* The annex is being issued without formal editing, in the languages of submission only.

Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1, held its twenty-seventh session from 1 to 12 May 2017. The review of Algeria was held at the 12th meeting, on 8 May 2017. The delegation of Algeria was headed by the Minister of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation, Ramtane Lamamra. At its 17th meeting, held on 11 May 2017, the Working Group adopted the report on Algeria.
2. On 13 February 2017, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Algeria: China, Slovenia and Togo.
3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to Council resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Algeria:
  - (a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/27/DZA/1);
  - (b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/27/DZA/2);
  - (c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/27/DZA/3).
4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Belgium, Liechtenstein, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia, Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Algeria through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. In his introductory statement, the Minister of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation thanked all participating countries for their interest and explained that the report had been prepared by an interdisciplinary working group, with the involvement of civil society.
6. In Algeria, democratization was reflected in the regular holding of free and transparent elections, diversity of the membership of the parliament (with 36 political parties and 20 independent parliamentarians), democratic functioning of institutions, free expression of opinions and a flourishing civil society.
7. The adoption of two laws in 2012 had led to an increase in the number of registered political parties (71) and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) (more than 100,000). Freedom of association was exercised by 65 trade union organizations and through a tripartite meeting that allowed the Government, employers and trade unions to review and agree on consensual arrangements to safeguard employment, strengthen social protection and enhance competitiveness.
8. The freedoms of assembly and demonstration were regularly exercised throughout Algeria. A measure that applied on an exceptional basis to public demonstrations in Algiers had been adopted to preserve public order and safety.
9. The Algerian press — with 142 daily, 43 weekly and 90 monthly periodicals — was unanimously recognized as one of the freest in the region. Censorship did not exist, nor was there a monopoly on printing.
10. The Minister referred to the establishment on 9 March 2017 of the National Human Rights Council, which was a constitutional body composed mainly of civil society representatives, taking into account the principle of gender parity, with extensive powers for monitoring, early warning, assessment and information and awareness-raising in the area of human rights.

11. The adoption of a new Constitution on 7 February 2016 had led to substantial innovations, in particular: promotion of Tamazight as an official language and establishment of an academy for its full development; a stipulation, not subject to constitutional review, that presidents may be re-elected only once; strengthening of the rights given to the opposition in parliament; strengthening of the independence and autonomy of the Constitutional Council and the Supreme Council of Justice; establishment of an independent authority for election oversight; promotion by the State of gender parity in the labour market; introduction of the principle of the right of appeal in criminal cases; strengthening of measures prohibiting violence against children; provisions to protect and care for persons with disabilities and older persons and destitute people; and the establishment of advisory bodies such as the National Anti-corruption Agency, the National Council for Scientific and Technological Research and the Youth Council.

12. In the justice sphere, the Minister called attention to the amendments to the Criminal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, the simplification of procedures, the strengthening of the specialization of courts and the implementation of their decisions and the launch of a modernization plan aimed at providing more humane conditions of detention, including in holding facilities, with regular inspections by the prosecution service. He confirmed that there were no places of detention in Algeria that were outside the law.

13. Algeria had observed a de facto moratorium on the application of the death penalty since 1993 and had initiated a process to limit the crimes subject to capital punishment.

14. The Minister reiterated his Government's commitment to the universality of human rights, which in no way signified that models of social or political organization must be uniform or conform to a single paradigm. He refuted the amalgam of sexual orientation and discrimination that had been put forward in various forums; sexual orientation was a private matter, for individuals.

15. Freedom of worship and religion was guaranteed by the Constitution and was exercised within the framework of the law, without any discrimination. The State budget covered the maintenance and renovation of places of worship and remuneration for the clergy of all religions. Muslim, Christian and Jewish religious festivals were all celebrated in Algeria and by law, the faithful were entitled to time off on such occasions.

16. The Minister stressed the priority that the Government accorded to the question of women's rights through measures such as: increasing women's representation in elected bodies; promotion of women to leadership positions in all fields; the punishment of all forms of violence against women in all places and circumstances (in private, in public and in the workplace) and the provision of free court-appointed legal aid for victims; the establishment of the National Women's Council; the adoption of a strategy for the prevention of violence and for the support and integration of victims; and the establishment of a fund to provide alimony and child support for divorced women whose former spouses defaulted on payments.

17. Human trafficking and the smuggling of migrants were now offences punishable under the Criminal Code. An ad hoc national body had been set up to monitor such problems, which had arisen essentially as a result of the migration crisis.

