach harmonization and textual concordance in its six official languages, carried out by the Drafting Committee and reviewed at informal plenary meetings (p. 129); participation in the Convention by entities other than States, considered at informal plenary meetings (p. 134); and the mandate of the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, discussed in formal meetings of the First Committee and informal meetings of the Committee's Working Group of 21 (p. 137). The First Committee also dealt with other matters pertaining to the sea-bed (p. 128), and informal meetings were held by the Second and Third Committees (p. 129).

One further unresolved question- the treatment to be accorded to preparatory sea-bed investments made before the Convention entered into force- was not taken up because the Group of 77 developing countries said it was not prepared to negotiate on the question since the United States had not clarified its position relating to the Convention.

Consultations chaired by the President were held between two interest groups on the question of delimitation of maritime boundaries between States with opposite or adjacent coasts. There were also consultations and First Committee meetings on the production policy for sea-bed mining (p. 132).

On 15 April, the Conference devoted one meeting to hearing reports by Committee chairmen as well as delegation views on the matters considered during the first part of the session. On 16 April, it decided to suspend the session and to resume at Geneva on 3 August (p. 127).

At the opening meeting of the resumed session, the Conference, on the suggestion of its President, approved a programme calling for continued work on outstanding issues for the two weeks through 14 August. This work programme was extended on 17 August for one further week, through 21 August.

At the suggestion of the Chairman of the Group of 77, the United States informed the Conference, at an informal plenary meeting on 5 August, of the results of the review of the draft Convention by the new United States Administration. No agreements were reached during subsequent consultations held to examine the issues raised by the United States with respect to the sea-bed provisions of the Convention.

Indicative votes on the seats of the Authority (p. 133) and the Tribunal (p. 136) were taken at an informal plenary meeting on 21 August.

On the recommendation of the General Committee,<sup>(2)</sup> the Conference decided on 24 August to revise the informal text of the draft Convention in order to accord to it the status of an official draft Convention, subject to three conditions: (1) The door would be kept open for consultations and negotiations on certain outstanding issues; the results, if they received widespread and substantial support improving the prospect of consensus, would be incorporated in the draft Convention without the need for formal amendments. (2) The Drafting Committee would complete its work; its recommendations, as approved by the Conference at informal meetings, would be incorporated into the text. (3) Since consultations and negotiations would continue, delegations would not be permitted to submit formal amendments at that stage; they could do so only after the termination of all negotiations.

On 28 August, the Conference received reports by the President on consultations relating to maritime boundary delimitation (p. 134) and by the chairmen of the First and Drafting Committees. Also submitted were a study on the functions of the Secretary-General under the Convention and on the needs of countries for information, advice and assistance under the new legal régime (p. 139), as well as a revised draft resolution on development of national marine science, technology and ocean service infrastructures (p. 760).

The Conference decided on 28 August to hold its final decision-making session for the adoption of the Convention in New York from 8 March to 30 April 1982 (p. 130), and adopted a work programme for that session (p. 131).

The draft Convention on the Law of the Sea was issued at the close of the session (p. 131).

First Committee

The First Committee held five formal meetings between 19 March and 27 August 1981 on questions relating to the sea-bed provisions of the Convention and to the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. The first two meetings (19 and 20 March) were devoted to a general debate on the Preparatory Commission (p. 137). At the next two meetings (3 and 7 April), the Committee heard general comments on two reports of the Secretary-General: on potential financial implications for States parties to the future Convention (p. 138), and on the effects of the Convention's production limitation formula for sea-bed mining (p. 132). The fifth meeting (27 August) was devoted to consideration of a report by the Committee Chairman on the results of negotiations on various topics during the resumed session.

The Chairman made three reports during 1981, the first to the Conference on 16 April,<sup>(1)</sup> the second to the Committee on 27 August<sup>(3)</sup> and the third to the Conference on 28 August.<sup>(2)</sup>

The issue of the seat of the Sea-Bed Authority was discussed formally for the first time (p. 133). The opportunity was also given for the examination of any matter that countries felt had not been dealt with formally in the First Committee. In this connection, Australia, on 7 April, made a suggestion about provisions dealing with unfair economic practices relating to sea-bed minerals which might injure the international trading interests of another State party to the Convention (p. 133).

The Committee's Working Group of 21 met under the co-chairmanship of the Conference President and the First Committee Chairman. It concentrated mainly on negotiations regarding the Preparatory Commission. The Working Group continued to be composed of 10 members nominated by the Group of 77 developing countries, China, and 10 members nominated by the principal industrialized States.

Informal consultations were held among delegations on some of the issues discussed at formal meetings, as well as on the composition of the Council of the Authority (p. 133).

Meeting records: Conference on Law of Sea, First Committee, A/CONF.62/C.1/SR.50-54 (19 Mar.-7 Apr. & 27 Aug.).

Second Committee

The Second Committee held four informal meetings, all during the first part of the 1981 session, and heard 119 statements on matters concerning the territorial sea, the exclusive economic zone and fisheries, and other subjects (p. 135). The delimitation of maritime space between States with opposite or adjacent coasts was dealt with separately by the two groups of countries concerned (p. 134).

In a report of 15 April,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee Chairman stated that, while a number of countries had raised a few questions on which they wanted to see changes in the draft Convention, there was a virtual consensus on the fact that it was not desirable or practical to reopen discussion on the basic issues. He added that the draft Convention was acceptable to the great majority of countries, although it was possible to make minor changes designed to clarify or improve it, at such time as the Conference might decide.

Third Committee

The Third Committee held an informal meeting on 25 March 1981, in order to ascertain whether there were still any issues it could discuss. The Chairman, in a report of 17 April,<sup>(1)</sup> reiterated that the substantive negotiations of the Committee had been completed. It had been agreed that the draft Convention with respect to parts XII, XIII and XIV (concerning protection and preservation of the marine environment, marine scientific research, and development and transfer of marine technology) constituted a compromise based on a sound balance which should not be upset by reopening issues already extensively negotiated. It had also been agreed that, if and when called upon by the Conference, the Committee should be available to consider any issue within its terms of reference.

Drafting Committee

The Drafting Committee, together with its six language groups and their co-ordinators, held five series of meetings in 1981, of which three were held while the Conference was in session and two were inter-sessional: from 12 January to 2 March;<sup>(1)</sup> during the first part of the Conference's 1981 session, 9 March to 16 April;<sup>(3)</sup> from 20 to 24 April, after the adjournment of the Conference's other organs;<sup>(4)</sup> from 29 June to 31 July;<sup>(5)</sup> and during the Conference's resumed session, 3 to 28 August.<sup>(7)</sup> The meetings through April were held in New York and the others at Geneva.

The convening of the inter-sessional meetings at Geneva was a proved by the General Assembly on 11 May.<sup>(9)</sup> The Assembly, in a resolution of 9 December on the work of the Conference, also approved the convening of the Committee in New York from 18 January to 26 February 1982, prior to the 1982 session of the Conference.

The work of the Drafting Committee in 1981 was carried out at 695 meetings of the language groups open to all delegations, 75 meetings of the language group co-ordinators under the direction of the Committee Chairman and at 32 meetings of the Committee as a whole, all informal. The Committee maintained its previously established working methods, but altered the procedure for the meetings of the co-ordinators by opening them to all members of the Committee and of the language groups.

The Committee continued the process of harmonization of words, expressions and terminology as well as improving concordance of the draft Convention in its six official languages (Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian, Spanish). It reviewed article by article about 1,000 proposals submitted by the language groups and approved by the co-ordinators on parts II to X, section 5 (6 in the 1980 draft) of part XI, and parts XII to XV of the draft Convention, as well as annexes I to VIII. (For a list of the parts and annexes of the draft Convention, see p. 131.)

The Conference held eight informal plenary meetings—six at the first part of the session<sup>(2)</sup> and two at the resumed session<sup>(6)</sup>—to consider and approve the Committee's recommendations on the following: arts II to X; sections 1 (general provisions), 2 (principles governing the Area) and 5 (settlement of disputes and advisory opinions—section 6 in the 1980 draft) of part XI; parts XII to XV; and annex V.

In an oral report of 17 March, the Chairman informed the Conference that the Committee had found it desirable to avoid records of discussion of drafting changes and suggested that the Conference do likewise in its plenary meetings in order to expedite matters and obviate the need for interpretative statements. He stated that, although the Committee had not always been able to improve linguistic concordance of the texts in the six official languages, it had sought to achieve juridical concordance in all cases.

Eleventh session (1982)

Dates and meeting place

By a resolution of 9 December 1981, <sup>(2)</sup> adopted without vote, the General Assembly approved the convening of the eleventh, final decision-making, session of the Conference in New York from 8 March to 30 April 1982. It authorized the Conference to extend beyond that date exclusively for the purpose of completing its work, should the formal stage of adoption of the Convention and other pertinent decisions have started and more time be needed to finish the decision-making process. It recommended that the Secretary-General provide facilities for informal consultations by delegations, in particular to the members of the Group of 77, and requested him to consult the Government of Venezuela in order to arrange for the signature of the Final Act and the opening of the Convention for signature at Caracas in early September 1982.

The Assembly also approved the convening of the Drafting Committee in January/February 1982 (p. 129) and invited contributions to the Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea (p. 139).

The resolution was based on the Conference's decision of 28 August (p. 1281), as communicated to the Assembly by a letter of 4 November from the Conference President.<sup>(1)</sup>

Introducing the resolution in the Assembly on behalf of 12 nations, Sierra Leone appealed to Governments to forgo the temptation to contemplate a unilateral path and said it was vital for all participants to commit themselves to the successful conclusion of the Conference.

Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3067(XXVIII) of 16 November 1973, 3334(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3483(XXX) of 12 December 1975, 31/63 of 10 December 1976, 32/194 of 20 December 1977, 33/17 of 10 November 1978, 34/20 of 9 November 1979 and 35/116 of 10 December 1980,

Taking note of the letter dated 4 November 1981 from the President of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea to the President of the General Assembly, informing the latter of the decisions adopted by the Conference regarding the holding of its eleventh session from 8 March to 30 April 1982, the possibility of extending the formal work of the Conference beyond that date, should the formal decision-making stage have started, the meeting of the Drafting Committee of the Conference from 18 January to 26 February 1982, the provision of facilities for the Group of Seventy-seven to meet prior to the eleventh session, from 3 to 5 March 1982, and the arrangements for the signature of the Final Act and the opening of the Convention for signature,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General regarding the establishment of a scholarship under the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, in recognition of the unique contribution made by the late President of the Conference to the work of the Conference,

Taking note further of the decision of the Conference requesting the Secretary-General to continue the study on the future functions of the Secretary-General under the draft Convention and on the needs of countries, especially developing countries, for information, advice and assistance under the new legal régime,

1. Approves the convening of the eleventh, final decision-making, session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, in New York, for the period from 8 March to 30 April 1982;

2. Authorizes the Conference to extend its work beyond 30 April 1982, in consultation with the Secretary-General, exclusively for the purpose of completing its work, should the formal stage of adoption of the Convention, of the text of the draft resolution on the establishment of the Preparatory Commission, of the Final Act and of other pertinent decisions have started and more time be needed to finish the decision-making process;

3. Approves also the convening of the Drafting Committee of the Conference in New York from 18 January to 26 February 1982;

4. Recommends that the Secretary-General should provide the necessary facilities for informal consultations to delegations participating in the Conference, in particular to the members of the Group of Seventy-seven;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to consult the Government of Venezuela in order to arrange for the signature of the Final Act and the opening of the Convention for signature at Caracas in early September 1982;

6. Invites the Governments of States participating in the Conference, as well as universities, philanthropic foundations and other interested national and international institutions and organizations, to contribute to the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea in the form recommended by the Secretary-General in his report.

Organization of work

The work programme for the 1982 session, <sup>(1)</sup> approved by the Conference on 28 August 1981, provided for five stages: consultations and negotiations on pending issues, and processing of Drafting Committee recommendations at informal plenary meetings (8-26 March); discussion in plenary of the results of negotiations, followed by the issuance of a memorandum by the collegium listing all changes to be made in the draft Convention (29 March-1 April); decision by the Conference on when to allow formal amendments to the text, and consultations by delegations with their Governments on the decision-making stages of the session (6-12 April); submission of formal amendments if delegations regarded that as necessary, and application of the procedures for seeking general agreement (13-22 April); and adoption of the Convention, the resolution on the establishment of the Preparatory Commission, the Final Act and any other decisions (23-30 April). Should more time be needed to complete the work, the Conference would, in consultation with the Secretary-General, be authorized to extend beyond 30 April exclusively for that purpose.

The work programme was based on proposals submitted by the collegium<sup>(2)</sup> which were modified, in accordance with an oral proposal by Norway as amended by Greece, to allow for the possibility of an extension in the event that the 30 April deadline arrived after the Conference had begun voting. The Conference also agreed on a suggestion by Pakistan to set aside three working days prior to the eleventh session, from 3 to 5 March 1982, for meetings of the Group of 77.

Discussing the work programme, the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany argued that four weeks might be needed for the negotiating stage, while Mauritius and the United Republic of Tanzania thought two weeks would be enough. The Conference agreed to retain the three-week consultation and negotiation period proposed by the collegium.

Mauritius and Pakistan thought the time allowed for decision-making in the fifth stage might be too short. Brazil, Cuba, Kenya, Qatar, Romania (speaking on behalf of the Eastern European Group) and the USSR supported the proposed programme of work; Cuba and the USSR stated that it should be strictly implemented so that the Conference would achieve its goal of adopting the Convention at the next session. The Philippines hoped that no new issues would be raised in 1982.

Issues relating to the draft Convention

As decided by the Conference on the Law of the Sea on 24 August 1981 (p. 128), the official text of the draft Convention on the Law of the Sea was issued at the close of the 1981 session.<sup>(1)</sup> It reproduced the informal text of August 1980 <sup>(2)</sup> with the following changes: (1) The recommendations of the Drafting Committee approved by the Conference in informal plenary meetings during the first and resumed parts of its 1981 session (p. 129) were incorporated. (2) In articles 74 and 83, paragraph 1 was replaced by new texts providing that the delimitation of the exclusive economic zone (article 74) and continental shelf (article 83) between States with opposite or adjacent coasts would be effected by agreement on the basis of international law, in order to achieve an equitable solution (p. 134). (3) A footnote to article 74 concerning the median or equidistance line was deleted. (4) A footnote to article 156, paragraph 3, relating to the Conference's choice of a seat for the projected International Sea-Bed Authority, was deleted and the text changed to read that the seat of the Authority would be in Jamaica (p. 133). (5) A footnote to article 1, paragraph 2, of annex VI, mentioning proposals for the seat of the projected International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, was deleted and the text changed to read that the seat of the Tribunal would be in the Federal Republic of Germany (p. 136).

The draft Convention contained 320 articles, a transitional provision (on non-independent Territories) and eight annexes. The articles were divided into 17 parts, with the following titles: I, Use of terms; II, Territorial sea and contiguous zone; III, Straits used for international navigation; IV, Archipelagic States; V, Exclusive economic zone; VI, Continental shelf; VII, High seas; VIII, Régime of islands; IX, Enclosed or semi-enclosed seas; X, Right of access of land-locked States to and from the sea and freedom of transit; XI, The Area; XII, Protection and preservation of the marine environment; XIII, Marine scientific research; XIV, Development and transfer of marine technology; XV, Settlement of disputes; XVI, General provisions; XVII, Final clauses. The annexes had the following titles: I, Highly migratory species; II, Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf; III, Basic conditions of prospecting, exploration and exploitation; IV, Statute of the Enterprise; V, Conciliation; VI, Statute of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea; VII, Arbitration; VIII, Special arbitration procedure.

Sea-bed

Several issues relating to the future legal system for mining the international sea-bed area and the control machinery of the projected International Sea-Bed Authority were considered by the Conference in 1981. However, a number of issues were left pending after the United States informed the Conference, during the March/April part of its session in New York, that that country's new Administration was engaged in an overall review of the draft Convention and particularly of part IX, concerning the sea-bed, and that the review would not be completed until late in the year.

Sea-bed mining

Production control. At a First Committee meeting on 19 March 1981, Zambia, supported by Zaïre and Zimbabwe, appealed for further examination by the Conference of the issue of sea-bed mineral production policies under the Convention. The position of these countries, along with Gabon and others, was that the production limitation formula contained in the draft Convention failed to provide adequate protection to the land-based producers and exporters of cobalt, manganese, copper and low-grade nickel from adverse effects on their economies likely to result from sea-bed mining. The four States sponsored an informal amendment which, according to a statement by Gabon to the Conference on 16 April, would guarantee a satisfactory profit to the companies exploiting the sea-bed while mitigating the negative effects of the existing provision.

On 3 April, the Committee discussed a report of the Secretary-General dated 24 February,<sup>(3)</sup> requested by the Conference in August 1980,<sup>(4)</sup> on some potential effects of the draft Convention's formula (in article 151) to limit sea-bed production of nickel. The report contained a technical numerical analysis of how the formula might limit such production under various sets of assumptions, including different start-up dates for deep-ocean exploitation and different hypothetical growth rates for world nickel consumption ranging up to 5 per cent a year.

While Canada, Cuba, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States found the report useful, Gabon, Zaïre, Zambia and Zimbabwe criticized it for not adequately showing what they regarded as the potentially catastrophic effects of sea-bed mining on the economies of land-based producers such as themselves. Zambia informally circulated a proposal to base the limitation formula on cobalt rather than nickel, allowing lower tonnages of metals produced from sea-bed mining. Gabon calculated that, under the existing formula, it would lose 30 to 40 per cent of its income from manganese. On the other hand, Belgium and the Federal Republic of Germany expressed concern that the future sea-bed mining system might be too costly for the restricted number of mine-sites that could be established under the production limitation formula.

Canada proposed the establishment of a small group of experts to evaluate further the production limitation formula. The proposal was supported by Australia, Gabon, the Philippines, Zaïre, Zambia and Zimbabwe, while Chile, Cuba, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Peru, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States felt that it should be taken up at the following session. As there was no consensus on the proposal, the Chairman said he would consult delegations informally on the matter.

In his report of 27 August on various First Committee issues,<sup>(2)</sup> the Chairman said there had been no formal negotiations on production policy during 1981. However, having analysed different approaches brought out in his informal consultations, he had come to the conclusion that no single measure might be adequate and that a combination of steps might be needed. He suggested that the matter be studied by the Preparatory Commission (p. 137), which should then make recommendations to the Authority on ways to reach a mutual accommodation among producers and consumers. Reporting to the Conference on 28 August at the end of the resumed session,<sup>(1)</sup> the Chairman said there was room for enlarging the scope of the existing consensus on production policy without disturbing the fundamental structure of the production limitation formula. A balance should be sought that would both stimulate sea-bed production and avoid measures that would have serious adverse effects on the fragile economies of several developing countries.

At plenary meetings on 16 April and 24 August, Gabon; Zaïre and Zimbabwe, supported by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, urged that the production limitation formula, which in their view conferred advantages on producers of marine minerals, should be considered as an unresolved topic requiring further consideration.

The First Committee, on 27 August, approved a suggestion by Liberia on behalf of the African Group that the Conference secretariat should undertake a preliminary study of the potential impact of the Convention on the economies of the developing countries which were producers and exporters of the minerals to be extracted from the international sea-bed area, with special reference to the production limitation formula.

Pioneer investors. The First Committee Chairman, in his report of 27 August 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> referred to the problem of protection of sea-bed investments made by consortia before the Convention entered into force. He stated that the United States had made some concrete proposals on the subject, but had withdrawn them during the first part of the 1981 session; during the resumed session no discussion of the matter had taken place. He appealed to the industrialized countries to ensure that the matter would be discussed at the following session.

On 17 March, during a discussion of the Conference's work programme, Uganda, speaking for the Group of 77, said the Group was not prepared to discuss the subject of pioneer investors in view of the United States decision to review the entire Convention.

Other matters. Consultations continued during 1981 on a so-called unfair practices clause proposed for inclusion in the sea-bed part of the Convention. According to an oral report by Australia presented to the First Committee on 27 August, an earlier text was revised during the year by Australia, its main proponent, following consultations involving potential sea-bed mining countries and land-based mineral producers. The new clause provided that, in the production, processing, transport and marketing of minerals and commodities derived from the resources of the international sea-bed area, parties to the Convention must avoid economic practices which caused, or threatened to cause, material injury to the interests of another party.

Addressing the Conference on 28 August during a discussion of First Committee matters, the United Kingdom said it did not consider that such a provision should be included in the Convention. In response, Australia stated that the unfair practices clause had commended itself to several African, Asian and Latin American countries, and Australia hoped the United Kingdom would drop its reservations.

International Sea-Bed Authority

Membership of the Council. The First Committee Chairman reported at the end of the Conference's 1981 session in August that a stalemate still existed on the problem raised by some smaller and medium-sized industrialized Western States which sought a better representation for such States in the Council of the projected International Sea-Bed Authority.<sup>(1)</sup>

Speaking in the Committee on 27 August, the USSR expressed strong objection to consultations on this matter and to the Chairman's request that they be intensified, stating that the issue had already been settled. Sweden, on the other hand, said the question still posed serious difficulties for several small and medium-sized industrialized countries, and it expressed confidence that an acceptable text could be found without upsetting the balance of the Council's decision-making procedure.

Site of Authority headquarters. On 21 August 1981, at an informal plenary meeting, the Conference voted in favour of Jamaica as the seat of the Sea-Bed Authority. Before the balloting, the President told the meeting that the voting would be indicative rather than formal, that the candidates had agreed to abide by the results and that the outcome would be taken into account in any future revision of the draft Convention. The Conference agreed that, if the country chosen did not become party to the Convention or later withdrew as a party, the Assembly of the Authority would be authorized to select another seat.

In the first of two secret ballots, Jamaica received 69 votes, Malta 56 and Fiji 14; there were 5 abstentions and 1 blank ballot. As no candidate received the required majority of 70 votes, a second ballot was held, limited to the two candidates receiving the most votes in the first ballot. In this deciding ballot, Jamaica obtained 76 votes to 66 for Malta, with 5 abstentions.

Prior to this decision, the site of the Authority was considered by the First Committee on 7 April. Jamaica, recalling that its candidacy had the support of the Group of 77, said that a building (in Kingston) for the Preparatory Commission would be completed by September. Malta said it already had buildings available which the Commission and the Authority could use; however, it objected to the First Committee's discussion of a matter which the Conference had agreed to decide. The latter view was supported by Fiji.

Support for Jamaica's candidacy, which was first put forward in 1974,<sup>(1)</sup> was voiced by Argentina, the Bahamas, Barbados, Botswana, Brazil, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, the Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador (on behalf of the Latin American Group), El Salvador, Ghana, Guyana, Honduras, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, Malawi, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Peru, Saint Lucia, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Madagascar, Morocco and Senegal thought the matter should be discussed later.

At a plenary meeting on 3 August, Malta invited delegation heads to visit Malta as the Government's guests to see the facilities available there for the Authority.

The cost of establishing the Authority's headquarters was discussed in a report of the Secretary-General on the financial aspects of the Convention (p. 138).

Delimitation of maritime boundaries

On 28 August 1981, the President reported to the Conference that there was widespread and substantial support for a new compromise formula on the delimitation between States of adjacent exclusive economic zones and continental shelves. This was confirmed by Ireland and Spain as the chairmen of the two groups involved in negotiations on the issue.

The compromise, later inserted in the draft Convention issued at the close of the 1981 session (p. 130) provided for a revision of two controversial articles (74 and 83) in the 1980 informal draft Convention concerned with delimitation problems arising when States faced one another across a body of water or lay adjacent to one another along a coastline. According to the revised text, delimitation of the exclusive economic zone or continental shelf would be effected by agreement on the basis of international law, as referred to in Article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice (listing the evidence of international law to be applied by the Court in deciding disputes), in order to achieve an equitable solution.

During negotiations lasting several years, the group chaired by Ireland favoured an emphasis on "equitable principles" in resolving maritime boundary disputes, while the group chaired by Spain advocated inclusion in the text of a specific reference to the "equidistance" principle, which called for drawing the boundary line midway between the coastlines. The two groups met informally during both parts of the 1981 session, both jointly and separately.

Argentina, Bulgaria, Chile, Colombia, the German Democratic Republic, Indonesia, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Peru, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR expressed support for the new formula or stated that they would not object to its incorporation in the draft Convention, while Bahrain, China, Egypt, Iran, Israel, Kuwait, Oman, Portugal, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, the United States and Venezuela expressed reservations on the proposal or asked for more time to consider it.

Participation in the Convention

The President of the Conference prepared two reports in 1981 (not issued as formal Conference documents) on the results of informal consultations he had conducted on provisions for participation in the Convention by three categories of entities other than States: national liberation movements, intergovernmental organizations, and self-governing associated States and dependent Territories. He said an understanding had emerged from the consultations that an entity which did not fall within the category of sovereign States could participate in the Convention provided it had competence over matters falling within the scope of the Convention and the capacity to enter into treaties with regard to such matters.

National liberation movements

With regard to national liberation movements recognized by the United Nations and regional intergovernmental organizations, the President reported in August that it had been conceded that such entities could not currently fulfil the two criteria determining participation in the Convention. However, it had been urged that the strict application of those criteria was not appropriate and that, since liberation movements, as evolving States, had the potential to fulfil the criteria, they should be allowed to participate. The opposing view had insisted on strict application of the criteria and contended that failure to allow such participation would not prejudice the position of the future State when it desired to become a party.

The President indicated that further negotiations on this issue would be required.

Intergovernmental organizations

Participation in the Convention by intergovernmental organizations was considered informally at both parts of the Conference's 1981 session. In August, the President suggested a seven-article draft annex to the Convention spelling out the circumstances under which such bodies would be able to adhere, linked to a revised article 305 under which the Convention could be signed by any international organization to which States signatories to the Convention that were members of such organizations had transferred competence over matters governed by the Convention, including the competence to enter into treaties in respect of such matters. A new article 306 his would permit such organizations to adhere to the Convention by acts of formal confirmation, and a revised article 307 would enable them to accede (a process of adherence not involving prior signature).

The proposed new annex contained provisions on signature, acceptance, rights and obligations, declarations and notifications, responsibility of international organizations and settlement of disputes involving an international organization party to the Convention.

Self-governing associated States and dependent Territories

The President reported in April 1981 that it had been found during consultations that self-governing associated States satisfied the two criteria established for participation in the Convention. It had been pointed out that, if such States did not participate in their own right, the Convention could not apply to them at all, as no other State was entitled to act on their behalf.

With regard to dependent Territories, the President said three points had emerged: not all such Territories could be allowed to participate as a class; the question of disputed Territories should be set aside for the moment; and some Territories which had achieved full internal self-government in a manner consistent with United Nations resolutions could satisfy the two criteria.

Territorial sea

Innocent passage

A number of States expressed reservations on article 21 of the draft Convention, governing the innocent passage of foreign warships through the territorial sea.

Reporting to the Conference on 15 April 1981, <sup>(1)</sup> the Second Committee Chairman noted that several States had proposed the establishment of a working group or that consultations be held among the most interested countries with the aim of harmonizing the different points of view. However, he had found from consultations that there was no agreement on the establishment of a working, negotiating or consulting group for that purpose.

During discussion in plenary meetings on 15 April and 24 August, a number of speakers, including Argentina, Cape Verde, China, the Congo, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ecuador, Egypt, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Romania, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen, favoured a change in the text that would require prior notification to or authorization by the coastal State for such passage. Ecuador remarked that the Convention must guarantee the rights which many States had long exercised in their territorial sea.

Australia, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Chile, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Kenya, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Poland, Portugal, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam maintained that there was apparent agreement on the substantive provisions of the draft, which should not be renegotiated. Some, such as France, Italy and the United States, specifically urged retention of the existing wording providing for freedom of passage for all ships. The USSR said the existing formula safeguarded both the security interests of coastal states and the interests of international navigation.

Sanitary regulations

By a letter of 21 August 1980, circulated as a Conference document in March 1981, <sup>(1)</sup> the Director-General of the World Health Organization stated that clauses in articles 21 and 42 of the draft Convention, dealing with the right of coastal States to make laws and regulations relating respectively to innocent passage through the territorial sea and to transit passage through straits used for international navigation, were compatible with the International Health Regulations.

Exclusive economic zone

A few matters pertaining to the draft Convention's provisions on the exclusive economic zone—the maritime area extending to 200 nautical miles from the coast between the territorial sea and the high seas—were raised during the Conference's discussion on 15 April 1981 of the report by the Second Committee Chairman, as well as its consideration on 24 August of its 1982 work programme.

Land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States. Several land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States raised the question of their access to the exclusive economic zone. Zaire said that, without amendments to the existing text, the rights accorded to land-locked States and those with special geographical characteristics might remain theoretical. Romania called for continued consultations, arguing that geographically disadvantaged States situated in a region poor in living marine resources must be assured access to such resources of coastal States in adjacent regions, in accordance with an informal proposal it had presented. Zambia, supported by Zimbabwe, suggested that the area beyond 12 miles should be of a regional nature so as to ensure that the land-locked, coastal and geographically disadvantaged States had access to its natural resources.

The German Democratic Republic stated its opposition to proposals designed to change the provisions on access to the living resources in the economic zones of coastal States by land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States to the disadvantage of any member of that group of States, whether developed or developing. Peru could not agree with the changes proposed by Zaire, and said Zambia's proposal seemed anachronistic in the light of the negotiations and the practice established among States over the previous 10 years.

Fishery conservation. Argentina urged that consultations continue on the conservation of fish stocks occurring in two or more adjacent exclusive economic zones or straddling such zones and the high seas; it supported an informal amendment proposed by Uruguay and others to article 63 of the draft Convention, arguing that the amendment sought better protection for those resources and would benefit all countries. Uruguay hoped the text could be amended by consensus after consultation and negotiation.

The German Democratic Republic opposed the amendment on the ground that it would curtail freedom of fishing in areas adjacent to the exclusive economic zone, and the USSR remarked that approximately 60 land-locked or geographically disadvantaged States, backed by a large number of other countries, were unable to accept the amendment. Hungary, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR also opposed a reopening of discussion on this question.

Offshore structures. The United Kingdom detailed its informal proposal to modify article 60, paragraph 3, on the removal of abandoned or disused installations or structures in the exclusive economic zone. According to the proposal, such structures would be removed as necessary to assure safe navigation of ships in accordance with generally accepted international standards; such removal would have due regard to fishing, protection of the marine environment, and the rights and duties of other States. Publicity would have to be given to information on the depth and position of any installations or structures which were not entirely removed. Support for the proposal was expressed by Italy, and France said it would consider the proposal with sympathy.

Proposed Common Heritage Fund A number of land-locked States urged support for their proposal to establish a Common Heritage Fund which would redistribute to developing countries a share of the revenues derived from exploitation of the natural resources of the exclusive economic zone and the continental shelf. Nepal said the sponsors of that proposal had agreed to place a ceiling on the rate of contributions to the Fund and to ensure that the amount received by a developing country from the Fund would be no less than that Government's contribution.

The proposal was supported by Israel, the Niger, Zambia and Zimbabwe, while Algeria said it deserved serious consideration and Yugoslavia promised to study the revised formula with interest. The Niger said the proposal was aimed at reducing the widening gap between developed and developing countries, and counterbalancing the situation of countries disadvantaged by geographical location or history.

In Peru's opinion, on the other hand, the proposal had the support only of its sponsors and a limited number of others; any proposal on financing could be accepted only if it were based on revenues from the international sea-bed area or the continental shelf—not from the exclusive economic zone, over which coastal States exercised express rights.

Location of the Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

At an informal plenary meeting on 21 August 1981, the Conference voted in favour of the Federal Republic of Germany as the seat of the projected International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. The other candidates were Portugal and Yugoslavia.

Two secret ballots were needed. In the first, with a required majority of 71, the Federal Republic of Germany received 67 votes, Yugoslavia 59 and Portugal 15; there were 3 abstentions and 1 blank ballot. The results of the second ballot, limited to the two countries receiving the most votes on the first ballot, were 78 for the Federal Republic of Germany and 61 for Yugoslavia; there were 4 abstentions and 2 blank ballots.

As in the case of the decision on the site of the International Sea-Bed Authority headquarters (p. 133), the voting was indicative rather than formal. The result was incorporated into the draft Convention issued at the close of the Conference's 1981 session (p. 131). The Conference agreed that, if the country chosen did not adhere to the Convention or later withdrew as a party, another location would be selected.

By a letter of 17 March to the Conference President,<sup>(*)</sup> the Federal Republic of Germany reiterated its offer of Hamburg for the seat of the Tribunal. The offer was first made in August 1980.<sup>(2)</sup> At a plenary meeting on 16 April 1981, Portugal offered as the site of the Tribunal the Cascais fortress, former summer residence of the Portuguese President on the Atlantic coast.

Establishment of a Preparatory Commission

A draft resolution on the establishment of a Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, prepared in March 1980 by the former President of the Conference as a result of discussions at informal plenary meetings,<sup>(3)</sup> was considered by the First Committee on 19 and 20 March 1981. It was discussed further in April, and again in August, at informal meetings of the Working Group of 21, co-chaired by the President and the First Committee Chairman, as well as at a First Committee meeting on 27 August. The co-Chairmen prepared an informal draft text on 6 August which they revised on 26 August.

On 16 April, the First Committee Chairman reported to the Conference<sup>(1)</sup> a general agreement in the Working Group that: the Commission should be established by a resolution of the Conference included in its Final Act; the objective of the Commission was to make provisional arrangements for the first sessions of the Authority's Assembly and Council, for the establishment of its secretariat and Enterprise (its mining arm), and for the convening of the Tribunal; the United Nations Secretary-General should be empowered to convene the Commission once 50 States signed or acceded to the Convention; and the Commission's life should not be unduly long, considering the nature of its mandate and the need to have the Authority established expeditiously.

The discussion revealed divergences of view on critical issues relating to the composition, mandate, decision-making system and financing of the Commission.

Referring to the discussion in the Working Group of 21, the First Committee Chairman noted in his report that some industrialized countries preferred the membership of the Commission to be open to all signatories of the Conference's Final Act. This position was endorsed in the Committee and at a plenary meeting on 16 April by Austria, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Japan, Nepal, Portugal, Spain and the United Kingdom. The arguments they advanced were that preparations for the establishment of a world-wide organization should be approved on as broad a basis as possible and that such an arrangement would avoid the problem of a changing membership. The Federal Republic of Germany said it was eager to contribute to the Commission's work from the start, but that might not be possible if it first had to sign the Convention—a potentially lengthy process under its national law.

Others, such as Argentina, 'Colombia, the German Democratic Republic, Haiti, India, Iraq, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, Senegal, Sri Lanka, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, Uruguay and Yugoslavia, believed that signature of the Convention must be the minimum criterion for membership. It was stated that membership must be based on the clearly expressed desire of States to assume the rights and obligations provided for in the Convention; that such a rule would offer an incentive for States to sign the Convention as soon as possible; that signatories of the Convention and signatories of the Final Act could hardly be treated on the same footing; and that allowing signatories of the Final Act to become members might enable some States to obtain concessions or advantages without later becoming members of the Authority. Peru, speaking on behalf of the Group of 77, expressed willingness to accept a compromise granting observer status to States which signed only the Final Act, empowering them to participate fully in the Commission's deliberations but not to take part in decision-making. The Netherlands thought it might be useful to discuss a formula enabling all States to participate in the Commission but drawing a distinction in regard to decision-making between those which had signed the Convention and those which had signed only the Final Act.

Summarizing the results of the discussion on these issues at the resumed session, the First Committee Chairman, in his report of 27 August,<sup>(2)</sup> said it was recognized that the issue of membership was linked to decision-making on substantive questions and to the financing of the Commission.

With regard to decision-making, the Chairman, in his report of 16 April, stated that the Western industrialized and the Eastern European countries appeared to insist that decisions be taken by consensus, while the Group of 77 favoured a two-stage approach in which failure to achieve consensus would be followed by voting. As reported by the Chairman on 27 August, the Group of 77 further clarified its position by supporting in principle a two-thirds majority rule for decisions on all substantive issues.

Commenting in the Committee on the Chairman's August report, the USSR said it was prepared to negotiate with the Group of 77 and others in order to find a compromise on the basis of the decision-making formula applicable to the Authority's Council.<sup>(4)</sup>

With regard to the financing of the Commission, the Chairman said in his April report that the issue presented some difficulties. At the first part of the session, all sides had agreed to having the United Nations provide for the initial costs, but some had seen legal and practical difficulties. The Group of 77 and the Eastern European States had argued that the Commission should be financed from the United Nations regular budget, but others had pointed out that that procedure would require non-signatories of the Convention to contribute. The industrialized Western States had taken the position that the Commission should be financed by a repayable loan from the United Nations. The revised draft submitted by the two co-Chairmen on 26 August adopted the former approach.

With regard to the Commission's functions, the First Committee Chairman reported that there appeared to be general agreement on its broad mandate of preparing for the establishment of the Authority and the Tribunal. However, at the first part of the session, the industrialized countries had considered it premature to discuss the establishment of the Enterprise, arguing that that had to be taken up along with proposals for protecting pioneer sea-bed investments. The Group of 77 and other members of the Working Group, on the other hand, had thought it imperative for the Commission to have this function, as the Enterprise would be a main organ of the future system for deep-sea mining. At the resumed session, as reported by the Chairman, the industrialized countries accepted this as a function of the Commission, provided that it was also given the task of making arrangements for the other track of the parallel system, namely exploration and exploitation of the sea-bed by State and private operators.

Agreement was reported at the resumed session that the Commission should prepare draft rules, regulations and procedures of the Authority, be empowered to establish subsidiary organs and make use of outside experts, and prepare a final report on its work, though it was disputed as to whether that report should go to the Authority, its Assembly or Council, the Secretary-General or the General Assembly.

Concerning the location of the Commission, the co-Chairmen proposed in their draft of 26 August that the Commission meet at the seat of the Authority if facilities were available. Colombia, speaking in the First Committee, opposed this proposal, stating that the Commission should meet at United Nations Headquarters for reasons of efficiency and economy. Kenya, however, expressed dismay that anyone should regard it as illogical for the Commission to work at the seat of the Authority.

No agreement was reached in 1981 on the issue of when the Commission should terminate its work. Some members preferred it to remain in existence until both the Assembly and the Council of the Authority had been convened, while the Group of 77 considered that it should conclude its work upon the convening of the Assembly. The co-Chairmen proposed on 26 August that it remain in existence until the conclusion of the Assembly's first session.

The Group of 77 also proposed that the Commission should not continue indefinitely if the Convention had not entered into force after five years. This idea was supported by some participants in the Working Group, while others regarded such a provision as premature.

In his report of 27 August to the First Committee, the Chairman said substantial agreement had been reached in the Working Group of 21 on many basic issues relating to the Commission. He identified membership, decision-making, financing and termination of the Commission's work as issues still unresolved, and suggested they be dealt with as a package.

Financial aspects

On 7 April 1981, the First Committee discussed a report by the Secretary-General, submitted in February, on the potential financial implications for States parties to the future Convention on the Law of the Sea.<sup>(1)</sup> The report provided preliminary estimates of possible costs of the main organs to be established under the Convention, as well as of the contributions of States parties to the financing of the first mine-site to be operated by the Enterprise.

Three possible levels of cost were provided for each of these organs. The ranges were as follows (rounded to the nearest million dollars): for the Authority, $51-112 million to construct and equip a headquarters, $20-26 million annually to operate; for the Enterprise, $32-70 million to construct and equip, $14-17 million annually to operate; for the Tribunal, $21-47 million to construct and equip, $5-7 million annually to operate; for the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, $2 million annually; for the Preparatory Commission, $1 million to service meetings, no estimate for other costs; total, $104-229 million for headquarters, $41-53 million annually for operation.

Concerning the cost of an initial sea-bed mining venture, the report assumed three alternative amounts (in 1980 dollars): $700 million, $1,000 million and $1,400 million. Under the draft Convention, half of these amounts, along with half of the administrative costs of the Enterprise, would be contributed by all States parties by way of interest-free loans; the remaining half would be borrowed by the Enterprise on the world credit market.

Introducing the report in the Committee on 3 April, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General stated that it was based on a number of assumptions that were subject to revision in the light of future events.

Commenting on the report, several speakers, including the German Democratic Republic, Iran, Romania and the USSR, stressed the need for the most economical arrangements possible.

Functions of the Secretary-General

During its resumed session in August 1981, the Conference received a study by the Secretary-General on his future functions under the Convention and on the needs of countries, especially developing countries, for information, advice and assistance under the new legal regime.<sup>(2)</sup>

The report detailed the functions which the Convention would assign to the Secretary-General with respect to the establishment of the limits of coastal State jurisdiction, depositary and related functions, administrative functions associated with the convening of meetings of States parties, dispute-settlement functions and reporting. The Secretariat would also be involved in the co-ordination of marine-related activities and the establishment of policies with regard to problems of ocean space.

The study concluded that the provision of information, advice and assistance in the various sectors covered by the Convention would be the responsibility of specific United Nations organizations or entities. A common understanding must be reached on the future roles of the international organizations concerned in the implementation of the Convention.

The report, requested by the General Assembly in December 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> was briefly considered by the Conference on 28 August 1981. On a suggestion by Peru, supported by Bulgaria, Pakistan and Uruguay, the Conference decided to request the Secretary-General to continue the study.

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, at its May/June session in New York (p. 1076), decided to consider in 1983 a cross-organizational programme analysis of marine affairs activities by organizations of the United Nations system.<sup>(1)</sup>

Other questions

Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea

The General Assembly, in its resolution of 9 December 1981 on the Conference on the Law of the Sea,<sup>(3)</sup> invited States participating in the Conference, as well as universities, philanthropic foundations and other interested national and international institutions and organizations, to contribute to the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, in the form recommended in a report by the Secretary-General.

In his report of November 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General presented recommendations for an annual award by the United Nations of a fellowship in the field of the law of the sea and related matters, as a memorial to Mr. Amerasinghe, the Sri Lankan diplomat who was President of the Conference until his death in December 1980. The report was requested by the Assembly in 1980.<sup>(2)</sup>

According to the Secretary-General's recommendations, the Fellowship would be funded from voluntary contributions and awarded annually by the Conference secretariat, after consultation with the President of the Conference. It would provide an academic component, followed by specialized training in matters relating to the law of the sea within the Conference secretariat. It would be carried out by that secretariat, during 1982-1983 and in subsequent years, under the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law (p. 1267). Contributions for the Fellowship would be sought from the States and organizations periodically invited by the Secretary-General to contribute to the Programme. These arrangements relating to the Programme were endorsed by the Programme's Advisory Committee.

Marine science and technology

The Conference decided on 28 August 1981 to postpone a decision on a draft resolution, submitted by Pakistan on behalf of the Group of 77,<sup>(1)</sup> on assistance to strengthen the marine science, technology and ocean services of developing countries (p. 760).

Chapter IV

International peace and security

The General Assembly adopted in December 1981 a Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States,<sup>(8)</sup> affirming that no State had the right to intervene or interfere in the internal or external affairs of other States.

This was the main action emerging in 1981 from the Assembly's annual consideration of issues pertaining to international security, with special reference to implementation of its 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security.<sup>(2)</sup> In a related resolution, the Assembly made recommendations to States and the Security Council on ways of improving the world security situation.<sup>(7)</sup> In another action, the Assembly invited States to intensify efforts to implement its 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace.<sup>(3)</sup>

Concerning peace and security between neighbouring States, the Assembly called on States to develop good-neighbourly relations and sought governments' views on ways to enhance good-neighbourliness so as to prevent conflicts.<sup>(6)</sup>

After receiving an inconclusive report from its Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations,<sup>(1)</sup> the Assembly again urged the Committee to work towards completion of agreed guidelines for United Nations peace-keeping operations and to devote attention to the practical implementation of such operations.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Assembly proclaimed an International Day of Peace, to be celebrated on the third Tuesday of each September, and invited the Economic and Social Council to consider declaring an International Year of Peace.<sup>(5)</sup>

Other questions pertaining to international political relations were examined by the Assembly from their legal aspects (p. 1204).

Implementation of the 1970 Declaration on international security

COMMUNICATIONS. In 1981, as in previous years, many communications from United Nations Member States addressed to the Secretary-General were circulated under the General Assembly agenda item "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security". A number of these dealt with disarmament or with specific disputes or situations, including the armed attack against Seychelles (p. 226), the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Sudan (p. 225), other questions concerning the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (p. 358), the Afghanistan situation (p. 232), the Kampuchea situation (p. 239), the Kampuchea-Thailand border (p. 249), the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand (p. 249), China and Viet Nam (p. 250), Guyana and Venezuela (p. 254), and the Western Sahara question (p. 1193). Others, concerned with general aspects of international security, are summarized below.

By a letter of 24 June,<sup>(15)</sup> the USSR transmitted the text of an appeal from its Supreme Soviet to the parliaments and peoples of the world, adopted on 23 June, declaring that the achievement of peace was the highest goal of the foreign policy of the Soviet State and urging the legislative organs of all countries to support negotiations for the prevention of a new phase of the nuclear missile race. This appeal was supported in a declaration of 25 June by the People's Chamber of the German Democratic Republic, transmitted on 3 July;<sup>(4)</sup> a declaration of 30 June by the Federal Assembly of Czechoslovakia, transmitted on 4 August;<sup>(3)</sup> a declaration of 4 July by the National Assembly of Viet Nam, transmitted on 26 August;<sup>(16)</sup> and a declaration of 7 July by the People's Assembly of Bulgaria, transmitted on 20 July.<sup>(1)</sup>

By a note verbale of 25 June,<sup>(7)</sup> Mongolia transmitted a statement by its Government reviewing the international situation and mentioning a proposal made on 26 May by the Chairman of the Presidium of the Great People's Khural of Mongolia for the drafting and signature of a convention on non-aggression and non-use of force in Asia and the Pacific. This proposal, which also called for the convening of a conference of Asian and Pacific States to which the five permanent members of the Security Council could be invited, was referred to again in an appeal by the Khural to the parliaments of all countries of the region, adopted on 29 June and transmitted on 15 July.<sup>(8)</sup> Further particulars of the proposal were provided in a message dated 21 September from the Chairman of the Presidium, transmitted on 9 October.<sup>(9)</sup>

Two appeals by the Grand National Assembly of Romania were transmitted. In the first, adopted at a session held on 30 June and 1 July and communicated on 2 July,<sup>(10)</sup> the parliaments of the States that had signed the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (Helsinki, Finland, 1975) were asked to join in measures of co-operation and disarmament in Europe. In the second appeal, adopted at a session of 27 and 28 November and communicated on 30 November,<sup>(13)</sup> the parliaments, Governments and peoples of European countries, the United States and Canada were asked to co-operate in ensuring respect for the right of the European peoples to develop freely on the path to progress, co-operation and peace; in stopping the armaments race; in achieving general disarmament, and first and foremost nuclear disarmament; in strengthening security and co-operation in Europe; and in building a better and more just world. Romania also transmitted, on 4 November,<sup>(12)</sup> an appeal for disarmament and peace adopted on 30 October by its Socialist Democracy and Unity Front.

By a letter of 18 September,<sup>(11)</sup> Romania transmitted the text of a message from its President to the participants in the International Symposium "Scientists and Peace", held at Bucharest on 4 and 5 September, and of an appeal by the participants announcing the establishment of an International Action Committee to organize scientific activities, expose the dangers of the arms race, inform the public about them, formulate measures to avoid them and prepare for a world congress of scientists in the service of peace.

By a letter of 5 December,<sup>(14)</sup> Romania transmitted a communiqué adopted at a Bucharest meeting on 1 and 2 December of the Committee of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States Parties to the 1955 Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance, setting out their views on the international situation and urging a series of steps towards disarmament.

By a letter of 11 November,<sup>(2)</sup> Bulgaria forwarded excerpts from a speech by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of its Communist Party and President of its State Council, delivered at a ceremonial meeting in Sofia on 20 October dedicated to the 1300th anniversary of the founding of the Bulgarian State, stressing the need for co-operation among Balkan States and proposing a meeting on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the area (p. 44).

By a letter of 25 June,<sup>(6)</sup> Malta transmitted a declaration on the neutrality of Malta approved by its Government on 14 May, declaring Malta to be a neutral State that would refuse to participate in any military alliance and would not permit foreign military bases on its territory. By a letter of 25 June,<sup>(5)</sup> Italy transmitted a declaration of its Government issued on 15 May, welcoming the Maltese declaration, pledging to respect Malta's sovereignty and neutrality, and inviting all other States to do likewise.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 9 December,<sup>(18)</sup> the General Assembly called on States to help implement the Declaration on international security.<sup>(17)</sup> It urged them, particularly the permanent members of the Security Council, to refrain from any threat or use of force against a State or its rights over its natural resources, to reject situations brought about by such use, to take measures to prevent the disruption of detente, to seek the peaceful settlement of disputes, to start meaningful disarmament negotiations, to support national liberation movements and to proceed to global economic negotiations (p. 380). It requested the Council to examine mechanisms for enhancing its authority and enforcement capacity, and to explore the possibility of holding periodic high-level meetings on conflict prevention. It called on participants in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to seek substantial results, favoured further efforts to transform the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and co-operation, and called for the views of Governments on the latter question.

Other provisions of the resolution concerned the nuclear capability of South Africa (p. 46), the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace (p. 94), and human rights and peace (p. 974).

This resolution, sponsored by 20 nations, was adopted by a recorded vote of 127 to none, with 20 abstentions, following its approval in the First

Committee on 3 December by a recorded vote of 93 to none, with 21 abstentions. The original draft was revised by its sponsors before adoption.

Introducing the resolution, Yugoslavia said it reflected the particular attention that the non-aligned countries paid to the question of strengthening international security, as well as their concern over the aggravation of the international situation.

In explanation of its abstention in the vote, Israel stated that much of the text was calculated to encourage confrontation and hostility rather than dialogue and mutual understanding. The United States, also abstaining, said it had serious reservations about the utility of the many resolutions on the subject when the Charter of the United Nations provided the best guidelines for measures to strengthen peace and security; it also objected to calls for support to national liberation movements without recognition of the role of peaceful settlement of disputes.

Albania, stating that it would not participate in the vote, said it had a different opinion about detente from that implied in the text; it did not approve of appeals to permanent members of the Security Council, since they included the super-Powers responsible for world tension; for a similar reason, it did not agree with the idea of high-level Council meetings; it had reservations on the idea of nuclear-weapon-free zones; it thought peace and security in the Mediterranean would be better served by countering the manoeuvres and designs of the imperialist super-Powers, particularly with respect to the presence of the USSR and United States navies there; also, it did not accept the resolution's evaluations of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

Among those voting for the resolution but with reservations, Austria said the requests to the Security Council did not take full account of the delimitation of functions of different United Nations organs. Finland emphasized that there should be strict compliance with Charter provisions concerning the powers of the Council and the General Assembly. Ireland also had reservations about references touching on the competences of the two organs. France did not consider that the international mechanisms for maintaining peace and security could be questioned as institutions.

Austria stated that it could not support the proposal to transform the Mediterranean into a zone of peace, as long as the concept had not been defined and clarified in discussions with all countries of the region and until their readiness to participate had been ascertained. Finland said the regional arrangements dealt with in the text could only be arrived at freely among the States of the region concerned and with undiminished security for all. Spain, abstaining in the vote, said it had reservations on viewpoints and terms used in reference to the Mediterranean. Turkey, though it also abstained on the resolution, said the provision on the Mediterranean took account of its own security concerns and came close to its concept.

France and the United States said that the rights of States to dispose of their' natural resources must be exercised with respect for international law.

Reservations were also expressed by France on the paragraph on South Africa's nuclear capability, and by France and the United States on the references to the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace.

During the general debate on international security, a number of suggestions were made for steps to bring about a more secure world through improved international relations. Bulgaria urged contacts and the beginning of a dialogue to achieve mutually acceptable understandings on key questions, while respecting the principle of equal security and the legitimate interests of the opposing side. The Byelorussian SSR stressed the need to settle conflicts by peaceful means, around the negotiating table. Hungary welcomed efforts to revitalize negotiations and other contacts between the USSR and the United States, and said it intended to continue to establish and broaden contacts with every country, without exception, that was ready for dialogue.

Poland said it was necessary to seek ways of reducing conflicts, to institutionalize various forms of governmental and non-governmental consultations and make them more substantive, to develop forms of co-operation based wherever possible on long-range agreements, and to strive for vital national objectives through negotiation without attempting to impose one's will. Romania considered that there was no conflict that could not be settled by negotiations conducted in a spirit of understanding and mutual respect, and also believed that inter-State relations must be democratized and based on absolute respect for the principles of international law. The Ukrainian SSR favoured an active and thorough dialogue and negotiations in all forms and at all levels, including the highest, aiming at urgent joint action to reduce the threat of war, curb the arms race and ensure world peace.

Cuba stated that security could be strengthened by ending the arms race, eradicating colonialism, radically transforming the structure of international economic relations, ending all acts of aggression, resolving the Middle East conflict and eliminating the racist apartheid regime. Sri Lanka also had an agenda for strengthening security, which called for completing decolonization, eradicating racism and apartheid, making tangible progress towards general and complete disarmament, dismantling military blocs and alliances, enabling nations to feel secure from foreign domination and aggression and from intervention in their internal affairs, and restructuring international economic relations on a more equitable basis.

In the view of Bangladesh, concerted international economic co-operation, on the basis of an agreed strategy to reduce and eliminate the gap between the developed and developing countries, was a vital pre-condition for the strengthening of international peace and security. Nigeria questioned whether the doctrine of deterrence, or balance of terror, would prove a reliable instrument of control in a crisis.

To foster the preservation of peace and security, said Trinidad and Tobago, all nations should pledge to abide by the principles of the Charter and to accept the authority of United Nations organs. Venezuela stated that respect for, and compliance in good faith with, international agreements concluded by States constituted one of the foundations of peaceful, harmonious coexistence among States.

Cyprus stressed the importance of maintaining order and security through the prevention or suppression of acts of aggression, and suggested that the Assembly hold a special session on international security within the system established by the Charter.

Eastern European States and some others held the United States responsible for a worsening international situation. Czechoslovakia stated that the imperialist forces headed by the United States were striving by military and other means to negate the positive results achieved through détente. Viet Nam said the world situation was characterized by a new recrudescence of aggressiveness by the United States against the security of third world countries and an ever closer collusion between Washington and Beijing. The USSR described its own peace programme, put forward by its Communist Party Congress early in 1981, calling for steps towards disarmament, settlement of disputes in the Middle East and the Persian Gulf, and a high-level meeting of the Security Council; it contrasted that programme to that it described as the irresponsible policy of the United States aimed at securing a position of superior force.

In Albania's view, the two imperialist super-Powers-pursuing an aggressive, hegemonic, neo-colonialist policy-were primarily responsible for the dangers jeopardizing peace and security. China stated that the correct way to strengthen peace and security was for the people of the world to unite and wage a resolute struggle against the hegemonists.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic supported the USSR proposal that a special session of the Security Council be held at the highest level to seek a solution to the most pressing international problems. The German Democratic Republic thought such a meeting would provide an opportunity, by means of constructive dialogue, to reach a decision on a reasonable balance.

Cyprus stated that there was an urgent need to comply with Article 43 of the Charter by creating an international force to give effect to the Council's decisions. Malta welcomed and supported efforts to strengthen the Council. Sri Lanka stated that, while it did not intend to pillory the Council or blame it for the state of the world, careful consideration should be given to ways in which its authority and enforcement capacity could be utilized for the settlement of outstanding issues. Yugoslavia thought the Council should be far more active and efficient in defence of peace and in the search for solutions, and regretted that there was no initiative from the Council to that end.

The Sudan supported the idea of establishing zones of peace in the Indian Ocean, the Mediterranean, Africa, the Middle East, Asia and Latin America. The concept of zones of peace was also endorsed by Yugoslavia.

Several States, including Czechoslovakia and Hungary, spoke in favour of the creation of a zone of peace and co-operation in the Mediterranean. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reiterated its support for maintenance of the Mediterranean's neutrality, as a sea of peace. Malta said the establishment of such a zone would enable component States to tackle their own problems, free from super-Power interference, and could eventually entail the creation of a political forum for periodic discussion. Yugoslavia also supported the idea, adding that security in that area must be considered in the context of the situation in Europe and the world as a whole.

The USSR said it would welcome the conversion of the Mediterranean from a scene of military and political confrontation into a zone of stable peace and co-operation, through the application of confidence-building measures in the military field, an agreed reduction of armed forces, withdrawal of ships carrying nuclear weapons, renunciation of the stationing of nuclear weapons on the territory of non-nuclear-weapon countries, and acceptance by nuclear-weapon Powers of the obligation not to use nuclear weapons against a Mediterranean country which did not permit such weapons to be placed on its soil.

Concerning peace and security in Europe, a number of speakers commented favourably on proposals made to the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, meeting at Madrid, Spain, for a further conference on military security in Europe, also discussed during the First Committee's disarmament debate (p. 89). Albania accused the United States and the USSR of plotting in the Balkans to inflame chauvinistic feelings, set the peoples and countries of the area against one another and prevent the development of good-neighbourly relations. Romania supported efforts to develop economic, technical, scientific and cultural co-operation among all European States, without distinction as to social systems, and eventually to free the continent from nuclear weapons.

With regard to Asia and the Pacific, Mongolia outlined its proposal, described in communications to the Secretary-General (p. 141), for a regional conference to conclude a convention on non-aggression and non-use of force. The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam supported the proposal.

Many speakers commented on aspects of international security also dealt with under separate agenda items. Thus, a number of States—including Cyprus, Malta, Nigeria, Poland and Romania—referred to the close link between disarmament and international security, a connection discussed during the First Committee's disarmament debate (p. 100). Suggestions were made by Bangladesh, Nigeria and Romania to strengthen the role of the United Nations, a topic discussed in greater detail by the Sixth (Legal) Committee (p. 1236).

States directly involved in particular disputes gave their views on those situations, including disputes between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta over the continental shelf (p. 358) and Guyana and Venezuela over borders (p. 254), as well as the situations between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States (p. 360) and between Nicaragua and the United States (p. 255).

Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security",

Noting with concern that the provisions of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security have not yet been fully implemented,

Profoundly disturbed by the escalation of tension in the world, the ever more frequent recourse to the threat or use of force, intervention, interference, aggression and foreign occupation, the continued stalemate in the solution of crises in different regions, the continuous escalation of the arms race and military build-up, the pursuance of the policy of rivalry, the confrontation and struggle for the division of the world into spheres of influence and domination, the persistence of colonialism, racism and apartheid, and the lack of solution of the economic problems of developing countries, all of which endanger international peace and security,

Deeply concerned that the process of relaxation of international tension has reached a point of deep crisis owing to the lack of progress in the settlement of international problems and conflicts and to the stalemate in the process of disarmament,

Stressing the need for the main organs of the United Nations responsible for the maintenance of peace and security, particularly the Security Council, to contribute more effectively to the promotion of international peace and security by seeking solutions to the unresolved problems and crises in the world,

Emphasizing that, in its twenty years of existence, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries has significantly contributed to the efforts of the United Nations towards the promotion of international peace and security, the democratization of international relations, the development of international co-operation and the establishment of a system of international relations based on justice, sovereign equality and equal security of all States and peoples, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the principles and policy of non-alignment.

1. Expresses its deep concern over the aggravation of focal points of international tension and crisis in the world, more frequent recourse to force and increasing violations of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms once more the universal and unconditional validity of the purposes and principles of the Charter as the firm basis of relations among all States, irrespective of size, geographical location, level of development or political, economic, social or ideological systems;

3. Urges all States to abide strictly, in their international relations, by their commitment to the Charter and, to that end:

(a) To refrain from any threat or use of force, intervention, interference, aggression, foreign occupation or measures of political and economic coercion which violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of other States or their right freely to dispose of their natural resources;

(b) To refrain from supporting or encouraging any such act for any reason whatsoever;

(c) To reject and refuse recognition of situations brought about by any such act;

4. Calls upon all States to contribute effectively to the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security;

5. Urges all States, in particular the permanent members of the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to prevent the further aggravation of the international situation and the disruption of the process of detente and, to this end:

(a) To seek the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elimination of the focal points of crisis and tension;

(b) To start serious, meaningful and effective negotiations on disarmament and on the halting of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, on the basis of the recommendation of the General Assembly at its tenth special session;

(c) To contribute to an urgent solution of international economic problems and the establishment of the new international economic order;

(d) To accelerate the economic development of developing countries, particularly the least developed ones;

(e) To proceed without any delay to a global consideration of ways and means for a revival of the world economy and for the restructuring of international economic relations within the framework of the global negotiations;

6. Takes note of the fact that the Security Council has failed to report to the General Assembly on steps taken to implement the provisions of paragraphs 13 and 15 of Assembly resolution 35/158 of 12 December 1960;

7. Requests the Security Council to consider ways and means to ensure the implementation of the provisions of paragraph 5 above as well as to examine all existing mechanisms and to propose new ones aimed at enhancing the authority and enforcement capacity of the Council in accordance with the Charter, and to explore also the possibility of holding periodic meetings of the Council, in conformity with Article 28 of the Charter, at the ministerial or higher level in specific cases, so as to enable it to play a more active role in preventing potential conflicts, and to present the Council's conclusions to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

8. Reiterates the need for the Security Council, particularly its permanent members, to ensure the effective implementation of its own decisions in compliance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

9. Considers that respect for and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms in their civil, political, economic, social and cultural aspects contribute to the strengthening of international peace and security;

10. Reaffirms again the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and urges Member States to increase their support for and solidarity with them and their national liberation movements and to take urgent and effective measures for the speedy completion of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and for the final elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid;

11. Calls upon the Security Council to take appropriate effective measures to promote the fulfilment of the objective of the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger which the nuclear capability of South Africa constitutes to the African States, in particular to the front-line States, as well as to international peace and security;

12. Reiterates its support for the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and expresses the hope that the Conference on the Indian Ocean, which is an important stage in the realization of the objectives of that Declaration, will be held not later than in the first half of 1983 and, to this end, calls upon all States to contribute effectively to the success of that Conference;

13. Calls upon all States participating in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, at Madrid, to take all possible measures and exert every effort in order to ensure substantial and balanced results of that meeting in the implementation of the principles and goals established by the Final Act of the Conference, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975, as well as the continuity of the multilateral process initiated by the Conference, which has great significance for the strengthening of peace and security in Europe and in the world;

14. Considers that further efforts are necessary for the transformation of the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and co-operation on the basis of the principles of equal security, sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity, non-intervention and non-interference, non-violation of international frontiers, non-use of force, peaceful settlement of disputes and just and viable solutions of the existing problems and crises in the area on the basis of the Charter and relevant resolutions of the United Nations, respect for sovereignty over natural resources and the right of peoples to make their own decisions independently and without any outside pressure or intimidation;

15. Calls upon all Governments to submit to this effect, before the thirty-seventh session of the General Assembly, their views on the question of the strengthening of security and co-operation in the region of the Mediterranean and requests the Secretary-General to submit the report on this question to the Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security".

Declaration against intervention

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 9 December 1981, approved a Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States, and requested the widest dissemination of the text to States and organizations.<sup>(1)</sup>

By this Declaration, the Assembly declared that no State or group of States had the right to interfere, in any form or for any reason, in the internal and external affairs of other States. The Declaration spelled out the components of the non-intervention principle in three categories: rights of States, duties of States, and matters which were both rights and duties. Matters dealt with under rights were sovereignty, independence, national security, permanent sovereignty over natural resources, and information (p. 371). In the category of duties, States were enjoined to refrain from intervention through such means as the use of force in international relations (p. 1205), assistance to mercenaries (p. 1216), propaganda, international economic relations, exploitation of human rights issues (p. 974) and terrorism (p. 1219). Aspects of human rights and self-determination were mentioned under the category of rights and duties. Nothing in the Declaration was to prejudice the right to self-determination, freedom and independence of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes.

This resolution and annexed Declaration, sponsored by Guyana on behalf of United Nations Member States belonging to the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, were adopted by a recorded vote of 120 to 22, with 6 abstentions, following approval by the First Committee on 3 December by a recorded vote of 90 to 21, with 8 abstentions.

Guyana, which chaired the Ad Hoc Working Group of the First Committee that had worked on the text in 1980<sup>(2)</sup> and during the 1981 Assembly session, introduced the text and said the sponsors saw the Declaration as a shield to be used by all States rather than as a sword. Although many delegations had remarked on the frequent instances of intervention and interference in recent times, some had shown a marked reluctance to negotiate on the text. Nevertheless, said Guyana, the States of the Non-Aligned Movement had decided to press for a decision by the Assembly in 1981.

Australia, which voted against the resolution and Declaration, regretted that the sponsors had decided to persist with a text which, while containing much of merit, also included elements causing Australia serious difficulties that might have been overcome, given time for examination and consultation. Austria, also voting against, and Finland, which abstained, doubted the necessity of a new declaration—particularly one which in Austria's view contained a number of highly controversial elements, some of which seemed incompatible with the United Nations Charter, and which Finland saw as interpreting Charter principles selectively and arbitrarily.

Venezuela, voting against, said the text contained incongruities and contradictions, and lacked any reference to unsolved territorial disputes; it should have contained a statement that nothing in the Declaration affected the rights of States under treaties concerning territorial disputes, and that no State should use it to evade the obligation to try to find peaceful solutions envisaged in such treaties.

Also voting negatively, France and the United States opposed the clause on the duty of States to refrain from measures to strengthen military blocs and alliances conceived in the context of great-Power confrontation, on the ground that this provision was at variance with the right of States to individual and collective self-defence; the United States also objected that the text defined rights and duties in vague and sometimes unbalanced language. Reservations on this clause were also voiced by Greece and Turkey, which abstained in the vote on the text as a whole. Fiji, voting in favour, interpreted the clause as not precluding a State from entering into any arrangement commensurate with its genuine security needs. Haiti also voted affirmatively but with the reservation that inequality of geopolitical conditions could impel some States to have recourse to defensive alliances so as to protect themselves against expansionist designs. Ireland, voting against, said the text contained provisions inconsistent with the right of United Nations organs to take collective action to maintain or restore peace and security.

Fiji and Uruguay, voting in favour, voiced reservations on a clause declaring it to be a State's right and duty to support the right of peoples under colonial, foreign or racist domination to wage both political and armed struggle for self-determination, freedom and independence; Uruguay could not accept an attempt to institutionalize recourse to armed force for the attainment of any objective, however noble. Similarly, Ireland could not associate itself with an explicit endorsement of armed struggle in a United Nations declaration.

Objections were also raised to the provision on a State's duty not to use economic assistance or economic reprisals as instruments of political pressure or coercion and to prevent the use of transnational corporations under its control for that purpose. Finland said it would have voted against this provision if it had been voted on separately. The United States said the text purported to define new and hitherto unrecognized duties of States and did not address the issues realistically or equitably.

Objections to the clauses on information and on exploitation of human rights issues were also voiced by Finland, Greece, Ireland and the United States.

Among those which voted in favour, Mexico, though it had doubts about some aspects of the text which seemed to address circumstantial factors rather than general principles, regretted that the absence of a negotiating attitude on the part of some delegations had not made consensus possible. Malta regarded the text as a major step forward and a comprehensive indication of the preoccupations of the Non-Aligned Movement, but would welcome an improvement in the text at forthcoming sessions to gain wider support. The USSR said the Declaration was positive and constructive on the whole, though the clause on military blocs could have been strengthened by referring to the need to dissolve military alliances, and the reference to military bases conceived in the context of great-Power confrontation could be used by the imperialists to justify deployment of interventionist forces and bases against developing countries.

The Declaration was welcomed by States from Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe and Latin America. Bhutan stated that the Declaration would provide guidance applicable to all nations, big or small, powerful or weak, in the conduct of their mutual relations. Czechoslovakia regarded the Declaration as an important measure within the framework of efforts to strengthen international security, while Mongolia saw it as an important complement to the Declaration on international security. Guinea viewed the Declaration as a useful legal instrument for the security of States in the current state of international affairs.

Romania said that if there was any reason to reaffirm and develop the substance of the principle of non-interference and non-intervention in a comprehensive declaration, it was precisely because political concepts were still being entertained which overlooked the need for strict respect for that principle. The USSR stated that all those who had no ignoble intentions with regard to the non-aligned and other developing countries must support the Declaration. Yugoslavia observed that the Declaration contained precise definitions of all unlawful acts of intervention and should serve as a standard for assessing such behaviour from whatever quarter it might come.

Commenting on the non-intervention principle, the Congo cited what it viewed as two aberrations whose intended victim was peace and security: the notion of vital national interests outside the national territory of an imperial Power, and the supposed right to intervene in defence of those interests, which was an interpretation of self-defence that was wholly alien to the terms of Article 51 of the Charter on the right of individual and collective self-defence). Also supporting the Declaration, Trinidad and Tobago said that, as a minimum, States should freely recognize each other's rights to national existence and territorial inviolability, so that no State would have the right to invade the territory of another.

Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2734(XXV) of 16 December 1970, containing the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and 2131 (XX) of 21 December 1965, containing the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention in the Domestic Affairs of States and the Protection of Their Independence and Sovereignty,

Recalling also its resolutions 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, containing the Definition of Aggression,

Recalling further its resolutions 31/91 of 14 December 1976, 32/153 of 19 December 1977, 33/74 of 15 December 1978, 34/101 of 14 December 1979 and 35/159 of 12 December 1980 on non-interference in the internal affairs of States,

Deeply concerned at the gravity of the international situation and the increasing threat to international peace and security owing to frequent recourse to the threat or use of force, aggression, intimidation, military intervention and occupation, escalation of military presence and all other forms of intervention or interference, direct or indirect, overt or covert, threatening the sovereignty and political independence of States, with the aim of overthrowing their Governments,

Conscious of the fact that such policies endanger the political independence of States, the freedom of peoples and their permanent sovereignty over their natural resources, adversely affecting thereby the maintenance of international peace and security,

Conscious of the imperative need for all foreign forces engaged in military occupation, intervention or interference to be completely withdrawn to their own territories, so that peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist régimes may freely and fully exercise their right to self-determination, in order to enable peoples of all States to administer their own affairs and determine their own political, economic and social systems without external interference or control,

Conscious also of the imperative need to put a complete end to any threat of aggression, any recruitment, any use of armed bands, in particular mercenaries, against sovereign States, so as to enable the peoples of all States to determine their own political, economic and social systems without external interference or control,

Recognizing that full observance of the principles of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal and external affairs of sovereign States and peoples, whether direct or indirect, overt or covert, is essential to the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the widest dissemination of the Declaration to States, the specialized agencies and other organizations in association with the United Nations, and other appropriate bodies.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and interference in the internal Affairs of States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, that no State has the right to intervene directly or indirectly for any reason whatsoever in the internal and external affairs of any other State,

Reaffirming further the fundamental principle of the Charter that all States have the duty not to threaten or use force against the sovereignty, political independence or territorial integrity of other States,

Bearing in mind that the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security are founded upon freedom, equality, self-determination and independence, respect for the sovereignty of States, as well as permanent sovereignty of States over their natural resources, irrespective of their political, economic or social systems or the levels of their development:

Considering that full observance of the principle of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal and external affairs of States is of the greatest importance for the maintenance of international peace and security and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter, Reaffirming, in accordance with the Charter, the right to self-determination and independence of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes.

Stressing that the purposes of the United Nations can be achieved only under conditions where peoples enjoy freedom and States enjoy sovereign equality and comply fully with the requirements of these principles in their international relations,

Considering that any violation of the principle of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal and external affairs of States poses a threat to the freedom of peoples, the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of States and to their political, economic, social and cultural development, and also endangers international peace and security,

Considering that a declaration on the inadmissibility of intervention and interference in the internal affairs of States will contribute towards the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Considering the provisions of the Charter as a whole and taking into account the resolutions adopted by the United Nations relating to that principle, in particular those containing the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention in the Domestic Affairs of States and the Protection of Their Independence and Sovereignty, the Declaration of Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the Definition of Aggression,

Solemnly declares that:

1. No State or group of States has the right to intervene or interfere in any form or for any reason whatsoever in the internal and external affairs of other States.

2. The principle of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal and external affairs of States comprehends the following rights and duties:

(c) The right of States and peoples to have free access to information and to develop fully, without interference, their system of information and mass media and to use their information media in order to promote their political, social, economic and cultural interests and aspirations, based, inter alia, on the relevant articles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of the new international information order:

(b) The duty of a State to ensure that its territory is not used in any manner which would violate the sovereignty, political independence, territorial integrity and national unity or disrupt the political, economic and social stability of another State; this obligation applies also to States entrusted with responsibility for territories yet to attain self-determination and national independence;

(c) The duty of a State to refrain from armed intervention, subversion, military occupation or any other form of intervention and interference, overt or covert, directed at another State or group of States, or any act of military, political or economic interference in the internal affairs of another State, including acts of reprisal involving the use of force;

(d) The duty of a State to refrain from any forcible action which deprives peoples under colonial domination or foreign occupation of their right to self-determination, freedom and independence;

(i) The duty of States to refrain from any measure which would lead to the strengthening of existing military blocs or the creation or strengthening of new military alliances, interlocking arrangements, the deployment of interventionist forces or military bases and other related military installations conceived in the context of great-Power confrontation;

(j) The duty of a State to abstain from any defamatory campaign, vilification or hostile propaganda for the purpose of intervening or interfering in the internal affairs of other States;

(k) The duty of a State, in the conduct of its international relations in the economic, social, technical and trade fields, to refrain from measures which would constitute interference or intervention in the internal or external affairs of another State, thus preventing it from determining freely its political, economic and social development; this includes, inter alia, the duty of a State not to use its external economic assistance programme or adopt any multilateral or unilateral economic reprisal or blockade and to prevent the use of transnational and multinational corporations under its jurisdiction and control as instruments of political pressure or coercion against another State, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations;

(l) The duty of a State to refrain from the exploitation and the distortion of human rights issues as a means of interference in the internal affairs of States, of exerting pressure on other States or creating distrust and disorder within and among States or groups of States;

(o) The duty of a State to refrain from any economic, political or military activity in the territory of another State without its consent:

III

(a) The right and duty of States to participate actively on the basis of equality in solving outstanding international issues, thus actively contributing to the removal of causes of conflict and interference:

(b) The right and duty of States fully to support the right to self-determination, freedom and independence of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes, as well as the right of these peoples to wage both political and armed struggle to that end, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter;

(c) The right and duty of States to observe, promote and defend all human rights and fundamental freedoms within their own national territories and to work for the elimination of massive and flagrant violations of the rights of nations and peoples, and, in particular, for the elimination of apartheid and all forms of racism and racial discrimination:

(d) The right and duty of States to combat, within their constitutional prerogatives, the dissemination of false or distorted news which can be interpreted as interference in the internal affairs of other States or as being harmful to the promotion of peace, co-operation and friendly relations among States and nations;

(e) The right and duty of States not to recognise situations brought about by the threat or use of force or acts undertaken in contravention of the principle of non-intervention and non-interference.

3. The rights and duties set out in this Declaration are interrelated and are in accordance with the Charter.

4. Nothing in this Declaration shall prejudice in any manner the right to self-determination, freedom and independence of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes, and the right to seek and receive support in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter.

5. Nothing in this Declaration shall prejudice in any manner the provisions of the Charter.

6. Nothing in this Declaration shall prejudice action taken by the United Nations under Chapters VI and VII of the Charter.

Implementation of the 1978 Declaration on societies and peace

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. In a report to the General Assembly issued in September 1981 (with later addenda),<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted replies from 14 Governments on progress in implementing its 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace.<sup>(3)</sup> The report, requested by the Assembly when it adopted the Declaration,<sup>(4)</sup> also included a response by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) describing action taken at meetings of educators, activities under the Associated Schools Project in Education for International Co-operation and Peace, the award of a UNESCO Prize for Peace Education and social sciences research relevant to the promotion of peace.

In a letter of 20 February 1981 to the Secretary-General,<sup>(1)</sup> Poland, the initiator of the Declaration in 1978,<sup>(6)</sup> described what it had done to implement the Declaration by teaching a "mentality of peace" in schools; it mentioned the recognition given to the document in various international bodies and suggested internal, regional and multilateral activities by States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 9 December 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly invited States to intensify efforts to implement the Declaration. It reiterated its appeal for concerted action—by Governments, the United Nations, specialized agencies and other organizations—to give tangible effect to the supreme importance and need of establishing, maintaining and strengthening a just and durable peace for present and future generations. It requested the Secretary-General to report again by 1984 on progress in implementing the Declaration.

This resolution, sponsored by 16 nations, was adopted by a recorded vote of 143 to none, with 2 abstentions, following its approval by the First Committee on 3 December by a recorded vote of 114 to none, with 2 abstentions.

Introducing the resolution, Poland stated that far more dedicated efforts were needed to put into effect the concepts and ideals of the Declaration. These included increased co-operation among States, good faith in dialogue and negotiations, increased regional efforts on all continents, greater bilateral co-operation, promotion of good-neighbourliness and mutual respect, and encouragement of specific activities by organizations and individuals.

Abstaining in the vote, the United States saw what it regarded as two fundamental flaws in the Declaration and the resolution: there was inadequate reference to human rights, and the idea that States should prepare their citizens for life in peace and use information media and schools to achieve what the resolution's preamble referred to as the "moulding of human consciousness" to fulfil the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter was antithetical to free societies, whose Governments were prohibited from attempting to dictate or mould the opinions of their citizens.

Reservations on this preambular phrase were also voiced by some States that voted for the resolution. The United Kingdom, on behalf of the European Community (EC) members, rejected the concept of controlling information sources, and also thought the call in paragraph 2 for action by Governments, the United Nations and specialized agencies might be interpreted as placing them on the same level, whereas the United Nations should exercise a co-ordinating role. The Netherlands thought the preambular phrase seemed to imply state activities that could prejudice the exercise of freedoms by individuals and also believed, as did Austria, that the concept of life in peace must be related to human rights. Poland, on behalf of the sponsors, did not accept a Canadian suggestion that the phrase "positive moulding of human consciousness" be replaced by "encouraging in the human consciousness".

In the general debate on international security, support for the resolution was voiced by the Byelorussian SSR and Czechoslovakia.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, contained in its resolution 33/73 of 15 December 1978,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming the lasting importance of the preparation of societies for life in peace as part of all constructive efforts at shaping relations among States and strengthening international peace and security,

Aware of the paramount value of positive moulding of human consciousness for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the charter of the United Nations,

1. Solemnly invites all States to intensify their efforts towards the implementation of the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace by strictly observing the principles enshrined in the Declaration and taking all necessary steps towards that end at the national and international levels;

Good-neighbourliness between States

By a resolution of 9 December 1981 on the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly called on States to develop good-neighbourly relations and reaffirmed that good-neighbourliness conformed with the purposes of the United Nations and was founded on the rejection of attempts to establish zones of influence or domination. The Assembly reaffirmed the need to examine good-neighbourliness in order to develop its content as well as modalities to enhance it, and believed the results of that examination could be included at an appropriate time in an international document. It requested Governments to communicate their views and suggestions on the topic, with a view to preventing conflicts and increasing confidence among States; invited United Nations organizations to continue to inform the Secretary-General of their activities relevant to good-neighbourliness; and requested him to submit a report in 1982 containing such views and suggestions.

This resolution, sponsored by 31 nations, was adopted without vote following its approval in similar fashion by the First Committee on 3 December. The sponsors orally revised paragraph 8 to have the Assembly request that the report contain "an orderly presentation of the views and suggestions received concerning the content of good-neighbourliness, as well as ways and modalities to enhance its effectiveness" rather than simply "a systematic presentation of the views and suggestions received".

Romania, introducing the resolution, said it was not enough to proclaim principles and norms; ways to ensure their application in relations between States must be established and utilized. Romania suggested a number of possible methods to strengthen good-neighbourliness, including the conclusion of friendship treaties and other instruments on the non-use of force, the creation of bodies for consultation and negotiation, and the establishment of zones of peace and co-operation and of demilitarized zones. Such an institutional and juridical framework could prevent disputes or ensure that they did not degenerate into conflicts.

A report of the Secretary-General,<sup>(1)</sup> requested by the Assembly in 1979,<sup>(2)</sup> contained replies from 27 States with their views and suggestions on good-neighbourliness and ways to enhance it, and from 14 organizations and bodies in the United Nations system on their activities relevant to the development of good-neighbourliness.

In the First Committee debate, Albania stressed the duty of States to cast aside everything that could endanger good-neighbourly relations and said it was especially important to take a firm attitude against attempted interference or intrigue by the super-Powers and other imperialists practising a "divide-and-rule" policy. Yugoslavia viewed national minorities as bridges of friendship, mutual understanding and co-operation among countries and peoples, particularly between neighbours.

Bangladesh endorsed the idea that the principle of good-neighbourliness should be studied further with a view to finding specific modalities for achieving it. China reiterated its view that relations among States and among neighbours should be based on the five principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence. The Congo stated that, for weak countries that were slow to develop, good-neighbourliness was a symbol of union and thus of strength.

Ecuador believed that a specific reference to the principles of non-use of force and the obligation to settle international disputes by peaceful means should have been included in paragraph 2 of the resolution, calling on States to develop good-neighbourly relations.

Greece classified the elements regulating good-neighbourliness into three phases or categories: the cessation of every act that had a negative effect on good-neighbourliness, the positive steps which a State could take in order to develop good relations with its neighbours and close co-operation for the benefit of all peoples concerned. Guinea listed three principles which West African States had followed in negotiating disputes: giving up the threat or use of force and hostile propaganda, promoting confidence by practical actions, such as avoiding the stationing of troops along frontiers, and maintaining agreements and dialogue at the highest possible level. Turkey stated that good-neighbourliness required a certain stability or a minimum of harmony among the partners, in the absence of which it would be absurd to speak of such a concept.

Mali believed that a legal instrument governing good-neighbourliness should be drafted. Singapore acknowledged the concern that good-neighbourliness did not correspond to any concept in international law or that a legal code on the subject would be broken to suit selfish interests, but felt nevertheless that there were two reasons to start giving the concept some legal content: a well-defined concept of good-neighbourliness would assist in judging rights and wrongs in a world where acts of aggression against neighbouring States had always been justified by some lofty principle, and it was the hallmark of civilized men to regulate their mutual relations according to a set of laws or recognized code of ethics. The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, stated that they were not convinced that the notion of good-neighbourliness necessarily corresponded to any existing principles of international law and thought any further work to strengthen and develop the concept should take place in the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee.

