Education

REPORTS OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL AND UNRWA. The Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly in August 1981 (with later addenda)<sup>(1)</sup> on the responses of Member States and United Nations agencies to a 1980 Assembly appeal for special allocations, scholarships and grants for the higher education of Palestine refugees.<sup>(3)</sup>

Among the countries responding, Australia had indicated that it had offered six awards to Palestine refugees for tertiary studies in Australia; one of these had been granted and the rest were being finalized. The Federal Republic of Germany had offered 10 scholarships for vocational instructor training for graduates of UNRWA vocational training centres, and France had offered two scholarships to such graduates. Egypt advised that some 20,000 Palestinian students had attended Egyptian schools and universities in the 1980/1981 academic year, most of them free of charge, and that 450 had been admitted to Egyptian universities in 1980/1981.

Several specialized agencies—the International Labour Organisation, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the Universal Postal Union, the World Intellectual Property Organization and the World Meteorological Organization—informed the Secretary-General of the assistance they were providing to Palestinians, including provision of training facilities and fellowships for higher studies.

The UNRWA Commissioner-General, in his annual report,<sup>(2)</sup> described the education and training services which accounted for more than half of the Agency's total expenditures (p. 326). The report also indicated that UNRWA had awarded 365 scholarships to Palestine refugees for study at Arab universities, of which 285 were continuing scholarships and 80 were new awards.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. The General Assembly, on 16 December 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> strongly appealed to States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to augment the special allocations for grants and scholarships to Palestine refugees in addition to their contributions to the regular budget of UNRWA, and invited United Nations agencies to expand their assistance for higher education of Palestine refugee students. It appealed to States, specialized agencies and other international bodies to contribute to Palestinian universities in the territories occupied by Israel and towards the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees. The Assembly requested UNRWA to act as recipient and trustee for special allocations and scholarships and requested the Secretary-General to report to it in 1982.

The resolution was adopted, by a recorded vote of 145 to none, with 1 abstention, on the recommendation of SPC, where the draft, introduced by Jordan also on behalf of Bangladesh and Pakistan, was approved on 10 November by a recorded vote, requested by Israel, of 125 to none, with 2 abstentions.

Also on 16 December, in connection with its consideration of the situation in the territories occupied by Israel, the Assembly condemned Israeli practices against Palestinian students and faculty and demanded that Israel rescind measures against educational institutions.<sup>(5)</sup>

With regard to the resolution on educational assistance to Palestine refugees, Israel explained that it had abstained in the vote because of certain political formulations that betrayed the true purpose of the resolution, which was not to promote education but to further Jordan's unrelenting propaganda campaign.

During the SPC debate, Jordan urged other Governments to follow the lead of those who had granted scholarships to Palestine refugees.

Offers by Member States of grants and scholarships for higher education, including vocational training, for the Palestine refugees

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolution 212(III) of 19 November 1948 on assistance to Palestine refugees,

Recalling also its resolution 35/13 B of 3 November 1980,

Cognizant of the fact that the Palestine refugees have, for the last three decades, lost their lands and means of livelihood,

Having examined with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on offers of grants and scholarships for higher education for Palestine refugees and the scope of the implementation of resolution 35/13 B,

Having also examined with appreciation the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1980 to 30 June 1981, dealing with this subject,

Noting that fewer than one per thousand of the Palestine refugee students have the chance to continue higher education, including vocational training,

Noting also that over the past several years the number of scholarships offered by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East has dwindled to half of what it was because of the Agency's recurring budgetary difficulties.

1. Urges all States to respond to the appeal contained in General Assembly resolution 32/90 F of 13 December 1977 in a manner commensurate with the needs of the Palestine refugees for higher education and vocational training;

2. Strongly appeals to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to augment the special allocations for grants and scholarships to Palestine refugees in addition to their contributions to the regular budget of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations that responded favourably to General Assembly resolution 33/112 C of 18 December 1978;

4. Invites the relevant United Nations agencies to continue to expand the inclusion within their respective spheres of competence of assistance for higher education for the Palestine refugee students;

5. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and the United Nations University to contribute generously to the Palestinian universities in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

6. Also appeals to all States, specialized agencies and other international bodies to contribute towards the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees;

7. Requests the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to act as recipient and trustee for such special allocations and scholarships and to award them to qualified Palestine refugee candidates:

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Proposed university

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. The Secretary-General, on 30 October 1981, submitted a report,<sup>(1)</sup> requested by the General Assembly in November 1980,<sup>(2)</sup> on ways of establishing a university of arts and sciences at Jerusalem to serve Palestine refugees.

According to 1980 estimates by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization cited in the report, three fourths of the 40,000 Palestinian Arab students who completed secondary education each year did not go on to university, mainly because of the lack of facilities. Of the 60,000 Palestinian Arab students in institutions of higher learning in 1977, only about 5,000 (9 per cent) attended universities on the West Bank and in Israel. Jordanian and Palestinian experts consulted for the report believed it essential to increase the number of Palestinians at the professional, managerial, scientific and technical levels, and to train them in the territories occupied by Israel, including Jerusalem.

As to the proposed university, those experts expressed the opinion that, while it should admit Palestinian Arabs regardless of their place of residence, it might initially have to restrict admission to those living in the occupied territories. The United Nations should provide its charter, select its board of trustees, assist in the appointment of academic staff and, if possible, arrange for financing. The persons consulted indicated that, if necessary, voluntary funds, primarily from Arab sources, could be made available on a regular basis.

It was evident, the Secretary-General concluded, that the establishment of the university would be possible only with the agreement and co-operation of the Israeli authorities, which had not been obtained.

Annexed to the report were exchanges of correspondence between the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs and Israel, Jordan and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). In reply to the Under-Secretary-General's request for co-operation with the study and access to the area by United Nations experts, Israel expressed concern that the sponsors were attempting to use the field of higher education for dubious political ends and said it was unable to help in taking the matter further. Jordan invited United Nations representatives to visit two of its universities. PLO expressed full support for the university project and suggested that a feasibility study be prepared.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 16 December,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly recognized the urgent necessity of establishing an arts and sciences university at Jerusalem for Palestine refugees and called on Israel to remove the obstacles it had put in the way. It requested the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures, including a feasibility study, for establishing the university and to report in 1982 on the progress made.

The Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote, requested by Israel, of 119 to 2, with 20 abstentions, following its approval by SPC on 30 November by a recorded vote of 87 to 2, with 17 abstentions. The draft was introduced by Jordan, also on behalf of Bangladesh, India, Pakistan and Senegal, and was revised by its sponsors before approval.

Israel, voting against, said the resolution did not respond to the refugees' educational needs. In Judea and Samaria there were already several universities established and developed by Israel. The new initiative might lead to discrimination between Moslems, Jews and Christians. Furthermore, it had no precedent in the history of refugees, most of whom found it difficult to satisfy their most elementary needs for education. The United States also voted against, explaining that it considered the initiative unrealistic.

Among those which abstained in the vote, Canada thought it was ill-timed to advocate the establishment of a university even though UNRWA was not receiving enough contributions for its pressing needs; moreover, Canada was not convinced that a university was urgently needed. Sweden, although it favoured the general aim of establishing a university, wanted a feasibility study before any commitment was undertaken. The United Kingdom said the European Community members had difficulty with some of the text's formulations and considered that any resulting expenditure must be covered through voluntary contributions outside the UNRWA budget.

Austria, though voting affirmatively, also favoured voluntary contributions and added that it might be better to use or enlarge existing institutions in view of the costs.

In the Committee's debate, Egypt expressed regret that Israel had not co-operated on the project.

Chapter IX

Cyprus question

Talks between representatives of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities in Cyprus continued throughout 1981, focusing on constitutional and territorial issues. The two sides met at Nicosia, Cyprus, under the auspices of the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Cyprus, Hugo J. Gobbi, who presented in November, on the Secretary-General's behalf, an evaluation paper suggesting ideas or working hypotheses with regard to some aspects of the Cyprus problem.

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) continued to supervise cease-fire lines drawn in 1974<sup>(7)</sup> between the Cyprus National Guard in the south and the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces in the north (p. 344). Twice during 1981, in June<sup>(5)</sup> and December,<sup>(6)</sup> the Security Council extended the Force's mandate for six-month periods, expiring on 15 December 1981 and 15 June 1982, respectively.

Prior to each extension, the Secretary-General reported to the Council, in May<sup>(2)</sup> and December,<sup>(3)</sup> on the United Nations operation in Cyprus. He also submitted a report on the Cyprus question to the General Assembly in November.<sup>(1)</sup>

Agreement between the two sides was announced in April on terms of reference for the establishment of a Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus. The Committee began work in July but procedural difficulties prevented it from starting its substantive work. The General Assembly in December urged that the Committee proceed without further delay aided by the Secretary-General's good offices.<sup>(4)</sup>

A $14 million United Nations programme of humanitarian assistance to Cyprus was under way during the year (p. 346).

General aspects

COMMUNICATIONS (FEBRUARY-MAY). A number of communications concerning the situation in Cyprus were received by the Secretary-General from Cyprus and Turkey, the latter transmitting letters from representatives of the Turkish Cypriot community. The letters transmitted by Turkey were signed by Rauf R. Denktas as "President of the Turkish Federated State of Kibris" (Kibris being the Turkish-language name for Cyprus) or by Nail Atalay as "representative of the Turkish Federated State of Kibris".

Turkey, by a letter dated 23 February,<sup>(11)</sup> transmitted a letter of the same date from Mr. Atalay attaching a 19 February letter from Mr. Denktas, stating that the final communique (New Delhi Declaration) of the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries<sup>(10)</sup> (New Delhi, India, 9-13 February) contained misleading elements, including a reference to the Greek Cypriot administration as the Government of Cyprus; Mr. Denktas added that the Turkish people of Cyprus did not consider itself bound by any decisions on Cyprus taken in its absence at any international forum at which it was not represented. Cyprus, in a letter of 6 March,<sup>(1)</sup> rejected the views expressed in the Turkish letter and cited the paragraph on Cyprus in the New Delhi Declaration, in which the Ministers of non-aligned countries reaffirmed their support for the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and non-alignment of the Republic of Cyprus and reiterated their solidarity with its Government and people.

Cyprus, by a letter of 9 March,<sup>(2)</sup> protested the Turkish Foreign Ministry's inclusion of the Mission of the Turkish Federated State of Kibris in its 1981 list of foreign diplomatic missions at Ankara, Turkey. Replying by a letter of 14

April,<sup>(12)</sup> Turkey stated that it had no choice but to recognize the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus until new structures were agreed upon by the two communities. By another letter of 14 April,<sup>(13)</sup> Turkey transmitted a letter of the same date from Mr. Atalay stating that the Turkish Federated State of Kibris had maintained an office at Ankara since 1975.

Cyprus, by a letter of 10 April,<sup>(3)</sup> protested a report that the Turkish Cypriot leadership had taken steps to issue title deeds to Turkish Cypriots for properties in the occupied area of Cyprus owned by Greek Cypriot refugees.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL (MAY). Before the mandate of UNFICYP was due to expire, the Secretary-General, on 27 May, submitted a report to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering the period from 1 December 1980 to 27 May 1981.<sup>(21)</sup> The report dealt with the activities of the Force, including its civilian police element and its financing (p. 344), as well as with developments in the intercommunal talks, held in the framework of the good offices mission entrusted to the Secretary-General by the Security Council since 1975.<sup>(23)</sup> The humanitarian assistance programme was also reviewed (p. 346).

The Secretary-General reported that the intercommunal talks had continued in a constructive atmosphere, although with limited practical results. Meetings had been held almost weekly at Nicosia, under the auspices of his Special Representative, with a reduced schedule to take effect in May and June in view of elections in both parts of Cyprus. The interlocutors for each side had taken up in succession the four agenda items agreed upon when the current round of talks began in August 1980.<sup>(29)</sup>

The Secretary-General had continued direct personal contact with the parties with a view to facilitating the negotiations. During the first months of 1981, his representatives, in consultation with the parties, had sought to devise the basis and content of a partial interim agreement that would take into account the matters assigned priority or special importance by the 10-point accord of 1979 for resumption of the talks.<sup>(28)</sup> However, there were still difficulties with regard to the possible impact of that approach on the political and legal positions of the parties, on the geographical scope and the nature of a new régime for Varosha (a community near the port of Famagusta, just inside the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces' cease-fire line), and on the method and extent of the easing of economic restrictions in connection with the reopening of Nicosia International Airport.

On 22 April, agreement had been announced on the establishment and terms of reference of a Committee on Missing Persons (p. 345).

The Secretary-General recommended to the Council a six-month extension of the UNFICYP mandate. On 4 June, in an addendum to the report, he added that both parties had concurred in the proposed extension.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (JUNE). The Security Council, by a resolution of 4 June<sup>(24)</sup> prepared on the basis of consultations carried out by its President, took note of the Secretary-General's report and extended the stationing of UNFICYP in Cyprus for a further six months, to 15 December. It urged the parties to pursue the intercommunal talks, and requested the Secretary-General to continue his good offices mission and to report to the Council by 30 November. This resolution was adopted by 14 votes to none, with China not participating in the vote.

Before adopting the resolution, the Council invited Cyprus, Greece and Turkey, at their request, to participate without vote in the discussion of the Cyprus situation. Mr. Atalay was also invited to participate under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.<sup>a</sup>

The Secretary-General, in a statement to the Council, said the intercommunal negotiations were to enter a more active phase at the beginning of July, and the parties had given him reason to believe that they were prepared to make a serious effort towards a comprehensive settlement. That would involve the interconnected consideration of territorial and constitutional aspects.

Cyprus stated that progress in the negotiations could be achieved only through the implementation of agreements already reached and by taking further steps in the right direction. Proposals by the other side should not reiterate old positions or undermine the legal order in the Republic, but should be pragmatic and reasonable.

Greece believed that the party responsible for the Cypriot tragedy had the duty to make a serious effort to arrive at a settlement; the situation could have been resolved if the two Cypriot communities had been allowed to seek a satisfactory settlement without the interference of outside elements more interested in promoting their own aims than in the welfare of the Cypriots.

Turkey stated that the intercommunal negotiations were the only valid means for a just and lasting solution; progress could be achieved only by mutual concessions, not by taking unrealistic positions and going back on previous agreements.

<sup>a</sup> Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Mr. Atalay, stressing the need to address the two communities as equals, stated that the only way to guarantee a lasting peace in Cyprus was to create a bicomunal, bizonal federation in which each community could manage its internal affairs without interference from the other side; there could be no federation without equality of the units forming it.

FURTHER COMMUNICATIONS (JUNE-DECEMBER). On 3 June,<sup>(4)</sup> 13 August,<sup>(6)</sup> 9 November<sup>(7)</sup> and 17 November,<sup>(8)</sup> Cyprus protested violations of its airspace by jet fighters of the Turkish air force on 1 and 2 June, 11 August and 5, 12 and 13 November. On 19 November<sup>(17)</sup> and 27 November,<sup>(18)</sup> Turkey transmitted letters of the same dates from Mr. Atalay stating that the aircraft mentioned in the Cyprus letters sent in November had remained within the airspace of the Turkish Federated State.

By a letter dated 10 June,<sup>(14)</sup> Turkey transmitted a letter of the same date from Mr. Atalay protesting remarks by Archbishop Chrisostomos of the Greek Orthodox Church, published in the Greek Cypriot daily Agon on 17 May, calling for the break-up of the intercommunal talks and urging Greece to create an armed front against Turkey and Turkish Cypriots. On 13 June,<sup>(5)</sup> Cyprus cited a statement by its President objecting to what he called provocative remarks by Mr. Denktas about the existence of borders in Cyprus and stating that the future of the intercommunal talks would become gloomy if the intransigent attitude of the Turkish side did not change radically.

By a letter of 16 June,<sup>(15)</sup> Turkey transmitted a letter of the same date from Mr. Atalay charging that Greek Cypriot leaders had publicly denied the existence of the population exchange agreement reached in 1975 at Vienna, Austria, under the auspices of the Secretary-General.<sup>(27)</sup>

By a letter of 27 November,<sup>(9)</sup> Cyprus stated that the Turkish Cypriot leaders had decided to confer citizenship status in the so-called Turkish Federated State of Cyprus to settlers from Turkey; annexed to the letter was the text of an amendment to that effect dated 28 October. On 15 December,<sup>(19)</sup> Turkey transmitted a letter of the same date from Mr. Atalay, replying that the Federated State had the right and responsibility to pass, execute and apply laws deemed necessary and suitable for the task of governing northern Cyprus, just as the Greek Cypriot administration did regarding the area under its own jurisdiction.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL (DECEMBER). In a report to the Security Council dated 1 December on the United Nations operation in Cyprus for the period 28 May to 30 November,<sup>(22)</sup> the Secretary-General expressed the view that the search for a solution to the Cyprus problem had undergone a rapid evolution. For the first time, the parties had proposed concrete territorial, in addition to constitutional, arrangements. Shortly after the talks had resumed on 5 August, following a short recess while elections were held in the island, the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor had submitted his community's proposals, and on 9 September the Greek Cypriot interlocutor had done likewise.

The Secretary-General's Special Representative had submitted an evaluation paper, initially on 22 October as an informal draft and officially on 18 November. This paper dealt with some aspects of the problem, analysing the parties' positions, seeking to identify major points of coincidence and equidistance, and suggesting ideas or working hypotheses, derived mainly from the parties' positions and conceived as parameters for negotiations. The paper did not purport to introduce proposals as a basis for negotiations to solve the Cyprus problem.

The report also covered the other topics dealt with in the Secretary-General's May report on the Cyprus operation (p. 341).

In the light of the situation on the ground and of political developments, the Secretary-General again concluded that the continued presence of UNFICYP remained necessary, both in helping to maintain calm and in creating conditions for a peaceful settlement. He therefore recommended a further six-month extension of the Force's mandate and, in an addendum of 14 December, he stated that the parties had signified their concurrence.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (DECEMBER). By a resolution of 14 December,<sup>(25)</sup> adopted unanimously on the basis of a draft prepared during consultations among Council members, the Security Council took note of the Secretary-General's latest report, extended the stationing of UNFICYP for a further six months to 15 June 1982, and requested the Secretary-General to continue his good offices mission and to report by 31 May 1982.

Before adopting the resolution, the Council invited Cyprus, Greece and Turkey, at their request, to participate without vote in the discussion. Mr. Atalay was also invited to participate under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.<sup>b</sup>

Addressing the Council after adoption of the resolution, the Secretary-General said the parties had agreed to use the evaluation presented by his Special Representative as a method of negotiation, thus embarking on the path designed to lead eventually to a comprehensive settlement.

There had been gradual movement in the negotiating process instead of confrontation, and the pace of that movement had accelerated over the previous few months. However, the parties should not lose sight of the great distance to be travelled.

Cyprus stated that the basis for the intercommunal dialogue remained the United Nations resolutions and the past high-level agreements, not the Secretary-General's evaluation paper, though it was helpful to the negotiations. Cyprus had accepted an understanding not to have the Cyprus question discussed at the current General Assembly session (see below), but it would request a full-fledged debate and a resolution if the talks in Cyprus did not register progress within a reasonable time.

Greece stated that the Turkish Cypriots, in their August proposal, had offered to return about 3 per cent of the territory occupied by foreign troops in return for the virtual partition of the island through the creation of two federated entities, each of which would be an independent State in all but name.

Turkey denied that the Turkish Cypriot side had asked for partition and said the other side should give up the hope of prevailing on the Turkish Cypriots to place themselves under Greek Cypriot administration; the Greek Cypriots should negotiate on the basis of the Secretary-General's evaluation before seeking to go before the General Assembly in the hope of obtaining doubtful satisfaction and poisoning relations between the two communities.

Mr. Atalay stated that the Turkish Cypriot side had accepted the evaluation paper as the framework and basis of the intercommunal talks; its August proposals had helped the talks to reach a constructive stage and it was determined to do all it could to keep the talks alive, despite the unconstructive attitude of the other side.

China, explaining its position on United Nations peace-keeping operations, said that henceforth it would support those operations that were conducive to the maintenance of peace and security and the preservation of the sovereignty and independence of the States concerned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. The Secretary-General submitted a report on the Cyprus question to the General Assembly on 20 November,<sup>(20)</sup> reviewing developments in the intercommunal talks and other matters (covered in his reports to the Security Council). He observed that there had been a rapid evolution during the year in the search for a solution, with the submission of new or revised proposals by both sides and of his evaluation paper. While the talks represented the best method of pursuing the negotiations, the evaluation paper constituted a determined effort to lend structure and substance to the process.

The Assembly did not discuss the Cyprus question in 1981, though the item remained on its agenda. When suspending the session on 18 December,<sup>(26)</sup> it listed this item among those to be considered when the session resumed.

By a letter of 8 September,<sup>(16)</sup> Turkey transmitted a letter of the same date from Mr. Atalay forwarding a letter dated 4 September from Mr. Denktas, on the representation of Cyprus in the Assembly; Mr. Denktas stated that the Greek Cypriot administration's continued attempts to represent the Republic as a whole at international forums were null and void, and that the Turkish Cypriot community would not be bound by anything said or done by such a delegation.

UN Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus

Activities of UNFICYP

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) continued during 1981, for the seventeenth year, to supervise the cease-fire lines of the Cyprus National Guard and the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces, and to provide security for civilians in the buffer zone between those lines. To help maintain the cease-fire, UNFICYP exercised surveillance over the area between the lines—a zone 180 kilometres long and from 20 metres to 7 kilometres wide—based on a system of 133 observation posts, 64 of which were permanently manned (as at 30 November). United Nations civilian police (UNCIVPOL), deployed in support of the Force, contributed to the maintenance of law and order in that area and to the protection of civilians, particularly where intercommunal problems existed.

In discharge of its humanitarian responsibilities, UNFICYP assisted in the transfer from north to south, at their request, of 90 Greek Cypriots during the first 10 months of 1981. As of 31 October, 1,086 Greek Cypriots were residing in the north and some 187 Turkish Cypriots remained in the south. It also helped implement the humanitarian assistance programme for Cyprus (p. 346).

The Security Council extended the Force's mandate twice during 1981, for six months on each occasion (16 June-15 December 1981 and 16 December 1981-15 June 1982). The activities of the Force were described in two reports by the Secretary-General to the Council, covering the United Nations operation in Cyprus for the periods 1 December 1980 to 27 May 1981<sup>(1)</sup> and 28 May to 30 November.<sup>(2)</sup>

Composition of UNFICYP

As at 30 November 1981, UNFICYP had a strength of 2,374, including civilian police.<sup>(1)</sup> Contingents came from eight States (see table below). The number of military personnel was 117 below the level of 30 November 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> in pursuance of a 1980 recommendation by a Secretariat Survey Team.<sup>(2)</sup>

UNFICYP financing

The expenditures of UNFICYP totalled $20,987,635 in 1981. The Force continued to be financed by voluntary contributions and by troop-contributing Governments. A total of $16,506,781 was received in contributions from 22 States during 1981 (see table below).

The accumulated deficit of the Force stood at $91.5 million as at 15 December 1981. Because of the deficit, it was impossible to reimburse troop-contributing Governments for the whole of their extra costs in providing contingents. The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council in December<sup>(3)</sup> that the last payment to those Governments in respect of their claims, which represented in some cases only a fraction of their actual costs in maintaining their contingents, had been made in April 1981, and met those claims only up to July 1976.

The Secretary-General made appeals for contributions in letters of 5 June<sup>(1)</sup> and 29 December,<sup>(2)</sup> sent following each renewal of the UNFICYP mandate to all States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies. Pointing out that contributions had consistently fallen short of needs, he said in the December letter that the rate of accumulation of the deficit had been growing, since voluntary contributions for the previous five years had averaged $9 million every six months while expenses had increased from $11 to $14 million for a six-month period.

Other aspects

Establishment of the Committee on Missing Persons

On 22 April 1981, the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Cyprus announced that an agreement had been reached by the two sides on terms of reference for the establishment of a Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus. In his report of 27 May to the Security Council,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that the announcement had been the result of efforts by himself and his representatives aimed at bridging the gap between the two communities with regard to the establishment of an investigatory body to trace and account for missing persons. The Committee consisted of three members: one humanitarian person representing each of the two communities and an official-Claude Pilon—selected by the International Committee of the Red Cross, with the agreement of both sides, and appointed by the Secretary-General.

The Committee began work on 14 July. However, the Secretary-General reported to the Council in his 1 December report<sup>(2)</sup> that it had immediately encountered procedural difficulties that had prevented it from embarking on substantive work. The Committee reconvened on 26 November and received from its third member a revised set of proposals intended to resolve those difficulties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 16 December,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly, expressing regret at the lack of progress towards commencing the investigative work of the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus, urged that the Committee proceed with that work without further delay and called on the parties to assist it in a spirit of co-operation and goodwill. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to provide his good offices for the unhindered functioning of the Committee.

This resolution, sponsored and revised by Cyprus, was adopted by the Assembly without vote, following its approval by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 4 December by a recorded vote of 89 to 7 (Bangladesh, El Salvador, Guatemala, Indonesia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Turkey), with 30 abstentions.

Cyprus stated, in introducing the resolution, that 2,000 persons were still missing in that country as a result of foreign aggression. However, the Turkish Cypriot party had used pretexts and stratagems to prevent the Committee on Missing Persons from starting its investigative work.

Turkey opposed the text, stating that the procedural matters could have been solved if the Greek Cypriots had not resorted to obstructive methods, including violation of the rule of secrecy that should govern the Committee's work; the Turkish Cypriot community, supported by Turkey, considered that the Assembly had no power to pronounce judgement on the Committee, whose establishment, terms of reference and procedure derived not from a United Nations decision but from intercommunity agreement.

Also voting against, Bangladesh said it sought to avoid supporting a text that might delay movement towards a mutually acceptable solution. Pakistan said the agreement establishing the Committee, and its work, were confidential, and any observations on that work might impede efforts to establish confidence between the parties.

Brazil abstained, explaining that it had no knowledge of the Committee's procedural difficulties or the provisions of the agreement mentioned in the text.

Among those voting for the resolution, Australia, Austria and Sweden said they had done so for purely humanitarian reasons, in the hope that the Committee could fulfil its mandate. Papua New Guinea also cited humanitarian concerns as the reason for its vote. Greece observed that some of the missing persons were of Greek nationality and added that the reluctance of the Turkish Cypriot side to co-operate had caused procedural difficulties.

New Zealand, which also voted in favour, regarded the text as procedural but expressed reservations to a reference in the preamble by which the Assembly welcomed an oral agreement of 26 March concerning attendance of the Committee of Relatives of Missing Persons (a non-governmental organization in Cyprus) at meetings of the three-member Committee. In regard to this reference, Turkey said that, following meetings with Father Christophorou (Chairman of the Committee of Relatives), Rauf R. Denktas had made a press statement on 29 March announcing a concordance of views on three points, including the participation of families of missing persons in the Committee's work as observers; but it could not be claimed that Mr. Denktas, as President, could have concluded an intercommunity agreement of public law with a private person or the association over which that person presided.

Missing persons In Cyprus

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the question of the missing persons In Cyprus,

Reaffirming the basic human need of families to be informed, without further delay, about the fate of their missing relatives,

Having in mind that agreement was reached, on 19 May 1979, during the high-level meeting held at Nicosia under the auspices of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the agreement establishing the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus, referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 27 May 1981, including the oral agreement of 26 March 1981 concerning the attendance of representatives of the Committee of Relatives of Missing Persons at the meetings of the Committee,

Regretting the fact that owing to procedural difficulties no progress has been achieved towards the commencement of the Committee's investigative work,

1. Urges that the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus proceed, without any further delay, with its investigative work for the tracing of and accounting for missing persons in Cyprus;

2. Calls upon the parties concerned to assist, in a spirit of co-operation and goodwill, the Committee in carrying out its investigative task;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide his good offices for the unhindered functioning of the Committee.

Humanitarian assistance

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued in 1981 to assist displaced and needy persons in Cyprus in his capacity as Co-ordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus. According to the Secretary-General's December report to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus,<sup>(1)</sup> the 1981 programme provided $14 million for 18 projects to build temporary housing and a general hospital, procure health, education and agricultural equipment and supplies, and provide professional training. During the 12 months ended 30 November 1981, UNHCR distributed or delivered 1,299.2 tons of food, clothing, gas and diesel oil: 961 tons to Greek Cypriots and Maronite Christians in the north, and 338.2 tons to Turkish Cypriots in the north. The World Food Programme was a major contributor of food.

This programme was in addition to humanitarian functions performed by the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) for Greek Cypriots remaining in the north, including good offices in regard to temporary visits to the south by Greek Cypriots residing in the north, and periodic visits by UNFICYP officials to Turkish Cypriots in the south.

Chapter X

Organizational questions

In December 1981, the United Nations selected a new Secretary-General, Javier Pérez de Cuéllar of Peru, for a five-year term beginning on 1 January 1982, to replace Kurt Waldheim of Austria. The appointment was made by the General Assembly<sup>(12)</sup> on the unanimous recommendation of the Security Council.<sup>(17)</sup>

Three States joined the United Nations, raising its membership to 157. Resolutions recommending the admission of Vanuatu,<sup>(14)</sup> Belize,<sup>(15)</sup> and Antigua and Barbuda<sup>(16)</sup> were adopted unanimously by the Security Council, after which the Assembly admitted them to the Organization—Vanuatu on 15 September,<sup>(4)</sup> Belize on 25 September,<sup>(7)</sup> and Antigua and Barbuda on 11 November.<sup>(11)</sup>

In October, the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States was granted observer status in the Assembly.<sup>(8)</sup> The Assembly also called for strengthened co-operation between the United Nations and intergovernmental organizations previously granted such status—the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation,<sup>(13)</sup> the League of Arab States<sup>(10)</sup> and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,<sup>(9)</sup> as well as the Organization of African Unity (OAU) (p. 228).

The Assembly resumed its thirty-fifth session in January,<sup>a</sup> March and May, and adjourned it on 14 September. It held its eighth emergency special session, on the Namibia question, from 3 to 14 September, and opened its thirty-sixth regular session on 15 September, suspending it on 18 December after having completed consideration of all but seven of the 138 agenda items. It elected Ismat T. Kittani (Iraq) as President for the thirty-sixth session (p. 350).

In March and September, the Assembly approved the decisions of its Credentials Committee to reject the credentials of South Africa for representatives to the thirty-fifth session<sup>(1)</sup> and the eighth emergency special session.<sup>(2)</sup> It approved all other credentials submitted by Member States for the emergency special session,<sup>(3)</sup> and at the start<sup>(5)</sup> and close<sup>(6)</sup> of its thirty-sixth session, rejecting a challenge to the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea.

In addition to these organizational questions affecting political organs, the United Nations dealt with a number of organizational issues related to economic and social matters, centred on co-ordination and restructuring within the system and relations with non-governmental organizations (p. 1074).

Appointment of the Secretary-General

By a resolution adopted by acclamation on 15 December 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Security Council, appointed Javier Pérez de Cuéllar of Peru as Secretary-General of the United Nations for a term of office from 1 January 1982 to 31 December 1986. Mr. Pérez de Cuéllar had served as Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Cyprus (1975-1977), Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs (1979-1981) and Personal Representative of the Secretary-General on the situation in Afghanistan (1981). He had previously been a Peruvian Ambassador and Permanent Representative to the United Nations.

The Council recommended the appointment by a resolution adopted unanimously on 11 December,<sup>(6)</sup> transmitted to the Assembly on the same date by a letter from the Council President.<sup>(1)</sup> The Assembly resolution was sponsored by all 15 members of the Council.

The Council devoted four meetings to the matter, on 27 and 28 October and 4 and 17 November, before adopting its recommendation on 11 December. All these meetings were held in private, in accordance with the Council's practice when considering the appointment of the Secretary-General.

Prior to the Council's consideration, the candidature of Salim Ahmed Salim, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the United Republic of Tanzania, was supported unanimously by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, at its eighteenth ordinary session (Nairobi, Kenya, 24-27 June), and was supported by acclamation at the meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of non-aligned countries (New York, 25 and 28 September). The OAU decision was communicated in letters dated 28 September to the Council and the Assembly by the Chairman of the African Group;<sup>(2)</sup> the decision by the non-aligned countries was communicated to the Council in a letter of 30 September from Cuba.<sup>(4)</sup> However, in a statement of 8 December transmitted to the Council by a 10 December letter from Botswana, Chairman of the African Group,<sup>(3)</sup> Mr. Salim said he had asked that his name be set aside from subsequent ballots, as the position of a permanent member of the Council had made it impossible for the Council to recommend him.

Adopted unanimously Meeting 2312 11 December 1981

The Security Council,

Having considered the question of the recommendation for the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, Recommends to the General Assembly that Mr. Javier Pérez de Cuéllar should be appointed Secretary-General of the United Nations for a term of office from 1 January 1982 to 31 December 1986.

General Assembly resolution 36/137

Appoints Mr. Javier Pérez de Cuéllar as Secretary-General of the United Nations for a term of office beginning on 1 January 1982 and ending on 31 December 1986.

Admission of Members to the United Nations

During 1981, the number of Member States of the United Nations rose to 157. Three States—Antigua and Barbuda, Belize and Vanuatu—were admitted to membership by the General Assembly on the Security Council's recommendation. In each case, the Council acted unanimously on the basis of unanimous recommendations by its Committee on the Admission of New Members. The Assembly's resolutions were adopted by acclamation except in the case of Belize, on which Guatemala voted against.

Admission of Antigua and Barbuda

Antigua and Barbuda, a Caribbean island country formerly administered by the United Kingdom, attained independence on 1 November 1981 and applied for membership by a telegram of the same date.<sup>(2)</sup> Its admission to the United Nations was unanimously recommended by the Security Council on 10 November.<sup>(3)</sup> Acting on the Council's recommendation as transmitted by its President in a letter of the same date,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly admitted Antigua and Barbuda on 11 November by adopting by acclamation a resolution sponsored by 59 States.<sup>(4)</sup>

Congratulations to the Government and people of Antigua—as it was known prior to independence—were extended on 21 August by the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (p. 1181).

Decides to admit Antigua and Barbuda to membership in the United Nations.

Admission of Belize

Belize, a Central American country formerly administered by the United Kingdom, attained independence on 21 September 1981 and applied for membership by a telegram of the same date.<sup>(2)</sup> Its admission to the United Nations was unanimously recommended by the Security Council on 23 September.<sup>(3)</sup> Acting on the Council's recommendation as transmitted by its President in a letter of the same date,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly admitted Belize on 25 September by adopting a 75-nation resolution<sup>(4)</sup> by a recorded vote of 144 to 1.

Guatemala, which voted against the admission of Belize, maintained in the Council and the Assembly that Belize was part of its territory and that it would continue to struggle by peaceful means in support of its claim, regarding the United Kingdom as primarily responsible for the origin and solution of the dispute. The United Kingdom said its guiding principle had always been the right of self-determination; it had never accepted the Guatemalan claim and hoped that negotiations could be resumed promptly, though its role would be different now that Belize was an independent State. Following the admission of his country, the Prime Minister of Belize, George C. Price, told the Assembly that his Government was ready to pursue the formula agreed upon by Belize, Guatemala and the United Kingdom on 11 March.

The dispute between Guatemala and the United Kingdom over Belize was the subject earlier in the year of several letters to the Council and the Assembly (p. 1181).

Organizational questions concerning the General Assembly

Dates of sessions

The thirty-fifth session of the General Assembly, which had opened on 16 September 1980 and been suspended on 17 December, was resumed on 15 January 1981. Additional meetings of the resumed session took place on 16 January, 2 to 6 March, 11 May and 14 September.

The eighth emergency special session of the Assembly was held from 3 to 14 September to consider the question of Namibia (p. 1140).

The Assembly opened its thirty-sixth session on 15 September. The session continued through 18 December, when the Assembly, on an oral proposal of its President, decided to resume the session in 1982 in order to complete consideration of the seven items remaining on its agenda.<sup>(1)</sup>

General Assembly decision 36/461

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 8.

Suspension of the thirty-sixth session

At its 105th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1981, the General Assembly decided to resume its thirty-sixth session, at a date to be announced, for the sole purpose of considering the following agenda items:

- Item 12: Report of the Economic and Social Council (consideration of the question of human rights relating to the case of Mr. Ziad Abu Eain);
- Item 15 (c): Election of a member of the International Court of Justice;
- Item 18 (i): Appointment of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia;
- Item 35: Question of Cyprus;
- Item 37: Launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development;
- Item 60: United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;
- Item 100: Proposed programme budget for the biennium 1982-1983 (question of the formulation, presentation, review and approval of programme budgets).

Election of the President

On 15 September 1981, the General Assembly elected Ismat T. Kittani, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs of Iraq, as President of its thirty-sixth session.<sup>(1)</sup> In accordance with the pattern of rotation among regions established in 1978,<sup>(4)</sup> only representatives of Asian States were eligible for the presidency. The election was by secret ballot. Of the 150 votes cast on the first ballot, Mr. Kittani received 64, Khwaja Mohammed Kaiser (Bangladesh) 46 and Tommy T.B. Koh (Singapore) 40; there was 1 abstention and 1 invalid ballot. Since the required majority (76) was not obtained, a second ballot was held, restricted to Mr. Kaiser and Mr. Kittani, in which each candidate received 73 of the 146 votes cast; there were six invalid ballots. Mr. Kittani's name was then drawn by lot, in accordance with rule 93 of the Assembly's rules of procedure.<sup>b</sup>

In a letter of 18 September to the Secretary-General, Iran enclosed a communiqué dated 17 September from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs stating that Iraq had launched a war of aggression against Iran and that the accession of such a State to the Assembly presidency would have grave moral and political implications for the United Nations.<sup>(2)</sup> In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 25 September, Iraq responded that Mr. Kittani had been elected in compliance with the rules of procedure and that Iran had begun and continued to wage a war of aggression against Iraq.<sup>(3)</sup> (For information on the Iran-Iraq situation, see p. 238.)

Agenda

The General Assembly adopted without vote on 4 September 1981<sup>(1)</sup> a five-item agenda<sup>(3)</sup> for its eighth emergency special session, including one substantive item: Question of Namibia.

A 134-item agenda for the Assembly's thirty-sixth session was adopted initially on 18 September, and four additional items were included on 6 October and 4 November<sup>(2)</sup>. In addition to adopting the agenda,<sup>(4)</sup> the Assembly allocated each of the 138 items for consideration by one of its Main Committees or directly in plenary meetings.<sup>(5)</sup> These actions were taken on the recommendation of the General Committee,<sup>(9)</sup> which acted on the basis of a provisional agenda of 126 items<sup>(7)</sup> and a supplementary list of 8 items<sup>(8)</sup> proposed for inclusion prior to the session (annotated by the Secretariat<sup>(6)</sup>, as well as proposals for additional items submitted during the session.

The Assembly's actions on inclusion and allocation of items were taken without a vote. In the General Committee, inclusion of two items was recommended by vote on 16 September, the others having been recommended without vote: item 38, Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council (24 votes to 4) (p. 353), and item 42 (b), Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons: report of the Secretary-General (a proposal by the USSR to delete the sub-item was rejected by 18 votes to 4, with 2 abstentions) (p. 73).

Approved by General Committee (A/36/250 and Add.1, 2). 16 September, 6 October and 3 November; agenda item 8.

Adoption of the agenda and allocation of agenda items

At its 4th, 28th and 46th plenary meetings, on 18 September, 6 October and 4 November 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its first, second and third reports, adopted the agenda and the allocation of agenda items for the thirty-sixth session.

Credentials of representatives

At its eighth emergency special session and its thirty-sixth regular session, the General Assembly approved reports of its Credentials Committee accepting the credentials submitted by Member States for representatives attending those sessions, except for those submitted by South Africa at the emergency special session. In each case, the Committee adopted resolutions orally proposed by its Chairman by which it accepted the credentials concerned, and the Assembly then adopted resolutions submitted by the Committee to approve its reports.

The Assembly resolution at the emergency special session<sup>(3)</sup> was adopted without vote on 11 September 1981, on the basis of a draft similarly approved by the Committee the previous day. At its regular session, the Assembly adopted similar resolutions without vote on 18 September<sup>(4)</sup> and 17 December,<sup>(5)</sup> as recommended by the Committee, also without vote, on 15 September and 9 December, respectively. The Assembly rejected on 18 September an amendment that would have added the phrase "except with regard to the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea" to the resolution approving the report (p. 248).

The Assembly twice approved reports stating that the Committee had decided to reject the credentials submitted by South Africa (p. 163). This occurred first on 2 March by a resolution<sup>(1)</sup> which the Assembly adopted by 112 votes to 22, with 6 abstentions, following a Committee vote the same day to reject the credentials submitted by South Africa for the thirty-fifth session. The Assembly adopted a similar resolution on 4 September<sup>(2)</sup> by a recorded vote of 117 to 22, with 6 abstentions, after the Committee, on the previous day, decided to reject the credentials submitted by South Africa for the eighth emergency special session. In both instances, the vote in Committee to reject the credentials was 6 to 1, with 2 abstentions. South Africa did not submit credentials at the thirty-sixth session later in 1981.

During the discussions on credentials at the Assembly's emergency special and thirty-sixth sessions, individual delegations also opposed approval of the credentials of Afghanistan (p. 237) and Chile (p. 951), and reservations were expressed on the credentials of Israel (p. 263).

Observer status for the African,

Caribbean and Pacific Group of States

By a resolution of 15 October 1981, sponsored by 53 States and adopted without vote, the General Assembly invited the African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) Group of States to participate as observer in the Assembly's sessions and work.<sup>(2)</sup> The resolution was introduced by Samoa.

The matter was raised by a letter dated 14 August from 27 States,<sup>(1)</sup> requesting inclusion in the Assembly's agenda of an item on observer status for the ACP Group. An explanatory memorandum annexed to the letter noted that the 61-member Group, established pursuant to the Georgetown (Guyana) Agreement of 6 June 1975 as an intergovernmental organization with headquarters at Brussels, Belgium, had two main objectives: to help develop closer trade, economic and cultural relations among ACP States and among developing countries in general, and to promote regional and interregional co-operation and the establishment of a new international economic order.

Organizational questions concerning the Security Council

Agenda

The Security Council held 60 meetings during 1981 at which it considered a total of 15 items. It continued to follow the practice of adopting at each meeting the agenda for that meeting. (For list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.)

On 17 December,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly, on an oral proposal of its President, took note of a note by the Secretary-General dated 15 September. In his note,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General notified the Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations, of nine matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which the Security Council had discussed since his previous annual notification. In addition, he listed 87 matters of which the Council remained seized but which it had not discussed during the period.

Report of the Security Council

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1981, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Security Council.

Proposed increase in membership

In 1981, the General Assembly again postponed consideration of the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council. Draft resolutions on this item, proposing an increase in membership from 15 to 21, had been introduced and discussed at both the 1979<sup>(3)</sup> and 1980<sup>(4)</sup> sessions, but no action had been taken.

On 14 September 1981, at its resumed thirty-fifth session, the Assembly decided to include the item in the draft agenda of its 1981 regular session.<sup>(1)</sup> The decision was orally proposed by the Assembly President at the request of the 19 sponsors of the 1980 draft resolution and was adopted without vote. Following consultations at the Assembly's thirty-sixth session, the President proposed that the question be included in the provisional agenda of the 1982 regular session since there had been no request to consider the item at the 1981 session. This decision was adopted by the Assembly without vote on 18 December.<sup>(2)</sup>

Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council

Relations between the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations

In 1981, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, four resolutions concerned with strengthening co-operation between the United Nations and the following intergovernmental organizations: the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation, the League of Arab States, the Organization of African Unity (p. 229) and the Organization of the Islamic Conference. By each resolution, the Secretary-General was requested to report to the Assembly in 1982 on measures taken to further co-operation between the United Nations and the organization concerned.

Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation

By a resolution of 17 December 1981, the Assembly welcomed the participation of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation in United Nations work and requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Agency, to examine Agency proposals aimed at reinforcing co-operation.<sup>(2)</sup>

The draft of the resolution, as orally amended by the USSR in Committee to specify that the Secretary-General's report be submitted through the Economic and Social Council, had been approved by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, also without vote, on 11 November. An earlier draft, sponsored by 36 States and introduced by Zaire,<sup>(1)</sup> was withdrawn by its sponsors following the informal consultations that resulted in the submission of the final draft by a Vice-Chairman of the Committee. Under the first draft, the Assembly would have decided to strengthen co-operation, rather than recognized the necessity of doing so, and the Secretary-General would have considered ways of strengthening co-operation, rather than examined the Agency's proposals on reinforcing it.

General Assembly resolution 36/174

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add.1) without vote. 11 November (meeting 35); draft by Committee Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.40), based on informal consultations on 36-nation draft (A/C.2/36/L.17) and orally amended by USSR; agenda item 69.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/18 of 10 November 1978, by which it accorded observer status to the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 190(LXI) of 5 August 1976, by which the Council had designated the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation to participate on an ad hoc basis in the deliberations of the Council on questions within the scope of its activities.

Noting with satisfaction the desire expressed by the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation to establish close co-operation with the United Nations in all fields of common interest, in particular training, desertification control, science and technology for development, new and renewable sources of energy and technical co-operation among developing countries,

Recognizing the importance of those sectors,

1. Welcomes the participation of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation in the work of the United Nations in fields of common interest;

2. Recognizes the necessity of strengthening co-operation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in collaboration with the Secretary-General of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation, to examine proposals by the Agency aimed at reinforcing co-operation with the United Nations and to submit a report thereon through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

League of Arab States

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 14 August 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> Algeria, as Chairman of the Arab Group for August, requested that the General Assembly include an item on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States in its agenda for the 1981 regular session. An attached explanatory memorandum stated that the objective of the request was for closer co-operation between the United Nations and the League — which was granted observer status by the Assembly in 1950<sup>(2)</sup>—and for joint efforts in seeking solutions to international problems.

By a resolution of 9 November, sponsored by 20 States belonging to the League and introduced by Qatar, the Assembly noted with appreciation the League's constructive contribution to the work of the United Nations system, recognized its continued efforts to promote co-operation among Arab States and to seek solutions to Arab problems, reaffirmed the determination to work with the League towards the establishment of the new international economic order, and requested the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen political, economic, cultural and administrative co-operation with the League.<sup>(3)</sup>

and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 477(V) of 1 November 1950, in which it requested the Secretary-General of the United Nations to invite the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States to attend sessions of the General Assembly as an observer,

Recalling also the pertinent articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional arrangements for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations, Recognizing the efforts made by the League of Arab States for the promotion of these purposes and principles.

Noting that the Charter of the League of Arab States has envisioned co-operation with international bodies in order to guarantee peace and security and to promote economic and social relations,

Noting with satisfaction the co-operation that has developed for more than thirty years between the United Nations and the League of Arab States in areas of common endeavour,

Taking note of the effective participation of the League of Arab States in the work of the United Nations system,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 477(V) and decides to invite the League of Arab States to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly and of its subsidiary organs as an observer;

2. Notes with deep appreciation the increasing participation of the League of Arab States in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and its constructive contribution to that work;

3. Recognizes the continued efforts of the League of Arab States to promote co-operation among Arab States and to seek solutions to Arab problems of vital importance to the International community and takes note with satisfaction of the increased collaboration of various organizations of the United Nations system in support of these efforts;

4. Recognizes the importance of continued close association by the United Nations and the specialized agencies, where appropriate, with the efforts of the League of Arab States in order to promote social and economic development and to advance intra-Arab as well as international co-operation in this vital field;

5. Reaffirms the determination of the United Nations to work closely with the League of Arab States towards the establishment of the new international economic order in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to maintain contacts with the League of Arab States and requests him further to strengthen these contacts;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen co-operation at the political, economic, cultural and administrative levels between the United Nations and the League of Arab States in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of co-operation between the League of Arab States and the organizations concerned within the United Nations system.

Organization of the Islamic Conference

In a report issued in November 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General described measures taken to implement the General Assembly's 1980 resolution on promoting co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference.<sup>(6)</sup> The report described activities in which the two organizations had co-operated. Among them were: investments by the Islamic Development Bank in projects in Indonesia and Somalia supported by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); consultations on investment monitoring between the Bank and UNDP; preparation of a joint programme with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for establishing an industrial training and development centre; joint activities with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to celebrate the fifteenth century of Hegira, including an international symposium on Islam (Paris, July 1981); and joint programmes between the Bank and the World Health Organization to improve the health of refugees in Somalia and southern Sudan. In the political field, the two organizations had consulted and exchanged information on the Palestine question, the Afghanistan situation, disarmament, apartheid and the situation between Iran and Iraq.

The report suggested that the Islamic Conference be granted observer status with the Economic Commission for Western Asia, the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

Resolutions on these and other political, economic, social and cultural issues were adopted at the Third Islamic Summit Conference, held at Taif, Saudi Arabia, from 25 to 28 January, at which the Secretary-General delivered an address on 26 January emphasizing the necessity of finding just solutions to the political and economic problems of concern to both organizations. The texts of the Conference's resolutions and communique were circulated as an Assembly document, at the request of Saudi Arabia.<sup>(4)</sup> Circulated as documents at the request of Iraq were the resolutions and communiqué of the Twelfth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Baghdad, Iraq, from 1 to 5 June,<sup>(1)</sup> and the communique of a meeting held by the Foreign Ministers at United Nations Headquarters on 3 October.<sup>(2)</sup> A special representative of the Secretary-General attended the June meeting.

On 9 November, the Assembly adopted without vote a resolution<sup>(7)</sup> by which it noted the Secretary General's report and the participation of the Islamic Conference in the financing of development projects, and urged the United Nations and the Islamic Conference to intensify co-operation on such questions as international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order. It invited bodies of the United Nations system to send studies and experts to the Islamic Conference.

The draft of this resolution was introduced in the Assembly by Iraq, on behalf of the members of the Islamic Conference. After its adoption, Ethiopia stated that it would have voted against if the resolution been put to a vote; it did not believe the United Nations should be a party to decisions of an organization based on a particular religion. India said it would have abstained in a vote; while it had no objection to maintaining co-operation with the Islamic Conference on equal terms with other observer organizations, it felt that the object of some elements in the resolution was unclear. Israel also said it would have abstained, since the Islamic Conference endeavoured to promote aims that were sometimes in contrast to the Charter of the United Nations; it also had reservations about attempts to institutionalize further differentiation among Member States on the basis of religion. The Philippines, voicing support of the Islamic Conference, observed that some delegations could not approve all of the Conference's decisions without reservation since they were not necessarily bound by them. The USSR said it would not have supported the resolution, as it placed the Islamic Conference in a privileged position with the aim of creating in the United Nations a special machinery for consolidating an abnormal situation.

Israel, in a letter to the Secretary-General dated 25 November<sup>(3)</sup> referring to resolutions of the January and June meetings of the Islamic Conference, said it was difficult to see how a call for a "Holy War" against Israel could be reconciled with the United Nations Charter (p. 258).

7. Takes note of the appointment by the Secretary-General of a special representative to participate in the work of the Twelfth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Baghdad from 1 to 5 June 1981, and to study the best way of establishing machinery for co-ordinating the activities of the various units of the secretariats of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system which co-operate or may co-operate with the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session a report on the state of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference".

Twentieth anniversary of the Conference of Non-Aligned Countries

On 12 October 1981, the General Assembly met for a solemn observance of the twentieth anniversary of the first Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, from 1 to 6 September 1961.

The proposal for the observance was made in a letter of 14 August 1981 by Cuba, on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries,<sup>(1)</sup> requesting that the matter be included in the agenda of the Assembly's 1981 session. An attached explanatory memorandum noted that membership in the Movement had increased from 25 countries to virtually two thirds of United Nations Members, attesting to the increasing validity of its principles and its positive role in international relations.

At the observance, the Assembly President emphasized the close parallel between the principles and objectives of the Movement and those of the United Nations, as well as its consistent support for the United Nations. The Secretary-General described the Movement as one of the great forces directing the world's political evolution and said its achievements had confirmed its founders' belief that medium and small Powers could, by joining together, initiate positive international action. Tributes to the work of the Movement were also paid by Yugoslavia, the host country for the first Conference; Cuba, Chairman of the Movement for 1981; and by representatives of regional groups and national liberation movements.

The documents of the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi, India, from 9 to 13 February, were circulated as an Assembly document at the request of India.<sup>(3)</sup> In accordance with a request by Cuba, the same was done for the communiqué of the meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of non-aligned countries to the 1981 regular session of the Assembly, held at United Nations Headquarters on 25 and 28 September.<sup>(2)</sup>

Other intergovernmental organizations

At the request of Cuba, the resolutions adopted at the sixth-eighth Inter-Parliamentary Conference, held at Havana, Cuba, from 15 to 23 September 1981, were circulated at the Assembly's 1981 regular session.<sup>(2)</sup> The communiqué and the declaration of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting, held at Melbourne, Australia, from 30 September to 7 October, were also circulated as an Assembly document at the request of Australia.<sup>(1)</sup>

Other organizational questions

Composition of UN organs

On 16 December 1981, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations. On the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, it decided without objection to include the item in its 1982 agenda.<sup>(3)</sup> The Chairman proposed this action orally in Committee, noting that no member had asked to speak on the question, which had been deferred by the Assembly at its 1979<sup>(1)</sup> and 1980<sup>(2)</sup> sessions. The Committee agreed to the proposal without objection on 2 December.

General Assembly decision 36/433

Approved by SPC (A/36/765) without objection. 2 December (meeting 47); Oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 68.

Question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 16 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "Question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations".

Chapter XI

Other political questions

Aspects of a dispute between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta over delimitation of the continental shelf between them were considered by the Security Council during 1981, and a Special Representative of the Secretary-General sought to help the parties resolve their differences over submission of the matter to the International Court of Justice (p. 358).

An aerial incident on 19 August between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States, and other aspects of relations between the two countries, were the subject of letters by both sides to the United Nations (p. 360).

In October, the General Assembly endorsed the continuing work of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation,<sup>(2)</sup> which examined a number of scientific papers in preparation for a substantive report it was to issue in 1982.

Various aspects of information were considered by the Assembly and its Committee on Information.<sup>(1)</sup> In December, the Assembly made a number of recommendations to strengthen the United Nations public information programme,<sup>(4)</sup> and called for governmental and private support to expand the International Programme for the Development of Communication—a project of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.<sup>(3)</sup>

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta

During 1981, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta were unable to agree on whether either party had the right to conduct offshore drilling operations in a disputed area of the Mediterranean Sea pending a decision by the International Court of Justice on delimitation of the continental shelf between the two States. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya sought an interim ban on drilling pending a Court decision, but Malta regarded this as an unacceptable precondition. As a consequence, by year's end the parties had not completed the formalities required to submit the delimitation dispute to the Court under a special agreement, signed by them in 1976, that provided for such adjudication as a means of resolving the dispute.

A Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Diego Cordóvez, continued a mission aimed at assisting the parties to complete the formalities of submission to the Court. The positions of both sides were presented in letters to the Secretary-General (January-June) and the Security Council President (September-November), and at a meeting of the Council in July. In December, the Special Representative suggested that the parties consider submitting the issue of interim drilling to the Court in conjunction with the delimitation case.

COMMUNICATIONS (JANUARY-JUNE). In a letter dated 14 January,<sup>(1)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya informed the Secretary-General that the Libyan Basic People's Congresses had decided to ratify the 1976 agreement with Malta on submission of the dispute over the continental shelf to the International Court of Justice, provided that no drilling was allowed until the Court concluded consideration of the matter.

In a reply of 15 January,<sup>(6)</sup> Malta said the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had delayed ratification by almost one month and had laid down a new condition on drilling which Malta viewed as failure to comply with the unconditional Libyan undertaking—given to the Secretary-General's Special Representative during consultations in October/November 1980<sup>(20)</sup>—to submit the original text of the agreement for ratification by the Libyan Congresses.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya responded on 21 January<sup>(2)</sup> that it had stated at the outset and during negotiations that it would not accept commencement of drilling in the disputed area until the dispute was settled; it cited the Special Representative's November 1980 report to the effect that Malta had accepted an implicit understanding in 1976 that it would not begin drilling until the Court had reached a decision and a delimitation agreement had been concluded.

Malta stated on 23 January<sup>(7)</sup> that it was depositing on that date a further declaration accepting, unconditionally and without reservations, the Court's jurisdiction on disputes over delimitation of its continental shelf; Malta would have spontaneously refrained from drilling if the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had ratified the 1976 agreement at once, but it was no longer equitable to impose such a condition in 1981. On 27 January,<sup>(8)</sup> Malta transmitted notes verbales by which the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 26 January, announced that it was ready to exchange documents ratifying the 1976 agreement, and Malta, on 27 January, invited the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to exchange the instruments of ratification at Valletta, Malta, and sign a joint document notifying the Court of the agreement; Malta said in its letter of transmittal to the Secretary-General that it had no objection to that course because the Libyan ratification had not been made conditional, and asked him to indicate a day for finalization of the formalities.

In a letter of 2 February,<sup>(9)</sup> Malta reproduced a Libyan note verbale of 29 January stating that it was ready to ratify the agreement provided no drilling was allowed in the disputed area until the Court had completed its review—a proviso which Malta said was not acceptable. On 17 February,<sup>(10)</sup> Malta said it had been notified on 15 February that a Libyan delegation was about to visit for the exchange of ratification instruments, but Malta had also been informed by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya that formal submission of the case to the Court had yet to be negotiated and finalized; unless the Security Council acted, the dispute would again threaten the region's security.

On 3 June,<sup>(11)</sup> Malta said the Council should meet to ask the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to comply with its 1980 commitment to ratify the agreement without conditions. Reiterating on 18 June its request for a Council meeting,<sup>(12)</sup> Malta said it was willing to exchange the instruments of ratification if it received a Libyan assurance that its Congresses' decisions placed no condition.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 11 June,<sup>(3)</sup> said the nature of the dispute was such that neither party should foster the intention of exploiting the disputed area; it was prepared to exchange instruments of ratification but not to have dictated to it a different formula for those instruments.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION. By a letter of 21 July to the Security Council President,<sup>(13)</sup> Malta said it was clear that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya did not wish to submit the agreed terms to the Court and insisted on inserting extraneous conditions; Malta therefore requested that the Council meet to condemn the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya for its show of force in August 1980<sup>(19)</sup> and for going back on its undertaking to place the matter before the Court.

The Council met on 30 July in accordance with Malta's request, and invited the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta to participate in the discussion without vote.

The Secretary-General gave the Council an account of contacts he and his Special Representative had had with both parties with a view to assisting them in finalizing the exchange of instruments of ratification and the joint notification to the Court, as provided in the 1976 agreement. In late March, a Libyan delegation had visited Malta to conclude the formalities, but the discussions had been inconclusive. The Secretary-General had conveyed to the Libyan side a 2 July statement by Malta that it considered the question of interim drilling operations in the disputed area as a separate legal issue on which the parties were entitled to have different views. In a letter of 17 July, Malta had accepted a Libyan offer to send a special envoy to discuss the matter. However, meetings between the parties on 27 and 28 July had failed to resolve pending issues.

Malta told the Council that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya would continue to find excuses not to ratify the 1976 agreement. By failing to do so for five years, it had lost its claim to the area where Malta had carried out exploration activities. Although the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had drilled 30 offshore wells of its own, it had forcibly prevented Malta, which was completely dependent on imported petroleum, from carrying out the only activity it had legitimately authorized. Malta, while continuing to exercise self-restraint, believed that a Council pronouncement safeguarding Malta's right to exploit its offshore resources and enjoining the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to desist from threats was essential.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reaffirmed its commitment to conclude the exchange of instruments of ratification and submit the dispute to the Court. As evidence of that commitment, it cited the dispatch of two delegations to Malta, in March and July. However, it could not accept Malta's demand that the Libyan instrument be replaced by a text presented by the Maltese Foreign Ministry. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya believed that to continue bilateral negotiations would be better than to delay them by creating unnecessary obstacles. It hoped those negotiations would put the 1976 agreement into effect and lead to submission of the dispute to the Court.

FURTHER COMMUNICATIONS (SEPTEMBER-NOVEMBER). In a letter dated 15 September,<sup>(4)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a telegram to the Security Council President from the Secretary of the People's Committee of the Libyan People's Bureau for Foreign Liaison, stating that, on 4 January 1981, it had ratified the 1976 agreement by a resolution stating the Libyan Congresses' view that drilling in the disputed area would cease pending the Court's decision; the telegram added that Malta was solely responsible for making conditions that would delay the exchange of ratification instruments. Malta replied on 24 September<sup>(14)</sup> that the view of the Libyan Congresses had no place in the instrument of ratification.

On 2 November,<sup>(15)</sup> Malta stated that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had not provided a comprehensive reply to the Maltese position as stated to the Secretary-General's Special Representative on 24 September. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya responded on 11 November<sup>(5)</sup> that the issue was legal and procedural and should not have been submitted to the Security Council, since there was no threat to Malta or to regional security; it reiterated its desire to have recourse to the Court and said it had no aggressive intentions against Malta. Replying on 17 November,<sup>(16)</sup> Malta stated that it was still threatened with the use of force should it drill in its part of the continental shelf.

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE. In a letter of 8 December,<sup>(17)</sup> Malta said the report by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, submitted to the Security Council on 1 December, was a vindication of Malta's warning that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya would turn the mediation efforts into a means for procrastination; those efforts had failed because the Council's insistence on an agreed settlement had been interpreted by the Libyan side as unwillingness of the Council to act against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

In a note of 9 December,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that, since Malta had referred to the Special Representative's report, he was making it available as a Council document.

In the report, annexed to the Secretary-General's note, the Special Representative said the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had expressed readiness to meet with Malta at Valletta but Malta's position was that such a meeting should be held only if the Libyan Government notified its intention of modifying its ratification instrument. After summarizing the parties' positions, he concluded that the crux of the problem preventing them from concluding the formalities for submission of the matter to the Court was lack of agreement on the right of either party to drill in the disputed area pending a Court decision. It was no longer possible to overcome that specific problem on the basis of procedural arrangements, on which his latest efforts had focused.

The Special Representative therefore suggested that the parties, in order to settle the question of interim drilling, might consider requesting the Court, in conjunction with the submission of the delimitation case, to indicate, as a matter of priority, what Article 41 of the Court's Statute described as "any provisional measures which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party". By so doing, they would ensure that their legal positions would be consistently safeguarded until the dispute was resolved.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States

An incident on 19 August 1981 involving the shooting down of Libyan aircraft by the United States over the Gulf of Sidra (Surt) in the Mediterranean Sea, and other matters concerning relations between the two countries, were the subject of letters to the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council and to the Secretary-General.

Prior to that incident, by a letter to the Secretary-General dated 27 April,<sup>(3)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a letter from its head of State asserting that the establishment by the United States of so-called rapid deployment forces in the Middle East constituted a threat to international and regional peace and security. By a letter of 3 August to the Security Council President,<sup>(4)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a letter from the Secretary of the People's Committee of the Libyan People's Bureau for Foreign Liaison, charging the United States with a campaign aimed at aggression against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya through such means as a declaration of readiness to pay for military aid to its neighbours, escalation of military manoeuvres and of a media campaign to pave the way for aggression, and a reported plan to liquidate the Libyan leader.

The United States, -in a letter to the Council President dated 19 August,<sup>(9)</sup> said that United States aircraft participating in a routine peaceful naval exercise over international waters in the Mediterranean Sea had on that date been subjected to an unprovoked attack by Libyan aircraft and had shot down two of them. In a protest note to the Libyan Government, cited in the letter, the United States said the exercise had been announced in accordance with international practice; it expressed grave concern at the attack and declared that any further attacks would also be resisted with force if necessary.

In a letter to the Council President transmitted by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on 20 August,<sup>(5)</sup> the Libyan Secretary for Foreign Liaison said eight aircraft attached to the United States Sixth Fleet, participating in military manoeuvres in the Gulf of Surt (Sidra) within Libyan territorial waters, had intercepted two Libyan Air Force aircraft and shot down one of them while they were engaged in reconnaissance over Libyan territorial waters. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reserved the right to take all necessary measures to protect its rights to its territorial waters and airspace.

In a further letter transmitted on 25 August,<sup>(6)</sup> the Libyan Secretary said that a statement by the United States President on 20 August, admitting that he had ordered the Sixth Fleet to carry out provocative manoeuvres in Libyan waters and to fire on the Libyan aircraft, revealed that the aggression had been premeditated. On 6 October,<sup>(7)</sup> the Libyan Secretary sent a letter to the General Assembly President mentioning statements about the incident by groups of Arab, Islamic and non-aligned countries.

Also regarding the incident, Algeria, as Chairman of the Group of Arab States, transmitted to the Security Council President on 21 August<sup>(1)</sup> a declaration by which the Group condemned what it termed United States aggression and called on all international groups to stand fast against a challenge by a major Power which, as a permanent member of the Security Council, bore special responsibility to maintain international peace and security.

On 23 November,<sup>(8)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a letter in which its Secretary for Foreign Liaison denied news reports that it had equipped assassination squads to kill the United States President and other officials; he affirmed that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya did not believe in such terrorist measures, asserted that the allegations made it clear that the United States was plotting to invade his country, and offered to welcome a Security Council fact-finding mission to investigate the allegations.

On 7 December,<sup>(2)</sup> Ethiopia transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of 25 November from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, in his capacity as Chairman of an extraordinary session of the Political Committee under the Tripartite Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation between Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 15-17 November), annexing a joint statement in which the Committee condemned military manoeuvres and acts of intimidation by the United States and its collaborators in the region.

Radiation effects

UNSCEAR ACTIVITIES. The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation (UNSCEAR) held its thirtieth session at Vienna, Austria, from 6 to 10 July 1981. It discussed a number of scientific documents prepared by the United Nations Secretariat, containing supporting evidence for its next substantive report to the General Assembly, scheduled for 1982.

According to its 1981 report,<sup>(1)</sup> these documents reviewed information on physics and biology provided by United Nations Members and international organizations or published in scientific literature. In the field of physics, the discussions dealt with models for the assessment of radiation doses to humans, exposures resulting from peaceful nuclear-power production, exposures received through diagnostic or therapeutic radiology, exposures to radon and thoron and their decay products, and occupational exposures. Among biological topics considered were: models for tumour induction by radiation in man and experimental animals; short- and long-term non-tumorous consequences of partial-body exposure; the biological effects of radiation administered in combination with other physical, chemical or biological agents; and fatality rates of radiation-induced tumours. The Committee also reviewed and approved a document on the environmental behaviour and dosimetry of radionuclides, prepared by the Secretariat in response to a request by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 28 October,<sup>(2)</sup> adopted without vote, the General Assembly commended UNSCEAR for its 26-year contribution to an understanding of radiation effects, and requested it to continue its work, including co-ordination activities, to increase knowledge of the doses, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources. The Assembly endorsed the Committee's intention to continue its scientific review and assessment activity, requested UNEP to continue supporting the Committee's work and disseminating its findings, and endorsed its renewed request that Member States and organizations provide further data about doses, effects and risks from various radiation sources.

The resolution was approved by the Special Political Committee (SPC) on 14 October, also without vote, on the basis of a 29-nation draft. Introducing it, Poland remarked that international co-operation on atomic radiation could not progress without measures to limit and halt the arms race.

In the SPC discussion, Chile, Czechoslovakia, India, Poland, the USSR and Venezuela called for a halt to nuclear-weapon testing, particularly in the atmosphere. Australia, Fiji and New Zealand mentioned a resolution adopted by the heads of Governments participating in the South Pacific Forum (Vanuatu, 10 and 11 August) condemning such testing and the dumping or storage of nuclear wastes in the Pacific. New Zealand added that it was awaiting information requested from France on nuclear tests it had carried out on Mururoa Atoll (in the Tuamotu Archipelago, French Polynesia) and on their effects. France responded that the tests were carried out underground, far from population centres, and it published a safety report on each explosion and an annual report on the monitoring of radioactivity.

Argentina expressed concern that some countries benefiting from nuclear energy did not attach due importance to UNSCEAR studies. Austria and Greece favoured the establishment of world-wide standards for radiation protection. Greece also suggested that UNSCEAR study population exposure from natural radiation sources and from radio-isotopes arising from the nuclear fuel cycle. Sierra Leone would have liked the resolution to include a provision calling on interested parties to reduce the levels of radiation to which mankind was exposed.

Those delegations and others, including Japan, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, the United States and Uruguay, stressed the importance of the Scientific Committee's work and the need for States to co-operate with it, and said they looked forward to the substantive report it was to submit in 1982.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 35/12 of 3 November 1980, by which it, inter alia, requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations, resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on man and his environment,

We/coming the decision of the Scientific Committee to submit its report with scientific annexes to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past twenty-six years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation, and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the doses, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

4. Endorses the Scientific Committee's Intention to continue its activity of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

7. Endorses the Scientific Committee's renewed request that Member States and the United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned should provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help the Committee in the preparation of its next major report to the General Assembly.

Information

By two resolutions adopted on 16 December 1981 under the title "Questions relating to information", the General Assembly made a number of recommendations to strengthen the United Nations public information programme,<sup>(5)</sup> and called for governmental and private support to expand the International Programme for the Development of Communication—a project of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).<sup>(4)</sup> Both resolutions, prepared in a Working Group on information questions established on 19 October by SPC and open to all its members, were approved by SPC without vote on 3 December.

Most of the recommendations were based on proposals by the Assembly's Committee on Information. Following an organizational session on 3 and 4 March, the Committee held its third session at United Nations Headquarters from 27 April to 15 May, resuming on 30 May to adopt part of its report and on 26 August to consider 33 recommendations which it adopted by consensus.<sup>(1)</sup> In October, the Secretary-General reported<sup>(2)</sup> on action taken by the Department of Public Information to implement recommendations made by the Assembly in 1980.<sup>(3)</sup>

UN public information

The General Assembly's 1981 resolution on the public information programme of the United Nations<sup>(3)</sup> contained several recommendations about specific activities (p. 365), as well as an affirmation of support for the efforts of UNESCO to promote the establishment of a new world information and communication order (p. 371). By this resolution, the Assembly approved the recommendations of the Committee on Information,<sup>(1)</sup> reaffirmed the mandate it had given the Committee in 1979 with regard to public information and establishment of a new information and communication order,<sup>(2)</sup> and requested the Committee to avoid overlap with the activities of UNESCO and to seek the co-operation of United Nations organizations. It reiterated its appeal for wider dissemination of information about United Nations activities.

This resolution was adopted, by a recorded vote of 147 to 2, on the recommendation of SPC (p. 362).

UN public information programme

The General Assembly, by its December 1981 resolution on United Nations public information,<sup>(5)</sup> reiterated a 1980 recommendation<sup>(4)</sup> that additional resources for the Department of Public Information (DPI) should be commensurate with the increase in United Nations activities. It listed a number of priority areas for public information in the political, economic and social spheres, requested urgent steps to recruit more nationals from developing countries and asked for reports in 1982 from the Committee on Information and the Secretary-General.

Other recommendations in the resolution dealt with strengthening DPI language adaptation services (p. 366), regional units in its Radio and Visual Services Division (p. 367), United Nations radio and television programmes (p. 367), co-operation with news agencies (p. 368), United Nations information centres (p. 370) and the publication of Development Forum (p. 370).

The provisions on public information priority areas and geographical distribution of DPI staff, as well as on a number of other specific matters, were based on recommendations of the Committee on Information, contained in its 1981 report to the Assembly.<sup>(1)</sup> The Committee said the Assembly should welcome assurances that no additional appropriations would be sought to implement past recommendations on this subject. It suggested that DPI determine methodologies for evaluating the prevailing image of the United Nations as well as the effectiveness of the Department's channels for reaching public opinion.

In a report to the Assembly dated 2 October 1981<sup>(2)</sup> on implementation of its 1980 resolution on public information,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that there had been progress, though uneven, towards improved geographical balance in DPI. As at 30 June 1980, the proportion of Professional-level staff in DPI from the Group of 77 developing countries had risen from 21.2 per cent in 1976 to 28.1 per cent of the total, while among higher-level posts (P-5 and above) it had risen from 20.4 to 32.1 per cent.

During discussion of this topic in SPC, Bangladesh favoured the allocation of increased resources to DPI and the public information programme, Cyprus and Turkey said sufficient funds should be provided to cope with growing tasks, and the Congo. said the Department should receive priority in fund allocation. Liberia believed DPI would need additional resources to provide the services demanded of it, including technical co-operation with the third world. Venezuela expressed concern that those favouring zero budget growth were attempting to curtail public information activities.

In Czechoslovakia's view, the only way to achieve improvements within existing financial constraints was to use available resources more effectively and concentrate on key issues. Japan believed DPI must make the best use of the limited resources available. The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community (EC) members, said that, in view of budget limitations, new activities implied a contraction of other work. The United States favoured reorganizing the Department by reallocating resources in the interests of greater efficiency and higher quality products.

Concern about the projected cost of implementing the 1981 resolution—estimated by the Secretary-General at $912,600 for 1982-1983—was voiced by Canada, New Zealand and the United States when SPC was given the cost estimates in December. The United States explained its vote against the resolution in the Assembly by stating that the consensus achieved earlier on the provisions of the resolution had been dissipated by the decision of the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 14 December to approve the addition of this amount to the 1982-1983 budget.

With regard to geographical distribution of nationalities represented in DPI, the Byelorussian SSR said the Department's most serious shortcoming was the low proportion of staff members from developing countries and socialist States. Calls for better representation from their areas were also made by a large number of speakers from Africa, Asia and other socialist countries. However, the United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, felt that personnel matters should be considered in the Fifth Committee.

Canada endorsed the resolution's provision on geographical balance in DPI on the understanding that the requirement for qualified personnel would be borne in mind. Sweden said the principle of equitable geographical distribution applied to the Secretariat as a whole, not merely to individual departments.

As to information priorities, the Byelorussian SSR felt that efforts to avert nuclear war, curtail the arms race and promote détente should be publicized more widely. Poland said DPI should better reflect United Nations priorities. Romania considered that United Nations information activities could make an important contribution to mobilizing the political will of States. Benin and Ireland stressed the importance of presenting a balanced picture of the United Nations. Ireland added that this should include both its achievements and its debates on unresolved issues.

Jordan suggested that an expert group of the Committee on Information draw up an action programme in line with the goals of the new world information and communication order, defining a few well-studied projects that could be carried out with the help of a special voluntary fund.

The Philippines saw a need to refine the guidelines for measuring the success of information programmes. Brazil thought that information centres could help in the evaluation of DPI products by distributing questionnaires and gathering data on the type of material most requested by the public.

Strengthening language adaptation services

The General Assembly, by its December 1981 resolution on public information,<sup>(3)</sup> requested a more strenuous effort to ensure balance in the use of official languages in DPI publications and programmes and a strengthening of the unit which produced information material in Spanish for United Nations information centres. It asked for a report in 1982 to the Committee on Information.

In response to a 1980 request by the Assembly for better balance in the use of languages,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General stated in his October report on public information<sup>(1)</sup> that continuing efforts had been made to that end. The report mentioned a number of publications that had been or would be issued in up to 24 languages and the addition of a Russian-language writer/adaptor to the Adaptation Unit of the Press and Publications Division.

In the SPC discussion of information in October, Benin said the Adaptation Unit should not simply translate articles conceived and written in English but should be a real working unit in which the official United Nations languages had complete equality. Portugal hoped the Portuguese language would be used more widely in United Nations information. Spain, supported by Argentina and Cuba, urged the establishment of a unit to produce Spanish-language materials for information centres.

Regional units in the Radio and Visual Services Division

The General Assembly, by its December 1981 resolution on public information,<sup>(5)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to submit a plan for regionalizing the Radio and Visual Services Division of DPI. In regard to the Radio Service, which already had a regional structure, the Secretary-General was asked to establish a Caribbean Unit, expand the African Unit, consider enlarging the Arabic Unit and make proposals to enable the Asian Unit to undertake programming in additional languages. The Assembly also requested that a report be submitted in 1982 to the Committee on Information.

A report on regionalizing the Division, drafted by a consultant, was presented to the Committee on Information in April,<sup>(1)</sup> in response to a 1980 request by the Assembly.<sup>(4)</sup> It envisaged the establishment of Visual Service units covering films and television for Africa, Asia, Latin America/Iberia, the Middle East/Arabic and the Caribbean, and eventually for North America and Europe. However, it noted that each such unit would cost not less than $200,000-$250,000 a year. In his covering note, the Secretary-General said that in the Organization's difficult financial condition it would not be easy to justify treating DPI differently from other Secretariat departments subject to budgetary restraint.

Responding to another 1980 Assembly request, the Secretary-General estimated, in a note to the Committee,<sup>(2)</sup> that 14 new posts would be needed to strengthen the regional structure of the Radio Service, mainly by establishing a Caribbean Unit and expanding the African Unit. However, he reaffirmed his intention not to seek additional resources.

After considering these documents, the Committee on Information recommended in August<sup>(3)</sup> that a plan for regionalizing the Division should be set in motion urgently, through a redistribution of existing posts and the creation of a limited number of new ones when necessary. It also urged faster progress towards a more balanced linguistic output of the Division.

During the October debate on information in SPC, regionalization of the Radio and Visual Services Division was endorsed by Algeria, Benin, Cuba, Egypt, Jamaica, Liberia, Mongolia, Singapore, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and Venezuela, though Venezuela stressed the need to maintain a global perspective. Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago specifically urged the creation of a Caribbean Unit in the Radio Service. Bangladesh and Nepal asked that the Radio Service's Asian Unit produce programmes in their national languages, while Chile stressed the need for television programmes in Spanish. Sierra Leone urged expansion of the African Unit and said Portuguese language services should be strengthened. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania and the Syrian Arab Republic favoured a single unit for Arabic-language radio and television programmes, while the Sudan asked that more resources be provided to the Middle East Unit to bring it to the same level as other regional units. Singapore stressed that regionalization must be accompanied by recruitment of qualified persons from the regions to be served.

Brazil said a decision had to be taken on how best to reconcile the functions assigned to regional units with central planning and co-ordination. Japan regretted demands for further decentralization of DPI activities, stating that this would reduce the effectiveness and volume of its work. Yemen viewed the plan submitted to the Committee on Information as cumbersome and not likely to achieve regionalization.

UN radio and television programmes

Two means of improving the dissemination of United Nations radio and television programmes were under consideration in 1981—satellite transmission and short-wave broadcasting.

A consultant's report submitted to the Committee on Information in April<sup>(2)</sup> proposed that a daily 10-minute news programme produced by DPI be transmitted to developing countries by communication satellite during General Assembly sessions, as the first stage in a move to modernize the United Nations telecommunication system. A covering note reaffirmed the Secretary-General's intention not to seek additional appropriations.

The Committee asked in August for reports in 1982 on the cost-effectiveness of various means of transmission and on the possibility of the United Nations acquiring its own communication satellite.<sup>(3)</sup> It also suggested that, after surveying potential recipients' interest, DPI should prepare a weekly 10-minute newscast for satellite transmission during the 1982 regular session of the Assembly, to be followed in a second stage by a weekly broadcast in Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish for transmission to all Member States throughout the year.

The General Assembly did not deal with satellite broadcasting in its December 1981 resolution on public information; however, it authorized implementation of proposals presented to the Committee and endorsed by it for the expansion of United Nations short-wave broadcasts.<sup>(6)</sup> These proposals, as described in a note by the Secretary-General in April,<sup>(1)</sup> provided for a total of nine hours of daily broadcasts, five days a week, to various regions in Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Greek, Hebrew, Japanese, Portuguese, Russian, Somali, Spanish, Swahili and Turkish. No funds were appropriated for this purpose for 1982, pending a study of the full costs.

In his October report to the Assembly on public information,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General said that 22 radio stations all over the world made use of United Nations programmes produced for broadcast to southern Africa. Production of weekly television magazines in Spanish was to begin with the 1981 regular session of the Assembly. Studies on short-wave broadcasts over United Nations facilities and on United Nations frequency modulation broadcasts in the Headquarters area, called for by the Assembly in 1980,<sup>(5)</sup> would be submitted in 1982.

In the SPC discussion of information in October, Jordan suggested that Member States be asked to allocate on their radio and television stations half an hour every two weeks during Assembly sessions for material supplied by DPI. Increased short-wave broadcasting was endorsed by Algeria, Jamaica and Tunisia. Colombia suggested that existing communication satellites be used by the United Nations as the first step towards creating its own satellite system. The Congo and Zaire supported the idea of a United Nations communication satellite. Sri Lanka thought the Organization should make greater use of satellites and that its officials should appear on more radio and television programmes.

On the other hand, Austria felt that such major steps as the creation of a United Nations communication satellite system must not be undertaken lightly, while New Zealand said the Committee on Information should concentrate on co-ordination of information activities.

Co-operation with news agencies

Requesting that DPI continue to develop active links with a broad spectrum of international and regional news organisations so as to encourage more media coverage of the United Nations, the General Assembly, by its December 1981 resolution on public information,<sup>(5)</sup> asked that such co-operation be strengthened, in particular with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies as well as with regional and national news agencies of developing countries. DPI, it said, should be adequately equipped to supply information on the United Nations to those agencies, and should consider the possibility of receiving their dispatches.

This action had been recommended by the Committee on Information in its 1981 report to the Assembly.<sup>(2)</sup> An April note by the Secretary-General<sup>(1)</sup> described co-operative arrangements with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, Inter Press Service, the Pan African News Agency, broadcasting unions, other regional news agencies, and national news agencies and broadcasting organisations. Also, in his October report to the Assembly on public information,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that, in keeping with the Assembly's 1980 request,<sup>(4)</sup> whenever working space had been available to journalists at United Nations Headquarters, preference had been given to media representatives from developing countries.

During the October debate on information in SPC, Yugoslavia urged closer co-operation between the United Nations and the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, including United Nations use of the Pool's dispatches. Support for closer co-operation between DPI and news organizations was also expressed by Bangladesh, Egypt, India, Iraq, Trinidad and Tobago, and Turkey. The United States said it understood the provision in the resolution for co-operation with news agencies to encompass private as well as public organizations.

Pakistan urged greater efforts to provide adequate office space for journalists at Headquarters, particularly those representing smaller countries.

UN information centres

Noting the unique position of United Nations information centres because of their ability to co-operate directly with national news media in their areas, the General Assembly, in its December 1981 resolution on public information,<sup>(4)</sup> requested that steps be taken to strengthen the centres where needed. The Secretary-General was asked to present a study on ways of enhancing their role and increasing their functional flexibility. These provisions had been recommended by the Committee on Information in August.<sup>(1)</sup>

In a report to the Committee dated 2 April,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General presented a plan to enhance the effectiveness of the network of centres. This would be done through such means as improved guidance and support from United Nations Headquarters in languages other than English, better geographical balance in staffing, improved career prospects for locally recruited information assistants, and the provision of more funds and modern communication technology. In his October report to the Assembly on public information,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General announced the establishment in August of the sixty-first centre, at Dacca, Bangladesh, and said preparations for a centre at Salisbury, Zimbabwe, were in their final stages. Negotiations had begun for establishing a centre in Panama.

In SPC in October, Algeria, Bangladesh, Cuba, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Philippines urged a strengthening of the information centres, while Iraq called for better co-ordination of their activities. Czechoslovakia considered that the centres played a significant role but said the key to improving the United Nations image lay in the approach taken by mass media and Governments. Denmark, speaking for the Nordic States, said the study of the centres proposed by the Committee on Information should aim at measures to give them more independence and flexibility. Ireland thought it more important to expand the capabilities of existing centres than to create new ones. Endorsing the proposed study, Jamaica said more such studies were needed before the Committee could develop specific guidelines for DPI. Romania made the point that the centres should be better adapted to specific national and regional conditions.

Programme for journalists and broadcasters

Nineteen persons took part in the 1981 Programme for Journalists and Broadcasters from Developing Countries, held at United Nations Headquarters for eight weeks beginning 8 September. As part of the Programme, participants undertook in-service work assignments with the Secretariat, attended briefings on United Nations issues and covered events for their own media organizations. This was the first such programme held in response to a 1980 request by the General Assembly.<sup>(3)</sup> Information about it was communicated by the Secretary-General in a note dated 2 April to the Committee on Information<sup>(1)</sup> and in his October report on public information.<sup>(2)</sup>

Support for this programme was voiced in SPC in October by Algeria, Austria, Bangladesh, Egypt, Jamaica, Kenya, Singapore and Yugoslavia. Benin said more resources should be found for such training.

Other aspects of the public information work programme

The Committee on Information, in its 1981 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> recommended a strengthening of the Non-Governmental Organizations Section of the DPI External Relations Division, additional support for the World Newspaper Supplement on development and economic matters, and publicity for the 1981 observance of the twentieth anniversary of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (p. 356).

The Committee also examined a draft medium-term plan projecting the activities of DPI for 1984-1989. Following its discussion, the United Nations Secretariat was to redraft the text to reflect members' views and use it as a basis for proposing budgets during the period covered by the plan.

The World Newspaper Supplement was endorsed in the SPC discussion in October by Algeria, Bangladesh and Yugoslavia. The United States criticized it for having displayed partisanship on critical issues of the new international economic order, but Uganda defended its balance and impartiality.

Pakistan asked that DPI bear in mind the contributions of the mass media to development. Trinidad and Tobago urged that a special information effort be addressed to youth.

Co-ordination in the UN system

The General Assembly, by its December 1981 resolution on United Nations public information, recommended a strengthening of the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), the inter-agency body responsible for co-ordinating the public information activities of organizations in the United Nations system (p. 370). It also asked that long-term financial support by United Nations organizations continue to be sought for Development Forum, a periodical in newspaper format jointly financed by a number of them (p. 370).

JUNIC activities

JUNIC held its eighth regular session in Tokyo from 3 to 6 February 1981 and a special session at Geneva from 8 to 10 July.

According to the Secretary-General's October report to the General Assembly on United Nations public information,<sup>(3)</sup> as well as its own report submitted in April to the Committee on Information,<sup>(2)</sup> JUNIC was strengthening its role by moving from co-operative planning to joint action. It was completing a report for its parent body, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, on the image of the United Nations and the erosion of public support. It had prepared a study on communication in support of development and a plan of action for 1982-1983 setting out the information activities planned by United Nations organizations, including those pegged to special events.

One joint activity, the non-governmental liaison services at New York and Geneva, whose function was to advise non-governmental organizations interested in international economic issues, was described in an annex to the JUNC report. In August, the Committee on Information recommended that JUNC encourage that activity.<sup>(1)</sup>

JUNC also worked on plans for continued joint support for the publication of Development Forum and drew conclusions about the need to strengthen inter-agency co-ordination of public information activities (see below).

Proposed strengthening of JUNC

By its December 1981 resolution on United Nations public information,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly requested that JUNC, as the essential instrument for inter-agency co-ordination and co-operation in public information, should be strengthened and made more effective. Such strengthening had been recommended by the Committee on Information in August.<sup>(1)</sup>

A stronger and more responsible JUNC was also one of the main recommendations in a February report by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on co-ordination of public information activities in the United Nations system.<sup>(2)</sup> Prepared by Sreten Ilic, a member of JIU in 1980, the report concluded that the effectiveness of JUNC had been weakened by a lack of sufficient authority and that its funds and manpower were not being used rationally. The Inspector recommended that members be given authority to commit their organizations, that the JUNC programme and plan be submitted to the Economic and Social Council through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, that the heads of information services be required to attend its sessions and that its staff and budget be increased.

In the report on its eighth session,<sup>(3)</sup> JUNC pointed to the danger of duplication and overlapping of effort when different United Nations organizations aimed at the same audiences. It considered that its activities, particularly joint projects, should continue to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination.

 Resolution: <sup>(4)</sup>GA, 36/149 B, para. 7, 16 Dec. (p. 364).

Publication of Development Forum

In its December 1981 resolution on public information,<sup>(6)</sup> the General Assembly reaffirmed that the continued publication of the periodical Development Forum<sup>(1)</sup> as an inter-agency project was essential. It requested the Secretary-General to continue seeking financial support for the publication from United Nations organizations and to report to the Committee on Information in 1982.

In its February report on co-ordination of public information activities in the United Nations system,<sup>(3)</sup> JIU recommended that this publication, founded in 1973, should be the only system-wide periodical in the field of economic and social development and should be financed from obligatory contributions by participating organizations. A table in the report indicated that Development Forum expected income of $1,691,800 in 1981, of which $900,000 would be derived from subscriptions and the rest from 14 different sources within the United Nations system, including $200,000 from the United Nations, as well as the African and Asian Development Banks.

In a note to the Committee on Information issued in April as an addendum to its report,<sup>(4)</sup> JUNC said that a renewed expression by the Committee of long-term financial support was essential. The Committee, in its 1981 report to the Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> recommended that the Secretary-General secure the financial basis for continuation of Development Forum through the United Nations regular budget, that other United Nations organizations should contribute on a long-term basis and that efforts to secure voluntary contributions should continue. It suggested that the feasibility of locating the editorial offices in a developing country should be investigated.

In October, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), noting the support given to Development Forum by the Committee on Information, requested that the heads of United Nations organizations in a position to support the publication should reiterate their intention to continue their support beyond 1983.<sup>(7)</sup>

A $400,000 subvention to Development Forum, proposed by the Secretary-General,<sup>(5)</sup> was included in the United Nations budget for 1982-1983 as the result of a decision, taken without vote, by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 1 December 1981. The United States said it would have opposed the addition on budgetary grounds, if there had been a vote.

United Nations budgetary support for Development Forum was endorsed in the Special Political Committee in October by Bangladesh, Denmark (speaking for the Nordic countries) and Zaire. The Lao People's Democratic Republic hoped the publication would present more information about the least developed countries. The USSR said publications such as Development Forum tended to omit mention of the development achievements of socialist countries and those newly independent States that had opted for the non-capitalist road.

Costs of public information

The 1981 JIU report on co-ordination of public information<sup>(1)</sup> cited figures prepared by the Secretary-General showing that some $52 million had been spent by the United Nations system for public information in 1979, $37 million of it by the United Nations. JIU recommended that, to give States a full picture, a standardized form be worked out for presenting such expenditures, that the Secretary-General regularly submit estimates of expenditures to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), that ACC explore ways of pooling resources, and that public information programmes and budgets of a joint character be submitted to CPC for its guidance.

Establishment of a new information and communication order

By its December 1981 resolution on United Nations public information,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly affirmed strong support for the efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to promote the establishment of a new world information and communication order. In the preamble, the Assembly said such an order should be based on free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing the diversity of information sources and free access to information, and the urgent need to change the dependent status of the developing countries in the information and communication fields.

The Assembly's Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States,<sup>(4)</sup> adopted on 9 December, included among the rights comprising non-intervention the right of States and peoples to free access to information and to develop fully, without interference, their system of information and mass media and to use their information media to promote their interests and aspirations. Also encompassed by the non-intervention principle, according to the Declaration, was the right and duty of States to combat, within their constitutional prerogatives, the dissemination of false or distorted news which could be interpreted as interference in the internal affairs of other States or as harmful to the promotion of peace, co-operation and friendly relations among nations.

Speaking in the First Committee when it approved this Declaration, the United States objected that this provision contradicted the article in the Assembly's 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights<sup>(3)</sup> affirming the right to receive and impart information across frontiers. Greece said it could not subscribe to a paragraph that appeared to limit the right to information and Finland said it would have voted against the paragraph if it had been voted on separately.

The need for everyone to collaborate in the establishment of a new world information and communication order was cited by the Committee on Information in its 1981 report.<sup>(1)</sup> The Committee recommended that the Joint United Nations Information Committee take into account several practical steps to that end which the inter-agency body had listed in its report on its February session:<sup>(2)</sup> strengthening the information and communication capabilities of developing countries and their capacity to communicate among themselves; improving the dissemination of information on development issues between developed and developing countries; and promoting improved understanding of the developing countries and a global perception of common world problems on the part of the public in industrialized countries.

Much of the October debate on information in the Special Political Committee (SPC) centred on the concept of a new world order and on the importance of freedom of information under that order. Benin expressed the view that those who urged respect for such freedom without first seeking to identify and correct the serious injustices and inequalities in the existing system were putting the cart before the horse. The Congo saw the concentration of the media in the hands of a minority as a threat to freedom of information. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said freedom of information entailed the obligation to respect the sovereignty and independence of States without tampering with their social and cultural heritage.

The Niger and the Philippines disagreed with the perception that a new order would threaten freedom of information. Tunisia saw no contradiction between this freedom and the need for wider and better balanced dissemination.

Canada considered that the role of Governments in eliminating the imbalance in information must be confined to developing the means to promote a free flow of information; it must not extend to the content of information. Denmark, speaking for the Nordic States, recognized the need for a new order aimed at redressing imbalances in communication while safeguarding freedom of the press, freedom of speech, and the freedom to gather, receive and impart information. Ireland said the choice by information media of what to publish would be enhanced if they had a variety of independent sources. Portugal advocated a system that would enable more individuals to obtain a maximum of information from different independent sources. Turkey said the process of creating a new order should be based on consensus rather than confrontation.

New Zealand said it could not support any move that would limit the freedom of the media to report on events in their own country and the world. Speaking for the European Community (EC) members, the United Kingdom said the imbalance in communication resources should be corrected without diminishing basic human rights, which could best be defended by ensuring a well-informed and critical audience. The United States said the way to resolve the concerns of developing countries over imbalances in the flow of information was not to silence voices or restrict access to the means of communication but to encourage diversity of opinion; it understood the resolution as in no way limiting the freedom of information media to report events or imposing inappropriate codes of conduct on journalists. Spain favoured a liberal information system whereby the individual could choose for himself. Austria, Chile and Japan were also among those which stressed the need to maintain freedom of information.

A number of speakers were critical of the type of information being disseminated about developing countries. Democratic Yemen said the monopoly of Western news agencies, which transmitted false news about the life and future of nations, must be eliminated. Ethiopia charged transnational news agencies with giving distorted images of developing countries, ignoring their development efforts and over-emphasizing negative news; a similar point was made by Guyana, Liberia, Nepal, Qatar and Uganda. Madagascar thought it strange that attempts were made to reduce the problem of a new order to freedom of information, since the dissatisfaction with the present order was caused by bias and insufficient coverage of third-world problems and aspirations. The Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Syrian Arab Republic also complained of domination by the West in the flow of information and of the distorted news supplied.

Sri Lanka warned that the distortions and malice which sometimes characterized the flow of information between North and South might provoke Governments to take actions which they would not have taken if the information had been more balanced. Yugoslavia saw a need to "decolonize" information so that developing countries would not have to depend on prejudiced news.

Several speakers emphasized the need for information to respect the political and cultural independence of audiences in developing countries. Argentina said the establishment of a balanced flow of information, adapted to freedom of expression and respectful of the sovereignty and cultural independence of peoples, should be a mandatory international norm. Everyone favoured freedom of information, said Guinea, provided that it did not dull the awareness of peoples seeking cultural, social and political identity. Mauritania favoured the dissemination of information relevant to the majority in developing countries rather than that which expressed the needs of minority groups in urban areas who had often assimilated alien values.

Peru considered that, rather than imposing censorship on the pretext that the existing system was based on an information monopoly and failed to reflect third-world aspirations, countries should strengthen their infrastructures and formulate their own information policies.

Brazil, Cyprus and Venezuela were among a number of countries which observed that a new information and communication order was inseparable from the establishment of a new international economic order. Mexico viewed the right to information as an aspect of the principle of self-determination of peoples. Trinidad and Tobago criticized the view of information as merchandise, which deliberately ignored the fact that "inform" meant "educate" in the sense of intellectual and moral training.

Several speakers commented on the responsibility of information media. Observing that terrorist acts throughout the world had increased as publicity about them intensified, Colombia said the future of free information depended on how clearly the line could be drawn between the informative and the sensational. Egypt said information media had a vital role to play, not only in analysing international situations but also in reducing tension and checking the deterioration in international relations. Romania said the media should help arrest the deterioration in the international political climate, highlight the dangers of the arms race, illustrate the abnormal gap between developed and developing countries and bear in mind the need to eliminate colonialism and racial discrimination.

In Bulgaria's view, information should neither impinge on the sovereign rights of countries nor violate approved principles of international relations; the concept of the free flow of information without qualification was unacceptable. The German Democratic Republic favoured the establishment of international legal norms to eliminate the risk of misusing information against peoples and to point to possibilities of exploiting information for international peace and understanding. The USSR thought the United Nations should urge the communication media and States to ensure that information was used to further peace and security, combat colonialism and apartheid, contribute to mutual assistance and encourage confidence.

Other countries also spoke of the role of information in international relations. In the view of Bangladesh, the international climate depended in large part on the content of information disseminated. Qatar urged States to emulate the machinery set up by the Gulf Arab countries to co-ordinate information policies and promote friendly relations. Zaire said it was time to broaden and diversify the information flow from South to North, so as to strengthen peace and understanding.

The technological gap in communications between developed and developing countries was a recurrent theme in many statements. Pakistan wondered how developing countries could discharge their obligation to disseminate knowledge with no broadcast transmitters, ill-equipped studios and obsolete printing presses. Algeria called on developed countries to provide sustained assistance to help developing countries install comprehensive national communication systems, while China saw the developed countries as duty-bound to help developing countries with capital, technology and equipment; but both added that developing countries should rely mainly on one another. Senegal saw technology as heightening differences between States in such a way that those with the most advanced media controlled the flow of information. Observing that most developing countries shared the West's belief in freedom of information, Singapore said it was in the interest of Western countries to help the developing countries which upheld that principle to develop their communication structures and train media personnel. Yemen felt that the establishment of the new order was necessary to eliminate the dependence of developing countries in the field of communication.

Austria considered that the share of developing countries in the production and transmission of news could be adjusted through increased co-operation, technology transfer and training of personnel. Japan argued that the disparity between developed and developing countries must be redressed not by imposing controls on the flow of information but by gradually enhancing the capacity of developing countries to disseminate information. The EC nations, said the United Kingdom, were ready to consider practical steps to correct the imbalance. The USSR said it had long been assisting developing countries in the installation and maintenance of communication facilities and by training some 1,000 specialists; such aid was not tied to political conditions. Australia, Malaysia and New Zealand also cited assistance they had given to develop communications in the Pacific and elsewhere.

Iraq said the great Powers used the media in their spheres of influence; such information was not objective and there was imbalance between developing and developed countries. Czechoslovakia saw the information imbalance as caused by the fact that the major Western news agencies supplied 80 per cent of the information circulated daily in the non-socialist world; until the developing countries created their own information networks, free circulation of information would be a myth. Poland said it agreed with the criticism that some Western news agencies were trying to impose their political beliefs and thought patterns on developing countries.

Criticism of certain national information activities was voiced in the debate. The Byelorussian SSR said the United States-financed radio broadcasts by the Voice of America, Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty aimed at interfering in the affairs of other States and slandering the socialist countries and national liberation movements. A similar point was made by Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and Mongolia. The Ukrainian SSR condemned the use of information media to increase international tension. Viet Nam criticized the Voice of Free Asia for broadcasting slander against the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Viet Nam and the legitimate Government of Kampuchea. Cuba said it was only to be expected that a country such as the United States would resort to measures such as the imminent installation of a radio transmitter for the ideological penetration and destabilization of Cuba.

Implementation of the UNESCO Programme for communication

By a resolution adopted without vote on 16 December 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly called on United Nations Member States, organizations and enterprises to support an expansion of resources of the International Programme for the Development of Communication, established by UNESCO in 1980.<sup>(4)</sup> It invited 1 Member States to work within organizations to which they belonged to secure satisfactory implementation of the Programme by allocating additional resources. It also invited the Director-General of UNESCO to report in 1982 on the Programme and on efforts to establish a new world information and communication order.

The initial stages of the Programme were described in a progress report by the Director-General, transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General in a note of 28 September.<sup>(2)</sup> The report noted that the Programme had been established with the approval of the UNESCO General Conference in 1980 and that its 35-member Intergovernmental Council, elected by the Conference, had held its first session in Paris from 15 to 22 June 1981. By a resolution of 22 June, the Council had decided to launch the Programme in 1982 with a few well-studied projects, to be examined at a subsequent session. During the first phase, priority would be given to regional and subregional communication development. In addition, the Council had defined main areas for research, beginning with a questionnaire to identify the needs of States.

Initial resources would be provided by financial contributions to the Programme. India, Iraq, Mexico and the Netherlands had announced the amounts of their contributions, while France, Nigeria, Norway, Venezuela and Yugoslavia had declared their intention of contributing later. The Council had decided that the appropriate financing system would be established in the light of studies.

In his October report to the Assembly on United Nations public information,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General said he would continue to support and encourage UNESCO and the Programme. He noted that the United Nations had been represented at the Intergovernmental Council's June session and would be at its following session (Acapulco, Mexico, January 1982).

A UNESCO representative told SPC in October that his organization was continuing its regular activities in the field of communication, helping countries to plan, set priorities and train personnel (p. 1414).

In the SPC debate, most speakers supported the new Programme as a means of enabling developing countries to set up their own communication facilities and helping establish a new information order. Canada said the Programme's success would depend on whether it avoided ideological confrontation. Denmark stated that the Nordic countries would consider supporting feasible communication projects under the Programme. Indonesia was among several countries which expressed hope that the Programme would be adequately funded. The Philippines favoured a fellowship programme for journalists from developing countries.

Many representatives stressed the need to promote co-operation and avoid duplication between the work of the United Nations and that of UNESCO.

The Byelorussian SSR said UNESCO was under attack by those who sought to preserve a policy of information imperialism, pursued under the slogan of "free information". Benin viewed the criticism of UNESCO as part of a conspiracy by transnational press agencies, while Cuba saw it as blackmail and sabotage by the United States and its allies. The Ukrainian SSR said the United States had threatened to cut off its contribution to the UNESCO budget and the Syrian Arab Republic regretted that certain industrialized Western countries were withdrawing their support for efforts to establish a new information and communication order. Yugoslavia cited a decision by the Intergovernmental Council of Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries to defend UNESCO from incorrect and sometimes malicious interpretations of its activities.

The United States said its House of Representatives had adopted in July a provision that would restrict United States payments to UNESCO should that body adopt any resolution to restrict journalists or inhibit the free flow of information.

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development and international economic and social policy

The discouraging world economic situation—sluggish growth, accelerating inflation, world trade slow-down, worsening current-account balances and higher energy prices—continued to occupy a major part of the attention of United Nations bodies during 1981.

Little progress was recorded towards the launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, originally scheduled to commence in 1980 (p. 378). Accordingly, the General Assembly decided to leave the item open to allow informal consultations to continue on the form the negotiations should take. Technical work was under way to promote greater economic co-operation among developing countries, including preliminary consideration of a global system of trade preferences among them (p. 382).

The special concern the Organization had shown for more than two decades for the poorest of the world's poor was further demonstrated at the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (Paris, 1-14 September 1981).<sup>(3)</sup> The Conference adopted the second phase—the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s—of the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for these countries, inaugurated in 1979 by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). The Substantial New Programme was designed to transform the economies of these countries and enable them to achieve internationally accepted minimum standards of nutrition, health, housing and education as well as job opportunities for all, particularly the rural and urban poor. In December, the General Assembly endorsed the Programme, called for its implementation and arranged for its mid-term review in 1985.<sup>(15)</sup> Earlier, the Economic and Social Council appealed for substantial aid to these countries,<sup>(8)</sup> added Guinea-Bissau to the United Nations list of the least developed countries<sup>(6)</sup> and decided to review Togo's economic situation for its possible inclusion in the list.<sup>(9)</sup>

The Assembly also appealed again to donor nations to assist the land-locked developing countries build their transport and transit facilities<sup>(13)</sup>

and made a further request for contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, managed by the United Nations Development Programme.<sup>(16)</sup>

Reiterating the need to strengthen economic co-operation for development within the United Nations system, the Economic and Social Council called for the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, adopted by the Assembly in 1980,<sup>(12)</sup> to be applied in the work programmes of United Nations organizations.<sup>(11)</sup>

The first of a new series of annual reports on the world economic situation—the Trade and Development Report, 1981—was issued by UNCTAD.<sup>(2)</sup> Another report, the World Economic Survey 1980-1981,<sup>(1)</sup> was a background document for the annual discussion in the Economic and Social Council on international economic and social policy, with special emphasis on current trends (p. 384). A third assessment of current trends and prospects for the 1980s was prepared by the Committee for Development Planning, a standing body of experts appointed by the Council.<sup>(4)</sup> The Council also considered a preliminary draft of a report on long-term trends, offering a socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000 (p. 388).

Several broad areas of economic and social development were the object of special United Nations studies. Following preliminary action by the Council in July<sup>(10)</sup> the General Assembly called in December<sup>(14)</sup> for implementation of a new United Nations work programme to study the interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development. The Council also requested high priority for United Nations studies on the role of the public sector in economic development.<sup>(7)</sup> Reports were submitted on a unified approach to development analysis and planning, combining economic and social elements (p. 395). The Council called on Governments to give special attention to increasing the social impact of rural development policies,<sup>(5)</sup> and arranged for the continued submission, every four years, of reports on agrarian reform and rural development (p. 399). The Assembly decided to continue a computerized Development Information System operated by the Information Systems Unit of the United Nations Secretariat's Department of International Economic and Social Affairs.<sup>(17)</sup>

The improvement of development planning (p. 396) and public administration (p. 398) in developing countries continued to be a focus of technical co-operation activities.

Among other broad aspects of development under consideration in 1981 were development finance (p. 558), social development (p. 761), and the relationships between disarmament and development (p. 96) and development and human rights (p. 973).

Economic co-operation

Proposed global negotiations

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION. As it had decided in 1980,<sup>(11)</sup> the General Assembly resumed its thirty-fifth session on 15 January 1981 to consider four agenda items, among them the launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development. On the same day, the Assembly agreed to an oral proposal by its President that he pursue consultations on the subject and report on their outcome at a later date.

At the final meeting of the thirty-fifth session, on 14 September 1981, the President outlined work done since October 1980, when an informal consultative group had been established under his chairmanship to seek general agreement on launching the negotiations.<sup>(14)</sup> That group had achieved substantial progress by December 1980, the President said, and he felt that it had been close to agreement. He had set out the results in an informal text of 14 December that dealt with both procedures and agenda for the negotiations.

A wide measure of agreement had been reached, the President stated, on a four-stage general framework for the negotiations: (1) the central conference would establish objectives and provide guidance with respect to the agenda items; (2) the items would be sent to an existing specialized forum in the United Nations system—commodities to UNCTAD, for example—or to an ad hoc group when no such forum existed, as in the case of energy questions; (3) the outcome of the second phase would be considered by the central conference, which would be responsible for assembling a package for approval by all Member States; and (4) the agreements would be implemented. However, there was disagreement in regard to the third stage, and specifically as to whether the conference should be able to change conclusions reached in a specialized forum such as the International Monetary Fund, whose procedures and voting structures were more restricted than those of the General Assembly.

Regarding the agenda, the President said that there were still differences over two areas—energy, and money and finance. The major issue concerning energy was whether predictability of supplies and petroleum pricing should be listed as distinct sub-items. Concerning money and finance, the major question was how to set out the functioning and reform of the international monetary and financial system in all its aspects.

He informed the Assembly that, following an economic summit meeting of Western industrial nations (Ottawa, Canada, 19-21 July), the United States had told him that the matter of global negotiations should not be pursued until the Assembly's regular 1981 session. In the conviction that full participation in efforts to launch the negotiations was vital, the President proposed—and the Assembly decided without vote on 14 September—to include the item in the draft agenda of its thirty-sixth (1981) session.<sup>(12)</sup>

Speaking after the decision, Canada and China expressed regret that no agreement had been reached on procedures and agenda. However, these States—together with the United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community (EC) members—generally felt that there had been a narrowing of differences. Japan urged all countries to recognize the serious economic and political impact that might result from failure to engage in constructive North-South dialogue and to adopt a more positive and constructive attitude towards the negotiations. Norway, on behalf of the Nordic countries, said they were ready to accept the texts as they stood and hoped all States would join in a consensus. The United States reiterated its view that consideration of the negotiations should be deferred until after the International Meeting on Co-operation and Development—a conference of 22 heads of State or Government at Cancún, Mexico, on 22 and 23 October, focusing on North-South relationships.

Venezuela expressed the disappointment of the Group of 77 developing countries that negotiations had not formally commenced. Jordan, on behalf of the Group of Arab States, termed the progress meagre.

The readiness of the industrialized States members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) to conduct international consultations and co-operation with developing countries was affirmed in a communiqué issued by an OECD ministerial meeting on 16 and 17 June; the communiqué, forwarded by a 13 July letter from Belgium,<sup>(3)</sup> also reviewed member countries' economic prospects and policies, trade problems, the energy situation and trade relations with developing countries.

A 30 September letter from Venezuela<sup>(5)</sup> attached the Declaration of the fifth annual meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 (New York, 28 and 29 September), in which the Group expressed regret that a few developed countries lacked the political will to undertake without delay measures to achieve equitable solutions to the world economic crisis and voiced concern that the launching of the negotiations continued to be jeopardized mainly by one country.

The outcome of the Cancun summit conference was conveyed in a summary by its co-Chairmen, transmitted by a 26 October letter from Canada and Mexico.<sup>(4)</sup> With regard to global negotiations, the summary said the participants had confirmed the desirability of supporting a consensus to launch them on a basis to be mutually agreed and in circumstances offering the prospect of meaningful progress; some countries had insisted that the competence of the specialized agencies should not be affected.

The General Assembly resumed consideration of the subject on 4 and 5 November, hearing delegations reiterate their views on the substance and format of the projected negotiations.

Several States pointed to recent international high-level meetings, particularly the Cancún conference and a meeting of Commonwealth heads of Government (Melbourne, Australia, 30 September-7 October),<sup>(2)</sup> as reason for optimism for the launching of the negotiations, although it was recognized that there had been differences of approach.

For Japan, a highlight of Cancún was that agreement had been reached to continue preparatory negotiations for the global round in New York. Australia suggested that progress in the preparatory process might be made through a contact group open to all countries, meeting concurrently with the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, that might capture the spirit of the Cancún and Melbourne meetings—a free-flowing exchange of views between developed and developing countries. The United Kingdom said EC members felt that concentration on substance could help in the search for practical solutions; the General Assembly had a central role to play but the competence of the specialized agencies should be respected. Regarding the respective roles of specialized bodies and the overview mechanism, Finland and Sweden thought it over-zealous to try to establish, before the substantive negotiations began, what to do with their results.

Norway said it was important that further efforts at agreement be based on common positions already established and that preparations be finalized so the negotiations could start at the beginning of 1982. Austria felt it essential to arrive at a consensus on basic elements and not become bogged down in a futile search for detailed and specific guidelines for every stage of the negotiations. Canada urged States to consider the damage that would be done to the credibility of the United Nations if the projected undertaking could not be successfully concluded.

The United States cited its leading role in assistance to and trade with developing countries, and stressed five objectives for development: feeding hungry people, enabling all countries to strengthen and diversify their economies through an open world trading system, integrating developing countries more fully into that system, achieving economic growth through trade and commercial capital flows that responded to market-place incentives, and solving the energy problem through higher production and more efficient use.

Algeria, on behalf of the Group of 77, restated the Group's view that: there was a fundamental need for a world dialogue open to all countries, based on democratic decisions and institutions; the General Assembly was the central body for decision-making, direction, the provision of impetus and co-ordination at all stages of negotiation; essential questions of reconstructing the world economy and reshaping international economic institutions could not be removed from the agenda; and the major issues identified by the Assembly when it decided in 1979 to launch the negotiations<sup>(8)</sup> should be considered with equal care and with regard for their inter-relationship.

China said that an orderly restructuring of international economic relations through dialogue was in the common interest of most nations and would contribute to peace and security. The Philippines remarked that no one was calling for the overthrow of the current system or the destruction of existing economic and financial institutions; the task was to make adjustments in the existing order to meet urgent needs of the times.

Poland, on behalf of the Eastern European States and Mongolia, reiterated their support in principle for the negotiations and the broad outline of the agenda and said they had been willing to participate in the consensus on procedure, but remarked that the unwillingness of certain imperialist circles to give up their positions and their desire to keep the developing countries in a state of dependence hardly gave reason for optimism.

On 9 December, in a resolution on the strengthening of international security<sup>(9)</sup> the Assembly urged States to proceed without delay to a global consideration of ways and means to revive the world economy and restructure international economic relations within the framework of global negotiations.

Following several weeks of inconclusive informal consultations, the Assembly agreed on 18 December, on an oral proposal by its President, that the item should be left open in order to allow the consultations to continue, on the understanding that the Assembly would reconvene at short notice to consider any agreement that might emerge. Accordingly, the topic was included in the list of seven items which the Assembly decided to consider when it resumed its thirty-sixth session in 1982.<sup>(13)</sup>

Algeria (for the Group of 77), China and the USSR, the last named on behalf of the Eastern European States and Mongolia, expressed regret that, because of one delegation, agreement had not been reached. The United Kingdom restated the EC members' aim to launch the negotiations on a basis acceptable to all and promising genuine progress.

OTHER ACTION. The first regular 1981 session of the inter-agency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (Geneva, 13 and 14 April) was attended by the General Assembly President, who informed it of efforts to launch the global negotiations. The Committee expressed appreciation to the President for his efforts<sup>(10)</sup> and, in its annual overview report,<sup>(6)</sup> issued in May, stated its concern that there had been no agreement on the matter.

The Joint Meetings of ACC and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) (Geneva, 29 June-1 July)<sup>(7)</sup> reaffirmed the contribution that adequately prepared global negotiations could make to implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see below) and the need to launch them as soon as possible.

The Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), meeting at Rome, Italy, from 7 to 25 November, offered that organization's assistance in the global negotiations with regard to food production, food aid, food security and related matters; the Conference's position was conveyed in a letter of 8 December from the FAO Director-General, annexed to a 16 December note by the Secretary-General.<sup>(1)</sup>

Launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development

At its 114th plenary meeting, on 14 September 1981, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development" and to transmit to that session all relevant documentation from the eleventh special session and the thirty-fifth session of the Assembly.

Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade

During the year following the adoption by the General Assembly in December 1980 of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,<sup>(6)</sup> which began on 1 January 1981, the Economic and Social Council and other United Nations bodies took steps to ensure that the goals and objectives of the Strategy were incorporated into their work plans.

On 20 March 1981, the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD decided to inscribe on the agenda for its September/October session an item on arrangements for review and appraisal of the Strategy's implementation.<sup>(7)</sup> On 7 October, the Board decided, after informal consultations, to defer consideration to a future session.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Committee for Development Planning (CDP), in the report on its 1981 session (New York, 23 March-1 April),<sup>(3)</sup> stated that in future it would study particular aspects of the world economic situation and prospects as well as critical development problems hampering implementation of the Strategy.

In their 1981 report to the Council,<sup>(2)</sup> the CPC/ACC Joint Meetings (Geneva, 29 June-1 July) viewed the Strategy as the policy framework for planning and programming in the United Nations system, reaffirmed the international community's commitment to its implementation and stressed the need to mobilize resources. The report also summarized the Meetings' discussion on five issues suggested by ACC relating to implementation of the Strategy:<sup>(1)</sup> growth, employment, protectionism and structural adjustment; energy, money and finance; food; development of infrastructures; and social development. After acknowledging a divergence of opinion on some questions, the report said there was broad understanding and consensus on most fundamentals.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution<sup>(5)</sup> calling on the United Nations system to apply the International Development Strategy as a policy framework in formulating and implementing work programmes and medium-term plans. The Council reiterated the need to strengthen international economic co-operation for development within the system, with the General Assembly in the central role. It urged ACC to continue to assess the world economic situation and prospects, and requested the Secretary-General to continue bringing to the Council's and the Assembly's attention the results of those assessments. In addition, CDP was requested to carry out future work related to the Strategy's implementation, as envisaged by CDP in its 1981 report.

The draft, introduced by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77, was adopted without vote as revised by the sponsors after informal consultations. Following its adoption, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States said the reservations they had expressed at the time the Strategy was adopted<sup>(8)</sup> still stood. The USSR said any action taken by United Nations bodies in implementing the Strategy should not be limited to reorganization of their work nor imply extra expenditure; it added that other Assembly decisions for the restructuring of economic relations should be taken together with the Strategy as a guide for United Nations bodies.

Prospects for attaining the Strategy's targets were also addressed in a preliminary draft perspective of the development of the world economy to the year 2000, prepared by the Secretary-General (p. 389).

Taking note also of the World Economic Survey 1980-1981, the report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives on its eighth session, the conclusions of the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and the report of the Committee for Development Planning on its seventeenth session,

ACC Task Force on

Long-Term Development Objectives

The ACC Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives met at Geneva from 16 to 18 March 1981 and reported to ACC<sup>(1)</sup> that it had made a collective review of the world economic situation and prospects and reviewed critical international policy issues in the context of the International Development Strategy<sup>(2)</sup> (p. 388). After receiving this report, ACC expressed the view on 14 April that it should receive wide publicity.<sup>(3)</sup>

On the same date ACC adopted new terms of reference for the Task Force<sup>(4)</sup> which include a Cuba focus on implementation and review and appraisal of the Strategy, as well as assisting and advising ACC to provide technical support and analytical contributions for intergovernmental bodies on development objectives and targets. It was also to serve as an inter-agency mechanism for considering emerging development issues and questions arising from General Assembly resolutions.

Implementation of the 1974 Charter #### of Economic Rights and Duties of States

During debate in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on development and international economic co-operation at the 1981 regular session of the General Assembly, several delegations referred to the need to implement the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, adopted by the Assembly in 1974.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Byelorussian SSR said that achievement of the goals of the Charter and the International Development Strategy<sup>(2)</sup> depended largely on how consistently and firmly the developing countries struggled against neo-colonialism, defended their sovereignty over their natural resources and controlled the transnational corporations operating in their territory. The German Democratic Republic, warning against attempts by imperialist forces to oppose implementation of the Charter, said that advocacy of the so-called free market system should be seen as a device to replace a democratic restructuring of international economic relations by the unbridled activities of private capital. Hungary urged compliance with the Charter and Mongolia expressed the view that the conditions for attaining the goals of the Strategy could be created only through application of the Charter.

Poland and the USSR said they observed the Charter in their relations with other States, including developing countries; the USSR added that the deterioration of the international situation was due to the proliferation of acts of aggression by imperialists, running counter to the Charter. The Ukrainian SSR stated that implementation of the Charter had been delayed by the obstinacy of some Western States which sought to maintain their privileged economic positions and to use economic relations for blackmail and discrimination.

The Congo described the Charter as an important document in the strategy to establish a new international economic and political order. Cuba and Viet Nam urged periodic evaluation of progress in implementing it, while Zaire said the Secretary-General should report regularly on the matter.

On 17 December the General Assembly, on the Second Committee's recommendation, decided without vote<sup>(3)</sup> to include a sub-item on the Charter in the provisional agenda of its 1982 regular session, under the item on development and international economic co-operation. This decision, orally proposed by the Second Committee Chairman, was similarly approved by the Committee on 10 December after he announced that several delegations had requested that the topic be resubmitted in 1982.

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Development and international economic co-operation", a sub-item entitled "Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States".

Economic co-operation

among developing countries

to promote measures of economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC). These activities complemented programmes of technical co-operation among developing countries pursued by the United Nations Development Programme and others (p. 462).

The Committee for Development Planning (CDP), at its 1981 session (New York, 23 March-1 April), devoted a chapter of its report<sup>(3)</sup> to South-South economic co-operation. It noted the slow growth and increasingly inward-looking policies of many developed countries, and urged that ECDC be vigorously initiated. The Committee felt that short- and medium-term progress could be achieved by co-operation in finance, energy, food and rural development, technology, trade, industrial development and infrastructure. It favoured such measures as the establishment of a third world development bank, soft loans by oil-exporting countries that would enable oil importers to meet higher petroleum prices, investment by capital-surplus developing countries in rural development programmes of other third world countries, and promotion of South-South trade through tariff and other preferences.

A High Level Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, convened by the Group of 77 at Caracas, Venezuela, from 13 to 19 May, adopted a programme of action specifying co-operative activities in trade, technology, food and agriculture, energy, raw materials, finance, industrialization and technical co-operation, and proposing mechanisms for co-ordination, monitoring, follow-up actions and evaluation; the report of the Conference was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 5 June by Venezuela as Chairman of the Group of 77.<sup>(2)</sup>

UNCTAD ACTIVITIES. The Meeting of Governmental Experts of Developing Countries on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, convened by UNCTAD, held its second session at Geneva from 27 July to 7 August. The Meeting adopted recommendations aimed at facilitating the early negotiation of a global system of trade preferences (GSTP) among developing countries.

On 6 November, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board decided, by a roll-call vote of 54 to 20 (Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States), with 7 abstentions (Eastern European States), to include a third session of the Meeting on ECDC in the 1982 UNCTAD calendar.<sup>(4)</sup> Group B States (developed market-economy countries) acknowledged the importance of ECDC but objected to activities which they felt were not in keeping with the principle that all UNCTAD members should be associated with its decision-making. Group D States (centrally planned economies) also reiterated their reservations about universality and equality of States. To resolve this issue, the Board authorized its President to undertake consultations, between its current and 1982 sessions, with a view to arriving at a generally acceptable solution to the problems underlying UNCTAD activities on ECDC.<sup>(8)</sup>

An International Workshop on the Promotion of Economic and Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries with Particular Reference to Developing Countries' Joint Investments and their Financing, organized by UNCTAD and the Research Centre for Co-operation with Developing Countries (Ljubljana, Yugoslavia), was held at Bled, Yugoslavia, from 2 to 7 November.<sup>(6)</sup> The Workshop made general policy recommendations as well as specific suggestions to support this form of co-operation through improved information and communications, to stimulate joint ventures and multinational enterprises and to increase financial flows to such undertakings.

Technical co-operation activities of UNCTAD relating to ECDC<sup>(5)</sup> continued to concentrate on assistance to regional and subregional organizations and integration secretariats responsible for trade liberalization schemes, common external tariffs, and financial and monetary co-operation. Regional projects assisted the Economic Community of West African States, the West African Economic Community, the Customs and Economic Union of Central Africa, the Mano River Union and the Niger Basin Authority; the Trade Negotiations Group, the Bangkok Agreement and the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN); and the Central American Common Market and the Andean Group. Inter-regional and regional advisers aided other regional and subregional organizations as well as some commodity associations. The interregional programme included projects promoting co-operation between state trading organizations and the initiation of a Trade Information System, involving collection and dissemination of data on trade barriers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 16 December, the General Assembly, in a resolution on UNCTAD,<sup>(7)</sup> requested that body to intensify and complete its work in the priority areas indicated in a 1977 resolution of the UNCTAD Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, especially in the areas of trade information systems regarding the foreign trade of those countries, their state trading organizations, multinational production and marketing enterprises, GSTP and monetary and financial co-operation among them.

The original draft of this resolution,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted to the Second Committee by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77 and later withdrawn in favour of a text submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman after informal consultations, contained an additional paragraph by which the Assembly would have welcomed the 1980 and 1981 Meetings of Governmental Experts of Developing Countries on ECDC and a proposed 1982 meeting of senior officials which was to finalize and approve rules for launching negotiations to establish GSTP.

In the Committee's general debate, Bhutan, Democratic Yemen, Mexico, Thailand, Tunisia and Zimbabwe made the point that ECDC was meant to complement and not replace North-South co-operation. Turkey considered that it would be natural for developing countries to start by establishing preferential tariffs among themselves, but the aim should be to use them as a means of eventually integrating their economies with that of the world. The United Republic of Cameroon stated that ECDC must not be regarded as a stage on the way to autarky or as obviating the need for fundamental adjustments or structural changes in North-South relations.

Afghanistan said that ECDC was a means of strengthening the solidarity of developing countries but could be developed only in the context of a radical restructuring of the international economic system. India viewed ECDC as essential to the promotion of individual self-sufficiency and collective self-reliance, allowing the developing countries to make the best possible use of the complementary features of their economies. Uganda saw this form of co-operation as essential to the new international economic order.

The importance of the Caracas Conference on ECDC as a stimulus to closer co-operation was stressed by a number of developing countries, including Algeria, China, Kenya, Madagascar, the Niger, Pakistan, the Sudan, Venezuela and Zambia. Guyana said the action programme approved by that Conference reflected the developing countries' new awareness of the fact that interdependence must be based on mutually beneficial relationships. Nepal saw the results as proof that third world countries had the will to increase co-operation among themselves and thus contribute to their economic development and emancipation. Liberia and Sierra Leone hoped the action programme would be endorsed by the international community. The United Arab Emirates thought a timetable should have been fixed for implementation. Among the developed countries, Canada said it was ready to assist efforts to implement the Caracas plan.

Several States cited examples of ECDC in which they were participating, especially with countries in the same region. Barbados mentioned joint ventures between itself and Trinidad and Tobago in such areas as cement production and air cargo facilities, and said it had offered assistance to certain Caribbean and African countries in respect of sugar cane technology. Mexico had begun participating in the Caribbean Development Fund and, with Venezuela, had extended for a year an energy co-operation programme for Central America and the Caribbean. Botswana noted that 14 countries of eastern and southern Africa were negotiating the establishment of a preferential trade area for that subregion. Singapore mentioned preferential trade arrangements and other economic co-operation among ASEAN members.

The Syrian Arab Republic called on developing countries, especially those with the means to do so, to provide financing and investment assistance by granting long-term low-interest loans.

Referring to UNCTAD and other United Nations activities in this area, the USSR said they must not violate the principle of universality, must be kept within the limits of competence of the sponsoring organs and must not jeopardize work on other trade and economic problems of interest to all States.

Economic and social conditions and trends

The current world economic situation was the subject of three major United Nations reports issued in mid-1981 as a background to discussion in the Economic and Social Council and the Trade and Development Board.

One of these reports, the World Economic Survey 1980-1981,<sup>(2)</sup> prepared annually by the United Nations Secretariat's Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, concluded that the world economy was in a major recession, its deepest since that of 1975. Growth in world output had declined from 4.6 per cent in 1978 to 2.2 per cent in 1980, and in the developed market economies the growth rate had fallen to 1.5 per cent, compared to 3.1 per cent in the centrally planned economies. Among energy-importing developing countries the growth rate had slipped to 3.9 per cent; when adjusted for the decline in the purchasing power of their exports, the rate was below that of population growth, resulting in lower per capita incomes.

The deterioration in economic growth had been accompanied by accelerated inflation, a marked slow-down in the expansion of world trade and worsened current-account imbalances, associated with higher interest rates and import prices, including a 64 per cent rise in petroleum prices compared to 1979. For the remainder of 1981, the Survey forecast a hesitant recovery and high inflation levels.

According to the Survey, much of the sharp deceleration in the economic growth of energy-importing developing countries was due to pressures from abroad, including the developed market economies, where recessionary tendencies had been reinforced by policy measures directed increasingly to fighting inflation. While the recession in the major industrial centres had weakened demand for the exports of developing countries, monetary restraint had led to sharply higher interest charges for developing country borrowers. In addition, higher prices for imports, and particularly for energy, put pressure on their external accounts. Such adverse external developments had led to a sharp decline in the purchasing power of the exports of energy-importing developing countries and to widening current account deficits, from $48 billion in 1979 to $72 billion in 1980.

The Survey concluded that the revival of the world economy was attendant on finding a successful approach to inflation in the market economies. Policies depending solely or primarily on demand restraint were unlikely to succeed in combining greater price stability with vigorous growth. A combination of measures was required, including monetary and fiscal restraints, encouragement of savings, consensus on how real income losses should be distributed, and incentives for rapid changes in productive structures imposed by changes in relative prices and comparative advantage. Better international co-ordination was needed to minimize the negative impact of national anti-inflationary policies. Improved mechanisms were also needed to channel financing to developing countries.

The second major economic study was the Trade and Development Report, 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> the first in a series of annual reports published by the UNCTAD secretariat. The Report pointed out that the divergence between targets and actual growth rates had reached major proportions at the beginning of the Third United Nations Development Decade. Decelerating growth necessitated severe cuts in developing countries' investment programmes, reducing the capacity of many to achieve even the minimal structural change required to sustain current development levels. The worsening economic situation was unequally distributed, with the poor shouldering a disproportionately large part of the burden.

Assessing economic prospects for 1981-1982, the Report stated that the continued world recession would make it difficult for any group of developing countries to improve its growth performance in 1981, but that a moderate upturn of world output and trade in 1982 would permit a slightly improved performance in that year. The developed market-economy countries were likely to experience mixed growth in 1981—higher in the United States and lower in several major European countries—followed by a cyclical upturn expected to result in a higher growth rate for the group as a whole in 1982, accompanied by lower inflation. Planned growth rates for the socialist countries of Eastern Europe averaged 3.2 per cent for 1981, and China's rate might be 4 to 5 per cent.

Looking to the medium term, the Report pointed to an apparent decline in the secular growth of developed market-economy countries, with the consequence that current counter-cyclical policies were unlikely to move those economies back to the growth paths of the 1950s and 1960s. In the case of the Eastern European socialist countries, prospects for growth of the labour supply were less favourable, resulting in a possible slow-down of economic growth in the 1980s; nevertheless, the outlook for expansion of trade between those countries and others—especially developing countries—was good. China's economy continued to be relatively closed, so that growth prospects would be largely determined by internal dynamics, which pointed to possible fast development.

Given the trends in major industrial economies, and assuming no major changes in trade and capital flows, the Report projected an annual growth rate for developing countries of the order of 4.5 per cent during the 1980s, compared to the 7 per cent target of the International Development Strategy.<sup>(6)</sup> This implied that international discussion of development objectives would need to consider viable alternatives, possibly including far-reaching reforms in the organization of international economic relations. Such measures would require intensified international economic co-operation and concerted governmental effort, since market forces alone could not bring about the required transformations and structural reforms.

A third assessment of the current world economic situation and prospects for the 1980s was prepared by CDP at its 1981 session (New York, 23 March-1 April).<sup>(4)</sup> The Committee concluded that, unless the international community found ways to break with stalemate and stagflation, any pretence of achieving the goals of the International Development Strategy must be abandoned. In addition to lagging growth in all groups of countries, the developed market economies were likely to resort increasingly to protectionist policies in the absence of a renewed effort to resolve the problems hampering world trade. The only solution lay in globally co-ordinated action to restore openness and dynamism in the world economy.

Six areas were identified by CDP as requiring urgent action to assist the developing countries, particularly the poorest: support to enable international financial institutions to enlarge the flow of quickly disbursable funds; substantial increases in bilateral development assistance; greater co-operation between oil-exporting and oil-importing countries; cessation of protectionism; additional investment in agriculture; and a system of food security. It also urged the developed centrally planned economies to expand co-operation with developing countries in six basic areas: natural resources development, industrial and energy-producing capacities, preferential export promotion, favourable credit and loan repayment conditions, training of personnel, and the formulation of national social and economic development plans. Finally, CDP called for action by all countries towards disarmament, in view of the serious economic burden caused by the arms race (p. 99).

Other 1981 reports on the economic situation included surveys of individual regions (p. 608) and of long-term trends in economic development (p. 389).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL CONSIDERATION. In an address to the Economic and Social Council on 1 July, prior to its annual discussion of international economic and social policy, the Secretary-General stated that more countries were resorting to unilateral measures that tended to shift the burden of economic adjustment to others; if the others retaliated, all might eventually be in a worse state. The economies of the major industrial countries had lost their dynamism, many special interests were competing for resources and Governments found it increasingly difficult to allocate enough resources to meet pressing social and economic needs. Tendencies towards fragmentation and dispersal had to be reversed and the temptations of unilateral solutions resisted. He called for strengthened co-operation, particularly in the areas of food, energy, finance and trade.

The Council debate focused on the disquieting trends in the world economy, and different views were expressed with regard to both their cause and remedy. Most speakers, however, recognized that the developing countries were worst affected by the global crisis.