18. Algeria was a party to most international and regional human rights instruments and in September 2016 the Government had ratified the Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the Rights of Women in Africa and the African Charter on Democracy, Elections and Governance. It had submitted a number of reports to the competent bodies.

19. Various mandate holders of the Human Rights Council had already visited Algeria. The Minister extended invitations to the Special Rapporteur on the rights of persons with disabilities, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, the Special Rapporteur on cultural rights, the Independent Expert on the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons, the Independent Expert on human rights and international solidarity and the Independent Expert on the effects of foreign debt and other related international financial obligations of States on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights.

20. The Minister referred to the efforts made by Algeria in terms of massive infrastructure investments, non-contributory social protection spending and social transfers for the realization of economic rights.

21. The Minister presented the new economic growth model for the period 2016-2030, which aimed to stabilize the country's macroeconomic and social situation, optimize State resources and rationalize expenditure.

22. While emphasizing the consequences of the threat of terrorism that continued to weigh on neighbouring countries, the Minister reaffirmed the commitment of Algeria to continue the fight against terrorist groups and those supporting them politically and through the media.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

23. During the interactive dialogue, 101 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

24. Tunisia welcomed the constitutional amendments to the Criminal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure and amendments establishing the National Human Rights Council, as well as the efforts relating to economic and social rights.

25. Turkey noted institutional, policy and socioeconomic reforms achieved through amendments to the Constitution. It enquired about further measures to be taken to improve the quality of education.

26. Ukraine welcomed that the role of the opposition and the independence of the judiciary had been strengthened, that the autonomy of the Constitutional Council and women's rights had been reinforced and that the National Child Protection Ombudsman had been established.

27. The United Arab Emirates expressed appreciation for the enactment of Act No. 15-12, whereby the Office of the National Child Protection Ombudsman had been established.

28. The United Kingdom welcomed the criminalization of domestic violence and sexual harassment. It noted that domestic law potentially limited the freedoms of conscience and religion.

29. The United States of America expressed concern about the arrests of members of the independent media and Ahmadi Muslims, as well as about the lengthy and cumbersome registration process under the law on associations.

30. Uruguay encouraged Algeria to continue to increase efforts relating to gender parity and women's rights and expressed appreciation for the existing de facto moratorium on the death penalty.

31. Uzbekistan welcomed recent constitutional amendments leading to the strengthening of the judiciary and the establishment of the National Human Rights Council.

32. Qatar commended the constitutional amendments adopted to strengthen the promotion and protection of human rights and to establish the National Human Rights Council and the Office of the National Child Protection Ombudsman.

33. Viet Nam welcomed the establishment and consolidation of institutions; measures taken to combat poverty and promote economic, social and cultural rights; and the new Constitution.

34. Yemen appreciated the establishment of the National Human Rights Council and legislative amendments to protect the rights of women and children, as well as increased transparency in elections.
35. Zambia expressed concern that accepted recommendations regarding the freedoms of association and assembly and trade unions had not been implemented effectively. Instances of extrajudicial killings, as well as the use of excessive force by security forces during protests and demonstrations, also raised concerns.
36. Zimbabwe welcomed the establishment of the National Human Rights Council and the provision of universal access to free and non-discriminatory health care and free education up to the tertiary level.
37. Angola welcomed inclusive and transparent reforms aimed at consolidating the rule of law, good governance and human development.
38. Argentina welcomed the establishment of the National Human Rights Council and noted that Argentina had paid particular attention to freedom of expression in Algeria.
39. Armenia noted the challenges faced in the protection of women's rights and encouraged the State to take further steps to combat discrimination and violence against women.
40. Australia acknowledged the adoption of constitutional amendments and the criminalization of domestic violence and sexual harassment. It remained concerned at allegations of curtailment of the exercise of the right to freedom of expression.
41. Azerbaijan welcomed measures aimed at consolidating the independence of the judiciary, strengthening ethical standards in public affairs and modernizing public administration.
42. Bahrain praised the acceptance by Algeria of most of the recommendations from the second cycle, including those put forward by Bahrain on the rights of women and children.
43. Bangladesh welcomed reforms aimed at consolidating the rule of law, good governance and human development, including the establishment of an election oversight authority and the National Human Rights Council.
44. Belarus welcomed legislative measures to combat human trafficking and violence against women, as well as the national strategy on human trafficking.
45. Belgium welcomed the criminalization of violence against women, and encouraged further efforts in the implementation of this new legislation. Challenges related to migration required the State's determination, notably in respect of combating discrimination.
46. The Plurinational State of Bolivia welcomed the establishment of the National Human Rights Council, the National Child Protection Ombudsman and policies for the inclusion and participation of women.
47. Bosnia and Herzegovina welcomed the establishment of the Office of the National Child Protection Ombudsman and the law on child protection.
48. Botswana expressed concern about children being subjected to prolonged pretrial detention and not always being separated from adults in detention. It encouraged Algeria to address the reported high prevalence of maternal and neonatal mortality.
49. Brazil praised achievements in promoting gender equality and the equitable realization of economic and social rights, and the establishment of the National Human Rights Council.
50. Brunei Darussalam commended the achievement of education and health targets set out in the Millennium Development Goals and encouraged Algeria to achieve the goals set out in the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. It commended the progress made in providing adequate housing.
51. Burkina Faso welcomed constitutional amendments, the establishment of the National Human Rights Council, and measures in the area of the rights of women. It welcomed the State's ratification of the Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the Rights of Women in Africa.