The USSR stated that the motto which best characterized United States policy towards its neighbours was the slogan "Speak softly but carry a big stick", as demonstrated by the overthrow it organized in 1954 of the progressive régime in Guatemala, the 1961 invasion by mercenaries against Cuba and the landing of United States troops in the Dominican Republic in 1965. The United States said it had improved its excellent relations with the two neighbours sharing its open and unguarded borders; a truly good neighbour encouraged the free exchange of people and ideas, and did not require a rigid political orthodoxy of smaller States on its borders or resort to massive armed intervention to enforce that orthodoxy.

Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the determination of the peoples of the United Nations as expressed in the Charter to practise tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours,

Recalling its resolutions 1236(XII) of 14 December 1957, 1301(XIII) of 10 December 1958, 2129(XX) of 21 December 1965 and, in particular, 34/99 of 14 December 1979,

Bearing in mind that, owing to geographic proximity, there are particularly favourable opportunities for co-operation and mutual advantage between neighbouring countries in many fields and that the development of such co-operation may have a positive influence on international relations as a whole,

Considering that the great changes of a political, economic and social nature as well as the scientific and technological progress which have taken place in the world and led to unprecedented interdependence of nations have given new dimensions to good-neighbourliness in the conduct of States and increased the need to develop and strengthen it,

1. Reaffirms that good-neighbourliness conforms with the purposes of the United Nations and is founded upon the strict observance of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as well as upon the rejection of any acts seeking to establish zones of influence or domination;

2. Calls upon all States, in the interest of the maintenance of international peace and security, to develop good-neighbourly relations, acting on the basis of these principles;

3. Considers that the generalization of the long practice and of principles and rules pertaining to good-neighbourliness is likely to strengthen friendly relations and co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter;

4. Reaffirms the need to examine the question of good-neighbourliness in order to strengthen and further develop its content, as well as ways and modalities to enhance its effectiveness;

5. Believes that the results of the examination of good-neighbourliness and of the clarification of its elements could be included, at an appropriate time, in a suitable international document;

6. Requests the Governments that have not communicated their views and suggestions on good-neighbourliness, as well as on ways and modalities to enhance it, with a view to preventing conflicts and to increasing confidence among States, to do so as soon as possible, and invites the Governments that have already communicated such views and suggestions to supplement them if they deem it necessary;

7. Invites the United Nations organs, bodies and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies, within their fields of competence, to continue to inform the Secretary-General of the aspects of their activities relevant to the development of relations of good-neighbourliness between States;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, on the basis of the replies of States and of the views expressed during the thirty-sixth session, as well as of the comments of specialized agencies, a report containing an orderly presentation of the views and suggestions received concerning the content of good-neighbourliness, as well as ways and modalities to enhance its effectiveness;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States".

Review of UN peace-keeping operations

CONSIDERATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON PEACE-KEEPING OPERATIONS. The Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, established by the General Assembly in 1965,<sup>(3)</sup> held three meetings in 1981, on 17 July and 6 and 26 August. It discussed its mandate, reiterated by the Assembly in December 1980,<sup>(5)</sup> which was to work towards the completion of agreed guidelines to govern the conduct of United Nations peace-keeping operations and devote attention to specific questions related to the practical implementation of such operations.

In its report to the Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee observed that long-standing basic differences remained and that its task would continue to be difficult, owing to the fundamental nature of the issues involved. It concluded, however, that the importance of the issues was such that its mandate should be renewed.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Committee a report<sup>(1)</sup> containing the responses of seven Governments to the Assembly's 1980 invitation<sup>(4)</sup> that States provide information on experience gained in peace-keeping operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 18 November 1981,<sup>(6)</sup> the General Assembly took note of the Special Committee's report, repeated its invitations to Member States to provide information on experience gained in peace-keeping operations, and again urged the Committee to work towards completion of agreed guidelines for the conduct of peace-keeping operations and to devote further attention to questions related to the practical implementation of such operations. The Committee was requested to report in 1983.

This resolution was adopted without vote on the basis of a text submitted by the Chairman of the Special Political Committee (SPC) following informal consultations, and approved by that Committee without vote on 13 November.

Commenting on the text, Jamaica thought it should have been improved by urging the Special Committee to hold substantive meetings and requesting it to submit a comprehensive report explaining the nature of the difficulties and the options it had considered with a view to overcoming the deadlock.

In the SPC debate on this subject, it was generally felt that the peace-keeping role of the United Nations was fundamental to the effective implementation of its Charter. Most delegations expressed regret that, although a certain amount of common ground had been reached, deep-rooted differences had prevented the Special Committee from fulfilling its mandate. It was felt however that, despite the lack of progress, the Committee should not give up its search for agreed guidelines for future United Nations peace-keeping operations.

As in previous years, the debate centred on a small number of issues, including the role of the Security Council and other main organs of the United Nations in peace-keeping operations, and the financing of those operations.

Regarding the role of peace-keeping operations, Lebanon thought they should have diplomatic and political dimensions, since warring parties could not be made to co-operate with an international force without constant political action; moreover, the Security Council's authority must be enhanced, so that peace-keeping resolutions could be implemented and States that defied them could be forced to abide by them.

Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Pakistan maintained that the Council alone had the power of decision with regard to the launching, supervision, financing and command of United Nations peace-keeping operations throughout their duration. Czechoslovakia thought it would be useful for the Council to establish a subsidiary body to assist it in implementing such operations.

India, Ireland and Kenya, on the other hand, while stressing the Council's responsibility in backing or conducting United Nations peace-keeping operations, felt that the Secretary-General should be given the authority and flexibility needed to ensure the effective conduct of the operations. Nepal, too, felt the Secretary-General must have clear authority to direct the day-to-day operations of any such force so that the United Nations could respond adequately and promptly to emergencies.

Egypt, Greece and India stressed the need for prior consent by the host country before the establishment of United Nations peace-keeping operations. Cyprus, Greece and India added that there must be full respect for the sovereignty of the State on whose territory the operations were being carried out. In this regard, Ireland upheld the principle that a peace-keeping force must have the full co-operation of all parties involved in a dispute, while Israel suggested that, in order for the force to have the confidence of the parties, it should be composed exclusively of troops from countries maintaining normal relations with all the Governments in the area. The Syrian Arab Republic reaffirmed the need for all parties to commit themselves to unconditional co-operation with United Nations peace-keeping forces, and Cyprus stressed that those forces should be allowed to function without hindrance.

Several speakers, including Chile, Cyprus, Fiji, Finland, Greece, Ireland, Israel, Nepal, Pakistan and Sri Lanka, made the point that peace-keeping operations should not be an end in themselves or a substitute for efforts to find a peaceful solution to the underlying causes of conflicts.

Regarding the work programme of the Special Committee, some States continued to favour parallel consideration of issues of principle and practical implementation, while others insisted on seeking prior agreement on guidelines for peace-keeping operations. In the former camp, Japan thought the consideration of practical measures would have an important bearing on current and future operations and would contribute to the completion of agreed guidelines.

On the other hand, Hungary said that, while it was not averse to discussing practical matters relating to peace-keeping, it believed the preparation of guidelines should have priority. The German Democratic Republic said the over-emphasis on so-called practical aspects complicated the solution of the main issue. A similar view was expressed by the USSR, which felt that attempts to divert the Committee's attention from resolving the main issues could play into the hands of those who did not want it to complete its main task; the so-called practical aspects could be worked out in special arrangements concluded under Article 43 of the Charter between the Security Council and potential troop-contributing countries.

Israel thought the usefulness of general guidelines was likely to be limited; they could be effective only if they were adaptable to particular requirements. Jamaica said the guidelines should not be too tightly drawn and should take account of different circumstances in different areas as well as the need for operational flexibility; it also voiced doubts about continuing the Special Committee and mentioned a special session of the Assembly or an expert group as alternative ways to continue the work on guidelines and other matters.

A number of suggestions were made with a view to improving the efficiency of United Nations peace-keeping efforts. Kenya, Nepal and the United States stressed the need for maintaining stand-by forces or earmarking contingents that could be made available to the United Nations in urgent situations, and Finland, speaking for the Nordic States, pointed out that they had maintained such forces since 1964. Austria and Cyprus suggested that national or regional seminars be conducted under United Nations auspices so that States could share their experiences; Austria also suggested that standards be elaborated relating to the safety and security of peace-keeping units. Morocco observed that peace-keeping operations had to be conducted with extraordinary speed in order to keep pace with events.

Regarding the financing of peace-keeping operations, Chile, Fiji, Finland, Jamaica, Kenya, Nepal and the United States expressed the view that Member States had a collective responsibility for such financing and that, consequently, the costs must be borne by all Members as part of United Nations expenses. Sharing this view, Ireland, Japan and the United Kingdom (for the EC members) regretted that certain countries, in particular some permanent members of the Security Council, had refused to honour their financial obligations with regard to peace-keeping operations; the United Kingdom remarked that this placed an additional financial burden on troop-contributing States. Zaïre stated that the financial implications of peace-keeping operations should not serve as a pretext to shirk collective responsibility.

Fiji emphasized that troop-contributing States should be fully, regularly and equitably compensated for their services in order to encourage the participation of small States in peace-keeping operations and to achieve a balanced geographical distribution in the composition of the force. Canada cautioned that delays in the payment of contributions might reduce the capacity of the countries concerned to maintain their contingents and discourage participation by other States. The United States called for the punctual payment of financial contributions so that the troop-contributing countries would not have to bear the financial burden.

Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and Hungary reaffirmed the primary role of the Security Council in choosing the method of financing peace-keeping operations. The German Democratic Republic maintained that the aggressor must bear full responsibility with regard to the expenses incurred by such operations, and the Syrian Arab Republic said the victim of aggression could not be required to contribute. Making a similar point, the Lao People's Democratic Republic said that to apportion the costs of the aggression among the members of the international community would be tantamount to legitimizing a criminal act.

Albania expressed the opinion that the negative impact of United Nations peace-keeping operations was due in part to the ineffectiveness of the Security Council and declared that it would never participate in financing such operations.

General Assembly resolution 36/37

Adopted without vote Meeting 63 18 November 1981

Approved by SPC (A/36/690) without vote, 13 November (meeting 32); draft by Chairman following informal consultations (A/SPC/36/L.16); agenda item 63.

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965, 2053 A (XX) of 15 December 1965, 2249(S-V) of 23 May 1967, 2308(XXII) of 13 December 1967, 2451 (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2670(XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2835(XXVI) of 17 December 1971, 2965(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3091 (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3239(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3457(XXX) of 10 December 1975, 31/105 of 15 December 1976, 32/106 of 15 December 1977, 33/114 of 18 December 1978, 34/53 of 23 November 1979 and 35/121 of 11 December 1980,

Reaffirming once again the fundamental importance of the maintenance of international peace and security by the United Nations as set out in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the determination of the United Nations to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest of Member States,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations,

Noting with regret the difficulties being experienced by the Special Committee in carrying out its mandate,

Emphasizing again that only by a greater demonstration of political will and conciliation can progress be achieved,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations;

2. Repeats its invitations to Member States to report and to provide information on experience gained in peace-keeping operations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a further compilation of the replies submitted in accordance with paragraph 2 above;

4. Urges again the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, to renew its efforts to work towards the completion of agreed guidelines which will govern the conduct of peace-keeping operations of the United Nations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and to devote further attention to specific questions related to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations;

5. Requests the Special Committee to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects".

International Day and Year of Peace

On 30 November 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly proclaimed the third Tuesday of September, the opening day of its regular session, as International Day of Peace, devoted to commemorating and strengthening the ideals of peace. It invited Member States, organizations and individuals to commemorate the Day, especially through all means of education. The Assembly also invited the Economic and Social Council to consider declaring an International Year of Peace at the first practicable opportunity and to submit its recommendations to the Assembly in 1982.

This resolution, sponsored by 20 nations, was adopted without vote.

The item entitled "Declaration of a Peace Year, a Peace Month and a Peace Day" was placed on the Assembly's agenda at the initiative of Costa Rica, contained in a letter of 14 August to the Secretary-General.<sup>(1)</sup> An accompanying explanatory memorandum stated that the International Association of University Presidents, at its Sixth Triennial Conference (San José, Costa Rica, 28 June-3 July), had endorsed the conclusion that the most effective means of achieving lasting peace was education. Consequently, it had decided to invite the Assembly to declare a Peace Year, a Peace Month and a Peace Day to serve as a constant reminder of the ardent longing for universal peace.

Introducing the resolution, Costa Rica said the Peace Year should not be a celebration empty of substance; apart from its educational aspect, it should be a year in which tensions were reduced, lives were saved and the arms race did not attain the level of universal madness. Costa Rica had originally proposed the year 1984, but was leaving the choice open in order to abide by guidelines to be decided by the Assembly.

General Assembly resolution 36/67

Adopted without vote Meeting 77 30 November 1981

20-nation draft (A/36/L.29/Rev.1); agenda item 133.

International Year of Peace and International Day of Peace
The General Assembly,

Recalling that the promotion of peace, both at an international and a national level, is among the main purposes of the United Nations, in conformity with its Charter,

Reaffirming that, as set forth in the preamble of the Constitution of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defences of peace must be constructed, that a peace based exclusively upon the political and economic arrangements of Governments would not be a peace which could secure the unanimous, lasting and sincere support of the peoples of the world, and that the peace must therefore be founded, if it is not to fail, upon the intellectual and moral solidarity of mankind,

Further recalling that, on the basis of similar considerations, the General Assembly established the United Nations University in 1972 and, more specifically, the University for Peace in 1980, and entrusted other organs and organizations of the United Nations system with the promotion of peace, mainly through education in all its aspects,

Noting with appreciation the initiative taken by the International Association of University Presidents at its Sixth Triennial Conference, held at San José from 28 June to 3 July 1981, to propose the Declaration of a Peace Year, a Peace Month and a Peace Day,

Acknowledging the conclusions of the Conference that it would be appropriate to devote a specific time to concentrate the efforts of the United Nations and its Member States, as well as of the whole of mankind, to promoting the ideals of peace and to giving positive evidence of their commitment to peace in all viable ways,

Considering that, through the declaration and proper celebration of an International Year of Peace and an International Day of Peace, it would be possible to contribute to strengthening such ideals of peace and alleviating the tensions and causes of conflict, both within and among nations and peoples,

1. Invites the Economic and Social Council to consider, at its first regular session of 1982, the possibility of declaring an International Year of Peace at the first practicable opportunity, taking into account the urgency and special nature of such an observance as well as the guidelines for international years and anniversaries adopted by the General Assembly in its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980, and to submit its recommendations to the Assembly at its thirty-seventh session on the basis of appropriate arrangements for the timing, organization and financing of the Year;

2. Declares that the third Tuesday of September, the opening day of the regular sessions of the General Assembly, shall be officially proclaimed and observed as International Day of Peace and shall be devoted to commemorating and strengthening the ideals of peace both within and among all nations and peoples;

3. Invites all Member States, organs and organizations of the United Nations system, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations, peoples and individuals to commemorate in an appropriate manner the International Day of Peace, especially through all means of education, and to co-operate with the United Nations in the observance of that Day.

Chapter V

Africa

The apartheid policies of South Africa and ways to bring them to an end remained under active consideration during 1981 in several United Nations bodies (see below). The General Assembly continued to urge the imposition of mandatory sanctions and the Security Council denounced South Africa's bantustanization policy. An International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa, held in Paris in May, adopted a Declaration on Sanctions.

No progress was reported in efforts to bring about independence for Namibia through implementation of a plan approved by the Security Council in 1978 (p. 1126).

The Assembly condemned South Africa's aggression against neighbouring States, in particular against Angola and Seychelles (p. 214). While Angola's complaint to the Security Council against South Africa did not result in the adoption of a resolution (p. 217), the Council condemned the armed attack against Seychelles carried out in November by mercenaries and established a commission of inquiry to investigate the incident (p. 226).

Charges of South African attacks against Lesotho and Mozambique (p. 221), the situation in Chad (p. 222) and relations between Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Sudan (p. 225) were the subject of letters from those States to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.

The Assembly reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte and invited the Comoros and France to continue talks for a just solution (p. 223). Assembly consideration of a dispute between France and Madagascar over the status of several Malagasy islands in the Indian Ocean was postponed until 1982 (p. 225).

The United Nations and the Organization of African Unity continued their co-operation on a number of matters aimed at the elimination of colonialism and apartheid in Africa and the accelerated development of African countries (p. 228).

South Africa and apartheid

The General Assembly continued in 1981 to call insistently for an end to the racial separation policies enforced by the Government of South Africa under the name of apartheid

Throughout the year, the Assembly's Special Committee against Apartheid mobilized international campaigns to apply pressure on South Africa and to block various forms of collaboration with that country's régime.

Following a debate in plenary meetings, the Assembly adopted 16 resolutions on apartheid on 17 December. By the first of these,<sup>(4)</sup> it urged the Security Council to determine that the situation in South Africa constituted a grave threat to international peace and security, and to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against the Pretoria régime.

This call for sanctions was repeated in another text by which the Assembly also called on Governments to sever all relations with South Africa.<sup>(7)</sup> By a resolution condemning South Africa's acts of aggression against Angola, Seychelles and other African States, the Assembly urged the Council to adopt effective measures under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations (on action with respect to threats to the peace breaches of the peace and acts of aggression).<sup>(6)</sup> It repeated an earlier request that the Council consider imposing a mandatory oil embargo,<sup>(10)</sup> and urged it to consider effective measures to strengthen the existing arms embargo<sup>(9)</sup> and secure the immediate cessation of military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa.<sup>(8)</sup> It also demanded that Israel terminate all such collaboration.<sup>(16)</sup> In the economic sphere, it again urged the Council to consider steps to achieve the cessation of foreign investments and loans.<sup>(18)</sup> The termination of all collaboration by transnational corporations with South Africa was called for by the Economic and Social Council on 2 November.<sup>(2)</sup>

To mobilize support for such efforts, the Assembly proclaimed 1982 the International Year of Mobilization for Sanctions against South Africa<sup>(5)</sup> and authorized the Committee against Apartheid to organize in 1982 an International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions against South Africa.<sup>(11)</sup>

The Assembly took a series of steps to mobilize public action against apartheid. It endorsed a proposal for national and international conferences and exhibits to promote such action by academic, cultural and sports personalities, as part of a boycott of South Africa in these fields.<sup>(12)</sup> It moved to encourage action by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the mass media in the international campaign against apartheid including mobilization of support for sanctions.<sup>(15)</sup> In approving the work programme of the Committee against Apartheid, the Assembly made a special allocation for projects to promote the international campaign.<sup>(17)</sup>

The Security Council and the Assembly denounced South Africa's 4 December proclamation of the Ciskei, a bantustan, as a so-called independent State (p. 193).

The members of the Council, in a statement by its President on 5 February 1981, expressed grave concern over death sentences handed down by a South African court in November 1980 against three men charged with attacks on a bank and a police station (p. 195).

In the latest of a series of resolutions on political prisoners in South Africa, the Assembly demanded again that the Pretoria régime refrain from executing persons sentenced for acts arising from opposition to apartheid and release all political prisoners.<sup>(13)</sup> It invited co-operation in promoting solidarity with and assistance to the women and children of South Africa.<sup>(14)</sup> The Assembly appealed for contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, which aided refugees from that country as well as persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation there.<sup>(19)</sup>

The Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities dealt with human rights violations in South Africa, including death sentences, political prisoners, and women and children under apartheid (p. 943).

Concerned about the burden placed on host countries by student refugees from South Africa and Namibia, the Assembly, on 16 December, urged generous contributions to the assistance programmes for those refugees in southern Africa.<sup>(3)</sup> The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa was giving scholarship aid to 533 persons from South Africa (p. 212).

Twice during the year, in March and September, the Assembly approved recommendations by its Credentials Committee to reject credentials submitted by South Africa (p. 163).

The Committee against Apartheid continued to review the apartheid policies of South Africa and their international repercussions. Meeting throughout the year, it carried out its mandate from the Assembly to promote the dissemination of information on the evils of apartheid and the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa, to encourage full implementation of United Nations resolutions on the subject by all Governments and organizations, to promote public action and campaigns supporting the national liberation movement of South Africa, and to promote concerted action by Governments and organizations in the international mobilization against apartheid.

In its annual report,<sup>(1)</sup> transmitted to the Assembly on 9 October, the Committee summarized its activities and presented a series of conclusions and recommendations, many of which were incorporated into Assembly resolutions. It also submitted two special reports: on relations between Israel and South Africa (p. 192), and on the International Year of Mobilization for Sanctions against South Africa (p. 177).

A review of developments in South Africa since October 1980, annexed to the Committee's report, stated that mass resistance to apartheid had attained new heights and greater effectiveness. Organized and sustained struggles had taken place on several fronts, including a nationwide uprising against the Republic Day festivities in May, a widespread revolt by black students against racial discrimination in education, an unprecedented wave of strikes by black workers demanding a living wage and trade union rights, bus boycotts and rent strikes, and struggles against forced removals and relocation of communities in urban and rural areas. A significant feature of 1981 had been the growing unity in action among the various struggling sectors of the population.

The régime, however, was pursuing its policy of repression, terror and propaganda, the review continued. Political arrests, detentions, torture, bannings, banishments, police attacks, intimidation and other forms of repression had intensified. Six freedom fighters had been sentenced to death. The Government had accelerated the implementation of its policy of bantustanization. Its aggression against neighbouring States had intensified. There were increased military contacts and co-operation between South Africa and some military establishments in Western Europe, North America, Latin America, Israel and Taiwan.

General aspects

transmitted a letter of 1 January from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information dismissing as superficial and contemptible the resolutions on South Africa and apartheid adopted by the General Assembly in 1980. The Minister stated that the resolutions did not reflect the situation in South Africa, a dynamic society working at its major problem of accommodating the national aspirations of all its peoples in a way that would ensure advancement for all while avoiding conflict. Proposed sanctions would hurt South African blacks and Western investors.

Cuba, by a note verbale of 5 June to the Secretary-General,<sup>(3)</sup> transmitted a communiqué adopted by the extraordinary plenary meeting of the non-aligned countries, held in New York on 4 June, condemning the intensification of repression in South Africa, noting with grave concern the support of South African policies and practices by the United States, and reiterating its solidarity with the struggle of the oppressed South African people.

By a letter of 26 August to the Secretary-General,<sup>(1)</sup> the Acting Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid transmitted a Committee statement of the same day drawing urgent attention to the recent detention and trial of numerous persons and the death sentences passed against six freedom fighters (p. 196); it called for urgent and effective international action for the total isolation of the apartheid régime and for full support to the South African national liberation movement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. The first of the resolutions on South Africa and apartheid which the General Assembly adopted on 17 December<sup>(7)</sup> dealt with the situation in South Africa and its international implications. Several of its provisions were elaborated upon in other resolutions of the same date.

The Assembly urged the Security Council to impose mandatory sanctions against South Africa and called for urgent measures to terminate all political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military, nuclear and other collaboration with that régime (p. 168). It condemned the actions of States which had increased their relations with South Africa, as well as transnational corporations and other organizations which collaborated with the régime and apartheid institutions. It appealed for assistance to the national liberation movement (p. 209) and reaffirmed the legitimacy of the anti-apartheid struggle by the South African people, including armed struggle. It vehemently condemned South Africa for repeated acts of aggression, subversion and terrorism against African States (p. 215) and denounced the "independence" proclamation of the Ciskei, a bantustan (p. 194).

On human rights aspects, it condemned South Africa for its brutal repression and the imposition of death sentences, demanded prisoner-of-war treatment for captured freedom fighters (p. 197), appealed to States to accede to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid<sup>(6)</sup> (p. 946), and reaffirmed the United Nations commitment to the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic society in South Africa.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 115 to 12, with 16 abstentions.

Introducing the 39-nation resolution, Nigeria recalled that the United Nations had repeatedly endorsed the aspirations of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement, and remained committed to the establishment of a democratic society in which all the people would enjoy equal and full human rights and participate freely in determining their destiny. The South African régime, however, had increased its repression; six freedom fighters were under sentence of death; the Government had proceeded with its bantustanization policy in a vain attempt to deprive the African majority of its citizenship, and had engaged in numerous acts of aggression, terrorism and destabilization against several other countries. The United Nations Charter provided sufficient authority for decisive action.

While all States participating in the Assembly debate voiced strong opposition to South Africa's apartheid policies, a number of them, such as Australia (abstaining), the Bahamas, Brazil and Costa Rica (in favour) and the United States (against), objected to some of the language in this resolution and others on apartheid, on the ground that it prevented the Assembly from reaching the desired consensus. Australia, Austria, the Bahamas, Botswana, Greece, Indonesia, Ireland, the Netherlands, Norway (for the Nordic States), Portugal, Samoa, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States found unsuitable the references to certain countries in this and other resolutions; the United States characterized as a despicable perversion of the truth the provision that its Government's pronouncements, policies and actions had encouraged South Africa to undertake its criminal acts. Solomon Islands abstained because of references to individual countries and Fiji voted in favour but with reservations on this point. Also voting positively, Thailand voiced reservations on the paragraph singling out the United States, and Ecuador said it would have abstained on that paragraph if there had been a separate vote.

Explaining their negative vote, several speakers, including Canada, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal and the United Kingdom, the last speaking for the member States of the European Community (EC), objected to the endorsement of armed struggle. Australia, Austria, Ireland, Norway (for the Nordic States) and Spain abstained because they could not support such an endorsement. Argentina and Papua New Guinea, though supporting the text, also reserved their position on this point. Fiji said it had no difficulty in supporting the provision to the extent that it advocated abandonment of apartheid through a process that would allow peaceful change.

Objections or reservations about the provision on sanctions were voiced by Botswana, Ireland, Lesotho, Spain and Swaziland (p. 168). Canada and the Netherlands objected to provisions on assistance to national liberation movements (p. 209). Argentina and the Netherlands had reservations on the provision concerning captured freedom fighters (p. 197).

During the debate, speakers generally condemned apartheid in South Africa as a criminal violation of human rights and demanded prompt international action for its eradication.

In Hungary's opinion, South Africa's apartheid policy had been the greatest political and moral challenge to the United Nations for many years. India said the question of apartheid was still the central issue facing the General Assembly, even after decades of discussions in various forums aimed at eliminating that pernicious evil. What distinguished apartheid from any other human rights violation and justified the world's insistent concern, said Ireland, was the fact that a racist theory had been adopted as a fundamental political principle for a whole society. Kenya observed that the United Nations had been founded to prevent such a situation from arising. Liberia charged that each time the issue of apartheid came up for debate by the international community, South Africa engaged in acts of defiance of United Nations policies. The more appeals the United Nations made, said Senegal, the more South Africa redoubled its efforts to consolidate the apartheid system.

As a result of apartheid, Bulgaria said, more than 3 million people had been uprooted from their homes and suffered untold misery, and the vast majority of the South African population was denied its right to equal education, health services and other benefits. In the view of Cyprus, apartheid was an affront to the United Nations and humanity as a whole. Finland regarded it as the most systematic and massive violation of human rights, while Saudi Arabia called it the basest form of degradation in society. Iran viewed it as a manifestation of materialism. Mexico remarked that no alleged legality, no so-called respect for freedom of expression or for political organization could be invoked as being above the principles of equality, justice and human dignity which had to be restored in South Africa.

Sierra Leone expressed deep concern over the apparent disparity between the international community's overwhelming support for resolutions calling for action against apartheid and their implementation once adopted; the end result of that dichotomy was not only the perpetuation of apartheid but also the loss of the Assembly's credibility. Bahrain, Brazil, and Trinidad and Tobago expressed a similar view.

In Angola's view, the situation would not change unless the international community forced all States to observe and implement the countless resolutions on the subject. In view of South Africa's inflexible position, said Austria, the international community would doubtless consider further measures under the United Nations Charter to bring about the long-overdue change in that country's policy. Bhutan believed that only through joint and individual action by the international community, particularly by key Western countries, could South Africa be coerced into abandoning apartheid. Ghana felt the time had come for States to pronounce themselves against apartheid or risk most of their relations with the rest of Africa. Vanuatu thought United Nations decisions and international public opinion had been ignored far too long by those profiting from South Africa's system of exploitation. Viet Nam said a solution to the South Africa situation could not be postponed; the struggle of the people concerned and the international efforts to eliminate apartheid were entering a particularly urgent and complex phase, which could be decisive.

Many States were of the view that South Africa was enabled to persist in its apartheid policy because of the support it received from outside. Thus, the United Republic of Cameroon regretted that certain Powers, whose dedication to the ideals of freedom, human rights and justice was well known, had let themselves be caught in a web of economic and geostrategic interests, enabling South Africa to defy the entire international community.

Australia urged delegations to seek language in Assembly resolutions that would attract universal support as well as leave South Africa in no doubt that its policies were condemned by all United Nations Members; references commending armed struggle, or mentioning the purported errors of others in support of Pretoria, did nothing to enhance the deliberations.

Somalia felt there had been noticeable progress in recent years, and particularly over the previous 12 months, in establishing and shaping international mechanisms to combat South Africa's racial policies, especially at the grass-roots level of NGOs and concerned individuals; however, in the face of increasing repression, the need for concerted action to eradicate apartheid had never been more apparent.

According to Cuba, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and others, repression in South Africa had intensified, in disregard of repeated United Nations resolutions. Madagascar thought that, despite protestations to the contrary, no progress had been made that reflected the desire of the international community for the establishment of racial equality, justice, freedom and peace in South Africa.

Bangladesh believed that the problem created by apartheid had two components, humanitarian and political, which could not be treated in isolation from each other. Other States mentioned the economic aspect, exemplified by the dependence of the apartheid system on cheap labour.

In Finland's opinion, South Africa's isolation would only deepen as long as apartheid persisted, with internal and external violence as an inevitable consequence. Djibouti, Sweden and others held a similar position. New Zealand thought South Africa could not keep the majority of its people under subjugation for long; if there was to be an evolutionary and relatively peaceful solution, the Government had to begin to bring about genuine change.

Many States expressed concern at South Africa's rapidly expanding military budget. Noting that the country's current defence spending had risen by 30 per cent over the previous year, Nepal said the aim was to keep the rulers safe from their own people and to carry out aggression against neighbouring States.

Apartheid was regarded by many, including Algeria, Bulgaria, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Malaysia, Mongolia, Morocco, the Niger, Poland, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia, as a threat to international peace and security. Haiti feared that, unless all States redoubled their efforts to deal the final blows to apartheid, the parties might resort to extreme measures and the conflict might spill over South Africa's borders and extend throughout Africa and even beyond.

Czechoslovakia said recent reforms which had softened some external aspects of apartheid could only be called cosmetic, since they had not touched such areas as education, the economy, health and sports; the racist leaders were merely changing tactics to gain time, compensate for political losses, halt the spread of the national liberation struggle and resolve the problem of southern Africa on a neo-colonialist basis. Albania, Australia, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Egypt, Finland, the Gambia, Ghana, Ireland, the Netherlands, Singapore, the Sudan, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR and Zimbabwe also expressed the view that the changes were not substantive; Zimbabwe saw them as aimed at maintaining white control by the limited appeasement of blacks.

Botswana said that constitutional reform, in the context of Afrikaaner political thought, meant the consolidation of apartheid and the desegregation of a few restaurants and other places, designed to hoodwink black South Africans and the world into believing that meaningful change had begun. Morocco asked how promises of reform could be believed when Pretoria sought ways to refine and perpetuate apartheid. Mauritania said there could be no compromise with apartheid, no liberalization by little steps. Mozambique and the Sudan stated that apartheid could not be dealt with by petty reforms; it must be destroyed. The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, said the reforms introduced by South Africa in 1980 had failed to create the hoped-for momentum for the liberalization and dismantling of apartheid; the system of apartheid must be eliminated, not simply modified, and must give way to a Government based on truly representative democracy.

Zambia cited the boycott of elections to the South African Indian Council as testimony of the oppressed people's mood in the face of divide-and-rule tactics intended to weaken the ranks of apartheid's victims.

The need for a peaceful solution was stressed by many speakers, including Austria, Brazil, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Norway; the United Nations, Brazil thought, had an important role to play in that connection. Botswana believed that dialogue between the leaders of white South Africa and the African leaders currently in prison or exile could initiate meaningful change towards a common society. Sweden also called for dialogue, warning that important sections of the majority increasingly saw little alternative to armed action to achieve fundamental change.

The view that mass resistance by the South African people was growing was shared by many countries, including Albania, Brazil, Czechoslovakia, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, Haiti, Jamaica, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mongolia, the Niger, Romania, Uganda, the USSR, Viet Nam and Zambia.

China stated that the historical trend of national liberation was irresistible, while the Comoros expressed the conviction that South Africa was moving irresistibly towards majority rule, even if it might still demand a long struggle. Pakistan was confident that the South African people would succeed in their just struggle. Cuba thought the oppressed people of South Africa, despite massive and brutal repression, had won major victories in their struggle to eradicate apartheid and to create a new society based on freedom, equality and respect for human dignity.

Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Mozambique, Nicaragua, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR, the United Republic of Cameroon, Viet Nam, Zaire and many others declared their support for the liberation struggle of the South African people. Nicaragua said the determination of the South African people to struggle for its freedom must be given the broadest international support.

The Netherlands considered that the collective weight of the EC members provided an important means to influence events in South Africa and also that increased international pressure was necessary, supported by autonomous initiatives. Sri Lanka said those having diplomatic and other means of pressure on South Africa must convey to that régime the international community's rejection of apartheid so that bloodshed could be avoided and a free society established. Sweden also called for pressure by Western countries.

The United States said the United Nations should consider concrete ways to expand democracy, education and economic opportunity in South Africa, to help advance peaceful, non-destructive change; it also urged that South Africa be allowed to take its rightful place in the Assembly, arguing that its continued illegal expulsion violated the United Nations Charter and diminished the Organization's capacity to influence the country constructively.

Algeria, on the other hand, considered armed struggle the only means to free South Africa from racist oppression, while Gabon stated that the racist régime would not abandon apartheid until it was forced into its last trenches.

By a letter of 17 December to the President of the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid transmitted a statement he had intended to make at the end of the Assembly debate. He appealed to the countries collaborating with South Africa to reassess their position and made a special appeal to the United States, whose attitudes and actions, he said, would greatly influence the pace of South Africa's inevitable transition to freedom and the scale of sacrifices in human lives needed to reach that goal.

The Special Political Committee, on 24 and 25 November, heard statements on the item by representatives of nine NGOs, in accordance with an Assembly decision that organizations having a special interest in the question should be heard. The speakers were: Beatrice von Roemer, International Confederation of Free Trade Unions; Wilfred Grenville-Grey, International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa; Annie Street, Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility; Luis Guastavino, Chile Democrático; William Booth, American Committee on Africa; Jim Morrell, Center for International Policy; Vicki Erenstein, International Committee of the National Lawyers Guild; Colin Moore, National Bar Association; and the Reverend Herbert Daughtry, National Black United Front. The Assembly, by a decision of 27 November,<sup>(8)</sup> adopted without vote on an oral proposal of its President, took note of the Committee's report on these hearings.<sup>(5)</sup>

Situation in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Reaffirming that apartheid is a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security,

Recognizing the contribution of the struggle for freedom and equality in South Africa to the purposes of the United Nations,

Conscious of the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement, as proclaimed, in particular, in General Assembly resolution 3411 C (XXX) of 28 November 1975,

Convinced that it is incumbent on the international community to provide all necessary assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement in their legitimate struggle for the establishment of a democratic society in accordance with their inalienable rights, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Welcoming with great satisfaction the growing mobilization of world public opinion and of all segments of the oppressed people of South Africa against apartheid,

Commending, in particular, the courageous struggle of the black workers of South Africa for their legitimate rights, Commending the liberation movements, particularly the African National Congress, and the oppressed people of South Africa for intensifying the armed struggle against the racist régime.

Paying tribute to all those who have sacrificed their lives in the struggle for freedom and human dignity in South Africa,

Reaffirming that the apartheid régime is totally responsible for precipitating violent conflict through its policy of apartheid and inhuman repression,

Gravely concerned at the intensification of repression in South Africa and the imposition of death sentences on six freedom fighters of the African National Congress, namely, Mr. Johannes Shabangu, Mr. Anthony Tsotsobe, Mr. David Moise, Mr. Ncimbithi Johnson Lubisi, Mr. Naphtali Manana and Mr. Petrus Tsepo Mashigo, Reaffirming that freedom fighters of South Africa are entitled to prisoner-of-war status under Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Denouncing as an international crime the policy of "bantustanization" designed to deprive the African majority of citizenship and to further dispossess it of its inalienable rights, as well as the continuing forced removals of millions of black people,

Recognizing that apartheid cannot be reformed but must be totally eliminated,

Noting with indignation the recent vetoing by the Western permanent members of the Security Council of proposals to impose mandatory sanctions against the apartheid régime of South Africa, Concerned that some Western countries and Israel continue to provide military supplies to South Africa, directly and indirectly, in gross violation of the provisions of Security Council resolution 41 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 forbidding the supply of arms and all related matériel to the apartheid régime.

Reaffirming that the policies and actions of the apartheid régime, the strengthening of its military forces and its escalating acts of aggression, subversion and terrorism against independent African States have resulted in frequent breaches of the peace and constitute a grave threat to international peace and security,

Recognizing the urgent need for increased humanitarian and educational assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa, as well as for direct assistance to the national liberation movement in its legitimate struggle,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/54 of 22 July 1981 on implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,

Recalling and reaffirming the Declaration on South Africa contained in its resolution 34/93 O of 12 December 1979,

Endorsing the Paris Declaration on Sanctions against South Africa, adopted by the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa, held in Paris from 20 to 27 May 1981, as well as the declarations of international seminars organized by the Special Committee against Apartheid in 1981,

Emphasizing the conclusion of the Paris Declaration that the continuing political, economic and military collaboration of certain Western States and their transnational corporations with the racist régime of South Africa encourages its persistent intransigence and defiance of the international community and constitutes a major obstacle to the elimination of the inhuman and criminal system of apartheid in South Africa and the attainment of self-determination, freedom and national independence by the people of Namibia,

Considering that the acquisition of nuclear capability by the apartheid régime constitutes a grave menace to Africa and the world,

Condemning all military, nuclear and other collaboration of certain Western States and Israel with South Africa,

Condemning also the collaboration of transnational corporations and financial institutions with South Africa,

1. Strongly condemns the apartheid régime of South Africa for its brutal repression and indiscriminate torture and killings of workers, schoolchildren and other opponents of apartheid, and the imposition of death sentences on freedom fighters;

2. Vehemently condemns the apartheid régime for its repeated acts of aggression, subversion and terrorism against independent African States, designed to destabilize the whole of southern Africa;

3. Reiterates its firm conviction that the apartheid régime has been encouraged to undertake these criminal acts by the protection afforded by major Western Powers against international sanctions, especially by the pronouncements, policies and actions of the Government of the United States of America;

4. Condemns, in particular, the actions of those States, especially the major trading partners of South Africa, that have increased their political, economic and military relations with the racist régime of South Africa despite repeated appeals by the General Assembly;

5. Further condemns those transnational corporations, financial institutions and other organizations that collaborate with the racist régime and apartheid institutions in South Africa;

6. Reaffirms its conviction that comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, universally applied, are the most appropriate and effective means by which the international community can assist the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and discharge its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security;

7. Urges the Security Council to determine that the situation in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole, resulting from the policies and actions of the apartheid régime of South Africa, constitutes a grave and growing threat to international peace and security, and to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that régime under Chapter VII of the Charter;

8. Deplores the action of the Western permanent members of the Security Council in vetoing proposals for mandatory and comprehensive sanctions against South Africa and calls upon them to co-operate in effective action for the elimination of apartheid;

9. Denounces the proclamation of the so-called "independence" of the Ciskei on 4 December 1981;

10. Again calls upon all States and organizations to refrain from any recognition of or co-operation with the so-called "independent" bantustans;

11. Calls upon all States, in particular the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, the Federal Republic of Germany, France and Israel to take urgent, effective measures to terminate all collaboration with South Africa in the political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military, nuclear and other fields in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

12. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so to accede to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

13. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement by all available means, including armed struggle, for the seizure of power by the people, the elimination of the apartheid régime and the exercise of the right of self-determination by the people of South Africa as a whole;

14. Demands that the apartheid régime treat captured freedom fighters as prisoners of war under the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocol I thereto;

15. Again proclaims its full support of the national liberation movement of South Africa as the authentic representative of the people of South Africa in their just struggle for liberation;

16. Appeals to all States to provide all necessary humanitarian, educational, financial and other necessary assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement in their legitimate struggle;

17. Urges the United Nations Development Programme and other agencies of the United Nations system to expand their assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and to the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, namely, the African National Congress and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, in consultation with the Special Committee against Apartheid;

18. Decides to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the budget of the United Nations to enable those liberation movements to maintain offices in New York in order to participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee and other appropriate bodies;

19. Extends its greetings to the African National Congress on its seventieth anniversary;

20. Requests Governments and organizations to co-operate with the Special Committee in publicizing the national liberation struggle in South Africa, its legitimate objectives and its wider significance;

21. Reaffirms the commitment of the United Nations to the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour, sex or creed, will enjoy equal and full human rights and fundamental freedoms and participate freely in the determination of their destiny.

General Assembly decision 38/419

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 32.

Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa

At its 75th plenary meeting, on 27 November 1981, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Special Political Committee.

Credentials of South Africa in the General Assembly

In 1981, the General Assembly twice approved recommendations of the Credentials Committee to reject the credentials of South Africa, for the resumed thirty-fifth session and for the eighth emergency special session on the Namibia question. South Africa did not submit credentials for the regular Assembly session later in 1981.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (MARCH). On 2 March,<sup>(9)</sup> the Assembly, by 112 votes to 22, with 6 abstentions, approved a report by its Credentials Committee<sup>(7)</sup> rejecting the credentials submitted by South Africa for the resumed thirty-fifth session. The credentials were rejected earlier that day by a Committee vote of 6 to 1 (United States), with 2 abstentions (Costa Rica, Spain).

The Committee acted after South Africa's credentials were challenged by the United Republic of Cameroon, on behalf of the African Group, at the start of the Assembly's deliberations on Namibia on 2 March (p. 1129). At the request of the United Republic of Cameroon, the Assembly President referred the matter immediately to the Credentials Committee.

The Committee's Acting Chairman announced that a letter had been received from South Africa requesting that it be permitted to present its position on its credentials to the Chairman or the Committee.<sup>(1)</sup> He stated that it was not the practice of the Committee to give the floor to non-members of the Committee and that therefore the request could not be acted upon.

In the Committee's discussion, as summarized in its report, the majority—Angola, China, Haiti, Kenya, Singapore and the USSR—of the nine members declared that they would vote to reject South Africa's credentials. They mentioned their stand on South Africa's apartheid policies, and China added that it could not accept the right of a minority racist régime, imposed on the South African people, to represent that people. In the view of the United States, however, the credentials conformed to the Assembly's rules of procedure and were therefore in order. Spain said it would abstain as it could not ignore the position adopted by the Assembly, although it appeared that the credentials were technically in order.

South Africa, by a letter of 2 March to the Assembly President,<sup>(2)</sup> expressed the wish to address the Assembly before it acted on the Committee's report; it invoked rule 29 of the rules of procedure, under which a representative to whose admission a Member had objected must be seated provisionally with the same rights as other representatives until the Credentials Committee had reported and the Assembly had decided. However, the Assembly adopted, by 113 votes to 23, with 1 abstention, a motion by the United Republic of Cameroon not to hear South Africa before the report had been disposed of. Austria and the United Kingdom opposed the motion, arguing that South Africa should have had the opportunity to speak in accordance with rule 29.

Speaking in explanation of vote on the credentials resolution, several States objected to the denial of South Africa's right to participate in the Assembly deliberations, saying the Committee had rejected the credentials for reasons not provided for in the rules of procedure or in the Charter of the United Nations. Some, such as Australia, Austria, Chile, France, Iceland (speaking for the Nordic States) and Samoa, stated that they had voted against the decision on legal grounds, although they continued to oppose apartheid. Australia, Austria, Canada, Chile, Iceland (for the Nordic States), New Zealand and the United Kingdom also thought it was at variance with the principle of universality of the United Nations. Canada, Iceland (for the Nordic States) and the United States regarded the rejection of South Africa's credentials as contrary to Articles 5 and 6 of the Charter, according to which a Member State might be suspended or expelled only on the recommendation of the Security Council as confirmed by the Assembly.

The Netherlands, speaking for the EC members, said they had voted against because the Committee had rejected the credentials for reasons not provided for in the Assembly rules. The Federal Republic of Germany added that the Committee's competence did not go beyond the right to examine the due form of credentials and that it was inconsistent with the Charter to evaluate the legitimacy and policies of the Governments issuing credentials. A similar view was held by France and New Zealand. Portugal said it had voted against the Committee's decision because the credentials met the procedural requirements and also because it believed that South Africa should be considered as one of the parties in the Namibia question, as had been stressed in many Assembly resolutions. The United Kingdom did not think South Africa's exclusion helped solve the problems before the Assembly.

Costa Rica abstained, citing what it saw as the contradiction between legal arguments and the fact that the official policy of the Pretoria Government was based on minority control. Turkey said its positive vote should be interpreted strictly in the light of its protest against South Africa's racist policies.

By two further letters dated 2 March, South Africa protested the Assembly President's refusal to grant it the opportunity to speak on the original point of order raised by the United Republic of Cameroon,<sup>(3)</sup> and strongly objected to the decision to deny it the right to speak as violating the Charter and the rules of procedure.<sup>(4)</sup> On 6 March, South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information<sup>(5)</sup> rejecting as null and void the resolution to deny South Africa the right to participate in Assembly deliberations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (SEPTEMBER). On 4 September, the Assembly acted on South Africa's credentials for the eighth emergency special session, on the Namibia question, by adopting a resolution<sup>(10)</sup> approving a report of the Credentials Committee rejecting the credentials.<sup>(6)</sup> The Assembly acted by a recorded vote of 117 to 22, with 6 abstentions, after the Committee vote on the previous day of 6 to 1 (United States), with 2 abstentions (Costa Rica, Spain).

Explaining its negative vote on the Assembly decision, the United States repeated the arguments it had used in March, adding that it was vitally important that the United Nations be fair and even-handed if it was to be an effective participant in the process leading to Namibia's independence. Australia, Austria, Canada, Chile, New Zealand, Norway (for the Nordic States) and the United Kingdom (for the EC members) said that, although they opposed South Africa's apartheid policy and its illegal occupation of Namibia, they supported the acceptance of South Africa's credentials as they firmly believed in the basic principle of United Nations universality. Canada added that the Assembly decision contradicted the distribution of powers between the Security Council and the Assembly.

Costa Rica, explaining its abstention, stated that rejecting the credentials of a delegation because the Government that issued them was illegitimate would be equivalent to affirming the legitimacy of all those whose credentials had been accepted. Repeating the stand it had taken in March, Turkey said its positive vote should be interpreted strictly in the light of its protest against South Africa's racist policy.

Before considering the resolution, the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 113 to 24, with 6 abstentions, endorsed Algeria's appeal on behalf of the African Group against a ruling by the Assembly President to give South Africa the opportunity to speak. Canada, the United Kingdom (for the EC members) and the United States opposed that appeal as not being in accordance with the Assembly's rules of procedure. Jordan, on the other hand, believed that the rule stating that representatives whose credentials were in dispute should be provisionally seated did not mean that they should be entitled to participate in the debate.

On 11 September,<sup>(6)</sup> South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of the same date from its Foreign Minister rejecting the Assembly decision not to accept South Africa's credentials. He stated that the Assembly had revealed itself as the intransigent party, had reinforced the belief that it was incapable of being objective and was afraid of hearing an opposing view.

Sanctions against South Africa

In 1981, the General Assembly and its Special Committee against Apartheid again called insistently for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, and condemned States which maintained political and economic relations with that country. However, because of negative votes by three permanent members, the Security Council did not adopt proposals by African States to impose such sanctions in connection with South Africa's continued occupation of Namibia (p. 1133).

To help mobilize world opinion in favour of sanctions, the Committee, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), organized in Paris in May an International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa. The Assembly proclaimed 1982 the International Year of Mobilization for Sanctions against South Africa (p. 177). Recognizing the important role of trade unions in the international campaign for sanctions, the Assembly authorized the Committee to organize in 1982 an International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions against South Africa (p. 179). The Security Council was urged to strengthen the arms embargo (p. 172) and to consider a mandatory oil embargo against South Africa (p. 175).

ACTION BY THE COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS. On 23 February, in a resolution on violations of human rights in South Africa and Namibia (p. 944), the Commission on Human Rights requested the Security Council to consider imposing mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa.<sup>(11)</sup> On 6 March, in a resolution on the self-determination of peoples (p. 8911, the Commission condemned the policy of States which continued to maintain political, economic, military and other relations with the racist régime in southern Africa, thus supporting, protecting and encouraging it to persist in suppressing the aspirations of peoples for self-determination and independence.<sup>(12)</sup>

CONFERENCE ON SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA. The International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa, organized by the United Nations in co-operation with OAU, was held in Paris from 20 to 27 May. The Conference, authorized by the General Assembly in 1980,<sup>(13)</sup> was attended by representatives of 121 Governments as well as of United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, OAU, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, national liberation movements, intergovernmental, international and national organizations, and invited individuals. The liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia—the African National Congress of South Africa, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania and the South West Africa People's Organization—were represented by high-level delegations led by their respective presidents. (For list of participating States and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

The Conference reviewed the situation in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole. On 27 May, it adopted by acclamation the Paris Declaration on Sanctions against South Africa, by which it called on Governments and organizations to counteract all moves to assist and encourage the apartheid régime, and appealed to them to concert their efforts in an international campaign for comprehensive sanctions against South Africa. It urged the United Nations, in co-operation with OAU and the national liberation movements, to promote, secure and monitor the sanctions programme.

The purpose of the sanctions, according to the Declaration, was to force abandonment of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia; to demonstrate abhorrence of apartheid and solidarity with the struggle against it; to deny benefits of international co-operation to South Africa; to undermine South Africa's ability to repress its people, commit aggression and threaten peace and security; and to remove economic support from apartheid so as to promote as peaceful a transition as possible.

The Conference drew the attention of States which opposed sanctions to the fact that their policies were aiding the escalation of violence. It considered that the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia and their national liberation movements deserved international support in their legitimate struggle.

The Conference also adopted a Special Declaration on Namibia by which it called on all Member States to impose sanctions on South Africa to ensure its immediate compliance with United Nations decisions (p. 1137).

The Political and Technical Commissions of the Conference proposed a number of detailed political and economic measures to implement sanctions and isolate South Africa, including an international campaign to stop the use of the veto against sanctions by one or more of the permanent members of the Security Council, unilateral sanctions pending the international imposition of a comprehensive programme and support to the national liberation movements. They also recommended strengthening of the existing arms embargo (p. 173) and oil embargo (p. 176), as well as other action to terminate military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa (p. 181), cut off foreign investments (p. 186) and monitor the activities of transnational corporations (TNCs) (p. 188).

The Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid, by a letter of 27 May,<sup>(1)</sup> drew the Conference report<sup>(10)</sup> to the attention of the Assembly and the Security Council. On 11 June, he transmitted the two declarations to the Secretary-General for the attention of the Assembly and the Council.<sup>(2)</sup>

Plans for publicizing the results of the Conference were made part of the programme for the International Year of Mobilization for Sanctions against South Africa (1982) (p. 177).

COMMUNICATIONS. In a message to the President of the Conference on sanctions, circulated by a note of 25 May,<sup>(7)</sup> the President of the Security Council stated that the Council recognized the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people to eliminate apartheid and maintained the hope that the inevitable changes in South Africa's racial policy could be attained peacefully. Without prejudice to the individual position of its members, the Council was unanimous in its condemnation of apartheid and had called on South Africa to act immediately to eliminate apartheid and grant all citizens equal rights.

Brazil, by a letter of 27 May to the Secretary-General,<sup>(3)</sup> transmitted a message from its President to the Conference expressing solidarity with the peoples of Africa. Nicaragua, on 2 June,<sup>(4)</sup> transmitted a government message of 21 May saying the Conference must do everything possible to give practical expression to the international repudiation of apartheid.

South Africa, on 27 May,<sup>(5)</sup> transmitted a letter of the same date in which its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information asserted that sanctions would hurt the countries of southern Africa whose economies were tied to that of South Africa, and said the Secretary-General's statement at the Conference simply echoed the same emotional statements expressed in General Assembly resolutions and ignored the fact that blacks in South Africa enjoyed better living conditions than black Africans in the rest of Africa. Replying on 29 May,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General observed that the position of the main United Nations organs on apartheid did not coincide with that of South Africa, and that in his own statement he had observed strict moderation in order to facilitate peaceful change.

ACTION BY THE COMMITTEE ON COLONIAL COUNTRIES. A resolution on United Nations organizations and decolonization, containing provisions deploring relations between South Africa and the International Monetary Fund (IMF), was adopted on 17 August by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. These provisions were later incorporated into General Assembly resolution of 24 November (p. 167).

The Committee's Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance presented a report in August in which it deplored the continued collaboration between IMF and South Africa. It stated that that country's continued membership, and its consequent ability to borrow money from the Fund when necessary, enabled it to borrow more and on better terms in private international financial markets, thereby buttressing the régime. The Sub-Committee recommended that the presiding officers of the Committee on colonial countries, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Committee against Apartheid constitute a mission to the Fund in 1982, and that the United Nations Secretariat's Unit on Studies and Information on Decolonization prepare a study on the relationship between IMF and South Africa. The Committee on colonial countries decided that further consultations should be held on implementing these recommendations, and it annexed them to its report to the Assembly.<sup>(9)</sup>

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. In its report to the General Assembly,<sup>(8)</sup> the Committee against Apartheid recommended that the Assembly endorse the declarations of the Conference on Sanctions against South Africa as well as the measures proposed by its commissions, and take urgent steps towards implementing them. The Committee regretted the non-participation in the Conference of a number of States, particularly the major trading partners of South Africa, namely, the United Kingdom, the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Italy, Belgium, Greece and Portugal, and of a number of inter-governmental organizations, particularly the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, IMF and the World Bank.

The Committee emphasized again the desirability of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa. It recalled that many States had instituted unilateral sanctions in response to appeals by the national liberation movements, OAU and the United Nations. It noted with utmost regret that the Western permanent members of the Security Council had continued, in the face of repeated breaches of peace and acts of aggression by South Africa, to prevent a determination by the Council that the situation constituted a threat to international peace and security requiring action under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter (on action with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace and acts of aggression). It considered that the attitudes and actions of those permanent members were a violation of their responsibilities under the Charter and an abuse of the veto, encouraging South Africa to persist in its escalating crimes.

The Committee said that a number of States, including several Western States, had become convinced of the need for sanctions, and it noted with satisfaction the statements by the new Government of France. It expressed appreciation at action by African, non-aligned, socialist and other States to break off, or refrain from, any relations with the apartheid régime.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(23)</sup> the General Assembly endorsed the declarations of the Conference on sanctions and the reports of its Political and Technical Commissions, and requested the Security Council to consider them urgently with a view to imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa. It called on all Governments to sever relations, implement the arms embargo (p. 173), prohibit nuclear collaboration (p. 180), cease trade and commercial transactions as well as loans and investments (p. 185), prohibit collaboration by corporations and individuals, prevent services by national airlines and shipping companies, and prevent cultural and sports contacts. It condemned the continuing collaboration of certain States with South Africa, in particular the United States, the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel. It expressed serious concern that IMF and the World Bank had not acted to terminate loans and credits to South Africa and suspend its membership, and requested the Secretary-General to try to persuade them to respect United Nations resolutions. The Committee against Apartheid was requested to intensify its sanctions campaign, and Governments, parliaments and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) were invited to co-operate.

The Assembly also endorsed the recommendations of the Seminar on Effective Measures to Prevent Transnational Corporations and Other Established Interests from Collaborating with the Racist Régime of South Africa (Geneva, 29 June-3 July) (p. 188).

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 109 to 18, with 13 abstentions.

In a resolution of 17 December proclaiming 1982 as the International Year of Mobilization for Sanctions against South Africa, the Assembly endorsed the Paris Declaration of the Conference on sanctions and commended it to the attention of all Governments and organizations.<sup>(21)</sup> In another resolution of the same date, on the work programme of the Committee against Apartheid, the Assembly requested the Committee to give the highest priority in 1982 to mobilizing support for sanctions, reviewing implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid, especially those on embargoes, and publicizing developments concerning collaboration with South Africa.<sup>(25)</sup>

In a resolution on foreign interests impeding decolonization,<sup>(15)</sup> adopted on 24 November, the Assembly strongly condemned Western and other States and TNCs which continued to invest in and supply armaments, oil and nuclear technology to South Africa. It called on all States, particularly the United Kingdom, the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Japan, Belgium, Israel and Italy, to terminate all political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military and nuclear collaboration with that régime.

Paragraph 10 of this resolution, citing States by name, was adopted by a recorded vote of 63 to 30, with 49 abstentions, after a motion to have a separate vote on this paragraph, to which Angola objected, was adopted by a recorded vote of 57 to 48, with 28 abstentions.

In a resolution of the same date on United Nations organizations and decolonization<sup>(16)</sup>—similar to the one adopted in August by the Committee on colonial countries—the Assembly expressed regret that the World Bank and IMF continued to maintain links with South Africa, as exemplified by that country's membership in both agencies; deeply deplored and called for an end to the persistent collaboration between IMF and South Africa; and proposed that the IMF Board of Governors include in its agenda an item on the Fund's relationship with South Africa.

The Assembly voted separately on two paragraphs of this resolution concerning IMF and World Bank relations with South Africa. Paragraph 6, expressing regret that the two agencies continued to maintain links with South Africa and that neither had fully implemented Assembly resolutions, was adopted by a recorded vote of 82 to 25, with 30 abstentions. Paragraph 7, deploring and calling for an end to the persistent collaboration between IMF and South Africa, was adopted by a recorded vote of 84 to 22, with 29 abstentions.

The Assembly called for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa in resolutions adopted on 28 October, on the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;<sup>(14)</sup> 10 December, on the Namibia situation,<sup>(17)</sup> and 17 December, on the South Africa situation.<sup>(20)</sup> By the last resolution, it reaffirmed its conviction that such sanctions, universally applied, were the most appropriate and effective means by which the international community could assist the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and discharge its responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and security; urged the Security Council to determine that the situation in South Africa and southern Africa as a whole, resulting from South Africa's policies and actions, constituted a grave and growing threat to international peace and security, and to impose comprehensive sanctions; and deplored the action of the Western permanent members of the Council in vetoing proposals for sanctions and called on them to co-operate in effective action for the elimination of apartheid.

By a resolution of 10 December calling for action by Member States in support of Namibia,<sup>(18)</sup> the Assembly requested States to take measures to isolate South Africa and sever all relations with it, and requested the Council for Namibia to continue to monitor the boycott of South Africa and to submit to the Assembly in 1982 a comprehensive report on all contacts between Member States and South Africa, with an analysis of information from States and other sources on the continuing political, economic and other relations of States and their economic and other interests with South Africa, and of measures taken by them to terminate all dealings with South Africa.

The 17 December resolution on sanctions was introduced by Ghana on behalf of 33 nations. Ghana said that violence and repression in South Africa were increasing and, save for a few cosmetic amendments to the laws, the apartheid system remained structurally unaltered. Therefore, despite the failure of the Security Council to impose sanctions, the case for them remained valid. The resolution represented another attempt to focus international attention on the serious situation in South Africa, to demonstrate the universal abhorrence of apartheid, and to deny the benefits of international co-operation to South Africa so as to oblige it and its supporters to heed world opinion.

Explaining the opposition of the Nordic

States to the resolution, Norway said they could not endorse the recommendations of the Conference commissions; they deplored the inappropriate and arbitrary singling out of individual countries and reserved their position on provisions which failed to take into account that only the Security Council could adopt decisions binding on Member States. Canada and New Zealand also voted against, Canada stating that the question of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter was strictly a Council prerogative and New Zealand declaring that it could not support proposals seeking to pre-empt the Council's functions or singling out countries for criticism.

Ireland, though supporting the application by the Council of certain selective measures, voted against the resolution because it doubted the wisdom of calling for comprehensive sanctions and because it disapproved of the arbitrary condemnation of a number of countries. Spain also objected to the call for sanctions and the naming of countries, both in this resolution and in the one on the South Africa situation. The naming of States was cited by Greece and Portugal in explaining their negative votes on the sanctions resolution.

Explaining the negative votes of the EC members, the United Kingdom said they did not support demands to break off all relations with South Africa and believed that existing lines of communication must be used to allow for the free expression of views on all political, social and economic questions of concern to the South African people. The Netherlands favoured limited sanctions but believed that the imposition of global sanctions against South Africa and its total isolation would only lead to increased oppression and hardship for the population and cause damage to neighbouring States; it also had reservations on entrusting the Committee against Apartheid with tasks belonging to the Security Council's arms embargo Committee. The United States, also voting against, said sanctions and boycotts were ineffective ways by which to attempt the eradication of apartheid.

Lesotho abstained as it feared that, because of its geopolitical situation, economic sanctions would present it with considerable problems; it had the same reservations on the sanctions provisions of the resolution on the South Africa situation and in the call for Security Council action in the Assembly's 17 December resolution on South African aggression against neighbouring States.<sup>(22)</sup> Swaziland abstained on similar grounds in the vote on the sanctions resolution. Botswana reserved its position on the provisions concerning comprehensive sanctions in the resolutions on the work programme of the Committee against Apartheid and the South Africa situation, as well as on clauses in the latter resolution mentioning specific States and the reference to the Conference on sanctions in the resolution on an arms embargo.<sup>(24)</sup>

Austria, which abstained, said it could not support prejudgement of the prerogatives and decisions of the Council, and felt that the arbitrary singling out of States for condemnation or criticism was unjustified and did not advance the cause of the oppressed people in South Africa.

The Bahamas, Bangladesh, Indonesia, Senegal, Suriname and Togo supported the text but voiced reservations on the specific mention of certain States—as did Samoa, which abstained. Bangladesh and Suriname said they would have abstained had there been a separate vote on the paragraph concerned.

Argentina, which cast a positive vote, said Member States could not be asked to comply with some of the measures until the Security Council had acted.

Brazil voted in favour but voiced doubts about the excessive language and scope of the text, which seemed to go beyond what would be expected of an Assembly resolution. Costa Rica, though supporting the text, said it could not go along with some of its paragraphs and concepts; it also expressed reservations on the mention of the Paris Conference and Declaration in the preambles of the resolutions on the South Africa situation and the International Year of Mobilization for Sanctions against South Africa, noting that the Declaration had been adopted without Costa Rica's agreement.

Explaining its abstention on the resolution on an International Year for sanctions against South Africa, Australia noted that it had not participated in the Conference on sanctions and did not subscribe to the Declaration. New Zealand, which also abstained, said it could not support the endorsement of the Paris Declaration.

Ireland said its support for this resolution should be understood in the light of the statement it had made at the Conference (describing its understanding that the reports of the Political and Technical Commissions did not form part of the consensus). The Netherlands, though casting a positive vote, also voiced reservations on the Declaration. Speaking for the Nordic States, which also voted in favour, Norway recalled that they had participated in the Conference's consensus with reservations.

Voting against paragraph 10 of the resolution on foreign interests impeding decolonization, Belgium said the selection of States mentioned therein was inspired by political considerations. The Central African Republic, Ireland, New Zealand and Uruguay deplored the selective condemnation of particular countries—especially, Ireland added, when some of them had denied the allegations. Chile thought the provision did nothing to encourage the understanding and co-operation needed to solve the problems of southern Africa. Denmark and Norway believed the accusations to be unjustified, and Finland said they were based on insufficient evidence. France asked how it and other members of the Western contact group on Namibia could be asked to break diplomatic relations with South Africa even as they were being urged to induce that régime to implement the Security Council's settlement plan for the Territory; as to economic and nuclear matters, France was bound to honour contracts and commitments already assumed. Israel believed that the condemnation of its Government had been generated by extraneous considerations. Japan said it had no diplomatic, military or nuclear relations with South Africa, had prohibited Japanese investments there, had called on its banks to refrain from extending loans and had limited trade relations with South Africa. Liberia remarked that the strategy of putting States in the full blaze of publicity had not proved successful.

Somalia thought the provision went against the aims of the resolution and contained a list that was far from exhaustive. Sweden said some countries were arbitrarily named, while Turkey would have preferred a text that avoided discriminatory condemnation. The United Kingdom, on behalf of the EC members, found the unjustified and arbitrary attacks against certain States particularly offensive. The United States said many Governments traded directly or indirectly with South Africa, often through their own state trading organizations.

Among those which abstained on this paragraph, Argentina and Fiji thought the provision impaired the effectiveness of the resolution. The Bahamas said no effort had been made to verify the allegations or distinguish between the positive and negative activities of certain States. Gabon, Indonesia, Morocco, Senegal, Sri Lanka and Togo expressed regret or reservations about the selective condemnation of several countries, as did the United Republic of Cameroon, which observed that the text was silent about other States that had collaborated with South Africa. Saint Lucia considered it impossible to encourage members of the Western contact group to apply pressure on South Africa while expecting them to sever all political relations with that régime. Reservations were also voiced by Bangladesh, Botswana, Burundi, Mali, Peru, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand; Botswana also reserved its position on the mention of oil supplies to South Africa.

In explanation of vote on the resolution concerning United Nations organizations and decolonization, the United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, cited the references to IMF and the World Bank among the reasons why they could not support the resolution. They voted against two paragraphs referring to the two agencies, as did Canada and Uruguay, which regarded the provisions as unacceptable politicization of technical agencies, and New Zealand, which considered the criticisms to be inappropriate.

Among States which abstained on these paragraphs, Lesotho said its stand should not be interpreted as endorsing negative references to IMF and the World Bank; Sri Lanka would have preferred it if the text had not referred to technical institutions whose statutes prevented them from implementing some Assembly resolutions; and Swaziland objected to politicizing the two agencies. Bolivia, Fiji, Mexico, Portugal and Spain also said they had difficulties with these paragraphs, and Saint Lucia and Trinidad and Tobago thought they were not in accord with facts.

Voting for the resolution, the USSR said the $2.2 billion in assistance received from IMF would help South Africa solve its balance-of-payments problems and increase its military power.

The IMF representative told the Fourth Committee, where the resolution originated, that the Fund's decisions on financial transactions had been taken in conformity with its Articles of Agreement and implied no approval or disapproval of policies or actions by a member State that were not within the Fund's authority. For IMF to base decisions on considerations unrelated to its Articles of Agreement would mean cutting itself adrift from agreed principles, to the detriment of all members.

The representative of the World Bank said South Africa had not been represented among the Bank's Executive Directors since 1972 and received no assistance from the Bank; the sole link was South Africa's membership in the agency.

Referring to a paragraph in an Assembly resolution of 10 December on dissemination of information on Namibia, calling for an international campaign to denounce the collusion of certain Western countries with the South African racists,<sup>(19)</sup> Costa Rica stated that it was against singling out any States for condemnation, because many others also traded with South Africa, including some in Africa, Asia and Eastern Europe. In response, Bangladesh, Bulgaria, the Central African Republic, the Congo, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Poland, Romania, the USSR, Viet Nam and Zaire denied that they traded with South Africa.

During the debate on apartheid and South Africa, many speakers supported the call for sanctions or measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. Those taking this position included Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, China, the Comoros, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Haiti, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania and Yugoslavia. Several countries, such as Bangladesh, Cyprus, Jamaica, and Trinidad and Tobago, called for a total isolation of South Africa.

The Netherlands thought selective economic measures against South Africa should preferably be decided upon by the Security Council or be implemented by enough countries in a position to exert meaningful pressure. New Zealand was willing to go along with economic sanctions imposed by the United Nations. Senegal called for a ban on commercial transactions and on the provision of essential supplies, particularly electronic and telecommunications hardware.

Many countries declared that they had restricted their relations with South Africa. China, Cyprus, Turkey, the United Republic of Cameroon and Venezuela said they had no political or economic relations with that country; Venezuela added that it discouraged its citizens from establishing contact with South African corporations. Czechoslovakia said it had stopped all contacts with South Africa in 1963 and was systematically boycotting that country. Ecuador had no official relations and refrained from promoting trade with South Africa. Malaysia had totally banned all trade and economic relations with South Africa and prohibited travel between the two countries. Nigeria had maintained a total trade embargo since its independence in 1960. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had closed its air and sea space to the aircraft and ships of countries that collaborated with South Africa.

Norway said that, together with other Nordic countries, it had taken steps to prevent Norwegian investments in and exports to South Africa, adopted a policy of not selling Norwegian oil to South Africa and instituted visa requirements for South African citizens; it was willing to co-operate with other countries to see how existing voluntary measures could be better coordinated and made more effective. Sweden said it had taken a series of measures unilaterally and on the basis of the Joint Nordic Programme of Action against South Africa adopted in 1978.

Japan and New Zealand declared that they had no diplomatic relations with South Africa; Japan added that it confined its economic relations with that country within the framework of normal trade and was making every effort to reduce its dependence on imports, particularly of natural resources, from there.

The United States, on the other hand, thought the United Nations could contribute to the ultimate erosion of apartheid if it became more realistic and less repetitive in calling for more embargoes, sanctions and other punitive steps which had never brought about constructive political reforms at any time in modern history.

According to many participants in the debate, collaboration by certain Western States and others was responsible for the continued existence of the apartheid régime. The Gambia said continued trade and investment were the life-blood of apartheid, enabling the régime to survive the economic disruption resulting from mass industrial action within the country. Saudi Arabia remarked that the profits derived from such a policy of opportunism were short term and would prove useless in the long run. The USSR said the Assembly should condemn States which had not ceased co-operating with South Africa, gave it political and diplomatic protection, and even proclaimed it their strategic ally. In the view of Viet Nam, the major Western countries must either continue their collusion with South Africa and share with it the ignominy of condemnation for complicity in the crime of apartheid, or join with the international community in imposing comprehensive sanctions.

Others protesting Western support for South Africa included Albania, Angola, Bahrain, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Ghana, Guinea, Nepal, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Mongolia and the Ukrainian SSR held the United States especially responsible in this regard. China said South Africa had stepped up its collaboration with the Taiwan authorities, in violation of Chinese sovereignty.

Comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolution 35/206 C of 16 December 1980.

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Recognizing that comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations are essential to avert the grave threat to international peace and security resulting from the policies and actions of the apartheid régime of South Africa,

Considering that political, economic, military and any other collaboration with the apartheid régime of South Africa encourages its persistent intransigence and defiance of the international community and its escalating acts of repression and aggression,

Deploping the attitude of those Western permanent members of the Security Council that have so far prevented the Council from adopting comprehensive sanctions against that régime under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Deploping also the attitude of those States, in particular the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel, which have continued and increased their political, military, economic and other collaboration with South Africa,

Strongly condemning the activities of those transnational corporations that continue to collaborate with the apartheid régime, especially in the military, nuclear, petroleum and other fields, and of those financial institutions which have continued to provide loans and credits to South Africa,

Deploping the policies of those States that refuse to take firm action against transnational corporations and financial institutions within their jurisdiction to prevent them from collaborating with the apartheid régime,

Commending the efforts of trade unions, religious institutions, student organizations and anti-apartheid movements in their campaigns against transnational corporations and financial institutions collaborating with the racist régime of South Africa,

Taking into account the relevant decisions adopted by the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 9 to 13 February 1981, and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its eighteenth ordinary session, held at Nairobi from 24 to 27 June 1981.

Having considered the declarations and reports of commissions of the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa, as well as the declarations of the international seminars organized in 1981 by the Special Committee against Apartheid.

1. Endorses the declarations of the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa as well as the reports of Its Political and Technical Commissions, and the declarations of the International seminars organized by the Special Committee against Apartheid;

2. Also endorses the recommendations of the Seminar on Effective Measures to Prevent Transnational Corporations and Other Established Interests from Collaborating with the Racist Régime of South Africa, held at Geneva from 29 June to 3 July 1981;

3. Requests the Security Council urgently to consider the above declarations and reports with a view to the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the apartheid régime of South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Condemns the continuing economic and other collaboration of certain Western and other States, in particular the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel, with the racist régime of South Africa;

5. Commends all Governments that have taken action to break off, or to refrain from, any relations with the apartheid régime of South Africa;

6. Urges all States that have not yet done so to adopt separate and collective measures for comprehensive sanctions against South Africa, pending action by the Security Council;

7. Calls upon all Governments that have not yet done so:

(a) To sever diplomatic, military, nuclear, economic, cultural, academic, sports and other relations with the apartheid régime of South Africa;

(b) To implement scrupulously the arms embargo against South Africa and prohibit all forms of nuclear collaboration with South Africa;

(c) To cease all direct and indirect trade and commercial transactions with, as well as loans to and investments in, South Africa;

(d) To eliminate all government promotion of, or assistance or facilities to, trade with and investment in South Africa;

(e) To prohibit the sale of krugerrands;

(f) To prohibit, within their jurisdiction, collaboration of corporations and individuals with the racist régime of South Africa;

(g) To cease any facilities to airlines and shipping lines of South Africa and to prevent their national airlines and shipping companies from providing services to and from South Africa;

(h) To deny visas and other facilities to South African athletes, artists, entertainers and academic personalities and effectively to prevent their nationals from having cultural, academic and sporting contacts with South Africa;

8. Again requests States members of the European Economic Community, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, as well as States parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, to take the necessary steps to deny all assistance and commercial or other facilities to the racist régime of South Africa;

9. Expresses serious concern that the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank have not taken steps to terminate loans and credits to South Africa and to suspend South Africa from membership;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake urgent consultations with the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank in order to persuade them to respect the repeated resolutions of the United Nations on collaboration with the apartheid régime of South Africa, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, as well as all agencies and organizations of the United Nations system:

(a) To withhold any facilities from, or investment of any funds in, banks, financial institutions and corporations that continue to give loans to or invest in South Africa;

(b) To refrain from any purchase of South African products, directly or indirectly;

(c) To deny any contracts or facilities to transnational corporations and financial institutions collaborating with South Africa;

(d) To prohibit any official travel by South African Airways or South African shipping lines;

12. Requests and authorizes the Special Committee:

(a) To continue and intensify its campaign to achieve world-wide support for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa;

(b) To strengthen its co-operation with trade unions and other organizations in order to promote effective sanctions against South Africa;

(c) To publicize the activities of transnational corporations, financial institutions and other interests collaborating with the apartheid régime of South Africa;

(d) To organize conferences and seminars, and to arrange for studies and publications on all aspects of sanctions against South Africa and on the continuing collaboration with South Africa of Governments, corporations and other interests;

13. Invites all Governments, parliaments, non-governmental organizations, anti-apartheid and solidarity movements, trade unions, religious bodies and other groups to promote comprehensive sanctions against South Africa in co-operation with the Special Committee.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Arms embargo

There were calls in United Nations bodies during 1981 for a strengthening of the arms embargo against South Africa mandated by the Security Council in 1977.<sup>(10)</sup>

ACTION BY THE COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS. On 23 February 1981, in a resolution on violations of human rights in South Africa and Namibia (p. 944), the Commission on

Human Rights requested the Security Council to reinforce the arms embargo against South Africa by adopting comprehensive mandatory measures to end all military and nuclear collaboration with the apartheid régime.<sup>(4)</sup>

ACTIVITIES OF THE SEMINAR ON THE ARMS EMBARGO. An International Seminar on the Implementation and Reinforcement of the Arms Embargo against South Africa was held in London from 1 to 3 April 1981, organized by the Committee against Apartheid in co-operation with the World Campaign against Military and Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa and with the assistance of the British Anti-Apartheid Movement. The Seminar was attended by representatives of United Nations bodies, Governments, national liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia, anti-apartheid movements and other NGOs, members of parliament and experts.

In a Declaration, transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter of 10 April from the Committee Chairman,<sup>(1)</sup> the Seminar expressed serious concern that the Security Council's arms embargo had not been effectively implemented because of the resistance of certain Western and other States. It pointed to the failure of many States to enact adequate legislation, to their narrow interpretations which made the embargo largely ineffective and to the weakness of monitoring and enforcement measures.

The Seminar considered it essential and urgent to promote a world-wide campaign aimed at pressing the major Western Powers to implement and reinforce the arms embargo against South Africa. It suggested in particular: that all States enact legislation or policy directives covering all military collaboration, including transfers through third parties and involvement in production in South Africa; that petroleum, computers, other electronic equipment, military technology, "dual purpose" equipment for civilian and military use, components, auxiliary equipment and spare parts for arms be included in the embargo; that the Security Council adopt the 1980 recommendations<sup>(12)</sup> of its Committee on the question of South Africa established in 1977<sup>(11)</sup> (on measures to make the arms embargo more effective); and that all States furnish the Council with information about violations.

In its report to the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee against Apartheid recommended urgent action on the Seminar's recommendations for the enforcement and better monitoring of the arms embargo. To promote effective monitoring, the Committee suggested joint meetings of itself and the Council Committee to consider means to investigate and publicize information on implementation of the embargo and the strengthening of monitoring services in the United Nations Secretariat.

ACTION BY THE CONFERENCE ON SANCTIONS. In its Paris Declaration of 27 May (p. 165), the Conference on Sanctions against South Africa<sup>(3)</sup> also endorsed the recommendations of the Security Council Committee. Like the London Seminar, the Conference called on States to adopt legislation or issue policy directives covering all forms of military collaboration, direct or indirect, including end-user clauses designed to monitor and enforce the arms embargo scrupulously. Such legislation should also cover existing loopholes with regard to "dual purpose" items, computers, electronic equipment and related technology.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. The Declaration of the Seminar on the arms embargo against South Africa was approved by the General Assembly in a resolution of 28 October on racial discrimination.<sup>(5)</sup>

By a resolution of 17 December on the arms embargo against South Africa,<sup>(9)</sup> the Assembly urged the Security Council to consider effective measures to reinforce and strengthen the embargo, taking into account the 1980 recommendations of the Council Committee and the declarations of the Conference on sanctions and the Seminar. It called, on all States to take effective measures to ensure that governmental and non-governmental organizations within their jurisdiction ceased relations with the military and police forces, military industry and nuclear institutions of South Africa; requested States to take firm steps to prevent co-operation or contacts with South Africa by military alliances to which they were parties, and asked them to co-operate with the Committee against Apartheid and the Council Committee; and requested more effective Secretariat services for monitoring the arms embargo. The Assembly also requested the Committee against Apartheid to strengthen its co-operation with the Council Committee and to continue efforts for a comprehensive and effective embargo on all military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

The resolution, introduced by Nigeria on behalf of 52 sponsors, was adopted by a recorded vote of 138 to none, with 7 abstentions.

By a resolution of the same date concerning military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa,<sup>(8)</sup> the Assembly urged the Security Council to take immediate steps to ensure the scrupulous and full implementation of the arms embargo and its effective monitoring in the light of the Council Committee's report on ways of making the embargo more effective.

In a resolution of 28 October on the right of peoples to self-determination,<sup>(6)</sup> the Assembly again demanded the immediate application of the arms embargo by all countries, particularly those that maintained military and nuclear co-operation with the Pretoria régime and continued to supply it with related matériel.

By a resolution of 10 December on action by Member States in support of Namibia,<sup>(7)</sup> the Assembly requested all States: to cease providing to South Africa arms and related matériel, as well as equipment, supplies and licences for their manufacture or maintenance; to ensure that arms export agreements provided for guarantees preventing embargoed items or any components thereof from reaching South Africa through third countries; to prohibit the export of spare parts for embargoed aircraft and other military equipment belonging to South Africa, and the maintenance and servicing of such equipment; to prohibit government agencies and corporations under their jurisdiction from transferring technology for the manufacture of arms and related matériel to South Africa and from investing in such manufacture in South Africa; and to prohibit all imports of arms and related matériel from there.

France said its abstention in the vote on the arms embargo resolution was justified by the fact that certain provisions were perceptibly removed from the 1977 Security Council resolution imposing an arms embargo, which it was strictly applying. Also abstaining, the Federal Republic of Germany stated that the declarations of the Conference on sanctions and the Seminar on the arms embargo contained dubious propositions to which it could not subscribe; it had applied a voluntary arms embargo against South Africa since 1963 and had given full support to the 1977 Council resolution.

Among those voting for the resolution, Australia and Spain mentioned that the imposition of sanctions was the responsibility of the Security Council. Belgium, Botswana, Japan and the Netherlands, though supporting the text, expressed reservations on the Conference and Seminar declarations; Belgium added that it could not accept the indirect references to supposed co-operation between certain Western States and South Africa, and Japan said it had strictly implemented the arms embargo. Ireland said its support for the resolution should not be seen as endorsement of the Seminar Declaration; it also expressed reservations concerning the paragraph calling on States to take specific measures unilaterally. The Netherlands attached importance to strengthening the arms embargo as a means to compel South Africa to desist from its repressive internal policy and military actions against neighbouring States; however, it believed that peaceful nuclear collaboration could not be categorized as a form of military collaboration.

During the debate, many States-among them Gabon, Indonesia, Ireland and Singapore-deemed it essential to strengthen the arms embargo and improve its monitoring. Malaysia and others were disturbed at reports of breaches of the embargo by certain countries. Ghana and Tunisia expressed concern that there were still loopholes which permitted violations, while Venezuela was concerned at the failure to enforce the embargo. The German Democratic Republic charged imperialist monopolies with violating the embargo, and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that 'Western States, and the United States in particular, had paid no attention to its implementation.

The Netherlands said it had long prohibited the sale of arms on a voluntary basis. The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, stated that they strictly observed the embargo. The United States said it had been the first country to impose a complete arms embargo against South Africa, in 1963, 15 years before the United Nations embargo.

Arms embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/206 B of 16 December 1980,

Further recalling Security Council resolutions 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 and 473(1980) of 13 June 1980.

Recognizing the importance of the effective and universal implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa, the cessation of all military co-operation with South Africa and the denial of any assistance or co-operation, either direct or indirect, to South Africa in its military build-up or nuclear plans, Considering that military or nuclear co-operation with South Africa increases the threat to international peace and security.