The developed market-economy countries generally shared the view of the United Kingdom, speaking for the European Economic Community (EEC), that it was necessary to combat inflation, bring down interest rates and pursue structural adjustment in order to regain world economic stability and growth. The United States spoke similarly and said it intended to give direct aid, help the developing world by restoring the health of its own economy, stimulate trade by avoiding protectionism, encourage the private sector in the development process and strengthen international financial institutions.

Australia was among those which recognized that protectionism by developed countries had caused balance-of-payments deficits, high debts, increased interest rates and uncertain access to markets for developing countries. Ireland also urged resistance to protectionism but said that, in the erratic and unpredictable conditions of the previous few years, such protective measures were almost inevitable. For Spain, protectionism was dangerous because it affected chiefly the economically weaker countries and threatened the liberal, multilateral approach to economic affairs.

Denmark, on behalf also of Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, said the Nordic States had a long tradition of support for the developing countries and believed that such support would also benefit industrialized countries and contribute to world stability.

Belgium cited the increase in petroleum prices as a cause of inflation, restrictive economic policies and their accompanying hardships. Canada advocated increased agricultural development and farmers' incentives to stimulate food production and the establishment of a World Bank affiliate to promote energy development in developing countries; it also favoured a greater voice for developing countries in international financial institutions, in keeping with their increasing economic weight. Italy called on oil-producing countries to recognize the important impact of energy prices on other factors of the world economy.

The developing countries generally felt that counter-inflationary policies by some developed countries had adversely affected the rest of the world. Growth had slackened, resulting in a decline in developing countries' imports and in global demand for commodities. High interest rates in certain developed countries had raised the debt-servicing costs of borrowers. Disappointment was expressed at the failure to launch global negotiations towards a new international economic order (p. 378). Several States stressed the benefits to be derived from expanded economic co-operation among developing countries and pledged support for the action programme adopted at the High Level Conference on this subject held at Caracas in May (p. 383).

Argentina warned that the doubling of indebtedness of the developing countries within two years could have explosive consequences for individual countries and the world economy; the indefinite accumulation of massive deficits could not add up to a development strategy. Unlike temporary crises of the past when growth rates fell and inflation rose, said Brazil, the rich countries currently had predictable growth levels while the poor countries had no growth prospects at all. Chile said it knew from experience the importance of combating inflation, but the policies adopted by some countries to that end had caused a drop in demand for the products of developing countries and a sharp decline in commodity prices. Venezuela observed that the industrialized countries' monetary and fiscal policies, adopted to regulate demand, had not produced any significant reduction in inflationary pressures.

Burundi noted that a number of African nations had based their currencies on those of former metropolitan Powers, which had in turn been subordinate to the United States dollar; successive fluctuations in the central currency had weighed heavily on the new States' balances of payments and developing countries had had to bear the full weight of inflation. Ethiopia pointed to a widening gap between developing countries: the per capita gross domestic product of the least developed had grown by an annual average of only 1 per cent over the past two decades, compared to 2.9 per cent for developing countries as a whole. The Sudan stated that the purchasing power and export earnings of the least developed countries were less than they had been 20 years previously. Although it was true that the crisis affected all countries, said Senegal, it was felt much more keenly by the developing ones and notably by the majority which imported petroleum.

Algeria thought it inadmissible to argue that world economic recovery must stem from recovery in the developed countries; action designed merely to re-establish the former balance between developed and developing countries would be politically unacceptable and economically ineffective. Barbados said that fundamental and acute economic problems would not disappear by general declarations of intent. Indonesia pointed out that, while interdependence was becoming increasingly recognized, some developed countries were still reluctant to acknowledge that reality by adopting corresponding policy measures. Yugoslavia called for a strengthening of international financial institutions and regretted that some States were using the current economic difficulties as a pretext for delay in implementing the International Development Strategy.

Bangladesh said a number of countries had embarked on planned development in the light of the Strategy but found themselves in difficulties when assumptions on trade growth, investment and resource flows had had to be discarded at the beginning of the decade. Nepal stated that, while all countries were affected by the declining economy, developing countries were less able to defend themselves because of deteriorating terms of trade, increasing energy costs, protectionism and tighter monetary policies in the industrialized countries, restricted access to private capital markets and a decline in real terms of official development assistance (ODA). Nigeria ascribed the plight of developing countries not to lack of effort on their part but to deteriorating access to export markets, technology and finance.

Morocco stated that the increased protectionist policies of industrialized nations had left developing countries no alternative to continued indebtedness as the price of survival. Also referring to the effects of protectionism, Iraq noted that the annual growth rate in the volume of developing country exports to the industrial economies had declined to virtually nil in 1980.

With regard to ODA, EEC felt that the burden should be balanced more fairly among all countries able to contribute; it welcomed aid given by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and urged a similar commitment from the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA). France also said mobilization of financial resources was not a matter for Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries alone and added that it was committed to reaching over the coming years the ODA target set by the International Development Strategy—0.7 per cent of the developed countries' gross national product (GNP).<sup>(7)</sup> Japan pledged increases in both quality and quantity of its ODA, which it planned to more than double during the five years beginning in 1981. Italy reported the doubling of its contribution in 1980.

China said it was not right for certain countries to cite differences in economic systems as grounds for evading their assistance obligations. Turkey called for a substantial increase in ODA by industrialized countries, whatever their economic system, and by countries with a surplus. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya remarked that it had provided substantial financial and development assistance through bilateral and multilateral programmes.

Fiji, Mexico and Zaire were among those which pointed out that an increase in ODA of only 5 per cent of the nearly $500 billion spent each year on armaments would make it possible to reach the target set in the International Development Strategy. Ghana said ODA increases had been more noticeable at the bilateral level; donors tended to see their contributions in terms of self-interest rather than of meeting human needs. India pointed out that the current level of ODA, as a share of GNP, was below that reached five years previously. Pakistan called for targets to be set in order to reverse the trend; for example, the leading economic Powers might earmark for ODA 0.7 per cent of the increment in their GNP in each remaining year of the 1980s.

Cuba saw a need to improve the developing countries' terms of trade, give them a massive transfer of additional resources, reform the international monetary system and speed negotiations for disarmament and détente.

The developed centrally planned economy countries felt that international economic co-operation and developing countries' growth and progress depended on the easing of international tensions and on disarmament. They held that there were some stabilizing factors in the world economy such as the continuous and planned national economic development of the member countries of CMEA.

The USSR said Western ruling circles had attempted to overcome their economic crisis by protectionism and by draining funds and resources from developing countries through transnational corporations and the brain drain; it called for observance of a code of conduct to democratize international economic relations and reiterated its proposal that the major military Powers agree to reduce their military budgets and allocate part of the savings to meet the needs of developing countries. Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Mongolia and Viet Nam said that world economic problems could be solved only under conditions of détente and peaceful coexistence.

The Byelorussian SSR viewed the capitalist countries as the originators of inflation and protectionism, and said the flow of foreign private capital to developing countries was increasing their external debt. The German Democratic Republic urged the United Nations to control the import of highly qualified personnel from developing countries, remarking that some States were profiting more from such plunder than they gave in development aid. Poland warned that, if various forms of protectionism were the only response to economic difficulties, the stagnation would become a prolonged economic crisis, with foreseeable political and social repercussions.

TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD CONSIDERATION. The current world economic situation, with special reference to the Trade and Development Report, 1981, was discussed by the Trade and Development Board in September/October. Introducing the report, the Director of the Money, Finance and Development Division of the UNCTAD secretariat stressed the need to consider what would be required to secure faster growth in developing countries so that, before the end of the century, they could sustain autonomous development and growth largely independently from world economic conditions. Faster growth would generate more balanced and sustainable trade patterns than those currently prevailing.

On 9 October, after considering a note by the UNCTAD secretariat on the world economic outlook for 1981 and 1982<sup>(1)</sup> and another by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD on world inflation, the Board noted his intention to provide an in-depth study of the world inflationary phenomenon (p. 393) and decided to refer to its March 1982 session a draft decision on access by developing countries to international capital markets (p. 561).<sup>(5)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 16 December, the General Assembly, in a resolution on UNCTAD,<sup>(8)</sup> took note with appreciation of the initiative of the UNCTAD Secretary-General in preparing the Trade and Development Report.

Long-term trends in economic development

ACTIVITIES OF THE TASK FORCE. At its eighth session, held at Geneva from 16 to 18 March 1981, the Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives, a subsidiary body of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), assessed the world economic situation and prospects and identified areas where action appeared particularly necessary to bring about progress in implementing the International Development Strategy.<sup>(5)</sup> In its report,<sup>(3)</sup> the Task Force discussed the interrelated problems of growth, employment, protectionism and structural adjustment. It also focused on two other areas of major concern for the 1980s: energy (p. 696) and food (p. 718).

With regard to the first item, the Task Force saw a need in the developed market economies for a mix of national anti-inflation policies to restrain demand and stimulate investment, coupled with international co-ordination to keep exchange and commodity markets stable. It warned against protectionist measures affecting international trade and suggested that international consultation to facilitate structural adjustment within national economies could help prevent short-term employment losses. For developing countries, it favoured a development-oriented process, combining national and international measures, to ensure sufficient long-term financing of payments deficits; emphasis on the domestic market instead of exports to industrialized countries, without neglecting regional trade; and expanded South-South co-operation. It emphasized that a global policy framework was essential, since no country had found a satisfactory answer through short-term national economic management.

Revised terms of reference for the Task Force were approved by ACC on 14 April (p. 382).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. In accordance with a 1979 General Assembly request,<sup>(4)</sup> the Economic and Social Council considered in November 1981 a preliminary draft of an overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000, prepared by the Secretary-General in consultation with United Nations bodies.<sup>(2)</sup> Describing this project in a note to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General said full use had been made of technical work and studies by organizations within and outside the United Nations system.

In his note to the Council, the Secretary-General said the preliminary draft examined the possibilities for world economic development and focused on two interrelated aspects: a summary appraisal of the current world situation and the implied short-term outlook (1980-1982) and medium-term prospects (1980-1985); and a prospective assessment to the year 2000, developed according to different assumed policy approaches to the resolution of current issues. He pointed to critical problem areas requiring intensified international co-operation: population, resources and environment; food and agriculture; industrialization, trade and the international division of labour; energy; technological development, technology transfer and transnational corporations; the international monetary and financial system; and disarmament. The question of strengthening the findings of the global perspectives was to be the subject of further inter-agency consultation through the ACC Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives, while regional perspectives were being elaborated with the regional commissions.

The Assistant Secretary-General in charge of the United Nations Secretariat's Office for Development Research and Policy Analysis introduced the draft to the Council on 2 November. He said the report made it clear that a substantial acceleration of growth in the developing countries could be brought about only by a large increase in resources for capital formation, together with a substantial improvement in productivity, particularly in low-income and least developed countries. According to projections, national savings rates and productivity improvements would be insufficient to permit attainment of the International Development Strategy target of an annual growth rate of 7 per cent.<sup>(6)</sup> Even if that rate was attained, the poverty of millions could not be alleviated by the year 2000 without deliberate policies to reduce income inequities.

In the Council, the USSR criticized the draft for failing to focus on the issue of restructuring international economic relations, not indicating how growth rates could be improved, unduly stressing the role of foreign investment capital, omitting comments about the adverse consequences of transnational corporation activities and ignoring the multilateral co-operation between socialist and developing countries. The German Democratic Republic and the USSR pointed out that only the first chapter of the preliminary draft envisaged by the Assembly's 1979 resolution had been submitted. Poland and the United Kingdom, the latter on behalf of the EEC members, felt it preferable to postpone further consideration until 1982.

In a decision of 2 November,<sup>(7)</sup> adopted without vote on an oral proposal by its President, the Council invited the Secretary-General to take into account the views expressed and to prepare a revised preliminary draft perspective, incorporating the conclusions of interorganizational consultations under way, which would be considered at the Council's second regular session of 1982. The Council also recommended that the General Assembly defer for one year the review of progress made in implementation of its 1979 resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote a decision<sup>(8)</sup> by which it took note of the Secretary-General's note and of the Council's action and deferred the review to its 1982 regular session. On 27 November, the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had similarly approved this text as introduced by its Chairman.

In the Committee's discussion, the USSR said future work on this topic should take account of the importance of socio-economic changes such as land reform, strengthening of the public sector, industrialization, comprehensive planning and control over foreign capital, as well as the need to transfer resources from military to development purposes.

Examination of long-term trends in economic development

At its 44th plenary meeting, on 2 November 1981, the Council decided:

(a) To take note of the note by the Secretary-General containing the preliminary draft of an overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000 and of the indication therein that consultations with the regional commissions and organizations of the United Nations concerned, as called for in General Assembly resolution 34/57 of 29 November 1979, were in progress;

(b) To invite the Secretary-General, taking into account the views expressed by delegations at the resumed second regular session of 1981, to proceed with the preparation of a revised report on the preliminary draft perspective, incorporating the conclusions of the interorganizational consultations under way, with a view to synthesizing the findings of other organizations of the United Nations system on long-term social and economic trends;

(c) To consider that report at its second regular session of 1982;

(d) To recommend to the General Assembly that it should defer for one year the review specified in paragraph 7 of Assembly resolution 34/57 relating to the progress made in the implementation of that resolution.

General Assembly decision 36/423

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add.11) without vote. 27 November (meeting 44): draft by Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.118); agenda item 69 (m).

Long-term trends in economic development

At its 84th plenary meeting, on 4 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee:

(a) Took note of the note by the Secretary-General on the progress in the preparation of an overall socio-economic perspective of the development of the world economy;

(b) Took note also of Economic and Social Council decision 1981/200 of 2 November 1981 concerning the examination of long-term trends in economic development;

(c) Decided to defer to its thirty-seventh session the review specified in paragraph 7 of its resolution 34/57 of 29 November 1979 relating to the progress made in the implementation of that resolution.

Environment, natural resources, population and development

In December 1981, the General Assembly called for implementation of a new work programme to study the interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development. The programme was drawn up and revised by the Secretariat during the year, on the basis of proposals by an expert group convened by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

ACTIVITIES OF THE UNEP EXPERT GROUP. Pursuant to a 1980 decision of the UNEP Governing Council,<sup>(18)</sup> the UNEP Executive Director convened, in January 1981, a second session of a high-level group of experts to advise him on elements for inclusion in a system-wide work programme on interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development—a programme envisaged in 1980 resolutions by the General Assembly<sup>(13)</sup> and the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(8)</sup>

In its report, annexed to the UNEP Council's report to the Assembly,<sup>(6)</sup> the expert group pointed out that rapid modernization had produced important unintended dysfunctional consequences such as poverty, unemployment, explosive growth of urban slums, environmental degradation and irrational management of natural resources. It concluded that interrelationships should be mapped through regional and country case studies. Several studies and projects were proposed for inclusion in the programme.

In a decision of 26 May,<sup>(16)</sup> the UNEP Governing Council agreed with the expert group's proposals and invited the Economic and Social Council to consider them favourably. The Governing Council considered that further reports by the Secretary-General should contain advice to Governments on the results of studies and that emphasis in the immediate future should be placed on projects and case studies that would demonstrate the value of the interrelationships approach.

ACTION BY THE POPULATION COMMISSION (JANUARY/FEBRUARY) AND THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL (MAY). The interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development were considered by the Population Commission at its January/February session (p. 778). The Commission stated in its report<sup>(4)</sup> that population policies and programmes could play an important role with regard not only to slowing population growth, density, age structure and spatial distribution, but also to accommodation, social and urban problems, congestion and pollution. It added that the qualitative dimension of population programmes was central to problems of development and rapid social change as well as to processes of self-reliance, decentralization and participation in development.

The Economic and Social Council, in a resolution of 6 May<sup>(9)</sup> on implementation of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action,<sup>(17)</sup> urged those responsible for new development strategies, for international conferences or for drafting instruments on economic, social and technological progress to consider fully the interrelationships of population factors and social, economic, cultural and political development in dealing with population problems.

In another resolution of the same date, on a population work programme,<sup>(10)</sup> the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue work on interrelations of population and development, with a view to integrating demographic factors in development strategies and plans. He was also asked to expedite the preparation of manuals on methods of incorporating demographic factors in development planning.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (JULY). In accordance with a 1979 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(7)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in May 1981 a report to the Council<sup>(5)</sup> which discussed the scope and nature of the issues and set out some conclusions on requirements for sustaining long-term development. It reviewed findings that had emerged from activities of the United Nations system in four areas: population pressure, resource systems and technological options; human capabilities, livelihood systems and environmental management; development processes, human settlements and population distribution; and national self-reliance, life-styles and patterns of development. The report also submitted findings relevant to national planning.

In a statement to the Council on 14 July, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation outlined elements of a proposed system-wide work programme whose objectives would be: synthesis, integration and advancement of knowledge, based on co-ordinated multidisciplinary research; identification of issues emerging from ongoing or anticipated changes in the distribution of power and resources between and within societies, such as those implicit in Assembly documents relating to the new international economic order; and improvement of the capability for long-term global analyses of interrelationships so that they could be used to elaborate long-term strategies and policy decisions at local, national, regional and international levels.

Programme areas to be explored would include rational use of global resources, consumption patterns and life-styles, and improvement and expansion of carrying capacity. Within these areas, projects would be identified for implementation by the United Nations system and other institutions. Programme components would include: system-wide cataloguing and evaluation of work; data gathering and analysis, theoretical work, long-term perspectives and projections; assistance to developing countries trying to solve problems stemming from interrelationships; and national planning implications.

The Director-General added that a trust fund had been established to receive governmental contributions for these activities.

On 22 July, the Council adopted without vote a resolution,<sup>(11)</sup> sponsored by India, Kenya, Pakistan and Sweden, by which it welcomed establishment of the trust fund and urgently requested the Director-General to finalize the proposals for the work programme and to submit them to Governments at an early stage for consideration at the Assembly's 1981 regular session.

The Federal Republic of Germany, Spain and the United Kingdom expressed opposition to the fund, while the United States said it would not contribute. On the other hand, Sweden said it was prepared to make a contribution.

On 24 July, in a resolution on international co-operation on the environment,<sup>(12)</sup> the Council endorsed in principle the proposals of the expert group and the important role of UNEP on this topic, and invited the Assembly to request the Director-General to implement the proposals, taking into account the Council's resolution of 22 July. This provision incorporated two revisions made after informal consultations on the original draft, adding the words "in principle" and the phrase inviting the Assembly to take account of the Council resolution.

Brazil expressed reservations on the Secretary-General's report, saying it appeared to imply that reduction of development and modification of development objectives were justified to preserve the environment, and that some of its ideas prejudged the exercise of economic and social options by developing countries and invaded areas of exclusive national jurisdiction.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. Responding to the Economic and Social Council resolutions of 22 and 24 July, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in October a report of the Director-General containing proposals for the system-wide work programme on interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development.<sup>(3)</sup>

The programme would include surveys and monitoring, field projects, development of planning and policy tools, and research. Its objectives were to be the advancement of understanding, the promotion of multidisciplinary approaches and the stimulation of international efforts.

Components were to include: comparative geographic, sectoral and societal studies; action-oriented research studies urgently needed for developing countries; methodological studies; and review and synthesis of new knowledge. Three programme areas were specified: rational use of global resources, consumption patterns and life-styles, and improving and expanding carrying capacity.

An appendix listed eight study projects identified for inclusion, on the following topics: land resources for future populations (Indonesia, Kenya, Tunisia); deforestation of the Himalayan foothills; overgrazing in the Sudano-Sahelian region; peasant survival and environmental management in densely populated semi-arid highlands (Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru); high-consumption regions; resource use; development and life-styles; and development of an extended Social Accounting Matrix for analysis of interrelationships.

The Director-General proposed that existing ACC machinery be used for inter-agency consultations and that an advisory body of four outside experts be constituted to review programme activities, assess orientation and achievements, recommend further development and advise on the trust fund, which would finance the advisory body's meetings.

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote a resolution<sup>(14)</sup> by which it requested the Director-General to initiate implementation of a work programme as outlined in his report and to consult Governments on the elements. The Assembly supported the proposed arrangements for inter-agency consultations and establishment of the advisory body, appealed to Governments to contribute to the trust fund and decided to review progress at its 1983 regular session. It expressed awareness that national policies and strategies in resources, environment, people and development were government prerogatives.

The resolution was approved by the Second Committee on 7 December, also without vote, as submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman after informal consultations on an earlier draft introduced by Sweden, also sponsored by India and Pakistan and subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup>

In another resolution of 17 December, on international co-operation on the environment,<sup>(15)</sup> the Assembly welcomed the recommendations of the UNEP Governing Council and the Economic and Social Council on the work programme and the role of UNEP, and requested the Director-General to take steps for their implementation.

The three-nation text differed in several respects from the one adopted. It contained no reference to government prerogatives and, in addition to drafting differences, would have had the Assembly: endorse the Director-General's proposals to initiate a work programme, taking into account the relevant provision in the other Assembly resolution of 17 December (see previous paragraph); welcome (rather than support) the Director-General's arrangements; and appeal for substantial contributions to the trust fund. Also, the initial draft did not provide that the advisory body should be financed from the trust fund.

Explaining their positions on this resolution, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom restated their opposition to the proliferation of funds. Canada, referring to the preambular clause on government prerogatives, supported the right of States to pursue national policies but said States also were responsible for ensuring that activities within their jurisdiction or control did not harm the environment of other States.

Speaking of the second resolution, the Federal Republic of Germany said it was premature to request implementation of the work programme; further consideration by the UNEP Council was needed.

COMMUNICATION. On 9 November, China transmitted to the Secretary-General<sup>(2)</sup> the Beijing Declaration on Population and Development, adopted by the Asian Conference of Parliamentarians on Population and Development (Beijing, China, 27-30 October). In this document, the participants recognized the inextricable relationships between population, resources and environment in efforts to manage poverty, employment and development, and resolved to stimulate interest and create awareness and understanding of those relationships among fellow parliamentarians and people.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/74 of 5 December 1980 on international co-operation in the field of the environment, in which the Secretary-General was requested to take the requisite steps for the Implementation of the recommendations of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of the United Nations system on interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development;

2. Welcomes the statement of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, in which he presented an outline of the elements of a system-wide programme of work on the interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development;

3. Urgently requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to finalize the proposals for the system-wide programme of work on interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development, bearing in mind the above-mentioned outline of the elements, and to submit the proposals to Governments at an early stage, so as to facilitate the full consideration of the programme of work by the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session and to enable the Assembly to take the appropriate decisions for its implementation, also bearing in mind Council resolution 1981/73;

4. Welcomes the establishment of the general trust fund for the purpose of facilitating the implementation of the system-wide programme of work to be undertaken pursuant to General Assembly resolution 35/74.

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add.1) without vote, 7 December (meeting 46); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.133), based on informal consultations on 3-nation draft (A/C.2/36/L.75); agenda item 69.

Interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development,

Conscious of the Interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development, as noted in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recognizing that the application of existing knowledge concerning those interrelationships could lead to a more efficient use of available resources in the United Nations system,

Recalling its resolution 35/74 of 5 December 1980, in paragraph 5 of which it requested the Secretary-General to take the requisite steps for implementation of a system-wide programme of work on the interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1981/51 of 22 July 1981 and 1981/73 of 24 July 1981,

Aware that the formulation and implementation, at the national level, of policies and strategies in the fields of resources, environment, people and development fall within the prerogative of Governments,

1. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation:

(a) To initiate implementation of a co-ordinated multidisciplinary programme of work on interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development, as outlined in his report, and within this framework the recommendations on this subject of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and of the Economic and Social Council;

(b) Urgently to consult Governments on the elements contained in his report, as he proceeds in the implementation of the above-mentioned programme of work;

2. Inflation and development

In a note to the General Assembly, transmitted by the United Nations Secretary-General on 29 September 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) proposed to submit in 1982 rather than 1981 a report requested by the Assembly in 1979<sup>(4)</sup> on measures to combat world inflation with a view to accelerating developing countries' real growth and increasing their import capacity in a context of just and stable financial markets. He pointed out that there had been changes since 1979 in the underlying economic forces affecting inflation. Several Governments appeared to have different perceptions of the origins of that process and to attach different weights to the goals of reducing inflation and achieving full employment. Therefore, the UNCTAD secretariat felt that a comprehensive review was required and it proposed to submit such a report for the twenty-fifth session of the Trade and Development Board (September 1982) and the Assembly's 1982 regular session.

On 9 October, the Board noted this intention and agreed to consider the report in September 1982.<sup>(3)</sup>

On 16 December, in a resolution on UNCTAD,<sup>(5)</sup> the Assembly took note of the UNCTAD Secretary-General's intention and the Board's agreement. In an earlier version of this text, submitted by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77,<sup>(1)</sup> the Assembly would have welcomed the Board's decision and requested that the study and the Board's comments be transmitted to the Assembly in 1982.

In a related decision,<sup>(6)</sup> adopted without vote on 16 December, the Assembly took note of the UNCTAD Secretary-General's communication. This action was recommended by the Second Committee, which similarly approved it on 11 December on an oral proposal of its Chairman.

The effects of inflation and monetary instability on the finances of the United Nations system were also examined by the Assembly during the year (p. 1300).

World Inflationary phenomenon

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 16 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting a note by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the world inflationary phenomenon.

Public sector and economic development

Responding to a 1979 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in May 1981 a progress report on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries,<sup>(1)</sup> in advance of a comprehensive report scheduled for 1983.

According to the report, new perceptions and priorities regarding development had led most developing countries to enlarge the role of the public sector and mobilize more resources for its use. The need to bring the fruits of development to the larger mass of people had caused the public sector to devise new organizations and redesign development policy to undertake wholly new tasks. The public sector had attempted to bring about changes in institutions such as agrarian relations, created new institutions such as public enterprises and joint ventures, and implemented policies designed to benefit selected groups.

Governments had expressed the need for research and analysis of public sector policies and programmes and the modalities to implement them, the report said. The larger and complex role of the public sector had called for more and diversified training of personnel and for policies to retain competent persons, and there was also a growing need to improve public management.

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the report be transmitted to the General Assembly, together with the Secretary-General's comprehensive report called for by the Assembly in 1979.<sup>(4)</sup> The Council decided to discuss the latter at its second regular session of 1983, requested the Secretary-General to accord high priority to studies and reports on the role of the public sector in promoting developing countries' economic development, and recognized the important role of the International Centre for Public Enterprises in Developing Countries in promoting co-operation among developing countries in this field.

The Council took these actions by a resolution which it adopted without vote. The 11-nation draft, introduced by Mongolia, incorporated oral amendments proposed by Brazil and by the United Kingdom on behalf of the European Economic Community. Brazil's amendment had the Council recognize instead of emphasize the role of the International Centre. The United Kingdom amendment added a preambular paragraph saying that every State had the sovereign and inalienable right to choose its economic and social system in accordance with its people's will, without outside interference.

Canada stated that, had there been a vote, it would have been unable to support the request for high priority for studies and reports on this topic.

Role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1978/60 of 3 August 1978, 1978/75 of 8 November 1978 and 1979/48 of 31 July 1979,

Further recalling General Assembly resolution 34/137 of 14 December 1979, in which the Assembly, inter alia, invited the Secretary-General to continue his detailed study of the role of the public sector and to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive report to the Assembly at its thirty-eighth session, paying special attention to several aspects of the question indicated in that resolution,

Noting the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in which it is stressed that due account should be taken of the positive role of the public sector in mobilizing internal resources, formulating and implementing overall national development plans and establishing national priorities,

Bearing in mind that every State has the sovereign and inalienable right to choose its economic and social system, in accordance with the will of its people and without outside interference,

1. Takes note of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries;

2. Recommends that the progress report should be transmitted to the General Assembly, together with the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General to be submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 34/137;

3. Decides to discuss the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General at the second regular session of the Council in 1983;

4. Reaffirms Council resolution 1978/60, in which it, inter alia, invited the regional commissions and other appropriate organizations of the United Nations system to assist the Secretary-General regularly in his continuing study of the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to accord high priority to the studies and reports on the role of the public sector in the economic development of developing countries;

6. Recognizes, in this connection, the important role of the international Centre for Public Enterprises in Developing Countries in promoting co-operation among developing countries in this field.

Development planning and information

The Committee for Development Planning (CDP) held its seventeenth session at United Nations Headquarters from 23 March to 1 April 1981.<sup>(2)</sup>

Composed of experts appointed by the Economic and Social Council, CDP examined the causes and costs of the world economic crisis and outlined priority areas of action to restore dynamism in the world economy, including action by the developed market and centrally planned economies (p. 386). It made recommendations regarding regional development strategies in Africa (p. 611), Asia and the Pacific (p. 636), Latin America (p. 661) and Western Asia (p. 669). It suggested activities for economic co-operation among developing countries (p. 383) and reviewed the United Nations list of least developed countries (p. 411). The world economic situation and development problems hampering implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (p. 381) were to be the subjects of future study by CDP.

In connection with development planning, a 10 September letter from Israel to the Secretary-General<sup>(1)</sup> attached a government report outlining an alternative development strategy for developing countries; this approach called for a shift of resources from the modern to the traditional sector, where a transitional economy would be created that would produce food and non-agricultural goods primarily for its own consumption, using its predominantly agricultural surpluses to pay for its imports from the modern sector and from the world market.

Unified approach to development planning

Responding to the concern, spanning more than a decade, of both the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to promote a unified approach to development analysis and planning for socio-economic development, the Secretary-General, in January 1981, submitted two related reports.

One of these reports,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted in response to a 1979 Assembly decision,<sup>(6)</sup> contained conclusions and recommendations based on information from Governments on their experience in applying a unified approach. Previous reports, in 1977<sup>(8)</sup> and 1979,<sup>(9)</sup> incorporated information from 25 Governments; for the 1981 report, new replies were received from Argentina, Cyprus, Iraq, Jordan, Malaysia, Pakistan and Suriname.

The report concluded that various countries had applied a unified approach in varying degrees and contexts. Their development objectives had become more comprehensive and explicit, to facilitate policy and programme formulation; the interrelationships of policies and programmes were being taken into account; attempts had been made to incorporate regional programmes into national plans; and review and appraisal had become part of decision-making. Arrangements had been made to widen the participation of local institutions, improve the co-ordination of central planning authorities, facilitate the application of a unified approach in regional and local plans, and make review and appraisal more effective. There had also been efforts to improve the availability of information.

The second report concerned world experience in integrated social and economic planning which could be recommended to interested Governments for their application.<sup>(2)</sup> This report, requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1979,<sup>(3)</sup> illustrated interactions among nutrition, health, educational and family planning programmes. The report sought to demonstrate that knowledge of the nature of such interactions was necessary for the design of integrated plans and programmes. It found that sectoral programmes were often designed in isolation from one another, due to compartmentalization of agencies and the rigidities arising from a functional allocation of responsibilities. To avoid this, many Governments would have to improve their organizational arrangements.

The Commission for Social Development took note of both reports on 17 February.<sup>(4)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. On 4 May, the Economic and Social Council decided to continue to consider regularly a unified approach to development analysis and planning. It requested the Secretary-General, on the basis of government information, to submit in 1983 a report on experience acquired in applying such an approach in socio-economic development at the national level, as well as in the activities of United Nations economic and social bodies.

The decision to this effect<sup>(5)</sup> was adopted without vote, following similar approval on 24 April by the Council's First (Economic) Committee of a text introduced by its Chairman and based on consultations.

In the Committee's discussion, the Byelorussian SSR and the USSR stressed the importance of integrated planning in socialist economies and called for more work by the United Nations on this topic, leading to practical recommendations. The United States said experience had demonstrated the need to avoid relying too heavily on Governments in promoting social development; individual and group initiatives should be encouraged instead. The German Democratic Republic and India thought that a unified approach should also be applied in international economic relations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 19 November, the General Assembly confirmed the Council decision, also decided to continue consideration of the question regularly and requested that the report called for by the Council be submitted to the Assembly in 1983 through the Commission for Social Development and the Council.

The Assembly took these actions by adopting without vote a decision<sup>(7)</sup> recommended by its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The Committee had likewise approved the draft, submitted by its Chairman, on 11 November.

(a) To take note of the report of the Secretary-General on a unified approach to development analysis and planning;

(b) To continue to consider on a regular basis the question of a unified approach to development analysis and planning, taking into account its importance for the process of development as stressed in the international Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

(c) To request the Secretary-General, on the basis of information supplied by Governments, to prepare a report on the experience acquired in applying a unified approach in the process of socio-economic development at the national level, as well as in the activities of the United Nations economic and social organs and organizations, and to submit it to the Council at its first regular session of 1983 through the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-eighth session;

Unified approach to development analysis and planning

At its 64th plenary meeting, on 19 November 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee:

(a) Took note of the report of the Secretary-General on a unified approach to development analysis and planning;

(b) Confirmed Economic and Social Council decision 1981/107 of 4 May 1981, entitled "Unified approach to development analysis and planning";

(c) Decided to continue consideration on a regular basis of the question of a unified approach, taking into account its importance for the process of development as stressed in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

(d) Requested the Secretary-General, on the basis of information supplied by Governments, to prepare a report on the experience acquired in applying a unified approach in the process of socio-economic development at the national level and in the activities of the United Nations economic and social organs and organizations and to submit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session through the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-eighth session and the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1983;

(e) Further decided to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-eighth session the item entitled "Unified approach to development analysis and planning".

Technical co-operation

During 1981, the United Nations Secretariat's Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) implemented 90 technical co-operation projects in 70 developing countries designed to improve their technical and institutional capabilities for planning and to strengthen their infrastructure for development. According to a report by the Secretary-General to the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP),<sup>(1)</sup> advisory missions provided assistance in specific economic and social sectors and, in response to developing countries' needs for more skilled personnel, training formed an important aspect.

The main emphasis was on national and regional planning, formulation and evaluation of investment projects, planning for international technical co-operation, and projects devoted exclusively to training. Significant support was also given to preparations for the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (p. 404); to country programming for the third

UNDP programming cycle (1982-1986) (p. 444); and, in co-operation with the Office for Special Political Questions, to special economic assistance programmes mandated by the General Assembly (p. 495).

Development information

Information Systems Unit in DIESA

The General Assembly decided in December 1981 to continue the Information Systems Unit (ISU) in the United Nations Secretariat's Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA) and to finance it within the existing total of the United Nations budget. This Unit created and maintained a computerized Development Information System (DIS), providing access to unpublished reports and studies produced by or for DIESA, DTCD, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the Centre for Human Settlements.

The Assembly acted on an October 1981 report of the Secretary-General,<sup>(3)</sup> submitted in response to a 1980 resolution,<sup>(4)</sup> describing the Unit's activities. He said there had been considerable demand for the Unit's services during 1981 and estimated that its continuation at the current operational level would cost $447,200 in 1982-1983.

An evaluation of ISU was prepared by a consultant designated by the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems (IOB). In his report,<sup>(2)</sup> the consultant concluded that, unless ISU could be provided with at least $300,000 a year—the minimum needed to make it useful and comprehensive—the current limited operation should be discontinued. In transmitting this report to the Assembly, IOB stated that it could not express an opinion and felt that the Assembly must decide.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a report to the Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> concluded that the reports of the Secretary-General and IOB had not convinced it that there was need for ISU and DIS as currently constituted.

On 18 December, the Assembly concluded that the loss of DIS could have a negative effect on international co-operation for development. Accordingly, it requested the Secretary-General to continue ISU by absorbing its cost through savings, economies and redeployment within the United Nations budget for 1982-1983. He was asked to report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on institutional arrangements which would enable ISU to serve as a focal point for expansion, merging and distribution of the development-related data bases of the regional commissions and for maintaining the Macrothesaurus for Information Processing in the Field of Economic and Social Development (a document-indexing tool used by several United Nations organizations). The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to improve the System's coverage and services and asked IOB to report in 1983 on the Unit's performance and utility.

The Assembly took these actions by adopting a resolution,<sup>(5)</sup> recommended by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, by a recorded vote of 107 to 16, with 15 abstentions. On 15 December, the Committee had approved the draft, sponsored by Canada, Denmark and Pakistan, by 40 votes to 14, with 23 abstentions.

Canada, introducing the resolution, said the budgetary arguments against ISU were not relevant to the key issue of a long-term approach to the establishment of an integrated development information system in the United Nations. The sponsors had been advised that the modest sum needed to finance ISU could be found within the existing budget total.

A number of States explained their positions in the Fifth Committee. Those which voted against the resolution thought ISU should be discontinued. The USSR felt that money was being wasted on an unnecessary undertaking when so many problems required an urgent solution. The United States objected to expanding the Unit's mandate to cover co-ordination of United Nations development information systems and opposed the transfer of activities from voluntary funding to the regular budget.

Several States explained their abstentions. Brazil, Ghana and Greece said they hoped ISU might yet prove useful. India, noting that it had argued in 1980 against continuing ISU, abstained in view of the call for a review. Japan said that, although it had contributed to ISU, it could not support any proposal that might lead to a budget increase. Peru, which voted in favour in the Assembly, thought funding should be by voluntary contributions. The United Republic of Tanzania noted that both the consultant and ACABQ had concluded that DIS should be discontinued.

A number of delegations explained their positive votes. Algeria, Sierra Leone, Venezuela and Yugoslavia felt ISU could benefit developing countries. Australia agreed, adding that knowledge lost could never be regained. Guinea supported the dissemination of development information. Kenya noted that ISU had made an effort to co-operate with the Economic Commission for Africa. Mauritania wished to give ISU another chance to prove itself but had reservations on its usefulness. Morocco said it was too early to let DIS expire; if voluntary funds could not be found, financing from the United Nations budget should continue. Pakistan thought it premature to terminate a unit which held promise but was not reaching its potential because insufficient resources had been devoted to it. Trinidad and Tobago and the United Republic of Cameroon also felt ISU had potential.

In the Fifth Committee's discussion, Denmark said a token increase in the ISU budget might suffice to expand DIS into a comprehensive system of access to development literature. Sweden stated that it continued to believe in the usefulness of ISU and DIS but would no longer make voluntary contributions, since the users and the Secretary-General had not shown a readiness to support it.

General Assembly resolution 36/237

107-16-15 (recorded vote) Meeting 105 18 December 1981

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/36/845) by vote (40-14-23). 15 December (meeting 77); 3-nation draft (A/C.5/36/L.29/Rev.1); agenda item 100.

Establishment of an information Systems Unit in the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs The General Assembly,

Recalling section XIII of its resolution 35/217 of 17 December 1980, by which it decided that the staffing complement of the Development Information System of the Information Systems Unit would be funded temporarily by the regular budget for 1981 and that a report on the evaluation of the System should be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session,

Taking note of the report of the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems containing an evaluation of the Development Information System of the Information Systems Unit, as well as the report of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, which provide information on the progress of the Unit since last year, and particularly the section which outlines the role that the Unit can play in the maintenance of compatibility and the exchange of development information among the regional commissions,

Mindful of the limited size of both the data base and user community of the Development Information System and of the need to improve its coverage and services,

Considering that the Development Information System, in providing access to the unpublished reports and studies produced by or for the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and other parts of the Secretariat, will be providing a needed and valuable service to the Governments and Member States and other users of the System,

Further considering that the loss of the Development Information System could have a negative effect on international co-operation for development,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the Information Systems Unit by absorbing the cost of the Unit from the resources proposed for the 1982-1983 programme budget through savings, economies and redeployment;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the potential and appropriate institutional arrangements in regard to the Information Systems Unit which would enable it to serve as a focal point for the expansion, merging and distribution of the development-related data bases of the regional commissions and for the maintenance of the macrothesaurus;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to undertake measures to improve the Development Information System in terms of its coverage and services;

4. Requests the Inter-Organization Board to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, on the performance and utility of the Information Systems Unit.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bhutan, Bolivia, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Austria, Belgium, Benin, Brazil, Ghana, Greece, India, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Romania, Rwanda, Spain, Turkey, United Republic of Tanzania.

Other developments

During 1981 there were several other developments with regard to economic and social information systems. In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted two resolutions on the subject. The first dealt with preparations for the Second Intergovernmental Conference on Strategies and Policies for Informatics, scheduled for Havana, Cuba, in 1983 (p. 759). By the second, the Council recognized the importance of harmonizing United Nations information systems and made specific requests to the Secretary-General and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on enhancing the effectiveness of such systems (p. 1385). In May, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme acted to expand the International Referral System on the environment (INFOTERRA) (p. 826). The Industrial and Technological Information Bank, a project of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, continued to develop its data base and network of correspondents (p. 593).

Public administration

Technical co-operation

The United Nations Secretariat's Department of Technical Co-operation for Development

(DTCD) supported 86 projects in 1981, including 27 new ones, in the field of development administration, which encompassed public finance (p. 562) as well as public administration. A third of these focused on administrative reform and improvement of management practices and procedures, according to a report on United Nations technical co-operation activities prepared by the Secretary-General for the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme.<sup>(3)</sup> Emphasis was also given to programmes for alleviating shortages of skilled personnel.

Support was given to public enterprises in a number of countries to strengthen their role as effective instruments of economic development. DTCD co-operated with the Central American Institute for Public Administration, the Latin American Centre for Development Administration and the African Training and Research Centre in Administration for Development, as well as with the International Centre for Public Enterprises at Ljubljana, Yugoslavia.

An Expert Working Group on Network in Public Administration and Finance focused on the potential for global co-operation and joint activities in this field (Alcalá de Henares, Spain, 9-15 December).<sup>(2)</sup> Among seminars and workshops organized by DTCD during the year were those on: curricula design for management development (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 20-24 July);<sup>(1)</sup> decentralization for development (Khartoum, Sudan, 14-18 September); economic performance of public enterprises-jointly with the Government of Pakistan (Islamabad, Pakistan, 24-29 November); and strategies and measures for enhancing capabilities for development administration in developing countries Bangkok, Thailand, 9-14 December).

Rural development

Social aspects

By a resolution adopted on 6 May 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the Economic and Social Council called on Governments to give special attention to increasing the social impact of basic rural development policies such as implementing agrarian reforms, promoting co-operative endeavours, introducing development planning, strengthening the role of national qualified personnel and encouraging popular participation in the development of rural areas. The Council requested the Secretary-General to devote special attention to social aspects of rural development in his 1982 report on the world social situation (p. 768). He was also invited to help increase dissemination of information on national experience and requested to report in 1983 to the Commission for Social Development on implementation of this resolution.

The resolution was adopted without vote after the Council's Second (Social) Committee had similarly approved the draft on 29 April, as recommended by the Commission for Social Development on 16 February.

The Commission on Human Settlements made several recommendations on 6 May to improve slums, squatter areas and rural settlements (p. 858).

Social aspects of rural development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, Recalling also the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980.

Concerned at the distressing social conditions prevailing in rural areas of many countries.

Taking into account the need for implementing integrated rural development programmes to fight mass poverty, raise the levels of living of the rural population and achieve the goal of equitable distribution of national income,

1. Calls upon Governments, while implementing the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and national development programmes, to give special attention to increasing the social impact of basic rural development policies such as:

- (a) Implementing agrarian reforms;
- (b) Promoting co-operative endeavours;
- (c) Introducing development planning;

(d) Strengthening the role of national qualified personnel in rural development;

(e) Encouraging popular participation in the development process of rural areas:

2. Requests the Secretary-General to devote special attention in the forthcoming report on the world social situation to the social aspects of rural development, taking into account the provisions of the present resolution;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to facilitate increasing dissemination of information on national experience of countries with different socio-economic systems in rural development;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Rural development and land reform

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), in a report to the Economic and Social Council in June 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> described action it was taking to analyse and disseminate information on agrarian reform and rural development, as called for in the Programme of Action approved by the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development.<sup>(9)</sup>

According to this report, review and analysis of national policies were being undertaken by high-level missions, whose reports could give guidance to developing countries in regard to policy options and to development organizations regarding assistance possibilities. United Nations agencies were conducting research, diagnostic and evaluation studies were to be undertaken and regional centres for rural development had been established in Africa and in Asia and the Pacific to analyse and disseminate information. Information furnished by Governments would be monitored by FAO, which would collaborate with other United Nations agencies to establish benchmarks and socio-economic indicators.

The FAO report was submitted following three decisions by the Council relating to the type of reports it wished to receive on this topic. It had decided in February 1980<sup>(5)</sup> that the submission of progress reports on land reform should be discontinued and that it would consider at its 1981 organizational session what type of report it would require. On 6 February 1981,<sup>(6)</sup> it requested FAO to suggest what the report might contain. The FAO suggestions, contained in a letter of 26 March,<sup>(1)</sup> were approved by the Council on 24 April<sup>(7)</sup> in a decision adopted, without vote, on an oral proposal by the President; the Council decided to consider the report in July. Addressing the Council on 14 April, the USSR stressed the importance of democratic land reform for radical socio-economic change and thought the Council should consider the topic regularly.

Taking note of the FAO report on 23 July, in a decision<sup>(8)</sup> adopted, without vote, as orally proposed by its President, the Council approved the organization's suggestion that it submit every four years, beginning in 1984, a review and analysis of agrarian reform and rural development. In making this suggestion, FAO pointed out that the 1979 Conference had stressed the need for analysis and dissemination of information on the subject.

In further action, both the Council and the General Assembly called on Governments to implement agrarian reform and rural development within the framework of their national plans and objectives and in accordance with the Conference's recommendations. The Council's action was contained in a 24 July resolution on food and agriculture,<sup>(3)</sup> and the Assembly's was incorporated in a 17 December resolution on the work of the World Food Council.<sup>(4)</sup>

Report on land reform and rural development

At its 8th plenary meeting, on 24 April 1981, the Council approved the suggestions made by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations as to the type of report required on land reform and rural development and decided to consider that report at its second regular session of 1981 under the item entitled "General discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments".

Land reform and rural development

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1981, the Council took note of the report of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on land reform and rural development and decided to approve the suggestion contained in paragraph 29 thereof, concerning the submission to the Council every four years, beginning in 1984, of a report to be entitled "Review and analysis of agrarian reform and rural development".

The Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) carried out several integrated rural development projects during 1981, according to a report by the Secretary-General on United Nations technical co-operation activities.<sup>(1)</sup>

Under the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation, DTCD launched an interregional project to strengthen national capabilities for integrated rural development. Missions were sent to Bahrain, China, the Congo, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Guatemala, Guinea, Liberia, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Sudan, Swaziland, Thailand and the United Republic of Tanzania. Some supported government efforts to formulate regional and national social plans, policies and programmes, while others focused on popular participation and self-reliance or sought to enhance the participation of women in community development. In co-operation with the Economic Commission for Latin America, Panama was assisted to identify particularly disadvantaged areas and to try to improve living conditions.

Co-ordination in the UN system

New priorities for rural development work by the United Nations system were agreed to in March 1981 by the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). They called for a focus on joint action at the country level in support of national efforts, promoting popular participation in development and evaluation of rural development.

This revised orientation had been proposed by the ACC Task Force on Rural Development as the result of its own appraisal of its work, which took place at its ninth meeting (Rome, Italy, 5 and 6 February).<sup>(3)</sup> The Task Force, established in 1976 to co-ordinate assistance to States in their rural development programmes, concluded that the original objectives of its effort had not been completely achieved. It proposed a work programme realistically designed for implementation and conforming to an explicit time frame and clearly designed output. These conclusions, mentioned in the 1981 ACC overview report to the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(1)</sup> were endorsed by the Consultative Committee, which agreed that a further review and appraisal of inter-agency action in this area should take place by the end of 1983.

The results of the 1981 appraisal were considered in May/June by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC),<sup>(2)</sup> which generally agreed with the ACC assessment that the Task Force had not been as successful as desired. The Committee noted that the Programme of Action of the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development<sup>(4)</sup> had set out inter-agency tasks and that the new work programme proposed by the Task Force was designed to produce outputs of direct use to Governments within a specified time period. It recommended that a new progress review be presented to the Economic and Social Council through CPC in 1984.

Special measures for the least developed and other developing countries

Least developed countries

Among the 122 developing Member States of the United Nations in 1981, 31 had been officially designated as least developed countries (LDCs), including one—Guinea-Bissau—added to the Organization's list in May by the Economic and Social Council (p. 412). Their special problems, and ways to alleviate them, were the focus of the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris in September (p. 406).

The table on p. 403 contains selected basic economic and social indicators for these countries as compared with all developing countries. The data, published by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD),<sup>(2)</sup> updates information furnished to the Conference on LDCs by its secretariat.<sup>(1)</sup>

Comprehensive New Programme of Action

Implementation of the Immediate Action Programme (1979-1981)

After receiving preliminary information from the Secretary-General on the results of the Immediate Action Programme for the least developed countries (LDCs), the Economic and Social Council expressed deep concern in July 1981 that the Programme had not been fully implemented more than two years after its adoption and nearly at the end of the programme period (1979-1981). This provision was incorporated in a resolution of 20 July on preparations for the Conference on LDCs.<sup>(7)</sup> The phrase "nearly at the end of the programme period" was added to the original draft by its sponsor-Venezuela, on behalf of the Council members belonging to the Group of 77—after Australia remarked that a number of delegations thought it premature to declare the Programme a failure when data for the whole period were not available.

In another action on 20 July,<sup>(9)</sup> orally proposed by the Council President and adopted without vote, the Council took note of an initial report by the Secretary-General on the Programme's implementation.<sup>(4)</sup> The report, prepared in response to a 1980 General Assembly request to monitor implementation of measures in favour of LDCs,<sup>(8)</sup> contained no substantive information. Rather, it drew attention to studies prepared for the Conference on LDCs and to the fact that the Preparatory Committee for the Conference had also been asked to monitor progress under the Programme.

The Committee undertook this review at its June/July session<sup>(2)</sup> but reached no conclusions, devoting most of its attention to Conference preparations (p. 404).

In further response to the Assembly request, the Secretary-General included, in his November report on the Conference,<sup>(3)</sup> a review of progress in the Programme's implementation. The report summarized information supplied by individual donor countries, the United Nations system and multilateral donor agencies. It concluded that sufficient financing had not been provided to meet one of the Programme's two main aims—an immediate boost to the economies of LDCs and alleviation of their most pressing social needs. Despite efforts by some donors, overall concessional financial resources to LDCs had declined in 1979 and, according to preliminary estimates, again in 1980, in both total and per capita real terms. As to the other main aim, the request by the Group of 77 for at least $100 million to support preparations by LDCs for the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s remained unfulfilled.

Also included in the Secretary-General's report was information about activities by United Nations bodies in implementation of the Immediate Action Programme, including the following:

- Department of Technical Co-operation for Development. Twenty-two projects in 18 countries encompassing regional and national economic planning, strengthening and creating project formulation and evaluation units, and rural development; expert missions on mineral development.

- Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP). Activities in agriculture, industry, environmental protection, regional trade expansion and co-operation, export promotion and other trade-related issues.

- Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA). Advisory services, training of personnel and research to assist Democratic Yemen and Yemen.

- World Food Council Assistance to 10 countries on food supply strategies to eradicate hunger and malnutrition.

- United Nations Industrial Development Organization. Technical assistance, training of personnel, industrial information services; solidarity meetings within the framework of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

- United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Expenditures of $139.3 million in 1979, $158.3 million in 1980 and an expected increase for 1981; in addition, $9.8 million in 1979, $14 million in 1980 and $15 million in 1981 <sup>(6)</sup> from the Special Measures Fund for LDCs; special intercountry programmes in Africa, the Arab States and Asia.

- World Food Programme. Economic and social development projects and emergency operations to promote agriculture, food production and rural development, and to improve nutrition and warehouse management.

- World Bank. Total commitments to LDCs of $858 million for 1979, $980 million for 1980 and $1,186 million (estimated) for 1981, with some 80 per cent of all International Development Association credits in fiscal 1980 (1 July 1979-30 June 1980) going to countries whose per capita gross national product did not exceed $360 (in 1978 dollars).

- International Monetary Fund. A total of 2,776 million in special drawing rights made available to LDCs during 1979 and 1980 from various Fund facilities; $71.8 million distributed to them from gold sales profits.

- Universal Postal Union. Provision of experts and fellowships to Botswana, Cape Verde, Chad, the Comoros, Lesotho and Uganda.

- International Telecommunication Union. Help in development planning and improvement of training schemes; efforts to enable African countries to attain some objectives of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988) (p. 614).

- Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization. Technical assistance to 13 countries in training of personnel, developing dry docks and other port facilities, and reorganization and equipping of shipyards.

- World Intellectual Property Organization. Award of 43 fellowships for training or study courses; assistance in drafting or revising national legislation concerning intellectual property rights; aid to two African bodies for the establishment of documentation and information centres concerned with patents.

- International Fund for Agricultural Development. Assistance to LDCs amounting to $306 million—about 35 per cent of the Fund's total aid—between December 1977 and December 1980, through either development loans on highly concessional terms or grants for technical assistance and research.

- General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Special and differential treatment and technical assistance provided under tariff and non-tariff measures agreed during the Tokyo Round of negotiations, in force from 1 January 1980.<sup>(10)</sup>

Implementation of special measures in favour of the least developed countries

At its, 38th plenary meeting, on 20 July 1981, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Review of progress in the implementation of special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries, including those of the immediate Action Programme for 1979-1981".

UN Conference on LDCs

Conference preparations. Plans for the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries were completed at the third session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, held at Geneva from 29 June to 10 July 1981.

The Committee considered a "non-paper" by the Conference secretariat suggesting a working draft of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s. This was considered by a Contact Group, along with several informal texts and amendments submitted by different groups. The Committee decided to transmit to the Conference, annexed to its report,<sup>(6)</sup> all these texts together with the Chairman's statement on the discussion, outlining areas of the draft on which differing views remained. The Committee further agreed that, to aid government preparations, the Chairman should prepare a synoptic paper to reflect the various proposals.

The Committee decided to bring to the attention of the pre-Conference Consultation among Senior Officials (Paris, 27 and 28 August) the Chairman's proposals for the provisional agenda and organization of work of the Conference. The Committee also approved the Conference's provisional rules of procedure.

Also prior to the Conference, each LDC prepared a presentation describing its economic situation, prospects and needs. These were reviewed by each country with its aid partners at a series of clustered meetings between April and June. Each meeting considered development potentials, bottle-necks, development objectives and priorities, assistance requirements, and projects and programmes.

A memorandum by Chad on its emergency assistance needs was presented at a meeting during the Conference.

Additional regional preparations included the first meeting of the Conference of Ministers of African LDCs (Addis Ababa, 26-30 July)<sup>(4)</sup> and the Ministerial Meeting of LDCs of the ESCAP and ECWA Regions (Bangkok, Thailand, 10 and 11 August).<sup>(5)</sup> The Bangkok Meeting emphasized the need for follow-up to the Programme of Action and requested the Conference to consider establishing a calendar of meetings, including a mid-term review.

A report on the situation and prospects of LDCs, with emphasis on plans for the 1980s, was submitted to the Conference by its Secretary-General.<sup>(1)</sup> After a sector-by-sector review of their problems and possibilities, the report detailed the kinds of support the international community could render.

Inter-agency consultations on the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for LDCs, devoted mainly to preparations for the Conference, were held at Geneva on 12 and 13 January,<sup>(2)</sup> 28 and 29 April<sup>(3)</sup> and 13 and 14 July. At the April meetings, participants expressed their views on follow-up to the Conference (p. 408).

On 27 June, the UNDP Governing Council requested the Administrator to ensure the full participation of UNDP in the Conference and, within existing administrative resources, to prepare for any role which might be requested of it regarding implementation of the Programme of Action for the 1980s.<sup>(12)</sup>

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, after expressing concern that the Immediate Action Programme (1979-1981) had not been fully implemented (p. 401), urged donor Governments and other United Nations Member States to attend the Conference at the highest political level and make firm commitments to support and implement the measures agreed. The Council also appealed to donors, Member States and United Nations bodies for substantial aid to LDCs, particularly during the 1980s.

These actions were incorporated into a resolution<sup>(11)</sup> adopted without vote. The text was submitted by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77 after informal consultations had been held to revise the Group's original draft.

Australia was concerned that the request for firm commitments came close to prejudging the issue, while Canada stated that it did not usually make firm advance commitments to measures that had not been defined or agreed. The USSR spoke similarly and said it would not take on additional financial obligations.

United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

Recalling resolution 122(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, by which it endorsed, as one of its major priorities, a Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries in two phases: an Immediate Action Programme (1979-1981) and a Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s, Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 34/203 of 19 December 1979 and 35/205 of 16 December 1980, by which the Assembly decided to convene the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, with the objective of finalizing, adopting and supporting the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s.

Noting with great satisfaction that the Conference will be held in Paris in September 1981.

Recalling resolution 887(XXXVII), adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held at Nairobi in June 1981, on the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, by which all donors, States Members of the United Nations and international organizations were urged to make firm pledges during the Conference in order to launch effectively, immediately after the Conference, the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the least developed countries, to be finalized and adopted at the Conference,

Noting also General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, by which the Assembly adopted the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and in particular the subsection on the least developed countries, in which the Assembly stated, inter alia, that, as an essential priority within the Strategy, the least developed countries—the economically weakest and poorest countries with the most formidable structural problems—required a special programme of sufficient size and intensity consistent with their national plans and priorities to make a decisive break from their past and present situation and their bleak prospects.

Deeply concerned about the serious and deteriorating economic and social conditions of the least developed countries,

Noting with appreciation that some developed countries have taken positive steps towards the implementation of resolution 122(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

1. Expresses deep concern that the Immediate Action Programme (1979-1981) has not been fully implemented more than two years after its adoption and nearly at the end of the programme period;

2. Expresses its gratitude to those Governments which have provided assistance for the preparation of the forthcoming United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other United Nations bodies for their efforts in the preparation of the Conference;

4. Takes note of the statements made during the Council's second regular session of 1981 on the forthcoming Conference;

5. Notes with appreciation that the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity decided, inter alia, in resolution 887(XXXVII), to call upon the current Chairman of the Organization of African Unity to address the Conference on behalf of that organization;

6. Urges all donor Governments and States Members of the United Nations to attend the Conference at the highest possible political level and to make firm commitments to support and implement the measures agreed to at the Conference, in order to launch effectively, immediately after the Conference, the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the least developed countries, to be finalized and adopted at the Conference;

7. Appeals to all donor Governments, States Members of the United Nations and appropriate United Nations organizations and programmes to provide substantial financial and material assistance to the least developed countries to support their domestic efforts aimed at promoting rapid and self-sustained socio-economic development, in particular during the 1980s.

Programme of Action for the 1980s. The Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries—the second phase of the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for LDCs (p. 401)—was adopted by acclamation by the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 1 to 14 September 1981.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Programme consisted of a preamble and three chapters. The chapters dealt with the general situation and national measures, international support measures, and arrangements for implementation, follow-up and monitoring. Highlights of the Programme follow.

General situation and national measures. The main objectives of the Programme were: to promote structural changes to overcome the extreme economic difficulties of LDCs; to provide internationally accepted minimum standards for the poor; to identify and support major investment opportunities and priorities; and to mitigate the adverse effects of natural disasters. Efforts must be made to enable each country to increase its national income substantially, even double it by 1990 as compared to the late 1970s—requiring an annual growth rate of 7.2 per cent.

The countries would set themselves appropriate objectives. Agriculture should continue to receive the highest priority in national objectives, aiming towards, and if possible surpassing, the 4 per cent annual growth target set in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.<sup>(4)</sup> A first objective was to increase food production and food security in order to eliminate hunger and malnutrition rapidly, not later than 1990. Measures to develop forestry, fisheries and livestock were also set out. High priority was attached to comprehensive and integrated rural development.

The Programme called for LDCs to mobilize their human resources through education, training and provision of incentives, and stressed the indispensable role of women in development. Emphasis was placed on improving health, nutrition and human settlements, and on appropriate national measures for family planning and population control.

Substantial support was urged to enable LDCs to exploit and develop their natural resources, complete geological surveys, and map mineral and energy resources. Energy problems were viewed with concern and measures for priority action suggested.

In the manufacturing sector, the aim was to increase output to an overall annual rate of 9 per cent or more. Measures were specified to accelerate industrial development.

Attention was called to the need to strengthen and develop physical and institutional infrastructures, safeguard the environment and promote investments that would transform economies to a high level of operation. The additional problems of the 15 land-locked and 5 island countries among the 31 LDCs were mentioned. Foreign trade objectives to expand markets and thereby increase export earnings were listed, and measures were urged to improve response to disasters.

International support measures. Only a substantial increase in official development assistance (ODA) in real terms during the current decade would enable LDCs to achieve their objectives, the Programme declared. In this regard, all donor countries reaffirmed their commitment to the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product (GNP) for overall ODA, as envisaged in the International Development Strategy.<sup>(3)</sup> Most donors would devote 0.15 per cent of their GNP to LDCs, while others would double ODA to that group. The result, by 1985, was likely to be a doubling of ODA to those countries compared to the previous five years. As LDCs were currently financing only half their imports from export earnings, assistance was called for to improve their balance of payments.

Multilateral assistance agencies were asked for substantial and increased concessional aid. New mechanisms should be considered, such as international tax schemes for development, further International Monetary Fund (IMF) gold sales, a link between the creation of special drawing rights (SDRS) and development assistance, and interest subsidies.

To improve the quality and effectiveness of ODA, donors were called on to: provide grants or highly concessional loans, untied whenever possible; take into account the effects of inflation on project costs; and increasingly utilize national development agencies in recipient countries for programme implementation.

An immediate action component was included in the Programme to meet the most urgent needs in such areas as food and energy shortages, debt relief, disaster assistance, aid to overcome production bottle-necks, project identification and preparation, fertilizers and pumps to improve agricultural productivity, community-level job creation activities and assurances of predictable levels of assistance.

In regard to technical assistance, emphasis was placed on the prompt provision of experts and on the training of national personnel.

Suggested commercial policy measures included: improved access to markets; promotion of exports by diversification, an integrated vertical approach to expansion, long-term sales arrangements, regional and economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC), trade support measures and technical assistance; and international co-operation on commodities through agreements and compensation for export earnings shortfalls. Other economic policy measures included: strengthening transport and communications; improving food and agriculture by assistance to build food stocks, conclusion of an international wheat agreement, establishment of an international emergency food reserve and other measures; accelerating technological transformation; and support for ECDC and multi-country investments.

Arrangements for implementation, follow-up and monitoring. The Programme provided for national, regional and global co-operation and review.

At the national level, Governments might establish aid consultative groups or other arrangements with their development partners, or strengthen and broaden them where they already existed. Country review meetings should be held periodically, preferably starting by 1983, to consider each country's economic situation and its progress in implementing the Programme of Action, and to review aid conditions and secure further assistance. The Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) would be invited to be represented at those meetings, which would take place at the initiative of the interested LDCs. In a separate resolution,<sup>(2)</sup> the Conference noted the reports on review meetings already held (p. 405) and recommended them for consideration in follow-up action on the Programme.

At the global level, UNCTAD would have the focal role in elaborating arrangements for implementation. The Conference recommended to the General Assembly that the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries should meet at a high level in 1985 for a mid-term progress review and consider an end-of-decade review, possibly in the form of a second United Nations Conference on LDCs.

For global monitoring, the UNCTAD secretariat, in collaboration with United Nations bodies, would prepare information and analyse progress and policy issues. To help countries with planning, feasibility studies and project preparation in the first half of the 1980s, donors should make special allocations to the UNDP Special Measures Fund for LDCs or through other channels.

The Secretary-General was requested to make recommendations to the Assembly's 1981 regular session on arrangements to enable the United Nations Secretariat to perform follow-up, monitoring and implementation services.

After adoption of the Programme, Conference participants expressed general satisfaction at the outcome.

The Group of 77 felt the Conference had been a positive, though not decisive, sign for resumption of North-South dialogue. China spoke in similar vein. Norway said it had hoped to see the Programme incorporate objectives and measures of a magnitude greater than those which had materialized; it regretted that certain concepts of the International Development Strategy had not been included.

Differing opinions were expressed on the modalities of development assistance.

The United Republic of Tanzania, speaking for the African Group, said it would have wanted a stronger and more unequivocal commitment on the flow of resources in real terms and within a specific time frame. Bangladesh remarked that, without giving up the goals of the International Development Strategy, the Conference had attempted to see how actual commitments and agreements could be reached.

The spokesman for the European Economic Community (EEC) said the donor countries among its members, in the context of efforts to reach the general ODA target of 0.7 per cent, would aim to allocate 0.15 per cent of their GNP as aid to LDCs; some had already surpassed that target. Finland reaffirmed its commitment to the 0.7 per cent target and said it would reach the 0.15 per cent level in the coming years. Japan stated that it would try to increase assistance to LDCs in the context of its new medium-term ODA target. Saudi Arabia pointed out that its annual average aid contributions represented 6 per cent of its GNP and that 22 LDCs were among the recipients.

Australia said it would maintain a flow of resources in the context of its regional priorities and its concern to assist those in greatest need; it had more than doubled its aid to LDCs between 1978 and 1981. New Zealand could not accept specific financial sub-targets, but in assisting South Pacific countries would pay special regard to the Programme, which was directly relevant to the needs of island developing countries. The United States said its position of not accepting specific ODA targets had not changed; it continued to oppose a link between SDRs and aid, and could not support the concept of international taxation.

China stated that, in terms of being able to provide aid, it could not be placed in the same category as those developed or donor countries mentioned in reference to ODA.

Bulgaria, on behalf of the Eastern European States and Mongolia, said it viewed recommendations on financial and other assistance as directed towards industrially developed capitalist States; those socialist States were determined to contribute significantly to the Programme's measures and targets which corresponded to the principles of the socialist system and of their system of economic relations with developing countries.

With regard to LDC exports, the EEC spokesman said EEC would examine ways of meeting the recommendation on export earnings stabilization and further improvements to the EEC scheme of generalized preferences. The United States considered IMF the best forum for dealing with financial difficulties caused by export earnings shortfalls, while Canada would have preferred the Programme to refer to the IMF balance-of-payments approach to export earnings compensation and Japan felt that studies on this subject should be continued in the international organizations already dealing with it.

Implementation of the Programme of Action. Initial steps to follow up the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs were authorized by the General Assembly in December 1981 and United Nations organizations made plans for inter-agency co-ordination in implementing the Programme.

At the fourth inter-agency consultations on the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for LDCs, convened by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) at Geneva on 28 and 29 April,<sup>(2)</sup> participants expressed the view that follow-up for review and co-ordination of assistance to LDCs should not duplicate existing national, regional and international mechanisms, and that full consultations should take place with the agencies concerned.

On 30 October, ACC decided that implementation and follow-up by secretariats in the United Nations system would be carried out through inter-agency consultations to be convened by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation within the ACC work programme.<sup>(9)</sup>

Responding to the request contained in the Programme (p. 407), the Secretary-General, in a report of 9 November to the General Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> made proposals for United Nations Secretariat services for follow-up, monitoring and implementation, to be provided by the Director-General, UNCTAD, and the regional commissions for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Western Asia.

Under these arrangements, at the national level the Secretariat would help organize country reviews if requested by the Governments concerned and resident co-ordinators for United Nations system development assistance in each LDC would ensure coherence in the contributions of participating organizations. Regional commissions would contribute to the follow-up within their areas and assist in organizing and synchronizing country reviews. At the global level, where the Conference had proposed that UNCTAD play the focal role, the UNCTAD secretariat would prepare information and submit progress reports, while other United Nations bodies would report periodically on their own contribution.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted a resolution on the results of the Conference<sup>(7)</sup> by which it endorsed the Programme of Action, called, on Member States and international organizations to implement it immediately as part of international action for the establishment of a new international economic order, and urged donors to implement their commitments and to make adequate special allocation to the Special Measures Fund of UNDP or other suitable channels. After reaffirming that LDCs had primary responsibility for their development, the Assembly decided that review and monitoring of progress in implementation of the Programme should be undertaken as envisaged therein, that resources to be made available to UNCTAD and other United Nations bodies would be adequate for the purpose and that the mid-term review would be carried out by the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on LDCs at a high-level meeting in 1985. The Secretary-General was requested to report in 1982 on the resolution's implementation.

This resolution was adopted, without vote, as recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved it in like manner on 7 December. The draft was submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman following informal consultations on a text submitted by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77,<sup>(1)</sup> subsequently withdrawn.

In addition to drafting changes, the resolution differed from the Group's text in several respects. The paragraph by which the Assembly reaffirmed the responsibility of LDCs for their own development was not in the earlier version. By the Group's draft, the Assembly would have called on the developed countries in particular to implement the Programme and would have decided to ensure that additional resources were made available to the appropriate United Nations bodies for follow-up. Also, the Assembly would have decided to convene the Intergovernmental Group in order to carry out the mid-term review; by the compromise text it decided that the Group should carry out the review and that the results be made available to it for review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy.<sup>(4)</sup> Further, the Group of 77 text would have had the Assembly urge that aid consultative groups or other review arrangements be established without delay; whereas by the adopted text, the Assembly called on States, the United Nations system and other relevant agencies to respond favourably to invitations to participate in such consultations.

Also on 17 December, the Assembly adopted without vote a decision<sup>(10)</sup> whereby it took note of the report of the Conference Preparatory Committee (p. 404) and the report of the Secretary-General on the Conference (p. 408). On 7 December, the Second Committee had approved the draft in the same manner, on an oral proposal by the Chairman.

Special measures for LDCs were called for in three other resolutions adopted on 17 December. In a resolution on the United Nations Capital Development Fund,<sup>(8)</sup> the Assembly endorsed a UNDP Governing Council proposal of 19 June that the Fund be enabled to play a direct role in the Programme's implementation<sup>(11)</sup> and requested the Council to enhance the Fund's capacity to respond to the priority needs of LDCs. In a resolution on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(5)</sup> the Assembly requested the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to increase technical co-operation and the programmes and projects for LDCs. In a resolution on food,<sup>(6)</sup> the Assembly reiterated its belief that food aid for LDCs should be provided, in so far as possible, in the form of grants or on highly concessional terms and that donors should consider paying transport costs.

Following the adoption of the resolution on follow-up to the Conference, Australia, New Zealand, Poland (on behalf of the Eastern European States) and the United States reiterated the positions they had taken at the Conference (p. 407).

In the Second Committee's discussion, most speakers welcomed the results of the Conference as constructive and urged action to ensure implementation of the Programme. Among LDCs, Cape Verde said it had intensified its agricultural development efforts but would have to rely on international assistance for its food security. Mali gave rural development and transport and communications as its priorities. Democratic Yemen urged that developed countries provide financial support and open up their markets to help LDCs change their structures and diversify their economies.

With regard to targets for international assistance, Canada said it intended to devote 0.15 per cent of its GNP as ODA to LDCs. France attached particular importance to the unilateral pledges made by donors at the Conference, including some which had announced specific budgetary provisions for ODA. Japan hoped donors would double their aid to LDCs in the first half of the 1980s. New Zealand mentioned its long-term commitment to assist small Pacific island countries. Norway, speaking for the Nordic States, endorsed the 0.15 per cent target as a whole but said it should be viewed in the context of overall development assistance targets and time frames in the International Development Strategy. Denmark, also speaking for this group, welcomed the Conference's mention of the UNDP Special Measures Fund for LDCs as a channel for allocating resources. The United States supported the Programme as a reasonable balance between the primary responsibility of LDCs for their development and the responsibility of the international community to help; the United States had significantly increased its assistance to those countries.

The need for greater assistance to the landlocked LDCs was stressed by Afghanistan. The Congo believed that a number of the poorer developing countries should be able to benefit from the assistance advocated for LDCs. Egypt thought the results of the Conference should be incorporated into the International Development Strategy. Israel said it was willing to continue to share with LDCs its experience in agricultural production, an area to which it believed those countries should accord highest priority. Mexico regarded the Programme as inadequate and said efforts should be made to exceed the agreed ODA target. Romania believed the developed countries had a special responsibility to assist LDCs, though not at the expense of other developing countries.

The Eastern European States held colonialist, neo-colonialist and imperialist practices to be mainly responsible for the backwardness of LDCs. Bulgaria said their basic problems could not be solved unless fundamental issues such as ensuring peace and promoting disarmament were borne in mind. The Byelorussian SSR considered that a solution depended on the efforts of LDCs to use their resources effectively, introduce reforms, protect their sovereignty over their natural resources and strengthen the economic role of the state sector. The German Democratic Republic said some LDCs had expressed concern at politically motivated decisions to suspend aid to them; a credible commitment to the Programme for LDCs meant being guided by those countries' objective economic needs, which excluded a political approach.

Regarding follow-up to the Conference, Bangladesh favoured the arrangement envisaged in the Programme according to which each LDC had the option of selecting the lead agency for its contacts with its development partners and working out details of consultative arrangements with that agency. Austria remarked that the regional meetings that had preceded the Conference (p. 405) had initiated an innovative and promising approach to collaboration between LDCs and donor countries.

Australia was of the view that UNCTAD should not require additional resources for follow-up. The Sudan, on the other hand, hoped the Assembly would provide UNCTAD and other bodies with the financial and human resources they needed for the purpose.

United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Reaffirming that in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade the General Assembly stated, inter alia, that as an essential priority within the Strategy, the least developed countries-the economically weakest and poorest countries with the most formidable structural problems-require a special programme of sufficient size and intensity consistent with their national plans and priorities to make a decisive break from their past and present situation and their bleak prospects,

Recalling resolution 122(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in which the Conference decided, as one of its major priorities, to launch a Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries in two phases, an Immediate Action Programme, 1979-1981, and a Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s, which was endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 34/210 of 19 December 1979,

Recalling also its resolutions 34/203 of 19 December 1979 and 35/205 of 16 December 1980 on convening a United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries with the objective of finalizing, adopting and supporting the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the least developed countries,

Deeply concerned at the gravity of the deteriorating economic and social situation of the least developed countries and their dismal development during the past two decades, as well as their bleak development prospects for the 1990s.

Recalling that the objective of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, is to transform the economies of those countries towards self-sustained development and enable them to provide internationally accepted minimum standards of nutrition, health, transport and communications, housing and education as well as job opportunities to all their citizens, particularly to the rural and urban poor,

Expressing deepest concern that more than two years after the adoption of the Immediate Action Programme, 1979-1981, contained in resolution 122(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, very limited progress has been made towards its implementation,

Reaffirming that there is an immediate need for a greatly expanded programme, including a major increase in the transfer of additional resources, to meet the critical needs of the least developed countries and to help them promote more rapid socio-economic development,

Stressing that external support should be forthcoming from all developed countries, developing countries in a position to do so, multilateral development institutions and other sources,

Emphasising the particular importance of the contribution that economic co-operation and technical co-operation among developing countries can make, inter alia, to the development of the least developed among them,

Recognizing the need for extensive public awareness throughout the world of the desperate plight of the least developed countries and the importance and objectives of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Taking note of the Report of the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on secretariat services for the follow-up, monitoring and implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action,

1. Endorses the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Government and the people of France for acting as host to the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, as well as for their gracious hospitality, excellent arrangements and important contribution to the outcome of the Conference;

3. Calls upon all Member States as well as intergovernmental and multilateral institutions, the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, and all others concerned to take immediate, concrete and adequate steps to implement the Substantial New Programme of Action as part of the international action for the establishment of a new international economic order;

4. Emphasizes that, in view of their desperate socio-economic plight, the least developed countries need the urgent and special attention and the large-scale and continued support of the international community to enable them to progress towards self-reliant development, consistent with their own plans and programmes;

5. Strongly urges all donor countries to implement their commitments, as stated in paragraphs 61 to 69 of the Substantial New Programme of Action, so as to achieve, in that regard, a substantial increase of assistance for the development of the least developed countries;

6. Reaffirms that the least developed countries have primary responsibility for their overall development and that, although international support measures are vitally important, the domestic policies those countries pursue will be of critical importance for the success of their development efforts;

7. Urges all donor countries to make adequate special allocation to the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Capital Development Fund, or through other suitable channels for the least developed countries, in order to provide the extra resources needed by the Governments of those countries for more intensive planning efforts, feasibility studies and project preparation over the first half of the decade of the 1980s and, for that purpose, invites the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to take appropriate action to mobilize additional resources for the activities under his administration;

8. Decides that regular review and monitoring of the progress in the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action at the national, regional and global levels should be undertaken, as envisaged in that Programme, to maintain the momentum of commitments made by the international community and to promote the implementation of the plans and programmes of the least developed countries with a view to achieving accelerated growth rates and structural transformation of their economies;

9. Decides also that the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its high-level meeting in 1985 shall carry out the mid-term review, consider the possibility of holding a global review at the end of the decade, which might, inter alia, take the form of a United Nations conference on the least developed countries, and readjust, as appropriate, the Substantial New Programme of Action for the second half of the decade in order to ensure its full implementation, and further decides that the results shall be made available to it, so that they may be taken fully into account in the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

10. Calls upon States, organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant agencies to give favourable response to invitations to participate in aid consultative groups or other arrangements to be established at the initiative of the least developed countries in accordance with paragraphs 110 to 116 of the Substantial New Programme of Action as a mechanism for the regular and periodic review and implementation of that Programme and suggests that the first round of review meetings for that purpose at the country level should take place as soon as possible, preferably by 1983;

11. Invites the governing bodies of appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to take the necessary and appropriate measures for the effective implementation and follow-up of the Substantial New Programme of Action within their respective spheres of competence and mandates;

12. Decides further to ensure that resources that will be made available to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system are adequate for the effective follow-up, review, monitoring and implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action, including those specified in the report of the Secretary-General on the secretariat services required, as well as in paragraph 8 of the present resolution;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in conformity with paragraph 123 of the Substantial New Programme of Action, to entrust the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, in close collaboration with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the executive secretaries of the regional commissions and the lead agencies for the aid groups, with the responsibility of ensuring at the Secretariat level the full mobilization and co-ordination of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system for the purpose of implementation and follow-up of the Substantial New Programme of Action and, for this purpose, to retain and effectively utilize the system of focal points in each United Nations agency, which was used in the preparations for the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly decision 36/448

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add.12) without vote, 7 December (meeting 46); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 69 (p).

United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries as well as of the report of the Secretary-General on the Conference.

List of LDCs

Guinea-Bissau was added in 1981 to the United Nations list of LDCs, raising the total number of countries therein to 31 (p. 403). The Economic and Social Council requested in July that the situation of Togo be examined with a view to its inclusion, and the General Assembly took similar action in December with respect to Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Liberia, and Sao Tome and Principe. Recommendations with respect to additions to the list continued to be made by the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) on the basis of three main criteria—per capita gross domestic product (GDP), share of manufacturing output in total GDP and adult literacy rate.

CDP ACTION. At its March/April 1981 session, in accordance with 1980 requests by the Economic and Social Council<sup>(12)</sup> and the General Assembly,<sup>(7)</sup> CDP reviewed the economic situation of Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Tonga and certain newly independent developing countries, with a view to their inclusion in the list of LDCs. The review was based on the most recent available data provided by the Secretariat in respect of the three main criteria,<sup>(3)</sup> covering the aforementioned countries and Dominica, Kiribati, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Solomon Islands, Tuvalu and Zimbabwe.

In its report to the Council,<sup>(4)</sup> CDP concluded that only Guinea-Bissau met the criteria and recommended that it be added to the list. The Committee added that the possibility of revising the criteria used to identify LDCs deserved to be explored, as did the broader question of the usefulness of such groupings as developing island and land-locked countries and those most seriously affected by economic crises.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (MAY). On 8 May, the Economic and Social Council acted on the CDP recommendation by deciding without vote to add Guinea-Bissau to the list. The resolution to this effect,<sup>(5)</sup> based on informal consultations, was submitted by a Council Vice-President.

In the discussion, Djibouti objected to its exclusion from the list, saying that it was a drought-stricken country whose per capita annual GDP (given in the Secretariat note to CDP as $947 at current market prices for the period 1976-1978) did not take into account high local prices, the presence of many expatriates and the overvaluation of production compared to less urbanized countries having more subsistence production.

Regarding criteria for inclusion in the list, Australia thought additional factors such as nutrition levels and life expectancy should be taken into account; it was also concerned that the current measures might exclude large countries with high enough aggregate figures but having major pockets of poverty, as well as small countries, such as several in the Pacific, whose GDP had been distorted by large amounts of external aid. Denmark, for the Nordic States, agreed with CDP on the desirability for a fresh appraisal of the criteria. Brazil observed that such a review would require political as well as technical input. Bangladesh stated that its approval of the resolution was not intended to prejudge its position on the views of CDP regarding criteria.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (JULY). On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council requested CDP to examine the economic situation of Togo, with a view to including it in the list on the basis of existing criteria, and to make a recommendation to the Council as soon as possible. The Council acted by adopting without vote a resolution<sup>(6)</sup> sponsored by Burundi, Senegal, Togo, Zaire and Zambia, and introduced by Zambia.

The action was taken after the Council President received a request to this effect from Togo, contained in a letter dated 6 July,<sup>(2)</sup> which cited figures concerning its economy and noted that it had been classified as least developed by the European Economic Community.

In the Council's discussion, Australia and Denmark reiterated their view that the criteria should be re-examined at an appropriate time; Australia added that the information provided by Togo suggested that its characteristics did not differ much from those of countries which CDP had found not to meet the criteria. The United States also supported a review of criteria and said it could agree to applying them retroactively to countries already on the list if that was generally regarded as appropriate. Togo and Zambia agreed on the need for a review of criteria, but Togo said its figures had been calculated according to accepted methods. Bangladesh opposed any proposal to modify the criteria.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 17 December, in resolutions on special economic assistance to specific African States, the General Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council to invite CDP to consider the eligibility of Djibouti,<sup>(11)</sup> Equatorial Guinea,<sup>(8)</sup> Liberia,<sup>(9)</sup> and Sao Tome and Principe<sup>(10)</sup> for inclusion in the list of LDCs, in the light of new data from those Governments. In the case of Equatorial Guinea, the Assembly noted that UNDP would assist the Government in preparing new statistics on national income and population. The Secretary-General was requested to assist Sao Tome and Principe to prepare new national income figures. In regard to Liberia, the Assembly invited the Government to provide the data to CDP.

The preamble of the resolution on Liberia mentioned a letter from that country to the Council President,<sup>(*)</sup> dated 20 October, containing statistics on its economic situation and asking for a study of its economic conditions so that it could be classified among the least developed.

Inclusion of Guinea-Bissau in the list of the least developed countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its decision 1980/161 of 24 July 1980, in which it requested the Committee for Development Planning to expedite the review of the economic situation of Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Tonga and certain newly independent developing countries, with a view to their inclusion in the list of the least developed countries, and to make recommendations concerning those countries to the Council at its first regular session of 1981,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/106 of 5 December 1980, in which the Assembly decided to authorize the Economic and Social Council to consider, at its first regular session of 1981, the recommendations of the Committee for Development Planning on the above-mentioned countries and, accordingly, to add any of those countries to the list of the least developed countries on the basis of existing criteria and the most recent data relating to the above-mentioned countries, and in which the Assembly further decided that that exercise should be without prejudice to any future overall review of the list of the least developed countries which might be authorized at a later date by the Assembly in accordance with established procedures,

Taking note of chapter IV of the report of the Committee for Development Planning on its seventeenth session and statements made in the Council in this regard, Decides to add Guinea-Bissau to the list of the least developed countries.

Review of the economic situation in Togo with a view to the inclusion of that country in the list of the least developed countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2768(XXVI) of 18 November 1971, 3487(XXX) of 12 December 1975, and 32/92 and 32/99 of 13 December 1977, establishing the current list of the least developed countries.

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 34/121, 34/123, 34/124, 34/126, 34/131 and 34/132 of 14 December 1979,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 34/203 and 34/210 of 19 December 1979 and 35/205 of 16 December 1980 concerning the convening of a United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Having examined the letter of 6 July 1981 addressed to the President of the Economic and Social Council by the Permanent Representative of Togo to the United Nations Office and the specialized agencies at Geneva concerning the serious economic situation of his country,

Requests the Committee for Development Planning to examine the economic situation of Togo, with a view to including that country in the list of the least developed countries on the basis of existing criteria and the most recent data relating to those criteria and that country, and to make a recommendation concerning Togo for consideration by the Council as early as possible.

Land-locked developing countries

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which managed the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries (p. 415), identified a total of 21 such countries in 1981: 14 in Africa, 5 in Asia and the Pacific and 2 in Latin America.

The Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs (p. 406) pointed out that 15 of the 31 LDCs were land-locked and urged that, in co-operation with their transit neighbours, they should try to improve transit/transport-related facilities.<sup>(1)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 17 December 1981, by a resolution on action related to the needs and problems of land-locked developing countries,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly reaffirmed their rights to free access to and from the sea and to freedom of transit. It appealed to States and international organizations to implement urgently the actions envisaged in earlier United Nations resolutions, including three adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD),<sup>(4)</sup> as well as in the International Development Strategy<sup>(2)</sup> and the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s. Donor countries, others able to do so and international organizations were urged to provide financial and technical aid in grant form or concessional loans for transport and transit facilities. The Assembly also invited transit countries to co-operate with the land-locked developing countries in harmonizing transport planning and promoting joint transport ventures.

The resolution, sponsored by 20 nations, was adopted by a recorded vote of 137 to none, with 6 abstentions. Paragraph 1, reaffirming the right of free access and transit to and from the sea, was adopted by a recorded vote of 59 to 9, with 66 abstentions.

The draft was approved on 13 November by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by a recorded vote of 120 to none, with 7 abstentions, following the approval of paragraph 1 by a recorded vote of 46 to 11, with 65 abstentions. Both Committee votes were requested by India.

Introducing the text in the Committee, Bolivia stated that absence of tangible results showed that the international community was not fully aware of the difficulties faced by land-locked developing countries in exporting products. It was essential not only to remedy an injustice but to correct a situation in which some countries were taking advantage of efforts made by others.

Explaining their 'negative votes on the paragraph concerning free access and transit, Angola, Nigeria, Pakistan and Yemen said these questions were best dealt with bilaterally. This point was also made by Liberia and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya; they added that the issues affected the sovereignty of transit countries and had been discussed extensively in the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. India and Thailand spoke similarly and also expressed reservations with regard to the invitation to transit countries to harmonize transport facilities. Sierra Leone found the paragraph's wording too categorical.

Among those abstaining in the vote on the paragraph, Algeria, Ghana, Jordan, Mauritania, Senegal, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and the United Republic of Cameroon saw the matter as bilateral or subregional. Some of these, along with Benin and Morocco, mentioned that the Conference on the Law of the Sea was dealing with the matter. Mozambique shared the reservations expressed regarding free access.

Voting for the paragraph and the resolution as a whole, Brazil said lack of access to the sea posed problems for the economic development of the least developed land-locked countries which could be significantly reduced by bilateral agreements. Peru and Uruguay stated that adoption of the resolution should not prejudice the results of the Conference on the Law of the Sea; Uruguay added that international law did not provide for unlimited rights of communication with the sea. The USSR said it had bilateral agreements with a number of land-locked countries and had helped some develop their transport infrastructures; the paragraph would place no more responsibilities on the USSR than it had already assumed. Viet Nam believed the issues of access and transit should be settled bilaterally, in full respect for sovereignty.

Abstaining in the vote on the resolution as a whole, Pakistan said the text should have taken account of the needs of transit countries, some of which were among the world's poorest and also needed international assistance to develop their infrastructures.

During 1981, special economic assistance programmes established by the General Assembly were under way in seven land-locked developing countries in Africa: Botswana, Central African Republic, Chad, Lesotho, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe (p. 497).

Specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reiterating the specific actions related to the particular needs of the land-locked developing countries stated in resolutions 63(III) of 19 May 1972, 98(IV) of 31 May 1976 and 123(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 31/157 of 21 December 1976, 32/191 of 19 December 1977, 33/150 of 20 December 1978, 34/198 of 19 December 1979 and 35/58 of 5 December 1980 and other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries,

Bearing in mind various other resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, its related organs and the specialized agencies, emphasizing special and urgent measures in favour of land-locked developing countries, Recalling the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and the prohibitive transit, transport and trans-shipment costs impose serious constraints on the socio-economic development of land-locked developing countries,

Noting with concern that the measures taken so far in favour of land-locked developing countries and the assistance given fall far short of their needs,

1. Reaffirms the right of land-locked developing countries to free access to and from the sea and their right to freedom of transit;

2. Appeals to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries envisaged in resolutions 63(III), 98(IV) and 123(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries and in other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

3. Urges all donor countries, as well as others in a position to do so, and the international organizations concerned, to provide land-locked developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction and improvement of their transport and transit infrastructures and facilities;

4. Urges also the international community and multilateral and bilateral financial institutions to intensify efforts in raising the net flow of resources to land-locked developing countries to help offset the adverse effects of their disadvantageous geographical situation on their economic development efforts, in keeping with the overall development needs of each land-locked developing country;

5. Invites the transit countries to co-operate effectively with the land-locked developing countries in harmonizing transport planning and promoting other joint ventures in the field of transport at the regional, subregional and bilateral levels;

6. Commends the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other United Nations agencies for their work and the assistance they have provided to the land-locked developing countries and invites them to continue to take appropriate and effective measures to respond to the specific needs of those countries;

7. Invites the international community to give financial support to interested transit and land-locked developing countries in the construction of alternative routes to the sea;

8. Recommends continued and intensified activities relating to the conducting of necessary studies and the implementation of special actions and action programmes for the land-locked developing countries, including those in the area of economic co-operation among developing countries, as well as those that have been envisaged in the programme of work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the regional commissions and other programmes and activities at the regional and subregional levels.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran,<sup>a</sup> Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

UN Special Fund for

Land-locked Developing Countries

No new projects were financed in 1981 by the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, in view of the low level of contributions to the Fund (p. 416). Some allocations were made to small-scale projects previously approved. Total allocations since the Fund became operational amounted to $681,000, covering 12 projects. At year's end some $400,000 was unencumbered, of which $350,000 had been allotted to the three regions containing land-locked developing countries; negotiations were under way for commitment of this money. The Fund was in its fifth year; its statute was approved by the General Assembly in 1976.<sup>(3)</sup>

On 19 June, <sup>(9)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council appealed to all countries to review their position with respect to the Fund and to contribute urgently and generously. The Administrator was requested to report on the Fund's activities biennially, beginning in 1983.

On 22 July, <sup>(6)</sup> the Economic and Social Council decided without vote to take note of the Governing Council's action and a report by the Administrator<sup>(2)</sup> on the Fund's 1980 activities.<sup>(10)</sup> The draft decision was similarly approved on 17 July by the Council's Third (Programme and Coordination) Committee, on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly, urging Member States to give due consideration to the special constraints affecting the development of land-locked developing countries, appealed to donor countries to review their position with respect to the Fund, with a view to giving greater support. It appealed to Member States—particularly developed countries—and to financial institutions to contribute generously in order to implement measures relating to land-locked developing countries provided for in the International Development Strategy.<sup>(4)</sup> The Assembly requested the UNDP Administrator, in consultation with the Secretary-General of UNCTAD and heads of other bodies, to continue action in favour of those countries.

The resolution was adopted by 119 votes to none, with 22 abstentions. The draft, submitted by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77, was approved by the Second Committee on 16 November by 112 votes to none, with 20 abstentions. Introducing the text, Algeria remarked that, owing to lack of resources, the Fund had been unable to meet the needs of the land-locked developing countries.

Explaining the Nordic States' abstentions in the vote, Denmark said they opposed the proliferation of special funds and preferred to channel aid through existing bodies. For the European Community members, the United Kingdom said they felt that assistance to the countries in question should be proportional to their individual levels of development and, therefore, they preferred to contribute through bilateral or multilateral programmes.

On oral proposals of its President, the Assembly took two decisions on 17 December, both without vote, deferring action on the inauguration of the permanent machinery envisaged for the Fund by its statute. First,<sup>(7)</sup> the Assembly deferred to 1982 the election of the Fund's Board of Governors. Second,<sup>(8)</sup> it took note of information contained in a note by the Secretary-General<sup>(1)</sup> to the effect that he was not submitting for Assembly confirmation an appointment for the post of Executive Director. The Fund thus continued on an interim basis under UNDP management, in collaboration with UNCTAD.

United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/177 of 21 December 1976, by which it approved the statute of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/113 of 15 December 1977, 33/85 of 15 December 1978, 34/209 of 19 December 1979 and 35/82 of 5 December 1980,

Taking account of resolution 123(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and decisions 80/21 of 26 June 1980 and 81/3 of 19 June 1981 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Recalling its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and the relevant provisions of the Strategy, in particular paragraphs 152 to 155,

Recalling further the relevant paragraphs of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Convinced that access to world markets at the least possible cost is an integral part of meaningful economic development of land-locked developing countries,

Bearing in mind that a large number of countries classified as least developed are land-locked developing countries.

Expressing deep concern at the consistently very low level of contributions that have been pledged to the Fund since its establishment,

Noting that, according to the report of the Secretary-General prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 34/207 of 19 December 1979, contributions to the Fund must increase significantly if it is to be effective in meeting the large requirements for reducing the real costs of transit for land-locked developing countries,

Noting further that the demands for assistance from the Fund are additional to, and generally different from, the types of activities financed from other sources of the United Nations system,

1. Urges all Member States to give due consideration to the special constraints affecting the economic and social development of land-locked developing countries;

2. Appeals to all donor countries to review their position with respect to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, with a view to extending greater support to it;

3. Also appeals to all Member States, in particular developed countries, and to multilateral and bilateral financial institutions to contribute significantly and generously to the Fund in order to implement the measures relating to land-locked developing countries provided for in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

4. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the executive heads of other related bodies, to continue to pursue action in favour of land-locked developing countries within the framework of the interim arrangements, bearing in mind that each country concerned should receive appropriate technical and financial assistance.

Finances of the Fund

Contributions. In 1981, a total of $39,570 was collected from 12 States in contributions to the Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, and 14 States pledged a total of $69,291 for 1982 (see table on following page). Most of the contributors were land-locked developing countries. The pledges were made at the 1981 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held at United Nations Headquarters in November (p. 426). Contributions pledged during the five years of the Fund's existence amounted to about $1 million.

Financial regulations. The General Assembly, on 18 December 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> authorized the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to adopt the financial regulations of the Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries and, in the mean time, to apply the UNDP Financial Regulations to the Fund. first be reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and would be reported to the Assembly following their adoption by the Council. This arrangement was to apply during the interim period before the Fund's own policy and management machinery was established.

This action modified a provision of the Fund's statute,<sup>(1)</sup> adopted by the Assembly in 1976, which specified that the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations would apply until the Assembly approved new ones on the recommendation of the Fund's Board of Governors. The Assembly's 1981 action was taken at the request of the Council, which asked on 30 June 1981<sup>(3)</sup> for authority to formulate financial regulations in respect of all funds which it administered, including the Special Fund (p. 451).

Island developing countries

In accordance with a 1979 resolution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), <sup>(3)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat issued in January 1981 a note for the Trade and Development Board<sup>(1)</sup> describing UNCTAD studies on common problems of island developing countries.

The note suggested six areas which might be examined by an intergovernmental group of experts, in the event that the Board established such a group, to examine the specific problems of developing island economies, as had been suggested in 1980:<sup>(4)</sup> statistics policy for effective planning; investment policy for national savings and for foreign capital; employment, training and migration policy; integration of marine space into national economic planning; response to technical change in transport and communications; and marketing and export promotion of goods and services.

On 20 March 1981, after considering the question, the Board decided to remit to its March 1982 session a draft decision, submitted by Mexico on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, which would have the Board decide that an intergovernmental group of experts be convened to prepare a comprehensive action programme to alleviate the special problems of island developing countries.<sup>(2)</sup>

Special economic assistance programmes coordinated by the United Nations were under way in three island developing countries in the Africa region during 1981: Cape Verde (p. 500), the Comoros (p. 506) and Sao Tome and Principe (p. 518). Multiagency missions, studying economic assistance needs resulting from hurricane damage and other problems, visited four Caribbean island nations: Dominica (p. 525), Grenada (p. 526), Saint Lucia (p. 527) and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines (p. 528). Several United Nations agencies were providing assistance to Tonga, in the Pacific (p. 530).

UN Special Fund for the most seriously affected countries

On 4 December 1981, the General Assembly decided without vote to continue performing the functions of the Board of Governors of the United Nations Special Fund pending further consideration of the matter in 1983.<sup>(3)</sup> It recalled its 1978 decision to suspend ad interim the activities of the Fund for lack of contributions.<sup>(2)</sup> The Fund was established by the Assembly in 1974 to assist countries most seriously affected by economic crises.

The 1981 decision was recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved without vote on 20 November a draft by its Chairman.

During the Committee's discussion of development and international economic co-operation, Sri Lanka urged reactivation of the Fund to meet the grave difficulties faced by the least developed countries.

United Nations Special Fund

At its 84th plenary meeting, on 4 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, recalling its decision 33/431 of 19 December 1978, in which it had decided, inter alia, to suspend the activities of the United Nations Special Fund, ad interim, and to perform the functions of the Board of Governors of the Fund, decided to continue performing the functions of the Board of Governors, within the context of its consideration of the item on development and international economic co-operation, pending subsequent consideration of the question by the Assembly at its thirty-eighth session.

Chapter II

Development assistance

Total contributions by Governments to the United Nations system to finance operational activities for development amounted to $5.3 billion in 1981, compared to $5.6 billion in 1980 (p. 420). Despite the drop in income, net transfers of resources for development purposes from the United Nations system to developing countries rose to $6 billion in 1981, up from $4.8 billion in 1980 (p. 419). Of this total, technical co-operation expenditures amounted to $2 billion, compared to $1.8 billion in the previous year (p. 431).

Expenditures by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), including the trust funds it managed, exceeded $1 billion for the first time; the share of UNDP in total system-wide, grant-financed technical co-operation remained at the same level as in 1980—about 50 per cent (p. 432). The United Nations itself, excluding the specialized agencies, delivered a technical co-operation programme of $297 million, of which $204 million came from UNDP (p. 459).

Development assistance, also referred to as operational activities for development, remained by far the largest component of United Nations operational activities. Some of this was rendered by United Nations programmes active in specific fields, of which the largest were the World Food Programme (p. 726), the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (p. 781) and the United Nations Children's Fund (p. 999).

Expenditures by the United Nations system on humanitarian and other assistance not directly related to development came to $648 million in 1981, raising the value of all operational activities to $6.7 billion. Such assistance included disaster aid, other emergency assistance and special economic assistance to countries undergoing unusual hardships (p. 471), as well as programmes of assistance to refugees (p. 1027). In addition to direct multilateral assistance, the United Nations promoted special measures for particular categories of countries, notably the least developed (p. 401).

Pledges for 1982, made to 19 United Nations funds and programmes covered by the 1981 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 3 and 4 November), totalled just over $1 billion as at 30 June 1982, compared to $1.1 billion in payments received for 1981 (p. 426). The General Assembly expressed deep concern in December that contributions to the funds and programmes included in United Nations pledging conferences for development activities had been stagnating and urged a rapid and substantial increase of contributions to the United Nations system's operational activities for development on a predictable and continuous basis.<sup>(9)</sup>

The United Nations Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation submitted his first annual report to the General Assembly on operational activities for development,<sup>(2)</sup> forming a basis for discussion by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee of financial and management aspects of development assistance by the United Nations system (p. 428).

For UNDP, 1981 marked the final year of its second development co-operation cycle, a five-year forward plan of comprehensive programming for technical co-operation (p. 432). Despite indications that resources available in the third cycle, spanning 1982-1986, might fall short of the total envisaged, the UNDP Governing Council, at its twenty-eighth session<sup>(3)</sup> (New York, 9 June-1 July), decided to retain, for purposes of forward planning, the level of resources previously envisaged, which assumed a 14 per cent average annual growth of voluntary contributions (p. 444). Both the Economic and Social Council, in July,<sup>(5)</sup> and the General Assembly, in December,<sup>(10)</sup> urged Governments to renew their efforts to provide the resources necessary to establish a sound financial basis for the Programme's planned activities for 1982-1986.

Also in December, the Assembly authorized the Governing Council to adopt revised financial regulations in respect of all funds administered by UNDP.<sup>(11)</sup>

The year 1981 marked the tenth anniversary of the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme, which at mid-year, for the first time, had 1,000 volunteers serving technical co-operation projects in 91 countries (p. 460). The Assembly, in December, noted with satisfaction the programme's achievement and reiterated its appeal for contributions to overcome the financial straits UNV was experiencing(s).

Promotion of technical co-operation among developing countries was expanding in the development assistance activities of the United Nations system (p. 462). At its second session (New York, 1-8 June),<sup>(1)</sup> the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries recommended a number of measures to overcome what it saw as insufficient progress in this area. The Economic and Social Council in July commended the Committee's decisions to the General Assembly,<sup>(4)</sup> which urged in November that Governments implement the agreements reached by the Committee.<sup>(6)</sup>

For the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), 1981 saw a 150 per cent increase in expenditures over the 1980 level, reaching nearly $50 million (p. 468). Most of its projects were for rural areas of least developed countries. In December, the Assembly approved a UNDP Governing Council recommendation that UNCDF should meet its own administrative and programme support casts.<sup>(7)</sup>

General aspects of operational activities for development

Financing

Contributions to operational activities for development conducted by the United Nations system decreased in 1981, although expenditures -partly financed by previous years' contributions -increased by 6 per cent over 1980. Pledges made at the 1981 United Nations Pledging Conference fell short of targets established by intergovernmental organizations.

Expenditures

According to the 1982 report on operational activities submitted by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation,<sup>(1)</sup> net transfers of resources from the United Nations system to developing countries amounted to $6 billion in 1981 (see table below), compared to $4.8 billion in 1980 and $4 billion in 1979. The 1981 figure consisted of $2.2 billion in grants, mainly for technical co-operation; $1.7 billion in concessional loans (commodity and capital assistance), and $2.2 billion in non-concessional disbursements. (Net transfers represent gross disbursements to recipients and borrowers, less interest and charges on loans.) Most of the loans and non-concessional aid was disbursed by the World Bank (including the International Development Association (IDA)) and the International Finance Corporation (IFC).

Both concessional and non-concessional flows increased, the latter in particular. Grant-financed expenditures- those undertaken by organizations of the system other than the World Bank, IFC and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)-rose by 6 per cent over 1980. Concessional flows (grants and concessional loans) accounted for 64 per cent of the total net transfer of resources through the system.

By far the greatest share of operational activities went to developing countries in support of national development programmes; a comparatively small share (about 7 per cent) was for regional, interregional and global activities.

Expenditures on technical co-operation amounted to $2 billion in 1981, compared to $1.8 billion in 1980 (p. 431).

Countries with a per capita gross national product (GNP) of less than $500 accounted for 78 per cent of the transfer of concessional resources through the United Nations system. There was a fairly even distribution of resource flows among the developing regions of the world on a per capita basis, reflecting the universality of participation by all countries in the system's operational activities.

Expenditures on refugee, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance amounted to $648 million in 1981. This brought the total of official development assistance transferred to developing countries through the United Nations system to $6.7 billion (see table on next page).

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, transmitted by S-G note, A/37/445.

Contributions

Total contributions to multilaterally funded operational activities for development declined in 1981. Payments by Governments and other official and non-official sources to the operational activities of the United Nations system amounted to $5.3 billion, compared to $5.6 billion in 1980 and $4.8 billion in 1979. Covered in these totals were all United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, including the World Food Programme, IFAD, the World Bank (including IDA) and IFC; contributions to United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) cost-sharing activities and self-supporting projects of other organizations were excluded. The decline reflected a slight drop in contributions to the programmes and funds covered by the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (p. 426), a $433 million decrease in contributions to the World Bank and IFC and a delay in securing the first replenishment of IFAD.

These figures were transmitted to the General Assembly in a 1982 report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation.<sup>(2)</sup> The report also contained information on the 1981 contributions of each country to United Nations system development assistance, along with performance indicators showing contributions in relation to population size and GNP (see table beginning on p. 422).

Voluntary contributions (in the amount of $1.1 billion) to the funds and programmes covered by the Pledging Conference declined in 1981, largely the result of stagnation or decline in amounts contributed to the three largest funds-UNDP, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the last mainly because of a drop in contributions to supplementary funds such as that for aid to Kampucheans (p. 494). Contributions to the specialized agencies for operational activities continued to increase, partly through the growth in their regular budgets and partly because of the continued growth in extrabudgetary contributions placed directly at their disposal.

The inter-agency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination expressed concern at the reduction in resources available for development activities. It stated in October<sup>(4)</sup> that, at a time when interdependence was acknowledged as the keystone of world economic prosperity and development, the decline in funds could only be detrimental to developed as well as developing countries. It therefore wished to alert the General Assembly to the urgent need to support the efforts of developing countries, for their own sake but also for the sake of world prosperity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly strongly reiterated the need for a substantial and real increase in resources for operational activities on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis, and urged all countries, particularly those developed countries whose performance was not commensurate with their capacity, to increase their contributions rapidly and substantially. It decided to review and appraise the situation regularly, taking account of targets set by intergovernmental bodies, and for that purpose it requested the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to provide an annual compilation of information from Governments, together with his comments and recommendations. To ensure more stability in funding, the Assembly urged countries to indicate their probable contributions for a multiyear period. It invited governing bodies in the United Nations system to consider new ways of mobilizing increased resources.

The resolution superseded a draft submitted by Algeria for the Group of 77 developing countries,<sup>(1)</sup> which was withdrawn by the sponsor. By that draft, the Assembly would have strongly reiterated its appeals to Governments to increase their contributions rapidly and substantially on a more continuous and assured basis, and would have made a special request to those developed countries whose overall performance was not commensurate with their capacity to increase significantly their contributions in real terms. It would have invited all developed countries and other countries in a position to do so to inform it in 1982 of the steps they intended to take to expand their contributions, with a view to realizing the agreed targets and funding levels of various programmes and funds. United Nations governing bodies would have been invited to recommend specific ways of increasing resources on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, including the establishment of funding targets whenever possible. The Director-General would have been asked for recommendations in that regard, including the feasibility of establishing targets.

Speaking in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, where the 17 December resolution originated, the USSR said it had not opposed the text on the understanding that the targets referred to did not apply to the USSR and that the resolution should be implemented on the basis of resources already allocated for such activities, without entailing additional expenditures.

In the Committee's debate, calls for increased resources for operational activities were made by a number of developing countries, including China, Cuba, the Gambia, Kenya, the Niger, Sri Lanka, the Sudan and Tunisia.

Bangladesh appealed to all developed donor countries to contribute and said the centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe could not shy away from their responsibilities. Bhutan noted that most developed countries had failed to meet agreed contribution targets while the developing countries had gradually increased their contributions even though their economies had not significantly improved. Elaborating on this point, Mauritania noted that Kuwait, Qatar and Saudi Arabia had been among the major contributors to operational activities in per capita terms and in share of GNP. Pakistan remarked that the 11 per cent increase in contributions reported by the Director-General for 1980<sup>(5)</sup> represented near stagnation in real terms, after discounting the effects of inflation, and that the major developed countries had fallen behind in terms of the ratio of their contributions to their gross domestic product; Pakistan suggested that a target be established for such contributions.

Indonesia hoped the discouraging trend in contributions for multilateral assistance did not signal a change of heart but was a sign that, for a time, uncertainty and domestic concerns had overshadowed the sense of international responsibility. The Philippines expressed hope that the decline in funds was a passing trend resulting from budgetary restrictions. However, Madagascar thought the drop in voluntary contributions to United Nations agencies was due to centrifugal forces in international economic relations, resulting in an erosion of multilateral economic co-operation.

Among developed countries, Belgium remarked that real growth of resources for operational activities would probably be small in coming years, not because States were unaware of needs but because most industrialized countries were facing virtually insurmountable budgetary difficulties because of the continuing economic crisis. Japan made a similar point but added that it had excluded official development assistance from its zero-growth budget policy. Italy believed the major donors should try to keep the level of their contributions at least constant in real terms and to increase them whenever possible.

The United States, observing that it had given nearly twice as much as the second largest contributor to the United Nations development system, said the most significant untapped source of additional revenue could be found among the capital-surplus developing countries and the industrialized socialist States. Australia, France and the Federal Republic of Germany made similar points, the last adding that the industrialized centrally planned economies had contributed barely more than India.

Responding, the USSR asked whether it was right to say that the socialist countries, whose economy was based exclusively on the work of their own people and the development of their own resources, had a responsibility equal to that of the imperialist countries, which had plundered the resources of their colonies for centuries and were still exploiting them.

Several developed countries-including Denmark (for the Nordic States) and the United Kingdom-made the point that operational activities were still largely dependent on contributions by a small group of donor countries. Yugoslavia believed that the more economically advanced developing countries should become net contributors as soon as possible, thereby becoming direct partners in assisting less fortunate developing countries. The Philippines suggested a study of proposals to finance assistance through such means as assessments on arms sales, an international tax on ocean-resource exploitation, a brain-drain tax and the linking of the International Monetary Fund's special drawing rights to development aid.

Canada supported the concept of central funding for development assistance by the United Nations system and regretted what it saw as a tendency by certain specialized agencies to canvass for direct contributions to their technical co-operation programmes, bypassing UNDP. France and Poland also endorsed central funding as opposed to a proliferation of special funds; Poland added that all funds should be administered by UNDP and their activities integrated within country and intercountry programming, while retaining each fund's specialization in its own field. The United Kingdom criticized the proliferation of funds as drawing resources away from other funds and absorbing scarce resources for bureaucracy. Central funding was also supported by Italy.

Different views were expressed on the possibility of moving from annual to multiyear pledging. Denmark, speaking for the Nordic States, said they attached importance to stability and predictability in the flow of funds and had therefore proposed that the UNDP Governing Council reconvene its study group on long-term financing. Support for reconvening this group was expressed by Madagascar. Canada stated its willingness to explore proposals for multiyear pledging, provided that it was not limited to the traditional major donors and that others made contributions in convertible currency. France thought it would not be easy to meet the requirements of predictability and continuity, especially since national budgets were adopted annually, but said it might be possible in the medium term and through increased co-ordination to achieve a reasonable degree of predictability. India favoured measures to ensure greater automaticity in multiyear funding.

Hungary, however, thought it unrealistic to demand that Governments commit themselves several years in advance with regard to the amount of their contributions. The United Kingdom thought the price of achieving predictability might have to be a revision of assumptions about continued growth.

Several Eastern European countries thought UNDP could make better use of contributions in national currencies (p. 456).

Egypt expressed alarm at signs that some major donors were moving away from traditional support of multilateral aid in favour of greater reliance on bilateral assistance. Ethiopia said the countries which, for political reasons, were trying to strengthen bilateralism at the expense of multilateralism should reconsider their attitude and stop exerting pressure on multilateral organizations. However, a number of Western donor countries believed there was no cause for concern, since they viewed bilateral and multilateral assistance as complementary.

Pledging Conference for Development Activities. The 1981 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held at United Nations Headquarters on 3 and 4 November to receive government pledges for 1982 to 19 United Nations funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance. As at 30 June 1982, pledges and payments to these funds by individual Governments totalled $1,014,563,000,<sup>(2)</sup> down from a corresponding figure of $1,106,907,000 in payments received for 1981<sup>(3)</sup> (see table on p. 427). Few funds and programmes experienced real growth and contributions to 12 of them-including the largest, UNDP and UNICEF-declined.

The General Assembly, in a resolution of 17 December 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> expressed deep concern that voluntary contributions to the funds and programmes included in the United Nations pledging conferences for development activities had been stagnating and falling short in many cases of targets set by intergovernmental bodies. That situation, it added, had serious consequences for the organizations concerned with respect to their capacity to maintain the level of their operational programmes in support of the growing needs of developing countries for multilateral concessional assistance through the United Nations system.

The original draft of this resolution,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77 and later withdrawn by the sponsor, would have had the Assembly express deep concern that contributions to the funds and programmes included in the pledging conferences had been stagnating and in many cases declining in real terms, despite the existence of agreed targets and funding levels, with serious consequences for the capacity of the organizations concerned to maintain the real value of their operational programmes.

United Nations pledging conferences for development activities

At Its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the note by the Secretariat on arrangements for future United Nations pledging conferences for development activities.

Arab Gulf Programme for UN Development Organizations. In early 1981, an Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations was established to provide support for the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other United Nations organizations concerned with the development of human resources. Founding members were Bahrain, Iraq, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Originally known as the Arab Gulf Development Foundation for the United Nations, it made its initial contribution to UNICEF in 1981 (p. 1009).

Review of operational activities

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL. Operational activities for development of the United Nations system were reviewed in 1981 in the first annual report to the General Assembly on this topic by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation.<sup>(2)</sup> The report analysed trends in expenditures and contributions, and provided information and recommendations on measures under way or contemplated to enhance the efficiency of operational activities.

A synthesis of measures reported by various organizations, adopted in October by the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), was included in the report. Among the measures mentioned were: formulation of long-range strategies and plans of action, and of medium-term plans; organizational surveys aimed at cost-saving; decentralization of management responsibilities to regional or country offices; involvement of recipient Governments in the formulation and implementation of field projects, and other measures to make country programming more responsive to immediate needs; improved project design to ensure that assumptions made at the planning stage remained valid; strengthened management information and evaluation; and better recruitment techniques and headquarters backstopping for projects.

The report also included observations by the Director-General on broad issues of efficiency and effectiveness in operational activities. Pointing to the decentralized nature of the United Nations system as well as the need for common approaches and co-ordinated actions on certain issues, he thought the Assembly should begin by identifying such issues and then elaborate common approaches to them. He made the point that the pursuit of administrative economy was not the sole component of efficiency or effectiveness; other elements included the objective of improving quality and responsiveness, links between operational activities and headquarters-based research and analysis functions, and the adequacy and predictability of resources. Presenting his report to the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 9 November, the Director-General cautioned against dismantling services and getting rid of expertise that might be needed in future when operational activities resumed their upward growth.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly took note with appreciation of the Director-General's report. After reiterating the need for increased contributions (p. 420), the Assembly welcomed a June decision of the UNDP Governing Council urging a reduction in the Programme's administrative budget (p. 448) and urged other governing bodies, as a general guideline, to seek to minimize administrative and overhead costs with a view to increasing the proportion of resources available to meet the assistance requirements of developing countries. It favoured measures leading to a greater use of developing countries' capacities in procuring material and equipment, providing training and services, finding local contractors and recruiting personnel. It requested the Director-General to include in his 1983 report to the Assembly recommendations on ways to increase the participation of developing countries in programme execution. It invited governing bodies to take action to reduce administrative and other support costs and improve efficiency, and asked for information on what was being done in that regard.

The resolution was adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 7 December. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a draft sponsored by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77,<sup>(1)</sup> subsequently withdrawn.

According to the original draft, the Assembly would have urged governing bodies responsible for operational activities to minimize (instead of seek to minimize) administrative and overhead costs, and would have urged them to make greater use (instead of inviting them to adopt appropriate measures leading to a greater use) of the capacities of developing countries in regard to equipment and personnel.

Introducing the draft, Algeria said it reflected the deep concern of the developing countries at the financial crisis hampering operational activities for development.

In the Second Committee debate on this topic, many States emphasized the need for improved administration of development assistance activities in order to enhance their credibility and make them more attractive to donors. The Federal Republic of Germany remarked that the extent of contributions would largely depend on keeping administrative expenditures within reasonable limits. France regarded rigorous management of development assistance funds as essential if Governments were to retain confidence in United Nations organizations and regretted that the Director-General's report contained little information about measures taken in that regard. Austria asked for more such information in the 1982 report. Italy said there could be no improvement in the trend in contributions unless the organizations improved their efficiency and co-ordination.

Denmark, speaking for the Nordic States, believed the various agencies should join their resources in field offices to achieve savings and increased efficiency. The United Kingdom also opposed wasteful duplication of bureaucracy at field offices and hoped the Director-General would report on the extent to which the problem had been reduced by the appointment of resident co-ordinators for the development assistance activities of the United Nations system (p. 430).

Belgium regretted that the Director-General's report had not fulfilled expectations for proposals to reduce administrative and support costs and to harmonize agency procedures; if there was to be real growth in resources for development, maximum resources must be allocated to projects by cutting non-essential costs. Canada considered that the Director-General and the resident co-ordinators of development assistance in the field were not getting the full support of all parts of the United Nations system; it believed the Assembly should remain the final authority in defining the system's development objectives and that the specialized agencies should be asked for reports on implementation of Assembly resolutions. Austria, France and Italy supported this request for reports.

Ecuador was among those which thought headquarters bureaucracies should be reduced; it deplored the attitude of agency heads who expressed satisfaction at increases in their budgets but announced 20 per cent cuts in field programmes. Others calling for a cut in excessive administrative costs included Kenya and Mongolia.

Some speakers urged caution regarding attempts to reduce administrative expenses. Bangladesh, Bhutan and Indonesia feared that the quality of services might deteriorate if administrative expenses were cut back excessively. The Netherlands thought the field network should be reduced only as a last resort. Pakistan said it was hard to enhance efficiency when the level of resources was not predictable; it also saw a need to preserve a basic infrastructure of policy formulation, administrative capacity and field organization. The Philippines suggested that estimates be drawn up of the threshold levels at which further lowering of support costs would harm the effectiveness or quality of assistance. Sri Lanka did not believe cost-cutting should be at the expense of field office efficiency.

Bhutan and others stressed the importance of improved monitoring and evaluation of operational activities. Tunisia thought that evaluation should be regarded as an integral part of measures to improve the effectiveness of development assistance.

Operational activities for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further its resolutions 33/201 of 29 January 1979 and 35/81 of 5 December 1980 on a comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development,

Recalling its resolutions 2688 (XXV) of 11 December 1970 on the capacity of the United Nations development system and 3405 (XXX) of 28 November 1975 on new dimensions in technical co-operation,

Having noted with deep concern the outcome of the 1981 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held on 3 and 4 November 1981,

Having examined the annual report for 1981 of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Reiterating that a substantial part of world resources, material as well as human, continues to be diverted to armaments with detrimental effect on international security and on efforts to achieve the new international economic order, including operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and calling upon Governments to take effective measures in the field of real disarmament that would increase the possibilities of allocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, especially development of developing countries,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the annual report for 1981 of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and takes note of the areas identified by the Director-General in which further progress can be made;

2. Reaffirms that the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should contribute effectively to the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, which should provide the framework within which those activities should be planned and conducted;

3. Expresses its deep concern that over all voluntary contributions from Governments and other sources to the funds and programmes that are included in the United Nations pledging conferences for development activities have been stagnating and falling short in many cases of targets which have been set by the relevant intergovernmental bodies, with serious consequences for the organizations concerned with respect to their capacity to maintain the level of their operational programmes in support of the growing needs of developing countries for multilateral concessional assistance through the United Nations system;

4. Strongly reiterates the need for a substantial and real increase in the flow of resources for operational activities on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis and, in this context, urges all countries, particularly those developed countries whose overall performance is not commensurate with their capacity, to increase rapidly and substantially their contributions to the system's operational activities for development;

5. Invites all countries to inform the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session of the steps they have taken or intend to take in response to the present resolution and other relevant resolutions of the Assembly, taking into account targets which have been set by the relevant intergovernmental bodies;

6. Decides to review and appraise on a regular basis the mobilization of resources for operational activities for development, taking into account targets which have been set by the relevant intergovernmental bodies and, for this purpose, requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include in his annual report to the General Assembly a compilation of information provided by Governments, in accordance with paragraph 5 above, and other relevant information, together with his comments and recommendations;

7. Expresses its deep concern at the slow progress towards placing the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system engaged in operational activities for development on a more stable financial basis and, in this context, urges all countries that are able to do so to indicate, while making their pledges, their probable contributions for a multiyear period, taking into account the need to ensure increased resources in real terms on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis;

8. Reiterates its invitation to the governing bodies of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as appropriate, to consider new and specific ways and means of mobilizing increased resources for operational activities for development on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis and requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to take into account the outcome of these considerations in the preparation of his report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session;

9. Welcomes paragraph 4 of decision 81/16 of 27 June 1981 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, in which the Council urged the Administrator to reduce the size of the administrative budget of the Programme, and urges all the governing bodies of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system engaged in operational activities for development, as a general guideline, to seek to minimize the administrative and overhead costs with a view to increasing the proportion of resources available to meet the assistance requirements of developing countries;

10. Invites all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system engaged in operational activities for development to adopt appropriate measures leading to a greater use of the capacities of developing countries in local or regional procurement of material and equipment, in training and in services, in facilitating the increased use of local contractors, and in the recruitment of training, technical and managerial personnel, bearing in mind decision 81/28 of 30 June 1981 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme;

11. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include in his report to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session recommendations on specific ways and means of increasing the participation of developing countries in the execution of programmes and projects of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, bearing in mind paragraphs 8,9 and 10 of Assembly resolution 35/81;

12. Invites the governing bodies of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system engaged in operational activities to take the action requested in paragraphs 8,9 and 11 of General Assembly resolution 35/81, and invites the Secretary-General and the heads of those organs, organizations and bodies to provide information on the action taken by the governing bodies, and requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include that information, together with his own recommendations, in his reports to the Assembly at its thirty-seventh and thirty-eighth sessions and, in preparing the recommendations requested in paragraph 18 of that resolution, to take into account the responses made by the above-mentioned governing bodies and the comments made thereon by delegations during the thirty-sixth session of the Assembly;

13. Welcomes the establishment by the Secretary-General of the consultative process in pursuance of paragraph 6 of General Assembly resolution 34/213 of 19 December 1979, in which the Assembly called for consultations with Governments, through the resident co-ordinator, and for the participation of all organizations concerned both at the country level and subsequently through the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, calls upon the executive heads of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to co-operate fully in that process, and requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include in his annual report information on the outcome of those consultations;

14. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to provide in his annual report comprehensive statistical information on operational activities for development of the United Nations system on the same basis as that contained in the annual report for 1981, and to include separately in his report information pertaining to the United Nations Trust Fund for Special Economic Assistance Programmes and the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme, as well as information relating to administrative, programme and other support costs incurred by organizations engaged in operational activities for development.

Role of resident co-ordinators

By the end of 1981, resident co-ordinators had been designated by the Secretary-General in most countries receiving United Nations development assistance. Their functions, defined in 1979,<sup>(3)</sup> involved responsibility for and co-ordination of operational activities for development carried out by the United Nations system at the country level, in co-operation with national authorities. The first co-ordinators were designated in 1980.<sup>(6)</sup>

The UNDP Governing Council, on 27 June 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> noted with appreciation the progress achieved in the designation of resident co-ordinators as further evidence of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system.

The Economic and Social Council in a resolution on UNDP adopted on 22 July,<sup>(2)</sup> requested the organizations participating in the United Nations development system to strengthen co-ordination between their headquarters and in the field, in particular to enable the resident co-ordinators to act as the central co-ordinating authority on behalf of the United Nations development system in the field.

In his 1981 report to the General Assembly on operational activities for development,<sup>(1)</sup> the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation stated that the co-ordinators were consulting Governments on the best way of enabling them to exercise their responsibilities. The outcome of those exploratory contacts would be brought to the attention of ACC in the context of its future review of arrangements for the exercise of the co-ordinators' functions.

The Assembly, in its resolution of 17 December on operational activities for development,<sup>(4)</sup> welcomed the establishment of this consultative process and requested the Director-General to inform it of the outcome.

In the Second Committee debate on operational activities, Australia and Bangladesh saw the resident co-ordinators as playing an important role in avoiding waste, duplication and competition between organizations. Argentina, Ecuador and Zambia thought that agencies should discontinue the establishment of regional offices with functions similar to those of the co-ordinators. The Philippines thought the co-ordinators' key function was to facilitate the integration of United Nations assistance into the Government's development programmes and said it was better to adopt an experimental approach rather than rigid guidelines for their work.

The General Assembly, in a resolution on UNDP of 17 December 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> stressed that the realization of the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, approved by it in 1980,<sup>(2)</sup> required a renewed emphasis on technical co-operation and a significant increase in the resources provided for that purpose.

Information on technical co-operation expenditures

The Economic and Social Council endorsed on 22 July 1981<sup>(1)</sup> a 27 June decision of the UNDP Governing Council<sup>(2)</sup> by which the UNDP Administrator was requested, pending alternative arrangements, to continue to provide information on regular and extrabudgetary technical co-operation expenditures by specialized agencies financed from sources other than UNDP.

Resolution and decision: Res.: <sup>(1)</sup>ESC, 1981/59, para. p. 22 July (p. 435). Dec.: <sup>(2)</sup>UNDP Council (report, E/1981/61/Rev.1). 81/34. 27 June.

UN Development Programme

UNDP activities

For the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) -the largest source of multi-lateral technical co-operation - 1981 marked the final year of the Programme's second development co-operation cycle, a five-year forward plan of comprehensive programming for technical co-operation at the country and intercountry levels. The first cycle extended from 1972 to 1976 and the second from 1977 to 1981, while the third was to extend from 1982 to 1986. Expenditures for the second cycle were virtually on target.

In his report to the UNDP Governing Council for 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> the UNDP Administrator noted that project-related expenditures were increasingly directed towards lower income countries, especially in Africa and Asia. Least developed countries, and others given similar treatment, accounted for 32.6 per cent of all allocations to individual countries in the 1977-1981 cycle. The dollar value of the programmes they received more than doubled over the previous cycle, as measured by the indicative planning figures (IPFs) by which UNDP allocated funds to country and intercountry programmes. These countries were to account for 40.2 per cent of IPF allocations in the third development cycle, while all countries with an annual gross national product of under $500 per capita were projected to receive almost 80 per cent of country IPF allocations in the same period. Third cycle IPFs were confirmed by the UNDP Governing Council in June 1981 (p. 444).

The share of total UNDP field expenditures going to industry, transport and communications, human settlements and, especially, general development issues, policy and planning increased in the second cycle as compared to the first, while the share of expenditures for agriculture, population, health and education declined somewhat. For natural resources, international trade and development finance, employment, and science and technology, the proportion of field expenditure remained relatively unchanged between the first two cycles.

Other quantitative indicators for the first two cycles showed: a rough doubling of voluntary contributions and expenditures; a substantial rise in cost-sharing contributions to UNDP-supported projects by developing country and third party Governments; a loss in the value of contributions received, particularly severe in 1981, due to exchange-rate fluctuations; a significant decline in the share of project expenditures spent on international project personnel, counterbalanced by a growth in the training and equipment components; an across-the-board increase in the share of project inputs provided by developing countries, particularly in terms of experts and sub-contracts; and a total of more than $42 billion of investment commitments reported during the period 1972-1981 as a follow-up to UNDP aid.

UNDP continued to shift the mode of its country and intercountry assistance from a project to a programme orientation. Previously, programmes had been elaborated on the basis of a list of projects rather than a comprehensive assessment of the countries' technical co-operation needs; little effort had been made to identify linkages between national objectives, sectoral diagnoses and specific projects. Recent qualitative improvements in programming included: efforts to assess technical co-operation needs more rigorously; an integrated approach to sectoral assistance based on wide-ranging participation by project-implementing agencies; increased use of project personnel from the receiving country and emphasis on technical co-operation among developing countries; provision for additionality and co-ordination with other sources of assistance; and closer relationships with related intercountry activities.

Field expenditures of the main programme<sup>a</sup> rose by 8 per cent from the previous year, to a record level of $732 million in 1981. Country projects accounted for $600.1 million, or 82 per cent, of total field expenditures. For intercountry programmes, $97.5 million was spent on regional projects, $9.6 million on interregional and $15 million on global projects. Programme support and administrative services costs for 1980-1981 amounted to 13.6 per cent of main programme expenditures and were projected to increase to 14.5 per cent for 1982-1983 (p. 447).

The number of UNDP projects approved in 1981 declined compared to the previous year, from 1,321 in 1980 costing $466.1 million to 1,114 in 1981 costing $406.3 million. Of the total cost, new country projects in Asia and the Pacific accounted for 37.5 per cent; Africa, 31 per cent; Arab States, 11 per cent; Latin America, 10.8 per cent, and Europe, 0.7 per cent. The share of new regional, interregional and global projects was 9 per cent.

Field work was completed in 1981 on 194 UNDP-supported projects costing $150,000 or more: 78 in Africa, 52 in Asia and the Pacific, 32 in Latin America, 17 in the Arab States, 12 in Europe and 3 global projects.

The year 1981 was the first billion dollar year in the Programme's history, with expenditures of all UNDP-managed operations totalling $1,043.8 million, against income of $890.7 million (p. 446). However, voluntary contributions paid by Governments to the main UNDP account decreased for the first time, from $691.8 million in 1980 to $688.7 million in 1981 (p. 451). Total income for the year in this account was $804.3 million, a 2 per cent decrease from the $821.4 million received in 1980 (p. 446).

UNDP COUNCIL ACTION. The UNDP Governing Council held its twenty-eighth session at United Nations Headquarters from 9 June to 1 July. Its Budgetary and Finance Committee met concurrently, from 8 June to 1 July.

The Council approved 14 new country programmes whose sectoral allocations showed a continued emphasis on agriculture, with natural resources, industry and human resource development as the next most important sectors (p. 436).

The Council took note of an intercountry programme for Asia and the Pacific proposed for the third programme cycle- the first such programme to have been conceived, formulated and submitted in accordance with the UNDP policy of enlarged government participation in programme planning (p. 442). Six new global projects were approved (p. 443).

Despite indications that resources available in the third programming cycle might fall short of the total envisaged, the Council decided to retain, for purposes of forward planning, the level of resources initially envisaged for the 1982-1986 programme cycle, which assumed a 14 per cent average annual growth of voluntary contributions from the 1977-1981 level (p. 444).

On other programme matters, the Council endorsed revised country programming procedures (p. 445), requested stronger ties between UNDP and multilateral financial institutions (p. 443) and called for a further report on a proposal to upgrade the UNDP fisheries vessels pool (p. 444). It took note of a report on evaluation of technical co-operation activities (p. 445) and decided that full consideration should be given to making Governments rather than international organizations responsible for executing more UNDP projects (p. 446).

Taking note of the report of the Administrator for 1980, <sup>(2)</sup> the Council commended him for his efforts to improve programme performance, for the growing field service functions of UNDP and for the substantial continued growth in programme delivery. <sup>(7)</sup>

Among its financial actions, the Council approved supplementary appropriations for 1980-1981 amounting to $32 million for the main programme and other UNDP-managed activities, raising the administrative budget for that biennium to $204.4 million. For 1982-1983, it approved appropriations totalling $262.7 million (p. 448).

To ease the burden on smaller agencies executing UNDP projects, which often had to spend more to administer those projects than they were reimbursed by the Programme, the Council approved support cost flexibility arrangements that would permit higher reimbursement rates under specified conditions (p. 449). For 1982-1983, it approved an allocation of $3.7 million for sectoral support activities designed to complement project and programming activities financed by the agencies themselves (p. 450).

The Council adopted revised UNDP Financial Regulations and, at its request, the General Assembly authorized it in December to adopt financial regulations in respect of all funds administered by UNDP (p. 451). Noting with concern the increasing level of unpaid pledges, it invited Governments to pay amounts due for 1981 and prior years (p. 456). It was unable to agree on additional action to reduce its holdings of non-convertible currencies contributed by some Governments (p. 456).

To improve management and administrative functions, the Council authorized a strengthening of the Division of Management Information Services (p. 457) and decided to continue financing the Inter-agency Procurement Services Unit (p. 457). It also took action on matters concerning the recruitment of project professional staff (p. 458). A UNDP study programme was established to promote greater understanding of development problems and to generate new resources and ideas (p. 458).

The Council adopted measures to streamline and rationalize its work, including steps to enable it to concentrate on policy issues (p. 458).

Other actions by the Council related to several funds and programmes managed by or in co-operation with UNDP: the United Nations Volunteers (p. 461), the United Nations Capital Development Fund (p. 468), the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries (p. 415), the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (p. 486), the joint venture with the United Nations Environment Programme to combat desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region (p. 829), the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (p. 675), the UNDP Energy Account (p. 711), the United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development (p. 742) and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (p. 781).

In addition, the Council: reviewed United Nations technical co-operation programmes (p. 460) and requested that it continue to be given information on programmes not financed by UNDP (p. 432); approved new policies, rules and procedures for the use of UNDP country programme funds for technical co-operation among developing countries (p. 467); called for continued assistance to Palestinians (p. 273) and to national liberation movements (p. 1099), and welcomed plans for a report on the development problems of Namibia (p. 1170); authorized preparatory and follow-up action on the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (p. 405); appealed for international assistance to drought-stricken areas of Africa (p. 486) and authorized UNDP aid to Uganda (p. 520), while deferring action on Lebanon (p. 529); and authorized assistance to maritime transport training institutions (p. 568).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. By a resolution of 22 July,<sup>(5)</sup> adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed the central funding and co-ordinating role of UNDP in the field of technical co-operation within the United Nations system and recommended that intergovernmental bodies take full account of the need to preserve that role when considering new funding arrangements for technical co-operation.

The Council noted the Governing Council's report and decisions,<sup>(4)</sup> particularly its decision on preparation for the 1982-1986 programming cycle; welcomed decisions on recruitment of professional staff, government execution of projects, project evaluation, establishment of a study programme and rationalization of the Governing Council's work; and endorsed the request for information on technical co-operation expenditures by executing agencies. It urged renewed efforts to place UNDP on a sound financial basis (p. 452), favoured improved inter-agency co-ordination through resident co-ordinators (p. 430), and commended to the General Assembly's attention the view that the United Nations Capital Development Fund should be authorized to meet its administrative and programme support costs from its own resources (p. 468).

The Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee approved this resolution, which was introduced by India on behalf of 22 nations, without vote on 17 July.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. The Economic and Social Council resolution was endorsed by the General Assembly on 17 December, by a resolution adopted without vote.<sup>(6)</sup> Noting with satisfaction the Governing Council's report and decisions, the Assembly stressed the need for renewed emphasis on technical co-operation and a significant increase in resources. It further decided that, beginning in 1983, a policy review of UNDP-managed funds and programmes should be undertaken biennially-with a brief report on them, including a financial statement, to be made available in intervening years-and invited the Governing Council to act accordingly. The Assembly reiterated the need for a substantial increase in contributions to UNDP (p. 452) and encouraged greater efforts to increase its efficiency and effectiveness, taking account of the need to restrain administrative expenditures (p. 449).

The Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee approved the resolution without vote on 1 December. The draft, submitted by a Vice-Chairman and orally revised by him, was based on informal consultations on a text introduced by Yugoslavia on behalf of 32 nation<sup>(1)</sup> - mostly developing countries-and subsequently withdrawn. The drafts differed in their provisions on contributions and administrative expenditures; the oral revision affected the reference to administrative expenditures.

Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 35/56 of 5 December 1980, containing the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and 35/81 of 5 December 1980, on the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development,

Mindful of the continuing urgent problems of development faced by the peoples of developing countries, and reaffirming that the attainment of the individual and collective self-reliance of the developing countries would make an important contribution to the ultimate solution of those problems,

Bearing in mind the role of the United Nations Development Programme in multilateral technical co-operation for the economic and social development of developing countries, as defined by the General Assembly in its resolutions 2888(XXV) of 11 December 1970 and 3405(XXX) of 28 November 1975,

Recalling its resolution 2024(LXI) of 4 August 1978 on operational activities for development,

Recognizing that the United Nations Development Programme is making an important contribution to the accelerated development of developing countries,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-eighth session,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-eighth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Notes in particular Governing Council decision 81/16 of 27 June 1981 on the preparation for the third programming cycle, 1982-1988, by which decision 80/30 of 26 June 1980 was reaffirmed;

3. Urges all Governments to renew their efforts to provide the United Nations Development Programme with the resources necessary to establish the sound financial basis needed to implement the Programme's planned activities for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, which, for the purpose of forward planning, also assumes an overall average growth of resources of at least 14 per cent;

4. Reaffirms the central funding and co-ordinating role of the United Nations Development Programme in the field of technical co-operation within the United Nations system in conformity with the consensus of 1970 and General Assembly resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977, 33/202 of 29 January 1979 and 35/81 of 5 December 1980, and recommends to the intergovernmental bodies concerned that the need to preserve this role should be taken fully into account in the consideration of new funding arrangements for technical co-operation activities;

5. Requests all international organizations participating in the United Nations development system to strengthen their mutual co-ordination, both between headquarters and at the field level, with a view to improving the integration of technical assistance, in particular to enable the resident co-ordinators to act as the central co-ordinating authority on behalf of the United Nations development system at the field level;

8. Commends to the attention of the General Assembly the view that the United Nations Capital Development Fund should be authorized to meet the administrative and programme support costs pertaining to its activities from its own resources;

7. Welcomes Governing Council decisions 81/20 on the improvement of the methods and procedures for the recruitment of project professional staff and consultants; 81/21 on government execution and management, project design, monitoring and evaluation, and experts financed by the United Nations Development Programme; 81/30 on the establishment of a United Nations Development Programme study programme; and 81/37 on the streamlining and rationalization of the work of the Governing Council, all dated 27 June 1981;

8. Notes with satisfaction that the Governing Council, in its decision 81/37, decided that "New and specific ways and means of mobilizing increased resources on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis" will be the subject of its agenda item on policy review for its twenty-ninth session;

9. Endorses Governing Council decision 81/34 of 27 June 1981, by which the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme was requested to continue to provide information on agency regular and extrabudgetary technical co-operation expenditures financed from sources other than the United Nations Development Programme, until alternative arrangements for the provision of such data have been made within the United Nations system.

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/812) without vote, 1 December (meeting 45): draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.121), orally revised, based on informal consultations on 32-nation draft (A/C.2/36/L.107); agenda item 70 (b).

United Nations Development Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, 35/81 of 5 December 1980 on the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development and 35/83 of 5 December 1980 on the United Nations Development Programme,

Reaffirming the unique and important contribution which the United Nations Development Programme is making to the development efforts of developing countries,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-eighth session and Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/59 of 22 July 1981 on the report of the Governing Council,

Concerned at the shortfall of voluntary contributions in relation to the assumed overall average annual growth of resources,

Aware that, together with efforts to obtain additional voluntary contributions, steps are being taken to increase further the quality, efficiency and effectiveness of the United Nations Development Programme,

Noting that the Governing Council of the Programme has decided to retain for the purposes of forward planning for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, an assumed overall average annual growth of resources of at least 14 per cent,

Noting with appreciation the statement made before the Second Committee on 24 September 1981 by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme,

Reaffirming the validity of the consensus of 1970, as set forth in the annex to its resolution 2688(XXV) of 11 December

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-eighth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/59;

3. Stresses that the realization of the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade requires a renewed emphasis upon technical co-operation and a significant increase in the resources provided for that purpose;

4. Endorses also decision 81/37 of 27 June 1981 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on streamlining and rationalizing the work of the Governing Council;

5. Commends the efforts made by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to increase further the quality, efficiency and effectiveness of the Programme, and encourages the Administrator to continue to intensify those efforts, taking account, inter alia, of the need to restrain administrative expenditures in order to maximize programme delivery in accordance with paragraph 4 of decision 81/16 of 27 June 1981 of the Governing Council of the Programme;

6. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments of both developed and developing countries which, at the 1981 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, announced contributions or their intention to contribute to the United Nations Development Programme for 1982, in particular those Governments which have consistently increased their voluntary contributions to the Programme;

7. Expresses its deep concern nevertheless that the likely shortfall in 1982 in overall voluntary contributions may adversely affect the proposed programme delivery for the third programming cycle of the United Nations Development Programme;

8. Urges all Governments, especially those whose voluntary contributions may not reflect their capacity to contribute, to renew their efforts to provide the United Nations Development Programme with the resources necessary to establish a sound financial basis for the implementation of the Programme's planned activities for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, which for the purpose of forward planning would assume an overall average annual growth of resources of at least 14 per cent;

9. Strongly reiterates the need for a substantial and real increase in the flow of resources for the United Nations Development Programme on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis, and in that context welcomes decision 81/37 of the Governing Council of the Programme in which the Council decided to review this issue at its twenty-ninth session;

10. Reaffirms the request of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, in its decision 81/16, to the Administrator of the Programme to continue consultations with donor countries with a view to reaching the level of resources envisaged for 1982-1986 in order to maintain the level of programme planning for participating countries, as approved by the Governing Council for the third programming cycle, 1962-1986;

11. Decides that, beginning in 1983, a broad policy review of those funds and programmes which are under the guidance of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and managed by the Administrator of the Programme should be undertaken on a biennial basis, on the understanding that a brief report, including a financial statement, on those funds and programmes should be made available to the Governing Council in the intervening years, and invites the Governing Council to act accordingly.

Country programmes

The UNDP Governing Council, on 15 and 26 June 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> approved country programmes proposed by the Administrator for Bangladesh, Bhutan, Bulgaria, the Congo, Cuba, Egypt, Kenya, Maldives, Mauritius, Nepal, the Philippines, Poland, Rwanda and Viet Nam. It authorized him to proceed with appraisal and approval of requests for assistance falling within the outlines of the respective country programmes while ensuring that expenditures were kept in conformity with the IPFs for each country and contained within the financial resources actually available.

With respect to the Viet Nam programme, it requested the Administrator to report in 1982 on steps set forth in his programme recommendation, which envisaged that UNDP missions would be sent to determine precisely what work was needed and what inputs were required for projects in that country. The Council also asked him to submit to it those projects which required its consideration and approval.

On 24 June,<sup>(1)</sup> the Council took note of an April report by the Administrator on trends and problems in these 14 new country programmes.<sup>(3)</sup>

The new country programmes ranged in size from $175 million for Bangladesh- the second largest UNDP country programme and the largest for any least developed country- to $4.8 million each for Bulgaria and Poland. Most of them covered the period 1982-1986, though a few were to begin earlier. Agriculture was the largest single sector in all programmes except those of Bulgaria and Cuba, where industry accounted for about half of the projected expenditure. The focus in the agricultural sector was on food production and self-sufficiency in basic foodstuffs. Natural resources, industry and human resource development were the next most important sectors.

Only in a few of these countries were UNDP resources to be augmented by Governments and third-party cost-sharing. A government cost-sharing contribution of $3.5 million was envisaged in the Congo, while in Maldives and Nepal additional financing was expected from multi-bilateral sources.

GENERAL NOTES TO TABLE:

Indicative planning figures: Figures for 1982-1986 are illustrative; actual figures may vary from those in the table, depending on the total financial resources available to UNDP. Figures for "Other Asia and the Pacific" and "Other Latin America" are undistributed IPFs; figure under "Other and undefined" is for future participants, etc. Amounts are given as of April 1982.

1981 programme: Data cover expenditures financed under IPFs. Special Programme Resources. Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries. Special Industrial Services and government cost-sharing.

Project expenditures: Figure under "Other Arab States region" is for Palestinian people; figure under "Other and undefined" is government cash counterpart.

Experts: Data cover professional project personnel serving in the field, including members of firms and organizations working under sub-contract to participating and executing agencies, as well as UNDP operational assistance personnel and associate experts. Totals under country of assignment differ from those under nationality because some experts had more than one assignment during the year.

Fellowships: Numbers include participants in seminars, training courses and related projects. "By nationality" column gives number of fellowships awarded by country or area receiving assistance. Totals under host country differ from those under nationality because some fellowship awards called for study in two or more countries. Figure under "Other Arab States region" refers to stateless persons.

Equipment ordered: Data are for country of procurement. Figure under "Other Africa" relates to unspecified countries in the French franc area.

Sub-Contracts: Data show cost of new sub-contracts by headquarters of contractor, as well as net additions to sub-contracts awarded in previous years. The cost of sub-contracts to the following Institutions are included under the countries indicated: International Centre for Diarrhoeal Diseases Research, Bangladesh, $950,000; International Crop Research Institute for the Semi-Arid Tropics, India, $5,700,000; International Centre for Insect Physiology and Ecology, Kenya, $7,925,000. Included under "Other and undefined" is $19,000 for a contract with an international organization.

Three dots (...) indicate that data are not available or are not separately reported.

Regional classification as provided by UNDP.

Highlights of the new country programmes follow.

-Bangladesh. Increasing allocation to agriculture; emphasis on training, planning and investment-oriented activities.

-Bhutan. Major emphasis on training; further emphasis on sector analyses and feasibility studies to plan and attract investments, filling technical deficiencies and revenue-generating activities, particularly for foreign exchange.

-Bulgaria. Particular efforts to use programme to offer training facilities for technical and scientific personnel from developing countries and sending expert consultants to those countries.

-Congo. Agriculture to receive half of programmed resources.

-Cuba Directed to development of science and technology, including research development and application on pilot basis, programme to provide access to advanced foreign technology.

-Egypt. Sectoral priorities: agriculture and industry, emphasizing food security and improving living conditions of the rural poor; further emphasis on training.

-Kenya. Concentration on selected areas, with emphasis on short- and medium-term objectives, minimizing assistance for long-term undertakings such as research.

-Maldives. Sectoral priorities: agriculture and fisheries, transport, education and training; emphasis on development of human resources and economic and social infrastructure.

-Mauritius. Increasing emphasis on short-term expertise, training and equipment; sectoral emphasis on agriculture and health.

-Nepal Sectoral emphasis on rural areas including agricultural production, forestry and integrated rural development; pre-investment activities, training, institutions and their planning capability.

-Philippines. Emphasis on training, institution building and pre-investment, particularly for energy and investments generating employment and exports.

- Poland. Emphasis on research and development and pre-investment activities; sectoral emphasis on health and agriculture.

- Rwanda. Emphasis on pre-investment activities, reinforcing government institutions and avoiding parallel structures.

- Viet Nam. Focus on increasing production of food and consumer goods, promotion of scientific research to apply technical innovations and enhance self-reliance, and restoration of infrastructure.

Expenditures on country projects, amounting to $600,144,000, represented 81.98 per cent of total UNDP project expenditures in 1981 (see table on p. 437). On a regional basis, main UNDP field expenditures on country projects, exclusive of $9.8 million in government cash counterpart contributions, were as follows: Africa, $221.4 million (36.89 per cent); Asia and the Pacific, $190.3 million (31.71 per cent); Arab States, $86.2 million (14.36 per cent); Latin America and the Caribbean, $85.2 million (14.2 per cent); and Europe, $17 million (2.83 per cent).

In the debate on operational activities for development in the General Assembly's Second Committee, Nepal found the country programme approach helpful in establishing a link between the technical co-operation and pre-investment programme and national development plans. The Netherlands suggested that, to give a more complete picture of UNDP and related assistance, the Assembly consider inviting recipient countries to attach to their country programmes, for information purposes, statistics on UNDP aid from sources other than IPFS.

Viet Nam, supported by the Lao People's Democratic Republic, said the United States and other countries had tried in the Governing Council to prevent the Viet Nam country programme from being adopted, despite the fact that UNDP and other United Nations agencies were generally regarded as non-political bodies that should not be used as instruments of pressure. The United States replied that Viet Nam would have fewer economic problems if it were not occupying a neighbouring country.

Intercountry programmes

Regional programmes. By a decision of 26 June 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council took note of a $226 million intercountry programme for Asia and the Pacific for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, presented by the Administrator.<sup>(2)</sup> The Administrator was requested to proceed with appraisal and approval of requests for assistance falling within the programme's outlines, ensuring that expenditures were in conformity with the region's IPF and contained within available financial resources.

Activities under the programme were to concentrate on seven key sectors. Ranked in the order of resources allocated to each, they were: energy, natural resources and environment; transport and communications; human resources development; agriculture, fisheries and forestry; planning and administration; technology and industry; and trade and economic co-operation. A total of 159 projects were identified, of which 133 were costed. In planning the programme, Governments gave the highest priority to energy and food production.

In the paper presenting this programme, the Administrator noted that it was the first inter-country programme for the region entirely conceived, formulated and submitted under the principles of enlarged government participation. Programming commenced early in 1980 and culminated at the Intergovernmental Meeting of Development Assistance Co-ordinators of Asia and the Pacific (New Delhi, India, February 1981), attended by Governments, executing agencies and UNDP representatives. In addition, missions were assigned to 34 countries, entities and territories in the region; regional and sub-regional intergovernmental organizations were consulted; and Governments, executing agencies and UNDP reviewed regional projects and current and future project planning and implementation.

Regional projects accounted for $97,499,000 of UNDP expenditures in 1981.

In the debate on operational activities for development in the General Assembly's Second Committee, Hungary saw the organization of intergovernmental consultations on regional programmes as a positive step which allowed recipient countries to be more actively involved; it thought such consultations might be held midway in the 1982-1986 cycle to review results and prepare for the following cycle.

Interregional programme. Interregional activities during the second programming cycle, 1977-1981, and proposed activities for the third cycle, 1982-1986, were summarized in a UNDP report of March 1981.<sup>(2)</sup>

During the second cycle, priority was given to the development of ocean fisheries and aquaculture, which absorbed one third of available resources, and international trade projects, which accounted for one quarter. Next in importance were a special public works programme for the least developed countries, training and advisory services in transport and communications, and health projects. Training assumed a growing importance, with particular attention given to course design, selection procedures, training techniques and evaluation.

Over the five years, 105 projects were operational, some in more than one phase, and there was a continuing trend towards larger-scale activities. Expenditures for the second cycle were estimated at approximately $32 million against the IPF for interregional projects, with an additional $4.6 million for special measures for the least developed countries. Project expenditures in 1981 totalled $9,605,000.

The interregional programme proposed for 1982-1986 continued to give priority to international trade and fisheries. However, greater diversification was planned, with continuing emphasis on training and human resources development but with the addition of new sectoral themes in energy planning and water and sanitation. Activities were to continue, at least for the early years of the cycle, on the National Household Survey Capability Programme (p. 1072) and an expanded immunization programme. Other areas suggested for exploration were research and advisory services in science and technology, hydrology and marine telecommunications.

Global programme. The UNDP Governing Council approved six global projects on 26 June 1981 and authorized the Administrator to arrange for their execution.<sup>(1)</sup> The projects were: special programme for research and training in tropical diseases (phase II); development of long-range means of control of crop and livestock pests and diseases (International Centre for Insect Physiology and Ecology, Kenya); testing and demonstration of small-scale, solar-powered pumping systems; research and development in integrated resource recovery; West African sorghum and millet improvement programme (phase III) (International Crop Research Institute for the Semi-Arid Tropics, India); and research, graining and production programme for nutritional quality maize.

For the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, an illustrative global IPF of $114.8 million was established by the Council. This was more than double the $52.9 million figure approved for 1977-1981. High priority was given during the earlier cycle to agricultural development. In addition, global projects in health-related areas were aimed at providing new institutional structures of importance to future development.

Besides agriculture and health, energy was identified as the third priority area for 1982-1986; a commitment to those three areas was likely to absorb 80 to 90 per cent of available resources, according to a report by the Administrator giving details of the programme.<sup>(3)</sup> The Council took note of this report on 27 June.<sup>(2)</sup>

Pre-investment activities

With the aim of encouraging follow-up investments in UNDP-assisted projects, the Governing Council, on 27 June 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> requested the Administrator to strengthen relationships with multilateral financial institutions and regional development banks and other sources of finance. It authorized the use of $100,000 from the 1981 Special Programme Resources in addition to a similar amount authorized in 1980<sup>(3)</sup> to implement co-operative arrangements with participating and executing agencies directed towards generating additional information required to make such projects attractive to potential investors. It invited Governments, in preparing their country programmes, to give due priority to pre-investment activities.

The Council endorsed a revised definition of pre-investment agreed upon by an Inter-agency Consultative Meeting in December 1980 and presented by the Administrator in a March 1981 report.<sup>(2)</sup> Pre-investment projects were defined as those that clearly identified, as an objective, the task of collecting, analysing and presenting economic, financial, technical, institutional and social data, in any development sector, in a form which would facilitate decision-making concerning the feasibility of committing capital for the creation of physical assets, production of goods and services or the development of human and natural resources. These were distinguished from investment-oriented projects such as natural resource surveys, sector studies, master plans, regional plans, research and pilot schemes.

During 1981, UNDP entered into new co-operative arrangements to stimulate pre-investment activities with the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development. It strengthened arrangements with development finance institutions through an increased flow of project and country programme information related to possible investment follow-up opportunities. In co-operation with the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank, it offered two training courses in investment development, in April/May and November, for UNDP resident representatives and their deputies.

Investment commitments of $4,799.6 million were reported in relation to UNDP projects in 1981, mainly in the industrial sector. This was 18 per cent above the 1980 level.

During the debate on operational activities for development in the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the USSR said it opposed the control of UNDP activities by the World Bank and similar institutions on the excuse-mentioned in the Governing Council's decision of 27 June-of strengthening relationships between UNDP and those organizations. The Byelorussian SSR also thought that caution should be exercised in relations with the World Bank, where one group of countries predominated.

Argentina supported the Council decision, stating that it attached great importance to pre-investment activities. Japan favoured more efforts to help Governments plan technical co-operation projects in areas where there were good possibilities of a link with sources of capital.

Fisheries vessels pool

On 30 June 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council requested the Administrator to report in 1982 on the continued need to develop the Programme's fisheries vessels pool, consisting of 16 fisheries research and training vessels used for UNDP projects throughout the world and managed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. After examining a May 1981 note by the Administrator proposing the purchase of four to seven modern vessels equipped with advanced electronic instruments to replace vessels that were becoming obsolete,<sup>(2)</sup> the Council asked him to formulate proposals on financing, utilization and maintenance, based on the assumption of full international competitive bidding. The Administrator's proposal had been that such bidding be pursued only if contracts could not be concluded through a limited call for bids aimed at permitting the maximum use of accumulated non-convertible currencies in the Programme's accounts.

Programme planning and execution

Preparations for the 1982-1986 programme cycle. On 27 June 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council took note of consultations carried out by the UNDP Administrator which indicated that resources available to UNDP in the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, might fall short of the total envisaged by the Council in 1980 when it decided on the allocation of resources for the cycle.<sup>(6)</sup> The Council decided none the less to retain, for purposes of forward planning, the level of resources envisaged for the third cycle, which assumed a 14 per cent average annual growth of voluntary contributions from the 1977-1981 level. Accordingly, it confirmed the figures it had approved in 1980 for third-cycle country, intercountry and unallocated indicative planning figures (IPFs) (see table on p. 437), as well as for Special Programme Resources, Special Industrial Services p. 587) and sectoral support (p. 450).

In order to conserve resources, the Council urged the Administrator to reduce the administrative budget during the third cycle (p. 448) and requested host Governments to increase significantly their contributions towards local costs of UNDP field offices. It also called for measures to increase contributions and make further use of non-convertible currencies (p. 452).

On 30 June, in adopting the 1982-1983 administrative budget,<sup>(5)</sup> the Governing Council appropriated $2.5 million to meet the costs resulting from the need to dismiss staff members in some countries and hire additional ones elsewhere as a consequence of the redistribution of programme resources during the third cycle (p. 448).

The Economic and Social Council, on 22 July <sup>(2)</sup> and the General Assembly, on 17 December,<sup>(3)</sup> urged all Governments to renew their efforts to provide UNDP with the resources necessary to establish the sound financial basis needed to implement the Programme's planned activities for 1982-1986. The Assembly expressed deep concern that the likely shortfall in 1982 might adversely affect programme delivery and reaffirmed the Governing Council's request that the Administrator continue consultations with donor countries with a view to reaching the level of resources envisaged for 1982-1986.

The Assembly resolution, based on a text submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, differed in several respects from an earlier draft sponsored by 32 nations.<sup>(1)</sup> It referred to the adverse effect of a contributions shortfall on proposed programme delivery for the third cycle, whereas the initial draft said the shortfall might seriously affect the impact of the operational activities of the United Nations development system for the benefit of developing countries. The provision reaffirming the Governing Council request for continued consultations with donor countries was not in the original text.

In the Committee's debate on operational activities for development, Canada said that, as an annual growth of even 8 or 9 per cent in contributions might not be achieved, the Council would have to address the difficult question of reduced IPFs and administrative costs would have to be kept as low as possible. Bulgaria supported a proposal to meet the situation by assigning 80 per cent of IPFs for 1982 and making any necessary corrections later in the cycle.

Ecuador opposed any reduction in IPFs, observing that each UNDP dollar generated local expenditures in ratios of 4 to 1 and even sometimes 10 to 1. Bangladesh said the decision to restrict IPF expenditures had already affected implementation of the Bangladesh country programme and dealt a severe blow to the central role of UNDP in technical co-operation. Italy hoped the Governing Council could find a way to keep programme delivery at a maximum.

Argentina, observing that the impact of the reduction of available funds seemed to fall almost entirely on Latin America, objected to any distinction between developing countries which led to a reduction for those considered most developed. Suriname observed that, ever since the Governing Council had decided in June 1980 to shift the Programme's emphasis to lower-income countries, many developing countries, including Suriname, had seen their hopes of a nominal increase in their third-cycle IPFs diminish.

Programming procedures. The UNDP Governing Council endorsed on 27 June 1981<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator's recommendations for revised country programming procedures. These centred around the concept of continuous programming, designed to maintain the relevance of UNDP technical co-operation to evolving national objectives, needs and priorities through a process of continuing review and assessment. Also endorsed were the Administrator's proposals for simplified programme documents, annual progress reports to the Council on programme implementation in each region, and criteria and procedures to allow extension of country programmes beyond their established duration when necessary. He was asked to ensure the timing of country programmes was decided in full agreement with the Government concerned.

In a March report setting out these proposals, <sup>(2)</sup> the Administrator stated that a continuing dialogue between the United Nations system and Governments- their ministries as well as their central planning and co-ordinating authorities-should be the corner-stone of continuous programming. That dialogue should be the basis for formulation of the country programme, continuing review of its implementation and identification of new activities. He indicated that the revised procedures would be followed during the third programming cycle, 1982-1986.

During the debate in the General Assembly's Second Committee on operational activities for development, Poland praised the country programming approach as one which safeguarded the sovereignty of the countries concerned and synchronized assistance with their development objectives, while retaining co-ordinating authority of UNDP over rational spending of funds.

Project evaluation. In a March 1981 report to the Governing Council,<sup>(2)</sup> the UNDP Administrator summarized work done on thematic evaluations of technical co-operation activities. He noted that seven studies had been completed and that reports were in preparation on rural co-operatives, innovation and reform in education, and export promotion. A study on industrial training was in progress, while two others-on national agricultural research institutes and on manufactures industries-were in the planning phase. All these studies were conducted in collaboration with the Governments concerned, executing agencies and UNDP. The cost of carrying out the thematic evaluations for 1980-1981 was expected to be $400,000.

On 27 June,<sup>(1)</sup> the Governing Council took note with appreciation of the report and of an appended extract from an evaluation of the International Trade Centre (p. 547) which suggested ways of making more effective its technical co-operation projects for strengthening national trade promotion organizations.

In the General Assembly, during the debate in the Second Committee on operational activities for development, Tunisia said much remained to be done to ensure that internal monitoring systems were effectively used; evaluation should be regarded as an integral part of measures to improve the effectiveness and quality of operational activities.

Government execution of projects. While most UNDP projects continued to be executed by intergovernmental organizations, expenditures on projects directly executed by Governments increased by 32 per cent in 1981 over the 1980 level, to an amount of $10.3 million. Approvals of such projects in 1981 totalled $12.3 million, signalling a continuing increase.

In a decision of 27 June,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council requested the Administrator, in co-operation with other United Nations organizations: to give full consideration, in the designation of executing agents, to implementation of UNDP assistance by the host Governments; to review and analyse in greater detail the reasons for lack of progress in implementing government execution and to report to the Council in 1982 on proposals for amending financial and administrative arrangements with a view to increasing the use of government execution; and to examine how government implementation would affect the work-load of UNDP field offices, particularly in the least developed countries, and make proposals for any additional staff that might be needed. The Council took note of the Administrator's view that any additional costs would be offset by savings in the support costs UNDP paid to executing agencies as reimbursement for their expenses in implementing a project. The decision also dealt with alternatives to use of internationally recruited experts (p. 458).

In a February report to the Council,<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator identified some reasons for the general lack of government execution and proposed that such execution become the preferred approach for implementing all UNDP assistance, unless there were reasons for deciding otherwise. Under this approach, another executing agent would be chosen only if the Government rejected responsibility for executing a project.

The Governing Council's decision was welcomed by the Economic and Social Council on 22 July.<sup>(2)</sup>

During the year the UNDP/Inter-Agency Task Force, established in 1977 to assist in efforts towards a better articulation of operational activities for development within the United Nations system, collaborated in the review of government execution undertaken at the Governing Council's request.

In the debate on operational activities for development held in the General Assembly's Second Committee, several speakers commented on likely benefits from expanded government execution. Bangladesh thought it would increase resources for development, as the savings in support costs would be made available to the countries concerned. Hungary believed that project execution might be simplified and accelerated if Governments were responsible for execution. Pakistan remarked that the Governing Council had shown a reluctance to accept increased financing of government execution through UNDP reimbursement of support costs, despite a clear directive from the Assembly in 1980<sup>(3)</sup> and the Administrator's estimate that savings would result. The USSR thought that government execution could help rectify the practice of entrusting projects to a group of Western countries. The Gambia and India also believed that Governments of recipient countries should assume responsibility for executing more projects.

Indonesia remarked that Governments were inhibited from assuming greater responsibility for project execution by procedural, administrative and financial restraints; it hoped recommendations would be made to solve those problems.

UNDP finances

Financial situation

Income received by UNDP in 1981 totalled $890.7 million, against expenditures of $1,043.8 million, according to the Programme's financial reports and accounts.<sup>(2)</sup> These figures covered all funds for which UNDP was responsible, including the Programme's central account and 13 special-purpose trust funds. Income of the central account was $804.3 million, a 2 per cent decrease from the $821.4 million received in 1980.

While field expenditures of the central account rose in 1981 by 8 per cent from the previous year to a record level of $732 million (p. 447), voluntary contributions pledged by Governments decreased for the first time, from $691.8 million in 1980<sup>(5)</sup> to $688.7 million in 1981 (p. 451). According to the Administrator's review of the financial situation in 1981<sup>(4)</sup> income was $136.3 million less than anticipated.

After considering the Administrator's report on the 1980 financial situation,<sup>(3)</sup> the Governing Council, on 30 June 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> noted with satisfaction the continuing steady growth in programme delivery but expressed concern at the increasing level of unpaid pledges. It invited Governments to pay amounts due, past and current, before the end of 1981 (p. 456). It also authorized additional funds for the Special Industrial Services programme (p. 587).

Expenditures

Expenditures of UNDP in 1981 totalled $1,043.8 million,<sup>(1)</sup> or 11.7 per cent above the 1980 level.<sup>(3)</sup> Of this, $962.8 million was from the Programme's central accounts, $75.2 million was from special-purpose trust funds and $5.9 million was spent on the Junior Professional Officers' Programme.

Expenditures in 1981 exceeded income by $153.2 million. For the central accounts, the excess of expenditure over income was $133.2 million. The deficit was financed by applying unspent income from previous years.

Excluding $25.25 million in transfers between accounts, the $937.5 million spent against the central accounts included the following principal elements: $731.6 million (78 per cent) in project costs, $104.6 million (11.2 per cent) for UNDP administrative and programme support costs (see below), $94.3 million (10.1 per cent) for agency support costs (p. 449) and $5.6 million (0.6 per cent) for sectoral support activities (p. 450). (A country and regional breakdown of project costs is given in the table on p. 437, and a breakdown by executing agency in the table on p. 431.)

Expenditures on project costs by component (excluding government cash counterpart expenditure of $9.8 million) were: project personnel, $372.7 million (51.6 per cent); equipment, $161.2 million (22.3 per cent); sub-contracts, $88.5 million (12.3 per cent); training, $72.3 million (10 per cent); miscellaneous, $27.1 million (3.8 per cent). Also, UNDP administered or supported in varying degree some $1,008 million in project expenditures under other United Nations system or bilateral development programmes, almost 18 per cent more than in 1980.<sup>(5)</sup>

The major elements of UNDP expenditures are given in the table in the next column.

Administrative budgets. Programme support and administrative services costs constitute the UNDP administrative budget, which is adopted on a biennial basis. Expenditures under this budget in 1981 came to $104.6 million. The administrative budget amounted to 13.6 per cent of main programme expenditures for 1980-1981 and was projected to increase to 14.5 per cent for 1982-1983, due mainly to a fall in contributions to UNDP which forced reductions in programme delivery while administrative services for delivery had to be maintained.

On 30 June 1981, the UNDP Governing Council approved appropriations covering the administrative costs of the main programme and of five other activities managed by UNDP: the United Nations Volunteers (p. 461), the United Nations Capital Development Fund (p. 470), the United

Supplementary appropriations for 1980-1981. The Governing Council approved net supplementary appropriations for 1980-1981 amounting to $31,960,700, raising to $204,354,800 the total appropriations for the programmes managed by UNDP.<sup>(6)</sup> This included $28,995,100 in supplementary appropriations for the main programme, raising its appropriations for the biennium to $192,798,900. The Administrator had proposed a net increase of $31,259,100 for the main programme.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Administrator ascribed most of the rise to unforeseen increases in salaries, wages and other costs. In addition, he requested 63 new posts, of which the Council approved 50, including 25 in a new field office at Pyongyang, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and 7 in the Division of Management Information Services at UNDP headquarters (p. 457). This brought the total number of established posts to 4,382.

Administrative budget for 1982-1983. The Council approved a net appropriation of

The Council decided to reduce the Administrator's proposed appropriations<sup>(2)</sup> by $7 million gross, calling on him to exercise extreme caution and to ensure that expenditures were closely controlled. It approved 9 of the 13 additional posts which had been requested but not approved for 1981, including 2 for the Emergency Co-ordination Unit at headquarters and a regional information officer for the Arab States. The Administrator requested no additional posts for 1982-1983, ascribing the proposed budget increase to inflation and similar causes.

Future budgets. The Governing Council, on 27 June,<sup>(5)</sup> urged the Administrator to reduce the administrative budget in the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, and decided that the budget in that cycle should not rise in real terms beyond the level approved for 1982-1983. The need for additional resources tied to any increase in programme delivery should be met by redeployment of staff and other facilities.

The General Assembly, in its 17 December resolution on UNDP,<sup>(4)</sup> commended the Administrator's efforts to increase the quality, efficiency and effectiveness of UNDP and encouraged him to continue to intensify those efforts. The text, as adopted following informal consultations, incorporated a phrase that had not been in the original 32-nation draft,<sup>(1)</sup> asking the Administrator to take account, inter alia, of the need to restrain administrative expenditures in order to maximize programme delivery in accordance with the Council's 27 June decision. The words "inter alia" were added orally by a Vice-Chairman of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee who submitted the final text.

In the Committee's debate on operational activities for development, a number of countries -including the Byelorussian SSR, Japan and the USSR-urged a reduction in administrative expenses so that more resources would be available for programmes. China considered that agencies applying a zero-growth policy to their administrative costs could economize still further by careful saving and strict budgeting; expansion of bureaucracies should be avoided. Madagascar welcomed the Administrator's decision not to increase UNDP administrative expenditure in real terms during 1982-1983 and to limit any future increase.

Programme support costs. Agency support costs reimbursed by UNDP increased from $87.9 million in 1980 to $94.3 million in 1981, or 12.9 per cent of field programme expenditures (see table below), excluding sectoral support provided to agencies (p. 450). These support costs were reimbursements to agencies executing UNDP projects, in accordance with a 1980 formula which, from 1 January 1982, was to provide 13 per cent of project delivery costs, down from the previous 14 per cent.<sup>(4)</sup>

As the reimbursement did not cover the full cost of providing technical and administrative support to UNDP projects, especially in the case of smaller agencies, the UNDP Governing Council, on 30 June 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> approved support cost flexibility arrangements to permit higher reimbursement rates to agencies executing a relatively small volume of UNDP projects. Eligible to benefit were autonomous organizations in the United Nations system whose annual delivery did not exceed $15 million. A sliding scale was set according to which agencies handling less than $5 million of UNDP projects could receive as much as 22 per cent of their cost, with the reimbursement rate dropping as project delivery increased. In reviewing requests for flexibility, the UNDP Administrator would ensure that no executing agency would receive less in total support cost reimbursement for delivering a higher programme level than it had received for delivering a lower level.

United Nations organizations not eligible for support cost flexibility arrangements would be entitled to limited compensation if the average annual currency exchange rate at their headquarters had appreciated by at least 11 per cent vis-à-vis the United States dollar between one year and the next.

The Council also approved reimbursement of support costs to the UNDP Office for Projects Execution based on the rates in effect for other executing agencies.

The new arrangements were based on proposals made by the Administrator in a March report to the Council.<sup>(3)</sup> In that report he also described consultations between UNDP and agencies on devising a format for ex post facto reporting of actual support costs incurred by agencies, and said he intended to submit a format in 1982 so that reporting could begin in 1983.

With regard to a request by the International Telecommunication Union for additional support cost reimbursement of $87,955 for 1980 as a consequence of currency exchange losses, the Council, noting that the exchange rate of the dollar vis-à-vis the Swiss franc had considerably improved in 1981, decided to review the request in 1982 in conjunction with 1981 data.<sup>(2)</sup>

Sectoral support activities. In 1981, UNDP allocated $1,925,000 to eight executing agencies for sectoral support activities—principally regional advisers and short-term missions of experts—designed to complement similar activities undertaken by the agencies from their own resources. This was in addition to the largest programme of this type, Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAS), managed by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (p. 587).

The UNDP Governing Council, on 30 June,<sup>(1)</sup> approved the Administrator's proposal to allocate $3,689,000 for sectoral support for 1982-1983, primarily for the smaller agencies. This amount, up slightly from $3,650,000 for 1980-1981, was out of a total of $12 million allocated for all sectoral support, the balance of which was for the SIDFA programme.

The need for sectoral support activities was confirmed by the Administrator in an April 1981 report to the Council.<sup>(2)</sup> He considered that UNDP should continue to finance such activities in the third programming cycle, 1982-1986 (p. 444), mainly for agencies which had neither an established field structure nor access to regular programme funds for technical co-operation. He proposed that funds be made available primarily to agencies which had received allocations in 1980-1981, with the addition of the World Intellectual Property Organization, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements and the Universal Postal Union.

Accounts

Accounts of executing agencies for 1979. The UNDP Governing Council, on 30 June 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> took note with satisfaction of the audit reports of participating and executing agencies relating to funds allocated to them by UNDP as at 31 December 1979.<sup>(1)</sup> Noting the Administrator's observations on the auditors' comments, it requested him to continue submitting observations and to consult with executing agencies that used commercial external auditors on the possibility of including in future audit reports observations on substantive matters as well as on financial planning and control mechanisms, ways of improving reporting to decision-making bodies, management controls and electronic data processing systems.

Accounts for 1980. By a resolution of 30 November 1981 on the 1980 accounts of various United Nations programmes and funds,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly accepted the UNDP accounts for the year ended 31 December 1980,<sup>(2)</sup> concurred with observations and comments by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ),<sup>(1)</sup> and requested remedial action where required by the Board of Auditors in its comments on the accounts.

Investment and contract procedures were among the matters discussed by the Board, ACABQ and the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee in connection with the accounts. Also considered were two matters pertaining to contributions-collection of contributions and non-convertible currencies (p. 456)—n which the UNDP Governing Council took decisions. The UNDP administration responded in its financial statements and in the Fifth Committee.

Investments. The Board noted that the Administrator was exploring the possibility of transferring responsibility for placing UNDP funds for investment from the United Nations to UNDP. The UNDP administration said it intended to carry out such a review by the end of 1981, after which it might consult with United Nations officials if a change was desirable. ACABQ recommended that it be given the opportunity to review any proposal to change the current arrangement.

In the Fifth Committee, Ghana agreed that any proposals should first be submitted to ACABQ, though any change in arrangements should be left to the UNDP Governing Council.

The ACABQ recommendation was also supported by Bangladesh and Japan.

Contracts. The Board recommended that UNDP discourage the practice of submitting contracts involving significant amounts of money for ex post facto approval. ACABQ also favoured a tightening of procedures in this regard. UNDP responded that 17 out of 173 cases reviewed by its Contracts Committee in 1980 had been submitted ex post facto; its representative informed the Fifth Committee in October that the number of such approvals as of that time in 1981 had been halved, and the administration was reviewing measures to reduce such cases to a minimum.

In the Fifth Committee, Bangladesh considered it important to prevent anomalies or negligence in the approval of contracts ex post facto. Ghana felt that UNDP had been lax in controlling the award of contracts. Japan called for a tightening of approval procedures. India urged UNDP to expand its coverage of potential suppliers, particularly in developing countries, so that the system of international competitive bidding would live up to its name.

Financial regulations

Revised UNDP Financial Regulations were approved by the UNDP Governing Council on 30 June 1981.<sup>(5)</sup> The modifications were aimed at meeting the long-term requirements of UNDP, including its needs in programme and project management. The initial redrafting was done by the Administrator; <sup>(2)</sup> the text approved by the Council took into account comments by ACABQ. <sup>(3)</sup> Certain proposed changes concerning contributions in non-convertible currencies (p. 456) were left for a decision in 1982 because of a lack of consensus in the Council.

Acting at the Council's request, the General Assembly, by a resolution adopted without vote on 18 December 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> authorized the Council to adopt financial regulations in respect of all funds administered by UNDP. It also decided that the Financial Regulations of UNDP would apply to the United Nations Capital Development Fund (p. 471) and the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries (p. 416) until the Council adopted special financial regulations for them. The Fifth Committee, acting on a draft by the Secretary-General, approved the text on 16 December, also without vote.

In a note of 3 December,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General indicated that the two funds were the only ones administered by UNDP on which action was needed, as in other cases the Assembly had either specified that the UNDP Financial Regulations would apply or had not stated that the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would apply.

Financial regulations in respect of the funds administered by the United Nations Development Programme

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-eighth session, In particular Governing Council decision 81/28 of 30 June 1981 concerning the Financial Regulations of the United Nations Development Programme,

1. Authorizes the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to adopt financial regulations in respect of all funds administered by the Programme and requests it to report such regulations to the General Assembly;

2. Decides to adopt, on a Provisional basis, the following measures in implementation of its resolutions 2186(XXI) of 13 December 1966 and 2321 (XXII) of 15 December 1967:

(a) The financial regulations of the United Nations Capital Development Fund, after they have been reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, shall be adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, which shall report such regulations to the General Assembly; In the preparation of those regulations, account shall be taken of the special requirements of the operations of the Fund;

(b) Pending the adoption by the Governing Council of financial regulations for the Fund, the Financial Regulations of the United Nations Development Programme shall apply:

3. Decides that until the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries becomes operational In the manner specified In General Assembly resolution 31/177 of 21 December 1976:

(a) The financial regulations for the Fund, after they have been reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, shall be adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, which shall report such regulations to the General Assembly; in the preparation of those regulations, account shall be taken of the special requirements of the operations of the Fund;

(b) Pending the adoption by the Governing Council of financial regulations for the Fund, the Financial Regulations of the United Nations Development Programme shall apply.

Contributions

Governments paid a total of $776.3 million to the central UNDP accounts in 1981 (see table beginning on p. 453), a slight increase over the $772.7 million recorded for 1980. The main source of funds was voluntary contributions for the main UNDP account, received from 147 Governments in the amount of $688.7 million; this compared to $691.8 million paid in 1980, representing the first such decline in the Programme's history. Another $12.9 million was paid by four Governments to the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs), up from $11.7 million in 1980. The rest of the contributions came from recipient countries: $62.7 million as cost-sharing contributions from 67 Governments and three intergovernmental organizations (a 7.6 per cent increase over the previous year); $10.8 million from 28 Governments and an intergovernmental body in cash counterpart contributions for projects; and $1.3 million from five Governments in assessed programme costs.

For 1982, a total of $416,299,290 was pledged for the main UNDP account by 108 Governments as at 31 December 1981, mostly at the 1981 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held on 3 and 4 November (p. 426). In addition, eight Governments pledged $17,355,860 for the Fund for LDCs, bringing total pledges for 1982 to $433,655,150.

The UNDP Governing Council, although noting with concern indications that UNDP resources might fall short of the amount needed to sustain the programme at the level envisaged for the 1982-1986 cycle (p. 444), decided on 27 June 1981<sup>(4)</sup> to retain, for purposes of forward planning, the previously envisaged level. This was based on the assumption that voluntary contributions would grow by an annual average of 14 per cent from the level set for 1977-1981.

The Council requested the Administrator to continue consultations with donor countries with a view to reaching the level envisaged for 1982-1986. It asked all countries to reconsider the magnitude of their third-cycle contributions and urged donors which lagged behind in the first part of the cycle to increase their contributions later in the cycle so that the overall objective could be reached. All countries, particularly those whose previous contributions were below their capacity, were asked to consider increasing their contributions substantially.

The Council's decision also contained provisions on contributions in non-convertible currencies (p. 456).

In another action of 27 June,<sup>(5)</sup> the Council decided that the policy review item for its 1982 session would be entitled "New and specific ways and means of mobilizing increased resources on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis".

The Economic and Social Council, in its 22 July resolution on UNDP,<sup>(2)</sup> urged Governments to renew their efforts to provide UNDP with the resources necessary to establish the sound financial basis needed to implement activities planned for the third programming cycle.

The General Assembly, on 17 December,<sup>(3)</sup> expressed deep concern that the likely shortfall in 1982 contributions might adversely affect programme delivery for the third cycle. It urged Governments, especially those whose contributions might not reflect their capacity, to renew their efforts to provide UNDP with the resources needed to establish a sound financial basis for the upcoming cycle. It strongly reiterated the need for a substantial and real increase in resources on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis, and welcomed the Governing Council's decision to review the issue in 1982. It reaffirmed the Council's request that the Administrator consult with donors in order to reach the resource level envisaged for 1982-1986.

The reaffirmation of the Council's request was added, as a result of informal consultations in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, to the initial draft of the resolution as submitted by 32 nations, mainly developing countries.<sup>(1)</sup> Another difference concerned the paragraph on the need for a substantial and real increase in resources: the earlier draft did not mention the Council decision to review the issue but would have had the Assembly appeal to all Governments to contribute on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis.

During the Committee's debate on operational activities for development, many countries, including Bangladesh, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, the Gambia, India, Indonesia, Italy, Kenya, Madagascar, the Niger, Pakistan, the Philippines, Rwanda, the Sudan, Suriname, Tunisia, the Upper Volta and Yugoslavia, warned of the consequences of a shortfall in contributions to UNDP and urged donors to make adequate contributions.

Ecuador said only by maintaining the 14 per cent growth target would UNDP assistance reach $2 billion by 1986, a figure consistent with the minimum requirements of the developing world. The Niger thought that the 14 per cent goal was still remote.

Argentina, Australia and France pointed out that they had substantially increased their contributions. Austria estimated that one quarter to one third of the anticipated shortfall might be due to currency exchange rate fluctuations with respect to the United States dollar; to maintain its contribution at the 1981 dollar level, Austria had had to raise it by more than 20 per cent in terms of its national currency. Denmark, speaking for the Nordic States, said they could not increase their contributions, which accounted for nearly 30 per cent of UNDP resources; in the long run, UNDP could not continue to depend on a limited number of donors.

Bangladesh pointed out that exchange rate fluctuations and high inflation rates contributed to the negative growth rate of UNDP resources. Poland, warning against the proliferation of special funds and the resulting dispersion of resources, observed that the UNDP share of global technical co-operation funding had fallen below 60 per cent in 1980.

The USSR opposed fixing amounts for contributions to UNDP; in its opinion, proposed changes in current pledging arrangements undermined the principles of universality and voluntariness. Japan remarked that targets were recommendations rather than rigid legal commitments.

Speakers also touched on the consequences of a decrease in contributions for development assistance as a whole (p. 425) and for UNDP activities during the 1982-1986 programming cycle (p. 445).

Collection of contributions. Noting with concern the increasing level of unpaid pledges to UNDP, the Governing Council, in a decision of 30 June 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> invited Governments to pay amounts due for 1981 and prior years before the end of 1981 or to indicate the date in early 1982 on which they expected to make payment. It also called on Governments to pay their annual pledges as early as possible in the year for which the pledge was made and requested the Administrator to consult with donors on the extent to which payment schedules could be established.

The matter of unpaid contributions was also raised by the Board of Auditors in connection with the 1980 UNDP accounts (p. 450). The Board recommended intensified efforts to collect from Governments.<sup>(3)</sup> The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in its report on the accounts,<sup>(2)</sup> said it had been informed that, of the total of $102.3 million unpaid under the UNDP account as at 31 December 1980, $89.2 million related to contributions for 1980. UNDP told the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee that the amount of unpaid contributions for prior years had been reduced to less than $14 million by the end of September 1981.

Ghana remarked in the Fifth Committee that the matter required a political solution and the co-operation of States. Japan urged that Governments either pay their pledges in full or indicate that the amounts were uncollectable.

In the Second Committee's discussion of operational activities for development, Sri Lanka observed that the time-lag between pledges and the receipt of contributions had compounded the problem caused by inadequate resources for UNDP.

Non-convertible currencies. A paragraph on the issue of non-convertible currencies held by UNDP, resulting mainly from the practice by some Governments of paying their voluntary contributions in their national currencies, was included in the Governing Council's decision of 27 June 1981<sup>(1)</sup> on preparation for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986 (p. 444). However, much of the wording was in square brackets, reflecting the Council's inability to reach a consensus on the matter. The provision was to the effect that donor countries not receiving UNDP assistance and contributing in non-convertible currencies should pay a gradually increasing share in convertible currencies, and that entities headquartered in net donor countries which contributed in non-convertible currencies should be reimbursed for services and equipment purchased by UNDP in the currencies in which their contribution was paid.

The issue of non-convertible currency holdings was also left unresolved when the Council considered revisions in the UNDP Financial Regulations (p. 451).

The Board of Auditors, in its report<sup>(2)</sup> on the 1980 UNDP accounts (p. 450), recommended that UNDP intensify efforts to exchange for readily usable currencies its non-convertible currency holdings, the value of which had risen to $45.2 million as at 31 December 1980. The UNDP administration said it was making every effort to increase the utilization of such currencies or to exchange them; its representative told the Fifth Committee in October that a reduction of several million dollars in holdings of such currencies was expected in 1981.

In the Committee, Italy called for action by the administration to use the accumulated currencies, while Japan regretted that no progress had been made on the matter. Morocco thought a solution must be found by the countries that had contributed the currencies. Yugoslavia welcomed the auditors' recommendations. India said it was unfortunate that the Administrator's proposal to use non-convertible currencies to purchase ships in the socialist countries for the fisheries vessels pool (p. 444) had been rejected by the Governing Council for political reasons.

The USSR remarked that the issue had been trumped up by certain circles with the aim of discriminating against some national currencies, undermining the international character of UNDP activities and helping transnational corporations perpetuate their preferential position with regard to the award of UNDP contracts. The German Democratic Republic could not subscribe to the Board's recommendation and said the amount and form of voluntary contributions was at the sole discretion of Governments.

Nigeria said the UNDP administration had admitted that the task was beyond its capabilities; the problem called for action by either the Fifth Committee or the General Assembly.

The issue was also discussed in the Second Committee during the debate on operational activities for development. The Gambia called on the countries concerned to make their future contributions in convertible currencies. Denmark (speaking for the Nordic States) and Italy urged those concerned to reconsider their position, while Rwanda expressed concern at the lack of flexibility shown by those who paid in non-convertible currencies.

On the other hand, Bulgaria remarked that, given goodwill, there were no obstacles to utilizing all available currencies. The Byelorussian SSR thought the problem had been exaggerated and that the ability of the socialist countries to aid developing countries had not been fully exploited. Czechoslovakia said it could increase its contribution to UNDP if full use was made of the non-convertible currencies in which it contributed; the services its economic, scientific and technical organizations provided to UNDP could be financed entirely from that source. Hungary regretted what it viewed as attempts to exploit the issue, stating that, if Governments were required to contribute only in convertible currencies, their decisions on how much to contribute would be subject to foreign currency availability. Poland urged that no effort be spared to utilize contributions in national currencies.

UNDP management and staffing

Strengthening the Division of Management Information Services

New management information systems, designed to supply UNDP administrators with current data required for decision-making and control, became operational in 1981. They consisted of computerized systems for programme and project management, accounts, income and cash management, administrative budget and personnel. They were designed and developed by the Integrated Systems Improvement Project (ISIP), established in 1977. The Division of Management Information Services took over the functions of ISIP in June 1980, and began maintaining and enhancing the new systems.

After receiving a report from the Administrator on implementation of the new systems as of April 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council, on 30 June,<sup>(2)</sup> approved the Administrator's staffing proposals for the Division, contained in his reports on supplementary budget estimates for 1980-1981<sup>(4)</sup> and estimates for 1982-1983.<sup>(3)</sup> As specified in the Council's decision on supplementary estimates for 1980-1981,<sup>(1)</sup> this called for the addition of 7 posts to the existing complement of 30. The number of posts was to be reduced by one in 1982-1983.

Inter-agency Procurement Services Unit

The UNDP Governing Council, on 30 June 1981, <sup>(1)</sup> expressed support for continued development of the work of the Inter-agency Procurement Services Unit and decided that the Unit should continue to be financed from the UNDP budget, as a part of support services for UNDP-executed projects. As described in a March report by the Administrator<sup>(2)</sup> in response to a 1979 Council request,<sup>(3)</sup> the Unit's primary objective was to procure equipment at the lowest possible cost, consistent with the maintenance of adequate standards.

According to this report, more than $200 million a year was spent by the United Nations system on common-user items. Among the benefits ascribed to the Unit were cost savings of 5 to 10 per cent through preferential discounts based on economy of scale, the establishment of motor-vehicle standards, increased procurement from developing countries, more equitable geographical distribution of procurement and utilization of accumulated non-convertible currencies.

China, speaking in the debate on operational activities for development in the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, expressed the view that suppliers who delivered defective goods to UNDP should be subject to economic penalties. In Romania's view, greatly increased purchases of equipment from developing countries would enable UNDP to promote technical co-operation more effectively.

Recruitment of professional staff

The UNDP Governing Council, recognizing the need to improve methods for recruiting project professional staff and consultants, especially from developing countries, decided on 27 June 1981<sup>(3)</sup> to invite countries to establish or strengthen national expert recruitment services and requested the Administrator to assist. The Administrator was asked to submit in 1982 a report on what was being done to prepare and update rosters of project professional staff and consultants, and to provide national recruitment services with information on vacancies. He was requested to make recommendations for improving such recruitment and for ensuring that the best qualified experts were recruited world-wide for UNDP-supported projects.

In another decision of 27 June,<sup>(4)</sup> dealing mainly with government execution of UNDP-financed projects (p. 446), the Council made suggestions on alternatives to the use of internationally recruited experts. It invited Governments, UNDP and United Nations organizations to make increasing use of qualified national professional staff, bearing in mind the importance of continuing to obtain the best-qualified advice and expertise. They were also invited to consider such other available options as non-resident nationals and institutional twinning, keeping in mind the requirements of each project and the availability of qualified national resources.

In a February report to the Council,<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator noted that agencies had been instructed to give primary consideration, when recruiting professional staff for a UNDP-supported project, to use nationals of the assisted country having the required qualifications and experience.

The Economic and Social Council, in its 22 July resolution on UNDP,<sup>(2)</sup> welcomed both Governing Council decisions.

In the General Assembly's Second Committee, during the debate on operational activities for development, Romania said that more experts should be recruited from developing countries, since they had worked in development conditions similar to those in which UNDP projects operated. The Byelorussian SSR believed that project staff should be recruited locally. The Ukrainian SSR said the Administrator must remedy an intolerable situation in which the human resources of the socialist countries were not being used.

Establishment of a study programme

The UNDP Governing Council requested the Administrator on 27 June 1981<sup>(2)</sup> to establish a study programme on technical co-operation issues. The programme was to organize seminars attended by high-level national policy-makers, government representatives to international organizations, senior secretariat officials and field experts. They would informally discuss aspects of technical co-operation in order to promote greater understanding of development problems and to generate new resources and ideas. The programme was to be financed by voluntary contributions from Governments, international institutions and private foundations. An annex to the Council's decision set out the objectives, organization and management of the study programme.

The Governing Council's decision was welcomed by the Economic and Social Council on 22 July, in its resolution on UNDP.<sup>(1)</sup>

On 15 October, the Administrator wrote to Governments and organizations requesting their support for the programme.

Relations with NGOs

The UNDP Administrator reported to the Governing Council in January 1981 on relations between UNDP and external institutions, mainly non-governmental organizations (NGOs).<sup>(2)</sup> According to the report, Council members and the administration shared a common desire to see the number of co-operating organizations increase steadily. Additional steps were being taken, through UNDP resident representatives, to associate organizations from developing countries. Co-operating organizations included the Aga Khan Foundation, the International Co-operative Alliance, the Catholic Relief Services, the International Federation of Consulting Engineers, the Young Presidents' Organization, the International Federation of Institutes of Advanced Study and the Industry Council for Development.

The Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report on 27 June.<sup>(1)</sup>

Rationalization of the work of the Governing Council

The UNDP 'Governing Council, on 27 June 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> adopted measures to streamline and rationalize its work.

The Council decided to allocate time to major policy issues and emerging developments in the activities under its supervision on which immediate action was necessary. Such policy reviews would be a major item on the agenda of each annual session, the precise topic to be defined a year in advance. A short part of each session would be held at a senior policy-maker level, and short sessions might be held on specific matters, including one in 1982 on country and intercountry programmes and another in 1983 on approval of new country programmes. The Budgetary and Finance Committee would meet one week prior to the annual Council sessions. An organizational meeting of one or two days would be held in New York each February.

The Council decided to establish the substantive agenda of each session under five main headings: policy review; programme implementation; programme planning; other funds and programmes; and financial, budgetary and administrative matters. Two topics—a policy review of other funds and programmes, and technical co-operation among developing countries—would be considered biennially.

The Council adopted measures to streamline the organization of its work and approved corresponding revisions to three of its rules of procedure. It also decided on steps to control documentation, including specific limits on the number of pages to be submitted to it in 1982, excluding country and intercountry programme papers.

The Economic and Social Council, in its 22 July resolution on UNDP,<sup>(2)</sup> welcomed the Governing Council's decision. On 24 July, in connection with the calendar of future meetings, it requested the General Assembly to consider the feasibility of altering the dates of Governing Council sessions so that its reports might be submitted in good time for the mid-year sessions of the Economic and Social Council in 1982 and 1983.

The Assembly, in its resolution of 17 December on UNDP,<sup>(3)</sup> endorsed the Governing Council's decision and decided that, beginning in 1983, a broad policy review of the funds and programmes under UNDP guidance should be undertaken biennially. This text omitted a phrase in an earlier draft sponsored by 32 countries<sup>(1)</sup> stressing the need for further streamlining and rationalization of the Governing Council's work.

UN technical co-operation programmes

In 1981, the United Nations continued its work to further the economic and social progress of the developing countries by supplying experts, awarding fellowships, providing advisory services, and organizing workshops and study tours. These activities covered a broad range of subjects, including development planning (p. 396), public administration (p. 398), rural development (p. 400), international trade (p. 535), shipping (p. 567), industrial development transnational corporations (. 604), mineral resources (p. 680), population (P. 787), environment (p. 841), statistics (p. 1072) and human rights (p. 937). Emphasis on the needs of the least developed countries (LDCs) was intensified.

The United Nations delivered a technical co-operation programme of approximately $297 million in 1981, according to a report by the Secretary-General to the UNDP Governing Council.<sup>(*)</sup> Of this total, $204 million came from UNDP, $46 million from special-purpose trust funds contributed by Governments, $32 million from the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) and $15 million from the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation (see table on following page).

Slightly less than half of the United Nations programme—$137 million, compared to $134 million in 1980—was carried out by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD). The share of DTCD programmes funded by UNDP increased to 67 per cent ($92 million) of the Department's total delivery, while that financed by trust funds and other sources decreased: UNFPA, 19 per cent ($26 million); trust funds and other resources, 9 per cent ($12 million); regular programme, 5 per cent ($6 million).

The regional commissions delivered $37 million, or 12 per cent of the United Nations programme, while the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) was responsible for $13 million, or 4 per cent. The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) executed $90 million in projects and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) $20 million, or 30 per cent and 7 per cent of the total, respectively.

Of expenditures on DTCD projects, the programme for Africa remained the largest, accounting for $54 million or 39 per cent of the total. Expenditures in Asia and the Pacific amounted to $36 million or 26 per cent, while those in the Americas, at $20 million, represented a decrease from 21 per cent in 1980 to 15 per cent in 1981. Arab States accounted for $9 million (7 per cent) and Europe for $8 million (6 per cent). The remainder was spent on interregional (6 per cent) and global (0.3 per cent) projects. More than 35 per cent of DTCD field activities were concentrated in LDCs.

The sectoral breakdown of the DTCD programme changed only slightly. Natural resources and energy projects rose from 35 to 37 per cent of the programme and amounted to $51 million. Projects in statistics increased to 22 per cent, or $30 million. Projects in development administration (public administration and finance) remained at 9 per cent and involved expenditures of $13 million, while development planning increased slightly from 19 to 20 per cent, with expenditures of $27 million. Population projects amounted to 4 per cent or $6 million, and social development projects were 2 per cent or $3 million. Fellowships under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (p. 1117) and programmes in other sectors accounted for the remaining expenditures.

Under the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation, financed as part of the United Nations regular budget, $3.3 million was spent on industrial development activities. Projects in the area of natural resources accounted for over $2.8 million of the programme's $14.8 million total, while more than $1.4 million was spent on development strategies, policies and planning. The programme also financed regional and subregional advisory services managed by the regional commissions, at a total expenditure of $3.7 million. The $1.3 million in activities by the Economic Commission for Africa was the largest of the regional components.

In 16 countries whose UNDP country programmes were to be reviewed by the Governing Council in 1982 and 1983, DTCD missions assisted national authorities in reviewing the objectives of their national and regional development plans in order to identify technical co-operation needs. Special efforts were made in 1981 to increase the level of investment-oriented work and to include assessment of investment potential as an integral part of the Department's missions and advisory services. Many activities related to technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) (p. 462) were undertaken by DTCD during the year, leading to the formulation of pilot or experimental projects and promoting new approaches. DTCD also provided training facilities and assistance to students: in 1981, the number of fellowship awards increased to 3,531, and developing countries hosted more than 1,300 fellows.

The Governing Council, by a decision of 24 June,<sup>(1)</sup> endorsed the orientation of DTCD work and the use of the regular programme of technical co-operation for innovative activities for promoting TCDC and the global priorities recognized by United Nations bodies, special consideration being given to the needs of LDCs and the island and land-locked developing countries. The Council invited the UNDP Administrator to take account of the special competence, experience and expertise of DTCD in its fields of specialization when selecting executing agencies for implementing projects financed by UNDP or UNDP-managed funds, including those entrusted to UNDP in the future. It also endorsed a recommendation on co-ordination between DTCD and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (p. 675).

During the debate on operational activities for development in the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the USSR said DTCD had been ineffective in arranging for the training of personnel from developing countries in the USSR and other socialist countries.

UN Volunteers

By the middle of 1981, its tenth anniversary year, the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme reached for the first time the level of 1,000 volunteers serving in the field. The number dropped to 975 by 31 December. The number of countries receiving assistance from the programme increased from 87 in December 1980 to 91 by the end of 1981.

According to a report by the UNDP Administrator on the programme's 1981 activities,<sup>(3)</sup> UNV increasingly emphasized service in least developed countries: 460 volunteers were assigned to such countries as of December. In terms of regional distribution, the programme expanded considerably in Asia and the Pacific, where 44 per cent of the serving volunteers were assigned as of December, compared to 35 per cent a year earlier. Africa accounted for 38 per cent, the Arab States 14 per cent, and Latin America and the Caribbean 4 per cent.

The programme continued work in its two principal areas, domestic development services and youth. Funds were earmarked from the UNDP indicative planning figure for Africa for a project, commencing in 1982, in which UNV would co-operate with organizations active in those areas. A review and programming meeting with organizations participating in a similar project in Asia and the Pacific was held at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, from 8 to 14 November 1981, to assess the project and chart its second phase, due to begin in 1983. Some 60 organizations from 14 Asian and Pacific countries participated in the project in 1981, and 95 volunteers were assigned. In Latin America, government representatives participating in a UNV-executed regional project on promotion of youth participation in social development activities decided to set up continuing machinery to facilitate exchange of information and promote co-operation in the field of youth.

Volunteers included engineers, agronomists, vocational teachers, medical doctors, nurses and midwives, social and community workers, mechanics and persons of many other skills and professions. The programme assigned an average of 39 new volunteers per month throughout the year, for an annual total of 470. At year's end, 760 volunteers- 78 per cent of the total-were nationals of 57 developing countries. More than 20 per cent of all volunteers were women.

The financial position of UNV deteriorated in 1981, since the level of annual contributions to the Special Voluntary Fund, established to support the programme's activities, remained static while the programme grew rapidly. Total contributions paid to the Fund in 1981 amounted to $581,187 from 15 countries (see table on p. 462). In addition, UNDP allocated $250,000 to the programme, and interest income, derived mainly from previous years' contributions, provided another $540,125. Project expenditures totalled $1,608,408, or $235,616 more than total income. For 1982, a total of $492,182 was pledged by 17 countries as at 31 December 1981.

Administrative costs continued to be met from the UNDP budget (p. 447). Acting on 30

June 1981, the UNDP Governing Council, through a supplementary appropriation of $393,700, raised its 1980-1981 appropriation for this purpose to $3,750,100 (net) and added four posts to the UNV staff of 37,<sup>(7)</sup> and appropriated $4,590,500 for 1982-1983, including the cost of six additional posts.<sup>(8)</sup>

Both the Governing Council and the General Assembly reconfirmed their support for UNV. The Council, on 18 June,<sup>(6)</sup> noted the programme's progress in response to its related mandates in the fields of domestic development service and youth, requested the UNV Executive Co-ordinator to continue recruiting volunteers on the widest possible geographical basis and reiterated its invitation to donors to increase contributions to the Special Voluntary Fund. On 30 June, in its decision on support costs of executing agencies,<sup>(9)</sup> the Council decided to review in 1982 the question of reimbursing UNV for costs related to non-UNDP-financed activities and requested the Administrator to present proposals.

The Economic and Social Council, on 22 July,<sup>(5)</sup> took note of the Governing Council's 18 June decision as well as of the UNDP Administrator's report on the 1980 activities of UNV.<sup>(2)</sup> This decision was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, as orally proposed by the Committee Chairman and approved without vote on 17 July.

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December adopted without vote,<sup>(4)</sup> noted with satisfaction the programme's successful achievement during its first decade and that it had achieved ahead of schedule the target of 1,000 volunteers in service. It considered UNV a valuable instrument of multilateral technical co-operation and reiterated its appeal to donors to contribute or increase their contributions to the Special Voluntary Fund so as to overcome the financial straits affecting it.

The Second Committee approved this text without vote on 27 November, as submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a lo-nation draft<sup>(1)</sup> introduced by the Philippines. The original draft, which was withdrawn, would have had the Assembly reaffirm its conviction (instead of consider) that the programme was a unique (rather than valuable) instrument of multilateral technical co-operation. Also, the original text called for enabling the programme to overcome financial constraints affecting its growth, whereas the adopted text used the phrase "affecting it". All three revisions were made orally on behalf of the original draft's sponsors and were carried over into the Vice-Chairman's draft.

In the Committee's debate on operational activities for development, a number of speakers commended UNV and urged its continued support. Among them, Bhutan said that although the programme had been working in that country for less than two years, it was already an important source of skilled manpower. Rwanda regretted that its nationals had been recruited outside its borders to serve with the programme, depriving Rwanda of their services when their United Nations contracts had terminated. The Syrian Arab Republic said volunteers had performed well in that country and would be used for training local supervisory staff under its development plan.

United Nations Volunteers programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2659(XXV) of 7 December 1970,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-eighth session and its decision 81/1 of 18 June 1981 on the United Nations Volunteers programme,

1. Notes with satisfaction the successful achievement of the United Nations Volunteers programme during the first decade of service, that it is active in ninety-three countries, including the least developed countries, and that it has, in response to General Assembly resolution 34/107 of 14 December 1979, reached ahead of schedule the target of one thousand volunteers in service;

2. Notes the activities of the programme in the fields of youth and domestic development service;

3. Considers that the programme is a valuable instrument of multilateral technical co-operation in response to the needs of the developing countries, in particular the least developed and newly independent countries;

4. Reiterates its appeal to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute or to increase their contributions to the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers so as to enable the programme to overcome the financial constraints affecting it, and requests the Executive Co-ordinator to explore ways of ensuring increased resources and to make proposals thereon to the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

UNDP continued in 1981 to play a leading role in efforts by the United Nations to promote the exchange of experts and skills among developing countries (p. 467). A committee of the General Assembly reviewed activities by the United Nations system in regard to technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) and made suggestions for future work. These activities paralleled action in favour of economic co-operation among developing countries, taken by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and others (p. 383).

Among its activities in Africa, UNDP was helping to strengthen an African aquaculture centre in Nigeria, a national centre in Mauritius where research and training facilities in sugar-cane production were provided for 12 African countries, and a project for rice production in West Africa. UNDP field offices helped Governments which participated in the November TCDC Meeting of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Council to prepare their country profiles.

Among Arab States, regional projects with a TCDC component included an Arab planning institute in Kuwait, desert-locust survey and control, and an Arab institute for banking and financial studies, primarily serving the Gulf area. Thirty-nine TCDC projects in Asia and the Pacific were under way in 1981, with a UNDP contribution of about $31.4 million, or approximately 34 per cent of all Asian and Pacific regional programmes in the 1977-1981 planning cycle. About 85 per cent of regional projects in Latin America and the Caribbean involved TCDC, including the Inter-American Research and Documentation Centre on Vocational Training (Montevideo, Uruguay) and support to the Caribbean Community secretariat.

Many interregional and global projects also promoted TCDC activities. A number of these involved support for institutions, such as the International Centre for Public Enterprises in Developing Countries (Ljubljana, Yugoslavia), or for links between institutions, as in a project to find ways in which management development bodies in developing countries might co-operate more closely. Others were training projects, including one designed to develop vocational training in telecommunications.

While most TCDC projects were regional or interregional, some were financed as part of the programmes of individual countries. One example was a computer software development and training project in India, begun in 1981 by the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development, in which Indians joined with Africans, Asians and Latin Americans to develop training courses.

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE ON TCDC. The second session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries was held at United Nations Headquarters from 1 to 8 June 1981.<sup>(2)</sup> The Committee's tasks were to review TCDC activities within the United Nations system, ensure that efforts to strengthen such activities were sustained, support new policies and approaches to further the development of TCDC, consider the availability of funds and their effective use by the United Nations system, and ensure co-ordination of TCDC activities within the system. These functions were defined by the Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, adopted in 1978 by the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Buenos Aires, Argentina.<sup>(8)</sup>

The Committee adopted 10 decisions on 7 June 1981, aimed at promoting TCDC in general and in specific areas. In one of these, it urged action to reverse what it saw as insufficient progress in implementing the Buenos Aires Plan of Action (p. 465). It sought to encourage potential sources for financing TCDC (p. 465), called for an exchange of information on government activities in this field (p. 466), invited developing countries to co-operate in strengthening institutional and administrative mechanisms (p. 466) and legal arrangements (p. 467) for TCDC, and suggested policy and procedural changes to facilitate the use of UNDP country programme funds for TCDC (p. 467).

In other decisions, the Committee called for activities to develop transport and communications between developing countries (p. 568) and to promote women's participation in development programmes through TCDC (p. 986), and recommended greater co-operation among developing countries in scientific and technological research (p. 749). Finally, it adopted a provisional agenda for its next (1983) session, concentrating on a review of progress and on organizational and support arrangements for

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council, by a resolution<sup>(3)</sup> adopted without vote, took note with satisfaction of the report of the Committee on TCDC and commended its decisions to the attention of the General Assembly. The Council's Third Committee had recommended this action on 17 July, also without vote, on the basis of a 16-nation draft introduced by India.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 19 November,<sup>(4)</sup> adopted without vote, the General Assembly also took note of the report and urged Governments to implement the agreements reached by the Committee. It requested that the third session of the Committee be convened prior to the 1983 session of the UNDP Governing Council; invited participants in UNDP to send high-level representatives to the Committee's next session; and requested the executive heads of United Nations organs, organizations and bodies, including the regional commissions, to contribute to the preparation of the session and participate actively in it.

The Second Committee approved the resolution without vote on 11 November. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman, based on informal consultations on a draft introduced by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77.<sup>(1)</sup> The adopted text added a clause stating that preparations by United Nations organs and organizations should be conducted "within their spheres of competence, programmes of work and available resources".

In the Committee's debates on development and international economic co-operation and on operational activities for development, several speakers, including Argentina, the Gambia and

Guinea, urged developed countries to support TCDC. India said it was unfortunate that developed countries paid only lip-service to TCDC and felt threatened by it. Romania regarded it as unsatisfactory that most TCDC activities were financed by the developing countries and felt that developed countries, development banks and the United Nations system should increase their contributions substantially.

Other speakers mentioned action which developing countries could take to strengthen TCDC. Egypt suggested that they create pools of skilled manpower and establish joint institutions for planning and education. The Philippines said the Committee on TCDC had reaffirmed the key principle that activities in this sphere had to be initiated, organized and directed primarily by developing countries. The Republic of Korea noted that during 1980 it had provided courses for 127 trainees from developing countries and had sent experts to 17 such countries; it would ensure that its companies operating overseas were mindful of the host countries' need for employment and training.

In other comments, Argentina stressed the supremacy of Governments in decision-making on the subject of TCDC. The Congo, though realizing that the current economic crisis did not favour TCDC, remarked that there was no substitute for a firm resolve to transfer the concept into well-established operational activities. The Gambia hoped the Committee on TCDC would consider the role of TCDC in promoting agricultural production, rural development, desertification control and the exchange of skills. Tunisia said TCDC was aimed at taking advantage of the complementarity of developing countries so that they could make better use of their resources. The Ukrainian SSR considered that TCDC was impeded by political, financial, economic and social problems which developing countries had to overcome by changing their economic and social structures and providing full employment through the development of domestic industries.

TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACTION. On 9 October,<sup>(6)</sup> the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare, in collaboration with the International Labour Organisation and other agencies, an action-oriented study on the co-operative exchange of skills, including recommendations for further action, and to submit that study to the 1983 session of the Committee on TCDC. The Board invited UNDP to co-operate in the study. The suggestion that UNCTAD consider initiating such a study was made by the Committee in its 7 June decision on scientific and technological co-operation among developing countries (p. 749).

The Board's resolution was endorsed by the General Assembly on 16 December, in a resolution on UNCTAD.<sup>(5)</sup>

4. Decides that the organization of the session of the Committee in 1983 shall provide for plenary meetings and for meetings of only one working group;

5. Invites all participants in the United Nations Development Programme to undertake the necessary preparations for the third session of the Committee and to be represented at a high level;

6. Requests the executive heads of the organs, organizations and bodies in the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, within their spheres of competence, programmes of work and available resources and in close co-operation with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, to contribute to the preparation of the third session of the Committee and to participate actively therein.

Implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action

The Committee on TCDC, in a decision of 7 June 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> expressed concern that progress in implementing the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for TCDC<sup>(4)</sup> had been insufficient. It invited developing countries to increase and promote activities in this sphere and developed countries to continue and consider increasing and improving their support for such activities. The Committee requested governing bodies in the United Nations system to continue providing support for TCDC, with maximum use of local inputs and of those provided by developing countries. It requested the UNDP Administrator to prepare a report for the Committee's 1983 session that would review progress and provide information on potential sources of finance (see below) and on the UNDP contribution (p. 468). The UNDP administration was also requested to emphasize action-oriented activities by supporting regional and interregional technical co-operation projects, and to promote the exchange of information in this sphere (p. 466).

The UNDP Administrator, in a March report to the Committee on implementation of the Plan of Action,<sup>(2)</sup> stated that significant progress was being made in introducing and applying TCDC.

United Nations organizations had reoriented their structures and policies to that end, or were in the process of doing so. Many activities of the United Nations system were financed by UNDP (p. 467). However, there were still major obstacles, such as the lack of a concrete manifestation of a political will in some cases to sustain co-operation between developing countries, and the lack of adequate financial, technical and human resources. Also, sufficient effort had not been made to mobilize professional and technical organizations in furthering TCDC, and the private sector in developing countries had scarcely been involved. Continued support for TCDC promotional activities by the United Nations system could be seriously affected by the lack of adequate catalytic resources.

The Committee for Development Planning (p. 395), in the report on its March/April session,<sup>(2)</sup> mentioned the need for developing countries vigorously to initiate a strengthening of South-South interdependence. In addition to suggesting various types of economic co-operation (p. 383), it favoured more TCDC to promote technology, particularly through the greater use by developing countries of each other's professionals, consultancy firms, construction contractors and skilled workers.

Financing

By a decision of 7 June 1981 on potential sources for financing TCDC,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee on TCDC invited developing countries to consider incorporating resources in their national budget to finance TCDC activities and setting up national funds for technical co-operation. It reiterated requests to regional and interregional funds, development banks and other intergovernmental financial institutions and aid agencies to make special efforts to support such activities. Developed countries were invited to continue to consider requests for financial support for national TCDC projects, promotional activities such as training of personnel and pre-feasibility studies, and strengthening of intercountry institutions and physical infrastructure. The Committee requested the UNDP Administrator to devote the greatest possible share of intercountry resources to TCDC activities with subregional, regional and interregional objectives (p. 468).

In its decision of the same date concerning implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action (see above), the Committee requested the Administrator to provide information on potential sources of TCDC financing from international institutions and organizations, multilateral development banks and funds, and government agencies of developed and developing countries.<sup>(1)</sup>

Examining the potential sources for financing TCDC, the Administrator, in a March report to the Committee,<sup>(3)</sup> pointed out that few countries included TCDC appropriations in their national budget. However, development banks and funds in developing countries had no apparent problem in financing bankable TCDC activities, and developed countries, through their bilateral assistance programmes, assisted specific projects of interest to them. Some multinational institutions had also fostered TCDC.

Exchange of information

Following up a recommendation by the UNDP Administrator, the Committee on TCDC, by a decision of 7 June 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> invited Governments of developing countries to consider collecting systematically information on their bilateral and multilateral TCDC activities and, when they deemed it appropriate, to share that information with the United Nations development system. The Administrator was invited, in preparing future reports on government TCDC activities, to attempt more complete and more analytical coverage.

In a decision of the same date<sup>(2)</sup> on implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action (p. 465), the Committee requested the Administrator to work towards a methodology of information for TCDC which would be homogeneous and easily understood, and to continue efforts for a proposed Development Information Network which would help foster information exchange among developing countries. To permit an effective response to countries interested in TCDC, it requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Administrator, to continue efforts in the United Nations system to make the different information networks compatible so that the information flow would become systematic and timely.

In a March report to the Committee,<sup>(3)</sup> the Administrator concluded that the main obstacle to the preparation of comprehensive information on TCDC activities by Governments had been the lack of national arrangements or systems for the preparation of such information, and possibly the lack of time to gear up the necessary system.

Institutional arrangements

Endorsing recommendations of the UNDP Administrator on institutional arrangements and administrative mechanisms for TCDC, the Committee on TCDC recommended on 7 June 1981<sup>(1)</sup> that developing countries consider what administrative arrangements should be established or strengthened to enhance the implementation of TCDC objectives and invited them to intensify co-operation among themselves as part of that process. It urged the United Nations system to assist developing countries in establishing and/or strengthening national focal points or co-ordinating mechanisms for TCDC, and invited UNDP to assist developing countries in organizing, primarily at the regional and subregional levels, TCDC training programmes for government officials.

In its decision of 7 June on potential sources for financing TCDC,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee included the strengthening of intercountry institutions as one of the TCDC activities it invited developed countries to assist financially.

The Administrator, in a March report,<sup>(3)</sup> mentioned the need for national focal points to reinforce TCDC national and bilateral efforts, and pointed out that the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC, in co-ordination with UNDP resident representatives, could provide a link with national focal points.

Regional institutions

A Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report of December 1980, prepared by Inspector Julio C. Rodriguez Arias and transmitted to the General Assembly in February 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> examined assistance by the United Nations system to regional intercountry technical co-operation institutions. The report stressed that United Nations aid should support rather than supplant the mutual activities of countries participating in such institutions and not encroach on their management and administrative responsibilities. Regional institutions should be self-reliant; it was at variance with the purposes of United Nations technical co-operation for them to be totally dependent on the United Nations system for resources.

Commenting on the JIU report, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) agreed with its thesis that the United Nations system should avoid supplanting the central role which only Governments could play in regard to such institutions. However, while supporting the notion that they should be financially independent, ACC stressed that the capacity of participating countries to provide basic financial support had to be taken into account in each instance.

The Economic and Social Council, in a decision of 22 July adopted without vote,<sup>(1)</sup> took note of the JIU report and the ACC comments. The action was recommended by the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee on an oral proposal by its Chairman, approved without vote on 17 July. The General Assembly acted similarly on 17 December,<sup>(2)</sup> on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the decision on 7 December, also without vote, as orally proposed by its Chairman.

During the Second Committee's debate on operational activities for development, Kenya said it did not agree with the JIU recommendation that regional institutions should be legally constituted before they received United Nations assistance; such bodies might be able to assist other countries without having a legal agreement.

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Joint inspection Unit entitled "Assistance by the United Nations system to regional intercountry technical co-operation institutions" and of the comments of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination thereon.

Legal aspects

As suggested in a consultants' report submitted in March 1981 by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP),<sup>(2)</sup> the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (TCDC), by a decision of 7 June,<sup>(1)</sup> recommended that developing countries consider adopting laws and regulations to facilitate TCDC, including provisions on sending their technical and professional personnel abroad without loss of benefits. It also invited multi-lateral agencies to consider adjusting their rules and procedures so as to support TCDC, and recommended that developing countries continue sending legal instruments on technical co-operation to the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC.

The Administrator's report surveyed legal arrangements for TCDC and suggested elements to be incorporated in legal instruments.

Report: <sup>(2)</sup>UNDP Administrator, TCDC/2/15.

UNDP programme

New policies, rules and procedures designed to facilitate the use of UNDP country programme funds to help recipient countries aid others through TCDC were approved on 26 June 1981 by the UNDP Governing Council.<sup>(4)</sup> The Council acted on the basis of proposals in a March report by the Administrator,<sup>(6)</sup> endorsed on 7 June by the Committee on TCDC.<sup>(3)</sup>

The new arrangements lifted the blanket restriction imposed in 1980<sup>(7)</sup> which largely prevented UNDP from reimbursing a recipient Government for TCDC-related costs it incurred in its own currency, as when it paid the transportation costs of its nationals attending training courses in another developing country or purchased equipment and supplies at home for use in a TCDC project elsewhere. The Administrator reported that the restriction on reimbursement probably helped account for the fact that little use had been made of country programme funds for TCDC. Under the new arrangements, funds available under a recipient country's indicative planning figure (IPF), used to finance the UNDP country programme, could be used as a catalyst and supplementary contribution for a country's TCDC activities, though the primary responsibility would be that of the developing countries.

For the 1982-1986 programming cycle, the Committee recommended and the Council decided that earmarkings from IPFs for TCDC activities should not exceed 10 per cent of a country's IPF or $7.5 million, whichever was less. In addition, basic guidelines were approved for assessing TCDC project proposals and stipulations were made concerning the payment of expenses for services, materials and personnel, allowing the same flexibility as for the rest of UNDP projects.

As requested by the Committee, the Council asked the Administrator to report to both bodies in 1983 on the costs of TCDC projects funded from country IPFs, with details on local cost reimbursement and on expenditures for expertise, equipment and supplies, consultancy services and training.

In addition to this action affecting country IPFs, the Council, on the Committee's recommendation, decided on 26 June to allocate $1 million from UNDP Special Programme Resources for TCDC promotional purposes for 1982-1983.<sup>(5)</sup> The Council requested a report from the Administrator in 1982 on the use of those funds.

With regard to UNDP intercountry programmes, the Administrator noted in his report that it was up to the Governments concerned to decide the extent to which TCDC elements should be incorporated. The Committee, in a 7 June decision on TCDC financing,<sup>(2)</sup> requested the Administrator to devote the greatest possible share of regional, interregional and global IPFs to support projects with TCDC elements to be carried out by intergovernmental agencies having subregional, regional and interregional objectives. In another decision of the same date,<sup>(3)</sup> on implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC (p. 465), the Committee requested the UNDP administration to give more emphasis to action-oriented activities by supporting regional and interregional technical co-operation projects, bilateral and multilateral.

The Governing Council, in a decision of 26 June<sup>(5)</sup> on the report of the Committee on TCDC, requested the Administrator to submit in 1982 a study on the possibility of financing TCDC activities from other sources, including regional and interregional IPFs, and a report on TCDC activities under regional and interregional programmes.

UN Capital Development Fund

In 1981, the seventh year of operations of the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), the Fund's operations accelerated sharply. Project expenditures totalled $48.2 million, representing a 150 per cent increase over the previous year, while new commitments approved in 1981 totalled $71 million, compared with $52.2 million in 1980. Income in 1981 totalled $42.1 million, including $29.7 million contributed by Governments (p. 470).

A report by the UNDP Administrator on the Fund's 1981 activities<sup>(3)</sup> indicated that, of the 35 new projects approved in 1981, 19 became operational during the year, bringing the total number to 164 operational projects in 39 countries. Of the recipients, 31 were least developed countries (LDCs) and the others were countries which the General Assembly had directed be given similar consideration. As at 31 December 1981, total cumulative commitments reached $220.1 million for 188 projects (including 24 completed projects) in 42 countries, while cumulative expenditures totalled $102 million.

About 80 per cent of the Fund's assistance continued to be devoted to the rural sector. Emphasis was on: basic social infrastructure, such as provision of food, drinking water and sanitation, schools and training institutions, health centres and basic medical equipment, low-cost housing and slum rehabilitation; and on economic infrastructure and production inputs, such as feeder roads, water resources development and irrigation schemes, rural electrification, crop storage and distribution facilities, and small-scale agro-based and agriculture-related industries.

The Fund acted to increase co-operation with international and bilateral agencies and multilateral financing institutions and with United Nations regional commissions and other regional bodies, particularly in such critical areas as desertification control, water resources management and other priority sectors affecting LDCs. In July it began negotiations for a basic agreement with beneficiary Governments establishing the legal framework for its assistance.

After receiving a report by the Administrator on the Fund's 1980 activities,<sup>(2)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council, on 19 June 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> decided to continue the partial funding system for projects (p. 470) and reiterated its request that UNCDF be authorized to meet its own administrative and programme support costs (p. 469).

The Assembly approved the proposal on administrative and programme support costs in a resolution of 17 December, adopted without vote.<sup>(4)</sup> It also reaffirmed the role of UNCDF as a supplementary source of concessional capital assistance, first and foremost to LDCs, and requested the Governing Council to consider measures to enhance the Fund's capacity to respond effectively to the priority needs of those countries, including measures to improve complementarity between the Fund's assistance and other types of assistance administered by UNDP (p. 409). The Assembly endorsed the programme orientation and operational policies of UNCDF and stressed the importance of achieving a balance between resources allocated for meeting basic needs of low-income groups and those required for strengthening the productive sectors and dealing with other structural bottle-necks, with a view to prompting national self-reliance and accelerated self-sustained economic growth of LDCs. It called on Governments to provide financial support to the Fund (p. 470).

The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee approved the resolution on 20 November, also without vote. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an essentially similar 26-nation draft introduced by the Gambia and subsequently withdrawn by its sponsors.<sup>(1)</sup>

In the Committee's debate on operational activities for development, the Gambia called for steps to ensure complementarity between UNCDF and the UNDP Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries, since the mandate of UNCDF precluded it from financing technical co-operation even when such assistance was a prerequisite for capital financing. The Upper Volta thought UNCDF should give greater attention to strengthening training, transport and energy infrastructures. Yugoslavia believed that UNCDF resources should be totally committed to LDCs.

United Nations Capital Development Fund

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1521 (XV) of 15 December 1960 and 2186 (XXI) of 13 December 1966, in pursuance of which the United Nations Capital Development Fund was established, as well as subsequent resolutions and decisions relating to the administration and operations of the Fund, in particular resolutions 2321 (XXII) of 15 December 1967, 3122 (XXVIII) of 13 December 1973 and 3249 (XXIX) of 4 December 1974, and decisions 34/428 of 14 December 1979 and 35/422 of 5 December 1980,

Noting with satisfaction the substantial increase in the operations of the United Nations Capital Development Fund and the progress achieved in providing timely and effective assistance first and foremost to the least developed among the developing countries, as described in the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the Fund in 1980.

Recognizing the central role of the United Nations Development Programme in providing unified management and administration to the United Nations Capital Development Fund, Reaffirming the need to utilize and reinforce existing mechanisms for channelling additional resources to the least developed countries and to ensure effective co-ordination and complementarity between the assistance programmes of the various financing institutions of the United Nations system.

Noting with appreciation the steady increase in voluntary contributions to the general resources of the United Nations Capital Development Fund,

Having duly considered and noted chapter XXIX of the report of the Economic and Social Council, on operational activities, as well as decision 81/2 of 19 June 1981 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, particularly as regards the question of the administrative costs of the United Nations Capital Development Fund,

1. Reaffirms the role and mandate of the United Nations Capital Development Fund as a supplementary source of concessional capital assistance, first and foremost to the least developed among the developing countries;

2. Commends the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the effective measures taken to increase the scope and momentum of the activities of the United Nations Capital Development Fund;

3. Endorses the proposal of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, contained in its decision 81/2, that the United Nations Capital Development Fund should be enabled to play a direct role in the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

4. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to consider measures to enhance the capacity of the United Nations Capital Development Fund to respond effectively to the priority needs of the least developed countries, including measures to improve complementarity between the capital assistance available to them from the Fund and other types of assistance available to the least developed countries administered by the United Nations Development Programme, with a view to maximizing the impact and effective utilization of those resources in the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

5. Endorses the programme orientation and operational policies of the United Nations Capital Development Fund as described in the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the Fund in 1980 and, in particular, stresses the importance of achieving a balance between resources allocated for meeting basic needs of low-income groups and those required for strengthening the productive sectors and dealing with other structural bottle-necks, with a view to promoting national self-reliance and accelerated self-sustained economic growth of the least developed among the developing countries;

6. Decides that the administrative and programme support costs of the United Nations Capital Development Fund shall be met from the general resources of the Fund, while the United Nations Development Programme will continue to provide field support services as well as all headquarters administrative support services to the Fund;

7. Calls upon Governments not already contributing to the United Nations Capital Development Fund, particularly developed countries and others in a position to do so, to provide financial support to the activities of the Fund.

UNCDF finances

Administrative budget

In its resolution of 17 December 1981 on UNCDF,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly approved a 19 June request by the UNDP Governing Council<sup>(3)</sup> that UNCDF be authorized to meet its own administrative and programme support costs, currently financed from the UNDP administrative budget. The Assembly decided that UNDP would continue to provide the Fund with field support and all headquarters administrative support services. The Governing Council's view had been commended to the Assembly's attention by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution of 22 July on UNDP.<sup>(1)</sup>

For 1980-1981, through a supplementary appropriation of $1,466,100, the Governing Council added 14 posts to the Fund's authorized strength of 15 and more than doubled its administrative budget, to a total of $2,899,800.<sup>(4)</sup> The Council appropriated $3,800,800 for 1982-1983.<sup>(5)</sup> Both actions were taken on 30 June 1981 in connection with the UNDP administrative budget (p. 447).

Partial funding system

The UNDP Governing Council decided on 19 June 1981<sup>(1)</sup> that UNCDF should continue for one more year a partial funding system which for the previous two years had enabled it to increase the level of project disbursements and to absorb accumulated liquidity resulting from the former full funding policy. Partial funding permitted UNCDF to programme projects on a cash-flow basis beyond resources actually pledged, while maintaining an operational reserve at 20 per cent of outstanding project commitments.

This procedure was initially established in 1979 for an experimental period of two years.<sup>(4)</sup> Continuation of the practice was recommended in a June 1981 report by the UNDP Administrator,<sup>(2)</sup> who said the implementation of partial funding had led to an acceleration in the Fund's disbursement rate.

According to a 1982 report of the Administrator,<sup>(3)</sup> the annual volume of UNCDF operations increased from $40 million in 1979 to $71.1 million in 1981, while programme disbursements increased from $8.9 million in 1979 to $48.2 million (revised figure) in 1981. Accumulated liquidity (exclusive of non-convertible currencies) had been reduced from $89.5 million in 1980 to $83.1 million at the end of 1981, including $23.3 million of operational reserve.

Contributions

Thirty-nine Governments paid a total of $29.7 million to UNCDF in 1981 (see table below). For 1982, 32 countries pledged contributions totalling $24.4 million as at 31 December 1981, and several major donors indicated that they would announce their 1982 contributions early in the new year.

The UNDP Governing Council, on 19 June 1981, called on all countries to contribute to the Fund so as to enable it to maintain the momentum achieved the previous year.<sup>(2)</sup> The General Assembly, on 17 December, called on Governments not already contributing, particularly developed countries and others in a position to do so, to provide financial support.<sup>(1)</sup>

Financial regulations

The General Assembly, in a resolution of 18 December 1981 on the financial regulations of funds administered by UNDP,<sup>(1)</sup> decided that the UNDP Regulations should be applied to UNCDF until the Governing Council adopted special regulations for the Fund following a review by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

This action modified arrangements in effect since 1969, by which the Fund had been operating under the Financial Regulations of the United Nations. The action was taken at the request of the Council, which asked on 30 June 1981<sup>(2)</sup> for authority to formulate financial regulations in respect of all funds which it administered, including UNCDF (p. 451).

Chapter III

Disasters, emergency relief and economic assistance

The United Nations continued in 1981 to mobilize international assistance for disaster and other emergency relief for countries stricken by natural or man-made disasters, as well as for countries in need of special economic assistance due to acute hardships.

Following study and discussion of ways to improve the response of the United Nations system to meet humanitarian needs in emergency situations, the General Assembly, in December, reaffirmed the mandate of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) as the focal point for disaster relief co-ordination, called for its strengthening and established guidelines for the system to follow in a co-ordinated response to major disasters.<sup>(26)</sup> The Assembly expressed appreciation to the outgoing Co-ordinator.<sup>(25)</sup>

During the year, UNDRO responded to 17 disasters in 14 countries, involving floods, earthquakes, droughts and civil strife (p. 482). It also helped disaster-prone countries prepare for emergencies and plan to prevent their avoidable effects (p. 484). Much of this work was financed by the Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance (p. 483).

The United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office mobilized $30.9 million in 1981 to assist eight countries in the Sudano-Sahelian region of Central and West Africa recover from a long-lasting drought (p. 485). The money came through bilateral and multilateral channels, including $8.5 million in expenditures by the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities (p. 489). In addition to medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation projects, part of this money was spent for desertification control to render future droughts less damaging (p. 827). Both the Economic and Social Council, in J<sup>(3)</sup> uly, and the General Assembly, in December,<sup>(4)</sup> urged States to increase resources for this purpose.

Kenya was added during the year to the list of East African States for which the United Nations was mobilizing international assistance to help the population in drought-stricken areas. The Economic and Social Council, in May, appealed for increased aid to drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia.<sup>(1)</sup> Following a July recommendation by the Council that a mission be sent to assess the needs of Kenya's drought-stricken areas,<sup>(2)</sup> the Assembly, in December, authorized United Nations assistance to such areas in Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda, and endorsed the recommendations of a multiagency mission which visited most of those countries in September/October.<sup>(22)</sup>

The United Nations Children's Fund continued to act as lead agency for an emergency assistance programme for the Kampuchean people, providing humanitarian aid to the people of Kampuchea inside the country as well as to those who had sought refuge in neighbouring countries, principally Thailand (p. 494).

Special economic assistance programmes continued for African and other countries suffering acute economic hardships due to a variety of causes ranging from drought and other natural disasters to civil strife. Multiagency missions visited most of them to identify reconstruction and development projects requiring international funding, and the information was circulated to prospective donors, bilateral and multilateral.

reconstruction and development effort was also under way in Lebanon, for which the Assembly authorized increased United Nations assistance. It did likewise in respect of Nicaragua and recommended that that country continue to receive treatment appropriate to its special needs until the economic situation returned to normal.<sup>(14)</sup> Economic missions were sent to four Caribbean island States stricken by hurricanes in 1980 and 1981 - Dominica, Grenada, Saint Lucia, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines (p. 525). Plans were being made to send a mission to Tonga, in Oceania (p. 530).

Disasters and emergency relief

The capacity of the United Nations system to respond to disasters and other emergencies, and the role and mandate of UNDRO, were re-examined in 1981 by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), the Secretary-General and the General Assembly (see below). The Assembly, in December, reaffirmed the mandate of UNDRO as the focal point of the United Nations system for disaster relief co-ordination, called for its strengthening and established guidelines for the system to follow in a co-ordinated response to major disasters.

During 1981, UNDRO dealt with nearly 300 disaster alerts, 17 of which were major emergencies requiring its intervention and the provision of international relief assistance (p. 482). In addition to its involvement with individual emergency situations as they arose, UNDRO assisted Governments to plan for disaster preparedness and prevention (p. 484). A number of these activities were financed by the Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance, to which Governments made voluntary contributions (p. 483). The 1981 activities of UNDRO were described in reports of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly in June 1981<sup>(1)</sup> and June 1982.<sup>(2)</sup>

JIU REPORT. An evaluation of UNDRO, completed by JIU in October 1980, was transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in January 1981.<sup>(8)</sup> The report concentrated on the 1976-1980 period, during which time the staff and activities of UNDRO had been substantially expanded.

In the report, JIU found that UNDRO had had difficulty in implementing its programme. Its involvement in relief co-ordination had been only modest. Despite many missions, neither a coherent technical co-operation programme nor major projects had been developed. Most planned research had been delayed or never undertaken, and information dissemination and sponsorship of meetings had been limited. Other organizations of the United Nations system had not accepted the leadership of UNDRO; disaster-prone countries would like more direct contacts and innovation from it, and donor countries had been increasingly critical of its performance. Internally, UNDRO had major staff turnover and vacancy problems, lacked management procedures and controls, and did not fully use its staff because of a tightly centralized management system.

To improve the performance of UNDRO, JIU made six recommendations. (1) The basic function of UNDRO should be confined to sudden natural disasters, excluding "creeping" disasters such as droughts, epidemics and famines. (2) The Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance (p. 483) should be phased out, although UNDRO could continue to receive voluntary contributions for specified disasters. (3) The Trust Fund's subaccount for disaster prevention and pre-planning should be replaced by funding of projects by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). (4) The UNDP Governing Council should become the governing body of UNDRO. (5) The Co-ordinator should report directly to the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation for day-to-day guidance. (6) Management reforms should be instituted, including: a programme review to eliminate some activities and establish priorities and targets for the remaining ones; a substantial reduction in staff, up to 50 per cent; development of an information centre on disasters; introduction of internal assessment and evaluation of UNDRO activities; and greater delegation of authority.

The report also suggested a possible new approach to disaster co-ordination in the United Nations system, through the establishment of an inter-agency Emergency Assistance Committee that would approve a plan of action for assistance in each disaster situation requiring an effort of more than a few weeks. The plan would specify the role and contribution of each organization. The Committee would also organize any collaboration required for technical co-operation projects and, on request, advise UNDRO on policies and techniques for dealing with sudden natural disasters.

The Secretary-General, in comments on the report circulated in May, outlined what had been done since UNDRO became operational in 1972<sup>(18)</sup> to improve preparedness for natural disasters and other emergencies, and to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations system to respond: organizational units had been created and others strengthened; more funds had been made available and steps had been taken to ensure their more effective and flexible use; the capacity to assess needs had been improved; and much experience with inter-agency co-ordination had been accumulated.

Commenting on some specific JIU recommendations, the Secretary-General made the following points. (1) The UNDRO mandate, as defined in the 1971 General Assembly resolution establishing the Office,<sup>(12)</sup> had stood the test of time; to limit its scope to sudden natural disasters would risk leaving certain situations uncovered, reduce flexibility and limit the application of UNDRO experience and capabilities. (2) Steps would be taken to clarify the objectives of the Trust Fund; elimination of the subaccount for strengthening UNDRO could be considered only after the Office's overall requirements were determined. (3) The purpose of the technical assistance subaccount should be clarified and more efforts made to develop disaster preparedness projects for UNDP funding. (4) Existing machinery would allow effective direction of UNDRO; placing it under the UNDP Governing Council could create jurisdictional issues, since UNDP was among the bodies whose disaster-related activities UNDRO was supposed to co-ordinate. (5) The Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation should not become involved in day-to-day UNDRO operations; he should concentrate on policy matters, including arrangements for integration of UNDRO activities with those of the system as a whole.

With regard to the JIU recommendations for improving the operations of UNDRO, the Secretary-General agreed that prompt action was needed in each of the management areas identified in the report. Some of them were already being addressed by a high-level official appointed by the Secretary-General; the Secretariat's Administrative Management Service was conducting a management survey, and UNDRO was reviewing certain delayed activities with a view either to phase them out or accelerate them.

Concerning the recommendation for an inter-agency committee, the Secretary-General noted that ACC had recently adopted measures to deal with exceptional emergencies (see below). He felt that that approach should be developed, that the possibility of convening when necessary an ad hoc inter-agency co-ordinating committee should be considered and that the extension of such a system to deal with lesser emergencies might be explored.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. A report on international efforts to meet humanitarian needs in emergency situations, prepared by a consultant, George F. Davidson, in response to a July 1980 request by the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(11)</sup> was submitted to the Council in March 1981 under cover of a note by the Secretary-General.<sup>(9)</sup> The factual report, containing no recommendations, described how the United Nations system had carried out, over the previous decade, its role of co-ordinating and implementing humanitarian emergency assistance in cases other than those caused by natural disasters.

The report concluded that, while problems remained and difficulties arose from time to time owing to lack of adequate co-ordination, the basic facilities and services required for coping with man-made emergencies were reasonably well in place and could be made available without unreasonable delays. Further improvement would depend not so much on the development of new or different mechanisms as on the flexibility and ingenuity of organizations in adjusting to unforeseen situations and on the human factor, including the ability to work as members of a team.

ACC ACTION. On 14 April, ACC adopted arrangements for inter-agency co-ordination in regard to exceptional and complex emergencies.<sup>(15)</sup> It stated that these measures were meant to apply to emergencies like the one in Bangladesh in the early 1970s and the current one in Democratic Kampuchea (p. 494), and not to most emergencies, for which the response of the United Nations system had been generally effective. The approved measures, annexed to the Committee's annual report to the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(5)</sup> included the following.

At the initiative of the Secretary-General or the executive head of a United Nations organization, full consultations would be held to determine whether an exceptional situation existed. These would be based on information and assessment from UNDRO, officials of the United Nations system in the country concerned, voluntary organizations and emergency units in United Nations organizations. An assessment mission might be dispatched to evaluate needs and the probable duration of the emergency.

Once the Secretary-General had determined the existence of an exceptional emergency situation requiring system-wide action, he would, in consultation with the organizations involved, designate a lead entity—either an organization or a special representative. Within the overall effort co-ordinated by that entity, each organization would be responsible for assistance falling within its competence. The scope and duration of the relief operation would be periodically reviewed. When operational responsibility was assumed by other organizations such as the Red Cross, the United Nations system should consider supporting them. To remedy the lack of resources in the United Nations system, the Secretary-General, the lead entity and organizations concerned would consult on the nature of an appeal to outside donors.

ACC decided that its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) would consider elaborating the role and terms of reference of the lead entity and related questions, including relations with donor Governments, the International Red Cross and voluntary organizations.

CPC CONSIDERATION. The Economic and Social Council, on 6 May,<sup>(16)</sup> referred the Secretary-General's report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and decided to consider that report and the comments of CPC at its mid-year session. The decision was taken without vote on a proposal by the President.

The Committee reviewed the report on 22 and 27 May, along with the JIU report, while considering the section relating to UNDRO in the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1982-1983 (p. 1274).

According to the Committee's report,<sup>(6)</sup> most delegations were of the view that it did not seem necessary or desirable to revise the UNDRO mandate. The Committee believed there was need to strengthen intergovernmental supervision of UNDRO activities, though there were differences about whether the existing machinery should be changed. Members generally shared the Secretary-General's view that it would not be necessary or practicable for the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to be involved in the day-to-day operations of UNDRO, as recommended by JIU. Delegations attached importance to strengthening the performance of UNDRO.

At the annual Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC, held from 29 June to 1 July, the Secretary-General, speaking as ACC Chairman, emphasized that the ability of the United Nations system to respond effectively to emergencies depended on the resources at its disposal and could only complement and support the activities of Governments. The Chairman of CPC felt that disaster relief and development activities should be regarded as part of a continuum; in that context, a network of organizations could be assigned specific responsibilities to provide the various elements of assistance in a co-ordinated fashion.

In the ensuing debate, as summarized in a report to the Economic and Social Council by the two Chairmen,<sup>(7)</sup> all speakers emphasized that the United Nations system must play a strong role in disaster situations and that its capacity to meet assistance requirements must be enhanced. The general view was that the establishment of additional machinery should be avoided; CPC members preferred ad hoc mechanisms to a permanent ACC committee.

UNICEF BOARD ACTION. The Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), at its May 1981 session (p. 999), adopted a set of conclusions reaffirming its current policy with regard to UNICEF involvement in emergency relief, rehabilitation and special situations.<sup>(10)</sup> This included recognition of the following: that UNICEF might have to play a distinctive role not available to other agencies in meeting the immediate and particular needs of children in natural and man-made emergencies; that large-scale emergency assistance should, in principle, be financed to the maximum extent possible by specific contributions; that UNICEF would not assume lead-agency responsibilities in a major emergency, except in rare instances; and that lead-agency responsibilities should be accepted only after consultation and agreement with the Board.

The Board also believed that, without detriment to the Fund's major concern with long-range development programmes, more systematic attention should be given to consolidating its capacity to respond to emergencies and that it should co-operate closely with other organizations.

The UNICEF Executive Director informed the Board of plans to upgrade the emergency unit at headquarters and to make other arrangements at headquarters and in the field which would help ensure a more rapid response in procurement and delivery, financial management and staffing in large-scale emergencies, and strengthen links with other United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations. The Board did not accept his proposal to increase the emergency reserve fund from $3 million to $5 million in order to cope with small-scale emergencies.

The Board also took action with respect to UNICEF emergency relief activities in Kampuchea (p. 495) and Africa (p. 1001).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. Taking note of the reports on emergency assistance, the Economic and Social Council decided on 23 July<sup>(17)</sup> to transmit them to the General Assembly, along with a draft resolution submitted to the Council by France proposing new mechanisms to co-ordinate emergency relief.<sup>(3)</sup> The Council invited the Secretary-General to provide the Assembly with any appropriate additional information and/or suggestions, with a view to developing the views expressed by delegations in the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee which reflected consensus.

This decision was adopted without vote following its approval in similar manner on 17 July by the Third Committee, based on a proposal by the Chairman.

The draft resolution by France would have had the Council recommend that, particularly in disaster-prone countries, the United Nations resident co-ordinator should provide for the convening of a relief co-ordination unit of United Nations organizations and voluntary bodies, including the International Committee of the Red Cross. Assistance provided would include promotion of an early-warning system, measures to enhance disaster prevention and preparedness, and assessment and monitoring in the event of a disaster. The relief co-ordination unit would report simultaneously to the host Government and to UNDRO, which would disseminate information to Governments and organizations. The Council would have recommended that agencies involved in disaster relief establish emergency units.

The Secretary-General would have been requested to establish at Geneva a co-ordinating committee, serviced by UNDRO, to be convened when there was an emergency situation which did not fall clearly within the mandate of any single entity. This committee would review disaster assessments, assist the Secretary-General in co-ordinating action, keep in touch with Governments on fund-raising and maintain liaison with the League of Red Cross Societies.

The Council would have called on Member States to respond to the Secretary-General's appeals for contributions, and invited them to keep UNDRO informed of relief actions and to provide the United Nations system with personnel and logistical support. The Council would have reaffirmed the mandate of UNDRO and called on the Secretary-General to pursue measures aimed at assuring its effective management.

The French proposal was submitted following informal discussions in the Third Committee which did not produce an agreed text. Varying views were expressed on when and where the matter should be taken up next. Most delegations agreed to the resumption of discussions no later than the 1981 Assembly session, using the text of the draft resolution as a starting point. Accordingly, the French proposal was not pressed to a vote.

The USSR said it did not regard the French text as a suitable basis for the Assembly's discussion. Kenya said it would have difficulty with the idea that the discussion should be based on that text alone. However, France responded that the text would be a basis for discussion, not the only basis. Venezuela said the Group of 77 developing countries understood that the French text was not binding and that anyone could adopt any position in the Assembly's discussion.

In the debate, France said the Council was the most suitable body for the type of co-ordination required in order to improve United Nations emergency assistance procedures; it regretted what it described as a lack of determination to make improvements and instances in which specific agencies had obstructed prospective co-ordination. The United States voiced disappointment at the Council's inaction on the question of better co-ordination and said those who tried to curtail the international community's ability to deliver disaster assistance or who failed to contribute for disaster relief performed a disservice. Australia, China, the Sudan and the United Kingdom also expressed disappointment that the Council had not reached agreement.

Kenya said it opposed attempts to eliminate or replace UNDRO, could not accept the idea of turning that Office into a minor service with a restricted mandate and opposed the suggestion for a standing committee to co-ordinate emergency relief. The USSR said there was already sufficient machinery for emergency assistance; the need for new co-ordination machinery was purely fanciful.

The Secretary-General, responding to the Council's invitation that he provide additional information and/or suggestions, stated in a note to the Assembly in October that, since no consensus had been reached at the intergovernmental level, he was not in a position to do so.<sup>(4)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 128 to 9, with 6 abstentions, a resolution on strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural disasters and other disaster situations.

By this text, the Assembly reaffirmed the UNDRO mandate, endorsed the Secretary-General's approaches in his comments on the JIU report, and called for steps to strengthen the Office's capacity and effectiveness, its management and its information collection and dissemination capability. The Assembly outlined steps to be taken in response to a Government's request for disaster relief, including: meetings of international organizations, convened by the local United Nations resident co-ordinator, to plan, monitor and take immediate action; inter-agency meetings convened by the Secretary-General or by the Disaster Relief Co-ordinator as his representative, to develop a concerted relief programme and consult on delivery; and designation by the Secretary-General of a lead entity in the United Nations system in the case of an exceptional or complex disaster requiring system-wide action. The Assembly reiterated its appeal for increased contributions to the UNDRO Trust Fund, particularly for emergency relief (p. 483). The international community was urged to help disaster-prone countries establish early-warning systems (p. 485).

This resolution, introduced by Kenya and sponsored by 27 nations, was approved on 11 December by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, by a recorded vote of 109 to 11, with 5 abstentions. The sponsors revised the text three times in writing and once orally before its approval. The oral changes affected the two paragraphs on inter-agency meetings; they moved to the beginning of these paragraphs phrases stating that steps to convene such meetings should be taken in response to or following a request for disaster relief from a disaster-stricken State.

On 14 December, in a resolution on the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Assembly requested the High Commissioner to co-ordinate and co-operate closely with other organizations for greatest efficiency of relief in the case of major emergencies.<sup>(13)</sup>

Before approving the resolution on disaster relief, the Second Committee, by 81 votes to 15, with 20 abstentions, rejected a set of 20 amendments to this text proposed by the USSR.<sup>(1)</sup> Among other things, these would have: replaced a preambular reference to shortage of resources by mention of the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of States; deleted references to "other disaster situations", so that the resolution would deal solely with natural disasters; deleted references about strengthening the capacity of UNDRO and its information collection and dissemination capability, and replaced a request for strengthening its management by a request to improve its effectiveness; and deleted a reference to the ACC decision on arrangements to be applied in exceptional emergencies.

With regard to paragraphs 8 to 10, on co-ordination in the United Nations system, the USSR amendments would have: replaced paragraph 8, on the convening of meetings by resident co-ordinators to plan and take immediate action on requests for assistance, by a paragraph authorizing such meetings to assist the Government in assessing the scope of damage and in planning assistance; replaced paragraph 9, on the convening of meetings by the Secretary-General or his representative to develop a concerted relief programme, by a paragraph providing for meetings to be convened by UNDRO when intergovernmental bodies could not consider a situation at their regular sessions, for the purpose of mobilizing, directing and co-ordinating relief activities without impeding the right of each agency to respond autonomously; and deleted paragraph 10, on the designation of a lead entity in exceptional or complex disasters.

The USSR amendments would also have: replaced a request that ACC examine the roles of the lead entity and participating organizations by a request that it sum up experience concerning the designation of a lead entity with a view to developing the mandate of that entity; limited a request for information from States on relief actions to "such information as they consider desirable"; deleted a phrase urging international assistance to help States establish national early-warning systems; specified that emergency units or focal points in organizations involved in humanitarian assistance should be established "within the limits of available resources"; and deleted a request for a comprehensive report by the Secretary-General in 1983.

These amendments incorporated earlier amendments by the USSR to replace paragraphs 8 and 9, which the sponsor withdrew when introducing the set of 20 amendments. The USSR, supported by Bulgaria and the Ukrainian SSR, later requested separate votes on the amendments to paragraphs 8 to 10 and then sought to withdraw all of its other amendments. However, on a motion by the Sudan, supported by Pakistan, the Committee decided, by 84 votes to 14, with 7 abstentions, to vote on the amendments as a whole.

After introducing its amendments, the USSR submitted a draft decision proposing that the draft resolution and amendments be transmitted to the Assembly's 1982 session, through the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(2)</sup> However, the Committee rejected, by 88 votes to 15, with 15 abstentions, a USSR motion to vote on its draft decision before acting on the draft resolution. After approving the resolution, the Committee decided without vote not to act on the draft decision.

Kenya, introducing the resolution in its initial version, said its key concepts were efficiency and speed of assistance, having regard to the roles of disaster-stricken countries and of donor countries and organizations. Closer co-operation among the parties was needed to facilitate the co-ordination of relief, not by creating a new institution but by strengthening the roles of UNDRO and the United Nations system.

In proposing the amendments, the USSR stated that the resolution, by authorizing inter-agency meetings to decide 'which situations were to be treated as "complex disasters and emergencies of exceptional magnitude"', would entrust secretariat units with prerogatives belonging to inter-governmental bodies. For secretariats to decide on the provision of relief over the heads of organs established by the Charter of the United Nations would be a serious violation of the Charter. Moreover, to authorize the Secretary-General to designate a lead entity to co-ordinate international relief implied a considerable expansion of his functions. The USSR amendments would safeguard States' sovereignty by preventing the proposed machinery from interfering in their internal affairs. The amendments sought to eliminate references to strengthening the existing machinery, which would inevitably lead to unwarranted expenditure and the establishment of new machinery.

Pakistan replied that the sponsors of the resolution could not accept the USSR amendments, as they would fundamentally alter its purpose. The sponsors' intention had been to strengthen the United Nations system and not to restrict it, as appeared to be the intent of the amendments.

A representative of the Secretary-General from the Office of Legal Affairs, responding to a question by the German Democratic Republic as to whether the inter-agency machinery provided for in the resolution was compatible with the relationship agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies, said there seemed to be no legal objections in this regard, although implementation would depend in part on decisions to be taken by the agencies. To a further question by that delegation as to whether the Secretary-General was empowered to designate a lead entity to carry out relief operations in a given situation, he replied that the General Assembly could indicate what organ could take action in such matters; if the resolution was adopted, the Secretary-General would be responsible for making the designation.

Explaining their votes against the resolution, Poland, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stated that the proposed method of convening meetings of United Nations organizations and the fact that assistance could be provided even when there was no prior request from the country concerned might violate that country's sovereignty; that the concept of "complex disasters and emergencies of exceptional magnitude" was not defined and it was not known who would decide whether such a situation existed; and that problems which did not arise from natural disasters were evidently due to causes of a different nature, not within the Second Committee's competence.

Among those which abstained in the vote, Argentina said it believed that the function of UNDRO was limited to assistance in cases of natural disaster. The Lao People's Democratic Republic said it had great difficulty in believing in the efficacy of the new machinery provided for in the resolution; moreover, a mechanism that would operate almost automatically when disasters occurred ran counter to the inviolability of a State's independence. Viet Nam said it would have voted against paragraphs 8 to 10 because concepts such as "complex disasters" and "emergencies of exceptional magnitude" could be interpreted in ways that might affect the sovereignty of disaster-stricken countries and because action on the resolution was premature without the agreement of all countries concerned.

Among countries which voted for the resolution, several commented on its provisions on the role of disaster-stricken States. Nigeria stated that the Governments of the countries concerned would have to consent to the convening of meetings by the United Nations resident co-ordinator and any conclusions or recommendations resulting from those meetings would have to be approved by those Governments. Sweden stated that there should be no restriction of any kind on eligibility for disaster relief, even when the affected country was not in a position to ask for it. The United States regarded the resolution as a step towards swift and efficient delivery of emergency assistance whenever and wherever it was needed, though it was concerned that the oral revisions (on prior requests by disaster-stricken States) might prove an obstacle to a swift and effective response.

Jordan stated that any United Nations initiative in response to a disaster in that country would have to be the result of a prior request by its Government and be subject to its full participation. Similarly, Turkey said that any such activities on its territory could be carried out only with the Government's prior request and consent and under its full control; Turkey added that UNDRO should normally be designated as the lead agency in disasters and that countries "affected" by a disaster could include the neighbours of those directly affected.

In Australia's view, the resolution provided a more precise definition of the significant role played by the United Nations in disaster relief operations. Canada stated that the resolution, although not reflecting all its concerns, was an important step in the collective effort to improve the speed and effectiveness of the United Nations system in responding to emergencies. China and Venezuela thought the resolution met the twofold concern of strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to disasters while safeguarding national sovereignty.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community (EC) members, said they would have preferred stronger co-ordination measures but the resolution was a start in that direction; they hoped Governments would be kept fully informed of the co-ordination measures taken by the United Nations system so that the international community could respond to disaster situations in a fully integrated manner.

Explaining their votes against the USSR amendments, China and Turkey stated that the changes would have altered the main purpose of the resolution by limiting its scope to natural disasters. Zimbabwe said the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to situations where humanitarian considerations were of the utmost importance should not be limited.

Peru said that, ideally, some of the amendments might have been accepted, especially the proposed preambular paragraph on non-intervention and the affirmation of the concept of natural disasters.

During the debate on disaster relief assistance, many States, including Bangladesh, China, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Kenya, Madagascar, the Sudan, Turkey, the United States and Yugoslavia, stated that the mandate of UNDR0 to assist countries affected by natural and other disasters should be reaffirmed. Canada believed that UNDR0 must be at the heart of a well co-ordinated relief system because its work, particularly the collection and dissemination of information to Governments, United Nations agencies and voluntary organizations, was absolutely vital to a successful operation.

Turkey stated that the JIU report had ruthlessly and unjustifiably attacked UNDR0 with the purpose of dismantling it and reducing it to a minor size and function; Turkey was grateful to the Secretary-General for clearly arguing against the diminution of the Office's mandate. Uganda had serious difficulties with the JIU recommendations; it believed that a central co-ordinating organization in the area of disaster relief was useful and should not be hampered by a lack of resources or bureaucratic procedures. The United States said that the roles of UNDR0 in co-ordination and information dissemination were useful, and its involvement in areas not clearly within the mandate of other organizations, such as assistance to persons displaced within their own countries by war or civil strife, was a legitimate function of the Office.

Some countries acknowledged the importance of UNDR0 while emphasizing the need to improve its functioning. Australia saw an urgent need to streamline and strengthen the Office by resolving its administrative and management problems and promoting greater understanding and acceptance of its mandate. France believed that the key role of UNDR0 should be reaffirmed but said its functioning could be improved in view of its increasing responsibilities.

The USSR believed that UNDR0 activities should be limited to co-ordinating the relief efforts of United Nations organizations. Yugoslavia thought that, in addition to co-ordination, the Office should develop methods that would help national authorities to assess the consequences of disasters. Zaire supported the conclusions and recommendations of JIU and cited shortcomings the Unit had found in the functioning of UNDR0.

The suggestion by JIU that the UNDR0 mandate should be limited to sudden natural disasters was supported by Peru and Viet Nam. Such a limitation was opposed or questioned by Egypt, India and Yugoslavia. Portugal favoured a clarification of the mandate, observing that some of the difficulties of UNDR0 reflected uncertainties about its precise functions in mobilizing and co-ordinating assistance and in disaster preparedness and planning.

Madagascar believed that the JIU proposal for an intergovernmental body to control and direct UNDR0 activities might politicize assistance and render decision-making more cumbersome. Support for the suggestion to place UNDR0 under the UNDP Governing Council was voiced by the USSR, which also believed that the Office should be financed entirely by voluntary contributions.

France and a number of other countries stressed the importance of safeguarding the sovereignty of a State stricken by disaster. Egypt said the Government concerned must give its approval before relief was provided, especially in the case of man-made disasters occurring on the border between two countries.

Several countries, including Democratic Yemen and Egypt, stressed the close relationship between disaster relief and development problems. The German Democratic Republic remarked that the relief of short-term problems was not enough; it was essential to create conditions that would prevent their recurrence.

France stressed the need for co-ordination among the specialized and voluntary agencies concerned with disasters, and added that such co-ordination could be effective only if planned in advance; it should not be interpreted as an infringement on the autonomy and fields of competence of those organizations. The United Kingdom, on behalf of the EC members, stated that, bearing in mind the need to assure the speed and efficiency of relief delivery, the Secretary-General, under the authority of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, should guide co-operative efforts; effective contact should be established not only between United Nations agencies but also between them and voluntary agencies and, at the administrative level, between the agencies and representatives of interested Governments.

Several States, including Bangladesh, Ethiopia, India, Kenya, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Sierra Leone, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia, opposed the establishment of an inter-agency co-ordinating committee as suggested by JIU or said they were not convinced of the need for such a body. Kenya could not accept any supranational arrangement for imposing decisions on Governments in emergencies.

Australia favoured an ad hoc decision-making authority of agency heads, chaired by the Secretary-General or his representative. Canada favoured the use of an ad hoc committee which could be called into operation by the Secretary-General when a complex situation arose. Kenya stated that ad hoc consultations between the Secretary-General and the heads of United Nations organizations concerned with disaster relief operations should not be subject to bureaucratic procedures which would impede a prompt response to disasters. The Lao People's Democratic Republic regarded ad hoc arrangements for dealing with individual emergencies as more effective than the establishment of a new mechanism. Speaking for the Nordic States, Sweden believed that an ad hoc co-ordinating committee should meet only to discuss emergencies that did not fall clearly within the mandate of one organization; there was no question of creating a new headquarters unit. Yugoslavia recognized that in the case of major disasters there might be a need for special consultations, which could be undertaken either by the Secretary-General or by an institution authorized by him. India opposed the setting up of ad hoc groups, remarking that they were bound to perpetuate themselves.

China said co-ordination would be strengthened by making maximum use of existing agencies and avoiding the creation of new ones. The German Democratic Republic stated that the problems of organizing emergency multilateral assistance could not be overcome merely by establishing new organs or expanding the activities of existing bodies without cause. The USSR considered that the United Nations system already had adequate machinery to co-ordinate international emergency assistance; moreover, it could not approve proposals to require consensus among organizations on assistance to specific countries, as that would justify attempts by some capitalist States to deprive certain countries of aid.

Regarding co-ordination in the field, Australia thought that arrangements should be formalized—for example, through the establishment of relief co-ordination units where appropriate; UNDP resident representatives should be able to convene local relief co-ordination meetings while respecting the sovereignty of the Government concerned and the special expertise of the various agencies. Bangladesh stated that co-ordination of disaster relief activities at the country level must be improved. Canada favoured relief co-ordination units, under the local resident co-ordinator where appropriate, for better co-ordination. Sweden, on behalf of the Nordic States, believed that the setting up of such a unit should be arranged with the full concurrence of the Government concerned. Zaire also supported the establishment of such units.

Kenya regarded a field co-ordination facility as necessary but stressed that it should assist the Secretary-General and not attempt to co-ordinate activities itself in an imperial way.

Strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural disasters and other disaster situations
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, by which it established the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, 3243(XXIX) of 29 November 1974 on the strengthening of that Office, 3440(XXX) of 9 December 1975, in which it provided, inter alia, for measures to be taken in support of the activities of the Office, and 3532(XXX) of 17 December 1975 on the financing of emergency relief assistance and technical co-operation activities of the Office,

Recalling also its resolution 31/173 of 21 December 1976 on financial arrangements for the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

Recalling further the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling the report of the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries containing the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, in particular the section concerning disaster assistance for the least developed countries,

Deeply concerned about the increasing number of natural disasters and other disaster situations, the economic burden borne by disaster-stricken and affected countries, particularly the developing countries, and the disruption thereby caused to their development process,

Also recalling its resolution 35/107 of 5 December 1980,

Further recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/43 of 23 July 1980 regarding international efforts to meet humanitarian needs in natural disasters and other disaster situations,

Fully cognizant of the sovereign interests and rights of affected countries and of the primacy of their role in caring for the victims of natural disasters and other disaster situations,

Anxious that the international community should respond speedily and effectively to calls for emergency humanitarian assistance,

Recognizing that the quality and appropriateness of material and other assistance provided by the international community should meet the particular needs of the populations of disaster-affected areas,

Recognizing the contribution made by the United Nations system to the relief of suffering and provision of humanitarian relief in natural disasters and other disaster situations,

Recognizing that the primary responsibility of administration, relief operations and disaster preparedness lies with the affected countries and that the major part of the material assistance and human effort in disaster relief comes from the Governments of those countries,

Recognizing also the importance in international relief of the contribution of the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and appropriate voluntary organizations,

Recognizing further that, in order to attain an effective co-ordination system of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance, it is essential to strengthen and improve the capacity and effectiveness of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the United Nations system as a whole in order to enable the Office to respond to natural disasters and other disaster situations speedily, efficiently and effectively, and thereby ensure prompt delivery of concerted relief,

Recognizing that a major constraint for the United Nations system to respond effectively to natural disasters and other disaster situations has been the shortage of resources,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and other reports on international efforts to meet humanitarian needs in emergency situations, as well as on measures for strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural disasters and other disaster situations and of the statement made by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator before the Second Committee on 5 November 1981;

2. Reaffirms the sovereignty of individual Member States, recognizes the primary role of each State in caring for the victims of disasters occurring in its territory and stresses that all relief operations should be carried out and co-ordinated in a manner consistent with the priorities and needs of the countries concerned;

3. Reaffirms the mandate of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, established by the General Assembly in resolution 2816(XXVI) as the focal point of the United Nations system for disaster relief co-ordination, and calls for strengthening and improvement of the capacity and effectiveness of the Office;

4. Endorses the approaches outlined by the Secretary-General in his comments on the report of the Joint Inspection Unit concerning the role of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in the various phases of disaster assistance;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary steps to strengthen the management operations of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator;

6. Stresses the need to take full advantage of information provided by existing early-warning monitoring systems that have been developed to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations system in responding to natural disasters and other disaster situations and to co-ordinate, as far as feasible and useful, all the relevant early-warning systems, and stresses that, to this effect, the capability of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in information collection and dissemination should be further strengthened and improved;

7. Urges the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system. Including the United Nations Children's Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme and other appropriate bodies, to co-operate closely, in their respective areas of competence, with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in disaster relief activities and other disaster situations, to respond effectively to the needs of the situation and to comply promptly with the requests of disaster-affected countries;

8. Decides that, in response to a request for disaster relief from a disaster-stricken State and, as necessary, in particular in disaster-prone countries, the United Nations resident co-ordinator shall, with the full concurrence, consent and participation of the Government, convene meetings of the concerned organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to plan, monitor and take immediate action to provide assistance and the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and appropriate voluntary organizations may be invited to participate in such meetings with the approval of the host country;

9. Decides that, following a request for disaster relief from a disaster-stricken State and whenever required to deal effectively with complex disasters and emergencies of exceptional magnitude, the Secretary-General or his representative, who would normally be the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, shall convene meetings of the concerned organizations of the United Nations system in order to develop a concerted relief programme and conduct ad hoc consultations with the heads or representatives of the agencies concerned with disaster-relief questions, with a view to ensuring speedy and efficient delivery of goods and services to the disaster-stricken areas, and decides that these ad hoc consultations should draw on information provided by the Government concerned, as well as on the assessments of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the resident co-ordinator and representatives of other United Nations organizations in the countries concerned, and take into account advice offered by the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and appropriate voluntary organizations in the field with the understanding that all agencies with responsibilities for natural disasters and other disaster situations should be involved at the appropriate level in such consultations;

10. Decides that, once it has been determined on the basis of the above-mentioned information and consultations that an exceptional or complex natural disaster or other disaster situation requiring system-wide action exists, the Secretary-General shall designate, at the international level, a lead entity from among the United Nations organizations, agencies and bodies, including the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, and, at the country level, the appropriate entity of the United Nations system to carry out relief operations, taking into account the specific requirements of the situation and in consultation with the host Government, and calls upon all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to co-operate closely with one another in their relief operations;

11. Invites the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to examine urgently the role of the lead entity and participating organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in complex disaster situations, taking into account decision 1981/2 of that Committee, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982, to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, on the deliberations of the committee;

12. Strongly calls upon all States to respond positively and expeditiously to the Secretary-General's appeals for contributions to meet natural disasters and other disaster situations;

13. Reiterates, in particular, its appeal in resolution 35/107 for increased contributions to the Trust Fund of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, in particular to the subaccount for humanitarian emergency relief;

14. Stresses in this regard the need to strengthen the operational capacity and the human, material and financial resources available to individual agencies and organizations, in order to enable them to play their respective roles more promptly, efficiently and effectively in natural disasters and other disaster situations;

15. Requests all States to ensure a full flow of information to the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, especially regarding relief actions, and also to provide the United Nations system with the necessary personnel and logistic support;

16. Urges Governments in disaster-prone countries to explore further, with the assistance of the donors, appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, the possibility of improving storage, communication and transportation facilities, as well as measures to ensure disaster preparedness and prevention;

17. Also urges the international community to assist disaster-prone countries, upon their request, with the establishment of effective national early-warning systems, the development of contingency plans for disasters and the strengthening of assessment capacity for relief requirements and for distribution and monitoring of relief supplies;

18. Calls upon organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system involved in the provision of humanitarian assistance and disaster relief to establish emergency units or focal points if they are not already in existence;

19. Reaffirms the need for the international community to respond fully to requests for emergency and humanitarian assistance, in particular through increased financial contributions for affected developing countries, bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, as well as those of the Trust Fund of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a preliminary progress report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982, and a comprehensive report to the Assembly at its thirty-eighth session, through the Council at its second regular session of 1983.

Disaster relief

At the request of the Governments concerned, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) responded during 1981 to eight flood emergencies, five earthquakes, two droughts and two situations involving civil strife, affecting 14 countries.

Its functions in individual disasters included several or all of the following: (a) gathering information and disseminating it in the form of situation reports to Governments and potential donors; (b) conducting assessment missions; (c) mobilizing relief contributions and ensuring the rapid transport of relief supplies; (d) seconding relief co-ordination officers to the offices of resident co-ordinators of the United Nations development system and resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); (e) assessing the impact of major relief programmes; and (f) advising Governments on the inclusion of disaster prevention concepts in the post-emergency phase.