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Taking note of the report of the International Seminar on the Implementation and Reinforcement of the Arms Embargo against South Africa, held in London from 1 to 3 April 1981, and the Paris Declaration on Sanctions against South Africa, adopted by the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa, held in Paris from 20 to 27 May 1981,

Expressing its grave concern about the large increase in the military budget of South Africa since the imposition of the arms embargo by the Security Council, the development by South Africa of its nuclear-weapon capability and the increasing acts of aggression by South Africa against independent African States,

Noting with regret that the Security Council has so far failed to take action on the report of 19 September 1980 of the Council Committee established by resolution 421 (1977) concerning the question of South Africa on ways and means of making the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa more effective,

Commending the World Campaign against Military and Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa and other groups for their co-operation in providing information to organs of the United Nations on infringements of the arms embargo,

1. Urges the Security Council to consider effective measures to reinforce and strengthen the arms embargo against South Africa, taking into account the recommendations of the Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa, the Paris Declaration on Sanctions against South Africa and the Declaration of the International Seminar on the Implementation and Reinforcement of the Arms Embargo against South Africa;

2. Calls upon all States to take effective measures to ensure that governmental and non-governmental organizations within their jurisdiction cease any relations with the military and police forces, military industry and nuclear institutions of South Africa;

3. Requests all States concerned to take firm steps to prevent any co-operation or contacts with the régime of South Africa by military alliances to which they are parties;

4. Requests all States to extend their co-operation to the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421 (1977) concerning the question of South Africa in the discharge of their respective mandates;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure more effective Secretariat services for the monitoring of the arms embargo against South Africa and maximum co-ordination towards that end;

8. Requests and authorizes the Special Committee:

(a) To strengthen its co-operation with the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa;

(b) To continue in its efforts to promote a comprehensive and effective embargo on all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa.

Oil embargo

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. During 1981, the Committee against Apartheid continued to promote an embargo on international trade in petroleum and petroleum products with South Africa. In co-operation with a committee of nine Western European parliamentarians, it organized a Conference of West European Parliamentarians on an Oil Embargo against South Africa, at Brussels, Belgium, on 30 and 31 January. The Conference, attended by 35 members of parliament from eight Western European countries and the European Parliament, representatives of United Nations bodies, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the national liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia, adopted a declaration favouring a mandatory Security Council oil embargo and urging legislative action by European Governments to enforce and strengthen such an embargo.

The Committee Chairman, by a letter of 21 January, expressed appreciation to Norway for its action in preventing a Norwegian tanker from delivering oil from the Norwegian continental shelf to South Africa. By a letter dated 22 January to the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, he requested that Committee to consider the continued supply to South Africa of oil from Brunei under a contract between Shell and SASOL, the South African parastatal oil corporation. By a letter of 20 March, he commended the work of the Holland Committee and its Shipping Research Bureau, established to study how South Africa had been able to evade the oil embargo imposed by oil-exporting countries.

The Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid and the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, in a joint statement commending five churchmen in France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States for a letter they had addressed on 23 March to five oil companies, called on all oil companies to cease forthwith the supply of oil and oil products to South Africa, especially in violation of embargoes enacted by oil-exporting countries.

In its 1981 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> which gave an account of these activities, the Committee recommended that the Security Council institute a mandatory oil embargo against South Africa and call on States to impose exemplary punishment on any transnational corporation or tanker company involved in the supply of oil to South Africa. It also called for the termination of all participation by corporations and financial institutions in South Africa's oil-from-coal industry.

The Committee commended for the urgent attention of the Council and the Assembly the proposals of the Conference of West European Parliamentarians on an oil embargo and of the Technical Commission of the Conference on Sanctions against South Africa (see below), as well as a resolution on South Africa adopted in June at Nairobi, Kenya, by the OAU Council of Ministers, which reaffirmed the organization's commitment to an oil embargo and reiterated its appeal to prohibit oil exports to South Africa or Namibia.<sup>(1)</sup>

ACTION BY THE COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS. In a resolution of 23 February on violations of human rights in South Africa and Namibia (p. 944), the Commission on Human Rights requested the Security Council to consider imposing mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa, including in particular an embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products.<sup>(5)</sup>

ACTION BY THE CONFERENCE ON SANCTIONS. In its Paris Declaration of 27 May, the Conference on Sanctions against South Africa<sup>(4)</sup> (p. 165) noted with satisfaction that the major oil-exporting States had imposed an embargo on the supply of their oil to South Africa. It called on other suppliers of oil or oil products to join in implementing the embargo through legislation or policy directives. It urged the Security Council to institute a mandatory embargo on the supply of oil and oil products to South Africa and on the provision of any assistance to the South African oil industry.

The Conference's Technical Commission, recognizing that oil was South Africa's most vulnerable point of dependence on the outside world, agreed that an oil embargo was a key element in any sanctions programme against South Africa. It recommended a set of legislative, monitoring and enforcement measures, including the establishment of an intergovernmental monitoring agency and action by Governments to penalize companies that violated the embargo.

COMMUNICATION. Kuwait, by a letter of 9 November,<sup>(2)</sup> transmitted to the Secretary-General a resolution adopted at Kuwait on 6

May by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC), containing recommendations for the strengthening and better control of the embargo on the delivery of Arab oil to South Africa, to be adopted by its member countries. The resolution was signed by Algeria, Bahrain, Iraq, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(8)</sup> the General Assembly again requested the Security Council to consider urgently a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa. It urged States to take effective legislative and other measures to ensure the implementation of an oil embargo, and asked them to act against corporations and tanker companies involved in the illicit supply of oil to South Africa. It requested the Committee against Apartheid to continue its efforts to promote an effective oil embargo and authorized it to organize if necessary, under United Nations auspices, a conference of oil-exporting countries that had imposed an oil embargo, to consider national and international arrangements to ensure implementation. It invited Governments and organizations to lend their full support to the embargo.

This resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 126 to 7, with 12 abstentions.

By a resolution of 24 November on foreign interests in colonial countries,<sup>(7)</sup> the Assembly called on oil-producing and oil-exporting countries to take effective measures against the oil companies that supplied crude oil and petroleum products to South Africa.

Introducing the 52-nation resolution on an oil embargo against South Africa, Algeria said the text essentially reproduced the provisions of the 1980 Assembly resolution on the subject.<sup>(6)</sup> The sponsors were convinced that its strict application would do a great deal to strengthen common action to eradicate apartheid.

New Zealand, which abstained in the vote, as well as Ireland, the Netherlands and Spain, which supported the Assembly's request to the Council to impose an oil embargo, reserved their position on provisions which they regarded as appearing to pre-empt Council consideration. Australia abstained on similar grounds. Norway, which voted in favour, said the Nordic States were prepared to join in a mandatory oil embargo imposed by the Council; it was Norway's policy not to sell oil to South Africa.

During the debate, Ghana urged the Council to adopt an oil embargo as a matter of urgency. The call for an embargo was supported by a number of other countries, among them Algeria, Ireland, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Poland and Senegal; the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that, as a member of OAU, it worked closely with other oil-exporting countries in implementing the embargo. Saudi Arabia declared its readiness to carry out boycotts by every available means, particularly an oil embargo. The Netherlands said it was considering participation in the existing voluntary embargo.

Oil embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolution 36/206 D of 16 December 1980.

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Taking note of the Paris Declaration on Sanctions against South Africa, adopted by the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa, held in Paris from 20 to 27 May 1981, and the Declaration of the Conference of West European Parliamentarians on an Oil Embargo against South Africa, held at Brussels on 30 and 31 January 1981.

Convinced that an embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic materials is an essential complement to the arms embargo against South Africa.

Commending all Governments that have imposed an oil embargo against South Africa,

Taking note of the resolution adopted on 6 May 1981 by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries to tighten crude oil sales contracts in order to prevent oil from reaching South Africa,

Reiterating the urgent need for the imposition of a mandatory oil embargo against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations and for more effective monitoring of the embargoes imposed by most oil-exporting States,

Condemning the activities of corporations and other interests engaged in the clandestine supply to South Africa of oil from countries which imposed an oil embargo,

1. Again requests the Security Council to consider urgently a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Urges all States that have not yet done so to take effective legislative and other measures to ensure the implementation of an oil embargo against South Africa;

3. Requests all States concerned to take effective action against corporations and tanker companies involved in the illicit supply of oil to South Africa;

4. Requests and authorizes the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue its efforts, including the undertaking of missions, the holding of seminars and the publication of studies, to promote an effective oil embargo against South Africa;

5. Further authorizes the Special Committee, in consultation with the Secretary-General and oil-exporting countries, to organize if necessary, under the auspices of the United Nations, a conference of oil-exporting countries that have imposed an oil embargo against South Africa to consider national and international arrangements to ensure the effective implementation of their oil embargo;

6. Invites Governments, International and non-governmental organizations, trade unions and other appropriate bodies to lend their full support to the oil embargo against South Africa.

International Year for sanctions against South Africa (1982)

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. In its annual report for 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee against Apartheid recommended that 1982 be proclaimed the International Year of Mobilization for Sanctions against South Africa.

In a special report to the General Assembly on this observance, transmitted on 29 October 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee suggested that the purpose of the Year should be to make world public opinion aware of the grave situation in southern Africa and mobilize maximum support for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa. While awaiting the imposition of sanctions by the Security Council, the Year's activities would seek to promote selective and partial sanctions and unilateral measures by States, organizations, groups and individuals in order to isolate the apartheid régime.

The programme for the Year would entail the promotion of concrete action by the United Nations, Governments, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to end collaboration and encourage wider public action such as consumer, sports, cultural and academic boycotts, divestment from corporations doing business in South Africa, and the establishment of anti-apartheid and solidarity movements.

The Committee's recommendations for the Year included: the holding of a special General Assembly meeting to present awards to persons recommended by the Committee for their outstanding contribution to the international movement for sanctions; United Nations publicity for the Paris Declaration and other documents of the Conference on sanctions (p. 165), and for other measures for the isolation of South Africa; and government action to establish national committees, hold special parliamentary sessions and review actions concerning the cessation of collaboration with South Africa. Specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations should be requested to review their relations with South Africa with a view to terminating any collaboration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly proclaimed 1982 the International Year of Mobilization for Sanctions against South Africa. It endorsed the programme for the Year recommended by the Committee against Apartheid, as well as the Paris Declaration on Sanctions against South Africa, and requested the Committee to promote observance of the Year. It invited Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and institutions to participate, and requested the Secretary-General to encourage the widest possible observance.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 130 to 8, with 8 abstentions.

By another resolution of the same date,<sup>(5)</sup> dealing with the Committee's work programme, the Assembly requested the Committee to give the highest priority in 1982 to mobilizing support for sanctions against South Africa.

India introduced the resolution on the International Year on behalf of its 52 sponsors, stating that the time had come for greater concerted efforts to mobilize the world community for comprehensive sanctions.

Explaining its negative vote on the resolution, Portugal said the initiatives of those in South Africa struggling for fundamental changes should not be hampered and contact should be kept with the people of South Africa.

New Zealand, which abstained, said it thought that designating an international year was the wrong way to go about imposing selective sanctions. Speaking for the Nordic States, which voted in favour, Norway observed that the resolution did not take into account the guidelines for international years established in 1980 by the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(3)</sup>

Reservations regarding the Paris Declaration were voiced by Australia and New Zealand, which abstained, and by Ireland, the Netherlands and Norway, the last speaking for the Nordic States, which voted in favour (p. 169).

During the Assembly's debate, Jamaica suggested that the programme of the Year concentrate on promoting concrete actions by Governments to end collaboration with South Africa and encourage wider public action, such as consumer, sports and cultural boycotts.

Trade unions and sanctions

ACTION BY THE CONFERENCE ON SANCTIONS. The Political Commission of the Conference on Sanctions against South Africa (p. 165), in its report to the Conference adopted on 26 May,<sup>(3)</sup> called on all trade unions to help boycott transport and communication with South Africa and to support the struggle of black workers there and in Namibia, both through direct solidarity and by giving material assistance to the South African Congress of Trade Unions and the National Union of Namibian Workers.

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. In its 1981 report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee against Apartheid commended the actions of trade unions in denouncing repression against workers and journalists, supporting sanctions and exposing violations of the arms and oil embargoes, discouraging loans and emigration of workers to South Africa, opposing the activities of transnational corporations (TNCs) in aid of the apartheid régime, and assisting persecuted workers and their trade unions. It also commended the Declaration and resolutions on apartheid adopted at Geneva in June by the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) as an important guide to further action.

In its Declaration, which updated a 1964 ILO Declaration on the subject,<sup>(7)</sup> the General Conference reaffirmed the organization's determination to promote and take part in securing the freedom and dignity of the people of South Africa, and to fight the policy of apartheid; confirmed the ILO Director-General's mandate to monitor and follow the situation in South Africa in respect of labour and social matters and to submit a special report every year; decided to establish a permanent Conference Committee on Apartheid to examine information on South Africa and on action taken against apartheid; and asked ILO to increase its technical assistance to the liberation movements, black workers and their independent trade unions and to create a training institute for South Africa to promote manpower training and development.

The Committee against Apartheid welcomed a resolution adopted at Nairobi, Kenya, in June by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), requesting the OAU Sanctions Committee, in collaboration with the Organization of African Trade Union Unity, the Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia, to convene an international trade union conference to work out an action programme towards the enforcement of sanctions.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly should: denounce the trade union rights violations in South Africa and the repression against black workers; commend the courageous struggle of black workers of South Africa for their rights; commend actions by the world trade union movement in support of the struggle for trade union rights and liberation in South Africa, and encourage further measures in the light of the conclusions of the Conference on sanctions and the decisions of the ILO General Conference; and provide funds to enable the Committee to contribute to the organization of an international sanctions conference of trade unions and to undertake other activities to promote trade union action against apartheid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 17 December,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly requested and authorized the Committee against Apartheid to take steps, in co-operation with the Council for Namibia, ILO, OAU and the Organization of African Trade Union Unity, to organize in 1982 an International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions against South Africa. The purpose of the Conference would be to work out an action programme towards the enforcement of sanctions against apartheid. The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 129 to 2, with 12 abstentions.

By its resolution of the same date on sanctions against South Africa,<sup>(4)</sup> the Assembly requested the Committee to strengthen its co-operation with trade unions and other organizations in order to promote effective sanctions against South Africa. In another resolution of 17 December, on public information, the mass media and apartheid the Assembly authorized the Committee to promote the organization of the Conference.

Guinea, introducing the 47-nation resolution on the Conference, said the denial of trade union rights formed part of a series of measures to restrict, limit, persecute and do police violence to the victims of which made of South Africa a vast camp of displaced persons, subjected to strict conditions of forced labour. The Assembly, in endorsing the holding of a conference of trade unions, would contribute to the success of the International Year for sanctions (p. 177) and express its devotion to humanitarian ideals.

Abstaining in the vote on this resolution, New Zealand voiced reservations about the call for such a conference. Costa Rica, though voting in favour, expressed reservations on the mention of the report of the Conference on sanctions in a preambular paragraph of the resolution. Botswana had reservations on the reference to the Conference of trade unions in the public information resolution.

International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/206 C of 16 December 1980.

Deploping that some Member States have maintained and even increased their political, military, economic and other relations with South Africa despite the resolutions of the United Nations on apartheid:

Having considered the report of the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa, held in Paris from 20 to 27 May 1981, as well as the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid.

Recognizing the important role of trade union organizations in the international campaign for sanctions against South Africa,

1. Requests and authorises the Special Committee against Apartheid to take all necessary steps, in co-operation with the United Nations Council for Namibia, the International Labour Organisation, the Organization of African Unity and the Organization of African Trade Union Unity, to organize in 1982 an International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions against South Africa for the purpose of working out a programme of action towards the enforcement of sanctions against apartheid;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Committee in the organization of the Conference.

Relations with South Africa

Political, economic and military collaboration with South Africa by States, business enterprises and financial institutions was condemned in 1981 by the General Assembly, the Conference on Sanctions against South Africa and the Committee against Apartheid as an encouragement of South Africa's apartheid policies. To isolate South Africa, they urged the Security Council to take measures to end such collaboration, especially in the military and nuclear fields (see below). The Assembly condemned in particular Israel's increasing collaboration with South Africa in these areas (p. 192). Termination of collaboration by TNCs was called for by the Economic and Social Council (p. 188), while the Assembly requested effective steps by the Security Council to achieve the cessation of foreign investments in South Africa (p. 185).

Military and nuclear relations

ACTION BY THE COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS. By a resolution of 23 February, on foreign support of South Africa (p. 945), the Commission on Human Rights requested States to end all forms of collaboration and assistance, including military and nuclear supplies and equipment, to the racist régime which used such assistance to repress the people of South Africa and Namibia and their national liberation movements<sup>(7)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (MARCH). In a resolution on the Namibia question adopted on 6 March,<sup>(11)</sup> the General Assembly condemned Western and other States which had assisted South Africa in developing a nuclear capacity and urged all Member States to frustrate South Africa's attempts to develop nuclear weapons.

In a resolution of the same date on Namibian uranium,<sup>(12)</sup> the Assembly requested the Security Council to ensure that South Africa did not continue to acquire foreign nuclear technology. It condemned the collusion of France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel and the United States with South Africa in the nuclear field; and called on all States to refrain from supplying the régime with installations that might enable it to produce nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment.

ACTION BY THE CONFERENCE ON SANCTIONS. In its Paris Declaration, adopted on 27 May (p. 165), the Conference on Sanctions against South Africa<sup>(6)</sup> expressed concern at reports of efforts by South Africa to form military alliances and arrangements involving some Western Powers and régimes in other regions. It considered that any military alliances or arrangements with South Africa would be an act of hostility against the struggle of its people that would greatly aggravate the situation in southern Africa, and called for vigilance by the international community to prevent such arrangements.

The Political Commission of the Conference stated in its report that the apartheid economy and its war machine had been created primarily through the active participation of a number of Western Powers and TNCs, which had developed into an alliance between those enterprises and the régime. South Africa continued to manufacture under licence military aircraft and equipment originating in France, Italy, the United Kingdom and other countries; it had obtained military communications equipment from France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom; Danish ships had been involved in arms transport to South Africa, Spain had acted as a conduit of arms, a United States-Canadian company had provided an artillery system and Israel had supplied arms and munitions. Several Western States had permitted the training and recruitment of nuclear scientists and the supply of nuclear technology.

In addition to calling for a strengthened arms embargo, the Commission said there was an urgent need to apply Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations (on action with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace and acts of aggression) to prevent all forms of nuclear collaboration with South Africa. It also called for action to stop all imports of uranium from South Africa and Namibia.

The Conference's Technical Commission expressed grave concern over the serious and immediate threat which South Africa's nuclear capability presented to world peace and particularly to African States. It was of the view that South Africa had developed and tested a design weapon and that producing a small arsenal from its available weapons-grade material was only a matter of weeks. That capability had been acquired with the assistance of France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, as well as Belgium, Israel, Japan, the Netherlands and Switzerland, through uranium extraction and processing, supply of nuclear equipment, technology transfer, and training and exchange of scientists.

The Commission recommended a halt to the uranium trade with South Africa and Namibia and a strengthened Security Council ban on nuclear collaboration with South Africa. It also proposed the termination of nuclear contracts, training of personnel, technology transfer, supply of nuclear materials, and all economic and other support for South Africa's nuclear industry or any related industry.

ACTION BY THE COMMITTEE ON COLONIAL COUNTRIES. In a consensus on military bases in colonial countries (p. 1110), adopted on 14 August,<sup>(5)</sup> the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples condemned any co-operation with South Africa by certain Western countries and other States in supplying arms, military equipment and technology, including nuclear technology and equipment that could be used for military purposes. It called on States to cease such collaboration and support, particularly the sale of weapons and other matériel which increased South Africa's capacity to wage war against neighbouring States, as well as the supply of equipment, technology, materials and training which increased its nuclear capacity.

In a consensus on the Namibia question (p. 1138), also adopted on 14 August, the Committee condemned the continued military collaboration between South Africa and certain Western and other States, and called for the termination of their collaboration in the nuclear field, which it regarded as a serious violation of the military embargo imposed by the Security Council in 1977.<sup>(20)</sup>

munications — summarized in its annual report<sup>(4)</sup> — to the Secretary-General, the President of the Security Council and others calling attention to instances in which equipment with military uses had reportedly been supplied to South Africa.

By a letter of 12 March to the Permanent Representative of the United States to the United Nations, he conveyed the Committee's concern at press reports that the United States intended to grant Israel the right to sell to South Africa its KFIR jets and other military equipment with American components, and called for action to prevent such sale. In a reply of 6 April, the United States assured the Committee that it had received no such request from Israel and that it would not grant permission to sell any military equipment containing American components, including KFIR jets, to South Africa.

After receiving a report that the United Kingdom was exporting electronic equipment from the Plessey Company to South African military forces, the Chairman sent a letter on 29 April to the Chairman of the Security Council Committee on the question of South Africa, expressing hope that the Committee would take urgent action to prevent the export of the equipment to South Africa. On 8 May, following a further report that the equipment included United States computers manufactured under licence in Ireland, the Chairman wrote to the United States requesting that it look into the matter urgently and act in the light of the Council and Assembly arms embargo resolutions.

By a letter of 11 May, the Chairman transmitted to the Secretary-General, for the attention of the Assembly and the Council, a statement of the same date denouncing reported plans for a non-governmental conference at Buenos Aires, Argentina, on 26 May, to be attended by representatives from South Africa, the United States, Argentina, Brazil and other Latin American countries, for the purpose of discussing a South Atlantic alliance, including South Africa.<sup>(1)</sup>

In a reply of 22 May,<sup>(3)</sup> transmitted on the same day to the Secretary-General, Brazil stated that it had never been associated with the event, would not send any representative and had not altered its opposition to undertaking military alliances with the South African Government. Argentina, by a letter of 22 June,<sup>(2)</sup> transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of 15 May to the Chairman together with a press release of 14 May, stating that it had no connection with the meeting and it resolutely opposed the conclusion of any military pact with South Africa relating to the South Atlantic.

sembly strongly condemned the collusion with South Africa in the nuclear field by certain Western countries and other States, particularly the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel, and called on France and all other Governments not to supply installations that might enable South Africa to produce nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment. It condemned all States that continued military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, in particular certain Western States and Israel. The Assembly again requested the Security Council to strengthen the arms embargo (p. 173) and secure the immediate cessation of military and nuclear collaboration. It authorized the Committee against Apartheid to continue to promote an embargo on such collaboration and to expose developments. It invited Governments and organizations to assist persons compelled to leave South Africa because of conscientious objection to military or police service. Condemning manoeuvres to create a South Atlantic Treaty Organization with South Africa, it appealed to the Council to ensure that such an organization was not established.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 119 to 19, with 4 abstentions. Paragraph 1, condemning nuclear collusion by certain named States and calling on France and others not to supply certain installations, was adopted by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 56 to 24, with 51 abstentions.

By a resolution of 9 December on implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa,<sup>(16)</sup> adopted in 1964 by the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Assembly reaffirmed that South Africa's nuclear programme endangered peace and security and increased the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons; condemned and called for an end to nuclear collaboration with South Africa by any State, corporation, institution or individual; and requested the Security Council to prohibit all such collaboration. In a resolution of the same date on South Africa's nuclear capability, the Assembly requested the Council to intensify its efforts to prohibit nuclear co-operation and collaboration with South Africa and to institute effective enforcement action to prevent that regime from endangering peace and security by acquiring nuclear weapons. It called on States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate all military and nuclear collaboration, including the provision of such related materials as computers, electronic equipment and corresponding technology.

In resolutions on foreign interests impeding decolonization, adopted on 24 November,<sup>(13)</sup> and on the Namibia situation, adopted on 10 December,<sup>(18)</sup> the Assembly strongly condemned the continuing collaboration of certain Western and other States with South Africa and called on all Governments to refrain from such collaboration. It particularly condemned such collusion by the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel, and called on France and all others to refrain from supplying South Africa with installations that might enable it to produce nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment.

The Assembly, in a resolution of 1 December<sup>(14)</sup> on implementation of its 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,<sup>(8)</sup> strongly condemned all collaboration with South Africa, particularly nuclear and military, and called on all States concerned to cease all such collaboration forthwith.

In a resolution of 9 December<sup>(17)</sup> on implementation of its 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security,<sup>(10)</sup> the Assembly called on the Security Council to take effective measures to promote the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger which South Africa's nuclear capability constituted to the African States, in particular the front-line States, as well as to peace and security.

Introducing in the Assembly the 34-nation resolution on military and nuclear collaboration, Cuba said South Africa's actions were sufficient cause for denying that country collaboration of any kind, all the more so if such collaboration enabled it to strengthen its already considerable military potential and gave it access to nuclear military technology. It was highly surprising that well-known Western Powers should maintain links with South Africa and expressly violate the arms embargo. Particularly disturbing was the information concerning recent talks between the United States and South Africa on nuclear collaboration. It was necessary to put an end to that reprehensible collaboration, which directly resulted in aggression by South Africa against African States and the consolidation of apartheid.

Voting against paragraph 1 as well as the resolution as a whole, Australia, Greece, Ireland, New Zealand, Norway (for the Nordic States), Portugal and Spain declared that they could not support the singling out of certain States. Spain reserved its position also on the naming of countries and groups of countries in the preamble (which referred to certain members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and Israel) and in paragraph 4 (mentioning the United States). Norway, speaking on behalf of the three Nordic NATO members-Denmark, Iceland and Norway-rejected the reference to NATO as wholly unjustified, saying it introduced an East-West element totally irrelevant to the struggle against apartheid.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community (EC) members, which also voted against in both votes, said they rejected all arbitrary and unjustified attacks on Member States, whether by name or implicitly. The Federal Republic of Germany strongly rejected the accusations of nuclear and military collusion as unjustified, unacceptable and harmful to friendly co-operation. The United States said it denounced, in the strongest possible terms, the malicious fabrications on military and nuclear collaboration; it did not export nuclear fuel or provide nuclear facilities to South Africa, and charges about its alleged intention to create a "South Atlantic Treaty Organization" were specious and demonstrably false.

Several other speakers objected or expressed reservations to the singling out of certain countries. These included Austria, which voted against paragraph 1 and abstained on the whole text, as well as Argentina, Bangladesh, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Indonesia, Jamaica, Morocco, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Togo, which voted in favour of the resolution but abstained on that paragraph; Togo wondered whether the States mentioned were the only ones deserving of condemnation.

Brazil, voting for the text but abstaining on paragraph 1, said some provisions should have been more balanced; it reiterated its opposition to any military alliance involving South Africa. Chile said the allusion to such an alliance was baseless and Costa Rica said it could not accept the paragraph. Turkey, which supported the resolution but voted against paragraph 1, voiced reservations also about the reference to NATO in the preambular paragraph by which the Assembly expressed serious concern at the failure of certain NATO members, Israel and other States to cease their military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa.

Sierra Leone, on the other hand, said there was substantial evidence, which had yet to be contradicted or disproved, to support paragraph 1, and there was also evidence of a fiendish attempt by South Africa to draw others into a so-called South Atlantic Treaty Organization; it could not see why those who would have nothing to do with such an organization should be exercised by the reference to it.

Paragraph 4 of the resolution on the denuclearization of Africa, containing the call for termination of military and nuclear collaboration, was approved in the Assembly's First Committee by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 101 to 6, with 16 abstentions. Several States objected to this provision and to a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly expressed indignation that certain Western countries and Israel had continued to collaborate with South Africa despite the risk of proliferation of nuclear weapons. Voting against the paragraph, Israel and the United Kingdom denied any nuclear collaboration with South Africa, while the United States rejected efforts to include all high-technology items under the arms embargo. Among those abstaining, Australia objected to the tendentious naming of States, while Portugal considered that only military co-operation should be condemned. Austria, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Norway, Spain, Sweden and Turkey objected to the preambular provision referring to certain Western countries and Israel.

Paragraph 9 of the resolution on foreign interests impeding decolonization, citing States by name in reference to military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, was adopted by a recorded vote of 59 to 36, with 47 abstentions, after a motion to have a separate vote on this paragraph, to which Angola objected, was adopted by a recorded vote of 57 to 50, with 26 abstentions.

Voting against the paragraph, the Federal Republic of Germany rejected the accusation of military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, adding that it had applied since 1963 a voluntary embargo on arms to that country. The United States said it had permitted no export of nuclear fuel or facilities to South Africa in the previous five years. Belgium, the Central African Republic, Chile, Denmark, Finland, Gabon, Israel, Morocco, New Zealand, Norway, Senegal, Somalia, Sweden, Turkey and Uruguay, as well as the United Kingdom on behalf of the EC member States, objected to the mention of specific States.

Reservations, mainly concerning the selectivity of the list, were also voiced by the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Burma, Burundi, Fiji, Indonesia, Liberia, Mali, Peru, the Philippines, Singapore, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Suriname, Thailand and Togo, which abstained on the paragraph. Liberia added that it would have been better if the States accused of nuclear collusion had been requested to advise the Secretary-General on the action they had taken or intended to take.

Canada, speaking for the five-nation contact group engaged in negotiations on the Namibia question, stated that the condemnation of two members of that group for collusion with South Africa in the nuclear field was included in the resolution on the Namibia question in apparent ignorance of the true state of affairs.

During the Assembly debate on apartheid, a number of speakers viewed as ominous the possible acquisition of nuclear weapons by South Africa. Several countries proposed a total ban on nuclear collaboration with South Africa, and Ghana urged the Security Council urgently to prohibit all such collaboration. Singapore urged countries supplying South Africa with nuclear technology and equipment to reconsider their policy. Sri Lanka called for a halt to all military and other collaboration with South Africa which enabled it to maintain apartheid and commit aggression against neighbouring States. The Netherlands held it imperative that South Africa adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons<sup>(9)</sup> or, at least, that it accept full-scope safeguards which would permit inspection of its installations.

Austria endorsed a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa, while Turkey stated that every effort should be made to achieve the denuclearization of Africa and the ending of nuclear co-operation with South Africa.

According to the USSR, South Africa's military self-sufficiency had advanced from 70 to 90 per cent as a result of financial and technical assistance and licences granted by Western Powers. The Syrian Arab Republic said the open collaboration between South Africa and the United States had reached a higher stage, as evidenced by visits to that country by South African military officials. Those who supplied military hardware to South Africa, said the Gambia, must assume direct responsibility for the savage repression of the Africans there.

Japan said there was no military co-operation between Japan and South Africa, nor co-operation in nuclear development.

Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam expressed concern at reports that the United States was trying to create a South Atlantic Treaty Organization including South Africa, Argentina and other countries. Argentina restated its opposition to such a pact.

Military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions on military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, in particular its resolution 35/206 B of 16 December 1980.

Recalling Security Council resolutions 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 and 473 (1980) of 13 June 1980.

Recalling also its resolutions concerning the denuclearization of the continent of Africa, Having considered the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid and of the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa, held in Paris from 20 to 27 May 1981.

Gravely concerned that the racist régime of South Africa has continued to obtain military equipment and ammunition, as well as technology and know-how, to develop its armament industry and to acquire nuclear-weapon capability,

Recognizing that any nuclear-weapon capability of the racist régime of South Africa constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Expressing its serious concern at the failure of certain members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Israel and other States to cease their co-operation with the racist regime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and to prevent corporations within their jurisdiction from carrying out such co-operation,

Condemning the attitude of those transnational corporations that continue, through their collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, to enhance its military and nuclear capabilities,

Considering the urgent need for comprehensive mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to prohibit any military and nuclear collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa,

1. Strongly condemns the collusion by the Governments of certain Western countries and other States, particularly those of the United States of America, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel, with the racist regime of South Africa in the nuclear field and calls upon France and all other Governments to refrain from supplying the racist minority régime of South Africa, directly or indirectly, with installations that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

2. Further condemns the manoeuvres to create a South Atlantic Treaty Organization with the racist régime of South Africa and appeals to the Security Council to undertake measures to ensure that this sinister organization is not established;

3. Condemns all States that violate the arms embargo and continue to collaborate with South Africa in the military and nuclear fields, in particular certain Western States and Israel;

4. Expresses its deep concern about reports on the recent talks between the United States of America and South Africa concerning closer collaboration in the nuclear field;

5. Urges the Security Council to take immediate steps to ensure the scrupulous and full implementation of the arms embargo imposed by the Council in its resolution 418(1977) and the effective monitoring of the embargo in the light of the report of the Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa on ways and means of making the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa more effective;

6. Again requests the Security Council to take mandatory measures to strengthen the arms embargo and secure the immediate cessation of any form of collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields;

7. Requests all States to co-operate with the Special Committee against Apartheid in its efforts to ensure the total cessation of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa;

8. Invites all Governments and organizations to assist, in consultation with the national liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia, persons compelled to leave South Africa because of their objection, on the ground of conscience, to serving in the military or police force of the apartheid régime;

9. Authorizes the Special Committee:

(a) To follow closely the question of the nuclear plan and capability of South Africa;

(b) To continue its efforts to promote a comprehensive and effective embargo on all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa;

(c) To continue its efforts to expose all developments concerning military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, particularly:

(i) Supply of arms, technology and other vital resources in contravention of resolutions of the United Nations;

(ii) Attempts to forge any military alliance with the racist régime of South Africa;

(iii) Development of further links with the apartheid regime as an ally, in the context of aggravating international tension and conflict.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Investments in South Africa

ACTION BY THE CONFERENCE ON SANCTIONS.
In its Paris Declaration,<sup>(3)</sup> adopted on 27 May 1981, the Conference on Sanctions against South Africa (p. 165) called for a freeze on all new investments in, and financial loans to, South Africa. Foreign capital, loans and other financial facilities, it said, sustained the apartheid economy and provided it with resources to expand its aggressive apparatus and increase its military and nuclear capability, to the detriment of peace and security in southern Africa.

More specific action was proposed in the report of the Conference's Technical Commission. This included intensified campaigns against financial institutions which provided loans to South Africa, aimed at severing all such links; investigation of banks involved in financing trade with South Africa; and campaigns against the sale of kruggerands (South African gold coins).

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. On 24 March, the Committee against Apartheid held a hearing on bank loans to South Africa, with the participation of several leaders of non-governmental organizations who informed the Committee of their campaigns against such loans.

The Committee, in co-operation with the World Council of Churches, the Non-Governmental Organizations Sub-Committee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization, the Swiss Anti-Apartheid Movement and the Berne Declaration Group, held an International Seminar on Loans to South Africa at Zurich, Switzerland, from 5 to 7 April. Participants included representatives of Governments, United Nations bodies and agencies, other organizations and national liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia, as well as individual experts.

The Seminar adopted a Declaration containing a number of proposals for halting all loans, credits and other financial assistance to South Africa, including a special appeal to Switzerland and the Federal Republic of Germany. Any such assistance, it declared, represented collusion with apartheid and was a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa, OAU and the United Nations. It called on all financial institutions to cease all lending to the South African Government and its agencies and to South African corporations, and called on the United Nations and Governments to assist the front-line and other neighbouring States in their efforts to extricate themselves from economic relations with South Africa. The Declaration was transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter dated 10 April from the Committee Chairman.<sup>(1)</sup>

On 5 January, the Committee Chairman issued a press statement expressing satisfaction at the decision of the Borough of Lambeth, London, to remove its account from Barclays Bank because of the Bank's involvement in South Africa, and commending the United Kingdom Labour Party for drawing the attention of all Labour-controlled municipal councils to the involvement of the Bank in financing the apartheid régime. On 9 January, in another press statement, he commended six United States organizations for initiating a campaign to press for further action by state legislatures and city councils to divest from banks and corporations in South Africa.

By a letter dated 20 March to the President of the United Nations Correspondents Association, the Chairman expressed consternation that the membership directory of the Association carried an advertisement for South African Airways.

By letters of 13 May to the Director-General of the World Health Organization and the Secretary-General of the World Medical Association, the Chairman conveyed the Committee's appeal to reject attempts to readmit the Medical Association of South Africa to the World Medical Association. After the Association took this step at its annual Assembly (Lisbon, Portugal, 28 September-2 October), the Committee denounced the decision and called for appropriate action by Governments and organizations.

In a statement and cable of 13 September, the Chairman expressed satisfaction at an announcement by the World Council of Churches that it was breaking links with the Union Bank of Switzerland, the Swiss Bank Corporation and the Dresdner Bank of the Federal Republic of Germany because of their extensive involvement in financial support to South Africa.

In its 1981 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee noted with regret that the Security Council had failed to take steps to achieve cessation of further foreign investments in and loans to South Africa. It noted with serious concern that South Africa had been able to raise substantial loans in the past year, regarding them as an expression of confidence in the apartheid system, and noted with regret the continuing flow of large-scale investments to South Africa from a number of Western countries.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly endorse the recommendations contained in the Declaration of the Seminar on Loans to South Africa and the report of the Technical Commission of the Conference on sanctions. It also recommended that the Assembly appeal to States and organizations to support non-governmental campaigns against loans to and investments in South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly again urged the Security Council to consider at an early date the matter of foreign investments in and loans to South Africa, with a view to taking effective steps to achieve their cessation. In the preamble, the Assembly expressed its conviction that a cessation of all new foreign investments and loans would constitute an important step in international action for the elimination of apartheid, as such investments and loans abetted and encouraged South Africa's apartheid policies. It welcomed the action of those Governments that had taken legislative and other measures and noted with regret that the Council had not yet acted.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 138 to 1, with 7 abstentions.

By a resolution of 24 November on activities of foreign interests impeding decolonization,<sup>(4)</sup> the Assembly requested all States to refrain from making any investments to the benefit of, or extending loans to, South Africa and from agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with it.

Introducing the 49-nation resolution on foreign investments, Sweden said a diminishing flow to South Africa of capital for investment and other purposes would be an effective means of pressing the régime to change its racial and aggressive policies, and would make it more difficult for that country to carry out the increasingly costly build-up of its military and nuclear capacity and energy reserves for the purpose of withstanding internal and international pressure. Though some States might find the scope of the resolution too limited, the sponsors had formulated the operative element in such a way as to enable the widest range of countries to vote for it. The broadest possible support for such action would be a clear signal to South Africa that the world as a whole was reacting strongly against its apartheid policies.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Canada said it had abstained because of the inclusion of emotive or substantial generalizations on such matters as the alleged effect and intent of international business dealings with South Africa and allegations of collaboration with South Africa by private and public institutions.

New Zealand explained that it was a sponsor of the text because it offered a practical way of bringing pressure to bear on South Africa peacefully and effectively. Greece voted for the resolution on similar grounds. The Netherlands also voted in favour but said selective enforcement measures should preferably be decided upon by the Security Council.

Speaking during the Assembly debate on apartheid, a number of States cited foreign investment as a vital source of support for the South African Government. Directly or indirectly, said the Byelorussian SSR, such loans enabled South Africa to finance its repressive apparatus, including its militarization and nuclear programmes, as well as its aggression against African States. Trinidad and Tobago remarked that capital flows to South Africa from major financial institutions in Western countries continued unabated, while developing countries had been experiencing enormous difficulties in obtaining financial aid for development. According to Hungary, the United States had $2 billion of direct investment in South Africa. The USSR cited figures published in the South African press putting foreign investment in South Africa at 30 billion rands and stating that, at the end of 1980, there had been 1,200 British, 375 American and 350 West German companies operating in South Africa.

Japan declared that it did not permit direct economic investment in South Africa and had called on Japanese foreign exchange banks to refrain from extending loans to that country. The Netherlands said it withheld medium- and long-term credit guarantees to South Africa and was considering regulations concerning investments in that country. Norway stated that, together with other Nordic countries, it had adopted a number of measures aimed at voluntary and unilateral disengagement from previous contacts with South Africa, including steps to prevent Norwegian investments. Sweden said it was reviewing its 1979 law on prohibition of investments in South Africa and Namibia in the light of possible supplementary measures in such areas as technology transfer. The United States maintained that South Africa was only of modest economic interest to it, having received only some 1 per cent of United States overseas investment.

Algeria, Ireland and Senegal called for a ban on investments, while Ghana strongly urged the Security Council to prohibit all forms of loans and technology transfers to South Africa. In Finland's view, the Council should, as a first step, take decisions aimed at preventing new foreign investments in South Africa; this position was supported by Singapore.

Investments in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/206 Q of 16 December 1980.

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Convinced that a cessation of all new foreign investments in, and financial loans to, South Africa would constitute an important step in international action for the elimination of apartheid, as such investments and loans abet and encourage the apartheid policies of that country,

Welcoming the actions of those Governments that have taken legislative and other measures towards that end,

Noting with regret that the Security Council has not yet taken steps towards that end, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolutions 31/6 K of 9 November 1976, 32/105 O of 16 December 1977, 33/183 O of 24 January 1979, 34/93 Q of 12 December 1979 and 35/206 Q of 16 December 1980.

Again urges the Security Council to consider the matter at an early date with a view to taking effective steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investments in, and financial loans to, South Africa.

Activities of transnational corporations

ACTION BY THE COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL. In a resolution of 23 February 1981 on foreign support of South Africa (p. 945), the Commission on Human Rights called on Governments to put an end to the trading, manufacturing and investing activities in South Africa by banks, transnational corporations (TNCs) and other organizations identified in a report by a Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities as assisting the racist régime.<sup>(6)</sup>

On 8 May,<sup>(12)</sup> the Economic and Social Council approved a 1980 decision of the Sub-Commission<sup>(13)</sup> to authorize the Special Rapporteur to continue updating the list of organizations in his report.

ACTION BY THE CONFERENCE ON SANCTIONS. The Technical Commission of the Conference on Sanctions against South Africa (p. 165), in its report of May 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> recommended that the Committee against Apartheid in consultation with the United Nations Council for Namibia and the national liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia, should ensure that effective monitoring procedures were established with a view to investigating financial and commercial dealings, including the transfer of technology, between TNCs and other companies and the South African economy. It proposed that regular reports of such dealings be provided to Governments and the Council, to be taken into account in the award of public contracts and in all other appropriate ways. The Commission further recommended the extension of campaigns against emigration to South Africa, to include especially the transfer of personnel by TNCs, as a contribution towards halting the exchange of technology, and the co-ordination of campaigns to expose the role of TNCs in South Africa, in order to secure their withdrawal and a halt to trade promotion.

SEMINAR ON TNCs AND SOUTH AFRICA. In connection with the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983) (p. 864), the United Nations Division of Human Rights organized at Geneva from 29 June to 3 July a Seminar on Effective Measures to Prevent Transnational Corporations and Other Established Interests from Collaborating with the Racist Régime of South Africa. Arrangements for the Seminar were made following consultations between the Chairmen of the Commission on Human Rights and the Committee against Apartheid. Participants came from 16 countries, several United Nations organs and bodies, specialized agencies, the League of Arab States and OAU.

The Seminar, in its report,<sup>(5)</sup> recommended the following measures, among others: concerted campaigns against TNCs whose collaboration was crucial to South Africa's economy, with direct action against specific corporations; a stepped-up boycott of South African products; elaboration of a global convention or regional conventions binding States to enforce sanctions against South Africa and to prevent their nationals from collaborating with it; consideration of the international responsibility, including criminal responsibility, of TNCs, their officers and their countries of nationality; and measures to awaken world public opinion to the adverse consequences for human rights in South Africa of the collaboration with that country by certain Governments-in particular those of Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States-and of TNCs and other interests, and to expose the false picture of that collaboration being presented by the collaborators and their defenders.

Among the Seminar's other recommendations were: that oil-exporting countries review their relations with TNCs supplying petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa, in particular Shell, British Petroleum, Total, Caltex and Mobil; that States committed to action against apartheid review their relations with TNCs operating in Namibia and South Africa; that trade unionists employed by TNCs be urged to act to secure the withdrawal of those corporations from South Africa and to take action in solidarity with the struggle of South African workers; and that measures be adopted to stop TNC activities which assisted the apartheid régime by undermining United Nations initiatives, promoting trade and immigration, carrying out propaganda for the apartheid régime and otherwise assisting South Africa.

Recommendations for action by the United Nations and its specialized agencies included: preparation of a report on TNC involvement in the infringement of human rights in South Africa; publication by the Commission on Human Rights of a list of all TNCs directly contributing to South Africa's military and nuclear capability; convening of an international conference of scientists to consider the implications of South Africa's nuclear capability for the peace and security of Africa; and discontinuation of business dealings between United Nations organizations and banks or other commercial enterprises collaborating with South Africa.

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. In its annual report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee against Apartheid again emphasized the importance of action against TNCs collaborating with South Africa and called for action by the United Nations and Member States to prevent such collaboration.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly endorse and act on the recommendations made by the Technical Commission of the Conference on Sanctions against South Africa and by the Seminar on TNCs and South Africa. It also asked that it be authorized to organize seminars and symposia to promote the campaign against TNC operations in South Africa.

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMISSION ON TNCs. In a report of 9 July,<sup>(4)</sup> the United Nations Secretariat supplied to the Commission on Transnational Corporations information on recent financial activities and employment practices of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia. According to this report, following three years of relatively low levels of foreign borrowing, South Africa had resumed in 1980 its borrowing activities abroad. The value of identified foreign loans had increased from $296 million in 1979 to nearly $800 million in 1980, arranged mainly by individual transnational banks or by consortia.

Most of the new investment projects had fallen into three groups: energy, mining and import substitution, especially for strategic products such as chemicals and transport equipment. The role of TNCs in the energy sector had been particularly important in view of South Africa's dependence on external sources of petroleum and of the Government's goal of self-sufficiency. The activities of some TNCs in the coal and oil sectors, and in oil-from-coal projects, as well as the flow of foreign capital through international loans, undermined international efforts against apartheid. Yet, except for efforts by some countries to discourage the flow of capital and technology to South Africa, most home Governments of TNCs operating there had not responded to the concerns of the international community.

Regarding employment practices, the report said that some TNCs had recognized black trade unions in 1980, but on the whole it did not seem that the TNC practices had made significant contributions in the area of wages or industrial relations; with few exceptions, they did not differ substantially from those of South African enterprises.

In September,<sup>(1)</sup> the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council a draft resolution on TNC activities in southern Africa (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (NOVEMBER). Adopting on 2 November the resolution proposed by the Commission on Transnational Corporations,<sup>(7)</sup> the Economic and Social Council condemned those TNCs which collaborated with South Africa and urged all TNCs to comply fully with United Nations resolutions by terminating all further investments in South Africa and Namibia and by ending their collaboration. It called on all home countries of TNCs to take steps to terminate such collaboration by their corporations, to prevent new investments and reinvestments, and to bring about an immediate withdrawal of all existing investments in Namibia; and it called on institutions which owned shares of TNCs operating in South Africa and Namibia to withdraw their holdings. The Council reaffirmed that the code of conduct on TNCs (p. 600) should include measures against their collaboration with South Africa, and requested the Secretary-General to intensify the collection and dissemination of information on TNC activities in southern Africa, to arrange for public hearings by the Commission and to present further reports to the Commission.

The resolution was adopted by a roll-call vote of 35 to 5, with 8 abstentions.

Speaking for the European Community members represented on the Council, the United Kingdom said they could not support the resolution because it contained some unacceptable elements, though they abhorred and rejected apartheid and were committed to peaceful change in southern Africa. The United States said it was unable to support the text, as the competence to adopt measures constituting sanctions lay exclusively with the Security Council.

During the Council debate, Algeria, speaking on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, said the resumed financial and banking support to South Africa's public sector had a clear political significance; also, although some developed countries had induced TNCs to apply codes of conduct in employment matters, the corporations had not always observed the codes and had followed South African labour legislation, which sanctioned apartheid. Nigeria said many corporations had not observed the United Nations stipulations that the purpose of their activities in southern Africa should be to improve living and working conditions; some corporations seemed to have increased their investments in South Africa, thus strengthening the position of the racist minority regime and contributing to a deterioration in the situation instead of helping to improve political conditions.

The German Democratic Republic and the USSR spoke in support of the resolution; in the USSR's opinion, the Secretariat's Centre on Transnational Corporations should establish closer co-operation with the Centre against Apartheid in its research on TNC activities in South Africa.

ACTION BY THE SUB-COMMISSION ON DISCRIMINATION AND MINORITIES. In a resolution on adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of assistance given to racist regimes in southern Africa, adopted on 9 September,<sup>(11)</sup> the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities recommended to its parent body, the Commission on Human Rights, that the Group of Three set up under the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid<sup>(8)</sup> should be asked whether the actions of TNCs operating in South Africa came under the definition of the crime of apartheid, and whether or not legal action could be taken under the Convention (p. 946).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. The activities of TNCs in South Africa were dealt with in two of the resolutions on apartheid which the General Assembly adopted on 17 December. In its main resolution on the South Africa situation,<sup>(9)</sup> the Assembly condemned TNCs that collaborated with the racist regime and with apartheid institutions in South Africa. In its resolution on sanctions,<sup>(10)</sup> the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the Seminar on TNCs and South Africa, requested the Secretary-General and United Nations organizations to deny contracts or facilities to TNCs that collaborated with South Africa, and requested the Committee against Apartheid to publicize the activities of such corporations.

During the Assembly debate on apartheid, many speakers, among them the Byelorussian SSR, Nicaragua and the Ukrainian SSR, stated that the co-operation of certain Western Powers and their TNCs with South Africa supported the apartheid policy. Bulgaria remarked that more than 2,000 Western companies, over 540 of them American, had economic interests in South Africa. Bahrain urged that the countries concerned forbid TNCs from trading or otherwise co-operating with South Africa.

The TNCs operating in South Africa were also criticized for bolstering apartheid through their labour policy. Angola stated that they had created the migrant labour system and the poverty and deprivation resulting from it. Egypt thought it illogical to expect that TNCs in South Africa would work to eliminate racial discrimination, since apartheid enabled them to reap tremendous profits through cheap labour.

The Nordic States described steps they had taken to curb investments in South Africa (p. 187).

Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/86

35-5-8 (roll-call vote) Meeting 43 2 November 1981

Draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1981/49); agenda item 12.

Activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority régime in that area

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 35/206 F of 16 December 1980, entitled "Role of transnational corporations in South Africa", 35/227 A of 6 March 1981, entitled "Situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the Territory by South Africa", and 35/227 B of 6 March 1981, entitled "Intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia", and the Special Declaration on Namibia adopted at the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa, held in Paris from 20 to 27 May 1981,

Reaffirming the resolutions adopted by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its previous sessions on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority regime in that area,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations entitled "Transnational corporations in southern Africa: update on financial activities and employment practices",

Considering the internationally documented fact that the employment practices of transnational corporations in southern Africa have brought no positive contribution to the improvement of the situation of the majority populations in that area,

Considering also that the operations of transnational corporations in the industrial and technological development of South Africa contribute to the survival of the racist minority regime and the continued illegal occupation of Namibia,

Considering further that the role of transnational corporations in critical sectors of South Africa's economy undermines the sustained efforts of the international community directed against the policy of apartheid and the continued illegal occupation of Namibia,

Concerned that some Governments of home countries of transnational corporations operating in southern Africa have not taken effective measures at the national level which respond directly to the concerns of the international community to prevent collaboration by transnational corporations with the racist minority régime in southern Africa,

Affirming the need for action at the international level by intergovernmental as well as non-governmental organizations in order to complement national measures,

1. Notes with satisfaction the report of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations entitled "Transnational corporations in southern Africa: update on financial activities and employment practices";

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretariat for the efforts made by it to publicize in home countries of transnational corporations information on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa;

3. Reaffirms the legitimate struggle of the people of South Africa and Namibia towards self-determination and independence, including their right to armed struggle;

4. Commends those non-governmental organizations which have made efforts to combat apartheid and, in particular, to stop bank loans and capital transfers to South Africa and calls upon such organizations to intensify their useful efforts in these areas;

5. Welcomes as a positive step the policies of some Governments to bring about an end to the activities of their transnational corporations in southern Africa;

6. Condemns the racist minority regime in South Africa for its perpetuation of the inhuman system of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia;

7. Condemns those transnational corporations which collaborate with the racist minority régime in southern Africa, and calls upon all transnational corporations to respect the various United Nations resolutions concerning southern Africa;

8. Condemns the actions of those home countries of transnational corporations designed to promote and perpetuate investments by their transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia in contravention of United Nations resolutions;

9. Calls upon all home countries of transnational corporations to take effective measures to terminate the collaboration of their transnational corporations with the racist minority régime in southern Africa, to prevent further new investments and reinvestments and to bring about an immediate withdrawal of all existing investments in Namibia;

10. Calls upon all those countries concerned to re-examine their relations with the transnational corporations operating in their territories which collaborate with the racist minority régime in southern Africa;

11. Calls upon all anti-apartheid movements, religious institutions and bodies, trade unions, universities and other institutions which are shareholders of transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia to contribute to the efforts of the international community to eradicate apartheid by withdrawing their shareholdings in such transnational corporations;

12. Urges all transnational corporations to comply fully with the relevant United Nations resolutions by terminating all further investments in South Africa and Namibia and by ending their collaboration with the racist minority régime;

13. Reaffirms Security Council resolution 301(1971) of 20 October 1971 calling upon all States to abstain from entering into economic relations with South Africa in respect of Namibia and declaring that rights, titles or contracts granted to individuals or corporations by South Africa after the termination of the mandate are not subject to protection or espousal by their home States against the claims of a future lawful government of Namibia;

14. Reaffirms that the code of conduct on transnational corporations should include effective measures against the collaboration of transnational corporations with the racist minority régime in southern Africa;

15. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To intensify the useful work of the Secretariat in the collection and dissemination of information on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa;

(b) To make arrangements for the organization of public hearings, at an appropriate time, to be conducted by the Commission on Transnational Corporations or an ad hoc body, with the assistance of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia;

(c) To disseminate the text of the present resolution as widely as possible, particularly to anti-apartheid movements, religious institutions and bodies, trade unions, universities and other institutions and transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia, and to seek their reaction and follow-up action thereon;

(d) To report to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its eighth session on the measures taken in pursuance of the present resolution;

(e) To prepare a report on the policies and practices of transnational corporations regarding their activities in South Africa and Namibia for the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its ninth session, and to include as an annex to that report a list of transnational corporations which continue to operate in strategic sectors, including military and nuclear sectors, of the southern African economy in violation of United Nations resolutions, as well as those transnational corporations which have taken measures to terminate their activities in such sectors.

Israel and South Africa

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. The Acting Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid transmitted to the Secretary-General on 9 September 1981 a special report by the Committee on recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa,<sup>(1)</sup> prepared in pursuance of a 1980 General Assembly request.<sup>(3)</sup> The report stated that, during the 12 months under review, the collaboration had become systematic and covered a wide range of political, military, nuclear, economic and cultural relations.

The report said that Lucas Mangope and Chief Patrick Mphahlele, the Presidents of the bantustans Bophuthatswana and Venda, respectively, had visited Israel in 1980. Israeli officials had also visited South Africa.

There had been persistent reports of increasing nuclear collaboration between Israel, Taiwan and South Africa. According to those reports, South Africa was the main supplier of uranium to Israel and Taiwan, and shared its uranium extraction process with them. The United States Department of State and intelligence sources had reported that the three were collaborating on a nuclear-weapons programme and developing a strategic cruise missile with a nuclear warhead delivery capacity of 1,500 miles. At Salisbury Island, South Africa, Resheff class single-missile gunboats were being constructed under contract with Israel.

Trade between Israel and South Africa had been increasing rapidly; during the first nine months of 1980, Israeli exports to South Africa reportedly totalled $33 million while its imports totalled $63 million. Bank Leumi and its subsidiary, the Union Bank, had begun selling krugers in Israel. In December 1980, South Africa and Israel had concluded a trade agreement, providing Israel with 125 million rands of easy South African credit over the following three years, allowing South Africa to invest approximately R 45 million in Israel and permitting the Israel bonds campaign to operate in South Africa. Agreements in principle had also been reached to increase Israel's fishing rights off the South African coast and to increase South Africa's coal quota to Israel from the current 1 million tons per annum to 3 million tons.

Relations existed also in the areas of culture, sports and science. An Israeli soccer team had toured Bophuthatswana in June 1981, while South Africa had participated in Israel's Maccabi Games in July. Joint medical and scientific research programmes had been carried out, and a conference on operation research had been held in February as a joint venture between the Operation Research Societies of Israel and South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly strongly condemned Israel's continuing and increasing collaboration with South Africa, especially in the military and nuclear fields, and demanded that Israel desist from and terminate all such collaboration. It requested the Committee against Apartheid to keep the matter under constant review and report to the Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 104 to 19, with 17 abstentions.

The Sudan, which introduced the 48-nation resolution, pointed to what it saw as the danger arising from relations between the two countries and cited, as a recent example of military collaboration, the visit of the Israeli Defence Minister to South Africa in December.

Israel did not participate in the vote, saying that it wished to express its abhorrence at the cynical debasement of the discussion. It was the only country singled out for specific condemnation in a special resolution based on patent falsehoods. The sponsors of the resolution had ignored official Israeli communications refuting the false allegations and had instead relied on the unsupported distortions, innuendoes and speculative press reports cited in the Committee's report. During the Assembly debate on apartheid, Israel reaffirmed its strong and absolute opposition to apartheid, stating that there was no evidence of anything special or different in its relations with South Africa; the unending diatribes against Israel only served to subvert and discredit the United Nations role in the genuine battle against racism.

Voting against the resolution, Ireland believed the text inappropriately singled out one State for selective condemnation. Australia, Austria, New Zealand and Norway, the last speaking for the Nordic States, cited similar reasons for their negative votes, as did Argentina, the Bahamas, Chile, Costa Rica and Greece for their abstentions. Reservations about the condemnation of Israel for its collaboration with South Africa were also voiced by Jamaica and Thailand, which voted in favour.

During the Assembly debate, most Arab States condemned co-operation between Israel and South Africa, and many added that the two régimes applied similar racist policies in areas subject to their domination.

ACTION BY THE CONFERENCE ON NEW AND RENEWABLE SOURCES OF ENERGY. In a resolution of 21 August on the right of nations to develop and control non-fossil energy resources,<sup>(2)</sup> the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (p. 689) warned against the danger of joint military nuclear activities between Israel and South Africa. This provision was in a resolution by which the Conference condemned Israeli aggression against Iraq's nuclear research centre (p. 279).

Explaining its negative vote, Israel denied allegations of nuclear co-operation, stating that no evidence had been adduced. It added that it accounted for a mere two fifths of 1 per cent of South Africa's international trade and that virtually every nation was represented in the other 99.6 per cent.

Relations between Israel and South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolution 35/206 H of 16 December 1980,

Having considered the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa,

Gravely concerned about the reports of continued collaboration between Israel and South Africa, in particular in the military and nuclear fields,

Considering that such collaboration is a serious hindrance to international action for the eradication of apartheid, an encouragement to the racist régime of South Africa to persist in its criminal policy of apartheid and a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and the entire African continent, and constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

1. Strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration of Israel with the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the military and nuclear fields;

2. Demands that Israel desist from and terminate all forms of collaboration with South Africa forthwith, particularly in the military and nuclear fields, and abide scrupulously by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

3. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the matter under constant review and to report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Non-recognition of the independence of the Ciskei

Both the Security Council and the General Assembly denounced the proclamation by South Africa of the Ciskei, a bantustan, as a so-called independent State on 4 December 1981.

LETTER FROM THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. The Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid by a letter of 19 November,<sup>(1)</sup> transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement approved by the Committee on 17 November, calling on the international community to denounce the so-called "independence" of the Ciskei, to refrain from direct or indirect recognition of its authorities or any dealings with them and to proclaim that the 2.1 million people of Ciskeian origin retained their inalienable rights as citizens of South Africa as a whole.

The proclamation of so-called independence, the statement said, was part of the plan to ensure total white domination of South Africa and to dispossess the African people of their inalienable rights in their own country. The Ciskei had a population of 636,000, while the South African régime regarded 2.1 million people of Ciskeian origin all over South Africa as "citizens" of the Ciskei. An area of 8,300 square kilometres, or 2.4 per cent of South Africa, with low farm income and hardly any industry, it suffered from high population density and extreme poverty and unemployment. Chief Lennon Sebe, the Chief Minister of the Ciskei, and his brother Brigadier Charles Sebe, Ciskei's intelligence chief, had established a régime of terror with brutal repression against trade union leaders, students and others, in order to suppress the widespread resistance to their collusion with the Pretoria régime.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION. At a meeting on 15 December, the Security Council condemned and declared invalid the proclamation of the Ciskei's "independence". The Council's position was set out in a statement made on its behalf by its President, after consultation with the members. The statement,<sup>(4)</sup> read out at the meeting, was as follows:

"The Security Council notes that on 4 December 1981, the South African régime proclaimed the Ciskei, an integral part of South African territory, a so-called 'independent' State, in pursuance of its apartheid and bantustanization policy.

The Security Council recalls its resolution 417(1977), in which it demanded that the racist régime of South Africa should abolish the policy of bantustanization. It also recalls its resolutions 402(1976) and 407(1977), in which it endorsed General Assembly resolution 31/6 A of 26 October 1976 on the matter. The Council further takes note of General Assembly resolution 32/105 N of 14 December 1977 on the question of bantustans.

The Council does not recognize the so-called 'independent homelands' in South Africa: it condemns the purported proclamation of the 'independence' of the Ciskei and declares it totally invalid. This action by the South African régime, following similar proclamations in the case of the Transkei, Bophuthatswana and Venda, denounced by the international community, is designed to divide and dispossess the African people and establish client States under its domination in order to perpetuate apartheid. It seeks to create a class of foreign people in their own country. It further aggravates the situation in the region and hinders international efforts for just and lasting solutions.

The Security Council calls upon all Governments to deny any form of recognition to the so-called 'independent' bantustans, to refrain from any dealings with them, to reject travel documents issued by them, and urges Governments of Member States to take effective measures within their constitutional framework to discourage all individuals, corporations and other institutions under their jurisdiction from having any dealings with the so-called 'independent' bantustans."

The meeting was convened following receipt of a letter of 7 December<sup>(2)</sup> from Botswana, on behalf of the African Group, inviting the Council President to consult with members on appropriate action. The Group said the action was designed to divide and dispossess the Africans and establish client States under South Africa's domination in order to perpetuate apartheid.

On 28 December, South Africa transmitted to the Council President a letter of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information<sup>(3)</sup> saying that the President's statement was reprehensible and that the Council had no authority or jurisdiction to involve itself in the matter. Accordingly, South Africa rejected the statement as an attempt to deny the people of the Ciskei their right to self-determination. The decision to grant independence to the Ciskei had been taken in exercise of South Africa's sovereign right in response to a request by the Ciskei, following a referendum in which a substantial majority of the people of the Ciskei opted for independence. The letter concluded that no decision by the Council or any other United Nations body could eliminate the fact that the Republic of the Ciskei was now an independent State.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In its resolution of 17 December on the South Africa situation,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly denounced the proclamation of the so-called "independence" of the Ciskei and again called on all States and organizations to refrain from any recognition of or co-operation with the so-called "independent" bantustans.

During the debate on apartheid, many speakers, including Bhutan, the Byelorussian SSR, Djibouti, the Gambia, Hungary, Japan, Madagascar, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Trinidad and Tobago, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Kingdom (for the European Community members), the United States, Yugoslavia and Zambia, rejected South Africa's bantustan programme and pledged to withhold recognition of the so-called independent bantustans, including the Ciskei. More Africans were to be deprived of their citizenship, said Cyprus, and transferred forcibly to densely populated areas with the aim of dismembering the country. Greece, Ireland and Venezuela condemned bantustanization as a policy designed to deprive thousands of Africans of their human rights.

The Niger and others supported the view of the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid that the policy of bantustanization was aimed at strengthening white South African domination while confining the black population in so-called States which were nothing but satellites, providing South Africa with its own reserves of cheap labour and a dumping-ground for the infirm and elderly. Albania saw the policy as turning South Africa into a veritable concentration camp for more than 20 million blacks. Gabon said the Government was increasingly thinking in terms of a white State from which blacks would be banned. Africans were being deprived of their citizenship and ethnic differences were being exacerbated, Hungary and the Lao People's Democratic Republic commented. The USSR remarked that the policy sought to relegate the indigenous population to 10 bantustans comprising only 13 per cent of South Africa's territory, on land least suitable for supporting human life. The United States described the policy as cruel in bestowing "homelands citizenship" on 6 million urban blacks who might never have seen those poor lands.

Situation in South Africa

Violations of human rights in South Africa continued to be considered by United Nations bodies in 1981. Members of the Security Council, in a statement by its President, expressed grave concern over death sentences imposed on three members of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC) (see below), and the General Assembly again demanded the release of all political prisoners (p. 196). The Assembly also appealed for solidarity with and assistance to South African women and children in their liberation struggle (p. 198).

Economic and social conditions in South Africa were the subject of a report of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (p. 200). The Trade and Development Board requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to assist national liberation movements of southern Africa on trade and development issues (p. 209).

Reviewing the year's developments in South Africa, the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid told the General Assembly in November that there had been a further mobilization of the oppressed people against racist tyranny. Blacks and many whites had joined in a massive boycott of celebrations organized by the régime in May to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of the Republic. The nearly total boycott of elections to the South African Indian Council (4 November) had shown the futility of manoeuvres to divide the blacks. Armed resistance had increased, with attacks by freedom fighters on police stations, apartheid institutions and military installations. Action by the international community would determine whether freedom would come through martyrdom or through the creation of a non-racial society by means of consultation.

Sentencing of ANC members

Three members of ANC were sentenced to death in 1981 by the Pretoria Supreme Court, and three others were awaiting an appeal from death sentences imposed in 1980. Those sentenced in November 1980—Ncimbithi Johnson Lubisi, Naphtali Manana and Petrus Tsepo Mashigo—had been tried on charges of treason and attempted murder in connection with January 1980 attacks on a bank at Silverton (a suburb of Pretoria) and a police station in northern Transvaal. The three others—David Moise, Johannes Shabangu and Anthony Tsotsobe—were sentenced on 19 August 1981 for a June 1980 attack on installations of SASOL (the South African parastatal oil corporation) and assaults on a police station and a constable's house. The Security Council met twice during 1981 on these cases.

COMMUNICATION. Egypt, by a letter of 23 January 1981 to the Secretary-General,<sup>(1)</sup> denounced the 1980 death sentences as a crime against humanity, appealed to world public opinion to mobilize efforts to secure the immediate release of all African nationals in South African prisons and called on national and international organizations to ensure the implementation of sanctions against South Africa.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (FEBRUARY). On 5 February 1981, the Council met following consultations on a November 1980 letter concerning the sentences, sent by Senegal as Chairman of the African Group.<sup>(7)</sup> The President read out the following statement on behalf of the Council members:<sup>(4)</sup>

"The members of the Security Council have entrusted me to express, on their behalf, their grave concern over the death sentences recently passed by the Transvaal Division of the Supreme Court at Pretoria on Ncimbithi Johnson Lubisi (28), Petrus Tsepo Mashigo (20) and Naphtali Manana (24), and which may be considered shortly by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court at Bloemfontein.

Having this in mind, I strongly urge that the Government of South Africa, in order to avert further aggravating the situation in South Africa, should take into account the concerns expressed for the lives of these three young men."

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (AUGUST). On 27 August, the Niger, on behalf of the Group of Non-Aligned Countries members of the Council, transmitted a letter of 24 August<sup>(2)</sup> to the Council President from the ANC representative to the United Nations, Johnstone F. Makatini, conveying a request of the ANC National Executive Committee for action by the Council to save the lives of the three ANC members sentenced to death on 19 August. That verdict and sentence, the letter added, was designed to pave the way for indiscriminate prosecution and execution of all opponents of the apartheid régime. The Niger requested a Council meeting at the earliest possible opportunity to consider this matter.

The Council met on this request the same day and decided to invite Mr. Makatini under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure.<sup>a</sup> The proposal to invite the ANC representative was made by the Niger, Tunisia and Uganda in a letter of 27 August.

<sup>a</sup> Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure reads: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

During the Council debate, all speakers expressed concern at the death sentences. China condemned them as outrageous criminal acts, while Mexico saw them as proof that Pretoria despised international public opinion and systematically denied United Nations principles. Although the ANC members had been condemned for alleged acts of sabotage, said the Niger, the sentences were obviously linked to their everyday struggle against the apartheid régime. In Uganda's view, the Council must make clear that it was dealing not with a normal judicial process but with a political situation which had given rise to oppression leading to resistance and to the death sentences; it should do nothing which would comfort the forces of apartheid or which might be interpreted as equivocation.

The German Democratic Republic, Panama, the Philippines, Spain and Tunisia were among those calling for urgent Council action to save the lives of young patriots; the Philippines expressed disappointment and astonishment that there had been opposition to such an appeal. In France's opinion, the Council, through its President, should unanimously express concern and appeal to South Africa to take that concern into account in order not to aggravate the situation. Ireland supported an appeal by the President on behalf of Council members, and Japan wanted the members' concern conveyed immediately to South Africa. The USSR said it supported the convening of the Council in order to prevent a fresh crime against those combating apartheid; it also supported the proposal of the non-aligned countries that the President make a statement on behalf of the Council.

The United Kingdom said it understood that the judicial process in the case might not be complete; however, on humanitarian grounds alone, the death sentences, if confirmed, should call for clemency. The United States strongly urged the South African Government to take into serious account the concern expressed not only regarding the lives of the three men but also regarding the need not to enhance the tensions within the country.

Mr. Makatini appealed to the Council to make its voice heard in order to save the lives of the three patriots who, in the eyes of the entire black community in South Africa, were freedom fighters; the Council could not afford by omission to encourage further deterioration of the South Africa situation, whose explosion might poison race relations not only in Africa but throughout the world for decades to come.

The Council adjourned without setting a date for a further meeting on the subject.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. In its 1981 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(5)</sup> the Committee against Apartheid strongly condemned the imposition of death sentences on six freedom fighters. It considered the sentences imposed on 19 August to be particularly alarming, as they set the precedent of death sentences in cases in which no loss of life had resulted from the alleged actions of the accused. The court's conclusion that membership in ANC showed a common purpose and conspiracy to commit "terrorism" opened the way to mass executions of members of the national liberation movement. The Committee warned that the execution of patriots was bound to lead to grave repercussions and might well lead to reprisals by the liberation movement against the régime and its supporters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In the preamble to its 17 December resolution on political prisoners in South Africa,<sup>(6)</sup> the General Assembly expressed alarm at the imposition of death sentences on six freedom fighters and the recent assassination of attorney Griffith Mxenge (p. 197).

Political prisoners

ACTION BY THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. The Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid, in a press statement of 10 March 1981, denounced the capture of ANC members reportedly abducted by South African forces—three from Mozambique on 30 January and one from Swaziland on 19 February—and urged Governments to exert their influence to persuade South Africa to release and return them.

In its 1981 report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee noted again with utmost concern that, despite repeated calls by the United Nations and the international community, the apartheid régime had failed to release political prisoners and detainees and grant prisoner-of-war status to captured freedom fighters, and instead had intensified repression and instituted numerous trials. There had been increasing evidence of torture of political detainees, and the régime had even resorted to kidnapping and assassination of members of national liberation movements from neighbouring countries.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that the national liberation movement of South Africa had adhered to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocol I of 1977 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts. It recommended that, in the light of the escalating repression by the apartheid régime and its grave repercussions, the General Assembly should warn the régime of the grave consequences of continued repression and execution of patriots, call on all parties to the Geneva Conventions to take effective measures to grant prisoner-of-war status to captured freedom fighters, and request all Governments to help promote the campaign for the release of all political prisoners in South Africa.

On 12 October, the Committee held two meetings in observance of the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October). After hearing statements by United Nations and national liberation movement officials, it adopted a Declaration by which it appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals: to denounce the brutal repression in South Africa; to demand the immediate and unconditional release of all those imprisoned, restricted, banished or exiled for their opposition to apartheid; to publicize and mobilize support for their noble ideals; to honour the martyrs and leaders in the South African liberation struggle; and to support that struggle by implementing United Nations resolutions for the isolation of the apartheid régime and for assistance to the liberation movements. This Declaration was transmitted to the Secretary-General for the attention of the General Assembly and the Security Council by a letter of 13 October from the Committee Chairman.<sup>(1)</sup>

On 27 November, the Chairman expressed indignation at the assassination in Durban, South Africa, of Griffith Mxenge, an attorney who had defended a number of political prisoners in South Africa. In a statement of the same date, he expressed shock at the death in police custody of Tshifhiwa Muofhe, a leader of the banned Black People's Convention.

On 1 December, the Chairman issued a statement denouncing the arrest of over 30 trade unionists, as well as student and other leaders. He expressed concern on 8 December at reports of a hunger strike among a number of political prisoners on Robben Island.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> adopted without vote, the General Assembly demanded again that South Africa end repression against the black people and other opponents of apartheid, cease all trials under arbitrary repressive laws, refrain from executing persons sentenced under those laws for acts arising from opposition to apartheid, release all political prisoners and abrogate bans on organizations and the media for their opposition to apartheid. It urged Governments and organizations to act for an end to repression and for the release of all political prisoners in South Africa, and requested the Committee against Apartheid with the assistance of the United Nations Centre against Apartheid, to continue to promote the world campaign for the release of all political prisoners in South Africa. By a preambular paragraph, the Assembly expressed alarm at the death sentences imposed on six freedom fighters (p. 196) and at the assassination of Mr. Mxenge.

The Assembly, in its resolution on the South Africa situation, adopted on the same date,<sup>(3)</sup> demanded that the apartheid régime treat captured freedom fighters as prisoners of war under the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I. Also on 17 December, in a resolution on the work programme of the Committee against Apartheid,<sup>(5)</sup> the Assembly requested the Committee to give the highest priority in 1982 to promoting the world campaign for the unconditional release of all persons imprisoned or restricted for their opposition to apartheid.

Introducing the 68-nation resolution on political prisoners, Finland said that, in view of the death sentences pending against six ANC members and the recent arrests of numerous black trade union leaders, students and others, the resolution had particular urgency. Wide support for the text should help persuade South Africa to change its policies and convey a message of solidarity to the victims and opponents of apartheid.

Argentina and the Netherlands expressed reservations about the provision in the resolution on the South Africa situation concerning prisoner-of-war status under the Geneva Conventions and Protocol; the Netherlands questioned the applicability of those instruments, while Argentina said it was still studying the Protocol.

During the Assembly debate on apartheid, many countries, including the United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community members, called for the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners. The Lao People's Democratic Republic called for a campaign to free those imprisoned for resistance to apartheid or at least give them the status of political prisoners. The Sudan also urged assistance to the prisoners and their families and a halt to arbitrary arrests. Sweden appealed for the release of Nelson Mandela and other imprisoned leaders of the majority, stating that they could make an important contribution to South Africa's transition to a democratic society.

Political prisoners in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions concerning political prisoners in South Africa, in particular resolution 35/206 K of 16 December 1980,

Noting with grave concern the continued escalation of repression against all opponents of apartheid in South Africa, including the persecution of black trade unionists, students and journalists, as well as the threats against churches,

Alarmed at the imposition of death sentences on six freedom fighters, namely, Mr. Johannes Shabangu, Mr. Anthony Tsotsobe, Mr. David Moise, Mr. Ncimbithi Johnson Lubisi, Mr. Naphtali Manana and Mr. Petrus Tsepo Mashigo, Further alarmed at the recent assassination of attorney Griffith Mxenge and other opponents of the apartheid régime,

Considering that the continued repression against and executions of opponents of apartheid are bound to have grave repercussions,

Taking note of the Declaration adopted by the Special Committee against Apartheid on 12 October 1981 to commemorate the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the elimination of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic society,

1. Demands again that the racist régime of South Africa:

(a) End repression against the black people and other opponents of apartheid;

(b) Cease all trials under arbitrary repressive laws;

(c) Refrain from the execution of persons sentenced under such repressive laws for acts arising from opposition to apartheid;

(d) Release all political prisoners in South Africa;

(e) Abrogate bans imposed on organizations and the media for their opposition to apartheid;

4. Requests the Special Committee, with the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, to continue to promote the world campaign for the release of all political prisoners in South Africa.

Women and children under apartheid

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. During the year, the Committee against Apartheid and its Task Force on Women and Children under Apartheid continued to devote attention to the plight of women and children under apartheid their role in the national liberation struggle and ways of promoting assistance to them. The Task Force consulted with the liberation movements and the Non-Governmental Organizations Sub-Committee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization.

In its 1981 report,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee urged that international action in solidarity with the struggle of women in South Africa and Namibia should be intensified, particularly with respect to mobilization of world opinion and increased assistance. It declared its intention to expand its activities to that end and invited Governments and organizations to co-operate. It planned to send a mission to the relevant projects of national liberation movements and front-line States in order to consult on means to promote greater assistance to them; to expand contacts with women's organizations all over the world; and to organize in 1982 an international conference in co-operation with the newly established International Committee of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia (p. 199).

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly proclaim 9 August as International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia (p. 199), appeal to Governments and organizations for assistance to projects of the national liberation movement and front-line States and invite United Nations Secretariat units to co-operate on publicity for the plight of women and children under apartheid and their struggle for national liberation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly encouraged the Committee against Apartheid to intensify activities in support of women and children oppressed by apartheid, through conferences, seminars and missions. It appealed to Governments and organizations to contribute to the projects of national liberation movements and front-line States for assistance to refugee women and children from South Africa. It requested the Secretary-General to ensure the closest co-operation by the Secretariat's Centre against Apartheid Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and Department of Public Information on maximum publicity for the plight of women and children under apartheid and their struggle for national liberation. It invited Governments and organizations to observe 9 August annually as the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia (see below).

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 145 to none, with 2 abstentions. The 63-nation text was introduced by Indonesia.

In a resolution of 28 October on the self-determination of peoples,<sup>(2)</sup> the Assembly demanded the immediate release of children detained in Namibian and South African prisons.

Day of Solidarity (9 August)

On the recommendation of its Task Force on Women and Children under Apartheid, the Committee against Apartheid decided to observe 9 August 1981, the twenty-fifth anniversary of a demonstration by women against the South African pass laws in Pretoria, as the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia. At a meeting on 11 August, the Committee heard statements by United Nations and non-governmental organization officials and national liberation movement representatives. It received signatures from hundreds of organizations and individuals to a message of greetings to women of South Africa and Namibia, declaring solidarity with them and all those struggling to destroy the apartheid system. Special guests invited to the meeting decided to establish an International Committee of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia, with Jeanne Martin Cissé of Guinea as Convenor.

As recommended by the Committee in its annual report,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly, in its resolution of 17 December on women and children under apartheid,<sup>(2)</sup> invited Governments and organizations to observe this Day annually on 9 August. Introducing the resolution, Indonesia said that by this observance the international community would express its solidarity with the women suffering under apartheid and its support for their righteous struggle to eliminate that repressive system.

Economic and social survey

The Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), on 9 October 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to continue studies of the economic and social conditions of South Africa.

The UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the Board in August a report<sup>(1)</sup> prepared by a consultant, J. H. Mensah (Ghana), on economic conditions in Namibia (p. 1170) and South Africa. The report noted that the South African economy was the most industrially advanced in Africa, with the characteristics of a middle-rank industrialized country. Trade with neighbouring African countries provided a substantial outlet for manufactures, including machinery and equipment.

The report stated that black workers constituted some 68 per cent of the 9.3 million working population and were concentrated in agriculture and mining, where they made up some 90 per cent of the labour force. Under the migratory labour system, the African worker had no opportunity to acquire such rights as seniority, pensions and social security, to acquire skills or achieve a stable place in industrial production. Due to a growing shortage of skilled workers, however, industry had started to advocate the opening up of skilled jobs to Africans. On the other hand, the number of unemployed blacks continued to increase. The earnings gap between Africans and whites had tended to narrow in the tertiary sectors, to about one third of the average white wage, but in the most important production sectors it had tended to widen.

The report cited such aspects of South African economic and social life as resistance to full trade union rights for workers of all races; dissatisfaction over the inadequacy of housing, education, transport and recreational facilities for the black urban population; and an absence of development opportunities in the bantustans. It added that, while the business community had finally come to the conclusion that government policy must change, legislation and implementation of reforms proposed in 1979 by two South African commissions had met resistance. The changes required might well be left to a post-liberation government, and United Nations technical assistance should prepare the national liberation movements for that task.

Resolution: <sup>(2)</sup>TDB (report, A/36/15), 238(XXIII), para. 2, 9 Oct.

Other aspects

Action against violations of human rights in South Africa (p. 943) was recommended in 1981 by the Commission on Human Rights.

The Economic and Social Council demanded on 8 May<sup>(1)</sup> the cessation of police and state interference in industrial disputes and the recognition of the right of the black trade union movements in South Africa to full freedom of association and to unimpeded collective bargaining. Also on that date,<sup>(2)</sup> the Council decided to transmit to the Commission's Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa allegations regarding infringement of trade union rights in South Africa received by the Secretary-General from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and requested the Group to report to the Commission and the Council in 1982.

Encouragement of public action against apartheid

Throughout 1981, the Special Committee against Apartheid continued, with General Assembly approval, to encourage public action against apartheid by promoting a boycott of apartheid sports as well as a cultural and academic boycott and other activities (see below). Work continued on the drafting of an international convention against apartheid in sports, begun in 1978 (p. 203). An International Seminar on Publicity and the Role of the Mass Media in the International Mobilization against Apartheid made recommendations, which were endorsed by the Assembly, for greater involvement and co-operation of the mass media in the international anti-apartheid campaign (p. 204). The Committee organized and/or co-sponsored several conferences, seminars, meetings and other events, and observed a number of international days in solidarity with the liberation struggle in South Africa (p. 207).

Cultural, academic and sports boycotts

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. The Committee against Apartheid continued in 1981 to promote an international campaign to achieve a total boycott of apartheid sports teams as well as a cultural and academic boycott. It issued statements commending countries and organizations that had refused to participate in matches with South African teams or to tour South Africa, and sent communications to other sports organizations urging them to end sports exchanges with that country. It repeatedly appealed to the Irish Rugby Football Union to cancel a proposed tour to South Africa, but the team went ahead with the tour in May.

In connection with a tour to New Zealand by the South African Springbok rugby team, the Committee repeatedly appealed for action to stop the tour and commended two players who had decided not to play against the South African team. After the tour took place in July, the Chairman, in a statement of 14 September, expressed disappointment that the New Zealand Government, while expressing opposition, had not only failed to take action within its power to stop the tour, but had constantly attacked the anti-apartheid movement and provided police protection to the apartheid team.

In its 1981 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> and in a statement of 14 September, the Committee expressed serious disappointment at the fact that the United States Government had taken no action to prevent the United States tour of the South African team upon completion of its New Zealand tour. The Committee noted with satisfaction, however, that widespread public opposition to the United States tour and repeated appeals by the Committee Chairman to the authorities of the cities where the games were scheduled had resulted in cancellation of games in New York City and Rochester, New York.

In a message of 8 April to the Conference of European Ministers of Sport as well as in a press statement, the Chairman expressed concern that some sports bodies, administrators and promoters had been enticed by South African propaganda and by offers of enormous financial rewards to organize sports exchanges with South Africa. On 14 April, in a message to the Fourth Biennial Meeting of the South African Council on Sport (Durban, South Africa, 8 and 9 May) and in a press statement, the Chairman said the Committee admired the Council's continued efforts to uphold the principle of non-racialism in sports and denounced the seizure of its Secretary's passport in June 1980 on the eve of his departure for consultations at the United Nations.

The Chairman sent a letter on 23 October to the Permanent Representative of the Netherlands to the United Nations, requesting action with regard to a pamphlet issued by Royal Dutch Airlines (KLM) offering South Africa's white sports clubs assistance to compete internationally. The representative replied on 12 November that the head office of KLM had ordered its South African office to stop distributing the folder and to recall copies already sent.

On 8 December, the Chairman issued a statement commending the Welsh Rugby Union for cancelling its proposed tour of South Africa.

The first register of sports contacts with South Africa by organizations, individuals, promoters and administrators in Western and other States was published by the Committee on 15 May. The stated purpose was to enable Governments and organizations to take action with respect to sportsmen and sports administrators and promoters collaborating with South Africa. The register, which was transmitted to the Organization of African Unity, was to be kept up to date and published from time to time.

In its annual report, the Committee noted with concern and regret that several sports organizations outside South Africa had promoted renewed sports contacts with that country and that some sportsmen had been enticed by exorbitant financial rewards to play in South Africa. It noted with particular regret the failure of several Governments, especially New Zealand and the United States, to take firm action to terminate sporting contacts with South Africa, and suggested that the General Assembly should deplore the attitudes of those Governments and appeal to them to co-operate in the campaign against apartheid in sports.

With regard to cultural contacts, the Committee noted with great satisfaction the movement inside South Africa to boycott tours by entertainers from abroad. It commended action by the Netherlands Parliament to terminate the cultural agreement between the Netherlands and South Africa, expressing hope that other countries would take similar action.

The Committee proposed to organize in 1982 an international conference of cultural personalities for action against apartheid and to sponsor international and national art exhibits and other events against apartheid. It also intended to initiate a register of cultural contacts with South Africa in order to promote an effective boycott.

In a press statement of 9 March, the Committee Chairman commended the organizations and individuals, including dancers, who had expressed opposition to a projected two-week tour of South Africa by the Boston Ballet of the United States, which the company's executive board had decided on 6 March to abandon in response to representations by a number of organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(2)</sup> adopted by a recorded vote of 124 to 5, with 14 abstentions, the General Assembly commended the Committee against Apartheid for its efforts to promote academic, cultural and sports boycotts of South Africa and to mobilize academic, cultural and sports personalities in the campaign against apartheid. It endorsed the Committee's proposal to organize national and international conferences and exhibits to promote action by academic, cultural and sports personalities against apartheid and condemned sports organizations, sportsmen and promoters of sports events that had collaborated with South Africa. It also requested continued work by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports (p. 203).

In a resolution of the same date on the work programme of the Committee against Apartheid,<sup>(3)</sup> the Assembly requested the Committee to give the highest priority in 1982 to promoting the participation of writers, artists and other cultural personalities in the international campaign against apartheid.

Introducing the 39-nation resolution on academic, cultural and sports boycotts, Barbados stated that there could be no normal sports or cultural environment in a country where racial discrimination was an integral part of the law.

Among those voting against the resolution, the Federal Republic of Germany said certain academic and cultural contacts with South Africa were necessary in order to maintain a dialogue, though it would continue, within its legal possibilities, to discourage sports organizations and athletes from having contacts with South Africa if they promoted and practised racial discrimination; moreover, the Federal Republic had reservations about singling out countries and about the register of sportsmen visiting South Africa. New Zealand, though declaring its support for the basic purpose of the text, objected to the criticism in the preamble directed at it and the United States for permitting tours of the Springbok rugby teams; with regard to the register, New Zealand was unconvinced that it was appropriate or defensible for a United Nations body to judge the actions of individuals. New Zealand voiced similar objections in explaining its abstention on the resolution endorsing the report and work programme of the Committee against Apartheid.

Also voting against, Portugal said contact must be kept with the people of South Africa. The United States reiterated its position that sports were not a matter for government control and added that it would be more practical and constructive to encourage integration in South African sports, as a spearhead of the movement towards greater integration in the country as a whole.

The United Kingdom, which also cast a negative vote, said the member States of the European Community strictly adhered to the Olympic principle of non-discrimination and would continue firmly to discourage sporting contacts involving racial discrimination, but they respected the independence of private sports organizations and the fundamental right to travel abroad freely.

Abstaining, Canada said that to end academic and cultural interchanges with South Africa would deny to the academic and cultural communities the opportunity of demonstrating in meetings and discussions the total unacceptability of apartheid and the need for change. The Netherlands could not accept any infringement of certain traditional freedoms, such as the autonomy of sports organizations and the right of nationals to leave the country. Canada and the Netherlands also had reservations about the proposed convention (p. 204). Samoa believed the singling out of two States was neither necessary nor exhaustive. Australia, Austria and Solomon Islands abstained on similar grounds.

Though voting in favour, Fiji, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Spain and Thailand voiced reservations to the paragraph singling out New Zealand and the United States for criticism; Thailand remarked that New Zealand had opposed the Springbok tour and had a long record of opposition to apartheid Costa Rica, stating that it could not accept the legitimacy of requesting States to impose certain sanctions and limits on individuals, expressed reservations on the paragraph condemning sports organizations, sportsmen and promoters that had collaborated with South Africa. Japan also expressed reservations on the endorsement of the Committee's proposal to organize conferences and exhibits to promote action by academic, cultural and sports personalities.

Ireland said its support for the resolution should not give rise to expectations that it would restrict the constitutional right of its citizens to travel abroad. Speaking for the Nordic States, which also supported the text, Norway said that, in accordance with the Joint Nordic Programme of Action against South Africa, restrictive measures had been taken with regard to academic, cultural and sports exchanges; however, the Nordic States reserved their position on elements in the resolution which infringed their citizens' constitutional rights.

During the apartheid debate, the Gambia expressed the view that sports contacts with South Africa undermined efforts to isolate the regime diplomatically and conferred a de facto respectability on apartheid. Ghana stated that sports and cultural events with South African participation were on the increase because of the naivety and greed of some individuals, sporting organizations, impresarios and international agents; it hoped that, wherever possible, visas and other facilities would be withheld from those who had chosen to collaborate with the racist régime. Indonesia believed that sports, cultural and academic boycotts had a strong impact on the morale of the South African Government and should be intensified. Japan said it had decided not to issue visas to South Africans for cultural and educational exchanges or sports. Trinidad and Tobago thought that the sports boycott was the most effective weapon in the fight against apartheid.

New Zealand said it had fulfilled its commitment under the 1977 Gleneagles Agreement, in which the Commonwealth Governments had agreed that they would seek to discourage sporting contacts with South Africa by means consistent with their domestic laws and practices; however, New Zealand followed the principle that there should be no political interference in sports.

Draft convention against apartheid in sports

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports was again unable in 1981 to complete work on a draft convention because of disagreement over the sole remaining issue—a proposal that would require measures to be taken against non-parties to the convention if they acted contrary to its principles. The Committee reported to the General Assembly that a working group had considered several proposals in this regard. One of these, mentioned in its report,<sup>(1)</sup> was to expand the mandate of the International Commission against Apartheid in Sports, to be established under the convention, so that it could decide on action to be taken against teams and individuals from States not parties to the convention that violated the boycott of apartheid sports. The Committee felt that further consultations might enable it to reach a consensus.

The Committee, which began work on the draft convention in 1978,<sup>(3)</sup> recommended that its mandate be extended.

The General Assembly, in its resolution of 17 December on cultural, academic and sports boycotts against South Africa,<sup>(2)</sup> requested the Committee to continue its work with a view to submitting a draft convention as soon as possible, and authorized it to continue consultations with representatives of Governments and organizations and with experts on apartheid in sports.

Canada, which abstained in the vote on this resolution, expressed reservations about the appropriateness and utility of the proposed convention, saying its generalizations and the constitutional framework of Canada's federal system would probably make it impossible for Canada to subscribe. The Netherlands also voiced reservations about the convention, while Ireland hoped the convention would not create legal or constitutional problems for its Government.

In the debate on apartheid and South Africa, Ghana expressed hope that the convention would soon become a reality.

Public information, public action and the mass media

SEMINAR ON PUBLICITY, THE MASS MEDIA AND APARTHEID. An International Seminar on Publicity and the Role of the Mass Media in the International Mobilization against Apartheid, organized by the Committee against Apartheid in co-operation with the Government and the Solidarity Committee of the German Democratic Republic, was held at Berlin from 31 August to 2 September 1981. Participants included representatives of Governments, United Nations bodies and agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and national liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia, as well as individual experts.

On 2 September, the Seminar unanimously adopted the "Berlin Declaration", containing recommendations on the role and responsibility of the mass media in the struggle against apartheid. This stated that the media must publicize the legitimacy of that struggle, and make the world aware of the inhumanity of apartheid and the need for international action; they must expose the propaganda of the apartheid régime and its allies, including efforts to defame the national liberation movements; and they must expose the links of the apartheid régime with racist and fascist régimes and groups all over the world. The media must investigate, publicize and expose the sustenance of the apartheid régime by certain Western Powers and transnational corporations (TNCs).

The Seminar recommended that the United Nations, Governments, organizations and institutions should assist the national liberation movements in their information activities by providing broadcasting facilities, printing and distributing publications, offering technical and professional training, providing equipment and supplies, and assisting in gathering information. Also, public campaigns against apartheid should be developed and co-ordinated. Specific suggestions were made for activities by the Committee against Apartheid, including monitoring distorted reports about events in South Africa and Namibia presented by major Western news agencies and other media, and encouraging journalists' organizations to establish awards for journalists with outstanding records of exposing the apartheid system.

With regard to government action, the Seminar recommended: that Governments inform the public through all media about the national liberation struggle in South Africa and Namibia and United Nations efforts to eliminate apartheid; that they prevent and counteract propaganda by the apartheid régime; and that they instruct their external information services and offices to help disseminate anti-apartheid information.

The Seminar called for support action, especially by media and media workers, for journalists subjected to repression by the apartheid régime. It called on trade unions with members in the media to consider discussing with management its editorial policy on news and information on southern Africa; Journalists' organizations and trade unions in developing countries, it suggested, should set up anti-apartheid committees to ensure that false and distorted information about South Africa and Namibia would not be automatically disseminated. It recommended steps to collect and disseminate news about the liberation struggle in South Africa and Namibia, with United Nations assistance.

On 1 September, the Seminar adopted an appeal to journalists, film-makers, organizations of writers and mass communicators, and all United Nations organizations to mobilize world public opinion against apartheid and expose and condemn the racist régime in South Africa and its external allies and accomplices. It called on them: to be vigilant against the clandestine apartheid propaganda paid for by South Africa; to express concern at the suppression of press freedom in, and manipulation of news by, South Africa; to expose in words and pictures those collaborating with the apartheid régime; to publicize the activities of the national liberation movements in southern Africa and extend solidarity to journalists, publicists and writers of those movements; to expose the crimes of the apartheid régime and the operations of TNCs in assisting apartheid; and to inform world public opinion of the decisions and activities of the United Nations and other international organizations against racism and apartheid.

The Berlin Declaration and the appeal, together with a Declaration on aggression by South Africa against Angola (p. 220), were transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter of 10 September from the Acting Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid.

COMMUNICATION. On 16 June,<sup>(2)</sup> Guyana transmitted to the Secretary-General the Georgetown Declaration, adopted by the International Forum on the Liberation of Southern Africa, held at Georgetown, Guyana, from 30 April to 3 May, with the participation of representatives of 12 States, national liberation movement spokesmen and others. The participants reaffirmed the legitimacy of armed struggle and all other forms of struggle against the South African régime, condemned in the strongest terms the collaboration between South Africa and Western countries, and called for assistance to the liberation movements and the front-line States.

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID. The Committee against Apartheid continued to encourage and promote dissemination of information against apartheid by the Secretariat's Centre against Apartheid and the Department of Public Information as well as by NGOs, through publications in several languages, radio programmes for broadcast to South Africa, television spots, films and other material. It promoted voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid (p. 207) and co-sponsored conferences, seminars and other events with anti-apartheid movements and other NGOs (p. 207).

In its 1981 report,<sup>(3)</sup> the Committee made several recommendations concerning public action, in particular: the United Nations and States should consider political, financial and other assistance to anti-apartheid and solidarity movements to enable them to continue and expand their activities; the United Nations and other organizations should provide assistance and co-operation to promote youth and student activities against apartheid; the General Assembly should appeal to NGOs to desist from collaboration with the apartheid régime, and should request the Economic and Social Council and the Secretary-General to co-operate with the Committee in investigating and publicizing such collaboration so that action might be taken with respect to organizations which continued it; and the United Nations should make a special effort to inform parliamentarians on international action against apartheid, and should publicize and encourage anti-apartheid actions by local authorities.

With regard to public information, the Committee recommended that the General Assembly increase the United Nations budget approprition for publications on apartheid in various languages and appropriate $5,000 for grants to writers in connection with the initiation of a feature service on apartheid.

ACTION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly commended the Berlin Declaration to Governments, organizations and the media, and requested the Committee against Apartheid to take appropriate action towards implementing the recommendations in that document, including the publication of expert studies and the organization of journalists' seminars. It requested the Secretary-General and the Committee to encourage action by NGOs and the mass media in the anti-apartheid campaign, called on NGOs to desist from collaboration with the apartheid régime and institutions, and requested the Secretary-General to co-operate with the Committee in investigating and publicizing such collaboration and persuading those concerned to desist. It approved the Committee's recommendations to increase the budgetary provision for publications on apartheid and to initiate a feature service, and it requested the Committee to intensify co-operation with NGOs in the mobilization for sanctions against South Africa and aid to the national liberation movement.

The Assembly authorized the Committee to promote the International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions against South Africa (p. 179) and appealed for contributions to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid (p. 207).

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 126 to 2, with 19 abstentions.

By its resolution of the same day on the South Africa situation,<sup>(4)</sup> the Assembly requested Governments and organizations to co-operate with the Committee in publicizing the national liberation struggle in South Africa, its legitimate objectives and its wider significance.

Egypt introduced the 49-nation resolution on public information and public action against apartheid, stating that additional efforts should be made to keep the public informed of the South Africa situation with a view to isolating the apartheid régime and supporting the national liberation movement.

Explaining its negative vote on the resolution, the United States said that mobilizing world public opinion was an activity singularly unsuited to the United Nations; it feared that the gross distortions of truth found in the resolutions on apartheid could find their way into United Nations information activities. The United Kingdom, which also voted against, said the European Community (EC) member States (most of which abstained) could not support texts implying a limitation of freedom of information and expression; in particular, they could not support formulae implying that the press, broadcasting services or journalists were subject to government dictate.

Ireland abstained on the resolution because of reservations it shared with other EC members. New Zealand and Spain abstained on similar grounds; New Zealand added that it had a number of reservations concerning the Berlin Declaration. Australia, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the Nordic States abstained because of objections to the endorsement of the Declaration; the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and Norway, the last speaking for the Nordic States, also held that the media could not be subjected to governmental interference. Austria abstained mostly for constitutional reasons which would prohibit implementation of the resolution at the national level. Also abstaining, Japan could not support the $5,000 grant for feature writers.

Costa Rica and Greece, though voting in favour, reserved their position in respect of the endorsement of certain ideas and recommendations in the Berlin Declaration; Greece also had reservations on the paragraph endorsing the Committee's recommendations for activities to be financed from the United Nations budget. Ecuador supported the text on the understanding that it did not affect freedom of information. Botswana had reservations on the paragraphs on the Conference of trade unions and on mobilization for sanctions.

During the Assembly debate on apartheid and South Africa, Egypt favoured an international mobilization of opposition to apartheid concentrating on the countries that collaborated with the régime. As international public opinion became better acquainted with the evils of apartheid, said Iraq, Governments became more convinced of the necessity of adopting effective measures against South Africa. Poland remarked that, for joint anti-apartheid actions to be effective, there was need for the full co-operation of civic and political organizations, trade unions and student bodies. Trinidad and Tobago thought the mass media had a responsibility to bring their influence to bear on the side of patriots who sought to eliminate apartheid. Viet Nam thought that mobilization of international opinion to unmask and outlaw the actions of the South African régime, the complicity of Governments and corporations and the complacency of certain international organizations was one of the most important tasks of the United Nations.

Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid

In its resolution of 17 December 1981 on public information, the mass media and apartheid, <sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly appealed to all Governments to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid. Such an appeal was suggested by the Committee against Apartheid in its 1981 report.<sup>(1)</sup>

During 1981, 17 Governments contributed a total of $94,255 to the Fund, which was established in 1974 for the production of publications in languages other than the official languages of the United Nations and for grants to NGOs for reprinting and disseminating United Nations information material on apartheid. #### Meetings, missions and observances

During 1981, the Committee against Apartheid organized and/or co-sponsored several conferences, seminars and other events with anti-apartheid movements and other NGOs, including: the Conference of West European Parliamentarians on an Oil Embargo against South Africa (Brussels, Belgium, 30 and 31 January) (p. 175); the International Seminar on the Implementation and Reinforcement of the Arms Embargo against South Africa (London, 1-3 April) (p. 173); the International Seminar on Loans to South Africa (Zurich, Switzerland, 5-7 April) (p. 186); the Seminar on Effective Measures to Prevent Transnational Corporations and Other Established Interests from Collaborating with the Racist Régime of South Africa (Geneva, 29 June-3 July) (p. 188); and the International Seminar on Publicity and the Role of the Mass Media in the International Mobilization against Apartheid (Berlin, 31 August-2 September) (p. 204).

The Committee assisted and participated in the International Conference of Youth and Students in Solidarity with the Peoples, Youth and Students of Southern Africa (Luanda, Angola, 13-15 November).

On 27 March, the Committee held a hearing on legal aspects of the struggle against apartheid, to which representatives of several organizations and individuals were invited. The participants reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement by all available means, including armed struggle, for the seizure of power by the people, the elimination of the apartheid régime and the exercise of self-determination by the people of South Africa.

They also were of the view that responsibility for the crime of apartheid was not confined to the South African régime, but extended to its accomplices which artificially kept it alive.

On 24 March, the Committee held consultations with Bishop Desmond M. Tutu, General Secretary of the South African Council of Churches. On 27 March, the South African Prime Minister announced that Bishop Tutu's passport would be seized on his return to South Africa. By a statement of 10 April, the Committee Chairman appealed for wide support for the Bishop. In a statement of 17 April, he called on the international community not only to denounce the seizure of the passport, but also to institute total sanctions and to increase assistance to the oppressed people and their national liberation movements.

Observances in which the Committee participated included the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (21 March) (p. 877); Africa Liberation Day (25 May); the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa (Soweto Day) (16 June); the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia (9 August) (p. 199); and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October) (p. 197).

In its 1981 report,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee recommended the organization of regional conferences or seminars in order to promote wider dissemination of information on the South Africa situation, greater public action against apartheid and the implementation of sanctions or other measures against South Africa. It proposed that in 1982 such meetings be organized in Latin America, to study action by Latin American countries against apartheid, as well as collaboration by certain Governments and corporations; and in Asia, to study the virtual alliance that had developed between South Africa and Taiwan, as well as reports concerning open and clandestine trade and other links between the apartheid régime and some Asian countries.

The General Assembly, by its resolution of 17 December on the Committee's work programme,<sup>(2)</sup> decided to make available for 1982, from the United Nations budget, funds for international and national conferences and seminars against apartheid.

During the Assembly debate on apartheid, Viet Nam welcomed the Committee's proposal for a regional conference or seminar in Asia in 1982 to study the relations of certain Asian countries with South Africa.

Observance of the seventieth anniversary of ANC

By a letter of 19 November 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement on the seventieth anniversary (8 January 1982) of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC) appealing for international action in solidarity with the struggle of the South African people and for isolation of South Africa.

The Assembly, in its resolution of 17 December on the South Africa situation,<sup>(2)</sup> extended greetings to ANC on its seventieth anniversary.

International assistance

Financial, educational and other United Nations assistance continued to be provided in 1981 to the two national liberation movements in South Africa recognized by the Organization of African Unit (OAU) – the African National Congress (ANC) and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC) (see below). The United Nations programme of assistance to southern African student refugees (p. 210) entered its fifth year, having begun in February 1977. The United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa made nine grants totalling $2,510,000 for legal aid, relief, education and other assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, as well as for assistance to South African refugees (p. 211). Studying on scholarships granted by the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, established in 1967, were 533 persons from South Africa (p. 212).

Assistance to national liberation movements

In its 1981 report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Special Committee against Apartheid emphasized the urgent need to assist the national liberation movement in the light of the grave situation in South Africa.

The Economic and Social Council, in a resolution of 22 July on assistance by organizations of the United Nations system to colonial countries and South Africans,<sup>(6)</sup> requested those organizations to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa.

The Council President, on 2 July, reported on consultations held with the Chairmen of the Committee against Apartheid and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples on assistance by United Nations organizations to South Africans and their national liberation movement. According to his report,<sup>(3)</sup> they agreed on the following conclusions: that the Council and the two committees should continue to maintain close co-operation in maximizing world support for the peoples under colonial and racist domination; that the United Nations commitment to assist peoples under colonial and racist domination should receive urgent priority; that United Nations organizations should provide moral and material assistance; that assistance to the national liberation movements recognized by OAU should be given utmost attention; and that United Nations organizations should contribute to the campaign for South Africa's total isolation.

UNDP ACTIVITIES. The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), by a decision of 24 June,<sup>(10)</sup> requested the UNDP Administrator: to continue to assist efficiently and with maximum flexibility the national liberation movements recognized by OAU; to study the possibility of financing the participation of several liberation movement representatives in meetings convened by UNDP, including Council sessions; and to continue to report to the Council on assistance to the movements.

The Council took note of a report by the Administrator dated 18 March,<sup>(4)</sup> describing activities in 1980 and resources available for assistance to the national liberation movements. It stated that more than $4 million was available for this purpose in 1981 from the United Nations Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

According to a later report covering 1981 activities,<sup>(5)</sup> there were three UNDP projects each for ANC and PAC, involving educational assistance, promotion of self-reliance in housing and infrastructure construction, settlements planning and implementation, and food production for South Africans in the United Republic of Tanzania. In addition, UNDP supported four projects of health, vocational and educational assistance jointly benefiting both liberation movements. A fifth project enabled representatives of those movements to participate in sessions of the UNDP Council.

In September/October, an evaluation mission reviewed all ongoing UNDP-financed assistance to those liberation movements. The mission concluded that: UNDP assistance to African national liberation movements was achieving the intended development and humanitarian objectives; such assistance benefited only the targeted beneficiaries; and, while UNDP assistance to the liberation movements had improved conceptually and procedurally over the years, there was still room for improvement, particularly in such areas as data gathering, compilation and analysis as well as in project formulation, implementation, monitoring and co-ordination.

The mission's report served as a basis for consultations between UNDP, the national liberation movements, OAU and United Nations agencies at an inter-agency meeting held at Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, from 8 to 11 December. Priority needs were identified for development assistance in the UNDP programming cycle for 1982-1986.

UNCTAD ACTIVITIES. By a resolution of 9 October 1981,<sup>(9)</sup> the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to assist OAU-recognized national liberation movements of southern Africa on the most immediate issues facing their territories in the fields of trade and development, and give their leaders an opportunity to be more fully acquainted with UNCTAD activities in the area of international economic relations and negotiations. He was also asked to continue studies on economic and social conditions in South Africa (p. 200). The Board invited UNDP to make additional resources available to UNCTAD with a view to achieving those objectives, and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to submit progress reports on implementation of the resolution.

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 16 December on the work of UNCTAD,<sup>(7)</sup> took note of the Board's resolution. This provision was adopted in place of one in the original draft, proposed by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries,<sup>(1)</sup> that would have had the Assembly endorse the resolution. The adopted text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on the basis of informal consultations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By its resolution, of 17 December on the South Africa situation,<sup>(8)</sup> the General Assembly appealed to States to provide humanitarian, educational, financial and other assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement. It urged UNDP and other United Nations bodies to expand their assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and to the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU, and decided to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the United Nations budget to enable those movements to maintain offices in New York in order to participate in the deliberations of the Committee against Apartheid and other bodies.

In explanation of vote, Canada objected to the allocation of United Nations funds to individual liberation movements. The Netherlands said that, while it supported the efforts of ANC and PAC as anti-apartheid movements, it did not recognize them as a liberation movement because it did not regard the South African situation as colonial.

During the Assembly debate on apartheid, many States pledged to provide humanitarian assistance to the victims of apartheid and the South African liberation movement. For some countries, such as Japan, which argued that change could still be effected peacefully, such assistance excluded support of armed struggle. Others, including Malaysia and the Sudan, said they supported the struggle against apartheid by all means, including armed struggle. Nigeria said it would continue, regardless of the price and sacrifice, to give material resources to African freedom fighters for their just war against their racist oppressors.

Assistance to southern African student refugees

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), designated as co-ordinator for the assistance programme for southern African student refugees, reported orally on 14 July 1981 to the Economic and Social Council that Namibian and South African refugee students in the four asylum countries-Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia-continued to benefit from UNHCR assistance. Primary and secondary level scholarships had been provided, as well as medical care and accommodation. Some 250 refugees were enrolled at universities in those countries. UNHCR had met the travel costs of some 200 students who had left Botswana, Lesotho and Zambia for further education elsewhere. The Council took note of the High Commissioner's report on 20 July.<sup>(3)</sup>

At the Secretary-General's request, UNHCR reviewed the assistance programmes and identified needs that had arisen as a result of the student refugees' presence in the asylum countries. In a report of 18 September by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the High Commissioner concluded that the international community had provided valuable assistance to help host Governments provide accommodation, maintenance, care and education for the student refugees. Most of the original assistance projects had been successfully completed. The constant flow of student refugees would require international assistance for some time, particularly for the expansion of higher educational institutions.

According to tables appended to the report, government contributions earmarked for refugee aid in the asylum countries, in response to a 1977 appeal by the High Commissioner, amounted to $15,950,329 as at 15 July 1981, reflecting no increase since 24 May 1980.<sup>(4)</sup> Bilateral assistance reported to UNHCR amounted to an additional $7,653,182. Also as at 15 July 1981, the cost of projects financed by UNHCR or in co-operation with it totalled more than $13 million. The financial requirements for continuing projects or for new, related needs were estimated at more than $5 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 16 December,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly endorsed the assessments and recommendations in the Secretary-General's report. It requested him, in co-operation with UNHCR, to continue to organize and implement a programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for the student refugees, and urged Member States and organizations to contribute. It appealed to United Nations programmes and international and non-governmental bodies to provide humanitarian and development assistance for the resettlement and integration of refugee families from South Africa in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia, and called on all United Nations agencies and programmes to co-operate with the Secretary-General and UNHCR in humanitarian assistance programmes for the student refugees. Finally, it requested the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council in 1982 of the status of the programmes and to report to the Assembly later in 1982.

The text, sponsored by 31 nations and introduced by Botswana, was adopted by the Assembly, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which approved it in like manner on 3 December.

In the Third Committee debate, Yugoslavia said the international community must continue to provide financial support for the creation of decent living conditions and the establishment of educational opportunities for the student refugees. Also appealing for assistance, Zambia said most refugees from South Africa and Namibia were school-age people who had been discriminated against in their own country; in view of their increasing numbers, countries of asylum were bearing an increasing burden.

Assistance to student refugees in southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/184 of 15 December 1980, in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who had taken asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing the review by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees of the assistance programmes for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa,

Satisfied that some of the projects recommended in the report on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa have been successfully completed,

Noting with concern the continued influx into Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia of student refugees from South Africa as well as from Namibia,

Convinced that the discriminatory policies and repressive measures being applied in Namibia and South Africa will lead to a further exodus of student refugees from these countries,

Conscious of the burden placed on the limited financial, material and administrative resources of the host countries by the presence of those student refugees,

Appreciating the efforts of host countries to deal adequately with their present student refugee populations and also to be prepared to meet any new emergency by sharing the responsibilities and obligations with the international community,

Noting with satisfaction that provisions were made to allow former student refugees from Zimbabwe to complete their education in the country of asylum or to continue with their studies until alternative arrangements can be made for the completion of their education in their own country,

1. Endorses the assessments and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and commends him and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for their efforts to mobilize resources and organize the programme of assistance to student refugees in the host countries of southern Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for continuing to grant asylum and make educational and other facilities available to the student refugees in spite of the pressure which the continuing influx of those refugees exerts on facilities in their countries;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for the co-operation which they have extended to the Secretary-General and to the High Commissioner on matters concerning the welfare of those refugees;

4. Notes with appreciation the financial and material support provided for the student refugees by Member States, the High Commissioner, other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who have taken asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

6. Urges all Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously to the assistance programmes for the student refugees, through financial support of the regular programmes of the High Commissioner, the projects identified in the report of the Secretary-General and the projects and programmes submitted to the International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa;

7. Appeals to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Food Programme, the World Bank and the United Nations Children's fund, as well as other international and non-governmental bodies, to provide humanitarian and development assistance to expedite the resettlement and integration of refugee families from South Africa who have been given asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

8. Calls upon all agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to co-operate with the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in the implementation of humanitarian programmes of assistance for the student refugees in southern Africa;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to continue to keep the matter under review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the current status of the programmes and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN Trust Fund for South Africa

The United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa made nine grants totalling $2,510,000 in 1981, under a 1965 mandate from the General Assembly<sup>(2)</sup> authorizing it to make financial contributions to help persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, as well as refugees from those countries. The funds were to be used for legal aid, relief, education and other assistance to such persons and, in some cases, to their families. Recipients of grants were voluntary organizations, Governments of host countries of South African refugees and other bodies.

In its annual report on the Fund, annexed to a report by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly dated 30 October 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the Fund's Committee of Trustees noted that a large number of individuals faced persecution as a result of the nation-wide protests in South Africa in May during the observance of the twentieth anniversary of the Republic, school boycotts, strikes of workers, and community protests against increases in rents and bus fares. There had also been a series of new trials under the Terrorism Act and on treason charges. A number of journalists had been placed under restriction or had lost employment in the aftermath of a strike by the Media Workers' Association, and a large number of trade unionists had been persecuted in connection with strikes and other activities. Particularly alarming had been the imposition of death sentences in political trials (p. 195).

The Committee expressed grave concern at the precedents that might be set by the trials, the repercussions likely to result from executions, and government moves to intimidate Bishop Desmond M. Tutu (p. 208), the South African Council of Churches and others engaged in humanitarian assistance to victims of apartheid. In the light of those developments, it called for additional efforts to promote greater contributions to the Trust Fund and to voluntary organizations assisting victims of repression and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia.

Government contributions to the Trust Fund for South Africa totalled $2,002,032 during the year ended 31 December 1981. They came from 35 States, as follows:

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(3)</sup> adopted without vote, the General Assembly commended the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees for their efforts, and expressed appreciation to the Fund's contributors and the voluntary agencies aiding victims of apartheid and racial discrimination. It appealed for generous and increased contributions to the Fund and for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies concerned.

The resolution was sponsored by 50 States. Introducing the text, Norway stated that, until apartheid was totally eradicated, the international community had to do whatever it could to alleviate the suffering caused by that policy and to assist its victims.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa,

Gravely concerned at the continued and increased repression against opponents of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa, and the institution of numerous trials under arbitrary security legislation, as well as continued repression in Namibia,

Reaffirming that increased humanitarian assistance by the international community to those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia is appropriate and essential,

Recognizing that increased contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned are necessary to enable them to meet the increased needs for humanitarian and legal assistance,

1. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa for their efforts to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, as well as assistance to their families and to refugees from South Africa;

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1981, 533 persons from South Africa were studying in 24 countries on scholarships granted by the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (p. 1117). According to the Secretary-General's annual report on the Programme, dated 6 October 1981, <sup>(1)</sup>786 applications were received from South Africans and 52 new scholarship awards were granted between 1 October 1980 and 30 September 1981. Of the 533 recipients, 246 were studying in Africa, 167 in North America, 72 in Asia and 48 in Europe.

On 24 November,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly appealed for greater financial and other support to ensure the Programme's continuation, effectiveness and expansion.

Work programme of the Committee against Apartheid

In its annual report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Special Committee against Apartheid recommended that the annual budget allocation for special projects to promote the international mobilization against apartheid, which had been $150,000 in 1981, should be increased to $300,000 in 1982, and that the Committee should be authorized to seek voluntary contributions for such projects. In making this recommendation, it cited the need for a great expansion of activity in view of the grave situation in South Africa and the proposed International Year of Mobilization for Sanctions against South Africa (p. 177), as well as for more Secretariat services.

The Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(2)</sup> decided to make a special $300,000 allocation to the Committee for 1982 from the regular United Nations budget, for special projects to promote the international campaign against apartheid through conferences, other promotional efforts and studies, and requested Governments and organizations to assist and contribute towards such projects. Endorsing the Committee's recommendations on its work programme, the Assembly requested the Committee to give the highest priority in 1982 to mobilizing support for sanctions against South Africa (p. 167), reviewing the implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid and especially on embargoes, publicizing developments on collaboration with South Africa, promoting the participation of cultural personalities in the anti-apartheid campaign (p. 202) and promoting the campaign for the release of persons imprisoned or restricted for their opposition to apartheid (p. 197).

The resolution, sponsored by 50 States and introduced by Nigeria, was adopted by a recorded vote of 139 to 1, with 5 abstentions.

Japan abstained in the vote, saying that it could not accept the proposal to increase the special allocation to the Committee by 100 per cent or the provision that would enable the Committee to solicit and receive contributions for its own projects. New Zealand also abstained, taking exception to the Committee's comments and recommendations about New Zealand's actions in regard to apartheid and sports (p. 200).

Though voting in favour, Botswana reserved its position on the request for priority to mobilizing support for sanctions, while Greece had difficulties with certain points in the list of the Committee's priorities. The Netherlands voiced reservations on provisions entrusting the Committee with tasks within the competence of the Security Council's Committee on an arms embargo. Portugal expressed reservations on the request for voluntary contributions or other assistance for special projects, particularly in regard to the International Year for Mobilization of Sanctions against South Africa.

During the Assembly debate on apartheid, Jamaica favoured an expansion of the Committee's membership.

Other questions involving South Africa

Relations between South Africa and neighbouring States were again on the United Nations agenda in 1981. South Africa was charged with aggression against its neighbours (see below), including attacks against Angola (p. 217) and armed incursions into Mozambique (p. 221). A border incident with Lesotho was the subject of letters to the Secretary-General (p. 221). The Security Council established a commission of inquiry to investigate an armed attack against Seychelles (p. 226). No progress was reported in attempts to secure the independence of Namibia, which remained under illegal South African occupation (p. 1126).

Lesotho continued to benefit from a special economic assistance programme authorized by the General Assembly (p. 513).

Relations with neighbouring States

The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its 1981 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> stated that South Africa had committed numerous acts of aggression against the neighbouring front-line States during the previous few years. Such aggression had become inseparable from apartheid. The Committee therefore considered that the United Nations must recognize the breaches of peace and acts of aggression in southern Africa, declare the apartheid regime as the aggressor and decide on comprehensive and mandatory sanctions. It noted that the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa (p. 165), in its Paris Declaration of 27 May,<sup>(3)</sup> had viewed the situation as threatening a wider conflict with grave repercussions in Africa and the world.

The Commission on Human Rights, in resolutions adopted on 23 February in connection with the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa (p. 944), called on South Africa to desist from its aggression and violations of the territory of African States,<sup>(4)</sup> and condemned those attacks as a breach of international law.<sup>(5)</sup> It repeated this condemnation in a resolution of 6 March on the self-determination of peoples (p. 891) and requested that help be given to the front-line States to buttress their determination to support the liberation struggle in southern Africa.<sup>(6)</sup>

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in a consensus on the Namibia question (p. 1138) adopted on 14 August,<sup>(2)</sup> condemned the repeated acts of aggression perpetrated by South African forces against neighbouring States and the use of Namibian territory to launch those attacks. It called on States to extend moral and material assistance to Angola and other front-line States to help them defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity against such aggression.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 14 September, in a resolution on the Namibia question,<sup>(7)</sup> the General Assembly condemned South Africa for its armed attacks against neighbouring States, particularly Angola, and called on the international community to extend support and assistance, including military assistance, to the front-line States to enable them to defend their sovereignty and territory against South African aggression.

By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(13)</sup> adopted in connection with its consideration of apartheid and South Africa, the Assembly condemned the unprovoked acts of aggression by South Africa against Angola, Seychelles (p. 227) and other independent African States. It urged the Security Council to adopt effective measures under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations to prevent breaches of the peace and acts of aggression by the apartheid régime, and thereby avert the grave threat to international peace and security. The Assembly called on States and organizations to provide moral and material support to Angola and other African States subjected to aggression, subversion and terrorism by the apartheid régime, and requested the Committee against Apartheid to publicize those acts and promote support to the front-line States. It also demanded the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola and the payment of compensation (p. 221). The resolution, sponsored by 48 States, was adopted by a recorded vote of 136 to 1, with 8 abstentions.

The Assembly, in another resolution of 17 December on the South Africa situation,<sup>(12)</sup> vehemently condemned the apartheid régime for its repeated acts of aggression, subversion and terrorism against African States, designed to destabilize southern Africa.

In a resolution of 28 October on racial discrimination,<sup>(8)</sup> the Assembly vigorously condemned the repeated acts of aggression by South Africa against neighbouring States, particularly Angola, Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia, and expressed solidarity with the front-line States that were victims of South Africa's aggression and destabilization attempts.

In a resolution of 24 November on United Nations organizations and decolonization,<sup>(9)</sup> the Assembly urged the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations and institutions to extend, as a matter of priority, substantial material assistance to the front-line States in order to enable them more effectively to support the Namibian struggle for freedom and independence and to resist the violation of their territory by South African armed forces, directly or, as in Angola, through puppet traitor groups in the service of Pretoria.

Provisions relating to the front-line States were included in two resolutions on the Namibia situation adopted on 10 December. In one of these,<sup>(10)</sup> the Assembly called on the international community to extend full support and assistance, including military assistance, to the front-line States to enable them to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity against the repeated aggression of South Africa. In the second resolution,<sup>(11)</sup> the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with the United Nations Development Programme, a comprehensive programme of assistance to States neighbouring South Africa and Namibia, to help them overcome short-term difficulties and move towards complete self-reliance.

Nigeria, introducing the 17 December resolution on aggression against States neighbouring South Africa, said the text urged the Security Council to carry out its duty concerning the maintenance of international peace and security by imposing mandatory sanctions.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United States said it deplored the recent South African action in Angola and any escalation of violence in southern Africa from any quarter; however, it had to oppose the resolution for its obvious flaws.

France, abstaining, said the resolution introduced elements not contained in the draft resolution on Angola submitted in the Security Council (p. 218), which France had supported.

Among those voting in favour, Botswana voiced reservations on the clause concerning Council action; some proposed courses of action, it said, presented it with considerable problems because of its geopolitical situation. The Netherlands stated that the call for support to African States subjected to South African aggression was consonant with its own support for their efforts towards increased mutual co-operation and self-reliance. Spain declared that, although it disagreed with some of the ideas contained in the resolution, it would cast a positive vote because it considered that the continuing acts of aggression by South Africa against independent countries deserved serious condemnation.

Canada supported the resolution because of the overwhelming political importance of opposition to aggression, but it expressed reservations on the reference to Seychelles, as well as on the preambular paragraph referring to the United States vote in the Security Council on the armed attack against Angola; also, the paragraph urging the Council to take enforcement action trespassed on the Council's prerogatives. Also voicing reservations with regard to the mention of the armed attack against Seychelles were Australia, Ireland, the Netherlands and New Zealand (p. 227).

Reservations were expressed by Portugal in regard to the provision in the resolution on the Namibia question calling for military assistance to the front-line States.

During the debate on apartheid, many speakers, including Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Gabon, the German Democratic Republic, Kenya, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Romania, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Zambia, denounced South Africa's aggression against neighbouring States or described it as threatening a wider conflict.

Ghana stated that South Africa's military incursions had been stepped up because of the open political support given it by certain Western Governments, coupled with the knowledge that international action against it would be frustrated by certain permanent members of the Security Council. As long as the racist regime persisted, said Madagascar, South Africa would remain a threat to African countries and a favourable ground for hatching plots to destabilize Governments that opposed apartheid colonialism and imperialism. Mozambique, Uganda and the USSR viewed such action as designed to intimidate and destabilize States and force them to give up their assistance to the national liberation movements in southern Africa. Trinidad and Tobago held it essential that the international community protect the territorial integrity of South Africa's neighbouring States by invoking appropriate measures under Chapter VII of the Charter.

Zimbabwe stated that, based on the instability of the region, South Africa hoped to erect a constellation of States, as an indication of its determination to see that democracy and freedom were destroyed in order to make the region safe for apartheid.

Ireland, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Sudan and Uganda called for assistance to the front-line States to reduce their dependence on South Africa, defend their territory and compensate them for economic losses. The Netherlands said that, together with its partners in the European Community, it attached priority to providing financial aid to the front-line States. Sweden said it was assisting those States in their efforts to reduce their economic dependence on South Africa and their vulnerability to sanctions.

Acts of aggression by the apartheid regime against Angola and other independent African States

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Gravely concerned at the explosive situation in southern Africa resulting from the policies and actions of the apartheid regime of South Africa,

Condemning the continuing acts of aggression committed by the apartheid regime against independent African States, in particular its raid on Matola, Mozambique, in January 1981, its large-scale invasion of Angola since July 1981 and its recent invasion of Seychelles on 25 November 1981,

Noting with grave concern that the Security Council was unable on 31 August 1981, owing to the veto by the United States of America, to adopt a resolution condemning the unprovoked and massive armed aggression of South Africa against Angola.

Commending the Government and people of Angola, as well as the Governments and peoples of other front-line States, for their sacrifices in the cause of the liberation of South Africa and Namibia,

Recognizing that the apartheid regime of South Africa is guilty of repeated breaches of the peace and acts of aggression which constitute an ever-growing threat to international peace and security,

Condemning any encouragement to the apartheid regime in its acts of aggression, direct or indirect, as hostile to the interest of peace and freedom,

Commending all States that have provided assistance to Angola and other front-line States in accordance with relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

1. Condemns the unprovoked acts of aggression committed by the racist regime of South Africa against Angola, Seychelles and other independent African States;

2. Urges the Security Council to adopt effective measures, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to prevent breaches of the peace and acts of aggression by the apartheid regime, and thereby avert the grave threat to international peace and security;

Angola and South Africa

Following a series of letters from Angola complaining of armed attacks by South African forces across the Angolan border with Namibia, the Security Council met in August 1981 to consider an Angolan complaint of a large-scale invasion and occupation of the southern part of its territory. Because of a negative vote by a permanent member (the United States) the Council did not adopt a draft resolution<sup>(1)</sup> condemning South Africa and demanding the withdrawal of its troops. Following further charges by Angola, the General Assembly, on 17 December, demanded the immediate withdrawal of all South African troops.<sup>(34)</sup>

COMMUNICATIONS (JANUARY-AUGUST). By a letter of 19 January,<sup>(6)</sup> Angola drew the Secretary-General's attention to a series of armed attacks into Cunene and Huila provinces by South African army units and helicopters beginning on 12 January, which had left a number of people dead or wounded. In further letters of 22 January<sup>(7)</sup> and 24 February,<sup>(8)</sup> the latter annexing a communique by the Ministry of Defence, Angola indicated that the attacks were continuing.

In a letter of 23 June,<sup>(9)</sup> Angola charged that more than 95,000 South African troops and mercenaries were in Namibia, ready to invade Angola. On 30 July,<sup>(11)</sup> Angola stated that an infantry brigade and three battalions of South African troops and mercenaries, supported by aircraft, had carried out a massive invasion. Annexed to an Angolan letter of 25 August<sup>(12)</sup> was a letter of the same date from the President of Angola, stating that more than 45,000 South African troops were concentrated in the border area and warning that Angola might be forced to resort to Article 51 of the United Nations Charter (on individual and collective self-defence).

To a letter of 26 August<sup>(13)</sup> was annexed a communique from the Acting Foreign Minister of Angola describing aerial attacks against the towns of Cahama and Tchibemba—more than 200 and 300 kilometres, respectively, inside Angola's borders—as well as continuing ground attacks near Xangongo and Catequero, 100 and 150 kilometres from the border.

On 13 July,<sup>(10)</sup> Angola transmitted the Declaration on the People's Republic of Angola adopted at Nairobi, Kenya, in June by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), expressing concern about steps by the United States Administration to have the Congress revise existing legislation with a view to giving direct military assistance to groups of Angolan traitors in the pay of the Pretoria regime, and voicing Africa's commitment to stand by Angola for the defence of its sovereignty and territory.

On 26 August,<sup>(14)</sup> Angola transmitted a letter from its President requesting an urgent meeting of the Security Council to deal with a rapidly deteriorating situation as a result of an attack by three to four brigades of South African troops, supported by aircraft and about 135 tanks, operating more than 100 kilometres inside the border. Angola reiterated its request for a meeting in a letter of 27 August to the Council President.<sup>(15)</sup>

Letters or notes verbales on this situation were sent to the Secretary-General or the Council President by Spain, on 27 August;<sup>(28)</sup> China,<sup>(21)</sup> Egypt<sup>(23)</sup> and the USSR,<sup>(31)</sup> on 28 August; Mongolia, on 29 August;<sup>(25)</sup> and Algeria Botswana<sup>(20)</sup> and Suriname,<sup>(29)</sup> on 31 August. They transmitted official statements or communiqués condemning South Africa's aggression against Angola, expressing solidarity with the Angolan Government and people, and calling for the immediate withdrawal of South African troops. Algeria called for the immediate imposition of sanctions against South Africa.

In addition, calls for Security Council action were made by the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries at a 28 August meeting in New York, in a communique annexed to a Cuban letter of 29 August,<sup>(22)</sup> and by the President of Kenya as current OAU Chairman, in a telegram annexed to a letter from Kenya dated 29 August.<sup>(24)</sup> The non-aligned countries called on the Council to apply Chapter VII of the Charter.

By a letter of 26 August to the Secretary-General,<sup>(2)</sup> the Acting Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid transmitted a Committee statement of the same date dealing with various aspects of the South Africa situation (p. 158); with regard to the armed attack against Angola, the Committee called for urgent action on Angola's request to put an end to the successive acts of aggression against it and neutralize the imminent and large-scale invasion prepared by South Africa. The Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, by a letter of 28 August,<sup>(18)</sup> transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement of the same date condemning the invasion of Angola and calling for the strongest measures against South Africa by the international community and by the Security Council in particular.

By a letter of 27 August,<sup>(27)</sup> South Africa transmitted a letter of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information, stating that premeditated attacks conducted from across the border by the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) had escalated to new levels of intensity during the previous weeks. SWAPO sought to build a terrorist force in neighbouring countries, dependent on the USSR and Cuba for its philosophy, training, armament and supplies. In countering the incursions, South Africa had limited its response to SWAPO targets. It invited Security Council representatives to visit Namibia to observe the situation.

OTHER ACTION. The United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (p. 689), by a resolution of 21 August,<sup>(32)</sup> deplored all South African military activities in Namibia and Angola, which were having serious ecological consequences, thereby limiting the future capacity to develop new and renewable energy sources. The Conference demanded the complete and unconditional withdrawal of all South African troops from the occupied Angolan provinces of Cunene and Kuando Kubango.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION. The Security Council met between 28 and 31 August to discuss Angola's complaint of an armed attack by South Africa. On 31 August, a draft resolution<sup>(1)</sup> sponsored and twice revised by Mexico, the Niger, Panama, the Philippines, Tunisia and Uganda received 13 votes in favour but was not adopted because of the negative vote of a permanent member; there was one abstention.

This draft would have had the Council strongly condemn South Africa for its premeditated, unprovoked and persistent armed invasion perpetrated against Angola and its utilization of the illegally occupied Territory of Namibia as a springboard for armed invasions and destabilization of Angola. The Council would have declared the armed invasion a flagrant violation of Angola's sovereignty and territorial integrity, and a danger to international peace and security. It would have demanded the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all South African troops from Angola; strongly condemned South Africa's use of mercenaries against Angola; and condemned the aggressive campaign and other hostile activities aimed at destabilizing Angola.

The Council would have urged all Member States urgently to extend material assistance to Angola in order to enable it to defend its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, and called on all States to implement fully the arms embargo imposed against South Africa in 1977.<sup>(35)</sup> It would have called for full and adequate compensation to Angola by South Africa for the damage to life and property resulting from the armed invasion. The Council would have decided to send immediately to Angola an investigation commission of five Council members for an on-the-spot evaluation of the critical situation resulting from the invasion, with a mandate to report to the Council by 30 September. Finally, the Council would have decided to remain seized of the question and to meet again to consider the implementation of the resolution.

The vote on this draft was as follows:

In favour: China, France, German Democratic Republic, Ireland, Japan, Mexico, Niger, Panama, Philippines, Spain, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: United Kingdom.

The text was revised twice before the vote. By the first revision, a paragraph by which the Council would have decided to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter was deleted. By the second, the six references to "acts of aggression" were replaced by "armed invasion", and the invasion was described as a danger to rather than a breach of international peace and security.

Explaining its negative vote, the United States said the draft blamed South Africa alone for the escalation of violence, whereas the presence of foreign-particularly Cuban-combat forces and USSR military advisers in Angola, along with the provision to SWAPO of arms of USSR origin, fuelled the explosive atmosphere of confrontation and violence. The United Kingdom, abstaining, said that although it could support much of the draft, particularly the demand for troop withdrawal, it did not believe that offensive characterizations and highly coloured rhetoric contributed to peaceful solutions; moreover, it did not regard the text as constituting a determination under Article 39 of the Charter (on the existence of a threat to peace, breach of peace or act of aggression).

The USSR said it had voted for the draft because it reflected the demands of the victim of the aggression as well as the position and interests of Africa; the negative vote of the United States had been cast in the context of its new southern Africa strategy, aimed at destabilizing Angola and reversing decolonization by forcing its South African partner on the continent.

Angola said the veto would be seen by Africa and the third world as support for South Africa's racism, its flouting of United Nations resolutions and its disregard for human dignity and life; as stated in its letter of 25 August (see above), Angola might have no option but to invoke Article 51 of the Charter. Uganda, a sponsor of the draft resolution, expressed disappointment that the draft, though not containing any references to Chapter VII and to the fact of aggression, had been blocked by a single veto—an action which would make the victim of aggression more vulnerable, give comfort and encouragement to South Africa and deal a blow to the Namibians in their search for self-determination.

For the discussion preceding the voting, the Council invited Angola, Brazil, Canada, Cuba, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique, South Africa, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe, at their request, to participate without vote. At Tunisia's request, contained in a letter of 29 August,<sup>(30)</sup> the Council also extended an invitation under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure<sup>a</sup> to the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations.

At the start of the debate, Angola gave an account of the invasion by South Africa, stating that the invasion force, which included gangs of mercenaries, had been accompanied by 135 tanks, 140 armoured vehicles, 38 helicopters and three artillery units, as well as aircraft used for reconnaissance, bombing and strafing. The invaders had occupied or destroyed a number of towns and inflicted brutalities on civilians. Warning that the situation could provoke a widespread conflagration, Angola demanded redress, the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African troops and assistance to strengthen its defences against South Africa's military and nuclear might.

South Africa rejected the charges of aggression against Angola, saying that any action by South African security forces was aimed solely at SWAPO, not at Angola and its people. Between July 1978 and September 1980, there had been almost 1,000 SWAPO attacks across the Angola-Namibia border, involving the murder of almost 300 Namibians, the abduction of 390 schoolchildren and serious injuries to 250 inhabitants of the Territory. The perpetrators had fled back to their sanctuaries in Angola. Rather than a liberation struggle, SWAPO had been conducting a systematic campaign to terrorize and intimidate Namibians with a view to taking over the Territory's government by armed force. The African States had nothing to fear from South Africa, provided they chose the road of peaceful coexistence. The Chief of the South African Defence Force had announced on 28 August that the forces involved in follow-up operations against SWAPO elements in southern Angola were returning to their bases and advance groups were already back in Namibia.

Most speakers, among them Brazil, China, Cuba, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Ireland, Japan, Kenya (speaking for the OAU members), the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Niger, Panama, the Philippines, Spain, the USSR, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia, considered that the Council must condemn South Africa's invasion, which most regarded as a clear violation of Angolan sovereignty and territory and a threat to peace and security. These States, together with Canada, the United Kingdom, the United States and Zimbabwe, the last speaking as Chairman of the African Group, called for urgent Council action to ensure the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of the South African troops.

A number of countries, such as Brazil, China, the German Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Niger, Panama, the Philippines and Viet Nam, supported Angola's demand for full compensation for the human and material losses caused by the invasion. Others, including France, Ireland and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, said the Council must demand that South Africa respect Angola's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The United Kingdom called on the Council to agree urgently on a simple and direct appeal to South Africa to terminate its military action in Angola. The United States believed the Council should call urgently and immediately for the cessation of violence from every quarter and by all parties. Spain expressed the view that a Council condemnation of South Africa's aggression and a request that it unconditionally withdraw all its forces would not prevent the Council from continuing to work on a resolution of wider scope.

China stated that South Africa was so reckless in attacking neighbouring States because of the connivance and support of a super-Power that had sided with it.

In the view of the USSR and Viet Nam, the purpose of Pretoria's action was to destabilize the progressive regime in Angola, with support and encouragement from imperialist and racist forces in the West. Cuba voiced a similar opinion, saying the refusal by the United States to allow the imposition of mandatory sanctions against South Africa meant a manifest decision to protect the aggressor. The German Democratic Republic and the USSR said it was time for the Council to act in accordance with its June 1980 resolution on Angola and South Africa, when it decided to meet again in the event of further South African violation of Angola's territory in order to consider more effective measures under the Charter, including Chapter VII.<sup>(36)</sup> The German Democratic Republic favoured an appeal to States to provide Angola with all necessary assistance in order to bring South African aggression to an immediate end.

Tunisia said international peace and security, as well as the Council's authority and credibility, would be reinforced by the adoption of mandatory sanctions. The call for sanctions was supported by several others, such as the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Uganda. Yugoslavia said the demand of the non-aligned countries for sanctions had become more acute and more universal. In Brazil's view, the Council would have no other resort but the use of Chapter VII if South Africa did not meet the request to withdraw its troops and pay full compensation for the human and material losses caused by its invasion.

Ireland charged that South Africa had utilized its illegal occupation of Namibia to attack Angola on the pretext of a pre-emptive strike; Ireland wondered whether those attacks might not ultimately be aimed at promoting instability throughout southern Africa. In Japan's opinion, South Africa's military actions in Angola went against all United Nations efforts to find a settlement of the Namibian problem.

Kenya, as Chairman of OAU, said Angola was the target of the invasion, not SWAPO and its bases. Mozambique believed that South Africa's invasion of Angola and its January attack on Matola, Mozambique (p. 211, were meant to destabilize the situation in both countries and make it more difficult for them to express political and material solidarity with national liberation movements. The Niger remarked that the conduct of the operations, their timing and objective ruled out the possibility of improvisation or chance; they were outright acts of aggression, backed with sufficient means. The Philippines saw the invasion as part of South Africa's scheme to perpetuate its illegal occupation of Namibia. India expressed a similar opinion and urged the Council to take appropriate and resolute action, including the application of Chapter VII.

Uganda saw four South African objectives in committing aggression against Angola: to make the world safe for apartheid; to eliminate all patriotic elements within and outside Namibia so as to consolidate its illegal hold on the Territory and frustrate self-determination; to intimidate the front-line States and inhibit them from expressing solidarity with the liberation movements and refugees; and to weaken the economies of the neighbouring States so as to make them dependent on South Africa.

In Canada's view, the situation re-emphasized the acute need for a solution to the Namibia question. France said South Africa's argument that it was acting in self-defence against incursions by SWAPO fighters was not at all valid, as South African territory was not in danger; the direct cause of the dangerous situation in southern Africa was the unjustified maintenance in Namibia of a South African presence and Pretoria's refusal to accept the United Nations settlement plan for Namibia. The Federal Republic of Germany expressed the conviction that efforts for a peaceful solution to that question could succeed only if all parties exercised the utmost restraint and desisted from any action likely to endanger peace and security in the area.

Mexico stated that South Africa's impunity was largely the result of the Council's ambiguous conduct; it had not reacted with sufficient decisiveness when faced with an obvious fact. Panama said the gravity of South Africa's aggression required the adoption of forceful coercive measures; States could not remain neutral when faced with the constant institutional erosion produced in the United Nations by that country's stubborn and delinquent attitude.

FURTHER COMMUNICATIONS (SEPTEMBER-NOVEMBER). On 3 September<sup>(19)</sup> and 8 September,<sup>(26)</sup> respectively, Bangladesh and Pakistan transmitted government statements denouncing the acts of aggression against Angola, expressing solidarity with it and calling for international action to terminate the attack and ensure withdrawal of the South African troops.

The Acting Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid, by a letter dated 10 September,<sup>(3)</sup> transmitted to the Secretary-General a Declaration on the Aggression by the South African Racist Regime against the People's Republic of Angola, adopted on 31 August by the International Seminar on Publicity and the Role of the Mass Media in the International Mobilization against Apartheid, held at Berlin (p. 204). The Seminar, condemning the invasion, requested that the Security Council declare South Africa as the aggressor, demand the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of its forces, declare its liability for full reparations, adopt comprehensive and mandatory sanctions and call on all

Africa

States, individually and collectively, to assist Angola to defend its sovereignty and territory.

On 17 September,<sup>(5)</sup> Algeria, on behalf of the African Group, transmitted to the Secretary-General a communique issued at the end of an emergent summit of the front-line States and Nigeria Lagos, Nigeria, 11 September), in which the participating heads of State and Government appealed for international assistance for Angola's defence and reconstruction, expressed dismay at the United States veto in the Security Council, condemned that country's support of South Africa and expressed their views on the Namibia question (p. 1128).

Angola, by letters of 28 October<sup>(16)</sup> and 11 November,<sup>(17)</sup> charged that South Africa's aggression against it continued unabated and that South African forces continued to occupy the southern part of the country.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In a resolution of 28 October on self-determination of peoples,<sup>(33)</sup> the General Assembly strongly condemned the invasion and occupation of part of Angolan territory by South African troops.

By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(34)</sup> adopted under the agenda item on apartheid and South Africa, the Assembly condemned the unprovoked acts of aggression by South Africa against Angola and other African States, and urged the Security Council to adopt effective measures to prevent breaches of peace and acts of aggression by the apartheid regime. It demanded that South Africa withdraw all its troops from Angola immediately and unconditionally, respect fully the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola and other States, and pay full compensation to Angola for the damage to life and property caused by its acts of aggression. It called on States and organizations to provide moral and material support to Angola and other African States subjected to aggression, subversion and terrorism by the apartheid regime, and requested the Committee against Apartheid to publicize those acts of aggression and to promote moral and material support to Angola and other front-line States.

During the debate on apartheid, a number of States criticized South Africa for committing aggression against Angola. The German Democratic Republic and Uganda said such action was intended to weaken and destabilize Angola; another aim, said Uganda, was to insulate South Africa from the liberation movements fighting against apartheid. Mozambique said South Africa must get out of Angolan territory and pay indemnities to that country.

Ghana and the Syrian Arab Republic said the United States veto in the Security Council of the draft resolution on the invasion of Angola furthered the protection and encouragement of the South African regime. In Sierra Leone's view, the veto indicated double standards and double-talk; it was inconsistent to condemn one proven case of aggression and refuse to condemn another in similar circumstances.

Lesotho and South Africa

By a letter of 9 October 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> Lesotho informed the Secretary-General that, on 8 October, mortars and machine-guns had been fired from South African territory at the barracks of a Lesotho paramilitary unit stationed near the border. Annexed to the letter was a protest note addressed to the South African Government.

South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General on the same day a letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information<sup>(2)</sup> rejecting the inference that South Africa had been involved in the attack and pointing out that opposition elements in Lesotho had openly claimed responsibility for past acts of violence against the Lesotho Government. The letter further stated that South Africa had acted against armed persons or groups endeavouring to traverse South African territory en route to Lesotho. It requested the Secretary-General to dispatch a fact-finding mission.

Mozambique and South Africa

By a letter of 2 February 1981 to the Secretary-General,<sup>(2)</sup> Mozambique stated that, on 30 January, a group of South African commandos had invaded its territory at Matola (near the capital of Maputo) and killed 11 South African refugees who were members of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), as well as a Portuguese technician; it described the attack as part of a concerted plan to weaken, terrorize and destabilize southern African countries. The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Mozambique, by a letter of 5 February,<sup>(3)</sup> informed the Secretary-General that South Africa had recalled its personnel in Maputo for consultations and continued to concentrate a large number of troops and war equipment along the border and to violate Mozambique airspace; Mozambique believed that South Africa was preparing another aggression and requested the Secretary-General to take immediate action to dissuade it.

Replying on 6 February,<sup>(5)</sup> South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of the same day from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information, stating that the action by the South African Defence Force had been directed solely at ANC terrorists; it had followed several warnings to Mozambique that, unless steps were taken to put an end to terrorist activities against South Africa from its territory, South Africa would be forced to act.

The Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid condemned the attack in a press statement of 3 February and urged the Security Council to impose sanctions against South Africa to force it to end its criminal acts of aggression.<sup>(7)</sup>

On 9 February,<sup>(1)</sup> India conveyed to the Council President a message from the Secretary-General of the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, 9-13 February) in which the Conference strongly condemned the South African military action against Mozambique and appealed for increased assistance to strengthen the defence of the African front-line States and for United Nations action to prevent such acts of aggression.

By a telegram of 18 March to the Secretary-General,<sup>(4)</sup> the Foreign Minister of Mozambique stated that, on 17 March, about 50 South African soldiers had crossed the border into Mozambique and opened fire against a unit of border guards near the town of Ponta do Ouro, seriously injuring one guard while losing two of their own soldiers; large numbers of South African troops were still positioned along the border.

South Africa, on 20 March,<sup>(6)</sup> transmitted to the Secretary-General a message of 17 March addressed to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Mozambique, in which the South African Department of Foreign Affairs and Information stated that the South African border unit involved in the incident had accidentally strayed across the unmarked border due to a navigational and map-reading error; South Africa protested the killing of one of its soldiers.

Chad situation

During 1981, the situation in Chad was the subject of several communications to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.

By a letter of 18 February,<sup>(6)</sup> Sierra Leone transmitted to the Council President three documents relating to Chad, including the final communique issued at Lomé, Togo, on 14 January 1981 by the Bureau of the seventeenth summit (1980) of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the OAU Standing Committee on Chad. By that communiqué, the participants called on Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to set aside the reported merger agreement between them, affirmed that only a democratically elected government could commit Chad in such a fundamental agreement, called on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and other Powers immediately to withdraw their troops and military personnel from Chad, called on OAU members to refuse the use of their territory by extra-African Powers or dissident Chadian groups as sanctuaries or bases for mounting armed attacks against Chad, mandated the OAU Secretary-General to organize elections in Chad by the end of April 1981, and decided to send to Chad a Monitoring Commission and an African peace-keeping force composed of troops from Benin, the Congo, Guinea and Togo.

By a letter of 20 February,<sup>(*)</sup> Chad declared that the January communique had not been approved by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government and did not commit Chad, as it had been adopted in Chad's absence; peace had returned to Chad since the defeat of the rebel group and Chad firmly opposed any consideration of the situation by the Security Council.

By a letter dated 22 April,<sup>(2)</sup> Chad charged that Egypt and the Sudan were threatening it with armed aggression. Both countries denied these charges by letters of 24 April<sup>(4)</sup> and 27 April,<sup>(7)</sup> respectively; the Egyptian letter annexed a 24 April letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Council President.

The Sudan, on 16 September,<sup>(8)</sup> stated that the occupying Libyan forces in Chad had committed three acts of aggression against the Sudan, bombing villages on 10 and 15 September and overflying the city of El Geneina on 15 September. Chad, on 21 September,<sup>(3)</sup> termed these charges baseless and said they were aimed at covering up the repeated military incursions launched against it from the Sudan by perpetrators assisted and protected by the Government. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya also responded to the Sudanese letter on 13 October in the context of its relations with the Sudan (p. 225).

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, by a letter of 24 November,<sup>(5)</sup> maintained that the presence of its forces in Chad, requested in 1980 by the Transitional National Union Government of President Goukouni Oueddi, had helped put an end to the civil war that had lasted since 1965; at the Government's request, all Libyan forces had been withdrawn by the third week of November 1981.

Status of the Comorian Island of Mayotte

The sovereignty of the Comoros over the Island of Mayotte was reaffirmed by the General Assembly in 1981, and France, which retained the island under its jurisdiction, was invited to resume its negotiations with the Comoros on the question.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. In response to a 1980 Assembly request,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report dated 3 December 1981<sup>(1)</sup> on the question of the Comorian island of Mayotte. The report contained information from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Co-operation of the Comoros, the Permanent Mission of France to the United Nations and OAU.

The Comoros, by a note verbale of 9 July, told the Secretary-General that new elements in French policy and the election of a President whose party had opposed the separation of Mayotte from the Comoros raised hopes for a solution; the Comoros wished to raise the issue shortly with the new French Government. France, by a note verbale of 14 September, informed the Secretary-General that its new Government had re-examined the question, and consultations with the Comoros had begun and would continue in the coming weeks.

The OAU activities on the question were indicated in three documents which that organization transmitted to the Secretary-General on 2 December. By a resolution adopted in June, the OAU Council of Ministers called on the organization's Ad Hoc Committee of Seven on the Comorian Island of Mayotte, which had not been able to meet as requested by the Council in 1980,<sup>(5)</sup> to convene at Moroni, Comoros, before the Council's next session, to study the situation and recommend a settlement. This Committee, meeting at Moroni from 9 to 11 November, decided to send a mission to consult with French authorities on measures to return the island to the Comoros as soon as possible, and instructed the African Group to set in motion any United Nations action to hasten that return. The Committee also adopted a declaration reiterating its rejection of any recourse to a referendum or to any form of consultation in Mayotte, which would be considered null and void.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 10 December,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte and invited France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the 1974 referendum on self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago, concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros. France was also invited to resume and actively pursue negotiations with the Comoros, with a view to ensuring the island's return to the Comoros as soon as possible. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to follow developments, in conjunction with the OAU Secretary-General, and to report again in 1982.

This resolution, sponsored by 15 States and introduced by the Comoros, was adopted by a recorded vote of 117 to 1, with 20 abstentions.

The question was also referred to in a resolution of 28 October on the self-determination of peoples, in which the Assembly took note of the contacts between the Comoros and France in the search for a just 'solution to the integration of Mayotte into the Comoros'.<sup>(3)</sup>

Explaining its vote against the resolution on Mayotte, France regretted that the question was again on the Assembly's agenda, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations and despite the fact that the debate was not likely to bring a solution closer. The French President had stated that France was committed actively to seek a solution in the context of its national and of international law. It hoped that solution would take account of geographical, ethnic and historical links between the islands of the Archipelago. But France could not be expected to go counter to the sacred principle of self-determination; the inhabitants of Mayotte must freely choose their destiny. Mayotte's status was provisional and did not close the door to any evolution. France encouraged the development of economic, commercial, human, cultural and other relations between Mayotte and the other Comorian islands, and relied on the Comoros' willingness to make it easier to strengthen such ties. France hoped to continue a constructive dialogue aimed at a solution consistent with the wishes of the inhabitants of all the islands.

The Comoros affirmed that Mayotte was a Comorian island and that the four Comorian islands, including Mayotte, constituted a single entity with a homogeneous population sharing the same language and culture and practising the same religion. During an official visit to France from 4 to 15 October, the President of the Comoros had been assured by the French President that France wished to end the dispute quickly. That position had been reiterated at a Conference of Heads of State of France and Africa (Paris, 4-6 November), when the French President had recalled that as a Deputy he had stood in 1974 and 1975 for the independence of the Comoros in unity. If France did not act speedily to find a solution, the Comoros' future would be jeopardized and tension in the Indian Ocean aggravated.

Australia said its abstention in the vote should not be interpreted as compromising its long-standing view that colonial Territories should be brought to independence on the basis of unity and territorial integrity.

The Ivory Coast said its positive vote could be interpreted only as encouraging negotiations to eliminate any cloud hovering over Franco-Comorian relations.

During the debate, most speakers welcomed the negotiations between France and the Comoros concerning Mayotte. The necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago and of respecting prior commitments was reaffirmed by Botswana, Cuba, Gabon, Morocco, Senegal, Singapore and Zambia.

Gabon, Chairman of the OAU Committee on Mayotte, said that, since its creation, the Committee had undertaken unceasing efforts and innumerable mediation activities between the parties; its members had no doubt that a just and satisfactory solution could soon be achieved. Senegal, also a Committee member, said the strengthening of co-operation in all fields between France and the Comoros was proof of their desire to overcome the technical difficulties they faced; the United Nations should do more to contribute to the process they had started with a view to finding a solution.

Botswana asked why France, which had been able to decolonize its vast colonies in Africa without losing much face, should seem to want to hang on to one island and run the risk of damaging its image in Africa. In Morocco's opinion, France could only increase its standing in the eyes of Africa and of the Comorian people if it responded positively to the Comoros' legitimate claims. Zambia said the dismemberment of the Comoros, if tolerated by the Assembly, would constitute a dangerous precedent, with grave implications for many small and weak countries. Singapore, speaking on behalf of the countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, expressed a similar view.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration.

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161 (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291 (XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979 and 35/4:3 of 28 November 1980, in which It, inter alia, affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros, Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli.

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements signed on 15 June 1973 between the Comoros and France concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Taking note of the talks opened between the Government of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros and the Government of the French Republic,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the decisions of the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference concerning this question,

1. Reaffirms the sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte;

2. Invites the Government of France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the referendum on the self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago of 22 December 1974 concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros;

3. Also invites the Government of France to resume and actively pursue the negotiations with the Government of the

Comoros with a view to ensuring the effective return of the island of Mayotte to the Comoros as soon as possible;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to follow developments concerning this question, in conjunction with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte".

Against: France.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Mauritania, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

Denying these charges in a letter of 11 August,<sup>(5)</sup> the Sudan described them as an attempt to cover up Libyan designs of aggression and intervention in the internal affairs of other States; it reiterated a suggestion that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya accept impartial inspection to ascertain the presence of foreign troops in the two countries, and declared that co-operation between Egypt and the Sudan should not be construed as a threat against any State.

On 13 October,<sup>(3)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted to the Council President a letter from the People's Committee of the People's Bureau for Foreign Liaison, charging that the Sudan had escalated the mobilization of Sudanese and Egyptian troops on their borders with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and had established an airlift between Egypt and the Sudan to transport troops and equipment to the border area, with the aim of covering up foreign intervention in support of the insurgency against Chad (p. 223).

Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Sudan

In several communications during 1981, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya charged Egypt and the Sudan with harbouring hostile plans against it, which the two countries denied.

By a letter of 14 April,<sup>(1)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter to the Arab kings and heads of State from its own head of State and Leader of the First of September Revolution, charging that the President of the Sudan, in a statement published by the International Herald Tribune of Paris, had offered to assist anyone willing to kill the Libyan leader. The Sudan denied the charges by a letter of 23 April.<sup>(4)</sup>

On 31 July,<sup>(2)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted to the President of the Security Council a telegram of 30 July from the Secretary of the People's Committee of the Libyan People's Bureau for Foreign Liaison, stating that repeated hostile statements by the Presidents of Egypt and the Sudan, and the stationing of 90,000 Egyptian troops in the Sudan near the Libyan border, made it evident that a plan for military aggression by the two countries against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was being hatched in co-ordination with Israel and the United States.

Status of Malagasy islands in the Indian Ocean

In response to a 1980 General Assembly request for follow-up and report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General addressed communications to the Governments of France and Madagascar on 2 April 1981, inviting them to inform him of any developments since December 1980 on the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India.

Reporting on 25 November 1981 <sup>(1)</sup> on the information supplied in response to his request, the Secretary-General said Madagascar had informed him that the question had been discussed in June by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, which decided to keep the matter under consideration. France had informed him that it had no information to provide. The Secretary-General reported that the Presidents of the two countries had met in Paris on 30 September, and if either party transmitted additional information he would reproduce it for the Assembly.

By a decision of 16 December,<sup>(3)</sup> adopted without vote on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the Assembly decided to include the question in the provisional agenda of its 1982 session. The decision was approved by the Committee in similar fashion on 2 December on an oral proposal by its Chairman, who told the Committee that Madagascar, following consultations with interested delegations, had requested deferral of the item.

Question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 16 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India".

Armed attack against Seychelles

On 25 November 1981, an armed group landed in a civil aircraft at Seychelles International Airport on the main island of Mahé, fought at the airport with the Seychelles People's Defence Force and hijacked another aircraft to the South African port of Durban. Seychelles charged that South Africa had been involved in the incident and requested a Security Council meeting. The Council, by a resolution unanimously adopted on 15 December,<sup>(7)</sup> condemned the attack and established a commission of inquiry to investigate the incident.

COMMUNICATIONS. On 26 November,<sup>(2)</sup> Seychelles transmitted a telegram of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating that a group of mercenaries, presumably of South African origin, had attacked Seychelles International Airport on 25 November and taken its personnel hostage after landing on board a scheduled flight of Royal Air Swazi. The Seychelles People's Defence Force had brought the situation under control, freed most of the hostages and subjugated several invaders; others had fled, hijacking an Air India aircraft and diverting it to Durban with all passengers on board.

By a letter of 1 December,<sup>(3)</sup> Seychelles transmitted to the Secretary-General a note from its Foreign Ministry announcing strict security measures as a result of the attack and other recent airspace violations, and declaring that aircraft committing further violations would be shot down without warning. On 8 December, Seychelles requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council on the incident.<sup>(4)</sup>

Also on 8 December, Kenya transmitted a government statement rejecting allegations made by one of the captured mercenaries that it was involved in the attempted coup.<sup>(1)</sup>

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION. By a resolution of 15 December,<sup>(7)</sup> prepared during consultations among its members and adopted unanimously, the Security Council affirmed that the territorial integrity and political independence of Seychelles must be respected and condemned the mercenary aggression against Seychelles and the subsequent hijacking. It decided to send a commission of three of its members to investigate the origin, background and financing of that aggression, as well as to assess and evaluate economic damages, and to report to the Council with recommendations not later than 31 January 1982. The members were to be appointed after consultations between the Council's President and members and Seychelles.

Before this action, the Council invited Botswana and Seychelles, at their request, to participate without vote in the discussion, which took place at its meeting of 15 December.

Giving its account of the attack, Seychelles said that Royal Air Swazi, on whose flight the 44 foreign mercenaries had arrived, had confirmed that they had boarded the aircraft after arriving at Matsapha Airport in Swaziland by coach from South Africa, posing as members of a sports club. On their arrival at the Seychelles airport, security forces had been alerted after a sub-machine-gun was found in their luggage. The mercenaries had then taken control of the airport and of the 70 persons present. In the subsequent fighting, one mercenary had been killed and six captured, and damage estimated at $30 million had been caused. Only five of the mercenaries escaping to Durban had been charged by South Africa with kidnapping and released on trivial bail, while the others had been set free without being charged, despite Seychelles' request that they be returned to Seychelles to stand trial before an international tribunal appointed by the United Nations.

The incident was condemned or deplored by most Council members, including China, France, the German Democratic Republic, Ireland, Japan, the Niger, Tunisia, Uganda, the USSR and the United Kingdom. The dispatch of a commission of inquiry—which had been requested by Seychelles—was specifically endorsed by the majority of speakers, including Botswana, France, the German Democratic Republic, Ireland, Japan, the Niger, the USSR and the United Kingdom. Japan recalled that it had repeatedly stressed the need to strengthen the fact-finding capacity of United Nations organs, including the Security Council.

The United States, though joining the consensus on the resolution, said the Council should reflect on three broader issues: whether the intervention was a purely internal affair; whether the Council was prejudging the investigation by assuming that another State was involved; and whether a Government which had survived an attempted coup—and even one which had not—could always legitimately request a United Nations investigation and perhaps redress.

In the Niger's view, the incident was an armed attempt to overthrow an established Government, a violation of the territorial integrity of a sovereign State and an attempt to destabilize it. Botswana, Tunisia and Uganda expressed similar views. China said the invasion posed a grave threat to the sovereignty and security of an independent State. Ireland regarded the events not simply as an attempted coup d'état, but as a major attack from outside on a small State particularly vulnerable to such attack. Spain stated that the use of international banditry and mercenaries endangered world peace and security.

Botswana, speaking for the African Group, felt that South Africa's action and its attitude towards the mercenaries cast serious doubts and suspicion on its protestations of innocence. Uganda considered that the evidence of South Africa's involvement, widely reported by many independent sources, could not be ignored. The German Democratic Republic said it was typical that the mercenaries who had committed the attack were set free by South Africa. Mexico said that, according to the initial evidence, the aggression against Seychelles was part of a long chain of attacks from South Africa against neighbouring States.

Tunisia believed that, after having studied the inquiry commission's report, the Council would have to take measures required by the gravity of such acts. The USSR expressed its conviction that the Council, on receiving the report, would act to defend the sovereignty of Seychelles and to prevent acts of international terrorism carried out by mercenaries against the independence of developing States.

The United Kingdom announced that it had agreed to implement a previous agreement on aid to Seychelles and would view sympathetically any request for assistance in repairing the damage done to the airport.

The Council President, by a note of 24 December,<sup>(*)</sup> reported that agreement had been reached in consultations with the Council members and Seychelles that the commission of inquiry would be composed of Ireland, Japan and Panama.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In its resolution of 17 December entitled "Acts of aggression by the apartheid régime against Angola and other independent African States",<sup>(6)</sup> the General Assembly condemned unprovoked acts of aggression by South Africa against Angola, Seychelles and other African States. The November invasion of Seychelles was mentioned, together with the January raid against Mozambique and the July invasion of Angola (p. 221), in a preambular paragraph condemning South African aggression.

In explanation of vote on this resolution, Australia, Ireland and the Netherlands, which voted in favour, said they wished to await the report of the Security Council's commission of inquiry in regard to Seychelles. New Zealand, though also supporting the text, believed that no country should be condemned before the evidence established the facts beyond reasonable doubt; it added that in the case of the Seychelles events, the circumstances were not clear. Canada also expressed reservations regarding the charge against South Africa in regard to Seychelles.

Responding to these remarks, Seychelles said it would be surprising if South Africa had not known about the invasion, given the number of white mercenaries involved with ties to its security services.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the letter dated 8 December 1981 from the Charge d'affaires of the Permanent Mission of the Republic of Seychelles to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the Republic of Seychelles,

Bearing in mind that all Member States must refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

1. Affirms that the territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Seychelles must be respected;

6. Decides to remain seized of the question.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

In 1981, co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) continued in a number of areas, and the General Assembly called for a strengthening of co-operative activities between the two organizations.

In a report to the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General reviewed developments in five areas: a meeting at Geneva from 13 to 16 April between representatives of the OAU General Secretariat and the secretariats of the United Nations system; consultations and exchange of information; co-operation with regard to the situation in southern Africa; co-operation on economic and social development; and co-operation on information and publicity. The report also gave highlights of assistance rendered to African countries by the United Nations system.

The report noted that the Secretary-General had addressed the eighteenth OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government, held from 15 to 26 June at Nairobi, Kenya, where he also had held talks on matters of common concern with the OAU Chairman and other African leaders.

The report summarized the conclusions reached at the Geneva meeting of secretariat officials in April, which was attended by representatives of 37 United Nations organizations and units.

In regard to public information, the participants agreed on a regular exchange of programme material between an OAU radio service to be established and the United Nations radio service and other United Nations offices producing radio programmes. They further agreed that OAU should make available to the United Nations and the specialized agencies as soon as possible information on its activities and all press releases issued by it, invite heads of missions and delegations and representatives of agencies to its press conferences, and welcome the publication of articles on questions of interest to Africa in journals published by the United Nations and other organizations.

Concerning research relating to development and science and technology, the meeting stressed the importance of facilitating OAU access to the results of such research conducted by the United Nations system, and said it would be useful to exchange visits and agree on lines of research. African research programmes and centres needed to be strengthened through bilateral and multilateral assistance, with United Nations help.

With regard to the training of personnel, it was agreed that the United Nations system should continue to orient its programmes to the needs of African countries and that it would be useful for the OAU secretariat to draw up training priorities. OAU also requested international organizations to consider helping to train the personnel of national liberation movements in various fields, according to their needs.

Other topics discussed at the meeting were the employment of Africans in United Nations organizations (p. 1319), refugees and assistance to liberation movements.

Instances mentioned in the Secretary-General's report of co-operation between the United Nations and OAU in regard to southern Africa included: collaboration by the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia in implementing projects of the OAU Bureau for Placement and Education of African Refugees; OAU participation in sectoral workshops for development of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia (p. 1174); OAU co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in organizing meetings with national liberation movements on plans for assisting their humanitarian and developments needs (p. 1098); a meeting organized by the International Labour Organisation (Livingstone, Zambia, 4-8 May) 'to help plan a joint programme of action against apartheid, in co-operation with OAU and the Special Committee against Apartheid; and a February visit by an OAU committee to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), to discuss possible assistance to front-line States in southern Africa.

In the field of economic and social development, the report stated that the Information Service of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and the OAU Bureau for refugees had jointly disseminated information on the 1981 International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (p. 1039). The ECA Information Service had also contributed towards the establishment of the Pan-African News Agency, participating in preparatory meetings. An ECA/OAU committee on modalities for implementing the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa (p. 611) had begun to meet.

OAU, ECA and UNIDO had co-sponsored the Sixth Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 23-25 November) (p. 621). UNIDO had convened a working group (Vienna, March 1981) at which it discussed with ECA and OAU representatives the outline of a joint programme to assist in implementing the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990). As part of UNDP co-operation with OAU, projects had been approved relating to the social implications of the Lagos Plan of Action (UNDP contribution, $411,266) and strengthening of OAU/UNDP co-operation (UNDP contribution, $47,500).

The 54 resolutions and a declaration adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers at its thirty-seventh ordinary session (Nairobi, 15-26 June) and the two resolutions and two decisions adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government at its eighteenth ordinary session (Nairobi, 24-27 June) were transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter of 18 September from Algeria.<sup>(1)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. The OAU Chairman for 1981/1982, Daniel T. arap Moi, President of Kenya, addressed the General Assembly on 24 September 1981, discussing political and economic questions of concern to Africa. He saw no alternative to taking whatever steps were necessary to bring independence to Namibia, declared that there could be no compromise with apartheid and demanded the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African forces from Angola. He asked Ethiopia and Somalia to apply the fundamental OAU principles of respect for boundaries and non-interference in internal affairs. He requested additional international assistance to alleviate Africa's refugee problems and said Africans recognized the need to deal with the causes of those problems. He called for new development strategies based on collective self-reliance and Africa's immense resources, since past strategies, dependent on foreign aid and export of primary commodities, had failed. He stressed Africa's needs in regard to food, industrial development, and transport and communications.