The Office was authorized to draw from the United Nations budget up to $30,000 per country for relief assistance in the case of any one disaster. It made this maximum allocation on 10 occasions during 1981. Specific disaster relief operations in which UNDRO was involved during the year are described below.

- China. An UNDRO-led multiagency assessment mission visited flood-stricken Hubei province and drought-stricken Hebei province, 12-31 January. UNDRO launched an international appeal in March for food, fertilizer, clothing, blankets and medical supplies, resulting in contributions of $25 million. Aid was delivered and distributed during the latter part of 1981.

An earthquake struck Daofu, Sichuan province, on 24 January. An UNDRO grant of $30,000 was used for medical supplies and other assistance.

-Indonesia. In response to a typhoon and floods in central Java, 7-19 January, UNDRO allocated $5,000 for temporary shelter.

After an earthquake damaged about 16 villages in Irian Jaya, UNDRO allocated $10,000 for emergency shelter.

-Greece. An earthquake in the Athens and Corinth areas, 24 February, killed 22 persons and rendered 80,000 temporarily homeless. UNDRO issued situation reports and appealed for 2,000 tents, most of which were provided by the international community.

-Mozambique. Areas of extensive floods in February were visited by a multiagency assessment mission in March, which found that approximately 160,000 people had lost their subsistence crops. Participating organizations contributed most of the relief supplies needed. A $30,000 grant by UNDRO was used to purchase light boats and medical supplies.

-Djibouti Heavy rains in March/April left some 100,000 people, almost a third of the country's population, temporarily homeless. The Government appealed through UNDRO for power generators, pumps, mobile kitchens, tents, food and medicines. Most needs were covered by a number of international organizations; contributions reported to UNDRO reached $1 million. An UNDRO grant of $30,000 was used for tents and sugar.

-Somalia Food and relief supplies were provided by Governments and international organizations following heavy seasonal rains, March/April, especially in Hiran and Juba provinces. United Nations resident co-ordinators assumed responsibility for the receipt and distribution of supplies.

-Democratic Yemen Flash floods in March killed 70 persons, left 64,000 homeless, destroyed buildings and damaged agricultural land and crops; 13,000 head of livestock were lost. An UNDRO appeal resulted in reported contributions of $1.8 million, including $30,000 from UNDRO and a grant from UNDP for tents, medicines and blankets.

Flash floods in September in Abyan governorate on the southern coast destroyed a major dam and heavily damaged housing and infrastructure. The World Food Programme provided emergency food rations; UNDRO and UNDP grants, including $30,000 from UNDRO, were used for blankets, beds, stoves and kitchen utensils. UNDRO assisted the Government to assess relief needs and advised on flood control.

-Iran. Earthquakes struck Kerman province, east-central Iran, 11 June and 28 July, killing more than 2,000 persons and leaving 37,000 homeless. An UNDRO representative visited the area, assessed the damage and evaluated relief needs. Several United Nations organizations, 20 Governments and many non-governmental organizations responded to an UNDRO appeal. A $30,000 UNDRO grant was used for soap, blankets and foodstuffs.

-Angola. In July the Government requested assistance for its displaced population in the southern provinces and central plateau. UNDRO led a multi-agency fact-finding mission which recommended a $12 million, six-month emergency relief programme to be followed by a longer-term relief and rehabilitation scheme. Designated by the Secretary-General as co-ordinating agency for the programme, UNDRO launched a major appeal which brought contributions of about $11 million, including the Office's maximum grant of $30,000. A follow-up mission in November reported that the programme was being implemented but was being hindered by military operations and civil strife.

-Gambia. Following civil unrest in July, causing heavy loss of life and damage to the economy and infrastructure, an UNDRO-led multi-agency assessment mission recommended a food programme for 120,000 persons and other emergency assistance. Virtually all emergency needs were met within a month; international contributions exceeded $12 million, including $30,000 from UNDRO, used to purchase 83 tons of rice.

-Comoros. Responding to a Government request in August, UNDRO contributed $4,000 for motor pumps and water containers needed for drought-affected populations.

-Guinea. Following a Government request in August, UNDRO assessed flood damage caused by the overflow of the Selingué reservoir in Mali. With a $20,600 allocation, it joined other United Nations agencies in providing food, tents and blankets.

-Nepal. Floods and landslides in September in central regions left several hundred persons dead, affected more than 2,600 families, and damaged houses, crops and roads. The international community provided almost $300,000 worth of relief assistance.

-Chad. In November, in response to a situation caused by years of civil strife (p. 504), the Secretary-General appealed for reconstruction and rehabilitation assistance and designated UNDRO as the lead agency to mobilize and co-ordinate emergency relief. UNDRO made its maximum allocation of $30,000 for direct assistance and sent a representative to N'Djamena, the capital; he reported that substantial resources and a special logistic effort would be needed to move relief supplies.

Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance

The activities of UNDRO were financed partly from the United Nations budget and partly from the voluntary Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance. Budget appropriations for 1980-1981 totalled $4,482,500; expenditures under the Trust Fund were $2,835,212 for the same period, of which $940,424 pertained to 1981.

The Trust Fund had three main subaccounts, under which 1981 expenditures were: strengthening of UNDRO, $563,068 (60 per cent); emergency relief assistance, $235,719 (25 per cent); and disaster prevention and pre-disaster planning, $141,637 (15 per cent) (see table below). (Most of the 1981 expenditures for relief were recorded for activities in connection with disasters which occurred in 1980.<sup>(3)</sup>)

A recommendation to phase out the Trust Fund was made by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) in its evaluation of UNDRO (p. 472). In December, however, the General Assembly reiterated a previous appeal for increased contributions to the Fund, particularly to its subaccount for humanitarian emergency relief.<sup>(2)</sup>

During discussion of disaster relief assistance in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee (p. 478), a number of speakers commented on the role of the Trust Fund. Egypt and Turkey pointed out that the Assembly had decided in December 1980 to maintain the Fund for two years from 1 January 1982.<sup>(1)</sup> Madagascar favoured maintaining the Fund until a valid system of financing UNDR0 had been set up. Peru stated that the Fund should be maintained as a channel for voluntary economic assistance by Governments and for direct co-operation which donors wanted to channel through UNDR0. Sierra Leone agreed with the Secretary-General's comment that the Fund's future could be decided only after the Assembly had made known its views on the role and functions of UNDR0.

Contributions paid to the Trust Fund in 1981 totalled $886,712, consisting of $821,873 from 16 Governments (see table below) and public donations in the amount of $64,839. The Fund's total income, including interest, was $1,495,327, or $554,903 more than its expenditures.

Disaster preparedness and prevention

In addition to its disaster relief activities, UNDR0 continued its pre-disaster planning functions, which involved it in promoting the study, prevention, control and prediction of natural disasters, and the collection and dissemination of information.

The Pan-Caribbean disaster preparedness and prevention project was initiated in September 1981. Serving all island States of the region, the project included 33 activities relating to updating of emergency plans, training of personnel, stimulation of public awareness, and vulnerability analysis and risk mitigation. UNDR0 was responsible for general co-ordination of the project, including the appointment of staff and supervision of technical activities.

Often in co-operation with other United Nations organizations, the Office provided assistance in pre-disaster planning to Governments that requested it, as summarized below.

-Jamaica. A joint mission in January advised the Office of Disaster Preparedness and Emergency Relief Co-ordination on priorities of its work programme.

-Nicaragua. A joint mission in January with the World Health Organization advised the Government on the structure and work programme of a national civil defence office responsible for future in-country disaster relief operations and disaster prevention.

-Panama. UNDR0 advised in January on the establishment of a national emergency office, including its structure and work programme.

-Peru. A multiagency mission in January formulated a comprehensive national disaster preparedness and prevention programme and identified six projects for implementation by international agencies. In April UNDR0 initiated a study to assess tsunami (tidal wave) risks in the vicinity of Lima.

-Somalia. An UNDR0 consultant completed in January a mission of advice on revising the national disaster preparedness plan.

-United Republic of Tanzania. An UNDR0 consultant completed in January a mission to assist the Government in identifying priorities related to land use and in drafting a general preparedness scheme for the country.

-Ecuador. A multiagency mission in January/February determined the country's needs for international assistance in disaster preparedness and prevention.

-Mexico. A joint mission in January/February with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) advised on the establishment of a work programme in disaster preparedness and prevention and on possible joint activities by national agencies.

-Venezuela. An UNDR0 mission in February identified technical co-operation projects in disaster preparedness and made arrangements for closer involvement of Venezuela in international disaster relief operations and possibly in disaster preparedness activities in the Caribbean.

-Senegal An UNDRO consultant completed in March a mission to advise the Government on strengthening its relief organization plans and operations.

-Indonesia An UNDRO consultant in March/April surveyed disaster-prone areas and recommended ways of raising the level of provincial disaster preparedness.

-Ecuador. A joint mission in October with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization assessed emergency preparedness measures to be taken in the event of an eruption of the Pichincha volcano, near Quito.

In addition, UNDRO continued to provide advisory and physical planning services to Yugoslavia following the 1979 earthquake in Montenegro republic, and assistance to Egypt in vulnerability analysis and housing reconstruction following flooding in Upper Egypt in November 1979.

A number of UNDRO activities were financed by the subaccount for disaster prevention and pre-disaster planning in the Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance (p. 483).

The role of UNDRO in regard to disaster preparedness and prevention was discussed during the year in connection with the assessment of the capacity of the United Nations system to deal with emergencies. JIU, in its report on UNDRO (p. 472), recommended that the subaccount for disaster prevention and pre-planning should be replaced by United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) funding of projects. In his comments on this report, the Secretary-General stated that more efforts should be made to develop disaster preparedness projects for UNDP funding.

When the Committee for Programme and Coordination discussed this topic in May (p. 474), different views were expressed as to whether UNDRO should deal with pre-disaster planning and preparedness. The draft resolution which France presented to the Economic and Social Council, and which the Council decided in July to transmit to the General Assembly (p. 474), included a provision for United Nations assistance in promotion of an early-warning system and of prevention and preparedness measures.

In its resolution of 17 December on strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural and other disasters,<sup>(1)</sup> the r Assembly urged Governments in disaster-prone countries to explore, with the assistance of donors and the United Nations system, the possibility of improving storage, communication and transportation facilities, as well as measures to ensure disaster preparedness and prevention.

The international community was urged to assist such countries with the establishment of national early-warning systems, the development of contingency plans for disasters, and the strengthening of assessment capacity for relief requirements and for distribution and monitoring of relief supplies.

During discussion of disaster relief assistance in the Assembly's Second Committee, Egypt expressed the view that UNDRO had a role in co-ordinating scientific research by specialized agencies and disseminating disaster-control technology. Democratic Yemen, Sierra Leone and Sweden, the last speaking for the Nordic States, wished to see pre-disaster planning and preparedness activities strengthened; Sierra Leone could not support the JIU suggestion to phase out the subaccount for this purpose. The Sudan and the United States believed that UNDRO should continue to fulfil disaster preparedness functions.

Some speakers suggested that UNDP become more active in this area. India believed that UNDP should include technical co-operation for disaster preparedness and prevention in its regional and interregional programmes, helping disaster-prone communities in developing countries to improve their ability to cope with such tragedies. Peru thought such assistance might be channelled through UNDP country programmes, keeping UNDRO as the executing agency.

Sweden, on behalf of the Nordic countries, stated that it was essential that development plans and programmes of developing countries, especially those which were disaster prone, should include programmes for disaster prevention and preparedness; United Nations organizations could provide the tools and financial means so that such countries would be prepared in the event of disaster.

The USSR could not agree to proposals for an international early-warning system, on the ground that they could lead to interference in the internal affairs of States; it also believed that UNDRO should not deal with pre-disaster planning.

Drought-stricken areas of Africa

Sudano-Sahelian region

The United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO), operating within UNDP, continued in 1981 to serve as the principal unit of the United Nations system for co-ordinating efforts by United Nations agencies to help eight drought-stricken countries of the Sahel to implement medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programmes. These programmes were aimed at mitigating the effects of future droughts, achieving self-sufficiency in food staples and accelerating socio-economic development. The countries assisted-Cape Verde, Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta-were the members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel (CILSS).

Under a separate mandate, UNSO also assisted 19 countries in Central and East Africa to control desertification, under a joint venture between UNDP and the United Nations Environment Programme (p. 827).

General Assembly in 1981<sup>(2)</sup> and early 1982,<sup>(3)</sup> described the activities undertaken in 1981 under the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme. As a result of expanding operational capability, the number of UNSO-assisted projects for drought-related recovery and rehabilitation reached 119 (28 regional and 91 national) by the end of 1981, at a total cost of more than $701 million.

In 1981 UNSO mobilized $30.9 million in international assistance to finance priority drought-related recovery and rehabilitation projects as well as desertification control projects of the States members of CILSS. Sources for these funds were bilateral and multilateral, and included the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities (p. 489). Since the inception of UNSO in 1973,<sup>(10)</sup> close to $450 million had become available from various quarters by the end of 1981, of which more than $60 million was contributed by and through the Trust Fund.

Projects assisted by UNSO were concentrated mainly in the transport infrastructure and agricultural sectors. The affected Governments placed growing emphasis on range management and conservation, control of water resources with special attention to surface-water harvesting, improved food production, intensified reforestation and afforestation, the development of national capabilities through expanded training of personnel, the establishment or strengthening of national units for drought-related recovery and rehabilitation, and the development of new and renewable energy sources.

Prominent among UNSO-assisted regional activities was a $150-million programme for the construction, improvement and maintenance of a region-wide, 3,900-kilometre system of all-weather feeder roads. Approximately $105 million had been secured by the end of 1981 for the construction of some 2,150 kilometres, including $60 million through UNSO. A total of 1,300 kilometres had been constructed since the programme's inception, including close to 300 kilometres in 1981.

The UNDP Administrator, in a March 1981

report to the UNDP Governing Council on assistance to drought-stricken countries in Africa,<sup>(4)</sup> noted that in 1980-1981 the CILSS member States had had a shortfall of 200,000 tons of grain which had to be offset by commercial imports and aid, and that rainfall in almost the entire Sahelian area had again been unevenly distributed in both time and space. However, the Administrator subsequently reported<sup>(5)</sup> that most Sahelian countries had experienced nearly normal rainfall and weather in 1981, with generally satisfactory grain harvests. The exceptions had been Cape Verde and Chad, which had had a serious drought, while Mauritania and the Niger had been affected to a lesser extent.

Describing assistance provided by United Nations organizations in 1981 to the most seriously affected countries, the Administrator reported that aid to Cape Verde had concentrated on soil and water conservation, water resource development and the expansion of agricultural production. In Chad, where the crisis caused by drought had been made worse by civil strife, inter-agency missions visited three times to assess the situation and alert donors about the most urgent needs. In Mauritania, UNDP, UNSO and the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) were helping to establish construction brigades to maintain secondary roads and dams. Projects of UNDP in the Niger were designed to strengthen agrometeorological services, soil cartography and collection of agricultural statistics; others assisted agricultural mechanization, reafforestation, and construction, maintenance and improvement of secondary roads.

The Governing Council, on 19 June,<sup>(9)</sup> called on Governments to make special efforts to enable UNSO to respond to priority requirements, including voluntary contributions at the 1981 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (p. 426). It noted with satisfaction the decisive role played by UNSO in combating the effects of drought and requested the Administrator to continue to enhance the Office's capacity through the greater use of available resources, particularly from the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, UNCDF and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. By a resolution of 22 July,<sup>(7)</sup> the Economic and Social Council called on Governments to make special efforts to increase UNSO resources through voluntary contributions, including those to be made at the 1981 Pledging Conference. It requested UNSO to continue co-operating with the States members of CILSS with a view to hastening implementation of the recovery and rehabilitation programme, and invited the Secretary-General to pursue consultations—originally suggested by the Council in July 1980<sup>(6)</sup>—for joint undertakings between UNSO and other United Nations organs, agencies and programmes. The Council asked for a further report in 1982.

The resolution, introduced by Senegal and sponsored by 11 nations, was adopted without vote following its approval without objection by the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee on 16 July. The approved text included a drafting change made by the sponsors after the USSR orally proposed to delete “including” from the original phrase calling on Governments to increase UNSO resources “including through voluntary contributions” at the Pledging Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. Another call for voluntary contributions to UNSO, through the Pledging Conference and bilateral channels, was made by the General Assembly in a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(8)</sup> adopted without vote. The Assembly requested United Nations bodies to continue and increase their assistance through joint undertakings with UNSO and invited the Secretary-General to pursue consultations on arrangements for such undertakings. It reaffirmed the role of UNSO as the central point and principal body responsible for co-ordinating the efforts of United Nations agencies to help the countries of the Sahel to implement their recovery and rehabilitation programme, and invited UNSO to continue to strengthen the close co-operation with CILSS and its member States.

This resolution was submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier 17-nation draft,<sup>(1)</sup> introduced by the Gambia and subsequently withdrawn. It was approved in Committee without vote on 20 November, as orally amended by the Gambia on behalf of the sponsors of the earlier draft. These changes affected the latter part of paragraph 8, by which the Assembly noted with appreciation the effective manner in which UNSO was discharging its responsibilities. In place of the phrase “in responding to the programme priority” of CILSS member States, the revised text read “in responding to the priority requests” of CILSS member States and added “within the framework of their programme”.

The resolution differed from the 17-nation draft by the addition of a reference to bilateral channels in paragraph 3, asking States to increase the resources of UNSO.

The Gambia, introducing the original draft, said that a lasting solution to the problems caused by persistent drought in the Sahel depended on the provision of funds and technology by the international community. The States members of CILSS had submitted 116 national and regional projects costing an estimated $656 million. A significant portion of that amount had been secured and UNSO would pursue resources for the remaining projects.

Several African countries cited projects under way to alleviate drought conditions in the Sahel. Guinea said that UNSO-assisted development of the Fouta-Djallon massif in Guinea, watershed for the main rivers of West Africa, was aimed at ensuring the navigability of rivers for a length of 2,610 kilometres in several States, dredging those rivers to facilitate drought and flood control, developing hydroelectric production through the construction of 14 dams, and serving as the linchpin of African economic integration. Mali mentioned its joint programme with Mauritania and Senegal to develop the Senegal River basin for irrigation and electric power generation and to give Mali access to the sea. The Niger noted that in 1981 UNSO had contributed more than $4 million towards a $6.3 million feeder-road construction and maintenance programme in that country.

Mauritania, observing that more developing countries were contributing to the Trust Fund, said that technical co-operation among developing countries should play a major role in the recovery and development of the Sahel. Sierra Leone said it would have liked to see an increase in unearmarked contributions so that UNSO could be more responsive to the needs of recipients.

Poland, also speaking on behalf of other Eastern European countries and Mongolia, said they would continue to provide technical assistance to the Sahelian countries bilaterally and through certain multilateral programmes, including UNDP. The German Democratic Republic added that in January 1981 it had given assistance amounting to several million marks to Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mali and the Niger. The United States said its Congress had been asked to appropriate $107.5 million for Sudano-Sahelian recovery and rehabilitation in 1982.

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/737) without vote, 20 November (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.98), based on informal consultations on 17-nation draft (A/C.2/36/L.28), orally amended by Gambia for sponsors of draft A/C.2/36/L.28; agenda item 72 (c).

Implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, 2959(XXVII) of 12 December 1972, 3054(XXVIII) of 17 October 1973, 3253(XXIX) of 4 December 1974, 3512(XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/180 of 21 December 1976, 32/159 of 19 December 1977, 33/133 of 19 December 1978, 34/16 of 9 November 1979 and 35/86 of 5 December 1980, as well as its resolution 35/69 of 5 December 1980,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1918(LVIII) of 5 May 1975, 2103(LXIII) of 3 August 1977, 1978/37 of 21 July 1978, 1979/51 of 2 August 1979, 1980/51 of 23 July 1980 and 1981/55 of 22 July 1981,

Taking note of decision 81/5 of 19 June 1981 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme concerning the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region,

Noting with satisfaction the decisive role played by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in helping to combat the effects of the drought and to implement the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme adopted by the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, and in mobilizing the necessary resources to finance priority projects,

Considering that the nature and magnitude of the needs of the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region, which are among the least developed countries, urgently call for the continuation and further strengthening of actions of solidarity by the international community in support of the recovery efforts and the economic development of those countries,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Governments, agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations, private organizations and individuals that have contributed to the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region;

3. Strongly urges all Governments to make special efforts to increase the resources of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, including voluntary contributions through the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, as well as other bilateral channels, so as to enable it to respond more fully to the priority requirements of the Governments of the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel;

4. Requests all organs, agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to continue and increase their assistance through joint undertakings with the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, in response to requests from the Governments of the Sudano-Sahelian countries, for the implementation of their recovery, rehabilitation and development programmes;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to pursue further the consultations envisaged in paragraph 5 of Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/51, with a view to working out specific arrangements for joint undertakings between the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office and the appropriate organs, agencies and programmes of the United Nations system;

9. Invites the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to continue to strengthen its close co-operation with the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and with the Committee, with a view to hastening the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to the General Assembly, through the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region.

UN Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities

Expenditures from the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities totalled $8,511,441 in 1981. Of this sum, $6,992,873 represented project costs, $1,110,463 was for administrative costs and $408,105 was paid to agencies executing UNSO projects in reimbursement for their support costs.

Ten Governments contributed a total of $3,992,562 to the Trust Fund in 1981 (see table below). Total income for the year, including interest on investment of contributions received in previous years, came to $6,595,983, or $1,915,458 less than expenditures.

East Africa

Six East African countries affected by drought-Djibouti (p. 491), Ethiopia (p. 491), Kenya (p. 493), Somalia (p. 493), the Sudan (p. 494) and Uganda (p. 494)-were the subject of action by United Nations bodies in 1981. A multiagency mission visited most of them to assess needs and recommend specific measures, and the General Assembly appealed to organizations and States to assist the affected populations. Five of these countries had been the subject of earlier appeals; the Assembly added Kenya to the list in December.

The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in reports to the Governing Council issued in March 1981<sup>(2)</sup> and April 1982,<sup>(3)</sup> reviewed the situation in Africa, including East Africa, and the assistance provided by the United Nations system other than that given through UNSO (p. 485). He reported that food aid from the World Food Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, much of it integrated with development projects, was being provided to all these countries except the Sudan and Uganda, where rainfall was reported to be relatively normal in 1981.

On 19 June,<sup>(7)</sup> the Governing Council appealed to the international community to give drought-stricken African countries generous emergency assistance and requested the Administrator to continue to report on the situation.

The United Nations Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes informed the Economic and Social Council on 14 July that developments in some of the affected countries, including heavy rains and floods, had made it necessary to postpone the inter-agency mission originally scheduled for May. This oral report was noted by the Economic and Social Council on 20 July.<sup>(6)</sup>

During September and October, the United Nations multiagency mission visited Kenya (20-25 September), Uganda (25-30 September), Somalia (1-8 October), Djibouti (8-15 October) and the Sudan (17-24 October). A recurrent theme in the resulting reports-which the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly - was that planning should be re-oriented from emergency measures to longer-term preventive measures, and that steps to combat drought should be integrated into economic and social planning in such a way as to make them a stimulus for development rather than stop-gap measures to counter the cyclical recurrences of drought.

On 6 November, in a statement to the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the leader of the mission said the persistent drought in East Africa had become a crisis in the previous two or three years because of the narrow margin of subsistence in poor rural areas, rising demand in wealthier rural and urban areas, the financial difficulty of importing food, and the extra burdens caused by disabled persons and refugees and by security problems. Although the mission had recommended a number of pressing projects to donors, in general it had concentrated on outlining the steps required to lay down a general policy and programme which would permit the development of high-priority projects. Four of the five Governments had welcomed measures suggested by the Assembly in December 1980 for regional co-operation through an intergovernmental body that would be responsible for co-ordinating measures against drought and other natural disasters and for dealing with recovery and rehabilitation efforts;<sup>(4)</sup> Djibouti had said it would respond after studying the mission's reports.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In a resolution adopted without vote on 17 December,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the multiagency mission and appealed to Member States and organizations to contribute to the projects and programmes described in its reports. Governments of the region were urged, with assistance from the Secretary-General and the UNDP Administrator, to arrange for the establishment of an intergovernmental body to co-ordinate and support national efforts to combat drought and other natural disasters and to deal with recovery and rehabilitation. The Assembly reiterated an appeal to Member States and organizations to contribute towards the cost of a UNDP co-ordinating unit that would assist the affected countries in drought mitigation and economic and social development. The Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Administrator, was requested to assist the Governments in establishing policies for dealing with drought in the context of their national development programmes and to mobilize international assistance.

The resolution was submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier and essentially similar draft, introduced in a revised version by the Sudan and sponsored by 20 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup> The Committee approved it without vote on 24 November.

The USSR withdrew an oral amendment it had submitted to paragraph 2 which, instead of having the Assembly endorse the mission's recommendations, would have had it recommend that the specialized agencies consider them.

General Assembly resolution 36/221

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/737) without vote, 24 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.113), based on informal consultations on 20-nation draft (A/C.2/36/L.61/Rev.1); agenda item 72 (b).

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas in Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/90 and 35/91 of 5 December 1980 on the question of assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/48 of 20 July 1981 on assistance to the drought-stricken countries, particularly Kenya,

Having heard the statement made before the Second Committee on 6 November 1981 by the head of the United Nations multiagency mission which visited Djibouti, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda, to assess the immediate, medium-term and long-term needs of the Governments concerned for their drought-affected populations,

Noting with satisfaction the reports of the Secretary-General on assistance to the drought-stricken areas in Djibouti, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda, to which were annexed the relevant reports of the multiagency mission,

Aware of the adverse effects of the drought on the economic and social development of the countries concerned as well as on their ecology,

Bearing in mind the imperative need for the international community to render assistance to Member States in the event of major natural disasters,

Recalling its resolutions and those of the Economic and Social Council concerning assistance in cases of natural disaster, in particular General Assembly resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971 and 2959(XXVII) of 12 December 1972,

Taking into account the regional nature of the drought and the practical and regional co-operation arrangements which already exist among the affected countries,

Recalling its recommendation in paragraph 6 of its resolution 35/90 that the Governments of the drought-stricken countries of the region should consider the establishment of an intergovernmental body with the responsibility for co-ordinating and supporting the countries' efforts to combat the effects of drought and other natural disasters and to deal with the problem of medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation,

Noting that, in response to paragraph 7 of its resolution 35/90, arrangements have been made by the Secretary-General for a unit within the United Nations Development Programme to be established when funds are made available through voluntary contributions and to be assigned responsibility for assisting the countries of the region,

Noting further that, also in response to paragraph 7 of resolution 35/90, the Secretary-General appealed to Member States and international organizations for voluntary contributions to meet the costs of such a unit to enable it to provide the assistance envisaged in that paragraph,

1. Commends the Secretary-General for his positive response to the urgent situation of the drought-stricken areas in Djibouti, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda, and for his action in dispatching a multiagency mission to those countries to assess their medium-term and long-term needs, and also commends the multiagency mission for the excellent efforts it deployed and requests the Secretary-General to send a similar mission to those countries for which such reports do not exist:

2. Endorses the recommendations made by the multi-agency mission in its reports, which were annexed to the reports of the Secretary-General;

3. Appeals to Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and Intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously, in the form of financial, material and technical assistance, towards the projects and programmes to help the affected populations, as described in the reports of the multi-agency mission;

4. Urges the Governments of the drought-stricken countries of the region to continue their consultations and to finalize the necessary arrangements for the establishment of an intergovernmental body with the responsibility for co-ordinating and supporting each country's efforts to combat the effects of drought and other natural disasters and to deal with the problem of medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation;

5. Invites the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, and within existing resources, to assist those countries in the establishment of the proposed Intergovernmental body;

6. Relates its appeal to Member States and international organizations to make voluntary contributions to meet the cost of the special co-ordinating unit, to be established within the United Nations Development Programme, and to enable it to provide assistance to the Governments of the affected countries to strengthen their national and regional capabilities to mitigate the effects of drought and to promote sustained economic and social development;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme:

(a) To extend all necessary assistance to the Governments of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda in establishing detailed policies for dealing with drought as a recurring phenomenon within the context of their national development programmes;

(b) To mobilize international assistance for the populations affected as a result of drought and other natural disasters in the countries concerned;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep the situation under review and to report to the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, and to the General Assembly, at its thirty-seventh session, on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Djibouti

The multi-agency mission which visited Djibouti from 8 to 15 October 1981 (p. 489) reported the Government's estimate that there were 30,000 drought victims living in camps and another 30,000 refugees among the country's population of 350,000. The Government intended to settle the camp inhabitants into activities such as fishing, animal husbandry linked with agriculture, and small-scale manufacture or handicrafts; until that happened, food and other basics would have to be provided.

Until a national development plan could be drawn up, the mission stated in a report circulated to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> a policy and integrated programme of measures against drought should be prepared. In view of the shortage of trained personnel, it suggested that international organizations provide training and experts during a transition period. It saw an urgent need to ascertain how many persons were in camps, to find employment for them and to educate camp-dwelling children.

The head of the mission told the Second Committee in November that Djibouti's unique problems consisted of a lack of natural resources, absence of a potential for agricultural development and a critical shortage of water. Djibouti informed the Committee that it supported the establishment of a regional intergovernmental body to combat the effects of drought and other natural disasters.

Along with assistance to drought-stricken areas, Djibouti benefited from a special economic assistance programme organized by the United Nations (p. 507) and received aid for its refugees (p. 1042).

Ethiopia

According to the March 1981 report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on assistance to drought-stricken countries in Africa,<sup>(2)</sup> 5.1 million persons in Ethiopia were endangered by drought and another grain deficit was expected.

On 24 April, the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator told the Economic and Social Council that the outlook for 1981 was not promising, as poor harvests were again expected in the drought-stricken areas. A report in March by the United Nations Co-ordinating Committee for Relief and Rehabilitation in Ethiopia had indicated that about 1.5 million people desperately required help. Food was the most pressing need, with a 350,000-metric-ton deficit expected. The Co-ordinator stated that the problems of the long-term drought in the Horn of Africa were compounded by the presence of refugees and displaced persons in locations unable to support them without massive international assistance.

At the same meeting, the Ethiopian Commissioner for Relief and Rehabilitation said that despite reports by two United Nations missions to Ethiopia, establishing the extent of damage and the assistance required, the international response had been disappointing. Later in the Council's discussion, Ethiopia recalled that the region had been affected for almost a decade by severe droughts in Ethiopia and Somalia; it noted that, on 2 May, the Secretary-General had issued a statement appealing for international assistance in regard to floods which had recently struck both countries.

By a resolution of 6 May on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia,<sup>(3)</sup> the Economic and Social Council requested United Nations programmes and organizations to continue and intensify assistance to that country in its relief and rehabilitation efforts, particularly the Government's resettlement programme. It appealed to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to continue and intensify their assistance for relief, rehabilitation and recovery of those areas.

This resolution, introduced by Zimbabwe and sponsored by 20 nations, was adopted without vote following the withdrawal of amendments proposed by Somalia.<sup>(1)</sup> These would have made the following changes: added a paragraph calling on all concerned to ensure that assistance was used solely for relief and rehabilitation to drought-stricken people; replaced references to drought-stricken "areas" by "people"; omitted mention of assistance to the Ethiopian Government's resettlement programme; and reformulated the appeal to non-United Nations donors so as to mention only the continuance of assistance and not its increase, and replace the reference to assistance to the Government by "assistance for relief and rehabilitation of the drought-stricken people in Ethiopia".

In the Council's discussion, the German Democratic Republic said it had granted assistance to Ethiopia worth 16 million marks in 1980 and further bilateral relief measures had been agreed upon in December 1980. The USSR said it was giving large-scale assistance and expressed concern that the implementation of past General Assembly resolutions on this subject was being sabotaged by some United Nations organizations.

Addressing the Assembly's Second Committee on 5 November, the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator said that, in addition to the food relief programme, a $25-million, short-term emergency programme had been drawn up for the improvement of services, including provision of drugs and supplies and the repair and reconstruction of damaged health facilities. Contributions received by his Office for 1980-1981 amounted to some $40 million, and the World Food Programme would provide 10,000 tons of wheat valued at $3 million-enough to feed the 280,000 drought victims in the Ogaden area for three months.

Ethiopia stated that some 3.9 million people in that country were seriously affected by man-made and natural disasters, 1.5 million of whom had been identified as most needy, requiring assistance of $217 million and 244,000 tons of food over two and a half years. Ethiopia was ready to join a regional intergovernmental body whose establishment the Assembly had suggested in December 1980 to co-ordinate measures against drought and other natural disasters and to deal with recovery and rehabilitation efforts.<sup>(4)</sup>

The United Nations also acted in 1981 to mobilize international assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia (p. 1044).

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/91 of 5 December 1980, in which the Assembly, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council on the implementation of the relevant resolution; the Assembly and the Council on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia,

Having heard the oral report of the Secretary-General, presented by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator 24 April 1981, outlining the substantial assistance requirements for the year 1981,

Noting with concern the statement of the Commissioner for Relief and Rehabilitation of Ethiopia underlining the grave situation facing the people of the drought-affected areas and the urgent assistance required to provide them with relief and rehabilitation,

Noting further the call made by the multi-donor mission, the inter-agency mission and the United Nations Co-ordinating Committee for Relief and Rehabilitation for generous urgent assistance to the people in the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts in this regard of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the United Nations Development Programme, United Nations Children's Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Food Programme, as well as other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies,

Recalling also that, despite the assistance offered to Government of Ethiopia by Member States, organizations within the United Nations system and voluntary agencies enormous difficulties still persist in the rehabilitation and recovery efforts,

1. Takes note of the oral report of the Secretary-General presented by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia;

2. Requests the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations organizations and specialized agencies to continue and intensify assistance to Ethiopia in its relief and rehabilitation efforts particularly the Government's resettlement programme in their respective areas of competence and to implement promptly and fully the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3441 (XXX) of 19 December 1975 and 31/172 of 21 December 1976, Economic and Social Council resolutions 1833(LVI) of 8 July 1974, 1876(LVII) of 16 July 1974, 1971 (LIX) of 30 December 1975, 1986(LX) of 6 May 1976, 1978/2 of 2 May 1978 and 1980/2 of 16 April 1980;

3. Appeals to the Governments of Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations all voluntary agencies to continue and increase their assistance to the Government of Ethiopia for relief, rehabilitation and recovery of the drought-stricken areas:

4. Decides to keep the matter under review.

Kenya

The UNDP Administrator informed the Governing Council, in his March 1981 report on assistance to drought-stricken countries in Africa,<sup>(2)</sup> that all of Kenya had been affected by drought in 1980 and 350,000 tons of maize, costing $73.5 million, would have to be imported in 1981, along with $41.3 million worth of wheat.

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council recommended to the General Assembly a draft resolution by which the Secretary-General would be requested to send a multiagency mission to Kenya to survey drought-stricken areas and assess the Government's short-, medium- and long-term needs. The mission would report to the Assembly in 1982, through the Council.

The Council's resolution was adopted without vote on a draft introduced by Bangladesh and also sponsored by Barbados, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Kenya and Malawi.

Kenya told the Council that it had been affected by drought since 1979 and had formulated agricultural and cattle-raising policies that would require extensive resources. It hoped neighbouring States-particularly Ethiopia, the Sudan and the United Republic of Tanzania-would participate with it in joint projects.

The United States, while joining in the consensus on the resolution, questioned the value of further multiagency missions; it believed the local UNDP resident representative should study and report on such situations.

The multiagency mission which visited five East African nations in September/October (p. 489) went to Kenya from 20 to 25 September. It noted that the country had been in an economic downturn since 1977, with a trade deficit that had quintupled over four years to about $700 million in 1980. Kenya had had to import food during the previous two years, although it had previously been self-sufficient in food.

In a report transmitted to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the mission recommended that, within the national development plan, a policy on measures against drought be instituted. That policy should relate national economic programmes to the resolution of specific drought problems, and establish priorities for intensifying the use of high-yield land and increasing the use of arid and semi-arid lands while safeguarding them from degradation by applying desertification controls. A national drought-mitigation programme should be prepared, with emphasis on meteorological monitoring of drought conditions, rangeland control and development in arid and semi-arid areas, and implementation of a food security policy, including an early-warning system for crop failures, improved storage, and planning and institutional arrangements for meeting food shortages and managing food reserves.

The head of the mission, speaking to the Assembly's Second Committee in November, said Kenya would probably have been able to handle a drought without external assistance had it not been for the combined effect of the recent drought and global economic problems. Kenya would continue to need some food aid, but the need would not persist indefinitely.

The Committee, following its approval on 24 November of a draft resolution on assistance to drought-stricken areas in six East African States including Kenya (p. 490), decided not to act on the draft resolution on Kenya recommended by the Economic and Social Council.

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Kenya
The Economic and Social Council,

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution at its thirty-sixth session:

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling its resolutions 35/90 on assistance to the drought-stricken areas in Djibouti, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda, and 35/91 on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia, of 5 December 1980,

"Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/43 of 23 July 1980 on international efforts to meet humanitarian needs in emergency situations,

"Requests the Secretary-General to send, as a matter of urgency, after consultation with the Government of Kenya and under the terms of General Assembly resolution 35/90, a multiagency mission to Kenya which would, inter alia, survey the drought-stricken areas of the country and assess the short-term, medium-term and long-term needs of the Government in the current situation, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982, on the results of the mission and on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution."

Somalia

With a refugee population that had risen to around 900,000, Somalia could have a 40,000-ton food deficit in 1981 following inadequate rainfall in 1980, the UNDP Administrator reported to the Governing Council in March 1981.<sup>(2)</sup>

The multiagency mission which visited Somalia from 1 to 8 October as part of a trip to several

East African countries (p. 489) reported that the refugee situation ~~the~~ object of separate United Nations action (p. 1046)-had eased. However, there had been little international response to proposals for emergency and longer-term action made by a similar mission in September 1980.<sup>(3)</sup> During the first six months of 1981, cereal imports had risen to 194,000 tons, of which 53,000 were for refugees. The effects of desertification were expanding as the search for fuel and construction wood went further into the countryside around camps.

In its report,<sup>(1)</sup> circulated to the General Assembly, the mission recommended that the Government adopt an official policy on anti-drought measures so that the planning and work of official agencies could be brought into focus. It also suggested the establishment of a technical assistance programme for the training of personnel and the assumption by donors of the local costs of projects until the country's financial situation improved.

Addressing the Assembly's Second Committee in November, the head of the mission said Somalia faced major difficulties and would need much help over a lengthy period. Given the improvement in food production in the previous year, donors should consider supplying fertilizer and pesticides in partial replacement for food.

Sudan

The multiagency mission sent to assess the drought situation in East Africa (p. 489) visited the Sudan from 17 to 24 October 1981. In a report transmitted to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> it noted that the Government was establishing a national co-ordinating body for the drought problem but that there was no formal drought policy-due perhaps to earlier optimistic forecasts of agricultural production. There was also a severe shortage of trained people due to emigration and much work was needed to build the factual basis for good programming.

In addition to measures to deal with these problems, the mission proposed: intensification and acceleration of measures against desertification; improvement of the meteorological service and full utilization of available data for planning purposes; and the establishment of self-help schemes, requiring a build-up of local food reserves, more appropriate systems of crop production and animal husbandry, extension services and a drought-warning system.

The head of the mission, addressing the General Assembly's Second Committee in November, said there was every reason in principle for the Sudan to become a major food exporter in the long term. Had the drought not coincided with global economic problems and domestic difficulties, the Sudan might have handled it without external aid. The country should be able eventually to extract itself from its drought-related difficulties, but it would require considerable external assistance in the mean while.

The Sudan informed the Committee that a national co-ordinating body with a permanent secretariat was to be established with responsibility for drought control strategy and for co-ordination among ministries and between donors and the Government. In addition, the Sudan had invited neighbouring States to meet at Khartoum early in 1982 to discuss ways of establishing a regional body.

The United Nations also provided assistance to the Sudan for its refugee problem (p. 1049).

Uganda

On average, drought was not a serious problem in Uganda except in the north-east and some other areas, according to the multiagency mission which visited five East African countries in 1981 (p. 489), including Uganda from 25 to 30 September. But there had been serious security problems, including cattle-raiding, robbery, killing and inter-tribal fighting, and Uganda had had food and water shortages during the previous two years.

The mission thought it essential for the Government and external aid bodies to improve their co-ordination, separately and collectively. In a report transmitted to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> it further suggested that a formal policy was needed to combat drought, covering both preventive and relief measures. There would still be a need to continue a feeding programme in the north-east and in some newly affected areas. The most immediate economic task was the attainment of food self-sufficiency by revitalizing the agriculture and livestock sector. A special and integrated programme should be developed for the Karamoja region in the north-east.

The head of the mission, speaking to the General Assembly's Second Committee in November, said Uganda had once been self-sufficient in food and there was no reason why it should not be so again, though the drought and other events had put off the time when that could be achieved.

Uganda was also the subject of a special economic assistance programme established by the Assembly (p. 520).

Emergency relief for Kampucheans

The United Nations system continued in 1981 to participate in a programme of humanitarian assistance to the people of Kampuchea, including those who had sought refuge in neighbouring countries. It co-operated and co-ordinated with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), many non-governmental organizations and donor countries providing bilateral assistance. Reporting to the General Assembly in October on the Kampuchea situation,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that the international relief efforts had been successful in helping to ameliorate significantly the worst conditions of hunger, malnutrition and disease among the Kampucheans (p. 242).

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued to act as the lead agency for the United Nations system in the Kampuchea emergency programme. This programme consisted of emergency assistance within Kampuchea as well as for the Khmer people at the Kampuchea-Thailand border. Also included were Kampuchean refugees in holding centres operated by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and Thai villagers displaced by events at the border. Harmonization of humanitarian assistance provided by the United Nations system to the people of Kampuchea remained the responsibility of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Co-ordination of the United Nations Humanitarian Programmes Resulting from Developments in Kampuchea, Sir Robert Jackson.

Since its inception in October 1979, the relief programme had provided $634 million in assistance to Kampuchean civilians, according to a note by the UNICEF Executive Director to the Fund's Executive Board in March 1982.<sup>(2)</sup> Through 1981 the programme had provided food, shelter, water, health care, environmental sanitation, supplementary feeding, basic education and social services to over half a million Kampucheans camped along the Thai-Kampuchean border and in UNHCR holding centres, as well as to 80,000 Thais affected by the influx of Kampucheans. Inside Kampuchea the relief effort had provided over 300,000 metric tons of food aid, of which the World Food Programme (WFP) had provided about 62,700 tons in the first 10 months of 1981. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations had given emergency agricultural assistance, including rice seeds, fertilizers and other agricultural inputs as well as assistance in animal husbandry and fisheries.

The return of Kampuchean refugees to their communities was assisted by UNHCR in co-operation with the Kampuchean Red Cross. Since its inception in late 1980, this programme had covered 400,000 Kampucheans. The number of Kampucheans in the holding centres had been reduced from a peak of 177,000 in June 1980 to 90,000 by late 1981, and the population in the border camps had decreased to about 200,000 by the end of 1981. UNHCR, in co-operation with ICRC, continued tracing activities in Kampuchea to reunite with their families the unaccompanied minors remaining in UNHCR children's centres in Thailand. The number of Kampucheans in Thailand of concern to UNHCR stood at 97,804 as at the end of 1981 (p. 1033).

At a special session on 22 and 23 January,<sup>(4)</sup> the Executive Board took note with approval of a 9 January letter, annexed to an information note to the Board,<sup>(1)</sup> in which the Executive Director confirmed, in response to a request by the Secretary-General, that UNICEF would continue as lead agency in Kampuchea through 1981, as it had done since 1979.<sup>(6)</sup> UNICEF ceased performing this function at the end of 1981, turning over its responsibilities for co-ordinating services at the Thai-Kampuchean border to the United Nations and WFP.

The General Assembly, in its 21 October resolution on the Kampuchea situation,<sup>(5)</sup> expressed appreciation to donor countries, the United Nations and its agencies and other national and international humanitarian organizations for their assistance and appealed to them to continue to assist Kampucheans in need, especially those along the Thai-Kampuchean border and in the holding centres in Thailand. It expressed appreciation for the Secretary-General's efforts in co-ordinating humanitarian relief assistance and monitoring its distribution and requested him to continue his efforts.

In the Assembly debate on the Kampuchea situation, India said it had continued its bilateral efforts to improve the situation in Kampuchea and would shortly send a mission with a view to expanding such co-operation. The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community (EC) members, said that, thanks to international efforts, the survival of the Kampucheans seemed assured; if food shortages recurred, EC members, which had contributed some 40 per cent of the international relief, might give more.

Economic assistance

The United Nations continued in 1981 to mobilize special economic assistance programmes for countries identified by the General Assembly as facing particularly onerous economic difficulties. Under mandates from the Assembly, the United Nations Secretariat's Unit for Special Economic Assistance Programmes helped to co-ordinate activities by the United Nations system and monitored other assistance efforts by Governments.

For most of the affected countries, multiagency missions in previous years had drawn up assistance programmes and identified individual projects, as guidance for multilateral and bilateral assistance. During 1981, similar missions, organized by the United Nations, again visited most of the countries to assess the situation and update the assistance programmes. They ascertained the level of assistance-bilateral and multilateral-received by each country, described ongoing projects and, in many cases, identified new projects proposed by the Government. The estimated cost of projects was given, for the information of potential donors. The missions' reports were annexed to a series of reports by the Secretary-General to the Assembly, which had requested this information in December 1980.

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Assembly in October a report containing replies by 19 United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, describing their assistance to the countries concerned.<sup>(2)</sup>

After receiving these reports, the Assembly, on 17 December, adopted resolutions on most of the countries, appealing to United Nations Member States and intergovernmental bodies to assist them, and requesting United Nations organizations and programmes to increase their assistance, co-operate with the Secretary-General in organizing a programme for each country, and report to him periodically on what they had done and spent for that purpose. The Secretary-General was asked to continue mobilizing resources, to maintain contact with States and organizations, and to arrange for a further review of each country's economic situation and of progress in organizing and implementing the programmes. He was to apprise the Economic and Social Council in 1982 of the status of the programmes and report to the Assembly later in 1982.

Preliminary information on the affected countries was provided to the Council on 14 July 1981 in an oral report by the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, Gordon K. Goundrey. The Council took note of this report without vote on 20 July, on an oral proposal by the President.<sup>(1)</sup> Updated information was given to the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 6 October by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes, Abdulrahim Abby Farah.

Of the 24 countries which were the object of special economic assistance programmes and related activities, 17 were in Africa (p. 497) and 5 were in Latin America and the Caribbean area (p. 525). The others were Lebanon (p. 528) and Tonga (p. 530).

Most financing for the projects identified in these programmes was provided bilaterally or through the regular assistance programmes of multilateral agencies. Five Governments contributed a total of $74,293 in 1981 to the United Nations Trust Fund for Special Economic Assistance Programmes (see table on p. 497). Expenditures by the Fund totalled $199,324 during the year, mostly for Uganda; a balance of $217,892 remained as at 31 December 1981.

During discussion of special economic assistance programmes by the Economic and Social Council in July, China observed that many newly independent countries were experiencing slow or even negative growth because of unfavourable economic conditions, prolonged exploitation under colonialism and unequal international economic relations; they therefore needed generous international assistance. The German Democratic Republic stated that many emergency situations were the result of colonial rule and neo-colonialism; accordingly, economic assistance to the affected countries should be supplemented by support for their struggle for economic independence and against colonialism.

Swaziland was critical of countries that refused to increase their contributions on the ground that they had not been involved in the colonization of Africa, as well as of those which only wished to help countries they regarded as sure friends.

Australia said it would like to see the Joint Co-ordinator's capacity for action strengthened without a corresponding increase in bureaucracy.

During the General Assembly's debate on special economic and disaster relief assistance, Guinea said that emergency international assistance would be more effective if the raw materials and exports of recipient countries commanded a fair price in international markets, if the loans given to them did not carry high interest charges which had to be paid quickly, and if the price of equipment and manufactures needed for development was not set arbitrarily. The German Democratic Republic thought it useful to examine whether United Nations organizations working in countries which were the subject of special economic assistance programmes might take over the tasks previously performed by special missions.

Africa

On 17 December 1981, the General Assembly added the Gambia (p. 511) and Liberia (p. 515) to the list of African countries which were the object of special economic assistance programmes. This raised the number of such States to 17, all south of the Sahara. In addition to these two West African countries, the beneficiaries were: in Central Africa, the Central African Republic (p. 502), Chad (p. 504), Equatorial Guinea (p. 509) and Sao Tome and Principe (p. 518); in East Africa, Djibouti (p. 507) and Uganda (p. 520). off the East African coast, the Comoros (p. 506); in southern Africa, Botswana (p. 499), Lesotho (p. 513), Mozambique (p. 516), Zambia (p. 522) and Zimbabwe (p. 524); and in West Africa, Benin (see below), Cape Verde (p. 500) and Guinea-Bissau (p. 512). Inter-agency missions organized by the United Nations to review the economic assistance programmes were sent during the year to all these countries except Uganda.

These programmes were in addition to assistance rendered to the drought-stricken countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region (p. 485) and East Africa (p. 489).

On 9 December, in a resolution on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU),<sup>(1)</sup> the Assembly reiterated its appreciation to the Secretary-General for organizing and mobilizing special economic assistance programmes for African States experiencing grave economic difficulties, particularly newly independent and front-line States (neighbouring South Africa). It called on the international community to participate in those programmes, requested the Secretary-General to keep OAU informed, and called on States and organizations to increase assistance to States stricken by natural or other disasters, particularly where displaced persons were involved.

In southern Africa, some of the reconstruction and rehabilitation projects identified in reports by previous United Nations review missions were incorporated into a subregional programme organized by the newly formed Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference. Composed of nine States of the area—Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe—the organization was emphasizing the development of transport and communications systems.

Benin

A $149-million assistance programme, directed primarily to strengthening Benin's physical and social infrastructure and its modest but growing industries, was recommended by an inter-agency mission sent to review the country's economic situation in pursuance of a December 1980 request by the General Assembly.<sup>(3)</sup> In its report,<sup>(2)</sup> based on a visit to the country from 4 to 12 May 1981, the mission identified 52 projects, classifying some of them as urgent and others as part of a medium- and long-term programme. Among the largest of the urgent projects were a national seed-multiplication plan, bridges on the Mono and Sazue rivers, potable water supply for villages and urban water development. While most of the projects were for economic development, some $21 million of them were designed to meet urgent food and health needs.

In his oral report to the Economic and Social Council in July, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes said that Benin was handicapped by a lack of known mineral resources, a very limited economic base, a chronic deficit in external trade, a deficiency of capital and an unfavourable climate.

The General Assembly, on 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> endorsed the mission's recommendations and urged Member States and organizations to respond at a donors' conference which Benin planned to organize in 1982, assisted by the United Nations Development Programme. It also urged them to provide food, medicines and essential equipment for hospitals and schools.

This action was taken by a resolution adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 24 November. The text was introduced by a Vice-Chairman following informal consultations on an essentially similar draft introduced by Algeria and sponsored by 43 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup>

Supporting the resolution, the Byelorussian SSR believed that assistance should be given to countries that had freed themselves from colonial dependency and were trying to introduce progressive changes in the interest of the entire population.

Special economic assistance to Benin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/88 of 5 December 1980, in which it appealed to the international community to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to Benin so as to help that country overcome its financial and economic difficulties,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, in which the Council appealed to all States and all appropriate international organizations, including the United Nations and the specialized agencies, to assist Benin,

Having heard the statement made by the representative of Benin before the Second Committee on 29 October 1981 describing his country's serious economic and financial situation,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, to which was annexed the report of the inter-agency mission which he dispatched to Benin in May 1981,

Noting from the report the serious economic and financial problems that confront Benin, which arise primarily from the weak and underdeveloped state of its economic and social infrastructure, its lack of financial and material resources and its chronic foreign trade deficit,

Noting further that Benin's terms of trade have deteriorated sharply and that the production of export crops has been adversely affected by drought,

Taking note of the recommended programme of assistance to Benin drawn up by the mission in consultation with the Government,

Noting further Benin's urgent need for international assistance in its health programmes, as well as for food aid,

Aware of the desire of the Government of Benin to organize, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, a round-table conference of providers of funds in 1982 to discuss the country's development needs and to consider ways and means of backing the Government in its efforts to meet those needs,

Bearing in mind that Benin is classified as one of the least developed countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he has taken to organize an international economic assistance programme for Benin;

2. Endorses fully the assessment and recommendations of the mission, contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Urgently reiterates its appeal to all Member States to provide ample and appropriate assistance, through bilateral and multilateral channels, wherever possible in the form of grants or concessionary loans, in order to enable Benin to implement fully the recommended special programme of economic assistance;

4. Urges Member States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and interregional governmental bodies, financial and development institutions and non-governmental organizations to support fully the efforts of the Government of Benin to mobilize funds for its special programme of economic assistance and, to this end, to respond generously to the needs of Benin at the forthcoming round-table conference;

5. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the international Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Benin, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

6. Calls upon regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial and development Institutions, to give urgent consideration to the establishment of a programme of assistance to Benin or, where one is already in existence, to the expansion of that programme;

7. Urges Member States and the relevant United Nations bodies-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities--to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of Benin to meet the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide, as appropriate, food, medicines and equipment for hospitals and schools;

8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Benin and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Benin;

(b) To ensure that the necessary financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to Benin and the mobilization of that assistance;

(c) To keep the situation in Benin under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other Intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for Benin;

(d) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Benin and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Botswana

Of the original 16 projects identified as required to meet the emergency and strategic needs of Botswana, 13 had been completed since the United Nations special economic assistance programme there began in 1977,<sup>(5)</sup> according to the inter-agency mission which visited the country from 10 to 13 March 1981. Sent in pursuance of a December 1980 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> the mission reported<sup>(2)</sup> that one of the projects completed in 1981, the oil storage programme, was to be expanded due to growth in estimated petroleum needs. The three projects remaining to be completed were: take-over of the rail system and fleet from Zimbabwe Railways; completion of the last 300 kilometres of the Botswana-Zambia road, at a cost of $31.3 million; and construction of a new national airport and the improvement of four airfields.

The mission also reviewed and updated 12 rehabilitation and development projects, related to rural rehabilitation, control of foot-and-mouth disease, and the development of transport and communications within the context of regional programmes of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (p. 497). It reported excellent progress during 1981 in implementing the last two groups of projects. However, progress had been slower on the rural projects, primarily concerned with the areas bordering Zimbabwe.

The Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, in his oral report to the Economic and Social Council in July, said an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease among Botswana cattle had been brought under control in November 1980 and the Government was taking intensive measures to prevent further outbreaks. The closure of some overseas markets to Botswana beef had resulted in serious economic loss. On 6 October, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the General Assembly's Second Committee that international assistance was needed for the economic rehabilitation of the border areas severely affected by the recent war.

The Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> endorsed the revised programme of assistance to Botswana contained in the mission's report, drawing particular attention to the transport and communications projects as well as those for rehabilitation of the border areas. It appealed to States and organizations to expand their assistance.

The Assembly adopted this text without vote, following its approval in like manner by the Second Committee on 24 November. The draft, submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations, was based on a similar text introduced by Mozambique and sponsored by 26 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(*)</sup>

Assistance to Botswana

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 403(1977) of 14 January 1977 and 406(1977) of 25 May 1977, concerning the complaint by the Government of Botswana regarding acts of aggression committed against its territory by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia,

Recalling a/so Security Council resolution 460(1979) of 21 December 1979, in which all Member States and specialized agencies were called upon to provide urgent assistance to Zimbabwe and the front-line States,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 32/97 of 13 December 1977, 33/130 of 19 December 1978 and 34/125 of 14 December 1979, in which the Assembly, inter alia, recognized the special economic hardship confronting Botswana as a result of diverting funds from current and planned development projects to effective arrangements for security against attacks and threats by Southern Rhodesia, and endorsed the assessments and recommendations contained in the notes of the Secretary-General dated 28 March 1977 and 26 October 1977 and in his reports of 7 July 1978 and 28 August 1979.

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 23 June 1981, to which was annexed the report of the mission which he sent to Botswana in response to General Assembly resolution 35/98 of 5 December 1980.

Noting the need of the Government of Botswana to rehabilitate and develop effective road, rail and air communications, both internally and with the rest of the world, in view of the uncertain political situation in the region, Botswana's vulnerability as a land-locked country and its dependence on externally controlled railway systems for the transport of its principal exports and imports,

Noting with appreciation Botswana's desire to establish its own railway system,

Noting a/so the urgent need to complete speedily the projects that have been identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Notes with satisfaction the efforts of Botswana in implementing its development projects;

2. Endorses fully the revised programme of assistance contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General and calls the attention of the international community to the outstanding needs for assistance identified therein;

3. Notes that, while the response from some Member States and international organizations to the appeals of the Secretary-General has been encouraging, there is an urgent need to maintain the flow of contributions to carry out the remainder of the emergency programme, the implementation of parts of which remains a critical necessity;

4. Draws the attention of States and international and intergovernmental organizations particularly to the projects in the field of transport and communications, as well as to the priority requirements to rehabilitate the border areas most adversely affected by the war, in accordance with the recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

5. Reiterates its appeal to all States and intergovernmental organizations to provide generous assistance to enable Botswana to carry out the remainder of its planned development projects, as well as those made necessary by the current political and economic situation;

6. Appeals to all Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Botswana to enable it to carry out its planned development programme without interruption;

7. Urges Member States and organizations which are already implementing or are negotiating assistance programmes for Botswana to expand them, wherever possible;

8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Bank and the

International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the assistance they are rendering to Botswana, for which the General Assembly has requested the Secretary-General to implement a special programme of economic assistance, and to report on the results of that assistance and on their decisions to the Secretary-General in time for consideration by the Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

9. Appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account established by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Botswana;

10. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Botswana;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Botswana;

(b) To keep the situation in Botswana under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Botswana;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Botswana and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Cape Verde

One of the least developed countries, Cape Verde continued to face serious economic problems following 12 consecutive years of drought, according to the economic review mission which visited the country from 10 to 13 March 1981<sup>(2)</sup> in pursuance of a December 1980 General Assembly request.<sup>(3)</sup> Irregular rainfall had caused an extensive crop failure and a serious food deficit estimated at 60,900 metric tons. As agricultural production did not cover basic food needs even in good years, it would be necessary to rely on commercial imports and food and financial aid for many years to come. Since independence in 1975, international assistance had been essential to Cape Verde's survival and continued assistance remained vital.

The mission reviewed 92 projects included in the special economic assistance programme and found that 24 had been fully financed, partial funding had been secured for 20 and no international support had been forthcoming for 35 projects; the Government had withdrawn 13 projects and identified 9 new ones for which it was seeking assistance. Among the new projects were integrated river-basin development ($5.5 million), establishment of a metal-works industry ($2.5 million), renovation of a ship-repair workshop ($1.2 million) and a land redistribution scheme ($7.5 million).

The Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, in his oral report to the Economic and Social Council in July, said the Government was anxious to conclude agreements on long-term food-aid commitments to meet the structural food deficit, in order to minimize the need for annual appeals for emergency assistance.

In October, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the General Assembly's Second Committee that, in view of the country's budget deficit and trade imbalance in 1981, private transfers and foreign aid, mainly grants, would be required. There had been no positive response to the Government's effort to make long-term arrangements on food.

Also addressing the Second Committee in October, Cape Verde said that its five-year plan (1982-1986) and its long-term objectives placed special emphasis on agriculture through exploration for underground water resources. This could lead to the development of 10,000 hectares of irrigated soil, thus permitting an increase in fruit, vegetable and livestock production. The strategy also envisaged an increase in export-oriented industrial activity and in shipping, civil aviation, tourism, the construction industry and communications. Financing of the five-year plan would require $253 million in international assistance, mainly in the form of grants and concessional loans.

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December<sup>(4)</sup> reiterating its appeal for international assistance for Cape Verde, invited donors to support the country's five-year plan and to contribute food and fodder assistance.

This resolution, submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee, was adopted without vote following similar approval by the Committee on 24 November. The draft replaced an earlier and essentially similar one, introduced by Benin and sponsored by 51 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup>

Assistance to Cape Verde

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/99 of 13 December 1977, 33/127 of 19 December 1978, 34/119 of 14 December 1979 and 35/104 of 5 December 1980, in which the international community was requested to provide an appropriate level of resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance to Cape Verde as envisaged in the reports of the Secretary-General,

Noting that Cape Verde, one of the least developed as well as the most seriously affected Island country, and a member of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, is in need of substantially increased assistance to overcome its economic backwardness,

Stressing the urgent need to implement the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, in which the programme of assistance to Cape Verde was endorsed,

Recognizing the strenuous efforts deployed by the Government and the people of Cape Verde in the process of their socio-economic development, despite existing constraints,

Recognising also the essential role of both short-term and long-term international assistance in the process of development of Cape Verde,

Gravely concerned that the expected harvest for 1982 has been lost as a result of the failure of the seasonal rains and the recurrence of drought,

Taking into account the results of the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, in particular the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, adopted on 14 September 1981,

Taking into account also the country programme of Cape Verde presented to the Conference, in which a five-year plan as well as long-term planning were delineated,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General, to which was annexed the report of the review mission which visited Cape Verde in implementation of General Assembly resolution 35/104.

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts deployed in the process of mobilizing resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance to Cape Verde;

2. Expresses its gratitude to States, international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations for their contribution to the programme of assistance to Cape Verde;

3. Calls the attention of the international community to table 10 in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General, which contains a statement of projects that have not yet been financed;

4. Urges States, international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations to extend and intensify substantially their assistance with a view to implementing the programme of assistance to Cape Verde as soon as possible;

5. Invites the international community, in particular donor countries, to take appropriate and urgent measures to support the realization of the Five-Year Plan of Cape Verde, in accordance with the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

6. Requests the organizations, organs and bodies of the United Nations system to continue and to increase their assistance to Cape Verde, to co-operate with the Secretary-General in his efforts to mobilize resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance and to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the measures they have taken and the resources they have made available for assistance to that country;

7. Calls upon the international community to continue to contribute generously to all appeals for food and fodder assistance made by the Government of Cape Verde or on its behalf by the specialized agencies and the other competent organizations of the United Nations system to help it cope with the critical situation in the country;

8. Draws once again the attention of the International community to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/99, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Cape Verde;

9. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to continue, through their governing bodies, to consider the special needs of Cape Verde and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for implementing the programme of development assistance to Cape Verde;

(b) To keep the situation in Cape Verde under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Cape Verde;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Cape Verde and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Central African Republic

An acute state of financial imbalance existed in the Central African Republic, which had a substantial budget deficit ($47.6 million) in 1980, a $200-million public debt and a large trade deficit, according to a United Nations mission which visited the country from 26 January to 3 February 1981 in response to a request made by the General Assembly in December 1980.<sup>(3)</sup> In its report,<sup>(2)</sup> the mission assessed the country's economic situation and relief and rehabilitation needs, and recommended a programme of international assistance. It found a critical need for capital investment in virtually all economic sectors.

The mission recommended international action to alleviate the financial crisis, including budgetary assistance, public debt moratoria, and food and commodity aid. It also proposed a $149-million relief and development programme consisting of immediate humanitarian aid ($11 million), rehabilitation and reconstruction ($51 million), and medium- and long-term development ($86 million). Thirty-six projects were identified, primarily in four sectors: agriculture and livestock ($99 million); health ($18 million); education and training ($17 million); and infrastructure, transport and communications ($11 million). The largest projects were for integrated development in areas producing cotton and coffee, important export crops.

The Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, in his oral report to the Economic and Social Council in July, stated that the Central African Republic found it impossible to raise additional loans, even though virtually every sector was in critical need of capital. United Nations bodies were providing assistance but the needs were far beyond their means. Speaking to the General Assembly's Second Committee in October, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes said the recent drought in the country would mean reduced output of coffee and cotton in 1981.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Central African Republic, addressing the Assembly on 7 October, said that external assistance was essential so that his country could carry out the minimum emergency economic programme set by the Military Committee for National Reconstruction. The situation had deteriorated as a result of the inadequacy of financial means and the failure to carry out the programme established by the previous regime. A representative of the Central African Republic later told the Second Committee that his Government invited investment from all friendly countries to make improved use of agricultural and mineral resources through processing and assembly industries.

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> endorsed the mission's recommendations and called on Member States and organizations to expand their assistance, particularly to meet critical needs for food, medicines and hospital and school equipment, and to meet the emergency needs of people in drought-stricken areas. The Secretary-General was requested to organize a special emergency assistance programme with regard to food and health.

This resolution was adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The draft, submitted by a Vice-Chairman, was based on informal consultations on an earlier draft, introduced by Senegal and sponsored by 51 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup> The adopted resolution included a paragraph not in the earlier draft, by which the Assembly noted with satisfaction the efforts by the Government and people for national reconstruction, rehabilitation and development.

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/737) without vote, 24 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.97), based on Informal consultations on 51-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.39); agenda item 72 (b).

Assistance for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the Central African Republic

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolution 35/87 of 5 December 1980 in which it affirmed the urgent need for international action to assist the Government of the Central African Republic in its reconstruction, rehabilitation and development efforts, Noting the statement made by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Central African Republic to the General Assembly on 7 October 1981, in which he described the serious economic and financial problems of the country and affirmed that the situation had deteriorated owing to the insufficiency of financial resources and that external assistance was essential.

Noting further the statement made by the representative of the Central African Republic before the Second Committee on 29 October 1981 to the effect that the response of the international community to the urgent appeal of the General Assembly had not been adequate to meet the needs of the situation.

Bearing in mind that the Central African Republic is landlocked and is classified as one of the least developed countries,

Recalling that the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, adopted unanimously by the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, calls for increased aid to these countries,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General, to which was annexed the report of the inter-agency mission dispatched to the Central African Republic to consult with the Government on the additional assistance needed for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the country,

Noting that the budgetary situation in the Central African Republic, according to the report, makes it impossible for the Government to embark on a programme of reconstruction and rehabilitation without sufficient external financial aid,

Particularly concerned that the Government of the Central African Republic is unable to provide the population with adequate health, educational and other essential social and public services because of an acute shortage of financial and material resources,

1. Notes with satisfaction the efforts exerted by the Government and people of the Central African Republic for national reconstruction, rehabilitation and development;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report on the economic situation of the Central African Republic and the additional assistance required by that country for its reconstruction, rehabilitation and development;

3. Endorses fully the assessment and recommendations of the mission contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Urgently reiterates its appeal to all Member States to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the Central African Republic;

5. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization-to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to the Central African Republic, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

6. Calls upon regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial institutions-In particular the European Economic Community, the European Development Fund, the African Development Bank, the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries Fund for International Development, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the Kuwaiti Fund and the Abu Dhabi Fund-to give urgent consideration to the establishment of a programme of assistance to the Central African Republic or, where one is already in existence, to the expansion of that programme;

7. Urges Member States and the relevant United Nations bodies-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization-to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of the Central African Republic to meet the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide, as appropriate, food, medicines and essential equipment for hospitals and schools, as well as to meet the emergency needs of the population in the drought-stricken areas of the country;

8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of the Central African Republic and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To organize a special emergency assistance programme with regard to food and health, especially medicaments, vaccines, hospital equipment, generating sets for field hospitals, water pumps and food products, in order to help the vulnerable population, whose steadily deteriorating situation is becoming a matter of increasingly serious concern;

(b) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Central African Republic;

(c) To ensure that the necessary financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to the Central African Republic and the mobilization of that assistance;

(d) To keep the situation in the Central African Republic under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Central African Republic;

(e) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of the Central African Republic and of the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Chad

In compliance with two resolutions adopted by the General Assembly on 5 December 1980,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General sent two missions to Chad in 1981, the first to determine urgent humanitarian needs and the second to ascertain needs for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development.

The first mission (5-10 March), reviewing humanitarian needs, reported<sup>(2)</sup> that, as a consequence of civil war in 1979 and 1980, most buildings in the capital, N'Djamena, had been damaged; there was no regular water supply, banking services or communications within the country or to the outside world, and most schools had been closed for three years. Rural areas which the mission visited had been less dramatically affected. Nevertheless, the disruption of normal agricultural activities, the suspension of commerce and the lack of administration and communications had left the people of Chad in dire need.

The mission outlined a programme for immediate emergency aid, with the following objectives: to provide a ferry service across the Chari River at N'Djamena; to generate electricity around the clock; to supply water in the capital and maintain and repair wells and pumps in rural areas; to re-establish telecommunications; to distribute 12,000 tons of food grains and 600 tons of seed; to improve health and medical services; to immunize livestock and provide veterinary services; to refurbish schools and restart certain technical training programmes; to reopen N'Djamena airport to civilian traffic; and to reactivate the economy and resume United Nations programmes, suspended during the hostilities.

Following the first mission to Chad, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) reopened its field office at N'Djamena on 1 May.

In July, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, in his oral report to the Economic and Social Council, said that, while humanitarian needs had been given high priority, effective relief operations would be greatly handicapped unless assistance was forthcoming to improve transport and communications.

The representative of Chad told the General Assembly in October that, thanks to international assistance, famine and epidemics had been avoided, displaced persons and refugees had found shelter, and water and electrical distribution systems, N'Djamena airport and other means of communication were being rebuilt. In the framework of a general amnesty granted by the head of State, and thanks to assistance by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and by neighbouring States, citizens who had left areas of combat were returning to their country by the thousands. Chad hoped the international community would contribute to its recovery.

The second mission to Chad (26 October-9 November),<sup>(3)</sup> concerned with longer-term development assistance, reported that large-scale displacement of people, the destruction of physical structures, an almost total lack of maintenance of basic infrastructure, the diversion of resources for military expenditure, the interruption of education and health services, and the dislocation of Government machinery, all associated with the war, had sharply reduced production and adversely affected economic and social conditions. The budget deficit for the last six months of 1981 exceeded expected revenue by 471 per cent. By the end of 1979, the public debt had reached $171.7 million and there was a yearly service obligation of $18.4 million, representing about a quarter of export revenue. Gross international monetary reserves at the end of May 1981 amounted to $4.7 million; that low level, representing about three weeks of imports, handicapped efforts to restore normal economic activity.

The mission reported that some of the emergency measures recommended by the March mission had been or were being implemented. Transport services across the Chari River had been restored by a ferry repaired with UNDP financing; N'Djamena had round-the-clock electricity service, but on a precarious basis; a project to supply potable water to the capital would be reactivated by UNDP as soon as a sub-contractor was found; UNDP was undertaking a preliminary study on re-establishing telecommunications links with the outside world; and N'Djamena airport had been reopened to civilian traffic.

The mission proposed a two- to three-year, $226-million reconstruction and rehabilitation programme calling for investments and technical assistance to rebuild basic physical infrastructure, to mobilize and support reconstruction and redevelopment efforts within the private sector, to strengthen institutional infrastructure in the social sectors, and to restore Government functions so that it could collect revenues and operate the public sector efficiently. The bulk of the financing would be for human settlements (33 per cent), transport (24 per cent) and industry (18 per cent). Included among the 58 recommended projects were brick production plants ($14 million), a cement plant ($15 million), rehabilitation of 2,500 kilometres of roads ($35 million), reconstruction of public buildings ($45 million), urban development ($16 million) and rehabilitation of the N'Djamena central hospital ($10 million). Also recommended, as an extension of the emergency aid programme, was an acceleration of food and medical aid and the supply of an additional 50,000 tons of food grains for the 12 months starting in November.

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December adopted without vote,<sup>(5)</sup> appealed for international assistance to enable the Chad Government to aid people affected by the civil war, as well as emergency assistance for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development. The Secretary-General was requested to organize a pledging conference for Chad at Nairobi, Kenya, in March 1982 and an international programme of financial, technical and material assistance. He was asked to contact the Government with a view to appointing a resident co-ordinator who would also be his special representative for reconstruction, rehabilitation, development and emergency relief operations in Chad.

The request to the Secretary-General to organize a pledging conference, along with a paragraph urging Member States and organizations to consider taking part and contributing generously, was added to the resolution on an amendment by Chad and Kenya, adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 112 to none, with 22 abstentions. The amendments replaced a paragraph by which the Assembly would have urged States and organizations in a position to provide assistance to consider taking part in a pledging conference for Chad.

The text without these amendments, submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee, was approved by that Committee without vote on 24 November, on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier draft introduced by Benin and sponsored by 28 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup> The two texts differed with regard to the official to be responsible for operations in Chad: whereas the original text referred to him as a special representative of the Secretary-General, the Vice-Chairman's text stated that he should be a resident co-ordinator who would also be a special representative.

The Federal Republic of Germany said its Government, which had recently announced a $20-million contribution for financial and technical aid to Chad, felt that March 1982 was too early to hold another pledging conference and would not be able to make an additional pledge then.

Assistance to Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/120 of 14 December 1979 and 35/92 A and B of 5 December 1980 on reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Chad and emergency humanitarian assistance to that country,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General on emergency humanitarian assistance to Chad,

Noting with satisfaction that a mission was dispatched to Chad by the Secretary-General to review with the Chad authorities the needs of the country, in accordance with paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 35/92 A,

Deeply concerned about the massive destruction of property and the serious damage to the economic and social infrastructure of Chad during the past fifteen years,

Affirming the urgent need for financial and material support from the international community to the Government of Chad in its efforts for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the country and to meet immediate humanitarian needs,

Bearing in mind the concern expressed by Member States about the deterioration of the socio-economic situation as a result of the fighting in Chad and the interest they have shown in its speedy return to normal conditions of life and in its reconstruction and development,

Considering that Chad is in a particularly disadvantageous position as a least developed, land-locked and drought-stricken country,

Noting the urgent appeal made to the international community by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in resolution AHG/Res.102(XVIII) adopted at its eighteenth ordinary session, held at Nairobi from 24 to 27 June 1981, and by the Chairman of the delegation of Chad in the General Assembly on 7 October 1981,

Aware of the need to take urgent steps to mobilize financial and material assistance for the reconstruction of Chad,

1. Commends and encourages the efforts exerted by the Government and people of Chad for national reconstruction, rehabilitation and development and for assistance to the victims of the civil war;

2. Expresses its gratitude to Member States, institutions and agencies that have provided assistance to Chad but regrets that all the emergency humanitarian needs listed in the report of the Secretary-General have not yet been met;

3. Appeals to all Member States, governmental and non-governmental organizations, and the specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme and the World Health Organisation, to provide the necessary assistance, as a matter of urgency, to the Government of Chad to enable it to come to the aid of the people affected by the civil war, in conformity with the report of the Secretary-General:

4. Urgently appeals to all Member States, the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system and international financial and economic institutions to provide generous emergency aid to Chad, through bilateral or multi-lateral channels, to meet its reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs, in conformity with the report of the review mission that visited Chad from 26 October to 6 November 1981;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to organize a pledging conference at Nairobi in the first half of March 1982, in close co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and the Government of Chad, to help Chad to carry out its reconstruction programme;

6. Urges Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to consider taking part in the International Conference on Assistance to Chad and to contribute generously in support of the objective of the Conference;

7. Requests the appropriate programmes and organizations of the United Nations-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund-to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help Chad;

8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring the special needs of Chad to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

9. Appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account for Chad which has been established under the auspices of the United Nations Trust Fund for Special Economic Assistance Programmes for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Chad;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To organize an international programme of financial, technical and material assistance for Chad so as to enable it to meet its short-term and long-term reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs;

(b) To have the report of the review mission to Chad disseminated as widely as possible;

(c) To contact the Government of Chad with a view to the urgent appointment of a resident co-ordinator who will also be his special representative for reconstruction, rehabilitation, development and emergency relief operations in Chad;

(d) To ensure that appropriate financial and budgetary arrangements are made for the establishment of an effective international programme of assistance for Chad and for mobilizing that assistance;

(e) To keep the situation in Chad under review and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982 and to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Comoros

The already formidable difficulties facing the Comoros had been compounded during the past year by the world economic situation, according to the review mission sent by the Secretary-General in pursuance of a December 1980 request by the General Assembly.<sup>(3)</sup> After visiting the country from 29 May to 10 June 1981, the mission reported<sup>(2)</sup> that foreign exchange earnings from three principal export crops-vanilla, ylang-ylang and copra-had fallen sharply, increasing the trade deficit as the value of imports remained unchanged between 1979 and 1980. Given prevailing farming techniques, the amount of land suitable for agriculture or pasture fell far short of what was needed to produce the food required by the population. Foreign aid covered 42 per cent of the public expenditure deficit in 1980 and the share was expected to reach 54 per cent in 1981. The entire capital budget was financed by foreign loans and grants.

The Government had adopted six main priorities for economic and social development: self-sufficiency in food, improved communications for the islands, energy production and water supply, health and population policy, training, and physical and housing planning. Within the framework of those priorities, the Government and the mission had selected 19 projects to be executed during 1981-1985, costing a total of $48 million. Emphasis was to be on transport and communications equipment ($19 million), including the construction of telephone exchanges; agriculture and livestock ($11 million); and energy and water ($10 million).

In his oral report to the Economic and Social Council in July, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes said that, despite the Government's efforts and substantial international assistance, the Comoros economic situation had not improved. The Government's main concern remained its balance-of-payments difficulties. The accumulation of foreign debt and the prospect of increased debt-servicing made it essential for foreign aid, wherever possible, to be in the form of grants rather than loans.

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> noted with concern that assistance had fallen far short of the Comoros urgent requirements. It reiterated its appeal for international financial, technical and material aid to help the Comoros overcome, in particular, its budgetary and balance-of-payments deficits, and urged the international community to take account of the priority the Government gave to infrastructure, transport and telecommunications projects.

This resolution was adopted by the Assembly without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The draft was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an essentially similar draft, introduced by Benin and sponsored by 39 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(5)</sup>

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/737) without vote. 24 November (meeting 43): draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.84). based on informal consultations on 39-nation draft (AX.2/36/L.53): agenda item 72 (b).

Assistance to the Comoros

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on assistance to the Comoros, particularly resolution 31/42 of 1 December 1976, in which it urgently appealed to the international community to assist the Comoros in an effective and continuous manner so as to enable it to face successfully the critical situation resulting from the economic difficulties experienced by that newly independent country,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General, to which was annexed the report of the review mission which he sent to the Comoros,

Taking note of the special problems confronting the Comoros as a developing island country and as one of the least developed countries,

Noting the priority which the Government of the Comoros has assigned to the questions of infrastructure, transport and telecommunications, Noting further the grave budgetary and balance-of-payments problems facing the Comoros.

-Recalling its resolution 35/97 of 5 December 1980, in which it reiterated its appeal to the international community to assist the Comoros in overcoming its financial and economic difficulties,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for the Comoros;

2. Notes with satisfaction the response by various Member States and organizations to its appeal and that of the Secretary-General for assistance to finance, in whole or in part, a number of projects identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 3 November 1977 and in subsequent reports;

3. Notes with concern, however, that the assistance thus far provided continues to fall short of the country's urgent requirements and that a substantial amount of assistance is still urgently required to carry out the projects identified in the annexes to the reports of the Secretary-General;

4. Reiterates its appeal to Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to the Comoros to help it overcome its financial and economic difficulties, in particular its budgetary and balance-of-payments deficits;

5. Urges Member States to give special consideration to the inclusion of the Comoros in their bilateral and multilateral programmes of development assistance and, in cases where assistance programmes for the Comoros are already in force, to expand them, wherever possible;

6. Also urges the international community to take fully into account, in providing assistance, the priority which the Comoros gives to projects in the fields of infrastructure, transport and telecommunications;

7. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of the Comoros and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

8. Appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/92 of 13 December 1977, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to the Comoros;

9. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to increase their current programmes of assistance to the Comoros, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist that country;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Comoros;

(b) To keep the situation in the Comoros under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Comoros;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of the Comoros and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Djibouti

Although the gross domestic product (GDP) of Djibouti had almost tripled in eight years and the balance of payments was in surplus, the limited local production capacity and heavy reliance on imports of most basic goods, including food, meant that the country would continue for some years to require external aid for its development requirements. This was the conclusion of the multiagency mission to review economic assistance to Djibouti, which visited that country from 13 to 18 September 1981 in pursuance of a December 1980 request by the General Assembly.<sup>(3)</sup> In its report,<sup>(2)</sup> the mission noted that a round-table conference of donors, held in Djibouti from 23 to 27 February, had served as an initial step towards the preparation of the first national development plan, and a further meeting was expected in the near future to consider specific investment proposals requiring external financing.

The mission reviewed 69 projects in the special economic assistance programme for Djibouti and found that 38 had been fully funded, 4 others had been partially financed and the remaining 27 still required funding. A total of $144 million had been secured for these projects, of which the international community had provided $118 million. Money was sought for projects to improve Djibouti port, the service economy and transport links, and to help the poor through better facilities and services, as well as for pilot projects, studies and surveys, and technical assistance and training. The mission identified two new projects requiring assistance: urban road repair, and a study to determine the availability of building materials such as plaster and the feasibility of production for local use.

In his oral report to the Economic and Social Council in July, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes stated that the pattern of drought and flood in Djibouti had created serious economic problems. Early in 1981, more than a quarter of the rural population was concentrated in or was visiting relief camps for the distribution of food and water. It was imperative to organize additional economic activities in such areas as agriculture, fisheries and water supply, to expand vocational training and to promote the development of industries in the capital.

Addressing the General Assembly's Second Committee in October, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes said Djibouti's grave economic problems since its independence in 1977 were due to lack of natural resources, the negligible volume of exports and the need to import almost all essentials, including food. Those problems had been exacerbated by a sharp decline in foreign exchange earnings from the operation of its port and by an influx of refugees from neighbouring areas which had been estimated at 15 per cent of the population.

Djibouti informed the Committee that it proposed to vitalize its economy by modernizing its service sector, the most developed sector, and by promoting and developing industry and agriculture.

By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(5)</sup> the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the review mission and renewed its appeal to Member States, United Nations organizations and international economic and financial institutions to assist Djibouti, whenever possible in the form of grants. It also asked that Djibouti's eligibility for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries be considered by the Committee for Development Planning (p. 412).

This resolution was adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a 40-nation draft, introduced by Benin but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup>

In other action, the Assembly called on 16 December for humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti.<sup>(4)</sup> In addition, Djibouti was included among six East African countries for which the Assembly, on 17 December,<sup>(6)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to mobilize international assistance for drought-stricken areas (p. 491).

Assistance to Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/93 of 13 December 1977, 33/132 of 19 December 1978 and 34/124 of 14 December 1979, in which it, inter alia, expressed its deep concern at the serious economic situation prevailing in Djibouti and strongly appealed to Member States and to the international institutions concerned to offer effective and sustained assistance to that country to enable it to deal with the critical situation arising from its economic difficulties and requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti,

Recalling also its resolution 35/89 of 5 December 1980, in which it drew the attention of the international community to the critical economic situation still confronting Djibouti and to the list of urgent short-term and long-term projects submitted by the Government of Djibouti.

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General, to which was annexed the report of the mission which he sent to Djibouti in response to General Assembly resolution 35/89.

Taking note of the critical economic situation of Djibouti and the list of urgent and priority projects, formulated by the Government, that require international assistance,

Noting with concern that the harsh effects of the prolonged drought continue to persist and place serious strains on the fragile economic, social and administrative infrastructure of the country,

Noting the conclusion of the Committee for Development Planning at its seventeenth session, in response to the application of Djibouti for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries, that Djibouti did not satisfy the existing criteria for inclusion in that list.

Noting the statement made before the Second Committee on 6 October 1981 by the Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes, in which he emphasized the importance of priority projects for diversification of the economy and the urgency of providing increased financial, material and technical assistance to Djibouti.

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to organize an international economic assistance programme for Djibouti;

2. Endorses fully the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Notes with appreciation the assistance already provided or pledged to Djibouti by Member States and organizations of the United Nations system;

4. Draws the attention of the international community to the critical economic situation confronting Djibouti, to the assistance immediately needed for the victims of the drought and to the list of urgent short-term and long-term projects submitted by the Government of Djibouti for financial assistance as described in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

5. Requests the Economic and Social Council to invite the Committee for Development Planning, in the light of the new data and information provided by the Government of Djibouti, to consider, on the basis of the existing criteria, its eligibility for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries;

6. Renews its appeal to Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and international economic and financial institutions to provide Djibouti with ample and appropriate assistance, bilaterally and multilaterally, whenever possible in the form of grants, to enable Djibouti to cope with its special economic hardship;

7. Calls upon the international community to contribute generously to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Djibouti;

8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Djibouti and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

9. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Djibouti, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Djibouti;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

(b) To continue to ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to mobilize resources and to co-ordinate international assistance to Djibouti;

(c) To keep the situation in Djibouti under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Djibouti;

(d) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Djibouti and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Equatorial Guinea

During the 1970s, the per capita GDP of Equatorial Guinea at current prices was estimated to have fallen by more than 30 per cent, and at constant prices by nearly 80 per cent, according to the United Nations mission which visited that country from 21 to 26 September 1981 to review the special economic assistance programme in pursuance of a December 1980 request by the General Assembly.<sup>(3)</sup> The mission reported<sup>(2)</sup> that the decline was attributed principally to lower production in agriculture, forestry and fisheries, where the value of output fell by 42 per cent at current prices between 1970 and 1979. The adverse trade balance was expected to continue. Meanwhile, the country's foreign debt obligations at the end of 1980 amounted to $37.2 million, and debt-servicing obligations were estimated at about $3 million annually for 1982 and 1983. The budget deficit in 1980 might have been as high as $8.4 million, and although the projection for 1981 showed a small surplus of $330,000, the projected revenue increases depended heavily on increased cocoa and timber exports.

Of the 57 economic assistance projects apart from food assistance identified by a United Nations mission in 1980,<sup>(5)</sup> 4 had been fully funded, 9 partially funded and 1 withdrawn; of the remainder, 26 had been modified or elaborated. For its programme of rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, the Government had provisionally identified 145 projects for submission to a donors' conference planned for March 1982. These were chiefly in the sectors of transport, water supply and sanitation, health and agriculture. The Government's estimate of immediate food requirements totalled 9,520 metric tons, valued at $5 million; from mid-1980 to mid-1981, the World Food Programme had given support valued at $1 million.

In July, in his oral report to the Economic and Social Council, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes said the new Government of Equatorial Guinea, established in 1979, had inherited no foreign exchange reserves and no administrative structure which would facilitate the generation of local revenue; practically no businesses were functioning and no stocks of any kind were available in the country. Schools, hospitals and other basic institutions were either closed or providing inadequate services. Nevertheless, with the exception of Spain, and to a lesser extent France and Gabon, little bilateral assistance had been provided.

Addressing the General Assembly on 28 September, the First Vice-President of the Supreme Military Council and Commissioner for External Affairs of Equatorial Guinea stated that the Government, faced with the task of reconstructing the economy, wished to diversify agriculture so as to achieve self-sufficiency and expand activities in the fields of livestock, industry, fishing and other sectors of production.

In October, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Assembly's Second Committee that Equatorial Guinea had experienced a serious decline in cocoa and coffee production, affecting the balance of payments; coffee production had fallen from 8,000 tons in 1967 to 150 tons in 1980.

The Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> urged Member States to help meet Equatorial Guinea's economic needs and requested United Nations organizations to provide humanitarian assistance, including food, medicines and hospital and school equipment. It also requested that the Committee for Development Planning be invited to consider the country's eligibility for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries (p. 412).

The Assembly adopted this resolution without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier draft introduced by Egypt, sponsored by 34 nations and revised by them but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup> As adopted, the resolution omitted two paragraphs in the revised version of the earlier draft, expressing appreciation for the mission's report and endorsing its recommendations. In addition, where the earlier draft would have had the Assembly request the Secretary-General to assist the Government in preparing national income and population statistics, the approved text had the Assembly note that the United Nations Development Programme would assist the Government in that task.

Assistance for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Equatorial Guinea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/105 of 5 December 1980, in which, inter alia, it recognized the need for the adoption of special measures of assistance to enable Equatorial Guinea to rebuild its economy and to restore to normal the social and public services of the country, and drew the attention of the international community to the critical social and economic situation confronting Equatorial Guinea and to the list of urgent short-term and long-term projects required by the Government to carry out its programme of rehabilitation and reconstruction,

Taking note of the address delivered by the First Vice-President of the Supreme Military Council and Commissioner for External Affairs of Equatorial Guinea to the General Assembly on 28 September 1981, in which he described the grave social and economic problems of his country and expressed the hope that the international community would contribute generously towards satisfying the needs of Equatorial Guinea at the conference of donors to be held at the beginning of 1982.

Noting further that there are no official national income statistics available for Equatorial Guinea and that, since there has been no official census since 1964, official population figures will be forthcoming only after the census proposed for the second quarter of 1982.

Noting from the report of the Secretary-General, to which is annexed the report of the review mission dispatched to Equatorial Guinea, that the economic and financial situation in that country remains grave, that the tight budgetary situation and the large external trade deficit constitute a constraint on the Government's ability to embark on a programme of reconstruction and rehabilitation and that external financial assistance is essential if the Government is to provide the population with health, education and other essential social and public services,

1. Urgently reiterates its appeal to all Member States to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, towards satisfying the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs of Equatorial Guinea;

2. Requests the Economic and Social Council to invite the Committee for Development Planning, in the light of the new data and information provided by the Government of Equatorial Guinea, to consider, on the basis of existing criteria, the eligibility of that country for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries;

3. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Bank, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities-to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Equatorial Guinea, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance, to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country and to provide all possible assistance to meet the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide food, medicines and essential equipment for hospitals and schools;

4. Calls upon regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial and development institutions, to give urgent consideration to the establishment of a programme of assistance to Equatorial Guinea or, where one is already in existence, to the expansion of that programme, and to contribute generously towards satisfying the needs of Equatorial Guinea at the forthcoming conference of donors;

5. Notes that the United Nations Development Programme will assist the Government of Equatorial Guinea in preparing new official national income statistics and new population figures so that the Government can bring these data to the attention of the Committee for Development Planning in order to enable the Committee to re-examine the request of Equatorial Guinea for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries on the basis of the existing criteria and those new statistics;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Equatorial Guinea;

(b) To ensure that the necessary financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to Equatorial Guinea and the mobilization of that assistance;

(c) To keep the situation in Equatorial Guinea under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for Equatorial Guinea;

(d) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Equatorial Guinea and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Gambia

Expressing concern about the extensive destruction of life and property resulting from recent events in the Gambia, the General Assembly, in a resolution adopted without vote on 17 December 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> appealed to Member States and organizations to contribute towards the country's rehabilitation and reconstruction. It requested United Nations organizations to increase their assistance and asked the Secretary-General to organize a special programme of financial, technical and material assistance so that the Gambia could meet its urgent rehabilitation and reconstruction needs. He was also requested to dispatch a mission to the Gambia to assess needs.

This resolution was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 24 November. The draft was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier and essentially similar draft, introduced by Benin on behalf of the African Group and sponsored by 34 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) informed the Committee in November that UNDRO had organized a multiagency mission to assess rehabilitation and emergency assistance needs in the Gambia, and that States and United Nations organizations had contributed more than $12 million (p. 483).

Assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Gambia

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the extensive destruction of life and property as well as the severe damage to infrastructure which were inflicted on the Gambia as the result of recent events.

Noting that the Gambia is a least developed country with acute economic and social problems arising from its weak economic infrastructure,

Noting further that the Gambia also suffers from many of the serious problems common to countries of the Sahelian region, notably drought,

Convinced that the Government of the Gambia needs urgent international assistance to rehabilitate and reconstruct the damaged economy of the country,

1. Notes with satisfaction the efforts exerted by the Government and people of the Gambia for national rehabilitation and reconstruction:

2. Urgently appeals to all Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as international development and financial institutions, to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Gambia;

3. Calls upon regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, as well as international development and financial institutions, to give urgent consideration to the establishment of a programme of assistance for the Gambia:

4. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development—to increase their current and future programmes of assistance to the Gambia, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist that country;

5. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of the Gambia and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To organize a special emergency assistance programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Gambia to enable it to meet its urgent needs for rehabilitation and reconstruction;

(b) To ensure that the necessary financial and budgetary arrangements are made to organize an international programme of assistance to the Gambia and to mobilize that assistance;

(c) To dispatch a mission to the Gambia with a view to holding consultations with the Government on the additional assistance which it needs for rehabilitation and reconstruction and to communicate the report of the mission to the international community;

(d) To apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the assistance being provided and of the progress made in mobilizing assistance to the Gambia;

(e) To keep the situation in the Gambia under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Guinea-Bissau

Insufficient rainfall in Guinea-Bissau during the 1980/1981 agricultural year, as in the previous three years, had led to crop failures and a structural food deficit, an economic review mission reported following a visit to the country from 6 to 10 April 1981.<sup>(2)</sup> Sent in pursuance of a December 1980 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(4)</sup> the mission found that crops were on average only about 30 per cent of normal. As a result of the accumulated food deficit, food needs for 1981 were estimated at 100,000 metric tons; additional pledges were needed, as the country was unable to afford commercial purchases because of the shortage of foreign exchange and the accumulated arrears in loan payments. The balance-of-payments deficit had steadily increased and by 1981 the value of exports was only 20 per cent of the value of imports. The investment budget was almost totally funded by foreign aid.

Of the 89 previously elaborated projects reviewed by the mission, 24 had been fully financed, 17 had been partially financed, 39 had received no support and 9 had been withdrawn. Thirteen new agricultural, transport, health and industrial projects had been identified by the Government.

On 8 May, the Economic and Social Council added Guinea-Bissau to the United Nations list of the least developed countries.<sup>(3)</sup>

In July, in his oral report to the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations Joint Coordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes said the Government of Guinea-Bissau had recognized that concentration on project assistance had created major problems as a result of its inability to finance either the domestic or foreign exchange components of development projects. For that reason it had formulated a basic intersector support programme to meet its essential rehabilitation and development requirements.

By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the review mission, called on Member States and organizations to grant food aid, and renewed its appeal for international economic assistance.

This resolution was adopted without vote, after the Second Committee approved it in similar fashion on 24 November. The text, submitted by a Vice-Chairman, emerged from informal consultations based on an earlier and essentially similar draft, introduced by Benin and sponsored by 57 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(6)</sup>

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/737) without vote. 24 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.86), based on informal consultations on 57-nation draft (A/C.2/36/L.59); agenda item 72 (b).

Special economic assistance to Guinea-Bissau

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolution 35/95 of 5 December 1980, in which it reiterated its appeal to the international community to provide continuous financial, material and technical assistance to Guinea-Bissau to help it overcome its financial and economic difficulties and to permit the implementation of the projects and programmes recommended by the Secretary-General in his report of 21 August 1980 submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 34/121 of 14 December 1979,

Recalling also its resolution 3339(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, in which it invited Member States to provide economic assistance to the then newly independent State of Guinea-Bissau, and its resolutions 32/100 of 13 December 1977 and 33/124 of 19 December 1978, in which it, inter alia, expressed deep concern at the serious economic situation in Guinea-Bissau and appealed to the international community to provide financial and economic assistance to that country,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 31 July 1981, to which was annexed the report of the mission which he sent to Guinea-Bissau in response to General Assembly resolution 35/95.

Recalling that Guinea-Bissau is among the thirty-one least developed countries,

Noting with concern that Guinea-Bissau continues to be beset by a wide range of economic and financial difficulties,

Noting that the Government of Guinea-Bissau, by the application of a policy of economic austerity, was able to reduce the budget deficit in 1980 to a level substantially lower than in the two preceding years, although the country will continue to be dependent on external sources for public capital expenditure,

Also noting with concern the chronic deficit in the balance of payments, the substantial increase in loans and the inordinately low level of foreign exchange reserves,

Noting that Guinea-Bissau again experienced a poor harvest in 1980, owing to irregular and inadequate rainfall, and that the country needs emergency food aid,

Further noting with concern that the response of the international community to date has not been commensurate with the needs of the situation and that many of the projects approved for the special programme of economic assistance by the General Assembly at its thirty-third session have not yet been financed,

Taking note of the results of the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, particularly of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Guinea-Bissau;

2. Endorses fully the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General and draws the attention of the international community to the requirements for assistance for the projects and programmes identified therein;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those States and organizations that have provided assistance to Guinea-Bissau in response to appeals by the General Assembly and the Secretary-General;

4. Calls upon Member States and the international organizations concerned to be generous in granting Guinea-Bissau the food aid it needs;

5. Renews its urgent appeal to Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide continuous financial, material and technical assistance to Guinea-Bissau to help it to overcome its financial and economic difficulties and to permit the implementation of the projects and programmes identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/100, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Guinea-Bissau;

7. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Guinea-Bissau and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

8. Requests the specialized agencies and other competent bodies of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Guinea-Bissau;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Guinea-Bissau;

(b) To keep the situation in Guinea-Bissau under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for Guinea-Bissau;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Guinea-Bissau and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Lesotho

A continuing balance-of-payments deficit marred the economy of Lesotho, with exports representing only 11.6 per cent of the value of imports despite a substantial rise in diamond exports. This was a finding of the economic review mission which visited Lesotho from 16 to 20 March 1981 in pursuance of a December 1980 request by the General Assembly.<sup>(3)</sup> The Secretary-General sent the mission to review the economic situation and international assistance to that country. The mission reported<sup>(2)</sup> that real gross national product had declined by 3 per cent between 1978/1979 and 1979/1980, due mainly to declines in agriculture, caused by drought, and in construction, retarded by bottle-necks. The 1981/1982 development budget had risen by 62 per cent over the previous year, with much of the focus on infrastructure. The Government planned to reduce the country's dependency on South Africa by creating diversified employment opportunities in Lesotho and achieving self-sufficiency in food.

Based on information supplied by the Government, the mission reported that international assistance provided or pledged in relation to the special economic assistance programme amounted to $202,583,000 as of March 1981, or $42,473,000 more than in May 1980. As a result, a substantial part of the programme had been implemented. Out of 43 projects fully or partially funded, 8 of the 22 projects in the emergency component had been completed, as had 3 in the accelerated development component. External assistance was still needed to implement fully the road construction programme, to support the wool and mohair industry, and to complete agricultural, health, educational and small industrial projects. Additional food aid was also sought to enable the Government to expand food-for-work programmes, providing employment on development projects in road construction, afforestation, soil conservation and self-help activities.

In his oral report to the Economic and Social Council in July, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes said the Lesotho Government would especially like, through food-for-work programmes, to add 1,000 workers to the force of 7,750 engaged in strengthening the feeder-road system. In October, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the General Assembly's Second Committee that international assistance would accelerate Lesotho's development and make it less vulnerable to external economic pressures.

The Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> endorsed the assessments of the mission and noted the requirements of Lesotho to carry out the rest of its development programme, implement projects necessitated by the political situation in the region and lessen its dependence on South Africa. Reiterating its appeal for international assistance, the Assembly called on Member States to assist Lesotho in achieving greater self-sufficiency in food production, ensuring a regular supply of oil and developing its road and air communications. The Secretary-General was requested to assist the Government in integrating women more fully into development efforts and to report on the type of assistance required to establish labour-intensive projects so that migrant workers returning from South Africa could be absorbed into the Lesotho economy.

This resolution was adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier and essentially similar draft, introduced by Benin on behalf of the African Group and sponsored by 21 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup>

Assistance to Lesotho

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 402(1976) of 22 December 1976, in which the Council, inter alia, expressed concern at the serious situation created by South Africa's closure of certain border posts between South Africa and Lesotho aimed at coercing Lesotho into according recognition to the bantustan of the Transkei,

Commending the decision of the Government of Lesotho not to recognize the Transkei, In compliance with United Nations decisions, particularly General Assembly resolution 31/6 A of 26 October 1976,

Fully aware that the decision of the Government of Lesotho not to recognize the Transkei has imposed a special economic burden upon its people,

Noting the priority which the Government of Lesotho accords to raising levels of food production through increased productivity, thus lessening the country's dependency on South Africa for food imports,

Aware that the high prices paid by Lesotho for its imports of petroleum products as a result of the oil embargo on South Africa have become a serious impediment to the development of the country,

Taking account of Lesotho's need for a national network of roads, both for its planned social and economic development and to lessen its dependence on the South African network, to reach various regions of the country affected by the imposition of travel restrictions by South Africa,

Taking note of Lesotho's special problems associated with the employment of large numbers of its able-bodied men in South Africa,

Taking note also of the priority which the Government of Lesotho has accorded to the problem of absorbing into the economy the young generation, as well as migrant workers returning from South Africa,

Welcoming the action taken by the Government of Lesotho to make more effective use of women in the development process by promoting their participation in the economic, social and cultural life of the country,

Taking account also of Lesotho's position as a land-locked, least developed and most seriously affected country,

Recalling its resolution 32/98, in which it, inter alia, recognized that the continuing influx of refugees from South Africa imposed an additional burden on Lesotho,

13. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring further to the attention of their governing bodies the special needs of Lesotho and to report to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1982 on the steps they have taken;

(e) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Lesotho and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Liberia

On 28 September 1981, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Liberia, in a statement to the General Assembly, said the Government which had come to power in April 1980 had inherited a bankrupt treasury with an overdraft of $11 million and an external debt of more than $700 million. The country was beset by a 90 per cent illiteracy rate, cultural alienation, an inadequate health delivery system, a 53 per cent unemployment rate, and corruption bequeathed by the former regime. However, the new authorities had rescheduled the external debt, formulated a development plan and, with the assistance of the International Monetary Fund, worked out a stabilization programme to set the basis for economic recovery.

In a letter of 20 October to the President of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(2)</sup> Liberia presented economic and social statistics in support of a request that it be included in the United Nations list of the least developed countries (LDCs) (p. 412).

By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly urgently appealed for international assistance for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Liberia. It urged Member States and United Nations organizations to provide food, medicines and hospital and school equipment, and to continue economic assistance until the situation returned to normal. The Secretary-General was requested to organize an international programme of financial, technical and material assistance for the country's reconstruction, rehabilitation and development, and to dispatch a mission to Liberia to consult the Government on its needs. The Assembly asked that the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) be invited to consider Liberia's eligibility for inclusion in the list of LDCs.

This resolution was adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier draft introduced by Gabon, sponsored by 28 nations and revised by its sponsors but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup> The adopted text differed from the revised 28-nation draft in requesting assistance to Liberia until the situation returned to normal rather than requesting a special measure of assistance pending examination of its situation by CDP. The text also incorporated an oral amendment by the Vice-Chairman who submitted it, revising the title from "Assistance to Liberia" to "Assistance for the development of Liberia".

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/737) without vote, 24 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairmen (A/C.2/36/L.99), based on Informal consultations on 26-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.38/Rev.1), orally revised by Vice-Chairman; agenda item 72 (b).

Assistance for the development of Liberia

The General Assembly.

Having examined the letter dated 20 October 1981 from the Permanent Representative of Liberia to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Economic and Social Council, analysing the critical condition of the economy of Liberia,

Deeply concerned about the weak and underdeveloped state of the economic and social infrastructure of Liberia, which is a serious obstacle to the economic development of the country and to the raising of the living standards of its population,

Noting the statements made by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Liberia to the General Assembly on 26 September 1980 and on 28 September 1981, in which he described the unsatisfactory conditions prevailing in his country, including extremely high rates of illiteracy and infant mortality and unacceptably low levels of income among the vast majority of the population,

Affirming the urgent need for international action to assist the Government of Liberia in its efforts for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the country,

1. Urgently appeals to all Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and international financial and development institutions to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Liberia:

2. Requests the Secretary-General to organize an international programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Liberia to enable it to meet its long-term needs with respect to reconstruction, rehabilitation and development:

3. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund-to expand their programmes of assistance to Liberia, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country:

4. Calls upon regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, as well as the international financial and development institutions, to give urgent consideration to the establishment of a programme of assistance to Liberia or, where one is already in existence, to the expansion of that programme:

5. Urges Member States and relevant United Nations bodies-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities-to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of Liberia to meet the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide, as appropriate, food, medicines and essential equipment for hospitals and schools;

6. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Liberia and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

7. Invites the Government of Liberia to provide the Committee for Development Planning, on the basis of the existing criteria, with up-to-date statistical data and information pertinent to the examination of the country's economic situation, with a view to considering the possibility of its inclusion in the list of the least developed countries;

8. Requests the Economic and Social Council to invite the Committee for Development Planning, in the light of the new data and information provided by the Government of Liberia, to consider, on the basis of the existing criteria, the eligibility of that country for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries;

9. Requests Member States and the organizations of the United Nations system to accord Liberia, in view of its critical economic situation, assistance that is adequate to the needs of the country until the situation returns to normal;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To dispatch a mission to Liberia with a view to holding consultations with the Government on the additional assistance which it needs for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the country and to communicate the report of the mission to the international community, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial arrangements are made for the organization of an effective international programme of assistance to Liberia and for the mobilization of international assistance;

(c) To inform the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the assistance granted to Liberia;

(d) To keep the situation in Liberia under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Mozambique

While the economic situation of Mozambique had improved, a United Nations economic mission reported in 1981, the balance-of-payments deficit would remain for the year at the level of the past five years, when it had ranged between $150 million and $200 million annually. Visiting the country from 18 to 25 June in pursuance of a December 1980 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> the mission reported<sup>(2)</sup> that imports would be almost double the value of exports in 1981. The deficit was increasingly covered by external support and indebtedness, the latter amounting to $445 million by the end of 1980. Following small national budget surpluses in the previous two years, a $77-million deficit was expected for 1981. Mozambique expected to finance about 19 per cent of the 1981 State investment budget of $664 million from external assistance.

The mission identified $811 million in transport and telecommunications projects, including $336 million for port development, $286 million for railways, $116 million for roads, $65 million for a national microwave telecommunications system and $8 million for airport lighting and navigational aids. In addition, despite normal rains during the 1980/1981 season, the effects of earlier droughts had not been eliminated and Mozambique would need 215,000 metric tons of grain in the 12 months beginning 1 May 1981.

In his oral report to the Economic and Social Council in July, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes said the independence of Zimbabwe in April 1980 had enabled Mozambique to make significant economic progress. Agricultural production, particularly for export, had increased in 1980 and prospects for 1981 were encouraging, while several industries had recorded increases in output of 10 to 15 per cent in 1980 and were projected to have even higher growth rates in 1981. However, there was still a foreign exchange shortage, food production was insufficient for local needs and transit traffic from Zimbabwe through Mozambican ports had not materialized to the extent expected.

In the Council's discussion, the German Democratic Republic stated that it had sent harvesting combines and tractors to Mozambique, installed an electrical transmission line and transformer stations, and assisted in restoring and modernizing coal mining and processing.

Mozambique told the General Assembly's Second Committee in October that it badly needed international assistance to rehabilitate its transport system, which was of vital importance to Botswana, Malawi, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe. A Transport and Communications Commission of Southern Africa, established at Maputo, Mozambique, by the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (p. 497), was responsible for planning regional transport and communications projects and co-ordinating activities so as to maximize the efficiency of the regional system.

The Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> endorsed the recommendations of the mission and appealed for assistance in foodstuffs, medicines and technical co-operation for disaster preparedness and prevention. Expressing regret that assistance had fallen short of needs, it urged

Member States and organizations to strengthen their aid programmes and provide assistance in the form of grants wherever possible.

This resolution was adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier and essentially similar draft, introduced by Benin and sponsored by 42 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup>

In the Committee's debate on economic assistance, the USSR observed that it had begun geological prospecting work and the construction of agricultural machinery repair plants in Mozambique, and Soviet experts worked in many sectors of the Mozambican economy.

Assistance to Mozambique

The General Assembly,

Recalling the decision of the Government of Mozambique to implement mandatory sanctions against the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968,

Recognising the substantial economic sacrifices made by Mozambique in the implementation of its decision to enforce United Nations sanctions and to close its borders with Southern Rhodesia,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976, in which the Council appealed to all States to provide, and requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize with immediate effect, financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to carry out its economic development programme normally and to enhance its capacity to implement fully the United Nations mandatory sanctions,

Noting with deep concern the loss of life and destruction of such essential infrastructure as roads, railways, bridges, petroleum facilities, electricity supply, schools and hospitals identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 16 August 1979,

Recalling further its resolutions 31/43 of 1 December 1976, 32/95 of 13 December 1977, 33/126 of 19 December 1978, 34/129 of 14 December 1979 and 35/99 of 5 December 1980, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously with assistance to Mozambique.

Noting that the independence of Zimbabwe provides both an opportunity and a challenge for the international community, particularly for those neighbouring States whose economies have been so closely linked to that country,

Bearing in mind the fact that the drought which affected six out of the ten provinces of Mozambique has attained the dramatic proportions of a natural calamity,

Having examined the document on the drought in Mozambique, which contains an assessment of the immediate requirements for urgent assistance from the international community,

Noting that a mission of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme and the World Meteorological Organization visited Mozambique in July 1980 in order to assess the emergency food situation in terms of the partial loss of cereals due to the drought which had devastated part of the country,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 21 August 1981 and noting with concern that the economic and financial position of that country remains grave and beset by budgetary and balance-of-payments deficits and that, in the absence of increased international assistance, the Government will have to reduce major imports that are essential for its development programmes and for restoring industrial production to pre-sanctions levels,

1. Strongly endorses the appeals made by the Security Council and the Secretary-General for international assistance to Mozambique;

2. Endorses fully the assessment and major recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 21 August 1981;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he has taken to organise an international economic assistance programme for Mozambique;

4. Expresses its appreciation also for the assistance provided thus far to Mozambique by various States and regional and international organizations;

5. Regrets, however, that the total assistance provided to date falls far short of Mozambique's pressing needs;

6. Draws the attention of the international community to the additional financial, economic and material assistance identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General as urgently required by Mozambique;

7. Urges Member States and organizations which are already implementing or are negotiating assistance programmes for Mozambique to strengthen them, wherever possible;

8. Appeals to the international community to provide the urgently needed external assistance in foodstuffs and medicines and technical co-operation for disaster preparedness and prevention;

9. Calls upon Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organisations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Mozambique, wherever possible in the form of grants, and urges them to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Mozambique in their programmes of development assistance, if it is not already included;

10. Appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account of Mozambique established by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channeling of contributions to Mozambique;

11. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Mozambique and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

12. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund-to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Mozambique and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance, and to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Mozambique;

13. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique;

(b) To keep the situation in Mozambique under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions and other bodies concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Mozambique;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Mozambique and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Sao Tome and Principe

A United Nations economic mission to Sao Tome and Principe reported in 1981<sup>(2)</sup> that the country's gross domestic product had grown in real terms by approximately 8 per cent a year between 1976 and 1979, when it reached $22 million. However, a sharp decline in the price of cocoa, the commodity responsible for more than 90 per cent of export earnings, had caused those earnings to fall from $26 million in 1979 to $16 million in 1980, even though cocoa exports had risen from 6,630 metric tons in 1978 to 7,335 tons in 1980. After visiting the country from 30 March to 3 April 1981 in pursuance of a December 1980 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> the mission also found that continued drought and other difficulties, including an outbreak of African swine-pest in 1979 that had made it necessary to kill all the pigs, had increased dependence on food imports, which were expected to reach 34 per cent of total imports in 1981.

Of 52 projects in the special economic assistance programme reviewed by the mission, 10 had been fully funded, 6 partially funded and 14 withdrawn; 7 new projects had been added. The new projects, for which no cost estimates were available, involved construction of a national library, a teacher-training school, a central warehouse, health facilities, a new commercial port at Sao Tome and fire/crash facilities at the Sao Tome airport, as well as the provision of audio-visual equipment.

In his oral report to the Economic and Social Council in July, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes stated that, because of low export earnings, increased prices for its imports and the high import component of development projects, Sao Tome and Principe was not in a position to finance the remaining portion of the special economic assistance programme. Only a few countries were providing it with bilateral assistance.

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> endorsed the recommendations of the mission and expressed regret that assistance had fallen short of needs. It renewed its appeal for international assistance so that the Government could launch an effective economic and social development programme. It also requested that the Committee for Development Planning be invited to consider Sao Tome and Principe for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries (p. 412).

This resolution was adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman based on informal consultations on an earlier and essentially similar draft,<sup>(1)</sup> introduced by Benin and sponsored by 28 nations but subsequently withdrawn.

The United States, associating itself with the consensus on the resolution, disagreed with the Secretary-General's statement of financial implications indicating that an additional $11,900 might be needed to implement it.

Assistance to Sao Tome and Principe

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/187 of 21 December 1976, in which, inter alia, it expressed deep concern at the serious economic and social situation in Sao Tome and Principe as a result of the total lack of infrastructure for development and appealed urgently to the international community to assist the Government of Sao Tome and Principe to enable it to establish the necessary social and economic infrastructure for development.

Recalling also its resolutions 32/96 of 13 December 1977, 33/125 of 19 December 1978, 34/131 of 14 December 1979 and 35/93 of 5 December 1980, in which It reiterated its appeal to the international community to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Sao Tome and Principe,

Bearing in mind its resolution 31/156 of 21 December 1976, in which it urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of developing island countries, and its resolution 32/185 of 19 December 1977, in which it urged all organizations in the United Nations system to implement, within their respective spheres of competence, appropriate specific action in favour of developing island countries, as well as its resolution 34/205 of 19 December 1979, which sets out a specific action programme in favour of developing island countries,

Recalling its resolutions 32/160 of 19 December 1977 and 33/197 of 29 January 1979 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Having considered the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Committee for Development Planning on its seventeenth session concerning identification of the least developed countries,

Noting the renewed request of Sao Tome and Principe that its exceptional economic circumstances should again be reviewed by the Committee for Development Planning,

Taking account of the statement made by the representative of Sao Tome and Principe before the Second Committee on 29 October 1981 to the effect that there are no recent official national income statistics available for Sao Tome and Principe and that available published data are out of date and do not reflect the current situation in that country,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on economic assistance to Sao Tome and Principe, to which was annexed the report of the review mission dispatched to that country,

Aware that the economic and social development of Sao Tome and Principe has been seriously hindered not only by inadequate health, educational and housing facilities but also by inadequate infrastructure, and that urgent improvement in these sectors is a prerequisite for the country's future progress,

Taking note of the current development priorities of the Government of Sao Tome and Principe, notably in agriculture and livestock, fisheries, manufacture, mining, transport and other infrastructure, as well as in education, training, health and housing, Noting that substantial International assistance is needed to improve the infrastructure in sea, air and land transport in Sao Tome and Principe.

Noting also paragraph 2 of decision 80/30 of 26 June 1980 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Noting with concern that a large number of the projects and programmes identified in the report of the Secretary-General have not yet been financed,

Concerned about the conclusion of the report that, unless there is a significant increase in the volume of international assistance, the Government of Sao Tome and Principe will not be able to finance a development programme,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance to Sao Tome and Principe;

2. Endorses fully the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Expresses its appreciation to Member States and international organizations for the assistance provided to Sao Tome and Principe, both in food aid and development assistance;

4. Regrets, however, that the assistance so far provided falls far short of the needs of Sao Tome and Principe;

5. Also regrets that no resources have been provided to Sao Tome and Principe for the implementation of the action programme in favour of developing island countries;

6. Renews its appeal to Member States, regional and inter-regional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Sao Tome and Principe to permit the implementation of the projects and programmes identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General, as well as that of the action programme in favour of developing island countries, to enable the Government to launch an effective programme of economic and social development;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to assist the Government of Sao Tome and Principe to prepare new official national income statistics on the country so that the Government can bring these data to the attention of the Committee for Development Planning in order that it might, on the basis of existing criteria and of these new statistics, re-examine the request of Sao Tome and Principe for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries;

8. Requests the Economic and Social Council to invite the Committee for Development Planning, in the light of new data and information provided by the Government of Sao Tome and Principe, to consider, on the basis of the existing criteria, the eligibility of that country for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries;

9. Requests Member States and the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to accord Sao Tome and Principe special measures of assistance similar to those called for in paragraph 4 of its resolution 34/123 of 14 December 1979;

10. Urges the United Nations Development Programme, the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to respond favourably to requests from the Government of Sao Tome and Principe for technical assistance to help in formulating development projects and to assist in the implementation of its development programme;

11. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Sao Tome and Principe, and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

12. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Sao Tome and Principe;

13. Appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account which was established by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/96, for the purpose of facilitating the channeling of contributions to Sao Tome and Principe;

14. Requests the Secretary-General;

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Sao Tome and Principe;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to Sao Tome and Principe and the mobilization of assistance;

(c) To keep the situation in Sao Tome and Principe under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Sao Tome and Principe;

(d) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Sao Tome and Principe and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Uganda

Civil disturbances that had followed the overthrow of the Uganda Government in 1979 receded by the end of 1981, permitting the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to shift the emphasis of its activities in that country from short-term rehabilitation and reconstruction to longer-term institution-building and pre-investment.

According to an April 1982 report by the Administrator of UNDP to the Programme's Governing Council,<sup>(3)</sup> during the first part of 1981 the UNDP Resident Representative continued to be responsible for co-ordination of relief activities under a Relief Co-ordination Unit established by the Secretary-General. In March, when the Administrator visited the country to consult with the new President on development priorities and technical co-operation needs,<sup>(2)</sup> public order had not been restored in much of the country, and drought and disruption of transport and marketing facilities had led to serious food shortages in some areas. By August the situation had improved and good harvests had reduced but not eliminated the need for food relief. For the year as a whole, more than 60 per cent of UNDP programme expenditure had been for rehabilitation and reconstruction.

On 24 June,<sup>(6)</sup> the Governing Council, referring to what it called the special situation faced by Uganda due to mismanagement of the economy during the 1970s, compounded by war damages and severe drought, requested the Administrator to assist Uganda in its rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts and in the organization of a donor conference to mobilize international support for those efforts.

In July, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Economic and Social Council in his oral report that the Uganda Government had undertaken major economic reforms as a prelude to reconstruction and development. It had raised producer prices for its major export crops—coffee, tea and cotton—and had allowed the national currency to float as a means of correcting price distortions, a black market and smuggling. However, more than 250,000 drought-stricken people in the north depended on international food aid, and hundreds of thousands had fled following fighting in the West Nile region. United Nations agencies had delivered food and other relief supplies to the affected areas. Essential needs had generally been met and starvation had been prevented but it had not been possible to provide sufficient supplies for supplementary feeding or to organize acceptable levels of health services or adequate water supplies. Nor had it been possible to send an economic mission to prepare a reconstruction programme, as envisaged by the General Assembly in December 1980.<sup>(4)</sup>

A multiagency mission concerned with the drought in five East African countries reported on conditions in Uganda following a visit there in September (p. 494).

The Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the General Assembly's Second Committee on 6 October that Uganda had concluded an agreement with the International Monetary Fund which would help it to overcome the foreign exchange crisis and had arranged for a reconstruction loan from the World Bank. Moreover, the special programme of humanitarian assistance had been terminated owing to improved conditions. Nevertheless, Uganda's economic situation remained critical and the assistance it had received was inadequate.

Uganda informed the Committee that its development programme for the 1980s sought to make all regions self-sufficient in food, achieve an average growth rate of 6.4 per cent in the gross national product, raise life expectancy from 53 to 55 years, double the proportion of the population with access to potable water, increase primary education enrolment to 85 per cent, raise the literacy rate to 75 per cent and link at least 60 per cent of the district headquarters with hard-surface roads.

The Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(5)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to dispatch a mission to Uganda to consult on rehabilitation, reconstruction and development needs. It invited the international community to make resources available to implement Uganda's 10-year development plan and to contribute to the country's development needs and emergency requirements, and requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his humanitarian assistance programmes (p. 1032).

This resolution was adopted without vote following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier and essentially similar draft, introduced by Benin and sponsored by 26 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(6)</sup>

Assistance to Uganda

The General Assembly,

Recalling Its resolution 34/122 of 14 December 1979, in which it, inter alia, expressed its deep concern at the tragic loss of life, widespread destruction of property and severe damage to the economic and social infrastructure of Uganda and urgently appealed to the international community to contribute generously to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs of the country, and its resolution 35/103 of 5 December 1980,

Taking into account the ten-year development plan of Uganda presented to the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries adopted by the Conference, Recognizing that Uganda is not only land-locked but also one of the least developed and most seriously affected countries.

Recalling the donors' meeting on assistance to Uganda, held in Paris from 8 to 8 November 1979 under the auspices of the World Bank,

Noting with concern that severe drought has destroyed the livelihood of several hundred thousand people and that urgent assistance is required for the rehabilitation of essential community facilities and services in the affected areas,

Noting the appeals of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for emergency humanitarian assistance to Uganda,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 35/103,

Reaffirming the urgent need for international action to assist the Government of Uganda in its efforts for national reconstruction, rehabilitation and development and for resettling the large numbers of returning refugees and displaced persons into the permanent fabric of society,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Uganda;

2. Further expresses its appreciation to those States and organizations that have provided assistance to Uganda;

3. Requests once again the Secretary-General to dispatch a mission to Uganda to consult with the Government on its most urgent reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs and to submit the report of that mission, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982, to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made for the organization of an effective international programme of assistance to Uganda and for the mobilization of international assistance;

5. Invites the international community, in particular the organizations of the United Nations system and donor countries, to make available the necessary resources to implement the ten-year development plan for Uganda, in accordance with the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

6. Urgently renews its appeal to all Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and international economic and financial institutions to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs of Uganda and to its emergency requirements;

7. Urges Member States and international economic and financial institutions once again to respond generously to the appeal made at the donors' meeting held in Paris;

8. Renews its appeal to the international community to contribute to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Uganda;

9. Invites the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and the World Bank-to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Uganda and to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist that country;

10. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and the World Bank to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Uganda and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

11. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his humanitarian assistance programmes in Uganda;

12. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Uganda;

(b) To keep the situation in Uganda under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Uganda.

Zambia

The poor performance of the Zambian economy in the 1970s continued in 1980, according to the report of a mission which visited there from 25 to 30 June 1981<sup>(2)</sup> in response to a December 1980 request by the General Assembly.<sup>(3)</sup> The balance of payments had deteriorated sharply in 1980, partly due to high petroleum and maize prices, and external payments arrears had risen to almost $600 million. Economic prospects were not significantly better in 1981, but an upturn was expected towards the end of the year. Although Zambia had had to import 207,000 metric tons of maize in 1979/1980, a small surplus of 90,000 tons was expected in 1980/1981. Though still suffering from the effects of its closure of the border with Southern Rhodesia between 1973 and 1979 in response to United Nations sanctions, Zambia had good prospects of economic recovery and reconstruction, the mission concluded.

Investments of about $130 million were needed in the transport sector and a 10-year government plan envisaged an investment of $466 million in agriculture. For rehabilitation in border areas, $4 million was needed for water projects, and funding was also required to replace police and customs speedboats, vehicles and utility equipment. Important sections of the road network needed repair, land-mines had to be removed and damaged bridges reconstructed. The mission listed 28 projects previously identified for which assistance was still being sought and 59 new ones for which the Government was seeking international support. Some of the major new projects called for improving traditional agriculture, research and development for grain legumes and livestock, training at the Zambia Institute of Animal Health, strengthening the Prescribed Minerals and Materials Commission, rural water-supply development, civil aviation training and airport development, and improvement of science and mathematics teaching in schools.

In July, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, in his oral report to the Economic and Social Council, stated that by early 1981 the Zambian economy had begun to lose ground. The balance-of-payments deficit and the budget deficit had increased and external payment arrears had again begun to accumulate. Despite the short-term setback, however, a foundation for economic recovery appeared to have been established during the 1978 and 1979 stabilization programme.

Speaking to the General Assembly's Second Committee on 6 October, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes said it was expected that 70 per cent of the investment called for in Zambia's three-year investment programme would be financed through grants and soft loans, since the Zambian economy could not service inflows of funds on commercial terms.

Zambia told the Committee that it needed more external resources for economic development. Its gross domestic product had declined considerably since 1973, with mining, manufacturing, construction and agriculture showing a downward trend. Despite its agricultural recovery in 1980/1981, the country was not self-sufficient in all agricultural products. Government programmes to increase food production called for massive external financial assistance. Zambia also had to develop and maintain transport routes to the outside world as well as agricultural feeder routes.

By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the mission, drew the attention of the international community to the additional assistance required by Zambia, particularly for transport, and called on Member States and organizations to assist. It also requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue assistance to refugees in the country (p. 1032).

This resolution was adopted without vote following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The draft was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier and essentially similar draft, introduced by Benin and sponsored by 37 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(5)</sup>

In the Committee's debate on economic assistance, the USSR said Soviet doctors and teachers had been sent to Zambia to provide professional training, and the Soviet Red Cross and Red Crescent had sent drugs, food and industrial products.

Assistance to Zambia

The General Assembly,

Recalling previous United Nations resolutions concerning the question of assistance to Zambia, in particular Security Council resolution 329(1973) of 10 March 1973 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 2012(LXI) of 3 August 1976 and 2093(LXIII) of 26 July 1977, which commended the decision of the Government of Zambia in 1968 to implement progressively United Nations mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968.

Recalling also Security Council resolution 455(1979) of 23 November 1979 and General Assembly resolution 33/131 of 19 December 1978, in which the Assembly strongly endorsed the appeals made by the Council and the Secretary-General for International assistance to Zambia,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General, to which was annexed the report of the review mission which he sent to Zambia in response to General Assembly resolution 35/94 of 5 December 1980,

Regretting that the international community has not thus far provided assistance to Zambia on a scale commensurate with the costs, as called for in Security Council resolutions 253(1968) of 29 May 1968, 277(1970) of 18 March 1970 and 329(1973) of 10 March 1973,

1. Endorses the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance provided thus far to Zambia by various States and regional and international organizations;

3. Draws the attention of the international community to the additional financial, economic and material assistance required by Zambia, as identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General, and to the particular need for assistance in the transport sector;

4. Calls upon Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Zambia, wherever possible in the form of grants, and urges them to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Zambia in their programmes of bilateral or multilateral development assistance, if it is not already included;

5. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund-to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Zambia, in order to enable it to carry out its planned development projects without interruption;

6. Further requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Zambia;

7. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Zambia and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

8. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees in Zambia, and urges Member States and the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to carry out those programmes, as indicated in the Secretary-General's report;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Zambia;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made for continuing the organization of the International programme of assistance to Zambia and the mobilization of resources;

(c) To keep the economic situation in Zambia under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Zambia;

(d) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Zambia and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Zimbabwe

Following its independence in April 1980, Zimbabwe experienced a minor economic boom, particularly in manufacturing, according to an economic mission which visited the country from 11 to 18 June 1981<sup>(2)</sup> in response to a December 1980 request by the General Assembly.<sup>(3)</sup> However, Zimbabwe's balance-of-payments deficit on current account had risen from $112 million in 1979 to $265 million in 1980, and the situation was likely to remain adverse because of declining prices of gold (a major export) and because the congested rail and road system was unable to handle all potential exports, especially of maize. The central Government's budget deficit had reached $772 million in 1980/1981 and was expected to reach $997 million in 1981/1982.

Substantial international assistance was required to rebuild and develop Zimbabwe's rural areas, repair roads and bridges, and develop water resources, the mission reported. In March 1981, the Government had convened the Zimbabwe Conference on Reconstruction and Development, at which it had presented to international donors its external resource needs amounting to $2,816 million for reconstruction and development through 1984, including $1,878 million for rural development and the remainder for the foreign exchange component of an infrastructure and modern sector investment programme. As of three months after the Conference, more than two thirds of the needed amount had been pledged by donors, with $936 million remaining uncovered.

In July, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, in his oral report to the Economic and Social Council, stated that Zimbabwe was facing a serious shortage of foreign exchange and a large and growing government deficit. Gross foreign exchange reserves amounted to less than three months' imports, and the rate of inflation, around 15 per cent a year, was increasing. Additional locomotives were urgently needed to enable Zimbabwe to move its record export crops to port, including 1.2 million tons of surplus maize.

Zimbabwe told the General Assembly's Second Committee in November that its economic performance had been spectacular. The 10 per cent growth in real terms in 1980 indicated the success of the Government's rehabilitation, reconstruction and resettlement programmes. Its "Growth with equity" policy, announced in February, had laid the foundation for a revolutionary society based on socialist, democratic and egalitarian principles. However, because of a concerted policy by South Africa to sabotage the Zimbabwean economy, exports and imports were not moving efficiently, causing a severe strain on the country's foreign exchange.

By a resolution of 17 December, 4, the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the mission and emphasized that the social and economic reconstruction of Zimbabwe would require massive external assistance.

This resolution was adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 November. The draft was submitted by a Vice-Chairman based on informal consultations on an earlier draft, introduced by Mozambique and sponsored by 23 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(4)</sup>

Assistance to Zimbabwe

The General Assembly,

Recalling the statement made before the General Assembly at its eleventh special session, on 26 August 1980, by the Prime Minister of Zimbabwe, in which he outlined his Government's economic development priorities and invited the international community to render assistance in dealing with serious economic and social problems in Zimbabwe,

Recalling Security Council resolution 460(1979) of 21 December 1979 and General Assembly resolution 35/100 of 5 December 1980, in which the international community was called upon to provide urgent assistance for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Zimbabwe,

Taking into account the economic policy statement of Zimbabwe, "Growth with equity", on the basis of which a three-year plan was prepared, outlining short-term, medium-term and long-term national measures being undertaken to establish an egalitarian socialist society under conditions of growth with equity,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Zimbabwe, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 35/100.

1. Endorses the assessments and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Zimbabwe;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States and regional and international organizations that have extended economic assistance to Zimbabwe through bilateral and multilateral arrangements;

3. Emphasizes that the social and economic reconstruction of Zimbabwe is an on going exercise that will continue to require a massive injection of external assistance;

4. Invites appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organisation-to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the urgent and special needs of Zimbabwe and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1982;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Zimbabwe;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of international assistance to Zimbabwe;

(c) To keep the situation in Zimbabwe under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Zimbabwe;

(d) To arrange for a review of the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Latin America and the Caribbean area

Multiagency missions organized by the United Nations went in September 1981 to four Caribbean island States-Dominica (see below), Grenada (p. 526), Saint Lucia (p. 527) and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines (p. 528) -that had been struck by hurricanes in 1980 and 1981. The missions assessed the damage and the state of the islands' economies, and identified reconstruction and development projects deserving of international assistance. In addition, the General Assembly urged States to continue contributing to the reconstruction and development of Nicaragua (p. 526).

Dominica

The economy of Dominica had not recovered from the effects of disasters and events which occurred in 1979 and 1980, the United Nations Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes stated in an oral report to the Economic and Social Council on 14 July 1981. He referred to devastation caused by hurricanes "David", "Frederic" and "Allen", and an outbreak of leaf-spot disease affecting the main export crop, bananas. Those disasters had followed a long period of increased unemployment, deteriorating public finances and serious economic recession. Although immediate international humanitarian assistance had been provided, the Government was again faced with a substantial deficit. Pledges of further assistance were insufficient to enable the country to carry out a normal development programme and to recover from the effects of the previous years' disasters.

By a resolution of 20 July,<sup>(2)</sup> adopted without vote, the Council urged Member States and organizations to continue to assist in the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of Dominica. It requested the Secretary-General to keep the Council and the General Assembly informed. The resolution was introduced by Barbados and also sponsored by the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Brazil, Ethiopia, Kenya and Mexico.

The United States, supporting the resolution, said it was particularly interested in disaster reconstruction in the Caribbean and had provided $5.7 million in assistance to Dominica in 1980, including food and other farm products and construction personnel. In the Council's discussion, Barbados appealed for international assistance for Dominica, noting that the economic development and social stability of the island were at stake.

A multiagency economic mission visited Dominica from 22 to 27 September in response to a December 1980 request by the General Assembly.<sup>(3)</sup> The mission reported, in a document which the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> that the country had faced increasing economic and social difficulties over the previous decade, well before hurricane "David" wrought extensive damage in 1979. These included a fall in agricultural production leading to declining real output between 1970 and 1975, deteriorating infrastructure, social and political instability, and high unemployment. Recovery since the hurricanes had been slow, with real gross domestic product in 1981 not significantly different from the 1976 level, and a current account deficit on international transactions that had doubled in 1979 and again in 1980. The Government had had to concentrate almost exclusively on relief and rehabilitation, diverting resources from development.

The mission concluded that Dominica had a continuing need for substantial amounts of international grant assistance. It identified a $94-million programme of new projects, including $43.3 million for transport, $31.5 million for agriculture, $7.6 million for housing and industry, $6.1 million for health and sanitation, and $5.5 million for education and training.

Summarizing the country's needs, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 6 October that Dominica required international assistance to rehabilitate and reconstruct roads, organize a road maintenance and repair system, rehabilitate agriculture and diversify agricultural production. Funds were also needed for housing, education, health and water supply. Aid must be provided chiefly in the form of grants or soft loans.

International assistance for the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of Dominica

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 34/19 of 9 November 1979 and 35/102 of 5 December 1980, in which the Assembly expressed deep concern at the magnitude of the damage caused in Dominica by hurricanes "David" and "Frederic" in 1979 and hurricane "Allen" in 1980, and urged the Governments of Member States and international organizations to continue to provide, with the utmost urgency, assistance for the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of Dominica, as called for in resolution 418(PLEN.13) adopted on 19 October 1979 by the Committee of the Whole of the Economic Commission for Latin America,

Bearing in mind the oral report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Dominica,

Concerned at the continuing gravity of the economic situation in Dominica,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance provided so far to Dominica by various States and regional and international organizations;

2. Urges Governments of Member States and international organizations to continue to provide, with the utmost urgency, assistance for the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of Dominica;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly informed of the results achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Grenada

The almost complete dependence of Grenada on foreign trade with industrial countries made it subject to the effects of inflation and recession in those countries, a multiagency economic mission which visited Grenada from 26 to 30 September 1981 concluded. In its report,<sup>(1)</sup> prepared in pursuance of a 1979 General Assembly resolution<sup>(2)</sup> and transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General, the mission found that the country's relative remoteness, compounded by the infrequency and unreliability of transport, added to its inaccessibility. Grenada had suffered from a serious deterioration in its terms of trade during 1980 and 1981, with a trade deficit estimated at $33 million in 1980. Further, it was situated in an area prone to frequent natural disasters. In August 1980, hurricane "Allen" had caused more than $6 million in damage, and unusual wind and rain storms had struck in early 1981.

The mission outlined a $96.2-million programme of assistance to meet Grenada's development needs. Massive assistance, totalling $72.1 million, was required in the transport sector over the following three years, including $33 million for an international airport, $16.6 million for an emergency road programme and $10.3 million for port development. Some $8.8 million was required for health and housing, $6.9 million for education, $4.2 million for agriculture and forestry, and $4.2 million for industrial development. These needs were in addition to amounts already being provided or pledged.

The Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Assembly's Second Committee on 6 October that, because of the natural disasters, Grenada's output of bananas, cocoa and nutmeg had fallen sharply. Moreover, prices of its major exports had weakened in 1980 and 1981. However, as a result of financial reforms and strict control of expenditure, the regular budget had been brought into balance in 1980/1981 and 1981/1982. Nevertheless, assistance was needed to complete the new airport, repair damaged roads, rehabilitate the banana industry, launch a housing programme, reform the secondary school system and meet health needs.

Nicaragua

Faced with no reserves of foreign exchange, no State resources and the need to provide food assistance for half the population, the Government of Nicaragua, after coming to power in 1979, had launched an economic rehabilitation programme with international assistance, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the General Assembly's Second Committee in October 1981. Bilateral credits and loans had increased from $185 million in 1980 to $316 million in 1981. However, grants had amounted to only $42 million in 1981, less than half the amount of the previous year. For the period 1979-1983, organizations of the United Nations system had approved $62 million in assistance. Despite this response, assistance was insufficient and Nicaragua continued to require grants and soft loans.

Details of international assistance to Nicaragua were provided in a November 1981 report by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> submitted in response to an Assembly request of December 1980.<sup>(3)</sup>

By a resolution of 17 December 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> adopted without vote, the Assembly urged Governments and bodies of the United Nations system to continue contributing to Nicaragua's reconstruction and development, and recommended that the country continue to receive treatment appropriate to its special needs until the economic situation returned to normal. It requested a further report in 1982.

The Second Committee approved this resolution on 24 November, also without vote. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a previous draft, introduced by Mexico and sponsored by 39 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup> The adopted text differed from the initial draft by having the Assembly recommend that Nicaragua receive treatment appropriate to its special needs rather than "special treatment".

Referring to this provision in introducing the initial draft resolution, Mexico said that, if Nicaragua ceased to enjoy special treatment, the technical assistance it was to receive in 1982 from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) would suffer. Adoption of the resolution would permit an increase of almost 40 per cent in the indicative planning figure used to determine the amount of UNDP assistance to Nicaragua.

Assistance to Nicaragua

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/8 of 25 October 1979 and 35/84 of 5 December 1980 concerning assistance for the reconstruction of Nicaragua,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Nicaragua,

Noting with satisfaction the support which Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system have given to the efforts of the Government of Nicaragua for the reconstruction of the country,

Considering that, despite the efforts of the Government, the economic situation of Nicaragua has not yet returned to normal and continues to require the assistance of the international community,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts regarding assistance to Nicaragua;

2. Urges all Governments to continue contributing to the reconstruction and development of Nicaragua;

3. Requests the bodies of the United Nations system to continue and increase their assistance in this sphere;

4. Recommends that Nicaragua should continue to receive treatment appropriate to the special needs of the country until the economic situation returns to normal;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

S a i n t L u c i a

The difficulties facing a small island economy, compounded by damage caused by hurricane "Allen" in August 1980, were highlighted in a report<sup>(1)</sup> prepared by a multiagency economic mission which visited Saint Lucia from 1 to 9 September 1981 in pursuance of a December 1980 request by the General Assembly.<sup>(2)</sup> The report stated that the country's dependence on exports and tourism caused it to be immediately affected by recessions in industrial countries. Further, because of Saint Lucia's small size, there was a chronic shortage of stocks and inventory in all fields. In addition, hurricane "Allen" had caused direct damage estimated at $52 million as well as a loss in future income. Saint Lucia had succeeded in rapidly building and diversifying its economy by developing tourism in the 1960s and attracting manufacturing enterprises in the 1970s, but per capita incomes had been falling since 1979.

The mission identified a five-year, $73-million programme of assistance involving specific projects for low-cost housing and hurricane repair ($20 million); industry and employment $21 million); agriculture, especially feeder roads ($17 million); and health, education, transport and tourism.

Addressing the Assembly's Second Committee on 6 October, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes said that, although Saint Lucia had received significant amounts of international emergency assistance, much of the repairs and rehabilitation had been carried out by the Government and by parastate organizations at the expense of development projects. As a result of the extraordinary expenses it had had to incur, the Government was in a difficult financial situation and needed assistance to rehabilitate and develop agriculture, repair roads, rebuild and upgrade schools and hospitals, build and improve housing, and complete work on airports and docks.

Also speaking in the Committee, Saint Lucia expressed disappointment at the delay in submitting the report and at some of its contents, stating that the document had given cursory treatment to the economic effects of the hurricane while overestimating the country's per capita gross domestic product and distorting its recovery capacity. Moreover, the report had failed to mention the long rehabilitation period required for bananas and coconuts, the principal export crops. Saint Lucia would not submit a draft resolution on its assistance needs in 1981 but would inform the Committee in 1982 on the state of affairs.

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

Natural disasters in 1979, 1980 and 1981 ended a period of rapid economic growth in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, according to a multiagency economic mission which visited the country from 16 to 22 September 1981. The mission, sent at the Government's request, reviewed the economic situation and identified projects in a $23.5-million programme to meet the country's short-term needs and to assist in rehabilitation and reconstruction; its report was transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General.

The mission noted that the country's agriculture and infrastructure had suffered from a volcanic eruption in 1979, hurricanes in 1979 and 1980, and heavy rains in May 1981. Saint Vincent and the Grenadines had had a consistently large adverse trade balance, with an estimated deficit in 1980 of $31.8 million. It urgently required assistance for the rehabilitation and extension of feeder roads, agricultural extension services and fisheries ($7 million); for transport ($3 million), including airport improvement; for industry and tourism ($1.6 million), notably the arrowroot starch industry; for health and sanitation ($4.2 million), including redevelopment of Kingstown hospital; and for education and training ($7.6 million), including school construction and equipment and the establishment of five multi-purpose workshops.

The Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Second Committee in October that international relief efforts had not been enough to meet immediate needs following the series of natural disasters, with the result that the Government had had to divert nearly $2 million from other programmes to help with rehabilitation.

Other regions

Lebanon

Deterioration of the political and security situation in Lebanon during 1981 had had an adverse effect on the economy, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in September. <sup>(2)</sup> Responding to an Assembly request of December 1980 for information about progress in implementing its call for reconstruction and development aid to that country, <sup>(3)</sup> he stated that the internal events had slowed work on various projects and set back prospects for starting a full-fledged reconstruction and development programme. In the public sector, the main impediment was the lack of funds and other resources, accentuated by the fact that disturbed security conditions inhibited the collection of government revenues and the delivery of international aid. While some investment in industry and agriculture had taken place in the private sector, investors preferred to put money in the safer sections of trade or real estate.

Despite the worsened conditions, the report said, United Nations agencies had intensified their activities in Lebanon. In May, the Government had requested various items and commodities to meet the needs of 25,000 families in various parts of the country. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations had responded quickly by making available the required quantities of cereals, cooking oils and canned meat, borrowed from World Food Programme stocks in the country. By March 1981, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had committed $9.7 million to be spent in the 1977-1981 period, of which a third was for agriculture and other substantial shares were for health and education. The United Nations Children's Fund was co-operating with the Government in establishing basic services units in various parts of the country, aiding orphaned and handicapped children and providing services to Palestinian children and mothers. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees sought to encourage displaced persons to return to their villages and to facilitate their settlement through economic and social projects.

Southern Lebanon continued to suffer from water and electricity shortages, inadequate communications, and economic and social backwardness, the report stated. Prior to the cease-fire of 24 July (p. 289), continuous air attacks and shellings had temporarily driven people from their homes, destroyed bridges and damaged the Zahrani oil refinery and other installations. The presence of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon had brought a considerable measure of security to its area of operations and, through its humanitarian activities, it had helped people in villages to lead a more or less normal life. Those activities included health promotion, water distribution, assistance in repairing houses and school buildings, and restoration of small roads.

In April, the observer for Lebanon described to the Economic and Social Council steps his Government was taking to restore the economy by establishing a port commission to oversee the rebuilding of Beirut harbour, beginning work to enlarge and update Beirut International Airport, expanding electrical power generation capacity, restoring water supply and sewerage systems, improving technical education facilities, and rebuilding and establishing schools, hospitals and other social institutions. The Government was also exploring ways to finance a reconstruction programme, had created a housing bank to finance building projects and had been instrumental in setting up an economic policy co-ordination committee. Lebanon urgently needed funds for its reconstruction programme.

Because statistical data were lacking, the UNDP Governing Council, on 26 June,<sup>(5)</sup> deferred its determination of the indicative planning figure which was to project the level of UNDP assistance to Lebanon for the 1982-1986 development cycle. Referring to the country's difficult situation and the urgent need for its development, the Council decided to consider the matter in 1982 with a view to increasing UNDP assistance.

In October, the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon, introducing the Secretary-General's report to the General Assembly's Second Committee, stated that the emphasis in United Nations activities in 1981 had shifted from emergency relief to reconstruction and development. He cited two projects which had yielded concrete results: UNDP assistance to help Lebanon's Council for Development and Reconstruction with regard to long-term planning, and a reconstruction and development programme in southern Lebanon that was fully under way, unhampered by the disturbed conditions there.

Lebanon informed the Committee in November that, in addition to the large-scale rehabilitation programme for southern Lebanon, its Government was giving substantial support to a programme to reconstruct the private sector. Despite the emigration of large numbers of skilled personnel, activities in industry and housing had gradually expanded, banks had provided credit for reconstruction, and Lebanon had largely retained its dominant position in commercial and financial services.

By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(4)</sup> the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts for Lebanon's reconstruction and development, and invited United Nations organizations to expand and intensify their assistance programmes. It requested the Secretary-General to provide assistance to the Resident Co-ordinator at Beirut, the official responsible for on-the-spot co-ordination of United Nations activities in Lebanon.

This resolution was adopted without vote following similar approval on 24 November by the Second Committee. The draft was introduced by a Vice-Chairman based on informal consultations on a previous and essentially similar draft, introduced by Kuwait and sponsored by 28 nations but subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup> Presenting the original proposal, Kuwait observed that, despite the unstable situation, the Lebanese Government had not ceased preparing and implementing reconstruction programmes.

Supporting the resolution, the United Kingdom, on behalf of the European Economic Community members, said they had increased the funds available for food aid and emergency relief for Lebanon. The United States said it was helping Lebanon rebuild its infrastructure and stabilize its economy. The USSR associated itself with the consensus on the understanding that it would be implemented within the existing budget.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/146 of 20 December 1978, 34/135 of 14 December 1979 and 35/85 of 5 December 1980 on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/15 of 29 April 1980,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon,

Taking note of the statement made by the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon before the Second Committee on 2 October 1981,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Lebanon;

2. Commends the continuous efforts of the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon in the discharge of his duties;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts to provide all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help the Government of Lebanon in its reconstruction and development plans and in their implementation;

4. Invites the specialized agencies and the organs and other bodies in the United Nations system to expand and intensify programmes of assistance within the framework of the needs of Lebanon;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, in the manner he deems appropriate, all possible assistance to the Resident Co-ordinator, so that he may engage in co-ordinating the continuing United Nations activities in Lebanon, with a view to ensuring their harmony and success;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Tonga

International assistance and remittances from abroad had long been covering Tonga's severe trade deficit, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the General Assembly's Second Committee on 6 October 1981. Increased inflows of foreign capital were needed to maintain the investment rate. High unemployment had caused many Tongans to emigrate, with a resulting loss of skills. The Government wished to broaden its sources of assistance, especially to improve transport, in order to reduce its heavy dependence on a few bilateral programmes. With a view to organizing an assistance programme, as requested by the Assembly in 1979,<sup>(1)</sup> the United Nations had been in touch with the Tonga Government to arrange for a technical mission to visit in the near future.

Chapter IV

International trade and finance

A marked downturn in the growth of international trade, coupled with a sharp increase in the prices of goods traded, formed the backdrop of discussions on trade and finance in the United Nations during 1981. The Trade and Development Report, 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the first of an annual series by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), showed that the volume of international trade had increased by only 1.5 per cent in 1980—a considerable slow-down compared with a 7 per cent average between 1960 and 1979—and projected an equally disappointing outcome in 1981. At the same time, continued inflation raised prices by 20 per cent in 1980, as measured by indices of the unit value of world exports. Payments imbalances widened to worrisome levels, as they were associated with a high degree of monetary instability, especially with regard to exchange and interest rates.

The Report illustrated the particularly severe impact on oil-importing developing countries. Their terms of trade—the ratio between export and import prices—had deteriorated throughout the 1970s, owing to the steady rise in world prices of manufactures in relation to those of primary products other than petroleum, and two major increases in petroleum prices. More recently, higher interest payments—expected to rise to $44 billion in 1981—had contributed to the deteriorating balance-of-payments situation. An even more important factor had been a sharp rise in interest rates in capital markets. As a result, outstanding external debt of the developing countries was approaching $400 billion. The Report pointed to a paradox in international economic relations: developing countries were required to honour their debt obligations while creditor nations could hinder them from doing so by restricting imports.

Presented to the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD in September, the Report also assessed current economic trends in general, with emphasis on the development prospects of developing countries at a time of world economic recession (p. 385).

The problems of international trade and finance were discussed during 1981 at two regular sessions of the Trade and Development Board at Geneva: the first and second parts of its twenty-second session, from 9 to 20 March and on 12 May, and the first and second parts of its twenty-third session, from 28 September to 12 October and from 4 to 6 November. During the first of these sessions, a sessional committee of the whole met from 10 to 19 March. At the second session there were two such committees: Sessional Committee I met from 28 September to 8 October and Sessional Committee II (on trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems) from 28 September to 6 October. The Board reported to the General Assembly on the results of its work.<sup>(2)</sup>

The Board's Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget met twice at Geneva in 1981, devoting its third session (4-11 May) to the proposed budget for 1982-1983<sup>(3)</sup> and its fourth session (26 October-3 November) to the medium-term plan for 1984-1989 (p. 534) and UNCTAD technical co-operation activities.<sup>(4)</sup>

To consider protectionism and structural adjustment and for annual reviews of patterns of production and trade, the Board decided in March to establish a sessional committee in 1982 (p. 541). It also established an Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices, which, at its first session in November, called on countries to institute effective controls over such practices and proposed several UNCTAD activities in this regard, including studies and information dissemination ((p. 544).

The Board was unable to reach agreed conclusions on the effects of recent multilateral trade negotiations and decided to continue to return to the matter in 1982 (p. 539). It continued work on a draft resolution to encourage trade among countries having different economic and social systems (p. 540).

The Board's Special Committee on Preferences, at its tenth session (Geneva, 11-22 May), carried out its sixth periodic review of the generalized system of preferences (GSP), under which participating developed countries granted preferential treatment to imports from specified developing countries (p. 546).

During 1981, the International Trade Centre at Geneva, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), continued its technical co-operation activities, serving as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in the formulation and implementation of trade promotion programmes (p. 547). UNCTAD carried out its own technical co-operation activities in trade facilitation, helping countries to simplify procedures and documents (p. 549).

As at 31 December 1981, 75 States had signed and 19 had formally adhered to the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities (p. 550). For the Agreement to enter into force, it had to be ratified, accepted or approved by at least 90 States. The General Assembly, in December 1981, urged early signature and ratification.<sup>(9)</sup> The Fund's Preparatory Commission held its second session (Geneva, 9-13 February) and two working parties began drafting texts to enable the Fund to begin operations (p.550).

As part of UNCTAD activities in relation to individual commodities (p. 551), an agreement on tin was concluded in June 1981 (p. 553) and the International Cocoa Agreement, concluded in November 1980, entered into force provisionally in August 1981 (p. 554). The GATT Arrangement regarding International Trade in Textiles was extended in December 1981 until 31 July 1986, following a General Assembly appeal in December<sup>(10)</sup> for reduced trade barriers in the textile and clothing trade (p. 555). A United Nations conference met in January and May to begin negotiating an international agreement on jute (p. 553).

Consumer protection measures (p. 556), proposed in a report of the United Nations Secretary-General and covering areas such as government policy, consumer education, food, pharmaceuticals, restrictive business practices and practices of transnational corporations, were commended to Governments by the Economic and Social Council in July.<sup>(6)</sup>

With regard to financial and monetary questions (p. 557), UNCTAD continued work on the debt problems of developing countries (p. 559). However, controversy continued over its role in regard to reform of the international monetary system, and an expert group set up in 1980 to study the matter<sup>(12)</sup> did not meet in 1981 (p. 561).

The General Assembly, in November,<sup>(7)</sup> affirmed the need to encourage steps to mobilize personal savings in developing countries. A proposal for a world development fund to channel financial resources to developing countries for purposes not adequately covered by existing institutions was discussed in a report of the Secretary-General (p. 560); the Assembly requested further study of the idea.

A Working Group on International Monetary and Financial Issues, convened in October, recommended a set of national and international measures to stimulate world economic recovery and bring about international monetary stability (p. 561).

The Economic and Social Council, in July, requested preparation of a feasibility study on a proposed international centre for public accounting and auditing.<sup>(5)</sup> At the Council's request, the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters concluded that it could take on additional functions as an alternative to a suggestion for the establishment of an international tax co-operation council (p. 563).

The Trade and Development Board endorsed a resolution by its Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade on ways of retaining more insurance business in the national markets of developing countries (p. 564).

Measures for rationalizing the machinery of UNCTAD, including a new mechanism for regular informal consultations among its member States, were approved by the Board in March (p. 535). The General Assembly chose a location for the sixth session of the Conference, scheduled for 1983.<sup>(8)</sup>

Some $19 million was spent in 1981 on the technical co-operation activities of UNCTAD, geared to strengthening the external sector of developing countries, fostering economic co-operation among them and enhancing their effective participation in international negotiations (p. 535).

On other subjects, the Board authorized a social and economic survey of Namibia (p. 1170), requested the continuation of similar studies on South Africa (p. 200), asked for continued assistance to national liberation movements in southern Africa (p. 209) and authorized an economic survey of the Palestinian people (p. 322).

The Board set in motion a programme on technology transfer in specific industries (p. 754) and in the energy sector (p. 699), and asked for a report on national laws and regulations governing technology transfer (p. 757). Meanwhile, an UNCTAD conference sought agreement on a code of conduct for technology transfer (p. 755). The Board authorized the convening of a group of experts on the feasibility of measuring human resource flows between countries—an aspect of the brain drain (p. 757)—as well as continued work on industrial collaboration arrangements in relation to trade (p. 590). It requested a study on the exchange of skills as an element of technical co-operation among developing countries (p. 464). Several UNCTAD bodies continued work on shipping questions (p. 566).

The Board took note on 29 September of the 1981 report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (p. 1251). Statistics on international trade continued to be collected and published under the direction of the United Nations Statistical Commission (p. 1070).

The General Assembly, following its annual review of the Board's report, adopted a resolution in December dealing with various aspects of UNCTAD activities, including multilateral trade negotiations, GSP, the international monetary system, debt problems of developing countries, commodity matters and measures to rationalize UNCTAD machinery.<sup>(11)</sup> The Assembly also requested support for ongoing studies on problems facing Zaire with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets (p. 620).

Programme and finances of UNCTAD

Programme policy decisions

The General Assembly, on 16 December 1981, adopted a resolution on UNCTAD<sup>(2)</sup> by which it took note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on its 1981 sessions and dealt with a number of specific questions considered by the Board.

The Assembly welcomed, endorsed or took note of the Board's resolutions on the following subjects: assistance to national liberation movements in South Africa (p. 209) and Namibia (p. 1170); an economic survey of the Palestinians (p. 322); protectionism and structural adjustment (p. 541); trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems (p. 541); co-operative exchange of skills between developing countries (p. 464); and technology transfer (p. 754). The Assembly took note of the agreement concerning rationalization of UNCTAD machinery (p. 535). The resolution also dealt with the annual trade and development report (p. 385), plans for an UNCTAD study on inflation (p. 393), and UNCTAD work on multilateral trade relations (p. 539), GSP (p. 546), the international monetary system (p. 561), debt problems of developing countries (p. 559), economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC) (p. 382), registration of vessels (p. 566), transport conventions (p. 569), and commodities (p. 555).

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to none, with 23 abstentions, following its approval by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 11 December by a recorded vote of 100 to none, with 23 abstentions.

tions. Separate votes were taken in Committee on paragraphs 9 and 11, dealing with the convening of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental High-level Group of Experts on the Evolution of the International Monetary System (p. 561). and with action relating to the debt problems of developing countries (p. 559).

The text, submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman, was based on informal consultations on an original draft sponsored by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries.<sup>(1)</sup> The two drafts differed in regard to their provisions on assistance to African liberation movements, an economic survey of the Palestinians, the study on inflation, protectionism and structural adjustment, multilateral trade relations, debt problems, technology transfer, ECDC and registration of vessels. The paragraphs on commodities and on rationalization of UNCTAD machinery were not in the Group of 77 draft.

Introducing the original text in the Committee, Algeria expressed regret that certain decisions concerning the UNCTAD programme had not been supported by all delegations, including those dealing with assistance to national liberation movements, national laws and regulations on technology transfer (p.753), ECDC and vessel registration.

The United States, which abstained in the vote on the resolution, regretted that the Group of 77 had departed from the UNCTAD tradition by pressing for a vote on questions on which no consensus had been achieved and considered it wrong for the Assembly to re-examine matters already dealt with in UNCTAD.

Reservations were also voiced with regard to the provisions on: assistance to national liberation movements (Israel, United States); multilateral trade relations (United States); the international monetary system (European Community (EC) members, Japan, Sweden, United States); debt problems of developing countries (EC members, United States); ECDC (Israel, United States); and transport conventions (EC members, Japan).

Medium-term plan for 1984-1989

The UNCTAD section of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989, drafted by the UNCTAD Secretary-General,<sup>(*)</sup> was examined by the Trade and Development Board's Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget at its fourth session, held at Geneva from 26 October to 3 November 1981.<sup>(3)</sup>

Within the wide range of issues before UNCTAD, covering virtually the whole institutional framework of international economic relations, the draft plan emphasized three areas subsequently identified by the Board as the main issues to be considered by the 1983 session of the Conference (p. 536): commodities (p. 550), trade policy (p. 539), and financial and monetary matters (p. 557).

In the Working Party, regional groups expressed differing views regarding the relative importance of various issues identified in the plan, and also regarding the extent to which the draft plan should be revised. Consequently, it recommended that the Board inform the relevant United Nations organs that it had been unable to establish agreed relative priorities for the various subprogrammes. It also recommended that the UNCTAD Secretary-General be authorized to revise the draft plan in the light of the Working Party's discussions. The Board adopted these recommendations on 4 November.<sup>(2)</sup>

The technical co-operation activities of UNCTAD in 1981 were aimed at strengthening the external sector of developing countries, especially the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, with a view to achieving better planning, monitoring and control. They also sought to foster economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC) (p. 383), introduce improved trade mechanisms, procedures and supporting services, and enhance the effective participation of developing countries in international deliberations and negotiations.

Projects dealt with trade policies and planning of the external sectors, including assistance in regard to multilateral trade negotiations (p. 540) and trade among countries having different economic and social systems (p. 541); money, finance and development (p. 558); trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures; the generalized system of preferences (p. 547); trade in commodities and support to the Integrated Programme for Commodities; support to economic integration groupings; special problems of least developed, land-locked and island developing countries; economic and commercial aspects of maritime transport (p. 567), including international multimodal transport; technology transfer (p. 754); insurance and reinsurance (p. 564); and trade facilitation and documentation (p. 549). Under the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation, advisory services were provided in support of ECDC, mainly for short-term assistance to economic integration movements on trade expansion programmes, techniques of trade liberalization, monetary and payment arrangements, and investment programmes. Another activity of UNCTAD in 1981 was the organization of regional workshops on commodities.

Total project expenditures incurred by UNCTAD in 1981 amounted to $19,416,000 exclusive of expenditures by the International Trade Centre, which provided technical co-operation for trade promotion (p. 547). The programme was characterized by: a continuing high proportion of intercountry projects (about 75 per cent); a close relationship between the research, policy analysis and negotiating functions of the secretariat and the substantive content of technical co-operation activities; and the prominence of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in its financing (85.5 per cent) (p. 431).

Information on UNCTAD technical co-operation activities was submitted by the secretariat to the Trade and Development Board in July 1981<sup>(2)</sup> and by the United Nations Secretary-General to the UNDP Governing Council in April 1982.<sup>(1)</sup> These activities and their financing were reviewed at the October/November session of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget.<sup>(3)</sup>

Rationalization of institutional machinery

The Trade and Development Board agreed on 20 March 1981 to a series of measures designed to rationalize the machinery of UNCTAD, including the Conference, the Board and its committees and the services of the secretariat. The resolution setting out these measures<sup>(5)</sup> was the outcome of a review initiated by the Conference in 1979,<sup>(6)</sup> conducted from November 1979 to February 1980 by the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee on the Rationalization of UNCTAD's Machinery<sup>(7)</sup> and completed by the Board.

The Board identified seven main tasks for sessions of the Conference: to promote, direct and facilitate the work of UNCTAD machinery; to achieve solutions in negotiations facing deadlock within UNCTAD; to review developments and long-term trends in international trade and related areas of international economic co-operation; to act on recommendations by the UNCTAD machinery; to generate new ideas; to set guidelines and launch programmes; and to assess progress in implementing Conference decisions. Two alternatives were suggested with a view to utilizing the presence of ministers at the Conference:

(a) the first week or days might be devoted to meetings of high-level officials who would prepare a document identifying issues requiring ministerial decision, on which the ministers would negotiate; (b) the Board might prepare a negotiating document for ministers to bear in mind when addressing the Conference.

The Board decided with regard to its own functions that: it should deal with issues that had reached an impasse in other UNCTAD bodies; its co-ordinating functions should be strengthened so that it could give its subsidiary bodies more effective guidance and ensure the coherence of their activities; it should decide how to achieve effective evaluation of UNCTAD activities; and it should devote most of the time at its two annual sessions to deliberation and negotiation on a few carefully selected substantive issues.

New arrangements were envisaged for strengthening the negotiating role of the Board's main committees and for grouping meetings of different committees when they dealt with inter-related questions, scheduling them when possible in a six-month period prior to a Board session. They were asked to consider reducing the number of their subsidiary bodies. The Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget was requested to prepare recommendations for the Board in 1982 on ways of improving its effectiveness.

The Board decided to build an informal consultative mechanism consisting of monthly meetings among States, or between them and the UNCTAD Secretary-General, to obtain information and discuss substantive matters on the agenda of forthcoming meetings, exchange views on problems arising from negotiations in UNCTAD and prepare organizational aspects of meetings.

It was decided to make less use of groups of experts chosen in their personal capacity and greater use of experts nominated by Governments. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to strengthen research on long-term issues and develop new ideas for consideration by intergovernmental UNCTAD bodies. He was also asked to issue to Governments at Geneva, at least twice a year, a list of personnel vacancies and to report on the feasibility of producing a daily bulletin on the public meetings of UNCTAD. Other measures concerned the calendar of UNCTAD meetings and documentation, translation and interpretation (p. 538).

Along with this resolution, the Board adopted two decisions on the calendar of its meetings 'and on supplementary conference services (p. 538).

In October, the UNCTAD Secretary-General informed the Board <sup>(2)</sup> that, as it had requested in March, periodic listings of personnel vacancies would be circulated to UNCTAD member States beginning in November. Regarding the proposal for a daily bulletin on UNCTAD meetings, after receiving the secretariat's feasibility report and financial implications,<sup>(3)</sup> the Board decided on 7 October not to pursue the matter.

The General Assembly in its resolution of 16 December on UNCTAD,<sup>(4)</sup> took note of the agreement reached on measures to rationalize the UNCTAD machinery and urged its full implementation. This provision was added to the earlier version of the draft resolution, submitted by Algeria for the Group of 77 and later withdrawn<sup>(1)</sup> which made no reference to the topic.

In the debate in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on development and international economic co-operation, Australia thought that UNCTAD should allow more scope for informal discussion so that possible common ground could be explored before group positions hardened. Endorsing the Board's resolution on rationalization of machinery, Mongolia said the role of UNCTAD should be strengthened on the basis of universality and the rational use of the main committees, which would obviate the need to convene so many groups of experts. The United States said it had been dismayed to see a majority, over the opposition of a minority, decide to force resolutions through the Board, a development that could damage the credibility of those measures and of the Board.

Preparations for the 1983 session of the Conference

On the recommendation of the Trade and Development Board, the General Assembly decided without vote on 16 December 1981 to convene the sixth session of UNCTAD at Libreville, Gabon, in May/June 1983, preceded by a two-day meeting of senior officials there.<sup>(3)</sup> The draft resolution, sponsored by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77, was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 2 November.

In 1979 Cuba had offered to serve as host to the session, and later that year the Assembly had requested the Board to recommend the place, date and duration of the session, bearing Cuba's offer in mind.<sup>(2)</sup> In March 1981, the Board deferred a decision after Cuba repeated its offer and the United States said it would not attend a session at Havana. <sup>(1)</sup>

In October, the President of the Board announced that the Latin American Group had decided that the seventh session of the Conference should be held in a Latin American country and wished the sixth session to be held in Africa. The Board endorsed this decision on 8 October, (" on the understanding that the final decision on a Latin American venue would be taken at the right time and in the right place. It noted with interest the desire of Cuba to host the seventh session. The Board agreed in principle to recommend to the Assembly that the sixth session be held in a member State of the African Group, with the venue to be decided by the Board in November in the light of any offer received by then.

Before placing the decision before the Board, the President said that, during his unofficial negotiations, there had been unanimous agreement by all parties on two basic principles: the legal right of any United Nations Member State to host a United Nations conference such as UNCTAD, and the need to preserve the universality and world-wide character of UNCTAD, giving all members an equal chance to take part. After the decision was taken, Cuba said that it rejected United States attempts to dictate the venue for international meetings and that its offer to host the seventh session of UNCTAD must be given preference. The President said he had not felt that the United States had tried to impose any opinions; it had agreed without hesitation that every Member State had the right to host a United Nations conference such as UNCTAD.

On 5 November <sup>(4)</sup> the Board, in the light of an offer by Gabon dated 22 October, recommended to the Assembly that the session be held at Libreville (the offer was withdrawn in 1982). The Board also decided that the agenda should be selective, supported by concise, action-oriented documents, and that the session should be so organized as to ensure the attendance of ministers and other high-level policy-makers and to permit all delegations to contribute effectively to decision-making.

Endorsing this recommendation and decision in December, the Assembly requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to inform it in 1982 of the state of preparations for the session.

Sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975.

Recalling a/so its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further its resolution 34/196 of 19 December 1979, in which it requested the Trade and Development Board, at its twenty-first session, to recommend the place, date and duration of the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Bearing in mind its resolution 31/140 of 17 December 1976 on the pattern of conferences and also bearing in mind the communication dated 22 October 1981 received by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development from the Government of Gabon,

Taking note of Trade and Development Board decision 237(XXIII) of 8 October 1981, by which the Board endorsed the decision taken by the Latin American countries to hold the seventh session of the Conference in one of those countries on the understanding that the final decision on the venue in Latin America would be taken at the right time and in the right place, and noting with interest the desire of Cuba to act as host to the seventh session of the Conference,

Taking note further of Trade and Development Board resolution 245 (XXIII) of 5 November 1981, in which the Board recommended that the sixth session of the Conference should be held at Libreville in May/June 1983,

1. We/comes the offer of the Government of Gabon to act as host to the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at Libreville;

2. Decides to convene the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at Libreville in May/June 1983, to be preceded by a two-day meeting of senior officials at Libreville;

3. Endorses the decision of the Trade and Development Board that the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should have a selective agenda supported by concise action-oriented documents and should be so organized as to ensure the attendance of ministers and other high-level policy makers and to permit all delegations to contribute effectively to its decision-making process;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to inform the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session of the state of preparedness for the sixth session of the Conference.

Calendar of UNCTAD meetings for 1981-1982

In 1981, the calendar of UNCTAD meetings for the year in progress and subsequent years was reviewed by the Trade and Development Board on four occasions.<sup>(1)</sup>

On 20 March, <sup>(3)</sup> the Board approved a revised calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1981 and a tentative schedule for 1982. On 12 May, it noted that the United Nations Tin Conference, 1980, would be reconvened in June 1981 (p. 553); agreed that exceptions to the principle that no more than two simultaneous UNCTAD meetings should be held could be authorized if it appeared necessary in the light of the timing of the Board's sessions; and agreed that arrangements to facilitate the observance of Islamic holidays which fell during an UNCTAD meeting would be the subject of agreement among delegations.

A revised calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1981 and for 1982 and a tentative schedule for 1983 were approved on 9 October.<sup>(4)</sup> On 6 November, the Board made adjustments to the 1982 calendar,<sup>(5)</sup> including provision for the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Developing Countries on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries (p. 383) and the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on an Export Credit Guarantee Facility (p. 562).

To make meetings more productive and allow sufficient time for preparations, the Board, in its resolution of 20 March<sup>(2)</sup> on rationalization of UNCTAD machinery (p. 535), adopted the following principles concerning the calendar of meetings: no more than two simultaneous UNCTAD meetings should be held, save in exceptional cases and upon explicit request by the bodies concerned; once a calendar was approved, every effort should be made to adhere to it; a stable schedule of meetings should be re-established, and steps should be taken for the most efficient use of the time allocated for meetings.

The Board also took action on the calendar of its own meetings (see below).

Conference and meeting services

Improved documentation, translation and interpretation services for UNCTAD meetings were requested by the Board in its resolution of 20 March 1981<sup>(2)</sup> on rationalization of UNCTAD machinery (p. 535). The Board decided that meetings should not normally be held if documents were not available, that attempts should be made to identify redundant documentation and that documents should be action-oriented and concise. Pre-session documents should reach Governments six weeks in advance of a meeting; during sessions, documents should be translated expeditiously and delivered simultaneously in all relevant languages. Weekend and night meetings should be held only exceptionally; if they were unavoidable, interpretation and translation services should be available. The Board requested that, over time, sufficient conference rooms in the Palais des Nations at Geneva should be equipped for six-language interpretation.

Also on 20 March, the Board requested that supplementary conference services for UNCTAD continue to be provided, to the extent possible within existing resources, and decided to review the situation in 1982. <sup>(3)</sup> These services, as described in a report to the Board by the UNCTAD Secretary-General,<sup>(1)</sup> had been instituted in April 1980 by the United Nations Office at Geneva to improve the availability of in-session documentation for UNCTAD meetings, especially those held at night. The report concluded that a possible alternative arrangement, involving a task force of translators assigned specifically to UNCTAD meetings, would be much more costly.

Relations with intergovernmental organizations

The Trade and Development Board in 1981 designated four additional intergovernmental organizations at their request, to participate in the work of UNCTAD: the Arab Monetary Fund, the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration, and the Ministerial Conference of West and Central African States on Maritime Transport, designated on 17 March, and the Arab Fund for Technical Assistance for African and Arab Countries, designated on 12 May.<sup>(1)</sup> This brought the number of intergovernmental organizations participating in the work of UNCTAD to 87.

Trade and Development Board

Calendar of Board meetings. The Trade and Development Board, on 20 March 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to report on possible ways for it to comply with a General Assembly instruction of November 1980<sup>(2)</sup> that all subsidiary organs of the Assembly should complete their reports to the Assembly by 1 September and report any subsequent activity in addenda. Taking into account the possible conflict between that instruction and the timing of its two regular annual sessions, the Board asked him, if necessary, to explore the matter with the United Nations Secretary-General, bearing in mind the schedule of other United Nations meetings at Geneva.

The Board, on 7 October,<sup>(1)</sup> decided that in 1982 it would hold its twenty-fourth session in March and its twenty-fifth session at the beginning of September, and that in 1983 it would hold one session before the sixth session of the Conference, scheduled for May/June 1983 (p. 536), and one session after the Conference. The matter raised by the Assembly would be referred to the Conference at its sixth session.

In the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, during the debate on development and international economic co-operation, the Philippines suggested that the Board might meet at the ministerial level in 1982.

Trade policy

Multilateral trade relations

TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD CONSIDERATION. The Trade and Development Board, at both of its 1981 sessions, <sup>(3)</sup>continued its examination of the results of the multilateral trade negotiations (Tokyo Round) concluded in 1979 within the framework of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT),<sup>(6)</sup> and the implementation of those results. As in 1980,<sup>(7)</sup> the Board was unable to reach agreed conclusions. Accordingly, it remitted the matter to its March 1982 session.

A note by the UNCTAD secretariat,<sup>(2)</sup> prepared for the Board at its March 1981 session, reviewed 1980 developments. It indicated that the tariff concessions agreed upon in the negotiations had generally been implemented, and that agreements on some non-tariff measures and arrangements on particular products were all being applied following the entry into force on 1 January 1981 of agreements on customs evaluation and government procurement. The major unresolved issue was that of the multilateral safeguard system, which defined circumstances under which countries could take emergency action of a non-discriminatory character to restrict imports of particular products when they caused or threatened serious injury to domestic producers.

During the Board's discussion in March, the Group of 77, pointing to the numerous unresolved issues, expressed dissatisfaction with the results of the negotiations and argued that the matter should remain on the Board's agenda. Group D (centrally planned economies) agreed that the subject should be kept open. However, Group B (developed market economies) believed that consideration of the subject as a separate agenda item should be concluded. The Board decided to consider the item further in October.

In August the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a report <sup>(4)</sup> which focused on the difficulties of assessing the negotiations. It noted that the formal conclusion of the Tokyo Round had been only one stage of a continuing process. Moreover, action to implement the various arrangements and agreements at national and regional levels differed and, in some instances, was unclear. Until implementing procedures in the signatory countries were completed, it was not possible fully to evaluate the results. Nevertheless, the net effect of the tariff cuts on developing countries appeared to have been negative in terms of potential trade expansion. The negotiations had afforded a good opportunity to review the rules of the international trading system but, apart from certain changes, little had been done to pave the way for a unified, universal system.

Presenting this evaluation to the Board in October, a representative of the UNCTAD Secretary-General identified four changes in the international trading system since the start of the Tokyo Round in 1973: the importance of fixed measures of protection, especially customs duties, had declined, while the incidence of those which remained tended to be greater on imports from developing countries; greater reliance was placed on mechanisms of flexible protection, under which restrictions or other measures could be applied when specific conditions existed; the interpretation of criteria and terms had been influenced by a tendency towards what had been termed "managed" trade; and unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment had ceased to be the guiding principle of international trade relations. Basic contradictions in the system had to be resolved if international trade was to continue to grow and provide the means of accelerating economic development.

Gabon submitted a draft resolution on behalf of the Group of 77 calling for an annual review by the Board of developments in the international trading system covering, in particular, the rules and principles governing its functioning. On the basis of that review, the Board would formulate suggestions and take decisions on improvements in the system. The draft was supported by Group D and China, but Group B asked that the matter be deferred to the next session pending a study of certain aspects of the proposed review, including its scope and its relationship to other UNCTAD work. In view of the lack of agreement, the Board decided on 9 October that the question of multilateral trade negotiations, together with the draft resolution and the statement by the representative of the UNCTAD Secretary-General, should be remitted to its March 1982 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In its resolution of 16 December on UNCTAD,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly stressed the need to review developments in international trade, including those arising from implementation of the results of the multilateral trade negotiations; emphasized the importance of the UNCTAD role in considering multilateral trade and formulating principles and policies relating thereto; and noted that proposals in that context were to be further examined by the Board in 1982. The corresponding paragraph of an earlier draft,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted by Algeria for the Group of 77, contained different language referring to the need for continuous assessment of the operation of the international trade system with a view to achieving improved efficiency, equitability and transparency in its operation.

In the debate in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on development and international economic co-operation, several countries spoke of prospects for a ministerial meeting of the Contracting Parties to GATT, projected for 1982. Australia welcomed plans for the meeting but said it was by no means certain that the real problems of primary producers in the non-industrialized world would be addressed. Austria and Portugal hoped the meeting would deal with the current protectionist trend. Finland, on behalf of the Nordic States, hoped the meeting would result in a commitment to resist protectionism, solve problems remaining from the multilateral trade negotiations, promote new trade liberalization measures, and take account of the growing role of developing countries in international trade and the need to promote their integration into the multilateral trade system. The Philippines suggested that the meeting be held in a developing country instead of Geneva, its usual location.

Canada said the GATT system was sufficiently flexible and pragmatic to adapt to the needs of developing countries and would be strengthened by their participation in greater numbers. The United States believed that GATT should be the body which played a fundamental role in the formulation of trade policies and principles. The USSR said the UNCTAD secretariat must carry out strictly the 1980 Board decision calling for a global evaluation of the multilateral trade negotiations,<sup>(7)</sup> which the capitalist States were trying to obstruct.

Technical co-operation

The UNCTAD programme of support to developing countries in the area of multilateral trade negotiations\ continued throughout 1981, responding to requests from developing countries for technical assistance aimed at increasing their ability to benefit from their participation in negotiations and consultations with developed countries and at formulating their trade policies in the context of the new legal structure emanating from the negotiations and related developments. These activities included: collection, processing and refining of data on imports by the 11 main developed country markets and on trade barriers affecting access of developing countries' products to those markets; analysis of issues relating to acceptance of instruments emerging from the multilateral trade negotiations and implementation of the results of those negotiations; consultations with and advice to Governments on trade policy issues in the period following the negotiations; and provision of technical support to seminars held to evaluate the results of the negotiations and current developments in trade relations.

The Trade and Development Board, on 20 March, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General and invited the United Nations Development Programme to continue the programme of assistance to developing countries in the consultations and negotiations on unresolved issues of the multilateral trade negotiations of particular interest to them.<sup>(1)</sup>

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

In a report of August 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat described the continued expansion of trade among countries having different economic and social systems. In 1980, the total trade of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe as a group had increased in value by 14.2 per cent, a higher growth rate than in 1978 and 1979. Their trade had been particularly dynamic with the developing countries, rising by 33.7 per cent in 1980 compared with 1979, a much higher rate than in the case of their trade with the developed market-economy countries (14.4 per cent) and trade among themselves (9.9 per cent).

In July and August 1981, the UNCTAD secretariat issued studies on trends, policies and prospects in trade and economic co-operation between Peru and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe;<sup>(4)</sup> trade and economic relations between some Asian developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe;<sup>(5)</sup> and trade policies, developments and institutional framework of the German Democratic Republic.<sup>(6)</sup>

Following a review by its Sessional Committee II of trends and policies in this area, the Trade and Development Board, on 9 October, October,<sup>(3)</sup> requested States to continue efforts to expand trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems, bearing in mind the necessity to promote the economic development of developing countries.

The Board continued efforts to draft a comprehensive resolution on this subject, but a number of points remained unsettled. A Group of 77 spokesman stated that it had proved impossible to reach consensus on the question of financial assistance by the socialist countries of Eastern Europe to developing countries. The Board decided to continue consideration of the draft in 1982 on the basis of an incomplete text worked out in a contact group of Sessional Committee II and annexed to its resolution of 9 October. This draft contained provisions calling for the further expansion of East-West trade and trade between developing countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe, as well as for intensified secretariat work in this area, including technical co-operation (see below).

The General Assembly, in its resolution of 16 December on UNCTAD,<sup>(2)</sup> welcomed the Board's 9 October resolution and invited it to continue efforts with a view to arriving at comprehensive decisions in 1982.

In the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, during the debate on development and international economic co-operation, Bulgaria described the normalization of commercial ties between East and West as the basis for the development of just and democratic international trade relations for the greater well-being of all countries. The Byelorussian SSR said UNCTAD must examine not only trade between socialist and developing countries but also East-West trade. The German Democratic Republic stated that protectionist practices by certain capitalist industrialized countries were adversely affecting trade between States with different social systems. Hungary said it attached great importance to trade relations, not only with its socialist partners but with the developed capitalist and developing countries.

Technical co-operation. A comprehensive programme of technical co-operation for the development of trade between socialist countries of Eastern Europe and developing countries, organized jointly by the UNCTAD secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme, was expanded in 1981 following its inauguration in 1980. Prepared and carried out in collaboration with United Nations regional commissions and the International Trade Centre (p. 547), the programme took the form chiefly of interregional, regional and national seminars and workshops, which enabled more than 200 officials and business representatives from 50 developing countries to deepen their knowledge of policies and practices of trade with the Eastern European countries and the opportunities for developing trade and economic co-operation between the two groups of countries.

In its resolution of 9 October 1981<sup>(1)</sup> on trade among countries having different economic and social systems (see above), the Trade and Development Board stressed the importance of continuing UNCTAD technical assistance in trade between developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe with a view to ensuring support for technical assistance projects, particularly by expanding and improving advisory services to developing countries.

Trade restrictions

Protectionism and structural adjustment

TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACTION. On 20 March 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> the Trade and Development Board decided to establish a sessional committee, beginning in 1982, to carry out work in two areas which the Conference, in 1979, had asked the Board to keep under review in relation to protectionism and structural adjustment in international trade.<sup>(8)</sup> The committee was to meet during the Board's first regular session of each year: (1) to carry out an annual review of patterns of production and trade in the world economy, with a view to identifying elements and problems relevant to the attainment of optimum economic growth, including the development and diversification of the economies of developing countries and an effective international division of labour; and (2), along with other UNCTAD bodies, to review developments involving trade restrictions with a view to examining and formulating recommendations on protectionism. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to submit studies on both aspects.

The Board also considered a report on protectionism in the services sector, with particular reference to air transport (p. 568).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In its resolution of 16 December 1981 on UNCTAD,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly welcomed the Board's resolution. This text omitted a phrase in the original draft, submitted by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77 but later withdrawn,<sup>(*)</sup> stating that the Board's resolution had been adopted in the light of increased protectionist measures by developed countries adversely affecting the trade and development of developing countries.

Also on 16 December, the Assembly adopted without vote a decision <sup>(7)</sup> referring to its 1982 session a draft resolution by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77, dealing with trade restrictions by developed countries, structural adjustment and the international division of labour, and the reviews to be conducted by the Trade and Development Board.<sup>(2)</sup> The draft was annexed to the decision, which was approved without vote on 10 December by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on an oral proposal by its Chairman. Also transmitted to the 1982 session by this decision was a synoptic table containing suggestions by some developed countries for changes in the draft.

The Group of 77 text was a revised version of a 1980 draft by that Group<sup>(3)</sup> which the Assembly had transmitted to its 1981 session.®) Re-introducing it in 1981, Algeria stated that minor changes had been made to bring the 1980 text up to date. The recommendation to transmit the text to the 1982 session was taken after a Vice-Chairman of the Committee announced that the Group of 77 had been unable to secure consensus on the text because of the large number of amendments and the shortage of time.

Concerning trade restrictions, this text would have the Assembly urge developed countries to adhere to standstill provisions they had accepted by refraining from introducing new tariff and non-tariff barriers affecting developing country exports, and to reduce tariff escalation so as to improve market access for processed and manufactured products. Developed countries would also be called on to eliminate tariff and non-tariff barriers, particularly quantitative restrictions and other measures having an equivalent effect on developing country exports.

The United States supported the call for adherence to standstill provisions, while the European Community (EC) preferred to have the Assembly welcome commitments in this regard made by countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. Finland and EC suggested that the calls to reduce tariff escalation and eliminate trade barriers be deleted. The United States, on the other hand, suggested that developed countries be called on to seek ways to move towards reducing quantitative restrictions and other measures having equivalent effect, particularly in relation to products exported by developing countries, and to co-operate in exploring whether there remained areas of tariff escalation where reductions might improve access to products of export interest to developing countries. Sweden suggested that developed countries be asked to seek to reduce barriers rather than eliminate them.

With regard to structural adjustment and the international division of labour, the Group of 77 text stated that the international community, in particular the developed countries, should facilitate structural adjustment by efforts for accelerated and sustained growth of the developing countries, including economic development and diversification and an effective international division of labour involving both interindustry and intra-industry specialization, enabling developing countries to increase their share of world trade, processed goods and manufacturing. Developed countries would be called on to implement long-term industrial structural adjustment policies with a view to facilitating the establishment of an equitable and effective international division of labour.

The United States suggested three changes: to remove the phrase "in particular the developed countries" from the statement that the international community should facilitate structural adjustment; to remove "of the developing countries" from the goal of accelerated and sustained growth; and to revise the paragraph on an international division of labour by stating that developed countries should allow market-place decisions to proceed without interference with a view to facilitating the establishment of an efficient international division of labour. Finland objected to the reference only to developed countries.

Concerning the reviews by a sessional committee of the Trade and Development Board, the Group of 77 text would have the committee undertake sectoral reviews within the framework of the annual review of patterns of production and trade, continuously review developments involving trade restrictions against developing country exports and ensure that the latter review also dealt with the evolution of industrial capacity in developed countries in order to recommend measures that would avoid protectionist demands there.

The United States suggested, in place of this paragraph, that States be called on to review developments involving trade restrictions affecting developing country exports, including restrictions by other developing countries, while examining structural adjustments in developing countries which would facilitate the transition from import substitution to export promotion to take advantage of improved market access. In the view of EC, the Assembly should simply note the mandate already given by the Board to the sessional committee.

The dangers of protectionism were cited by a number of speakers in the Second Committee's discussion of development and international economic co-operation. Among developing countries, Costa Rica remarked that free trade in goods and services was essential to the developing countries' indigenous development processes and their capacity to repay loans. The Philippines hoped the report on this subject to be prepared by UNCTAD would quantify the adverse effects of protectionism on the economies of developing countries. Protectionism, said Uruguay, destroyed workers' income, sacrificed consumers' interests and gave rise to inefficiency which caused greater stagnation and further deterioration of the economic situation.

Tunisia remarked that a number of developing or recently industrialized countries had been forced to review their investment or equipment programmes because of protectionist measures adopted by developed countries. The United Republic of Cameroon viewed protectionism as a major obstacle to the agricultural and industrial development of the third world.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic said the protectionist policies of developed countries against the products of developing countries led the latter to wonder whether the current international economic system did not condemn them to perpetual exploitation by the capitalist nations. Zimbabwe attributed the unfair economic situation to application of the capitalist theory of comparative advantage, whereby developing countries exported commodities and imported manufactures made from those commodities; as a result, the terms of trade had declined at an unprecedented rate.

Afghanistan asked developed countries and the most advanced developing countries to do away with protectionist policies and grant non-reciprocal tariff concessions to the least developed and land-locked countries. The Gambia saw a need to remove artificial trade barriers in developed countries and to liberalize their trade policies so that they could expand their imports from developing countries. The Republic of Korea pledged to pursue vigorously its policy of import liberalization and said it was prepared to give preferential treatment to the products of other developing countries. Singapore said developed countries should focus on restructuring their economies so that free market forces would enable non-competitive industries to be phased out.

Portugal remarked that it had been victimized by protectionism and believed that an open multilateral trading system was essential to development. Romania stated that easier access to the markets of developed countries for the developing countries' exports had become a necessity. The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, said that, in analysing patterns of world trade, UNCTAD should take a practical view of trade trends and production patterns and their impact on international trade, taking account of the parallel and complementary work undertaken by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Some States noted that higher tariffs were not the only symptoms of the new protectionism. Australia observed that, although tariffs were out of favour as a means of controlling trade, new and more subtle barriers and distortions had evolved outside GATT, ranging from dubious anti-dumping pleas to so-called orderly marketing arrangements and various forms of voluntary restraint. Austria thought UNCTAD should pay increasing attention to the new and more flexible restrictions to international trade.

Many Eastern European countries ascribed much of the blame to the policies of some developed market-economy countries. Albania remarked that, when developing countries tried to increase their exports, especially of finished products, they were confronted with the protectionism of capitalist countries, which tried to entrench themselves in developing countries in order to sell their goods. Bulgaria said the increase in protectionist measures, tariff barriers and political discrimination by some developed market-economy countries had a devastating impact on the economies of developing countries. The German Democratic Republic endorsed the call for effective measures against protectionism, stating that protectionist practices were adversely affecting trade between States with different social systems. Hungary said it stood for co-operation instead of restrictions and expected its capitalist partners to do likewise.

The Ukrainian SSR charged that protectionist measures adopted by Western developed countries affected an ever-increasing number of products, were applied in a discriminatory manner and were sometimes imposed by methods that amounted to economic blackmail. The USSR said discriminatory restrictions by some Western States against the socialist countries reduced the latter's foreign exchange earnings and their ability to trade with and assist developing countries.

The Byelorussian SSR, Romania and the USSR favoured a central role for UNCTAD in regard to protectionism.

Protectionism and structural adjustment

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 16 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to refer to its thirty-seventh session for consideration the following draft resolution, together with the synoptic table containing the comments thereon:

"Protectionism and structural adjustment

"The General Assembly,

'Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1-May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, 31/163 of 21 September 1976 and 33/196 of 29 January 1979.

'Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, particularly resolution 96(IV) of 31 May 1976, entitled 'A set of interrelated and mutually supporting measures for expansion and diversification of exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures of developing countries',

"Recalling also resolution 131 (V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, entitled 'Protectionism and structural adjustment',

'Taking note of resolution 226(XXII) of 20 March 1981 of the Trade and Development Board, entitled 'Protectionism and structural adjustment',

"Recognizing that international trade should play an essential role in economic growth and development, particularly that of developing countries, and that the expansion of international trade on an equitable basis should be beneficial to all countries,

"Noting with concern the increase in many developed countries of subsidies to inefficient and internationally less competitive lines of production which are of particular export interest to developing countries,

"Noting a/sso that increasing domestic subsidies to agricultural productions in developed countries, a matter which is not sufficiently negotiated in the multilateral trade negotiations, disrupts international trade and seriously affects production in and export from developing countries.

"Recognizing also that a healthy world economy would require, inter alia, the establishment of long-term industrial structural adjustment policies and measures to facilitate a greater transfer of Industrial capacities from developed to developing countries, In order to attain equitable and effective international division of labour, as well as the promotion of a substantial increase in the share of developing countries in the industrial production and exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures, in the light of the targets Set out in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation,

"Noting the deep concern of all countries about intensified protectionist pressures and that of the developing countries in particular about the serious consequences which the increase in recent years of protectionist measures in developed countries may have for them by affecting their exports, particularly in sectors in which the comparative advantage has shifted in their favour and opened up important perspectives for growth in their economies,

"Recognizing further that the current economic problems of developed countries cannot be solved by concealed or open protectionism and that trade-restrictive measures could touch off chain reactions involving a widening series of actions by an increasing number of countries,

"Noting with deep concern that such measures, by delaying the process of necessary structural Change in the developed countries and consequently limiting the market access for agricultural, manufactured and semi-manufactured exports of developing countries, have adverse effects on the economies of developing Countries.

"Realizing that increasing protectionist measures have, inter alia, aggravated inflation in the developed countries which is, in turn, transferred to the developing,

"Emphasizing the importance of structural adjustment for the elimination of protectionism and for the promotion of greater international trade, taking into account the interests of developing countries and with a view to the early attainment of their development objectives,

"1. Urges developed countries to implement fully and to adhere strictly to the standstill provisions they have accepted by refraining from introducing new tariff and non-tariff barriers affecting the exports of developing countries and to reduce substantially tariff escalation so as to provide improved access to exports of manufacture, semi-manufactures and processed primary products from the developing countries;

"2.. Calls upon developed countries to eliminate promptly their existing tariff and non-tariff barriers, particularly quantitative restrictions and other measures having an equivalent effect on the exports of developing countries;

"3. Agrees that structural adjustment should be a constant and global process which the international community, in particular the developed countries, should facilitate by conscious efforts aimed at ensuring accelerated and sustained overall growth of the developing countries, including the development and diversification of their economies and an effective international division of labour involving both inter-industry and intra-industry specialization, enabling developing countries to secure an increase in their share of world trade, of processed goods and of manufacturing;

"4. Calls upon developed countries to implement long-term industrial structural adjustment policies with a view to facilitating the establishment of an equitable and effective international division of labour;

"5. Welcomes the decision of the Trade and Development Board to establish a Sessional Committee at the twenty-fourth session of the Board in accordance with its resolution 226(XXII) to deal with the problems of protectionism and structural adjustment;

"6. Calls upon that Sessional Committee to undertake sectoral reviews within the framework of the annual review referred to in resolution 131 (V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development with a view to the effective and full implementation of section A, paragraph 3. of that resolution, and invites the Conference, on the basis of such annual reviews, to formulate general recommendation which national Governments would take into account in implementing section A, paragraph 3. of resolution 131 (V) and to review continuously developments involving restrictions of trade affecting exports of developing countries with a view to examining and formulating appropriate recommendations, and to ensure that this comprehensive review also deals with the monitoring of the evolution of the industrial capacity in the developed countries in order to recommend the measures necessary to prevent protectionist demands in those countries."

Control of restrictive business practices

As requested by the General Assembly in December 1980,<sup>(4)</sup> the Trade and Development Board, on 20 March 1981, established an Inter-governmental Group of Experts on Restrictive

Business Practices.<sup>(5)</sup> The functions of this Group were defined in the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices,<sup>(2)</sup> approved by a United Nations conference and adopted by the Assembly in 1980.<sup>(9)</sup> The Group was to provide a forum for consultation on matters related to the Principles and Rules, undertake studies and research, collect and disseminate information, and make general recommendations to States.

The Group of Experts held its first session at Geneva from 2 to 11 November 1981.<sup>(5)</sup> It adopted a resolution by which it expressed concern about the persistent resort to the use of restrictive business practices by enterprises, including transnational corporations (TNCs), in international trade transactions, and called on countries to institute effective controls of such practices and to refrain from legislation and administrative measures that did not adequately take into account the objectives of the Principles and Rules. It also called on countries, particularly developed countries, to take into account, in their control of restrictive business practices, the development, financial and trade needs of developing countries, particularly the least developed. Moreover, it stressed that States should meet their commitment to the Principles and Rules and annually communicate information to UNCTAD.

The Group requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in co-operation with other United Nations agencies and financing programmes, to provide technical assistance, advisory services and training programmes on restrictive business practices and to approach States for financial and other contributions for such activities. It invited the United Nations Development Programme to ensure that adequate resources were allocated for the purpose. The Group called for studies by the UNCTAD secretariat on collusive tendering, tied purchasing and restrictive practices in relation to plant and equipment design and manufacture, as well as a revised draft of a model law or laws to help Governments control restrictive business practices. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to achieve more expeditious dissemination of information on major developments, such as by issuing newsletters.

The UNCTAD secretariat issued two studies in 1981 on aspects of restrictive business practices. The first, requested by the Conference in 1979,<sup>(8)</sup> concerned exclusive dealing arrangements in an abuse of a dominant position of market power.<sup>(6)</sup> The study pointed out that such arrangements, involving an undertaking not to sell to or purchase from outsiders, were a common feature in both international and domestic trade. When engaged in by an enterprise in a dominant position of market power, exclusive dealing arrangements could involve a wide range of restrictions aimed at reinforcing exclusivity, thereby preserving particular trade patterns by making it difficult for newcomers to enter the market. The study concluded that both developed and developing countries should devote more attention to controlling exclusive dealing arrangements, in view of their likely adverse effects on international trade.

The second study concerned marketing and distribution arrangements in respect of import and export transactions.<sup>(7)</sup> It stated that international trading channels were characterized by oligopolistic structures for nearly all products. State-owned or -controlled enterprises were increasingly important in world trade, not only in Eastern European countries but also in developed market-economy countries and developing countries, accounting for roughly 30 per cent of world trade. Most of the remaining trade was by TNCs, with roughly half being intra-firm transactions. The study suggested that further research be conducted on the extent to which State trading enterprises had been created and/or engaged in restrictive business practices in response to the existence of dominant market power in the supply or purchase of particular goods and services, and the extent to which restrictive business practices were likely to affect new entrants, particularly from developing countries, in the international trade in selected products.

An UNCTAD secretariat note<sup>(1)</sup> summarized information from States on the steps taken to meet their commitment to the Principles and Rules. In addition to dissemination of the text to enterprises and the public, there had been co-operation between a number of national authorities, in both developed and developing countries, in the control of restrictive business practices, including the provision of bilateral technical assistance. A number of developing countries had introduced legislation for the control of restrictive business practices and, in some cases, the Principles and Rules had been submitted to legislative bodies studying possible new enactments.

In the debate on development and international economic co-operation in the General Assembly's Second Committee, China urged that a plan be prepared for step-by-step elimination of restrictive business practices by developed countries directed basically against goods exported by developing countries, such as textiles.

Generalized system of preferences

The sixth periodic review of the operation and effects of the generalized system of preferences (GSP), which entered its second decade of application in 1981, was carried out by the Trade and Development Board's Special Committee on Preferences at its tenth session, held at Geneva from 11 to 22 May.<sup>(2)</sup>

Under GSP, according to studies prepared for the Committee by the UNCTAD secretariat,<sup>(1)</sup> 19 developed market-economy countries, including the members of the European Communities, granted preferential tariff treatment to imports, mainly of manufactures and semi-manufactures, originating from developing countries. Preferential tariff treatment and/or other economic and foreign trade measures of a preferential nature were also granted under GSP by six socialist States of Eastern Europe. Negotiated and implemented under the auspices of UNCTAD, GSP was initially established for a 10-Year period ending in 1981 and was extended in 1980 for another 10 years.

A secretariat report<sup>(3)</sup> concluded that, while a number of improvements had been made since the last review in 1980, they had had no noticeable effect on GSP. However, it continued to play a positive role in improving market access for developing countries. Imports by 16 preference-giving members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development from beneficiaries which had actually received preferential treatment in 1979 (1978 for Canada and the European Economic Community) had amounted to $17.6 billion, representing a 24.5 per cent increase over the preceding year. Nevertheless, the sizeable trade still subject to duties pointed to the need for further improvements, in particular through expansion of project coverage, removal of limitations, and simplification and harmonization of origin rules and other administrative requirements.

During the review by the Committee on Preferences, as summarized by its Chairman in the Committee's report, the preference-giving countries indicated that they had taken steps to extend the duration of their schemes, or were planning to do so, and reiterated their commitment to improve the schemes. They gave figures to substantiate the rise in preferential trade and explained the reasoning behind the restrictive measures taken, including the so-called graduation arrangements under which preferential treatment was phased out with respect to beneficiaries considered competitive to leave room for less-developed beneficiaries.

The preference-receiving countries, while appreciating the steps to prolong GSP and the various minor improvements made in the schemes, felt that too little had been done in that respect and that the achievement of the objectives of GSP remained as far off as ever. They felt that the devices used by preference-giving countries to restrict, limit or eliminate particular products or beneficiaries from preferential treatment ran counter to the agreement that the schemes should be constantly improved. They found graduation to be particularly unacceptable, pointing to the need for notification and consultations prior to modification or withdrawal of preferential treatment.

The Trade and Development Board took note on 9 October of the report of the Committee on Preferences and endorsed a resolution on technical co-operation adopted by the Committee (p. 547).

The General Assembly, in its resolution of 16 December on UNCTAD,<sup>(4)</sup> reaffirmed the importance of the generalized, non-reciprocal and non-discriminatory system of preferences for expanding and diversifying the export trade of developing countries and for accelerating their economic growth and, to that end, of the preference-giving countries' implementing fully the agreement reached by the Committee on Preferences in 1980.<sup>(6)</sup>

In a resolution of 17 December on the work of the World Food Council,<sup>(5)</sup> the Assembly recommended that GSP be expanded to cover a wider range of processed and semi-processed products and, whenever possible, agricultural commodities. It also recommended expanded technical assistance for the use of GSP (p. 547).

In the Second Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, Bulgaria said it levied no taxes on imports from the least developed countries (LDCs). Japan noted that it had decided to prolong its GSP scheme for a further 10 years and that special preferential measures for LDCs had been in effect since April 1980.

Rules of origin

At its eighth session, held at Geneva from 27 April to 1 May 1981, the Working Group on

Rules of Origin continued work on harmonization and simplification of the rules of origin, used to ensure that preferential tariff treatment under GSP was given only to goods originating in preference-receiving countries.<sup>(3)</sup>

In its agreed conclusions, the Working Group stated: that fresh initiatives were necessary to achieve progress in its task; that priority in those initiatives should be given to the percentage criterion (used to define what proportion of imported materials or domestic content a qualifying product might contain); that further discussion should be held in regard to the request by preference-receiving countries for full and global cumulative treatment (under which such countries would be regarded as one area for purposes of determining the origin of goods); and that renewed consideration might be given to further harmonization and improvement of the consignment rule (which requires that goods passing through third countries must not enter into commerce there).

The Working Group transmitted to the UNCTAD Special Committee on Preferences a revised text proposed for the notes accompanying the customs document known as the certificate of origin. The text took account of changes in the rules and also included the rules applied by the Eastern European preference-giving countries. The idea of the Working Group was that, if the proposals were approved, the certificate of origin with its revised notes would be accepted as of 1 January 1982.

On 14 May,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee on Preferences took note of the Working Group's agreed conclusions and recommended to the Trade and Development Board that the Group should be reconvened. The Committee, after hearing different views about the proposed changes in the certificate of origin, suggested that they be referred back to the Group. The Board, on 9 October, scheduled a further session of the Group for May 1982.<sup>(1)</sup>

Assistance to developing countries for the fuller utilization of GSP continued to be provided in 1981 under a joint project between UNCTAD and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).<sup>(2)</sup> An advisory mission visited China in September and a national seminar was conducted in Costa Rica in December. Japan financed a seminar on GSP in January, attended by officials from 17 developing countries in Asia and the Pacific. The project prepared or updated handbooks on national and regional preference schemes and carried out studies at the request of developing countries.

UNDP allocated $150,000 for the project in 1981, and another $58,057 was contributed by seven preference-giving countries and the European Economic Community. UNDP agreed to extend its financial support until 31 December 1983 at the rate of $180,000 a year, after the Special Committee on Preferences, on 22 May 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> recommended that UNDP continue financing the project over a multiyear period at levels that would permit it to maintain its essential functions as a focal point for disseminating information on GSP schemes. The Trade and Development Board endorsed this resolution on 9 October.<sup>(1)</sup>

In a resolution of 17 December on the work of the World Food Council,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly recommended that technical assistance activities providing information on the use of GSP-including assistance in research, development and marketing-should be enlarged and improved to enable developing countries to take full advantage of the trade preferences offered under the scheme.

Trade promotion and facilitation

International Trade Centre

During 1981, the International Trade Centre (ITC) at Geneva, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), continued its technical co-operation activities, serving as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in the formulation and implementation of trade promotion programmes. The Centre recorded a modest increase in project implementation (measured by disbursements), though considerably below the targets set in its medium-term programme for 1981-1983 (p. 549).<sup>(2)</sup>

The Centre gave priority to integrated assistance projects (35 in 1981), mainly national in scope. These projects sought to provide a balanced mix of assistance for institution building, trade promotion, strategy formulation, market information, training of personnel, and marketing and import techniques, with particular attention to the needs of the least developed countries (LDCs).

Programme implementation declined in Africa (15 national and 4 regional projects), expanded in Asia and the Pacific (23 national and 9 regional projects) and maintained its momentum in Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East (13 national projects) as well as in Latin America (11 national and 14 regional projects).

Approximately 30.8 per cent of the ITC programme was devoted to export-market development; 21.9 per cent to manpower development for trade promotion; 18.7 per cent to strengthening national infrastructures for trade promotion; 13.4 per cent to specialized national trade-promotion services; 4.7 per cent to technical co-operation with LDCs; 4 per cent to import operations and techniques; 2.5 per cent to multinational trade promotion; 2.1 per cent to technical co-operation with national chambers of commerce; and 1.9 per cent to trade promotion oriented to rural development.

The Centre continued to assist in identifying products offering favourable export prospects, undertook research on export markets and helped formulate market development plans. This assistance was provided through market surveys and marketing publications, advisory missions of market development officers, and the dissemination of trade information and statistics. Market research surveys were undertaken on several agro-based products and manufactures, and 13 monographs on trade channels were issued for products in individual markets.

Dissemination of trade statistics through the Import Tabulation System was expanded in 1981; 110 organizations in 70 developing countries regularly received the updated version in microfiche form. Consultants were sent to 12 developing countries, particularly for the building of statistical data bases, national registers of exporters and computerized dissemination systems. A workshop on data processing for trade promotion, organized in October in co-operation with the Instituto Mexicano de Comercio Exterior, enabled 30 participants from developing countries to exchange experience in the development of computer-based information systems.

Under the import-export contact programme, more than 3,000 profiles containing information on suppliers and projects in developing countries were processed in 1981. These profiles were gradually becoming the core of a computerized world-wide supply/demand information system.

Some 5,241 participants from developing countries took part during 1981 in ITC training activities, which numbered 255 events-20 of them interregional-including seminars, workshops, courses and study missions. The Centre co-operated with training institutions in developing countries and began a global search in both developed and developing countries for institutions willing and able to undertake consultancy or sub-contracting assignments on behalf of training institutions in developing countries. A revised training materials development programme was launched. In 1981, for the first time, ITC organized courses for chamber of commerce officials in co-operation with chambers of commerce in Austria, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Italy and Spain. Local training resources were strengthened through instructors' workshops.

Multinational trade-promotion activities grew substantially in 1981; by October, 11 intercountry projects were in operation. In this field, ITC initiated activities to promote the sale of jute and jute products, including the design and production of an international jute emblem. It prepared market potential reports on four national markets for the International Tea Promotion Association and co-operated with other commodity bodies.

Technical co-operation in connection with import operations and techniques was pursued with 44 countries or country groupings. The Centre's special programme of technical, co-operation with LDCs conducted research on export prospects, consulted on national programme development, helped with product research, provided trade information and documentation services, and offered training in trade promotion. Trade-promotion activities in the context of technical co-operation among developing countries were expanded. In co-operation with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, a workshop was held at Bangkok, Thailand, in December, on trade promotion oriented to rural development. In Africa, a study was undertaken to assess the export potential of the rural sector in Ethiopia, Senegal and Swaziland and to develop indicative export plans for rural products.

The Centre's 1981 regular budget of $8.3 million, covering headquarters operations, was contributed in equal portions by UNCTAD and GATT. Of its $15.7-million technical co-operation expenditure in 1981 (compared to $14.9 million in 1980), 70.7 per cent, or $11.1 million, was financed by trust fund contributions; the remainder ($4.6 million) was financed by UNDP. These figures excluded support costs accruing to ITC, which were applied to headquarters-based activities not included in the regular budget.

In November 1981, ITC headquarters staff consisted of 106 Professional and 129 General Service employees, including those financed from the regular budget and extrabudgetary resources and by developed countries, and excluding project-financed staff.

ACTION BY THE TECHNICAL COMMITTEE AND JAG. The Joint Advisory Group on the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT (JAG) held the first part of its fourteenth session at Geneva from 30 March to 3 April, following the tenth session of its Technical Committee (Geneva, 9-13 February<sup>(3)</sup>). The Committee and JAG reviewed the ITC technical co-operation programme and the ITC medium-term programme for 1981-1983 (see below). The Group also considered the Centre's relationship with UNDP (see below).

In its review of ITC activities, the Committee called attention to the fact that the implementation rate (proportion of programme disbursements to available resources) had apparently fallen from 73.8 per cent in 1980 to 70.6 per cent in 1981. It saw a need to expand the specialized trade-promotion services, to concentrate on fewer countries in the import operations and techniques programme, to increase the number of experts from developing countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe, and to increase assistance to LDCs. For its part, JAG called for greater efforts to achieve a geographically more equitable distribution of resources, with particular attention to raising the share of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries.

The Committee and JAG generally endorsed recommendations contained in an ITC/UNDP evaluation report on the ITC programme to assist national trade-promotion infrastructure.

The Trade and Development Board took note of the JAG report on 29 September.<sup>(4)</sup>

A proposal to have a single annual meeting of experts and policy officials instead of two separate annual meetings by JAG and its Technical Committee was made by a Working Party established by JAG in April 1981 to recommend proposals for improving current arrangements involving the two bodies. The Working Party on Future Arrangements for the Joint Advisory Group and its Technical Committee, which met at Geneva on 25 and 26 June,<sup>(5)</sup> suggested that its proposal be tried for at least two years and then be reviewed.

Medium-term programme for 1981-1983

The second medium-term programme of ITC, proposed by the Centre's secretariat for 1981-1983,<sup>(1)</sup> contained no new programme areas but introduced some new priorities, such as technical co-operation with state trading organizations, economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC) and joint ventures for export promotion. In regard to ECDC, emphasis was to be placed on computerized supply/demand information and trade documentation relating to expansion of trade between developing countries, supply/demand surveys for promotion of interregional trade and technical assistance for the establishment of multinational marketing enterprises of developing countries.

At its March/April 1981 session, <sup>(2)</sup>JAG considered the second medium-term programme a useful framework for the development of ITC activities over the coming three years, although several representatives viewed the estimated cost ($75 million) as an ambitious goal. Implementation of the programme, JAG recognized, would call for a greater number of trust fund donors and a greater utilization by developing countries of UNDP resources for trade-promotion assistance.

Relationship with UNDP

In April 1981, JAG discussed but reached no conclusion on the question of whether ITC should formally become an executing agency of UNDP.<sup>(1)</sup> The issue had been discussed in June and September 1980 by the Working Party on the Feasibility and Merits of a Change in ITC's Status vis-à-vis UNDP, which made no recommendation though it agreed that ITC met the criteria for executing agency status. JAG decided to reconsider the matter in 1982. During 1981, ITC activities financed by UNDP totalled $4.6 million; the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development remained the executing agency for ITC-implemented projects.

Trade facilitation

In 1981, 45 missions to 27 countries were carried out by United Nations advisers under the Special Programme on Trade Facilitation (FALPRO), financed by bilateral donors and UNDP either directly or through ITC or national projects. These technical co-operation activities included advice to Governments on the simplification and harmonization of trade procedures and documents, assistance to national trade-facilitation committees, training through national seminars, and co-operation with regional commissions and subregional economic groupings for the development of harmonized solutions.

Commodities

Common Fund for Commodities

Preparatory work began in 1981 towards the start of operations of the Common Fund for Commodities, a new mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing. However, the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities,<sup>(1)</sup> adopted in June 1980 by a conference of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD),<sup>(5)</sup> had been adhered to by only 19 States at the end of 1981, 71 short of the number required to bring it into force. By November 1981, pledges of voluntary contributions to the Fund's second account, through which commodity development measures other than stocking were to be financed, totalled about $225 million, as against the target of $280 million.

PREPARATORY COMMISSION ACTIVITIES. The second session of the Preparatory Commission for the Common Fund for Commodities was held at Geneva from 9 to 13 February.<sup>(2)</sup> Two working parties were established on 13 February to prepare drafts on various subjects for the Commission's consideration.

Working Party I was assigned to deal with administrative, legal and procedural matters, including rules of procedure of the Fund's Governing Council and Executive Board, the delegation of powers by the Council to the Board, rules and regulations for the conduct of business of the Fund and for the Consultative Committee, the administrative budget, staff regulations, organizational structure, relationship agreements with co-operating institutions and a headquarters agreement. At its first session (Geneva, 4-8 May), the Group prepared draft rules of procedure for the Council and the Board, and the rules and regulations for the conduct of business of the Fund.

Except for a few outstanding matters, the texts prepared by Working Party I were finalized by the Commission at its third session, held at Geneva from 21 to 25 September.<sup>(3)</sup>

Working Party II was asked to deal with operational and financial matters: the rules and regulations for the operations of the Fund's two accounts, including borrowing, and the Fund's financial regulations.

At its first session (Geneva, 27-31 July), Working Party II was mainly concerned with issues relating to the drafting of rules and regulations for operations of the first account, through which the Fund would finance international buffer stocks and internationally co-ordinated national stocks of commodities. There was a general consensus on the need for a model association agreement, a model guarantee instrument and agreement, and a model pledge instrument. Agreement was reached on several components of an interest-rate policy on loans and deposits. Currency provisions for loans, deposits, guarantee capital and guarantees were also considered. The question of maximum financial requirements under each association agreement and of deposits by an Associated International Commodity Organization were examined. There was general agreement on the need for a mechanism to adjust rapidly the level of guarantee capital and guarantees in the event of a modification of maximum financial requirements. Rules and regulations for internationally co-ordinated national stocks were also examined.

At its second session (Geneva, 14-18 December), Working Party II continued work on drafting rules and regulations for the first account.

Signatures and ratifications of the 1980 Agreement

As at 31 December 1981, the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities had been signed by 75 States and the European Economic Community (EEC), and 19 States had formally adhered by ratifying, accepting or approving it. Of these, 57 States (italicized in the lists below) and EEC signed the Agreement and all 19 adhered during 1981. For the Agreement to enter into force, it had to be adhered to by at least 90 States, whose total subscriptions of shares had to comprise no less than two thirds of the directly contributed capital allocated to all States entitled to sign the Agreement.

The States which had both signed and adhered to the Agreement as at 31 December 1981 were:

Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, China, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, Gabon, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Japan, Malawi, Norway, Philippines, Sri Lanka, Sweden, United Kingdom.

In addition, the Agreement had been signed by the following:

Afghanistan, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burundi, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Egypt, France, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Ireland, Italy, Kuwait, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Switzerland, Turkey, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 16 December,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly urged early signature and ratification of the Agreement. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to report to the Preparatory Commission on progress towards entry into force of the Agreement, and decided to consider that progress in 1982 if by that time the Agreement had not entered into force. States were also urged to ensure faster progress in negotiations on international commodity agreements (p. 552).

The resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the draft, submitted by its Chairman, in like manner on 27 November.

In the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, Austria, China, Mexico and the United Republic of Cameroon were among the countries urging prompt adherence to the Agreement. Costa Rica said the fact that the Agreement had not been ratified by the required number of countries was an example of how the trade and export earnings of commodity-producing countries continued to be dependent on the actions of industrialized countries. The Philippines warned that the Agreement might not enter into force unless countries made a concerted effort to ratify it.

For the EEC members, the United Kingdom said they had all signed the Agreement, were completing ratification procedures and had announced contributions to the second account. The United States said it would ratify the Agreement when enough properly structured agreements on specific commodities had been signed; the United States was generally in favour of the free play of market forces but had co-operated with international organizations in preparing agreements covering a wide range of commodities when it felt they were fair to both producers and consumers.

Adopted without vote Meeting 100 16 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add.3) without vote, 27 November (meeting 44); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.50/Rev.1); agenda item 69 (c).

Signature and ratification of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation.

Recalling that the United Nations Negotiating Conference on the Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities successfully concluded its work on 27 June 1980 by adopting the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities.

Recalling a/s/o that the Agreement has been open for signature and deposit of instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval at United Nations Headquarters since 1 October 1980,

Recalling further its resolution 35/60 of 5 December 1980. In paragraph 2 of which the General Assembly urged all Governments to complete expeditiously the procedures required for signature, ratification, acceptance or approval of the Agreement,

Mindful of the objectives of the Common Fund for Commodities, namely:

(a) To serve as a key instrument in attaining the agreed objectives of the Integrated Programme for Commodities as embodied in resolution 93(IV) of 30 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

(b) To facilitate the conclusion and functioning of international commodity agreements, particularly concerning commodities of special interest to developing countries,

Noting that the Agreement shall enter into force on 31 March 1982 if, by that date, instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval have been received from at least ninety States whose total subscriptions of shares comprise not less than two thirds of the directly contributed capital of the Common Fund, as laid down in article 57 of the Agreement,

Noting further that so far seventy-four States have signed the Agreement and only fourteen States have ratified, accepted or approved it.

Welcoming the pledges already announced for voluntary contributions to the second account of the Common Fund,

Expressing concern at the slow pace of progress in the signature and ratification of the Agreement,

Concerned also about the slow progress in the negotiations on international commodity agreements and expressing the need to promote the objectives of the Integrated Programme for Commodities through, inter alia, more rapid progress in concluding the negotiations on international commodity agreements,

1. Stresses the need for the early entry into force of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities;

2. Urges States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Agreement without delay;

3. Expresses the hope that States which have signed but have not yet ratified the Agreement will expedite the necessary action to that effect;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to submit a report on the progress being made towards the entry into force of the Agreement to the Preparatory Commission for the Common Fund for Commodities for bringing the Common Fund into operation;

5. Decides to consider at its thirty-seventh session, if by that time the Agreement has not entered into force, the progress made towards the entry into force of the Agreement, taking into account the work of any meetings of States under article 57 of the Agreement as well as any related developments;

6. Also urges States to ensure more rapid progress in concluding the negotiations on international commodity agreements.

Individual commodities

Principal achievements in 1981 under the UNCTAD Integrated Programme for Commodities ties<sup>(1)</sup> were the conclusion in June of a new International Tin Agreement (p. 553), the entry into force in August of the International Cocoa Agreement (p. 554) and the convening of the 1981 United Nations Conference on Jute and Jute Products (p. 553). Other commodities dealt with were cotton and hard fibres (see below), meat (p. 554), tropical timber (p. 554) and vegetable oils and oilseeds (p. 555). The UNCTAD Committee on Tungsten met in December (p. 554).

The General Assembly, in a resolution of 16 December on the Common Fund for Commodities,<sup>(*)</sup> expressed concern about the slow progress in negotiations on international commodity agreements and cited the need to promote the objectives of the Integrated Programme through faster progress in that regard. It urged States to ensure more rapid progress in concluding such negotiations.

A number of speakers commented on commodity trade during the Second Committee's discussion of development and international economic co-operation. Among developing countries, Afghanistan hoped preferential conditions would be granted to the products of the least developed countries. China called for acceleration of negotiations on individual commodities, remarking that inflation had caused great losses to developing countries which depended mainly on the export of raw materials and primary products. The Gambia saw the need to establish a linkage between the prices of the commodities exported by developing countries and those of goods they imported from developed countries. Mexico said that both producers and consumers, especially those most influential in world commodity trade, should participate in multilateral commodity agreements in order to give them more validity and wider application.

Canada was of the view that problems affecting individual commodities should be examined on a case-by-case basis in producer-consumer groups. Norway, speaking for the Nordic States, viewed progress on commodity agreements as unsatisfactory and hoped new impetus could be given to negotiations for individual agreements, without which the Common Fund would be unable to function properly. The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community members, said they had always played an active role in negotiating commodity agreements, were prepared to carry on work on other commodities and believed UNCTAD should intensify its work on the structure and operation of commodity markets.

Aside from the commodities being dealt with by UNCTAD, the World Food Council and the General Assembly took action during the year with regard to agricultural products and their bearing on food problems (p. 717).

Fibres

Cotton. The first part of the Sixth Preparatory Meeting on Cotton was held at Geneva from 27 April to 1 May 1981 to continue consideration of elements of an international agreement.<sup>(*)</sup> At previous preparatory meetings, the greatest divergence of views had been on the question of price stabilization. To break the deadlock on that issue, three Nordic countries—Finland, Norway and Sweden—submitted a proposal envisaging mandatory consultations in specified market instability situations, possibly resulting in recommended guidelines for voluntary national action to bring about better market balance.

The "Izmir Group" of 18 developing cotton-producing countries—which, at a seminar held at Izmir, Turkey, in March 1980, had adopted a declaration on negotiations for an international agreement<sup>(2)</sup>—indicated their willingness to consider the Nordic proposal, as did the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. The United States (the largest cotton exporter) and the majority of developed consuming countries, however, were unable to accept the Nordic outline, principally because of their opposition to the price stabilization proposals.

Owing to the continuing divergence of views, it was decided that the Sixth Preparatory Meeting should be resumed at an appropriate stage and that meanwhile the UNCTAD Secretary-General should convene consultations between interested cotton-producing and -consuming countries in an effort to ensure the success of the resumed Meeting.

Hard fibres. The Fifth Preparatory Meeting on Hard Fibres, held at Geneva from 25 May to 5 June 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> recorded little progress towards an international agreement to govern international trade in abaca, coir, henequen and sisal.

Producing countries submitted a position paper envisaging an agreement or agreements with comprehensive objectives and functions. This provided for a hard fibres organization or organizations that would be responsible for international action on the fibres and their products, taking full advantage of the Common Fund for Commodities (p. 550) and other available sources of finance. Most major consuming countries, however, envisaged a more restricted agreement.

No further progress was made towards resolving any of the three questions on which a divergence of views had emerged: whether country-specific projects with a capital investment component should be included in the technical improvement programme to be organized under the agreement; what role the envisaged organization or organizations should play in project financing; and what price stabilization measures, if any, should be included. With regard to the institutional question, producing countries expressed the view that a discussion of institutions was premature as long as basic agreement on substance had not been reached.

The Meeting, having concluded that some key issues could not be resolved at that stage, invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consult with the hard fibre-producing and -consuming countries with a view to convening a further meeting when prospects for a successful outcome existed.

Jute. The first and second parts of the 1981 United Nations Conference on Jute and Jute Products were held at Geneva from 12 to 30 January and 11 to 22 May to negotiate an international agreement on jute.

By the end of the first part of the Conference, unresolved issues included the objectives of the agreement, the functions of the proposed international jute organization, the location of its headquarters, voting, finances and the final provisions. On 30 January, the Conference accepted as a basis for further negotiations a proposal by its Chairman containing compromise proposals on the main outstanding issues. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to reconvene the Conference not later than June with a view to finalizing the agreement and asked the Chairman to consult with participating exporting and importing countries with a view to facilitating a successful conclusion.

By the conclusion of the second part of the Conference, agreement had been reached on the principal functions of the new organization, including: improvement of the quality and competitiveness of jute and jute products and expansion of markets for them through research and development projects, market promotion and cost reduction; and collation and dissemination of information on jute and its products, synthetics and related areas. Projects would be funded by the second account of the Common Fund for Commodities (p. 550) and by regional and international financial institutions. The draft agreement contained no provisions for the stabilization of prices and supplies, but provided for continuing consideration of the question of stabilization as well as issues relating to competition with synthetics and substitutes.

Proposed texts for the remaining articles were prepared by the Chairman as a basis for the third part of the Conference, which was to be convened when he considered that conditions for concluding the agreement had been met. In the mean time, he was to consult with Governments on the outstanding difficulties.

Minerals

Tin. On 26 June 1981, the United Nations Tin Conference, 1980, concluded the Sixth International Tin Agreement.<sup>(1)</sup> The new instrument had the same objectives as the Fifth Agreement, concluded in 1975,<sup>(2)</sup> and was designed primarily to prevent excessive fluctuations in the price of tin, to help increase export earnings from tin and to secure an adequate supply of tin at prices fair to consumers and remunerative to producers. Like previous agreements, it provided for a buffer stock and the application of export controls when necessary to reinforce buffer stock operations under specified circumstances, in order to adjust supply to demand.

The distinctive features of the Sixth Agreement were: the size of the buffer stock was raised by 10,000 metric tons, to 50,000 tons; for the first time, financing of the buffer stock—estimated by the Conference Chairman to require about $750 million for a full stock—was to be shared equally between exporters and importers; trigger points were fixed at which export controls were to be applied; and no automatic termination was foreseen if the requirements for definite entry into force had not been met 12 months after its provisional entry into force. The new Agreement also contained provisions for the eventual negotiation of an association agreement with the Common Fund for Commodities (p. 550) and provisions on consultation whereby the International Tin Council, as the administrative organ, would consult at the request of any member on factors affecting supply and demand.

The Agreement was to enter into force once it was adhered to by Governments of countries accounting for at least 80 per cent of total production and the same share of total consumption. If those requirements were not met by 1 July 1982, the Agreement would enter into force provisionally if Governments of countries accounting for at least 65 per cent of total production and the same share of consumption had adhered, either definitively or provisionally. As at 31 December 1981, the Agreement had been ratified by Malaysia (the largest producer) and signed by Indonesia and Norway.

The third and fourth parts of the 1980 Tin Conference, convened under UNCTAD auspices, took place at Geneva from 9 to 26 March and from 9 to 26 June 1981.

Tungsten. At its thirteenth session, held at Geneva from 7 to 11 December 1981, the UNCTAD Committee on Tungsten reviewed proposals for stabilizing the tungsten market through an international agreement to be negotiated at a conference.<sup>(1)</sup> All producing countries present except one (United States) and some consuming countries proposed to proceed to the negotiating phase for a stabilization agreement, whereas other consumers and the one producer felt that this was premature.

The Committee also discussed market developments in various countries and world-wide, and received proposals for improving the statistics available to the Committee, which it agreed to take up at its next session. It requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare an analysis of the functioning and application of price indicators, and an analysis of the range of tungsten products, specifications and grades required by the international market, with a view to identifying marketing and pricing differences and, if appropriate, the feasibility of rationalizing that range of products.

Other products

Cocoa. The International Cocoa Agreement, concluded in November 1980 by the United Nations Cocoa Conference,<sup>(*)</sup> entered into force provisionally on 1 August 1981.

As at 31 December 1981, 14 States had adhered to the Agreement by ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to it; another 25 States and the European Economic Community had undertaken to apply it provisionally, and 2 others (Colombia, Zaire) had signed without ratifying (all during 1981). Those which had definitively adhered were:

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Dominica, German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Hungary, Jamaica, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR.

States applying the Agreement provisionally were:

Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Haiti, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Sao Tome and Principe, Spain, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Meat. The Third Preparatory Meeting on Meat, held at Geneva from 30 November to 4 December 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> concluded that it was necessary to develop a co-ordinated international programme covering research and development, market promotion and other developmental measures for trade in livestock and meat. The Meeting agreed that project profiles of development measures presented by African and Latin American Governments, costed at $70.8 million for Africa and $58.9 million for Latin America, should be expanded into full projects by the secretariats of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), with a view to sponsorship by the FAO Intergovernmental Group on Meat for financing by the second account of the Common Fund for Commodities (p. 550) and other international financing institutions.

The project profiles endorsed by the Meeting had been prepared on the basis of project proposals submitted by individual countries. They were discussed and revised at regional seminars organized in 1981 by the UNCTAD secretariat and the respective United Nations regional commissions and held at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia (25-28 May) for the African region, at San Jose, Costa Rica (9-12 June) for Central American countries, and at Santiago, Chile (15-18 June) for South American countries.

The three seminars also recommended that a programme of developmental measures on hides and skins, also for second account financing, be elaborated as a part of the preparatory work on meat. As an alternative approach, they suggested that the UNCTAD Committee on Commodities decide on giving hides and skins the same status as the 18 commodities covered by the Integrated Programme for Commodities. The Preparatory Meeting on Meat endorsed the latter approach and recommended that the Committee consider it at its next session.

Tropical timber. Work towards an international arrangement or arrangements on tropical timber continued in 1981 in a preparatory meeting and two intergovernmental groups of experts. The Fifth Preparatory Meeting on Tropical Timber (second part), which met at Geneva from 7 to 18 July, <sup>(3)</sup> agreed on criteria for the selection of research and development projects and called for studies on market intelligence and on reforestation and forest management.

With regard to research and development, the Meeting agreed that the task of proposing a list of projects, evaluating cost estimates and proposing priorities should be given to an expert body. Accordingly, the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Research and Development for Tropical Timber, convened for the purpose at Geneva from 16 to 20 November,<sup>(2)</sup> organized 42 research and development project profiles into five broad programmes and suggested a percentage share of resource allocation for each: wood utilization (40 per cent); natural forest development (30 per cent); reforestation development (15 per cent); harvesting, logging and manpower development, and institutional framework and national planning (two programmes, 15 per cent). The projects, at an estimated cost of $106 million, had been prepared by three regional seminars (for Africa, Asia and Latin America) which met at Geneva during the Group's session. The second account of the Common Fund for Commodities (p. 550) was envisaged as the main source of financing.

Concerning market intelligence, the Preparatory Meeting considered possible measures to strengthen ongoing activities, including the establishment of alternative mechanisms for an early-warning system, and requested a study suggesting proposals to achieve an optimum flow of market information. The study was examined by the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Improvement of Market Intelligence on Tropical Timber, which met at Geneva from 23 to 27 November.<sup>(1)</sup> The Group agreed on a proposal for a mechanism of monitoring, evaluation and meetings between producers and consumers on the market situation and short-term prospects. The experts also identified the types of data and indicators to be provided by countries under an international agreement on tropical timber.

In the area of reforestation and forest management, the Preparatory Meeting asked for a paper on reforestation needs for industrial tropical timber.

The United Nations Environment Programme and FAO completed in 1981 a world-wide assessment of tropical forests (p. 831).

Vegetable oils and oilseeds. The Fourth Preparatory Meeting on Vegetable Oils and Oilseeds, held at Geneva from 2 to 5 March 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> approved programmes on research and development for coconuts, ground-nuts and their products, encompassing production and productivity improvement, processing improvement and product development, information and documentation. The Meeting agreed that these programmes were suitable for submission to financing institutions, particularly the second account of the Common Fund for Commodities (p. 550). It also agreed that no new international body was needed to supervise implementation of the programmes, but that the FAO Intergovernmental Group on Oilseeds, Oils and Fats would be an appropriate body to sponsor them.

TNCs and commodity trade

The Trade and Development Board decided twice, on 20 March and 9 October 1981, to remit to its following session consideration of a draft resolution on transnational corporations (TNC) and international commodity trade.<sup>(1)</sup> The draft had been submitted by Group D (centrally planned economies) to the fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in 1979. Group B (developed market economies) took the view the draft should be remitted to the Commission on Transnational Corporations.

Committee on Commodities

The Trade and Development Board, on 20 March 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> took note of the report of the Committee on Commodities on its ninth session (Geneva, 29 September-7 October 1980).<sup>(6)</sup> The Board endorsed the Committee resolution urging the early entry into force of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities (p. 550) and the 1979 International Natural Rubber Agreement,<sup>(5)</sup> as well as a resolution setting out the Committee's work programme relating to negotiations on individual commodities and other aspects of the Integrated Programme for Commodities.

The General Assembly, in its resolution of 16 December 1981 on UNCTAD,<sup>(3)</sup> took note of the Committee's work programme. The original draft resolution, submitted by Algeria for the Group of 77 and later withdrawn,<sup>(1)</sup> contained no reference to the Committee.

On 7 October, the Trade and Development Board decided to reschedule sessions of the Committee and its Permanent Sub-Committee on Commodities from November 1981 to February 1982. This decision was incorporated into the revised calendar of UNCTAD meetings (p. 538) which the Board approved on 9 October.<sup>(4)</sup>

Revision of the Multifibre Arrangement

The General Assembly, by a resolution adopted without vote on 16 December 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> appealed to countries-particularly developed countries-participating in the negotiations then under way on extension of the Arrangement regarding International Trade in Textiles, generally known as the Multifibre Arrangement, to show the necessary political will and mutual accommodation to achieve an expansion of trade in textiles and clothing, a reduction of barriers to such trade and its progressive liberalization, while ensuring its equitable development and avoiding disruptive effects. The Assembly recalled that one of the principal aims of the Arrangement was to further the economic and social development of developing countries and to secure a substantial increase in their export earnings from textiles.

The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee approved the resolution without vote on 10 December. The text, proposed by a Vice-Chairman, was based on informal consultations on a draft sponsored by Algeria for the Group of 77, introduced by the Philippines and subsequently withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup>

The resolution differed from the Group of 77 draft in that the adopted text omitted a request to the UNCTAD Secretary-General and the Director-General of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) to assist participating countries, particularly developing countries, in connection with the negotiations on the Arrangement. In addition, the adopted text added a phrase calling for the avoidance of disruptive effects in individual markets and on individual lines of production in both importing and exporting countries.

Jordan, though joining in the consensus on the resolution, said it would not be bound by the results of the negotiations, being neither a participant in them nor a member of GATT.

In the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, the Philippines mentioned that trade in textiles and clothing, though a dynamic element in the development efforts of developing countries, continued to be dominated by the developed countries, which imported from each other 54 per cent of total world imports of textiles, as against 24 per cent from developing countries.

On 22 December at Geneva, the GATT Textiles Committee decided to extend the Arrangement until 31 July 1986 (p. 1484). The Arrangement was originally negotiated under GATT auspices in 1973.<sup>(3)</sup>

Adopted without vote Meeting 100 16 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add.3) without vote. 10 December (meeting 47); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.152). based on informal consultations on draft by Algeria, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/36/L.116); agenda item 69 (c).

Arrangement regarding International Trade In Textiles
The General Assembly,

Noting that the Arrangement regarding International Trade in Textiles, also known as the Multifibre Arrangement, adopted by the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade at Geneva on 20 December 1973 for a period of four years, was extended by the Protocol of 14 December 1977 and will expire on 31 December 1981,

Convinced that trade in textiles and clothing is a dynamic element in the development efforts of many developing countries,

Believing that the establishment of an orderly and equitable conduct of trade in textiles and clothing is in the interest of all countries,

Noting that negotiations are in progress at Geneva on the revision or modification of the Arrangement,

1. Appeals to all countries participating in the current negotiations on the Arrangement regarding International Trade in Textiles, in particular to developed countries, to show the necessary political will and spirit of mutual accommodation, inter alia, to achieve an expansion of trade in textiles and clothing, a reduction of the barriers to such trade and the progressive liberalization of world trade in textile products, while at the same time ensuring the orderly and equitable development of such trade and avoiding disruptive effects in individual markets and on individual lines of production in both importing and exporting countries;

2. Recalls that one of the principal aims of the Arrangement is to further the economic and social development of developing countries and to secure a substantial increase in their export earnings from textile trade;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade for the information of the Contracting Parties and other countries participating in the negotiations.

Consumer protection

The Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council in June 1981 a report<sup>(3)</sup> proposing consumer protection measures which States might consider adopting, particularly in developing countries. Prepared in accordance with a 1979 Council request,<sup>(4)</sup> the report concluded that a concerted effort was needed by Governments, business communities and labour and consumer groups, and especially by consumers, to cope with problems ranging from defective weights and measures to misleading advertising and restrictive business practices. Consumers needed education and information to uphold their dealings in the market-place. A government role was also vital in legislating and enforcing standards. In developing countries, consumer protection should concentrate on food and pharmaceuticals.

Measures suggested for consideration by States included: adoption of a consumer protection policy; creation of governmental advisory and regulatory machinery; elaboration of standards for product safety and quality of consumer goods and services; implementation of national standards; national regulation of business practices covering the regulation of sales and accurate description of goods; encouragement of business communities to adhere to voluntary standards; adoption of a policy for improving the distribution system for essential consumer goods and services; measures to enable consumers to obtain redress; provision of consumer education and information programmes; and adoption of legislation against economic crimes and other offences harmful to consumers. The report also proposed measures specifically related to food, water and pharmaceuticals.

Concerning organizational arrangements in the United Nations system, the report concluded that there seemed no need for changes as collaboration among agencies had been working smoothly.

A draft of the Secretary-General's report was reviewed by an ad hoc inter-agency meeting on consumer protection held at Geneva on 1 and 2 April.<sup>(1)</sup> The meeting also discussed preparations for a Regional Consultation on consumer protection, convened at Bangkok, Thailand, from 2 to 8 June. The Regional Consultation made recommendations in the areas of government policy, consumer education and information, food and consumer protection, drugs and consumer protection, restrictive business practices and international trade, as well as practices of transnational corporations and distribution problems in rural areas, including the role of consumer co-operatives. Extracts from the report of the Regional Consultation were transmitted to the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(2)</sup>

On 23 July, the Council adopted without vote a resolution<sup>(3)</sup> by which it recommended that Governments take into account the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report in the formulation of consumer protection policy measures, national and international. The Council requested him to continue consultations looking towards the elaboration of guidelines on consumer protection, taking into account the needs of developing countries, and to report in 1983 with proposals, including the possibility of convening an intergovernmental meeting on the guidelines.

The Council's Third (Programme and Coordination) Committee approved the text without vote on 17 July, on the basis of a lo-nation draft introduced by Venezuela, orally revised in informal consultations and further revised by an oral amendment by the USSR, accepted by the sponsors. The original text contained a request, dropped from the revised version, that the Secretary-General convene an intergovernmental working group to elaborate a draft set of basic principles on consumer protection. The USSR amendment deleted the word "al" before "Governments" in the paragraph recommending that Governments take the Secretary-General's recommendations into account.

Consumer protection

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Its resolution 1979/74 of 3 August 1979,

Considering the increasing need for the effective protection of consumers, particularly in developing countries, against practices harmful to the interests of consumers,

Conscious of the need for reliance on an International basic policy framework that provides guidance and encouragement for further efforts in consumer protection on a worldwide scale,

Taking into account that the primary responsibility for consumer protection rests with each State, Having considered the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on consumer protection.

Having noted the recommendations of the Regional Consultation on consumer protection organized by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and held at Bangkok from 2 to 8 June 1981,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on consumer protection and recommends that Governments should take his recommendations into account in the formulation of consumer protection policy measures at the national and international levels;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, drawing upon the views of individual Member States, United Nations organs, agencies and programmes concerned, and the regional commissions, to continue consultations on consumer protection, within existing resources, with the aim of pursuing, inter alia, the elaboration of a set of general guidelines for consumer protection, taking particularly into account the needs of the developing countries and, in the light of his findings, to submit a report with appropriate proposals, covering, inter alia, the possibility of convening an intergovernmental meeting on the guidelines, to the Council at its second regular session of 1983.

Finance

The General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Trade and Development Board dealt in 1981 with several aspects of the financial problems of developing countries. A report was presented on the mobilization of personal savings as a source of investment capital for development (see below). The Assembly urged the adoption of measures to relieve the debt problems of developing countries (p. 559) and a proposal for a world development fund was reviewed (p. 560).

To discuss reform of the international monetary system, the Assembly urged the convening of the second session of an intergovernmental group of experts as early as possible in 1982 (p. 561). A Working Group on International Monetary and Financial Issues, convened in October, recommended measures to bring about international monetary stability (p. 561). Agreement was reached that all members of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development could take part in the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on an Export Credit Guarantee Facility (p. 562).

A proposal for an international centre for public accounting and auditing was also under study (p. 562), to supplement technical assistance already being rendered (p. 563). The Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters, at its first meeting in December, considered proposals for expanding its role (p. 564).

Development finance and investment

Mobilization of savings

In May 1981, the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(3)</sup> on the results of the International Symposium on the Mobilization of Personal Savings in Developing Countries, organized by the United Nations and held at Kingston, Jamaica, from 4 to 9 February 1980.<sup>(2)</sup> This was the first of two regional symposia—the other to be held in 1982—of bankers, economists, finance ministry officials and representatives of international organizations, representing the culmination of a United Nations research programme into the savings problems of developing countries. The findings, as finalized by the symposia, were to constitute a working tool for policy-makers and savings and credit officials in developing countries.

The 1980 Symposium made a number of recommendations on the mobilization of personal savings in developing countries, including the following: developing countries should continue efforts to stimulate public and private savings as an essential ingredient for development; Governments should use various tax and other incentives to encourage personal savings, with special emphasis on non-savers and small savers; further attention should be given to encouragement of saving at the grass-roots level and to the role of co-operatives and related institutions; funds accumulated under social security and similar schemes should be channelled into productive investment; interest rate policy should be aimed at channelling savings into the most appropriate forms; attempts should be made to stimulate the growth of contractual saving adapted to people's needs and possibilities; consideration should be given to special forms of protecting savings against substantial inflation; new sources of information on saving behaviour should be developed; and lending procedures should be improved.

The Economic and Social Council, by a decision of 23 July<sup>(5)</sup> taken without vote on an oral proposal by the President, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Symposium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. Also noting the Secretary-General's report as well as suggestions made during its debate, the General Assembly, by a resolution of 19 November,<sup>(4)</sup> affirmed the need to encourage development of indigenous financial institutions and to foster governmental and institutional exchanges of ideas and information on the mobilization of personal savings. It requested the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council in 1982 on the results of the Second International Symposium on the Mobilization of Personal Savings in Developing Countries, to be held at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, in March 1982.

The resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text on 30 October in like manner. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a draft sponsored by Barbados, Costa Rica, Jamaica, Malaysia and Sweden<sup>(1)</sup> which was later withdrawn. The only difference between the two texts was that the original did not refer to the suggestions made during the debate.

During the Committee's discussion, Egypt remarked that, in addition to domestic savings, there should be a continued increase in the flow of capital from developed to developing countries. The USSR observed that the report and recommendations of the 1980 Symposium ignored the rich experience of the USSR and other socialist countries with the mobilization of personal savings, which might prove useful for the developing countries in solving their economic problems.

Results of the 1980 International Symposium on the Mobilization of Personal Savings
 in Developing Countries

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1981, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the results of the 1980 International Symposium on the Mobilization of Personal Savings in Developing Countries.

General Assembly resolution 36/42

Adopted without vote Meeting 64 19 November 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/691) without vote, 30 October (meeting 28); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.19), based on informal consultations on 5-nation draft (A/C.2/36/L.9); agenda item 12.

Mobilization of personal savings

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Bearing in mind the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, in particular paragraph 23, which deals with the mobilization of domestic financial resources in developing countries,

Convinced of the necessity and importance of intensifying efforts to mobilize personal savings in developing countries so as to maximize financial resources available for accelerated development,

Emphasizing that, while developing countries will continue to bear the main responsibility for financing their development, external financial resources, particularly official development assistance, constitute an indispensable element of support for the developing countries' own efforts,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the results of the 1980 International Symposium on the Mobilization of Personal Savings in Developing Countries and the suggestions made during the debate;

2. Affirms the need to encourage development of appropriate indigenous financial institutions and to foster governmental and institutional exchanges of ideas and information in the field of mobilization of personal savings;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982 on the results of the Second International Symposium on the Mobilization of Personal Savings in Developing Countries, to be held at Kuala Lumpur in March 1982.

Debt reorganization and servicing

TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD CONSIDERATION. A report updating previous reviews on debt-relief measures for developing countries taken by developed donor countries, and analysing the impact of such action on the debt problems of developing countries, was submitted to the Trade and Development Board in July 1981.<sup>(3)</sup> The report noted that in 1977, prior to the Board's adoption in 1978 of a resolution calling for retroactive adjustment of terms of official development assistance (ODA),<sup>(5)</sup> developing countries had owed $43.7 billion of bilateral ODA to creditor countries. Since then, over 45 developing countries had received benefits under the resolution from developed market-economy countries. The total nominal value of debt relief granted had been $5.7 billion, including $3.3 billion in write-offs (of which $2.7 billion had been owed by least developed countries) and $2.2 billion in "equivalent action", mainly additional grants and loans commensurate with debt service due.

Total debt outstanding (ODA and non-ODA) at the end of 1980 was estimated at $446 billion, compared to $265 billion in 1977.

The report contained four suggestions: the geographical coverage of beneficiary countries should be defined less ambiguously so as to ensure widespread and equitable distribution of benefits; the nature of debt relief should be spelt out in more concrete terms and any relief should be additional to projected aid levels; as rapid implementation was of the essence, the time-frame for action should be clearly defined; and procedures for claiming debt-relief benefits should be clarified.

The Board included this item in the provisional agenda for its first session of 1982, approved on 9 October 1981.<sup>(2)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. In its resolution of 16 December 1981 on UNCTAD,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly urged developed countries to seek to continue to adopt retroactive adjustment of ODA terms, or equivalent measures, and strongly urged donor countries to implement fully and immediately the 1978 Trade and Development Board resolution to that effect. It urged implementation of the Board's resolution of September 1980 endorsing detailed features for future action relating to the debt problems of developing countries,<sup>(6)</sup> and requested the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) to continue to review the application of those features.

Introducing this text, a Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee said the purpose of the request to the UNCTAD Secretary-General was to have him fulfil the mandate given him by the Board in 1978.

The resolution omitted a clause contained in the original draft, submitted to the Second Committee by Algeria for the Group of 77 and later withdrawn,<sup>(1)</sup> by which the Assembly would have urged the UNCTAD Secretary-General and the heads of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to consult further on procedures for responding to requests from developing countries for analysis of debt problems, as envisaged in the Board's 1980 resolution. This was replaced by a clause urging implementation of the 1980 resolution, bearing in mind the agreement that the Board would review in 1983 the arrangements for future action relating to the debt problems of developing countries.

The paragraph was adopted in Committee by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 123 to 1.

Voting against, the United States said UNCTAD should not be entrusted with considering financial questions within the exclusive competence of the World Bank and IMF; moreover, the consultations of the UNCTAD Secretary-General with those organizations had already been completed. The United Kingdom said the European Community members had voted for the paragraph on the basis of the interpretation reached in informal consultations, as stated by the Vice-Chairman. Algeria said the one negative vote was a retrograde step with regard to agreements already reached in UNCTAD.

In the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, the Byelorussian SSR said the external indebtedness of developing countries was growing as a result of drastic price fluctuations in international trade and intensified protectionism by capitalist countries against developing countries' exports. China urged consideration of special measures to help solve the difficulties faced by some developing countries with serious balance-of-payments difficulties; leaving the solution to the international financial market would aggravate those countries' debt situation and contribute to the instability of the financial market. The United Republic of Cameroon regretted that the application of measures to lighten the debt burden of developing countries was restrictive and selective; the measures approved by the Trade and Development Board should be put into effect fully and without discrimination.

Proposed development fund

As requested by the General Assembly in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, adopted in December 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in October 1981 a report outlining elements of a proposed world development fund.<sup>(2)</sup> The report noted the origin of the idea in the 1980 report of the Independent Commission on International Development Issues, chaired by Willy Brandt and generally referred to as the "Brandt Commission". Urging a substantial increase in the volume of resources transferred to developing countries, the Commission thought that, in addition to enlarging the flow of capital through existing channels, there was a good case for creating a new multilateral institution for channelling a significant proportion of resources to developing countries.

Discussing the rationale for a world development fund, the report identified two main factors in support of a new institution as opposed to reform of existing institutions: the need for programme lending, not met by the World Bank and similar institutions which concentrated on project lending; and the need for a new approach to decision-making in multilateral financial institutions, with decisions taken by consensus and no group, debtors or creditors, allowed to dominate. The fund's main purpose and functions would be to promote development and to stimulate the world economy by filling gaps in the international financial system and effect further resource transfers to the poorest member countries, with special emphasis on the general support of development plans (programme lending) and lending for energy and minerals through an institution which would provide the machinery for universal consultation and collaboration on world development, on the basis of equality of its members.

The report mentioned the Commission secretariat's estimate that the fund would need $120 billion for its first seven years of operation.

The General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on 4 December.<sup>(1)</sup> The decision was taken without vote, following its approval by the Second Committee on 1 December in like manner, on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

Commenting on the proposed fund in the Second Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, Egypt described the idea as promising, stating that the proposals on membership, voting and management would prevent any group of countries from controlling decision-making and ensure that developing countries had a say in decisions. The Philippines said establishment of the fund would be justified only if it was assured of supplementary funds from sources other than those currently being tapped. These countries urged further study of the proposal.

World development fund

At its 84th plenary meeting, on 4 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on a world development fund.

Access to capital markets

The Trade and Development Board, on 9 October 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> decided to refer to its March 1982 session a proposal by the Group of 77 to have the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) evaluate conditions for the access of developing countries to capital markets, especially in the light of the level of interest rates, and their impact on debt servicing and the balance-of-payments situation of developing countries.

In the General Assembly's Second Committee, Romania regretted that a few developed countries had refused to support the Group of 77 proposal; it said the access of developing countries to capital markets, from which unduly high interest rates currently excluded them, should be a major concern of UNCTAD.

Monetary issues

Reform of the international monetary system

The General Assembly, in its resolution of 16 December 1981 on UNCTAD,<sup>(1)</sup> noted with concern the delay in convening the second session of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental High-level Group of Experts on the Evolution of the International Monetary System and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene the Group as early as possible in 1982.. It urged all members of UNCTAD to participate and requested that the Group's report, together with the comments of the Trade and Development Board, should be made available to the Assembly in 1982. The first session of the Group had been held in July/August 1980.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Second Committee approved this paragraph on 11 December by a recorded vote of 100 to 17, with 7 abstentions.

Voting against the paragraph, Japan and Sweden explained that their position had not changed since the 1979 session of UNCTAD, where they had voted against the resolution on monetary reform.<sup>(2)</sup> The United States said the monetary questions dealt with in UNCTAD should be resolved within that organization and not re-examined in the Assembly; the United States had not attended and would not attend any meeting of the Group of Experts.

Speaking on behalf of the European Community members, which voted against or abstained, the United Kingdom said that, within its mandate, UNCTAD could play a catalytic role in discussions on trade and related problems of economic development while fully respecting the competence of relevant institutions.

Norway, which abstained in the vote on the paragraph, recalled that in 1979 it had supported the establishment of the Ad Hoc Group; it had participated as an observer at the Group's first session and proposed to do the same at the second.

Among those voting for the paragraph, Algeria said the Group of 77 deplored the fact that several countries had voted against, thereby opposing the meetings of a group whose work was fully in keeping with the UNCTAD mandate. Poland, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stated that those countries had participated in the Group's meetings and believed its activities were fully consistent with the UNCTAD mandate.

In the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, the Gambia thought that the restructuring of the international monetary system was long overdue; it wished to see greater participation by developing countries in decision-making in the International Monetary Fund and opposed the idea that their participation should be proportionate to their financial contributions.

Working Group on International Monetary and Financial Issues

A Working Group on International Monetary and Financial Issues, established by the Committee for Development Planning at its March/April 1981 session, met in New York from 5 to 7 October to examine critical issues posed by the world economic situation.

In its report,<sup>(1)</sup> the Working Group observed that there was a need to strengthen the role of international institutions in three critical respects: through a more development-oriented economic adjustment process emphasizing investment, trade and equitable burden-sharing; through recycling capital surpluses into capital-deficit countries and improving distribution among countries; and through greater international control over the supply and distribution of newly created global liquidity. The Group also called for international support for new initiatives in South-South monetary and financial co-operation. It recommended a set of national and international measures related to these issues, to stimulate world economic recovery and bring about international monetary stability.

Trade-related finance

Proposed establishment of an export credit guarantee facility

The President of the Trade and Development Board announced on 9 October 1981 that it had been agreed in informal consultations that the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on an Export Credit Guarantee Facility, to be convened in accordance with a 1980 decision by the Board's Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade,<sup>(3)</sup> would be open to participation by all members of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). The Board noted the agreement on the same day.<sup>(2)</sup> On 6 November, in reviewing the calendar of UNCTAD meetings (p. 538), the Board decided that the Group would meet from 11 to 22 January 1982.<sup>(1)</sup>

Public finance

Government accounting and auditing

Proposed centre

A proposal to establish an international centre for public accounting and auditing, put forward in 1980 by the Fifth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance,<sup>(4)</sup> remained under study in 1981. The Economic and Social Council, in July, requested preparation of a feasibility study and project proposal.

The views of 43 States on the subject were analysed in a May 1981 report of the Secretary-General,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted in accordance with a 1980 Council request.<sup>(2)</sup> Thirty States supported the proposal for a centre to promote the training of public officials of developing countries. Four others (Denmark, Japan, Luxembourg, Norway) were not opposed in principle to the establishment of a centre but expressed concern about duplication of training activities of national institutions, excessive costs and relationships with international and regional institutions. Three States (Finland, Federal Republic of Germany, United Kingdom) were of the view that the centre should not be established without further study of needs and objectives. Six States (Belgium, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, German Democratic Republic, USSR, United States) expressed opposition to its establishment, believing that existing programmes of the United Nations and the United Nations Development Programme could serve the purpose.

The report mentioned that experts attending a United Nations Workshop on Public Accounting and Auditing (New York, 2-10 March) (p. 563) believed the proposed centre would be of great assistance to developing countries and recommended that it should concentrate on the development of generally accepted principles and standards in accounting and auditing and on the training of trainers.

By a resolution 22 July,<sup>(3)</sup> the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to submit in 1982 a feasibility study, including a project proposal for the centre, taking into account work being carried out by existing regional centres and international institutions. The Council recognized that the proposed centre could serve as a focal point for strengthening international technical co-operation in public accounting and auditing, and considered that it would be financed on a voluntary basis.

The resolution was adopted by 49 votes to 1, on the basis of a revised 12-nation draft. The United States, which had requested the vote, said it supported the principle of training public officials in developing countries in accounting and auditing techniques but did not regard establishing a new institution as the best means of achieving that aim; it favoured upgrading and expanding the use of existing facilities and programmes.

India, introducing the original text, said the importance of developing accounting and auditing systems could not be over-emphasized; the developing countries themselves had given the matter high priority at the national level. The proposed centre would be the best means of providing much needed external support and guidance to national and regional institutions. Introducing the revised text, Pakistan explained that it had been altered in informal consultations so as not to prejudice the outcome of the feasibility study.

The Federal Republic of Germany and the USSR said they supported the text on the understanding that the feasibility study would not prejudice the question of establishing a centre and that, if established, it would be financed exclusively on a voluntary basis. The United Kingdom, also supporting the text, requested that the study analyse the supply-and-demand situation with regard to training in public accounting and auditing, and weigh the costs and benefits of strengthening existing institutions against the alternative of establishing an international centre.

International centre for public accounting and auditing
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 33/193 of 29 January 1979 on preparations for an International development strategy for the third United Nations development decade, particularly section I, paragraph 3 (c), thereof, concerning the development of institutional and physical infrastructure in the various development sectors in the developing countries, and 32/179 of 19 December 1977, 33/1 44 of 20 December 1978 and 34/137 of 14 December 1979 on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries.

Recalling also its resolutions 1978/6 of 4 May 1978 and 1980/12 of 28 April 1980 on public administration and finance for development in the 1980s, and 1978/60 of 3 August 1978 and 1979/48 of 31 July 1979 on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries,

Further recalling its resolution 1979/47 of 31 July 1979 on public accounting and auditing for national development,

Reiterating the necessity and importance of the role of public accounting and auditing in the effective management of national development plans and programmes in developing countries and the urgency of the need to organize training activities at all levels in order to support national efforts to improve the accounting and auditing systems of those countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the proposal for the establishment of an international centre for public accounting and auditing, and of the views expressed thereon by Member States;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982 a feasibility study, including a project proposal for the centre, taking into account work being carried out by existing regional centres and international institutions;

3. Recognises that the proposed centre could serve as a focal point for strengthening international technical co-operation in the field of public accounting and auditing, with a view to:

(a) Promoting the training of trainers and the professionalization of standards for public officials of developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, in the relevant disciplines;

(b) Providing effective support to national, subregional and regional institutes concerned with public accounting and auditing in strengthening their technical and training capabilities;

(c) Promoting co-operation among national and regional supreme audit institutions and accounting agencies of developing countries, with a view to facilitating the exchange of experience and technical expertise and the identification of issues of common interest in the field of training;

(d) Promoting the exchange of experience and information between developed and developing countries in training in the field of public accounting and auditing;

4. Considers that the proposed centre would be financed on a voluntary basis.

Technical co-operation

Thirty-one technical co-operation projects in public budgeting, tax administration, financial management and auditing were carried out in 1981 by the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development. These were part of the Department's development administration programme, which also encompassed public administration (p. 398).

As part of this programme, a Workshop on Public Accounting and Auditing was held at United Nations Headquarters from 2 to 10 March 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> in response to a 1979 Economic and Social Council resolution.<sup>(2)</sup> Attended by 12 officials from different regions, the Workshop made recommendations on ways of strengthening public financial management through improved practices, national and regional training of personnel, and international efforts to develop accounting and auditing principles and provide training materials. It also suggested activities by the United Nations, including the provision of expertise, the preparation of technical guidelines and the exchange of information.

An Expert Working Group on Network in Public Administration and Finance (Alcalá de Henares, Spain, 9-15 December) focused on the potential for global co-operation and joint activities in this field.

Country projects in Liberia and Madagascar for the management of financial resources commenced in 1981 under a programme of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development designed to assist Governments to monitor external flows of capital and other financial resources.

Taxation

Proposed intergovernmental body

Pursuant to a 1980 request of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Council in May 1981 a report on his consultations with Governments and international organizations regarding the desirability and feasibility of establishing a direct tax co-operation council.<sup>(1)</sup> He stated that, while there was a consensus among those consulted on the need for a forum in which selected international taxation issues could be discussed by developed and developing countries, there were varying views about the functions and institutional framework of such a forum. Taking the replies into account, and in the light of budgetary and technical considerations, he suggested that the functions in question could be entrusted to the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters (see below). If the Council agreed in principle to give the Group additional functions, the Group could be asked to make specific proposals on those functions and the priorities to be accorded to them.

The Council, on 23 July,<sup>(3)</sup> decided without vote, on the proposal of its President, to transmit the Secretary-General's suggestions to the Group and requested the Group to make specific proposals on them.

In the discussion, Bulgaria and the USSR said they would have no difficulty with the call for further study but were opposed to the establishment of a new United Nations body. The Byelorussian SSR reaffirmed its similar position as set forth in the Secretary-General's report. These countries added that matters relating to the payment of taxes by foreign companies were political questions to be considered in bodies such as the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the Council. Canada endorsed the Secretary-General's suggestions.

Adopted without vote

Draft by President (E/1981/L.55): agenda Item 3.

International co-operation in tax matters

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1981, the Council:

(a) Took note of the report by the Secretary-General on the results of consultations with Governments and International organizations concerning the desirability and feasibility of establishing a direct tax co-operation council;

(b) Decided to transmit the suggestions of the Secretary-General contained in chapter III thereof to the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters, for consideration at its next meeting in December 1981, and to request the Ad Hoc Group to make specific proposals thereon;

(c) Decided to request the Secretary-General to report to the Council at its first regular session of 1982 on the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts.

Role of the Group of Experts on tax matters

The Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters, at its first meeting (Geneva, 7-18 December 1981) since it was renamed in April 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> responded to the Economic and Social Council's request for comments regarding its functions as an international forum for taxation issues (see above).

The Group agreed that it could usefully serve as a forum where developed and developing countries could discuss issues relating to direct tax co-operation, exchange experiences in the tax field and formulate policy suggestions for possible use by Governments. In that role, its functions should include: facilitation of international co-operation in preventing tax evasion and avoidance and in dealing with transfer pricing and the allocation of income and expenses; review and updating of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries, adopted by the Group in 1979; examination of the impact of tax treaties with a view to assessing their effectiveness in improving the flow of investment and achieving their other objectives; efforts to promote an understanding and knowledge of tax treaties; exchanges of experience on fiscal problems; dissemination of information about work in the fiscal field and about technical assistance available; and any additional functions in the area of tax relationships between countries and assistance to tax authorities.

The Group suggested that it should discharge its expanded functions by acting through meetings of the Group as a whole, a steering committee, or standing or ad hoc working parties.

The Group's recommendations were contained in a report on its meeting<sup>(1)</sup> and in a report of the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(2)</sup>

Insurance

The Trade and Development Board, on 20 March 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> took note of the report of the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade on the second part of its ninth session (September/October 1980), devoted to insurance.<sup>(2)</sup> The Board endorsed a resolution by which the Committee proposed steps to retain more insurance business in the national markets of developing countries. The Board also decided that the second part of the Committee's tenth session, in 1982, should be devoted to insurance.

Under its technical co-operation programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development supported four country projects and two regional projects on insurance, funded by the United Nations Development Programme: in Kenya, for the formulation of legislation; in Liberia, for the training of nationals; in Mali, for a market study with emphasis on marine insurance; in Malta, for the establishment and administration of an insurance department in the Ministry of Finance; support to the West African Insurance Institute, established in 1979 in Monrovia, Liberia, by five English-speaking countries of West Africa; and a training programme for Asian countries consisting of short-term regional seminars on specialized subjects and longer-term courses on general insurance and insurance management. Two short-term seminars, on motor and life insurance, were held in 1981 under the Asian Project.

Chapter V

Transport, communications and tourism

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and its subsidiary bodies continued in 1981 to deal with problems of transport, particularly shipping.

The Trade and Development Board approved in October the convening of an intergovernmental group that was to recommend principles for a possible international agreement on problems created by ships flying so-called flags of convenience, also known as open-registry fleets, which often have only tenuous economic links to the State with which they are registered. The action was recommended by the Board's Committee on Shipping, which devoted its third special session to the subject (Geneva, 27 May-6 June) (p. 566).

On other shipping topics, work continued on an international model for marine insurance contracts and a group of experts made recommendations to help developing countries participate more fully in the carriage of bulk cargoes (p. 567). The technical co-operation programme of UNCTAD in the areas of shipping, ports and multimodal transport, aimed at reducing the dependence of developing countries on foreign shipping, amounted to $3.9 million in 1981 (p. 567). In June, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNCTAD) authorized UNDP action to aid maritime transport training institutions of multinational scope in developing countries (p. 568).

The UNCTAD secretariat circulated a report in July which found that discriminatory practices hindered the growth of air transport in developing countries (p. 568). The High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries requested in June that developed countries and international financial institutions consider increasing substantially their support for transport and communications infrastructure (p. 568).

The Economic and Social Council took note in May of work done by its Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and recommended that the Committee's recommendations be published as soon as possible.<sup>(1)</sup> Expert groups of the Committee continued their activities during the year (p. 569).

As recommended by the Council in July,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly, in November,<sup>(3)</sup> proclaimed 1983 World Communications Year, with the theme "Development of communications infrastructures". The International Telecommunication Union was designated lead agency for the observance.

Efforts were undertaken to secure financing for projects being carried out in connection with the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988) (p. 614). The United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy examined the use of energy in the transport sector, an area where the United Nations Industrial Development Organization was also active (p. 705).

In regard to transport and communications in outer space, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its sub-committees continued to draft principles for the use of direct-broadcast satellites (p. 118) and to monitor progress in space transportation systems (p. 117).

The Assembly urged States to give due attention to principles for tourism development set out in the Manila Declaration of the World Tourism Conference, held at Manila, Philippines, in September/October 1980.<sup>(4)</sup>

Shipping

Flags of convenience. The third special session of the Committee on Shipping, held at Geneva from 27 May to 6 June 1981, was devoted exclusively to open-registry fleets, also known as ships flying flags of convenience.<sup>(2)</sup>

The UNCTAD secretariat issued for the Committee in March a report on the extent to which international conventions on safety and social standards were applied and verified under open-registry flags as compared with other flags.<sup>(4)</sup> It identified 10 basic reasons why standards were more likely to be breached under open-registry flags, all stemming from lack of control of open-registry countries over foreign, non-resident owners, managers and crews. The difficulties which open-registry countries encountered in controlling shipping operations under their flags stemmed directly from the lack of economic linkage between a vessel and its flag State. The disorderly development of the world fleet could be largely attributed to the existence of open registries, as tax-sheltered profits had been recycled into new building, leading to over-capacity in the shipping and shipbuilding industries. Further, the benefits which developing labour-supplying countries enjoyed from supplying crews to open-registry ships were unstable.

The Committee, on 6 June, adopted a resolution<sup>(6)</sup> recommending that the current régime of open registries be gradually and progressively transformed into one of normal registries by a process of tightening the conditions under which open-registry countries accepted or maintained ships on their registers, so that they would be capable of identifying owners and operators and making them accountable for all shipping operations, including the maintenance of standards and the welfare of crews. It recommended the convening of an intergovernmental preparatory group during the first half of 1982, to propose a set of basic principles governing the conditions under which vessels should be accepted on national shipping registers, with a view to preparing documents for the holding of a United Nations conference to consider the adoption of an international agreement.

The group would recommend principles for the manning of vessels, the role of flag countries in the management of shipowning companies and vessels, equity participation in capital, and identification and accountability of owners and operators. It would also recommend measures to protect the interests of labour-supplying countries and any additional measures needed for ensuring full jurisdiction of the flag State over vessels flying its flag.

This resolution was adopted by a roll-call vote of 49 to 18 (Australia, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Israel, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States), with 3 abstentions.

The Committee annexed to its report two draft resolutions submitted by France and the Federal Republic of Germany, each providing for the establishment of an UNCTAD intergovernmental working group with more limited terms of reference. The proposal by France called for the group to examine measures to improve the conditions under which the responsibilities of shipowners and managers could be engaged; the Committee would consider the group's conclusions so that an international instrument could be drawn up to provide for greater co-operation between port and flag States. The proposal by the Federal Republic of Germany would have the group submit non-mandatory guidelines relating to the conditions under which vessels should be registered and operated in order to facilitate the effective control of States over ships flying their flags and to increase the participation of their economies, in particular those of developing countries, in international shipping.

The Trade and Development Board, on 9 October, adopted the Committee's report and approved the convening of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Group on Conditions for Registration of Ships.<sup>(3)</sup> The meeting was scheduled for April 1982.<sup>(8)</sup> Explaining to the Board its negative vote in the Committee on Shipping, Liberia said the resolution represented an intransigent and uncompromising attitude which could lead only to deadlock, confrontation and recrimination at a time when the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea (p. 127) was drafting a convention that would deal with the matter. The Group of 77, however, reiterated its view that the resolution had set in motion a practical mechanism for dealing with the open-registry system. Group D (centrally planned economies) said it had voted in favour because it considered that open registries had been a main factor in disrupting the shipping market and the orderly development of merchant fleets.