By a resolution of 9 December,<sup>(3)</sup> sponsored by 50 African States and adopted without vote, the General Assembly approved the decisions, recommendations, proposals and arrangements contained in the conclusions of the Geneva meeting of secretariat officials of OAU and the United Nations system, and called on United Nations organizations and bodies to consider those recommendations and proposals with the object of enhancing co-operation with OAU. The Assembly requested that the next such meeting be arranged at Rome, Italy, in April 1982. It asked that adequate provision be made for technical assistance to the OAU secretariat and that measures be taken to strengthen political, economic, cultural and administrative co-operation with OAU. It called on United Nations bodies to continue to associate OAU closely with all their work concerning Africa and urged United Nations organizations to expand their co-operation with OAU and, through it, their assistance to national liberation movements.

In other provisions the Assembly urged support for economic assistance programmes in Africa (p. 497), recognized the importance of co-operative work for the social and economic development of Africa (p. 611) and called for increased aid to refugees in Africa (p. 1040) and equitable representation of Africans in secretariats of the United Nations system (p. 1319).

Explaining its position on the resolution, the United States commended OAU efforts to seek regional solutions to regional problems but voiced reservations with regard to references to the Lagos Plan of Action, regarded it as totally inappropriate to channel funds of the United Nations system through liberation movements, and objected to the use of the phrase "acts of aggression" in reference to South Africa's actions against front-line States, on the ground that the Assembly could not override the Security Council's discretion. Sierra Leone, on the other hand, stated that the co-operation of the specialized agencies with the liberation movements had always been of a humanitarian character; also, the definition of aggression by the Security Council, although left to the Council's discretion, should not be capricious.

The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom reaffirmed their view that the Assembly should not in principle approve decisions taken in forums other than those of the United Nations. France expressed concern that it would be difficult to control the financial implications of the recommendations of the Geneva meeting.

Speaking in the debate, Botswana, as Chairman of the African Group, declared that OAU was determined to make its co-operation with the United Nations work.

The United Kingdom, on behalf of the European Community members, supported United Nations efforts to reinforce and intensify assistance to OAU and promised that the Community would continue to work closely with all African countries in promoting economic and social development. Endorsing these views, Belgium supported any regional effort to help Africa solve its problems.

The USSR expressed its conviction that continuing and growing co-operation between the United Nations and OAU was in keeping with the interests of the struggle to eliminate the vestiges of colonialism, racism and apartheid and the task of consolidating peace and international security. The German Democratic Republic voiced appreciation for OAU efforts to strengthen co-operation among African States and solve the continent's problems.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and the practical measures taken for their implementation, in particular resolution 35/117 of 10 December 1980,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-seventh ordinary session and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization at its eighteenth ordinary session, which were held at Nairobi from 15 to 27 June 1981,

Considering the important statement made by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity before the General Assembly on 24 September 1981, particularly on matters of concern to the two organizations,

Noting with satisfaction the continued co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in areas of common interest,

Deeply conscious of the special needs of the newly independent African States, particularly with regard to the consolidation of their national independence, their endeavours towards social and economic betterment and the adverse impact on their economies of the current international economic situation,

Gravely concerned about the adverse effect on African economies of the current international economic situation,

Recalling in this connection the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its second extraordinary session, held at Lagos on 28 and 29 April 1980,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the Organization of African Unity and all specialized organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in realizing the goals and objectives set forth in the Lagos Plan of Action,

Convinced that the attendance at the International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva on 9 and 10 April 1981, bears evidence to the fact that the Conference drew international public attention to the grave situation and massive needs of African refugees,

Gravely concerned also at the need for special economic and emergency assistance programmes for a number of African States which face serious economic problems, in particular problems of displaced persons, resulting from natural or other disasters, to enable them to pursue effective economic development,

Gravely concerned further at the deteriorating situation in southern Africa arising from the continued domination of the peoples of the area by the minority racist régime of South Africa and conscious of the need to provide increased assistance to the peoples of the region and to their liberation movements in their struggle against colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Conscious of its responsibilities to provide economic, material and humanitarian assistance to independent States in southern Africa to help them to cope with the situation caused by the acts of aggression committed against their territories by the apartheid régime of South Africa.

Recognizing the importance of taking effective steps to give the widest possible dissemination of information relating to the liberation struggle of the peoples of southern Africa,

Recognizing the need for continuous liaison, exchange of information at the secretariat level and technical co-operation on such matters as training and research between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the meeting between representatives of the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, held at Geneva from 13 to 16 April 1981,

Noting with satisfaction the useful decisions and proposals which emerged from the Geneva meeting for enhancing co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Chapter VI

Asia

During 1981, situations in and around Afghanistan and Kampuchea, and the peace and security of South-East Asia, were the focus of debates and actions by the General Assembly.

On Western Asia, the Assembly, in November, again called for immediate foreign troop withdrawal from Afghanistan and requested the Secretary-General to continue efforts aimed at a political solution and guarantees for neighbouring States<sup>(3)</sup> with regard to Iran, the ongoing armed conflict with Iraq was the subject of letters from the two sides to the Secretary-General (p. 238), and in October Kuwait complained of an aerial attack by Iran (p. 239). The United Nations was informed that United States Embassy personnel held in Iran since 1979 had been released (p. 239).

Concerning South-East Asia, a General Assembly-sponsored International Conference on Kampuchea met in July<sup>(1)</sup> and adopted a Declaration, approved by the Assembly in October,<sup>(2)</sup> that included four elements for negotiating a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchea situation. The Assembly also discussed the question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia (p. 250). Other disputes in the area-pertaining to the Kampuchea-Thailand border (p. 249), an incident between the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand (p. 249) and relations between China and Viet Nam (p. 250)—were the subject of communications from the States concerned.

A report from the United Nations Command concerning implementation of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement was submitted by the United States (p. 253).

Western Asia

Afghanistan situation

As it had decided in 1980,<sup>(19)</sup> the General Assembly took up again in 1981 the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security. It called once more for immediate foreign troop withdrawal, reaffirmed the Afghan people's right to determine their own form of government, requested continued efforts by the Secretary-General for a political solution, called for the creation of conditions for voluntary return of Afghan refugees and appealed for aid for them.<sup>(20)</sup> During the year, the Secretary-General and his newly appointed Personal Representative on the situation held talks with the parties aimed at facilitating negotiations.

Afghanistan, the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and others opposed the Assembly resolution and called for a negotiated political solution guaranteeing non-intervention in the country's internal affairs; they stated that Afghanistan was being threatened by counter-revolutionaries based in neighbouring Pakistan who sought to overthrow the Government established following the revolution of April 1978. Many of those supporting the resolution called for withdrawal of USSR troops sent to Afghanistan in December 1979, and the establishment of conditions that would permit the Afghan people to exercise self-determination.

The Secretary-General received a number of communications on the Afghanistan situation during the year. Also, several delegations recorded reservations in regard to the credentials of that country's representatives to the General Assembly (p. 237).

During 1981, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR.) continued to assist Afghan refugees in Pakistan (p. 1033).

COMMUNICATIONS (JANUARY-MID-NOVEMBER). The Secretary-General received several communications on the Afghanistan situation from January to mid-November.

A 19 January letter from Afghanistan<sup>(1)</sup> transmitted a 17 January statement by its Government repeating earlier offers of amnesty and guarantees to Afghans who had left the country and were willing to return. A further letter from Afghanistan, dated 23 January,<sup>(2)</sup> transmitted a 17 January statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs stating that any decision on the Afghanistan situation taken at the Third Islamic Summit Conference (Taif, Saudi Arabia, 25-28 January) would be illegal and not binding on Afghanistan, whose membership in the Organization of the Islamic Conference had been unjustly suspended.

On 24 March, the European Council (the heads of State and Government and the ministers for foreign affairs of the European Community (EC), in a statement issued at Maastricht, Netherlands, and transmitted by the Netherlands on 26 March,<sup>(7)</sup> expressed concern that developments in Afghanistan remained a threat to regional and world-wide stability, and emphasized the need for a solution entailing foreign troop withdrawal and allowing the Afghan people to exercise self-determination.

An Afghan Government statement of 24 August, transmitted two days later,<sup>(3)</sup> set out its views on the problem of a political settlement, including the following: the main aim must be to secure complete and reliable cessation of armed and any other intervention in Afghan affairs and to create conditions that would make future interference impossible; international guarantees to that effect should be provided by the USSR, the United States and others; with cessation and guaranteed non-recurrence of armed intervention and any other interference in its domestic affairs, the causes of Afghanistan's appeal for a limited USSR military contingent to be sent to its territory would cease to exist; Afghanistan was willing to negotiate with Iran and Pakistan, either bilaterally or trilaterally.

In letters of 10 September<sup>(8)</sup> and 20 October,<sup>(9)</sup> Pakistan complained of incursions into its territory by Afghan forces. It said that attacks by two aircraft in Baluchistan on 5 September had caused civilian casualties and property damage; on 7 September, 40 Afghan soldiers had penetrated a mile beyond the border near Chaman; and on 4 October, the Pakistan border post of Domandai had been strafed by two Afghan aircraft. In a note verbale of 23 September,<sup>(4)</sup> Afghanistan denied that there had been any border violations by its armed forces and aircraft, and said the anti-Afghan allegations were particularly regrettable at a time when Afghanistan had launched a new initiative aimed at normalizing relations through direct negotiation.

By a letter of 12 November,<sup>(5)</sup> Afghanistan transmitted a statement by its Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating that a proposal by the European Council for an international conference to discuss the Afghanistan situation without the participation of the Afghan Government constituted interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs; the process of a political settlement should begin with direct negotiations between Afghanistan and its neighbours, Iran and Pakistan.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. In pursuance of a 1980 General Assembly request,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted on 6 November 1981 a report on the Afghanistan situation.<sup>(15)</sup>

In efforts to facilitate negotiations among the parties so as to achieve a political solution, the report stated, the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, appointed on 11 February, had twice travelled to Afghanistan and Pakistan (12-16 April, 4-9 August) and had met with President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq, Foreign Minister Agha Shahi and senior officials of Pakistan as well as with President Babrak Karmal, Prime Minister Sultan Ali Keshtmand, Foreign Minister Shah Mohammad Dost and senior officials of Afghanistan. In April, both Governments had emphasized the desire for a peaceful political solution and welcomed the visits as a positive step that might lead to negotiations. An understanding had been reached in August on the substantive issues to be negotiated, but not on their format. In the second half of September and early October, the Secretary-General and his representative had met separately on several occasions with the two Foreign Ministers, who had stressed their respective priorities on the issues to be negotiated and reaffirmed their desire to continue the diplomatic process. Meanwhile, during a visit of the Secretary-General to the USSR in May, the Soviet Government had stressed that it favoured a political settlement and supported continued efforts to resolve the problem peacefully.

The Secretary-General concluded that the approach adopted could facilitate the search for a fair political solution which would ensure that the Afghan people would be able to determine their own destiny, free from foreign intervention and interference. He would continue to pursue all possibilities for a peaceful settlement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 18 November, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the Afghanistan situation<sup>(20)</sup> by a recorded vote of 116 to 23, with 12 abstentions. The draft, sponsored by 45 States, was introduced by Pakistan.

By wording similar to resolutions it had adopted in January<sup>(16)</sup> and November<sup>(17)</sup> 1980, the Assembly called for immediate foreign troop withdrawal from Afghanistan, reiterated that preservation of that country's sovereignty and territorial integrity was essential for a peaceful solution, and reaffirmed the Afghan people's right to determine their own form of government free from outside intervention. It called for creation of conditions, for the voluntary return of Afghan refugees and renewed its appeal for aid to them. Expressing appreciation for the Secretary-General's efforts in the search for a solution, the Assembly requested him to continue efforts to promote a political solution and explore ways to guarantee non-use or threat of force against all neighbouring States on the basis of strict non-interference in each other's internal affairs. It asked him to report at the earliest appropriate opportunity.

Afghanistan, explaining its vote against this resolution, said that no resolution, conference or committee would help settle the situation around Afghanistan; only direct negotiations based on equality between its Government and those of Iran and Pakistan could do so. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which also voted against, said the resolution constituted propaganda for the United States imperialist camp.

Among the States which voted for the resolution, Albania said it would have liked stronger and more explicit condemnation of USSR aggression and special emphasis on support for the liberation struggle of the Afghan people. Iran considered that the solution was the task of the Afghan mujahideen (freedom fighters) and of neighbouring States directly affected. Peru would have preferred a more comprehensive, up-to-date text and a more conciliatory tone, in view of the complex negotiations required for an agreement. Vanuatu felt that the resolution failed to set forth the context and provocations from which the current situation had evolved; Vanuatu also dissociated itself from any artificial distinction between covert and overt interference in a State's affairs, since it considered that the introduction of covert operatives was comparable to the introduction of foreign troops.

In the debate preceding adoption of the resolution, and in an address during the Assembly's general debate, Pakistan stated that the true intent of the Kabul authorities' proposals was to secure legitimacy for their régime and attribute internal conflict to external instigation; Pakistan was ready to engage in an exchange of views through the Secretary-General and prepare the ground for trilateral talks with Iran and the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, and would co-operate in implementing any international guarantees linked to the complete withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan according to an established timetable.

Iran proposed a scheme leading to national elections for an Afghan Parliament that would write an Islamic constitution; it said details could be negotiated among the Afghan mujahideen, Pakistan, Iran and the USSR as soon as the USSR agreed to recognize Afghan rights and to withdraw its forces.

The majority of delegations speaking in the Assembly saw the situation in Afghanistan as a threat to regional stability, a danger to international peace and security and a threat to détente, and urged that a political settlement be based on the withdrawal of foreign troops and the exercise of the right to self-determination of the Afghan people. It was said that the resistance of the Afghan people in refusing to submit to an invasion belied the arguments put forward by the Afghan Government and its supporters.

A number of speakers criticized the USSR for maintaining troops in Afghanistan since December 1979 and called for their prompt withdrawal. In Canada's view, the Afghan régime was being maintained only through the pressure of an occupying USSR army, which had to contend with a resistance movement that controlled a large part of the countryside. The Federal Republic of Germany said that USSR support for the proposals of the Afghanistan régime served only to divert public opinion from the real issue—immediate withdrawal of Soviet troops. The United States said the Kabul régime was being propped up by 85,000 USSR troops who had used internationally prohibited anti-personnel weapons and, according to refugee reports, lethal and incapacitating chemical weapons in Afghanistan.

According to China, the USSR continued to ignore world opinion by stepping up its war of aggression against Afghanistan, including construction of permanent fortifications and a massacre of inhabitants by every means short of nuclear weapons.

France, Nepal, Norway, Portugal, Tunisia and Zaire were among those which said they were not prepared to accept any justification for military intervention, nor recognize a situation so created. The Comoros stated that if the USSR could invade an independent country with impunity at the invitation of a small minority for the benefit of exiled leaders and for the USSR's advantage, no country could be confident of its independence. A similar position was expressed by Thailand. Tunisia cautioned that, if one precedent was accepted, it might degenerate into a practice particularly threatening to small countries. Saudi Arabia said its condemnation of the USSR military occupation was not on ideological grounds; it condemned any invasion of one country by another.

In New Zealand's view, the USSR invasion of Afghanistan and establishment of a puppet régime was an alarming example of a powerful nation using force to impose its will on a defenceless neighbour. Sweden said that to persist in efforts to subjugate a neighbouring nation by brute force betrayed an arrogance and lack of political wisdom which caused great concern all over the world. Austria and Turkey were concerned that the developments in Afghanistan had dealt a serious blow to détente.

Albania stated that, by its occupation of Afghanistan, the USSR had revealed itself as an imperialist Power that was increasing its threat to the independence of sovereign States. Democratic Kampuchea said that, in both Afghanistan and Kampuchea, an independent non-aligned State had fallen victim to an expansionist policy which was part of a global strategy for regional and world domination. Haiti, stressing the need to end the suffering of the Afghan people, called on all concerned to rise above selfish schemes and political tactics.

Somalia noted that both the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 9-13 February) and the Organization of the Islamic Conference had called for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Afghanistan. Sri Lanka urged the USSR to respond to such calls with at least a gesture of withdrawal. The Sudan said that the support given to the third world by the USSR did not justify the occupation or denial of the inalienable rights of the Afghan people. In Suriname's view, the continued presence of foreign troops in Afghanistan violated the principle of non-intervention and the right of self-determination. Yugoslavia voiced increasing concern at endeavours to legalize military intervention and other uses of force, and to justify them through theories based on a State's geographical position, social system or zone of security or interest.

Australia pointed out that, at the meeting of Commonwealth heads of Government (Melbourne, Australia, 30 September-7 October), despite differing perceptions of developments leading to the current situation, participants had been united in calling urgently for a political settlement based on foreign troop withdrawal, respect for Afghanistan's sovereignty and non-aligned status, strict observance of noninterference principles and the right of Afghans to return home safely, and a negotiated settlement to allow them to determine their own future.

Bangladesh said peace could be secured by the withdrawal of all foreign troops, leaving the people free to determine their destiny without external intervention in any form. Sierra Leone called for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops and also called on all concerned to refrain from interfering in the country's affairs.

Kuwait said that, in co-operation with its neighbours, it wished to keep the Persian Gulf area free from international rivalry and believed that the military involvement in Afghanistan endangered the area's peace and security. A similar point was made by Oman, which felt that the main shipping lanes in the Indian Ocean were threatened by the foreign presence in the area. Malaysia expressed concern that the Soviet action had led to an intensified arms race in the Indian Ocean area.

Speaking for the EC members, the United Kingdom recalled that the European Council, on 30 June, had put forward a plan for a two-stage conference on Afghanistan at which the question of Afghan representation would be postponed until a climate more conducive to agreement existed, while guaranteeing the representation and participation of the Afghan people in the conference's decisions. Thailand announced that the Association of South-East Asian Nations favoured this proposal for an international conference—a proposition to which Japan, Qatar and Spain also subscribed. Egypt stated that the idea of a conference was worthy of serious consideration and added that its support for the Afghan people derived from obligations to them based on a common Islamic bond and mutual membership of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries. For Senegal, the existence of that Movement was threatened by the Afghanistan situation.

Singapore said that, since the political solution envisaged by Afghanistan and the USSR included recognition by Afghanistan's neighbours of the Babrak Karmal régime and acceptance of the results of the USSR armed intervention, Iran and Pakistan were right to reject such a proposal.

Widespread support was voiced for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his representative in discussions with those concerned and the hope was expressed that such dialogue would continue. Italy and Yugoslavia were concerned, however, about the limited progress achieved through these indirect contacts.

Afghanistan declared that the Assembly's debate on the so-called question of Afghanistan was flagrant interference in its internal affairs and would only delay a political settlement. Statements that the situation posed a threat to regional security and that there was some kind of national resistance in Afghanistan were a distortion by hegemonists who were trying to build up military forces in the area. The Afghan revolution of 1978 was being resisted by counter-revolutionary terrorist groups based in Pakistan and trained by instructors from the United States, the United Kingdom, China, Egypt and Pakistan. Despite hostile activities carried out from neighbouring countries, Afghanistan was ready to begin talks with Iran and Pakistan for a political settlement based on the complete and reliable cessation of armed and any other intervention in its affairs and the creation of conditions that would make future intervention impossible.

Those speaking in support of Afghanistan's position—the socialist States of Eastern Europe, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia and Viet Nam—declared that the Assembly's 1980 resolution had not only failed to bring a political settlement closer, but had rendered such a settlement between Afghanistan and its neighbours more difficult. They emphasized the need to ensure complete cessation of armed or any other form of interference in that country's internal affairs before a political solution could be brought about. They endorsed the proposals for a political settlement made by Afghanistan in May 1980<sup>(21)</sup> and August 1981 (p. 232).

The USSR called for a political settlement which would create conditions for the withdrawal of Soviet troops; the sooner agreements that ruled out interference in Afghan affairs were reached and implemented, the earlier the withdrawal of Soviet troops would be initiated and completed. Also urging negotiations to create the conditions for withdrawal, the German Democratic Republic said it would be turning the problem upside-down to make the start of negotiations contingent on withdrawal. Poland stressed the importance of reliable international guarantees that interference in Afghan affairs would cease and not recur. USSR troops in Afghanistan were not a threat to any third country, Viet Nam stated; their presence was purely to help Afghanistan defend itself in the face of an undeclared war.

Hungary termed the situation around Afghanistan a vicious circle, since arms supplied to an anti-Government rebellion would not lead that Government to call for the withdrawal of Soviet troops. The Byelorussian SSR protested what it called anti-Afghan hysteria aimed at turning back the course of history to the time prior to the 1978 revolution. The Ukrainian SSR charged that support for Afghan counter-revolutionaries had become official United States policy as part of a broader plan to destabilize South-West Asia.

Bulgaria said that despite a subversive political campaign against an independent Afghanistan, the country was successfully remedying complex political and socio-economic problems. Czechoslovakia and Mongolia also pointed to the social and economic progress achieved by the Afghan people.

Democratic Yemen stated that the problem was not in Afghanistan but around it; once its neighbour reconciled itself to the Afghan revolution and ceased to interfere in its internal affairs, there would be no cause for tension. The Lao People's Democratic Republic appealed to the non-aligned countries not to encourage, directly or indirectly, or play into the hands of those organizing interference in the internal affairs of one of their own members.

Cuba regarded Afghanistan's proposals as realistic and said they should lead to negotiations with its neighbours at which the Secretary-General or his representative would be present.

India cautioned that adoption of a resolution unacceptable to those directly involved would be counter-productive; it urged restraint by them as well as by outside Powers in order to avoid further deterioration or exploitation of the situation.

Pakistan urged a continuation of international assistance to help it care for Afghan refugees who it said were continuing to flow into the country. It stated that nearly 2.5 million Afghans had taken shelter in Pakistan, mainly since the 1979 military intervention in their homeland. Despite international assistance, Pakistan had had to bear half the cost of their upkeep; in 1981 it would spend $200 million. Iran put the total number of persons who had fled to Iran and Pakistan at close to 4 million.

A number of States endorsed the call for international assistance in what Canada described as the worst refugee situation in the world. Malaysia said the refugee problem was an international one and must be shared by the international community. Among those which indicated that they were co-operating in this effort were Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Norway and the United Kingdom (speaking for the EC members). Support for refugee assistance, including work done by UNHCR, was also voiced by Australia, China, Portugal, Singapore, Somalia and Sweden. Many of these speakers and others, including Bangladesh and New Zealand, also urged that conditions be created to enable the refugees to return home voluntarily and in safety.

Afghanistan said the refugee figures referred to in the debate were highly inflated by including seasonal migrations of nomads, migrant workers in Iran and counter-revolutionaries unlikely to return. The Afghan Government had made it clear on various occasions that bona fide refugees were welcome to return under a general amnesty, with guaranteed safety for their resettlement; thousands had returned recently.

Endorsing this view, the USSR said a change in a State's social and economic system often involved an exodus of people who did not accept the new régime, as shown by the history of England, France, Germany, Russia and many others.

FURTHER COMMUNICATIONS. During late November and throughout December, the Secretary-General received a number of additional communications relating to the Afghanistan situation.

Letters from Pakistan of 23 November,<sup>(10)</sup> 27 November,<sup>(11)</sup> 3 December<sup>(12)</sup> and 22 December<sup>(13)</sup> alleged further aerial attacks on Pakistani territory between 5 October and 18 December. Detailing eight incidents, Pakistan charged that Afghan aircraft, by strafing, bombing, firing flares and rockets and dropping mines, had caused military and civilian casualties as well as property damage inside Pakistan. In one incident, on 2 December, two helicopters were said to have strafed Amucha village and two buses, killing five persons.

Afghanistan, by a note verbale of 25 November,<sup>(6)</sup> rejected proposals contained in a "Plan on Afghanistan" released by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Iran on 10 November; it said the authors of the document were trying to impose on the Afghan people a government of foreign reactionary clergy and to subjugate them to foreign occupation by a so-called Islamic peace-keeping force of Iranian and Pakistani troops.

By a letter of 29 December<sup>(14)</sup> in reply to Afghanistan's statement of 12 November (p. 233), Pakistan said that allegations that it was allowing its territory to be used as a base of operations for the Afghan national resistance movement were false and aimed at misleading world opinion about the true nature of the resistance of the Afghan people.

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security",

Recalling its resolutions ES-6/2 of 14 January 1980 and 35/37 of 20 November 1980, adopted at the sixth emergency special session and the thirty-fifth session respectively,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the obligation of all States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of any State,

Reaffirming further the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own form of government and to choose their own economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever,

Gravely concerned at the continuing foreign armed intervention in Afghanistan, in contravention of the above principles, and its serious implications for international peace and security,

Noting the increasing concern of the international community over the continued and serious sufferings of the Afghan people and over the magnitude of social and economic problems posed to Pakistan and Iran by the presence on their soil of millions of Afghan refugees, and the continuing increase in their numbers,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need for a political solution of the grave situation in respect of Afghanistan,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, particularly of the appointment of his Personal Representative,

Recognizing the importance of the initiatives of the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the efforts of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries for a political solution of the situation in respect of Afghanistan,

1. Reiterates that the preservation of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and non-aligned character of Afghanistan is essential for a peaceful solution of the problem;

2. Reaffirms the right of the Afghan people to determine their own form of government and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever;

3. Calls for the immediate withdrawal of the foreign troops from Afghanistan;

4. Calls upon all parties concerned to work for the urgent achievement of a political solution, in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, and the creation of the necessary conditions which would enable the Afghan refugees to return voluntarily to their homes in safety and honour:

5. Renews its appeal to all States and national and international organizations to continue to extend humanitarian relief assistance, with a view to alleviating the hardship of the Afghan refugees, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

6. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General in the search for a solution to the problem and requests him to continue those efforts with a view to promoting a political solution, in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, and the exploration of securing appropriate guarantees for non-use of force, or threat of use of force, against the political independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and security of all neighbouring States, on the basis of mutual guarantees and strict non-interference in each other's internal affairs and with full regard for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States and the Security Council concurrently informed of the progress towards the implementation of the present resolution and to submit to Member States a report on the situation at the earliest appropriate opportunity;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

Credentials of Afghanistan

In September and December 1981, while the General Assembly was examining the credentials submitted by Member States for their representatives to the eighth emergency special session and the thirty-sixth regular session, respectively (p. 351), several delegations commented on the credentials of Afghanistan.

In the Credentials Committee in both September<sup>(1)</sup> and December,<sup>(2)</sup> the United States said the fact that it had not raised any objection to the Afghan credentials did not imply acceptance of that country's régime nor acquiescence in the installation of USSR-directed authorities as a result of the USSR military invasion and continuing military occupation of Afghanistan. Similar reservations were voiced in the Committee by China, Papua New Guinea and Singapore, and in the Assembly by Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Pakistan and the United Kingdom. Turkey told the Assembly that its position should be understood in the context of its support for United Nations resolutions calling for foreign troop withdrawal.

In the Committee, the USSR called this position unfounded, stating that the Afghanistan Government had been established as a result of a popular revolution; casting doubt on its legitimacy was tantamount to denying the right of peoples to self-determination and was interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign State.

Other aspects

Resolutions on the right of self-determination in Afghanistan were adopted in 1981 by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (p. 896). The Commission, on 6 March, reaffirmed its concern that the Afghan people continued to be denied their right to self-determination and called for a political settlement based on withdrawal of foreign troops, respect for Afghan independence and sovereignty, and non-intervention.<sup>(1)</sup> The Sub-Commission, on 9 September, expressed sympathy and support for Afghan refugees and called on the Commission to reaffirm the need for a political settlement.<sup>(2)</sup>

Questions concerning Iran

Iran and Iraq

The Secretary-General attempted in 1981 to promote a settlement of the continuing armed conflict between Iran and Iraq, which had broken out in September 1980.<sup>(10)</sup>

In his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization, dated 12 September (p. 6), the Secretary-General stated that he had offered his good offices to Iran and Iraq and had appointed Olof Palme, former Prime Minister of Sweden, as his Special Representative. Mr. Palme had discussed a comprehensive settlement involving a cease-fire and withdrawal of forces as well as procedures for peacefully resolving disputed issues. He had also discussed possible measures to enable the commercial ships of different nationalities immobi-lized by the conflict to leave the area. Although agreement on the overall issues had not been reached, the support for the mission shown by both parties had encouraged continued efforts.

From February to mid-December, the Secretary-General received several communications concerning this conflict.

To a letter of 18 February,<sup>(2)</sup> Iran annexed copies of notes dated 1 December 1980 and 14 January 1981 from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs to Iraq's Embassy in Teheran, rejecting what it referred to as Iraq's unilateral abrogation of the 1975 treaty on state frontiers and good-neighbourliness between the two countries and emphasizing that Iraq had consistently violated the treaty, which Iran considered still in effect, inviolable, permanent and conclusive.

In a letter of 10 March 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> Iraq responded that the continuous Iranian violations of the treaty had left Iraq with no treaty to implement; annexed to the letter were notes dated 6 December 1980 and 31 January 1981 by Iraq's Foreign Ministry to the Iranian Embassy in Baghdad, rejecting Iran's position as having no juridical value.

The Council of the League of Arab States, at an extraordinary session held at Baghdad on 11 June, called on both countries to respond to mediation efforts of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the United Nations, to stop the war and resolve their problems peacefully; the League's resolution was forwarded to the Security Council President by Yemen on 12 June.<sup>(9)</sup>

In a letter of 15 August,<sup>(5)</sup> Iraq's Foreign Minister quoted a statement by the leader of the Iranian Mujahideen Khalq organization, published on 3 August in the French newspaper Le Matin, which charged Iranian religious leaders with responsibility for the war against Iraq.

On 19 August, Iraq forwarded letters<sup>(6)</sup> from its Foreign Minister to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, charging that Iranian naval forces had seized a Danish vessel in the Strait of Hormuz and confiscated its cargo, destined for Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates, thereby violating international law and endangering peace and security and the interests of the Arab Gulf States.

A note by the Iraqi Foreign Ministry, annexed to a letter from Iraq dated 16 September,<sup>(7)</sup> cited several press reports of arms shipments from Israel to Iran since November 1980, including three flights from Tel Aviv to Teheran by an Argentine commercial transport aircraft said to have crashed on 18 July near Yerevan, Armenia, USSR. The Government of Argentina responded, in a letter of 21 August by its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Worship to the Iraqi Foreign Minister, that it had no connection with the private Argentine airline TAR that had operated the aircraft; the text of the letter was forwarded to the Secretary-General by Argentina on 9 October.<sup>(1)</sup>

By a note verbale of 16 December,<sup>(3)</sup> Iran forwarded a communiqué from its Foreign Ministry charging Iraq with air and rocket attacks between 9 and 11 December resulting in 50 civilian deaths and 225 injured, as well as torture and execution of Iranian civilians and war prisoners. A message from Iraq's Foreign Minister, forwarded on 17 December,<sup>(8)</sup> countercharged that Iraqi war prisoners had been murdered by Iran.

Iran and Kuwait

On 5 October 1981, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Kuwait in a letter to the Security Council President,<sup>(2)</sup> charged that, since the outbreak of hostilities between Iran and Iraq, the Iranian air force had attacked Kuwait's borders, positions and civilian installations several times, culminating in the bombing of a petroleum complex at Um Aleish on 1 October.

By a note verbale of 13 October,<sup>(1)</sup> Iran annexed a note of the previous day from its Foreign Minister, rejecting the accusations as attempts to overshadow recent defeats of Iraq's army and to mobilize the reactionary régimes of the region against Iran.

Letter and note verbale (nv): <sup>(1)</sup>Iran, 13 Oct., S/14725 (nv); <sup>(2)</sup>Kuwait, 5 Oct., S/14716.

Iran and the United States

In January 1981, agreement was reached between Iran and the United States to release a group of Americans from the United States Embassy at Teheran detained since November 1979.<sup>(5)</sup> This topic was the subject of two letters from the United States to the Secretary-General.

By a letter of 19 January,<sup>(1)</sup> the United States transmitted a message from its President informing the Secretary-General of the agreement to free the 52 Americans held hostage in Iran and adding that, with their release, the United States considered that Iran had complied fully with Security Council resolutions of 4 December<sup>(3)</sup> and 31 December 1979<sup>(4)</sup> and with the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 24 May 1980.<sup>(6)</sup>

By a letter of 3 March,<sup>(2)</sup> the United States transmitted a message from its Secretary of State saying that it did not consider that Iran had responded fully to the letter or spirit of other requirements of the resolutions and Judgment, including the return of the property of the United States Embassy and of its consulates in Iran, as ordered by the International Court.

On 6 April and 1 May the United States, in letters to the Court, made clear that, in consequence of commitments it had entered into with Iran at Algiers, Algeria, on 19 January, all currently pending proceedings before the Court relating to claims for reparation should be discontinued (p. 1202).

South-East Asia

Kampuchea situation

The situation in and around Kampuchea and the country's representation in the United Nations continued to occupy the attention of the Organization in 1981.

The International Conference on Kampuchea (New York, 13-17 July 1981)<sup>(51)</sup> met in accordance with a 1980 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(54)</sup> with a mandate to seek a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem. The Conference adopted a Declaration setting out elements for negotiation and a resolution<sup>(53)</sup> by which it established an Ad Hoc Committee to assist in seeking a settlement.

On 21 October, the Assembly approved the decisions of the Conference, reiterated that withdrawal of all foreign forces and the Kampuchean people's right to determine their own destiny were principal components of any resolution of the problem, and appealed for continued aid to Kampucheans.<sup>(56)</sup>

A Special Representative of the Secretary-General, M'Hamed Essaafi, visited South-East Asia in March/April to consult with Governments in the region.

Numerous communications were received concerning various aspects of the situation and related issues, including the alleged use of chemical weapons (p. 73), the situation on the Kampuchea-Thailand border (p. 249) and general aspects of peace and security in South-East Asia (p. 250). The credentials of representatives of Democratic Kampuchea were discussed in other communications, as well as in the Assembly (p. 247). The United Nations continued to organize emergency relief for Kampucheans (p. 494) and to assist refugees in neighbouring countries (p. 1033).

COMMUNICATIONS (JANUARY-SEPTEMBER). The Secretary-General received a number of communications on the situation between Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam.

Democratic Kampuchea's military, political and diplomatic activities were assessed by its Council of Ministers in a 7 January statement reviewing 1980, transmitted on 12 January 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> and a 19 May statement covering the dry season (October 1980-April 1981), transmitted on 1 June.<sup>(10)</sup> On both occasions, the Council cited favourable developments in what it called the struggle for national survival against the Vietnamese aggressors.

The military situation was described in two communications from Democratic Kampuchea annexing information from the Military High Command of its National Army and guerrillas. According to a map and explanatory note on the February situation, transmitted on 16 March,<sup>(6)</sup> there had been a perceptible expansion of the zone under Democratic Kampuchea's control; and in a 12 May communiqué on the military results of the dry season, transmitted on 3 June,<sup>(11)</sup> the High Command stated that 45,000 of the enemy had been killed or wounded.

Viet Nam was accused of looting and destroying ancient monuments at Angkor, in a 28 January statement by the Ministry of Culture and Education of Democratic Kampuchea, transmitted on 10 February.<sup>(5)</sup>

The Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 9-13 February) was the topic of two statements by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea. By the first, dated 21 January and transmitted on 28 January,<sup>(2)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea called for restoration of its seat in the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and requested that the Movement demand that Viet Nam withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. By the second, dated 2 February and transmitted two days later,<sup>(4)</sup> India's refusal to issue an entry visa to the delegation of Democratic Kampuchea was protested.

In a 25 June memorandum forwarded on 6 July,<sup>(12)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea's Foreign Ministry stated that the country would continue its struggle until Viet Nam withdrew its troops. This view was reiterated in a five-point programme for a great national union of Kampuchea against the Vietnamese Lê Duan clique, worked out at a meeting (28-30 June) of leaders of the Patriotic and Democratic Front of Great National Union of Kampuchea and government members, and transmitted by Democratic Kampuchea on 9 July;<sup>(14)</sup> the programme also called for United Nations-supervised elections for a national assembly after foreign troop withdrawal and freedom of action for the various anti-Vietnamese national forces, which would avoid confrontation and keep their political organizations provided there was no infringement of the programme. A further memorandum from the Foreign Ministry of Democratic Kampuchea, dated 30 June and transmitted on 7 July,<sup>(13)</sup> charged the Hanoi authorities with attempting to legalize their aggression in Kampuchea.

In a 1 February press conference at Bangkok, Thailand, excerpts from which were transmitted by China on 10 February,<sup>(40)</sup> the Premier of China stated that, after complete Vietnamese troop withdrawal from Kampuchea, China would be willing to join an international guarantee of non-aggression against Kampuchean territory.

The Foreign Ministers of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN)—Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand—issued an 18 June communiqué on the Kampuchean situation, excerpts of which were transmitted by the Philippines the following day;<sup>(31)</sup> the Ministers deplored the continued presence of Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea, reaffirmed commitment to General Assembly decisions and proposed a political settlement including United Nations peace-keeping forces, foreign troop withdrawal and the disarming of all Khmer factions.

On 6 July,<sup>(24)</sup> the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted a statement ascribed to its Foreign Minister together with those of Viet Nam and the People's Republic of Kampuchea, rejecting the ASEAN proposal and stating that Vietnamese troops were in Kampuchea by agreement with the People's Republic and because of threats posed by China in collusion with others. Similar views were also contained in a statement by the three Foreign Ministers issued at a conference held at Phnom Penh on 13 and 14 June (p. 251).

Elections on 1 May to the National Assembly of the People's Republic of Kampuchea were the subject of several communications.

On 25 March,<sup>(29)</sup> the Philippine Foreign Minister, as Chairman of the ASEAN Standing Committee, transmitted a statement by which the ASEAN members denounced the elections as an attempt by the Heng Samrin régime to legitimize itself and as contravening the 1980 General Assembly resolution calling for United Nations-supervised elections.<sup>(54)</sup> Expressing a similar view, Democratic Kampuchea, in a government statement of 29 March transmitted on 2 April,<sup>(7)</sup> challenged the validity of elections held while the country was under occupation by more than 300,000 Vietnamese.

The ASEAN viewpoint was rejected as gross intervention in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, in a 3 April statement attributed to the spokesman of its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, transmitted on 13 April<sup>(20)</sup> by the Lao People's Democratic Republic. Other communications concerning the elections and ascribed to organs of that régime were transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 29 May<sup>(21)</sup> and 29 June,<sup>(23)</sup> giving election results and the composition of leading organs of the People's Republic, and conveying an appeal by the first session of the National Assembly (Phnom Penh, 24-27 June) for Kampucheans to continue fighting and boost production. A 1 June letter from Viet Nam<sup>(33)</sup> transmitted a 20 May statement by the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea charging China with attempting to unite all types of reactionary Khmers and stating that the election results confirmed the will of the Kampuchean people.

On 9 September,<sup>(15)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a 6 August document of its Ministry of Social Affairs outlining activities at a national day of disabled persons held in Democratic Kampuchea on 30 July in connection with the 1981 International Year of Disabled Persons (p. 795).

CONFERENCE ON KAMPUCHEA. The International Conference on Kampuchea was the subject of several communications addressed to the Secretary-General between February 1981 and its convening in July.

Support for the holding of the Conference was voiced in statements by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea, transmitted by that country in letters of 3 February,<sup>(3)</sup> 30 April<sup>(8)</sup> and 26 May.<sup>(9)</sup> The Ministry also denounced a proposal for a regional conference between Indo-Chinese and ASEAN States, made at a conference of the Foreign Ministers of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Viet Nam and the People's Republic of Kampuchea (Ho Chi Minh City, Viet Nam, 27 and 28 January) (p. 250).

In a press statement on 10 April, issued at Manila, Philippines, following a meeting with the Secretary-General's Special Representative on the Kampuchea situation, the Foreign Minister of the Philippines, as Chairman of the ASEAN Standing Committee, said the Kampuchea conflict had to be resolved within the framework of a United Nations-sponsored conference and not the proposed regional conference; the statement was transmitted by the Philippines on 14 April.<sup>(30)</sup>

A number of countries indicated their opposition to the International Conference.

A spokesman for the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry pointed out, in a 10 April interview granted to the Viet Nam News Agency and forwarded on 13 April,<sup>(32)</sup> that it had been made clear to the Secretary-General's representative that Viet Nam regarded the 1980 General Assembly resolution on convening the Conference as a flagrant encroachment on the sovereignty of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and an imposition of views on the three Indo-Chinese countries. In a note verbale of 6 July,<sup>(34)</sup> Viet Nam reiterated this view and added that it would not participate in the Conference.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic stated that it would not participate in the Conference in two communications from its Vice-Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs: a 22 June note verbale<sup>(22)</sup> and an 11 July message conveyed two days later.<sup>(25)</sup> It said the Conference would harm the efforts of countries in the region to establish peace and co-operation through direct negotiations.

Several other States expressed opposition to the Conference, also on the ground that it constituted interference in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea. They stated their refusal to participate, and most announced support for the proposed regional conference. Notes verbales or letters to this effect were received from: Mongolia,<sup>(46)</sup> on 9 June; Czechoslovakia,<sup>(42)</sup> on 11 June; Poland,<sup>(47)</sup> on 12 June; Afghanistan,<sup>(38)</sup> the German Democratic Republic,<sup>(43)</sup> Hungary<sup>(44)</sup> and Seychelles,<sup>(48)</sup> on 15 June; the USSR<sup>(50)</sup> on 16 June; Bulgaria,<sup>(39)</sup> on 19 June; and the Congo,<sup>(41)</sup> on 10 July.

In a letter of 18 June,<sup>(45)</sup> India also stated that it would not participate since it felt that a conference based on a resolution rejected by several countries directly concerned might retard prospects of a meaningful dialogue and result in a hardening of attitudes; what was needed was a dialogue among the countries of the region.

Seventy-nine Member States participated in the International Conference on Kampuchea, held at United Nations Headquarters from 13 to 17 July; 14 States and the European Community (EC) attended as observers (for a list of participating and observer States, see APPENDIX III). Twenty-seven States informed the Secretariat that they would not participate.

A proposal by Singapore that three political groups be invited to participate without vote was approved with respect to the Khmer People's National Liberation Front and the National United Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Co-operative Cambodia. The Conference referred to its Bureau the question of the participation of the People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea.

Following a general debate in which 50 speakers (including the two invited political groups) took part, the Conference on 17 July adopted by consensus a Declaration and a resolution on Kampuchea. These texts, presented by a Working Group which met from 14 to 17 July, were included in the Conference's report to the General Assembly.<sup>(51)</sup>

By the Declaration, the Conference reaffirmed the right of all States to the inviolability of their sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity, and to determine their own destiny free from foreign interference, subversion and coercion. It expressed concern that the Kampuchea situation had resulted from the violation of those principles. It noted the serious international consequences that had arisen from the situation, in particular the escalation of tension in South-East Asia and major-Power involvement, and expressed its conviction that a political solution would be necessary for the long-term solution of the serious refugee problem.

The Conference identified the following as the principal components of a just and lasting solution: withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea; restoration and preservation of its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity; and a commitment by all States to non-interference in its internal affairs. It regretted that foreign armed intervention continued and that foreign forces had not been withdrawn, making it impossible for the Kampucheans to express their will in free elections.

With a view to reaching a comprehensive political settlement, it called for negotiations on: a cease-fire agreement by all parties and withdrawal of all foreign forces under supervision of a United Nations peace-keeping force/observer group; United Nations-supervised elections, with assurance that armed Kampuchean factions would not prevent or disrupt them and would respect the results; and maintenance of law and order. The Conference deemed it essential for Kampuchea to remain non-aligned and neutral, and for the five permanent Security Council members, all South-East Asian States and other States concerned to declare that they would: respect the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned and neutral status of Kampuchea; recognize its borders as inviolable; and refrain from interfering in its internal affairs, bringing it into any military alliance inconsistent with its neutral status, introducing foreign troops or military bases, and threatening its security.

The Conference expressed hope that, following peaceful resolution of the Kampuchean conflict, an intergovernmental committee would be established to consider an aid programme for Kampuchea's economic reconstruction and for the economic and social development of all States of the region. Noting the absence of Viet Nam and other States, the Conference urged them to attend future sessions and expressed hope that Viet Nam would participate in the negotiations.

By its resolution,<sup>(53)</sup> the Conference decided to establish an Ad Hoc Committee consisting of Japan, Malaysia, Nigeria, Senegal, Sri Lanka, the Sudan and Thailand, and authorized the Conference President, in consultation with Conference members, to include additional members in the Committee. The Committee was requested to assist the Conference in seeking a comprehensive political settlement and to undertake missions to that end, act as an advisory body to the Secretary-General and advise the Conference President as to when the Conference should be reconvened. The Conference also recommended that the General Assembly authorize it to reconvene at an appropriate time and request the Secretary-General to make a preliminary study of the future role of the United Nations.

Three communications addressed to the Secretary-General rejected the Declaration and resolution: a 20 July statement by the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry, transmitted by Viet Nam on 22 July,<sup>(35)</sup> said the decisions were illegal and had no validity; an 18 July statement by the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, forwarded by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 23 July,<sup>(26)</sup> condemned the resolution as ludicrous and considered it illegal, null and void—a view supported by the Lao People's Democratic Republic in a 21 July statement by its Foreign Ministry, transmitted on 28 July.<sup>(27)</sup> The three statements held China and the United States responsible for using the Conference to deceive world opinion about the Kampuchea situation.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. In a report to the General Assembly dated 12 October,<sup>(52)</sup> submitted pursuant to the Assembly's 1980 resolution,<sup>(55)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that he had undertaken extensive consultations and maintained close contact with government leaders and representatives of States most directly concerned with the Kampuchea situation and with other interested parties, in the discharge of his responsibility relating to peace and security and in the exercise of his good offices. Also, between 23 March and 11 April, his Special Representative, M'Hamed Essaafi, had undertaken a mission to South-East Asia to consult with Governments.

The Secretary-General concluded that a fundamental solution could be found only with the achievement of a just, lasting and comprehensive settlement of the underlying political and military issues. Regrettably, it had not been possible to bridge the gap between the strongly held views of the parties and States concerned. Reiterating his determination to continue to search for a peaceful solution, he stated that such a solution must be based on fundamental principles of the Charter of the United Nations, particularly respect for sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all States, non-interference and non-intervention in their internal affairs and non-use of force, and respect for self-determination of peoples and fundamental human rights.

The report also briefly described humanitarian assistance to Kampucheans (p. 494).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 21 October, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the Kampuchea situation<sup>(56)</sup> by a recorded vote of 100 to 25, with 19 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly reiterated that withdrawal of foreign forces, restoration and preservation of Kampuchea's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, the Kampuchean people's right to determine their own destiny and commitment by all States to non-interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs were principal components of any just and lasting solution. The Assembly adopted the Declaration of the Conference on Kampuchea and its resolution establishing the Ad Hoc Committee. It decided to reconvene the Conference at an appropriate time and urged all South-East Asian States to attend. The Secretary-General was requested to exercise his good offices towards a comprehensive political settlement and to undertake a preliminary study of the future United Nations role. The Assembly also requested continued aid for the Kampucheans (p. 495), urged South-East Asian countries to renew efforts towards establishing a zone of peace and expressed hope that, following a comprehensive political solution, an intergovernmental committee would be established to consider economic aid to Kampuchea.

The Assembly also noted a joint statement issued in Singapore on 4 September, transmitted by Democratic Kampuchea on 11 September,<sup>(16)</sup> in which Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Son Sann and Khieu Samphan expressed the desire to form a coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, announced agreement to set up a committee to study how that objective could be achieved and agreed to avoid clashes between anti-Vietnamese forces.

Introducing the 35-nation draft, which was revised by its sponsors before adoption, the Philippines stated that the Conference on Kampuchea was an important step in the quest for a comprehensive political settlement. Its Declaration, containing the major elements for negotiations, and the establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee—in whose work the Secretary-General would be involved—were the basis for such a settlement.

Speaking in explanation of their votes against the resolution, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Seychelles said that consideration of the subject constituted interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs. The Lao People's Democratic Republic also objected to Assembly endorsement of the decisions of the International Conference and said the funds needed to implement the resolution, towards which its Government would not contribute, would be better spent on food and medicine for the Kampucheans. Viet Nam supported the position of the People's Republic of Kampuchea as outlined in a 16 October statement<sup>(36)</sup> (p. 245) and said the designs of China and the United States to use the United Nations against the Indo-Chinese peoples were doomed to failure.

Albania did not participate in the vote because of the text's reference to previous Assembly resolutions, international activities and documents about which it held reservations, and said the text did not reflect the causes of the situation or condemn all enemies of the Kampucheans.

Zimbabwe, which voted in favour, said that, although it did not favour any particular group, it supported efforts to find a solution that would not leave out anyone.

In the Assembly debate, Democratic Kampuchea reiterated its determination to continue military, political and diplomatic opposition to Vietnamese occupation, and reaffirmed its proposal for a peaceful solution based on the withdrawal of Viet Nam's forces, United Nations-supervised, free general elections, and international guarantees for an independent, united, peaceful, neutral and non-aligned Kampuchea. It stated that the régime in Phnom Penh had been set up by the Vietnamese invaders, that 50,000 Vietnamese civilians decided all matters in the occupied areas, that the People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea was a branch of the Indo-Chinese Communist Party and that the May elections and new constitution were a sham.

Many speakers, including Egypt, Nepal, New Zealand, Mauritania, Pakistan, Senegal and Togo, felt that the Conference's Declaration provided a reasonable, balanced and practical basis for a settlement. Most of these countries urged Viet Nam to participate in the negotiating process leading to a solution to the Kampuchean problem and towards restoration of peace and stability in South-East Asia.

Although it supported the Declaration, Sweden said it found certain parts too detailed to be realistic at the current stage.

Japan was among those which regretted Viet Nam's boycott of the Conference and implored all concerned to participate in negotiations—a view shared by Austria and Sri Lanka, which saw such future involvement as a pre-condition for a settlement.

Speaking on behalf of the 10 EC members, the United Kingdom expressed support for ASEAN efforts to promote a solution and called on all concerned to use the United Nations framework in seeking a lasting solution; although the 10 members continued to abhor the régime of Pol Pot, they saw its record as no justification for invasion and occupation. Thailand agreed that Viet Nam had no right to try to impose a military solution on the Kampuchean people, who should be allowed their right of self-determination free from foreign occupation; it welcomed the efforts of the three Kampuchean leaders to form a nationalist coalition Government. China shared this view, adding that Viet Nam's claim that it had invaded Kampuchea because of a threat from or disputes with China was false.

Australia also said it would welcome the emergence of a nationalist coalition in Kampuchea, but stressed that it was the people themselves who must decide their future. For Norway, United Nations-supervised, free elections would guarantee that basic right. In Canada's view, the Kampucheans would choose neither the Vietnamese-backed régime nor the reprehensible regime of Pol Pot if they were allowed to choose freely.

According to Malaysia, any attempt to force acceptance of the Heng Samrin régime, contrary to General Assembly decisions, could only prolong the conflict. Indonesia supported the idea of a dialogue among countries of the region and also stressed the significance of the Ad Hoc Committee's role in bringing the parties together. Chile thought the Committee could facilitate the Secretary-General's task of creating a climate more conducive to negotiations.

Bangladesh, the Sudan, Tunisia and Yugoslavia called for strict implementation of the principles of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, particularly non-interference, foreign troop withdrawal and the right to self-determination; the Sudan and Yugoslavia supported the Conference Declaration as a basic framework for a comprehensive political solution. Zaire feared that, if the United Nations did not call for troop withdrawal and a reaffirmation of United Nations principles, the international community would give the unfortunate impression of accepting a flagrant violation of those principles.

Several speakers condemned what they regarded as Vietnamese aggression against Kampuchea and its continuing occupation of the country. The United States said that, if Viet Nam could invade, subjugate and occupy a neighbouring State by brute force and with impunity, and retain the prize of its aggression, the security of all States was substantially diminished.

The validity of the May elections in Kampuchea was challenged by several speakers. Singapore said they could not be described as free and democratic, since they were held under the guns of the occupying army and persons opposed to the Vietnamese occupation had not been allowed to participate.

India felt the approach embodied in previous Assembly decisions had not defused tension or led to a viable political solution and, for that reason, it had not participated in the Conference; it favoured a dialogue among the countries of the region and a solution based on non-use of force and non-interference in internal affairs.

Those speaking against the resolution said that discussion of the Kampuchea situation was interference in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, which had made great progress towards normalization of economic, social and political life.

Viet Nam stated that its troops were in Kampuchea to help defend that country's independence and sovereignty against threats from China; they would be withdrawn as soon as those threats no longer existed, and there would be a partial withdrawal if peace and security were restored along the Kampuchea-Thailand border. The Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam denounced the aim of the Conference as an effort to restore to power the reactionary régime of Pol Pot.

The USSR evaluated the Conference as an attempt to erect a new obstacle to normalizing relations between Indo-Chinese and ASEAN countries and to exacerbate regional tensions. According to Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia and the Ukrainian SSR, the situation in Kampuchea, which was in accordance with the will of the overwhelming majority of the people, was irreversible; they, too, rejected the Conference decisions and supported the proposals of the countries of Indo-China for a conference between them and ASEAN on matters of mutual concern. Poland thought that those proposals should be looked at constructively by the international community and that the Assembly should welcome assurances with regard to troop withdrawal once the threat from China no longer existed.

Afghanistan and the German Democratic Republic were among those pledging support for the struggle of the People's Republic of Kampuchea to gain international recognition. The Byelorussian SSR said that the general elections in Kampuchea had demonstrated majority support for the progressive changes there and approved the policy of the People's Revolutionary Party to rebuild a socialist society. Cuba felt that the course proposed in the Assembly resolution would only lead to confrontation with the Kampuchians. In Ethiopia's view, the United Nations was being manipulated in regard to Kampuchea; its task should be to foster dialogue among the countries of the region and not to assume a partisan role.

Albania stated that the Kampuchean people continued to be victims of rivalry between China, the United States and the USSR; it opposed interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs.

Three communications to the Secretary-General set forth the view that the resolution ignored reality and distorted the situation in Kampuchea.

A 13 October telegram signed by the Vice-President of the Council of Ministers and Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, annexed to a letter of the following day from the Lao People's Democratic Republic,<sup>(28)</sup> protested discussion of the resolution as gross and inadmissible interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs, rejected attempts to impose a comprehensive political settlement and stated that normal life had returned to Kampuchea. A 16 October statement from the same source, transmitted by Viet Nam on 19 October,<sup>(36)</sup> expressed similar views and charged that the resolution was a manoeuvre to thwart renaissance of the Kampuchians and to restore the Pol Pot régime. This position was supported in a 22 October statement by the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry, forwarded the following day.<sup>(37)</sup>

FURTHER COMMUNICATIONS (OCTOBER-DECEMBER). Late in 1981, the Secretary-General received four further communications on the Kampuchea situation.

By a letter of 16 October,<sup>(49)</sup> Singapore and the United Kingdom transmitted a communiqué of a meeting of Foreign Ministers of EC and ASEAN members (London, 13 and 14 October) by which the Ministers expressed hope that Viet Nam would participate in a negotiating process leading to peaceful resolution of the Kampuchea problem.

Democratic Kampuchea transmitted on 28 October<sup>(17)</sup> a résumé of a 2 October communiqué by its National Army's High Command on the military results of the 1981 rainy season (April-September), claiming that 36,300 enemy forces had been wiped out and more than 200,000 inhabitants had been liberated, raising to 1.7 million the number of people living in areas controlled by the Democratic Kampuchea Government.

A 7 December letter by Democratic Kampuchea<sup>(18)</sup> transmitted a 30 November communiqué reporting partial agreement on a structure for a coalition Government, and annexing the political programme of such a government and a circular letter of the Standing Committee of the Assembly of the People's Representatives of Kampuchea, the Government of Democratic Kampuchea and the Patriotic and Democratic Front of Great National Union of Kampuchea, seeking the views of the populace on national union.

In a 6 December statement forwarded on 18 December,<sup>(19)</sup> the Council of Ministers of Democratic Kampuchea stated that the Vietnamese enemy had been strategically defeated and called on Kampuchean parties to avoid attacking each other.

The situation in Kampuchea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979 and 35/6 of 22 October 1980.

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 35/6,

Welcoming the convening of the International Conference on Kampuchea, held at United Nations Headquarters from 13 to 17 July 1981, as a step forward towards a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem,

Noting the joint statement issued in Singapore on 4 September 1981 by Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Mr. Son Sann and Mr. Khieu Samphan concerning their agreement, in principle, to form a coalition, Bearing in mind the Declaration on Kampuchea and resolution 1 (I) adopted by the Conference on 17 July 1981, as contained in the report of the Conference,

Deploping that foreign armed intervention continues and that foreign forces have not been withdrawn from Kampuchea, thus causing continuing hostilities in that country and seriously threatening international peace and security,

Greatly concerned that the continuing deployment of foreign forces in Kampuchea near the Thai-Kampuchean border has heightened tension in the region,

Gravely disturbed that the continued fighting and instability in Kampuchea have forced more Kampucheans to flee to the Thai-Kampuchean border in search of food and safety,

Recognizing that the assistance extended by the international community has continued to reduce the widespread food shortages and health problems of the Kampuchean people,

Emphasizing that it is the inalienable right of the Kampuchean people who have sought refuge in neighbouring countries to return safely to their homeland,

Emphasizing further that no effective solution to the humanitarian problems can be achieved without a just and lasting political settlement of the Kampuchean conflict,

Convinced that, to bring about durable peace in South-East Asia, there is an urgent need for a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean problem which will provide for the withdrawal of all foreign forces and ensure respect for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea, as well as the right of the Kampuchean people to self-determination free from outside interference,

Convinced further that, after the comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean question through peaceful means, the countries of the South-East Asian region can pursue efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia so as to lessen international tensions and to achieve lasting peace in the region,

Reaffirming the need for all States to adhere strictly to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which call for respect for the national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of States, non-recourse to the threat or use of force, and peaceful settlement of disputes,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 34/22 and 35/6 and calls for their full implementation;

2. Reiterates its conviction that the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, the restoration and preservation of its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny and the commitment by all States to non-interference and non-intervention in the internal affairs of Kampuchea are the principal components of any just and lasting resolution to the Kampuchean problem;

3. Approves the report of the International Conference on Kampuchea and adopts:

(a) The Declaration on Kampuchea, which includes four elements of negotiations for a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem;

(b) Resolution 1(I) in which the Conference, inter alia, established the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with, to assist and to provide the Conference and the Ad Hoc Committee with the necessary facilities to carry out their functions;

5. Authorizes the Ad Hoc Committee to convene during regular sessions of the General Assembly in order to carry out its tasks;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to undertake a preliminary study of the possible future role of the United Nations, taking into account the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee and the elements of negotiations for a comprehensive political settlement as set out in paragraph 10 of the Declaration on Kampuchea;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for taking appropriate steps in convening the Conference;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the situation closely and to exercise his good offices in order to contribute to a comprehensive political settlement;

9. Decides to reconvene the Conference at an appropriate time in accordance with Conference resolution 1 (I);

10. Urges all States of South-East Asia and others concerned to attend future sessions of the Conference;

11. Requests the Conference to report to the General Assembly on its future sessions;

12. Expresses its deep appreciation to donor countries, the United Nations and its agencies and other national and international humanitarian organizations which have rendered relief assistance to the Kampuchean people, and appeals to them to continue to assist Kampucheans who are still in need, especially those along the Thai-Kampuchean border and in the holding centres in Thailand;

13. Deeply appreciates the efforts of the Secretary-General in co-ordinating humanitarian relief assistance and in monitoring its distribution, and requests him to continue such efforts as are necessary to deal with the situation;

14. Urges the countries of South-East Asia, once a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean conflict is achieved, to exert renewed efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia;

15. Expresses the hope that, following a comprehensive political solution, an intergovernmental committee will be established to consider a programme of assistance to Kampuchea for the reconstruction of its economy and for the economic and social development of all States of the region;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "The situation in Kampuchea".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Ireland,

Credentials of Democratic Kampuchea

The credentials of the delegation of Democratic Kampuchea were discussed at two 1981 General Assembly sessions (eighth emergency special and thirty-sixth regular) together with those submitted for representatives of other United Nations Member States (p. 351). Several communications on the subject were also received.

Two letters were addressed to the President of the Economic and Social Council. On 10 July,<sup>(2)</sup> 13 States, mainly Eastern European, said they considered the presence of the Democratic Kampuchea delegation at the July session of the Council to be illegal since, they claimed, the only existing Kampuchean State was the People's Republic of Kampuchea. Democratic Kampuchea replied, in a letter of 15 July,<sup>(3)</sup> that the 13-nation document was intended to disrupt the Council's work and its authors had spurned efforts to find a political solution.

The question of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials to the Assembly's eighth emergency special session was raised in the Credentials Committee on 10 September.<sup>(10)</sup>

The USSR stated that the only legal representative of the Kampuchean people was the Government of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and the Committee should return the seat of Kampuchea to its legal representatives.

China regarded the objection as groundless, since Democratic Kampuchea's Government was the only legal representative of the country and the credentials it had issued had been confirmed at other Assembly sessions. Singapore agreed, while the United States said it continued to deplore Democratic Kampuchea's human rights record but accepted that Government's credentials as valid.

In the Assembly discussion on credentials on 11 September, the German Democratic Republic, speaking also for Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said the People's Republic was the only legitimate representative of Kampuchea; those posing as its representatives represented only the overthrown clique. The Lao People's Democratic Republic also objected to the presence of the Democratic Kampuchea delegation. India, regarding the People's Republic as the legal Government, expressed reservations on Democratic Kampuchea's representation.

Democratic Kampuchea replied that the Assembly should condemn the manoeuvres of Viet Nam in raising the representation issue after invading and occupying the country with more than 300,000 troops. Pakistan, agreeing with those who favoured acceptance of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials, said foreign military intervention could never be justified.

Four communications were addressed to the Secretary-General concerning the representation of Kampuchea at the Assembly's thirty-sixth session.

On 10 September,<sup>(5)</sup> Viet Nam transmitted a telegram of the previous day from the Vice-President of the Council of Ministers and Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, stating that no problem affecting Kampuchea could be resolved in any international organization without participation of the representatives of the Council of State of the People's Republic, and urging restoration of Kampuchea's seat to those representatives. Responding by a letter of 14 September,<sup>(4)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea charged that the telegram was from a Vietnamese-installed administration and requested an urgent meeting of the Credentials Committee.

Two further telegrams from the People's Republic of Kampuchea were forwarded by Viet Nam. One, dated 10 September and transmitted on 15 September,<sup>(7)</sup> named a delegation for the Assembly's thirty-sixth session. The other, dated 12 September and transmitted two days later,<sup>(6)</sup> said there had been great progress in Kampuchea since 1979 under the Government of the People's Republic: elections had been held (in May 1981), security was assured, agricultural production had increased, literacy campaigns were under way and public health was improving.

An immediate meeting of the Credentials Committee to consider the credentials of Kampuchea was also requested in a 15 September note verbale<sup>(8)</sup> transmitted by Viet Nam and also signed by Cuba, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Grenada, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Nicaragua and Seychelles.

When the Committee met on 16 September to consider the credentials of representatives to the session,<sup>(11)</sup> Panama and the USSR maintained that the sole legitimate representative of Kampuchea was the Council of State of the People's Republic.

China and the United States felt that the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea were in good order and valid—a view shared by Papua New Guinea, which added that the other régime had been installed by an outside Power. Paraguay said it could not accept the credentials of a régime imposed by force; as those of Democratic Kampuchea had been recognized by the Assembly, it would accept them. The Niger also accepted the credentials.

The Netherlands explained that, as no authority could claim to represent Kampuchea, it could not support acceptance of the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea and would abstain in any vote. Ghana also said it would abstain since the situation in Kampuchea was unclear and it believed the people must choose their own representatives.

On 18 September, the Assembly adopted a resolution<sup>(12)</sup> approving the report of its Credentials Committee, after rejecting, by a recorded vote of 77 to 37, with 31 abstentions, a 14-nation amendment to have the report approved except with regard to the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea.<sup>(13)</sup>

Introducing the amendment, the Lao People's Democratic Republic stated that Democratic Kampuchea had not existed since January 1979 when the Pol Pot régime was overthrown and that Kampuchea's seat in the United Nations belonged to the Government of the People's Republic. A similar position was taken by Afghanistan, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Viet Nam; India added that the Assembly should at least disapprove the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea.

Supporting this position, the German Democratic Republic, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stated that the People's Republic represented the revolutionary forces that had ousted a régime of genocide; it held power firmly and irreversibly. Cuba felt that South-East Asian peace and security could be protected only by recognition of the Government of the People's Republic.

Madagascar, supporting the amendment, said the Assembly could not hide indefinitely behind a formalism but must take a political decision.

Opposing the amendment, China described it as an attempt to deprive Democratic Kampuchea of its rightful seat and to force the international community to recognize Viet Nam's occupation as a fait accompli; the situation in Kampuchea was by no means irreversible. Costa Rica, Japan, Nepal, Singapore and the United States were among those which said there was no justification for acceptance of credentials of a régime installed through foreign military intervention. These countries, together with Canada and New Zealand, regarded Democratic Kampuchea's credentials as legally and technically valid, but said they in no way supported the policies of Pol Pot.

Papua New Guinea said it continued to recognize Democratic Kampuchea's credentials because its Government had not been replaced by processes within the country. Thailand said the occupying Power was trying to deprive Democratic Kampuchea of its legitimate representation in the United Nations, having failed to eliminate the nationalist resistance on the ground. In Zaire's view, developments had confirmed the Assembly's 1980 decision to recognize the validity of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials.<sup>(13)</sup>

Several delegations explained their abstentions: France said it could not recognize a régime established by military intervention and had never had any relations with the Pol Pot régime; Austria found unacceptable both Democratic Kampuchea's human rights record and the installation of a régime by foreign intervention; and Australia and Sweden felt that neither régime represented the Kampuchians.

Explaining negative votes, the United Kingdom stressed that it had no intention of contributing to the re-establishment of the Pol Pot régime; Denmark gave its reasons as legal and procedural but said it should not be regarded as supporting either Government; Belgium recognized the validity of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials, while Pakistan saw that Government as the sole legal representative so long as foreign military intervention continued and the people were denied self-determination.

On 22 September,<sup>(9)</sup> Viet Nam transmitted a statement of the previous day by the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea condemning the Assembly's decision as an encouragement to China, the United States and their allies to resuscitate the corpse of Democratic Kampuchea.

Questions concerning Thailand

Kampuchea-Thailand border

During 1981, the Secretary-General received a number of letters concerning the situation on the Kampuchea-Thailand border.

Several were from Thailand and complained of incursions and attacks into Prachinburi and Trat provinces from Kampuchean territory by Vietnamese-Heng Samrin forces.

On 5 January,<sup>(3)</sup> Thailand charged that since June 1980 there had been over 80 separate violations of its sovereignty and territory; in the most recent, on 3 January, two Thai soldiers had been killed and another wounded in an attack on a Thai Army unit about 700 metres inside the border. Between 5 and 26 January, shellings and an armed incursion had left 10 Thais injured and one dead, Thailand alleged on 27 January.<sup>(4)</sup> A letter of 25 March<sup>(5)</sup> stated that a 17 March attack on a Thai marine unit had left two naval officers killed and four injured. Further incidents were detailed in a letter of 28 August:<sup>(6)</sup> attacks on 25 and 26 August had resulted in one Thai villager dead, one wounded, property damage and livestock losses; those incidents were among more than 46 serious territorial violations since 1 May, involving four Thai deaths, Thailand added. On 27 November,<sup>(7)</sup> Thailand listed incidents between 9 and 23 November in which two of its soldiers and one civilian had been killed, four civilians wounded, livestock killed or injured and property damaged.

An 8 January statement from Democratic Kampuchea's Ministry of Foreign Affairs, transmitted on 22 January,<sup>(1)</sup> also charged that Vietnamese soldiers had intruded into Thai territory on 3 and 5 January and that the latter incident had left five Thais seriously wounded.

Letters were received from Viet Nam denying these charges and countercharging that Thailand, while claiming neutrality with regard to the Kampuchean situation, had consistently collaborated with China against the Kampucheans by allowing Thai territory to be used for armed action against the People's Republic of Kampuchea by the remnants of the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary régime together with other Khmer reactionaries.

On 6 January,<sup>(8)</sup> Viet Nam forwarded a 5 January statement from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs that, on 3 January, Thailand had conducted a provocation on the Kampuchea-Thailand border and had attempted to discredit Kampuchea and Viet Nam. An 11 January statement from the same source, transmitted on 15 January,<sup>(9)</sup> reaffirmed Viet Nam's respect for Thailand's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, and demanded that Thailand reciprocate with regard to the Indo-Chinese countries. On 6 February,<sup>(10)</sup> Viet Nam annexed a report of the previous day by the SPK (Sapora-means Kampuchea) news agency of the People's Republic of Kampuchea charging that, during January, Thailand had increasingly violated Kampuchean territory, airspace and territorial waters by 67 overflights and 515 artillery attacks, some of them in support of incursions by Pol Pot bandits, causing damage and numerous civilian casualties. A further Vietnamese Foreign Ministry statement, issued and forwarded on 28 August,<sup>(11)</sup> denied a charge by Thailand's Foreign Ministry, broadcast on Bangkok radio two days earlier, that Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea had shelled Thai territory.

Charges that Thailand and reactionary Khmers had violated Kampuchean territory on numerous occasions throughout 1980—including more than 1,400 bombardments from August to December, 500 overflights during the second half of the year, 35 incursions in December and violations of Kampuchea's territorial waters—were detailed in a 10 January 1981 statement by the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 19 January.<sup>(2)</sup>

Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand

On 13 February 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> Viet Nam forwarded to the Secretary-General an 11 February statement by its Foreign Ministry stating that Thailand had recently committed repeated and serious armed provocations against the Lao People's Democratic Republic, particularly on 7 February when shelling and an invasion of Vientiane province had caused tension on the border.

In response, Thailand forwarded on 3 March<sup>(1)</sup> excerpts of a 27 February press release by its Foreign Ministry which stated that, in speaking for the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Viet Nam had misrepresented the situation and heightened tension; the incidents, which had resulted from deliberate sabotage by a third party, had been satisfactorily resolved by the two countries.

China and Viet Nam

Between January and September 1981, the Secretary-General received letters from China and Viet Nam, each charging the other with armed attacks and other aggressive acts along their common border.

On 8 January 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> Viet Nam transmitted a memorandum of 29 December 1980 from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs accusing China of intensifying, throughout 1980, hostile land, sea and air activities against Viet Nam, sowing discord between Indo-Chinese countries and members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) and obstructing negotiations between China and Viet Nam which, it said, China had broken off unilaterally on 6 March 1980.

By letters of 18 February<sup>(6)</sup> and 3 April 1981,<sup>(7)</sup> Viet Nam transmitted communiqués dated 16 February and 30 March, respectively, containing allegations of hostile actions by China against Viet Nam made by a commission of inquiry into Chinese expansionists' and hegemonists' war crimes. The first communiqué listed alleged crimes in 1979 and 1980; the second, hostile actions during the first quarter of 1981, including armed attacks, troop build-ups, intrusions by sea, overflights, spying activities, political sabotage and psychological warfare in Cao Bang, Ha Tuyen, Hoang Lien Son, Lai Chau, Lang Son, Phu Khanh and Quang Ninh provinces.

On 5 May<sup>(1)</sup> and 16 May,<sup>(2)</sup> China transmitted notes of the same dates from its Foreign Ministry to the Vietnamese Embassy in China. By the first, China cited shelling incidents and armed incursions by Vietnamese into Guangxi Zhuang autonomous region and Yunnan province from January to April, resulting in numerous civilian casualties and deaths, kidnappings, and losses of livestock and property; by the second, China alleged further incursions by Vietnamese troops on 5, 7 and 13 May.

For its part, Viet Nam transmitted on 8 May<sup>(8)</sup> a 6 May statement by its Foreign Ministry and a note of the same date to China's Foreign Ministry charging China with numerous armed intrusions into Vietnamese territory by sea and air, ambushes, shellings and land-grabbing operations, and stating that China had refused Viet Nam's proposal for the resumption of Viet Nam-China negotiations. Similar incidents between 6 and 14 May were alleged in a 17 May note from Viet Nam's Foreign Ministry to its Chinese counterpart, forwarded by Viet Nam on 19 May.<sup>(9)</sup>

A proposal for an immediate end to armed conflict in the border area and for the start of a third round of the China-Viet Nam talks, preferably in July, was made in a 13 June note from the Vietnamese to the Chinese Foreign Ministry, transmitted on 17 June.<sup>(10)</sup>

On 13 July,<sup>(3)</sup> China forwarded a Foreign Ministry memorandum of that date attributing responsibility for deterioration of relations between the two countries to Viet Nam's hostile policies against China which, it claimed, were designed to disguise USSR and Vietnamese expansionism in South-East Asia. In response, Viet Nam forwarded on 22 July<sup>(11)</sup> a 17 July editorial of the Vietnamese daily Nhan Dan rejecting China's allegations and charging it with expansionist ambitions against Viet Nam and other Indo-Chinese countries.

Two later notes between the respective Foreign Ministries were also forwarded to the Secretary-General. On 1 September,<sup>(12)</sup> Viet Nam forwarded its Ministry's note of 31 August suggesting September for the third round of negotiations. China replied to the 13 June and 31 August notes on 7 September, in a note transmitted the same day,<sup>(4)</sup> rejecting the Vietnamese proposals and stating that Viet Nam, in continuing its intrusions into Chinese territory, showed no desire to normalize relations and that the basis for resuming negotiations did not exist.

Peace and security of South-East Asia

A number of letters addressed to the Secretary-General during 1981 concerned general aspects of relations among the nations of South-East Asia. Most were circulated as documents under the General Assembly's agenda item on the "Question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia"—an item which the Assembly discussed in November without taking substantive action.

COMMUNICATIONS. On 29 January,<sup>(7)</sup> the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam transmitted a statement and communiqué issued by their Foreign Ministers and that of the People's Republic of Kampuchea at a conference held in Ho Chi Minh City, Viet Nam, on 27 and 28 January. The Ministers proposed that a regional conference between two groups of countries—those of Indo-China and ASEAN—and Burma be convened in March to discuss mutual problems of peace, stability, friendship and co-operation in South-East Asia, and that after conclusion of a peace treaty between the two groups a broad international conference be held to recognize and guarantee the treaty.

Opposing this proposal in a 1 February press conference at Bangkok, Thailand, the Premier of China stated that the aim of its sponsors was to cajole the international community into recognizing Indo-China as a sphere of influence of Viet Nam, to dupe ASEAN countries into giving de facto recognition to the Heng Samrin régime, to counter the International Conference on Kampuchea (p. 241) and to distort the root cause of tension in South-East Asia; excerpts from the press conference were transmitted by China on 10 February.<sup>(1)</sup>

Referring to the proposal in a 6 February statement transmitted on 25 February,<sup>(10)</sup> the Foreign Minister of the Philippines, also in his capacity as Chairman of the ASEAN Standing Committee, said it ignored the root cause of the problem—blatant breach in Kampuchea of fundamental principles of both the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Charter of the United Nations. In a press statement of 10 April following a meeting at Manila, Philippines, with the Secretary-General's Special Representative on Kampuchea (p. 241), transmitted by the Philippines on 14 April,<sup>(12)</sup> the Foreign Minister said the ASEAN countries did not regard a regional conference as an appropriate forum because of the international dimensions of the Kampuchea conflict.

By a letter of 25 February sent on behalf of ASEAN,<sup>(11)</sup> the Philippine Foreign Minister transmitted an extract from the final declaration adopted at the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 9–13 February) in which the Ministers urged all States of the region to undertake a dialogue leading to resolution of their differences and establishment of durable peace and stability in the area, as well as the elimination of involvement and threats of intervention by outside Powers.

A press communiqué issued following consultations at Vientiane, Lao People's Democratic Republic, on 24 April between the Foreign Ministers of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Viet Nam, and transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 27 April,<sup>(4)</sup> announced that the Vietnamese Foreign Minister had been appointed to act on behalf of the three countries in conducting regional consultations with ASEAN countries. Subsequently, a message of 19 May to the Secretary-General from the three Foreign Ministers, transmitted two days later by the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam,<sup>(8)</sup> announced that consultations had been held with Indonesia, Malaysia and the Philippines, with initial positive results.

The ASEAN Foreign Ministers, in a joint communiqué of 18 June issued at the conclusion of their meeting at Manila, excerpts from which were transmitted by the Philippines on the following day,<sup>(13)</sup> said the regional conference proposed in January could not provide an appropriate forum for any useful discussion that could lead to a durable solution, since the Kampuchea conflict involved outside Powers; they were not opposed to regional consultations and dialogues, but those could be no substitute for the conference on Kampuchea.

A revised proposal for regional action was set out in a statement and communiqué of a conference held at Phnom Penh on 13 and 14 June by the three Foreign Ministers responsible for the January proposal, and forwarded by a letter of 15 June from the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam.<sup>(9)</sup> They proposed to hold a regional conference with the Secretary-General and other mutually agreed upon countries participating as observers; to continue the regional consultations in the event that ASEAN States were not prepared to participate in such a conference; and to hold an international conference with broader participation—possibly to be convened by the United Nations provided that it stopped recognizing the Pot Pot régime—which would guarantee agreements reached in either the regional conference or consultations.

On 19 June,<sup>(2)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a statement of 15 June by its Foreign Ministry denouncing the Phnom Penh proposal as a manoeuvre to divert attention from the Conference on Kampuchea and to legalize the Vietnamese administration installed in Kampuchea. Also on 19 June,<sup>(14)</sup> the Philippines transmitted a press statement of that date by its Foreign Minister, rejecting the proposal as containing nothing new and as an inappropriate framework for solution of the Kampuchean problem.

On 29 September,<sup>(5)</sup> the Lao People's Democratic Republic forwarded a memorandum from its Foreign Ministry suggesting that a standing committee of Indo-Chinese and ASEAN States, possibly including Burma, be established to resolve problems and apply the principles of peaceful coexistence in such matters as respect for independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, non-intervention, self-determination of peoples, dispute settlement, economic co-operation, negotiation of differences over maritime zones and islands, and transit rights for land-locked countries.

This memorandum was characterized by Democratic Kampuchea, in a note of 7 October transmitted the same day,<sup>(3)</sup> as interference in its internal affairs, aimed at making the international community accept the fait accompli brought about by Viet Nam's invasion of Kampuchea.

On 28 December,<sup>(6)</sup> the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted the final document of a working consultative meeting of the Deputy Foreign Ministers of Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, the People's Republic of Kampuchea, Poland, the USSR and Viet Nam (Vintiane, 18 and 19 December), in which they reviewed the situation in the region and expressed support for the proposed regional conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. The question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia was considered by the General Assembly on 2 and 3 November.

A number of States supported the proposals for a regional conference and, after conclusion of a treaty between Indo-Chinese and ASEAN countries, for an international conference to recognize and guarantee that treaty.

Among the countries taking this position, the Lao People's Democratic Republic stated that intervention by an Asiatic super-Power in the internal affairs of the Indo-Chinese countries constituted the fundamental source of tension in South-East Asia. In the USSR's view, rapprochement between China and the United States and the development of military co-operation between them posed a threat to the region. Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic also warned of dangers resulting from collusion between those States, and the Ukrainian SSR added that China and the United States, supported by members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, had been pressuring ASEAN into confrontation with the Indo-Chinese countries. The States of the region would make a great mistake, said Cuba, if they did not realize the danger to them posed by two great Powers and did not decide to engage in dialogue.

Viet Nam pointed to its suggestions to resume the China-Viet Nam talks and the proposals to sign peace treaties with China—supported by Poland and others—and stressed the need for consultation and dialogue between the two groups of States in the region in order to counter the deterioration in relations linked to intervention and aggression by outside Powers. The Byelorussian SSR felt that encouragement of such dialogue would assure creation of a zone of peace and stability in South-East Asia.

Hungary considered that the principles outlined by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 29 September (p. 251) were the framework for negotiations. Angola supported this view, stating that the international community had a duty to encourage regional initiatives aimed at genuine peace and co-operation, and to thwart counter-moves aimed at sabotaging such approaches. Ethiopia and Mongolia also favoured these initiatives. Bulgaria remarked that, should ASEAN not be ready for a regional conference, bilateral and multilateral negotiations might be continued on a broad spectrum of questions, as proposed by the three Indo-Chinese countries.

The Congo voiced support for the position taken in February by the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Non-Aligned Countries in favour of a dialogue to resolve differences among the countries of South-East Asia (p. 251).

The ASEAN States, along with Papua New Guinea, said that Vietnamese intervention in Kampuchea was the main cause of regional tension and urged Viet Nam to join in the search for a settlement in accordance with the Assembly's resolution of 21 October on the Kampuchea situation.<sup>(15)</sup> Malaysia stated that it would be futile to discuss peace and security in South-East Asia in isolation from the events in Kampuchea and that the legitimate interests of major Powers in the region must be recognized. Thailand stated that the proposals of the Lao People's Democratic Republic ignored the Kampuchean problem and were intended to accomplish what foreign forces had failed to achieve. Singapore's view—shared by Australia—was that, until Viet Nam recognized that its occupation was the root of tension in the region, talk about desirability of dialogue was hollow.

China maintained that Vietnamese expansionism and aggression, backed by the USSR, threatened peace and stability in South-East Asia; the proposed regional conference was an attempt to move the issue out of the United Nations.

Speaking for the member States of the European Community, the United Kingdom said they could not support any proposals on the item which omitted the Kampuchea problem. Democratic Kampuchea and Japan pointed out that, in its resolution on the Kampuchea situation, the Assembly had mentioned the urgent need to solve that problem in order to bring peace to South-East Asia.

Albania said that political, economic and military pressures by China, the United States and the USSR were preventing the establishment of genuine regional peace and stability.

At the conclusion of the debate on 3 November, the Assembly decided without vote,<sup>(17)</sup> on an oral proposal of its President, to include this item in the provisional agenda of its 1982 session.

Previously, on 21 October, in its resolution on the Kampuchea situation,<sup>(16)</sup> the Assembly urged the South-East Asian countries, once a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchea conflict was achieved, to renew efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia.

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President: agenda item 34.

Question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia

At its 45th plenary meeting, on 3 November 1981, the General Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia".

Korean question

A report of the United Nations Command concerning the maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement<sup>(2)</sup> between 16 December 1980 and 16 December 1981 was submitted by a letter of 21 April 1982<sup>(1)</sup> from the United States to the President of the Security Council, on behalf of the unified command established pursuant to a 1950 Council resolution.<sup>(3)</sup>

The report stated that the Korean People's Army/Chinese People's Volunteers side continued to conduct hostile acts against the forces of the United Nations Command and the Republic of Korea. An appendix gave details of two 1981 incidents submitted by the Command to the Military Armistice Commission established under the Armistice Agreement; these were described as infiltration by a North Korean, initially sighted in the Imjin River on 29 June and killed south of the river on 4 July, and a North Korean surface-to-air missile attack on a United Nations Command aircraft in international airspace off the west coast on 26 August. The report added that a United Nations Command member of the Commission, at a meeting on 9 November, had reiterated a proposal that the two sides form joint observer teams to investigate incidents, but the other side had failed to respond.

The report concluded that the Command would continue to fulfil its obligations under its mandate from the Armistice Agreement and the Security Council until the parties directly concerned could arrive at a more permanent arrangement for peace.

Chapter VII

Latin America

Although no disputes involving Latin American countries were formally discussed by United Nations bodies in 1981, several situations were the subject of communications to the Organization from the States concerned. These involved border incidents between Ecuador and Peru (see below), the El Salvador situation (p. 254), a territorial dispute between Guyana and Venezuela (p. 254), and complaints by Nicaragua against the United States and Honduras (p. 255).

Ecuador and Peru

Border incidents between Ecuador and Peru in January 1981 were the subject of communications to the United Nations Secretary-General or the President of the Security Council from those countries and from the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States (OAS), circulated as Council documents.

By a telegram of 30 January,<sup>(5)</sup> the OAS Secretary-General transmitted the text of a resolution adopted in Washington, D. C., on 29 January by which the OAS Permanent Council, at the request of Ecuador, convoked the nineteenth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs to consider the situation and urged the Governments to refrain from action that could aggravate it.

By a letter of 1 February,<sup>(2)</sup> Ecuador brought the matter to the Security Council's attention, stating that there had been a serious aggression by Peruvian armed forces since 22 January in the Cordillera del Cóndor area of south-eastern Ecuador.

The OAS Meeting, which took place in Washington, D. C., adopted on 5 February a resolution by which it noted with satisfaction the announcement of a cease-fire by Ecuador and Peru, urged both countries to demobilize and restrict themselves to normal border-patrol troops, and noted their acceptance of a committee composed of Argentina, Brazil, Chile and the United States to observe the cease-fire and create conditions of peace. The resolution was transmitted by a telegram of 5 February from the OAS Secretary-General,<sup>(6)</sup> as well as by letters from Ecuador dated 5 February<sup>(3)</sup> and from Peru dated 10 February.<sup>(4)</sup>

Argentina, Brazil, Chile and the United States transmitted on 23 February<sup>(1)</sup> the text of a statement they had made at the OAS Meeting in their capacity as guarantors of the 1942 Peruvian-Ecuadorian Protocol of Peace, Friendship and Frontiers; they declared their determination to continue contributing to peace efforts and said their vote for the resolution did not affect the responsibilities they would continue to assume as guarantors of the Protocol. Peru also transmitted this statement in its letter of 10 February, together with a statement by its Minister for Foreign Affairs that it had voted for the resolution, which was indissolubly linked to the four-nation statement.

In his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization, the United Nations Secretary-General observed that Ecuador and Peru had decided to negotiate after the armed skirmishes early in the year, thereby arresting an escalation of hostilities (p. 8).

During the general debate at the 1981 regular session of the Assembly, Peru said it remained willing to have markers placed along a 78-kilometre stretch of the border that had already been delimited. However, Ecuador maintained that Peru continued to occupy territory to which Ecuador had a historical claim dating back to the discovery of the Amazon River in the sixteenth century.

El Salvador situation

In a joint declaration issued on 28 August and transmitted to the Security Council President by France and Mexico on that date,<sup>(2)</sup> the Foreign Ministers of the two countries recognized the alliance of the Farabundo Martí Front for National Liberation (FMLN) and the Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR) as a representative political force that should legitimately participate in instituting the mechanisms of rapprochement and negotiation required for a political settlement of the crisis in El Salvador.

Addressing the General Assembly on 29 September, the President of the Revolutionary Junta of the Government of El Salvador, José Napoleón Duarte, said his Government was trying to build a democratic society, undeterred by terrorist activities supported from outside. It was implementing a political timetable leading to free elections, and had appealed to FDR to cease its armed struggle and take part in that process. The Government would not negotiate with organized armed sectors but would welcome in the electoral process any group that laid down its arms.

By a letter of 13 October,<sup>(3)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted to the Council President proposals by the FMLN-FDR alliance for peace talks between itself and the Governing Junta of El Salvador, to discuss a restructuring of the armed forces and full democratic participation of the various sectors and forces of the Salvadorian people.

On 2 November,<sup>(1)</sup> Cuba transmitted to the Secretary-General a government statement issued on 28 October, denying an article in the Washington Post of 19 October which stated that Cuba had in September sent 500 to 600 troops to Nicaragua with the aim of taking over El Salvador and setting up a revolutionary Marxist government in the eastern part of the country.

The General Assembly, on 16 December, adopted a resolution on human rights in El Salvador<sup>(4)</sup> in which it requested the Salvadorian parties to reach a negotiated political solution, appealed to States to abstain from intervening in the country's internal situation, and urged the Government to ensure respect for human rights.

Guyana and Venezuela

A territorial dispute between Guyana and Venezuela over the Essequibo (Guyana Esequiba) area was taken up in communications addressed by the two Governments to the Secretary-General during the latter part of 1981.

The meeting of Commonwealth heads of Government (Melbourne, Australia, 30 September-7 October), in its final communiqué,<sup>(1)</sup> expressed deep concern at the threat to Guyana's territorial integrity arising from Venezuela's claim to more than two thirds of its territory and called for a peaceful settlement through established procedures and with full respect for the sanctity of treaties. By a letter of 30 October,<sup>(3)</sup> Venezuela transmitted a press release issued on 7 October by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, stating that this reference in the Commonwealth communiqué could lead to improper internationalization of an issue which should be kept within the bounds agreed by the parties.

By a letter of 2 November,<sup>(2)</sup> Guyana submitted a memorandum by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, giving historical and legal background on the dispute and declaring that the Venezuelan claim disregarded the boundary between the two countries as defined by an international arbitral tribunal in 1899. By a letter of 23 November,<sup>(4)</sup> Venezuela transmitted a memorandum by its Foreign Ministry refuting the validity of the 1899 judgement as a vestige of colonialism and recalling the Geneva Agreement of 1966, by which the two countries agreed to seek a solution to the dispute by peaceful means.

Questions concerning Nicaragua

A plenary meeting of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, convened in New York on 14 December 1981 at the request of Nicaragua, expressed concern about the situation in the region and appealed to all States to refrain from interference in the internal or external affairs of independent countries there; the communiqué of the meeting was transmitted to the Secretary-General on the same date by a note verbale from Cuba.<sup>(1)</sup>

Note verbale: <sup>(1)</sup>Cuba, 14 Dec., annexing non-aligned countries communiqué, A/37/59.

Nicaragua and the United States

Scheduled military exercises of the United States in Central America and relations between Nicaragua and the United States were the subjects of letters by those countries addressed to the President of the Security Council in 1981.

On 25 September,<sup>(1)</sup> Nicaragua condemned plans announced by the United States for joint military exercises with Honduras in areas close to Nicaraguan territory, stating that they would disrupt peace efforts in Central America and oblige Nicaragua to adopt a state of general alert. In a response of 2 October,<sup>(3)</sup> the United States said the exercises were not a threat to Nicaragua or to peace and security; if Nicaragua wished to observe them on an exceptional basis, the United States would consider such a request.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua, in a letter of 16 November transmitted the following day,<sup>(2)</sup> charged that United States officials had made false accusations and aggressive threats against Nicaragua, and called on the United States to repudiate publicly the threat or use of force in international relations and to respect the right of the Nicaraguan people to decide their future.

Nicaragua and Honduras

In a letter of 23 November to the Secretary-General,<sup>(1)</sup> Nicaragua referred to border attacks on 13 and 17 November, which it said had been committed by members of the Honduran armed forces, and stressed the need for a meeting between the Ministers for Defence of the two countries as agreed at a meeting of their Presidents at the El Guasale frontier post on 13 May. Annexed was a Nicaraguan Government note of 11 November to the Honduran President, stating that armed bands of persons who had belonged to the National Guard under Nicaragua's former régime were planning to attack a Honduran frontier village and then blame the Nicaraguan Army for the attack.

Chapter VIII

Middle East

In 1981, the situation in the Middle East continued to occupy the attention of the Security Council, the General Assembly and several other United Nations bodies. Aside from the annual debate on the Middle East situation as a whole (p. 257), the major aspects considered were the Palestine question (p. 263), the situation between individual Arab States and Israel (p. 275), the situation in the territories occupied by Israel (p. 300) and Palestine refugees (p. 325). The United Nations continued to maintain two major peace-keeping operations in the region financed by special assessments on Member States (p. 294).

By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(38)</sup> arising from its consideration of the Middle East situation, the Assembly declared once more that peace in the Middle East must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution under United Nations auspices, and rejected all partial agreements and separate treaties.

In connection with its consideration of disarmament items, the Assembly, on 9 December, adopted three resolutions relating to the proposed establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East (p. 49). It decided to include the subject in the provisional agenda of its 1982 regular session,<sup>(10)</sup> declared it imperative that Israel place its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safeguards,<sup>(11)</sup> and requested the Security Council to prohibit all nuclear co-operation with Israel.<sup>(12)</sup>

On 10 December, the Assembly adopted six resolutions on the Palestine question. It reaffirmed the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, including the right to their own State, and demanded that Israel withdraw from the Arab territories occupied since 1967.<sup>(16)</sup> It expressed strong opposition to all partial agreements and treaties which violated Palestinian rights,<sup>(18)</sup> and determined once more that Israeli measures to alter the character and status of Jerusalem were null and void and a threat to international peace and security.<sup>(17)</sup> The Assembly decided to convene an International Conference on the Question of Palestine not later than 1984,<sup>(15)</sup> and authorized continuing work by the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People<sup>(13)</sup> and the United Nations Secretariat's Special Unit on Palestinian Rights.<sup>(14)</sup>

The Committee on Palestinian rights, in its 1981 report to the Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> reiterated the validity of its 1976 recommendations, which included a call for Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories according to a timetable to be fixed by the Security Council and the establishment of an independent Palestinian entity.<sup>(47)</sup>

The United Nations continued to assist Palestinians in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and neighbouring Arab States. Aside from refugee assistance, much of this aid was rendered by the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund. The General Assembly requested the continuation of such assistance on 4 December.<sup>(8)</sup>

The Israeli aerial bombing on 7 June of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad, Iraq, was condemned by the Security Council on 19 June<sup>(41)</sup> and by the Assembly on 13 November.<sup>(5)</sup>

In southern Lebanon along the border with Israel, where the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) was stationed, the cease-fire was broken a number of times. Lebanon complained several times to the Security Council that Israeli forces had attacked civilian targets and repeatedly bombarded cities and villages, while Israel charged that armed elements of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) had attempted to cross into Israel through UNIFIL lines.

On 20 March, through a statement by its President, the Security Council condemned attacks on UNIFIL which had caused the death and injury of Force personnel, and addressed a serious warning to all the forces responsible for acts violating the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon and preventing the full deployment of the Force. The Council extended the UNIFIL mandate twice—first until 19 December<sup>(42)</sup> and then for another six months, until 19 June 1982.<sup>(46)</sup> On 21 July, the Council unanimously called for an immediate cessation of all armed attacks and reaffirmed its commitment to Lebanon's sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence.<sup>(43)</sup>

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) continued to supervise the observance of the cease-fire in the area of separation between the forces of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic in the Golan Heights. Twice during the year, the Council extended the UNDOF mandate for six months: first until 30 November 1981<sup>(40)</sup> and the second time until 31 May 1982.<sup>(44)</sup>

The General Assembly in 1981 appropriated a total of $177,099,248 for the two United Nations peace-keeping forces in the Middle East. Of this sum, $146,166,000 was for UNIFIL for the period 19 December 1980 to 18 December 1981<sup>(19)</sup> and $30,933,248 for UNDOF from 1 June 1981 to 31 May 1982.<sup>(6)</sup> The Assembly also continued an arrangement under which certain unexpended appropriations for UNIFIL<sup>(20)</sup> and UNDOF<sup>(7)</sup> were retained rather than returned to Member States.

The situation in the territories occupied by Israel was again considered by United Nations bodies. The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, in a report to the Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> stated that Israel's annexation and settlements policy continued unabated, with Israeli settlers playing a considerably increased role in implementing that policy. It added that Israel continued to follow a policy of extreme provocation of civilians and severe repression of any reaction to that provocation.

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted seven resolutions on this subject. One of them<sup>(31)</sup> contained the Assembly's strong condemnation of a series of Israeli policies and practices, including annexation, establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements, expulsion and transfer of Arabs, confiscation of property, transformation and pillaging of cultural property, destruction of houses, mass arrests, ill-treatment of detainees, interference with religious freedoms, family customs, education, development and freedom of movement, and illegal exploitation of natural resources and population. The Assembly demanded that Israel desist from those policies and practices and, by another resolution,<sup>(30)</sup> determined that Israeli measures designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, had no legal validity. By four other resolutions, the Assembly demanded that Israel facilitate the immediate return of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the Islamic Judge of Hebron,<sup>(32)</sup> report on assassination attempts against three other mayors,<sup>(35)</sup> rescind orders for the closure of three universities<sup>(34)</sup> and desist from repressive measures against Syrians in the Golan Heights.<sup>(33)</sup> The Assembly also reaffirmed that the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War was applicable to the occupied territories and demanded that Israel comply with its provisions.<sup>(29)</sup>

In separate resolutions relating to the occupied territories, the Assembly demanded that Israel cease implementing its project for a Mediterranean-Dead Sea canal<sup>(36)</sup> and desist from excavations and transformations of the historical, cultural and religious sites of Jerusalem.<sup>(4)</sup> It called on States and institutions not to assist Israel in exploiting the territories' resources.<sup>(37)</sup> It condemned Israel for the Palestinians' deteriorating living conditions and requested a report on the matter from the Secretary-General.<sup>(9)</sup>

Following the Israeli Parliament's decision on 14 December to apply Israeli laws, jurisdiction and administration to the Golan Heights, both the Security Council<sup>(45)</sup> and the Assembly<sup>(39)</sup> demanded on 17 December that Israel rescind its decision, which many countries characterized in the debate as tantamount to annexation.

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to provide education, health and relief services to Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip (p. 325). The UNRWA Commissioner-General reported to the General Assembly<sup>(3)</sup> that an acute financial crisis early in the year threatened a major part of the Agency's education programme; but later in the year, the receipt of additional pledges, together with cut-backs in both recurrent and non-recurrent expenditure, made it possible to continue this programme through the end of 1981. The Assembly decided to keep its regular 1981 session open until early 1982 to await proposals on ways of meeting the deficit forecast for the Agency's 1982 budget.

On 16 December, the Assembly adopted eight resolutions on Palestine refugees. It called on all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts to meet UNRWA's anticipated needs,<sup>(26)</sup> requested the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA to continue its efforts for another year<sup>(25)</sup> and endorsed the Agency's efforts to continue providing humanitarian assistance to other persons displaced as a result of the 1967 hostilities and in serious need of continued assistance.<sup>(24)</sup> It called on Israel to take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants of the territories occupied since 1967,<sup>(22)</sup> demanded that it desist from removing and resettling Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and from destroying their shelters,<sup>(21)</sup> and requested the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps for the protection and administration of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel.<sup>(23)</sup> It called on Israel to remove obstacles to the establishment of a university at Jerusalem for Palestine refugees,<sup>(27)</sup> and appealed for additional special governmental and non-governmental contributions for scholarships and grants to them.<sup>(28)</sup>

General aspects

Middle East situation

The situation in the Middle East was again considered in 1981 as an item on the General Assembly's agenda. Two resolutions were adopted under this item in December, one of them on general aspects of the situation (p. 259) and the other on the Golan Heights (p. 311).

COMMUNICATIONS (JANUARY-DECEMBER). In 1981, the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received a number of letters concerning the situation in the Middle East, dealing with general policy matters as well as individual incidents.

Israel, by a letter of 14 September,<sup>(15)</sup> complained that a number of attempts had been made at the United Nations to inject the Arab-Israel conflict into discussions having no bearing on, or relevance to, that conflict.

By a letter of 13 October,<sup>(23)</sup> the USSR transmitted a government statement addressed to the United States, condemning what it described as attempts by the United States to interfere in the internal affairs of Egypt by dispatching warships to the Egyptian coasts, placing marine units in the Mediterranean region in a high state of military readiness and setting up the so-called rapid deployment force. In reply, Egypt, on 23 October,<sup>(22)</sup> transmitted a government statement describing the USSR statement as an infringement of Egyptian sovereignty and adding that relations between Egypt and the United States were characterized by the full liberty of peoples to decide for themselves.

Iraq, by a letter of 14 October,<sup>(2)</sup> transmitted the final communique of a 3 October meeting in New York by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, in which they stated that the strategic agreements concluded or to be concluded between the United States and Israel were aimed at liquidating the Palestinian cause and impeding the implementation of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

By a letter dated 25 November,<sup>(19)</sup> Israel, referring to the resolutions adopted by the Twelfth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Baghdad, 1-5 June), stated that it was difficult to see how the call for "Holy War" against Israel could be reconciled with the Charter of the United Nations or Security Council resolutions on the Middle East. The resolutions in question were transmitted to the United Nations by Iraq on 5 August.<sup>(1)</sup>

In a letter of 2 December,<sup>(21)</sup> Israel expressed its strong protest at what it called the renewed misuse of United Nations premises by allowing PLO to mount an exhibition in the context of the International Year of Disabled Persons (1981).

The Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received a number of letters from Israel concerning specific incidents said to have been perpetrated by PLO.

A letter of 14 January<sup>(3)</sup> cited what were described as PLO terrorist acts against citizens, killing one Israeli and wounding 12 between 25 December 1980 and 11 January 1981. Letters of 11 March<sup>(4)</sup> and 16 March<sup>(5)</sup> reported attacks on 9 and 14 March against two civilian buses near Jerusalem.

In letters dated 3 April<sup>(6)</sup> and 17 April,<sup>(8)</sup> Israel charged that, on the evenings of 30 March and 13 April, a number of Katyusha rockets had been fired from Jordanian territory in the direction of villages and towns in the upper Jordan valley.

Israeli letters of 10 April,<sup>(7)</sup> 6 May,<sup>(9)</sup> 28 May,<sup>(10)</sup> 30 July,<sup>(11)</sup> 17 August,<sup>(12)</sup> 28 August,<sup>(13)</sup> 17 September,<sup>(16)</sup> 2 October<sup>(17)</sup> and 30 November<sup>(20)</sup> contained accounts of what were described as terrorist incidents for which PLO had claimed responsibility, in which bombs, hand grenades and other explosive devices had been detonated or discovered in bus stations, markets, parks and other public places in Jerusalem, cities and villages in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and Israeli facilities in other countries. Some 28 incidents were reported, resulting in five deaths and the wounding of 45 persons. An attack on a synagogue at Vienna, Austria, on 29 August, resulting in two deaths and injury to 19 persons, was ascribed to PLO terrorists in an Israeli letter of 31 August.<sup>(14)</sup>

By a letter of 18 November,<sup>(18)</sup> Israel charged PLO with a campaign of political assassinations against Arabs who favoured living in peace with Israel in Judea, Samaria and the Gaza District, as evidenced by an ambush on 17 November in which the head of a village association in the Ramallah area had been injured and his son killed.

There were also communications regarding Israel and Lebanon (p. 283), the situation in the Golan Heights (p. 308) and the situation in the territories occupied by Israel (p. 300).

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. On 11 November 1981, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council a report on the situation in the Middle East,<sup>(24)</sup> as called for by the Assembly in December 1980.<sup>(25)</sup>

After an account of various aspects of the situation as described in other United Nations documents, the report stated that the situation in the Middle East continued to be of central concern to the entire international community, containing an explosive potential of conflict endangering world peace. The heightening of tension between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic, the Israeli attack on the nuclear facility in Iraq and the continuing cycle of violence in and around Lebanon had underlined the dangers inherent in the absence of progress towards a settlement that ultimately could ensure a peaceful and just future for all the nations and peoples of the region. The Secretary-General expressed his continued belief that the United Nations provided a universal forum in the framework of which efforts to evolve a peaceful settlement might best be pursued.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the Middle East situation<sup>(29)</sup> by a recorded vote of 94 to 16, with 28 abstentions. The resolution was sponsored by Cuba, India, Madagascar, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

By this resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed that a just and comprehensive Middle East settlement could not be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people. It declared once more that Middle East peace must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution, under United Nations auspices. It rejected all partial agreements and separate treaties in so far as they violated the recognized rights of the Palestinians and contradicted just and comprehensive solutions. It considered that the agreements on strategic co-operation between the United States and Israel signed on 30 November would encourage Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the occupied territories, have adverse effects on peace efforts and threaten the region's security. It called on all States to end the flow to Israel of any military, economic and financial resources that would encourage it to pursue its aggressive policies. The Secretary-General was requested to report again to the Assembly and the Security Council.

Other provisions of the resolution dealt with particular aspects of the situation. The Assembly demanded Israel's withdrawal from the occupied territories, condemned its aggression and practices against Palestinians, and demanded that its 1980 decision to annex Jerusalem be rescinded (p. 302). The Assembly reaffirmed that peace could not be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinians of their national rights (p. 265). It condemned Israel's annexationist policies in the Golan Heights—in a paragraph adopted by a separate vote (p. 311)—and its aggression against Lebanon (p. 291).

On 9 December, the Assembly adopted three resolutions concerning the Middle East in connection with its consideration of disarmament items. By the first,<sup>(26)</sup> it decided to include in the provisional agenda of its 1982 session the item on establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. By the second,<sup>(27)</sup> the Assembly declared it imperative that Israel place all its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards. By the third,<sup>(28)</sup> the Assembly demanded that Israel renounce any possession of nuclear weapons.

The resolution on the Middle East situation was introduced by Cuba, which stated that it had been prepared in the Arab Group and in a working group of States belonging to the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

Among those voting against the resolution, Israel maintained that its purpose was to impede a peaceful solution of the Arab-Israel conflict, that it contradicted the Security Council's 1967 resolution on principles for a Middle East peace<sup>(30)</sup>—the only basis for a negotiated settlement—and that it was in flagrant violation of the United Nations Charter. The United States said it rejected the Assembly's challenge to its sovereign right to enter into its recent agreement on strategic co-operation with Israel; also, it believed that rejection of the Camp David peace process was irresponsible, that a call for sanctions was beyond the Assembly's competence and that the resolution failed to recognize Israel's right to live in peace.

Chile, El Salvador, the Philippines, Spain and Turkey, which voted for the resolution, expressed reservations on the paragraph on strategic co-operation agreements. Similar reservations were voiced by Ecuador, which abstained on the text as a whole, stating that the agreements cited had been freely contracted by sovereign countries.

The Bahamas, Chile, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Mexico and the Philippines also had reservations on the paragraph by which the Assembly rejected partial agreements and separate treaties. Chile considered that States had the sovereign right to conclude whatever agreements they deemed necessary; the Dominican Republic, which abstained in the vote on the resolution, considered that the agreements in question constituted true contributions to the search for peace. The Philippines voiced reservations also on the paragraph by which the Assembly called on States to end the flow of resources that would encourage Israel to pursue its aggressive policies.

Among those which abstained, Austria said a number of elements were missing in the text, including reference to the Security Council's 1967 resolution and to the right of all States in the area to exist within secure and safe boundaries. Peru thought the resolution contained provocative language and did not include basic elements included in Security Council resolutions. Sweden said that, in addition to the general lack of balance, the resolution included elements it could not accept.

Brazil and Trinidad and Tobago, though voting in favour, voiced doubts on some elements of the resolution. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said its positive vote did not mean that it agreed with all United Nations resolutions cited therein.

Canada and the United States expressed reservations regarding the paragraph on Israeli policies and practices in the occupied Golan Heights (p. 311).

In the debate preceding adoption of this resolution, most speakers listed recognition of Palestinian rights to self-determination and independence and Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, as essential to a Middle East peace. The Palestine question was viewed as the core of the problem. Among those taking this position were Bangladesh, Djibouti, the German Democratic Republic, Indonesia, Mauritania, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, Sri Lanka, Turkey, the USSR and Yugoslavia. In Tunisia's view, true security for Israel meant living in peace with its neighbours, giving up its role as the Prussia of the Middle East, and recognizing the existence of the Palestinian people and their inalienable right to self-determination.

Egypt, which described its 1979 peace treaty with Israel as a glimmer of hope in the area, said peace in the Middle East should be based on twin elements: the right of the Palestinian people to exist as an independent national entity and to security, and Israel's right to existence and security; the conflict could not be resolved without Israel's withdrawal from all the occupied territories.

Israel said the Assembly, in examining the Middle East situation, should not focus exclusively on the Arab-Israel conflict. Tensions in the area were the product of the domestic political situations of Arab régimes and their external behaviour. The framework of the Camp David accords, which had already yielded spectacular results in the form of the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel, carried the potential for an overall solution.

Stating the position of the European Community members, the United Kingdom restated two principles first set out by them in June 1980: the right of all States in the region, including Israel, to existence and security, and justice for all the peoples, including recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinians. Austria saw three elements as necessary to peace: first, recognition of the right of all States in the area, including Israel, to exist within secure and recognized boundaries, and recognition of the national rights of the Palestinians, including the right to have a State of their own; second, the right of the Palestinians to participate in the search for a solution, through representatives of their choice; and third, Israeli withdrawal from the territories occupied in 1967, including Jerusalem.

Finland, Japan, Portugal and Sweden stated that both the Palestinians' right to self-determination and Israel's right to exist must be mutually recognized. Sweden specified that Palestinian rights included the right to an independent State. These countries also urged negotiations between the parties to achieve those goals, with Japan and Sweden adding that PLO must participate. Brazil, Nepal and Senegal stressed four elements: withdrawal of Israel's occupation forces, Palestinian self-determination, PLO participation in peace negotiations, and recognition of the right of all States to live in peace within recognized borders.

Peace could not be achieved, the United States said, without recognizing the legitimate rights of the Palestinians and the right of all States, including Israel, to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries; the only path to peace was through negotiations among those sincerely committed to peace.

The Eastern European States expressed support for a USSR proposal to convene an international conference on the Middle East with the participation of all parties and other nations, including the USSR and the United States. Endorsing this proposal, Bulgaria said its great merit lay in the fact that it provided for a settlement of the whole problem by collective effort, to the benefit of all. Romania also favoured such a conference, stating that it should be convened by the Assembly and that the United Nations should be an active participant.

Oman voiced support for principles for a Middle East settlement suggested earlier in the year by Crown Prince Fahd Ibn Abdul Aziz of Saudi Arabia. Austria, Brazil, Morocco and Turkey also welcomed this initiative.

In the view of Lebanon, any solution of the Middle East crisis that was not based on a solution of the Lebanese problem would lead to a deterioration of the crisis and threaten international peace.

If the Palestine question was not resolved, said the PLO observer, the Middle East question would not be resolved and the situation would deteriorate, leading to a crisis that would reach beyond the Middle East.

Arab States generally were of the view, as expressed by Kuwait, that Israel bore the primary responsibility for the Middle East crisis. The United Arab Emirates spoke of Israeli aggression against the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples as well as its violation of the airspace of Iraq, Lebanon and Saudi Arabia, and propaganda against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Syrian Arab Republic. Eastern European countries took a similar view: Poland, for example, remarked that for years Israel's policy of adventurism had made it impossible to find a lasting and just solution. Sri Lanka said Israel's policies were designed not so much to seek a lasting settlement but rather to establish a State of Israel whose boundaries were visualized in the Biblical context of an undefined greater Israel.

Some countries urged stronger action to ensure implementation of United Nations resolutions by Israel. Djibouti urged that comprehensive mandatory sanctions be applied against Israel to ensure that it abandoned its acts of war against the Arab nation. The German Democratic Republic felt that it was high time to adopt decisive measures against the aggressor, Israel. Indonesia said it was prepared to support any effective measures sanctioned by the United Nations Charter to ensure that resolutions were carried out. Pakistan believed that, if Israel was so impervious to the will of the world community, the Security Council must take firm and decisive action. Mauritania thought the United Nations should multiply all instruments of investigation to ensure that world public opinion knew all aspects of Israeli practices against the Palestinians and other Arabs. Norway, however, stated that any attempt to adopt sanctions against Israel or to deprive it of its right to participate in international organizations would be totally unacceptable and counter-productive.

United States support for Israel, and the signing in November of a strategic agreement between the two countries, were criticized by a number of speakers, including Arab States and socialist States of Eastern Europe. Iran viewed such support as part of an assault on the great Islamic culture. Jordan described it as tantamount to acquiescence in Israeli aggression and called it a hostile act against the entire Middle East, particularly the Palestinians. In Qatar's view, Israel would not have been able to defy United Nations resolutions without the unlimited political, military and economic support of the United States. The Syrian Arab Republic said a balance of forces between the parties was a prerequisite to peace, but the United States and the parties to the Camp David accords had, through their alliance and collaboration, caused an imbalance of forces in the interests of settler and expansionist imperialism. For the Ukrainian SSR, exercises by the United States rapid deployment force, plans to establish a bridgehead in the Middle East in the guise of a so-called multinational force and the conclusion of a strategic agreement—essentially a military pact between the United States and Israel—were means of establishing political, military and economic domination over the region's people and natural resources. Yemen described United States vetoes in the Security Council as a new Israeli weapon brandished before the Arabs.

In Albania's view, both the USSR and the United States were benefiting from Israel's aggressive policies by finding pretexts for their political and military presence in the area and their manoeuvres to control oil deposits and strategic positions, while turning the region into an outlet for their weapons. Algeria criticized the so-called strategic consensus doctrine, stating that it viewed the Middle East in terms of super-Power rivalry as if there were no Israeli-Arab or Israeli-Palestinian problem. Yemen saw this doctrine as a smoke-screen behind which the United States was creating the spectre of a bogus enemy only to shield Israel.

Many Arab States, the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and a number of others were critical of the 1978 Camp David accords between Egypt and Israel, particularly in so far as they dealt with the Palestine question. In Cuba's view, any initiative which disregarded Palestinian rights or attempted to turn the Middle East into a sphere of influence of imperialism would be null and void. Iraq stated that the accords were bound to fail because they did not meet Arab aspirations and did not restore Arab rights or land to the legitimate owners.

The Byelorussian SSR saw the Camp David agreements as contradicting fundamental Arab interests and as designed to split the Arabs and consolidate Israeli colonialism. Speaking of the multinational force which was to be sent to the Sinai peninsula in 1982 under the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel, Czechoslovakia stated that the presence of United States forces would be a new source of tension. In Hungary's view, separate deals based on a partial approach could not fundamentally change the situation, could not eliminate the root cause of the conflict and could never result in a just and lasting settlement. In the view of the USSR, Camp David had exacerbated the Middle East problem, allowing Israel to step up its aggressive acts against the Arabs; with the help of the Camp David collusion, the United States sought to increase its presence in the Middle East and militarize countries there. Yugoslavia considered that separate, partial solutions introduced additional elements of exacerbation; additional efforts must be exerted in the United Nations framework to create conditions for a peaceful solution, with the active and equal participation of all parties.

On the other hand, Egypt said it saw no alternative to its path to peace, and the United States said it was dedicated to the successful completion of the negotiations begun by Egypt and Israel.

During the debate, most speakers also touched on specific aspects of Arab-Israeli relations, considered in greater detail in discussions on other agenda items. These included the Palestine question (p. 266), Israel's policy in the occupied territories (p. 303), the Israeli attack against Iraqi nuclear installations (p. 280), the Golan Heights (p. 311) and the situation in southern Lebanon (p. 283).

94-16-28 (recorded vote) Meeting 103 17 December 1981

5-nation draft (A/36/L.59 and Add.1): agenda item 33.

Sponsors: Cuba, India, Madagascar, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East", Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 11 November 1981.

Welcoming the world-wide support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation in order to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by previous resolutions of the General Assembly relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned that the Arab and Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, still remain under Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations have not been implemented and that the Palestinian people is still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law, as reaffirmed by resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to all the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Reiterating all relevant United Nations resolutions which emphasize that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and the Principles of international law and that Israel must withdraw unconditionally from all the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Reaffirming further the imperative necessity of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter and the principles of international law,

Gravely concerned also at recent Israeli actions involving the escalation and expansion of the conflict in the region, which further violate the principles of international law and endanger international peace and security,

1. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and demands the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all these occupied territories;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that the question of Palestine is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights;

3. Reaffirms further that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization as the representative of the Palestinian people;

4. Declares once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem, under the auspices of the United Nations, which ensures the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and which enables the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to exercise its inalienable rights, including the right to return and the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of its independent sovereign State in Palestine, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relevant to the question of Palestine, in particular General Assembly resolutions ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980 and 38/120 A to F of 10 December 1981;

5. Rejects all partial agreements and separate treaties in so far as they violate the recognized rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of just and comprehensive solutions to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;

6. Deplores Israel's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980 and General Assembly resolution 35/207 of 16 December 1980, determines that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to declare it its "capital", as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status, are null and void and demands that they be rescinded immediately, and calls upon all Member States, the specialized agencies and all other international organizations to abide by the present resolution and all other relevant resolutions, including Assembly resolution 38/120 E;

7. Condemns Israel's aggression and practices against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories and outside these territories, particularly in the Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon, including the expropriation and annexation of territory, the establishment of settlements, assassination attempts and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures, which are in violation of the Charter and the principles of international law and the pertinent international conventions;

8. Strongly condemns Israeli annexationist policies and practices in the occupied Syrian Golan Heights, the establishment of settlements, the confiscation of lands, the diversion of water resources, the intensification of repressive measures against the Syrian citizens therein and the forcible imposition of Israeli citizenship on Syrian nationals, and declares all these measures null and void as they constitute violations of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons In Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

9. Strongly condemns the Israeli aggression against Lebanon and the continuous bombardment and destruction of its cities and villages, and all acts that constitute a violation of its sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and the security of its people and prevent the full implementation of Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, including the full deployment of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon up to the internationally recognized borders;

10. Calls for strict respect of the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon and supports the efforts of the Government of Lebanon, with regional and international endorsement, to restore the exclusive authority of the Lebanese State over all of its territory up to the internationally recognized boundaries;

11. Deplores Israeli violations of the airspace of various Arab countries and demands their immediate cessation;

12. Considers that the agreements on strategic co-operation between the United States of America and Israel signed on 30 November 1981 would encourage Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, would have adverse effects on efforts for the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and would threaten the security of the region;

13. Calls upon all States to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic and financial resources that would encourage it to pursue its aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session a comprehensive report covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Credentials of Israel in the General Assembly

In a letter dated 17 September 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> the Sudan, as Chairman of the Arab Group for September, conveyed the Group's reservations on the credentials of Israel to the 1981 regular session of the General Assembly and its non-recognition of those credentials. The Arab Group based its reservations on what it considered Israel's violation of the United Nations Charter, its defiance of United Nations resolutions on Palestine and the Middle East, its policy of aggression against the Arab peoples and States, and its proclamation of Jerusalem as its capital. Similar reservations by the Islamic Group were conveyed on 18 September by Iraq, Chairman of the Group for September.<sup>(1)</sup>

In letters of 18 September<sup>(2)</sup> and 22 September,<sup>(3)</sup> Israel stated that its credentials had been accepted by the Credentials Committee and that the reservations were attempts to abuse the credentials procedure in order to introduce extraneous matters. The first letter added that such an approach was liable to affect adversely the ability of the United Nations to perform its primary functions for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Palestine question

The Palestine question continued in 1981 to be a concern of the General Assembly and of its Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. In addition to their consideration of the political aspects of the problem, United Nations bodies continued to examine the situation in the territories occupied by Israel (p. 300) and to provide and encourage assistance to Palestinians (p. 273).

Also, the Commission on Human Rights, on 11 February, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination without external interference and the establishment of a fully independent and sovereign State in Palestine (p. 956).

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE ON PALESTINIAN RIGHTS. The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People continued to follow developments in the territories occupied by Israel and actions by Israel which the Committee regarded as violations of international law or of United Nations resolutions. The Committee brought such actions, including Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, expropriation by Israeli authorities of Arab-owned lands and other matters affecting the rights of the Palestinians, to the attention of the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.

In its report,<sup>(2)</sup> submitted to the Assembly under a covering letter dated 15 September, the Committee expressed again its conviction that positive action by the Security Council on the Committee's recommendations would create the necessary conditions for a just and lasting peace. It, therefore, unanimously decided to reiterate the validity of the recommendations it had first made in 1976<sup>(15)</sup> and which had been repeatedly endorsed by the General Assembly. These called, among other things, for the establishment by the Council of a timetable for Israeli withdrawal, a United Nations take-over of the evacuated territories, handing the territories over to the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) as representative of the Palestinian people, and establishment of an independent Palestinian entity.

The Committee also recommended four principles to guide the Council: (1) the Palestine question was at the heart of the Middle East problem and no solution could be envisaged without taking into account the rights of the Palestinian people; (2) the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinians to return to their homes and to self-determination, independence and national sovereignty would contribute to resolving the Middle East crisis; (3) the participation of PLO, the representative of the Palestinian people, on an equal footing, was indispensable in all efforts, deliberations and conferences on the Middle East under United Nations auspices; and (4) the acquisition of territory by force was inadmissible and Israel must withdraw completely from all occupied territory.

The Committee again declared that all agreements and treaties that could affect the Palestinians' future, their inalienable rights and the status of the occupied Palestinian territories, and which ignored, infringed, violated or denied those rights or were negotiated without PLO participation, contravened Assembly resolutions and had no validity.

During the year, the Committee Chairman sent several letters to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council on developments in the territories occupied by Israel and in Lebanon. These dealt with the confiscation of Arab lands (p. 300), excavations affecting historic Islamic buildings in Jerusalem (p. 316), the Israeli project for a canal linking the Mediterranean and Dead Seas (p. 319) and the effects of Israeli attacks in Lebanon (pp. 285 and 289).

By a letter of 23 October to the Security Council President,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee Chairman said the Committee would be grateful if the Council acted on a December 1980 resolution<sup>(4)</sup> by which the Assembly requested the Council to consider adopting effective measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter (covering enforcement action) in the light of Israel's non-compliance with relevant United Nations resolutions.

The Committee met at United Nations Headquarters on 30 November in observance of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People. Addressing the meeting, the Chairman said it was part of a campaign to end the injustice foisted on the Palestinian people and a way of drawing attention to a situation which threatened peace. The New York meeting and a similar one at Geneva were addressed by a number of United Nations officials and government representatives.

With the Committee's participation, two seminars on Palestinian rights were organized by the United Nations Secretariat's Special Unit on Palestinian Rights, the first at Colombo, Sri Lanka, from 10 to 14 August, and the second at Havana, Cuba, from 31 August to 4 September. The reports of the seminars were annexed to the Committee's report to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted six resolutions on the Palestine question. Two of these dealt with general aspects and the rest with specific aspects of the question—the status of Jerusalem,<sup>(16)</sup> the convening of an International Conference on the Question of Palestine,<sup>(8)</sup> the work programme of the Committee on Palestinian rights,<sup>(6)</sup> and the strengthening of the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights.<sup>(7)</sup> All of these resolutions were introduced by Senegal on behalf of their sponsors, which included members of the Committee on Palestinian rights.

By the first of its general resolutions,<sup>(9)</sup> the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and a sovereign State, and reaffirmed that just and lasting peace could not be established without Israeli withdrawal from all occupied territories and a just solution to the Palestine problem. It expressed opposition to all policies and plans to resettle the Palestinians outside their homeland, and demanded Israel's complete and unconditional withdrawal from all occupied territories, including Jerusalem. It called for PLO participation on an equal footing in all efforts, deliberations and conferences on the Palestine question and the Middle East situation under United Nations auspices. It endorsed the recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian rights and requested the Security Council to consider adopting effective measures to implement them.

The Assembly also called for the early return of the Palestinians to their homes and property in Palestine (p. 333) and demanded Israel's compliance with United Nations resolutions on Jerusalem (p. 269).

This 18-nation resolution was adopted, as revised by its sponsors, by a recorded vote of 111 to 13, with 20 abstentions. Paragraph 9, by which the Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendations and drew the Security Council's attention to the fact that action on them was long overdue, was adopted by a recorded vote of 96 to 16, with 26 abstentions.

By the second of its two general resolutions on the Palestine question,<sup>(11)</sup> the Assembly expressed strong opposition to all partial agreements and separate treaties which flagrantly violated the rights of the Palestinian people, and declared that agreements and separate treaties had no validity in so far as they purported to determine the future of the Palestinians and of the occupied Palestinian territories. It declared that no State had the right to undertake any actions, measures or negotiations that could affect the future of the Palestinian people, its inalienable rights and the occupied Palestinian territories, without PLO participation on an equal footing; and decided that all actions, measures and negotiations to implement such accords and agreements were null and void in so far as they purported to determine the future of the Palestinians and the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel.

This 14-nation resolution, revised by its sponsors, was adopted by a recorded vote of 88 to 21, with 36 abstentions.

The Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December on the Middle East situation,<sup>(12)</sup> reaffirmed its conviction that the Palestine question was the core of the Middle East conflict and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region would be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights.

By a resolution of 28 October on the right of peoples to self-determination,<sup>(5)</sup> the Assembly strongly condemned the expansionist activities of Israel in the Middle East and the continuous bombing of Palestinian civilians as a serious obstacle to the realization of the self-determination and independence of the Palestinian people. This paragraph, and another condemning Israeli aggression against Lebanon (p. 291), was orally revised by its sponsor (Angola, on behalf of the African Group); the original paragraph would have had the Assembly condemn Israel's expansionist activities in the Middle East, such as constant violations of the territorial integrity of Lebanon and the continuous bombing of civilian, and in particular Palestinian, population and the destruction of their villages and encampments, as a serious obstacle to the realization of self-determination and independence of the Palestinian people. By the same resolution, the Assembly also urged States and international organizations to support the Palestinian people through its representative, PLO, in its struggle to restore its right to self-determination and independence.

Canada, Israel, Norway and the United States, which voted against the 18-nation resolution on the Palestine question, and Costa Rica, which abstained, argued that it lacked balance, prejudged elements which should be resolved by negotiation and did not reflect the principles for a Middle East settlement contained in Security Council resolutions of 1967<sup>(13)</sup> and 1973.<sup>(14)</sup> Chile voted for the resolution but objected to two of its provisions; in its view, the Assembly had exceeded its powers in requesting the Council to consider adopting measures to implement the recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian rights, and the Assembly should not grant exclusive representation to PLO until the Palestinians exercised their right to self-determination.

Also voting for the resolution, Iraq said the mention in its preamble of the Assembly's 1947 resolution on the partition of Palestine<sup>(5)</sup> did not prevent the Palestinian people from determining their own fate and establishing a State. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said its vote did not alter its position towards the 1947 resolution.

Reservations to paragraph 9, on the Committee's recommendations, were voiced by Argentina, Egypt, New Zealand, Peru, Portugal, Spain and Sweden. Argentina said the paragraph made critical judgements on partial efforts already made towards peace and security. Egypt could not agree with what it called the insinuations in the Committee's statement about the invalidity of agreements that violated Palestinian rights. New Zealand, speaking of this paragraph and the one on Israeli withdrawal, said account must also be taken of the principles on termination of belligerency and respect for the right of every State to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries. Spain did not want to prejudice its position in the Security Council.

Explaining its vote against the resolution on partial agreements, Canada said it was short-sighted to dismiss by implication the efforts being made within the framework of the Camp David accords to lay the groundwork for a comprehensive settlement. Israel said the resolution sought to hamper the only constructive peace process that had emerged with regard to the Arab-Israel conflict; the Assembly had no authority to question the validity of those accords. The United States considered it wrong for the Assembly to attack a treaty designed to lead to a just and lasting peace, or to attempt to undermine a process aimed at settling the Palestine problem in the absence of a realistic alternative.

Among those abstaining on this resolution, Chile challenged the Assembly's competence to question the validity of international agreements and said it would support all peace initiatives based on the use of peaceful settlement procedures envisaged by the United Nations Charter. Ecuador thought the United Nations should aim to promote peace and not foment tensions or criticize steps that could lead to a settlement. In Egypt's view, the resolution tended to restrict the right of States to work for a just solution to the Palestine problem and a lasting Middle East peace; moreover, Egypt rejected the simplistic and prejudicial insertion in Assembly resolutions of notions about the invalidity of certain international agreements. Peru thought the resolution limited the right of States to enter into treaties and seek peaceful solutions to the Palestine question.

Among those voting for the resolution, Costa Rica said any agreement which claimed to dispose of the Palestinians' future without their participation lacked validity and effectiveness; however, Costa Rica endorsed any peace agreement, and specifically the Camp David accords, which tended to consolidate peace between Egypt and Israel. Thailand said it would have abstained if there had been a separate vote on the paragraph by which the Assembly reaffirmed its rejection of provisions of the accords which ignored, infringed, violated or denied the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

In the Assembly's debate on the Palestine question, Israel stated that the Palestinian Arabs already had their own independent State—Jordan—and there was no justification for the creation of a second one. As to the call for the return to the territorial status quo prevailing before June 1967, no responsible Government would agree to return to those totally insecure lines; to do so would be suicidal for Israel. PLO had advocated a two-stage policy to do away with Israel: establishment of a second Palestinian Arab State, and the use of that State as a launching pad for the attempted overthrow of Israel. If the United Nations had a contribution to make, it was to encourage the Arab States to negotiate with Israel directly, without pre-conditions.

Jordan stated that Israel could not solve the problem of the Palestinian people's dispersal and exile by dumping them on Jordan, Lebanon or any other Arab country; the Palestinians would accept no place other than their ancestral homeland. Lebanon said Israel would have no peace as long as the Palestinians sought their homeland while Israel drove them out, thus spreading the war to all the other Arab countries. Israel and its collaborators might think the Palestinian people would yield to force, repression and terrorism, said Bahrain, but the new generation was no less enthusiastic than past generations in its desire to regain its rights.

In the view of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, peace would not come to the Arab world as long as the Zionists adhered to their thesis founded on the creation of a Zionist State and the expulsion of the Arabs in order to replace them by a larger number of immigrants. Zambia stated that Israel and its supporters should have the magnanimity and courage to change their policies and demonstrate willingness to recognize the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, including their right to a national homeland in Palestine.

Albania stated that the Palestinians were engaged in an unequal but heroic struggle against a number of savage enemies: Israel, which had robbed them of their motherland; the United States, which supported Israel and had turned it into the faithful guardian of its interests in the Middle East; the USSR, which was engaged in a fierce struggle with the United States to the detriment of the Arabs; and Arab reactionary forces, which had on more than one occasion stabbed the Palestinians in the back.

Egypt said the solution of the Palestinian problem must be based on Israel's withdrawal from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, evacuation of its military and civilian presence and its settlements, security measures applying mutually and equally to the Palestinians and the Israelis, and the right of the Palestinians to create their own independent State in the West Bank at the end of a limited transitional period.

Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Malaysia, Mongolia, Romania, Sri Lanka, Turkey, the USSR and Viet Nam—together with the Arab countries—were among those advocating recognition of the right of the Palestinians to their own independent State. These States also called for the participation of PLO as a full partner in the peace process.

China said it would always support the just struggle of the Palestinian and Arab peoples for the restoration of their national rights and the recovery of their lost lands. Japan's position was that both the Palestinians' right to self-determination—including the right to establish an independent State—and Israel's right to exist must be mutually recognized and that PLO must participate in the peace process. Sri Lanka paid tribute to PLO for having succeeded against tremendous obstacles in unifying a dispersed people in a common commitment to their goals of a return to their lands, self-determination and an independent State in Palestine. Within the framework of its support for the heroic struggle of the Palestinians, said the USSR, it had granted diplomatic status to the PLO mission in Moscow.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community (EC) members, said the essence of any solution must be the reconciliation of Israel and the Palestinian people, so that those two realities could live together in peace and security. The United States said a just and lasting settlement must provide for both the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and for Israel's recognition by all its Arab neighbours; as long as PLO endorsed the destruction of a United Nations Member State, the United States did not believe it had any role to play in deliberations to resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict.

A number of States, including Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Indonesia, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and Viet Nam, urged Security Council action against Israel to ensure a solution to the Palestine problem. The Sudan said the Council's inability to assume its responsibilities allowed Israel to pursue its policy of depriving the Palestinians of their rights. The United Arab Emirates ascribed the Council's inaction to the position of certain countries, primarily the United States, which continued to deny Palestinian rights.

The PLO observer said that, if Israel was not restrained and if the full rights of the Palestinian people, foremost among which was the right to establish their own independent State on their national soil, were not recognized, it would be fatally naïve not to expect more problems and complications.

With regard to the issue of agreements and treaties bearing on the Palestine question, the Eastern European countries and a number of Arab States contended that the Camp David agreements between Egypt and Israel, and the negotiations between those States in regard to further agreements, threatened the rights of the Palestinians.

Algeria said the impasse reached in the Camp David peace attempt was to be expected, since it was based on a denial of the Palestinians' national rights. Democratic Yemen viewed the accords as designed to consolidate Israeli aggression and to transform the problem into one of "autonomy" for the Palestinians instead of recognition of their right to their own State. Iraq stated that the Camp David agreements amounted to recognition of aggression and occupation and a denial of legitimate Palestinian rights. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said it rejected the Camp David accords; it rejected any conspiracy against Palestinian rights and refused to ratify aggression and occupation as well as the policy of fait accompli which some were trying to impose on the Arab nation. In the view of the Syrian Arab Republic, the American-Israeli-Egyptian alliance was trying, through the Camp David agreements, to eliminate the Palestinian cause and extend the domination of imperialism and zionism throughout the Middle East. Tunisia said the Camp David process had been reduced by Israel to a separate peace in which it was giving free rein to its expansionist policy in the occupied territories.

The PLO observer confirmed his organization's continued rejection of the Camp David accords adding it would fight to the utmost against the plot called "administrative civil autonomy".

Albania said the accords totally ignored the inalienable national rights of the Palestinians. Bulgaria and Hungary stated that agreements and plans arrived at behind the back of the Arab peoples, without PLO participation and not aimed at solving the Palestinian problem, were doomed to fail. The Byelorussian SSR said the Camp David deal was a tool used by Israeli and United States politicians for their own purposes, at the expense of Palestinian rights. Czechoslovakia described the process as anti-Arab, concluded without the participation of the Palestinians and against their will. Mongolia said the negotiations on so-called administrative autonomy for the Palestinians on the West Bank and in the Gaza sector were nothing more than an attempt to maintain the occupation of the Arab territories in a new form. The Ukrainian SSR and the USSR added that those negotiations were aimed at avoiding a just solution of the Palestine question.

Cuba stated that any attempt to promote piecemeal agreements or resolve the question without PLO participation, as in the case of the Camp David accords, was invalid. The Palestine question would be solved, said Iran, only if the Palestinians remained faithful to their principles and refused to adhere to compromising plans like that of Camp David.

Egypt said the accord it had signed was a first step towards a just and comprehensive settlement of the problem in all aspects and envisaged a limited transitional phase during which the occupied Palestinian territories would pass from Israeli domination and occupation to the authority and control of the Palestinian people, paving the way to self-determination and permitting peaceful coexistence between Palestinians and Israelis leading to mutual recognition.

Israel stated that the Camp David framework invited the Palestinian Arab residents of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza District to play an active role in shaping their future, by calling on them to participate in current negotiations, in negotiations which would determine the final status of the areas they lived in, and in eventual negotiations on a peace treaty between Israel and Jordan. Difficult problems remained in the negotiations for autonomy, but Israel was determined not to relax its efforts.

The United States said the Camp David accords deserved United Nations support; they offered the surest guarantee that Palestinian rights would be respected and provided a formula for Palestinian participation in forging their future.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the recommendations contained therein,

Having heard the statement of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people,

Expressing its extreme concern that no just solution to the problem of Palestine has been achieved and that this problem therefore continues to aggravate the Middle East conflict, of which it is the core, and to endanger international peace and security,

Reaffirming that a just and comprehensive lasting peace in the Middle East requires a just solution to the problem of Palestine through the attainment by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights,

Resolutely emphasizing the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Recognizing the need to work for a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, Recalling and reaffirming its previous relevant resolutions, particularly resolutions 181(II) of 29 November 1947, 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 3236(XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980.

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property in Palestine, from which they have been displaced and uprooted, and calls for their early return;

2. Reaffirms also the inalienable rights in Palestine of the Palestinian people, including:

(a) The right to self-determination without external interference, and to national independence and sovereignty;

(b) The right to establish its own independent sovereign State;

3. Reaffirms, in particular, that a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East cannot be established without the withdrawal of Israel from all the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, and without the achievement of a just solution of the problem of Palestine on the basis of the attainment by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights in Palestine, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

4. Expresses its opposition to all policies and plans aimed at the resettlement of the Palestinians outside their homeland;

5. Demands that Israel should withdraw completely and unconditionally from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem, with all property and services intact;

6. Further demands that Israel should fully comply with all the resolutions of the United Nations relevant to the historic character of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478 (1980) of 20 August 1980, and rejects the enactment of a "Basic Law" by the Israel Knesset proclaiming Jerusalem the capital of Israel;

7. Demands that Israel should fully comply with the provisions, in particular, of Security Council resolution 465(1980) adopted unanimously on 1 March 1980;

8. Reaffirms the basic principle that the future of the Palestinian people can only be considered with its participation and calls for the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, in all efforts, deliberations and conferences on the question of Palestine and on the situation in the Middle East to be held under the auspices of the United Nations, on an equal footing and on the basis of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

9. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People contained in paragraphs 49 to 53 of its report and draws the attention of the Security Council to the fact that action on the Committee's recommendations, as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 31/20 of 24 November 1976, is long overdue;

10. Requests the Security Council to convene in order to consider the situation and the adoption of effective measures to implement the recommendations of the Committee as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 31/20;

Status of Jerusalem

The General Assembly, on 10 December 1981, adopted a resolution on the status of Jerusalem<sup>(2)</sup> by a recorded vote of 139 to 2, with 4 abstentions. By that resolution, sponsored by 18 States, it determined once again that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel which altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" and the proclamation of Jerusalem as Israel's capital (1978), were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith. The Assembly reaffirmed its resolution not to recognize the "Basic Law" and other Israeli actions that, as a result of that law, sought to alter the character and status of Jerusalem. It urged States and international organizations not to conduct any business not in conformity with the relevant resolutions, and demanded that Israel fully comply with all United Nations resolutions on the historic character of the city.

Paragraph 2, by which the Assembly affirmed that Israel's actions on this matter constituted a serious obstacle to a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, and a threat to international peace and security, was adopted by a recorded vote of 113 to 2, with 26 abstentions.

A demand that Israel comply with United Nations resolutions on Jerusalem was included in a 10 December resolution on the Palestine question, in which the Assembly also rejected the enactment of the "Basic Law" on Jerusalem.<sup>(1)</sup>

By a resolution of 17 December on the Middle East situation,<sup>(3)</sup> the Assembly determined that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to declare it its capital, as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status, were null and void. It demanded that they be rescinded immediately and called on all Member States, specialized agencies and other international organizations to abide by the relevant resolutions.

Voting against the resolution on Jerusalem, Israel said a united Jerusalem would remain the eternal capital of Israel. The United States said that, while unilateral actions on Jerusalem could not prejudice the city's ultimate status, it had voted negatively because the resolution lacked any reference to negotiations among the parties and because the mention of a threat to peace and security raised the implication of sanctions.

Although voting for the resolution, Canada, Portugal and the United Kingdom, the last speaking for the EC members, stated reservations to the reference to international peace and security in paragraph 2; Canada and Portugal said such a finding was within the Security Council's competence. Sweden had strong objections to that paragraph.

The resolution was adopted following the Assembly's debate on the Palestine question, in which a number of speakers condemned Israel's actions with regard to the status of Jerusalem.

The Comoros said it could not agree to the city's current status, which was based on hatred, selfishness and usurpation. Cuba said the Israeli action showed scorn for the feelings of the majority of mankind and the intolerant and exclusivist nature of zionism. India stated that Jerusalem was part of the territories that must be vacated by Israel. For Kuwait, Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem indicated that its policies were based on expansionism, domination and usurpation, reflecting a racist philosophy that insulted man and his spiritual values. Israel did not care, said Malaysia, if its actions offended the feelings of billions of people who attached deep spiritual and cultural values to the city.

Morocco stated that Israel's actions, to the detriment of inalienable Arab rights over the city as well as Islamic religious feelings, had given rise to a justified reaction throughout the world. Nigeria regarded the Israeli action as an affront to Arab and Islamic people everywhere. Jerusalem could not become the spoils of war, declared Pakistan; it must be returned to Arab sovereignty. Tunisia saw Israel's actions as a flagrant violation of United Nations resolutions, defiance of the opinions of millions of believers throughout the world and an inadmissible attack, on the right of the inhabitants to self-determination. Turkey said Israel's continued failure to comply with United Nations resolutions on Jerusalem would make a solution of the Palestine question more difficult.

Speaking for the EC members, the United Kingdom said they could accept no unilateral initiative aimed at changing the status of Jerusalem.

Israel stated that any assault on Jerusalem, political or otherwise, was an assault on Israel as a whole. United Jerusalem epitomized the restoration of Israeli sovereignty in its homeland. At the same time, Israel was conscious of the city's deep meaning and concern for Christians and Moslems as well as Jews.

The Assembly dealt during 1981 with other matters pertaining to Jerusalem, especially the protection of cultural property there (p. 316).

Deploing the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, the demographic composition, the institutional structure and the status of the Holy City of Jerusalem,

Convening of a Conference on the Question of Palestine

On 10 December 1981, the General Assembly decided to convene, under United Nations auspices, an International Conference on the Question of Palestine not later than 1984.<sup>(1)</sup> It authorized the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People to act as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference and to recommend its site and scheduling. United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations were invited to co-operate.

The resolution was sponsored by 15 countries and adopted by a recorded vote of 122 to 4, with 20 abstentions.

Canada, explaining its vote against the resolution, said it doubted whether the Conference could make any contribution to resolving the essential problem of getting the parties together to negotiate a settlement of their differences. Israel stated that the Conference was not likely to advance the cause of peace; it would only involve the squandering of $700,000. The United States said that, in the absence of agreement on basic issues arrived at in advance among all interested States, such conferences were doomed to failure; to hold one for propaganda purposes was mischievous.

Sweden, which abstained in the vote, said it believed that a decision to hold an international conference on the basis provided was not likely to produce positive results.

The United Kingdom, on behalf of the EC members, said they believed that the convening of an international conference would be worth while only if it was likely to assist progress towards a just, lasting and comprehensive peace settlement.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, particularly resolutions 31/20 of 24 November 1976 and ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980,

Gravely concerned that no just solution to the problem of Palestine has been achieved and that this problem therefore continues to aggravate the Middle East conflict, of which it is the core, and to endanger international peace and security,

Convinced that wider international recognition of the facts underlying the question of Palestine will lead to a just solution of the problem,

Recognizing that a lasting peace in the Middle East requires a just solution of the problem of Palestine through the attainment and exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights,

Emphasizing the need for a comprehensive effort to seek effective ways and means to enable the Palestinian people to attain and to exercise those rights,

1. Decides to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, an international Conference on the Question of Palestine not later than 1984, on the basis of General Assembly resolution ES-7/2;

2. Authorizes the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People to act as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference and to take all the necessary steps for its organization, to hold sessions particularly for this purpose and to make recommendations regarding, inter alia, the site, scheduling of and participation in the Conference, and the provisional agenda of the Conference;

3. Invites all appropriate United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to co-operate with the Committee in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint a Secretary-General of the Conference and to provide all the necessary assistance to the Committee in the organization of the Conference.

Work programme of the Committee on Palestinian rights

On 10 December 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly requested the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People to keep the Palestine question under review and to report to the Assembly or the Security Council. It authorized the Committee to continue to promote the implementation of its recommendations; requested the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine and other United Nations bodies associated with the Palestine question to co-operate fully with the Committee; and urged United Nations bodies to act in accordance with the Committee's implementation programme.

The 18-nation resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 121 to 2, with 23 abstentions.

Voting against the resolution, Israel stated that the United Nations was being asked to squander resources on a Committee which had proved itself utterly biased and irresponsible.

The United States said the highly partisan Committee and the United Nations Secretariat's Special Unit on Palestinian Rights (see below) seriously undermined the dignity, objectivity and moral authority of the United Nations. Portugal, which voted for the resolution, said it had reservations on some provisions; its support did not imply a change in position regarding the resolutions mentioned in the preamble.

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Committee to keep the situation relating to the question of Palestine under review and to report and make suggestions to the General Assembly or the Security Council, as appropriate;

3. Authorizes the Committee to continue to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations, to send delegations or representatives to international conferences where such representation would be considered by it to be appropriate, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session and thereafter;

4. Requests the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, established under General Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, as well as other United Nations bodies associated with the question of Palestine, to co-operate fully with the Committee and to make available to it, at its request, the relevant information and documentation which they have at their disposal;

5. Decides to circulate the report of the Committee to all the competent bodies of the United Nations and urges them to take the necessary action, as appropriate, in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Committee with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks.

Strengthening the Unit on Palestinian Rights

By a resolution of 10 December 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights continued to discharge its tasks, to provide the Unit with additional resources, to redesignate it in keeping with the political importance of its work and its expanded programme, and to ensure the continued co-operation of the Department of Public Information and other Secretariat units. The Assembly authorized the annual organization of a seminar in North America, in addition to regional seminars (previously authorized), broader dissemination of the Unit's publications and their translation into more languages, and the production of a film on Palestinian rights and other visual material.

The 16-nation resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 119 to 3, with 22 abstentions.

Explaining its negative vote, Israel Said the Unit worked for all practical purposes under the guidance of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and the proposals in the resolution involved a gross misuse of United Nations resources. The United States, speaking in the debate on the Palestine question, deplored the activities of the Unit and the Committee on Palestinian rights (see above), stated that they had allowed themselves to become instruments in PLO hands, and said the United States Congress had agreed again in 1981, as it had done since 1978, that the United States should withhold any contribution in support of those bodies.

Portugal, which voted for the resolution, voiced the same reservations it had to the resolution on the work programme of the Committee on Palestinian rights.<sup>(1)</sup>

In the debate on the Palestine question, a number of delegations praised the Unit for its contribution to a better understanding of that question.

Assistance to Palestinians

During 1981, United Nations assistance was being provided to Palestinians in the West Bank and neighbouring Arab States. This was in addition to aid provided to Palestine refugees by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (p. 325).

Assistance in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip continued to be financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). By the end of 1981, 11 of the 17 projects for those areas authorized by the UNDP Governing Council in 1979 were under implementation or prepared for implementation and some had been largely completed. Among the projects under way (with their planned costs in parentheses) were: provision of furniture and equipment to primary schools ($245,000), organization of technical and vocational courses ($354,320), provision of fellowships for health manpower development ($948,000), furnishing of supplies and equipment to health institutions ($668,000) and assistance to children's institutions ($584,000).

The Governing Council, on 23 June,<sup>(7)</sup> authorized the UNDP Administrator to increase, where necessary, the notional amount of expenditures for individual projects, keeping within the allocation of $3.5 million from the UNDP Programme Reserve which the Council had authorized in 1979.<sup>(8)</sup>

UNDP also continued to finance regional activities benefiting Palestinians either directly or indirectly. For example, the Institute of Education at Amman, Jordan, the Regional Institute for Training and Research in Statistics at Baghdad, Iraq, and the Arab Planning Institute in Kuwait, which provided training and research facilities for Palestinian students and scholars, continued to receive UNDP assistance in an amount of $5.2 million by the end of 1981.

The Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), on 29 May,<sup>(1)</sup> after examining a report on UNIDO assistance to Palestinians, took note with appreciation of the participation of Palestinian trainees in group training programmes organized by UNIDO and sought the expansion of those activities. It noted with regret that other technical assistance projects had not been implemented, and condemned and deplored the obstacles placed by Israeli occupying authorities which had prevented UNIDO officials from visiting the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip. The Board urged the UNIDO secretariat to take all possible measures to increase technical assistance to the Palestinian people in co-operation with PLO, and requested a further progress report from the UNIDO Executive Director in 1982, including proposals on ways of expanding the programme. These conclusions were adopted by 26 votes to 1 (United States), with 11 abstentions.

The Commission on Human Settlements requested on 6 May<sup>(3)</sup> that the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements continue efforts to implement General Assembly resolutions on assistance to the Palestinian people and to report the results to the Commission in 1982. The Commission also urged the Assembly to deplore the occupying authorities in Palestine for the obstacles set up to hinder the implementation of these resolutions and to reiterate the necessity of implementing them.

The United Nations Children's Fund spent $482,100 in 1981 on assistance to Palestinian mothers and children in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, for health, education, family welfare and social welfare services. This included $219,100 in the West Bank and Gaza for kindergarten teacher training, furniture and equipment, musical instruments and other supplies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. In response to an Assembly request of December 1980,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council in June 1981 a report on assistance to the Palestinian people rendered by 22 United Nations organs and organizations.<sup>(2)</sup> The Council, on 22 July, decided to transmit the report to the Assembly.<sup>(6)</sup> This decision was adopted, without vote, on recommendation of the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, which approved the draft without vote on 10 July, as orally proposed by its Chairman.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted, by 99 votes to 2, with 18 abstentions, a resolution on assistance to the Palestinian people.<sup>(5)</sup> By this resolution, the Assembly urged United Nations organizations to take steps, in consultation and co-operation with PLO, for the full implementation of resolutions on assistance to the Palestinians. It strongly urged all parties to facilitate the full implementation of all the projects approved by the UNDP Governing Council and requested UNDP to undertake direct execution of the projects in the occupied Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem, in co-ordination with local Palestinian organizations and bodies. It requested that United Nations assistance to the Palestinians in the Arab host countries should be rendered in consultation with the parties concerned and in accordance with United Nations resolutions. Finally, it requested another progress report from the Secretary-General in 1982.

This resolution was recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text on 20 November by a recorded vote of 112 to 2, with 21 abstentions. The 39-nation draft, revised three times by its sponsors, was introduced by Pakistan.

Explaining in the Second Committee its vote against the resolution, Israel stated that it was not opposed to rendering assistance to the Palestinians provided that the assistance was for the direct benefit of the population and not PLO. The United States, which also voted against, said it rejected the introduction of political elements alien to the Committee's economic and humanitarian concerns.

The United Kingdom, explaining the abstentions of the European Community (EC) members, said they had not changed their position on the paragraph urging co-operation with PLO as representative of the Palestinian people; moreover, in referring to the occupied Palestinian territories, the text should have specified the territories occupied by Israel since 1967.

Voting for the resolution, Japan said it supported United Nations assistance to national liberation movements.

Situation between individual Arab States and Israel

Iraq and Israel

On 7 June 1981, Israeli aircraft bombed the Tuwaitha nuclear research centre near Baghdad. The action was condemned by the Security Council on 19 June and by the General Assembly on 13 November.

COMMUNICATIONS. On 8 June, by a letter to the Security Council President,<sup>(3)</sup> the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq requested an immediate meeting of the Council to deal with what he described as a grave act of aggression. At 1837 hours on 7 June, he stated, Israeli war-planes had raided Baghdad with the object of destroying the nuclear reactor installations. Iraq was a party to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons<sup>(46)</sup> and not a single violation by Iraq of the nuclear safeguards agreement (drawn up in accordance with that Treaty) had ever been registered by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). In a further letter of 10 June,<sup>(4)</sup> the Iraqi Foreign Minister stated that the attack by nine Israeli aircraft was not the first of its kind, as there had been two raids aimed at the nuclear installations on 27 September 1980.

Israel, on 8 June,<sup>(6)</sup> transmitted to the Council President and to the Secretary-General a special announcement of the same date by its Government, stating that a raid by the Israel Air Force had destroyed the "Osirak" (Tamuz-1) reactor and that all aircraft had returned safely to base. Israel had learnt that the reactor was designed to produce atomic bombs whose target would have been Israel, as the ruler of Iraq had announced after an Iranian raid which had slightly damaged the reactor. Under no circumstances would Israel allow an enemy to develop weapons of mass destruction against it. On 19 October,<sup>(9)</sup> Israel transmitted a document issued by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs and its Atomic Energy Commission detailing information on what was described as Iraq's preparations for the production by 1985 of nuclear weapons whose principal target was to be Israel.

By a telegram of 12 June,<sup>(1)</sup> the IAEA Director-General transmitted a resolution of that date by which the Agency's Board of Governors condemned Israel for the attack and recommended that consideration be given to suspending its membership rights in IAEA (p. 279). The records of the Board's discussion (9-12 June) were transmitted on 15 June.<sup>(2)</sup>

By a letter of 15 June,<sup>(7)</sup> Israel reaffirmed its support for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East (p. 49).

A number of States sent letters or statements to the Council President condemning Israel's action as an act of aggression, a violation of international law and a threat to world peace. Letters were received from Egypt,<sup>(22)</sup> Japan<sup>(29)</sup> and Spain<sup>(37)</sup> (9 June); Panama<sup>(33)</sup> (10 June); the German Democratic Republic,<sup>(23)</sup> Pakistan,<sup>(32)</sup> the Philippines,<sup>(10)</sup> Tunisia<sup>(12)</sup> and the USSR<sup>(40)</sup> (11 June); Hungary,<sup>(26)</sup> India,<sup>(27)</sup> Qatar,<sup>(35)</sup> Romania,<sup>(36)</sup> Viet Nam<sup>(41)</sup> and Zambia<sup>(43)</sup> (12 June); Bangladesh<sup>(18)</sup> (13 June); Czechoslovakia,<sup>(20)</sup> Grenada,<sup>(24)</sup> Indonesia<sup>(28)</sup> and Poland<sup>(34)</sup> (15 June); Democratic Yemen<sup>(21)</sup> and Guyana<sup>(25)</sup>

(16 June); Jordan, transmitting a letter of 10 June from King Hussein to the United States President,<sup>(30)</sup> and Suriname<sup>(38)</sup> (17 June); and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya<sup>(31)</sup> (18 June). The Czechoslovak statement asked that the Council decide on the imposition of sanctions against Israel; the Libyan letter suggested the application of Article 6 of the Charter of the United Nations (which provides for the expulsion from the United Nations of a State that persistently violates Charter principles).

On 12 June,<sup>(42)</sup> Yemen forwarded to the Council President and the Secretary-General a resolution adopted at Baghdad on 11 June by the Council of the League of Arab States, by which the Council condemned the Israeli aggression; affirmed the right of all States to establish technological and nuclear development programmes for peaceful purposes; and called on the States that supported Israel and provided it with economic, political, military and technological aid, notably the United States, to put an end to the Israeli aggression and to terminate such aid.

On 16 June,<sup>(19)</sup> Cuba transmitted a communique adopted by an extraordinary plenary meeting of non-aligned countries held in New York on that day, stating that the meeting had condemned the Israeli aggression; affirmed the right of countries to develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes; called on all States, in particular the United States, to refrain from economic, political, military and technological aid to Israel; and called on the Security Council to take effective measures against Israel in accordance with Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter (on action with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace and acts of aggression).

On 17 June,<sup>(11)</sup> the Philippines forwarded a statement by the Foreign Ministers of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, describing the Israeli attack as a dangerous and irresponsible act that would escalate tension in the area and seriously threaten peace. Also on 17 June,<sup>(16)</sup> the Acting Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) transmitted a decision adopted on 15 June at Nairobi, Kenya, by the OAU Council of Ministers, stating that the Israeli act of aggression was further proof of its arrogance.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION. On 19 June, the Security Council unanimously adopted a resolution<sup>(52)</sup> prepared in the course of consultations, by which it strongly condemned Israel's attack; called on Israel to refrain from any such acts or threats; considered that the attack constituted a serious threat to the IAEA safeguards regime; fully recognized the inalienable sovereign right of Iraq and all other States, especially the developing countries, to establish nuclear development programmes for peaceful purposes, consistent with the objectives of nuclear non-proliferation; called on Israel urgently to place its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards; and considered that Iraq was entitled to appropriate redress for the destruction it had suffered.

Speaking after the Council acted, Israel rejected the resolution as biased, one-sided and ignoring the fact that, in removing a nuclear threat to its existence, Israel had exercised its legitimate right of self-defence.

Iraq said it was not satisfied with the resolution, as it did not include sanctions; the resolution could have been a better reflection of world public opinion had it not been for United States support of Israel. Uganda said the Council ought to have acted decisively in accordance with the punitive provisions of the Charter and should have characterized Israel's act as unjustified aggression; nevertheless, the resolution rejected Israel's dangerous notion of the doctrine of self-defence, under which it claimed the right to attack on the basis of a speculative conjecture that a nation might use its technology for offensive purposes.

Explaining its vote for the resolution, the German Democratic Republic stated that, while the text provided for the minimum of measures to be taken against the aggressor, General Assembly resolutions demanding the complete termination of nuclear and military collaboration with Israel must be implemented. Tunisia, though pleased with the consensus achieved, thought the resolution was far from commensurate with the serious nature of Israel's act of aggression. The USSR said the demands for decisive measures, including sanctions against Israel, were not duly reflected in the resolution; nevertheless, the Council's consideration of Iraq's complaint had demonstrated Israel's isolation on the international scene and should serve as a serious warning to Israel.

France, while reiterating its commitment to the existence and security of Israel, said it believed that recourse to force would not serve the interests of Israel's security. Japan said the resolution contained the minimum common elements voiced by the international community concerning the various problems caused by the incident. The United States said its judgement that Israeli actions had violated the United Nations Charter was based solely on the conviction that Israel had failed to exhaust peaceful means; further, the question of appropriate redress had to be understood in the full legal context of the relationships in the region.

The Council held nine meetings on the subject from 12 to 19 June. Algeria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Israel, Italy, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mongolia, Morocco, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia were invited, at their request, to participate without vote in the debate.

On 12 June, the Council decided that an invitation should be accorded to a PLO representative to participate in the debate and that the invitation would confer on it the same rights of participation as those conferred on a Member State invited to participate under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.<sup>a</sup> The Council took this decision by a vote, requested by the United States, of 11 to 1 (United States), with 3 abstentions (France, Japan, United Kingdom). The proposal to invite PLO was made by Tunisia in a letter of 11 June.<sup>(13)</sup>

The Council acted without vote to extend invitations under rule 39<sup>b</sup> to the Secretary-General and the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, as proposed by Tunisia in letters of 11 June<sup>(14)</sup> and 16 June,<sup>(15)</sup> respectively, and to the IAEA Director-General, as requested by Uganda in a letter of 16 June.<sup>(39)</sup>

Opening the debate, the Foreign Minister of Iraq stated that the motives behind the Israeli attack were to cover up Israel's possession of nuclear weapons and, more importantly, the determination not to allow the Arab nation to acquire scientific or technical knowledge. Iraq, in 1969, had been one of the first adherents to the non-proliferation Treaty; it had concluded in 1972 an agreement with IAEA for the application of safeguards to all its nuclear activities, and at the latest safeguards inspection at the Iraqi centre, in January 1981, all nuclear material there had been accounted for Iraq actively supported initiatives in the General Assembly for the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones. While every country had the right to develop nuclear technology for peaceful purposes, Israel had had a nuclear-weapon capability for years. The Council could not limit itself to condemning Israel's act of aggression, but should impose mandatory sanctions and decide that all States, especially the United States, should refrain from providing Israel with any military, material or technical co-operation or assistance which might encourage it to pursue expansion and aggression.

Israel said that, in destroying the "Osirak" nuclear reactor, it had performed an act of self-preservation and exercised its inherent right of self-defence. A threat of nuclear obliteration was being developed against Israel by Iraq, which had declared itself in a state of war with Israel since 1948 and had rejected all United Nations efforts for peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli dispute. Israel had repeatedly urged the European countries involved to stop assisting Iraq's drive for military nuclear capability, but its public and diplomatic efforts had gone unheeded. Within weeks "Osirak" would have gone "hot", after which time any attack on it would have blanketed Baghdad with lethal radioactive fall-out. Israel invited the Council to consider its proposal, made repeatedly since 1974, for a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

The IAEA Director-General told the Council that periodic inspections of the three nuclear research reactors near Baghdad, most recently in January 1981, had revealed no non-compliance with the safeguards agreement; all nuclear material had been satisfactorily accounted for.

Most speakers in the debate condemned Israel's attack as a violation of the United Nations Charter and international law and as a threat to international peace and security. They could not accept Israel's argument that it had acted in self-defence to prevent a nuclear strike against it; they said Article 51 of the Charter limited the right of self-defence to a case of armed attack and did not allow for preventive action. They considered Israel's attack a dangerous precedent, rejected Israel's allegation that the Iraqi reactor was intended to produce nuclear weapons and underlined the right of States to develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes.

France stated that the sole purpose of the Tamuz reactor was scientific research; agreements between France and Iraq excluded its use for military purposes. The United Kingdom said it did not believe Iraq had the capacity to manufacture fissionable materials for nuclear weapons. The Iraqi bomb, stated the Niger, existed only in the imagination of the Israeli leaders. Spain said the Charter did not allow any right to preventive action by which a State could set itself up as judge and policeman in respect to another country.

India, Kuwait, the Niger, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Uganda, Viet Nam, Yemen and others regarded the Israeli attack as a continuation of Israeli aggression against the Arab people in Lebanon, Palestine and elsewhere, and as a denial of the rights of the Palestinian people. Its objective was to prevent Arab scientific and technological progress so as to enable Israel to maintain its supremacy in the region. Mexico described the attack as the climax of escalating violations of international law, including territorial annexation by conquest, persistence in illegal occupation, denial of Palestinian rights, and aggression and harassment against neighbouring States.

<sup>b</sup> Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Bulgaria and the Syrian Arab Republic considered the act a consequence of the Camp David accords between Egypt and Israel, which had freed the hands of extremist circles in Israel for further aggression. Israel's act, the USSR said, was a logical consequence of the Middle East policy of the United States, aimed at dividing the Arab world. Egypt maintained that the accords did not justify or permit acts of aggression; the Israeli aggression could only lead to Israel's isolation.

Several speakers cited reports that Israel had developed nuclear weapons. Guyana remarked that Israel would shrink from no aggression or terrorist act to maintain a nuclear monopoly in the Middle East.

References were made to an appeal by the General Assembly in 1979,<sup>(48)</sup> reaffirmed in 1980,<sup>(49)</sup> that States end co-operation with Israel which might help it to acquire nuclear weapons. The German Democratic Republic said the danger of a further aggravation of the situation in the region, for which Israel was responsible, made it imperative to cease all nuclear and military collaboration with the aggressor. Somalia hoped that the recent decision of the United States to suspend its planned delivery of four fighter-bombers to Israel was the beginning of a reassessment of the dangers of its supply of arms.

Several countries, including Egypt, France, the German Democratic Republic, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, Mexico, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Kingdom and Yemen, regarded the Israeli attack as a challenge to the nuclear safeguards system. If Israel suspected that Iraq intended to produce atomic bombs, said Japan, it should have sought to settle the matter by peaceful means, such as submitting it to IAEA. Perhaps it had not done so, the Philippines observed, because it was not a party to the non-proliferation Treaty. Many States, including Jordan and the Sudan, called on the Council to find ways of subjecting Israeli nuclear activities to regular international inspection and supervision.

A number of speakers, among others Egypt, Ireland, Japan and the United States, held that further efforts should be made to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and that States which were not party to the non-proliferation Treaty, including Israel, should accede to it as soon as possible. Lebanon called for compulsory means of subjecting Israel's nuclear superiority to the imperatives of international compacts.

A number of States-including Cuba (on behalf of the non-aligned countries), Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Malaysia, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, the USSR and Yemen-called for mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter. China thought the Council should take effective measures resolutely to put an end to Israeli aggression and to punish Israel in accordance with the Charter. Kuwait said any objection to the imposition of sanctions would be explained by the Arab people and peoples of the third world as an act of bias in favour of the aggressor.

Ireland questioned the wisdom of imposing sanctions in the face of the complex situation of conflict in the Middle East. The United States, while condemning the Israeli action as damaging to the regional confidence necessary for peace, said it would approve no decision that harmed Israel's basic interests, was unfairly punitive or created new obstacles to a just and lasting peace.

Many speakers, including France, Guyana, Italy, Jordan, Morocco, the Niger, Sri Lanka and Turkey, were of the view that Israel should compensate Iraq for the losses resulting from its aggression. A call for compensation was also included in a resolution by the Islamic Group of Member States at the United Nations, adopted on 16 June and read to the Council by Iraq.

Israel, maintaining that the non-proliferation Treaty was no effective guarantee against the proliferation of nuclear weapons, expressed the view that the most constructive step towards the security of all States in the area would be to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. Czechoslovakia, which supported the establishment of such a zone, said this idea should not be utilized to camouflage Israel's aggressive policies towards neighbouring Arab countries. Egypt stated that Israel's unwarranted air raid had cast serious doubts about its support for a nuclear-weapon-free zone; Egypt reiterated its call on all States, pending the establishment of such a zone, to declare that they would reciprocally refrain from producing, acquiring or in any way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices, and to deposit their declarations with the Security Council.

The Secretary-General of the League of Arab States stated that, by its act of aggression, Israel wanted to delay the technological progress of the Arabs, which was the guarantee of their independence and of their invulnerability. The League's Permanent Observer to the United Nations added that, when the world community sought punitive sanctions and measures, it did so not out of revenge but to deter the aggressor.

The PLO representative said Israel was not satisfied to invoke national security in the military field and on questions relating to borders; it wished to arrogate the power to impede the development of other countries in the region.