The adoption of the report by the Board was noted by the General Assembly in a resolution of 16 December 1981 on UNCTAD.<sup>(7)</sup> The subject was not mentioned in the original draft resolution,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted by Algeria for the Group of 77 and later withdrawn in favour of a text submitted on the basis of consultations by a Vice-Chairman of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

During the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, the United Republic of Cameroon said the decision to convene a preparatory group on the registration of vessels was important to developing countries since it would foster the establishment of genuine merchant fleets in those countries.

An annual review by the UNCTAD secretariat of the ownership of flag-of-convenience fleets, issued in November,<sup>(2)</sup> indicated that the beneficial ownership and control of those fleets continued to be dominated by the United States, Hong Kong, Greece and Japan, in that order. Together they beneficially owned 73.9 per cent and managed 67.2 per cent of the world's dead-weight tonnage.

Shipping insurance. At its eighth session, held at Geneva from 12 to 30 October 1981, the Working Group on International Shipping Legislation continued elaborating a set of standard clauses as a non-mandatory international model for marine insurance contracts, covering both marine hull and cargo insurance. It adopted and annexed to its report<sup>(2)</sup> composite texts on a set of "all risks" clauses and a set of "named perils" clauses for marine hull insurance contracts, and a set of "all risks" clauses for marine cargo insurance contracts. With regard to a collision liability clause, it drafted alternative provisions to reflect different national approaches and preferences. Agreement was reached on a general average and salvage clause for cargo insurance. The Group agreed to formulate restricted risk coverage clauses at the following session as an alternative to the "all risks" cover.

The work programme of the 1981 session was approved on 20 March 1981<sup>(1)</sup> when the Trade and Development Board endorsed a December 1980 resolution of the Working Group proposing that it be authorized to continue work on both aspects of shipping insurance. Acting on a further recommendation of the Group, adopted on 30 October 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> the Board, on 6 November,<sup>(4)</sup> scheduled the ninth session of the Group for 1982.

Bulk cargoes. The Group of Experts on Problems Faced by the Developing Countries in the Carriage of Bulk Cargoes, established in 1980 by the Committee on Shipping,<sup>(3)</sup> met twice in 1981 at Geneva, from 2 to 6 March<sup>(1)</sup> and from 30 November to 4 December,<sup>(2)</sup> to consider whether barriers existed to the participation of developing countries in the dry bulk trades in iron ore, phosphate, bauxite and alumina. On the basis of responses by major importers and exporters to a questionnaire, the Group, in its final report, agreed that shipping was heavily controlled by buyers, but disagreed as to whether developing countries faced barriers to participation. The Group made seven recommendations to the Committee on Shipping but its members expressed divergent views as to whether those recommendations would be sufficient to solve the problems of developing countries with regard to the bulk cargo trade.

The recommendations called for: the inclusion in sales and purchase contracts of a clause pledging favourable consideration for ships of developing countries; dissemination of information on shipping requirements; offering shipowners of developing countries a chance to participate in regular bulk trade plying a specified route; the establishment of regional and interregional pools for better utilization of transport capacity; the enactment of maritime legislation governing joint ventures; long-term shipping arrangements as a means of providing collateral for long-term financing; and government financing or guarantees for national merchant fleets.

Technical co-operation. In 1981, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) operated a $3.9 million technical co-operation programme in the areas of shipping, ports and multimodal transport, of which the United Nations Development Programme contributed $3.3 million. The aim of the programme was to reduce the dependence of developing countries on foreign shipping and foster the development of trade through lower transport costs and adequate shipping services.

A number of regional and national projects were executed in the interrelated fields of shipping, ports and protection of shippers' interests. UNCTAD provided assistance and direct support to national port authorities in several countries. National personnel were trained through fellowships, seminars and courses, and training material on ports was developed. A pilot project to strengthen local training institutions through the preparation of training courses and materials, training of instructors and course developers, and promotion of co-operation among training institutions was carried out in India, the Ivory Coast and Kenya. During the year, the UNCTAD sectoral adviser in shipping provided advice and direct assistance to 20 countries preparing development programmes.

The Trade and Development Board, on 20 March 1981, took note of the report of the Committee on Shipping on its ninth session in, September 1980<sup>(3)</sup> and endorsed its resolutions on port problems and technical assistance and training, and its decisions on port congestion surcharges and international maritime legislation.<sup>(2)</sup>

At consultations with regional co-ordinators held on 17 November 1981, an item concerning a review of the Committee's work programme was added to the provisional agenda of the Committee's 1982 session.

Training institutions

The High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (p. 463, in a decision of 7 June 1981 on transport and communications among developing countries (see below), requested the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to take steps in identifying and strengthening national maritime transport training facilities which had multinational Scope<sup>(1)</sup>

In response, the Governing Council, on 26 June,<sup>(2)</sup> requested the UNDP Administrator, in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization and other agencies, to enhance the capabilities of maritime transport training institutions with multinational scope in the developing countries through interregional and regional programmes and by assisting them with training specialists, training equipment and fellowships in maritime transport.

Air transport

In accordance with a 1979 UNCTAD request relating to protectionism in the services sector,<sup>(3)</sup>

the UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the Trade and Development Board in July 1981 a report on the effects of discriminatory and unfair civil aviation practices on the growth of air transport in developing countries. The report found that, although the institutional framework for civil aviation provided for equitable relations between States, discriminatory and unfair practices existed in relations between developed and developing countries. In addition, structural disadvantages in many developing countries restricted the development and growth of their airlines.<sup>(2)</sup>

The report identified 13 aspects of particular concern to developing countries: preferential treatment in regard to traffic rights and exchange of routes; greater transparency in bilateral agreements; equal access to fuel; development and promotion of air transport and tourist industries of developing countries; control of airport user charges with a view to eliminating discrimination; financial guarantees by regional and international financial and development institutions for the purchase of aircraft; careful weighing of the balance between fare discounting and airline profitability; examination of the merits of end-to-end and combination fares; removal of restrictions on access to computerized information and reservation systems; closer connections between the airlines of developing countries and hotels abroad; joint purchase of spare parts and the setting up of joint training and maintenance centres; joint management and operating companies; and, in some cases, leasing of traffic rights in order to gain experience without financial risk.

The Board decided on 9 October to consider the question further in 1982.<sup>(1)</sup>

Co-operation among developing countries on transport and communications

The High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (p. 463) on 7 June 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> invited developing countries to intensify and accelerate regional and subregional co-operation in transport and communications, and requested the United Nations development system to consider increasing substantially its support in that area. The Committee recommended that United Nations regional commissions and other bodies of the development system give special consideration to non-conventional means of transport and to the needs of geographically disadvantaged countries. Developed countries and the governing bodies of international financial institutions were invited to consider increasing their financial and material support for transport and communications infrastructure projects and programmes. The Committee also requested the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to strengthen national maritime transport training facilities with multinational scope (p. 568).

The Committee for Development Planning, in the report on its March/April 1981 session to the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(2)</sup> stressed the need for major action on transport and communications, especially in Africa south of the Sahara and in South Asia. The Committee noted that high transport costs impeded the growth and limited the markets of isolated industrial plants. It viewed subregional and regional planning and co-operation as a solution (p. 383).

Treaties

The General Assembly, in a resolution of 16 December on the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,<sup>(*)</sup> called on countries to consider becoming parties to the 1974 United Nations Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences<sup>(2)</sup> and the 1980 United Nations Convention on International Multimodal Transport of Goods.<sup>(3)</sup>

As at 31 December 1981, neither Convention had received sufficient adherences to bring it into force. Fifty-one States owning 20 per cent of the relevant world tonnage had adhered to the Convention on liner conferences (shipping cartels). Six States had signed the Convention on multimodal transport but none had ratified.

In the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, Japan said the adoption of the resolution did not prejudice its Government's position on the Convention on multimodal transport. The United Kingdom reiterated the reservations of the European Community members in regard to both Conventions.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Economic and Social Council, by a resolution of 4 May 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> took note of recommendations made in December 1980<sup>(6)</sup> by its Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous

Goods concerning the listing, classification, packaging and transport of products. This work was part of the Committee's ongoing task of harmonizing codes and regulations relating to the transport of explosives, liquefied gases, radioactive materials and other hazardous substances. The Council also took note of a report of the Secretary-General on the Committee's work in 1980<sup>(2)</sup> and of the Committee's recommendation to postpone further consideration of the question of a multimodal world-wide convention on the transport of dangerous goods. The Secretary-General was requested to publish and circulate the Committee's recommendations (p. 570), and Governments and organizations were invited to comment on them and to take account of them when developing national and international codes and regulations.

The Council decided on 6 May,<sup>(4)</sup> on the Committee's recommendation, to rearrange the 1981 calendar of meetings of the Committee's two subsidiary bodies. On 24 July 1981, in approving a calendar of economic and social meetings in 1982-1983,<sup>(5)</sup> the Council scheduled a session of the Committee and four sessions of its subsidiary bodies in 1982.

The Council's actions in May were taken without vote. The decision was orally proposed by the Council President, while the draft resolution was introduced in the Council's First (Economic) Committee by the United States, also on behalf of Canada, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. The Committee approved the text on 23 April, also without vote.

The Committee of Experts did not meet in 1981. The Group of Rapporteurs, at its twenty-seventh session, held at Geneva from 3 to 14 August, discussed revisions to the general recommendations on packing,<sup>(*)</sup> for which it adopted new specifications and testing procedures and agreed to a revised form of coding and simpler presentation of the text. The aim was to complete the revised chapter on packing in 1982.

In continuation of the revision of the recommendations on multimodal tank transport, a working group met at Munich, Federal Republic of Germany, on tank containers for refrigerated liquefied gases. It produced a draft for a new section covering such containers. Work was also started on intermediate bulk containers.

The Committee's Group of Experts on Explosives also met in 1981 (p. 571).

Noting the programme of work for the period 1981-1983 proposed by the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods in paragraphs 199 to 212 of the report on its eleventh session, and noting the report of the Secretary-General bringing to the attention of the Council the report of the Committee of Experts,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods;

2.. Takes note of the recommendations contained in the report of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods on its eleventh session respecting the listing, classification, packaging and transport of additional products, and other matters amending its recommendations;

3. Takes note with interest of the recommendation of the Committee of Experts to postpone at this time further consideration of the question of a multimodal world-wide convention on the transport of dangerous goods;

4. Notes with satisfaction the expression of appreciation of the Committee of Experts concerning the support it has received from the Economic Commission for Europe at Geneva during the past nineteen years;

5. Takes note of the Committee of Experts' desire for improved administrative and secretarial support for its activities;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the contents of the report of the Committee of Experts:

(a) To incorporate in the revised recommendations prepared by the Committee of Experts the amendments set forth in the reports of the Committee of Experts on its tenth and eleventh sessions, together with the consequential changes necessary to eliminate inconsistencies;

(b) To publish the recommendations as soon as possible, without financial implications for the programme budget for 1980-1981, as decided by the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session;

(c) To circulate the recommendations as soon as possible to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations concerned;

(d) To work closely with the Committee of Experts and the Economic Commission for Europe in improving administrative and secretarial support, both for the Committee's meetings and the regular publication of its recommendations;

7. Invites the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations concerned to transmit to the Secretary-General such comments as they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

6. Urges the Governments of Member States and international organizations concerned to take account of the recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods when developing both national and international codes and regulations.

Adopted without vote

Draft orally proposed by President: agenda item 15.

Meetings of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and its subsidiary bodies

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 6 May 1981, the Council decided:

(a) That the Group of Rapporteurs of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods should meet for two weeks in August, instead of for one week in March and one week in August 1981, as previously scheduled, and that the Group of Experts on Explosives should meet in October, instead of August 1981;

(b) To consider the calendar of meetings for 1982 of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and its subsidiary bodies at the second regular session of 1981 in the context of its overall consideration of the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1982 and 1983.

Publication of recommendations

The Economic and Social Council decided on 6 February 1981<sup>(2)</sup> that it should be informed of the status of publication of the recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods. In its resolution of 4 May on the Committee's work,<sup>(1)</sup> the Council requested the Secretary-General to publish the revised recommendations as soon as possible, without financial implications for the United Nations programme budget for 1980-1981.

Also on 4 May, the Council invited the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions urgently to examine the question of the earliest possible publication.<sup>(3)</sup> The Council adopted the decision, without vote, as recommended by its First Committee, which approved the text in like manner on 23 April on an oral proposal by its Chairman following a suggestion by the United Kingdom.

In the Council's discussion, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed concern at the delay in publication.

For financial reasons, the recommendations had not been published as of the end of 1981.

Economic and Social Council decision 1981/111

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1981/83), without vote, 23 April (meeting 4); oral proposal by Chairman on suggestion by United Kingdom; agenda Item 15.

Publication of the revised recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods
At its 13th plenary meeting, on 4 May 1981, the Council decided to invite the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions urgently to examine the question of the earliest possible publication of the revised recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, requested by the Council in its resolutions 1979/42 of 11 May 1979 and 1981/3 of 4 May 1981, bearing in mind the previous recommendations of the Advisory Committee and the decision of the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session on resources and publishing the recommendations.

Explosives

The Group of Experts on Explosives, a subsidiary body of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, held its twenty-first session at Geneva from 12 to 16 October 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> The Group drafted new entries for the United Nations recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods, including one on pyrotechnic articles, and amended others. It discussed the classification of ammonium perchlorate and water-wetted explosives. A definition of "unit load" was provisionally adopted, referring to separately packaged items secured together, as on a pallet or in a sling. Test methods and criteria for explosives were discussed with a view to the compilation of a manual. The Group expressed concern that decisions on the classification of explosives taken by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and the European Economic Community were diverging from the United Nations recommendations.

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Group of Experts, ST/SG/AC.10/C.1/6.

Communications

Designation of the World Communications Year (1983)

On the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly, in November 1981, proclaimed 1983 as World Communications Year: Development of Communications Infrastructures. The International Telecommunication Union (ITU) was named lead agency for the observance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. The recommendation that the Assembly proclaim 1983 as World Communications Year, provided that all preliminary arrangements for its financing from voluntary contributions had been finalized, was made by the Economic and Social Council in a resolution of 23 July 1981.<sup>(6)</sup> The Council invited the ITU Secretary-General to continue preparations and the mobilization of resources for the Year, and to co-operate closely with United Nations organizations and agencies, especially the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Universal Postal Union. Governments were invited to continue to participate actively in and to contribute to the programme of activities for the Year.

The Council adopted the text, without vote, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, which similarly approved the draft on 15 July. The resolution was introduced by Ghana and also sponsored by Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria and Yugoslavia. It incorporated a paragraph proposed by Senegal and accepted by the sponsors, by which the Council invited the ITU Secretary-General to co-operate with United Nations organizations and agencies.

During informal consultations, two further revisions were agreed upon. First, instead of having the Council decide that 1983 would be the appropriate year for the celebration of World Communications Year, the Council proposed that 1983 should be the year for its celebration. Second, the phrase "development of communications infrastructures" was added to the title and to paragraph 2, and proclamation of the Year was made conditional on financing from voluntary contributions.

The ITU Secretary-General told the Council that the basic objective of the Year would be to encourage countries to review their communications development policies and speed up the development of their communications infrastructure. A World Telecommunication Exhibition (TELECOM-83) at Geneva and related self-financing activities would further the study of communications infrastructure issues, investment needs, transfer of information and application of appropriate technology.

In April, the United Nations Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the ITU Administrative Council a report<sup>(3)</sup> summarizing comments from seven Governments on a provisional programme of activities for the Year, sent to Member States in response to a 1980 request of the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(5)</sup> The report also contained a provisional programme for the observance, drafted at an inter-agency meeting at Geneva on 6 February 1981. In a telegram of 22 June,<sup>(4)</sup> the ITU Secretary-General submitted comments by that organization's Administrative Council reiterating its support for the Year.

A revised action programme for the Year was annexed to a July report to the Economic and Social Council submitted by the ITU Secretary-General.<sup>(2)</sup> It outlined general principles and proposals for national, regional and international action, including the organization of seminars and symposia, the production of radio and television programmes and publications, and the development of pilot projects. The report stated that over 50 countries in all regions had appointed national correspondents to start national committees as soon as the Year was proclaimed. Financing was to be provided by voluntary contributions from Governments, foundations, non-governmental organizations and industry. This money, paid into an ITU-administered Special Fund for the World Communications Year, would be used to implement pilot projects, assist national and regional committees, finance promotional expenditure and pay for a secretariat at Geneva. Another annex to the report listed pledges totalling $1.5 million from 13 States and 2 international organizations as at 30 June.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. Endorsing the Economic and Social Council proposal, the General Assembly, on 19 November, adopted without vote a resolution by which it proclaimed the year 1983 World Communications Year: Development of Communications infrastructures.<sup>(7)</sup> It designated ITU as the lead agency, responsible for co-ordinating interorganizational aspects of the programmes and activities of other agencies. States were requested and non-governmental organizations and users of communications services were invited to participate. United Nations organizations and agencies were invited to co-operate closely with the ITU Secretary-General. Governments and organizations were invited to contribute through the Special Fund co-ordinated by ITU. The Assembly appealed to government authorities and organizations to make circuits available for reporting on the Year's activities through existing means of information, including radio and television broadcasts, and requested the ITU Secretary-General to report in 1982 on preparations.

The resolution was adopted on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved it without vote on 30 October as revised in writing and orally on behalf of its 22 sponsors. The oral changes included the insertion of "voluntary" before "resources" in a preambular reference to the mobilization of resources for the Year. The text and its revisions were introduced by Nigeria, which stressed the need for additional voluntary contributions.

The USSR explained that it had joined in the consensus on the text because the developing countries attached so much importance to the Year, and it welcomed the agreement that all projects would be financed from voluntary contributions; but it would not have voted for the appeal to make circuits available for reporting, as that matter lay within the exclusive competence of national authorities. Sierra Leone said the observance should help focus attention on the needs of the poorer nations for the development of communications. The United States observed that organizations with headquarters in the United States had already pledged more than $800,000 for activities relating to the Year.

The ITU Secretary-General, in a note transmitted to the Assembly in October by the United Nations Secretary-General, reported that, with voluntary contributions amounting to $3,612,000 and further pledges announced, the Year could be launched without ITU having to resort to regular budgetary resources.<sup>(1)</sup> The amount included $687,000 in cash from 16 countries and $2,550,000 in kind. An ITU representative informed the Second Committee that the intention was to use the contributions in kind for experimental telecommunications projects in rural areas and the installation of infrastructure in countries that had none.

World Communications Year: Development of Communications Infrastructures

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the fundamental importance of communications infrastructures in all countries as essential elements in their economic and social development,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, which proposed the designation of one year during the Decade as World Communications Year, Recalling a/so General Assembly resolution 35/109 of 5 December 1980 on the World Communications Year, by which the Assembly endorsed the arrangements made by the Council concerning the Year.

Recalling further Council resolution 1980/69 of 23 July 1980, whereby the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue consultations with Governments and to submit revised proposals on programmes for the Year, and designated the International Telecommunication Union as the lead agency for the Year and requested it to submit a report on the state of preparations for the Year,

Convinced that a World Communications Year would provide the opportunity for all countries to undertake an in-depth review and analysis of their policies on communications development and to stimulate the accelerated development of communications infrastructures,

Having taken into account the guidelines for future international years,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing the proposed programme of activities, the comments of the Administrative Council of the International Telecommunication Union thereon and the report of the lead agency on the state of preparations for the Year and, in particular, on the financial resources that had already been pledged for the Year and programmes that might be of interest to developing countries,

Welcoming the progress made by the United Nations system and Governments in preparations for the Year,

1. Proposes that 1983 should be the World Communications Year;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly, at its thirty-sixth session, should proclaim the year 1983 as "World Communications Year: Development of Communications Infrastructures", provided that all preliminary arrangements for its financing from voluntary contributions have been finalized before the adoption of the final decision;

3. Invites the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union to continue preparations and the mobilization of resources for the Year;

4. Invites further Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union, in preparing for the World Communications Year, to co-operate closely with the competent organizations and agencies in the United Nations system, especially the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Universal Postal Union, taking full account of their respective terms of reference, in order to avoid overlapping and duplication;

World Communications Year: Development of Communications Infrastructures

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, in which it requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the International Telecommunication Union and other specialized agencies concerned, to propose for consideration, as appropriate, one year during the Decade as a World Communications Year, in view of the importance of transport and communications to other regions of the world, Recalling also its resolution 35/109 of 5 December 1980 on the World Communications Year, by which it endorsed the arrangements made by the Economic and Social Council concerning the Year, Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1961/60 of 23 July 1961, in which the Council proposed that the year 1963 should be proclaimed World Communications Year: Development of Communications Infrastructures.

Taking into account the guidelines for future international years adopted in General Assembly decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980.

Having examined the note by the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union concerning the mobilization of voluntary resources for the World Communications Year,

Recognizing the fundamental importance of communications infrastructures as an essential element in the economic and social development of all countries,

Convinced that the World Communications Year will provide the opportunity for all countries to undertake an in-depth review and analysis of their policies on communications development and stimulate the accelerated development of communications infrastructures,

1. Endorses the proposal made by the Economic and Social Council in paragraph 1 of its resolution 1981/60 and proclaims the year 1983 World Communications Year: Development of Communications Infrastructures, with the International Telecommunication Union serving as the lead agency for the Year and having responsibility for co-ordinating the inter-organizational aspects of the programmes and activities of other agencies;

2. Requests all States to participate actively in the attainment of the objectives of the World Communications Year;

3. Invites the competent organizations and agencies of the United Nations system to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union, within their respective terms of reference, for the implementation of the programme for the World Communications Year;

4. Invites non-governmental organizations and users of communications services to participate actively in the World Communications Year and to secure the fullest possible co-ordination of their programmes for the Year, particularly at the national level;

5. Invites Governments and interested organizations to make voluntary contributions to the World Communications Year through the Special Fund for the World Communications Year co-ordinated by the International Telecommunication Union, in order to ensure increased financing of projects at the national, regional and global levels;

6. Appeals to governmental authorities and appropriate organizations to make circuits available for reporting on the activities of the World Communications Year through existing means of information, including radio and television broadcasts, in collaboration with those authorities;

7. Requests the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982, on the state of preparations for the World Communications Year.

Preparations for the Year

An inter-agency committee for the World Communications Year, meeting at Geneva on 3 December 1981, adopted an action plan for 1982 which included the distribution of publications and information material and the organization of meetings.<sup>(1)</sup> The committee approved the principle of early establishment in each country of a committee to co-ordinate national preparations and implementation of the programme for the Year, and adopted measures designed to make the national committees widely representative. It prepared a guide containing information on the general guidelines, organization and financing of the Year, approved the presentation of a register of activities and reviewed a list of proposed pilot projects.

Tourism

Implementation of the 1980 Manila

Declaration of the World Tourism Conference

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 19 November 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> welcomed the Manila Declaration on World Tourism, adopted in October 1980 by the World Tourism Conference and providing guidelines for the harmonious, balanced and equitable development of national and international tourism. The Assembly urged States to give due attention to the principles of the Declaration in formulating their tourism policies, plans and programmes. It requested the World Tourism Organization (WTO)—which organized the Conference at Manila, Philippines, from 27 September to 10 October 1980—to continue its efforts for the development and promotion of tourism, especially in the developing countries, bearing in mind the Declaration's guidelines. Organizations interested in tourism were requested to assist in implementing the Declaration. The Assembly decided that WTO might participate on a continuing basis in the Assembly's work in areas of concern to WTO and requested its Secretary-General to report to the Assembly in 1983 on implementation of the Declaration.

The resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved it on 11 November in the same manner.

The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Committee following informal consultations on a draft introduced by the Philippines, also sponsored by Bolivia, Jamaica, Kenya,<sup>(1)</sup> Panama and Thailand and later withdrawn. According to that draft, the Assembly would have affirmed the principles and concepts of the Manila Declaration rather than welcomed it. It would have urged States to give due attention to those principles and align their tourism policies, plans and programmes in consonance with the Declaration and within the framework of the WTO work programme. It would have decided that WTO "shall" participate in the work of the Assembly, whereas the adopted text specified that it "may" participate in the Assembly's work in areas of concern to it. Finally, the request for a report would have been addressed to the United Nations Secretary-General in collaboration with the WTO Secretary-General, instead of directly to the latter.

Poland, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, reiterated their reservations with regard to the Manila Declaration. In the Committee's debate, Hungary said that, in conformity with the Declaration, it supported the idea that tourism should develop in a climate of peace and security.

The President of the Manila Conference, addressing the Second Committee, described the Declaration as an expression of the hopes and aspirations of mankind for a better world through a balanced and equitable development of world tourism. Among its concepts were that tourism could be a vital force for peace, could contribute to the establishment of a new international economic order, and could flourish only if it was based on equity, sovereign equality, non-interference in internal affairs and co-operation among all States. It pointed out that economic returns could not be the only criterion for encouraging tourism; its cultural and moral dimensions must be fostered. It stated that the right to the use of leisure, and in particular the right to access to holidays and to freedom of travel and tourism, were recognized as an aspect of human fulfilment.

The Manila Declaration, with supplementary recommendations, was transmitted to the Assembly in May, annexed to a report on the Conference by the WTO Secretary-General, submitted under cover of a note by the United Nations Secretary-General.<sup>(2)</sup> The report suggested that investments for creating collective recreational facilities, improving tourist areas and sites and renovating historical and cultural monuments might be given priority. The emphasis on international tourism, it stated, had prevented the necessary attention from being devoted to the 80 per cent of tourist movements occurring at the national level; the development of overall tourism movements had therefore been somewhat unbalanced.

Chapter VI

Industrial development

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued in 1981 its efforts to assist developing countries raise their share of world industrial production to the target of 25 per cent by the year 2000. Its activities were geared to implementation of the instrument containing this goal—the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation,<sup>(s)</sup> adopted in 1975 at the Second General Conference of UNIDO (Lima, Peru).

Activities in 1981—described in a report by the UNIDO Executive Director to the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO<sup>(4)</sup>—focused on priority areas identified by the Board in May 1980,<sup>(10)</sup> as a follow-up to decisions of the Third General Conference (New Delhi, India, January/February 1980) : <sup>(9)</sup> energy-related and other industrial technology, industrial production, human resources development, special measures for the least developed countries (LDCs) and the System of Consultations on development of selected industrial sectors. Technical assistance delivery (p. 585) amounted to $88.5 million, the highest since the inception of UNIDO.

The 45-nation Industrial Development Board held its fifteenth session at UNIDO headquarters, Vienna, Austria, on 7 May and from 15 to 30 May,<sup>(1)</sup> when it reaffirmed the priorities set at its previous session. Its Permanent Committee met twice at Vienna, for its fifteenth (7-15 May)<sup>(2)</sup> and sixteenth (16-21 November)<sup>(3)</sup> sessions. The work of UNIDO was reviewed by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, each of which adopted a resolution on various aspects of its operations—the Council in July<sup>(5)</sup> and the Assembly in December.<sup>(7)</sup> The Assembly also added the three newest United Nations Members, Antigua and Barbuda, Belize and Vanuatu, to the lists of States eligible for membership in the Board.<sup>(6)</sup>

UNIDO expenditures in 1981 totalled $134 million—including $67 million supplied by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) for field programmes and $35.9 million from its regular budget, a part of the United Nations budget (P. 580). The voluntarily financed United Nations Industrial Development Fund (UNIDF) provided $10.4 million of the total (p. 582).

As at 31 December 1981, 66 States had ratified the new Constitution of UNIDO, adopted in 1979 with the aim of transforming it into a specialized agency (p. 583). Entry into force of the Constitution was to take place after 80 States had adhered.

In June 1981, the UNDP Governing Council increased its allocation for the Special Industrial Services programme, but financial constraints did not permit it to double the level of resources as the Board had requested (P. 587). The UNDP allocation for UNIDO Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAs) was also increased and the Economic and Social Council, on the Governing Council's recommendation, asked for efforts to have UNIDO pay a larger share of the cost (p. 587).

The Board established a 1982-1983 programme for the System of Consultations, and Consultation meetings were held in 1981 on the food processing, petrochemical and capital goods industries (p. 588). Their aim was to bring together government officials and others on problems relating to the development of specific industries in developing countries.

UNIDO continued its studies on structural changes in industry, including the redeployment of industries to developing countries (p. 590). The Permanent Committee, in November, was unable to reach agreement on a proposal by the UNIDO Executive Director for establishing an international bank for industrial development (p. 591). Consideration was given to ways in which UNIDO might improve its activities in assisting countries to prepare industrial development projects (p. 594). The Board reaffirmed the priority to be given to projects in LDCs (p. 595).

Technical co-operation projects aided developing countries to build up their major industrial sectors (p. 595). In addition, UNIDO convened expert meetings to explore possibilities in regard to new technologies, notably genetic engineering, micro-electronics and lighter-than-air craft (p.593).

On other matters, the General Assembly, on the Board's recommendation, decided to allocate adequate resources for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990) (p. 621), and called for increased assistance to Palestinians (p. 273) and Namibians (p. 1178). UNIDO continued to promote the most efficient industrial use of water (p. 684) and energy (p. 705), the transfer of industrial technology to developing countries (p. 755) and the participation of women in industrial development (p. 986). The United Nations Statistical Office provided advice to Governments on participation in the 1983 World Programme of Industrial Statistics (p. 1068).

Programme and finances of UNIDO

Programme policy decisions

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACTION. On 20 May 1981, the Industrial Development Board (2) reaffirmed the priorities for 1981-1983 which it had established in May 1980<sup>(7)</sup> when deciding on follow-up action to decisions taken in February 1980 by the Third General Conference of UNIDO.<sup>(6)</sup> The priority areas were energy-related and other industrial technology, industrial production, human resources development, special measures for LDCs and the UNIDO System of Consultations.

The Board requested the General Assembly, when allocating resources, to take into account the consensus on the 1982-1983 budget reached on 15 May 1981 by the Board's Permanent Committee (P. 581). The Committee agreed that the provision of adequate resources was particularly necessary in support of priority areas and stressed the importance of UNIDO operational activities.<sup>(3)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. By a resolution on industrial development co-operation adopted on 24 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Board's conclusions reaffirming its priorities for 1981-1983 and recommended that the General Assembly ensure adequate resources for those activities (p. 581).

Referring to specific UNIDO activities, the Council reiterated the importance of redeployment of industrial capacities to developing countries and of facilitating the restructuring of world industrial production (p. 591); recommended consideration of a proposal for an international bank for industrial development (p. 591); requested proposals on energy-related technology (p. 706) and follow-up to the 1981 United Nations Conference on LDCs (P. 406); supported a strengthening of the System of Consultations (p. 588); urged contributions to UNIDF (p. 582) and ratification of the UNIDO Constitution (p. 584); requested the allocation of adequate resources for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (p. 622); and favoured an increased share for UNIDO in the cost of SIDFAs (p. 588).

The Council adopted this resolution, sponsored by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, by 43 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, following its approval on 21 July by the First (Economic) Committee, as orally revised during informal consultations, by 41 votes to none, with 5 abstentions. The changes affected the provision on the 1982-1983 budget and, to a lesser extent, the paragraphs on the proposed international bank for industrial development and on energy-related technology.

Reservations were expressed with regard to the provisions on industrial redeployment (European Community (EC) members), resources for UNIDO (Belgium, Federal Republic of Germany), the proposed international bank for industrial development (Federal Republic of Germany), the SIDFA programme (United Kingdom), energy-related technology (Federal Republic of Germany) and the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (Belgium).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(5)</sup> the General Assembly took note of the Industrial Development Board's report, decided to ensure adequate resources for priority activities of UNIDO (p. 581) and made recommendations on various aspects of the UNIDO programme.

Like the Council, the Assembly requested the UNIDO secretariat to develop its programme on industrial redeployment; supported the strengthening of the System of Consultations; urged contributions to UNIDF and ratification of the UNIDO Constitution so as to convert it into a specialized agency; and requested the Board to consider the proposal for an international bank for industrial development. The Assembly also requested increased technical co-operation and other programmes on energy-related industrial technology, as well as increased technical co-operation with LDCs (p. 595); asked the Board to begin functioning as the Preparatory Committee for the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO, scheduled for 1984 (p. 585); and decided to allocate adequate funds in connection with the current Industrial Development Decade for Africa (p. 622).

The resolution was adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 7 December. The original draft,<sup>(1)</sup> sponsored by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77, was withdrawn and replaced by a text submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Committee on the basis of informal consultations on the Algerian text.

The adopted text included a preambular paragraph not in the original, by which the Assembly endorsed the Board's consensus on follow-up to the decisions of the UNIDO Third General Conference. There were also differences in the provisions on redeployment of industrial capacities, the System of Consultations, resources for UNIDO, UNIDF, the proposed international bank for industrial development and energy-related technology. As a result of further informal consultations, the Vice-Chairman revised his draft orally to delete a paragraph by which the Assembly would have urged the early implementation of all decisions in the Economic and Social Council resolution of 24 July.

Following approval of the resolution in Committee, comments or reservations were expressed in regard to the provisions on industrial redeployment (Eastern European States, United States), the System of Consultations (Eastern European States, EC members), UNIDF (Eastern European members), the proposed international bank for industrial development (EC members), the UNIDO budget (Eastern European States, EC members, United States) and the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (Eastern European States).

II

Industrial Development Decade for Africa

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General of 5 October 1981 on the implementation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa;
2. Declares the Industrial Development Decade for Africa to be one of the most important programmes of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;
3. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to provide adequate resources, including human resources, for the co-ordination unit for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa;
4. Decides to allocate adequate financial resources to assist in the rapid industrialization of Africa within the time-frame and scope of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, with particular reference to the least developed countries, as from the 1982-1983 biennium;
5. Also requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to continue and intensify contacts with the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in order to contribute to the success of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, and to submit, through the Industrial Development Board at its sixteenth session and the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982, a comprehensive report on the Decade to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Medium-term plan for 1984-1989

Twice during 1981, at its May<sup>(1)</sup> and November<sup>(2)</sup> sessions, the Permanent Committee of the Industrial Development Board examined a draft of the UNIDO section of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989, as submitted by the Executive Director. The draft was to be reviewed and finalized in the light of comments and observations by Committee members, and then submitted in 1982 to the General Assembly through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC).

Programme evaluation

Two review meetings on implementation, chaired by the UNIDO Executive Director and attended by all divisional directors and managers of major programmes, were held during 1981, as in previous years. These meetings, at which UNIDO programmes were assessed one by one, remained the principal mechanism within the secretariat for reviewing the performance of UNIDO. In addition, three outside experts were requested to review progress on several headquarters programmes and offer advice on future activities. Headquarters staff participated in approximately 40 in-depth project reviews and evaluations. Further, as requested by CPC, the United Nations Secretariat, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and UNIDO initiated the first phase of an in-depth evaluation of UNDP-financed and UNIDO-executed technical co-operation field projects covering manufactures.

The UNIDO secretariat submitted two reports on evaluation to the Permanent Committee. The first<sup>(3)</sup> described follow-up to a 1980 evaluation report on projects of assistance to industrial research and service institutes, and plans for an inter-agency evaluation of industrial training. The second, a progress report on systems design for internal evaluation,<sup>(4)</sup> said the secretariat intended to proceed in stages with the establishment of the proposed system.

After reviewing these reports, the Permanent Committee recommended on 8 May<sup>(2)</sup> that the Industrial Development Board request the Executive Director to install effective internal evaluation by the spring of 1982, within the resources budgeted for an evaluation unit. The Committee's report, containing this recommendation, was approved by the Board on 19 May.<sup>(1)</sup>

During the debate on development and international economic co-operation in the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, Austria regarded efforts to establish an internal evaluation system as particularly important in view of the budgetary constraints imposed on UNIDO.

Finances of UNIDO

Expenditures in 1981

UNIDO spent $134 million in 1981, of which 66 per cent was for technical co-operation programmes (p. 585) and the rest for headquarters activities. The largest source of funds was UNDP, which supplied $67 million for field programmes; a total of $36 million was derived from the United Nations regular budget (see table below).

Measured in expenditure terms, the major categories of activities were: industrial operations, $99.8 million (74.7 per cent); industrial studies, $8.8 million (6.6 per cent); conference services, public information and external relations, $7.8 million (5.8 per cent); administrative and common services, $7.6 million (5.7 per cent); policy co-ordination, $7.1 million (5.3 per cent); executive direction and management, $1.4 million (1 per cent); and policy-making organs, $1 million (0.7 per cent) (see table on next page).

Programme budget for 1982-1983

The appropriation for UNIDO in the United Nations programme budget for 1982-1983, as adopted by the General Assembly on 18 December 1981,<sup>(7)</sup> amounted to $72,942,200. This included $319,100 added by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee<sup>(2)</sup> to the original budget estimates to strengthen the System of Consultations, as called for by the Assembly on 17 December (p. 588).

The Permanent Committee of the Industrial Development Board,<sup>(4)</sup> after considering the proposed budget, adopted several conclusions on 15 May. While recognizing the budgetary restraints under which the United Nations had to operate, the Committee recognized the desirability of expanding some UNIDO activities, especially for technical assistance, and recommended that the budget ensure the provision of adequate resources to enable UNIDO to implement its mandate. The Committee further noted that the expansion of programmes or the addition of new programmes could be carried out by savings in other activities, by improvements in staff productivity and by reallocation of resources between sections of the United Nations budget.

The Industrial Development Board,<sup>(3)</sup> on 19 May, adopted its Committee's report, including its recommendation to submit to the Assembly the Committee's conclusions on the budget. In this regard, the United States said it did not interpret those conclusions as authorizing real growth in the UNIDO budget and it could not support reallocation of United Nations resources in favor of UNIDO. The Group of 77 reiterated the consensus reached in the Committee that reallocations in favor of UNIDO could take place, that expanding some UNIDO activities was desirable and that adequate resources were particularly necessary in priority areas.

The Economic and Social Council, in its resolution of 24 July on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(5)</sup> recommended that the Assembly ensure adequate resources for priority activities on the basis of the consensus reached in the Permanent Committee.

The original draft of this resolution, as proposed by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77, would have had the Council call for the allocation of "additional" adequate resources. Also, the final version omitted a clause mentioning that a sum not exceeding $3 million would provide additional technical assistance delivery of $25 million in the next biennium.

Following adoption of the resolution, Belgium stated that it was advisable to respect the zero-growth rate recommended by the Secretary-General for the United Nations budget for 1982-1983 and that any supplementary resources for priority sectors established by UNIDO should be offset by reductions elsewhere in the UNIDO programme. The Federal Republic of Germany opposed the provision of additional appropriations for UNIDO.

The General Assembly, in its resolution of 17 December on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(6)</sup> decided to ensure that adequate resources were made available to UNIDO for priority activities on the basis of the consensus reflected in the Board and its Permanent Committee. The original draft of this resolution introduced by Algeria for the Group of 77,<sup>(1)</sup> used the word "additional" rather than "adequate" in reference to resources and would have had the Assembly decide that those resources should be provided at the current session.

After approval of this resolution by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, Poland, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stated that the operational activities of UNIDO should be funded on a voluntary basis and that the UNIDO secretariat should take firm measures to streamline the use of existing financial resources. The United Kingdom, on behalf of the European Community members, said their position on the UNIDO budget remained unchanged. The United States said its interpretation of the resolution was that it did not authorize any real growth in UNIDO programmes.

Concern about the financing of UNIDO was voiced by some developing countries during the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation. Kenya said the concept of a zero-growth budget was dangerous and should be dropped as unrealistic. Opposition to zero growth was also expressed by India, Morocco, Mozambique and the Sudan. Pakistan said it agreed with the Group of 77 that the arbitrary constraints of a zero-growth budget should not be applied indiscriminately to relatively new organizations such as UNIDO. Suriname believed the zero-growth principle would hold back the expansion of UNIDO programmes and impede the industrialization of developing countries.

Hungary, while convinced of the decisive role that UNIDO had to play, opposed the steady increase in its budget and favoured its financing through voluntary contributions.

UN Industrial Development Fund

In 1981, 127 projects were approved by UNIDO, at a total cost of $16.5 million, to be financed by the United Nations Industrial Development Fund (UNIDF). Expenditures of UNIDF during the year were $10.4 million. Seminars, workshops, study tours and expert group meetings financed from this source dealt with such areas as agricultural machinery, food processing, micro-electronics, energy conservation, environmental control in the chemical and pharmaceutical industries, a proposed international centre for genetic engineering and biotechnology, the telecommunications industry and regional industrial development.

Forty-three training programmes in 21 fields benefited 732 participants, including 70 women and 232 participants from the least developed countries. Subjects included industrial information, industrial planning, cement and foundry industries, fertilizer and rice processing industries, wood-based panelling and furniture industries, the maintenance and repair of biochemical equipment, pharmaceutical production in multi-purpose plants, electric welding, diesel engine production, petrochemicals, pesticides and printing.

A total of $14,282,245 was paid by 84 countries in voluntary contributions to the Fund in 1981, and 73 countries pledged a total of $9,418,835 for 1982, as at 31 December 1981 (see table on next page).

On 21 and 22 May, the Industrial Development Board<sup>(2)</sup> considered a report by the Executive Director on the Fund's activities in 1978-1980<sup>(3)</sup> and approved the proposed programme for 1982. Noting with concern the constraints and difficulties under which UNIDF had operated since its inception, the Board urged all States, particularly the developed countries, to contribute or to raise their contributions with a view to reaching the desirable annual funding level of $50 million.

This appeal for increased funding so as to reach the $50 million target was echoed by the Economic and Social Council on 24 July<sup>(4)</sup> and the General Assembly on 17 December<sup>(5)</sup> in their resolutions on industrial development co-operation. The phrase "taking into account the need for maximum flexibility", which appeared in the Board's and the Council's texts, was omitted from the original draft resolution in the Assembly, sponsored by Algeria for the Group of 77,<sup>(1)</sup> but was restored in the adopted text as submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee following informal consultations on the original draft.

Following approval of this text in Committee, Poland, speaking on behalf of Eastern European States and Mongolia, said they participated in UNIDF but could not agree to the target for voluntary contributions.

In the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, Australia announced that it would make a contribution to UNIDF for the first time. Austria expressed concern at the insufficient flow of resources to the Fund. Malaysia said developing countries must contribute 'generously. Poland expressed gratitude that its contribution to UNIDF had been effectively utilized. Romania, Sri Lanka and Zambia called for contributions to UNIDF, particularly by developed countries, so that it could reach its annual target of $50 million. India regretted that the target had not been reached, while Suriname deplored the low level of resources pledged to the Fund.

The Assembly, in its resolution of 17 December on the same subject,<sup>(3)</sup> urged States to ratify as soon as possible in order to allow the conversion of UNIDO into a specialized agency in 1982.

During the Second Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, a number of States urged the prompt ratification of the Constitution or expressed gratification that States were ratifying it. #### Administration and management

The Executive Director of UNIDO, in a note on interim arrangements regarding greater autonomy for UNIDO,<sup>(1)</sup> informed the Industrial Development Board in May 1981 that additional authority on personnel matters had been delegated to UNIDO by United Nations Headquarters in regard to vacancy announcements, assignment of UNIDO staff and decisions to grant new appointments or reinstate former staff members.

On 30 May, the Board<sup>(2)</sup> took note of the degree of autonomy in personnel management granted by the Secretary-General to the Executive Director and requested the latter to continue his contacts with the Secretary-General in order to develop further the autonomy of UNIDO in administrative matters, in preparation for its conversion into a specialized agency. As recommended by the Permanent Committee on 15 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Board requested the Executive Director to give particular attention to the need for equitable geographical distribution of secretariat posts in the recruitment of personnel, in particular for high-level posts.

In the General Assembly's Second Committee, Poland, speaking on behalf of Eastern European States and Mongolia, said there was need for a discussion on how to increase the secretariat's effectiveness and to make UNIDO activities more action-oriented and objective by strictly applying the principle of equitable geographical distribution, with particular reference to the socialist countries.

Revision of the lists of States eligible for membership in the industrial Development Board

The General Assembly, by a resolution of 17 December 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> included Antigua and Barbuda, Belize and Vanuatu—the three States admitted to United Nations membership in 1981 (p. 348)—in the lists of States eligible for membership in the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO (see APPENDIX III).

This resolution was adopted without vote, following its approval in like manner by the Second Committee on 20 November, on a draft submitted by a Vice-Chairman.

General Assembly resolution 36/181

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add. 4) without vote. 20 November (meeting 42): draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.76); agenda item 69 (d).

Revision of the lists of States eligible for membership in the industrial Development Board

The General Assembly.

Recalling section ii, paragraph 4, of its resolution 2152(XXI) of 17 November 1966 on the United Nations industrial Development Organization.

Decides to include Vanuatu in list A and Antigua and Barbuda and Belize in list C of the annex to its resolution 2152(XXI).

Relations with other organizations

The Industrial Development Board,<sup>(1)</sup> on 25 May 1981, accepted the applications of two intergovernmental organizations for association with the activities of UNIDO: the Central African States Development Bank and the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration. The Board further granted consultative status to a non-governmental organization, the World Association for Element Building and Prefabrication.

Co-ordination in the UN system. Two inter-secretariat agreements on co-operation with other bodies in the United Nations system were concluded by UNIDO in 1981: a strategy paper with the World Health Organization, on the development of medical equipment and laboratory services, entered into force on 19 January; and a memorandum of understanding with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), on the co-operative arrangement on investment follow-up for projects in the industrial sector, was concluded in May.

A UNIDO secretariat report to the Permanent Committee of the Industrial Development Board, <sup>(2)</sup> covering the period from October 1980 to October 1981, described co-operation with other organizations in several areas of activity. On 17 November, after considering this report, the Committee <sup>(1)</sup> noted that better co-ordination would result from a continuing analysis by the secretariat of the relationship of UNIDO activities with those of other international organizations, in accordance with the UNIDO mandate as the central co-ordinator for industrial development in the United Nations system. It recommended that the secretariat be requested to provide further information on co-ordination, in particular with UNDP and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

Preparations for the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO

The General Assembly, in its resolution of 17 December 1981 on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(*)</sup> requested the Industrial Development Board to begin functioning at its next session (May 1982) as the Preparatory Committee for the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO, scheduled for 1984. It asked the Board to formulate an agenda and other proposals and to submit recommendations to the Assembly in 1982. The Assembly welcomed Kenya's offer to act as host to the Conference.

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>GA, 36/182, sect. I, paras. 13 & 14, 17 Dec. (p. 579).

Industrial development activities

Technical co-operation

Expenditures on technical co-operation delivered by UNIDO reached $88.5 million in 1981. This represented a 16 per cent increase over the $76.3 million recorded for 1980.<sup>(1)</sup> The main components were: chemical industries, $21.3 million (24.1 per cent); engineering industries, $14.3 million (16.2 per cent institutional infrastructure, $12.7 million (14.4 per cent); agro-industries, $8.3 million (9.4 per cent); metallurgical industries, $8.2 million (9.3 per cent); training, $6.2 million (7 per cent); factory establishment and management, $4.5 million (5.1 per cent); feasibility studies, $4.3 million (4.9 per cent); industrial planning, $4.3 million (4.8 per cent); and the investment co-operative programme, $2 million (2.3 per cent) (see table on p. 586).

Field activities involved a total of 1,734 projects: 101 of more than $1 million in value, 398 between $150,000 and $1 million, and 1,235 small-scale projects. About 687 new projects costing $70.9 million were approved during the year.

In keeping with the recommendations of the Industrial Development Board, the 1981 regular programme, like that of 1980, devoted increased resources to the establishment and strengthening of training facilities in developing countries. Allocations to the least developed countries amounted to about 30 per cent and were designed to accelerate the development of key sectors-agriculture, manufacturing, infrastructure and education-and to increase the linkages between them. Most projects were related to the development of specific industries (p. 595).

Three fourths of UNIDO technical co-operation was financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and 17 per cent by UNIDO and various trust funds, with the rest coming from the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation and the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development (see table on P. 580).

UNIDO continued to be the third largest executing agency responsible for the implementation of projects financed by UNDP. There were 785 UNIDO projects as at 31 December 1981, with a total value of $305.5 million. In the 14 new country programmes approved by the UNDP Governing Council in June 1981 (P. 436), the share of UNIDO grew from $35 million (1977-1981) to $78 million (1982-1986). There were significant increases in the industrial sector for Cuba, Nepal and Viet Nam, and preferred subsectors in these programmes included chemical industries, engineering, agro-industries and institutional infrastructure.

Asia and the Pacific accounted for 32.5 per cent of technical co-operation expenditures in 1981, Africa for 31.1 per cent, the Arab States for 13.2 per cent, the Americas for 11.6 per cent and Europe for 4 per cent. The remaining 7.6 per cent was spent on global and interregional projects (see table on p. 587). Assistance was

In the debate on development and international economic co-operation in the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, Pakistan observed that the UNIDO technical co-operation programme had declined in real terms if the effects of inflation and currency exchange rate fluctuations were taken into account. Turkey warned that a prolonged stagnation of that kind, stemming from budgetary constraints, would ultimately impede the industrialization of developing countries.

Allocations for 1982-1983

Proposed allocations under the UNIDO regular programme of technical co-operation for 1982-1983, as reported by the Executive Director to the Permanent Committee of the Industrial Development Board in February 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> totalled $6,746,400, the same as for 1980-1981. Funding for regional and short-term advisory services was to be reduced by $35,000 per year, and the $70,000 for the biennium was to be spent instead for the least developed countries.

The Permanent Committee, on 8 May, recommended approval of the proposed allocation pattern and also recommended that the Board seek to maintain the real value of the regular programme.<sup>(1)</sup>

SIS programme

The Special Industrial Services (SIS) programme, a source of funding created to permit action in areas that could not be covered by existing methods of financing, assisted more than 400 projects in 1981, notably in chemical, metallurgical, engineering and agro-industries as well as in factory establishment and management. The programme was designed primarily to enable UNIDO to meet high priority requirements of an urgent nature through the rapid provision of experts to developing countries. Expenditures in 1981, amounting to $1.6 million, were reduced from the level of $3.9 million achieved in 1980, mainly in order to prevent total expenditures during the 1977-1981 programming cycle of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) from exceeding by too much the five-year ceiling of $17.5 million.

On 19 May 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> the Industrial Development Board, on the recommendation of its Permanent Committee,<sup>(1)</sup> invited the UNDP Governing Council to consider at least doubling the annual level of resources for SIS during the 1982-1986 programme cycle. In June 1981, the Governing Council allocated $25 million to SIS for 1982-1986, but because of the limitation on UNDP resources only $20 million was to be used for forward planning purposes. With regard to the 1977-1981 cycle, the Council authorized on 30 June an increase from $17.5 to $18.2 million.<sup>(3)</sup>

During the debate in the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on development and international economic co-operation, Romania supported a doubling of funds for SIS.

SIDFA programme

The UNDP Governing Council, on 30 June 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> approved an allocation of $8,311,000, subject to resource availability, to cover the net cost to UNDP for the services of Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAs) during 1982-1983. It requested the Administrator to seek the agreement of Governments making use of SIDFA services to pay up to a quarter of the cost, either from national indicative planning figures (allocations of UNDP assistance to country programmes) or national sources, or both. It invited the Secretary-General to make every effort to increase the UNIDO share of the programme's cost.

The $8.3 million allocation, up from $7,962,000 in 1980-1981, had been recommended by the Administrator in an April 1981 report to the Council.<sup>(2)</sup> He indicated that this would pay for the 33 SIDFAs currently on duty or under recruitment, out of 46 authorized posts. In view of the financial constraints on UNDP, he proposed that Governments receiving their services meet one quarter ($40,000) of the estimated annual average cost of one Adviser for 1982-1983.

Prior to the Council's action, the Industrial Development Board,<sup>(1)</sup> on 30 May, invited it to maintain the current level of SIDFA services and to make an effort to increase them. The Board also invited States to provide, on a voluntary basis, additional funds to UNIDO to increase the number of SIDFAs.

The Executive Director of UNIDO had informed the Board in a March report<sup>(3)</sup> of earlier plans to increase the number of SIDFAs to 46 by mid-1981. He noted that UNIDO had allocated $190,000 from its regular budget for travel costs of SIDFAs in 1981. By the end of the year, the number of filled posts had dropped to 31.

As recommended by the UNDP Council, the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution of 24 July on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(4)</sup> invited the Secretary-General to make every effort to increase the share of UNIDO in the cost of the SIDFA programme. Following adoption of the resolution, the United Kingdom stated that it did not see the provision as implying any additional call on the regular budget.

SIDFAs represented UNIDO in all regions during the year, assisting Governments in regard to industrial programmes and helping with project design and implementation. The programme represented the largest component of UNDP sectoral support, under which certain advisory and other activities of agencies executing UNDP-funded projects were financed (P. 450). At the first Regional SIDFA Meeting for Latin America (Brasilia, Brazil, 9-15 September), recommendations were drawn up to improve UNIDO programmes in the region.

During the debate on development and international economic co-operation in the General Assembly's Second Committee, Austria and Zambia expressed the view that the SIDFA network should be strengthened. Finland, speaking for the Nordic States, believed that UNIDO should finance SIDFAs.

Training of personnel

Expenditure for fellowship and training components of all technical co-operation projects implemented by UNIDO in 1981 amounted to $9.9 million, against $11.2 million in 1980. Of the 1981 figure, fellowships and study tours accounted for $5.6 million, and group training programmes and meetings for $4.3 million.

The number of individual training programmes started in 1981, amounting to 1,147, was 15.6 per cent higher than in 1980, while the number of placements by host country, amounting to 1,972 increased by 28.2 per cent compared with 1980. Of these, 378 (19.2 per cent) were arranged in developing countries, 250 (21.8 per cent) of the trainees came from least developed countries and 120 (10.5 per cent) were women.

Industrial co-operation

System of Consultations

Three meetings between representatives of developed and developing countries on the problems of specific industrial sectors were held in 1981 under the UNIDO System of Consultations: on the food-processing (p. 595), petrochemical (p. 597) and capital goods (p. 598) industries. This brought to 14 the number of Consultation meetings organized since the System began operating in 1977.<sup>(5)</sup>

In May 1981, the Industrial Development Board<sup>(2)</sup> authorized Consultation meetings in 1982-1983 on training of industrial man power (first Consultation), industrial financing (first), the iron and steel industry (third), the pharmaceutical industry (second), the agricultural machinery industry (second), and the wood and wood products industry (first). An African Regional Consultation on the Agricultural Machinery Industry, originally scheduled for 1981, was later postponed to 1982. Possible additional meetings for the biennium were to be considered at the Board's 1982 session. In addition, the Board requested the Executive Director to examine the possibility of including in the 1984-1985 programme Consultation meetings on building materials, energy-related industrial technology and equipment, and non-ferrous metals. The Board recommended that participation in the 1982-1983 Consultation meetings by 50 representatives from least developed countries (LDCs) should be financed from sources to be determined by the General Assembly.

The Economic and Social Council, by its resolution of 24 July 1981 on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(3)</sup> strongly supported the strengthening of the System of Consultations and, in line with the Board's recommendation, requested the Assembly to ensure the participation of 50 representatives of LDCs by financing from sources to be determined by the Assembly. As a result of informal consultations, the text was orally revised from its original version, which would have had the Council support the expansion of the System.

The Assembly, by its resolution of 17 December on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(4)</sup> also strongly supported the strengthening of the System, giving particular attention to measures that could increase the industrial capacities of developing countries, and requested the Board to consider the possibility of holding Consultation meetings additional to those it had authorized for 1982-1983. This paragraph replaced the provision in the initial draft,<sup>(1)</sup> sponsored by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77, by which the Assembly would have urged the strengthening and expansion of the System with a view to increasing the industrial capacities of developing countries.

Poland, speaking in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee for Eastern European countries and Mongolia, stated that they objected strongly to attempts to involve representatives of private capital in the System on the same footing as government representatives; the System should operate on the basis of Industrial Development Board decisions and should be funded through voluntary contributions. The United States said its position on the analysis and evaluation of the System was unchanged.

In the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, Finland, speaking for the Nordic States, welcomed the establishment of the System on a permanent basis. Pakistan said the System remained divorced from its original purpose of furthering the redeployment of industry to developing countries; only if Governments participated fully in pursuing that objective could the System be effective. Poland regarded the System as an important instrument of restructuring world industry, leading eventually to a just international division of labour.

India, Romania and the United Republic of Cameroon believed the System should be extended; the Philippines thought it should be given additional resources and Viet Nam said it should be strengthened. The United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community members, said they were entirely in agreement with the idea of strengthening the System. Favourable comments on the System were also voiced by Austria, Portugal, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Turkey and Zambia.

Bulgaria believed more attention should be paid to improving the quality of the Consultations. The Byelorussian SSR opposed the expansion of the number of Consultation meetings and believed they should be strictly controlled by the Industrial Development Board, even at the regional level, and be devoted to defending the interests of developing countries against infringements by private foreign capital. Hungary believed that too many Consultations had been scheduled for the next cycle and thought it advisable to await the secretariat's evaluation of their usefulness before extending the System to other sectors. Mongolia warned that establishing a System of Consultations on issues that did not reflect the long-term trends of industrialization in developing countries or respond to their essential needs could fragment the efforts of UNIDO.

Draft rules of procedure. On 18 November 1981, the Permanent Committee of the Industrial Development Board<sup>(*)</sup> approved draft rules of procedure for the System of Consultations by 32 votes to none, with 5 abstentions.

The draft rules defined the principles, objectives and characteristics of the System, stating that it should seek action-oriented measures towards increasing the share of developing countries in world industrial production and creating new industrial facilities in developing countries contributing to the establishment of a new international economic order. The System would operate at four levels: global, regional, interregional and sectoral. The programme of Consultations would be decided by the Board every two years.

Participants would include government officials as well as representatives of industry, labour, consumer groups and others, as deemed appropriate by each Government. Any participant or observer could introduce proposals or amendments or raise points of order, but only participants could decide on substantive proposals. The meetings would operate on the basis of consensus among participants.

The draft had been submitted to the Board in April in a report by its President,<sup>(2)</sup> but the Board postponed action to permit him to seek consensus.<sup>(1)</sup> When he resubmitted the draft to the Permanent Committee in November, he announced that consensus had not been reached. He added that Group D (centrally planned economy) countries had proposed amendments which reopened some basic concepts underlying the rules and which could not be accepted by Group B (market economy) countries or by the Group of 77. Four of the rules (those summarized in the preceding paragraph) were approved by 31 votes to 5. Group D countries objected that they would enable representatives of transnational corporations to enjoy equal rights with Governments at the Consultation meetings.

Co-operation among developing countries

Solidarity meetings in two developing countries, the Sudan and the Upper Volta, were organized by UNIDO in 1981 with the aim of fostering the co-operation of interested developing countries in their industrial development. At the Sudan meeting (Khartoum, 23-26 March), attended by representatives of 22 countries and 6 development finance institutions, 54 projects were examined, of which 25 were selected for implementation in 1981-1983. The Upper Volta meeting (Ouagadougou, 1-4 December), attended by representatives of 18 countries and 9 financial institutions and international organizations, resulted in a number of concrete offers of technical assistance.

Other activities included preparations for round-table ministerial meetings, the development of joint programmes for sugar industry equipment (p. 598) and the cement industry (p. 599), and study tours to foster contacts, understanding and mutually useful activities in the context of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

International trade aspects

The expanding role of enterprise-to-enterprise arrangements affecting industrial co-operation and trade between developed and developing countries were examined in 1981 by a joint body of UNIDO and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). The Ad Hoc UNCTAD/UNIDO Group of Experts on Trade and Trade-related Aspects of Industrial Collaboration Arrangements (second session, Vienna, 1-12 June) (1) recognized the need to build up expertise in developing countries which would equip them to enter into beneficial industrial collaboration arrangements on an enterprise-to-enterprise basis, and suggested that intergovernmental agreements might foster long-term co-operation and assist developing countries in industrial development and trade diversification.

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board took note of the Group's report on 9 October and endorsed its recommendation that the UNCTAD and UNIDO secretariats should continue their work on industrial collaboration arrangements.(2)

Reports: (1) Group of Experts on industrial collaboration arrangements, ID/WG.337/9/Rev.1, transmitted by UNCTAD secretariat note, TD/B/862; (2) TDB, A/36/15.

Industrial co-operation contracts

Work continued in 1981 under the UNIDO System of Consultations (p. 588) on model contracts and other forms of standardized clauses and guidelines to facilitate the negotiation of industrial agreements between developed and developing countries. After examining a model form of licensing agreement for the petrochemical industry, devised by the UNIDO secretariat, the Second Consultation on the Petrochemical Industry (p. 597) recommended in June that a new draft should be prepared, containing alternative texts where divergent views had been expressed. A check-list of points to be covered in contractual agreements in the leather and leather products industry was approved by the Leather and Leather Products Industry Panel (fifth session, Vienna, 25-27 November).(1)

In June, the Working Group on the New International Economic Order, a body of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, continued consideration of a study by the Secretary-General on clauses related to the supply and construction of large industrial works (p. 1260).

Industrial redeployment and restructuring

A study entitled Structural Changes in Industry,(2) published by the UNIDO secretariat in August 1981, presented an overview of the findings of the UNIDO research programme on industrial redeployment and restructuring, and formulated proposals for action by developed and developing countries and the international community. Among its conclusions were that: Governments in developed market-economy countries possessed and utilized the means to influence the pace and direction of industrial restructuring; a large number of governmental instruments tended primarily to maintain existing industrial structures and aggravate structural adjustment pressures instead of easing restructuring; measures adopted might have the effect of further distorting allocation of resources, directing them to declining and less competitive industries and thereby reducing the potential for development; and policies affecting co-operation and trade with developing countries seemed to lack consistency by supporting sales of capital goods but restricting the resulting manufactured exports.

The aims and some results of this research programme were described in a February report by the UNIDO Executive Director to the Industrial Development Board.(4) The research programme sought to analyse developments and strategies create a basis for decision-makers seeking modalities of industrial redeployment, and provide a direct service to regional groupings and individual Governments. One of the conclusions of the studies, the report stated, was that there was no substance in the thesis that the de-industrialization of the North was a direct consequence of industrialization of the South.

After examining this report, the Board,(3) on 30 May, decided that the secretariat should continue to improve and develop its industrial redeployment programme along previously approved lines.

The Economic and Social Council, by its resolution of 24 July on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(5)</sup> requested the UNIDO secretariat to continue studies in this field. It also reiterated the importance of redeployment and of facilitating the restructuring of world industrial production.

Following adoption of the resolution, the United Kingdom stated that the position of the European Community members on redeployment remained unchanged.

The General Assembly resolution of 17 December on industrial development co-operation<sup>(6)</sup> contained provisions on industrial redeployment and restructuring similar to those in the Council resolution. It omitted a clause in the initial draft,<sup>(1)</sup> sponsored by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77, which would have had the Assembly reiterate the importance of an increase in operational programmes on industrial redeployment in the sectors identified for examination in the System of Consultations.

Following approval of the draft in the, Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, Poland, speaking on behalf of Eastern European States and Mongolia, stated that they were not carrying out special measures to transfer part of their industrial sectors to the developing countries, although they were promoting industrial development by other means. The United States said it had reservations on the value of further UNIDO studies on redeployment; the primary role of UNIDO was to provide technical assistance, not to intervene in redeployment, which would be determined by market forces.

In the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, Indonesia remarked that redeployment of industry should take place on the basis of mutual benefit and not be exploited as a way of relocating obsolete and polluting manufacturing plants. The United Republic of Cameroon made a similar point and added that redeployment must not mean access to cheap labour or raw materials. Morocco said redeployment should be accompanied by national technological development. Pakistan believed that redeployment lay at the centre of policies for achieving industrial growth. Uruguay, urging a more equitable redistribution of industrial means of production, said it was willing to receive foreign industries as long as they complied with its laws, which favoured the establishment of industry.

Industrial financing

Developing countries' requirements for industrial financing in 1981 totalled approximately $45 billion, of which foreign financial resources amounted to $20 billion, according to estimates by UNIDO. The lack of risk capital and the high cost of borrowing for industrial projects continued to be major problems for those countries.

UNIDO acted to stimulate the flow of capital to industrial enterprises through its Investment Co-operative Programme (p. 592) and other activities. Aside from this programme, it concluded an agreement with the proposed Equity Financing Programme of the Inter-American Development Bank to establish a UNIDO "financial promoter" at Washington, D. C., under a cost-sharing arrangement, to increase the flow of industrial risk capital in Latin America. Arrangements were made for officials from Bangladesh to visit and study, under UNIDO guidance, financial institutions in Arab countries in the Gulf region.

Proposed international bank for industrial development

In a report of April 1981,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNIDO Executive Director submitted to the Industrial Development Board a proposal for an international bank for industrial development. Operating on a commercial basis alongside existing financial institutions, the proposed bank would borrow short-term funds from the money and capital markets, transform their maturities and provide long-term loans for industrial projects in developing countries at subsidized interest rates, particularly for the least developed countries. It would be founded on principles of universal participation, mutual benefit for all participating countries and equitable control in decision-making and management, and would be capable of applying innovative techniques of borrowing not currently practised by multilateral financing agencies.

After considering this proposal, the Board, on 20 May, recognized the importance of financial flows to industrial development in developing countries.<sup>(2)</sup> However, as delegations had had little time to study the proposal, the Board called on its Permanent Committee to continue consideration and to take a decision.

The Economic and Social Council, in its 24 July resolution on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(5)</sup> reaffirmed the Board's recognition of the importance of financial flows to industrial development in developing countries and recommended that the Permanent Committee consider the proposal with a view to taking a decision on it. This last phrase replaced the words "with a view to taking appropriate follow-up steps", contained in the original draft as submitted on behalf of the Group of 77.

In the Council, the Federal Republic of Germany reiterated its opposition to the establishment of a bank. The USSR, speaking in the Council's First (Economic) Committee for the Eastern European States on the Council, objected to the setting up of new machinery or funds within UNIDO.

Failing to reach agreement on the proposal, the Permanent Committee,<sup>(3)</sup> on 17 November, requested the Executive Director to report to the Board in 1982 on any developments as well as information derived from his usual contacts. Group B (developed market economy) countries expressed firm opposition to the proposed establishment of a bank and said they would have preferred ending further consideration so as to avoid false hopes that the Group would be prepared to participate in such an institution. The Group of 77 welcomed the Executive Director's proposal and stated that the Committee's decision provided for further secretariat efforts towards a fruitful dialogue.

On 17 December, in its resolution on industrial development co-operation, the General Assembly requested the Board to give careful consideration to the proposal for an international bank with a view to taking a decision on it, and asked the Executive Director to continue efforts in accordance with the Permanent Committee's decision.<sup>(6)</sup>

The initial draft of this resolution, introduced in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on behalf of the Group of 77 while the Permanent Committee was in session at Vienna, would have had the Assembly endorse the Board's decision inviting the Committee to consider the Executive Director's proposal with a view to taking a positive decision on the proposal for further work by the secretariat.<sup>(4)</sup> This was replaced in the adopted text by the paragraph referring to further consideration by the Board at its next session, in 1982.

The United Kingdom, on behalf of the European Community (EC) member States, as well as the United States, indicated that their position on the proposal for a bank remained unchanged. The EC view was that UNIDO should not use its limited resources to direct the policy of financial institutions; it might promote industrial investment by helping developing countries prepare viable projects, trying to mobilize additional financing through its investment promotion services and continuing to co-operate with the World Bank.

Support for the proposed bank was expressed by Ecuador, India, Kenya, Madagascar and Suriname. Finland, speaking for the Nordic States, said they thought there was a need for new institutional arrangements. Sri Lanka hoped a definite decision would be reached on the matter. Yugoslavia and Zambia said the idea should be carefully studied; Yugoslavia added that there should be no initial prejudice against it.

Investment promotion

Under the Investment Co-operative Programme of UNIDO, seven Investment Promotion Services, established to promote the flow of external financial, technological and managerial resources to developing countries, were in operation by the end of 1981 at Brussels, Belgium; Cologne, Federal Republic of Germany; New York; Paris; Tokyo; Vienna; and Zurich, Switzerland. New Services in Australia, Italy and the Scandinavian countries, and a second Service in the United States, were under consideration. Negotiations continued on the establishment of Services in Brazil, India and one of the Gulf States, and negotiations opened with Mexico and Turkey.

In 1980 and 1981, the Investment Promotion Services at Brussels, Cologne, New York, Vienna and Zurich promoted 101 industrial investment projects in 13 developing countries, valued at some $1.7 billion. Projects promoted by the Paris and Tokyo Services were still at the negotiation stage. During 1981, the Services organized 41 country presentation meetings for 15 developing countries, bringing together potential partners in industrial development and investment.

The programme continued to provide support services for technical co-operation projects in the context of financing and industrial investment promotion. Advisory services and assistance were extended to a number of countries, including Bangladesh, Chile, Mali, Panama, Sri Lanka, Suriname, the Syrian Arab Republic and Tunisia.

The World Bank/UNIDO Co-operative Programme carried out 7 missions in 1981 and participated in 11 others to a total of 16 countries, preparing the way for World Bank loans and helping to find other investors for industrial projects.

During debate in the General Assembly's Second Committee on development and international economic co-operation, the Byelorussian SSR expressed concern at the opening of UNIDO centres in capitalist countries, stating that it strengthened the position of those who adapted the industrialization of developing countries to their own interests. Mongolia expressed misgivings about the promotion of investment in developing countries and the setting up of centres for investment aid; it thought such measures might harm countries trying to free themselves from the grip of transnational corporations.

Industrial technology

During 1981, UNIDO expanded its activities for building and strengthening the technological capabilities and capacities of industry in developing countries. In addition to its work in respect of individual industries (p. 595), it assisted countries in the formulation of technological policies and devoted attention to the selection, acquisition, adaptation, absorption and development of technology, as part of broader United Nations efforts to stimulate the use of science and technology for development (p. 733) and especially to promote technology transfer (p. 753).

New technologies

A major new programme was established by UNIDO in 1981, dealing with the implications of emerging technological advances for developing countries.

A Group of Experts on the Establishment of an International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology (Vienna, 15-16 October) drew up detailed recommendations on the functions, work programme and organization of such a centre,<sup>(2)</sup> whose creation was originally suggested by an earlier UNIDO meeting of experts in this field (Vienna, 4-6 February).

A meeting of experts on the implications of technological advances in micro-electronics for developing countries (Vienna, 10-12 June) recommended continuous international monitoring of trends and of their impact on various sectors, and the development of pilot projects and programmes dealing with applications and computer software. An expert group meeting on the implications of technological advances in lighter-than-air technology systems for developing countries (Vienna, 19-22 October) concluded that a gradual approach was needed in this area, given the current state of technology and limited operational experience with such aircraft.

Information systems

Six countries-Angola, Mauritania, Mongolia, Nepal, Nigeria and Portugal-were assisted by UNIDO in 1981 to establish or develop documentation and information services for the collection, processing and dissemination of industrial technical information. UNIDO co-sponsored a conference on informatics and industrial development (Dublin, Ireland, March) which highlighted the importance developing countries attached to information science in their industrial development strategies. The activities of the UNIDO Technological Information Exchange System, linking technology transfer registries in developing countries, were reviewed by the heads of participating registries (sixth meeting, Manila, Philippines, 25-28 November) at a meeting which also examined the possibility of extending the System to encompass technological aspects of technology transfer contracts.<sup>(1)</sup>

Report: ("Meeting of Heads of Technology Transfer Registries, ID/WG.355/10.

Industrial and Technological Information Bank. In its second year of operation, the UNIDO Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB) continued in 1981 to develop access to world-wide data-base systems. By the end of the year, more than 100 data bases related to all aspects of technology were accessible. INTIB prepared a roster of 400 experts to provide it with advice and to develop a market for direct employment of experts under contracts between them and employers in developing countries. Among its publications was a 450-entry directory of industrial information services and systems in developing countries.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Industrial Development Board,<sup>(2)</sup> in May, reaffirmed the important role of INTIB, approved its work programme and decided to consider a comprehensive report on INTIB in 1982. The report, it said, should contain information on volume of work, countries, clients, information sources, sectors covered and links with other information centres. The Board expressed regret that resource constraints had not permitted full implementation of its previous decisions on INTIB.

Support for the provision of adequate resources to INTIB was voiced by Egypt and India during the debate on development and international economic co-operation in the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

Patent information

Under an agreement among UNIDO, the World Intellectual Property Organization

(WIPO) and the Austrian Patent Office, searches were carried out to provide patent information. Users' guides to the International Patent Classification, prepared by WIPO in co-operation with UNIDO, were published in 1981 for the four sectors of the INTIB pilot operation—iron and steel, fertilizers, agro-industries and agricultural machinery.<sup>(*)</sup>

Industrial institutions

In 1981, UNIDO assisted national science and technology councils, industrial research and service institutes, industrial information services, institutions for intermediate and village technologies, technological innovation centres and industrial consultancy companies in 15 countries: Angola, Egypt, Indonesia, Kenya, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire. A total of 165 such projects were being implemented in 1981, and expenditures on them during the year amounted to $12.7 million, a 12 per cent increase over the 1980 level.

A meeting on industry-research institute linkage with special reference to instrument design (Sofia, Bulgaria, 20-24 April) discussed the possibility of twinning arrangements between the Bulgarian Institute for Instrument Design and research institutes in developing countries.<sup>(1)</sup> A group meeting on standardization and quality control in the industrialization of developing countries (Arandjelovac, Yugoslavia, 7-12 September) made recommendations for national and international action to strengthen activities in this field.

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Meeting on industry-research institute linkage, ID/WG.344/5.

Preparation of industrial projects

The Industrial Development Board considered in May 1981<sup>(3)</sup> a proposal for the establishment within UNIDO of an industrial project preparation facility to assist project identification, preparation and evaluation in the least developed countries (LDCs). As outlined in a March 1981 note by the UNIDO Executive Director,<sup>(4)</sup> such a facility, proposed in February 1980 by the Third General Conference of UNIDO,<sup>(5)</sup> would concentrate on carrying out feasibility studies right up to the "bankable" stage, which UNIDO had hitherto done only to a limited extent. It would focus on the development of small-scale agro-industries and mineral processing, and be financed from a revolving fund of $10 million a year.

The Board agreed that UNIDO should improve its assistance in the preparation of industrial projects, particularly in LDCs, and in developing national capacities to that end. It requested the General Assembly to take measures with regard to the ability of UNIDO to assist developing countries in the preparation of industrial projects.

The Assembly, in its resolution of 17 December on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(4)</sup> decided to ensure that adequate resources would be made available to UNIDO to assist developing countries in the preparation of industrial programmes and projects in energy-related industrial technology (p. 706) and for LDCs (p. 595). This provision replaced a paragraph in the original draft of the resolution, sponsored by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77,<sup>(1)</sup> by which the Assembly would have decided to provide UNIDO with additional resources to continue to assist developing countries in the preparation of industrial programmes and projects.

Through its Co-operative Programme with the World Bank, UNIDO assisted three countries during 1981 in the preparation of investment projects: Mexico (capital goods), Turkey (textiles) and Yemen (stone-quarrying and -cutting, cement and glass).

During the debate on development and international economic co-operation in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, India expressed the hope that the Assembly would strengthen the capacity of UNIDO to undertake feasibility and project studies, especially with regard to industrial project preparation.

Industrial management

Technical co-operation expenditures for UNIDO factory establishment and management projects amounted to $4.5 million in 1981, with the United Nations Development Programme financing some 90 per cent of the total; 67 projects were in various stages of implementation.

Projects providing expert assistance in industrial management were continued in El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guyana, Mauritius, Nicaragua, Somalia, the Sudan and Uruguay. Projects for instituting organizational improvements were initiated or continued in Benin, El Salvador, Malawi, Swaziland, Zaire and Zambia. Computer-based management information systems were introduced through projects in Egypt and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Social aspects of Industrialization

Recognizing that the purpose of promoting industrialization in developing countries was to improve economic and social welfare, and citing the need to include social dimensions when giving advice on technical assistance and industrial planning, the UNIDO Executive Director, in a March 1981 report,<sup>(2)</sup> sought the guidance of the Industrial Development Board on the inclusion of research on social aspects of industrialization in the 1982-1983 programme budget. He suggested that the research might aim at highlighting industrialization's contribution to social welfare and progress and at underscoring the role of social progress in promoting rapid industrialization in developing countries.

On 20 May, the Board, stressing the positive social aspects for developing countries of accelerated industrialization, expressed the view that the research proposed by the UNIDO secretariat deserved special consideration.<sup>(1)</sup>

During debate in the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on development and international economic co-operation, Mongolia expressed the view that UNIDO should not lose sight of the social aspects of industrialization, which should make it possible to raise standards of living and promote social justice by eliminating the exploitation of man by man.

Reports: (1)IDB, A/36/16; (2)UNIDO Executive Director, ID/B/261.Add.3.

Activities for LDCs

Special measures in support of industrial development of the least developed countries (LDCs) continued to be a priority concern of UNIDO, with emphasis on manufacturing, industrial inputs to agricultural development, and human and physical infrastructure. Technical assistance valued at $20 million was delivered to LDCs during 1981, about the same level as in 1980. The UNIDO Investment Co-operative Programme assisted these countries in identifying and promoting projects for potential investment, and investment promotion offices in developed countries (p. 592) trained representatives of LDCs in project promotion.

Consultations took place in 1981 between UNIDO and a number of special funds and financial institutions, in search of funds for UNIDO-assisted projects in various LDCs. Industrial surveys were undertaken for seven LDCs, and country industrial development profiles or country industrial briefs were prepared for some LDCs in connection with country programming by the United Nations Development Programme for 1982-1986.

On 20 May, the Industrial Development Board<sup>(1)</sup> reaffirmed the priority of UNIDO activities for LDCs and requested the secretariat to participate more effectively in the preparation, deliberations and follow-up of the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, in September (p. 406).

The Economic and Social Council, in its resolution of 24 July on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(2)</sup> addressed to the UNIDO Executive Director a similar request for effective participation in the Conference deliberations and follow-up.

On 17 December, in its resolution on the same subject, the General Assembly requested the Executive Director to increase technical co-operation and the programmes and projects for LDCs, and decided to ensure that adequate resources would be made available to UNIDO to assist developing countries in the preparation of those programmes and projects.<sup>(3)</sup>

Development of specific industries

Many of the technical co-operation activities, studies and meetings carried out by UNIDO in 1981-including three meetings under the System of Consultations (p. 588)-related to specific industrial sectors or industries. The major sectors were agro-industries (see below), chemical industries (p. 596), engineering industries (p. 598), 597) and metallurgical industries

Agro-industries

Expenditures for UNIDO technical co-operation in agro-industries amounted to $8.3 million in 1981, involving 216 projects. Africa accounted for 38 per cent of the expenditure, Asia and the Pacific for 34 per cent, the Americas for 14 per cent, Arab States for 6 per cent, Europe for 2 per cent, and interregional and global projects for 6 per cent. As in the past, activities covered a wide range of light industries.

Food industry

The First Consultation on the Food-Processing Industry (The Hague, Netherlands, 9-13 November 1981)<sup>(1)</sup> called for the development of policy guidelines for a comprehensive approach to the acquisition of training, technology, financing and marketing, and stressed the importance of long-term arrangements that would increase the participation of food-producing developing countries in processing, create a more equitable distribution of benefits among those involved in the agor-food chain and link the food-processing industry to other sectors of the economy. It recommended that UNIDO establish a roster and assist in bringing clients in developing countries into contact with appropriate partners.

The UNIDO secretariat prepared for the Consultation its first global study on the food-processing industry, comprising a detailed worldwide assessment of the industry and of developing countries' prospects for rapid progress in that sector.<sup>(2)</sup>

UNIDO technical co-operation activities in the food-processing sector included assistance in the expansion, modernization and integration of complexes for cane sugar and its by-products in Bangladesh, the Dominican Republic and Mauritius; initiation of work on the establishment of a sugar industry development centre in Egypt; and upgrading the production of baker's yeast in Viet Nam, biscuits in Uganda and bacon in Kenya. A study was conducted for the International Pepper Community on developing the pepper-processing and pepper products industry. Latin American countries received UNIDO assistance in improving urban food supply and developing an integrated agro-industry, with the aim of creating employment in rural areas and reducing the exodus of rural populations.

Textile industry

Of the nine current large-scale UNIDO projects in the textile industry, four were completed in early 1981. In addition to the five remaining projects in Bangladesh (two), Egypt, India and the United Republic of Tanzania, there were two medium-scale projects in Ghana and India and one preparatory assistance project in Sri Lanka. A major techno-economic feasibility study was completed in 1981 for the first textile manufacturing complex in Haiti.

Vegetable oil industry

A detailed evaluation of the vegetable oil and fat industries in 12 Pacific countries was undertaken in 1981 to promote closer regional co-operation in that sector. A Coconut Technology Consultancy Service was established in the UNIDO secretariat to extend coconut-processing documentation and upgrade selected domestic processes to semi-industrial and industrial levels. UNIDO initiated a study in seven developing countries in order to provide recommendations for international co-operation agreements on local manufacture and distribution of spare parts and equipment for the vegetable oil industry.

Wood-using industry

A UNIDO Expert Group Meeting on Timber Stress Grading and Strength Grouping (Vienna, 14-17 December 1981) sought to increase the use of timber in construction by drawing up standard rules and systems to assist designers and specifiers.<sup>(2)</sup> A seminar on wood-based panels and furniture industries (Beijing, China, 20 March-4 April) considered guidelines for the selection of options in establishing such industries in the least developed countries. A large-scale project in Sri Lanka on structural uses of coconut- and rubber-wood was started during the year. A manual on jigs for the furniture industry and a study on technical criteria for the selection of wood-working machines<sup>(3)</sup> were published.

Study: <sup>(3)</sup>ID/247.

Chemical industries

Technical co-operation expenditures for UNIDO activities in the chemical industries sector amounted to $21.3 million in 1981, involving 302 projects. Asia and the Pacific accounted for 42 per cent of the expenditure, Africa for 24 per cent, Arab States for 18 per cent, the Americas for 11 per cent, Europe for 3 per cent, and interregional and global projects for 2 per cent. Some 80 new projects were approved for implementation, 4 of which, at a total value of $2.8 million, were approved for financing by the United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development.

In an innovative approach, UNIDO technical assistance was combined with commercial co-operation when a firm that had contracted with UNIDO to provide advisory and training services to a public sector chemical dyestuff company in Egypt entered into a commercial agreement with the company, guaranteeing increased production and sales.

Fertilizer industry

In 1981, UNIDO carried out feasibility studies on establishing small-scale nitrogen fertilizer plants in Argentina and Nepal, and a nitrophosphate plant in Pakistan received technical assistance to increase the product's water solubility and improve the capacity utilization of the plant. Assistance continued to be provided to the Bangladesh Chemical Industries Corporation to increase plant utilization and to establish a central fertilizer training institute at one of its plants. In co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the Arab Industrial Development Organization and the Arab Federation of Chemical Fertilizer Producers, a programme was undertaken for the development and promotion of fertilizer production and utilization in the Arab region. An expert group (first meeting, Vienna, 7-11 December) met to exchange experiences in the construction and operation of fertilizer plants in developing countries.<sup>(3)</sup>

Developing countries began to use as a negotiating guide two model forms of contract for fertilizer plant construction—a turnkey lump sum contract<sup>(1)</sup> and a cost reimbursable contract<sup>(2)</sup>—which had been developed by UNIDO under its System of Consultations (p.588).

Petrochemical industry

The Second Consultation on the Petrochemical Industry (Istanbul, Turkey, 22-26 June 1981)<sup>(1)</sup> recommended that UNIDO should: provide information on opportunities for co-operation between industrialized and oil- and gas-producing developing countries for the development of downstream petrochemical industries in other developing countries; examine various forms of long-term arrangements for international co-operation in the sector, to help ensure orderly world-wide development of the industry; and revise a model form of licensing agreement for the petrochemical industry to include alternative texts on some points.

UNIDO submitted to the Consultation a second world-wide study on the petrochemical industry, which analysed patterns of supply and demand in respect of major petrochemical products, projected possible developments up to 1990 and indicated potential opportunities for new production capacities.

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Consultation on Petrochemical Industry, ID/273.

Petroleum industry

A workshop on petroleum processing (Vienna, 21-30 April 1981) sponsored by UNIDO, the Fund for International Development of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, the Government of Austria and the State-owned Austrian oil company, enabled technical managers of small, State-controlled refineries in developing countries to exchange information and develop closer co-operation.

Pharmaceutical industry

Technical assistance by UNIDO in the pharmaceutical sector exceeded $3.8 million in 1981. Projects focused on improving the supply of drugs for health care through provision of technological capabilities for local production of essential pharmaceuticals.

UNIDO assisted in the establishment of simple pharmaceutical formulation and medicinal plant extraction units in Afghanistan, Bhutan, Botswana, Cape Verde, Democratic Yemen, Guinea-Bissau, Nepal, Rwanda and the Upper Volta. Aid was also provided for the establishment of larger pharmaceutical formulation plants in Guinea and the United Republic of Tanzania, a pharmaceutical dosage form production unit in Mozambique, an intravenous equipment plant in Zambia, a multi-purpose plant for the production of 15 essential synthetic drugs in Cuba, and projects involving sophisticated technology for the manufacture of synthetic drugs in Brazil and India.

A round-table meeting of experts on pharmaceuticals (Mohammedia, Morocco, December) agreed that a directory of manufacturers and suppliers of bulk drugs and their intermediates being prepared by UNIDO would assist developing countries in considering a wider range of alternative sources of supply.

At a Workshop on Trade and Technology Policies in the Pharmaceutical Sector (Abidjan, Ivory Coast, 12-23 October), <sup>(1)</sup> organized by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in co-operation with the African Regional Centre for Technology, African participants adopted a Programme of Action for Rational Pharmaceutical Policies, aimed at overcoming technological dependence and ensuring a proper supply of drugs at reasonable prices. The Programme recognized the need to establish regional co-operation machinery, including a pharmaceuticals fund, for the pooled procurement of drugs and development of the pharmaceutical sector.

The United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations submitted to the Commission on Transnational Corporations a study on such corporations in the pharmaceutical industry of developing countries (p. 603). The General Assembly continued to call for the exchange of information on unsafe pharmaceutical products (p. 824).

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Workshop on Trade and Technology Policies in Pharmaceutical Sector, UNCTAD/TT/48.

Engineering industries

Technical co-operation expenditures for engineering industries activities of UNIDO totalled $14.3 million in 1981, involving 149 projects. Asia and the Pacific received 62 per cent of total expenditure, Africa 15 per cent, the Americas 11 per cent, Arab States 7 per cent and Europe 5 per cent. The value of projects approved in this sector increased by 50 per cent over the 1980 figure.

In addition to its assistance to established industries, UNIDO convened expert groups to evaluate the potential of some new technologies (p. 593).

Capital goods

The First Consultation on the Capital Goods Industry (Brussels, Belgium, 21-25 September 1981)<sup>(1)</sup> recommended that UNIDO make information available to developing countries on long-term technological trends, technological alternatives and their availability and costs, and commercial conditions for their acquisition. It also requested UNIDO to propose measures to improve the flow of technology to developing countries, taking into account the mutual interest of recipients and suppliers of technology and the consequences for employment. Alternative approaches to establishing and expanding the production of capital goods in developing countries were proposed by the UNIDO secretariat in its first global study on the capital goods industry, presented to the Consultation.*

Study: <sup>(2)</sup>ID/WG.342/3.

Agricultural machinery industry

Technical assistance on production of agricultural equipment at industrial, small-scale and artisan levels was provided by UNIDO in 1981 to Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Ethiopia, Kenya, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Somalia, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. As in the past, most projects in the least developed countries involved small-scale production and intermediate technology, and aimed at reducing imports of agricultural equipment, including hand tools.

A workshop on maintenance and repair of sugar industry equipment (Havana, Cuba, October), organized by UNIDO, the Group of Latin American and Caribbean Sugar Exporting Countries and the Government of Cuba, agreed on a joint regional programme for the maintenance of such equipment.

Electronics industry

Assistance provided by UNIDO in the electronics sector in 1981 was highlighted by the application of mini- and micro-computers to industrial processes and design. Several requests for projects in this field were received and specific services were provided to a number of countries.

During the year, the largest UNIDO engineering project to date, a turnkey training plant for bipolar digital integrated circuits, became operational in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. In addition to a programme for promoting the manufacture of telecommunications equipment in Africa, new projects included assistance to the heavy electrical manufacturing industry, electrical maintenance and repair facilities, and creation of electronics industries in China, Cuba, Egypt, Hong Kong, Hungary, Mexico, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Thailand and several Caribbean countries.

A workshop on the selection of technology for assembling electronic and electrical products in developing countries (Utrecht, Netherlands, 4-8 May), held in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme and the Industry Council for Development, recommended the preparation of guidelines for the establishment of television receiver assembly plants in developing countries.*

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Workshop on electronic and electrical products, ID/WG/339/16.

Metallurgical industries

Technical co-operation expenditures on UNIDO activities in metallurgical industries totalled $8.2 million in 1981. Asia and the Pacific received 34 per cent. of total expenditures, Africa 27 per cent, the Americas 18 per cent, Arab States 11 per cent and Europe 10 per cent. Some 94 projects were under way during the year, with a focus on development, transfer and application of technology.

Increased efforts were made to identify and implement foundry projects to supply local markets with agricultural implements, tools and spare parts, and to reduce imports. Such projects were under way in the Central African Republic, Democratic Yemen, Hungary, Nepal, the Niger, Sierra Leone and the United Republic of Tanzania. Activities concerned with the establishment and strengthening of metallurgical technology centres, training, and consultancy and quality control services took place in India, Nigeria, Pakistan and Turkey.

The Workshop on the Regional Project for Co-operative Research among Metallurgical Research and Development Centres in Asia and the Pacific (Jamshedpur, India, 7-11 December) resulted in an agreed scheme for future co-region.<sup>(1)</sup> among such institutions in the Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Workshop on metallurgical research and development centres in Asia and Pacific, ID/WG/361/18.

Iron and steel

The largest UNIDO project to date, a demonstration plant for the production of sponge iron in India, which was inaugurated on 31 December 1980, operated in 1981 at 10 per cent above its rated capacity of 30,000 tons a year. Assistance to the iron and steel industry was also given to Angola, Argentina, Brazil, Egypt, Mozambique, the Niger, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey.

Jointly organized by UNIDO and the Association of South-East Asian Nations, a workshop on regional steel standardization (Manila, Philippines, 20-23 July) discussed future co-operation in the gradual harmonization of the variety of national standards in use within the region. Two studies were completed in continuation of a project to elaborate scenarios for the development of the world iron and steel industry through 1990.<sup>(1)</sup>

Other industrial categories

Building materials and construction industry

In co-operation with Turkey and the Turkish Cement Manufacturers Association, UNIDO organized a High-level Meeting on Co-operation among Developing Countries in the Field of Cement, Lime and Related Industries (Ankara, 14-18 December 1981). <sup>(1)</sup>UNIDO technical assistance included recommendations for technical and managerial improvements at a major national construction company in Algeria, assistance to a cement plant in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and development of the building materials industry in the Syrian Arab Republic.

The first technical co-operation project on earthquake-resistant building construction was initiated in 1981, with the participation of Governments and institutes in Bulgaria, Greece, Hungary, Romania, Turkey and Yugoslavia. In addition, a comprehensive survey of the construction industry took place in the Sudan under the World Bank/UNIDO Co-operative Programme.

Report: <sup>(1)</sup> Meeting on cement, lime and related industries, UNIDO/PC/39.

Small-scale industries

During 1981, UNIDO assisted 38 countries and an intergovernmental organization in the establishment and strengthening of institutions serving small-scale industries and delivering technology to entrepreneurs in less accessible areas. In Egypt, a UNIDO-organized workshop (Alexandria, 23 June-2 July) produced a comprehensive programme for the identification, promotion and financing of small- and medium-scale industrial enterprises in two provinces. Togo received assistance in establishing and operating an industrial estate in an effort to direct industrialization to remote areas. Aid to Zambia in establishing a legal base for a development organization for small-scale industry resulted in the enactment of a small-scale industry act.

To promote co-operation at the plant level, a project was initiated for technology transfer between food-processing plants in the Netherlands and similar plants in China, Mexico, the Sudan and Thailand. Another project involved the study of possibilities for technology transfer from small-scale industries in India to those in Samoa processing coir and its by-products. UNIDO also encouraged co-operation between small-scale enterprises in India and Nepal concerned with non-ferrous metal casting, machine tools, small foundries, welding electrodes and small brick-making industries. An expert group meeting (Manila, Philippines, 2-6 November) reviewed a continuing pilot project in the Philippines which had established a link between industrial research institutions and small- and medium-scale industries, particularly in rural areas.

Chapter VII

Transnational corporations

United Nations activities in 1981 concerning transnational corporations (TNCs) were concentrated in the Commission on Transnational Corporations, with its two subsidiary working groups, and the Secretariat's Centre on Transnational Corporations. The Centre's work was reviewed by the Commission at its seventh session, from 31 August to 11 September at Geneva.<sup>(1)</sup>

Drafting continued of a code of conduct relating to TNC activities (p. 600). The Commission's Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct held three sessions, in January, April and May.<sup>(3)</sup> Agreement was reached concerning provisions on requirements for disclosure of information and on TNC activities in southern Africa, among others.

The other working group of the Commission—the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting—held two sessions in 1981, in January and March,<sup>(2)</sup> to continue the preparation of reporting standards on TNC operations (p. 601). It focused on lists of financial and non-financial items to be included in reports of transnational enterprises.

The Centre carried out its work programme, as mandated by the Commission, in the areas of information, research and technical co-operation (p. 602). It continued to develop its comprehensive information system on TNCs and to study their operations in a number of industries and sectors.

Acting on the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council, in November, called for the termination of all collaboration by TNCs with South Africa (p. 189).

Draft code of conduct on TNCs

In 1981, the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct continued work on the formulation of an international code relating to the activities of TNCs and the treatment to be accorded them by Governments. It held its twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth sessions at United Nations Headquarters from 5 to 23 January, from 6 to 17 April and from 18 to 29 May, respectively.

The May session was authorized by the Economic and Social Council on 6 February.<sup>(5)</sup> This was done at the Group's request, as conveyed in a letter of 30 January from its Chairman to the Council President.<sup>(*)</sup>

In 1981, the Working Group dealt mainly with the section on activities of TNCs. It discussed paragraphs dealing with non-interference in intergovernmental relations and reached agreement on some paragraphs concerning ownership and control, as well as on those dealing with disclosure of information to the public and to authorities of countries in which TNCs operated. Two alternative formulations were drafted for a paragraph referring to the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices adopted by the General Assembly in 1980.<sup>(4)</sup> The Group agreed on a provision stating that the Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy, adopted by the Governing Body of the International Labour Office in 1977, should apply in the field of employment, training, conditions of work and life, and industrial relations.

It provisionally agreed on a paragraph dealing with the activities of TNCs in southern Africa. This text stated that TNCs should progressively reduce their business activities and make no further investment in South Africa, cease business in Namibia and refrain from collaboration with the South African régime. Also, TNCs operating in southern Africa should respect national laws and regulations adopted in pursuance of Security Council decisions on southern Africa, and should contribute to the elimination of racial discrimination practices.

In the chapter on treatment of TNCs, the Working Group discussed but did not reach agreement on provisions dealing with their general treatment by the countries in which they operated, nationalization and compensation, and jurisdiction. It agreed to a paragraph on the right of States to regulate the entry and establishment of TNCs and to prohibit or limit their presence in specific sectors.

The Group drafted seven out of eight paragraphs dealing with intergovernmental co-operation and held a general discussion on the section of the code dealing with its implementation. In addition, at the Group's request, the Chairman prepared formulations covering the preamble, objectives, definitions, scope of application, and certain paragraphs in the section on the treatment of TNCs.

At the beginning of its May session, the Working Group decided to continue drafting provisions with a view to reaching, as far as possible, complete agreement on them. By the end of its fifth year of work on the code, the Group had drafted about 50 provisions, of which fewer than 20 had clauses in brackets, indicating lack of agreement on them. It still had to draft texts on the introductory part of the code (preamble, objectives and definitions), scope of application and the section on implementation. It requested authorization for three two-week sessions in 1982 to complete its work.

The report submitted by the Working Group to the Commission in 1981<sup>(3)</sup> contained the text of the provisions concluded by that time, as well as formulations by the Chairman on other provisions.

In September,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission took note of the Group's report and reaffirmed that the code of conduct had the highest priority among its tasks. As requested, it recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize three further sessions and it requested the Group to finalize its work and submit the results at the Commission's 1982 session. The Commission reaffirmed that the code should be universally adopted and decided to take all necessary measures to that end during its 1982 session.

The Commission's recommendations on the Working Group's 1982 calendar of meetings were approved by the Council on 2 November.<sup>(6)</sup>

During the Council's debate on TNCs, the USSR said that, at a time when developing countries were being deprived of income because capitalist Powers were trying to impose foreign private enterprise free from the jurisdiction of countries in which they operated, it was extremely important to work towards a code of conduct; the USSR regretted that progress was being blocked by Western countries. The German Democratic Republic felt that the code should be an instrument for regulating and controlling TNC activities, not for creating a climate for direct private investment.

The United States, expressing the view that foreign investment led to increased employment and enhanced international trade, supported work on a code, which it believed should take into account the activities of State-owned as well as private enterprises.

Definition of TNCs

At the April 1981 session of the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct (p. 600), the Chairman submitted a working paper which included a suggested definition of the term "transnational corporation" for inclusion in the introductory part of the code.<sup>(2)</sup> The Group did not deal with the matter in 1981.

At its August/September session,<sup>(1)</sup> the Commission on TNCs postponed consideration of the item until 1982 and decided to discuss it at that time in the context of the Working Group's report.

Reports: <sup>(1)</sup>Commission on TNCs, E/1981/49; (2)Working Group, E/C.10/79.

Standards of accounting and reporting

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, which began work in 1980,<sup>(5)</sup> held its third and fourth sessions in 1981 at United Nations Headquarters, from 19 to 30 January and from 16 to 27 March, respectively. The Group pursued its basic objective of setting up international accounting and reporting standards to improve the availability and comparability of information on TNC operations, giving priority to disclosure of information on the nature, scope and effects of TNC activities in both home and host, particularly developing, countries. It submitted a report to the Commission on TNCs covering its work in 1980 and 1981.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Group agreed on the principle of appropriate disclosure to meet users' needs for better understanding, analysis and evaluation of the performance of TNCs. Accordingly, it devoted its time to elaborating minimum lists of financial and non-financial information items to be included in general purpose reports of transnational enterprises as a whole and of individual member enterprises.

The Group discussed in detail the type of information that should be included in each main component of annual financial reports- balance sheet, income statement, statement of allocation of net profits or net income, and statement of changes in financial position. Disclosure of accounting policies was considered essential for understanding the content of financial statements. The Group considered that certain items of both financial and non-financial information should be reported not only in the aggregate but also by geographical area and line of business. In addition, it agreed on the definition of certain general and financial terms that TNCs should adopt in preparing their reports. The Group decided that reports should disclose all items which were material enough to affect evaluations or decisions by users, whether or not such items were included in a minimum list.

The Group agreed that lists of items for disclosure need not follow a pre-determined format. It was also agreed that the applicability of the lists to financial enterprises such as banks and insurance firms would be considered subsequently. In this connection, it asked the Centre on TNCs to produce a background study on information disclosure by banking and financial institutions.

The Group accepted the principle that financial information on group enterprises- those consisting of several member enterprises- should be presented in consolidated form. Consolidation was understood to involve the application of accounting principles and practices to eliminate transactions, investments and other balances, and profits or losses arising from transactions among members of the group, so that information was presented as if the group were a single enterprise.

The Group also dealt with financial information regarding individual enterprises, again with a view to setting out a minimum list with definitions. Due to the wide variation of national laws and regulations, it was agreed that such lists should apply to the extent and in the manner required by those laws.

Also discussed was non-financial information to be disclosed with regard to the enterprise as a whole, on topics such as labour and employment, production, investment programme, organizational structure, environmental measures and technology transfer.

By the end of the March session, the Group had yet to discuss a 1977 report by an earlier group of experts on international harmonization and standardization of the accounting and reporting practices of TNCs,<sup>(4)</sup> and recommendations of the Secretary-General on an international system of standardized accounting for TNCs; to review materials from international accountancy bodies and other interested groups; and to consider further steps in the field of international standards and reporting, particularly in regard to the United Nations information system on TNCs (see below), the draft code of conduct (p. 600) and improvement of the information provided by TNCs in their reports. In order to complete its mandate, the Group requested authorization for two further sessions in 1982, each of two weeks' duration, to complete its work.

Accordingly, the Commission on TNCs recommended in September that the Group be authorized to hold two sessions in 1982.<sup>(2)</sup> The Economic and Social Council decided on 2 November 1981<sup>(1)</sup> to authorize the sessions, with the objective of having the Group submit its final recommendations to the Commission in 1982.

Activities of the UN Centre on TNCs

The United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the main Secretariat unit for matters relating to TNCs, in 1981 continued to develop a comprehensive information system (see below), conducted and supervised technical co-operation activities (p. 604) and carried out research (p. 603). It assisted the working groups involved in formulation of a code of conduct (p. 600) and international standards of accounting and reporting (p. 601). It co-operated with other organizations and units inside and outside the United Nations system, in particular with joint units operated by the Centre and the United Nations regional commissions (p. 603).

Taking note of a report on the Centre's activities since mid-1980,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission, in September, requested more information on the financial implications of the Centre's work.<sup>(1)</sup> A report on the work accomplished between mid-1981 and mid-1982 was submitted to the Commission for its 1982 session.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Centre was financed from the United Nations regular budget, under which $7,294,600 was appropriated for 1980-1981.<sup>(4)</sup> In addition, it received $1,191,918 during 1981 in contributions from six Governments to the Trust Fund for the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations: Finland, $23,041; Italy, $338,240; the Netherlands, $79,613; Norway, $185,185; Sweden, $365,839; and Switzerland, $200,000. Pledges to this Fund for 1982 (as at 31 December 1981) were made by Finland ($33,708) and Norway ($168,067).

Information system

The Centre on TNCs continued in 1981 to expand its comprehensive information system, with special attention given to legal information, macro-economic information, studies of TNC activities in sectors of special significance to developing countries and corporate profiles on individual corporations. In a report to the 1981 session of the Commission on TNCs,<sup>(11)</sup> the Centre outlined the structure and development of the information system and its priorities and progress, surveyed its main features, and described the sources and nature of information, co-ordination with other United Nations agencies' systems, co-operation with regional joint units and information dissemination.

Priority was given to collection and analysis of legal information, particularly on policies, laws and regulations, and agreements between TNCs and host-country entities. Studies on legal topics produced in 1981 included a survey of national legislation relating to TNCs in 20 countries<sup>(8)</sup> and technical papers on management contracts,<sup>(6)</sup> petroleum and mining agreements<sup>(9)</sup> and turnkey contracts.<sup>(10)</sup>

Several industry studies analysed the role of TNCs in particular production sectors—copper,<sup>(1)</sup> bauxite/aluminium,<sup>(*)</sup> food and beverage processing,<sup>(3)</sup> fertilizers,<sup>(4)</sup> power equipment<sup>(5)</sup> and agricultural equipment.<sup>(7)</sup> The Centre initiated a programme for improving national capability for collecting and analysing information on TNCs in host developing countries.

A study was prepared on the possible role of the information system in improving the exchange of information on banned hazardous chemicals and unsafe pharmaceuticals (p. 824).

The Commission, after considering the Centre's reports at its August/September session,<sup>(12)</sup> noted the improved performance of the information system. It stated that further attention should be given to legal information, including national legislation and different forms of contracts; macrodata; studies of TNC activities in sectors of special significance to developing countries; and corporate profiles on individual corporations. It stressed the need for the development of national information systems, to be linked to the Centre's system with the assistance of the Centre.

Research

The research programme of the Centre, concerned with the economic, political, social and legal effects of TNCs in home and host countries, presented six reports to the Commission in 1981 on the following subjects: TNC activities in southern Africa (p. 189), the direct effects of TNCs on the balance of payments,<sup>(4)</sup> TNCs in the pharmaceutical industry of developing countries,<sup>(5)</sup> aspects of the social and political effects of the operations and practices of TNCs,<sup>(6)</sup> TNCs and transborder data flows,<sup>(7)</sup> and the Centre's ongoing and future research.<sup>(8)</sup> In addition, two studies completed previously, on sub-contracting<sup>(1)</sup> and transnational banks,<sup>(2)</sup> were issued as publications.

The Centre continued work on a comprehensive integrated study on TNCs in world development, the centre-piece of its research activities during the 1981-1982 biennium, to be submitted to the Commission in 1983. In addition, several case studies were under way with the aim of strengthening the negotiating capacity of host countries. Research was also being conducted in connection with the information system on TNCs (p. 602).

In September,<sup>(9)</sup> the Commission requested the Centre to continue its useful research, and reaffirmed that research should be action-oriented and should contribute to formulation of the code of conduct (p. 600) and to strengthening the negotiating capacity of host, particularly developing, countries. The Commission commended the Centre's periodical, The CTC Reporter,<sup>(3)</sup> as a useful means for disseminating information on research related to TNCs.

In the Economic and Social Council's discussion of TNCs and the work of the Centre, the USSR said the Centre had placed undue emphasis on the "positive" contribution of TNCs to the development of developing countries, while its reports provided little information on the adverse effects of TNC activities. The United States expressed concern that the Centre might be overstepping its mandate by producing some studies not formally requested by the Commission and suggested that the Commission review the Centre's reports so that bias against TNCs and the United States, evident in the past, could be reduced. However, Nigeria considered this suggestion unacceptable on the ground that it would lessen the Centre's effectiveness.

Joint units with the regional commissions

The Centre on TNCs submitted in July 1981 its first comprehensive report on the operations of the joint units established between the Centre and the United Nations regional commissions for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and Western Asia.<sup>(1)</sup> The report provided information on the establishment of the five joint units in 1976 and 1977, discussed co-ordination arrangements on policy matters and on their substantive work, described the work they had accomplished and listed the studies completed by each.

The joint units were established as the focal point for the Centre's activities in their respective regions, in particular through case studies which served as input for the studies and analyses carried out by the Centre. They collected and analysed information on matters relating to TNCs in the regions, to complement the Centre's information system (p. 602). Through a questionnaire designed by the Centre, the units provided it with information on individual corporations. The units for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America were co-operating in an inter-regional project on the role of TNCs in export-oriented primary commodities, concentrating on two issues: factors determining the relative bargaining positions of host Governments and TNCs, and the resulting structure of the distribution of gains between host countries and TNCs.

The Commission, in September,<sup>(2)</sup> expressed support for the work of the joint units. It stated that close co-ordination should be maintained between their work and that of the Centre and requested annual reports on them.

Technical co-operation

During 1981, the technical co-operation activities of the Centre on TNCs continued to expand in both quantity and scope. In response to government requests, the Centre completed or initiated 128 advisory projects in more than 40 developing countries and conducted 19 training workshops for over 500 officials from 59 developing countries. These figures compared with 49 advisory projects and 10 training workshops in 1980. The Centre reported to the Commission on its technical co-operation work from April 1980 to mid-May 1981<sup>(1)</sup> and from mid-May 1981 to June 1982.<sup>(2)</sup>

The Centre was increasingly involved with projects in support of development efforts. It assisted African, Asian and Latin American countries in reviewing or drafting laws and regulations governing direct foreign investment, acquisition of technology, and monitoring and screening procedures. It helped them in examining the legal, financial, economic and operational aspects of draft contracts and arrangements with TNCs in natural resources exploration and in developing processing projects for petroleum, natural gas, copper, coal, iron, gold, diamonds, bauxite, uranium, aluminium, fertilizers and petrochemicals. It also delivered advisory assistance to developing countries in an expanding range of manufacturing and service industries, including automotive, nuclear power, communications, tyres, food processing, hotel and tourism projects.

Of the 19 training workshops conducted in 1981, 12 were national, 5 were regional and 2 were interregional. They dealt with general legal and negotiating issues involving TNCs as well as issues in the following specific sectors and areas: petroleum, mining, banking, fisheries, tourism, contracts and technology transfer. The national workshops were for officials from China, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Malaysia, Maldives, Morocco, Namibia, Nepal, the Netherlands Antilles, Singapore, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia. There were regional exercises for the Caribbean (two), Latin America (two) and the Association of South-East Asian Nations.

Voluntary contributions from Governments were the main source of funding for advisory and training projects executed by the Centre. In 1981, income for technical co-operation relating to TNCs amounted to $2,154,430, of which $1,341,918 came from seven Governments: Finland, $23,041; Germany, Federal Republic of, $150,000; Italy, $338,240; Netherlands, $79,613; Norway, $185,185; Sweden, $365,839; and Switzerland, $200,000. The financial share of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) ($654,950) increased to 31 per cent, compared to about 6 per cent in 1980. Expenditures totalled $1,838,467.

In September 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> the Commission reaffirmed the importance it attached to the advisory and training services. It endorsed the Centre's proposal to assist developing country institutions to develop interdisciplinary training programmes on TNC matters and underlined the usefulness of that activity in strengthening self-reliance within and among developing countries. It stressed that full use should be made of experts with extensive experience, especially those from developing countries.

The Commission reaffirmed the importance of voluntary contributions for this programme while expressing hope that financial support from UNDP would continue to increase. It requested the Centre, in its 1982 report on the programme, to give more information on the cost of projects, the experts used, the content and documentation of workshops, and future activities.

Medium-term plan

The Centre on TNCs submitted to the Commission in July 1981 a draft for the section of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989 concerned with the Organization's activities on TNCs.<sup>(1)</sup> The document provided a detailed description of the Centre's three sub-programmes: securing an effective code of conduct and other international arrangements and agreements relating to TNCs; enhancing the contribution of TNCs to development and minimizing their negative effects; and strengthening the capability of host developing countries in dealing with matters related to TNCs.

The Commission, in September,<sup>(2)</sup> took note with appreciation of the Secretariat's draft and requested a revision in the light of the Commission's discussions and to ensure that the plan was consistent with the approved objectives of the Centre. Delegations made suggestions to be incorporated into the document for submission to the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the General Assembly in 1982.

Experts and consultants

The General Assembly, acting without vote on 18 December 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> requested that, in the future, the Secretary-General submit, for consideration in conjunction with the programme budget for the Centre on TNCs, full information on the experts and consultants employed by the Centre financed from both the United Nations regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources. The recommendation to this effect, on an oral proposal by Peru, was made by the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee without objection on 19 November.

The Committee's action was taken during its consideration of the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1982-1983. At the request of Peru, the Secretariat submitted to the Committee details on the experts and consultants employed by the Centre.

During the discussion in the Committee, Ecuador, Iraq, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Panama, Peru and the USSR expressed concern that not enough consultants were hired from Latin America, from developing countries generally or from Eastern Europe. The Director of the Centre responded that more than 40 per cent of the consultants employed by the Centre in 1980-1981 had been from developing countries.

Commission on TNCs

Convening of the 1981 session

The seventh session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations (TNCs) was held at Geneva from 31 August to 11 September 1981. Originally scheduled for 18 to 28 May at United Nations Headquarters, the session was postponed by the Economic and Social Council on 6 February<sup>(1)</sup> to permit the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct to hold an extra session, at the time and place originally planned for the Commission (p. 600).

The Council's decision was taken without vote on a draft by Venezuela, orally revised by the sponsor to specify the dates of the two sessions and the locale for the Commission's session.

Calendar of 1982 meetings

On the recommendation of the Commission on TNCs at its August/September 1981 session, the Economic and Social Council decided without vote on 2 November<sup>(1)</sup> to accept the offer of the Government of the Philippines to host the 1982 session of the Commission at Manila from 30 August to 10 September. The session had been scheduled for 12 to 21 May at United Nations Headquarters. The Council also authorized 1982 sessions of the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct (p. 600) and the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (p.601).

Chapter VIII

Regional economic and social activities

The five United Nations regional commissions -for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and Western Asia-continued in 1981 to promote development and co-operation among the countries of their regions. Most of them, in both developed and developing regions, devoted increased attention to energy-its cost, its conservation and the development of indigenous energy resources, both conventional and new.

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) (sixteenth session, Freetown, Sierra Leone, 6-10 April) (p. 609), meeting as a Conference of Ministers,<sup>(1)</sup> continued to concentrate on implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for the economic development of Africa, adopted by the Organization of African Unity in April 1980. The General Assembly, in December 1981, urged countries to provide resources for implementing the Plan.<sup>(14)</sup>

Emphasis was placed on three areas of African development: transport and communications, industrial development and food. Potential donors and African States were brought together in June at the first of four meetings designed to secure financing for projects under the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988), and preparations began for a second phase of the Decade, with support from the Economic and Social Council in July<sup>(8)</sup> and the General Assembly in December.<sup>(12)</sup> A Conference of African Ministers of Industry approved in November a framework for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990) (p. 621). In December, the Assembly again called on the international community to support Africa's efforts to increase its food production.<sup>(15)</sup>

In connection with the Transport and Communications Decade, the Council, in July,<sup>(9)</sup> and the Assembly, in December,<sup>(10)</sup> urged support for technical assistance to complete studies on the transport and foreign trade problems of Zaïre. The Assembly also called for efforts to seek funding outside the United Nations budget for the continued operation of the five subregional offices of ECA, known as Multinational Programming and Operational Centres.<sup>(13)</sup> On the Council's recommendation in July,<sup>(6)</sup> the Assembly, in December,<sup>(11)</sup> requested a study of the adequacy of conference facilities at ECA headquarters at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) (thirty-seventh session, Bangkok, Thailand, 10-20 March)<sup>(5)</sup> decided that it should be the regional focal point for work in the field of energy (p. 635). The Asian and Pacific Development Centre was inaugurated in August at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, following the approval of its Charter by ESCAP.

Several subsidiary bodies of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) (thirty-sixth session, Geneva, 30 March-8 April)<sup>(2)</sup> expanded their activities in relation to energy (p. 648). An ECE-related body concerned with transboundary air pollution made recommendations on the control of sulphur emissions into the atmosphere.

The Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) (nineteenth session, Montevideo, Uruguay, 4-15 May)<sup>(3)</sup> proclaimed the 1980s as the Latin American Development Decade and approved an extensive Regional Programme of Action, setting goals and suggesting action to achieve them (p. 660). As happened in other regions, a Regional Plan of Action on New and Renewable Sources of Energy was drawn up at an ECLA meeting, in preparation for the United Nations Conference on the subject held in August (p. 689).

The Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) (eighth session, Sana'a, Yemen, 3-7 May)<sup>(4)</sup> sought resources to expand its work in statistics, industrial development, and science and technology (p. 669). In December, the Government of Iraq made available to the ECWA secretariat a temporary site at Baghdad, pending construction of a permanent headquarters in that city.

Reviewing the work of the regional commissions in July, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the decentralization of economic and social activities to the commissions be accelerated.<sup>(7)</sup>

Regional co-operation and strengthening of regional commissions

The four commissions in developing regions adopted resolutions in 1981 on their role in the ongoing process of restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system (p. 1092): ECA, on 10 April<sup>(6)</sup> ECLA, on 15 May;<sup>(7)</sup> ECWA, on 6 May; and ESCAP, on 20 March.<sup>(10)</sup> The resolutions were summarized in the Secretary-General's report to the Economic and Social Council on regional co-operation,<sup>(4)</sup> which surveyed major economic and social developments in the regions as well as the work of each commission.

By these resolutions, all four commissions recommended the intensification of inter-agency co-operation and co-ordination at the regional level, and emphasized that adequate resources should be provided to enable them to carry out their increased responsibilities.

In addition, the commissions urged the General Assembly to involve them more fully in the preparation and implementation of United Nations global policy-making and programme planning (ECLA, ECWA, ESCAP); called for further measures in support of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries (ECA, ECWA, ESCAP); and asked that they be enabled to play a wider role in development assistance activities carried out in their region by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other multilateral institutions (ECLA, ESCAP). ESCAP suggested that it be delegated greater authority from United Nations Headquarters in respect of programme planning; and ECA requested greater decentralization of activities, accompanied by redeployment of staff from Headquarters, and suggested that the executive secretaries of the commissions be made full members of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination.

In May/June, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC)<sup>(2)</sup> discussed the distribution of tasks and responsibilities between the regional commissions and other United Nations units, programmes and organs in the fields of water resources (p. 686) and the environment (p. 842). It agreed to consider the matter further in 1982 on the basis of a more detailed report and suggested that the United Nations Secretariat continue to review activities to determine whether tasks were being performed at the appropriate levels.

The executive secretaries of the regional commissions held two joint meetings in 1981, under the chairmanship of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation: in New York in February and at Geneva on 3 and 4 July. In a report on the meetings,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General said the secretaries were concerned that the numerous reports and reviews on restructuring and decentralization had not resulted in the provision or redeployment of significant resources for the commissions, with the result that restructuring at the regional level was being hampered.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. On 24 July, in a resolution on regional co-operation<sup>(6)</sup> adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the General Assembly request intergovernmental organizations and Secretariat units to intensify and expedite the decentralization of economic and social activities to the regional commissions. Accordingly, it requested the Assembly to consider accelerating the redeployment to the commissions of staff and financial resources commensurate with the activities transferred to them.

This resolution was recommended by the Council's First (Economic) Committee on 21 July, also without vote. The text was submitted by the Chairman as a result of informal consultations on a draft by Zambia, later withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup> The adopted resolution omitted a paragraph in the Zambian draft requesting the Assembly to direct that the commissions be given greater administrative authority, including authority for financial and personnel management. The Chairman's draft was approved with an oral amendment by the United Kingdom deleting the word "increasing" from a preambular paragraph which mentioned the desirability of decentralizing administrative and management responsibilities to the commissions as part of the increasing transfer of activities to them.

Also on 24 July, the Council amended the terms of reference of three commissions<sup>(16)</sup> to take account of the admission of additional members: Zimbabwe as a full member of ECA, consequent upon its admission to the United Nations in August 1980;<sup>(13)</sup> Guam as an associate member of ESCAP (p. 648); and the Netherlands Antilles as an associate member of ECLA (p. 668). In addition, it took note of summaries of regional economic surveys<sup>(15)</sup> for Africa (p. 610), Asia and the Pacific (p. 636), Europe (p. 648), Latin America (p. 660) and Western Asia (p. 669)..

Both these decisions were taken, without vote, on the recommendation of the First Committee, where they were similarly approved on 21 July on oral proposals by the Chairman.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. As requested by the General Assembly in 1979,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1981<sup>(3)</sup> on implementation of the regional co-operation section of its 1977 resolution on restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system<sup>(11)</sup> and other relevant Assembly resolutions. Concentrating on the role and functions of the commissions in the developing regions, the report focused on decisions taken by them in regard to their policy-making and consultative functions, their expanding responsibilities for operational activities for development and their status as executing agencies for development assistance programmes, their action to promote regional and interregional co-operation among developing countries, their financial requirements and budgetary constraints, and actions to streamline their intergovernmental and secretariat machinery.

The report said all the commissions had noted or endorsed the Assembly's view that they were to be the main development centres in their regions, and some had recommended an improved distribution of tasks between their secretariats and those of global organizations, including the identification of research and analysis functions that could best be performed in the regions. With regard to inter-agency co-ordination, the report pointed to the possibility of scheduling joint regional meetings between the commissions and specialized global organizations. It noted the commissions' concern for enhanced participation in United Nations programme planning so as to make the process more responsive to regional priorities. All the commissions had reaffirmed their responsibility to contribute to global policy-making and to participate in the implementation of global decisions affecting them.

Describing expanded co-operation between the commissions and UNDP, the report suggested that greater use might be made of their functional committees to develop proposals for regional co-operation projects. It also suggested that the commissions should become more responsive to the requirements of regional and subregional economic integration and co-operation schemes, and that special arrangements might be needed to ensure appropriate funding of the commissions' work, including increased reliance on government contributions for projects and meetings, and sufficient budgetary flexibility to enable them to respond to unforeseen needs.

On 17 December, in a resolution on restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, the Assembly decided to return in 1982 to the implications of restructuring for the regional commissions, in the light of observations by CPC and the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(14)</sup>

Regional co-operation

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on regional co-operation,

Noting with appreciation the statements made to the Council by the executive secretaries of the regional commissions during the general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, held at the second regular session of 1981 of the Council,

Recognizing the need to intensify and expedite the efforts to decentralize economic and social activities to the regional commissions, as envisaged by the General Assembly in its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system.

Conscious of the desirability of decentralizing administrative and management responsibilities to the regional commissions as part of the transfer to them of substantive activities,

Aware that the regional commissions for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin American and Western Asia adopted, at their plenary sessions in 1981, resolutions relating to General Assembly resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977 and 33/202 of 29 January 1979, and to Assembly decision 35/440 of 16 December 1980,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on regional co-operation:

2. Recommends that the General Assembly, in considering the report of the Secretary-General referred to in its decision 35/440 and the resolutions adopted by the regional commissions pursuant to that decision, should request all intergovernmental organizations and the Secretariat bodies concerned to intensify and expedite the decentralization of economic and social activities to the regional commissions within the overall context of Assembly resolution 32/197 97;

3. Requests the General Assembly accordingly to consider accelerating the redeployment to the regional commissions of staff and financial resources commensurate with the substantive activities which are being transferred to them.

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1981/105) without vote. 21 July

(a) Summary of the Economic Survey of Europe in 1980: recent economic developments in the region of the Economic Commission for Europe;

(b) Summary of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1980: recent economic developments, 1979-1980;

(c) Summary of the Survey of Economic and Social Conditions in Africa, 1979-1980;

(d) Preliminary summary of the Economic Survey of Latin America, 1980;

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1981/105) without vote. 21 July (meeting 17); draft orally proposed by Chairman: agenda item 7.

Membership in the regional commissions

At its 41st plenary meeting, on 24 July 1981, the Council, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on regional co-operation and noting that Zimbabwe had become a full member of the Economic Commission for Africa and that the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and the Economic Commission for Latin America had admitted Guam and the Netherlands Antilles, respectively, to associate membership in their commissions, decided to amend the terms of reference of the commissions concerned to take account of the admission of the above-mentioned member and associate members.

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held its sixteenth session, which was also the seventh meeting of its Conference of Ministers, at Freetown, Sierra Leone, from 6 to 10 April 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> Zimbabwe attended the session for the first time as the fiftieth member of the Commission (p. 608). The session was preceded by the second meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole (Freetown, 24 March-2 April).<sup>(2)</sup>

Measures to implement the Lagos Plan of Action for the economic development of Africa (p. 611) were a recurrent theme in many of the Conference's 26 resolutions, one of which endorsed a series of measures to deal with the social implications of the Plan (p. 627). The General Assembly, in December, urged countries to provide resources for implementing the Plan.

Negotiations assisted by ECA led to the signing by 11 countries in December of a treaty to establish a Preferential Trade Area for eastern and southern Africa (p. 612). To provide information on the economic and social development of Africa, the Central Co-ordination Office of the Pan-African Documentation and Information System was set up at ECA headquarters at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia (p. 612).

The Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries held its first meeting at Addis Ababa in July (p. 613) and worked out a concerted African position for the United Nations Conference on the subject held in September. A Conference of Ministers Responsible for Human Resources Planning, Development and Utilization, held at Monrovia, Liberia, in October, identified project proposals for national action and technical co-operation in human resources development and utilization (p. 629).

African countries and potential donors met in June at the first of four consultative meetings seeking funds for a $9-billion programme of development *projects under the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988), and the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council repeated their appeals for financing (p. 614). With encouragement from those bodies, ECA continued to seek resources to carry out an in-depth study of the international trade and transport problems of Zaire (p. 619).

The Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Addis Ababa, November) approved proposals for the formulation and implementation of a programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990) (p. 621). The first Regional Conference on the Development and Utilization of Mineral Resources in Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, February) made recommendations and formulated programmes and projects (p. 623). As work continued on projects to develop African agriculture, the General Assembly called in December for additional international assistance to support Africa's own efforts to increase food production (p. 624).

Technical co-operation activities carried out by ECA in 1981 were valued at $11.6 million (p. 613). The United Nations Trust Fund for African Development, which financed a variety of economic and social activities by ECA, received contributions of $1.9 million from 19 States in 1981 (p. 631). At the Commission's request, the General Assembly asked the Secretary-General in December to seek extra-budgetary funding for the subregional ECA offices, known as Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (p. 631). On the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council, the Assembly requested in December a study of the adequacy of conference facilities at ECA headquarters (p. 634).

Other areas of ECA activity in 1981 included energy (p. 624), science and technology (p. 627), population (p. 627), human settlements and environment (p. 630), women in development (p. 630) and statistics (p. 630).

Seventeen African countries were the object of special economic assistance programmes under which the United Nations identified development and reconstruction projects and sought to mobilize international support for their financing (p. 497). Separate programmes were under way to aid drought-stricken countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region and East Africa (p. 485). An International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (Geneva, 9 and 10 April) was the highlight of 1981 United Nations activities to mobilize international assistance to refugees throughout the continent (p. 1039).

Economic and social trends

Africa faced major challenges in the 1980s, especially in the fields of energy, food, drought, balance of payments and domestic economic management, according to a summary of the Survey of Economic and Social Conditions in Africa, 1979-1980<sup>(4)</sup> noted by the Economic and Social Council on 24 July 1981.<sup>(3)</sup> If not properly and promptly attended to, those problems might eventually halt economic growth in the continent and lead to the economic and possibly social collapse of many of the poorer countries. Gross domestic product in developing Africa had risen by about 5 per cent at constant prices in 1979, compared with 5.4 per cent and 4.8 per cent in 1977 and 1978, respectively. However, negative growth in per capita income was projected for the poorest African countries during 1980-1985.

The Committee for Development Planning, in the regional economic analyses included in the report on its March/April 1981 session,<sup>(1)</sup> stated that African countries would have to make drastic changes in agriculture and industry if they were to meet targeted growth rates. In agriculture, emphasis would have to be placed on reduction of food losses, increasing production of cereals, livestock and fish, and improvement of productive structures. In industry, most African countries had to start building their industrial base with appropriate linkages between human resources, natural resources and technology in order to achieve locally generated and sustained growth. Africa also needed to place greater emphasis on training and improvement of managerial skills and administrative mechanisms, as well as regional co-operation in trade and finance.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, on 10 April, recommended that Commission members send each year a paper on national socio-economic conditions for use in preparing future surveys on Africa.<sup>(2)</sup>

Implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for economic development of Africa

ECA ACTIVITIES. Proposals by the ECA secretariat for implementing the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa were examined in 1981 by the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole (Freetown, Sierra Leone, 24 March-2 April)<sup>(2)</sup> and the Conference of Ministers. Both decided that the proposals should be improved. The Conference requested on 10 April that a joint document be prepared with the secretariat of the organization of African Unity (OAU), for consideration in 1982.<sup>(4)</sup> It also urged ECA members to bear in mind the Plan's recommendations when drawing up their development plans and projects.<sup>(5)</sup>

A broad programme to deal with the social implications of the Plan was endorsed by the Conference of Ministers on 10 April (p. 627).

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. AS requested by the General Assembly in December 1980, <sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in September 1981<sup>(3)</sup> on the contributions which the United Nations system was making to achieve the objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action, adopted by OAU in April 1980 on the basis of a draft submitted by ECA<sup>(9)</sup> The report described activities in the fields of food and agriculture, industry, human resources development, transport and communications, and science and technology. It concluded that, while implementation of the Plan of Action remained the primary responsibility of African Governments and peoples, the support of the international community was vital in ensuring success.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution on special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s,<sup>(8)</sup> adopted without vote on 17 December, the General Assembly invited United Nations organizations to examine ways of increasing resources for the African development decade and to apply special measures in a comprehensive and co-ordinated manner. Donor countries were urged to provide resources for implementing the Lagos Plan of Action and international financial institutions were invited to continue to consider increasing substantially their development assistance to Africa. Non-governmental organizations were invited to submit suggestions about their contributions. The Secretary-General was requested to continue allocating necessary resources to ECA and to report back in 1982.

This resolution was approved without vote by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 10 December. The draft was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a text by Algeria for the Group of 77 developing countries, later withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup>

The main difference between the two texts was that the approved version omitted two references to "additional resources" contained in the Algerian text, which would have had the Assembly reaffirm the need for United Nations organizations to examine ways and means, including the possibility of additional resources, to devote larger resources to the African development decade, and urge donor countries to provide additional resources. Also, the Algerian text did not have the word "continue" in the paragraphs by which the Assembly invited financial institutions to continue to consider increasing their development assistance and requested the Secretary-General to continue allocating necessary resources to ECA.

On 9 December, in a resolution on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU<sup>(7)</sup> the Assembly reaffirmed the determination of the United Nations to work closely with OAU towards the establishment of the new international economic order, taking full account of the Lagos Plan of Action. It requested the United Nations Department of Public Information and United Nations organizations to intensify information dissemination on African economic and social development.

The Sudan and other speakers in the Second Committee called for increased international support to help Africa achieve the goals of the Lagos Plan of Action. While the Plan encouraged self-reliance, said China, its implementation would require substantial international financial and technological inputs. The USSR said it understood that the resolution would not entail any future additional expenditure of United Nations funds; any additional resources needed would have to be obtained through extrabudgetary funds.

Recognizing the primary responsibility of the African countries for their development and the importance of the mobilization of their national resources for their socio-economic development,

Convinced of the need for increased and sustained external resources to achieve the aims and objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action,

We/coming the initial measures adopted by the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to implement paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 35/64.

1. Takes note of the interim report of the Secretary-General concerning special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s, which indicates the contributions by organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations to the implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for the implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa;

2. Invites, in this context, the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to examine ways and means of increasing the resources for the execution of the programmes for the development decade for Africa and to apply the special measures in a comprehensive and co-ordinated manner;

3. Urges donor countries to provide the necessary resources for the effective implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action;

4. Invites all international financial institutions, particularly the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, to continue actively to consider increasing substantially their development assistance to Africa during the decade;

5. Renews its invitation to the non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to submit to the Secretary-General suggestions for the contribution which they intend to make towards the implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for transmission to the Council at its second regular session of 1982;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to allocate necessary resources to the Economic Commission for Africa, taking into account its role as the main economic and social development centre within the United Nations system for the African region, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977 and 33/202 of 29 January 1979;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic integration

A Preferential Trade Area for 18 countries of eastern and southern Africa, negotiated with assistance from the ECA Multinational Programming and Operational Centre (MULPOC) at Lusaka, Zambia, was established by a treaty signed at Lusaka by 11 countries on 21 December 1981.. On 18 December, 11 States signed at Libreville, Gabon, a declaration of intent to establish an Economic Community of Central African States; two MULPOCs, at Gisenyi, Rwanda, and Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon, provided assistance in the negotiations.

Pan-African Documentation and Information System

The Central Co-ordination Office of the Pan-African Documentation and Information System (PADIS) was set up at Addis Ababa in 1981, following the establishment of the System in January 1980. Operating under the aegis of ECA, the System was designed to provide statistics and non-numerical information on African social, economic, scientific and technological development; to assist the development of national information handling capabilities; to establish data transmission links within Africa and beyond; and to design technical specifications and standards for electronic information exchange. The first conference of African computer, documentation and information scientists (Salisbury, Zimbabwe, 19-22 October 1981) marked a preliminary step towards the launching of national and subregional components of PADIS..

On 10 April, the ECA Conference of Ministers called on its members to set up national centres as part of a project to build a continental network and called for support to PADIS from multilateral and bilateral donors.

Resolution:<sup>(1)</sup> ECA (report, E/1981/54), 413(XV), 10 Apr.

Public administration

The ECA secretariat in 1981 completed two studies on government structures for accelerated development and a subregional conference on the subject was held for French-speaking Africa. A conference was held in November, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, on the role of the public sector in national and subregional development in the context of the Lagos Plan of Action for economic development (p. 611).. National workshops on procurement and supply management were held in several African countries. Advisory missions were undertaken to a number of countries, including the Gambia, Swaziland and Zimbabwe.

Least developed countries

On 10 April 1981, the ECA Conference of Ministers called on the international community- particularly developed countries, developing countries in a position to do so and international donor organizations- to provide adequate financial and technical resources to implement the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs),<sup>(2)</sup> the second phase of which- the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s- was subsequently adopted in September by the United Nations Conference on LDCs (p. 406).

A common position for the United Nations Conference was prepared at the first meeting of the Conference of Ministers of African LDCs (Addis Ababa, 27-30 July).<sup>(1)</sup> Meetings were also held to review the economic situation of each African LDC (p. 405).

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>ECA Conference of Ministers of LDCs, E/ECA/CM.8/10.

Technical co-operation

Expenditures on ECA technical co-operation activities in 1981 totalled $11.6 million. The main source was the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which supplied $7.7 million for projects in intra-African trade, statistics, national accounts, transport and communications, and conservation and development of forest resources. Support was given to co-ordination of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (p. 614) and $275,000 of the UNDP contribution came from its Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries. Among the regional training and research institutions which received assistance were the Eastern and Southern African Mineral Resources Development Centre, the African Regional Centre for Engineering Design and Manufacturing, the African Regional Centre for Technology, the African Institute for Higher Technical Training and Research, and the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning. In addition, UNDP was the main source of funds for the ECA Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MULPOCs) (p. 631).

The United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation provided #1.3 million for regional and subregional advisory services in such areas as development of conventional and non-conventional energy sources; training of personnel in public finance, budgeting and management; social welfare training; statistics; transport and communications; economic co-operation; and administrative support to MULPOCs. Additional money came from the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (p. 628) and the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women (p. 630).

There were 144 ECA technical co-operation experts serving in the field in 1981 and 76 fellowship awards were granted.

International trade

Recommendations on the dissemination of trade information, training of personnel, trade promotion and co-operative arrangements among their members were made by the First Joint Symposium of Presidents and Secretaries-General of African Chambers of Commerce (Addis Ababa, 16-20 June 1981), organized by ECA and the Association of African Trade Promotion Organizations.<sup>(1)</sup>

The ECA secretariat organized a tour for African businessmen to selected Asian and Latin American countries as a means of establishing direct trade contacts. During the year, ECA assistance was rendered to Governments negotiating subregional economic integration schemes in eastern, southern and central Africa (p. 612). A paper was published on the general state of intra-African trade, its obstacles and potential.<sup>(2)</sup>

Transport and communications

Transport and Communications
Decade in Africa (1978-1988)

The first of four consultative meetings between African countries and potential donors, aimed at securing financing for road, air transport, telecommunications and postal services projects under the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, took place in June 1981 (p. 617). As work progressed on the implementation and updating of a programme for the first phase (1980-1983) of the Decade (p. 618), preparations for the second phase (1984-1988) began in October 1981 (p. 619). The Decade, spanning 1978-1988, was proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1977.<sup>(12)</sup>

Activities relating to the Decade were reported by the Secretary-General(*) to the General Assembly, which appealed in December for increased financial support from donors.

The Committee for Development Planning, commenting at its March/April session<sup>(4)</sup> on prospects for economic co-operation among developing countries (p. 383), pointed out that financing was the major problem in the way of transport and communications development in Africa. Most African countries were small and could not raise the resources needed to build infrastructure that would yield returns only over a long period of time. The Committee suggested that co-financing with developed countries could make use of excess capacity in certain industries of those countries, but noted that sub-regional, regional and global planning and co-operation would be required for such an undertaking.

ECA ACTIVITIES. The Second Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning (Addis Ababa, 16-18 March)<sup>(5)</sup> took stock of the progress made in implementing the programme for the Decade, decided on a programme of consultative meetings on financing, endorsed proposals for updating the first phase programme and agreed to a schedule of preparatory work for the second phase. It also urged ratification of the convention adopted by the Diplomatic Conference on Air Tariffs (Addis Ababa, December 1980), the priority use of African expertise in implementation of projects for the Decade, the according of transit facilities to land-locked countries and the organizations of a co-ordinating meeting of agencies involved in satellite communications projects.

The Conference was preceded by two preparatory meetings: the Inter-agency Co-ordinating Committee on the Decade (fourth meeting, Addis Ababa, 9-10 March),<sup>(6)</sup> which took note of several developments relating to the first phase of the programme, and the second intergovernmental Meeting of Experts in Transport, Communications and Planning (Addis Ababa, 9-15 March).<sup>(7)</sup>

On 10 April, the ECA Conference of Ministers endorsed the decision to hold consultative meetings on financing, requested an early start on the second phase programme and asked the Secretary-General to provide ECA with resources to enable it to discharge its mandate as lead agency for the Decade.<sup>(9)</sup>

On the same date, the Conference also endorsed, as part of a programme on the social implications of the Lagos Plan of Action for African economic development (p. 627), a number of proposed measures to maximize the social benefits of the expansion of an intra-African transport and communications network and to cope with adverse consequences for population and manpower distribution patterns.<sup>(10)</sup> These suggestions included studies of migration policies to help solve social problems arising from migration, encouragement of video-taped and other programmes on social life and events in African countries until an intra-African satellite communications system was developed, allocations of labour between partners in joint economic projects such as heavy industries, agreements on the rights of workers deployed in such projects, and promotion of intra-African tourism.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. On 24 July, by a resolution on the Decade adopted without vote,<sup>(11)</sup> the Economic and Social Council reiterated its appeal to African States to accord the highest priority to transport and communications projects. It appealed to countries and financing institutions to step up their financial support (p. 617), urged close collaboration among States and organizations on updating the first phase programme (p. 618) and recommended that the General Assembly consider measures to enable ECA to carry out its role in preparing for the second phase (p. 619).

The text was approved by the First (Economic) Committee on 21 July, also without vote. It was submitted by the Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier draft by Venezuela, on behalf of the Group of 77,<sup>(3)</sup> which was later withdrawn. The two texts differed in their provisions on the first and second phases. In addition, the approved text incorporated an oral amendment by Nigeria affecting the provisions on financing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 17 December, the General Assembly, by a resolution on the Decade adopted without vote,<sup>(13)</sup> reiterated its appeal to African States to give the highest priority to transport and communications projects. It appealed for increased financial support from donors (p. 618), urged close co-operation among States and organizations on updating the first phase programme (p. 618) and requested the ECA Executive Secretary to begin preparation for the second phase as soon as possible (p. 619). The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to provide ECA with the financial means and resources needed to organize the remaining consultative meetings on financing, by using extrabudgetary funds and existing resources to the maximum, to complete preparation of the second phase and to fulfil its role as lead agency for the Decade. He and the ECA Executive Secretary were asked to submit progress reports.

The resolution was approved by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 7 December, also without vote. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier draft, submitted by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77<sup>(1)</sup> and later withdrawn. The Algerian draft had been preceded by a text introduced by Nigeria on behalf of 12 African nations,<sup>(2)</sup> which the sponsors withdrew when the Algerian draft was submitted.

The first two drafts were essentially similar, except for a few wording changes and the addition of a paragraph requesting a progress report by the Secretary-General in 1982. The Group of 77 draft differed from the adopted text in two provisions on financing, including the financing of consultative meetings.

Introducing the first draft, Nigeria said it implied that the ECA Transport and Communications Division would have to be strengthened if ECA was to be effective as lead agency for the Decade. Introducing the second draft, Algeria stressed the need to implement during the Decade national, subregional and regional projects that had been decided upon many years previously, with the aim of establishing an integrated transport and communications network to support African development.

Explaining their positions on the resolution, the USSR and the United States said the activities it called for should be met within existing United Nations resources.

During the Committee's debate, a number of African and other countries-including Botswana, China, India, Sierra Leone and the Sudan-called attention to the importance of mobilizing resources for the Decade. China added that it would continue to provide bilateral assistance to African countries, since transport and communications were less developed in Africa than in other developing regions. Ethiopia observed that the grave economic problems of Africa were due in part to lack of means of distribution. Senegal thought donors should be encouraged to make loans directly to subregional institutions such as the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). Nigeria mentioned the need to provide sufficient funds to enable ECA to convene the consultative meetings. Zaire hoped the ECA Executive Secretary would do all he could to maintain co-ordination between funding agencies and African countries.

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/61 of 3 August 1979 and 1980/46 of 23 July 1980 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Mindful of the decision of the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning, at its meeting held at Addis Ababa from 9 to 12 May 1979, in which the Conference adopted the global strategy for the implementation of the programme for the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and the programme of action for the first phase (1980-1983) of the Decade,

Conscious of the need, during the Decade, to implement fully national, regional and subregional projects geared towards the establishment of an integrated transport and communications network in Africa in support of the accelerated development of the African region,

Considering the need for sustained efforts to mobilize additional resources for the implementation of the programme for the Decade,

Recalling the decision of the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning at its second meeting, held at Addis Ababa from 16 to 18 March 1981, in which the Conference authorized the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to organize four technical consultative meetings between member States, African intergovernmental organizations concerned and donors,

Mindful of the role of the Economic Commission for Africa as the lead agency in the implementation of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Bearing in mind resolution 422(XVI) of 10 April 1981, adopted at the seventh meeting of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, held at Freetown from 6 to 11 April 1981, in which, inter alia, the Conference requested the Executive Secretary of the Commission, in collaboration with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, to embark urgently on the preparation of the plan of action for the second phase of the Decade,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/108 of 5 December 1980, in which the Assembly requested that the above-mentioned technical consultative meetings be organized by the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa, and also requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, at its second regular session of 1981, a progress report on the implementation of the programme for the Decade,

1. Notes the report of the Secretary-General on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa;

2. Takes note of the technical consultative meeting on transport and communications for the West African sub-region, held at Lomé from 8 to 11 June 1981, and the report on the meeting prepared by the Economic Commission for Africa;

3. Notes with appreciation the contribution made by some countries towards the implementation of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa;

4. Expresses disappointment, however, at the overall level of resources so far made available, which is far short of that required for financing the subregional programme, and appeals to donor countries, the funding agencies and the various financing institutions to step up their financial support for regional and subregional projects of the Decade;

5. Further notes with appreciation the steps taken by the Commission with regard to the scheduling of the remaining technical consultative meetings, which will be held, respectively, at Yaoundé (28 to 30 September 1981), Abidjan (27 to 30 November 1981) and Ouagadougou (20 to 23 January 1982);

6. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to make the report of the technical consultative meeting to be held at Yaoundé in September 1981 available to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session, and also to make available reports on the technical consultative meetings to be held at Abidjan and Ouagadougou to the Council at its second regular session of 1982;

7. Reiterates its appeal to States members of the Economic Commission for Africa to accord the highest priority in their development plans to transport and communication projects;

8. Urges the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to maintain close collaboration with member States, the Organization of African Unity, the regional African development organizations, the development institutions and the specialized agencies concerned in updating, on a regular basis, the programme for the first phase of the Decade;

9. Calls upon member States of the Organization of African Unity to intensify efforts in exploring possible sources of finance to execute projects adopted for the Decade;

10. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to maintain co-ordination between funding agencies and African countries in ensuring the successful implementation of the programme for the first phase of the Decade;

11. Further requests the Executive Secretary, in collaboration with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, to proceed as early as possible with the preparation of the plan of action for the second phase of the Decade;

12. Recommends that the General Assembly should give further consideration to measures that would enable the Economic Commission for Africa to carry out its role in initiating and accomplishing the preparation of the programme for the second phase of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa.

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolutions 32/160 of 19 December 1977, 33/197 of 29 January 1979 and 34/15 of 9 November 1979 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and, in particular, its resolution 35/108 of 5 December 1980, by which it approved the organization of consultative technical meetings for the various African subregions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1979/61 of 3 August 1979, 1980/46 of 23 July 1980 and 1981/67 of 24 July 1981 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Recalling a/s resolution 341(XIV) adopted on 27 March 1979 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa at its fifth meeting, in which the Conference Urged member States to give high priority to the development of transport and communications,

Recalling further resolution CM/Res.738(XXXIII) adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-third ordinary session, held at Monrovia from 6 to 20 July 1979,

Aware of the need to implement fully, during the Decade, national, subregional and regional projects aimed at establishing an integrated transport and communications network in Africa to support the accelerated development of the continent,

Noting with appreciation the considerable financial efforts made by the Governments of African States to enable a considerable part of the programme for the first phase (1980-1983) of the Decade to be financed and implemented,

Considering that sustained efforts must be exerted to mobilize additional resources in order to ensure the implementation of the programme for the Decade,

Recalling the decision by which the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning, at its second session, held at Addis Ababa from 16 to 18 March 1981, authorized the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to organize four consultative technical meetings between member States, interested African inter-governmental organizations and donors,

Aware of the role played by the Economic Commission for Africa as the lead agency in the implementation of the programme for the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Bearing in mind resolution 422(XVI) adopted on 10 April 1981 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa at its seventh meeting, in which the Conference, inter alia, requested the Executive Secretary of the Commission, in collaboration with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, to embark as early as possible on the preparation of the plan of action for the second phase (1984-1988) of the Decade,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa;

2. Takes note of the results of the consultative technical meeting on transport and communications for West Africa, which was held at Lomé from 8 to 11 June 1981, and of the report on the organization of three other meetings scheduled to be held in 1982;

3. Notes with satisfaction the contribution made by some countries to the implementation of the programme for the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa;

4. Expresses its disappointment, however, at the overall level of resources mobilized so far, which is far below the level required to finance the subregional programme, and appeals to donor countries, the funding agencies and the various financial institution to increase their financial support to the regional and subregional projects for the Decade;

5. Also notes with satisfaction the measures taken by the Economic Commission for Africa with respect to the organization and scheduling of the three other consultative technical meetings, to be held at Ouagadougou from 20 to 23 January 1982, at Yaoundé from 15 to 18 March 1982 and at Abidjan from 3 to 5 May 1982;

6. Reiterates its appeal to States members of the Economic Commission for Africa to give the highest priority in their development plans to transport and communications projects;

7. Appeals to donor countries and funding agencies to participate constructively and in large numbers in the three consultative technical meetings to be held in 1982 and to consider, together with the Economic Commission for Africa, possible ways of financing those projects for the Decade which are not national in character;

8. Urges the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to maintain close co-operation with member States, the Organization of African Unity, regional African development organizations, development agencies and interested specialized agencies with a view to the updating, on a regular basis, of the programme for the first phase of the Decade and in order to relate better the projects to national and subregional plans;

9. Calls upon States members of the Economic Commission for Africa to step up their efforts in connection with the study of the possible sources of finance for the implementation of the projects adopted for the Decade;

10. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to maintain the necessary co-ordination between the sources of finance and the African countries to assure the success of the implementation of the programme for the first phase of the Decade;

11. Also requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to organize in 1982, with groups of donor countries and the financing institutions and with the participation of Governments, United Nations institutions and African Intergovernmental organizations, the three consultative technical meetings scheduled with a view to finding additional financial resources for the implementation of the projects for the Decade;

12. Further requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to begin as soon as possible, in collaboration with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, the preparation of the plan of action for the second phase of the Decade;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Economic Commission for Africa with the financial means and resources necessary to enable it to organize the three consultative technical meetings scheduled to be held in 1982, inter alia, by using extrabudgetary funds and existing resources to the maximum extent possible, to complete the preparation of the plan of action for the second phase of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and to fulfil effectively its role as the lead agency for the Decade, and to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, a progress report on the implementation of the programme for the Decade;

14. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to continue to submit progress reports on the implementation of the programme for the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session a report on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Convening of consultative meetings on financing. ECA decided in 1981 to convene four technical consultative meetings at which African States and donors could discuss the financing of projects in connection with the Decade. The first of these was held in June 1981; the rest were scheduled for 1982.

The decision to hold the meetings was taken in March 1981 by the ECA Conference of Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning (p. 614).<sup>(5)</sup> The Conference also recommended that ECA, the African Development Bank (ADB), the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the United Nations should continue their search for financing, and that African countries should express stronger interest in the Decade at the annual United Nations pledging conferences for development activities.

In its resolution of 10 April on the Decade (p. 614), the ECA Conference of Ministers endorsed the decision to organize the consultative meetings, appealed to donor countries and financial institutions—including the World Bank, ADB the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa and the various Arab funds—to participate fully and positively, and invited non-African third world countries to express their solidarity by participating.<sup>(6)</sup>

The first technical consultative meeting (Lomé, Togo, 8-11 June) dealt with roads, air transport, telecommunications and postal services in the 16 countries of ECOWAS. It examined a programme of 138 projects costing an estimated $1.6 billion. The ECA Executive Secretary informed the Economic and Social Council's First Committee in July that available resources would cover one third of the road programme, one fourth of the communications programme and one tenth of the air transport programme.

The three remaining meetings were to be held in 1982: at Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon, on roads and inland waterways of 10 Central African States (originally scheduled for September 1981 but postponed to allow further consultations<sup>(4)</sup>); Abidjan, Ivory Coast, on maritime transport and ports of 25 countries belonging to the Ministerial Conference of West and Central African States (originally scheduled for November 1981); and Ouagadougou, Upper Volta, on railways throughout Africa.

The Council, in its resolution of 24 July on the Decade,<sup>(7)</sup> noted with appreciation the contribution made by some countries for the Decade but expressed disappointment at the level of resources made available, far short of that required for financing the subregional programme, and appealed to donor countries and financial institutions to step up their financial support for regional and subregional projects. It requested reports on the remaining meetings, called on OAU members to intensify efforts to explore possible sources of finance and asked the ECA Executive Secretary to maintain co-ordination between funding agencies and African countries.

This text, submitted by the Chairman of the First Committee, differed from the original draft by Venezuela, submitted on behalf of the Group of 77,<sup>(3)</sup> which did not contain the expression of appreciation to contributing countries and which would have had the Council express disappointment at the level of resources made available by those present at the Lomé meeting rather than at the overall level for the Decade. The Chairman's draft was orally amended by Nigeria to separate into two paragraphs the expressions of appreciation and disappointment.

Using similar language, the General Assembly, in its resolution of 17 December on the Decade,<sup>(8)</sup> noted with satisfaction the contribution of some countries to the Decade, expressed disappointment at the overall level of resources mobilized, far below that required for the sub-regional programme, and appealed for increased financial support for regional and subregional projects. It appealed to donor countries and funding agencies to participate constructively and in large numbers in the forthcoming meetings and to consider, with ECA, ways of financing projects that were not national in character. It called on ECA members to step up efforts in connection with the study of possible sources of finance, requested the ECA Executive Secretary to maintain co-ordination between financial sources and African countries, asked him to organize the three remaining meetings in 1982 with a view to finding additional funds, and requested the Secretary-General to provide resources for those meetings, including the maximum use of extrabudgetary funds and existing resources.

The original draft by 12 African countries<sup>(2)</sup> would have had the Assembly note with appreciation rather than satisfaction the contribution made to date, and appeal to financial institutions to participate fully and positively rather than constructively and in large numbers in the remaining meetings. These changes were incorporated in the second draft, by Algeria for the Group of 77.<sup>(1)</sup> That draft, in turn, differed from the adopted text in that it would have had the Assembly call on members of OAU rather than of ECA to step up efforts in connection with possible sources of finance. In addition, the call for maximum use of extrabudgetary funds and existing resources for the organization of the remaining meetings was not in the Algerian text.

Most funding for projects in connection with the Decade was provided through bilateral and multilateral arrangements with recipient countries. In addition, two countries paid a total of $1,700 in 1981 to the Trust Fund maintained by the United Nations for the Decade, and eight countries pledged a total of $76,693 for 1982 (see table below). Expenditures from this fund in 1981 amounted to $30,304, mainly from previous years' income.

Phase I programme (1980-1983). During 1981, ECA began updating the programme for the first phase of the Transport and Communications Decade (1980-1983), initially established at a level of 771 projects costing nearly $9 billion.<sup>(8)</sup> New project proposals were incorporated, including those identified in April 1981 by a mission of consultants sent to Angola, Equatorial Guinea, and Sao Tome and Principe-countries which ECA had previously been unable to visit.

It was agreed at the Conference of Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning (p. 614) that all proposals on updating would be sent to ECA by 31 May. However, the deadline was not met and the updating process extended into 1982. Meanwhile, ECA collected and computerized information on progress in the first phase programme.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, on 10 April, directed the ECA Executive Director to update regularly the programme for the first phase, in consultation with African States, United Nations specialized agencies and African inter-governmental organizations.<sup>(5)</sup> The Economic and Social Council, on 24 July, urged the Executive Secretary to maintain close contact with African States, OAU, regional African development organizations, institutions and specialized agencies in regularly updating the first phase programme.<sup>(6)</sup> The General Assembly, on 17 December, acted similarly, adding that updating should be done so that the projects would relate better to national and subregional plans.<sup>(7)</sup>

These actions were included in the resolutions on the Decade adopted by ECA, the Council and the Assembly. The phrase in the Assembly resolution on relating the projects to national and subregional plans was not included in the earlier drafts by 12 African nations<sup>(2)</sup> and by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77.<sup>(1)</sup>

Plans to establish in 1982 an operating authority for the Cairo-Gaborone Trans-East African Highway Authority, linking countries between Egypt and Botswana, were reviewed by a Meeting of Experts (Addis Ababa, 16 and 17 November 1981).<sup>(3)</sup> Other activities by ECA during 1981 included: a mission to the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference countries to identify maritime transport activities prior to the possible establishment of a multinational shipping company; a meeting with the Pan-African Telecommunications Union (Lagos, Nigeria, October/November) on harmonizing studies of a proposed African satellite communications system; and preparation of a preliminary study on connecting Mali, the Niger and the Upper Volta to the railway network of Togo.

According to a table annexed to the Secretary-General's June 1981 report on the Decade,<sup>(4)</sup> contributions by donors amounted to $3.2 billion for 120 transport projects and 25 communications projects. In October, the ECA Executive Secretary informed the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee that, of the 771 projects planned for the first phase, 298 were either being implemented or had been completed. Of the $4.4 billion needed for the projects under way or finished, 68 per cent had been provided by the African countries.

Phase II programme (1984-1988). Preparations began in 1981 for the second phase (1984-1988) of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa.

A schedule of activities for the preparations was adopted in March 1981<sup>(1)</sup> by the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning. Work was to commence in October 1981, when African States were to send provisional lists of projects to ECA; it was to be concluded in January 1983 with the distribution of a final version of the second phase programme to African States and potential donors.

The Conference was of the view that United Nations specialized agencies, OAU and African intergovernmental organizations should participate more actively in preparations for the second phase, and that African countries should state more clearly and comprehensively their local financial contributions to projects. It was agreed that each African State would establish its own programme and submit it to ECA, which could then establish a master plan based on the national projects and write two reports: one on projects to be financed partly by African States and the other on projects to be financed externally.

The Conference recommended that the General Assembly appropriate from the United Nations budget half the estimated cost of $1.5 million needed by ECA for preparatory work, with the rest to come from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

The ECA Conference of Ministers, on 10 April, requested the Executive Secretary, in collaboration with the OAU Secretary-General, to start preparing the second phase as early as possible, and called on UNDP to provide adequate resources for preparation and implementation of the second phase.<sup>(2)</sup> The Economic and Social Council, on 24 July, and the Assembly, on 17 December, made similar requests to the Executive Secretary in their resolutions on the Decade.

The Council also recommended that the Assembly consider measures to enable ECA to carry out its role in initiating and accomplishing the preparation of the second phase programme.<sup>(3)</sup> The Assembly responded by requesting the Secretary-General to provide the financial means and resources to complete the preparation of the second phase plan of action.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Inter-agency Co-ordinating Committee on the Decade (fifth meeting, Geneva, 10-12 December) decided on procedures and a schedule for preparing the second phase programme.

International trade and transport of Zaire

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. By a resolution of 24 July 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the Secretary-General and the General Assembly give strong support to efforts by United Nations organs to provide technical assistance as soon as possible so that studies on the problems of Zaire on transport, transit and access to foreign markets could be undertaken and completed without delay. It requested the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions urgently to consider the question of financing the studies requested by the Assembly in 1979<sup>(4)</sup> and 1980,<sup>(5)</sup> and to report to the Assembly in 1981. It invited the ECA Executive Secretary to submit the conclusions of his studies in 1982.

The resolution was sponsored by 15 nations and introduced by Zaire, which orally revised it before its approval by the First (Economic) Committee on 21 July, also without vote. The original version would have had the Council recommend that the Assembly provide ECA with the resources that would enable it to undertake and complete the studies.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. In October, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on action taken with respect to the projected studies as well as other action by United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to meet Zaire's trade and transport problems.<sup>(2)</sup>

With respect to the studies, the report said that ECA had been unable to secure funds from outside the United Nations budget to finance a mission for an in-depth study in Zaire on transport/transit problems. However, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) had sent a mission to Zaire to collect transit traffic data on trade with Burundi and Rwanda and to prepare an inventory on all other transit corridors for access to the sea that were of interest to Zaire, and another UNCTAD team was studying bottle-necks and transit costs for traffic via Zambia and Zimbabwe as part of a sub-regional project for southern Africa. In addition, a transit/transport project for Zaire was included in a $10 million ECA master plan for the development of transport and communications in eastern and southern Africa, for which funds from UNDP were to be available in 1982.

The report also described other assistance to Zaire by UNDP (aviation personnel training, export policy, transport systems management), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) (free-export zones, industrial financing, industrial planning, industrial research, metrology and standardization, small-scale industry, wood-processing industry), the International Trade Centre and specialized agencies.

After this report was submitted, an ECA/UNCTAD mission went to Zaire in November to update the results of a preliminary mission sent in 1978,<sup>(7)</sup> identify projects to improve the national transport network and international transport systems affecting Zaire, and make recommendations on transport system improvements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 16 December,<sup>(6)</sup> adopted without vote, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to give strong support to ECA and other United Nations organs with a view to providing technical assistance as soon as possible so that studies on Zaire's problems of transport, transit and access to foreign markets could be undertaken and completed without delay. It invited the ECA Executive Secretary, in conjunction with UNDP, to release funds for the transit project provided for in the ECA master plan for transport and communications development in eastern and southern Africa. It requested the Secretary-General to seek, from voluntary contributions or existing resources, funds that ECA needed to implement previous Assembly requests for studies.

The resolution was approved without vote on 16 November by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. It was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a revised draft sponsored by 17 countries, mainly African, introduced by Zaire and later withdrawn.<sup>(1)</sup> The 17-nation draft would have had the Assembly request the Secretary-General to seek funds for the ECA studies; the reference to voluntary contributions or existing resources was added in the Vice-Chairman's text.

In the Committee, Zaire mentioned some of its projects for the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, including an 828-kilometre segment of a trans-African highway, a feasibility study for a deep-water port at Banana at the mouth of the Zaire River, construction of a rail link from Banana upstream to Matadi and improvement of navigation on the river. Although funds had been made available in 1979 to enable ECA to carry out preliminary studies, the envisaged mission had not materialized. Observing that any expansion of its trade depended on the transport infrastructure, Zaire requested support for the speedy implementation of resolutions on the subject.

Particular problems facing Zaire with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets

The Economic and Social Council.

Recalling resolution 293(XIII), adopted on 26 February 1977 by the Economic Commission for Africa at its thirteenth session (fourth meeting of the Conference of Ministers), and Council decision 249(LXIII) of 25 July 1977,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977, in which the Assembly recalled Council resolution 2097(LXIII) of 29 July 1977 and proclaimed the period 1978-1988 as the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Recalling further resolution 110 (V) of 3 June 1979, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fifth session, held at Manila from 7 May to 3 June 1979,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 34/193 of 19 December 1979, requesting the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to enable the Economic Commission for Africa to accelerate the implementation of Conference resolution 110 (V),

Aware of the particular difficulties confronting Zaire as a result of the problems encountered in its foreign trade with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets.

Convinced that this situation is prejudicial to the development of the Zairian economy,

1. Recommends that the Secretary-General and the General Assembly should give strong support to efforts by the appropriate organs of the United Nations to provide the necessary technical assistance as soon as possible, so that studies on the particular problems facing Zaire with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets can be undertaken and completed without delay;

2. Requests the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to give urgent consideration to the question of financing the studies requested in General Assembly resolutions 34/193 of 19 December 1979 and 35/59 of 5 December 1980 and to report to the Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

3. Invites the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to take all the measures necessary to ensure the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 34/193 and to submit the conclusions of his studies to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982.

General Assembly resolution 36/139

Adopted without vote Meeting 100 16 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add.3) without vote, 16 November (meeting 40); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.68), based on informal consultations on 17-nation draft (A/C.2/36/L.27/Rev.1); agenda item 69 (c).

Particular problems facing Zaire with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of special measures relating to particular problems facing Zaire with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets,

Recalling resolution 110(V) of 3 June 1979 adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fifth session, held at Manila from 7 May to 3 June 1979,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/160 of 19 December 1977, concerning the Transport and Communications

Decade in Africa, and 34/193 of 19 December 1979, in which it requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to enable the Economic Commission for Africa to accelerate the implementation of resolution 110(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and to report thereon to the General Assembly,

Recalling further its resolution 35/59 of 5 December 1980, in which it requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with a view to enabling the appropriate organs of the United Nations to provide the necessary technical assistance as soon as possible to the Government of Zaire, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/68 of 24 July 1981, in which the Council recommended that the Secretary-General and the General Assembly should give strong support to efforts by the appropriate organs of the United Nations to provide the necessary technical assistance as soon as possible, so that studies on the particular problems facing Zaire with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets can be undertaken and completed without delay,

Recalling that the Economic Commission for Africa has so far not been able to carry out the in-depth studies, the need for which was recognized in the interim report of the Secretary-General and which were requested in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and noting with regret the slow progress in implementing General Assembly resolutions 34/193 and 35/59,

Aware of the particular difficulties facing Zaire because of the problems encountered in its foreign trade with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets, which require special and urgent assistance from the international community,

Convinced that the continuance of this situation is prejudicial to the development of the Zairian economy,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to give strong support to the Economic Commission for Africa and other appropriate organs of the United Nations with a view to providing the necessary technical assistance as soon as possible, so that studies on the particular problems facing Zaire with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets can be undertaken and completed without delay;

2. Invites the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa, in conjunction with the United Nations Development Programme, to release the funds needed for undertaking the transit project provided for in the master plan for the development of transport and communications in the sub-regions of eastern and southern Africa;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to seek from voluntary contributions or from existing resources the funds that need to be made available to the Economic Commission for Africa for the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 34/193 and 35/59.

Decade for Africa (1980-1990)

Proposals for the formulation and implementation of a programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990) were approved in 1981 by the Sixth Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Addis Ababa, 23-25 November). <sup>(2)</sup>Following the proclamation of the Decade by the General Assembly in December 1980, <sup>(5)</sup> the proposals were drafted by a working group of representatives of the secretariats of ECA, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and UNIDO. They were further discussed by an Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on the Programme of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, convened by the three organizations (Addis Ababa, 19-23 October), which made recommendations to the ministerial Conference. The proposals were to be revised to reflect the recommendations of the Intergovernmental Meeting and the Conference, for publication in 1982.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Conference approved proposals in four working papers submitted by the working group, on a framework for preparation and implementation of the programme, guidelines for the formulation of strategies for major industrial subsectors and areas, modalities for programme implementation, and monitoring and reporting on implementation.

With respect to the framework, the Conference concluded that there should be two phases: reparation (1982-1984) and implementation (1985-1989). During the preparatory phase, a set of national, subregional and regional policies, master plans and programmes would be prepared, machinery to achieve the Decade's objectives would be promoted, investment programmes and projects would be submitted to financial institutions, an industrial manpower development plan would be prepared, policy instruments for fostering intra-African industrial co-operation would be adopted, an African mechanism for industrial consultations and negotiations would be established, and action would be taken to popularize the Decade.

The Conference agreed on broad guidelines for the formulation of strategies for eight industrial subsectors identified as of major priority: food processing, textiles, forestry, building materials and construction, metallurgy, chemicals, engineering and small-scale industry. It also concluded that energy development programmes should be prepared and implemented. To monitor and report on implementation, the Conference suggested the establishment of national co-ordinating committees and the organization of workshops and review missions; the Conference itself and a follow-up committee would continue to provide the umbrella for regional monitoring.

Also in 1981, the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly declared the Decade to be one of the most important programmes of UNIDO and called for the allocation of adequate financial resources to assist in the rapid industrialization of Africa, with particular reference to the least developed countries. The Board and the Assembly also requested the UNIDO Executive Director to provide adequate resources for the co-ordination unit for the Decade.

The Board's request on 30 May that the Assembly allocate adequate funds<sup>(7)</sup> was repeated by the Council in a resolution of 24 July on industrial development co-operation; the Council added that the resources should be provided as from the 1982-1983 biennium.<sup>(4)</sup> Commenting on this provision, Belgium and the Federal Republic of Germany felt that no additional appropriations should be made available.

The Assembly, in a resolution of 17 December on industrial development co-operation,<sup>(6)</sup> decided to allocate adequate funds as from the 1982-1983 biennium. In addition, in line with a request which the Board had addressed to the UNIDO Executive Director, the Assembly asked him and the ECA Executive Secretary to intensify contacts with other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in order to contribute to the success of the Decade. Having received a report by the UNIDO Executive Director on activities relating to the Decade, transmitted by a note by the Secretary-General,<sup>(3)</sup> the Assembly requested the Executive Director and the Executive Secretary to submit a comprehensive report in 1982.

After the Second Committee approved this resolution, Poland, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said plans for the Decade must be implemented in the context of resources available to the United Nations, through either voluntary contributions from Member States or contributions from those States which continued to exploit Africa's human resources. During the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, the Byelorussian SSR approved of the idea of the Decade but felt there should be no increase in UNIDO staff or extrabudgetary expenditures.

Among African States, Egypt said the Assembly should ensure that funds were available to accelerate Africa's industrialization, in view of the fact that its share in world industrial production amounted to less than 1 per cent. Kenya regarded the UNIDO report on the Decade as incomplete and called on United Nations bodies to co-operate with OAU on proposals for implementing its objectives. Morocco also favoured greater co-ordination among UNIDO, ECA and OAU with a view to achieving the target of a 4 per cent growth rate in industrial production in Africa by 1990.

Nigeria, observing that many African nations had not even participated in the marginal industrial growth of developing countries in general, said the fact that future reports on the subject would be prepared jointly by ECA and OAU underscored the need for co-ordination between them so that they could carry out their mandate for the industrialization of Africa. The Sudan trusted that the Assembly would provide funds to achieve the Decade's objectives, and the United Republic of Cameroon urged the international community to make additional funds available. Zaire suggested that the UNIDO Executive Director contact African States, other United Nations bodies and OAU as soon as possible in order to facilitate the drafting of a programme for possible financing by the Assembly.

Other activities

The first Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on the Establishment of Iron and Steel Industry in Eastern and Southern African Subregion (Addis Ababa, 25-29 May 1981) listed the constraints on industrial development in this sector and decided to meet again to prepare a development programme. <sup>(2)</sup> The Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Chemicals for Eastern and Southern Africa (first meeting, Addis Ababa, 14-18 September) made several recommendations on the establishment of chemical industries and recommended that a feasibility study be carried out for a subregional multinational corporation that would act as a holding company for chemical enterprises. <sup>(1)</sup>

An ECA Seminar of African Businessmen on Development of Industrial Entrepreneurial Capabilities in Africa (Addis Ababa, 9-14 November) established an interim group to facilitate the formation of regional associations of African manufacturers and businessmen.

Studies were issued by UNIDO on the domestic financing of manufacturing in Africa, <sup>(4)</sup> industrial development in Rwanda <sup>(5)</sup> and the potential for resource-based industrial development in Botswana. <sup>(6)</sup>

Social policy measures in relation to industrial development were set out in a programme on the social aspects of the Lagos Plan of Action (p. 627) endorsed by the ECA Conference of Ministers on 10 April. <sup>(3)</sup> It was recommended that Governments: increase control over raw materials and natural resources as a prerequisite for industrialization; adopt an industrialization policy based on considerations of relative and competitive advantage in terms of raw materials; take account of opportunities for job creation; consider the impact of new industrial establishments on agriculture; adopt a policy of decentralized industrialization, combined with advance planning; set standards and regulations for industrial waste disposal and worker protection; and adopt a pay system that would stimulate motivation and discipline so as to encourage productivity.

Natural resources

Mineral resources

The first Regional Conference on the Development and Utilization of Mineral Resources in Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 2-6 February 1981) formulated programmes and projects for the extraction, processing and development of mineral resources. <sup>(1)</sup> It made recommendations on a number of aspects of mineral resources development, including: building up technical knowledge of the mineral resources base; developing national and multinational capabilities for mineral extraction, processing and marketing; developing intra-African trade and extra-African markets for minerals; training of personnel; research and development; national and international mineral exploration; the mining- and processing-equipment industries; and environmental protection. The recommendations of the Regional Conference were endorsed by the ECA Conference of Ministers on 10 April. <sup>(2)</sup>

A Seminar and Study Tour for African Specialists on Mining Methods (Krivoy Rog, Ukrainian SSR, 1-12 June) enabled 28 Africans to improve their managerial and technical competence with respect to mining operations.

Water resources

A Regional Seminar and Study Tour on Water Resources Development in Arid Zones (Tashkent, USSR, 3 June-12 July 1981), organized by ECA, examined the application of theory, methods and techniques; machinery and equipment used in exploration, exploitation, conservation and utilization; and managerial and research aspects.

An intensified search for simple yet efficient methods of providing adequate water supplies for personal use, such as the use of windmills, was among the measures endorsed by the Conference of Ministers on 10 April <sup>(1)</sup> in a programme on the social implications of the Lagos Plan of Action for economic development (p. 627).

Energy

A Regional Preparatory Meeting on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (Addis Ababa, 12-16 January 1981) prepared an African Regional Plan of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy. The report of the Meeting<sup>(1)</sup> was endorsed on 10 April by the ECA Conference of Ministers,<sup>(4)</sup> which urged African States to give high priority to measures for implementing national, subregional and regional programmes conceived within the framework of the African Plan.

The United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, in a resolution of 21 August on implementation of regional plans of action (P. 690), called on the international community, including Governments and United Nations organizations, to give financial and technical support for the development of new and renewable energy sources in Africa.<sup>(2)</sup>

As part of a programme of measures to implement the social aspects of the Lagos Plan of Action for African economic development (p. 627), the ECA Conference of Ministers endorsed on 10 April three measures to maximize the social advantages of the discovery of new energy resources: planning for the resettlement of people displaced by energy projects; planning and implementation of social services for the labour force attracted by such projects; and the establishment of protective standards for workers and communities.

Food and agriculture

ECA ACTIVITIES. Five subregional reports containing evaluations of ongoing and planned food development programmes and projects of some 40 African intergovernmental organizations, as well as guidelines for new programmes, were discussed in February and March 1981 with the governing bodies of the four Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (p. 631). As a result, a number of projects were incorporated into the centres' work programmes.

Five Governments received advice and assistance in the field of agricultural statistics, and the ECA secretariat participated in missions to Equatorial Guinea to assist in improving its agricultural development policies and plans. In co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), studies were initiated in Burundi, Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia to collect information on small farmers, including their problems with respect to farm investments and uses of improved inputs.

Measures for agricultural development were included in a programme on social aspects of the Lagos Plan of Action which the Conference of Ministers, on 10 April,<sup>(4)</sup> urged African States to consider (p. 627). They included agrarian reform, research to adapt production technologies, soil conservation and reforestation, programmes to settle nomadic pastoralists, eradication of illiteracy, promotion of food production co-operatives, expansion of small-scale and cottage industries, State entrepreneurship in large-scale food production, education programmes to change taboos and attitudes concerning food production and utilization, agricultural extension services, equitable price policies and expanded marketing facilities, improved credit availability and food distribution systems, expanded health services and food conservation research.

WORLD FOOD COUNCIL ACTION. In conclusions and recommendations adopted at its annual session in May, the World Food Council (p. 717) instructed its secretariat to gather for its 1982 session information about the work of international bodies on agriculture in Africa, highlighting the adequacy of what was being done about Africa's food problem.<sup>(3)</sup>

Commenting on this provision after its adoption, Canada said the Council should recommend action after assessing the effectiveness of multilateral aid programmes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. In a resolution on food and agriculture adopted on 24 July, the Economic and Social Council emphasized that measures of international assistance to African agriculture demanded continued and increased efforts by the international community and particularly by the United Nations system.<sup>(5)</sup>

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL. The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in October 1981 an interim report on Africa's food and agriculture problems in the 1980s,<sup>(2)</sup> in response to a December 1980 request from the Assembly for a study on the establishment of regional food trade and distribution organizations in Africa.<sup>(6)</sup> The report described the problems- poor production, rapidly increasing demand, and ineffective national policies and programmes- and the actions and programmes devised by ECA to remedy the situation. It included recommendations for short-, medium- and long-term action.

To bring about an immediate improvement in Africa's situation and lay the foundations of Collective self-sufficiency in cereals, livestock, fish and forestry products, it recommended: the formulation and implementation, by countries or groups of countries, of food policies, programmes and strategies for agricultural development and rapid industrialization; reduction of losses of food staples during all stages from harvesting to distribution; improvement of farming practices and technologies; price incentives; input subsidies; adequate production incentives and appropriate pricing policies; national food security; establishment of an African commodity intelligence service; and free movement of food and raw materials within Africa.

For the medium term, the report recommended reduction of food losses, agro-economic research, food security programmes up to the regional level, social and economic reforms to develop the agricultural base for self-sufficiency and marketable surplus, and programmes to reduce food imports while increasing intra-African agricultural trade. Long-term recommendations dealt with steps to attack the crisis of the rural sector, including: revision of national development plans and expenditures in favour of the rural sector; development of transportation, storage and marketing facilities; improvement of structures to channel credits and other farming inputs and to widen employment opportunities in rural areas; economic co-operation among African countries; closer integration between forestry and agriculture; and research and exchange of information on adaptive technology.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. On 17 December, in a resolution on food and agriculture in Africa, the General Assembly urged African countries to increase production and called for support to those efforts through provision of additional financial and technical assistance to Africa by the United Nations system<sup>(7)</sup> International assistance, it stressed, should include not only food aid but, more important, support of national efforts to restore and develop agricultural production. Governments and organizations were urged to assist food security projects, especially in the Sudano-Sahelian region, and to consider financing recurrent expenditures for agricultural development and granting concessional financial terms as appropriate. The Assembly urged support for an FAO programme to control African animal trypanosomiasis (a vector-borne parasitic disease). It also urged the international community to assist Africa to achieve by 1985 a significant improvement in the food situation, reduction of post-harvest losses, improved transport and more effective agronomic research.

This resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved it in similar fashion on 10 December. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier draft sponsored by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77<sup>(1)</sup> and later withdrawn.

The adopted text differed from the original draft in the following respects: concessional financial terms were to be granted "as appropriate" rather than "whenever necessary"; a clause commending FAO for its efforts to alleviate the effects of the African food crisis by mobilizing emergency food aid was replaced by a clause recognizing the role of the international community, FAO and the World Food Programme in mobilizing food aid and agricultural assistance in Africa; the FAO programme against African animal trypanosomiasis was to be "implemented" rather than "strengthened"; and a clause in the earlier text requesting that ECA, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), take every necessary measure to hold joint meetings on implementation of the resolution, was modified to request them to take every necessary measure including the holding of joint meetings.

The magnitude of Africa's food problems was mentioned by a number of speakers in the Second Committee. Ethiopia, citing World Food Council statistics showing that the per capita food production index in Africa at the beginning of 1980 had been 10 per cent less than its 1960 value, said that, while any lasting solution required a sharp increase of food production in the developing countries themselves, ambitious policies were needed for the transfer of resources, inputs, food aid, food security and favourable trade arrangements. Senegal referred to ECA figures indicating that, while food production in Africa had increased at an annual rate of 1.5 per cent during the 1970s, population had been increasing at a rate of 2.8 per cent a year. The United Republic of Cameroon noted that, of the 34 food-deficit developing countries, 24 were in Africa, although some 20 years earlier the continent had been almost self-sufficient in food.

Kenya urged United Nations bodies to co-operate more closely with one another and with African States to overcome Africa's critical difficulties and thought the affluent countries of the North had a special moral obligation to help solve its food problems. Nigeria regretted that some reports gave the impression that African countries did not devote sufficient resources to agricultural development; the modest efforts made by those countries, such as Nigeria's "green revolution", should be recognized. Zaire suggested that the heads of ECA and OAU be invited to agree on a joint approach to the implementation of the Regional Food Plan for Africa.<sup>(8)</sup>

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add.6) without vote. 10 December (meeting 47); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.153), based on informal consultations on draft by Algeria, for Group of 77 (A/C.36/L.128), orally amended by United Kingdom: agenda Item 69 (g).

Situation of food and agriculture in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling the Programme of Action of the World Food Conference, containing the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition adopted by the Conference,

Recalling also the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development,

Noting with concern that, over the past two decades, the situation of food and agriculture in Africa has drastically deteriorated, resulting in a decline in food production per capita and a reduction in average dietary standards below essential requirements,

Deeply concerned at the unabated encroachment of the desert in many countries of Africa, which has continued to accentuate the food problem on that continent,

Noting that a decision on food and agriculture was adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 23 February to 1 March 1981,

Deeply concerned the critical food shortages currently affecting many countries in the African region, which necessitate a distressingly large allocation of the scarce foreign exchange of those countries for the import of foodstuffs, to the detriment of their overall development;

Recognising the commitment and determination of Africa to devoting its limited resources on a priority basis to agricultural development in accordance with the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its second extraordinary session, devoted to economic matters, held at Lagos on 28 and 29 April 1980,

Recognizing that the responsibility for the development of food and agricultural production lies primarily with the developing countries themselves and that there is an increasing effort and growing commitment by the developing countries to accelerate the development of their food and agricultural sectors.

Recognizing the role of food-sector strategies, which emerged from the World Food Council, as a means for interested developing countries to adopt an integrated approach for increasing food production, improving consumption and attracting the necessary additional international resources.

Recognizing the central role of science and technology in raising global agricultural productivity and output, as well as the importance of appropriate infrastructure such as storage facilities and a system of transport conducive to the efficient distribution of agricultural products within each country and throughout the African continent,

Recalling its resolution 35/108 of 5 December 1980 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Stressing that the current shortages of foodstuffs demonstrate the continued vulnerability of many countries in the region to food crises due, inter alia, to crop failure, drought, soil erosion, low reserves and the high level of post-harvest losses,

Recalling its resolution 35/169 of 5 December 1980, concerning the critical situation of food and agriculture in Africa,

Noting that an important document on the problem of famine in Africa was published jointly by the Organization of African Unity and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, which explains in more detail the nature of famine and the means of eradicating it in Africa,

Noting with appreciation the assistance provided to African countries through bilateral and multilateral channels, inter alia, by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Bank and other competent organizations,

Recognizing the vital role played by transport infrastructure in food situations, particularly emergency food situations,

Recognizing the useful contribution that the effective execution of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa can make to the improvement of the food situation, in particular, and to the rapid overall development of Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on food problems in Africa and expresses its concern at the inadequacy of the results achieved in the implementation of its resolution 35/69;

2. Urges the countries of Africa to implement, in accordance with their national development programmes and priorities, measures to increase substantially their food and agricultural production;

3. Calls upon the international community to continue to support efforts undertaken by African countries at the national, subregional and regional levels to increase food production through, inter alia, the provision, on a priority and long-term basis, of additional financial and technical assistance to Africa by organizations of the United Nations system, such as the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations Development Programme and other organizations involved in the financing of agricultural development, and through an increase in lending by the World Bank to the agricultural sector in Africa;

4. Stresses that international assistance should not only take the form of food aid and the corresponding additional support but, more important, should also support national efforts for the restoration and development of agricultural production, specifically crops and livestock, in the regions affected;

5. Urges Governments and the international organizations concerned to provide the necessary technical, financial and food assistance to food security projects in the region, especially in the countries of the Sahel and the Sudano-Sahelian countries, in the framework of their own activities, including strengthening the Food Security Assistance Scheme of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations through the participation of current and prospective donors;

6. Calls for the urgent consideration of the adoption of a positive and flexible approach to the financing of agricultural development by external institutions and Governments, which would finance, inter alia, recurrent expenditure in connection with investment and the cost of factors of production, and for the granting of concessional terms as appropriate;

7. Recognizes the role of the international community, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Food Programme in mobilizing food aid and agricultural assistance in Africa, and requests existing and new donor countries to increase the resources required to meet African can needs for food aid and agricultural development;

8. Recommends that the Programme for the Control of African Animal Trypanosomiasis and Related Development, endorsed by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at its twentieth session In its resolution 8/79 of 28 November 1979, should be implemented on an urgent basis under the overall co-ordination of that organization and with the active financial and technical support of the International community;

9. Urges all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to Intensify their activities In Africa to assist Governments, Inter alia, In the areas relating to food production, agricultural processing, integrated research and extension service;

10. Also urges the international community to assist countries In the African region to achieve, by 1985, the following goals:

(a) A significant improvement in their food situation and the laying of the foundations for the attainment of self-sufficiency In cereals, livestock and fish;

(b) Significant progress towards attaining a 50 per cent reduction in post-harvest losses, through, Inter alia, the construction of storage facilities;

(c) An Improved transport Infrastructure to facilitate food distribution at the national, subregional and regional levels;

(d) Expanded and more effective agronomic research, with special emphasis on improved seeds and an adequate supply of fertilizers, pesticides and other chemicals suitable for African conditions;

11. Further urges all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to expand their training programmes in the building up of national capabilities for the preparation, execution, monitoring and evaluation of agricultural development projects;

12. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa, In consultation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, to take every necessary measure, including the holding of joint meetings, with a view to considering the possibilities for implementing General Assembly resolution 35/69 and the present resolution;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and organs and bodies of the United Nations system, In his final report called for In resolution 35/69:

(a) To identify the problems perceived in the attainment of the goals set forth in paragraph 10 above;

(b) To estimate the amount of external resources needed to attain those goals;

(c) To report on the level of technical and financial resources which the United Nations system will deploy towards the attainment of those goals and to suggest ways of attracting extra funding;

(d) To report on the action-oriented plans of the relevant organs and organization of the United Nations system which will implement the present resolution.

Science and technology

The ECA Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development (Addis Ababa, 2-6 November 1981) reviewed national and regional progress in implementing the science and technology chapter of the Lagos Plan of Action for African economic development (p. 611), and set up three working groups to monitor developments more closely.<sup>(1)</sup>

The social impact of science and technology in Africa was dealt with in a programme of measures on the social implications of the Lagos

Plan (see below), endorsed on 10 April by the ECA Conference of Ministers.<sup>(2)</sup> It was recommended that Governments mount research programmes on the adaptation of science and technology to their country's needs, promote public acceptance of appropriate technology, and encourage and support co-operatives in the use of scientific developments for agriculture and production.

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>ECA Committee on science and technology, E/ECA/TPCW.3/3 & Add.1.

Resolution: <sup>(2)</sup>ECA (report, E/1981/54), 423(XVI), annex, sect. VI.C, 10 Apr.

Social development

On 10 April 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> the ECA Conference of Ministers endorsed the recommendations of the third Conference of African Ministers of Social Affairs (Addis Ababa, October 1980),<sup>(2)</sup> and urged African States to consider adopting and implementing a series of measures approved at that meeting on the social implications, of the Lagos Plan of Action for African economic development (p. 611). Included were measures for international co-operation in social development, such as subregional pooling of university resources to train high-level manpower, the establishment in each subregion of centres for basic and applied social research, and assistance to the Association for Social Work Education in Africa.

The programme also covered measures to improve the demographic (see below) and health (p. 629) situation, the quality of human resources (p. 629) and the status of women (p. 630); measures to deal with problems of youth unemployment (p. 629), and refugees and displaced persons; and social policy measures to be taken in anticipation of adverse social consequences of the implementation of the Lagos Plan in the fields of agricultural development (p. 624), industrial development (p. 623), science and technology (see above), transport and communications (p. 614), water supply (p. 623) and energy resources development (p. 624).

Population

Population policy

Measures to improve Africa's demographic situation were included in a programme on the social implications of the Lagos Plan of Action for economic development (see above), endorsed on 10 April 1981 by the ECA Conference of Ministers.<sup>(1)</sup> It was recommended that African States formulate and implement population policies appropriate to their countries so as to reduce the dependency ratio, strike a balance between population and resources, and reduce fertility and infant mortality rates and the burden of excessive childbirths on women.

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECA (report, E/1981/54), 423(XVI), annex. sect. I, para. 1, 10 Apr.

Training and research institutions

Proposed new statutes for the Regional Institute for Population Studies at Accra, Ghana, and the Institut de formation et de recherche démographiques at Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon, were forwarded by ECA in April 1981 for approval by the General Assembly, but the Assembly referred them back to the Commission in December for consideration of points raised by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

The institutes were established in 1972 following agreements between the United Nations and the host Governments; their management was decentralized from United Nations Headquarters to ECA in 1980. The proposed statutes, endorsed by ECA in 1980,<sup>(8)</sup> were intended to regionalize the institutes by involving all the countries served by each institute in its financing and management. The Institute at Accra served English-speaking Africa and that at Yaoundé served French-speaking Africa.

On 10 April 1981, the ECA Conference of Ministers recommended that the Assembly approve the statutes and invited African States to discharge their financial obligations towards the institutes, as determined at meetings on their future to be held by interested States.<sup>(5)</sup> This and earlier ECA resolutions on the topic were transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Economic and Social Council, on 24 July, decided without vote to endorse the statutes and recommended their approval by the Assembly so that the two institutes could become operational as soon as possible.<sup>(6)</sup> This decision was approved without vote on 21 July by the First (Economic) Committee, on an oral proposal by the Chairman.

However, the Assembly decided without vote on 18 December to recommend that the Council, at its 1982 organizational session, invite the Conference of Ministers to take up the matter again in 1982 in the light of points raised by ACABQ<sup>(7)</sup> and any suggestions by the Secretary-General. The recommendation to this effect was made without objection on 16 December by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, on an oral proposal by the Chairman based on a modified version of a recommendation by ACABQ. The modification consisted of adding the reference to the Council's organizational session (held early in the year); it was made at the suggestion of the ACABQ Chairman to meet a point raised by Ghana and the United Republic of Tanzania, which wanted to be sure that there would be no delay in considering the statutes.

In suggesting reconsideration of the statutes, ACABQ said they did not give a clear picture of how the institutes were to be financed, what the financial role of the United Nations and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) would be, whether the institutes' staff members would be international staff of the United Nations, who would be responsible for grading posts and establishing staffing tables, and other personnel matters.<sup>(4)</sup>

The question had been referred to the Fifth Committee by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which decided without vote on 13 November<sup>(1)</sup> to transmit a draft decision by a Vice-Chairman that would have had the Assembly approve the statutes.<sup>(2)</sup>

Economic Commission for Africa: regional Institutes for population studies

At its 41st plenary meeting, on 24 July 1981, the Council, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on regional co-operation and recalling resolution 426(XVI) of 10 April 1981 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, decided to endorse the new statutes of the Regional Institute for Population Studies and the Institut de formation et de recherche démographiques annexed to that resolution and to recommend that the General Assembly should approve the statutes at its thirty-sixth session, in order to enable the two institutes to become operational as soon as possible.

General Assembly decision 36/450

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/36/843) without objection. 16 December (meeting 80); oral proposal by Chairman, based on ACABQ recommendation (A/36/670); agenda item 12.

Proposed statutes of the regional Institutes for population studies at Accra and Yaoundé

At Its 105th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, recommended that the Economic and Social Council, at its organizational session for 1982, should invite the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa to take up once again at Its next session in 1982 the proposed statutes of the regional institutes for population studies at Accra and Yaoundé. In the light of the points raised by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report and such suggestions as might be made by the Secretary-General thereon.

Technical co-operation

Funds from UNFPA were used by ECA in 1981 for infrastructure support in population, regional advisory services in demography and statistics, case studies, information and clearing-house activities, and national workshops in population and development, as well as for technical support and other services to the population institutes at Accra and Yaoundé (p. 628) and the Regional Centre for Population Studies of the Central African Customs Union. Work on data processing for a Zambian/ECA survey on infant and childhood mortality was completed in 1981. Staff members of ECA participated in some UNFPA needs-assessment missions.

Health and human resources

Health policy

Measures to improve the health situation in Africa were included in a programme to deal with the social implications of the Lagos Plan of Action for economic development (p. 627) endorsed by the ECA Conference of Ministers on 10 April 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> They called for the organization and strengthening of national health systems, with special attention to mothers and children, including pre- and post-natal care, family life education and responsible parenthood, nutrition education, and better community health through improved primary health services.

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECA (report, E/1981/54), 423(XVI), annex, sect. I, para. 2, 10 Apr.

Disabled persons

In connection with the 1981 observance of the International Year of Disabled Persons (IYDP) (p. 795), the ECA Conference of Ministers, on 10 April, endorsed the report, findings and resolutions of a Regional Seminar on IYDP (Addis Ababa, October 1980), and called for follow-up measures by United Nations bodies directed towards proper rehabilitation actions, social integration of the disabled and adequate prevention of disability.<sup>(2)</sup> Also on 10 April, the Conference condemned South Africa for atrocities resulting in a growing number of disabled persons and appealed to the international community to assist the front-line States of southern Africa in the rehabilitation and technical and vocational training of disabled persons.<sup>(3)</sup>

Human resources

An ECA-sponsored Conference of Ministers Responsible for Human Resources Planning, Development and Utilization (Monrovia, Liberia, 5-7 October 1981) identified project proposals for national action and technical co-operation in human resources development and utilization, called on African Governments to adapt those proposals to their national situation, and adopted interim terms of reference for the Conference as a part of ECA machinery.<sup>(1)</sup> The Conference was preceded by a Technical Preparatory Committee of Officials on Human Resources Planning, Development and Utilization (Monrovia, 28 September-3 October), which drew up detailed recommendations on education and training.

Several national training workshops in manpower planning, career planning, guidance and counselling were organized in 1981 with the help of ECA, and a regional workshop was held for training development officers and managers from public and private sectors. Advisory missions were sent for manpower planning, education and training, and career planning. A number of technical publications were produced.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, on 10 April, called on its members to consider a series of measures to improve the quality of human resources and to tackle problems of youth unemployment, as part of a programme to deal with the social implications of the Lagos Plan of Action (p. 627). Measures in the field of education included the eradication of illiteracy within the shortest possible time, preparation and distribution of reading materials for new literates, universalization of educational opportunities, increasing the vocational and technical content of primary and secondary school curricula, creation of vocational orientation systems, more emphasis on science and technology in higher education, and the teaching of African history, culture and civilization. Suggested steps to combat youth unemployment included vocational training facilities, continuing education for school drop-outs, national youth service programmes, and financial support for youth movements and workers' organizations.<sup>(3)</sup>

In his September report to the General Assembly, on social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General described as acute and widespread the need for human resources development in that region, and presented information on measures taken by various organs of the United Nations system to assist African countries in their endeavour.

African Institute for Higher Technical Training and Research. The ECA Conference of Ministers called on 10 April 1981 for support from African States to permit the African Institute for Higher Technical Training and Research to become operational.<sup>(1)</sup> The Conference expressed concern that only a restricted number of States had subscribed to the Institute's constitution and still fewer had paid their contributions to its 1980/1981 budget.

Human settlements and environment

The terms of reference of the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment were approved by the ECA Conference of Ministers on 10 April 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> In addition to the human settlements functions of its predecessor body prior to the expansion of its mandate in 1980,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee was to formulate regional and transnational environmental management policies, promote the exchange of information and experience, review the ECA work programme on the environment, assist in assembling information on national environmental problems, promote environmental education and training, and promote inter-organizational co-operation.

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECA (report, E/1981/54), 408(XVI), 10 Apr.

Environment

The ECA Conference of Ministers, on 10 April 1981, urged African States to enact laws and regulations on environmental protection, including the preservation and reconstruction of historic sites, and directed the ECA Executive Secretary to provide technical assistance for environmental legislation, assessment and management.<sup>(1)</sup>

A draft action plan for the development of marine science research and training was prepared at a workshop (Addis Ababa, 8-13 June) organized under a joint project involving ECA, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Oceanographic Commission.

Women

The Africa Regional Co-ordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development (second meeting, Addis Ababa, 12-14 March 1981) requested increased funding for regional and subregional ECA programmes for women, called for wider dissemination of information on activities in this field, urged African Governments to involve women in the formulation and implementation of national development plans, asked that ECA provide permanent posts for the African Training and Research Centre for Women, and appealed for support for projects to aid rural women. On 10 April, the ECA Conference of Ministers, noting the Committee's report,<sup>(1)</sup> reaffirmed the necessity for States and organizations to provide resources to programmes for the advancement of women, urged that substantial resources from the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development be devoted to the ECA women's programme, and urged intensified efforts to provide regular posts for the staff of the Training and Research Centre.<sup>(3)</sup>

Measures to improve the status of African women and increase their opportunities for involvement in national development efforts were part of a programme on the social implications of the Lagos Plan of Action for African economic development (p. 627) endorsed by the Conference of Ministers on 10 April.<sup>(4)</sup> The measures called for campaigns to change attitudes about the place of women in society, efforts to equalize educational opportunities, immediate abolition of discrimination in employment, raising the minimum age of marriage, support for the Pan-African Women's Organization and the African Training and Research Centre for Women, establishment of day-care centres, the development of labour-saving devices to free women from daily drudgery, giving women access to appropriate work tools, and a percentage share of seats for women on bodies and in services concerned with development.

The ECA secretariat organized a training workshop on improvement of the quality of life of rural women (Addis Ababa, May) for trainers, planners and leaders from Portuguese-speaking Africa. Financing from the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985) was used to strengthen national machinery for the integration of women in development, for information, training and supply of equipment, and to help support the African Training and Research Centre for Women. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) also provided financial support for the staffing of the Centre, through a $798,000 commitment for 1981-1983 approved by the UNICEF Executive Board in May.<sup>(2)</sup>

Statistics

Experts from ECA provided advisory services to African countries in several statistical areas during 1981, including economic, demographic and social statistics. Following a survey which found a serious shortfall in output by African statistical services, demonstrated by delays in data dissemination, a working group concluded that the services could produce better results with existing resources if they organized their work properly.

Project proposals were prepared for a number of countries participating in the African Household Survey Capability Programme, a component of the global National Household Survey Capability Programme, designed to help developing countries produce integrated economic, social and demographic statistics at the household and other levels (p. 1072). A work programme for the African Programme was recommended by a Working Group on Organization, Content and Methodology of Household Surveys (Addis Ababa, 29 June-3 July).<sup>(1)</sup>

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Working Group on household surveys, E/CN.14/SM/42.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions concerning ECA

The views of the Conference of Ministers on the role of ECA, and of United Nations regional commissions in general, in the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system were set out in a resolution of 10 April 1981 (p. 607).

Regional institutions

Noting the difficulties experienced by regional and subregional institutions sponsored by ECA due to their small memberships and inadequate financial support, the ECA Conference of Ministers, on 10 April 1981, appealed to its members to join those institutions and to meet their financial obligations, and requested the Executive Secretary to explore the feasibility of establishing a buffer fund that could advance money to the institutions during periods of financial difficulty.<sup>(2)</sup>

The Conference of Chief Executives of ECA-sponsored Regional and Subregional Institutions, which at its inaugural session in 1980 had called the Commission's attention to the difficulties facing those bodies, reviewed the situation further at its second session (Abidjan, Ivory Coast, 1-5 December).<sup>(1)</sup> It recommended that African Governments hosting such institutions grant them the same facilities, privileges and immunities as United Nations offices received.

Proposed new statutes for two regional population institutes were under consideration during the year (p. 628).

Financial questions

UN Trust Fund for African Development. Nineteen Governments paid a total of $1,858,774 in 1981 to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development (see table below), established at the request of ECA in 1977 to help implement its work programmes. An additional $1,684,378 was pledged for 1982 by 24 Governments. Including public donations and interest, the Fund received income of $2,271,868 in 1981 and spent $2,447,878 for activities in intra-African trade, manpower, industry, natural resources, building materials and agriculture, and for ECA Multinational Programming and Operational Centres.

The third pledging conference of African Governments and financial institutions for the Fund was held during the 1981 session of the ECA Conference of Ministers. On 10 April, the Conference appealed to its member States and to countries outside Africa, as well as African and non-African institutions, to provide resources for the work programme adopted by ECA within the framework of the Lagos Plan of Action.<sup>(1)</sup>

Financing of Multinational Programming and Operational Centres. Established in 1977 and 1978 as the operational arms of ECA in African subregions, five Multinational Programming and Operational Centres were responsible for promoting economic integration schemes (p. 612) and overseeing United Nations technical co-operation projects. They were located at Gisenyi, Rwanda, for the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries (Burundi, Rwanda, Zaire); Lusaka, Zambia, for eastern and southern Africa; Niamey, Niger, for West Africa; Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon, for Central Africa; and Tangier, Morocco, for North Africa. Discussions were under way at the end of 1981 to make the Tangier Centre operational.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, on 10 April, expressed appreciation for the efforts made to strengthen the Centres, particularly by decentralizing ECA activities, and called for the integration of the Centres' staff into the staffing table financed from the United Nations regular budget.<sup>(2)</sup>

Since their inception, the Centres south of the Sahara had been financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which provided $2.6 million for the purpose in 1981; the Tangier Centre was financed from the United Nations regular budget. However, faced with an anticipated reduction in funds for its African regional programme, UNDP indicated that, from 1982, it would phase out its assistance for the Centres' staffing and office operations, and support only their operational activities.

The General Assembly, in a resolution adopted without vote on 17 December,<sup>(3)</sup> called on the Secretary-General urgently to seek extrabudgetary funding to enable all the Centres to carry out their 1982 work programmes in the fields of general programming, research, studies and the organization of meetings. It urged UNDP to continue to support the Centres' operational activities during 1982-1986, and called on other bodies, within and outside the United Nations system, to render support. It called for two reports from the Secretary-General in 1982: one for the Economic and Social Council, in consultation with the UNDP Administrator, on financing the Centres on an established basis, and the other for the Assembly on implementation of the resolution.

The resolution was approved on 7 December by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, also without vote. The draft was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier text sponsored by Benin on behalf of the African Group.<sup>(1)</sup> The Benin draft would have had the Assembly call for resources from the United Nations regular budget to finance the Centres' non-operational activities.

Benin stated in introducing the initial draft that the survival of the Centres might be jeopardized unless adequate funds for their operation were made available regularly.

Multinational Programming and Operational Centres

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977 and 33/202 of 29 January 1979 on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system so as to make it more fully capable of dealing with problems of International economic co-operation and development in a comprehensive and effective manner,

Recalling, in particular, section IV of the annex to resolution 32/197 on structures for regional and interregional co-operation, through which the General Assembly designated the regional commissions, inter alia, as the main general economic and social development centres within the United Nations system for their respective regions,

Recalling also its resolution 35/64 of 5 December 1980 on special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s,

Recalling further the Final Act of Lagos, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its second extraordinary session, devoted to economic matters, held at Lagos on 28 and 29 April 1980, which called, inter alia, for the establishment of a subregional common market by 1990 as the first step towards the establishment of an African economic community by the year 2000,

Taking note of resolution 31.1 (XIII) adopted on 1 March 1977 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, by which the Conference decided to establish a certain number of Multinational Programming and Operational Centres at the subregional level,

Bearing in mind that the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres have become an integral part of the Economic Commission for Africa, through which the Commission effectively carries out its terms of reference not only with regard to studies, research, the organization of meetings and consultations but also with regard to its operational activities as an executing agency,

Emphasizing the importance of the activities of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres for the African countries and the need for substantial and adequate financial and human resources to sustain those activities,

1. Calls upon the Secretary-General urgently to seek to provide extrabudgetary resources to enable all the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres to carry out in 1982, at the subregional level, their work programme in the field of general programming, research, studies and the organization of meetings,

2. Welcomes the financial support which the United Nations Development Programme has extended to the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres since their inception and urges the Administrator of the Programme to continue with this essential support to the operational activities of the Centres during the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, of the Programme;

3. Calls upon other organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to render their fullest support to the activities of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres;

4. Invites the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa, to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1982, a report on the financing of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres on an established basis;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Work programme and medium-term plan

The proposed ECA work programme and priorities for 1982-1983, prepared by the secretariat,<sup>(1)</sup> gave high priority to the development of knowledge about African natural resources, the need to organize intra-African trade in industrial raw materials, and the development of indigenous skilled personnel, technology, and institutional and physical infrastructure. After examination by the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole, the programme was considered by the ECA Conference of Ministers, which adopted on 10 April 1981 a draft resolution for action by the Economic and Social Council, approving the programme and urging the Secretary-General to provide resources to enable ECA to implement it fully.<sup>(3)</sup> The Council did not act on the draft.

Also on 10 April,<sup>(2)</sup> the Conference recommended the adoption of the ECA medium-term plan for 1984-1989. This was to form part of the United Nations medium-term plan, to be considered by the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the General Assembly in 1982.

Proposed work programme: <sup>(1)</sup>E/CN.14/790.

Resolutions: ECA (report, E/1981/54), 10 Apr.:
<sup>(2)</sup>419(XVI), <sup>(3)</sup>428(XVI).

ECA secretariat

Personnel questions. The ECA Conference of Ministers, on 10 April 1981, encouraged efforts to Africanize the ECA secretariat, urged under-represented African States to make competent nationals available, appealed to United Nations authorities to take steps to ensure stability in employment and improve working and living conditions of the staff, and invited the Secretary-General to reconsider the recent cost-of-living survey for Addis Ababa to take corrective measures.<sup>(1)</sup>

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECA (report, E/1981/54), 421 (XVI), 10 Apr.

Training programmes for translators. The General Assembly decided on 18 December 1981<sup>(2)</sup> that a fourth training programme for English and French translators and précis-writers at ECA should be pursued and financed from the United Nations regular budget for 1982-1983. This action was taken by a recorded vote of 113 to 25, following the approval by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 24 November of an oral proposal by the United Republic of Cameroon, by a roll-call vote of 62 to 20, with 17 abstentions. The Committee vote was requested by the United States and the roll-call by the Ukrainian SSR.

The Secretary-General had recommended that an amount of $461,300 for this purpose, tentatively included in the proposed United Nations budget for 1982-1983, should be deleted, since current vacancies among ECA translator posts could be filled by successful candidates from previous courses. In a report evaluating the three courses organized since 1978,<sup>(1)</sup> he noted that ECA was considering financing 14 translator posts from extrabudgetary sources, mainly for its Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (p. 631), but that, according to United Nations budget policy, training for extrabudgetary posts should normally be provided from sources other than the regular budget. He recommended that the Assembly approve the resumption of the training programme as soon as extrabudgetary resources had been identified.

In proposing that the budgetary provision be confirmed, the United Republic of Cameroon, supported by Uganda, said the consultations held by officials at United Nations Headquarters with the ECA Executive Secretary had been inadequate. Nigeria asserted that the subregional Centres needed translators. The appropriation was also supported by Egypt and Mauritania.

Belgium, Japan, the United Kingdom (for the European Community members) and the United States took an opposing view, supporting the Secretary-General's recommendation that training for posts in the subregional Centres should be financed from extrabudgetary funds. Brazil, abstaining in the vote in the Committee, opposed the transfer to the regular budget of activities that should be financed outside it.

Expansion of conference facilities

On the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly requested in December 1981 a study of the adequacy of conference facilities at ECA headquarters in Addis Ababa.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION. The request by the Council was contained in a resolution of 24 July,<sup>(2)</sup> adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the First (Economic) Committee, which approved it in similar fashion on 21 July. The draft was sponsored by 15 African nations, introduced by Ethiopia, orally revised by the sponsors and orally amended by the United States.

By this resolution, the Council recalled that the conference facilities at Addis Ababa had been designed to service the limited number of African Member States in the late 1950s and that there were currently 50 African Members. Accordingly, it requested the General Assembly to entrust the Secretary-General, within existing resources, with a study on the adequacy of the facilities to meet the demands resulting from the enlarged membership and increased activities of ECA, and to report to the Assembly in 1982, through ECA and the Council.

The sponsors orally revised their original draft, which would have had the Council recognize the need to expand the facilities, request the Secretary-General to study the requirements and their budgetary implications, and report to the Council in 1982, through ECA. In addition, the sponsors accepted an oral proposal by the United States to insert the phrase "within existing resources" after the proposal for a study. However, they rejected an oral proposal by Canada that the Assembly be asked to "consider authorizing" the Secretary-General to make the study rather than to entrust him with it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION. By a resolution of 17 December,<sup>(3)</sup> adopted without vote, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to undertake urgently a study of the adequacy of the conference facilities at ECA headquarters to meet demands resulting from the enlarged membership and increased activities. He was asked to report the findings and his suggestions to the Assembly in 1982, through ECA and the Economic and Social Council.

This resolution was recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 16 November, also without vote. The draft was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier text by 40 African nations, Bangladesh and Democratic Yemen,<sup>(1)</sup> later withdrawn. The only substantive change was in a preambular paragraph, which in the original version stated that the facilities had proved grossly inadequate and in the final version that the facilities were believed to be inadequate.

Introducing the original draft, Benin observed that the inadequacy of conference facilities had been mentioned by the ECA Executive Secretary in a statement to the Committee. Ethiopia said it had decided to donate the land needed for additional construction. The United States expressed hope that any future expenditure incurred in connection with the study would be offset by savings elsewhere.

Expansion of the conference facilities of the Economic Commission for Africa at Addis Ababa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the Economic Commission for Africa was established at Addis Ababa in 1958,

Appreciating the important contribution made by the Commission to the development of Africa over the past two decades, Recalling that the present conference facilities of the Commission were made available by the Government of Ethiopia.

Further recalling that the conference facilities were designed to service the limited number of African countries that were States Members of the United Nations in the late 1950s,

Noting with satisfaction the increase in the number of independent States of Africa as a result of the process of decolonization,

Noting further that there are at present fifty African States Members of the United Nations and that there is the prospect of others joining the United Nations family,

Recalling the Lagos Plan of Action for the implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its second extraordinary session, held at Lagos on 28 and 29 April 1980,

Mindful of the heavy responsibilities entrusted to the Economic Commission for Africa for the implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action in the decades to come,

Noting that the present conference facilities at the headquarters of the Commission may be insufficient to meet the needs of the large number of African States that have become members of the Commission since its establishment and the growing number of international, intergovernmental and regional organizations participating in conferences,

Requests the General Assembly to entrust the Secretary-General, within existing resources, with a study on the adequacy of conference facilities at the headquarters of the Economic Commission for Africa to meet the demands thereon as a result of its enlarged membership and increased activities and to ask him to report, through the Commission and through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982, to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

General Assembly resolution 36/176

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add.1) without vote, 16 November (meeting 40); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/36/L.67), based on informal consultations on 42-nation draft (A/C.2/36/L.35); agenda item 69.

Expansion of the conference facilities of the Economic Commission for Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/65 of 24 July 1981,

Recalling also that the Economic Commission for Africa was established at Addis Ababa in 1958 and that its conference facilities, which were donated to the United Nations by the Government of Ethiopia, were designed to service the limited number of African countries that were States Members of the United Nations in the late 1950s and early 1960s,

Noting with satisfaction the increase in the number of independent States in Africa as a result of decolonization,

Noting further that there are at present fifty African States Members of the United Nations and that there is the prospect that more will be admitted to membership in the United Nations,

Mindful of the heavy responsibilities entrusted in the present decade to the Economic Commission for Africa as the main centre for the promotion of the economic development of Africa, in general, and for the implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for the implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, in particular, which the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity adopted at its second extraordinary session, held at Lagos on 28 and 29 April 1980,

Noting that the present conference facilities at the headquarters of the Economic Commission for Africa are believed to be inadequate in relation to the needs of the large number of African States that have become members of the Commission since its establishment and the growing number of international, intergovernmental and regional organizations participating in conferences there,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, as a matter of urgency, a study of the adequacy of the conference facilities at the headquarters of the Economic Commission for Africa to meet the demands thereon as a result of the enlarged membership and increased activities of the Commission;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to report the findings of the study together with his suggestions, through the Economic Commission for Africa at its seventeenth session and the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1982, to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) held its thirty-seventh session at its headquarters at Bangkok, Thailand, from 10 to 20 March 1981.<sup>(2)</sup> Energy was the main theme for the session, and ESCAP concluded that it should play an active role as the regional focal point for further work in this field (p. 644).

A highlight of the year was the inauguration in August of the Asian and Pacific Development Centre, with headquarters at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia (p. 636). The Regional Co-ordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops was established at Bogor, Indonesia, and began operations in April (p. 645).

Among the five ESCAP committees which met in 1981, the Committee on Development Planning (March) commented on the energy situation and discussed the role of transnational corporations (p. 637). The Committee on Statistics (June) (p. 647) and the Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment (September) recommended additional secretariat activities on these topics (p. 641). The Committee on Natural Resources (October/November) endorsed recommendations aimed at ensuring that environmental considerations were taken into account in mineral resources development (p. 643). The Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications (November) recommended that the 1980s be proclaimed Transport Decade for Asia and the Pacific, and decided on several activities in regard to rail and road transport and tourism (p. 640).

A $30.5-million programme of technical co-operation was carried out by ESCAP in 1981, the largest such programme among the United Nations regional commissions (p. 638).

Other areas of ESCAP activity included economic and technical co-operation among developing countries (p. 637), information systems (p. 637), rural development (p. 638), special measures for the least developed and other developing countries (p. 638), international trade (p. 639), transnational corporations (p. 642), social development (p. 646), population (p. 646), women (p. 646), and youth and aging persons (p. 647).

Guam was admitted during the Commission's session as the ninth associate member of ESCAP, raising its total membership to 44 (p. 648). Vanuatu changed from associate to full member on its admission to the United Nations on 15 September.<sup>(4)</sup>

The ESCAP programme of work and priorities for 1982-1983, and a draft of the ESCAP section of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989, were endorsed by ESCAP with several changes, following their consideration by the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission.<sup>(1)</sup> On 19 March, in one of the nine resolutions adopted at its 1981 session, ESCAP paid tribute to its retiring Executive Secretary, Johan B. P. Maramis,<sup>(3)</sup> who was replaced on 3 May by Shah A. M. S. Kibria of Bangladesh.

Economic and social trends

The contrast between the more rapidly growing economies of east and south-east Asia and the rest of the region, characteristic during the 1970s, had become far less marked in 1979 and 1980, according to a summary of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1980<sup>(3)</sup> noted by the Economic and Social Council on 24 July 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> Growth in gross product tended to wind down in those two years. Agricultural output continued to expand and diversify, although the region's non-food crop production fell below the 1979 level. Several non-oil-producing developing economies in the region kept pace with the expansion in world exports-running at an annual rate of 25 per cent in 1979 and over 20 per cent in the first half of 1980-with the largest gains recorded in south-east Asia. However, the growth rates of export volume decelerated in 1980 for both manufactures and primary products.

In its analysis of regional economic trends, the Committee for Development Planning, in the report on its March/April 1981 session,<sup>(2)</sup> noted that Asia was characterized by almost as much diversity as was to be found in the world as a whole. The more than 500 million people who lived in absolute poverty in Asia- three fourths of them in rural areas-accounted for about 90 per cent of the world's poor. The regional development strategy of ESCAP identified six objectives of development for the 1980s: high growth, fuller employment, distributive equity, fulfilment of basic mass needs, fuller participation in development and self-reliance. In addition to national actions and institutional changes, large capital inflows would be needed. In the context of collective self-reliance, great potential existed for substantially increased interaction between south Asia and the countries in east and west Asia, as well as with Africa.

Development policy

Asian and Pacific Development Centre

The Asian and Pacific Development Centre (APDC), defined by its Charter as an intergovernmental institution for policy research and training relating to development, was inaugurated on 17 August 1981 at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. Its purpose, according to its Charter, was to assist member Governments and other countries of the region, and collaborate with governmental and non-governmental research and training institutions and other public education institutions in the region, in the study, formulation, implementation, management and evaluation of development strategies and policies. It was to do this by conducting and encouraging research and programmes for exchange of experience, facilitating and arranging training, serving as an information clearing-house and providing consultants. The Centre integrated and replaced four regional training and research institutions: the Asian and Pacific Development Institute, the Asian and Pacific Development Administration Centre, the Social Welfare and Development Centre for Asia and the Pacific, and the Asian and Pacific Centre for Women and Development.

The Centre's Charter was approved by ESCAP on 19 March,<sup>(2)</sup> except for three provisions relating to financing and management, on which informal consultations were held during the year with a view to resolving disagreements. The Management Board (second session, Kuala Lumpur, 18 and 19 August) approved a work programme for 1982-1983.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Centre organized a conference on development perspectives in the 1980s (Kuala Lumpur, December). With funds from the United Nations Development Programme, it carried out nine training programmes and three research projects, paying special attention to the training needs of the least developed countries.

Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries

In its resolution of 20 March 1981 on the role of United Nations regional commissions in the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system (p. 607), ESCAP emphasized the need to enhance the commissions' role in promoting economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, and requested the Executive Secretary to assist countries at their request and to consult the secretaries of other regional commissions on co-operative activities.<sup>(2)</sup>

A project for interregional co-operation was formulated in 1981 and, as a first stage towards finalizing it, discussions were held with the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Latin America. Other activities under way included a project on co-operation in the automotive industry among countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), for which a final report was produced, and another to examine possibilities for ASEAN and Pacific economic co-operation, for which studies were initiated on food security, energy and minerals, and primary commodity exports, and a consultant's study on marine and forest resources <sup>(3)</sup> was issued. Published as a third volume in the series on inter-country institutional co-operation among developing Asian countries, Pacific Institutions described more than 165 intergovernmental, non-governmental and national institutions in the Pacific.<sup>(1)</sup>

Development planning

With a view to establishing an information service on development planning in Asia and the Pacific, ESCAP missions visited nine countries during 1981 to establish focal points and discuss implementation of the project; background studies were undertaken on the issues involved in establishing such a system, and operating procedures were devised. Work continued on the development of an econometric modelling framework for medium- and long-term projections of economic performance under alternative policy scenarios, and an informal consultation was held to consider choices of computer software and ESCAP country model systems (Osaka, Japan, August/September). An interregional seminar was organized on strategies and measures for enhancing capabilities for development administration in developing countries (Bangkok, December).

The ESCAP Committee on Development planning (third session, Bangkok, 2-6 March) commented on the energy situation in Asia and the Pacific (p. 644) and discussed the role of transnational corporations in the region (p. 643).<sup>(1)</sup>

On 19 March, ESCAP urged Governments to reflect in their policy formulation the goals, objectives and policy measures of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,<sup>(4)</sup> and called for proposals from its secretariat on programmes towards achieving those goals.<sup>(2)</sup> It also requested that its secretariat pay attention to the need for a unified approach to economic and social development and planning, and urged Governments to co-operate in an exchange of national experience in that area.<sup>(3)</sup>

Development information

The Study Group on the Co-ordination of Government Information Systems (second session, Bangkok, 2-7 February 1981) recommended some specific steps Governments might take in gathering raw data, organizing and using such data for planning, and ensuring the best institutional framework for a government information plan.<sup>(2)</sup> An Intergovernmental Meeting on Government Information Systems and Data Processing (Tokyo, 16-21 December)- the first intergovernmental meeting under the ESCAP information systems programme-recommended that countries give high priority to the management of their information resources at all government levels, suggested guidelines for them to follow and proposed additional activities by the ESCAP secretariat.<sup>(1)</sup>

Two ESCAP regional advisers, on administrative information systems and data processing, financed by France, and on data preparation and processing of censuses and surveys, financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, visited 15 countries of the region and made recommendations to the Governments. The ESCAP secretariat installed in March a new computer system donated by Japan, and established in May an Advisory Board on Information Systems to improve the management of information within the secretariat.

Rural development

As part of the ESCAP integrated programme on rural development, a Regional Workshop on the Development of Low-income Groups and Improving the Accountability of Public Agencies in Rural Areas (Bangkok, 27-30 October 1981) recommended ways to overcome disadvantages and disabilities faced by the rural poor so that they could improve their living conditions.<sup>(2)</sup> The Workshop examined a secretariat study on this topic, issued in August and based on nine case studies in seven countries.

Officials from 10 countries took part in a Study Tour/Seminar on Integrated Rural Development in China (22 June-4 July) to study that country's rural development experiences and how they might be applied elsewhere.<sup>(1)</sup> Under an inter-country project on training of personnel in rural banking institutions, a regional training workshop (Chainat, Thailand, November) was attended by banking officials and trainers from eight countries concerned with rural credit. The ESCAP rural development programme assisted Maldives to act on a long-term atoll development project and aided the Philippines to formulate an integrated development plan for Pangasinan province.

Study: <sup>(3)</sup>IRD/WDLIG/1.

Special measures for the least developed and other developing countries

On 19 March 1981, ESCAP urged donor countries and multilateral development institutions to allocate more funds and technical assistance for major structural transformations in the least developed countries (LDCs), with a view to doubling by 1985 the flow of official development assistance to those countries and helping them to develop their energy resources and to secure markets for their exports.<sup>(3)</sup>

As one of a series of regional meetings in preparation for the September 1981 United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (p. 405), ESCAP and the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) organized a Ministerial Meeting on LDCs of the ESCAP and ECWA Regions (Bangkok, 10 and 11 August),<sup>(1)</sup> preceded by a Meeting of Senior Officials.

In June 1981, an evaluation mission was sent to the least developed land-locked and transit countries of the region to formulate measures for the next phase, 1982-1984, of an assistance project to those countries financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The Special Body on Land-locked Countries (sixth session, Bangkok, 28 July-1 August) examined particular problems faced by the land-locked countries of the region and discussed ways in which the United Nations system could help them.<sup>(2)</sup> A workshop on special measures in favour of least developed land-locked countries (Bangkok, July), organized by ESCAP, UNDP and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), assessed activities by the UNCTAD and ESCAP secretariats and discussed subjects relating to the transit trade of those countries.

Reports: <sup>(1)</sup>Ministerial Meeting on LDCs, 12 (TRADE/MLDC/1); <sup>(2)</sup>Special Body on Land-locked Countries. E/ESCAP/256.

Technical co-operation

The total value of the regional technical co-operation programmes administered by ESCAP grew in 1981 to $30.5 million. Some $21 million of this amount came from extrabudgetary contributions by countries and organizations, including contributions for regional training and research institutions and the Interim Committee for Co-ordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin (p. 644). UNDP provided $5.2 million.

Thirteen regional advisers and experts undertook 43 missions providing technical and advisory services to the developing countries of the region, devoting primary attention to the needs of the least developed, land-locked and developing island countries. The United Nations Development Advisory Team for the South Pacific, financed mainly by ESCAP donor countries and UNDP and partly by the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation, enlarged its programme of short-term consultancies and arranged 37 outside consultancy projects.

Regional projects financed by UNDP dealt with manpower training and development, agricultural machinery, industrial development, trade, natural resources, energy, public administration, finance, remote sensing, statistics, maritime transport, and assistance to the Asian and Pacific Development Centre (p. 636). The United Nations Fund for Population Activities provided institutional support and information services to the ESCAP secretariat, and financed advisory services (p. 646).

International trade and finance

With a view to updating the 1975 Bangkok Agreement (First Agreement on Trade Negotiations among Developing Member Countries of ESCAP),<sup>(4)</sup> the Standing Committee of the Agreement (Bangkok: tenth session, May; eleventh session, December) finalized the modalities and guidelines for the second round of negotiations among members of the Agreement with a view to expanding its membership and enlarging the list of products enjoying preferential treatment, and decided that the second round would be held in 1982.

In the area of trade promotion, regional seminars combined with study tours focused on the two largest centrally planned economies, examining the foreign trade of the USSR (Moscow and Leningrad, September) and trade promotion techniques and institutions in China (Beijing, Tianjin, Nanjing and Guangzhou, October/November). Consultants or trainers on trade promotion were sent to six developing countries in the region. ESCAP drafted the Articles of Association and a technical co-operation project for the new Handicraft Promotion and Development Association, an institution of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN).

Several national and regional seminars on technical aspects of trade and market information were organized, including a workshop on trade information services for participants from the least developed countries of the region (Kathmandu, Nepal, December). The ESCAP Trade Information Service began in July the issuance of quarterly information on prices of selected products in Asia and the Pacific.<sup>(1)</sup>

ESCAP and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development organized seminars on the generalized system of preferences for exports of developing countries (Bangkok, January) and on anti-fraud and anti-smuggling measures (Bangkok, 22-27 April); the latter adopted a set of arrangements for mutual administrative assistance and co-operation among customs administrations.<sup>(3)</sup> A workshop was held for trainers in export and import techniques for ASEAN countries, organized by ESCAP with the co-operation of the Canadian International Development Agency and the Foundation for International Training for Third World Countries (Bangkok, March/April).

Seminars were also held on facilitation measures for movement of goods in international trade (Bangkok, 19-25 November) and on long-term contracts (Bangkok, 9-11 December). The recommendations of the seminar on facilitation were endorsed in November by the ESCAP Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications (p. 640), which recommended the convening of similar seminars in the future, particularly at the country level. A Regional Consultation on consumer protection (Bangkok, 2-8 June)<sup>(2)</sup> made recommendations for action in this area (p 557) . .

Four bodies of the ESCAP Trade Co-operation Group were active during the year. The Subgroup for Monetary and Credit Co-operation (second session, Bangkok, 2-3 November) recommended action to enlarge the membership of the Asian Clearing Union and the Asian Reinsurance Corporation, and sought Governments' views on the idea of setting up refinancing facilities for deferred-payment exports by developing countries on soft terms. The Subgroup for Long-term Contracts (fourth session, Bangkok, 4-5 November) suggested that the secretariat prepare guidelines, and possibly standard clauses, to help persons negotiating such contracts. The Subgroup for Encouragement and Liberalization of Trade within the Region (third session, Bangkok, 6-9 November) recommended further work by the secretariat to establish or update lists of trade barriers. A fourth Subgroup dealt with commodities (see below).

Commodities

An Intergovernmental Working Group Meeting of Tapioca Producing/Exporting Countries (Bangkok, 2-4 September 1981) approved a programme of co-operative activities recommended in an ESCAP study and requested the secretariat to convene an intergovernmental consultative committee of tapioca-producing countries of the ESCAP region as soon as at least three Governments confirmed their willingness to participate.<sup>(1)</sup> An Intergovernmental Meeting of Tropical Timber-producing Countries (Bangkok, June) agreed that, subject to government concurrence, a regional co-operative arrangement should be established to seek price stability and effective marketing arrangements for wood and wood products, and optimum utilization and development of timber. Co-operative activities-including studies, meetings and technical assistance -were agreed upon by a Government Consultation among Jute-producing Countries (Bangkok, 18-21 August).

The Subgroup for Commodities (fourth session, Bali, Indonesia, 21-24 September) of the ESCAP Trade Co-operation Group supported the work towards regional co-operative arrangements for jute, tapioca and tropical timber; authorized meetings in 1982 on arrangements for shrimp and other marine products and for silk; and recommended measures to assist existing associations for coconuts, natural rubber and pepper.

ESCAP co-operated with the International Pepper Community (IPC) in organizing two meetings of specialists, on a socio-economic study on production and productivity of pepper holdings in IPC member countries (second session, Jakarta, Indonesia, April) and on determination of remunerative price levels of pepper products (second session, Jakarta, August).

Transport and tourism

The Transport, Communications and Tourism Wing of the ESCAP Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications (fifth session, Bangkok, 24-30 November 1981) proposed that the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) be proclaimed "Transport Decade for Asia and the Pacific". It also made recommendations on the facilitation of international trade (p. 639), railway and road transport (see below), and tourism (p. 641). <sup>(1)</sup>

A regional transportation course was organized (Dacca, Bangladesh, February-April) to improve the skills of senior officers responsible for planning, appraising and supervising the execution and operation of national transport projects. A workshop on research towards a methodology for defining the transport needs of isolated communities (Bangkok, June) developed a simple methodology based on research and emphasizing people's participation.

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>ESCAP Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications, E/ESCAP/263 & Corr.1.

Railway transport

Missions of railway experts were sent by the ESCAP secretariat in 1981 to examine modernization of signalling and telecommunication in Malaysia and Thailand; missions also proposed upgrading of the Pakistan Regional Railway Training Centre and other needs in Bangladesh, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Singapore. A seminar and study tour to China on new railway construction, including tunnelling, bridging and operations (18 May-7 June), enabled railway engineers of the region to acquaint themselves with the technology in use on Chinese railways. <sup>(2)</sup> The secretariat initiated a programme of roving training courses for railway personnel with a course on signalling and telecommunication in the State Railway of Thailand and Bangladesh Railways (September).

A Working Group of Experts to Study the Establishment of an Asian Railway Union (Bangkok, 20-27 April) heard views favouring and opposing such a union, and recommended that the ESCAP secretariat set up a project or unit to promote co-operation among the region's railways. <sup>(3)</sup> This recommendation was endorsed in November by the Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications, which also requested the secretariat to convene as soon as possible a meeting of railway ministers. In addition, the Committee asked the secretariat to pursue recommendations made by the Conference of Top Railway Executives of Asia and the Middle East (sixth session, New Delhi, India, 14-23 October), <sup>(1)</sup> including the possible establishment of a regional management development institute for railway personnel.

The secretariat issued in October its first review of the region's railways. <sup>(4)</sup>

Review: <sup>(4)</sup>E/ESCAP/STC.5/13.

Road transport

An Intergovernmental Meeting of Highway Experts (Bangkok, 3-9 February 1981) made recommendations relating to energy-saving measures in transport, the economic advantages of road maintenance, environmental aspects of roads and road transport, rural road planning and construction, and the organization of seminars, study tours and training programmes. <sup>(1)</sup> Its recommendations that the ESCAP secretariat begin preparing for a meeting of road transport ministers and that the Meeting of Highway Experts be reconvened every two years were endorsed in November by the Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications.

A regional consultative meeting (Bangkok, June) finalized two manuals drafted by the ESCAP secretariat on rural road construction and maintenance.

Water transport

Under its shippers' co-operation project, the ESCAP secretariat organized regional workshops in 1981 on cargo consolidation (Calcutta, India, January), calculation of ocean costs (Madras, India, January), and the economic, operational and legal implications for shippers of containerization and unit loads (Bangkok, October); and country-level workshops on planning of shipping services (Jakarta, Indonesia, May/June) and economic and operational decision-making (Shanghai, China, October). Another workshop, for shipowners (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, December), discussed the implementation of the 1974 United Nations Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences.<sup>(3)</sup>

Meetings were convened at Bangkok for chief executives of national shippers' organizations (fifth session, 1-2 December), port authorities (second session, 1-2 December), customs authorities (first session, 2 December) and national shipowners' associations (fourth session, 2 December). A joint meeting of all four groups (first session, Bangkok, 3 December) requested the ESCAP secretariat to continue assisting countries in simplifying procedures and documentation for cargo movements and to develop the concept of joint planning of shipping services, and decided to create joint study groups of shippers and shipowners to deal with two topics: shippers' contracts, and the economic implications of currency adjustment and bunker adjustment factors in charges for shipping services.

A meeting of legal experts on a model maritime code for the ESCAP region (first session, Bangkok, May) decided that guidelines should be prepared for the drafting of a code and laid down the scope, technique and procedure for their preparation.

A seminar on coastal (domestic) shipping (Bangkok, 19-22 May) requested the ESCAP secretariat to organize a follow-up seminar and study tour on coastal shipping in Japan. A Seminar/Study Tour on Inland Ports and Waterways (China, 30 August-17 September) recommended that studies be conducted and meetings organized on various inland water transport topics, particularly ferro-cement technology, towing methods and aids to navigation systems. A Seminar on Port Containerization (Tianjin, China, 6-14 October) was aimed at assisting China to overcome problems by upgrading management personnel.<sup>(1)</sup>

A mission to survey seafarers' training facilities visited China early in 1981. A study of the factory ship concept in Papua New Guinea, as a possible supplement to conventional crushing of copra in the South Pacific, commenced in November.

Yearbook reference: <sup>(3)</sup>1974, p. 460.

Tourism

In November 1981, the Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications, emphasizing that the secretariat should increase its assistance to ESCAP countries in tourism development, asked it to focus more attention on domestic tourism, carry on training of personnel and help countries develop a special mechanism for promoting international rail travel.

The ESCAP secretariat co-operated with the Tourism Authority of Thailand and the Automobile Association of Singapore in organizing the Asian Highway Auto Venture, 1981, between Singapore and Bangkok. The aim was to promote international road transport through the Asian Highway, the use of ESCAP Asian Highway guidemaps, facilitation of frontier formalities and the development of international tourism. A study was issued on the impacts of tourism on the social and physical environment, analysing regional peculiarities and recommending ways of minimizing the undesirable effects of tourism.<sup>(1)</sup>

Industry, technology,
human settlements and environment

The ESCAP Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment (fifth session, Bangkok, 1-7 September 1981) reviewed ESCAP activities in each of these areas and recommended some new directions.<sup>(1)</sup>

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>ESCAP Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and Environment, E/ESCAP/240.

Industrial development

The Ad Hoc Group of Ministers of Industry (second meeting, Bangkok, July 1981) proposed a programme of ESCAP secretariat activities and drew attention to the need to strengthen national manufacturing capabilities.<sup>(2)</sup> In September, the Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment recommended that the secretariat try to have the programme implemented.

A Regional Consultative Forum on the Vegetable Oils and Fats Industry (first session, Jakarta, Indonesia, 23-27 March), organized by ESCAP and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), made proposals for integrated development schemes with the participation of smallholders, dissemination of information on such schemes, and assistance to the least developed countries through a survey on better utilization of existing oil-seeds and non-traditional oil-bearing materials.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Technical Advisory Committee of the Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery (fifth session, Los Baños, Philippines, July; sixth session, Manila, Philippines, November) approved a 1982-1984 work programme for the Network, including: establishment and strengthening of national networks; strengthening design capabilities; testing, evaluation and modification of prototypes; promotion of local manufacturing; popularization of improved implements and machinery; and information dissemination. The Network's Governing Body (fourth session, Manila, November) approved this programme and the accompanying budget, and endorsed the Committee's recommendation that donor countries should substantially increase their contributions and that potential new donors should be approached. Among the Network's continuing activities was the testing, evaluation and modification of a Chinese reaper and the International Rice Research Institute's manual rice transplanter.

A seminar on the development of project generation capabilities and consultancy services (Jakarta, November) made recommendations for the strengthening of national manufacturing capabilities and endorsed an ESCAP/UNIDO proposal for a regional industrial consultancy network. A seminar on development of the electronics industry in Thailand and in ESCAP countries urged the Commission to take the lead in increasing technical co-operation among developing countries in this area through workshops, visit programmes, fellowships and training courses. An industrial survey of the South Pacific was launched by ESCAP, the Asian Development Bank and the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Co-operation.

Science and technology

National seminars on patent information (Bangkok and Chiang Mai, Thailand, January 1981) were organized by the World Intellectual Property Organization, ESCAP and its Regional Centre for Technology Transfer. In September, the Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment recommended that the Centre concentrate on the evaluation, acquisition and absorption of foreign technologies and development of indigenous technologies, and provide advisory services to help countries set up institutions for technology development and to improve their technological capability, including their contract negotiating capacity.

A meeting of senior officials (Bangkok, February)<sup>(1)</sup> preparatory to an ESCAP meeting of ministers of science and technology suggested that a regional task force of representatives of United Nations bodies be established to assist in preparations for the high-level meeting. However, no decision on dates was taken by ESCAP in 1981.

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Meeting preparatory to meeting of ministers of science and technology, IHT/PRE-MMST/1.

Environment

The ESCAP secretariat, in co-operation with the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Cooperation, completed in 1981 a comparative study of environmental legislation in the South Pacific. With assistance from France, a study tour was conducted on remote sensing for monitoring the marine environment, and missions on the subject were sent to Bangladesh, Malaysia, Pakistan, Singapore and Thailand. A Working Group Meeting on Environmental Management in Mineral Resources Development took place under the natural resources programme (p. 643).

A regional technical workshop (Jodhpur, India, 20-23 October) to consider the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, adopted in 1977 by the United Nations Conference on Desertification,<sup>(1)</sup> recommended research, monitoring, training, and information collection and dissemination to speed progress towards the goals set by the Plan.

Human settlements

In September 1981, the Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment recommended that the ESCAP secretariat should be involved with the preparation of a feasibility report on the establishment of an Asian human settlements bank, under study by the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (p. 856).

A roving seminar on rural centre planning in Asia and the Pacific visited China, Fiji and the Republic of Korea (August/September). An expert group meeting (Bangkok, November) reviewed a draft outline prepared by the ESCAP secretariat for use by national officials as a framework in the preparation of country monographs for a survey of the human settlements situation in the region.

Transnational corporations

An Expert Group Meeting on Transnational Corporations (TNCs) in Primary Commodity Export Industries (Pattaya, Thailand, 19-21 February 1981) examined studies on tea in Bangladesh, copper in south-east Asia, forestry in Indonesia and bananas in the Philippines, as part of an interregional project with the United Nations commissions for Africa and Latin America.<sup>(1)</sup> The second phase of this programme began with the preparation of further case studies by the Joint Unit of ESCAP and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations (p. 603).

Also organized, during the year with the Joint Unit's participation were a round-table meeting on information and technical co-operation needs on matters relating to TNCs (Bangkok, May), and workshops on negotiations with TNCs (Singapore, October) and on regulating and negotiating with TNCs in the countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (Bangkok, November).

The ESCAP Committee on Development Planning (p. 637) reviewed the Joint Unit's work programme in March and stressed the importance of helping to increase the negotiating capacity of developing countries on whose territory TNCs operated.

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Expert Group Meeting on TNCs in Primary Commodity Export Industries, CTD/ESCAP/PCEI/15.

Natural resources

The ESCAP Committee on Natural Resources (eighth session, Bangkok, 27 October-2 November 1981) made a number of recommendations on mineral (see below) and energy resources (p. 645).<sup>(1)</sup>

Publication: <sup>(1)</sup>Proceedings of the Committee on Natural Resources, Eighth Session, and Of the Regional Expert Group Meeting on the Follow-up of the Nairobi Programme of Action- on New and 'Renewable Sources Of Energy (ST/ESCAP/219), Sales No. E.83.II.F.8.

Mineral resources

At two 1981 meetings on co-ordination in ESCAP mineral programmes (Bangkok: eighth session, March; ninth session, October), current and future secretariat programmes and related regional projects were considered, and activities of mutual interest were defined.

A map of the sedimentary basins of the ESCAP region, on the scale of 1: 10,000,000, was completed and published in 1981. Work proceeded on an oil and natural gas map (p. 645).

The Working Group Meeting on Environmental Management in Mineral Resources Development (Phuket, Thailand, 14-19 June) recommended national action and increased ESCAP activities to ensure that environmental considerations were taken into account in exploration, mining, processing, smelting and conversion into final products.<sup>(1)</sup> Its recommendations for international action were endorsed by the ESCAP Committee on Natural Resources in November.

After observing newly developed methods and techniques for mineral resources exploration, participants in a Seminar/Study Tour on Drilling, Sampling and Borehole Logging (Donetsk, USSR, 16-26 September) recommended that further seminars be held on prospecting, exploration and evaluation of mineral ore, oil and natural gas deposits.<sup>(5)</sup> The recommendations on topics for future seminars were endorsed in November by the Committee on Natural Resources. The Committee also suggested that the secretariat establish a clearing-house for information on energy planning, pricing, demand management and modelling.

The Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in Asian Offshore Areas (CCOP) (eighteenth session, Seoul, Republic of Korea, 21 September-2 October) reviewed activities carried out under its auspices in the fields of petroleum resources, tin and other heavy detrital minerals, Quaternary geology, geological maps, the marine environment, training of personnel and publications.<sup>(2)</sup> The CCOP Technical Advisory Group (seventeenth session) and Northwest Quadrant Panel of the Circum-Pacific Map Project (seventh meeting) also met during the CCOP session.

The Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in South Pacific Offshore Areas (CCOP/SOPAC) (tenth session, Port Vila, Vanuatu, 6-13 October) approved a 1981-1982 work programme, including offshore cruises and other prospecting projects in the Cook Islands, Fiji, Kiribati, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tonga and Vanuatu, and decided to establish a working group to foster and implement research on science, tectonics and resources.

The Regional Mineral Resources Development Centre expanded its activities, sending advisory missions, issuing technical reports, and organizing a workshop on geoscience information with emphasis on practical applications (Bandung, Indonesia, May) and a symposium on tungsten geology (jiangxi Province, China, October). Field-work began in May on an experimental geochemical programme in Indonesia, involving the collection and analysis of samples. These activities were reviewed by the Centre's Governing Council (fourth session, Bandung, 12-16 November).<sup>(4)</sup>

Water resources

After reviewing case studies by the ESCAP secretariat of irrigation projects in Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand,<sup>(3)</sup> an Expert Group Meeting on Measures to Improve the Performance of Irrigation Projects (Bangkok, 26 May-2 June 1981) made recommendations on engineering, management, agricultural, socio-economic and institutional factors affecting the efficiency of irrigation projects.<sup>(1)</sup> Participants in a Group Study Visit to China on Methods of Watershed Management for Flood Loss

Prevention and Management (September) recommended measures which Governments could take in this area.<sup>(2)</sup> A roving seminar on ground-water development and management (Philippines, Republic of Korea and Thailand, July/August) trained some 90 specialists in field practices and analytical techniques.

An inter-agency task force on water for Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok: seventh session, June; eighth session, November) considered likely areas for co-operation among its members on water resources development.

Mekong river basin development

The Interim Committee for Co-ordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin (tenth session, Bangkok, 13-18 January; eleventh session, Bangkok, 10-21 March; twelfth session, Vientiane, Lao People's Democratic Republic, 9-13 September) adopted a 1981 work programme listing 107 activities to be carried out by the Mekong secretariat, funded largely by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

Pre-investment work done during the year under the Committee's auspices, as described in its annual report,<sup>(1)</sup> included: completion of the third phase of studies on the Nam Pong environmental management research project (Thailand) and formulation of a simulation model for the Nam Pong system; updating of cost estimates for the Pa Mong dam project (Lao People's Democratic Republic-Thailand), together with a review of previous ideas regarding ownership, management and financing; and conduct of additional studies of hydropower potential at Khone Falls (Lao People's Democratic Republic-Kampuchea) and Stung Treng (Kampuchea). Investment work in 1981 included the installation of electric pumps for the Mekong pump irrigation project, where 19 pumps were in operation during the 1980/1981 dry season; and the start of operations on a flood-protection and swamp-reclamation project on the Vientiane Plain, where a swamp-reclamation study was also initiated.

Additional contributions (including pledges) for projects in the Committee's work programme totalled $47 million in 1981, raising to $475 million the total resources contributed to the programme from its inception to 31 December 1981.

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Committee on Mekong basin, E/ESCAP/275.

Tropical storms

The Panel on Tropical Cyclones (Colombo, Sri Lanka, February 1981), convened by ESCAP and the World Meteorological Organization, decided to implement in 1982 a regional cyclone operational plan, starting with the issuance of tropical cyclone weather statements and warnings by the Regional Meteorological Centre at New Delhi, India, and improved information exchange between the Centre and national meteorological services.

A pre-experimental phase of the Typhoon Operational Experiment, involving the first attempt to conduct an operational experiment on a tropical cyclone in real time, was carried out from 29 July to 18 August. The Typhoon Committee (fourteenth session, Manila, Philippines, 10-16 November) discussed plans for the main experiment, to be held in 1982 with support from UNDP and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).<sup>(1)</sup>

Energy

An ESCAP secretariat study on short-term policy aspects of the energy situation,<sup>(5)</sup> issued in February 1981, concluded that the developing countries of Asia and the Pacific would have to design their development strategies for the short-to-medium term on the premise that their dependence on petroleum products for the bulk of their commercial energy needs would not significantly decline. Accordingly, faced with prospects of steadily increasing oil prices, they would have to adopt policies ensuring the most efficient use of energy, as well as accelerate the development of indigenous energy sources and substitutes for imported petroleum.

A draft of the study was examined by a High-level Expert Group Meeting on Short-term Economic Policy Aspects of the Energy Situation in the ESCAP Region (Bangkok, 16 and 17 January), which identified major issues requiring further attention and suggested areas for follow-up work.<sup>(3)</sup> The completed study was discussed in March by the ESCAP Committee on Development Planning (p. 637), which stressed the need for rapid development of the region's indigenous energy sources so as to reduce dependence on imported energy supplies.

Energy was the main theme for the March session of ESCAP, which endorsed the recommendations for greater energy efficiency and substitution, and concluded that the energy transition would necessitate substantial investments, beyond the capacity of the region's developing countries. Accordingly, ESCAP stated in its report,<sup>(2)</sup> much larger capital flows and technical assistance would be needed. ESCAP should serve as the regional focal point for work on energy, promoting and co-ordinating new initiatives, collecting and analysing data, conducting research and selectively providing technical assistance, particularly to smaller countries. In November, the Committee on Natural Resources suggested that the secretariat establish a clearing-house for information on energy planning, pricing, demand management and modelling.

With regard to specific fuels, an Expert Group Meeting on Fuelwood and Charcoal (Bangkok, 5-11 May), organized by ESCAP, UNEP and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), made 35 recommendations for checking the accelerated diminution of fuelwood supplies.<sup>(1)</sup> The Expert Working Group Meeting on the Third Edition of the Oil and Natural Gas Map of Asia (Bangkok, 12-14 May)<sup>(4)</sup> revised the map's legend, which was thereafter sent to countries with a request to start preparing their sections.

During the year, the ESCAP secretariat defined a number of new projects and helped finalize project documents of the regional and Pacific energy development programmes aided by UNDP. Features of the preparatory assistance phase of the Pacific programme included strong local involvement through the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Co-operation, financing of capital equipment by the European Economic Community, and UNDP financing of technical, managerial and energy planning components.

Food and agriculture

The Regional Co-ordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops (CGPRT) was established at Bogor, Indonesia, and began to operate with effect from 29 April 1981, initially at ESCAP headquarters. A work programme for the Centre was endorsed by an Expert Group Meeting on CGPRT (Bangkok, 6-9 October), which recommended more emphasis on research aimed at strengthening national capabilities.<sup>(3)</sup> A Seminar on the Development of CGPRT (Krasnodar, USSR, 29 July-11 August) examined the advanced technology of cultivation, harvesting, marketing and processing of these crops, and made several recommendations, including one for the establishment of an ESCAP gene bank to provide germplasm to breeders.<sup>(4)</sup>

Local-level planning of agricultural development was the subject of a national workshop in Nepal (Kathmandu, February), the last of five on this topic in different countries of the region. Study tours were held to plan small-farmer pilot development projects for Thailand (April) and to observe farmers' group marketing in China (November). Small-farmer group marketing in Asia was examined at a regional round-up workshop (Bangkok, November). Under the agricultural information development scheme, financially supported by Japan, experts were sent to help Bangladesh, the Philippines and Solomon Islands to organize workshops for farm radio-programme producers.

In March, ESCAP endorsed a report by an Ad Hoc Advisory Group Meeting on a Special Study on Food Supply in the ESCAP Region (Bangkok, January) which recommended major policy areas for coverage in the study, to be completed in 1982.

As part of the Agricultural Requisites Scheme for Asia and the Pacific (ARSAP), funded and technically supported by the Netherlands, the fourth in a series of training workshops for instructors of agro-pesticides retailers (Dacca, Bangladesh, 5-17 February) produced teaching materials in local languages. The ARSAP/2 Agro-pesticides Regional Consultative and Evaluation Meeting (Bangkok, 30 November-3 December) recommended continuation of the training programme on safety and efficiency in the use of pesticides by farmers, as well as continued collection and analysis of data by the secretariat.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Fertilizer Advisory, Development and Information Network for Asia and the Pacific (FADINAP)-a joint project of ESCAP, FAO and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization- continued disseminating information through periodicals, and organized study tours to Malaysia to observe the operation of small-scale fertilizer mixing plants (June), to the Republic of Korea to observe the role of co-operatives in fertilizer promotion (September) and to the Philippines on the role of dealers in fertilizer promotion (September). A symposium on fertilizer marketing and adoption in South Asia (Bangkok, June), organized by ESCAP and the East-West Centre, was followed by a regional training course on fertilizer marketing (Bangkok, October). The FADINAP Technical Liaison Officers' Consultative Meeting (Bangkok, 31 August-2 September) discussed arrangements for the Network's activities.<sup>(2)</sup>

The role of women in food production was discussed at two meetings: a survey planning meeting on improving the socio-economic conditions of women in fisheries (Manila, Philippines, 22-25 September) and a workshop on women's participation in paddy production and processing (Kota Bahru, Malaysia, 21-28 October).

The Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery, established under ESCAP auspices, continued its activities (p. 641).

Social development

A workshop on legal approaches to social problems of low-income urban groups (Bangkok, February 1981) developed a conceptual framework for dealing with problems of the poor. Two subsequent workshops examined that framework in terms of people's participation in relation to law and social change (Penang, Malaysia, June; Baguio, Philippines, November).

On 19 March, ESCAP requested its secretariat to continue work on the role of the co-operative movement in the social and economic development of Asian and Pacific developing countries, taking full account of the need to assist efforts to promote co-operatives, especially in rural areas.<sup>(2)</sup>

The Inter-agency Meeting on Social Development (thirteenth session, Bangkok, 21 May) considered ways of improving collaboration among organizations of the United Nations system in matters concerning youth (p. 647) and women (see below) in the ESCAP region.<sup>(1)</sup>

Publication: Social Development Newsletter (3 issues yearly).

Population

An ESCAP regional seminar on evaluation of schemes and strategies for integrated family planning programmes with special reference to increased involvement of local institutions (Bangkok, June 1981) made recommendations on conceptual issues, strategies, policy and evaluation. A study on the impact of family planning programmes on fertility was completed in Indonesia and Sri Lanka, and major findings of the various country studies on this topic were disseminated to Governments.

The ESCAP secretariat, in collaboration with the South Pacific Commission (SPC), convened a seminar on population problems of small island countries of the ESCAP/SPC region, which made recommendations on collection and analysis of demographic data and country and intercountry studies.

Country reports and manuals were completed or under preparation as part of a continuing comparative study on migration, urbanization and development. A technical working group on migration and urbanization (Bangkok, December) discussed methods and techniques for analysing survey data. Another working group considered data bases for measurement of levels, trends and differentials in mortality (Bangkok, October).

The United Nations Fund for Population Activities continued to finance ESCAP regional advisory services, training of personnel and other activities in demography and population statistics, as well as studies and monographs. It funded 15 fellowships awarded by the ESCAP secretariat for training at the International Institute for Population Studies, Bombay, India.

The Preparatory Committee for the Third Asian and Pacific Population Conference (second session, Bangkok, August) agreed on the purposes of the 1982 Conference.

Publications: ADOPT (Asian and world-wide documents on population topics), vol. 3, Nos. 1-12 (monthly); Asian-Pacific Population Programme News, vol. 10, Nos. 1/2, 3 & special (1980/1981) issue.

Human resources

On 19 March 1981, ESCAP requested its Executive Secretary, while intensifying activities for the training of national personnel, to pay special attention to the Commission's priority areas and the needs of developing countries; it recommended that the Asian and Pacific Development Centre (p. 636) provide for intensified training of personnel, particularly from the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries.<sup>(1)</sup>

Women

An Ad Hoc Inter-agency Meeting on Women in Development (Bangkok, February 1981) identified areas for joint action and mechanisms for effecting co-operation.<sup>(1)</sup> In order to strengthen its activities for promoting the integration of women in development, ESCAP asked its Executive Secretary on 19 March 1981 to request a transfer to the ESCAP secretariat by 1982 of a senior post from within the United Nations regular budget, to redeploy such a post within the secretariat pending approval of that request, and to seek additional resources, such as extrabudgetary funding, for programmes and projects in this field.<sup>(2)</sup>

ESCAP joined with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in organizing a workshop of national co-ordinators for promotion and training of rural women in income-generating activities (Suva, Fiji, 30 March-4 April), and with the International Council on Social Welfare in a training workshop on management of economic activities of women (Bombay, India, September). Two national workshops were held in October on the promotion of income-generating activities for rural women (Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea; Port Vila, Vanuatu). Other meetings dealt with women's role in food production (p. 645).

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Inter-agency Meeting on Women in Development, SD/IMWD/4.

Youth and aging persons

Youth

Activities by ESCAP in 1981 to promote the role of youth in development included a national leadership training workshop for youth leaders and workers in Bangladesh (January/February), a workshop on youth and social development in Asia (Hong Kong, August/September), and a seminar and training workshop on policies and programmes for mobilization of youth in national development in the Pacific (Suva, November). The Suva meeting evaluated national youth policies and suggested mechanisms for maximizing youth development efforts. The first edition of the Youth Development Newsletter was published in August.

Aging persons

The Regional Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting for the World Assembly on Aging (Manila, Philippines, October 1981)<sup>(1)</sup> adopted a regional programme of action on aging, to serve as the basis for ESCAP activities and as the region's input into the global plan of action to be adopted at the 1982 Assembly (p. 1024). The draft programme was considered by a Technical Meeting on Aging for the Asian and Pacific Region (Bangkok, 27-30 January),<sup>(2)</sup> which also examined a regional survey of the aging submitted by the secretariat.<sup>(3)</sup>

Statistics

An Asian Workshop on Environment Statistics (Pattaya, Thailand, 10-16 February 1981), organized by ESCAP and the United Nations Statistical Office, recommended that ESCAP act as a clearing-house for environmental statistics and discussed plans for pilot studies in selected countries.<sup>(4)</sup> At a Regional Workshop on the CONCOR Computer Software Package for Census Edit (Bangkok, May), participants reviewed the use of this computer language for programming the input and editing of census and survey data.<sup>(3)</sup> A workshop was organized for Pakistani officials on the collection and compilation of economic statistics of shipping (Karachi, Pakistan, June). Recommendations for promoting the development of labour productivity statistics were made at another seminar (Moscow, 19-28 August).<sup>(2)</sup> An industrial census training workshop (Suzhou, China, 16 November-11 December), preparatory to the 1983 World Programme of Industrial Statistics (p. 1068), discussed all aspects of planning and organizing industrial censuses, considered a minimum programme suitable for small countries, and discussed the organization of surveys to cover cottage industries.

The ESCAP secretariat promoted the participation of Asian and Pacific countries in the National Household Survey Capability Programme (p. 1072) by helping to prepare a project proposal for the Republic of Korea and to revise a proposal for Thailand, participating in a review of Sri Lanka's programme, assisting Fiji with a household survey and drawing up a proposal for training courses in India. Regional advisory services in national accounts, household surveys, population censuses, civil registration and vital statistics were maintained through the financial support of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the International Labour Organisation.

The statistical activities of ESCAP-including work on government information systems (p. 637)-were reviewed by its Committee on Statistics (fourth session, Bangkok, 9-15 June).<sup>(1)</sup> One of its conclusions was that there was a great need to improve the methodology and compilation of price statistics, given the rapid inflation of recent years.

The ESCAP-associated Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific completed its eleventh general course in March and began its twelfth in October. Seven specialized courses were also given during the year and two workshops were organized.

Organizational questions concerning ESCAP

On 20 March 1981, ESCAP made a number of recommendations on its role in the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system (p. 607).

Admission of Guam as an associate member

After being informed by the United States that its Territory of Guam had requested admission as an associate member, ESCAP, on 10 March 1981, approved the request and recommended that the Economic and Social Council make the consequential changes in the ESCAP terms of reference. The Council acted accordingly on 24 July (p. 608).

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) held its thirty-sixth session at its Geneva headquarters from 30 March to 8 April 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> During the session, members examined the main economic problems facing Europe and North America, reviewed the performance of ECE and approved plans for its future work.

On 8 April, ECE adopted a resolution on its work and future activities.<sup>(2)</sup> Calling on its members to continue taking full advantage of its potential as an instrument for strengthening economic relations and multilateral co-operation, it reaffirmed their determination to work towards multilateral implementation of the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki (Finland) Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, and requested its principal subsidiary bodies to take account of the pertinent provisions of that document and of the interests of economically developing European States. It reiterated its April 1980 suggestion<sup>(3)</sup> that Governments study a USSR proposal to hold all-European congresses on energy and transport.

All but one of the principal subsidiary bodies of ECE met during 1981. The Committee on the Development of Trade (December) promoted various activities to expand intraregional, especially East-West, trade (p. 649). The Inland Transport Committee (January) placed new emphasis on transport policy and economics while continuing its efforts to co-ordinate inland water, rail and road transport (p. 650).

Concerning industry (p. 652), the Chemical Industry Committee (September), the Steel Committee (October) and the new Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation (February) approved work programmes that included studies on the efficient use of energy. The Committee on Water Problems (November) approved a pilot project on monitoring and evaluation of transboundary water pollution (p. 653). Regarding energy (p. 654), the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Energy (February and November) continued work on a major study of energy problems and co-operation in Europe, while the Coal Committee (September), the Committee on Electric Power (January) and the Committee on Gas (January) examined economic and technical problems in their fields.

Under the auspices of the Committee on Agricultural Problems (March), ECE published its first collected volume of quality standards for perishable produce (p. 655). The Timber Committee (October) convened a seminar in May on forest fire prevention and control (p. 656).

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology (June) organized a seminar in November on evaluation of research and development (p. 657). The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems (February) pursued work on low- and non-waste technology, while two other ECE-sponsored programmes dealt with transboundary air pollution (p. 657). The Committee on Housing, Building and Planning (September) oversaw work on ranging from housing forecasts to earthquake-resistant construction (p. 658). The Conference of European Statisticians (June) promoted the co-ordination of national statistical activities (p. 659).

The Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments did not hold a formal session in 1981 but convened an Ad Hoc Meeting on Long-term Economic Problems and Prospects (September) (P. 649). Five intercountry technical co-operation projects executed by ECE concerned inland waterways, roads, fuels, electric power and computers (p. 649).

Economic trends

The years 1980 and 1981 formed a period of near-stagnation for the western European economy, while economic activity in eastern Europe and the USSR was more buoyant in 1980 than in 1979 but still below the planned level, according to a summary of the Economic Survey of Europe in 1980<sup>(2)</sup> prepared by the ECE secretariat and noted by the Economic and Social Council on 24 July 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> The slowing down in western Europe's output had led to a 1.7 million increase in unemployed persons, while inflation had risen by an average of 11.4 per cent for 1980 and the trade deficit had increased because of worsened terms of trade caused by higher petroleum prices. Prospects for 1981 were described as bleak in western Europe and not particularly good in southern Europe. In eastern Europe, net material growth had risen by some 3 per cent, or 1.1 per cent without the USSR, and, while the trade surplus was estimated at $2 billion, the total current account deficit amounted to between $4.2 billion and $6 billion, due largely to debt payments to western Europe.

Development and regional economic and social policy

Economic projections and planning

On 8 April 1981, ECE requested the Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments to consider adopting a set of common assumptions and deciding on a set of common time horizons to guide ECE bodies in their work on economic projections.<sup>(1)</sup> It also invited its principal subsidiary bodies to co-operate with the Advisers in the identification of long-term economic trends and possibilities for the development of international co-operation,<sup>(2)</sup> and requested the secretariat to continue work on creation of an ECE data bank so that those bodies could have comparable data for their economic projections.

An Ad Hoc Meeting on Long-term Economic Problems and Prospects (Geneva, 21-23 September), convened by the Advisers, discussed secretariat summaries of economic prospects for 1980-1985, and studies of changes in economic trends in the 1970s and some long-term implications.<sup>(3)</sup> A Seminar on Recent Innovations in Economic Models including Methods for Planning Complex (Large-scale) Development Projects (Geneva, 27 April-1 May) discussed general economic planning models and models for development projects aimed at solving intersectoral or interregional problems.<sup>(4)</sup>

Co-operation among Mediterranean countries

On 8 April 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> ECE requested its Executive Secretary to continue to co-operate with the secretariats of the economic commissions for Western Asia and Africa and other United Nations bodies, and to pursue contacts with all Mediterranean countries not members of ECE on subjects within its competence of common interest to the Mediterranean countries. It recommended that its subsidiary bodies continue efforts to identify areas of interest for economic co-operation in the Mediterranean within the framework of ECE activities and its work programme.

Decision: <sup>(1)</sup>ECE (report, E/1981/53), F(XXXVI), 8 Apr.

Technical co-operation

Some $1 million was spent in 1981 on ECE technical co-operation activities, most of it provided by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Five UNDP-supported projects were being executed by ECE: preparation for a feasibility study on a navigable waterway between the Danube River and the Aegean Sea (p. 651), the Trans-European North-South Motorway (p. 652), research on the utilization of low-calorific-value coals and shales (p. 654), interconnection of electric power networks in the Balkans (p. 655) and statistical computing (p. 659).

International trade

In its resolution of 8 April 1981<sup>(11)</sup> on its work and future activities (p. 648), ECE recognized the importance of developing intraregional trade and the particular importance of ECE in respect of trade among countries having different economic and social systems; and invited European Governments to pay particular attention to trade obstacles, economic and commercial information, business contacts and facilities, industrial co-operation, small and medium-sized enterprises, and compensation transactions.

An Ad Hoc Meeting on Compensation Trade (Geneva, 9-30 November) analysed various forms of this trade on the basis of studies illustrating the growth in the importance and frequency of compensation transactions between European countries having different economic and social systems, but it reached no agreement on how ECE should deal with the topic.<sup>(8)</sup> An Ad Hoc Meeting to Discuss the Inventory of All Kinds of Obstacles to the Development of Trade (Geneva, 3-6 November) discussed proposals for keeping the existing ECE inventory current and for further work in this field.

The ECE Committee on the Development of Trade (thirtieth session, Geneva, 1-4 December) reviewed the trade situation in Europe, considered practical measures to remove obstacles to intra-regional trade and to promote and diversify trade, and discussed trade promotion through industrial co-operation, the development of market information and techniques, and the improvement of procedures and contract practices.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures (Geneva: thirteenth session, 26 and 27 March; fourteenth session, 24 and 25 September)<sup>(10)</sup> adopted a revised version of the basic international standard for the layout of trade documents, with terminology adapted to current data-processing vocabulary,<sup>(1)</sup> and a recommendation on facilitation measures related to international trade procedures.<sup>(2)</sup> Both texts were recommended by Group of Experts No. 2: Procedures and Documentation (Geneva: twenty-third session, 23 and 24 March; twenty-fourth session, 21 and 22 September).<sup>(7)</sup> The Working Party also adopted texts produced by its Group of Experts No. 1: Data Elements and Automatic Data Interchange (Geneva: twenty-third session, 24 and 25 March; twenty-fourth session, 22 and 23 September),<sup>(6)</sup> including a recommendation on numerical codes to be used in reporting statistics on modes of transport for merchandise in international trade.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Group of Experts on International Contract Practices in Industry (Geneva: eighteenth session, 13-15 July; nineteenth session, 9-11 December) approved a first draft of a guide for drawing up international contracts on consulting engineering, including related aspects of technical assistance.<sup>(5)</sup>

Inland transport

The ECE Inland Transport Committee (forty-first session, Geneva, 26-30 January 1981) decided to place new emphasis on transport policy and financing by establishing standing groups of experts on these subjects in place of ad hoc meetings.<sup>(3)</sup> The Group of Experts on Transport Trends and Policy (first session, Geneva, 8-10 July) proposed a revised work programme for the Committee.<sup>(9)</sup> The Group of Experts on Transport Economics (first session, Geneva, 19-21 October) began work on a report on energy consumption in transport, including specifics on rail, road and inland water transport, and discussed the distribution between countries of the benefits of new transport infrastructures used also by international traffic.<sup>(8)</sup>

The Group of Experts on Customs Questions Affecting Transport (forty-third to forty-fifth sessions, Geneva, 23-27 February, 29 June--3 July, 19-23 October) completed a review of a draft international convention on harmonization of frontier controls of goods, leaving several questions to be resolved in 1982; approved a draft resolution recommending the establishment of links between national customs transit systems; and discussed further ways of harmonizing and simplifying road transport documents.<sup>(5)</sup> The Administrative Committee for the TIR Convention 1975 (fourth session, Geneva, 22 and 23 October)<sup>(2)</sup> adopted two technical amendments to the Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets—a treaty governing permits for the transport of merchandise by motor vehicles between customs ports without customs inspection (transport international routier).<sup>(11)</sup>

The Group of Experts on Combined Transport (third session, Geneva, 15-19 June) approved a draft resolution intended to facilitate combined road/rail transport by piggyback.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Group of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (thirty-third session, Geneva, 19-22 May) considered the development and revision of international regulations, including the introduction of special training for drivers of vehicles carrying dangerous goods.<sup>(6)</sup> A number of technical amendments to the European Agreement concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road and the corresponding provisions of the International Regulations concerning the Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Rail (RID) were approved by joint meetings of the RID Safety Committee (a body of the Central Office for International Railway Transport) and the ECE Group of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (Geneva, 16-27 March, Berne, Switzerland, 21 September-2 October).<sup>(10)</sup>

The Group of Experts on the Transport of Perishable Foodstuffs (thirty-sixth session, Geneva, 12-15 October) continued work on the application of and amendments to the Agreement on the International Carriage of Perishable Foodstuffs and on the Special Equipment to be Used for Such Carriage.<sup>(7)</sup>

On 8 April ECE, noting that a general introduction and harmonization of summer time in Europe would eliminate difficulties involving international transport, requested Governments and organizations to comment on a unified date for the introduction of summer time, invited the Inland Transport Committee to consider harmonization and the possibilities of unifying dates, and invited the ECE Executive Secretary, in conjunction with ECE bodies, to make proposals and to report in 1982.<sup>(1)</sup> In November, the Working Party on Rail Transport (see below) proposed that Governments be asked to continue trying to unify the application of summer time and to refrain from unilateral changes without informing other Governments well in advance.

Inland water transport

The Working Party on Inland Water Transport (twenty-fifth session, Geneva, 9-13 November 1981) approved the text of Recommendations on Technical Requirements for Inland Navigation Vessels, intended to harmonize national and subregional rules for the benefit of international trade, safety of navigation and the protection of human life.<sup>(1)</sup> The recommendations were drafted by the Group of Experts on Standardization of Technical Requirements for Vessels and of Ships' Papers (Geneva: seventeenth session, 4-8 May; eighteenth session, 31 August-4 September).<sup>(4)</sup>

The Group of Experts on the Standardization of Rules of the Road and Signs and Signals in Inland Navigation (Geneva: seventeenth session, 2-6 March; eighteenth session, 28 September-2 October) continued work on the harmonization of the two main European agreements on this topic.<sup>(3)</sup> The Group of Experts on River Law (sixth session, Geneva, 26-28 October) was unable to reach agreement on a draft convention on liability for damage caused by small craft.<sup>(2)</sup>

The Group of Rapporteurs for the Economic Study of the Danube-Oder (-Elbe) Connection (fifteenth session, Tallin, USSR, 30 March-3 April)<sup>(5)</sup> completed a multiyear study intended to serve as the basis for future co-operation between the riparian States in the planning, construction and operation of this waterway link between the Danube river basin countries and the nations of central and western Europe and Baltic and North Sea ports. <sup>(7)</sup> The Group of Rapporteurs on Economic Aspects of the Danube/

Aegean Sea Waterway Link (first session, Geneva, 13-15 April) commented on economic aspects of the proposal for a navigable waterway and considered goods traffic flows in the area, in connection with a project financed by the United Nations Development Programme intended to provide Greece and Yugoslavia with information on which to base a decision about whether to proceed with construction.<sup>(6)</sup>

Rail transport

The ECE Working Party on Rail Transport (thirty-fifth session, Geneva, 2-5 November 1981), in addition to its action on summer time (see above), agreed to undertake preparatory work for a European rail network, starting with a determination of internationally important railway lines, identification of their capacity, and a listing of bottle-necks and measures to eliminate them.<sup>(1)</sup>

Road transport

The ECE Working Party on Road Transport (sixty-ninth session, Geneva, 16-19 November 1981) agreed to examine the possibility of establishing a set of rules and recommended practices which could be incorporated into a future international agreement on the use of roads for international road transport.<sup>(1)</sup>

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>ECE Working Party on Road Transport, TRANS/SC1/307.