By a letter of 29 June to the Council President,<sup>(8)</sup> Israel expressed regret that it had not, during the Council debate, given a complete quotation of a passage from a lecture by Sir Humphrey Waldock, President of the International Court of Justice, on the self-defence provisions of Article 51 of the Charter; it added that Iraq, in pointing out the omission during the debate, had omitted another sentence suggesting that preparations for atomic warfare would have to be treated as an armed attack under Article 51. Iraq replied on 24 July<sup>(5)</sup> that the sentence omitted by Iraq supported Iraq's position rather than that of Israel, since it was Israel which had possessed nuclear weapons for some time and therefore Iraq and other Arab States parties to the non-proliferation Treaty were entitled to treat those weapons as an armed attack.

OTHER ACTION. The United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (p. 689), by a 21 August resolution on the right of nations to develop and control non-fossil energy resources,<sup>(45)</sup> strongly condemned the Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear research centre. The text, sponsored by Iraq, Morocco and Pakistan, was adopted by a roll-call vote of 61 to 1 (Israel), with 26 abstentions.

Israel objected to the resolution as a blatant act of politicization which violated the non-political mandate of the Conference and added that it did not bother to reaffirm rights which Iraq had systematically violated for over 30 years. Australia, Canada, the United States and Uruguay said they had abstained because the resolution was extraneous to the purpose and mandate of the Conference.

The IAEA Board of Governors, on 12 June, adopted a resolution<sup>(1)</sup> by which it strongly condemned Israel for its attack. It recommended that the Agency's General Conference consider all the implications, including the suspension of Israel's membership privileges and rights, and that the Conference suspend IAEA technical assistance to Israel. The Board urged the Agency's member States to provide emergency assistance to Iraq to deal with the aftermath of the attack and reaffirmed its confidence in the effectiveness of the Agency's safeguards system as a reliable means of verifying peaceful use of a nuclear facility.

The General Conference, by a resolution of 26 September,<sup>(44)</sup> decided to suspend IAEA assistance to Israel, as the Board had recommended. It also decided to consider at its 1982 regular session the suspension of Israel from the exercise of the privileges and rights of Agency membership if by that time it had not complied with the Security Council resolution of 19 June.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 13 November, the General Assembly adopted, by a roll-call vote of 109 to 2, with 34 abstentions, a resolution entitled "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security".<sup>(50)</sup>

By this resolution, the Assembly strongly condemned Israel for its act of aggression; warned it to cease threatening and committing such attacks against nuclear facilities; reiterated its call to all States to cease providing Israel with arms and related material which would enable it to commit acts of aggression; requested the Security Council to investigate Israel's nuclear activities and the collaboration of other States and parties in those activities; reiterated its request that the Council institute effective enforcement action to prevent Israel from further endangering peace and security; demanded that Israel pay prompt and adequate compensation for the material damage and loss of life; and requested the Secretary-General to keep Member States and the Council informed of the resolution's implementation and to report to the Assembly in 1982.

By a resolution of 9 December<sup>(51)</sup> in connection with disarmament issues, the Assembly stated that the Israeli attack adversely affected prospects for a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

Provisions on the attack were also included in an Assembly resolution of 11 November on the annual IAEA report (p. 712).

Introducing the 36-nation draft resolution adopted on 13 November, Iraq observed that, unlike the Council's resolution, the Assembly text qualified the Israeli action as an act of aggression—a phrase the Council had not used for political considerations pertaining to the position adopted by certain permanent members.

Israel, explaining its negative vote, said it rejected the resolution for not taking into account several facts, such as the nuclear option Iraq had been developing, Iraq's consistent violations of the prohibition against the threat or use of force, its open rejection of Security Council resolutions on the Middle East, its attempts to bypass its obligations under the non-proliferation Treaty and the safeguards agreement with IAEA, and Israel's attempts by diplomatic means to remove the mortal threat to its existence, leaving it with no alternative but to destroy the nuclear reactor in self-defence. The United States said it strongly opposed the resolution for six reasons: the Security Council had already acted on the matter; the unbalanced text could only complicate the search for peace; the description of Israel's action as aggression was objectionable, prejudiced and legally troublesome; the text diverted attention from the pursuit of peace and security; the call for the United States to alter its relationship with Israel was one-sided, as other major Powers were not asked to stop their arms supplies to Israel's neighbours; and the request for a Security Council investigation of Israel's nuclear activities was politically motivated and would not have positive results.

Speaking in explanation of vote, several countries expressed reservations. The United Kingdom, explaining the abstentions of the EC members, said they did not believe the proposed enforcement action, including a selective arms embargo, would be appropriate, practicable or desirable in terms of the search for a just, lasting and comprehensive peace settlement in the Middle East. Fiji abstained on similar grounds, adding that its position was not to be interpreted as endorsement of Israel's attack.

Austria, Canada, Finland, New Zealand, Norway and Sweden said they abstained because they felt the Assembly was assuming responsibilities that, under the Charter, belonged to the Security Council. New Zealand added that it had reservations about the paragraph calling for a Council investigation of Israel's nuclear activities, which appeared to call for the duplication of investigations already being undertaken at the Assembly's request; also, it found somewhat gratuitous the references in the preamble to arms supplied to Israel by the United States. Turkey, though voting in favour, would have preferred that no particular country be singled out as a supplier of weapons.

Chile thought the resolution contained exaggerated language and would not lead to the proper implementation of the Council's June resolution. In Zaire's view, the resolution contained a superficial analysis that did not cover all aspects of Middle East problems.

Reservations about the wording were also expressed by certain States which voted in favour. Panama thought the coercive measures mentioned in the resolution were a matter for the Security Council. Portugal had reservations about what it considered as discriminatory language and elements contrary to the essential functioning of the Assembly and the United Nations. Venezuela was concerned about some of the terms used, as well as about the Assembly's making reference to enforcement action by the Council.

Spain made a similar point and added a reservation regarding references in the preamble to 1978 and 1979 Assembly resolutions on military and nuclear collaboration with Israel<sup>(47)</sup> and Israeli nuclear armament,<sup>(48)</sup> on which it had abstained; also, it would have preferred a more balanced drafting of the preambular paragraph referring to the misuse of aircraft and weapons by Israel.

Brazil, India and Zambia stated that their vote in favour was without prejudice to their position on the non-proliferation Treaty, which they had not signed.

In Samoa's view, the Assembly's call not to supply Israel with arms did not conform with the kind of balanced approach necessary to lessen tension in the Middle East. Uruguay thought that this paragraph, as well as the Assembly's requests for enforcement action and an arms embargo, prejudged the future attitude of a State.

Most of the delegations which abstained or expressed reservations stressed their condemnation of the Israeli attack.

The inclusion of the item on the agenda of the 1981 regular Assembly session was requested by 43 countries in a letter of 12 August.<sup>(17)</sup> In view of the importance of the question for international peace and security, they stated, it was incumbent on the Assembly to deal with the question in all its aspects.

During the debate, many speakers, including Algeria, Czechoslovakia, Indonesia, Jordan, Malaysia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Viet Nam, expressed regret that the Security Council had not imposed sanctions on Israel or demanded redress for the damage suffered by Iraq. A number of countries, such as the Byelorussian SSR, China, Czechoslovakia, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Pakistan, Qatar, the Sudan, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Arab Emirates and Viet Nam, also favoured effective enforcement action. Many of these States, along with Yugoslavia, specifically advocated a halt to the supply of arms to Israel, and Mauritania urged an embargo on all nuclear materials for that country. Sri Lanka said the matter had been brought to the Assembly to seek a vital action that the Council had been unable to provide—cessation of the provision of arms to Israel.

Several States, including Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, appealed to the Assembly to adopt a resolution requesting the Council to take every necessary measure to ensure strict implementation of its resolution of 19 June and other United Nations resolutions, and to prevent Israel from repeating its aggression and its violation of the rights of other States.

Iraq said the Council had failed to adopt effective measures because of the threat by the United States to use the veto, in spite of the fact that the Council had previously warned Israel that the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter would be applied should it again resort to aggression. Since the Council had been prevented from fully shouldering its responsibilities, Iraq added, the Assembly was called upon to remedy the situation within its competence and to try to restore the dignity of the Organization, especially considering that Israel had rejected the unanimous Council decision.

The Syrian Arab Republic requested the Assembly not only to adopt a resolution condemning Israeli aggression and placing the attack on the reactor within the framework of official acts of terrorism committed by Israel against Arab peoples, but also condemning the United States, which continued to provide Israel with instruments of destruction as part of its strategic alliance. A number of other countries, including Albania, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam, criticized the support and encouragement of Israel's policies by the United States.

Most speakers rejected Israel's argument that it had performed an elementary act of self-preservation and exercised its inherent right of self-defence. Many reiterated that the assault also constituted an attack on the IAEA safeguards régime. A number of countries, including Cyprus, Poland, Romania and Turkey, stressed the right of States to develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes.

Israel maintained that its military operation against the Iraqi nuclear reactor was neither an attack on IAEA nor an expression of no confidence in the Agency's safeguards system. Iraq had already acquired weapons-grade plutonium; it could have proceeded with its nuclear-weapons programme and then withdrawn from the non-proliferation Treaty on three months' notice, without fear of sanctions.

China underscored the inalienable right of all countries to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, but said it firmly opposed the clandestine development of nuclear weapons by Israel as a menace to neighbouring States and a threat to peace and security.

Egypt viewed the Israeli attack not as an act of self-defence but rather an act of self-destruction; peace and security in the Middle East could be achieved not by aggression or preemptive attacks but by the elimination of fear, suspicion and centuries-old hatred and through serious and responsible efforts to ensure a just and peaceful settlement.

Albania, India, Morocco and others said it was impossible to separate Israel's constant aggressive conduct against its Arab neighbours from its continual refusal to acknowledge the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, reiterated their condemnation of the Israeli attack, said there must be no repetition of such action by Israel or any other country, emphasized the central role of the IAEA safeguards system in the non-proliferation régime and urged all Middle East States including Israel to refrain from any action that would increase the danger which would result from the development of nuclear weapons in the region. Austria said it was essential for the Assembly to retain the unanimity reached in the Security Council on this matter. Japan was among a number of countries that urged Israel and other non-parties to adhere to the non-proliferation Treaty.

The IAEA Director-General, rejecting the argument that the Agency's safeguards inspection system would not have detected diversion of plutonium from the Tamuz reactor for weapons purposes, said the Israeli attack had also been an attack against IAEA, the non-proliferation Treaty and the climate of trust generated by the Treaty and its verification mechanism.

Israel, as it had done before the Security Council, advocated a regional non-proliferation régime and arms control arrangements and the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone through direct negotiations among the States concerned, a proposal which was supported by the United States. A number of countries, for example Jordan, regarded this suggestion as contradictory and deceptive because of Israel's continued refusal to adhere to the non-proliferation Treaty, the only multinational instrument to prevent proliferation.

The USSR stated that Israel's refusal to comply with United Nations decisions was eloquent proof that its real objective was to establish its own nuclear domination in the Middle East. This view was shared by most Arab States: Lebanon, for example, said the raid had revealed Israel's decision to ensure its right to police 20 Arab countries.

Security Council resolution 487(1981)

Adopted unanimously Meeting 2288 19 June 1981
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/14556).

The Security Council,

Having considered the agenda contained in document S/Agenda/2280,

Having noted the contents of the letter dated 6 June 1981 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq,

Having heard the statements made on the subject at its 2280th through 2288th meetings,

Taking note of the statement made by the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the Agency's Board of Governors on the subject on 9 June 1981 and his statement to the Security Council at its 2288th meeting on 19 June 1981,

Taking note also of the resolution adopted by the Board of Governors of the Agency on 12 June 1981 on the "military attack on Iraqi nuclear research centre and its implications for the Agency",

Fully aware of the fact that Iraq has been a party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons since it came into force in 1970, that in accordance with that Treaty Iraq has accepted Agency safeguards on all its nuclear activities, and that the Agency has testified that these safeguards have been satisfactorily applied to date.

Noting furthermore that Israel has not adhered to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Deeply concerned about the danger to international peace and security created by the premeditated Israeli air attack on Iraqi nuclear installations on 7 June 1981, which could at any time explode the situation in the area, with grave consequences for the vital interests of all States,

Considering that, under the terms of Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations, "all members shall refrain in their International relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations",

1. Strongly condemns the military attack by Israel in clear violation of the Charter of the United Nations and the norms of international conduct;

2. Calls upon Israel to refrain in the future from any such acts or threats thereof;

3. Further considers that the said attack constitutes a serious threat to the entire safeguards régime of the International Atomic Energy Agency, which is the foundation of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

4. Fully recognizes the inalienable sovereign right of Iraq and all other States, especially the developing countries, to establish programmes of technological and nuclear development to develop their economy and industry for peaceful purposes in accordance with their present and future needs and consistent with the internationally accepted objectives of preventing nuclear-weapons proliferation;

5. Calls upon Israel urgently to place its nuclear facilities under the safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

6. Considers that Iraq is entitled to appropriate redress for the destruction it has suffered, responsibility for which has been acknowledged by Israel;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council regularly informed of the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 36/27

109-2-34 (roll-call vote) Meeting 56 13 November 1981

36-nation draft (A/36/L.14/Rev.1 and Rev.1/Add.1); agenda item 130.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bahrain, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Gambia, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Somalia, Sudan, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraq nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and International peace and security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security", Expressing its deep alarm over the unprecedented Israeli act of aggression against the Iraq nuclear installations on 7 June 1981, which created a grave threat to international peace and security.

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 A of 14 December 1978 concerning military and nuclear collaboration with Israel and 34/89 of 11 December 1979 on Israeli nuclear armament,

Further recalling Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981 and noting with concern Israel's refusal to comply with that resolution,

Taking note of the resolution adopted on 12 June 1981 by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency and of resolution GC(XXV)/RES/381 adopted on 26 September 1981 by the General Conference of the Agency, in which the Conference, inter alia, considered that the Israeli act of aggression constituted an attack against the Agency and its safeguards régime and decided to suspend the provision of any assistance to Israel,

Fully aware of the fact that Iraq, being a party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, has subscribed to the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards régime, and that the Agency has testified that these safeguards have been satisfactorily applied,

Noting with concern that Israel has refused to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and, in spite of repeated calls, including that of the Security Council, to place its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Alarmed by the increasing information and evidence regarding Israel's activities aiming at the acquisition and development of nuclear weapons,

Gravely concerned over the misuse by Israel, in committing its acts of aggression against Arab countries, of aircraft and weapons supplied by the United States of America,

Condemning the Israeli threats to repeat such attacks on nuclear installations if and when it deems it necessary,

Affirming the inalienable sovereign right of all States to develop technological and nuclear programmes for peaceful purposes, in accordance with the internationally accepted objectives of preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons,

1. Strongly condemns Israel for its premeditated and unprecedented act of aggression in violation of the Charter of the United Nations and the norms of international conduct, which constitutes a new and dangerous escalation in the threat to International peace and security;

Israel and Lebanon

In southern Lebanon along the border with Israel, where the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) was stationed, the first half of 1981 saw a period of heavy and frequent exchanges of fire between the forces and armed elements in the area. These intensified in July, leading the Security Council to call unanimously for an immediate cessation of all armed attacks and to reaffirm its commitment to Lebanon's sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence. A new cease-fire was reported on 24 July.

The Council twice decided on six-month extensions of the mandate of UNIFIL, established in 1978 to confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restore international peace and security, and assist the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area.

COMMUNICATIONS (30 JANUARY- 10 MARCH). Between January and March 1981 the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received a number of communications concerning incidents in the Israel-Lebanon sector.

By a letter of 30 January,<sup>(28)</sup> Lebanon charged that Israeli aircraft had attacked Lebanese communities on 29 January, resulting in at least eight deaths and 42 people wounded, and that Israel had shelled four areas the following day.

Israel, by a letter dated 2 February,<sup>(10)</sup> stated that 10 civilians had been injured in rocket attacks between 28 and 30 January which PLO had carried out from Lebanese territory against the town of Qiryat Shemona and other Israeli civilian centres in Galilee.

Lebanon, by a letter of 24 February,<sup>(29)</sup> charged that on the night of 22/23 February Israeli forces had shelled several villages and landed troops near Nabatiyah, killing seven persons and wounding three in a four-hour operation.

By a letter dated 8 March,<sup>(11)</sup> Israel charged that, on 7 March, two PLO terrorists had attempted to fly single-seat gliders from Lebanon into Israel with the intent of taking hostages and demanding the release of PLO members detained in Israeli gaols. On 10 March,<sup>(12)</sup> it complained of incidents on 2 and 3 March in which towns and villages in northern Israel had been attacked by rockets fired by PLO members operating from Lebanon; annexed was a list of 26 PLO rocket attacks directed at civilian targets in northern Israel and attempted crossings from Lebanese territory between 7 April 1980 and 7 March 1981.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION, (MARCH). The Security Council met on 9 and 19/20 March to consider the situation in southern Lebanon. Lebanon, on 3 March,<sup>(30)</sup> had requested a Council meeting to address the continuing problem of what it termed repeated Israeli aggression against Lebanon.

At their request, Israel and Lebanon were invited to participate without vote in the discussion.

Lebanon said it had asked for the meeting because the situation in southern Lebanon had developed into a state of constant warfare, which threatened international peace and security as well as the security of UNIFIL. Israeli leaders had proclaimed that the violence was part of a considered policy of pre-emptive strikes. Such a policy would produce a predictable reaction leading to total war. Military and paramilitary operations had escalated, civilian life in southern Lebanon had been disrupted, and a general state of disintegration and terror had exploded throughout the Middle East. Lebanon asked the Council to initiate a mechanism for peace in Lebanon, specifically along the border with Israel.

The USSR, citing Israeli air raids on 2 March near Tyre in southern Lebanon in which 14 people were reported killed, urged the Council to condemn Israeli aggression against Lebanon, call for its cessation, and oblige Israel to respect Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity and cease all intervention in its internal affairs.

The Secretary-General, in a special report of 16 March,<sup>(55)</sup> informed the Council that elements of the de facto forces (Christian and associated militias) in southern Lebanon had that morning fired tank rounds into the village of Al Qantarah, in the Nigerian battalion sector of UNIFIL, killing a Nigerian captain and a corporal and injuring 11 Nigerian soldiers. (The casualty figures were later revised to three Nigerian soldiers killed and 20 wounded.<sup>(56)</sup>) Tanks had also fired at the village of Yatar in the Netherlands battalion sector to press a demand for the removal of a platoon of Lebanese soldiers from Al Qantarah. The incidents had been preceded on 13 and 14 March by the kidnapping of four Lebanese army medical personnel and a mortar attack in which three civilians had been wounded.

The Secretary-General reported that the UNIFIL Commander had made it clear to the de facto forces that there was no question of withdrawing the Lebanese platoon, which had been located in Al Qantarah since April 1979. The United Nations had been in touch with the Israeli authorities, urging them to make all possible efforts to bring an end to the irresponsible behaviour of the de facto forces. In recent months, UNIFIL had also had to contend with constant efforts by various factions of armed elements to the north and west to infiltrate its area of operation and had sustained casualties in the process, including the death of a Fijian soldier on 17 January.

Recalling that one of the most important principles on which UNIFIL was established was the full co-operation of all parties, the Secretary-General said it had been all too clear throughout the history of UNIFIL that that co-operation was not forthcoming. All possible efforts should be made to impress on those concerned that provocation, harassment and military offensives against UNIFIL could not be accepted and that their co-operation was required to fulfil its mandate.

At a meeting in the early morning of 20 March, the Council President, on behalf of the Council members, read out the following statement:<sup>(52)</sup>

"The members of the Security Council are deeply shocked and outraged at the report received about the repeated attacks on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the continuing killing of peace-keeping soldiers in southern Lebanon.

These renewed barbaric acts against a peace-keeping force are a direct defiance of the authority of the Security Council and a challenge to the mission of the United Nations in maintaining international peace and security which cannot be tolerated.

The Council condemns these outrageous actions by the so-called de facto forces which have caused the death and injury of Force personnel present in Lebanon under international mandate. In strongly condemning these latest outrageous acts of the so-called de facto forces, the Council calls on all those who share in the responsibility for this tense situation to put an end to any act which might increase the threat to international peace and security and to put an end to military assistance to any forces which interfere with the Force in the exercise of its mandate.

The Council addresses a serious warning to all the forces responsible for these dangerous acts violating the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon, preventing the full deployment of the Force, including the deployment of the Lebanese armed forces in the area, and severely hampering the Force in the fulfilment of the mandate as expressed in resolution 425(1978), which states:

[For text of resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, see YUN 1978, p. 312.]

The Council emphasizes that it is essential that the Force receive the full co-operation of all parties to enable it to carry out its mandate in the entire area of operation up to the internationally recognized boundaries, thus contributing to full implementation of resolution 425(1978).

The Council calls for the immediate release of Lebanese military personnel and of all those persons who were kidnapped by the so-called de facto forces during the recent hostilities.

The Council extends its sympathy and deep-felt condolences to the Government of the Federal Republic of Nigeria and the families of the victims.

The Council also commends the valiant action and the courage, under the most adverse circumstances, of the commanders and soldiers of the Force and expresses full support for their efforts."

COMMUNICATIONS (25 MARCH-5 JUNE). By a letter of 25 March,<sup>(48)</sup> the Netherlands transmitted a statement issued on 24 March in Maastricht, Netherlands, by the European Council, calling for the immediate and full co-operation of all interested parties to enable UNIFIL to carry out its mandate. In communications to the Secretary-General dated 9 April,<sup>(47)</sup> 16 April,<sup>(43)</sup> 17 April<sup>(45)</sup> and 1 May,<sup>(50)</sup> Japan, Argentina, Egypt and Uruguay, respectively, expressed deep concern over the escalation of violence in Lebanon and urged respect for Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Serious concern was also expressed in a letter of 8 May<sup>(2)</sup> from the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, who feared counteractions in response to Israeli attacks against Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon and said it seemed obvious that Israel intended to destroy the PLO infrastructure.

By letters dated 10 April<sup>(8)</sup> and 21 April,<sup>(9)</sup> Democratic Yemen transmitted four letters from PLO charging that Israeli forces had repeatedly attacked areas of southern Lebanon using warplanes, artillery and naval vessels, and that on 20 and 21 April Israeli war-planes had attacked refugee camps and other Lebanese localities, causing numerous civilian casualties. Israel by letters of 17 April<sup>(13)</sup> and 21 April,<sup>(14)</sup> stated that on 16 April a balloon attempting to penetrate Israel from Lebanese territory had been shot down, and that on 20 and 21 April civilian centres in northern Israel had been shelled by PLO elements operating from Lebanon.

Tunisia, on 28 April,<sup>(35)</sup> transmitted a PLO letter dated 27 April, calling for Security Council action to put an end to genocidal Israeli attacks and holding the United States equally responsible through its supply of war material and moral support. Further Israeli air strikes and gunboat attacks between 27 May and 2 June were reported in PLO letters of 2 and 3 June, transmitted by Yemen on 5 June.<sup>(51)</sup>

Cuba, by a note verbale of 5 June,<sup>(5)</sup> transmitted a communiqué adopted on 4 June at an extraordinary plenary meeting of the non-aligned countries held in New York, condemning the Israeli attacks on Palestine refugee camps in southern Lebanon and expressing grave concern at United States support of Israeli policies and practices.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (JUNE). As the mandate of UNIFIL was due to expire on 19 June, the Secretary-General, on 16 June, submitted a report<sup>(56)</sup> on the activities of the Force for the period from 12 December 1980 to 15 June 1981. He observed that UNIFIL had continued to encounter serious difficulties in fulfilling its mandate, as the parties had not extended full co-operation. UNIFIL personnel as at 15 June numbered 6,000, with contingents from Fiji, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Senegal and Sweden, assisted by 67 military observers from the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO). The Nepalese battalion, which had been withdrawn in May 1980 and temporarily replaced by an additional Ghanaian battalion, had begun rejoining the Force as of 1 June 1981. As of 15 February, Lieutenant-General William Callaghan of Ireland had succeeded Major-General Emmanuel Alexander Erskine of Ghana as Commander of UNIFIL.

During the period under review, there had been heavy and frequent exchanges of fire across the UNIFIL area between the de facto forces to the south, supported and supplied by Israel, and armed elements to the north, mainly PLO and the Lebanese National Movement. UNIFIL positions and personnel had come under close fire by the armed elements in 42 incidents. During the reporting period, eight UNIFIL members had been killed as a result of hostile actions, raising the total of such deaths to 31 since the Force's establishment in 1978. Armed elements had tried to infiltrate the UNIFIL area and relocate some of their positions in the area. The de facto forces had continued to resist further UNIFIL deployment in the enclave held by them. Restrictions on freedom of movement of UNIFIL and UNTSO personnel in the enclave had also continued to complicate UNIFIL operations.

Activities of the Israel Defence Forces in and near the UNIFIL area had increased. Israeli military forces had repeatedly violated Lebanese airspace and territorial waters, and had launched many attacks against targets in Lebanon outside the UNIFIL area.

The Secretary-General stated that, despite many difficulties, UNIFIL had continued in its endeavours to consolidate its position and, in co-operation with the Lebanese Government, to strengthen and make more effective the Lebanese presence, both civilian and military, in its area of operation. The strength of the Lebanese army in the south had increased during the period by more than 700 and currently stood at 1,350.

He declared that, although the Force had not been able to fulfil its mandate, he had no doubt that its presence and activities in southern Lebanon were an indispensable element in maintaining peace in the area and the Middle East as a whole. It would be disastrous if UNIFIL were to be removed at a time of tension and conflicts in the area. He therefore recommended that the UNIFIL mandate be extended for another six months, and renewed his appeal to all concerned to co-operate with UNIFIL, strictly observe the cease-fire and avoid actions leading to violence.

Annexed to the report was a letter dated 16 June, by which Lebanon asked that the renewal of the mandate should accent the interim character of the Force by creating objective conditions for its success, within an immediate time-frame and according to a phased programme of action.

On 19 June,<sup>(63)</sup> the Security Council renewed the mandate of UNIFIL for six months, until 19 December. The resolution containing this decision, drawn up in consultations among the Council members, was adopted by 12 votes to none, with 2 abstentions (German Democratic Republic, USSR), with one member (China) not participating in the vote.

By this resolution, the Council also reaffirmed its call for strict respect for Lebanon's political independence, unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity. It condemned actions that had prevented the full implementation of the UNIFIL mandate. Expressing support for rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts by the Lebanese Government in southern Lebanon and its deployment of Lebanese army contingents in the UNIFIL area, the Council requested the Secretary-General to assist Lebanon in establishing a joint phased programme aimed at the total implementation of the 1978 resolution defining the UNIFIL mandate.<sup>(61)</sup> It reaffirmed its determination to examine practical ways to secure the unconditional fulfilment of the mandate.

Speaking after the vote, the Secretary-General informed the Council that two UNIFIL soldiers from Fiji had been killed on 19 June in an incident in which armed elements had tried to infiltrate into the UNIFIL area. He added that recent developments and the accompanying tension had underlined the importance of UNIFIL as a conflict control mechanism.

Before adopting the resolution, the Council invited Israel and Lebanon, at their request, to participate without vote in the discussion.

Lebanon, while expressing gratitude for the presence of UNIFIL, cautioned that the Force might be in danger of becoming a static fixture in an escalating war of attrition. It stressed the importance of the Council's renewed call, first voiced in 1979,<sup>(62)</sup> for a phased programme of activities to be carried out jointly by the Force and the Lebanese Government. Substantial advances had been made in that regard, including improved freedom of movement and observation for the Force, and the operation of Lebanese army contingents under UNIFIL command.

Israel stated that its position with regard to Lebanon was well known. As to the deaths of the two Fijian soldiers, they, like the bulk of UNIFIL soldiers killed in the line of duty, had lost their lives through the activities of PLO. If the Council reacted with a resolution or presidential statement, that would be a departure from past practice, as it had expressed itself on killings of UNIFIL soldiers only when PLO involvement was not suspected.

France appealed for observance of the cease-fire and for the dismantling of positions set up in the UNIFIL area by other parties, and endorsed efforts by the Secretary-General to reactivate the Israel-Lebanon Mixed Armistice Commission (ILMAC). Ireland supported the efforts of UNIFIL, in conjunction with the Government of Lebanon, to strengthen and make more effective the Lebanese presence, civilian and military, in the UNIFIL area, as a step towards the return of full Lebanese sovereignty.

Japan saw the need for all parties to refrain from the use of force, hoped particularly that Israel would heed international opinion and act responsibly, and stated that terrorist actions must not be condoned as a means of settling international disputes. The United States reiterated its support for UNIFIL and for the determined efforts of Lebanon to continue to work for the reassertion of its full authority within its national borders.

Tunisia urged the unconditional withdrawal of Israel from Lebanon, stating that its assistance to the de facto forces rebelling against the legal authorities in Lebanon maintained a state of tension.

The German Democratic Republic said it had abstained in the voting because of reservations about the mandate, composition and financing of UNIFIL; the resolution did not contain any resolute measures to put an end to the aggressive actions of Israel and the bands of Major Saad Haddad (the de facto forces).

The USSR stressed the need for urgent measures to prevent Israel from pursuing its aggressive and expansionist policy towards Lebanon and to ensure the complete withdrawal of Israeli troops from southern Lebanon, and emphasized that all expenditures involved in eliminating the consequences of Israel's armed aggression should be borne by the aggressor.

By a letter dated 23 June,<sup>(46)</sup> Fiji transmitted a statement by its Prime Minister declaring that his Government deeply deplored and condemned the actions of armed elements which had resulted in the killing of the two Fijian soldiers.

On 25 June, following consultations among the Council members, the President of the Council issued the following statement on the deaths of the two UNIFIL soldiers:<sup>(53)</sup>

"At the end of the 2289th meeting of the Council, I made a statement to note the deep sorrow shared by all members of the Council over the loss of two United Nations soldiers in Lebanon, as well as all those others who have fallen in fulfilment of their duty in the cause of peace.

I also said that I was certain that I spoke on behalf of the Council when I conveyed our condolences to the Government and people of Fiji as well as to the families of the victims.

As President of the Council, I wish to condemn the killing on 19 June 1981 by so-called armed elements of two Fijian peace-keeping soldiers of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon.

This outrage against members of a peace-keeping force is a direct defiance of the authority of the Council and a challenge to the mission of the Force, as stipulated in resolution 425(1978).

In this connection, I am encouraged to learn that a group has already been established to investigate these events and that in the mean time appropriate steps are being taken by all concerned, in co-operation with the command of the Force, to prevent a recurrence of such incidents.

I also commend the valiant action and the courage, under the most adverse circumstances, of the soldiers of the Force and express full support for their efforts."

FURTHER COMMUNICATIONS (JULY). By a letter dated 13 July,<sup>(31)</sup> Lebanon protested the continued Israeli aggression against Lebanon and the numerous civilian casualties and the destruction of property caused by several air attacks conducted on 10 and 12 July.

Israel, by letters of 15 July<sup>(15)</sup> and 16 July,<sup>(16,17)</sup> stated that three civilians had been killed and 33 wounded in rocket attacks against northern Israel on 10, 15 and 16 July, carried out by PLO terrorists operating from Lebanon.

Considerable property damage was reported in the towns of Qiryat Shemona and Nahariya.

On 17 July<sup>(36)</sup> and 20 July,<sup>(39)</sup> Tunisia transmitted to the Secretary-General six PLO letters complaining about a series of Israeli air strikes and coastal shelling against Palestine refugee camps and Lebanese villages which had resulted in many civilian deaths and injuries, as well as material destruction and damage. The letters cited preliminary figures of 87 killed and 479 wounded in a raid against west Beirut on 17 July, and at least 50 killed in earlier attacks on Sidon.

By letters of 19 July,<sup>(18)</sup> 20 July,<sup>(19,20)</sup> 21 July,<sup>(21,22)</sup> 22 July,<sup>(23,24,25)</sup> 23 July<sup>(26)</sup> and 24 July, Israel submitted further complaints of indiscriminate shelling of towns and villages along its northern border by PLO elements operating from Lebanese territory, resulting in six deaths and 59 persons wounded, as well as property damage, since the shellings began on 15 July. Israel reported a steady build-up of arms in PLO hands and a widening of the organization's operational infrastructure in Lebanon.

Cuba, as Chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, transmitted on 24 July<sup>(6)</sup> a communiqué of an emergency meeting of the Movement's Co-ordinating Bureau held on 21 July, demanding the immediate cessation of all Israeli acts of aggression and military operations against Lebanon and the Palestinian people, and calling on the Security Council to consider mandatory sanctions against Israel.

Bangladesh, on 21 July,<sup>(44)</sup> transmitted a message from its Minister for Foreign Affairs describing the Israeli attacks as a serious threat to global peace and security, and urging the Secretary-General to use his good offices to prevent any further Israeli armed attacks on Lebanon. Qatar, on 22 July,<sup>(49)</sup> and Afghanistan, in a note verbale of 24 July,<sup>(42)</sup> also condemned the air raids. Afghanistan, in a government declaration, stated that they had been carried out with United States encouragement and demanded the imposition of international sanctions against Israel, while Qatar urged immediate international measures to halt Israeli aggression and renewed its call on the Arab nation to mobilize all its potential to confront the attack and those behind it.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (JULY). On 21 July, the Security Council unanimously adopted a resolution<sup>(64)</sup> sponsored by Ireland, Japan and Spain, by which it called for an immediate cessation of all armed attacks and reaffirmed its commitment to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. The Council requested the Secretary-General to report within 48 hours on implementation of the resolution. It reaffirmed an appeal made by the Council's President and members on 17 July for an immediate end to all armed attacks and for the greatest restraint so that peace and quiet might be established in Lebanon and a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

Spain, introducing the resolution, said it was aimed at an immediate cessation of hostilities, without interfering with broader efforts by other delegations.

The action was taken at the second of two meetings, on 17 and 21 July, held at the request of Lebanon. The request for an urgent meeting on the deteriorating situation in southern Lebanon and the Israeli attacks against civilian targets in Beirut was made in a letter of 17 July.<sup>(32)</sup>

During the Council's consideration of this matter, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, Mauritania, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen were invited, at their request, to participate without vote in the discussion.

On 17 July, the Council decided that an invitation should be accorded to a PLO representative to participate in the debate and that the invitation would confer on it the same rights of participation as those conferred on a Member State invited to participate under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.<sup>c</sup> The Council took this decision by a vote, requested by the United States, of 11 to 1 (United States), with 3 abstentions (France, Japan, United Kingdom). The proposal to invite the PLO representative was made by Tunisia in a letter of 17 July.<sup>(37)</sup>

The Council also extended an invitation under rule 39<sup>d</sup> to the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, as proposed by Tunisia in a letter of the same date.<sup>(38)</sup>

At each of the two Council meetings, the Secretary-General made a statement on developments in southern Lebanon. On 17 July, he said that on 10 July the Israeli air force had attacked targets in southern Lebanon and, the same evening, Palestinian elements had fired artillery and rockets into northern Israel. Since then, there had been exchanges of shelling involving the Israel Defence Forces and the de facto forces, on the one hand, and armed elements, mainly Palestinians, on the other. He expressed deep concern at the heavy escalation of violence and, in particular, at the bombing of population centres, and he appealed to all concerned to return immediately to the cease-fire.

On 21 July, the Secretary-General said PLO had agreed to a cease-fire proposal by the UNIFIL Commander provided the other side accepted. Efforts were continuing to secure a similar commitment from the Israeli authorities.

Meanwhile, shelling from both sides was continuing.

In the debate, Lebanon blamed Israel for the cycle of violence which had resulted in the killing of 300 people and the wounding of 800, among them a large number of women and children, as well as severe property damage. Israel, it said, was trying to destabilize Lebanon and could undermine the whole peace-keeping effort. Lebanon was being turned, against its will, into an arena for a fifth Arab-Israeli war. Lebanon called on the Council to pronounce itself on the necessity of reactivating ILMAC and said it would like the Council to support UNIFIL morally and politically, enabling it to implement its mandate to restore the authority and sovereignty of the Lebanese Government throughout its territory.

Israel attributed the tension in the area to PLO domination over large parts of Lebanon and said hundreds of people, Israelis and others, had been murdered in PLO atrocities in recent years, without incurring United Nations condemnation. PLO had engaged in a massive arms build-up, with weapons supplied by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Syrian Arab Republic and the USSR. Israel's response to PLO terror was what any self-respecting sovereign State would do in similar circumstances. While supporting the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries, Israel expected that Lebanese territory would not be permitted to serve as a launching pad for murderous attacks against Israeli citizens.

France said it was most urgent for the Council unambiguously to speak out in favour of an immediate cease-fire, respected by all parties. France condemned any resort to so-called pre-emptive actions that could not be justified by any interpretation of Article 51 of the Charter (on self-defence), a view shared by several other speakers, including Egypt, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Kingdom.

Tunisia said the attacks against Lebanon hardly left any hope that Israel would abide by any Security Council measure unless it was accompanied by sanctions. The call for sanctions was supported by Democratic Yemen, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen, as well as by the League of Arab States; the Syrian Arab Republic considered that Israel's expulsion from the United Nations was required. The need for decisive measures was also underscored by the German Democratic Republic and Jordan.

China urged the Council to condemn Israel

and take effective measures to put an end to Israeli aggression against Lebanon. Egypt considered it to be the Council's responsibility to adopt adequate measures and enforce its decision, and to reinforce and widen the peace-keeping functions of UNIFIL, in order to ensure full respect for Lebanese sovereignty. The USSR said the latest Israeli actions in Lebanon constituted a new stage in Israel's policy, encouraged by the United States, of international terrorism against the Arab States; the Council should strongly condemn Israel for those acts of aggression and demand that it halt them and not commit any similar acts.

The German Democratic Republic stated that the supply of highly sophisticated weapons by the United States encouraged Israel to continue its terror raids.

Jordan maintained that the Israeli attacks were a continuation of 11 years of aggression against the Lebanese people and their Palestine refugee guests, whose only wish was to return to their homeland in occupied Palestine; the United States, which had officially sanctioned Israeli aggression against Lebanon, bore moral responsibility towards the victims of the barbarous raids. The Syrian Arab Republic also regarded the United States as responsible for the Israeli aggression.

The United Kingdom criticized PLO violence but believed that the scale of Israeli actions and the resulting deaths, particularly the civilian casualties, could in no way be justified.

The PLO representative gave a detailed account of the Israeli air raids in southern Lebanon, held the United States to be criminally responsible, and appealed to the Council to use its authority and the Charter of the United Nations to bring peace to the Middle East and enable the Palestinians to return home; otherwise, they would have to force their way back.

In pursuance of the Council resolution, the Secretary-General reported on 23 July<sup>(57)</sup> that he had instructed the UNIFIL Commander and the UNTSO Chief of Staff to exert all possible efforts to ensure an immediate cessation of all armed attacks. PLO had stated that it had given approval for a cease-fire but, despite constant contacts with the parties, it had not been possible to achieve an immediate cessation of hostilities. However, there had been a measure of de-escalation of violence, which he hoped would soon lead to a complete cessation of armed attacks. The Government of Lebanon had expressed the opinion that he should continue his efforts, which he intended to do.

In an addendum to this report issued on 24 July, the Secretary-General informed the Council that he had received from the United States a statement made in Jerusalem the same day by Philip Habib, Personal Representative of the United States President, that all hostile military action between Lebanese and Israeli territory in either direction would cease as of 1330 hours (local time). Israel had endorsed that statement, Lebanon had welcomed it and PLO had said it would respect the Council resolution. The UNIFIL Commander had reported that as of 1320 hours the area was quiet.

COMMUNICATIONS (SEPTEMBER-DECEMBER). By a letter of 17 September to the Secretary-General,<sup>(3)</sup> the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights transmitted the report of a delegation of the Committee (Pakistan, Senegal, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR) which had visited Lebanon from 24 to 26 August at the invitation of Yasser Arafat, Chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, to see the damage done by the Israeli attacks in July. The delegation reported that the extensive damage, as far as could be seen, was entirely confined to civilian targets and appeared to be aimed at terrorizing the civilian population. Cuba, by a letter of 14 September,<sup>(7)</sup> transmitted the report of a mission of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries on a visit to Lebanon from 20 to 23 August, stating that there had been indiscriminate slaughter of civilians, revealing the Israeli intention to exterminate the Palestinian people.

By a letter of 6 October to the Secretary-General,<sup>(4)</sup> the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights expressed concern over a series of bomb attacks against Palestinians based in Lebanon, especially an explosion which reportedly had killed at least 50 people and wounded more than 250 near the PLO offices in Beirut.

Lebanon, by a letter of 3 December,<sup>(33)</sup> transmitted a resolution on Lebanon adopted on 25 November at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference in Fez, Morocco, by which the Conference resolved to elaborate a comprehensive Arab strategy to prevent and counter Israeli aggression, to support the Lebanese Government's efforts to deploy its army in the south, to assist Lebanon in restoring its civil and military institutions, and to provide financial assistance for reconstruction.

By a letter of 21 December to the Council President,<sup>(41)</sup> Tunisia transmitted a PLO letter charging Israel with moving army units into the areas of Al Bayyadah, Marjayoun and Shabaa.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (DECEMBER). As the mandate of UNIFIL was due to expire on 19 December, the Secretary-General, on 11 December, submitted a report<sup>(58)</sup> on the activities of the Force for the period from 16 June to 10 December, in which he noted that the situation in southern Lebanon remained precarious and fundamentally unstable. The Force had made strenuous efforts to maintain the cease-fire of 24 July, and an unusual degree of calm had prevailed in its area of operation.

Armed elements had continued attempts to infiltrate personnel and weapons into the UNIFIL area and to strengthen their positions. No progress had been made in deploying UNIFIL further in the enclave controlled by the de facto forces. Restrictions on freedom of movement of UNIFIL and UNTSO personnel in the enclave continued to complicate UNIFIL operations. Israeli forces continued to be active in and near the UNIFIL area, particularly during the July hostilities. Violations by the Israeli army of Lebanese airspace and territorial waters continued.

During the period under review, two members of the Force lost their lives and seven were injured as a result of hostile actions. This raised to 70 the number of lives lost since the Force's inception, 33 of them as a result of firing and mine explosions. The number of UNIFIL personnel remained at 6,000, and there were 85 military observers from UNTSO.

The Secretary-General further reported that, in order to consolidate the cease-fire and achieve progress in the fulfilment of the UNIFIL mandate, talks had been regularly conducted both at United Nations Headquarters and in the area. PLO had reiterated assurance of its co-operation with UNIFIL in the maintenance of the cease-fire.

In spite of all the difficulties faced by UNIFIL, the Secretary-General considered that its presence and activities in southern Lebanon were an indispensable element in maintaining peace in the immediate area and the Middle East as a whole. Therefore he recommended that the mandate of the Force be extended for another six months.

By a letter of 14 December to the Secretary-General,<sup>(34)</sup> Lebanon, while agreeing in principle to a further renewal of the mandate, reiterated its position that the Security Council had to enable the Force to implement its mandate within an immediate time-frame. To that end, Lebanon requested that the Council call for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the border area where UNIFIL had not been allowed to deploy, for the reactivation of the General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Lebanon, and for an increase in the strength of the Force by no less than 1,000 troops. It asked for clear support from the Council for the phased programme of activities intended to assist the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority.

The Security Council, on 18 December,<sup>(65)</sup> renewed the UNIFIL mandate for another six months, until 19 June 1982. It reaffirmed past resolutions, particularly its repeated calls for strict respect of Lebanon's political independence, unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity. It reiterated its determination to implement the UNIFIL mandate in the totality of its area of operation up to the internationally recognized boundaries. The Council called on all concerned to work towards the consolidation of the July cease-fire and expressed support for the Lebanese Government's rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in southern Lebanon. Finally, it requested the Secretary-General to continue discussions with the Lebanese Government, with a view to establishing a joint phased programme of activities for the total implementation of the UNIFIL mandate.

The resolution, prepared in consultations among Council members, was adopted by 13 votes to none, with 2 abstentions (German Democratic Republic, USSR).

Speaking after the vote, the Secretary-General said UNIFIL would continue to exert all possible efforts to carry out its task; he hoped Council members would use their influence so that the parties would heed the Council.

At their request, Israel, Kuwait, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic were invited to participate without vote in the debate. At Tunisia's request, conveyed in a letter of 18 December,<sup>(40)</sup> an invitation under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure<sup>c</sup> was extended to the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States.

Israel stated that as long as non-Lebanese elements—25,000 Syrian troops and over 15,000 PLO terrorists—were allowed to operate within and from Lebanon, no real progress would be achieved towards the return of the Lebanese Government's authority over its territory. The completion of Israel's withdrawal had been confirmed by the UNIFIL Commander on 13 June 1978,<sup>(66)</sup> but peace and security had not been restored in Lebanon because of the continuing presence of the Syrian occupation army and the massive presence of PLO terrorists. Israel continued to support Lebanon's independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and unity within its internationally recognized boundaries. The restoration of peace in Lebanon and the solution of its problems did not have to be contingent on the attainment of an overall solution to the Arab-Israel conflict.

Lebanon considered the resolution a satisfactory compromise although, together with Tunisia, it had suggested a different draft. However, it deplored the fact that the Council had not responded fully to its request to strengthen UNIFIL. Moreover, Israel had not withdrawn from Lebanese territory and the Council should examine ways to assure such withdrawal. Lebanon added that there was hope also in the fact that China had found it possible for the first time to vote on a resolution renewing the mandate of the Force.

The German Democratic Republic, observing that the resolution did not contain any vigorous steps to end Israel's aggressive actions and the actions of the Haddad bands against Lebanon and the Palestinians, reiterated its reservations on the mandate, composition and financing of the Force. Voicing similar reservations, the USSR said the Council should have focused on protecting Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity, and should have taken vigorous and effective steps to counter Israel's aggressive designs towards Lebanon and to secure the full withdrawal of Israeli troops from all Lebanese territory.

Kuwait, speaking on behalf of the Arab Group, said Israel's friends, notably the United States, should contribute towards stabilizing the area by pressuring Israel to stop its exploitation of a dangerous and explosive situation in Lebanon. The Arab League representative said his organization was committed to the diplomatic United Nations option for resolving the Middle East crises pertaining to Lebanon.

The Syrian Arab Republic said the duty of the Arab Defence Force in Lebanon was to stop a civil war, prevent the partition of the country into mini-States and enable the Lebanese people to determine its own destiny without external interference; the Syrian Arab Republic would never relinquish its duty to defend Lebanon's unity and peace.

France appealed to all parties to continue to respect the cease-fire, to refrain from any action liable to lead to violent reactions and to make a resolute effort to allow consolidation of the UNIFIL area; it favoured the earliest possible resumption of ILMAC and welcomed the ideas of strengthening the means and objectives of UNIFIL, as advocated by the Lebanese Government. In Ireland's view, UNIFIL had achieved considerable success but a peace-keeping force was not a substitute for an effort to negotiate a settlement. In the view of the United States, the existence of UNIFIL, with all its imperfections, had helped materially to reduce dangerous confrontations; the United States pledged to help towards the restoration of the Lebanese Government's authority in the south.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In its resolution of 28 October on the right of peoples to self-determination,<sup>(59)</sup> as well as in a resolution on the Middle East situation adopted on 17 December,<sup>(60)</sup> the General Assembly strongly condemned the Israeli aggression against Lebanon and the continuous bombardment and destruction of cities and villages, and all acts that violated Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and the security of its people and that prevented implementation of the Security Council's 1978 resolution establishing UNIFIL.<sup>(61)</sup>

The original draft of the resolution on self-determination, as submitted by Angola on behalf of the African Group, would have had the Assembly condemn Israel's expansionist activities, such as the constant violations of Lebanon's territorial integrity and the continuous bombing of civilian, particularly Palestinian, populations and the destruction of their villages and encampments, as a serious obstacle to Palestinian self-determination and independence. Lebanon proposed an amendment<sup>(1)</sup> to replace this paragraph by one condemning the expansion of Israeli activities, particularly the constant violation of Lebanon's territorial integrity and the continuous bombing of civilians in south Lebanon and Beirut, and generally the non-implementation of resolutions condemning violence against Lebanon. Lebanon withdrew its amendment after the sponsors revised their text to insert the wording on Lebanon paraphrased in the preceding paragraph, and to place in a separate paragraph the phrase in their original draft whereby the Assembly condemned Israel's expansionist activities and the continuous bombing of Palestinian civilians as a serious obstacle to Palestinian self-determination and independence.

Speaking before the vote in the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, Israel said it would vote against the resolution, since it distorted the facts by failing to mention the underlying causes of the Lebanon situation, including the Syrian occupation and the more than 100,000 civilian deaths which had resulted.

Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) continued in 1981 to supervise the observance of the cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic and to ensure, in accordance with its mandate, that there were no military forces in the area of separation. The mandate of the Force was renewed twice by the Security Council, each time for six months.

Both the General Assembly and the Council adopted resolutions dealing with the situation in the Golan Heights occupied by Israel and Israel's decision to apply Israeli law to that territory (p. 307).

REPORTS OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. Towards the end of each of the six-month UNDOF mandates, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report in which he recommended the extension of the mandate for a further six months.

The first report, dated 20 May,<sup>(3)</sup> gave an account of the Force's activities since 21 November 1980. The Secretary-General observed that UNDOF had continued to supervise the observance of the cease-fire in the area of separation between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic and the areas of limitation of armaments and forces, in accordance with the terms of the 1974 Agreement on Disengagement between Israeli and Syrian Forces in the Golan Heights.<sup>(8)</sup> With the use of fixed observation posts and patrols the cease-fire had been maintained, no complaints having been lodged by either side in that regard. The Secretary-General noted, however, that restrictions on the contingents' freedom of movement still existed and efforts to correct that situation would continue.

As at 20 May, the strength of the Force was 1,279, with contingents drawn from Austria, Canada, Finland and Poland, and including 14 military observers from UNTSO. On 25 February, Major-General Erkki Raine Kaira of Finland, formerly Chief of Staff of UNTSO, succeeded Major-General Guenther G. Greindl of Austria as Commander of UNDOF.

The Secretary-General noted that, despite the prevailing quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the Middle East situation as a whole was likely to remain dangerous without a comprehensive settlement. He expressed hope that determined efforts would be made by all concerned to arrive at a just and durable peace settlement.

He considered the continued presence of UNDOF to be essential and recommended that the Council extend its mandate for another six months. He added that the Governments concerned had agreed to the proposed extension.

With the UNDOF mandate due to expire on 30 November, the Secretary-General, on 20 November, submitted a report<sup>(4)</sup> on the activities of the Force for the period from 21 May to 20 November. He stated that UNDOF had continued, with the co-operation of the parties, to fulfil the tasks entrusted to it. The situation in the sector had remained quiet and there had been no serious incidents. The strength of the Force as at 20 November was 1,277, made up of contingents from Austria (527), Canada (219), Finland (393) and Poland (126), and with 12 United Nations military observers detailed from UNTSO.

The Secretary-General again observed that, despite the prevailing quiet in the sector, the overall situation in the Middle East remained potentially dangerous. He therefore considered the continued presence of UNDOF to be essential, recommended that its mandate be extended until 31 May 1982 and indicated that the Governments concerned had agreed.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION. On 22 May<sup>(6)</sup> and 23 November,<sup>(7)</sup> the Security Council renewed the UNDOF mandate for another six months, until 30 November 1981 and 31 May 1982, respectively. Each time, the decision was taken, without debate, by 14 votes to none, with one member (China) not participating in the vote. The Council also called on all parties to implement immediately its 1973 resolution calling for a cease-fire and peace negotiations,<sup>(5)</sup> and requested the Secretary-General to report to it in six months.

After each vote, the President made almost identical statements on the Council's behalf,<sup>(1,2)</sup> as follows:

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph [26] [27], that 'despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached'. This statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Financing of UN peace-keeping forces in the Middle East

The General Assembly in 1981 appropriated a total of $177,099,248 for the two United Nations peace-keeping forces in the Middle East. Of this sum, $30,933,248 was for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Israel-Syria sector for the period 1 June 1981 to 31 May 1982 and $146,166,000 was for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) from 19 December 1980 to 18 December 1981. The dates corresponded to the varying mandates of the Forces as established by the Security Council. The Assembly also provided for financial authority to meet the expenses of UNDOF and UNIFIL for specified periods beyond these dates in the event the Council decided to continue them beyond the expiry of the six-month mandates in effect when the Assembly acted.

In each case, the Assembly apportioned the expenses for the Forces among all Member States in accordance with the special scale used for this purpose since the establishment of the former United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) in 1973.<sup>(1)</sup> Under this arrangement, the permanent members of the Security Council were assessed more than under the scale of assessments for the United Nations regular budget, while most developing countries were assessed 80 per cent less and the least developed countries 90 per cent less than under the regular scale. According to the preambles of the appropriation resolutions, this arrangement took into account the fact that the economically more developed countries were in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries had a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures.

In respect of both Forces, the Assembly decided that Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and Zimbabwe, admitted to the United Nations in 1980, would be placed in the category of least developed States for assessment purposes.

The Assembly decided to suspend certain provisions of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations to enable the Organization to retain the surplus balances of $2,694,446 for UNDOF and $3,759,109 for UNFIL, instead of having to return these "book surpluses" to Member States as a credit against their subsequent assessments. The Assembly recognized that, because of the withholding of contributions by certain States, the surplus balances in the UNDOF and UNFIL Special Accounts had been fully drawn upon to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting the expenses of the Forces. Applying the rules, it added, would aggravate the already difficult financial situations of the Forces.

The Assembly acted on the basis of financial estimates submitted in reports of the Secretary-General and of recommendations by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

UNDOF financing

The General Assembly made appropriations for UNDOF spanning the two six-month extensions of the Force's mandate approved by the Security Council in 1981—1 June to 30 November 1981<sup>(7)</sup> and 1 December 1981 to 31 May 1982.<sup>(8)</sup>

By a resolution of 30 November 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> appropriations were made in the amounts of $14,959,248 gross $14,801,748 net of staff assessment) for the six months from 1 June to 30 November 1981 and $15,974,000 gross ($15,785,000 net) for the period from 1 December 1981 to 31 May 1982. Also by this resolution, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to enter into financial commitments for UNDOF for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1982, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the existing mandate. It limited such commitments to the monthly rate of $2,662,333 gross ($2,630,833 net) corresponding to the expenditure rate of the six months ending 31 May 1982.

The resolution also contained provisions relating to the apportionment of expenses among Member States (see above).

The Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 94 to 3, with 17 abstentions, following its approval in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 72 to 2, with 17 abstentions.

In a second resolution of 30 November,<sup>(6)</sup> the Assembly acted to make additional funds available to UNDOF by suspending certain provisions of the Financial Regulations so as to enable the United Nations to retain the unspent portion of 1980 appropriations for UNDOF, amounting to $2,694,446 as at 31 December 1980, which otherwise would have had to be surrendered as a credit against the subsequent assessments of Member States. The Assembly decided that this amount was to be entered in the account which it had created in 1978 when it took a similar action for the first time.<sup>(3)</sup>

This resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 91 to 16, with 8 abstentions, following approval by the Fifth Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 70 to 13, with 8 abstentions.

In a report of 23 October,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General gave cost estimates for the period from 1 December 1981 to 30 November 1982 totalling $32,248,000, or $2,687,333 gross ($2,655,833 net) per month, assuming maintenance of the current average strength of 1,275 troops and continuance of UNDOF's existing responsibilities.

The Secretary-General reported a shortfall of approximately $2.8 million in contributions to the Force for the period from 25 October 1979 to 30 November 1981 owing to non-payment by certain Member States. The shortfall of previous periods for UNDOF and for UNEF, until its liquidation in 1980, was estimated at $58.9 million. This situation, the Secretary-General said, placed a heavy burden on the troop contributors, as reimbursements to them had not been made on time or in accordance with agreed rates.

The appropriation and authorization figures approved by the Assembly for the 12 months beginning 1 December 1981 were in accordance with an ACABQ recommendation<sup>(1)</sup> that the Secretary-General's estimate be reduced by $300,000, to $31,948,000 gross ($31,570,000 net). The Committee did not recommend specific reductions for particular items, but felt that savings should result if attention was paid to economy and efficiency.

Introducing both resolutions in the Fifth Committee, Canada, on behalf of the eight sponsors (Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Norway, Sweden), explained that the formula proposed for financing UNDOF paralleled that approved by the Assembly in 1980.<sup>(4)</sup> Canada believed that all Member States had a responsibility to support UNDOF and viewed with continued concern the refusal by a number of countries to pay their assessed contributions.

Albania, Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic, which voted against the resolutions, reiterated their refusal to take part in the Force's financing; the Syrian Arab Republic added that Israel and its supporters should bear the whole cost. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which did not participate in the voting, took the same position, stating that the presence of peace-keeping forces in the Middle East had not contributed to a solution.

Democratic Yemen, which abstained, also refused financial responsibility, declaring that the Force was becoming permanent because of Israel's intransigent and expansionist policies, and that the aggressor should pay the costs of the aggression. Also abstaining in the Fifth Committee were Mauritania, which doubted whether the Force served any useful purpose, and Yemen, which said the resolution was an endorsement of occupation by force and the financing should be borne by the aggressor.

The USSR took exception to the $2.3 million increase estimated for UNDOF expenditures over the previous year's level, stating that substantial savings should be possible under several headings where the increase was not tied to inflation, such as purchase and maintenance of equipment, supplies and services, and water and electricity.

Israel, Japan, Jordan, Morocco and Peru supported the resolutions. Israel described the renewal of the UNDOF mandate as an imperfect solution but better than any alternative. Jordan stated that the stationing of peace-keeping forces in the territories occupied by Israel was preferable to the presence of other troops, while Morocco stressed the temporary nature of the forces and urged the international community to work towards removing all traces of aggression in the Middle East. In Japan's view, effective measures would have to be introduced sooner or later to ensure the payment of contributions withheld by certain States.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, 363(1974) of 29 November 1974, 369(1975) of 28 May 1975, 381(1975) of 30 November 1975, 390(1976) of 28 May 1976, 398(1976) of 30 November 1976, 408(1977) of 26 May 1977, 420(1977) of 30 November 1977, 429(1978) of 31 May 1978, 441(1978) of 30 November 1978, 449(1979) of 30 May 1979, 456(1979) of 30 November 1979, 470(1980) of 30 May 1980, 481(1980) of 26 November 1980, 485(1981) of 22 May 1981 and 493(1981) of 23 November 1981,

Recalling its resolutions 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3374 C (XXX) of 2 December 1975, 31/5 D of 22 December 1976, 32/4 C of 2 December 1977, 33/13 D of 8 December 1978, 34/7 C of 3 December 1979, 35/44 of 1 December 1980 and 35/45 A of 1 December 1980,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $14,959,248 gross ($14,801,748 net) authorized and apportioned by section III of Assembly resolution 35/45 A for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1981, inclusive;

91-16-8 (recorded vote) Meeting 77 30 November 1981

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/36/720) by recorded vote (70-13-8), 25 November (meeting 55); 8-nation draft (A/C.5/36/L.15, part B); agenda item 110 (a).

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 5 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Forces on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recalling its resolutions 33/13 E of 14 December 1978, 34/7 D of 17 December 1979 and 35/45 B of 1 December 1980,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Forces, Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $2,694,446, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 33/13 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Central African Republic, Chile, Colombia, Costa, Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Rwanda, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United States, Upper Volta, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Afghanistan, Albania, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Hungary, Iraq, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

Abstaining: Algeria, Angola, Chad, Democratic Yemen, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Romania.

UNIFIL financing

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 16 December 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> appropriated funds covering the two extensions of the mandate of UNIFIL approved by the Security Council for the period through mid-December 1981—from 19 December 1980 to 18 June 1981<sup>(7)</sup> and from 19 June to 18 December 1981.<sup>(8)</sup> For each six-month mandate, appropriations totalled $73,083,000 gross ($72,360,996 net) of staff assessment). Also by this resolution, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for UNIFIL, should the Council continue the Force beyond the existing mandate. The authorization covered the period from 19 December 1981 to 18 December 1982, at a monthly expenditure rate not to exceed $13,316,666 gross ($13,177,500 net). The Council, on 18 December 1981, renewed the Force's mandate until 19 June 1982.<sup>(9)</sup>

The resolution also included provisions relating to the apportionment of expenses among Member States (p. 295).

The resolution was adopted by 98 votes to 16, with 3 abstentions. By another resolution,<sup>(6)</sup> adopted on the same day by 102 votes to 15, the Assembly authorized suspension of certain provisions of the United Nations Financial Regulations to enable UNIFIL to retain a "surplus" balance of $3,759,109. This procedure was similar to that approved for UNDOF.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Fifth Committee, on 14 December, approved the two resolutions together by 73 votes to 13, with 2 abstentions.

The authorization for the year beginning 19 December 1981 amounted to $3,591,000 less for each six-month period than the $83,491,000 which the Secretary-General had estimated in a report on the financing of the Force,<sup>(2)</sup> based on an average strength of 6,000 troops. The $3.6 million reduction was recommended by ACABQ,<sup>(1)</sup> which suggested that savings could be made in such areas as: construction of premises; purchase, maintenance and repair of vehicles and other equipment; and supplies and services. It also recommended that any future estimates for UNIFIL be presented on a 12-month basis.

As to the status of contributions, the Secretary-General reported that the shortfall attributed to Member States which had said they did not intend to pay had risen from $84.1 million in 1980 to $114.9 million as at 30 September 1981, out of the $491 million in assessments of Member States from the inception of the Force in 1978 to 18 December 1981. There continued to be difficulties in meeting the Force's obligations on a current basis, particularly payments due to the troop contributors, which had again conveyed their serious concern over the heavy burden placed on their Governments. Only $11,700 had been contributed to a special account established under a 1979 Assembly resolution<sup>(3)</sup> for voluntary contributions to alleviate the financial burden on troop contributors.

Sweden, introducing the resolutions in the Fifth Committee on behalf of their 17 sponsors, said all Member States had a collective responsibility to share the financial burden of such operations equitably. Growing deficits undermined efficiency and made it increasingly difficult to find additional States to take part in the operations, given the disproportionate financial burden borne by the troop contributors. Because of non-payment by certain States, troop contributors were receiving less than half of their entitlement to reimbursement under the standard rates approved by the Assembly.

Ireland expressed hope that a satisfactory solution would be found to the problem of withholding, in order to safeguard the peace-keeping role of the United Nations. The United States appealed to States withholding their contributions to reconsider their position, and welcomed China's intention to contribute.

The USSR said all expenditures to eliminate the vestiges of aggression against Lebanon should be borne by the aggressor; it would therefore vote against the resolutions and not contribute to the financing of UNIFIL. Similar statements were made by Albania, Hungary, Iraq, Mongolia, Poland and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Decides that Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and Zimbabwe shall be included in the group of Member States mentioned in section I, paragraph 2 (d), of General Assembly resolution S-8/2 and that their contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution adopted by the Assembly at the current session regarding the scale of assessments;

2. Decides further that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon until 18 December 1981 of the Member States referred to in paragraph 1 of the present section shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the apportionments authorized in section III above.

General Assembly resolution 36/138 B

102-15 Meeting 100 16 December 1981

Approved by Fifth Committee together with draft of resolution 36/138 A above, with same sponsors.

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 7 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recalling its resolutions 34/9 E of 17 December 1979 and 35/115 B of 10 December 1980,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Force,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $3,759,109, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 34/9 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly.

Situation in the territories occupied by Israel

General aspects

During 1981, the situation in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of previous armed conflict in the Middle East was again considered by the General Assembly and its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories. The Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities dealt with human rights violations in the territories (p. 955). The occupied territories consisted of the West Bank of the Jordan River (including East Jerusalem), the Golan Heights, the Gaza Strip and part of the Sinai peninsula.

COMMUNICATIONS. A number of communications on this subject were addressed during the year to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.

Tunisia, on 25 March,<sup>(13)</sup> transmitted a letter of 17 March from the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) calling attention to recent attempts by Israel to consolidate its illegal presence in occupied Palestinian lands through the expansion of settlements and their conversion into "self-governing" townships.

Jordan, on 10 July,<sup>(8)</sup> transmitted charges, based on excerpts from an article published in The Jerusalem Post on 22 June, that Israeli colonization of the West Bank, including Jerusalem and its environs, had reached 35 to 40 per cent of the occupied areas. In letters dated 22 July<sup>(10)</sup> and 27 August,<sup>(12)</sup> Jordan gave an account of Israeli settlement activity in the West Bank and Jerusalem during June and July, indicating that hundreds of dunums (1,000 dunums = 1 sq km) of Arab lands had been confiscated for the purpose of establishing new settlements and enlarging existing ones.

On 14 July,<sup>(9)</sup> Jordan transmitted an article published in the Israeli newspaper Al-Hamishmar on 5 June, according to which almost 250,000 inhabitants of the occupied territories had been in Israeli gaols or detention camps at one time or another during 14 years of occupation.

On 19 August,<sup>(11)</sup> Jordan complained that Israeli prohibitions against Arab and other private contributions to municipalities, charitable institutions and other societies could lead to cessation of essential services to the citizens of the occupied territories and bankruptcy of vital institutions.

On 6 November<sup>(14)</sup> and 16 November,<sup>(15)</sup>

Tunisia transmitted three PLO letters, dated 5, 11 and 12 November, stating that there had been a serious escalation of tension in the occupied West Bank as a result of Israel's decision to impose a new military governor under the pretext of establishing a new civilian administration, and charging Israel with a campaign of repression, including the closure of the Arab University of Bir Zeit, the arrest of several prominent Palestinians and the wounding of a school-boy by Israeli troops.

Throughout the year, a number of communications were also addressed to the Secretary-General on behalf of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, dealing with general and special aspects of the situation in the occupied territories.

The Committee's Acting Chairman, by a letter of 27 February,<sup>(1)</sup> conveyed the Committee's serious concern at Israel's continued confiscation of Arab land, and the Committee's view that further United Nations action, particularly by the Security Council, was needed to call Israel's attention to the danger of its annexation policies and the necessity for its immediate and complete withdrawal. On 19 June,<sup>(2)</sup> he transmitted a copy of a September 1980 document of the World Zionist Federation on Israel's settlement policy, which left no doubt, the Acting Chairman said, that Israel intended to annex the territories it had illegally occupied and that the "autonomy" it envisaged would not apply to the territories but only to their Arab population.

By a letter of 15 July,<sup>(3)</sup> the Chairman expressed the Committee's deep concern at Israel's complete disregard for the rights of the Palestinian people, as evidenced by Israeli press reports of school and university closings, the establishment of new settlements, and desecration of the Moslem cemetery at Haifa to clear land for the construction of administrative offices and commercial centres. By a letter of 24 August,<sup>(4)</sup> the Acting Chairman protested the reported Israeli ban on channelling Arab funds through the Joint Committee for the Occupied Territories at Amman, Jordan.

On 15 October,<sup>(5)</sup> the Chairman referred to news reports that the Israeli Government planned to establish four new Israeli settlements in the occupied territories and to strengthen existing ones.

On 13 November,<sup>(6)</sup> he voiced the Committee's concern at reports of a tense situation, including strikes and protest marches, following the appointment on 1 November of a civilian to head the civilian administration of the occupied West Bank.

Israel and Jordan sent communications concerning arrests of Islamic religious leaders in the West Bank (p. 314), protection of cultural property in Jerusalem (p. 316), other developments relating to Jerusalem (p. 318) and the Mediterranean-Dead Sea canal project (p. 319).

ACTION BY THE COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND ITS SUB-COMMISSION. On 11 February, the Commission on Human Rights adopted two resolutions dealing with the violation of human rights in the occupied territories<sup>(18)</sup> (p. 955). By the first, it condemned a series of Israeli policies and practices in the territories, including annexation, the establishment of Israeli settlements, violence against Arab civilians, population transfer, mass arrests and property confiscation. By the second, it condemned Israel's failure to acknowledge the applicability to the occupied territories of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and called on Israel to abide by that Convention and other rules of international law.

The Sub-Commission on discrimination and minorities, by a resolution of 9 September,<sup>(28)</sup> recommended that the Commission deplore the human rights violations committed by Israeli authorities in the occupied territories and urge Israel to withdraw.

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE ON ISRAELI PRACTICES IN THE OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, in its annual report submitted on 4 September,<sup>(16)</sup> presented information on the situation of the civilian population in the occupied territories. Obtained without the co-operation of Israel, this information was gathered from a variety of sources, including oral and written testimony of persons with first-hand experience, Israeli press reports of statements by Israeli Government officials, other news reports, and from governmental and non-governmental bodies.

The Committee regarded as particularly disturbing the policy statement of the new Israeli Government that it would raise a claim of Israeli sovereignty over the occupied territories in the near future.

The Committee found that, during the period covered by its thirteenth report (25 July 1980-31 August 1981), Israel's annexation and settlement policy had continued unabated. Israeli settlers were playing a considerably increased role in implementing Israel's annexation policy. During the period, the Committee had received information on some 40 settlements that had been either established or inaugurated or whose construction had commenced; in addition, it noted the continuing construction and expansion of Israeli settlements in occupied Jerusalem.

The transfer of Israeli civilians to the occupied territories was contrary to the Convention on protection of civilians (p. 306).

Referring to the treatment of the population of the territories, the Committee stated that Israel continued to follow a policy of extreme provocation of civilians and severe repression of any reaction to that provocation. Despite sporadic reports of steps by the authorities to protect civilians from infringement of their rights by Israeli settlers, the overall picture confirmed the connivance and complicity of the authorities with the settlers. That policy not only denied the right to self-determination but also was the source of continuing and systematic human rights violations.

The Committee reiterated its conclusion, reached in its 1980 report,<sup>(29)</sup> that there were no judicial remedies available to the civilian population other than applying to the High Court of Justice. It had become apparent, the Committee stated, that even that residual possibility was meaningless, mainly because of Israel's conscious efforts to circumvent the judicial authorities. In the Committee's view, the fact that the occupying authorities had changed the law in virtually every field, substituting a legal régime based on Israeli lines, was a form of creeping legal annexation.

Expressing again its concern about the absence of a serious Israeli Government mechanism to supervise detention conditions and examine allegations of ill-treatment, the Committee found that interrogation procedures continued to be accompanied by violence and that detention conditions remained extremely poor. It called for drastic revision.

The Committee recommended, as it had done in previous years, the establishment of a mechanism (the protecting-Power formula based on the Convention on protection of civilians) to safeguard the human rights of the population in the occupied territories and the proper representation of their interests.

The Committee held two series of meetings in 1981: from 21 April to 1 May and from 26 August to 4 September, at Geneva.

The Secretary-General, in a report<sup>(17)</sup> prepared in response to a 1980 General Assembly request,<sup>(19)</sup> described the measures taken to provide facilities to the Committee, including an additional staff member, and to ensure the widest circulation of the Committee's report and dissemination of information on its activities and findings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. After considering the report of the Committee on Israeli practices in the occupied territories, the General Assembly, on 16 December, adopted, seven resolutions on the recommendation of its Special Political Committee (SPC).

One of these resolutions<sup>(22)</sup> contained the Assembly's strong condemnation of a series of Israeli policies and practices, including annexation, establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements, expulsion and transfer of Arabs, confiscation of property, transformation and pillaging of cultural property, destruction of houses, mass arrests, ill-treatment of detainees, interference with religious freedoms, family customs, education, development and freedom of movement, and illegal exploitation of natural resources and people.

The Assembly demanded that Israel desist from those policies and practices, reaffirmed that occupation itself constituted a grave violation of human rights, declared that Israel's grave breaches of the Convention on protection of civilians were war crimes and an affront to humanity, and reiterated its call for non-recognition of changes carried out by Israel in the territories. Deploring Israel's refusal to allow access to the territories by the investigating Committee, the Assembly requested the Committee to continue its work and the Security Council to initiate measures to halt the policies and practices in question.

This resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 111 to 2, with 31 abstentions. SPC approved it on 30 November by a recorded vote of 93 to 2, with 26 abstentions. Paragraph 6, declaring that Israel's grave breaches of the Convention on protection of civilians were war crimes, was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 96 to 18, with 29 abstentions, after the Committee approved it by a recorded vote of 81 to 17, with 21 abstentions. The request in paragraph 15 that the Security Council ensure Israel's compliance with the Convention and initiate measures to halt Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territories was adopted by a recorded vote of 111 to 18, with 12 abstentions, following approval in Committee by a recorded vote of 91 to 18, with 7 abstentions. Bangladesh introduced the resolution, which was also sponsored by Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Pakistan and the Ukrainian SSR.

By another resolution,<sup>(21)</sup> the Assembly determined that all Israeli measures designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, were in violation of the Convention on protection of civilians, constituted a serious obstruction of efforts to achieve peace in the Middle East and had no legal validity. It strongly deplored Israel's persistence in carrying out such measures, particularly the establishment of settlements; demanded that Israel comply with its international obligations and desist forthwith from taking such measures; and urgently called on all States parties to the Geneva Convention to respect and ensure compliance with its provisions in all territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.

This resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 142 to 1, with 3 abstentions, following approval by SPC on 30 November by a recorded vote of 117 to 1, with 2 abstentions. It was introduced in SPC by Pakistan, also on behalf of Bangladesh, India and Indonesia.

By other resolutions adopted on 16 December in connection with the report of the Committee on Israeli practices in the occupied territories, the Assembly demanded Israeli compliance with the Convention on protection of civilians,<sup>(20)</sup> and demanded that Israel facilitate the immediate return of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the Islamic Judge of Hebron,<sup>(23)</sup> report on assassination attempts against three other mayors,<sup>(26)</sup> rescind orders for the closure of three universities<sup>(25)</sup> and desist from repressive measures against Syrians in the Golan Heights.<sup>(24)</sup> Also, by a resolution of 17 December on the Middle East situation,<sup>(27)</sup> the Assembly condemned Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, and demanded immediate, unconditional and total Israeli withdrawal.

Israel voted against the resolution containing a condemnation of Israeli practices, saying that it reflected the biased attitude of the Committee's report and reproduced false allegations and conclusions based on unreliable evidence and testimony. The United States said it had voted against because of the resolution's bias and polemical tone.

Sweden abstained on the ground that the resolution contained generalizations which could not be substantiated and elements which went beyond the Assembly's competence. The European Community (EC) members, the United Kingdom declared, had abstained because of reservations regarding the paragraphs voted on separately and the paragraph by which the Assembly condemned specified Israeli policies and practices. Canada, while agreeing with the thrust of the resolution, could not support that paragraph or the condemnation of Israel's violations and grave breaches of the Convention on protection of civilians and their characterization as war crimes and an affront to humanity. Objection to these terms was voiced as well by New Zealand, which also did not approve of the request to the Security Council to initiate measures to halt Israeli practices.

Thailand voted for the resolution but abstained on the "affront to humanity" paragraph, on the ground that only a legal body could make such an assertion; it also had reservations on the condemnation of interference with the educational system and freedom of movement, and believed that no territories other than those occupied since 1967 should be mentioned.

Explaining its opposition to the resolution on Israeli settlements and other measures tending to change the occupied territories, Israel said SPC was not competent to pronounce on the legal validity of actions taken by Israel in those territories; also, it was particularly out of place to claim that such policies obstructed peace efforts.

The United States said it had abstained because the resolution sought to pronounce on the legality of Israeli settlements; the United States continued to oppose their establishment and saw them as creating obstacles to peace, but was convinced that repetitive pronouncements on legal issues were not likely to cause Israel to reflect on its policy.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, said they had voted for the resolution as it reflected their view that the settlements were illegal and a serious obstacle to peace. Sweden declared that the dismantling of settlements would be a constructive step.

Sri Lanka, introducing in SPC the report of the Committee on Israeli practices in the occupied territories, said the situation of the people in those areas had not improved and, on occasion, had perhaps worsened. It therefore wondered whether another formula should not be sought, acceptable to both the international community and the Israeli Government, to reverse the process and improve the human rights situation in the territories.

Israel rejected the report as replete with false accusations and distortions of truth. International law clearly recognized that the authorities had a duty to protect the population of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza District against disorder and terrorism. Despite terrorist acts, Israel had never applied the death penalty in the areas. It had given the local population access to Israeli courts, permitted them to travel and trade with neighbouring Arab countries, and allowed them to take part in democratic elections. No displacement of the local population had taken place, and the Arab population in the administered areas had even increased by about 20 per cent since 1967. The Israeli legal system provided numerous safeguards for the rights of the inhabitants. It was time to end the Committee's activities, which were designed to obstruct reconciliation and peace.

Many speakers considered that the Committee's conclusions were valid and that the Arab population in the occupied territories were denied their human rights. A number of countries, such as Albania, Algeria, Bahrain, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Mauritania, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, Yemen and Zambia, called for Israel's withdrawal from the territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the implementation of the rights of the Palestinian people, including its right to establish its own State.

Austria said that, contrary to international law, the Israeli administration had radically altered the legal and demographic status of the occupied territories, creating tension in the region and undermining the search for a peaceful negotiated settlement. Pakistan said that, even if Israel was telling the truth when it spoke of social and educational amenities in the occupied territories, that would not justify its occupation. Senegal stated that Israel, in defiance of human rights and international norms, persisted in its policy of creating a predominantly Jewish State, including most of the Arab territories under military occupation since 1967.

Oman stated that the Israeli policy of collective punishment, from which old people, women and children were not excluded, appeared to be worse than the Nazi policy in the Second World War. Saudi Arabia also stated that Israeli practices were no less dangerous than the methods used by the Nazis.

Many States expressed concern at evidence that Israeli settlements in the occupied territories were being established and expanded at an accelerated pace. The Syrian Arab Republic and Zambia saw this as proof that Israel had no intention of withdrawing from the territories.

In Algeria's view, Israel's aim was to uproot the Arabs once and for all from their homes. Kuwait said the strategy to transform Palestine into a totally Jewish "national homeland" had been manifested in three parallel thrusts: initial attempts to secure a continued influx of Jewish migrants to Palestine with the assistance of the former Mandatory Power, the acquisition of Arab lands by any method and the gradual displacement of Arab inhabitants. Yemen stated that Israeli measures of oppression in the territories were part of a plot to force the inhabitants to leave their lands so that Jewish settlers might replace them.

Iraq remarked that the Zionists had expropriated the territories' only major resource—water—by drilling wells for the new Jewish colonies while forbidding the Arabs to drill wells or increase their capacity.

Several speakers, among them Bulgaria, China, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Mongolia, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United Arab Emirates, maintained that the support given by the United States encouraged Israel to continue its occupation policy.

In Albania's view, the Camp David accords had enabled Israel to extend its aggressive activities against the Palestinians, while the USSR helped Israel by providing it with a steady flow of Jewish emigrants to people the new settlements in the occupied territories.

The USSR condemned the Israeli policy of mass repression and racial discrimination, adding that such excesses in the occupied territories could be ended only by a comprehensive Middle East peace settlement.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, urged an end to Israeli occupation, to the construction and expansion of settlements, and to expulsion of Palestinian notables, but said the EC members could not accept the Committee's report as fully authoritative, since it had been unable to obtain sufficient first-hand evidence or prepare a complete account. The United States described the report as incomplete, partial, partisan and based on selective sources of information; the United States was concerned about the situation of Jewish minorities in certain States of the region and about the terrorist acts which violated the human rights of Palestinian moderates as well as about the situation of those Palestinians whose rights had on some occasion been violated.

Egypt outlined proposals it had made to Israel for what it described as confidence-building measures in relation to the occupied territories, including: freezing of settlement; return of expropriated land and property; freeing of frozen or confiscated bank deposits; lifting of the ban on political gatherings and permitting freedom of expression; abolition of restrictions on freedom of movement; release of Palestinian detainees; return of displaced persons and of all political exiles; desisting from military manœuvres; return of the judicial system in the West Bank to its pre-occupation form; cessation of all violations of civil and political rights, including property rights and the right to academic freedom; and lifting of restrictions on water use in agriculture.

Cyprus reaffirmed the right of all displaced persons to return to their homes and lands of origin, and maintained that the civil, political, cultural and religious rights of the Palestinians must be protected. Spain saw a lack of will on Israel's part to settle the dispute over the territories, and urged action to prepare the ground for peaceful coexistence, free of the animosity that had accumulated over the years. Qatar said that, if the international community was unable to apply international law in defence of the Palestinian people, the Palestinians should continue to struggle by every means at their disposal to eliminate the effects of the occupation and exercise their rights.

Bangladesh called for an immediate cessation of Israeli exploitation of the natural resources and population of the occupied territories, and for prompt and decisive steps by the international community to put an end to Israeli occupation.

China believed that the Committee on Israeli practices in the occupied territories should continue its work to draw attention to the plight of the Arab and Palestinian peoples, and the Assembly should take steps to force Israel to comply with United Nations resolutions and international obligations in regard to the territories. Jordan said it was inescapable that the Committee should intervene promptly to end Israel's occupation of Arab and Palestinian lands.

Kenya considered it the duty of the Assembly and the Security Council to help promote the economic development of a Palestinian State, and urged them to call on Israel to reverse its settlement, expropriation and annexation policies.

Morocco recalled that the Twelfth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Baghdad, Iraq, 1-5 June) had called for suspension of Israel's United Nations membership and the application of sanctions as provided in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>(7)</sup> The need to consider sanctions was underlined by Bahrain, the Byelorussian SSR and the Syrian Arab Republic. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya called for effective international deterrent measures and the Sudan for intervention by the international community to put an end to Israel's annexation policy.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/5 of 28 October 1977, 33/113 B of 18 December 1978, 34/90 C of 12 December 1979 and 35/122 B of 11 December 1980,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980,

Expressing grave anxiety and concern at the present serious situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by the Government of Israel, as the occupying Power, designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories.

Considering that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all Arab territories occupied since 5 June 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, are in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and constitute a serious obstruction of efforts to achieve a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, and therefore have no legal validity;

2. Strongly deplures the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem;

3. Demands that Israel comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands once more that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, desist forthwith from taking any action which would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Geneva Convention to respect and to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and by the principles and provisions Of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, as well as of other relevant conventions and regulations,

Recalling all its resolutions on the subject, in particular resolutions 32/91 B and C of 12 December 1977, 33/113 C of 18 December 1978, 34/90 A of 12 December 1979 and 35/122 C of 11 December 1980, and also those adopted by the Security Council, the Commission on Human Rights and other United Nations organs concerned and by the specialized agencies,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, which contains, inter alia, public statements made by the leaders of the Government of Israel,

1. Commends the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly and for its thoroughness and impartiality;

2. Deplures the continued refusal by Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

3. Demands that Israel allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

4. Reaffirms the fact that occupation itself constitutes a grave violation of the human rights of the civilian population of the occupied Arab territories;

5. Condemns the continued and persistent violation by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and other applicable international instruments, and condemns in particular those violations which the Convention designates as "grave breaches" thereof;

Observance by Israel of the 1949

Convention on protection of civilians

By a resolution of 16 December 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly reaffirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (fourth Geneva Convention), was applicable to the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem. It condemned Israel's failure to acknowledge the Convention's applicability and demanded that Israel comply with its provisions.