Motor vehicles. During 1981, the Group of Experts on Construction of Vehicles (sixty-third to sixty-fifth sessions, Geneva: 9-13 March, 22-26 June, 26-30 October) approved six new international regulations aimed at improving safety and limiting the harmful effects of motor vehicles on the environment.<sup>(1)</sup> The regulations concerned headlamps for mopeds, light-signalling devices for mopeds and motor cycles, pneumatic tyres for motor cycles, rear under-ride protection systems for commercial vehicles, replacement silencing systems and new provisions to limit the noise emitted by four-wheeled vehicles.

The Group of Rapporteurs on Brakes and Running Gear (Geneva: ninth session, 18-21 May; tenth session, 8-11 December) continued work on a draft regulation on braking of agricultural vehicles and on amendments to a regulation on service brake performance.<sup>(2)</sup> The Group of Rapporteurs on Crashworthiness (Geneva: eighth session, 19-21 January; ninth session, 24-26 August) continued work on a draft regulation on the protection of occupants of private cars in the event of a head-on collision.<sup>(3)</sup> The Group of Rapporteurs on General Safety Provisions (thirty-seventh session, Rome, Italy, 4-7 May; thirty-eighth session, Geneva, 30 November-3 December) approved draft regulations on anti-theft protection for motor cycles and on unauthorized modifications of mopeds, and continued work on a draft regulation on accessibility and arrangement of tractor controls.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Group of Rapporteurs on Lighting and Light-signalling (eighth session, Lippstadt, Federal Republic of Germany, 7-10 April; ninth session, Leipzig, German Democratic Republic, 15-17 September) continued work on a draft regulation on the installation of lighting and light-signalling devices on agricultural tractors. The Group of Rapporteurs on Protective Devices (ninth session, London, 24-27 February; tenth session, Geneva, 20-23 July) considered amendments to regulations on protective helmets, vehicle seats and seat belts.<sup>(8)</sup> The Group of Rapporteurs on Safety Provisions on Motor Coaches and Buses (twenty-fifth session, Fellbach, Federal Republic of Germany, 1-4 June; twenty-sixth session, London, 10-13 November) continued work on amendments to provisions regulating the strength of seats and their mountings, approved draft requirements on retractable steps and discussed the carriage of disabled persons in public service vehicles.<sup>(9)</sup>

The Group of Rapporteurs on Noise (tenth session, Washington, D. C., 29 September-2 October) adopted a draft regulation to limit the noise emitted by mopeds. The Group of Rapporteurs on Pollution and Energy (Geneva: third session, 9-12 February; fourth session, 7-9 September) continued discussion of possible changes in the regulation on emissions.<sup>(7)</sup>

Other road transport questions. In 1981, the Group of Experts on Road Traffic Safety (Geneva: forty-first session, 11-14 May; forty-second session, 5-9 October) drew up recommendations designed to facilitate the movement of handicapped persons in traffic and to require special markings for road maintenance vehicles, and elaborated proposals for improved road traffic-accident statistics.<sup>(1)</sup> It also approved a recommendation on instruction methods for persons wishing to take driving tests for the operation of private vehicles, as drawn up by the fifth Ad Hoc Meeting on Methods of Professional Driving Instruction (Geneva, 3-6 February).<sup>(2)</sup> The recommendations were adopted in December by the Working Party on Road Transport.

Work continued on the 10-nation Trans-European North-South Motorway project, including preparation of guidelines for an environmental impact assessment and a manual on seismic aspects in design procedures, an initial study on the general development of infrastructure, preliminary studies on the international financing of selected links, and agreements on frontier crossings and standards. ## Industry

The ECE Chemical Industry Committee (fourteenth session, Geneva, 2-4 September 1981) approved a work programme for 1982-1986 emphasizing the development of new sources of raw materials and energy, new processes for conserving them, and the recycling of wastes.<sup>(1)</sup> The Group of Experts on the Periodic Survey of the Chemical Industry (ninth session, Geneva, 31 August and 1 September) approved sections of a draft survey covering market trends for chemical products in 1975-1980 and prospects to 1990.<sup>(2)</sup> An Ad Hoc Meeting for the Study on Trade in

Chemical Products among ECE Member Countries (Geneva, 30 November and 1 December) reviewed a draft of the study, scheduled for publication in 1982, and agreed that its title should be revised to reflect the fact that it dealt with East-West trade.<sup>(3)</sup>

A Seminar on Process Automation in the Chemical Industry (Noordwijkerhout, Netherlands, 27 April-1 May) concluded that the rapid changes wrought by microprocessors in systems for controlling industrial chemical processes created problems in regard to retraining, standardization between systems and reliability, and that applied research on the man-computer dialogue should be encouraged.<sup>(4)</sup>

Engineering industries

The ECE Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation, established in April 1980,<sup>(6)</sup> held its first session in 1981 (Geneva, 24-27 February),<sup>(2)</sup> at which it agreed on its terms of reference and on a 1981-1985 work programme that included studies on various aspects of innovation, the production and use of engineering equipment for preventing pollution, low-waste processes and more effective energy use. On 6 April, ECE adopted the Working Party's terms of reference and approved its work programme.<sup>(1)</sup>

A Seminar on Automation of Assembly in Engineering Industries (Geneva, 22-25 September) made recommendations on educating management and workers in the gains to be made from automation of assembly lines and on the need for compatibility of equipment, especially electronic components.<sup>(5)</sup> An Ad Hoc Meeting on the Methodology for Assessing the Techno-économie Trends of Automation (Geneva, 24 and 25 November) proposed additional topics for study by ECE, including robotization and the impact of automation on productivity.<sup>(4)</sup> An Ad Hoc Meeting on a Study of Techno-économie Aspects of the International Division of Labour in the Automobile Industry (Geneva, 26 and 27 November) adopted an outline for the study and approved plans to begin the collection of information.<sup>(3)</sup>

Work also proceeded on the collection and harmonization of statistics (p. 659).

Iron and steel industry

The ECE Steel Committee (forty-ninth session, Geneva, 21-23 October 1981) concentrated on current preoccupations of the industry—cost reduction, energy efficiency and adaptation of production to demand—and added to its work programme studies on structural changes in the international steel trade and protection of steel products against corrosion.<sup>(1)</sup>

An Ad Hoc Meeting on the Strategy for Energy Use in the Iron and Steel Industry (Geneva, 18 and 19 February) adopted an outline for a study on this question,<sup>(3)</sup> and the Steel Committee, in October, requested the ECE secretariat to revise a questionnaire on the topic for submission to Governments. A Seminar on the Energy Situation in the Iron and Steel Industry (Vienna, Austria, 7-11 September) recommended that a systematic approach be taken to decrease the energy consumed in steel production, by developing new production processes, using new energy sources, intensifying research into coal gasification and liquefaction, and designing equipment to recover low-potential energy sources.<sup>(4)</sup>

An Ad Hoc Meeting on the Evolution of the Specific Consumption of Steel (Geneva, 19 and 20 October) decided on an outline for an ECE study on this topic, which was intended to assist national steel industries to adapt their production to demand.<sup>(2)</sup> The Working Party on the Steel Market (twentieth session, Geneva, 18 and 19 June) concluded that 1980 statistics appeared to indicate a modest development of the steel industry in Europe and it anticipated no marked improvement for 1981.<sup>(5)</sup>

Water

On 8 April 1981,<sup>(5)</sup> ECE welcomed the 1980 decision of its Committee on Water Problems to convene an ad hoc meeting to prepare draft terms of reference for a pilot project on monitoring and evaluation of transboundary water pollution. This draft was prepared by the Ad Hoc Meeting on Monitoring and Evaluation of Transboundary Water Pollution (Geneva, 14 and 15 May)<sup>(3)</sup> and was approved by the Committee (thirteenth session, Geneva, 16-20 November) on the understanding that, before the project was initiated, all ECE Governments would be invited to indicate their willingness to participate and to specify the terms and conditions of their participation.<sup>(1)</sup>

Also on 8 April, ECE endorsed decisions by its committees on water and agricultural problems to consider closer co-operation on water problems in agriculture, and requested them to examine the possibility of further joint projects, relating particularly to irrigation and drainage.<sup>(6)</sup> One such project, a Seminar on Water Pollution from Animal Production (Geneva, 15-18 September), recommended that, for water conservation purposes, priority should be accorded to the effective enforcement of legal and administrative provisions prohibiting all direct discharges of waste from animal production, treated or not, into surface waters and ground-water aquifers.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Group of Experts on Aspects of Water Quality and Quantity (ninth session, Geneva, 11-14 May) prepared a draft decision calling on European Governments to pursue and strengthen efforts to co-operate on the development, use and conservation of shared water resources. The draft was approved by the Committee on Water Problems in November for submission to ECE. The Committee also decided to prepare a report and elaborate a declaration on rational use of water.

Energy

On 8 April 1981, ECE reiterated the importance of an exchange of information and views on energy among its member Governments, and reiterated the need to give due attention to all aspects of the work of the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Energy.<sup>(4)</sup> It selected energy as the next major topic to be considered in depth from the point of view of concentration, integration and co-ordination of its work programme.<sup>(5)</sup>

The Advisers on energy<sup>(1)</sup> (third session, Geneva, 16-20 February) approved a work programme divided into four areas: programmes, policies and prospects; demand; trade and co-operation; and conservation. Subsequently (fourth session, Geneva, 23-27 November), the Advisers suggested improvements in a draft report by the secretariat on energy problems and co-operation, heard differing views on the desirability of convening a high-level ECE meeting on energy, and discussed conservation and new and renewable energy sources.

An Ad Hoc Meeting on Scientific and Technological Research related to Low-Calorific-Value Fuels (Sofia, Bulgaria, 27-30 April) recommended that ECE pursue work on this topic involving such fossil fuels as brown coal, lignite and peat and supported a Bulgarian proposal for a regional project to promote research into the technology for using such fuels.<sup>(3)</sup> The recommendation for preparation of a full-scale regional project was approved in June by the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology (p. 657).

An Informal Meeting on the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Seminar on Improved Techniques for the Extraction of Primary Forms of Energy (Geneva: first meeting, 25 and 26 May; second meeting, 5 and 6 October)<sup>(2)</sup> considered follow-up measures to the recommendations of the November 1980 Seminar.<sup>(6)</sup>

Forestry and timber

A Seminar on Forest Fire Prevention and Control (Warsaw, Poland, 20-22 May 1981) stressed the importance of training fire-fighters and supervisors and improving their safety, suggested a study of the motivation and attitudes of people who caused wild fires, and identified topics for further work by ECE and other organizations.<sup>(5)</sup> A Seminar on the Maintenance of Forest Machinery in Large- and Small-Scale Forest Operations (Garpenberg, Sweden, 24-28 August) made a number of recommendations to improve maintenance through training of personnel, planning and control, and better machine design, and listed several topics for international collaboration.<sup>(6)</sup> A Seminar on Occupational Safety and Health and Applied Ergonomics in Highly Mechanized Logging Operations (Ottawa, Canada, 21-25 September) urged manufacturers to consider ergonomic needs when designing chain saws and other machines for the logging industry, and stressed the importance of dispelling the belief that ergonomics and safety were costly.<sup>(7)</sup>

Work continued in co-operation with the FAO European Forestry Commission and the International Labour Organisation. An Ad Hoc Meeting to Revise the FAO/ECE Classification and Definitions of Forest Products (Geneva, 2-4 March) produced a complete revision of this list, used as an authoritative framework for collecting compiling, analysing and presenting statistics. Publication of the list was authorized by the Joint Working Party on Forest Economics and Statistics (thirteenth session, Geneva, 9-12 June).<sup>(8)</sup> The Working Party also endorsed, with revisions, a questionnaire to Governments prepared by an Ad Hoc Meeting on Forest Resource Assessment (Geneva, 4-6 March),<sup>(4)</sup> as an initial step for a study on this topic; and recommended steps to improve information on energy derived from wood.

An Ad Hoc Meeting on Standardization of Stress Grading and Finger-jointing of Coniferous

Sawn Timber (Geneva, 29 June-1 July) drew up revised ECE standards for structural coniferous sawnwood, as well as forms for its impartation.<sup>(3)</sup>

The ECE Timber Committee (thirty-ninth session, Geneva, 12-16 October) asked that ECE studies place more emphasis on the impact of energy developments on forestry, and approved plans for the start of work on a major long-term study of timber trends and prospects, for publication in 1986.<sup>(4)</sup>

Science and technology

Reaffirming the importance it attached to its activities in science and technology, ECE, on 8 April 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> requested the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology to prepare specific proposals on the ECE contribution to the follow-up of the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development,<sup>(*)</sup> and invited the Advisers to examine the possibility of convening an ad hoc meeting on the subject.

The Senior Advisers (ninth session, Geneva, 15-19 June) responded by requesting the secretariat to prepare a progress report containing proposals and a synthesis of views of ECE members, for consideration in 1982.<sup>(2)</sup> On other matters, the Advisers called for continued work on low-calorific-value fuels (p. 654) and authorized the start of statistical studies on international technology flows and patents (p. 659).

A Seminar on the Evaluation of Research and Development (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 2-6 November) suggested several projects for further investigation, including a comparative study on the impact of national research and development management systems on scientific and technological development, an analysis of experience with the methods used in evaluating research and development, and a study of the possibility of having a multidisciplinary team of experts evaluate a selected research and development programme.<sup>(3)</sup>

Standardization

In 1981, the Group of Experts on Standardization Policies (eighth session, Gottwaldov, Czechoslovakia, 27-30 January; ninth session, Geneva, 3-6 November) began work on the topic of testing and decided to concentrate on the implications of testing activities for international trade and on the co-ordination of government policies in that sphere.<sup>(2)</sup>

On 6 April 1981, ECE decided to convene the Seventh Meeting of Government Officials Responsible for Standardization Policies, from 1 to 4 March 1982.<sup>(1)</sup>

Environment

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems (ninth session, Geneva, 10-13 February 1981) expressed the view that the attention of other ECE bodies should be drawn to the environmental aspects of energy extraction, transportation, conversion and use.<sup>(2)</sup> An Ad Hoc Meeting to Define Activities on Environmental Impact Assessment (Geneva, 25 and 26 November) recommended a work programme according to which the Advisers, through a group of experts, would examine frameworks and methods of environmental assessment as well as applications of assessment in various economic sectors.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Working Party on Low- and Non-Waste Technology and Reutilization and Recycling of Wastes (second session, Geneva, 1-3 June), whose terms of reference were adopted by the Senior Advisers in February, considered the progress of studies on methods for comparing and evaluating technologies, incentives for promoting such technologies, and international waste exchanges.<sup>(10)</sup> Under its auspices, National Focal Points for the Compilation of a Compendium on Low- and Non-waste Technology fourth meeting, Geneva, 2 and 3 December<sup>(5)</sup> approved an additional 31 monographs for inclusion in the ECE Compendium, a collection of information on energy and resource-saving technologies available in Europe which already contained 46 monographs, focusing primarily on manufacturing technologies.<sup>(1)</sup>

On 8 April 1981,<sup>(11)</sup> ECE reiterated an appeal for early ratification by States of the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution, adopted under ECE auspices in 1979.<sup>(2)</sup> Of the 35 signatories in 1979, the following 12 States had ratified, accepted or approved the Convention as at 31 December 1981 (States which acted in 1981 are italicized):

-Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Finland, France, Hungary, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United States.

Twenty-four ratifications were required to bring the Convention into force.

The Interim Executive Body for the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution (second session, Geneva, 2-5 November) made recommendations to the Convention's signatories on sulphur emission control, calling for the establishment of clear goals for total reduction of such emissions and the adoption of energy conservation measures and of technologically sound and commercially available control technologies.<sup>(3)</sup> These recommendations were based on the findings of the Third Seminar on Desulphurization of Fuels and Combustion Gases (Salzburg, Austria, 18-22 May),<sup>(6)</sup> as elaborated by the Working Party on Air Pollution Problems (eleventh session, Geneva, 7-9 September).<sup>(9)</sup> The Executive Body also endorsed in principle the conclusions and recommendations of its Working Group on Effects of Sulphur Compounds on the Environment (first session, Geneva, 27-30 April), which proposed a research project on the influence of such compounds on the corrosion rate of paints, sandstone and limestone, and plastics.<sup>(8)</sup>

The Co-operative Programme for Monitoring and Evaluation of Long-range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe began a new three-year phase in 1981, embracing 70 monitoring stations in 20 ECE countries. The Steering Body to the Programme (fifth session, Geneva, 7 and 8 December) recommended that highest priority be given to measurements of sulphur compounds and that the Programme be expanded to include research on nitrogen compounds with a view to a better understanding of air and precipitation chemistry.<sup>(7)</sup>

Human settlements

A Seminar on the Forecasting and Programming of Housing (Madrid, Spain, 30 March-3 April 1981) considered national and local forecasting and their interrelationship, improvement of information on the quality of housing and its environment, and programming issues arising from changes in the existing housing stock. Current trends in housing problems and policies were reviewed by the Working Part on Housing (tenth session, Geneva, 19-22 May).<sup>(7)</sup>

The Working Party on Urban and Regional Planning (thirteenth session, Geneva, 2-5 June) discussed systems of settlements and how they might be adapted to contemporary economic, social and administrative requirements.<sup>(s)</sup> It was joined in this discussion by the Group of Experts on Urban and Regional Research (twelfth meeting, 1-3 June), which also devoted attention to a study of long-term perspectives for human settlements development in Europe.<sup>(2)</sup> An Ad Hoc Meeting on New Concepts in the Layout of Urban Districts and the Design and Management of Traffic Therein (Veldhoven, Netherlands, 4-7 May) concluded that planning for urban districts should take account of the needs of an entire neighbourhood, and that design should aim at reducing the volume and speed of car traffic in residential areas.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Working Party on Building (thirteenth session, Geneva, 9-12 June) pursued work on an ECE compendium of model provisions for building regulations and endorsed an outline for a study on energy conservation policies in buildings.<sup>(6)</sup> A Second Seminar on Construction in Seismic Regions (Lisbon, Portugal, 12-16 October) called for increased international exchange of information on the redesign, repair and strengthening of buildings in seismic regions, and closer co-ordination of international codes and studies on design of earthquake-resistant buildings.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Committee on Housing, Building and Planning (forty-second session, Geneva, 14-18 September)<sup>(1)</sup> decided that the ECE secretariat should produce a synthesis report on human settlements every five years, based on country monographs to be submitted by Governments; agreed on a work-programme covering various aspects of urban renewal and modernization policies; and endorsed the conclusions of the Committee's Seminar on Citizen Participation in the Planning, Implementation and Management of Human Settlements (Split, Yugoslavia, October 1980).

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (twenty-ninth session, Geneva, 22-26 June 1981) devoted attention to the improvement of international comparisons of basic economic aggregates, including comparisons between countries having different economic and social systems.<sup>(1)</sup> Attention was also given to the collection of statistics for analysis of new areas of priority interest (energy, environment, science and technology) and the adaptation of statistical services to new technological capabilities.

The Working Party on Electronic Data Processing (seventeenth session, Geneva, 18-22 May) completed work on a report on computer aspects of the use of registers in statistical offices.<sup>(2)</sup> A Seminar on Statistical Data Collection and Processing Systems under New Conditions (Moscow, 21-25 September) discussed the relationship between national statistical offices and other organizations concerned with statistics; modern techniques and the regionalization of statistical activities; methods to ensure the quality, reliability, timeliness and confidentiality of statistics; and training of personnel in electronic data processing.<sup>(9)</sup> The second Meeting on Problems relating to Household Surveys (Geneva, 1-4 June) recommended continued work on guidelines for the presentation of the quality of statistics.<sup>(6)</sup>

An intercountry project on the use of computers for statistical purposes and the design and development of automated statistical information, financed by the United Nations Development Programme and executed by ECE, produced working papers for system specifications, prepared a new software installation and enabled several statistical offices to install a software package for everyday work. Guidance for the project was furnished by the Steering Committee for the Statistical Computing Project (second meeting, Budapest, Hungary, 28-30 October).<sup>(10)</sup>

Statistical activities were also conducted under the auspices of ECE sectoral bodies. The Group of Experts on Coal Statistics (eighteenth session, Geneva, 22-24 June) reviewed a comparative analysis of working time at mechanized coal faces, and initiated work on three topics: integration of coal statistics in general energy statistics, analysis of labour input and costs by location of work, and attendance patterns of mine workers.<sup>(2)</sup> A Meeting on General Energy Statistics (Geneva, 14-16 September) recommended that ECE carry out work on statistical information needed to assess conservation efforts, classification of products and activities for statistical purposes, development of price statistics, and methods for developing statistics on new and renewable energy sources.<sup>(5)</sup>

On the recommendation of the fourth Joint Meeting on the Development of Science and Technology Statistics (Geneva, 4-7 May),<sup>(7)</sup> the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology (p. 657) decided in June to authorize ECE studies on indicators to measure the international flow of technology and on the utility of patent statistics for the measurement of technology transfer. The third Ad Hoc Meeting on Questions of Statistics concerning Engineering Industries and Automation (Geneva, 11 and 12 June) asked the ECE secretariat to test the availability of internationally comparable data on production and international trade according to a revised list of selected commodities.<sup>(s)</sup> The Group of Experts on Transport Statistics (thirty-third session, Geneva, 28 September-1 October) devised a plan of work towards a manual on methods of compiling price and quantity indices, decided to prepare draft uniform guidelines for the collection of statistics on container transport, and concurred with a suggestion for obtaining wider data coverage for East-West flows of European goods.<sup>(3)</sup>

Meetings were also organized in conjunction with specialized agencies. The Study Group on Food and Agricultural Statistics in Europe (twelfth session, Geneva, 9-12 June), a body of ECE and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, made recommendations on the reporting of statistics on crops, livestock and livestock products.<sup>(11)</sup> The second Joint Meeting on Consumer Prices (Geneva, 5-8 October), convened by ECE and the International Labour Organisation (ILO), considered several methodological problems and drew up a list of topics for further work by ECE and ILO.<sup>(4)</sup>

Programme questions concerning ECE

On 8 April 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> ECE invited its principal subsidiary bodies to consider ways to improve co-ordination and co-operation among themselves by, for example, examining further possibilities for organizing their work jointly in areas of common interest and examining means of strengthening mutual consultation. It invited them to evaluate their activities regularly in order to eliminate those of marginal utility and release resources for other activities. In addition, it asked for greater exchange among them in regard to economic projections (p. 649) and it selected energy as the next topic for a study on co-ordination of its activities (p. 654).

Also on 8 April,<sup>(1)</sup> in its resolution on its work and future activities (p. 648), ECE approved its work programme for 1981-1982 and endorsed in principle, subject to review in 1982, its long-term work programme for 1981-1985.<sup>(3)</sup> It also noted that its Executive Secretary would transmit to the Secretary-General, under his own responsibility, the draft of the ECE portion of the proposed United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989, which it decided to review in 1982.

Latin America

The adoption of a Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s and the proclamation of that period as the Latin American Development Decade were the highlights of the nineteenth session of the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA), held at Montevideo, Uruguay, from 4 to 15 May 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> The Programme identified economic and social development goals for Latin America, including the Caribbean area, and suggested action which the Governments of the region could take to achieve them, both in their mutual relations and in their contacts with the developed and developing countries outside (p. 661).

TWO ECLA bodies concerned with subregional integration met during the year- the Committee on Central American Economic Co-operation in July and the Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee in November (p. 662). The two major institutes of the ECLA system- the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning (p. 662) and the Latin American Demographic Centre (p. 667)- continued their work of gathering information, publishing studies and advising Governments. From its headquarters at Santiago, Chile, the ECLA secretariat managed a technical co-operation programme of $8.6 million in 1981 (p. 663).

A Regional Plan of Action on New and Renewable Sources of Energy was adopted in March by a Regional Preparatory Meeting (p. 665) convened in connection with the United Nations Conference on the subject, held at Nairobi, Kenya, in August (p. 689).

Other topics dealt with by the ECLA secretariat during the year in its research and assistance activities- most of them also covered in the Regional Programme or in the 24 other resolutions adopted at the May session- included international trade and finance (p. 663), transport (p. 664), industrial development (p. 664), transnational corporations (p. 665), natural resources (p. 665), food and agriculture (p. 666), science and technology (p. 666), social development (p. 666), environment (p. 667), human settlements (p. 667), women in development (p. 667) and statistics (p. 668). In addition, ECLA presented its views on its role as a result of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system (p. 607).

The Netherlands Antilles was admitted on 14 May as the second associate member of ECLA (p. 668), raising its total membership to 40.

Economic and social trends

The economic growth rate of 6 per cent recorded by Latin America in 1980, though below the 6.4 per cent attained in 1979, was the highest for any major developing region and markedly above the rates of the centrally planned economies and the developed market-economy countries, stated the Economic Survey of Latin America 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> the preliminary summary of which the Economic and Social Council noted on 21 July 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> However, higher imports, along with an enormous rise in interest rates, had increased Latin America's balance-of-payments deficit on current account to a record $27.7 billion. At the same time, the decade-long rise in the net inflow of foreign capital halted, leaving the region with an insufficient amount to cover the current account deficit, so that Latin America's balance of payments closed with a negative balance—for the first time since 1962—of a little over $1.7 billion. Furthermore, the region's gross debt almost doubled over three years, to $212 billion in December 1980. On the positive side, the value of Latin America's exports grew by 28 per cent, compared to the world average of 20 per cent.

The Committee for Development Planning, in the analysis of regional economic trends contained in its March/April 1981 report,<sup>(4)</sup> said of Latin America that deteriorating international circumstances made it less likely that the rapid growth of a few countries in the early 1970s would be repeated for the region as a whole. Whereas economic growth for the oil-producing countries was likely to accelerate, such growth for the other countries would require profound changes in the external environment. It would require policies to increase domestic savings, improve income distribution, eradicate the worst aspects of poverty, and enable all sectors of society to participate economically and socially. It would also require substantial changes in developed countries' policies to facilitate growth and diversification of Latin American exports, and improved international financial mechanisms to reduce the region's dependence on private capital markets. Thought should be given to alternative development styles, less imitative of industrialized country patterns and more compatible with meeting the social needs of the majority.

A Panama Declaration, adopted by the foreign and other ministers and senior officials of the Latin American Economic System at a consultation meeting on Latin America's economic relations with the United States (Panama, 30 November and 1 December), was transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter of 8 December from Panama.<sup>(2)</sup> It called for a series of measures affecting international trade, commodities, financing, transnational corporations, foreign investment and technology transfer.

Development policy and economic co-operation

On 15 May 1981, ECLA proclaimed the 1980s as the Latin American Development Decade and adopted a Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s.<sup>(2)</sup>

The Programme focused on implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade<sup>(5)</sup> on the basis of Latin America's objectives and conditions. After sketching in broad outline the current situation and the needs of national economic and social development, it defined goals for co-operation within Latin America, with other developing areas and globally, in each major economic sector: technical co-operation (p. 663), international trade and finance (p. 663), transport (p. 664), industry (p. 664), transnational corporations (p. 665), natural resources (p. 665), energy (p. 665), food and agriculture (p. 666), and science and technology (p. 666). The ECLA Committee of High-level Government Experts, which drafted the Programme (fifth session, Quito, Ecuador, 9-13 March),<sup>(1)</sup> was entrusted with the task of appraising its implementation.

The Programme established a number of targets for the 1980s, including annual growth rates of 4.4 per cent for agriculture and fisheries, 8.5 per cent for industry and a little over 7 per cent for the region's economy as a whole. At the national level, it called for the real participation of the population in development and its benefits, along with deep-seated structural changes. Regionally, it stated that machinery for integration and co-operation must be supported and improved, trade preferences established for products originating in the region, and special consideration given to less economically advanced countries. At the global level, substantial funds must be procured on terms favouring development.

ECLA decided to assign top priority to the studies and action referred to in the Programme,<sup>(3)</sup> and requested that the Programme be presented to the Inter-American Development Bank and taken into account when the Bank defined its functions and policies in the 1980s.<sup>(4)</sup>

The European Economic Community members of ECLA and the United States said they could not support the adoption of the Programme because it went beyond the mandate of defining a regional development strategy.

Economic integration and co-operation

A study on regional integration and co-operation in the 1980s was issued by the ECLA secretariat in April 1981.<sup>(5)</sup> It summarized the economic problems facing the region, examined the potential of integration, analysed specific cases and outlined proposals for action.

The benefits of integration and other forms of co-operation among Latin American countries were stressed in the Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661), adopted by ECLA on 15 May.<sup>(1)</sup> To strengthen integration treaties, it stated, machinery should be set up to grant trade preference to products originating in the region, grant special consideration to the less economically developed countries, keep in view the final goal of a Latin American common market, and link the integration plans although retaining their institutional individuality.

Also on 15 May, ECLA decided that it should strengthen links with and lend full support to Latin American integration and economic co-operation agencies.<sup>(2)</sup>

With regard to economic co-operation among developing countries on a global scale, the Programme called for broadening and deepening co-operation between Latin America and other developing areas, and specified the nature of such ties in regard to technical co-operation (p. 663), technology, food, energy, raw materials and industrialization.

Also on 15 May, ECLA asked its Executive Secretary to strengthen the secretariat's machinery for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries and for regional economic integration, and to identify joint activities with other regional commissions; and called for full support of those efforts from developed and developing countries.<sup>(3)</sup>

In addition, ECLA requested its Executive Secretary to consider what advisory services it could provide and studies it could prepare in the light of the results of the High Level Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries (p. 383), held at Caracas, Venezuela, in May.<sup>(4)</sup>

ECLA continued to collaborate with the Economic Commission for Africa in a pioneering interregional project to promote economic and technical co-operation among developing countries in international trade, human resources development and technology.

Caribbean area. Throughout 1981, the ECLA Subregional Office for the Caribbean carried out activities to promote integration and co-operation in such fields as development planning (see below), development information (p. 663), international trade, shipping, energy, agriculture, science and technology, social development and women.

On 15 May, ECLA urged its developing member countries and the various regional secretariats to identify possibilities of technical and economic co-operation between countries of the Caribbean and other Latin American countries, and requested its Executive Secretary to prepare work programmes for such co-operation, identify obstacles and collaborate in preparing joint projects.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee met at the technical level (sixth session, first part, St. George's, Grenada, 4-10 November 1981) to prepare for the ministerial part of its session in New York in February 1982.

The offices for the Caribbean and Central America were the subject of a Joint Inspection Unit report considered by ECLA and the Economic and Social Council in 1981 (p. 668).

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 440(XIX), 15 May.

Central America. The Committee on Central American Economic Co-operation, at an ad hoc meeting at Mexico City on 3 July 1981, recommended that its members take advantage of and harness the interest which the subregion had awakened internationally, so as to mobilize outside resources to strengthen economic interdependence.<sup>(1)</sup> To put this recommendation into effect, the ministers for foreign affairs of the Central American countries signed a declaration on 16 August at Tegucigalpa, Honduras, establishing a Central American Economic and Social Development Co-operation Group.

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Committee on Central American Economic Co-operation, E/CEPAL/G. 1182.

Development planning

The Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) organized a seminar on public enterprises in the development planning of Central America and the Caribbean (San José, Costa Rica, 1-3 July 1981). It provided advisory services to Brazil, Colombia, Haiti, Panama and Venezuela, and sent missions to Brazil and Cuba. International courses were held at Santiago on social planning (6 April-12 June) and central planning (20 April-13 November), and national courses on planning were given in Brazil, Costa Rica, Grenada, Honduras, Panama, Paraguay and Spain.

The ECLA secretariat published a study on Latin American development in the 1980s.<sup>(2)</sup>

On 15 May, ECLA endorsed a recommendation that the United Nations Development Programme be requested to continue its financial support for ILPES, and urged Governments and co-operation agencies to provide ILPES with additional resources for its Caribbean activities.<sup>(1)</sup>

Development Information

The Latin American Economic and Social Documentation Centre, in addition to publishing a number of studies and reports, organized in 1981 a second training course/seminar on the operation of the information for planning system in Latin America (Santiago, 11-25 May), a technical meeting on terminology for development (Santiago, 1-3 July) and a meeting, sponsored by the International Development Research Centre, to launch a national planning information network in Panama (Panama City, 30 November-2 December). Together with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, it organized a seminar on methodologies for evaluating information and related infrastructures in Latin America (Santiago, 30 September-2 October).

The Caribbean Documentation Centre organized workshops on techniques for effective participation in the Caribbean Information System-Planning (Wilkey, Barbados, 9-13 March), basic techniques for library organization and services (Saint Vincent, 15-26 June), and methodology for inventory of development information units (Bridgetown, Barbados, 19-23 October).

On 15 May, ECLA requested its secretariat to study the possibilities of broadening the supply of economic and trade information for Latin American countries, in order to enable them to set up or improve their own development information units.<sup>(1)</sup>

Special measures for LDCs

In its Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s,<sup>(1)</sup> adopted on 15 May 1981 (p. 661), ECLA called for concentrated efforts to develop co-operation in areas of major interest to the least developed countries (LDCs) of Latin America and the Caribbean, such as energy, economic planning and administration, access to the sea, markets, development of infrastructure, training of technicians and professionals, and acquisition of strategic raw materials.

In another action on the same date, ECLA decided to set up an office at La Paz, Bolivia, for the study and analysis of the problems of depressed areas, and requested support for the office from the United Nations Development Programme and international and regional financial institutions.<sup>(2)</sup>

Resolutions: ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 15 May: <sup>(1)</sup>422(XIX), annex, sect. III.B.10; <sup>(2)</sup>424(XIX).

Technical co-operation

Expenditures by ECLA for technical co-operation activities in 1981 totalled $8.6 million, of which the major sources were voluntary trust funds ($2.8 million), the United Nations Fund for Population Activities ($2.7 million) and the United Nations Development Programme ($2.1 million).

Major areas of activity included demographic sampling, household surveys, economic development, transport, export promotion, water resources, energy, environment and socio-economic planning. ECLA and its two sister organizations, the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) (p. 662) and the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE) (p. 667), provided advisory services to Governments. ILPES trained 41 fellows from 14 Latin American countries and CELADE granted 30 fellowships.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

The Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661), adopted by ECLA on 15 May 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> suggested several ways in which Latin American countries could enhance their mutual technical co-operation activities, including greater use of national consultancy services and of capital goods produced within the region, partnerships between engineering enterprises, the creation of multinational enterprises to execute joint projects, and technological complementarity in sectors where some countries had acquired greater experience and know-how. In other resolutions of the same date, ECLA called for a strengthening of its activities to promote economic and technical co-operation among developing countries (p. 662).

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 422(XIX), annex, sect. III.B.9, 15 May.

International trade and finance

Expansion of intraregional trade, elimination of non-tariff barriers in Latin America, establishment of trade information systems, co-operation in transport and insurance, the possible establishment of multinational marketing enterprises, support to producers' associations, co-operation in export promotion and promotion of tourism were among the international trade measures envisaged in the Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661), adopted by ECLA on 15 May 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> With respect to a Latin American policy on world trade, the Programme called for the region's countries to consider voluntary application of similar tariff treatment to exports of developed countries which practised protectionist policies, persistent and co-ordinated action to secure fuller participation in negotiations and mechanisms for the defence of Latin American interests, and joint action to shift to other countries activities that were not internationally competitive.

With regard to monetary and financial matters, the Programme suggested that Latin American countries adopt concrete measures on joint regional activities, machinery for payments clearance and balance-of-payments support, financing of intraregional trade, medium- and long-term financing of investment, financing of multinational projects, strengthening of co-operation among Latin American banks, and mutual technical and financial co-operation. On external problems, the Programme urged increased international financial flows adapted to the needs of developing countries, support to debt renegotiation for countries requesting it, the establishment within the World Bank of a long-term financing facility for capital goods, reform of the international monetary system and a greater role for developing countries in decision-making on monetary issues.

Also on 15 May, ECLA instructed its secretariat to respond to government requests for advice on the repercussions of agreements emanating from multilateral trade negotiations, and to give priority to studies on the cost to Latin America of protectionism practised by developed countries and on the effects of the various national trade preference schemes under the Generalized System of Preferences (p. 546).<sup>(2)</sup>

An ECLA secretariat project examining the economic relations between individual Latin American countries and Eastern Europe was completed in early 1981. Another continuing project investigated the implications for Latin America of the state of the international monetary and financial systems.

Under an export promotion project carried out by ECLA and the International Trade Centre, a round-table meeting was held on the financing of exports of manufactures (Santiago, 29 June-1 July), followed by a meeting of export credit insurance bodies (Santiago, 2-4 December) at which the statutes of the Latin American Association of Export Credit Insurance Agencies were drawn up. A seminar on consortia and other joint export schemes (Mexico City, 3-7 August) examined various joint export alternatives available to Latin American export producers, particularly small and medium-sized enterprises.

Publication: Monetary Policy and Balance-of-Payments Adjustment: Three Studies (E/CEPAL/1088), Sales No. E.81.11.G.50.

Transport

In its Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661), adopted on 15 May 1981,<sup>(3)</sup> ECLA suggested that Governments review measures for co-ordinated action to build a land and river transport system linking the Atlantic and Pacific in South and Central America, as well as the Orinoco, Amazon and Plate river basins in eastern South America. With regard to maritime transport, the Programme cited two problems: the difficulty in obtaining freight rate reductions for countries which had improved their ports, and adaptation of merchant marine policies to deal with unilateral decisions of liner conferences (shipping cartels).

Also on 15 May, ECLA expressed support for the organization of an international meeting of interested countries on the Orinoco-Amazon-Plate link, at which countries could also present construction plans for the Trans-Jungle Border Highway of the Bolivarian Nations.<sup>(4)</sup>

A meeting attended by 55 railway company representatives, under a project sponsored by ECLA with the Latin American Railways Association and the World Bank, considered operational and management information systems in the region's railways (Santiago, 5-9 October). A round-table meeting on the transport and foreign trade of Paraguay (Asunción, Paraguay, 15-17 June) was organized by ECLA with the Paraguayan Export Promotion Centre and the International Trade Centre. As part of a new project financed by the Netherlands, the ECLA secretariat prepared a study on economic co-operation among Latin American and Caribbean countries in the establishment of container repair and maintenance enterprises.<sup>(5)</sup> Meetings of experts were held on trade facilitation and strengthening of transport institutions in South America (Santiago, 16-20 March)<sup>(2)</sup> and the Caribbean (Paramaribo, Suriname, 27-30 October).<sup>(1)</sup>

Industrial development

In its Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661), adopted on 15 May 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> ECLA stated that the countries of the region should strengthen basic industry, agro-industry, and small and medium-sized enterprises; establish a regional industrial strategy based on comparative advantage; establish long-term policies for restructuring of production capacity; accelerate import substitution where necessary; improve industrial development plans to rationalize the use of natural resources in the light of regional demand; expand scientific and technological capacity; improve national legislation on technology transfer and the activities of transnational corporations; set up regional multinational enterprises, and implement joint projects to increase exportable manufactures and semi-manufactures. The Programme called for consultations within the region to identify joint action for restructuring world industry.

A study on Latin American industrial policy in the 1980s was issued.<sup>(2)</sup> Studies on the supply and production of capital goods were continued by the ECLA secretariat. Industrial profiles of Barbados, the Dominican Republic, Grenada, Jamaica, and Trinidad and Tobago were prepared.

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 422(XIX), annex, sects. III.B.5 & D.7, 15 May.

Transnational corporations

Ways of improving the position of Latin American countries when dealing with transnational corporations (TNCs)—through information, common positions in negotiations, opposition to restrictive business practices and the determination of areas where such enterprises might make genuine contributions—were cited in the Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661), adopted by ECLA on 15 May 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> The Programme set out principles to which TNCs should conform, stating that they should comply with host country laws and regulations, not interfere in internal or foreign affairs, not serve as instruments of another State's foreign policy, be subject to the host country's permanent sovereignty over its natural resources, comply with national development policies and supply information to ensure that they were doing so, make a real economic contribution to the host country, contribute to the development of its scientific and technological capacity, and refrain from restrictive trade practices.

The United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and ECLA joined in organizing a seminar for South American government officials to consider various aspects of TNCs and Latin American development (Santiago, 30 March–10 April). Another seminar dealt with alternative approaches to negotiating with foreign investors and TNCs in the copper and tin industries.

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 422(XIX), annex, sects. III.B.11 & D.5, 15 May.

Natural resources

The Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661), adopted by ECLA on 15 May 1981, called for action to foster collective self-reliance in the regional supply of raw materials, environmental conservation and the rational use of resources, better returns from commodity exports through a greater degree of local processing and greater participation by producing countries in distribution and price-setting, and co-operation through producers' associations and marketing companies.<sup>(*)</sup>

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 422(XIX), annex, sect. III.B.3, 15 May.

Water

The first Latin American Seminar on Horizontal Co-operation for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (Santiago, 9–13 March 1981) examined ways of encouraging co-operation to achieve the targets of the Decade (1981–1990) (p. 684), with emphasis on social, economic and financial aspects.<sup>(1)</sup> For the second such seminar, planned for January 1982, the ECLA secretariat prepared two papers describing co-operation in this field among the countries of Central America<sup>(5)</sup> and the Caribbean.<sup>(6)</sup> Another paper examined the needs and possible sources of financing for Latin American programmes to improve drinking water supply and sanitation during the Decade.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Inter-secretariat Working Group on Water Resources in Latin America held its first meeting (Montevideo, Uruguay, 7 May) to co-ordinate activities among organizations of the United Nations system.<sup>(2)</sup> The ECLA secretariat co-operated on a regional seminar on environmental management in large water resource projects (p. 667).

On 15 May, ECLA requested a survey of the progress being made on water resources in Latin America, and asked its secretariat to promote co-operation, support government activities to improve water resource management, and strengthen its efforts concerning the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade.<sup>(3)</sup>

Energy

Regional co-operation should be fostered in the use of non-traditional energy sources, the processing and channelling of data on energy sources such as petroleum, and in training of personnel, business management and other aspects of energy economics and technology, ECLA declared in its Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661), adopted on 15 May 1981.<sup>(3)</sup> At the global level, the Programme called for several measures to maintain the rational development of developing countries' energy resources and to meet their needs, including the provision of financial and technical resources, exploration and development of indigenous resources, protection of the purchasing power of the unit value of energy exports by developing countries, and greater participation by those countries in transportation and post-extraction activities.

A Regional Plan of Action on New and Renewable Sources of Energy<sup>(1)</sup> was adopted by a regional preparatory meeting convened by ECLA and the Latin American Energy Organization (Mexico City, 16-20 March) in preparation for the 1981 United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (p. 695).

On 15 May, ECLA decided that its secretariat should continue to help member countries with their energy problems and policies, provide timely information on available energy resources and on world supply and demand, support the work of the Latin American Energy Organization, and carry out the studies that would enable Latin American countries to implement the Plan of Action.<sup>(4)</sup>

The Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, on 21 August, called on the international community to give financial and technical support for the development of those energy sources in the developing countries of Latin America.<sup>(2)</sup>

Food and agriculture

Latin America should seek to check the rapid rise in the number of people suffering from hunger and malnutrition and quickly recover its position as a net exporter of agricultural products, stated the Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661), adopted by ECLA on 15 May 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> To that end, the region should pursue a substantial increase in investment for food production, more research, modernization, national food reserve policies, participation in warning systems on shortages, international mobilization of financing and action against agricultural protectionism in developed countries.

Also on 15 May, ECLA called for a major study by its secretariat on the relationship between styles of development and food systems, with particular reference to modernizing or changing economic structures;<sup>(2)</sup> and resolved to support regional information machinery on agricultural surpluses and shortages and to promote studies on food security.<sup>(3)</sup>

A co-operation agreement was signed between ECLA and the Mexican Food System, leading to a joint programme aimed at assessing Mexico's recent experience in the study of food problems. A study on agricultural development in the 1980s was issued.<sup>(4)</sup> The ECLA secretariat co-operated on a regional seminar on expansion of the agricultural frontier and the environment (p. 667).

Resolutions: ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 15 May : <sup>(1)</sup>422(XIX), annex, sects. III.B.6 & D.4; <sup>(2)</sup>427(XIX); <sup>(3)</sup>428(XIX).

Science and technology

The Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661), adopted by ECLA on 15 May 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> called for several measures to develop science and technology in Latin America, including action to safeguard the interests of technology-purchasing countries, strengthening of indigenous technological capacities, training of personnel and the design of policies to make the best use of them, obtaining international and regional financial support, harmonizing standardization policies, and the establishment of joint programmes for training and exchange of skilled workers.

The ECLA secretariat continued its study of the impact of micro-electronics on Latin American economies, and prepared country studies on the economic and technological behaviour of metal-working enterprises in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Peru and Venezuela.

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 422(XIX), annex, sects. III.B.7 & D.6, 15 May.

Social development

Goals for social development in Latin America were set by the Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s (p. 661) adopted by ECLA on 15 May 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> They called for a redistribution policy to eliminate extreme poverty, integration of women into development, policies to reduce unemployment and democratize education, reduction of the housing shortage, expansion of health services so that all inhabitants could achieve a level of health that would allow them to lead productive lives, extension of social security to the entire population, prevention of disability and rehabilitation of disabled persons, integration of population programmes into socio-economic strategies, consideration of environmental impacts and the elimination of regional disequilibrium within countries.

Work was completed at the end of 1981 on a project that produced more than 80 studies on various aspects of development and education in the region. Sponsors of the project were ECLA, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and the United Nations Development Programme.

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 422(XIX), annex, sects. III.A.2, 15 May.

Population

The Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE) continued in 1981 to assist countries with their census programmes, and to issue and revise population estimates for individual countries. In February it initiated at its Santiago headquarters a regular two-year post-graduate teaching programme offering the Master's degree in demography and in social population studies; this programme replaced previous courses on demographic analysis, the last of which was completed in June. The fourth regional intensive course on demography was given at San José, Costa Rica (August-December). National courses and seminars were arranged in Argentina, Costa Rica and Panama.

With the Statistical Service of Barbados and the International Union for the Scientific Study of Population, CELADE co-sponsored a regional seminar on indirect procedures for estimating immigration (Barbados, 10-21 May). Another seminar dealt with recent demographic techniques (Santiago, 7-18 June).

After being informed that CELADE had had to cut back its activities for financial reasons, ECLA, on 15 May, called on the United Nations Fund for Population Activities to continue its financial support, requested ECLA members to provide more resources, and recommended that any new funds be used for the CELADE office at San José so as to strengthen activities in Central America and the Caribbean.<sup>(*)</sup>

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 436(XIX), 15 May.

Environment

Three regional seminars were held in 1981 under a joint project between ECLA and the United Nations Environment Programme concerned with horizontal co-operation in Latin America on styles of development and the environment.

The first of these, the Regional Seminar on Environmental Management and Large Water Resource Projects (Concordia, Argentina, 1-3 October), suggested that high-level experts be brought in to identify likely environmental effects of dams and other big projects and that ECLA consider establishing a centre for training in environmental management of such projects.<sup>(*)</sup> The Regional Seminar on the Expansion of the Agricultural Frontier and the Environment in Latin America (Brasilia, Brazil, 10-13 November) recommended a number of steps to protect frontier areas from environmental degradation while providing economic support to lands newly opened to agricultural development.<sup>(2)</sup> The Regional Seminar on Metropolitanization and Environment (Curitiba, Brazil, 16-19 November) favoured the establishment of co-operation machinery among authorities responsible for planning and developing Latin American metropolises, with a scientific and technical nucleus that would propose subjects for co-operation.<sup>(3)</sup>

Human settlements

Observing that ECLA had not yet received resources for its human settlements activities in accordance with the decentralization envisaged by the General Assembly in 1977 when it established the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat),<sup>(2)</sup> ECLA asked its Executive Secretary on 15 May 1981 to take steps to obtain the resources needed to permit the proper execution of the Latin American programme in this field.<sup>(1)</sup>

A seminar on technologies appropriate for human settlements in humid tropical climate (Lima, Peru, 30 November-12 December) was held by ECLA in co-operation with the Peruvian Ministry of Housing.

Resolutions: <sup>(1)</sup>ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 444(XIX), 15 May; <sup>(2)</sup>GA, 32/162, sect. IV, 19 Dec. 1977 (YUN 1977, p. 523).

Women

The Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean (fourth meeting, Quito, Ecuador, 9 and 10 March 1981) made recommendations to Governments and United Nations bodies, including a suggestion that ECLA co-operate with Governments in identifying and generating economic co-operation projects which concerned the situation of women.<sup>(1)</sup> Among ECLA activities in this sphere during the year were a Caribbean regional training workshop in programme and project planning skills (Barbados, 14-26 June) and an inter-agency seminar to analyse the integration of women into social planning (Santiago, 7 and 8 September).

Report: <sup>(1)</sup>Presiding Officers of Conference on women and development, E/CEPAL/G.1173.

Statistics

The ECLA secretariat continued to assemble and publish quantitative information on Latin America, and its three regional advisers carried out 12 advisory missions in 1981. A workshop on environmental statistics was held in conjunction with the United Nations Statistical Office (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, 26-28 August).

Publications: Statistical Yearbook for Latin America 1980 (E/CEPAL/G.1210), Sales No. S/E.81.II.G.5; 1981 (E/CEPAL/G.1281), Sales No. S/E.83.II.G.1.

Organizational questions concerning ECLA

On 15 May 1981, ECLA made a number of recommendations on its role in the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system (p. 607).

Admission of the Netherlands Antilles as an associate member

Having been informed by the Netherlands that it wished the Netherlands Antilles to be admitted as an associate member, ECLA approved the request on 14 May 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> The Economic and Social Council made the consequent changes in the ECLA terms of reference on 24 July (p. 608).

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECLA (report, E/1981/56), 445(XIX), 14 May.

Work programme and medium-term plan

The 1982-1983 work programme of the ECLA system (including the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning and the Latin American Demographic Centre) was approved by ECLA on 15 May 1981, along with its calendar of conferences for 1981-1984.<sup>(1)</sup> In a related action on the same day, ECLA resolved that its Committee of the Whole should review the planning and programming process in 1982 and that the Committee of High-level Government Experts, at its annual sessions, should make suggestions to the member Governments about priorities in the work programme.<sup>(2)</sup>

ECLA also decided on 15 May to transmit to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination the ECLA section of the draft United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989, as revised by the secretariat to take account of decisions at the Commission's 1981 session.<sup>(3)</sup>

Subregional offices

A December 1980 report by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the ECLA subregional offices for Central America and Panama and for the Caribbean was transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in February 1981, together with his comments.<sup>(3)</sup> The report, prepared by Inspector Alfred N. Forde, focused on the delegation of administrative authority from ECLA headquarters at Santiago to its two subregional offices, located at Mexico City and at Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago.

The report found that, while the delegation of authority on programming and substantive matters had been real, excessive administrative control from Santiago had weakened the capacity of the Caribbean office. It recommended a greater delegation of authority to that office on staff matters, and the strengthening of its capacity to handle its financial affairs. It also recommended that headquarters staff members be rotated or redeployed to the subregional offices.

In his comments, the Secretary-General observed that there had recently been a significant decentralization of administrative authority to the Caribbean office, especially on personnel matters. However, as that office had a staff of 45 in February 1980 compared to 119 in the Central American office, it was cost-effective to differentiate between the offices in the decentralization of some administrative tasks, especially financial affairs. The Secretariat's Administrative Management Service would survey the situation in 1982 and make recommendations. In addition, instructions would be issued to increase staff rotation among ECLA offices.

ECLA took note of the JIU report and the Secretary-General's comments in May.<sup>(2)</sup> The Economic and Social Council did likewise on 23 July, in a decision recommended without vote on 17 July by its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, on an oral proposal by its Chairman.<sup>(1)</sup>

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1981, the Council took note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "Report on the subregional offices for Central America and Panama and for the Caribbean of the Economic Commission for Latin America" and of the comments of the Secretary-General thereon.

Western Asia

The Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) held its eighth session at Sana'a, Yemen, from 3 to 7 May 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> adopting on 6 May a total of 19 resolutions on various issues concerned with closer co-operation among the Arab States of the region.

An ECWA Conference on International Migration in the Arab World (Nicosia, Cyprus, May) recommended ways of overcoming problems caused by the increase in migration for employment (p. 671). Also during the year, expert group meetings were held on economic co-operation and integration (see below), the petrochemical and engineering industries (p. 670), agriculture (p. 671), new and renewable energy sources (p. 671), and international trade and industrial statistics (p. 672). Among the other major programmes of ECWA activity were international trade and finance (p. 670), transport (p. 670), science and technology (p. 671), and social development and disabled persons (p. 672).

The ECWA secretariat continued work on two projects relating to the Palestinians, initiated by ECWA in 1976.<sup>(3)</sup> In connection with one of them, ECWA stressed the need to complete as soon as possible the study on the economic and social situation and potential of the Palestinian Arab people, and affirmed that the study would cover the situation of those people wherever they might be.<sup>(2)</sup> It took similar action with respect to the other project, a census of the Palestinians (p. 671).

A $1.8-million technical co-operation programme was executed by ECWA in 1981, with emphasis on advisory services to Governments in such areas as population and the role of women in development (p. 670).

In December, the Iraqi Government made available to ECWA its new temporary site at Baghdad, the city where it was to establish its permanent headquarters once its accommodations were ready (p. 672). The decision to move the headquarters from Beirut, Lebanon, was taken in 1979.

Economic trends

Whereas Western Asia had benefited from the sharp rise in the price of petroleum, which more than doubled over the previous two years, it had been adversely affected by world inflation and international monetary instability, according to the summary of the Survey of Economic and Social

Developments in the ECWA Region, 1980,<sup>(2)</sup> noted by the Economic and Social Council on 24 July 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> For the countries of the region, about half of them oil-exporting, the oil-spurred growth momentum had continued in 1979-1980 but at a more moderate pace. Oil production had declined in 1980 by about 7 per cent below the 1979 level, due to the interruption of production in Iraq in the last quarter of 1980 because of the armed conflict with Iran. The average real growth rate of gross domestic product in 1979 was provisionally estimated at about 7 per cent. Income disparity had tended to widen between countries and among income groups.

The Committee for Development Planning, in its March/April 1981 review of regional economic conditions,<sup>(3)</sup> remarked that a shortage of capital was not generally a major constraint in Western Asia, in contrast to other developing regions. But the great economic diversity in the region and within countries continued to grow, pointing to the need for development strategies aimed at creating a more diversified and productive physical and human infrastructure. Oil-producing countries with accumulated financial surpluses had to face basic decisions on expenditure and consumption patterns, and needed to find opportunities for secure and sound investment. The Committee viewed increased diversification of investments within a framework of regional and interregional co-operation as an attractive alternative.

Development policy and economic co-operation

On 6 May 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> ECWA called on its Executive Secretary to help its member States assess the implications for the region of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,<sup>(3)</sup> translate the Strategy's objectives into specific national goals and targets, and undertake a periodic review and appraisal of progress in implementing the Strategy. On the same date, ECWA requested the Executive Secretary to intensify activities in favour of the least developed countries and to consult with the Secretary-General on the decentralization of such activities to ECWA.<sup>(2)</sup>

An Expert Group Meeting on Feasible Forms of Economic Co-operation and Integration in Western Asia (Beirut, Lebanon, 14-18 December) recommended that the factors which had hindered regional co-operation and integration be identified and analysed; that regional arrangements be flexible in view of rapidly changing circumstances; that emphasis be placed on co-operative efforts initiated at the lower policy-making levels rather than at the top; that existing regional institutions be rationalized; and that consideration be given to creating such bodies as an Arab science and technology fund, an inter-Arab export-import bank and an Arab investment underwriting facility. A study on problems and prospects of financial integration<sup>(4)</sup> and another entitled "Towards a feasible path to economic co-operation and integration in Western Asia" were among the papers prepared by the ECWA secretariat on issues dealt with by the Meeting.

The secretariat, with funds from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), continued to assist the Arab Planning Institute, located in Kuwait, by providing administrative and technical support and financing fellowships. The assistance was limited to fellowships after 3 August

Technical co-operation

Expenditures on technical co-operation activities executed by ECWA in 1981 totalled $1.8 million. The largest share came from the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation and financed regional advisory services to Governments. These were provided for public finance, national accounts, human resources development, customs administration, transport, and science and technology.

With support from UNDP, ECWA assisted Arab institutes for planning (see above) and statistics (p. 672) and two UNDP-funded projects were launched to help establish an Arab Institute for Banking and Financial Studies and to provide a regional training programme in petroleum technology. Technical co-operation was also financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (p. 671) and the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women (p. 672).

On 6 May, ECWA requested its Executive Secretary to contact UNDP and other international bodies to secure funds for the establishment of ECWA advisory services to Governments in regard to agro-industries and textile industries, and international trade and balance of payments (see below).<sup>(1)</sup>

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup> ECWA (report, E/1981/55), 90(VIII), 6 May.

International trade and finance

On 6 May 1981, ECWA recommended that funds be allocated to enable its secretariat to provide Governments with advisory services in international trade and balance of payments, to promote exports and to rationalize imports in the interest of comprehensive economic and social development.<sup>(2)</sup>

After receiving a survey report by the secretariat on the technical assistance needs of selected countries in financial management,<sup>(1)</sup> ECWA requested its Executive Secretary to study the possibility of establishing a regional facility to meet the training and advisory needs of ECWA members in development finance and to draw up proposals for assistance to such a project by UNDP.<sup>(3)</sup>

Resolutions: ECWA (report, E/1981/55), 6 May: <sup>(2)</sup> 90(VIII), para. 2; <sup>(3)</sup> 104(VIII).

Transport

On 6 May 1981, ECWA called on its members to give due attention to the recommendations of its Intergovernmental Meeting on the Development of an Integrated Transport System for Western Asia (Beirut, Lebanon, March 1980) and requested that its secretariat continue to strengthen regional co-operation among developing countries on transport.<sup>(1)</sup>

The ECWA secretariat issued in December a report on transport harmonization and standardization, including the application of international and regional conventions.<sup>(2)</sup>

Industrial development

In a resolution of 6 May 1981 urging expansion of its secretariat's advisory services to Governments (see above), ECWA recommended the establishment of advisory services for the agro-industries and textile industries.<sup>(3)</sup>

Two expert group meetings at Vienna, Austria, were convened jointly by ECWA and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. An Expert Group Meeting on the Development of the Petrochemical Industry in the ECWA Region (9-12 June) proposed a programme of surveys, studies and field investigations as a basis for formulating a scheme for petrochemical industry development in the region, to be submitted to an intergovernmental meeting in 1983.<sup>(2)</sup> An Expert Group Meeting on Identification of Projects for Regional Co-operation in Capital Goods and Heavy Engineering Industries (15-19 June) recommended criteria for the selection of manufacturing industries as regional Arab transnational projects, and proposed four regional projects for the manufacture of digital telephone exchange equipment and four country projects involving transformer and telephone cable manufacture.<sup>(1)</sup>

Among the studies prepared by the ECWA secretariat for the Meeting on capital goods and heavy engineering industries were a preliminary report on industrialization and industrial polity<sup>(4)</sup> and a statistical compendium on exports of the world's major exporters of engineering products to the Arab world, 1971-1978.<sup>(5)</sup> For the Meeting on the petrochemical industry the secretariat prepared a paper outlining a basis for the formulation of strategies pertaining to the industry's development.<sup>(6)</sup>

A regional training programme for the development of industrial technological capabilities in petroleum-based industries was launched by ECWA in 1981, with financing from the United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development.

Food and agriculture

Ways of combating desertification were examined by an Expert Group Meeting on Management, Conservation and Development of Agricultural Resources in the ECWA Region (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, 9-15 May 1981), which made recommendations to the secretariat, Governments and international organizations on agricultural resource, surveys, resource use policies, legislation, institution strengthening, education and training, research, communication documentation and information support, and international and regional co-operation. The Meeting was co-sponsored by ECWA, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the Arab Centre for the Studies of Arid Zones and Dry Lands. The Joint ECWA/FAO Agriculture Division prepared for the Meeting a survey of the state of resources and management in the agricultural sector of the region.<sup>(1)</sup>

A national workshop on food security planning was held in Jordan (Amman, 8-10 December).

Energy

A regional preparatory expert group meeting (Beirut, Lebanon, 12-16 January 1981) drew up a report<sup>(1)</sup> for submission to the August 1987 United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (p. 689). Taking note of this report on 6 May, ECWA requested its Executive Secretary to ensure that additional resources were allocated to it for the proper implementation of the programme of action stemming from the Conference and for any other related functions which might be entrusted to it.<sup>(2)</sup>

The ECWA secretariat published a study on Arab energy prospects to the year 2000.<sup>(3)</sup>

Population

A Conference on International Migration in the Arab World (Nicosia, Cyprus, 11-16 May 1981) made recommendations on action by Governments and regional and international organizations to overcome the increasing difficulties stemming from greater intraregional and inter-regional migration for employment purposes. A report on the Conference indicated that the remittances of workers to countries exporting labour made a significant contribution to the economy of those countries, representing about 40 per cent of the net domestic product in some cases.

On 6 May 1981, ECWA requested the Executive Secretary to pursue measures needed to complete the census of the Palestinian Arab people which it had called for in 1976<sup>(2)</sup> and urged its members to supply census and other information concerning Palestinians in their territories.<sup>(1)</sup> Advisory services in demography and population statistics were provided by ECWA in 1981 to Egypt, Oman, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates, with financing from the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.

Science and technology

On 6 May 1981, ECWA requested its Executive Secretary to take measures to enable the secretariat to assume the increasing responsibilities entrusted to it in regard to science and technology, and to secure the necessary resources from within and outside the United Nations system.<sup>(1)</sup> Also on that date, ECWA urged its members to set up national centres or other organs for technology transfer and the establishment of technological capabilities, and invited United Nations organizations to co-operate with the ECWA secretariat in assisting States to do so.<sup>(2)</sup>

At a Seminar on Technology Policies in the Arab States (Paris, 14-18 December), held in cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, some 70 participants discussed papers on sectoral technology policies, investment aspects, the environment of technology policy in government operations, research and development, and international co-operation, as well as the role of consulting and engineering in technology transfer and development.

Social development and health

On 6 May 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> ECWA urged its members to elaborate and implement long-term programmes on disability, requested the Executive Secretary to strengthen the work of ECWA in this area, and forwarded to the General Assembly a regional plan of action<sup>(1)</sup> as a contribution to the International Year of Disabled Persons (1981) (p. 795).

The ECWA secretariat issued in January a survey of social development in Western Asia during 1980.<sup>(3)</sup>

Women

With financing from the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985), workshops in the ECWA region were conducted in Democratic Yemen, to strengthen the role of rural women extension workers; in the United Arab Emirates, to enable women from the Gulf area to organize training workshops; and in southern Lebanon, to train women workers in the administration of day-care centres and community services. The Fund also enabled ECWA to carry out field research, to prepare manuals and to begin data analysis in women-related fields.

Statistics

On 6 May 1981, ECWA recommended the strengthening of its Statistical Unit so that it could meet the increasing needs of member States for data, training of personnel and advisory services.<sup>(1)</sup> On the same date, it urged its members to participate fully in ECWA-executed regional statistical projects.<sup>(2)</sup>

An Expert Group Meeting on Foreign Trade and Industrial Statistics (Amman, Jordan, 5-10 September) recommended that the ECWA secretariat translate into Arabic the basic United Nations documents on these topics, organize meetings and training courses, and assist national statistical offices in modernizing international trade classifications and organizing industrial surveys and censuses.

The ECWA secretariat continued to collect and publish statistical series and indicators. It also assisted Democratic Yemen and Jordan in regard to national accounts, and aided those countries as well as the United Arab Emirates and Yemen with their national household survey capability programmes. With funds from the United Nations Development Programme, the secretariat provided technical and administrative support to courses organized by the Arab Institute for Training and Research in Statistics, at Baghdad, Iraq.

Programme and organizational questions concerning ECWA

On 6 May 1981, ECWA made a number of recommendations on its role in the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system (p. 607).

Relocation of headquarters

At a ceremony at Baghdad on 22 December 1981, temporary offices for ECWA were turned over to the United Nations by the Government of Iraq. This enabled the secretariat to begin moving from its former headquarters at Beirut, Lebanon, in accordance with a decision taken by the Economic and Social Council in 1979,<sup>(2)</sup> on the recommendation of ECWA. The temporary site, made available following the signing of an agreement between the United Nations and the Iraqi Government, consisted of two 10-storey buildings for offices, with two additional 10-storey buildings in 'the same compound available for housing of General Service staff members.

In anticipation of this development ECWA, on 6 May 1981, requested its Executive Secretary to continue to pay special attention to issues affecting staff efficiency and provide favourable terms of employment at the new location.<sup>(1)</sup>

Work programme

On 6 May 1981, ECWA adopted its work programme for 1982-1983<sup>(1)</sup> and decided to give member and non-member States participating in its annual sessions the opportunity to make financial contributions to its programmes for general or specific purposes.<sup>(2)</sup>

Publications

On 6 May 1981, ECWA approved its publications programme for 1982-1983 and urged the secretariat to expand as widely as possible the publication and distribution of the results of its work.<sup>(1)</sup> The programme called for an increase in the number of recurrent publications from 6 to 10, with new series in food and agriculture, industrial development and natural resources.

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECWA (report, E/1981/55), 101 (VIII), 6 May.

Co-operation with regional organizations

On 6 May 1981, ECWA recommended that its secretariat consult with specialized Arab and regional organizations before proposing new activities, and co-operate with such organisations on joint studies.<sup>(1)</sup> During the year, ECWA co-operated with the Arab Centre for the Studies of Arid Zones and Dry Lands in sponsoring a meeting on agricultural resources p. 671) and with the League of Arab States on statistical matters.

Resolution: <sup>(1)</sup>ECWA (report, E/1981/55), 97(VIII), 6 May.

Chapter IX

Natural resources

Revised arrangements for financing natural resources exploration and authorization of broadened activities for water resources development were among the highlights of United Nations work on natural resources issues in 1981.

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, despite financial constraints, expanded its mineral exploration programmes in developing countries, under the administration of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) (p. 674). On the recommendation of the UNDP Governing Council, the Economic and Social Council, in July,<sup>(3)</sup> approved proposals made in January by a Working Group of Government Experts on the Fund's financial and other arrangements, including the establishment of a fixed ceiling for the amount countries would have to repay the Fund from their earnings on resources it helped to locate, with a reduced rate for contributions from the least developed countries. The Governing Council also decided to review in 1982 the possible expansion of the Fund's activities into geothermal energy.

Acting in July on recommendations of the Committee on Natural Resources, which held its seventh session from 18 to 29 May in New York,<sup>(1)</sup> the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the Committee in 1983 on the utilization of subsurface space for storage, water supply and other purposes.<sup>(10)</sup> The Committee reviewed reports on new exploration techniques including remote sensing (p. 676) and on permanent sovereignty over natural resources (p. 677). The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the continuing programme of missions to assess the needs and costs of natural resources exploration and development in individual developing countries (p. 676).

In regard to mineral resources, the Council requested the Secretary-General to prepare for the Committee at its next session, in 1983, reports on investments in major mineral industries,<sup>(6)</sup> development prospects for rare metals,<sup>(5)</sup> prospects for the development of non-metallic raw materials,<sup>(4)</sup> and possible new locations in the developing countries for phosphate rock and potash exploration.<sup>(7)</sup>

On water resources development, the Council adopted a six-part resolution<sup>(8)</sup> calling for new initiatives in this field, including the sending of interdisciplinary advisory missions to help Governments formulate water policy and legislation. It also authorized United Nations involvement in information exchange on the development of shared water resources, including international river basins.<sup>(9)</sup>

The Council requested the Secretary-General to arrange for the convening of the Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific in 1983 at Bangkok, Thailand.<sup>(2)</sup>

The Committee on Natural Resources also acted as the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (p. 694).

General aspects of natural resources

Exploration

UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

With its operations growing, 1981 was the first year of a mineral exploration programme in full force by the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration. According to a report on its 1981 activities by the UNDP Administrator,<sup>(1)</sup> the Fund had field work under way in 9 countries and new projects were approved for 3 others, raising to 15 the number of projects since its establishment by the General Assembly in 1973 as a financing source for natural resources exploration activities in developing countries.<sup>(3)</sup>

In 1981, five countries paid $861,837 in voluntary contributions to the Fund (p. 676); its programme delivery reached an estimated $4.9 million, a 29 per cent increase over 1980; and its cumulative programme commitments were $25.7 million. Although the Fund was able to approve additional allocations for four projects in 1981 for a total possible maximum allocation of $7.9 million, the Administrator advised the Governing Council that it was operating under serious financial constraint.

By the end of 1981, the Fund had 26 international staff members in the field, a 73 per cent increase over 1980, and its staff carried out missions to 27 developing countries to monitor and assess field activities and evaluate new project proposals.

The third Fund project to be completed, for mineral exploration in Panama, was concluded in the first half of the year. It found that porphyry-copper and gold mineralization in the main target area was not extensive enough to mine, but it located a smaller area which could support a low-grade gold-mining operation.

Of the 12 active projects, field work was under way in Argentina, Cyprus, Guyana, Kenya, Liberia, the Philippines, the Sudan, Suriname and the Upper Volta. With the approval of supplementary short-term funding, further exploration of promising mineral potentials was at an advanced stage in Argentina and Cyprus, where both the recipient Governments and mining groups had expressed interest in possible investment follow-up. Mineral targets were identified for drilling in early 1982 in Guyana and Kenya; new project agreements were approved for Benin, the Congo and Mali, and a minimum work programme was approved for a project in Yugoslavia.

Evaluation of potential projects took place in China, Haiti, Morocco, Peru, the Philippines and the United Republic of Tanzania, while newly requested projects, in which assessments were under way, were submitted by Ecuador, Egypt and Yemen. In addition, missions to identify possible projects were sent to Burundi, Colombia, Costa Rica, Fiji, the Ivory Coast, Nicaragua, Oman, Portugal, Rwanda, Solomon Islands, Thailand and Vanuatu.

Taking into account suggestions by the Administrator, the Governing Council, on 18 June,<sup>(4)</sup> appealed to Governments for generous contributions to the Fund (p. 676); recognized the desirability of an annual minimum funding target of $10 million for its solid minerals exploration programme; and delegated to the Administrator authority to approve supplementary short-term funding beyond approved allocations at any stage in project development, where further work was vital to the continuation of field operations, on the understanding that such action would be reported to the Council. In addition, it approved projects and set maximum expenditure limits for investigation of kaolin in Benin ($600,000), offshore phosphate deposits in the Congo ($865,000) and minerals in Mali ($2.8 million), along with a supplementary project for mineral exploration in Argentina ($650,000).

The Economic and Social Council, in a resolution of 22 July concerned mainly with a review of the Fund's activities (see below), endorsed the Governing Council's decisions.

Review of the Fund's activities. A Working Group of Government Experts on the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, which met in New York from 12 to 23 January 1981, proposed a set of recommendations on the Fund's operation and financing which was subsequently approved by the UNDP Governing Council and the Economic and Social Council. The Group was composed of 17 members appointed by the Secretary-General to serve in their personal capacity.

In its report to the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(*)</sup> the Group proposed the establishment of a ceiling for replenishment contributions, according to which no country would have to pay back, out of what it earned from minerals produced under Fund-assisted projects, more than 10 times the Fund's investment; a repayment formula for feasibility studies, limited to reimbursement of expenditures plus overheads; and a reduction in the rate of replenishment contributions by the least developed countries (LDCs). It also recommended that an effort be made to introduce a system by which Governments would indicate future pledges and thereby give the UNDP Administrator reasonable expectations of future contributions on a firm and continuing basis.

The Group reached a general consensus that the Fund should expand its activities into geothermal energy but limit them for the time being to exploration of hydrothermal systems. It recommended that geothermal work should be oriented exclusively towards power generation and/or thermal energy production as substitutes for fuel-based consumption.

On 27 May, the Committee on Natural Resources commended the Working Group's report to the consideration of the Economic and Social Council and suggested that the Council request the UNDP Administrator to report in 1982 on co-operation between the Fund and other units and organizations of the United Nations system.<sup>(2)</sup>

On 23 June, the UNDP Governing Council approved the main recommendations of the Group, confirming the existing rate of replenishment contributions with a concessional rate reduction for LDCs; decided to review in 1982 a possible expansion of the Fund's activities into geothermal energy (p. 709); recognized the overall UNDP role of policy guidance and co-ordination; and decided that a second review of the Fund's activities should be carried out at a date it would determine.<sup>(6)</sup>

Further, in a 24 June decision on United Nations technical co-operation activities (p. 460), the Governing Council endorsed the Group's recommendation that the Fund maintain close co-operation with the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and that maximum use should be made of the Department's technical services for Fund-financed operational activities.<sup>(5)</sup>

The Economic and Social Council, in a resolution adopted without vote on 22 July,<sup>(4)</sup> welcomed the Group's report and endorsed the Governing Council's decisions. As the Governing Council had recommended, the Economic and Social Council amended parts of its 1973 resolution on the principles and objectives of the Fund,<sup>(3)</sup> pertaining to payments by recipient States, rate of repayment and the length of the repayment period, and specified that the UNDP Council would continue to be the Fund's governing body. In addition, it requested the Administrator to include in his next annual report on the Fund information on co-operation between the Fund and other units and organizations of the United Nations system, and urged Member States to recognize the need for additional contributions (p. 676).

This text, introduced by Italy, was approved by the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee without vote on 17 July after its sponsors-Argentina, Italy, Japan and Peru-agreed to an oral amendment by the United Kingdom to have the Administrator include information on the Fund in his annual report, rather than prepare a separate report as originally proposed.

Assessment missions

In a September 1981 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General described work carried out up to June by the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development in sending missions mandated by the Assembly in 1979<sup>(2)</sup> to assess the needs of developing countries for natural resources exploration and development, including an estimate of costs. Of the 77 assessment missions requested by 43 countries, 44 had been undertaken. Thirty-one reports had been completed, estimating mineral or energy requirements in 22 countries. Nine of the reports covered petroleum and gas, or hydrocarbons and coal; 3 dealt exclusively with coal and 3 with geothermal energy; and the remaining 16 covered non-fuel minerals, except for 2 which also included uranium. (By the end of 1981, 34 mineral and 25 energy assessment missions to 30 countries had been completed.)

The aggregated total financial requirements for the 22 countries for which reports had been completed were estimated at between $2,203 million and $2,415 million. Requirements for petroleum exploration accounted for 58 per cent of the total, covering eight countries, leaving 42 per cent for non-petroleum mineral exploration, geological surveys and mapping, and institutional improvement. In order to cover more countries and thus improve the validity of a global estimate, the Secretary-General suggested that the assessment programme be continued.

On 17 December, the General Assembly, acting without vote,<sup>(3)</sup> took note of the Secretary-General's report. This was done on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, made in like manner on 10 December on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

In the Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, Suriname supported the assessment programme but said its estimates of a country's financial needs should not be limited to the cost of general surveys; it should cover costs that would be incurred in the intensive investigation of limited areas, including seismic surveys and multiple drilling in the case of petroleum.

Multilateral development assistance for the exploration of natural resources

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on multilateral development assistance for the exploration of natural resources.

Exploration techniques

A March 1981 report by the Secretary-General<sup>(2)</sup> to the Committee on Natural Resources described recent trends and possible future developments in remote sensing and other new techniques for the identification, exploration and assessment of mineral and energy resources.

The report stated that, by the end of 1980, more than 110 countries were participating in remote-sensing activities, which had become a routine tool for mineral exploration. Satellite imagery (p. 116) and traditional aerial photography provided a comprehensive and relatively low-cost data base, particularly for large, inaccessible regions. For ground surveying, advances in electronic circuitry had made geophysical equipment more reliable under a wide range of environmental conditions, while advances in seismology included new techniques for more accurate location of stratigraphic traps and direct detection of hydrocarbons. Exploration drilling for oil and gas had reached an unprecedented level, with some 77,000 onshore and offshore wells having been drilled in 1980 outside the centrally planned economies, though all but about 10 per cent of them were in Canada or the United States.

The Committee on Natural Resources, on 27 May,<sup>(1)</sup> took note of this report, prepared in response to a request it had made in 1979.<sup>(3)</sup>

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources

A report on recent development relating to the exercise by developing countries and peoples of permanent sovereignty over their natural resources was submitted by the Secretary-General in May 1981 to the Committee on Natural Resources.<sup>(1)</sup>

Assessing the petroleum sector, the report examined such current trends as the more active participation by developing countries in the industry, sometimes through State-controlled exploration and development, and new patterns in their relations with transnational oil companies. In the non-fuel minerals sector, it reviewed the impact of new investors from petroleum-exporting countries, the hurdles posed by market volatility, the growth of control by State enterprises, and the decline of concession agreements in favour of joint ventures and management or service contracts. It suggested that the United Nations might help by undertaking or co-ordinating the dispatch of long-term advisers to developing countries, elaborating model contracts and regulations as well as negotiation manuals, and assisting national and regional mechanisms for dispute settlement through arbitration and renegotiation.

Taking note of this report on 27 May, the Committee recommended that a further report be prepared for its 1983 session.<sup>(3)</sup>

The General Assembly, in its 24 November resolution on activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding decolonization,<sup>(2)</sup> reiterated that any administering or occupying Power which deprived colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources violated its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations. The Assembly invited all Governments and United Nations organizations to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources was fully respected and safeguarded.

In other actions, the Assembly continued its study of permanent sovereignty over national resources in the territories occupied by Israel (p. 323) and the foreign exploitation of uranium in Namibia (p. 1169).

Utilization of subsurface space

The Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of the Committee on Natural Resources, recognized, in a resolution of 24 July 1981, the potential of subsurface space for the storage of water, energy, food and other commodities, as well as for water supply, sewage handling and energy conservation. It requested the Secretary-General to compile a report for the Committee in 1983 on the utilization of subsurface space, with particular reference to the potential benefits to developing countries.<sup>(1)</sup> The Council adopted the resolution without vote, following similar approval by the Committee on Natural Resources on 27 May and by the Council's First (Economic) Committee on 17 July.

The item was included in the 1981 agenda of the Committee on Natural Resources at Sweden's initiative.

Adopted without vote Meeting 41 24 July 1981

Approved by First Committee (E/1981/112) without vote. 17 July (meeting 16): draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1981/50): agenda Item 15.

Utilization of subsurface space

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned by the problems of population, urbanization and overcrowding and the need to provide people with food, water and fuel,

Recognising the potential of subsurface space for, inter alia, the storage of water, energy, food and other commodities, as well as for water supply, sewage handling and the conservation of energy,

Taking into account the experience of the use of subsurface space already available in many parts of the world,

Requests the Secretary-General to compile a report on the utilization of subsurface space, with particular reference to the potential benefits to the developing countries, bearing in mind the mandate of the Committee on Natural Resources and drawing upon documentation already available, to be considered by the Committee at its eighth session.

Medium-term plan for 1984-1989

A draft covering the natural resources and energy programme, for inclusion in the proposed United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989, was presented by the Secretariat for consideration by the Committee on Natural Resources at its May 1981 session. Covering activities in the fields of minerals, energy, water resources and cartography, it listed energy and minerals as priority areas.

Expressing regret that its members could not comment in detail on the draft because the text was made available during the session and in only one language, the Committee, on 27 May,<sup>(1)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to recast sections of the plan in the light of comments and to submit the revised text for further comments by members and observers.

Agenda for the 1983 session of the Committee on Natural Resources

On 24 July 1981, the Economic and Social Council, without vote, took note of the report of the Committee on Natural Resources on its 1981 session<sup>(2)</sup> and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its next session, in 1983.<sup>(1)</sup> This action had been recommended by the Committee on Natural Resources on 29 May and by the Council's First (Economic) Committee on 17 July, also without vote. The provisional agenda included most of the items listed in 1981, with the addition of sub-items on a mining investments survey (see below) and on terminology for mineral production and consumption.

Mineral resources

Survey of investments

The Economic and Social Council, on 24 July 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to prepare for the Committee on Natural Resources in 1983 a report analysing investments, both planned and effectively made, in major mineral industries, particularly in regard to regional distribution of mineral exploration and development. The report was to pay special attention to measures that could assist developing countries in their capacity to respond promptly to changing situations and to establish and implement effective mineral resources development policies.

The text, adopted without vote, had been recommended by the Committee on Natural Resources on 27 May and approved by the Council's First Committee on 17 July, also without vote.

Survey of planned investment for mineral development
The Economic and Social Council,

Having regard to its resolution 1954(LIX) of 25 July 1975 on problems of availability and supply of natural resources,

Bearing in mind that continued investment in exploration for mineral resources and in new mines and processing plants is of great importance for the development of the mineral sector of all countries, especially the developing countries, and for ensuring uninterrupted supplies of vital mineral raw materials.

Aware that information on planned investment and its regional distribution, while important for policy decisions by Governments, is not adequately available to most developing countries or is often unreliable and not sufficiently detailed,

Recognizing that information on the actual implementation of exploration programmes and the development of new capacity is not in many cases readily available,

Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for the Committee on Natural Resources at its eighth session, a report analysing investments, both planned and effectively made, in major mineral industries, in particular in regard to the regional distribution of mineral exploration and development, and paying special attention to measures that might be undertaken to assist developing countries in strengthening their capacity to respond promptly to changing situations and to establish and implement effective mineral resources development policies.

Metals

By a resolution of 24 July 1981, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to prepare, for submission to the Committee on Natural Resources in 1983, a report evaluating the development prospects of rare metals with special reference to tantalum, niobium (columbium) and lithium, and paying special attention to measures that might be undertaken in the developing countries to increase exploration for and production of those metals.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Council adopted the text without vote on the basis of a draft recommended on 27 May by the Committee on Natural Resources and approved without vote on 17 July by the First Committee.

Trends and salient issues, with particular reference to rare metals, especially tantalum, niobium (columbium) and lithium

The Economic and Social Council,

Having regard to Economic and Social Council resolution 1954(LIX) of 25 July 1975 on problems of availability and supply of natural resources,

Recalling that issues related to the raw materials base of the copper, nickel, chromium, molybdenum, cobalt, vanadium and phosphate rock and potash industries have been discussed at previous sessions of the Committee on Natural Resources,

Reaffirming that the Committee on Natural Resources should continue to consider problems of availability and supply of natural resources of selected minerals and metals,

Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for submission to the Committee on Natural Resources at its eighth session, a report evaluating the development prospects of rare metals, with special reference to tantalum, niobium (columbium) and lithium, and paying special attention to measures that might be undertaken in the developing countries to increase exploration for and production of those metals.

Non-metallic mineral resources

The Economic and Social Council, on 24 July 1981, requested the Secretary-General to prepare for the Committee on Natural Resources in 1983 a comprehensive report on the prospects for the development of non-metallic raw materials, with special reference to non-metallic minerals for the construction, paper, ceramics and glass industries.<sup>(*)</sup>

The Council took this action without vote following similar approval of the text by the Committee on Natural Resources on 26 May and by the First Committee on 17 July.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/76

Adopted without vote Meeting 41 24 July 1981

Approved by First Committee (E/1981/112) without vote. 17 July (meeting 16); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1981/50); agenda item 15.

Prospects for the development of non-metallic raw materials

The Economic and Social Council,

Having regard to its resolution 1954(LIX) of 25 July 1975 on problems of availability and supply of natural resources,

Recognizing the Importance of natural resources for economic development, in particular non-metallic raw materials,

Recalling that the Committee on Natural Resources considered copper, nickel and chromium, and molybdenum, cobalt and vanadium, as well as phosphate rock and potash, at its fifth, sixth and seventh sessions, respectively,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on trends and salient issues in respect of mineral resources, with particular reference to molybdenum, cobalt and vanadium and including problems of the transfer of technology, and on phosphate rock and potash,

Taking into account the work undertaken by other United Nations organizations concerned, such as the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for the eighth session of the Committee on Natural Resources, a comprehensive report on the prospects for the development of non-metallic raw materials, with special reference to non-metallic minerals for the construction, paper, ceramics and glass industries, bearing in mind developments in material sciences, and paying special attention to measures that might be undertaken to evaluate prospective raw materials in developing countries.

Phosphates and potash

The availability and supply of phosphate rock and potash, essential raw materials in the manufacture of fertilizers and industrial chemicals, was discussed in a report of the Secretary-General<sup>(1)</sup> submitted in March 1981 to the Committee on Natural Resources, in response to a 1979 request by the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(2)</sup>

The report stated that fertilizer production in most developing countries had been considerably less than consumption for many years and that more than half the current fertilizer requirements were being met by imports. As fertilizer manufacture was energy intensive, and the continuing price increase would have a deleterious impact on the foreign exchange position of non-oil-exporting countries, special efforts were needed to assist those countries to establish fertilizer production within their territories. It was suggested that the Committee consider setting up a working group to stimulate, guide and co-ordinate exploration for these minerals, and also consider other activities such as workshops and study tours on identification and evaluation of deposits.

Acting on the recommendation of the Committee, which approved the draft on 27 May 1981, the Economic and Social Council, by a resolution of 24 July, requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report identifying possible new locations where phosphate rock and potash might be sought in developing countries; to assist in evaluating deposits; and to examine other possible activities, including workshops and study tours, that would help developing countries in identifying and evaluating their fertilizer raw materials. He was also requested to explore all possible sources of funding for such activities.

This text was approved by the Council's First Committee without vote on 17 July.

Availability and supply of selected minerals:

phosphate rock and potash

The Economic and Social Council,

Having regard to Its resolution 1954(LIX) of 25 July 1975 on problems of availability and supply of natural resources,

Bearing in mind that a number of developing countries are interested in an evaluation of the situation with regard to exploration for and development of indigenous fertilizer raw materials, in particular phosphate rock, and noting the recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled Availability and supply of selected minerals: phosphate rock and potash,

Taking into account the work on fertilizers undertaken by other United Nations organizations, such as the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, and the phosphate resources research project of the International Geological Correlation Programme,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for the eighth session of the Committee on Natural Resources, a report identifying possible new locations for the exploration for phosphate rock and potash in the developing countries, making use of advanced exploration techniques, where appropriate, on the basis of available geological data;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to assist in the evaluation of known and newly discovered deposits on the basis of available data, bearing in mind (a) the need for the use of low-grade ores and local sources of raw materials in the manufacture of fertilizers, (b) the economic advantages of the direct application of phosphate rock in agriculture, and (c) the need to update the data on the future availability of this non-renewable resource;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to examine, in collaboration with other United Nations organizations concerned, the possibility of specific activities, including workshops and study tours, to assist developing countries in the identification and subsequent technical and economic evaluation of their fertilizer raw materials, with special emphasis on techniques suitable in the climatic and infrastructural conditions of those countries and with a view to improving the flow of information and transfer of technology to those countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to explore all possible sources of funding for such activities;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Committee on Natural Resources at its eighth session on progress achieved on these questions.

Technical co-operation

In addition to mineral survey work performed by the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (p. 674), and mineral and energy resources assessment missions mandated by the General Assembly (p. 676), the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development increased its mineral resources activities in 1981, with emphasis on training of personnel, institution-building and planning to improve exploration and development efforts in developing countries. Among the projects under way were the strengthening of the Geological Survey Division of, the Philippine Bureau of Mines and Geosciences; assistance to China, Mexico and Mozambique in the use of remotely-sensed data obtained by satellite imagery; and, in Bolivia, the reprocessing and interpretation of existing airborne magnetic data, using the latest data-processing techniques to determine subsurface lithological and structural conditions in greater depth.

Water

Water resources development

Expressing deep concern over serious constraints faced by developing countries in water resources development, including a shortage of trained personnel, inadequate funds, institutional and legal deficiencies, and lack of equipment, the Economic and Social Council adopted on 24 July 1981 a six-part resolution<sup>(3)</sup> dealing with various aspects of water resources development. It called for national action, with international assistance, to: formulate water policy and legislation and set up institutional arrangements (p. 683); intensify action for water resources assessment (p. 684); increase research and training of water management personnel (p. 684); expand technical co-operation among developing countries (p. 684); and take concrete steps to achieve the targets of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) (p. 684).

The Council noted measures taken to improve co-ordination of activities on water questions in the United Nations system (p. 686) and called on the Committee on Natural Resources to review again in 1983 the progress made in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan, adopted by the 1977 United Nations Water Conference at Mar del Plata, Argentina.<sup>(4)</sup>

This resolution, adopted without vote, originated in the Committee on Natural Resources, where it was approved on 27 May. The Council's First (Economic) Committee approved it without vote on 17 July.

Commending this resolution during the debate on development and international economic co-operation in the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee in October, Finland said the Nordic States would contribute to its implementation.

As background to the discussion in the Committee on Natural Resources, the Secretary-General submitted a report in April summarizing current and future activities of the United Nations system in this field<sup>(2)</sup> and another in March presenting conclusions and recommendations for further action, based on an analysis of the current status of water resources development.<sup>(1)</sup> The Council requested a further progress report in 1983.

Approved by First Committee (E/1981/112) without vote, 17 July (meeting 16): draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1981/50); agenda item 15.

Water resources development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/191 of 18 December 1979, in which the Assembly requested the Committee on Natural Resources to review during the 1980s the progress made in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Taking into account the provisions of General Assembly resolution 35/18 of 10 November 1980, in which the Assembly proclaimed the period 1981-1990 as the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade and decided to review at its fortieth session the progress made towards the attainment of the goals of the Decade,

Bearing in mind resolution 25 of 30 July 1980 on the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, adopted by the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Recognizing that access to adequate supplies of clean water affects not merely health but also general development, including human productivity, crop cultivation, livestock production, small-scale industry and overall economic growth,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/67, 1979/68 and 1979/70 of 3 August 1979, concerning the follow-up activities for the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Reiterating the importance of the provisions of the Action Plan in promoting the accelerated development and orderly administration of water resources for the improvement of the economic and social well-being of mankind,

Deeply concerned that Governments of developing countries, in their water development activities, continue to be faced with serious constraints, including a shortage of trained manpower, inadequate financial resources, deficiencies in institutional and legal frameworks and lack of equipment,

Bearing in mind that the majority of Governments of developing countries have expressed the view that bilateral and multilateral co-operation, in the form of, inter alia, the provision of scholarships, financing, equipment and technical advisory services, would be helpful in overcoming the above-mentioned constraints,

Taking note of the three reports prepared by the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, entitled "Present status of water resources development: progress and prospects since the United Nations Water Conference", "Progress and prospects relative to water resources policy, planning, legislation and institutional arrangements: proposals for interdisciplinary missions", and "Present and future activities of the United Nations system in water resources development",

I. Water resources planning, policy formulation, legislation and institutional mechanisms for co-ordinating national interests

1. Recalls the importance of the provisions of section D of the Mar del Plata Action Plan and asks those Governments that have not done so to formulate a national water policy statement that allows for the harmonization of their water development plans within the framework of national economic development planning, and to keep under review planning objectives and methods;

2. Urges Governments to intensify their efforts in the formulation and updating of water legislation, where appropriate, taking into account the applicable experiences of other countries;

3. Reiterates the importance of co-ordinating water resources at the national level, as well as the regional and local levels, as a means of effective and comprehensive planning for the development and management of national water resources;

4. Endorses the proposal for the organization of interdisciplinary advisory missions, staffed by experts from the various organizations of the United Nations system, to render technical assistance to Governments, inter alia, on the formulation of comprehensive water policies, the setting up of appropriate legislative and administrative arrangements and the formulation of national master plans, in response to requests from Governments and in line with their specific requirement and on the understanding that those missions would be organized along the lines set out in paragraph 87 of the report of the Committee on Natural Resources on its seventh session and funded from extrabudgetary resources, as specified in that paragraph;

5. Requests the Secretary-General and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to inform Governments of developing countries, through the resident co-ordinators of the United Nations system, of the possibility of requesting the services of such missions;

II. Assessment of water resources

1. Urges Governments to intensify their activities in water resources assessment which is a prerequisite for national water resources development, planning and management to include, inter alia, the strengthening of services for the collection, processing and dissemination of water resources data, the improvement of studies on the water cycle and hydrological processes and on the reciprocal reactions between these and human activities and the ecosystems, as well as improvements in the procedures for the assessment of water resources on the basis of area, and the development of appropriate infrastructures;

2. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Meteorological Organization and other organizations concerned to promote unified methodologies for water resources assessment and to enhance international co-operation in this area;

III. Education, training and research and development

1. Urges Governments of Member States to increase their capabilities for the provision of training and research at the national level by setting up new facilities and/or increasing the capacity of existing ones in the various fields of water resources, including planning, legislation, the assessment of water resources and their development and use for different purposes, such as agriculture, municipal water supplies and industry, and the preservation of ecological systems;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to develop, in co-operation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, integrated and comprehensive approaches and programmes with regard to education and training in the field of water resources in developing countries, and to report thereon to the Committee on Natural Resources at its ninth session;

3. Requests the regional commissions and the organizations concerned to consider the establishment and upgrading of regional and subregional water training programmes and networks, taking into account existing arrangements, and requests the Secretary-General to report on progress made in this regard to the Committee on Natural Resources at its ninth session;

IV. Technical co-operation among developing countries in water resources development

1. Urges Governments of developing countries to intensify co-operation in the form of technical co-operation among developing countries in such areas as the exchange of information and consultant services, technical and economic co-operation projects, the establishment of joint water-management centres and the standardization of services in the development of water resources;

2. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme and the other organizations of the United Nations system concerned with water development to play a catalytic role in promoting projects for technical co-operation among interested developing countries by assisting in formulating and carrying out proposals designed to promote co-operation among developing countries;

V. International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade

1. Calls upon Governments to take concrete steps, including the establishment of national committees, to proceed rapidly with the development of rational action plans for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade and to attain their respective targets for the Decade, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/18;

2. Further calls upon Governments of Member States to give sufficient priority to the Decade in their overall development plans, so that adequate resources for achieving the targets set for the Decade may be made available;

3. Notes the progress being made by organizations in the United Nations system in the context of the Decade, in particular the role of the Steering Committee for Co-operative Action, in bringing about a concerted approach to these activities and calls upon the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to increase their technical co-operation with and financial support for developing countries, so as to bring about a substantial improvement in the level of services in the supply of drinking water and in sanitation by 1990;

4. Urges Governments to recognize the role of the resident co-ordinator in carrying out his responsibilities as the focal point for co-operative action for the Decade at the country level and to provide assistance to facilitate that task;

VI. International co-operation in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan

1. Takes note of the arrangements made by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination for co-operation and co-ordination at the international level;

2. Takes note of the guidelines agreed upon by the organizations of the United Nations system for consultation and co-ordination with regard to field project activities, and looks forward to their implementation;

3. Recommends that the United Nations Development Programme and all other programmes and agencies of the system, including the World Bank, engaged in executing technical assistance programmes and projects in developing countries in the field of water resources development funded by the Programme, should ensure the full application of the policies relating to technical co-operation set forth in the decision of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme annexed to General Assembly resolution 3405(XXX) of 28 November 1975 and the policies governing the execution of such programmes and projects, inter alia, as set out in Governing Council decisions 25/20 of 3 July 1978 and 79/48 of 10 July 1979, so as to secure the maximum possible participation, as appropriate, of local technical and material resources, and to place the fullest possible reliance on local resources, including engineering consultants and contractors, wherever they are found competent to handle their task independently or in collaboration with foreign consultants; that in the implementation of these policies due consideration should continue to be given to making local and foreign consulting firms and contractors jointly responsible when the local firm is a major participant; that in appropriate situations the lead/principal role in joint ventures should be given to the major contributors, whether local or foreign firms; and considers that the full implementation of the procedures and rules already established and those which may be agreed upon in the future by the Governing Council of the Pro-programme is essential to improve the effectiveness of the Programme's assistance to the developing countries for enhancing their capabilities of implementing the Mar del Plata Action Plan within the shortest possible time:

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with the organizations of the United Nations system, a report, based on existing material, on the progress Governments have made in achieving the goals of the Mar del Plata Action Plan and of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, to be submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources at its eighth session, with a view to enabling the Committee to make its contribution in those fields to the first review of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, scheduled for 1984;

5. Calls upon the Committee on Natural Resources to review further at its ninth session the overall progress made in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan by Governments and by the United Nations system, simultaneously with the review of the progress made in the attainment of the objectives of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, to be carried out in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 34/191 and 35/18 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1957 B (LIX) of 25 July 1975.

Institutional arrangements, laws and regulations, and policy

In its resolution of 24 July 1981 on water resources development,<sup>(5)</sup> the Economic and Social Council endorsed a proposal by the Secretary-General for organizing interdisciplinary advisory missions to assist Governments, at their request, in formulating comprehensive water policies and national master plans and in setting up legislative and administrative arrangements. The missions would be composed of experts from various United Nations organizations and would be funded from extrabudgetary resources. The Council asked Governments to formulate water policy statements and urged them to intensify their efforts to formulate and update water legislation.

The Council stated that the missions should be organized along lines set out in the 1981 report of the Committee on Natural Resources.<sup>(1)</sup> Among several points the Committee had agreed to in May were that regional commissions would play leading roles in organizing the missions and that only projects formally requested by Governments would be considered.

In October, the Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources (p. 687) agreed on further points regarding the missions, including the principle that they should not as a rule become involved in formulating specific projects for implementation by any given organization but should concentrate on broader issues and that countries receiving extensive international assistance would not be the most appropriate choice for pilot missions.<sup>(2)</sup>

The proposal for interdisciplinary missions was originally made by the Secretary-General in 1980, in a report to the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(6)</sup> Details were spelt out in an April 1981 report to the Committee on Natural Resources on progress and prospects in water resources policy, planning, legislative and institutional arrangements.<sup>(3)</sup> This report stressed the importance of formulating national water policy statements as guides for planning, discussed the effects of water pricing policies, and noted the need for improved national water legislation along with effective mechanisms for co-ordinating water interests at different jurisdictional levels.

United Nations activities in water resources planning, management and policy formulation were largely concentrated in the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, the regional commissions, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Environment Programme. In his report to the Committee on Natural Resources on the water resources activities of the United Nations system,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that, since planning, management and policy issues arose in regard to both general and specific aspects of water resources, any attempt to reduce the existing overlap among organizations would probably decrease the total capacity of the system to assist developing countries.

Assessment of water resources

In 1981, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) were jointly engaged in implementing a project aimed at increasing national capabilities and determining countries' needs with regard to water resources assessment. Describing this and other activities of the United Nations system in a report to the Committee on Natural Resources,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General said that WMO activities included an innovative approach to technology transfer through its Hydrological Operational Multi-purpose Subprogramme. Among UNESCO projects was a survey of discharges of sediments and water pollutants from rivers to the sea, as part of the regional seas programme of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) (p. 833). The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) assisted countries to utilize isotope techniques for the assessment of surface and ground water resources. Under the Global Environmental Monitoring System, several agencies co-operated in the monitoring of inland water quality.

In a report to the Committee on water resources development since the 1977 United Nations Water Conference,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that lack of reliable data continued to create serious problems in most developing countries, and suggested the advisability of co-ordinated data-collection arrangements among national agencies, with one agency serving as a focal point. He also suggested that the Committee consider formulating specific measures of assistance to developing countries, including a call for increased bilateral and multi-lateral assistance in the form of scholarships, financing, provision of equipment and technical advisory services.

In its 24 July resolution on water resources development,<sup>(3)</sup> the Economic and Social Council urged Governments to intensify water resources assessment activities, including the strengthening of data collection, processing and dissemination. The Council also requested UNESCO, WMO and other organizations to promote unified methodologies for assessment and to enhance international co-operation in that area.

Research and training of water management personnel

Programmes offered by several United Nations organizations in research on water development and training of personnel were described in the Secretary-General's April 1981 report to the Committee on Natural Resources on water-related activities in the United Nations system.<sup>(2)</sup>

On research, the UNESCO International Hydrological Programme sought to strengthen research capabilities in developing countries. The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) worked on small-scale power generation. Other UNIDO research activities concerned low-cost water-lifting devices and water desalination using solar energy.

In the field of training, UNESCO sponsored 15 continuing post-graduate courses on hydrology and water resources, providing fellowships for some 300 specialists from developing countries. Similar courses were offered by WMO, in addition to courses for hydrology technicians under a project at Niamey, Niger, financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). IAEA periodically sponsored regional courses on the application of isotope hydrology. The World Health Organization, in collaboration with UNESCO and the International Labour Organisation, supported graduate programmes for sanitary engineers and the training of water sewage works operators. UNEP offered several training programmes on integrated management of water resources. The regional commissions also had training components in some of their water resources development activities.

In his March progress report on implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General remarked on the need for a programme of concerted multifaceted action to reduce such existing constraints as lack of qualified staff to meet the massive demand for training at all levels and in different fields of water resources development.

In its 24 July resolution on water resources development,<sup>(3)</sup> the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to develop integrated and comprehensive education and training programmes. Regional commissions and other organizations were asked to consider establishing or upgrading regional programmes and Governments were urged to increase their capabilities in this area.

Technical co-operation

In his March 1981 report on implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General noted that considerable progress had been made in technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) in such areas as information exchange, exchange of experts, establishment of institutions, joint ventures and standardization of engineering services. He suggested that the Committee on Natural Resources consider urging developing countries to increase such activities.

In its 24 July resolution on water resources development,<sup>(2)</sup> the Economic and Social Council urged Governments of developing countries to intensify TCDC activities in various areas of water resources management and development, and called on UNDP and other United Nations organizations to play a catalytic role in promoting such projects. It also recommended that UNDP and others executing United Nations technical co-operation projects endeavour to secure maximum participation of local technical and material resources, including engineering consultants and contractors.

International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990)

The Economic and Social Council, in its resolution of 24 July 1981 on water resources development,<sup>(3)</sup> called on Governments to take concrete steps to develop action plans and attain their targets for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, proclaimed by the General Assembly in November 1980.<sup>(4)</sup> The Council called on intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to increase technical co-operation and financial support so as to bring about a substantial improvement in drinking water and sanitation services by the end of the Decade in 1990. It urged Governments to recognize the United Nations resident co-ordinator as a country-level focal point for co-operative action for the Decade and to provide assistance to facilitate that task.

In his April 1981 report on United Nations activities in water resources development,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General listed a series of activities undertaken in the context of the Decade, including efforts by the World Health Organization (WHO) to improve rural water supply and sanitation as a component of primary health care. In co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme, WHO also had a project on prevention of health hazards through systematic surveillance of drinking water quality. The Steering Committee for Co-operative Action, composed of representatives of United Nations organizations active in the field of drinking water supply and sanitation, ensured overall harmonization of efforts and had agreed that resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme should serve as focal points for system-wide co-operation at the country level.

UNICEF ACTIVITIES. In 1981, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) assisted water supply and sanitation programmes in 94 countries, with expenditures of more than $45 million, mainly employing simple, low-cost technology and serving low-income rural or peri-urban communities. Because lack of adequate water supply and sanitation facilities was a major factor in child disease and mortality, UNICEF work in that area was viewed as a prerequisite for improving child and national health, and for releasing women and children from the time-consuming, energy-sapping chore of carrying water. Special importance was attached to linking sanitation and health education activities to water supply schemes.

In May, the UNICEF Executive Board<sup>(2)</sup> called for greater emphasis on the social aspects of its water programmes, especially health education and the involvement of women and the community as a whole. Expressing concern about the state of maintenance of drinking water and sanitation installations in some areas, the Board said UNICEF should considerably strengthen its co-operation in programme planning and promotion of governmental services and community participation in the maintenance and operation of such installations as hand-pumps, mechanized pump stations, protected springs, piped schemes and latrines.

Shared water resources

The first United Nations Interregional Meeting of International River Organizations (Dakar, Senegal, 5-14 May 1981) brought together representatives of 36 States and 17 international river organizations to discuss institutional and legal arrangements, co-operative arrangements, and economic and other considerations related to the development and management of international river basins and other shared water resources.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Meeting drew a series of conclusions, including the following: it was desirable to have integrated development programmes drawn up and possibly executed at the basin level by recognized entities, but where that approach was not viable, co-ordination of the activities of agencies should be sought; international river organizations should deal with such matters as water quality, environmental protection, flood control and ground water investigations; the local population and others affected by water projects should be involved from the outset, not after project designs had been finalized; no agreed method existed for apportioning benefits and costs, but United Nations bodies might elaborate basic principles as a guide; and the United Nations might also serve as a clearing-house for information on financial and other aspects.

Acting on other conclusions of the Meeting, the Economic and Social Council, in a resolution adopted without vote on 24 July,<sup>(2)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to undertake several tasks within existing budgetary and staff resources, including the organization of periodic interregional seminars, preparation of a manual on technical and managerial aspects, and the collection and distribution of information on the activities of international river and lake organizations. Member States and secretariats of those organizations were urged to consider transmitting such information to the United Nations.

This text originated in the Committee on Natural Resources, which approved it on 27 May. It was approved without vote on 17 July by the Council's First (Economic) Committee.

The preparation of draft articles on the non-navigational uses of international watercourses remained on the agenda of the International Law Commission in 1981 (p. 1222).

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution VII of the Mar del Plata Action Plan, adopted on 25 March 1977 by the United Nations Water Conference,

Recalling further Council resolution 2121(LXIII) of 4 August 1977, in which it endorsed, inter alia, resolution VII of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Noting with satisfaction that the first Interregional Meeting of International River Organizations, organized by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development in co-operation with the Government of Senegal and the Organization for the Development of the Senegal River, was held at Dakar from 5 to 14 May 1981;

Considering that the first Interregional Meeting of International River Organizations reached a number of conclusions in fields pertaining to the development, use and protection of international water resources,

Further considering that some conclusions emanating from that Meeting call for the immediate attention of the appropriate United Nations bodies, agencies and organizations.

1. Urges States members of existing international river and lake organizations and the secretariats of such organizations to consider furthering the exchange of information on the development, use and protection of international water resources by transmitting to the Secretary-General, for systematic collection, analysis and distribution, periodic information concerning activities, projects and programmes of those organizations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing budgetary and manpower resources:

(a) To establish within the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development a support function for the collection, analysis and periodic distribution of information concerning the activities, programmes and developments of interested international river and lake organizations;

(b) To prepare a manual on the technical and managerial aspects of the development, use and protection of international water resources, drawing on the competence of the organizations of the United Nations system, as required;

(c) To organize periodically interregional seminars, and to facilitate the exchange of personnel, concerned with specific technical and managerial aspects of the development, use and protection of international water resources;

3. Urges the regional commissions to consider, at the request of the Governments concerned, and whenever appropriate, the promotion of training activities for the preparation of qualified cadres of managers, administrators and technicians needed for the development, use and protection of international water resources.

Co-ordination in the UN system

Ways of improving co-ordination of activities on water questions among United Nations organizations were considered in several United Nations bodies during 1981.

In his April report to the Committee on Natural Resources on the activities of the United Nations system in this field,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that, while considerable progress had been made in harmonizing problems dealing with specific aspects of water, such as drinking water supply and environmental considerations, more complex problems were created when activities cut across various categories, such as water management or legislation. General guidelines for inter-agency co-operation had been agreed upon for joint action in regard to technical assistance, suggesting how organizations should deal with overlapping activities.

In its annual overview report to the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(2)</sup> the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) noted that its Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources, established in 1979, had met in November 1980 to consider follow-up measures to the Mar del Plata Action Plan, and that field co-ordination was being improved through the use of United Nations Development Programme resident representatives.

The Economic and Social Council took note of these guidelines and ACC arrangements in its 24 July 1981 resolution on water resources development.<sup>(*)</sup>

The distribution of tasks and responsibilities between the regional commissions and other United Nations bodies in the field of water resources was considered briefly by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) at its May/June session (p. 1076). It examined a note by the Secretary-General<sup>(1)</sup> stating that, on the whole, the current distribution of tasks and responsibilities appeared to correspond to what was needed, though some adjustments might be appropriate. CPC was informed orally that, at a meeting of water resources programme managers at United Nations Headquarters on 18 May, representatives of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development had differed with the view expressed by regional commission officials that water activities were largely regional in nature, but participants had agreed that analysis of the long-term distribution of tasks and responsibilities could be initiated in the context of preparations for the proposed United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989.

CPC found the Secretary-General's note-which also dealt with environmental issues (p. 842)-lacking in serious attempts at analysis and decided to return to the matter in 1982 on the basis of a further report.<sup>(3)</sup>

of a June report by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), written by Inspector Julio C. Rodriguez Arias and transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in August.<sup>(5)</sup> Stating that the implementation process was just beginning, the report said that the initiative in planning and executing action remained the exclusive prerogative of Governments; the United Nations system could only play a supporting role. The concepts, policies and institutions evolved by the United Nations system needed to be strengthened and consolidated. Co-ordination arrangements were on the right course, including decentralization to the regions, but the thrust did not appear to have been sufficiently vigorous in all cases and the arrangements remained embryonic.

Commenting on this report in November, the Secretary-General welcomed the emphasis it placed on the primary role of Governments. He stated that current inter-agency arrangements through the Intersecretariat Group provided an appropriate basis for functional co-ordination and for integrated planning and implementation, as well as for increased efforts for joint planning of activities.

The JIU report was discussed at the second session of the Intersecretariat Group (Geneva, 19-23 October),<sup>(4)</sup> whose views were incorporated into the Secretary-General's comments. The Group also reviewed the water resources activities of the United Nations system and agreed on some guidelines for the interdisciplinary missions that were to advise Governments on policy and legislative matters pertaining to water resources (p. 683).

Cartography

Implementation of the recommendations of the Second UN Cartographic Conference for the Americas

On 4 May 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> acting without vote on an oral proposal by its President, the Economic and Social Council took note of a report by the Secretary-General<sup>(2)</sup> on measures taken to implement the recommendations of the Second United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas, held at Mexico City in 1979.<sup>(3)</sup>

The report mentioned United Nations technical co-operation projects in Bolivia, Honduras and Mexico on the use of remote sensing data from satellites; a published United Nations study on the world's surveying and mapping manpower and training facilities; a study under way on the status of world hydrographic surveying and nautical charting; and plans for an inter-regional seminar in Moscow in September 1981 on thematic mapping as a tool for economic and social development.

Recommendations of the Second United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas

At its 13th plenary meeting, on 4 May 1981, the Council took note of the progress report of the Secretary-General on measures taken to implement, as appropriate, the recommendations of the Second United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas.

Preparations for the Tenth UN Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Council, in a resolution adopted without vote on 4 May 1981,<sup>(1)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to arrange for the convening of the Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific in the first quarter of 1983 at the headquarters of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, at Bangkok, Thailand. The Council also asked him to implement as appropriate the recommendations of the Ninth Regional Conference, held at Wellington, New Zealand, in February 1980,<sup>(2)</sup> including the convening of a working group of experts on space cartography, the Group of Experts on Hydrographic Surveying and Nautical Charting, and an advisory panel on cadastral surveying and mapping. The Secretary-General was requested to report in 1984 on the desirability and feasibility of holding United Nations inter-regional cartographic conferences.

This text, introduced by New Zealand, was also sponsored by Australia, India, Nepal and Thailand.

In the Council's discussion, Australia expressed the view that regional conferences were more economical and accessible, and should not be replaced by a single world conference. New Zealand observed that small island States and isolated developing countries would benefit more from a regional than a global conference. Sweden believed that United Nations cartographic conferences should focus on operational matters related to the conditions and problems of a particular region. However, the German Democratic Republic believed that interregional conferences should be held periodically in place of regional ones, to help solve global problems. Canada and the United Kingdom stated their understanding that a global conference would supersede and not be added to the existing regional conferences.

Brazil opposed the establishment of regional educational centres for cartography, remarking that they would duplicate the work of existing bodies such as the Cartography Section of the United Nations Department of Technical Cooperation for Development and the Pan American Institute of Geography and History, a specialized entity of the Organization of American States.

Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the Ninth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific, held at Wellington from 11 to 22 February 1980.

Expressing its appreciation for the valuable contribution made by the Conference to the promotion of cartographic work conducted in the countries of the region for the purposes of their economic and social development plans,

Noting the recommendation of the Conference that a tenth conference should be convened in 1983,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to convene the Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific at the headquarters of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at Bangkok in the first quarter of 1983;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to take, as appropriate, practical measures:

(a) For the implementation of the recommendations of the Ninth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific;

(b) To convene, in accordance with the recommendations of the Conference:

(i) A working group of experts on space cartography;

(ii) The Group of Experts on Hydrographic Surveying and Nautical Charting;

(iii) An advisory panel on cadastral surveying and mapping; and to keep the Council informed of developments in those matters:

3. Requests the Secretary-General to assess the desirability and feasibility of holding United Nations Interregional cartographic conferences and to submit a report on the matter to the Council in 1984, taking into account the views expressed by delegations during the Council's consideration of the question.

Chapter X

Energy

The United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, which met at Nairobi, Kenya, from 10 to 21 August 1981, approved a plan to promote the increased use of non-conventional power sources, including solar and wind power, ocean energy, biomass conversion, fuelwood and charcoal, geothermal energy, oil shale and tar sands, peat and draught animal power, as well as hydropower.<sup>(1)</sup> The aim of the plan, known as the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, was to help the world move away from its current dependence on depletable supplies of petroleum and gas (p. 689).

The General Assembly, in December,<sup>(5)</sup> endorsed the Nairobi Programme of Action and established an Interim Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy to launch implementation of the Programme in 1982.

The Energy Account of the United Nations Development Programme, in its first full year of operation, financed 13 projects (p. 711). One of them was the Information Centre on Heavy Crude and Tar Sands, established in May with the co-sponsorship of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (p. 708).

The environmental aspects of energy were under study by the United Nations Environment Programme (p. 839), while the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements was authorized to initiate work on energy requirements for human settlements (p. 852). The Economic and Social Council, in May, requested improvements in the United Nations collection and dissemination of energy statistics (p. 1069).

With regard to nuclear energy, the General Assembly, after considering in November the annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency, commended the Agency for its continuing efforts in promoting the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and noted the steady improvement in its safeguards system, intended to prevent diversion of supervised nuclear materials to military purposes.<sup>(3)</sup> Further, the Assembly endorsed in December<sup>(14)</sup> the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy<sup>(2)</sup> and decided to hold the Conference at Geneva in August/September 1983.

The use of nuclear power sources in outer space, both technical (p. 116) and legal (p. 122) aspects, remained under study in the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space.

UN Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy

Nairobi Programme of Action

The Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy<sup>(3)</sup> was adopted at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, which met at Nairobi, Kenya from 10 to 21 August 1981.

The Programme of Action stated in its introduction that the issue confronting the international community was achievement of an orderly and peaceful energy transition from the current international economy based primarily on hydrocarbons (petroleum and gas to one based increasingly on new and renewable sources of energy. This was to be done in a manner which, consistent with the national plans and priorities of individual countries, was socially equitable, economically and technically viable and environmentally sustainable. An effective energy transition needed to conform with the principle of full and permanent sovereignty of each country over its natural resources, entailed the rationalization of energy development, and bore direct implications for the quality of life and general well-being.

The Programme identified five broad policy areas for concerted action with international support: assessment and planning (p. 697); research, development and demonstration (p. 697); transfer, adaptation and application of mature technologies (p. 699); information flows (p. 698); and education and training (p. 699).

Within these areas, specific measures were identified in relation to individual energy sources. These included charcoal and fuelwood (p. 707); certain fossil fuels, particularly oil sands and shales (p. 707) and peat (p. 708); non-conventional energy sources, including biomass (p. 708), geothermal, marine and solar (p. 709), and wind (p. 710); hydropower (p. 710); and draught animals (p. 710). The Programme also proposed measures for the mobilization of additional financial resources for developing countries (p. 703) and for institutional arrangements for implementation and monitoring, including an intergovernmental body, co-ordination in the United Nations system, regional and subregional action, and co-operation among developing countries (p. 700).

The Programme was based on a preliminary draft prepared by the Secretary-General of the Conference, in accordance with a request made on 16 April<sup>(1)</sup> by its Preparatory Committee (p. 694) after the Committee had discussed a preliminary outline he had submitted. The Committee considered the draft in June and decided on 7 August to transmit it to the Conference.<sup>(2)</sup> The Conference considered it in both of its main committees before adopting it on 21 August.

Several reservations were expressed at the Conference following adoption of the Programme of Action.

Eastern European States considered that implementation of the Programme was basically the task of the countries themselves, and did not agree with provisions which emphasized the role of external economic factors, especially private foreign capital, in harnessing the energy potential of the developing countries.

On institutional arrangements, the Eastern European countries, as well as members of the European Community (EC), stressed the need to make full use of existing bodies and staff within the United Nations system. The Eastern European States and the United States said there must be no additional financial implications for the United Nations.

The EC members, Switzerland and the United States expressed reservations regarding the Programme's reference to permanent sovereignty over natural resources, stating that the application of that principle had to be governed by the rules of international law.

Japan and the United States reserved their positions on a paragraph calling for strengthening the developing countries' ability to evaluate, select, negotiate, acquire and adapt foreign technologies (p. 699). Japan said this provision did not prejudice the outcome of ongoing negotiations on technology transfer within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (p. 755).

Decisions: Preparatory Committee (report, A/36/47):

Report: (<sup>3</sup>)Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, A/CONF.100/11 (Sales No. E.81.I.24).

Conference resolutions

In addition to the Nairobi Programme of Action, the Conference adopted seven resolutions and two decisions on 21 August.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Conference invited Governments to consider energy policy in close relation to soil, water and forest policies (p. 696). In the context of rural development, it urged acceleration of reforestation programmes and the development of other new and renewable energy sources to conserve fuelwood (p. 707) and improve living standards in rural areas (p. 706). The Conference called on the United Nations system and other international bodies to support the development of new and renewable energy sources in Africa (p. 624), Asia (p. 644) and Latin America (p. 666).

The Conference acknowledged the right of all countries to explore and acquire technology relating to all kinds of new and renewable energy sources, and to use or control it without political constraints or fear of aggression from any other State (p. 699).

The Conference condemned Israel's aggression in June against Iraq's nuclear research centre (p. 279), warned against the danger of joint military activities between Israel and South Africa (p. 192), called on Israel to stop implementing its Mediterranean-Dead Sea Canal project (p. 319), condemned the plunder and illegal exploitation of Namibian energy resources by the South African régime and multinational corporations (p. 1171), and demanded the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola (p. 218).

Implementation of the Programme

The Nairobi Programme of Action was endorsed by the General Assembly in a resolution adopted without vote on 17 December 1981.<sup>(2)</sup> The Assembly urged Governments and organizations to implement the Programme, and established an Interim Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy to launch that implementation in 1982 (p. 700). The Committee was to formulate plans, promote the mobilization of resources and recommend guidelines to the financial organs of the United Nations system in respect of Programme implementation. The Assembly made the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation responsible for co-ordination within the United Nations system (p. 701), requested United Nations regional commissions to develop plans and programmes (p. 702), called for international support for co-operation among developing countries (p. 703) and emphasized the need for additional financial resources (p. 704).

The initial draft of this resolution was submitted by Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries.<sup>(1)</sup> On the basis of informal consultations on that draft, a Vice-Chairman of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee submitted a revised text, to which the Vice-Chairman and Japan made oral drafting changes before the Committee approved it without vote on 7 December.

The original and the final texts differed essentially in the fact that, while the Algerian draft would have had the Interim Committee develop and formulate policy guidelines for the United Nations system, the final text entrusted the Committee with recommending guidelines. Other changes in each of the remaining sections were on co-ordination in the United Nations system, regional and subregional action, co-operation among developing countries and financing.

Poland, speaking also for Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said they had not objected to adoption of the resolution without vote in view of the importance of energy but believed its financial implications should be met from existing resources. The United States said the resolution emphasized United Nations and other international efforts to implement a programme that was mainly the responsibility of individual countries; the United States would not contribute additional resources to the United Nations for that purpose and believed any budget increases had to be offset by savings in other areas. Comments on institutional arrangements were made by Canada and Japan.

In the Second Committee's debate on development and international economic co-operation, a number of developing countries stressed the need for concrete action to implement the Nairobi Programme of Action. India expressed hope that the international community would have the political will to implement it, that institutional arrangements would be made as soon as possible and that additional resource transfers would take place, as the developing countries would not look kindly on dilatory tactics. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya expressed satisfaction with the Programme but warned that it would remain a dead letter so long as the means for putting it into effect and financing it were not found.

Nepal welcomed the Programme as a first step towards the promotion and utilization of alternative energy sources but also noted that implementation depended on the support of Governments and of the United Nations system. Uruguay hoped the Programme would be implemented promptly through technological and financial arrangements geared to the establishment of a new international economic order; meanwhile, the only option of countries without their own conventional energy sources was to depend on oil imports and to suffer the economic, financial and political consequences. Venezuela said it was concerned that some developed countries at the Conference, from both the market economy and the centrally planned economy groups, had taken positions tantamount to a denial of the necessary material resources and to an attempt to undermine implementation of the results of the Conference. Zambia pointed to the need to establish a viable machinery to implement the Programme.

Indonesia thought the adoption of the Programme augured well for international co-operation in energy and heralded the beginning of a global approach to the transition from fossil fuels to new and renewable energy sources. Oman hoped the results of the Conference would prove to be the first real steps towards increased international co-operation. The Philippines hoped the Programme would fit into the framework of a world energy plan that would secure an orderly transition from the era of hydrocarbons to that of diversified energy sources. The Republic of Korea hoped the Programme would contribute towards stabilizing energy prices and to advances in energy technology. The Sudan trusted that global solutions would be found to energy problems along the lines agreed upon in the Programme.

Among developed countries, the United Kingdom, speaking for the European Community members, urged priority attention to activities on fuelwood, small-scale rural projects and technological research. For the Nordic States, Norway also believed that fuelwood problems deserved priority.

Canada said it would establish a $25-million programme to assist the Sudano-Sahelian countries of Africa to develop new energy resources and would intensify its aid to countries needing help in developing national energy plans. Israel offered to join other nations in implementing projects to make full use of renewable energy sources such as solar energy, including projects designed for energy conversion of agricultural waste. Italy said it would provide fellowships or training in 12 Italian centres, send experts to developing countries and set up training centres there; it hoped to finance large agro-forestry demonstration projects in Latin America, Africa and Asia. The United States viewed the Conference as a success and said it would support selected elements of the Programme, including training programmes and efforts to help developing countries assess and utilize their resources more efficiently.

Portugal welcomed the Nairobi Programme, saying that, if satisfactorily implemented, it would mark an important advance towards global solutions to problems affecting the whole international community. Spain supported the Programme but observed that hydrocarbons could not quickly be replaced and that the new technologies were still not commercially viable.

Bulgaria could not subscribe to provisions of the Programme that entailed an over-estimation of external economic factors, particularly private foreign capital; it believed the energy problems of developing countries could be solved primarily through their own resources, the elaboration of national energy programmes, personnel training, and the effective and rational use of financial resources. The German Democratic Republic stated that assistance to developing countries for exploring, developing and planning alternative energy sources could not take the form of private capital investment or new operations by transnational corporations. Hungary endorsed the statement in the Nairobi Programme that effective energy transition must conform to the principle of full and permanent national sovereignty over natural resources. The Ukrainian SSR disagreed with provisions of the Programme that would assign a dominant role to private capital; it believed assistance to developing countries should give priority to development of the public sector.

Recalling further its resolutions 33/148 of 20 December 1978, 34/190 of 18 December 1979 and 35/204 of 16 December 1980 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 2119(LXIII) of 4 August 1977, 1978/61 of 3 August 1978 and 1979/66 of 3 August 1979 and Council decision 1980/187 of 25 July 1980 regarding the convening of and preparation for the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, Convinced of the importance of developing new and renewable sources of energy in order to contribute to meeting requirements for continued economic and social development, particularly in the developing countries, through, inter alia, the transition from the present International economy based primarily on hydrocarbons to one based increasingly on new and renewable sources of energy.

Stressing that the primary responsibility for promoting the development and utilization of new and renewable sources of energy rests with individual countries, that in this regard international co-operation is indispensable and should be directed to assist and support national efforts, that developed countries bear a special responsibility to ensure that both their bilateral and their multilateral efforts contribute actively to this end and that other countries in a position to do so should also continue to promote efforts in this regard.

Reaffirming that the United Nations system should fully participate in and support the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy through adequate institutional arrangements and additional and adequate resources, and that it is imperative to increase the responsiveness of the system in this respect,

Further reaffirming that the final decision on further institutional measures will be taken by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session,

Recognizing the urgent need for adopting effective measures to facilitate the transfer and adaptation of technology from developed to developing countries in particular and for mobilization of financial resources for the development of new and renewable sources of energy in developing countries,

Taking note of the Report of the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, adopted by the Conference on 21 August 1981,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the Conference,

Noting with satisfaction the agreements reached on some issues at the Conference, as contained in the report it adopted,

Expressing deep concern that no final decisions were taken on some other important questions,

Recognizing the need for continuing commitment and efforts on the part of the international community in the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, adopted by the Conference,

Preparations for the Conference

Advance work for the Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy was carried out at the global, regional, subregional and national levels.

Preparations at the global level included a session each of six ad hoc expert groups; two sessions each of eight technical panels, consisting of a total of 77 experts; and a meeting of a Synthesis Group (p. 695) which reviewed the reports of the panels and other groups and drafted a report for the Conference taking account of their main conclusions.<sup>(2)</sup>

The expert groups, meeting in December 1980 and January 1981, dealt with policy issues and sectoral uses: research and development (p. 698) and technology transfer (p. 699), information flows (p. 698), education and training (p. 699), financing (p. 703), industrial issues including energy utilization in transportation and allied sectors (p. 705) and rural energy including utilization in agriculture (p. 706). The technical panels, which met between November 1979 and December 1980, were concerned with particular energy sources: fuelwood and charcoal (p. 707), oil shale and tar sands (p. 707), biomass energy (p. 708), geothermal energy (p. 709), ocean energy (p. 709), solar energy (p. 710), wind energy (p. 710) and hydropower (p. 710). In addition, an ad hoc working group prepared a report on draught animal power (p. 710) and Finland submitted a paper on peat (p. 708).

Meetings were organized by the five United Nations regional commissions (p. 695), and symposia organized in the framework of preparations for the Conference were held in Moscow, Tokyo and Stockholm, Sweden. In addition, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental bodies contributed papers giving particulars of their past and proposed activities.

National papers from 88 countries were submitted to the Conference, describing existing or prospective measures for supplementing or replacing energy resources. To encourage a large number of contributions, the Preparatory Committee, on 16 April, extended the deadline for submission of national papers to 31 May.<sup>(1)</sup>

Preparatory Committee

As decided by the General Assembly in 1979,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee on Natural Resources, open to participation by all United Nations Member States as full members, acted as Preparatory Committee for the Conference. It held two sessions in 1981, <sup>(1)</sup> its third from 30 March to 16 April in New York, and its fourth from 8 to 26 June in New York and from 3 to 7 August at Nairobi, Kenya.

On 16 April the Committee approved a preliminary draft provisional agenda<sup>(4)</sup> and draft rules of procedure<sup>(5)</sup> for the Conference, urged that it be attended by high-level delegations<sup>(6)</sup> and approved its organization of work.<sup>(7)</sup> The Committee requested the Conference Secretary-General to prepare a preliminary draft programme of action (p. 689), extended the deadline for submission of national papers (see above) and requested that the idea of establishing a computerized retrieval system for studies on new and renewable energy sources be pursued if funding could be secured (p. 699). On 25 June the Committee approved a provisional agenda<sup>(8)</sup> and documents list<sup>(10)</sup> for the Conference, and decided to resume its session at Nairobi in August in an attempt to agree on the draft programme of action.<sup>(9)</sup> On 5 August it agreed on the regional distribution of Conference officers<sup>(11)</sup> and on 7 August it decided to transmit to the Conference a preliminary draft programme of action<sup>(12)</sup>

On 17 December,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly took note of the 1981 report of the Preparatory Committee. It did so without vote on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, made on the oral proposal of its Chairman and adopted, also without vote, on 7 December.

General Assembly decision 36/447

Adopted without vote Meeting 103 17 December 1981

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/694/Add.12) without vote, 7 December (meeting 46): oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 69 (o).

United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1981, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy on its third and fourth sessions.

Regional meetings

The five United Nations regional commissions organized preparatory meetings between December 1980 and March 1981 or prepared studies in connection with the Conference<sup>(1)</sup>

The regional preparatory meeting held by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, 10-15 December 1980) suggested that international machinery might be set up to underwrite financial risks of large-scale projects using relatively unproven energy technology.<sup>(6)</sup> The preparatory meeting of the Economic Commission for Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 12-16 January 1981) produced a regional plan of action which included a proposal for the establishment and development of specialized regional or subregional training institutes and a regional bank or fund to finance energy projects.<sup>(2)</sup> An expert group meeting convened by the Economic Commission for Western Asia (Beirut, Lebanon, 12-16 January) urged the countries of the region to formulate a comprehensive national policy for utilization of new and renewable energy sources<sup>(3)</sup>

A ministerial-level meeting held by the Economic Commission for Latin America (Mexico City, 19 and 20 March), preceded by a technical session (16-18 March), adopted a Regional Plan of Action that listed priority programmes through which interested countries would co-operate in the study and design of specific schemes for introducing new energy sources.<sup>(4)</sup> The Economic Commission for Europe, in a report based on secretariat studies and on conclusions of seminars and symposia, stated that the long-term difficulties faced by developing countries in meeting their energy demands could reach crisis proportions if organizational, political and economic measures were not taken in time<sup>(3)</sup>

Synthesis Group

A synthesis report, reviewing the main issues before the Conference on the basis of work done by the technical panels and groups of experts (p. 694), was prepared by a Synthesis Group of 28 experts which met at United Nations Headquarters from 17 to 27 February 1981.<sup>(1)</sup> The Group reviewed the technological and economic prospects of various energy sources, discussed the problems involved in the application of new and renewable energy technologies, and examined the relationship between energy and development with particular reference to rural, urban, industrial and other sectoral issues.

The Group cited projections to the effect that the contribution of new and renewable energy sources to total world energy supply would have to rise from the current share of 15 per cent to 25 per cent in 20 years if even modest development objectives were to be met in developing countries, assuming a tripling of their total energy consumption. Modernized traditional and new energy technologies could assist both rural and urban development because they could be utilized in both centralized and decentralized modes—large-scale projects mainly benefiting urban areas, and small-scale hydropower, solar installations and windmills elsewhere.

Energy policy

CONFERENCE ACTION. In the Nairobi Programme of Action, adopted on 21 August 1981 (p. 689), the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy<sup>(5)</sup> stated that energy planning had a significant role to play in promoting an efficient and rational use of available resources and a shift away from the current excessive reliance on hydrocarbons towards a more diversified mix of energy sources. Individual countries had the primary responsibility to promote the development and utilization of new and renewable energy sources. However, developed countries had a particular responsibility to use their economic and managerial potential to support efforts aimed at an effective energy transition. Patterns of consumption which gave access to energy to a limited number of countries, or to a few within countries, were not compatible with agreed international goals.

The close relationship between energy policy and environmental policy was stressed in a resolution of 21 August<sup>(9)</sup> by which the Conference invited Governments to consider the two together, with particular reference to soil, water and forest policies (p. 839).