The resolution was adopted, by a recorded vote of 142 to 1, with 3 abstentions, on the recommendation of SPC, which approved the nine-nation draft on 30 November by a recorded vote of 117 to 1, with 2 abstentions.

The Assembly adopted paragraph 1, reaffirming the applicability of the Convention to the occupied territories, by a recorded vote of 142 to 1 (Israel), following its approval by SPC, also by recorded vote, of 118 to 1. Paragraph 2, condemning Israel's failure to acknowledge the Convention's applicability to the occupied territories, was adopted by a recorded vote of 140 to 2 (Israel, United States), after SPC approved it by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 114 to 2, with 2 abstentions.

By the same resolution and in another of the same date,<sup>(3)</sup> the Assembly urgently called on all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure compliance with its provisions in all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem. The applicability of the Convention was reaffirmed by a third resolution adopted that day.<sup>(5)</sup>

In a fourth resolution,<sup>(4)</sup> also of 16 December, the Assembly condemned Israel's persistent violation of the Convention and other international instruments, condemned in particular those violations which the Convention designated as "grave breaches" and declared such breaches to be war crimes and an affront to humanity.

On 17 December, both the Assembly<sup>(6)</sup> and the Security Council<sup>(7)</sup> determined that the Convention continued to apply to the Syrian territory of the Golan Heights occupied by Israel since 1967.

The resolution devoted to Israel's observance of the Convention was sponsored by Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Pakistan and Yugoslavia. Introducing it, Indonesia said it was similar to resolutions of previous years because the reason for them—Israeli occupation—continued to exist.

Explaining its negative vote, Israel said it did not acknowledge the applicability of the Convention to the areas administered by it, but it applied the Convention's principles and went even further by granting the local population privileges not provided for in the Convention.

The United States said it believed that the Convention applied to Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza and it would continue to measure Israel's practices there against the obligations of an occupying Power, but it had abstained in the vote because it considered it inappropriate to condemn Israel's failure to acknowledge that applicability.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members which voted in favour, noted that the language of the text was stronger than in the corresponding resolution of 1980,<sup>(1)</sup> and said they did not consider all changes to be justified.

Special aspects

Status of the Golan Heights

The situation in the Golan Heights, a part of the Syrian Arab Republic that had been occupied by Israel since 1967, was the subject of several communications during 1981 and of a resolution by which the General Assembly called on Israel to desist from repressive measures against Syrians as well as measures to change the character and status of the area. Following the Israeli Parliament's decision on 14 December to apply Israeli laws, jurisdiction and administration to the Golan Heights, both the Security Council and the Assembly demanded that Israel rescind its decision (p. 309).

COMMUNICATIONS. By notes verbales of 24 February<sup>(2)</sup> and 17 March,<sup>(3)</sup> the Syrian Arab Republic charged Israel with practising terrorism, pressure and coercion in the Golan Heights and changing its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status, with the aim of annexation. Syrian citizens, it said, had been compelled to renounce their original nationality and obtain Israeli citizenship, and 30 Israeli settlements had been established, populated by 7,000 Israeli settlers.

Israel, by a letter of 11 March,<sup>(1)</sup> rejected these allegations, in particular the charge that Syrian citizens had been forced to renounce their nationality or become Israelis.

On 22 June,<sup>(4)</sup> the Syrian Arab Republic stated in a note verbale that 30 leaders in the Golan Heights had signed a declaration asserting that the area was and would remain Syrian, and deciding to refuse to deal with any individual accepting Israeli identity. The text of the declaration, dated 25 March, was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 9 July.<sup>(5)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the Golan Heights. The first, on 16 December, arose from consideration by SPC of the situation in the territories occupied by Israel, and was prepared before the decision of the Israeli Parliament on 14 December to apply Israeli law to the area. The second, demanding that Israel rescind its decision, was adopted on 17 December in the context of the Assembly's consideration of the Middle East situation.<sup>(7)</sup>

By its resolution of 16 December,<sup>(6)</sup> the Assembly condemned Israel's persistence in changing the character and status of the Golan Heights and its refusal to comply with United Nations resolutions. All legislative and administrative measures to that end, it determined, were null and void. It called on Member States not to recognize such measures and on Israel to desist from enacting them. It also strongly condemned Israel for attempting to impose Israeli citizenship and identity cards on Syrian citizens in the area, and called on it to desist from repressive measures against the population. The Assembly requested a report from the Secretary-General at its 1982 session on implementation of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 141 to 1, with 3 abstentions, following approval by SPC on 30 November by a recorded vote of 96 to 2, with 24 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Bangladesh, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Pakistan and the Ukrainian SSR.

Speaking in explanation of vote in SPC, Israel opposed the resolution, calling it a weapon in the ongoing warfare against Israel waged by the Syrian Arab Republic, which refused to negotiate with Israel. For years, the Syrian Arab Republic had used the Golan Heights to launch attacks on Israel by regular and irregular forces.

The United States said it had voted against the text in SPC because of its bias and polemical tone.

Explaining their positive votes in the Assembly, Canada, Norway and Sweden, which had abstained in the Committee, stated that they had changed their positions in the light of the Israeli Parliament's decision of 14 December. However, Canada and Norway maintained strong reservations particularly concerning the condemnation of measures to impose Israeli citizenship on the Syrian citizens of the Golan Heights.

During the SPC debate in November on the situation in the occupied territories, the Syrian Arab Republic said that, since the occupation of the Golan Heights in 1967, Israel had expelled 90 per cent of the people, leaving only four inhabited villages with a total population of no more than 15,000, and had established 38 Israeli settlements. In implementing its policy aimed at ultimate annexation, Israel had adopted its customary defiance of international law and the will of the international community.

Annexation by Israel

The Security Council and the General Assembly adopted resolutions on 17 December 1981 in connection with the enactment by the Israeli Parliament, on 14 December, of a law which many speakers in the Council characterized as tantamount to annexation by Israel of the Golan Heights. The legislation extended Israeli laws, jurisdiction and administration to the area.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION. Meeting at the request of the Syrian Arab Republic, the Security Council, on 17 December, unanimously adopted a resolution<sup>(17)</sup> prepared in the course of consultations, by which it decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the Golan Heights was null and void, and demanded that Israel rescind that decision. It determined that all the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War continued to apply to the Syrian territory occupied since 1967 (p. 307). Requesting the Secretary-General to report to the Council within two weeks on implementation of the resolution, the Council decided that, in the event of Israel's non-compliance, it would meet not later than 5 January 1982 to consider taking appropriate measures.

Speaking after the Council acted, Israel said it could not accept the resolution, which ignored the Syrian Arab Republic's persistent aggressions against Israel since 1948 and its refusal to recognize Israel, negotiate and make peace with it. The resolution could only be construed by the Syrian Arab Republic as an encouragement to persist in its aggression.

The United States said that, in voting for the resolution, it expressed opposition to Israel's action purporting to extend permanent control over the Golan Heights; the United States called on Israel to reaffirm its commitment to a negotiated settlement, including the future status of the Golan Heights.

The Council met on 16 and 17 December in response to a request by the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 December<sup>(7)</sup> for an urgent meeting. By a note verbale of 14 December,<sup>(2)</sup> Cuba transmitted a communiqué adopted at a plenary meeting of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries held in New York on the same day, supporting that request and calling on the Council to take appropriate measures to restore the full sovereignty of the Syrian Arab Republic over all its occupied territories.

The Council invited Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Israel, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Pakistan, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zaire, at their request, to participate without vote in the discussion, in accordance with rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.<sup>f</sup>

The Council also invited, at Tunisia's request of 16 December,<sup>(9)</sup> the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, in accordance with rule 39.<sup>8</sup>

During the debate, most speakers expressed the opinion that Israel's action was an annexation of Syrian territory, a violation of international law and a new, serious obstacle to a settlement of the Middle East conflict. Several States, including China, the German Democratic Republic, Indonesia, Uganda and Yugoslavia, condemned the Israeli action and supported the Syrian demand that Israel revoke its decision. A number of speakers, such as China, Cuba, India, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Tunisia, Uganda, the USSR, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia, called for consideration of sanctions or firm action in the case of Israel's non-compliance with the Council decision.

Several countries, for example the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Uganda and Viet Nam, said Israel's action had to be seen in the larger context of its expansion and annexation policy. The need for Israel's withdrawal, not only from the Golan Heights but from all the territories occupied since 1967, was underlined by a number of States, among them Mexico, Romania, Turkey and Zaire.

In the Syrian Arab Republic's view, Israel's action epitomized a process of colonization begun in 1967 with a twofold objective: first, to create a de facto settler-colonialist situation, and second, to prevent the displaced Syrian Arab citizens, numbering approximately 200,000, from returning to their homes and property in the Golan Heights. It saw Israel's act not only as a breach of the cease-fire but as an act of war, and declared that it would not spare any effort to defend its territory and its national interests. It expected the Council to demand that Israel rescind its annexation of Syrian territory and, in the case of non-compliance, to impose sanctions.

Israel said it had occupied the Golan Heights in self-defence, following frequent Syrian bombardment of Israeli towns. Since then, the Syrian Arab Republic had refused to respond to Israel's repeated appeals for peace. In 1981, the Syrian Arab Republic had stepped up its subversive activities to incite the local Druze population of the Golan Heights against Israel and had been tightening its links with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Israel's decision to apply its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the Golan Heights had been taken in order to regularize the situation, as all the authorities there, military and civilian, were Israelis. No responsible Government could agree to return to the totally insecure pre-1967 armistice demarcation lines. Israel again appealed to the Syrian Arab Republic to start negotiations on all outstanding issues, including the international boundary.

Egypt, stating that the Israeli action undermined the Middle East peace process, urged Israel to rescind that act and desist from similar measures and called on the United Nations to put an end to the Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territories. Kuwait stated that the timing of the sudden Israeli decision and the attempts to convince the Syrian population of the Golan Heights to become Israeli citizens or, at least, carry Israeli identification cards indicated that Israel had planned to annex that territory a long time ago. Lebanon expressed unconditional support for the Syrian Arab Republic in the face of Israel's new aggression, adding that the world would become lawless if nations were allowed to get away with such actions. Tunisia believed that Israel's recent steps were not an isolated incident but were designed to strengthen a premeditated and systematic policy of transforming fact into law and occupation into outright annexation.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that Israel would not have dared carry out its aggression against the Golan Heights had it not been for the support from and alliance with the United States. A similar view was held by several other speakers, such as the German Democratic Republic, the USSR and Viet Nam. The Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States hoped the United States would rejoin the international consensus on the current occasion, instead of allowing Israel to create new colonial and annexationist legitimacy.

The Niger considered that Israel's action confirmed its periodically revealed determination to maintain a state of successive crises in order to cement its policy of aggression, war and domination. Stating that any step towards confrontation must be discouraged, Senegal said the Council had the duty to render Israel's decision inoperative. Uganda said Israel could achieve security not by the annexation of occupied territories and aggression against neighbouring Arab States but only through a negotiated and comprehensive peace, beginning with a just settlement of the Palestine question.

China said the Council should reaffirm that Israel's action was illegal, null and void and should be revoked; it should call on Israel to withdraw from the territories occupied since 1967. Japan also urged Israel to withdraw and said Israel must realize that only by pursuing a solution to the Middle East problem through peaceful means could its own security be more effectively guaranteed. The Philippines viewed the action by the Israeli Parliament as complicating and obstructing the search for a just and lasting solution in the Middle East.

Cuba stated that Israel's policy, aimed at annexing all the Arab territories occupied since 1967, was an integral part of its determination to de-Arabize the territory of Palestine, to deny the Palestinians the exercise of their inalienable national rights and to prevent any genuine settlement of the Middle East conflict. Israel's action, said Mexico, showed its refusal to seek solutions through negotiation and jeopardized the partial agreements already concluded. Panama hoped Israel would correct an action which, in its view, violated international law and showed lack of respect for the United Nations.

The German Democratic Republic said it shared the view of the Syrian Arab Republic that Israel should be called upon by a certain deadline to annul its action on the Golan Heights. In the view of the USSR, Israel's attempt to annex part of Syrian territory was aimed at consolidating the effects of Israeli aggression; it worsened a tense situation and set new obstacles to peace in the region.

France condemned Israel for an act amounting to annexation and appealed to it to abide by the rules of international law and not to jeopardize the chances of peace. Ireland believed that Israel's decision could be dangerous to its own interests, as it aggravated tensions in the region. The position of the United Kingdom was that the Golan Heights belonged to the Syrian Arab Republic, and it could not accept any unilateral initiative by Israel to change the status of that area from occupied territory to an area subject to Israeli law, jurisdiction and administration. In Spain's opinion, it was contrary to international law for the occupying Power to replace existing law in the territory by the law of the occupier just so that Israeli law could be applied to individuals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(16)</sup> the General Assembly declared that Israel's decision to apply Israeli law to the Golan Heights was null and void and had no legal validity. It demanded that Israel rescind its decision and all related measures, and called on States and international institutions not to recognize that decision. It requested the Security Council, in the event of Israel's failure to comply, to invoke Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations (on action with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace and acts of aggression), and requested the Secretary-General to report by 21 December.

This resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 121 to 2, with 20 abstentions. Paragraph 6, containing the request to the Security Council, was adopted by a recorded vote of 92 to 19, with 26 abstentions. Cuba, which introduced the 13-nation text, observed that it had been drafted by the Arab Group and the Working Group on the Middle East and Palestine of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

The Assembly's main resolution on the Middle East situation, also adopted on 17 December, contained a provision<sup>(15)</sup> by which the Assembly strongly condemned, and declared null and void, Israeli annexationist policies and practices in the Golan Heights, the establishment of settlements, land confiscation, the diversion of water resources, the intensification of repressive measures against Syrians in that territory and the forcible imposition of Israeli citizenship on them. This paragraph was adopted by a recorded vote of 132 to 1, with 7 abstentions.

Israel rejected the resolution on the Golan Heights, saying that it ignored the persistent aggression of the Syrian Arab Republic against Israel since 1948 and its adamant refusal to recognize Israel, negotiate and make peace with it. The Assembly was precluded from adopting such a resolution, as the Security Council was seized of the matter.

The United States, although opposing any unilateral change in the status of the Golan Heights, voted against the resolution and abstained on the paragraph because the resolution invoked Chapter VII of the Charter and because it was improper for the Assembly to make recommendations on a situation before the Council.

Australia, Canada, Chile, New Zealand, Sweden and the United Kingdom—the last speaking for the European Community (EC) members—deplored Israel's decision but said they were unable to support the request to the Council because the Assembly should not act on questions that were before the Council. Reservations with regard to that request were also expressed by Austria, Chile and Uruguay, which supported the text. Canada did not believe some of the allegations about Israel's actions against Syrians in the Golan Heights.

During the debate on the Middle East situation, Democratic Yemen saw the decision to apply Israeli law to the Golan Heights as an instance of arrogance and contempt for the United Nations. Djibouti regarded the Israeli action as defiance of the United Nations and a violation of the principle that territory must not be acquired by war. Nicaragua said Israel's decision made clear its intention to reject political solutions and to perpetuate its colonialist policy throughout the occupied territories. Norway deplored the action as a step that would seriously undermine the search for peace in the Middle East. The decision was also condemned by Oman, Pakistan, Turkey, the USSR and Yemen.

FURTHER COMMUNICATIONS. During the latter half of December, several countries sent comments and information on the Golan Heights in communications to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President.

Japan, by a note verbale of 15 December,<sup>(3)</sup> expressed deep concern that the Israeli action would impair a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict and heighten tension. Romania, on 16 December,<sup>(6)</sup> transmitted a statement by the Romanian Press Agency, AGERPRES, saying that Israel should annul the illegal annexation of the Golan Heights in order to strengthen confidence and create a climate favourable to a peaceful settlement. On the same day,<sup>(1)</sup> Afghanistan transmitted a government statement declaring its readiness to support any effective measure against Israel, including sanctions.

The United Kingdom, by a letter of 17 December,<sup>(12)</sup> transmitted a statement of 15 December by the EC Foreign Ministers, stating that the Israeli step was tantamount to annexation, contrary to international law and further complicated the search for a comprehensive peace. Malaysia, by a letter of 17 December,<sup>(5)</sup> transmitted a statement of the previous day by its Minister for Foreign Affairs, condemning the Israeli action as part of a policy of systematic aggression and expansionism, and stating that Malaysia would go along with all efforts to deal with the dangerous threat to international peace and security.

The Syrian Arab Republic, by a note verbale dated 18 December,<sup>(8)</sup> reported that the Syrian citizens of the Golan Heights had reacted to Israel's decision by strikes and demonstrations, notwithstanding pressure by the occupying authorities.

On 21 December,<sup>(10)</sup> Tunisia transmitted a letter of 18 December from the Palestine Liberation Organization to the President of the Security Council, stating that Israel had moved armoured battalions and heavy artillery into the Golan area and asking for the Council's immediate intervention to prevent wide-scale confrontation and further Israeli acts of aggression.

On the same day,<sup>(11)</sup> the USSR transmitted a statement by the TASS news agency declaring Israel's action to extend its laws to the Golan Heights a direct consequence of the Camp David accords and a tangible example of the strategic co-operation between the United States and Israel. Madagascar, on 22 December,<sup>(4)</sup> transmitted a message of 17 December by its President, condemning the Israeli action as an aggravation of an already dangerous situation and calling on the United Nations to denounce the involvement and responsibility of Israel's allies in the pursuit of Israel's policy.

REPORTS OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL.
Reporting on 21 December<sup>(13)</sup> on implementation of the General Assembly resolution of 17 December, the Secretary-General stated that Israel had informed him that its position remained as indicated following adoption of the Security Council resolution of 17 December, namely, that it could not and did not accept the Council's resolution.

On 31 December, the Secretary-General reported to the Council<sup>(14)</sup> that he had asked Israel for information on action taken by it with regard to implementation of the Council's resolution. On 29 December, Israel had replied that it could not be expected to maintain indefinitely a military administration merely to accommodate the Syrian Arab Republic's interest in persistent conflict. The legislation concerning the Golan Heights did not in the slightest manner diminish the rights of the local population. Israel reiterated its willingness to negotiate unconditionally for a lasting peace with the Syrian Arab Republic, as with its other neighbours; the Golan Heights law did not preclude or impair such negotiations. Israel hoped the Council would focus on attaining peace through negotiations between the States directly concerned and on preventing the threat or use of force.

The General Assembly,

Gravely alarmed by Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to apply Israeli law to the occupied Syrian Arab Golan Heights,

Reaffirming that acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Syrian territory,

Recalling its resolutions 35/122 A to F of 11 December 1980,

1. Declares that Israel's decision to apply Israeli law to the occupied Syrian Arab Golan Heights is null and void and has no legal validity whatsoever;

2. Determines that the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967;

3. Strongly deplores the persistence of the Israeli policy of annexation, which escalates tension in the region;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its decision and all administrative and other measures relating to it, which constitute a flagrant violation of all relevant principles of International law;

5. Calls upon all States, specialized agencies and other international institutions not to recognize that decision;

6. Requests the Security Council, in the event of Israel's failure to implement the present resolution, to invoke Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

Expulsion of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the Islamic Judge of Hebron

By a resolution of 16 December 1981,<sup>(6)</sup> the General Assembly demanded that Israel rescind the illegal measures of expelling and imprisoning the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and expelling the Sharia (Islamic) Judge of Hebron, and facilitate their immediate return. It requested the Secretary-General to report as soon as possible on implementation of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 143 to 1, with 2 abstentions, following approval by the Special Political Committee (SPC) on 30 November by a recorded vote of 118 to 1, with 1 abstention. The 24-nation draft was introduced in Committee by Bangladesh.

Israel had deported the three West Bank officials—Fahd Kawasmeh, Mayor of Hebron; Mohamed Milhem, Mayor of Halhul; and Rajab Tamimi, Kadi of Hebron—in May 1980, on the ground that they had systematically engaged in inciting the local Arab population to acts of violence and subversion, abusing their public offices.<sup>(8)</sup>

Israel voted against the resolution, saying its situation required that it attach the utmost importance to its duty to safeguard public order and security. The three leaders had had recourse to the Israeli judicial system; the Supreme Court had upheld the orders against them and, since their expulsion, their declarations and conduct had only added support to Israel's position.

Explaining its abstention, the United States said that, though it believed the deportation of the Mayors to be contrary to the 1949 Convention on protection of civilians, the resolution contained excessively harsh language and omitted reference to the violence in Hebron which had preceded the deportations.

In the SPC debate on the situation in the occupied territories, Egypt expressed concern at the imposition of restrictions on the movement of mayors and the prevention of their travel abroad.

The Secretary-General reported on 30 January 1981<sup>(4)</sup> on the implementation of two December 1980 resolutions, by which the General Assembly had called on Israel to rescind the illegal measures against the three Palestinian leaders<sup>(5)</sup> and the Security Council had declared it imperative that the Mayors be enabled to return home and resume their responsibilities.<sup>(7)</sup> He informed the Assembly of his appeals of 17 December 1980 and 14 January 1981, addressed to Israel, to heed those calls and release the Palestinian leaders. In its reply of 23 January, set out in the report, Israel reiterated its position that the Mayors had abused their offices in order to incite the Arab population to acts of violence and subversion. Since their expulsion, it added, there had been a marked reduction in tension and an improvement in public order in Hebron and Halhul.

In February and March, the Secretary-General received three letters in connection with the subsequent arrest of other Moslem religious leaders by Israeli occupation authorities. Jordan, by a letter of 2 February,<sup>(2)</sup> conveyed a message from the General Islamic Congress for Beitul-Maqdis (Jerusalem), meeting at Amman, Jordan, stating that there had been 23 such arrests throughout the West Bank, including the members of the Islamic Higher Council in Jerusalem, and urging the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure their immediate release. Israel, on 18 February,<sup>(1)</sup> rejecting the allegations in the Jordanian letter, said that only three Moslem religious functionaries had been arrested in December 1980 on suspicion of involvement in terrorist activities and they had since been released. Replying on 11 March,<sup>(3)</sup> Jordan gave the names of five Islamic religious dignitaries whom it said the occupation authorities had detained.

Deeply concerned at the expulsion by the Israeli military occupation authorities of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and of the Sharia Judge of Hebron,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in particular article 1 and the first paragraph of article 49, which read as follows:

"Article 1

"The High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances."

"Article 49

"Individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive..."

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Demands that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind the illegal measures taken by the Israeli military occupation authorities in expelling and imprisoning the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and in expelling the Sharia Judge of Hebron and that it facilitate the immediate return of the expelled Palestinian leaders so that they can resume the functions for which they were elected and appointed;

Attempted assassinations of the Mayor of Nablus and others

By a resolution of 16 December 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly expressed deep concern that Israel had failed so far to apprehend and prosecute the perpetrators of the June 1980 assassination attempts against Basam Al-Shaka, Mayor of Nablus; Karim Khalaf, Mayor of Ramallah; and Ibrahim Al-Taweel, Mayor of Al Bireh. It demanded that Israel inform the Secretary-General of the results of the investigations, and requested him to submit by 31 December a report on implementation of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 140 to 1, with 2 abstentions, following approval by SPC on 30 November by a recorded vote of 119 to 1, with 1 abstention. The draft was introduced by Pakistan on behalf of 25 countries.

Israel, which voted against, said the text raised serious questions of morality and double standards. Since 1966, terrorism by the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) had claimed the lives of some 400 Arabs and wounded 2,000 others. Investigation of the 1980 incident would continue until the criminals had been brought to justice.

The United States said it had abstained because the text failed to consider all elements and implied, without justification, a lack of effort by Israel to apprehend and prosecute the perpetrators of the assassination attempts.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community (EC) members, noted that the matter had already been considered by the Security Council and repeated their appeal to all parties to refrain from acts of violence which could only make the search for peace more difficult.

As requested by the assembly, the Secretary General submitted a report on 30 December.<sup>(1)</sup> It reproduced a reply from Israel of the same date stating that it had nothing to add to what it had said in SPC and that Israeli authorities were carrying on the investigation.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 471(1980) of 5 June 1980, in which the Council condemned the assassination attempts against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Birah and called for the immediate apprehension and prosecution of the perpetrators of these crimes,

Recalling once again the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in particular article 27, which states, inter alia:

"Protected persons are entitled, in all circumstances, to respect for their persons... They shall at all times be humanely treated, and shall be protected especially against all acts of violence or threats thereof..."

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Expresses deep concern that Israel, the occupying Power, has failed so far to apprehend and prosecute the perpetrators of the assassination attempts;

2. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, inform the Secretary-General of the results of the investigations relevant to the assassination attempts;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, not later than 31 December 1981, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Educational institutions

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 16 December 1981,<sup>(6)</sup> condemned Israel's policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculty, and its repression against and closing of universities in the occupied Palestinian territories, and demanded that it rescind immediately orders of closure of the universities of Bir Zeit, Bethlehem and Al-Najah. The Assembly requested a report from the Secretary-General by the end of 1981 on implementation of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted, by a recorded vote of 114 to 2, with 30 abstentions, on the recommendation of SPC, which approved it on 30 November by a recorded vote of 94 to 2, with 25 abstentions. The text was introduced by Bangladesh, also on behalf of Cuba, India, Indonesia and Pakistan.

In connection with its consideration of Palestine refugees, the Assembly, on 16 December, appealed to States, United Nations specialized agencies and the United Nations University to contribute to the Palestinian universities in the occupied territories,<sup>(5)</sup> and called on Israel to remove obstacles to the establishment at Jerusalem of a university for Palestine refugees.<sup>(4)</sup>

Israel voted against the resolution on educational institutions in the occupied territories, calling it another example of distortion of fact and wild accusations. The Israeli authorities had had to close Bir Zeit University for two months in the face of violence since November 1980 in which a number of students and faculty members had been involved in hostile activities on behalf of PLO. There was no truth in the assertion that orders existed for closing the universities of Bethlehem and Al-Najah.

The United States said it had voted against the text because of its biased and polemical tone.

The United Kingdom, explaining the abstentions of the EC members, said they had the same reservations as on the Assembly's 1980 resolution on the subject,<sup>(3)</sup> though the wording had been improved in the 1981 text. New Zealand also abstained for the same reasons as in 1980.

Prior to the Assembly action, Jordan, by a letter of 19 August,<sup>(1)</sup> complained of an assault on and closure of the Hebron Technical Engineering College by Israeli military authorities; details of the 21 and 22 July incident were provided in an enclosed note of 27 July to the Jordan Government from the League of University Graduates in the Governorate of Hebron, Amman branch.

Reporting to the Assembly on 29 December<sup>(2)</sup> in accordance with its request, the Secretary-General conveyed the text of a reply from Israel on the previous day, stating that no orders had been issued to close the universities of Bethlehem and Al-Najah and that both were open and functioning. As to Bir Zeit University, Israel said it had nothing to add to what it had told SPC.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply shocked by the most recent atrocities committed by Israel, the occupying Power, against educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories,

1. Reaffirms the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculty in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, especially the policy of opening fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Condemns the systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities in the occupied Palestinian territories, restricting and impeding academic activities of Palestinian universities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and educational programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control and supervision of the military occupation authorities, in clear contravention of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with the provisions of the Geneva Convention and rescind all actions and measures against all educational institutions and ensure the freedom of these institutions, and that it rescind immediately orders for the closure of the universities of Bir Zeit, Bethlehem and Al-Najah and facilitate the resumption of education in the above-mentioned institutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, before the end of 1981, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Jerusalem

Protection of cultural property

Excavations by Israel at cultural and historical sites in Jerusalem, notably Al Aqsa Mosque, were the subject of communications from States during 1981 and of a General Assembly resolution in October.

COMMUNICATIONS. By a letter of 8 September to the Secretary-General,<sup>(3)</sup> Jordan reserved the right to bring before the Security Council the case of the latest Israeli excavations beneath Al Aqsa Mosque, which it said threatened the total collapse of that focal point of the Islamic faith. Attached to the letter were a map of the excavations and letters from the Jordanian Minister for Foreign Affairs alleging that Israel had the avowed aim of building a Temple of Solomon on the ruins of the Mosque; from the Mosque's resident engineer reporting on a tunnel beneath the site; and from Ruhi Al-Khatib, who signed as Mayor of Jerusalem, saying the excavations violated the sanctity of the holy Islamic sites and threatened to bring them down. The Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, by a letter dated 17 September,<sup>(1)</sup> conveyed the Committee's deep concern at Israel's continuing excavation of the tunnel under the Mosque, stating that it endangered historic Islamic buildings and had been the cause of clashes between Arabs and Jews in Jerusalem.

Israel, by a letter of 24 September,<sup>(2)</sup> rejected the Jordanian charges as a groundless attempt at religious incitement against Israel; it said recent work to clear an ancient underground passage had been carried out with the full co-operation of Moslem authorities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 28 October the General Assembly adopted a resolution.

demanding that Israel desist from all excavations and transformations of the historical, cultural and religious sites of Jerusalem. It determined that such acts violated international law and the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, and were a serious obstruction to a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East as well as a threat to international peace and security. The Assembly requested the Security Council to consider the situation in case Israel failed to comply, and requested the Secretary-General to report on implementation to the Assembly and the Council by 23 November.

The resolution was adopted, by a roll-call vote of 114 to 2, with 27 abstentions, on the recommendation of SPC, which approved it on 26 October, also by roll call, by 101 votes to 2, with 23 abstentions.

Morocco, introducing the draft on behalf of its 49 Arab, Moslem and other sponsors, stated that the Israeli excavations around the Holy Places of Islam in Jerusalem were being conducted on the false pretext that they were archaeological excavations. The Moslem world had always accorded to the Wailing Wall the respect due to that Jewish monument, but Israel's leaders were attacking the Holy Places in the hope that their disappearance would lead to the disappearance from the area of all civilizations other than the Jewish.

Israel, which voted against the text, said it did not reflect the facts. No structure on the Temple Mount in Jerusalem was in danger of collapse as a result of excavations, and the Geneva Convention contained no provision on archaeological excavations.

Also voting against, the United States said it strongly objected to the resolution and deplored its inflammatory charges; a report by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) had found no damage to the holy sites and recent repair work had been carried out in full co-operation with the Moslem authorities.

Among States which abstained in the vote, Canada, Greece, Sweden and the United Kingdom, the last speaking for the EC members, questioned the paragraph characterizing the excavations as a threat to peace and security; Sweden commented that that provision prejudged Security Council consideration. Canada, Finland and Sweden added that they were not sure the facts warranted the statements in the text, and Japan said the resolution contained unacceptable concepts. However, these States reaffirmed the need to protect cultural property and respect the Geneva Convention.

Spain, though supporting the resolution, would have preferred wording which did not refer to questions within the competence of the Security Council.

Several speakers in the Committee, including Cuba, speaking on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as Iraq, Jordan, Pakistan and Saudi Arabia, expressed the opinion that Israel was trying to destroy the Moslem cultural heritage. Jordan and Senegal believed that the international community should act to put an end to any practices endangering the religious sites in Jerusalem, which were part of the common heritage of mankind. In Cuba's view, the draft resolution would help to remedy the situation without requiring recourse to the Security Council, though the Council would have to examine the situation if Israeli violations persisted.

Pakistan appealed to the United States not to wash its hands of the situation and its possible consequences, and noted that UNESCO had placed the Old City of Jerusalem and its walls on the World Heritage List. Senegal said the excavations could serve only to aggravate tension in the Middle East.

On 20 November, the Secretary-General reported<sup>(4)</sup> that, in reply to a note by which he had brought the Assembly resolution to Israel's attention, Israel had reiterated that the mosques on the Temple Mount were not in danger of collapse and that it regarded the conclusions and demands of the resolution as groundless.

Recent developments in connection with excavations in eastern Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Recalling its resolutions 2253(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2254(ES-V) of 14 July 1967, 3092(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3240 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 B (XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/106 B of 16 December 1976, 32/91 A of 13 December 1977, 33/113 A of 18 December 1978, 34/90 B of 12 December 1979 and 35/122 of 11 December 1980.

Recalling Security Council resolutions 252(1968) of 21 May 1968, 267(1969) of 3 July 1969, 271(1969) of 15 September 1969, 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980,

Bearing in mind the need to protect and preserve the unique spiritual and religious character and dimensions of the Holy City of Jerusalem,

Expressing its very grave concern that Israel, as the occupying Power, persists in excavating and transforming the historical, cultural and religious sites of Jerusalem,

Noting with alarm that the excavations and transformations in progress seriously endanger the historical, cultural and religious sites of Jerusalem as well as its overall configuration and that these sites have never been as endangered as they are today,

Noting with satisfaction and approval the decision of the World Heritage Committee of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to include the Old City of Jerusalem and its walls on the World Heritage List,

Noting with appreciation the recommendation of the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization during its one hundred and thirteenth session that the World Heritage Committee should speed up the procedure for including the Old City of Jerusalem and its walls in the List of World Heritage in Danger,

1. Determines that the excavations and transformations of the landscape and of the historical, cultural and religious sites of Jerusalem constitute a flagrant violation of the principles of international law and the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

2. Decides that such violations by Israel constitute a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East as well as a threat to international peace and security;

3. Demands that Israel desist forthwith from all excavations and transformations of the historical, cultural and religious sites of Jerusalem, particularly beneath and around the Moslem Holy Sanctuary of Al-Haram Al-Sharif (Al Masjid Al Aqsa and the Sacred Dome of the Rock), the structures of which are in danger of collapse;

4. Requests the Security Council to consider this situation in case Israel fails to comply immediately with the present resolution;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly and the Security Council, not later than 23 November 1981, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Other aspects

On 10 December 1981, the General Assembly reaffirmed its non-recognition of Israel's 1980 decision to proclaim Jerusalem as its capital, and other Israeli actions to alter the city's status.<sup>(7)</sup>

Several communications were sent during 1981 on other developments relating to Jerusalem.

By a letter of 10 March,<sup>(2)</sup> Jordan transmitted a letter of 8 March from Rabbi Moshe Hirsch on behalf of the Neturei Karta (Guardians of the Holy City) of Jerusalem, who charged that, on 7 March, Israeli security forces had committed an unprovoked assault against hundreds of defenceless Orthodox Jews in their synagogue, breaking windows and furniture and trampling religious texts. In a reply dated 23 March,<sup>(1)</sup> Israel charged that Jordan was promoting a distorted version of measures undertaken by Israeli authorities against law-breakers. In a letter of 1 April,<sup>(3)</sup> Jordan maintained that Israel's reply was designed to divert attention from charges of brutal police action against unarmed Orthodox Jews, as part of a pattern of political suppression inflicted by Israel on indigenous Palestinians of all faiths.

On 11 September,<sup>(5)</sup> Jordan transmitted a letter from the Neturei Karta of the United States, dated 4 September, protesting the desecration of graves and beatings and imprisonment of Orthodox Jews in Jerusalem.

On 7 April,<sup>(4)</sup> Jordan transmitted a memorandum from its Minister of Labour to the Director-General of the International Labour Organisation, stating that Israeli occupation authorities had violated international law and the Geneva Convention on protection of civilians by their take-over of the Jordanian Electricity Corporation of the Governorate of Jerusalem, whose concession they had transferred to the Israeli Regional Electricity Company. Morocco, on 10 July,<sup>(6)</sup> transmitted to the Secretary-General recommendations on political, information, cultural, economic and military matters adopted by the Al-Quds (Jerusalem) Committee of the Organization of the Islamic Conference at its fifth session, held at Fez, Morocco, on 23 and 24 April.

Mediterranean-Dead Sea canal project

On 29 March 1981, Israel approved a plan for the construction of a 67-mile hydraulic structure to channel water from the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea for electric power generation.

Under the project, part of the conduit would pass through the Gaza Strip, occupied by Israel since 1967.

The General Assembly and the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy adopted resolutions calling for a halt to Israel's canal project, and the Secretary-General received a number of communications regarding it.

COMMUNICATIONS. By a letter of 7 April,<sup>(1)</sup> the Acting Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People stated that Israel's announced intention of building a canal across the Gaza Strip would violate United Nations resolutions. Jordan, by a letter dated 9 April,<sup>(5)</sup> conveyed its profound concern over the project and cited a 23 March statement by the Council of the League of Arab States to the effect that the aim was to bring about fundamental geographical, demographic, environmental, economic and particularly ecological transformations, affecting the Palestinian Arabs and Jordan. By a letter of 13 April,<sup>(3)</sup> Egypt expressed strong objection to the project as creating a de facto permanent Israeli presence in the occupied territories and violating Security Council resolutions and the Geneva Convention on protection of civilians.

Israel, in a letter dated 2 October,<sup>(4)</sup> enumerated the benefits which the region, in its view, would derive from the power generated by the project, and expressed willingness to co-operate with Jordan in the scheme.

ACTION BY THE CONFERENCE ON NEW AND RENEWABLE SOURCES OF ENERGY. On 21 August, the Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy adopted a resolution<sup>(6)</sup> denouncing Israel for the canal project, describing it as aggression against the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people and their occupied land, and calling on Israel to stop implementing the project. The resolution was adopted by a roll-call vote of 63 to 1, with 33 abstentions.

Israel, which voted against, said the project would be of great advantage to the area by supplying pollution-free energy, and would not raise the level of the Dead Sea above the crest levels of existing dikes. Several of the States which abstained in the vote—Canada, Colombia, Denmark (speaking for the five Nordic countries) and Uruguay—said they had done so because the resolution went beyond the Conference's mandate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution<sup>(7)</sup> by which it demanded that Israel cease implementing the canal project and requested the Security Council to consider measures to halt it. The Assembly called on States not to assist the project and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly and the Council, by 30 June 1982, a study on the canal and its effects on Jordan and the Palestinian territories.

The resolution was adopted, by a recorded vote of 139 to 2, with 4 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee (SPC), which approved the text on 7 December by 114 votes to 2, with 3 abstentions. The draft resolution, revised by its sponsors, was introduced by Jordan, on behalf of 20 members of the League of Arab States. The same States, by a letter of 20 October,<sup>(2)</sup> had requested the inclusion of the subject as an additional item on the agenda of the 1981 regular Assembly session.

Explaining its negative vote, the United States said the resolution bore virtually no relation to reality; the canal project was in the earliest stages of planning and it was wholly inappropriate to call on the Security Council to consider the issue.

Among those voting in favour, Canada emphasized that the project must be undertaken only with the mutual consent of all parties and stated that it would not assist the project. The USSR believed that the study called for in the resolution could be carried out by United Nations staff members and should not entail additional expenditures.

Israel, which voted against, rejected the factual and legal premises of the text as well as the assertion that the project would violate international law. The project would produce a renewable energy source independent of petroleum. It was designed as a water conduit, largely an underground pipeline, and not a canal for shipping. The 400-metre drop from the Mediterranean to the Dead Sea would be used to generate electric power. The inflow of water would restore the Dead Sea to its 1955 level and would have only inconsequential effects on the composition and chemical balance of the water in the Sea.

Jordan said the project, for which nearly $1 billion was being raised, would cause incalculable damage to the vital interests of Jordan and the Palestinians. The overflow from the Dead Sea that would be caused by the canal would inundate areas of the Jordan valley and southern Jordan. Replying to Israel's invitation to co-operate in the project, Jordan stated that it did not enter into negotiations with Israel because it did not recognize Israel. Referring to Israel's mention of a Jordanian project to link the Dead Sea and the Red Sea, Jordan declared that it would not put such a project into effect unless the world community failed to halt the construction of the canal planned by Israel.

A number of States, among them Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates, stressed that Israel was violating international instruments and the rights and interests of the countries of the whole region, particularly Jordan and the Palestinians. Saudi Arabia said the fact that the canal would pass through Palestinian territories under Israeli occupation was proof of Israel's determination to perpetuate its occupation.

Algeria expressed a similar opinion, adding that control of water supplies, the first stage of which was the appropriation of all the Jordan waters, would give Israel a hold over the economy of the entire Middle East. Iraq charged that the project was designed to meet purely strategic and military objectives and would in no way contribute to the development of the region. Kuwait appealed to all nations not only to condemn the Israeli project but also to withhold any kind of economic, political and technical help. The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community (EC) members, reiterated their opposition to the project on the grounds that it would not only be illegal but would also create a serious obstacle to a just and lasting peace settlement; they called on Israel to reconsider the project.

Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention to all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Taking into account that the Israeli project to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea and the Dead Sea is in violation of the rules of international law, in particular those relating to the fundamental rights and duties of States,

Also taking into account that this project, if completed, will cause direct and irreparable damage to the rights and the legitimate vital interests of Jordan and of the Palestinian people,

Expressing concern that the proposed canal, to be constructed partly through the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, will violate the principles of international law,

1. Demands that Israel cease forthwith the implementation of its project of a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea and the Dead Sea;

2. Requests the Security Council to consider initiating measures to halt the execution of this project;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council, by 30 June 1982, a study on the Israeli canal and its effects on Jordan and the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967;

4. Calls upon all States not to assist, either directly or indirectly, in the preparation for and the execution of this project and to urge the compliance of national and international corporations to this effect;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea".

Living conditions of the Palestinians

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. On 29 May 1981, the Secretary-General submitted a report (with later addenda) on the living conditions of the Palestinians.<sup>(1)</sup> It set out the replies of 13 Governments on action taken in response to a December 1980 resolution by which the General Assembly condemned Israel's policy resulting in the deterioration of the living conditions of the Palestinians and called on States to co-operate with United Nations organizations and local Palestinian authorities to alleviate those conditions.<sup>(2)</sup>

Israel's reply, dated 25 March, stated that the negative approach towards Israel taken in United Nations resolutions on the living conditions of the Palestinians made it impossible for Israel to associate itself with the ventures undertaken, in accordance with those resolutions, by the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat). The resolutions presupposed consultations and co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), which Israel neither recognized nor accepted. Israel was doing its best to co-operate with those United Nations bodies whose aim was to assist in the improvement of the living conditions of the inhabitants of the territories under its control, among others the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the World Health Organization.

Reporting on social and economic progress in the occupied territories in the years 1967-1980, Israel stated that the gross national product had increased at an average annual rate of about 13 per cent, unemployment had been virtually eliminated, agricultural output and exports had increased significantly, the number of school classrooms had risen by 80 per cent and the public health system had been improved. The inhabitants enjoyed absolute freedom of religion and had been visiting Arab States in growing numbers. Freedom of speech and the press was restricted only by military censorship for security reasons. Municipal elections had been held in 1976, during which women in those areas had been allowed to vote for the first time.

The Economic and Social Council, on 24 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report. The decision<sup>(4)</sup> was adopted without vote, following similar approval on 21 July by the Council's First (Economic) Committee on an oral proposal by the Chairman.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution<sup>(5)</sup> by which it condemned Israel for the deteriorating living conditions of the Palestinians in the occupied Palestinian territories, affirmed that the elimination of the Israeli occupation was a prerequisite for the social and economic development of the Palestinians, and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly in 1982, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on their deteriorating living conditions, to be prepared in co-operation with PLO.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 109 to 2, with 25 abstentions, following approval by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 11 November by a recorded vote of 98 to 2, with 26 abstentions.

The draft was revised by its sponsors to delete the phrase "with satisfaction" from a paragraph by which the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the subject. Jordan, in orally proposing this change, observed that much of the report contained data supplied by Israel that were inconsistent with the conclusions of the report on this subject prepared for the Assembly in 1980.<sup>(6)</sup>

Introducing the 43-nation draft, the Syrian Arab Republic stated that Palestinians who refused to abandon the land of their ancestors were being exposed to psychological and economic pressure by Israeli authorities which, after having built settlements on the outskirts of Arab villages in occupied Palestine, were taking all sorts of economic and social measures to force them to leave.

Israel rejected the resolution on the ground that it included false allegations, despite the fact that substantial progress had been made in improving the living conditions of the Palestinian Arabs in the administered territories. Israel's administration policy was in accordance with its obligation under international law to guarantee the security of the territories and the safety of their inhabitants, and Israel had gone even further in promoting economic and social development. Israel objected to one-sided resolutions that presupposed consultation with PLO.

The United States, which also voted against, said it could not support the use of political rhetoric in regard to humanitarian questions, believed the text was unbalanced in its attacks against Israel and maintained that PLO should not be recognized as the representative of the Palestinian people.

Among those abstaining in the vote, Japan said the substance of some paragraphs was not appropriate for consideration under the economic item before the Committee. The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, said they took the view that Israel should withdraw from the territories occupied since 1967 and believed that the occupation inevitably had an impact on the region's economic and social development.

Uruguay said it supported the resolution on the understanding it had expressed in 1980<sup>(5)</sup> (that Israel's right to existence was recognized as irreversible).

In the Second Committee debate, Jordan regarded Israel's statements about the living conditions of the Palestinians as completely misleading and observed that Israel had refused to allow neutral observers into the occupied territories.

The PLO observer made the following points about the Palestinians living conditions: Israeli authorities had closed Arab banks in the occupied territories, blocking the financing of Palestinian projects; they had prevented the population of the Gaza Strip from receiving assistance from other Arab countries, thus prohibiting them from controlling their economy; the average wage of Arab workers was half that paid to Israelis for the same kind of work, and the Arabs were the first to be fired; the Israelis had destroyed the industrial infrastructure, so that the Palestinians were wholly dependent on the Israeli economy; and the occupation authorities had seized more than a third of the land in the occupied territories, particularly to establish settlements, and were obstructing agricultural development by inciting Palestinians to destroy their farms and attempting to prevent irrigation and the provision of drinking water.

Economic situation of the Palestinians

By a resolution of 9 October 1981<sup>(4)</sup> the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive and in-depth survey of the state of the economy of the Palestinians in the territories occupied by Israel, as well as an analysis of the potentials for its development, and to formulate proposals for alternative development strategies in collaboration with PLO. The Board also requested him to submit to it periodic progress reports on the preparation of the survey and invited UNDP to make additional resources available to UNCTAD for the purpose.

The General Assembly took note of that resolution on 16 December, in its resolution on the work of UNCTAD.<sup>(3)</sup> An earlier draft,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted to the Second Committee by Algeria for the Group of 77, by which the Assembly would have endorsed the Board's decision rather than taken note of it, was withdrawn in favour of the text adopted.

In a report circulated in August,<sup>(2)</sup> prepared at the request of the UNCTAD secretariat in response to a 1979 request by the Conference,<sup>(5)</sup> M. W. Khouja, Economic Adviser to the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development, and P. G. Sadler, Director of the Institute for the Study of Sparsely Populated Areas, University of Aberdeen, United Kingdom, reviewed the economic conditions of the Palestinians in the occupied territories. The authors, who were not given access to Israeli officials and were unable to visit or conduct interviews in the occupied territories, based their study on data available in Jordan and other Arab countries, official Israeli statistics and other publicly available sources of information in Israel, interviews with Palestinians outside the occupied territories and information gathered by PLO.

In order to stabilize and strengthen the local economies in the occupied territories and prevent their further deterioration, the study recommended that special attention be paid to measures to counter any further subjugation of those economies to that of Israel, and to make alternative employment and income opportunities possible. Such measures should have the effect of stemming emigration, allowing more residents of the occupied territories to find work at home instead of in Israel and strengthening the base of the local economies. The study recommended specific measures in areas such as agriculture, labour, finance, housing and infrastructure, and trade. It suggested that a monitoring body be set up to improve information on the deterioration of conditions in the occupied territories and the continued subjugation of their economies to Israel.

Permanent sovereignty over national resources

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. On 10 November 1981, the Secretary-General submitted a report,<sup>(1)</sup> requested by the General Assembly in 1979<sup>(2)</sup> and 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> on the effects of Israeli occupation on the national resources in the occupied territories. He stated that in August a mission had been sent to Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic to gather information from the Governments concerned and from PLO, as well as from United Nations and specialized agency offices. Israel refused to permit the mission to visit the occupied territories on the grounds that the resolutions calling for the study were motivated by political hostility and that the mission included staff members of the Economic Commission for Western Asia, of which PLO was a member while Israel was excluded.

The report, prepared by two consultants, stated that there had been a significant reduction in the amount of land under cultivation in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip since 1967, and more than 25 per cent of the total land area had been requisitioned, confiscated or otherwise appropriated by the occupying authorities. Israeli water use was dangerously close to the maximum sustainable capacity, increasing the pressure on water resources available to the Arab inhabitants.

The report noted a significant loss of human resources in the occupied territories, due to displacement following armed conflicts and emigration by Palestinians of working age in search of employment. Of the employed persons, 35 per cent worked in Israel, indicating a potential loss of manpower for the development of the occupied territories.

Regarding economic resources, the report cited Israeli data showing an aggregate increase in agricultural output, including output of the Israeli settlements, apparently due to new technologies introduced by the occupying authorities. There was considerable change in the mix of agricultural products, directed towards eliminating items competing with Israeli products and introducing new items which would provide raw material for Israeli industries.

The report found no evidence of any significant structural changes during the occupation that would have made industry a dynamic contributor to development. The establishment of factories in the Israeli settlements could have adverse consequences for the industrial sector, making Arab industries less competitive.

According to the report, there had been a dramatic change in the pattern and direction of trade, with Israel having become the main trading partner. All foreign exchange accrued to the Israeli economy and much of the wages earned were returned to the Israeli economy through the purchase of goods and services originating in Israel. Under those conditions, the people of the occupied territories had no choice but to rely on what could be provided through Israeli sources.

The report found that social, cultural and sports activities among the Arab residents were being discouraged and that books and publications were censored.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly emphasized the right of the Arab States and peoples whose territories were under Israeli occupation to full and effective permanent sovereignty and control over their natural and all other resources, wealth and economic activities. It reaffirmed that all Israeli measures to exploit those resources were illegal and called on Israel to desist immediately and on States, international organizations, corporations and other institutions not to co-operate or assist in such measures. The Assembly reaffirmed the right of the Arab States and peoples concerned to full compensation for the exploitation, depletion, loss of and damages to their resources. The Secretary-General was requested to submit two reports to the Assembly: in 1982, a comprehensive report on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied territories, with proposals for follow-up and implementation; and in 1983, a report on the implications, under international law, of the relevant United Nations resolutions.

The resolution was adopted, by a recorded vote of 115 to 2, with 24 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which approved the 24-nation draft on 7 December by a recorded vote, requested by Iraq, of 105 to 2, with 23 abstentions.

Kuwait, introducing the text in the Committee, said the resolution had been made necessary by Israel's continued exploitation of the national resources of the occupied territories in contravention of international law and accepted norms.

Israel, voting against the text, stated that it could not associate itself with the actions called for since the resolutions on the subject were motivated by political hostility and ignored many productive activities in the administered territories. The Secretary-General's report was based on misinterpreted facts and inaccurate information which had been manipulated to support a predetermined and biased conclusion. It should have included a survey of the achievements in the administered territories, where the situation was far better than it had been prior to 1967. Although Israel had been a victim of continuous Arab aggression since its establishment in 1948, every United Nations report had ignored the circumstances behind Israel's presence in those territories, for whose security Israel was responsible.

The United States explained that it had voted against the resolution because it dealt with political matters outside the Committee's competence and because blanket and repetitive condemnations of Israel's administration diverted attention from the fundamental issue of making progress in the peace process.

Explaining the abstentions of the European Community members, the United Kingdom said their position remained unchanged.

Among those voting in favour, Burma expressed reservations to a paragraph by which the Assembly condemned Israel's refusal to allow the consultants who prepared the United Nations report access to the occupied territories, and Portugal reserved its position on the paragraph by which the Assembly reaffirmed the right of the States and peoples under Israeli occupation to compensation for exploitation of their natural resources.

Japan stated that it fully sympathized with the Arab States' position on resources in the occupied territories and hoped the problem would be expeditiously solved in conformity with international law; but Japan's position on permanent sovereignty over natural resources remained unchanged.

Jordan said international law did not allow Israel to confiscate land in the occupied territories for building settlements, to allocate most of the water resources to Israeli settlers and to blow up 19,000 houses on the West Bank.

The USSR, also supporting the resolution, said the measures it called for should be undertaken within the existing United Nations budget.

Palestine refugees

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to provide assistance to 1.5 million Palestine refugees in Arab States and in territories occupied by Israel (see below). By the end of 1981, it had spent about $2 billion on such aid in the three decades since it began operations in 1950. However, it did not receive enough voluntary contributions during the year to meet all budgeted expenditures: income for 1981 was just over $190 million, against a projected budget of $239 million (p. 327).

The General Assembly, on 16 December 1981, adopted eight resolutions on Palestine refugees, as recommended by the Special Political Committee (SPC). They included a call for the return of displaced inhabitants of the occupied territories (p. 333), an endorsement of continued assistance to other displaced persons in the area (p. 334), a demand that Israel desist from removing and resettling refugees in the Gaza Strip (p. 335), and a request for United Nations protection and administration of Arab property rights in Israel (p. 336). States and organizations were asked to augment allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees (p. 337), and Israel was called on to remove obstacles to the establishment of a university for such refugees at Jerusalem (p. 338). Governments were called on to help meet the Agency's needs in the light of its projected budget deficit, and the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA was requested to continue its efforts for another year (p. 328).

UN Agency for Palestine refugees

Activities of UNRWA

In 1981, UNRWA provided education, health and relief services to Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. It maintained its own schools, training establishments, clinics and health centres, and it procured and distributed food rations to needy refugees.

Early in 1981, it appeared that the only way of maintaining the Agency's solvency would be a full or partial curtailment of the education programme, but later, the receipt of additional pledges and cut-backs in both recurrent and non-recurrent expenditure enabled UNRWA to continue these activities until the end of the year.

Military activity and civil strife again interrupted services and disturbed the livelihood of refugees in several areas. Agency services were subject to frequent interruptions, particularly in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and Lebanon. Local disturbances and Israeli military operations in southern Lebanon caused considerable damage to refugee shelters and some Agency installations. In the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, the occupation authorities continued to demolish refugee shelters, but they also started housing projects for refugees (p. 335).

The number of refugees registered with UNRWA rose through natural increase by 39,681 since 31 December 1980, to 1,902,843 at 31 December 1981. Of these, about 824,000 were eligible to receive food rations and approximately 1.5 million were eligible for health and education services.

The Agency also distributed rations to about 230,000 displaced persons and displaced refugee children (registered for services only) in Jordan, at the expense of the Jordanian Government. By the end of the year, extra rations were being provided to some 39,000 "special hardship cases" in Jordan, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and also in Lebanon, beginning in 1981, where widows and divorced women with young children were aided.

About 669,000 of the registered refugees, some 35 per cent of the total, were living in 61 camps as at 31 December.

In co-operation with the World Health Organization, the Agency continued its work in health education and integrated family health care, with emphasis on preventive medicine, including supplementary feeding for nutritionally vulnerable groups. Health services were provided at 100 UNRWA units and some associated clinics. Training in medicine and paramedicine was assisted through the Agency's medical and nursing scholarship programmes and by vocational training courses. Some $31.4 million was spent on health services in 1981.

The year's expenditure on relief services was $36.4 million, which represented mainly the value of food commodities donated in kind, the provision of shelter and hardship assistance.

The Agency spent $104.5 million on education during 1981, accounting for 57.8 per cent of its total expenditure. The education programme, operated with the technical assistance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), covered the first nine years of general education (10 years in Lebanon), some assistance for refugee pupils in government and private secondary schools, and vocational and teacher training in eight centres. Also, 365 university scholarships were awarded for the 1980/1981 academic year (p. 337). The majority of the Agency's 16,722 employees, almost all Palestine refugees themselves, were working in the educational field, most as teachers. In the 1980/1981 school year, some 200 additional teachers were appointed.

Over 321,000 children—7,000 more than in 1979/1980—received elementary and preparatory (lower secondary) education in 635 UNRWA schools during the 1980/1981 school year. Nearly 90,000 refugee pupils were enrolled in government or private schools, 8,901 of which received UNRWA assistance. Demand for places necessitated double shifts in about 74 per cent of Agency schools. During 1981, some $750,000 was allocated to construct 40 additional classrooms and specialized units to avoid triple-shifting.

There was a small increase in persons attending the Agency's vocational and technical courses, an increase facilitated by double-shifting in some locations. Female students were encouraged to follow vocational studies. Four vocational training centres were enlarged. About 70 per cent of 1981's 600 graduates found employment, mainly with UNRWA. The UNESCO/UNRWA Institute of Education continued to provide courses in educational techniques to meet special needs and new curricula developments.

Also during the 1980/1981 school year, professional aspects of the UNRWA education system were strengthened by setting up Education Development Units in Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic and an Education Development Centre in the West Bank. The Agency took over the pre-school centres in the Gaza Strip previously run for it by the American Friends Service Committee.<sup>(2)</sup>

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER-GENERAL. In a report covering the period 1 July 1980 to 30 June 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> the Commissioner-General of UNRWA, after detailing the Agency's activities, indicated that the year under review had been a very difficult one. Because of the Agency's unprecedented financial crisis, it had not been possible to maintain services at their customary level. The Commissioner-General suggested that Governments consult informally on an apportioning of UNRWA expenses among themselves (p. 328).

Referring to other factors affecting the Agency's work, the Commissioner-General stated that hostilities in Beirut and southern Lebanon had seriously disrupted UNRWA operations.

COMMUNICATION. By a letter of 19 May,<sup>(1)</sup> Jordan transmitted to the Secretary-General a resolution adopted in Amman on 20 April by its National Consultative Assembly, rejecting plans by UNRWA to reduce services to refugees and requesting the United Nations Secretariat to do all in its power to ensure that the States responsible for the dispersal of the Palestinians shouldered their financial responsibilities towards the Agency.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In December, the General Assembly adopted eight resolutions on Palestine refugees, each pertaining to a special aspect of the question (p. 325). This action followed a debate in SPC on various aspects of the problem.

During the debate, many countries, among them Austria, Finland, Jordan and Sri Lanka, shared the Commissioner-General's opinion that UNRWA had a stabilizing influence on the situation in the Middle East.

Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Guyana, Iraq, Malaysia, the Philippines, Portugal, Romania, Sri Lanka, the USSR and Yugoslavia, among others, pointed out that the Palestine refugee problem was not merely a humanitarian issue, but rather a major political problem whose solution resided in a just and lasting Middle East settlement. India, in addition to several Arab and Eastern European States, believed that UNRWA services could at best be only temporary; the ultimate solution lay in Israeli withdrawal from the territories occupied in 1967 and recognition of the legitimate national rights of the Palestinians. A final solution to the Palestine refugee problem, said the United States, could be achieved only in the context of a just and comprehensive peace, to be achieved through negotiations.

Speaking on behalf of the European Community (EC) members, the United Kingdom said they were disturbed to learn that the Agency's activities in Lebanon had again been seriously affected by the hostilities there, and were concerned at the difficulties encountered by UNRWA and its staff in other areas, including arbitrary arrest and detention without charge or trial, demolition of refugee shelters and the failure to secure certain privileges and tax exemptions. Austria and the Philippines were concerned about harassment and restrictions of Agency staff and refugees. Sri Lanka, Sweden and Turkey also voiced concern about detentions and travel restrictions affecting UNRWA staff members, while China noted that they had been subjected to Israeli bombing and shelling:

Egypt and others condemned all measures taken against UNRWA staff and refugee camps as well as the collective punishment of the refugees by the occupation authorities; Egypt demanded that the demolition of Palestinian family shelters by Israeli authorities be ended and expressed the opinion that the Palestinians had the right to fair compensation.

Israel, on the other hand, felt that UNRWA could not continue to serve camps under the control of terrorist organizations, nor could the United Nations give assistance to persons engaged in warfare against a Member State.

Japan and the Philippines were among those supporting the Commissioner-General's decision to give priority to educational services over other assistance. Lebanon maintained that the countries receiving Palestinian refugees could not support the political and human consequences resulting from any suspension of UNRWA operations or reduction of services. Guyana felt that any curtailment of UNRWA services would not only result in hardship for the refugees but would also entail serious political consequences.

UNRWA finances

A shortfall of the voluntary contributions from which UNRWA received its financial support caused the Agency to cut back its educational and other programmes in 1981. The General Assembly decided to keep its 1981 session open to await proposals on how to meet a projected deficit of $80 million in 1982.

REPORT OF THE WORKING GROUP ON FINANCING. The Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA, in a report to the General Assembly dated 22 October 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> noted that the Agency's financial position, which had been precarious for a number of years, had deteriorated even further during 1981. The Group stated that in spring 1981 the Agency had come close to collapse because of insufficient funds and that it might enter 1982 without enough money to finance its pay-roll beyond January. The health care programme was already at a minimum and the relief assistance programme consisted mainly of distribution of donated food. The Agency would be in a better position to give highest priority to the education programme if Governments making contributions in kind would consider converting some of them into cash. The Group feared that the reduction of the education programme and the closing of schools would have serious social and political consequences.

The Group believed that there was an urgent need to place the Agency's financing on a more stable basis. Its financial position could not be improved unless more countries contributed and those able to do so increased their contributions. The Group supported the suggestion in the Commissioner-General's annual report (p. 326) that informal consultations should take place on apportioning the Agency's expenses among contributors as one possible way of consolidating its financial basis.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 16 December,<sup>(7)</sup> the General Assembly called on all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the Agency's anticipated needs, particularly in the light of its projected budget deficit. It urged non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their contributions. Directing attention to the continuing seriousness of the UNRWA financial position, the Assembly noted with concern that, despite the Commissioner-General's successful efforts to collect additional contributions, the Agency's increased income was still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements. Other provisions of the resolution dealt with proposed repatriation of refugees (p. 333) and the location of UNRWA headquarters (p. 332).

The resolution, sponsored by the United States, was adopted by a recorded vote of 144 to none, with 1 abstention, after approval by SPC on 10 November by a recorded vote of 125 to none, with 1 abstention.

By another resolution of the same date,<sup>(5)</sup> the Assembly appealed for contributions to assist persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities.

The Assembly, also on 16 December,<sup>(6)</sup> noted with approval the report of the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA and requested the Group to continue its efforts for the financing of the Agency for another year. This action was taken by a resolution adopted without vote, following its approval in like manner by SPC on 10 November, where the 20-nation draft was introduced by the Netherlands.

The Assembly decided on 16 December<sup>(8)</sup> to keep open its 1981 session until the Working Group had submitted proposals, by the end of January 1982, on ways to meet the Agency's 1982 budget deficit. The decision was taken without vote, following its approval by SPC on 7 December, also without vote. On 18 December,<sup>(9)</sup> the Assembly decided to resume its 1981 session, at a date to be announced, to consider among other items the situation of UNRWA.

The proposal to keep the session open was made orally by the SPC Chairman at the suggestion of Kuwait on behalf of the Arab Group, after that Group had requested that there be no vote by the Committee on a draft resolution submitted by 20 Arab States, and on amendments proposed by the United States, concerning the future financing of UNRWA. The draft resolution<sup>(2)</sup> would have had the Assembly decide to cover the Agency's estimated deficit for 1982 from the United Nations regular budget. The Secretary-General would have been requested to submit in 1982 a detailed study of the inclusion of the UNRWA budget into the United Nations budget as of 1983. Qatar, introducing this draft, said the Group had decided that the expected voluntary contributions would not be sufficient and they held it particularly important to protect the rights of tens of thousands of young people to education.

According to the United States amendments,<sup>(1)</sup> the Assembly, instead of deciding to cover the Agency's deficit from the United Nations budget, would have taken note of the various proposals to improve its financial position and would have urged the Working Group and other interested and concerned parties to continue consultations on ways to ameliorate the Agency's critical financial situation, reporting their suggestions to the Secretary-General by 1 February 1982. The Secretary-General would have been requested to submit a detailed study of all the proposals advanced to enhance the Agency's long-term financial stability, including a comprehensive management audit.

Israel abstained in the vote on the United States-sponsored resolution because of its reference to a 1948 Assembly resolution on repatriation or compensation for refugees (p. 333).

The Commissioner-General of UNRWA, introducing in SPC the Agency's annual report,<sup>(3)</sup> stated that UNRWA had experienced serious financial problems in 1981. Total expenditure in 1982 was estimated at $265 million, of which $151 million was for education, $42 million for health and $61 million for relief. Estimated income was $185 million, leaving a projected deficit of $80 million, or $10 million more than in 1981.

To maintain all its programmes, he said, the Agency needed an additional $80 million, of which $34 million was the minimum required to avoid collapse of the education programme. Income from voluntary contributions 7 forecast at $132 million for 1982) had proved less and less adequate. Unless UNRWA was assured of regular and adequate contributions, it would continue to move from one crisis to another until it collapsed.

General concern was voiced in the debate that the Agency's continued financial crisis might lead to the curtailment of essential services. Jordan, in particular, said it was already spending more than $35.5 million in the current fiscal year for direct assistance to refugees and could not accept any attempt to transfer to the host countries the burden of services provided by UNRWA.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, said they did not believe that the voluntary system of financing was inappropriate, but rather that the international response had been inadequate; a number of countries with the means to contribute had not done so, despite their expressions of concern for the Palestinians. Similarly, Spain urged that contributions to UNRWA continue on a voluntary basis, but be increased in number and amount. The United States, while hoping to increase its contribution, believed that other nations must assume more of the burden, especially those in the Middle East with the means to do so.

Lebanon appealed to all States capable of assuming greater financial burdens to do so. Zambia ascribed the problem to the fact that the financial burden was borne by only a handful of countries and said all States had the responsibility to contribute.

Canada said it would increase its contribution to UNRWA but expressed concern about the increased costs of its operations. Sweden stated that, as one of the largest contributors, it would continue to give substantial support and would also support fully any arrangement to put the Agency's financing on a more stable footing, including a more equitable burden-sharing.

Norway said it was prepared to participate in any arrangement to broaden participation in the financing of UNRWA and to place it on a sounder basis, including a more reasonable apportioning of its expenses. Reconsideration or even a structural change of the Agency's financial basis was also advocated by others, among them Austria, Chile, Egypt, Finland and Turkey. These countries supported the Commissioner-General's proposal that Governments consult on his idea of sharing the Agency's expenses among Member States on an agreed basis. Mauritania, Portugal and others felt that the costs for UNRWA should be apportioned equitably among all Governments. Senegal urged that exceptional measures be taken to place the Agency's finances on a sound footing.

In Bangladesh's view, UNRWA needed clear guidance regarding its future course, particularly for dealing with the financial emergency. Pakistan held it essential that the Assembly should secure an adequate amount of income for UNRWA and explore ways of raising that amount.

The United Arab Emirates suggested that the Agency's budgetary deficit should be met by: charging the deficit to the United Nations regular budget; requesting the Secretary-General to study the feasibility of incorporating the Agency's budget into the United Nations budget and establishing new scales of assessment that would take account of the special responsibility of certain States because of their unconditional support for Israel; and enabling Palestine refugees to enjoy income from their property, which would suffice to cover their needs and make it possible to dispense with international assistance. The suggestion to include UNRWA expenditures in the United Nations budget or at least meet its deficit from that source was endorsed by other Arab States, such as Bahrain, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Yemen. Yemen added that the continued dependence of UNRWA on voluntary contributions would create confusion in its programmes and even threaten its existence. Chile believed that the idea of including the Agency's expenditures in the United Nations budget should be considered.

Qatar suggested that contributions to UNRWA should be a fixed percentage and not a set amount, so as to offset inflation.

Australia, on the other hand, expressed doubts about the feasibility of meeting the Agency's expenses or deficit from the United Nations budget; it thought the answer to the immediate crisis lay in a more generous and speedy response from Member States. Japan argued that reliance on the United Nations budget could set an undesirable precedent for other bodies. The United States said that, if the proposal by the Arab Group was adopted, it would have to reconsider its pledge and its overall relationship with UNRWA; the estimated budget deficit amounted to approximately 10 per cent of the total United Nations budget, and meeting it by assessments levied on Member States would call into question the entire funding pattern of the major donor nations.

The Byelorussian SSR felt that a change of the existing financing system would be tantamount to accepting the exile of millions of Palestinians and would place those countries which were impeding a just solution to the Palestine problem on the same footing as those which consistently upheld the just cause of the Palestinians. Yugoslavia thought the Agency should be supported regardless of who was primarily responsible for the situation; to refrain from financing UNRWA would be tantamount to ignoring the Palestinians and the injustice done to them.

Kuwait suggested that a mechanism be devised to secure the revenues from the Palestinian properties in Israel under the guardianship of the United Nations, and then use them as partial funding for UNRWA.

The USSR said that, like other States which did not contribute directly to UNRWA, it nevertheless participated in the financing of similar programmes carried out by other agencies, contributed to the maintenance of the Agency's international staff and granted considerable bilateral assistance to Palestinians. Czechoslovakia said it was assisting the Palestinians through the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Israel held it essential that the Agency's records be updated in view of its permanent financial difficulties; the refugees' substantial absorption was not immediately apparent because it was the Agency's rule to keep them and their descendants on its registers indefinitely, even when they became self-supporting.

In the Syrian Arab Republic's opinion, the Agency's financial crisis was in essence a political struggle between those working sincerely for the return of the refugees and those who were doing all in their power to deprive them of their rights in order to support Israel.

Having considered the report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees In the Near East, Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for

Palestine Refugees in the the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1980 to 30 June 1981, Gravely concerned at the critical financial situation of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, which has already reduced the essential minimum services being provided to the Palestine refugees and which threatens even greater reductions in the future.

Emphasizing the urgent need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at their present minimum level, the activities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the Agency's financial security;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

General Assembly resolution 36/146 F

144-0-1 (recorded vote) Meeting 100 16 December 1981

Approved by SPC (A/36/818) by recorded vote (125-0-1), 10 November (meeting 26); draft by United States (A/SPC/36/L.11); agenda item 60.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/13 A of 3 November 1980 and all previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1980 to 30 June 1981,

1. Notes with regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East should be relocated within the area of its operations as soon as practicable;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but not later than 1 October 1982;

5. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

6. Notes with concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

7. Calls upon all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

General Assembly decision 36/431

Adopted without vote

Approved by SPC (A/36/818) without vote, 7 December (meeting 51); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 60.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 16 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, decided to keep open its thirty-sixth session until the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East had submitted its proposals, by the end of January 1982, on ways of meeting the deficit of the Agency's budget for 1982.

Contributions

For 1981, a total of 64 Governments and the European Economic Community paid the equivalent of $146,459,961 in contributions to UNRWA as at 31 December 1981. In addition, contributions in the amount of $8,513,336 were received from the United Nations, specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations, private individuals and corporations. Counting $6,240,334 in bank interest and other miscellaneous income, total income for 1981 from all sources was $161,213,631 (see table on next page).

On 16 November, the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to UNRWA met at United Nations Headquarters. A total of 53 States pledged contributions for 1982 in cash or kind. Pledges announced were estimated at approximately $107 million.

Meeting record: Committee on contributions to UNRWA, A/AC.211/SR.1 (16 Nov.).

Accounts for 1980

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 30 November 1981 on the accounts of various United Nations programmes,<sup>(3)</sup> accepted the financial report and accounts and the audit opinion of the Board of Auditors with respect to UNRWA finances for the year ended 31 December 1980.<sup>(2)</sup> It concurred with comments by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)<sup>(1)</sup> and requested the Agency head to take remedial action as required by the Board's observations.

The Board of Auditors recommended that the UNRWA Financial Regulations be revised to accommodate the Agency's current requirements, according to which its original budget estimates for the following year were revised without prior consultation with its Advisory Commission before being submitted to the Assembly. In its September report on United Nations accounts, ACABQ trusted that this recommendation would be brought to the Advisory Commission's attention, but noted that the Commissioner-General had kept the Commission's members informed about major changes in the estimates.

In the discussion of these reports in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, Jordan expressed concern at the Agency's financial difficulties and supported a recommendation by the auditors that UNRWA should intensify its efforts to collect unpaid pledges by Governments, which had amounted to $26 million as at the end of 1980. Concern on this score was also expressed by Morocco and the Philippines. The Philippines and the United States hoped controls would be strengthened so as to prevent losses of commodities such as those reported by the Board.

An UNRWA representative responded that: steps had been taken to amend the Financial Regulations to meet the special circumstances that had given rise to frequent amendments to the original budget estimates; the amount of unpaid pledges had been reduced to $9 million; and strict controls were maintained over commodities and medical supplies, and losses were minimal.

Location of UNRWA headquarters

The main headquarters of UNRWA remained in 1981 at Vienna, Austria, where it had been moved from Beirut, Lebanon, in 1978.<sup>(2)</sup> Operational departments occupied rented premises at Amman, Jordan. The Lebanese Government reiterated its view that the Agency should return to Beirut as soon as circumstances in Lebanon permitted.

The General Assembly, in a resolution of 16 December on assistance to Palestine refugees,<sup>(1)</sup> reiterated its request that the Agency's headquarters, the major part of which remained outside its area of operations, be relocated within the area as soon as practicable.

During the debate on Palestine refugees in the Special Political Committee (SPC), the United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community members, said they were gratified that the Commissioner-General intended to reunify UNRWA headquarters in the Middle East as soon as practicable. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Turkey also supported such relocation.

Other aspects

Proposed repatriation of refugees

The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine was unable to report progress in 1981 towards the implementation of a 1948 General Assembly resolution providing for the repatriation of Palestine refugees and compensation for those who chose not to return.<sup>(2)</sup> In its thirty-fifth report, covering the period from 1 October 1980 to 30 September 1981 and transmitted to the Assembly by a note of the Secretary-General,<sup>(1)</sup> the Commission stated that events in the area had further complicated an already complex situation and that the circumstances which limited its possibilities of action had remained essentially unchanged. Nevertheless, it continued to hope that the situation would improve towards the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace, thus enabling it to carry forward its work.

The Assembly, by its resolution of 16 December on assistance to Palestine refugees,<sup>(4)</sup> noted with regret that the Commission had been unable to find a means of achieving progress in implementing the 1948 resolution, and requested it to exert continued efforts in that regard and to report to the Assembly by 1 October 1982. The Assembly also noted with regret that there had been no repatriation or compensation of refugees, or progress towards their reintegration by repatriation or resettlement.

In a resolution on the Palestine question adopted on 10 December, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property in Palestine, from which they had been displaced and uprooted, and called for their early return.<sup>(3)</sup>

Israel, explaining its abstention on the resolution, said it had a different interpretation of the 1948 resolution mentioned therein; since its adoption, there had been a population exchange in the area, the Security Council had called for a solution on the basis of negotiation and a further step had been taken through the 1978 Camp David agreements with Egypt.

During the debate on Palestine refugees in SPC, a number of Arab States made the point that the Palestine question could not be solved until the refugees were able to return to their homes. Iraq stated that, in denying them the right to return, Israel was in breach of its obligations as a Member of the United Nations. Morocco said that, despite repeated demands by the Assembly for the refugees' return, Israel had continued to defy world public opinion.

Return of displaced persons

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. The Secretary-General, on 30 September, submitted a report<sup>(1)</sup> on implementation of a 1980 resolution by which the General Assembly called on Israel to take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants in territories it had occupied since 1967 and to desist from measures that obstructed their return.<sup>(2)</sup> The report reproduced information from the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) and from Israel.

The Secretary-General reported that UNRWA was not involved in arrangements for the return of refugees or displaced persons and could not estimate the total number of displaced inhabitants who had returned. However, it knew of about 9,800 UNRWA-registered refugees who had returned to the occupied territories since 1967, including 212 in the year ended 30 June 1981.

Israel, responding to the Secretary-General's request for information, stated that, in spite of security risks which inevitably resulted in some constraints on the return of persons displaced in 1967, it followed a policy of facilitating the reunification of families. Between 1967 and the end of June 1981, it had admitted 55,993 persons for that purpose to the territories it administered.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 16 December,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and considered any agreements embodying any restriction on or condition for their return as null and void. Deploring Israel's continued refusal to take steps for the return of displaced inhabitants, it again called on Israel to take such steps and to desist from all measures obstructing their return, and requested the Secretary-General to report by the opening of its 1982 session on Israel's compliance.

The resolution was adopted, by a recorded vote of 121 to 3, with 21 abstentions, on the recommendation of SPC, which approved the 12-nation text, introduced by Pakistan, on 10 November, by a recorded vote of 105 to 3, with 18 abstentions.

Speaking after the vote in Committee, Israel rejected the resolution on the ground that it disregarded the facts. In Israel's view, the destructive intent behind the text was particularly evident in the paragraph referring to agreements, which was aimed directly against the Middle East peace process.

Also voting against, Canada stated that the resolution was critical of the peace process, which provided ways of dealing with the subject. The United States said that, while repatriation seemed applicable at the earliest practicable date in the context of an agreement among the parties, the outcome should not be prejudiced by the Assembly; the actions called for were premature, unworkable and one-sided.

Sweden and the United Kingdom, the latter speaking for the European Community members, abstained on the ground that the text appeared to preclude the possibility of a negotiated settlement.

In the Committee's debate, Cyprus said it was fully committed to the right of displaced persons to return, wherever they were located.

Israel stated that to permit persons displaced by the 1967 hostilities to return systematically would open Israel's frontiers to saboteurs and agents of terrorist organizations.

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967 and declares once more that any attempt to restrict, or to attach conditions to, the free exercise of the right of return by any displaced person is inconsistent with that inalienable right and inadmissible;

Assistance to displaced persons

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 16 December 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> again endorsed the efforts of UNRWA to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, also to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities and in need of continued assistance. Governments, organizations and individuals were asked to contribute for that purpose to UNRWA and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

The resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of SPC, which approved the 22-nation text in like manner on 10 November. It was introduced by Sweden, which noted that the same text had been adopted every year since 1967.

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

REPORTS OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL AND UNRWA. On 30 September 1981, the Secretary-General submitted a report,<sup>(1)</sup> requested by the General Assembly in 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> on compliance with its call that Israel desist from removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and destruction of their shelters.

According to Israel's response to the Secretary-General's request for information, included in this report, the positive trend of assisting refugee families to leave camps and find new dwellings had continued. As of July 1981, 5,846 families had been assisted in the framework of refugee rehabilitation projects; families which had received plots and built their own homes with Israeli aid had increased to 2,356, and 2,690 other refugee families had taken possession of new homes in Israeli housing projects. Israel added that it was patently incongruous to censure the promotion of housing projects designed to improve the condition of refugees.

The Secretary-General's report also provided information from UNRWA indicating that, in the year under review, Israeli occupying authorities had demolished, on punitive grounds, shelters occupied by 13 refugee families, leaving them to live in the open. The Agency had lodged compensation claims, but to no avail; nor had it been compensated for refugee shelters demolished in previous years. Despite the housing shortage, Israeli authorities continued to require refugee families moving into Israeli housing projects to demolish their shelters in the camps. During the reporting period, that requirement had been applied in all cases and a total of 272 shelter rooms had been demolished.

The UNRWA Commissioner-General, in his annual report to the Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> noted that special contributions had been received to improve the living conditions of refugees in the Gaza Strip, where the proportion of refugees living in camps and the density of population was higher than elsewhere. By the end of June 1981, 59 refugee families had received new shelter rooms in individual family units; one of the new shelters had been among seven demolished by Israeli authorities in May and June.

To reduce overcrowding in the Gaza Strip, the Commissioner-General held it essential that the total complement of housing should increase substantially.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 16 December,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly demanded that Israel desist from removing and resettling Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and from destroying their shelters, and requested the Secretary-General to report before its 1982 session on Israel's compliance.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 141 to 2, with 2 abstentions, following approval by SPC on 10 November by a recorded vote of 119 to 2, with 2 abstentions. The draft was introduced by Pakistan on behalf of 12 sponsors.

Israel stated that it had voted against because the resolution took a cynical approach towards the refugees in calling on Israel to stop providing them with housing. The United States said it opposed the text because it addressed Israel in a harsh and unfair manner.

Canada said it had voted in favour out of concern at the practice of demolishing refugee shelters on punitive grounds. The United Kingdom explained that, although the members of the European Community (EC) had voted in favour, they considered that nothing in the resolution should be held to interfere with the freedom of the refugees to choose where they wished to live.

In the Committee's debate, Sri Lanka referred to Israel's practice of demolishing shelters as a form of collective punishment, and expressed hope that it would be discontinued as contrary to international law and civilized conduct.

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2792 C (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 E of 23 November 1976, 32/90 C of 13 December 1977, 33/112 E of 18 December 1978, 34/52 F of 23 November 1979 and 35/13 F of 3 November 1980,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1980 to 30 June 1981, and the report of the Secretary-General of 30 September 1981,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948 and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip away from the homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

Alarmed by the reports received from the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East that the Israeli occupying authorities persist in their policy of demolishing, on punitive grounds, shelters occupied by refugee families,

1. Demands that Israel desist from the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and from the destruction of their shelters;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly before the opening of its thirty-seventh session on Israel's compliance with paragraph 1 above.

Property rights

The General Assembly, on 16 December 1981, requested the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps for the protection and administration of Arab property and assets in Israel, to establish a fund for the receipt of income derived therefrom and to report to it in 1982.<sup>(1)</sup>

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 117 to 2, with 26 abstentions, following approval by SPC on 10 November by a roll-call vote of 101 to 2, with 24 abstentions. The 10-nation draft was introduced by Bangladesh, which said the establishment of such a fund would enable UNRWA to solve its financial difficulties.

Israel, which voted against the resolution, said the right of a State to regulate and dispose of property within its territory was beyond question, and the United Nations had no competence to intervene. Israel had spent vast sums of money rehabilitating and developing derelict lands and property. Moreover, approximately 800,000 Jewish refugees from Arab countries who had resettled in Israel had left property which had been confiscated by the Governments of those countries.

Also voting against, the United States said that, while compensation could be applicable in the context of an agreement among the parties, the outcome should not be prejudiced by the Assembly; the actions called for in the text were premature, unworkable and one-sided.

Among those which abstained, New Zealand said the resolution was as unlikely to advance Palestinian rights in the occupied territories or to further peace as was their continued illegal occupation by Israel. Austria, Canada, Sweden and the United Kingdom, the last speaking for the EC members, considered that a solution to the problems of Palestinian property rights and the return of the refugees must be sought in the framework of a comprehensive Middle East settlement.

Jordan, which voted for the draft, observed that it referred to land and property left behind by persons who had lived in Palestine for centuries before the arrival of the Jewish immigrants; it was only fair that the Palestine refugees, who were living at the subsistence level, should receive income accruing from that property, from which the Israeli Government was currently profiting.

During the debate on Palestine refugees, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya urged the international community to demand that Israel repay the profits extracted from exploitation of Palestinian property. Saudi Arabia suggested that a board be set up to collect revenues from the refugees' property and distribute those sums to the owners, who would then not be a burden on the international community. A similar suggestion was made by Kuwait (p. 329).