52. Burundi welcomed the establishment of the National Human Rights Council and measures to combat violence against women and to ensure gender equality.

53. Canada welcomed measures to prevent and reduce violence against women, to enhance women's political participation and to allow unhindered access to the Internet.

54. Chad welcomed the inclusive and transparent reforms aimed at consolidating the rule of law, good governance and further legislative development.

55. Chile expressed regret that the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance had not been ratified, and also noted the absence of progress in establishing truth, justice and reparation for victims of the conflict of the 1990s.

56. China welcomed measures to protect the rights to education, to health, to housing and to safe drinking water, as well as to combat corruption and violence against women and to strengthen judicial mechanisms to protect the rights of vulnerable groups.

57. The Congo encouraged Algeria to increase its legislative efforts, and noted with satisfaction the positive results in the realization of the rights to health and to education.

58. Côte d'Ivoire welcomed measures strengthening the legislative and institutional framework, including judicial mechanisms aimed at ensuring the independence of the judiciary.

59. Cuba welcomed the inclusive and transparent reform process, the establishment of the National Human Rights Council and cooperation with human rights mechanisms.

60. In its response, the Algerian delegation stated that no journalists were in prison for their views. Some journalists had been prosecuted for offences under the ordinary law (such as invasion of privacy and defamation). Extrajudicial executions did not take place in Algeria and security forces carried out their activities strictly within the framework of the law. The prohibitions, restrictions and prosecutions purportedly based on religion had nothing to do with the exercise of religious freedom, as those cases related to the prosecution of individuals for ordinary crimes. Racial discrimination was punishable under the Criminal Code. The arsenal of laws and the Criminal Code addressed all forms of violence against women, and victims benefited from free legal assistance. Minors were rarely incarcerated, and when they were, they were separated from adults. An act of 2012 had encouraged the registration of associations, and the laws governing the right to demonstrate were in conformity with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

61. Cyprus welcomed the State's efforts to ensure the enjoyment of the right to education, and the policy to welcome more than 40,000 persons fleeing war.

62. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea welcomed measures aimed at strengthening institutional human rights protection mechanisms, as well as the continued prioritization of education, child protection and public health.

63. Denmark highlighted that the Convention against Torture Initiative, which worked on a basis of government-to-government exchange, stood ready to explore avenues to assist Algeria.

64. Djibouti noted with satisfaction the creation of a national delegate for the promotion of children and the organic law to support information professionals.

65. Ecuador welcomed initiatives to guarantee the integration of children with disabilities in their family, educational and socioeconomic environments, and also welcomed the plan of action entitled: "Algeria worthy for children."

66. Egypt welcomed the comprehensive reforms to ensure rule of law, good governance, a human rights culture and human development, as well as the improvements in legislative and institutional frameworks.

67. Ethiopia noted the progress in institutional, political and socioeconomic reforms, including the amendment of the Constitution.
68. France enquired about the State's intention to ratify the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance in the near future.
69. Georgia encouraged the Government to pursue efforts regarding the rights of women and children and welcomed the criminalization of violence against women.
70. Germany positively noted the constitutional reform but remained concerned about challenges in the human rights situation.
71. Ghana welcomed the establishment of the National Human Rights Council and the high independent authority for elections oversight.
72. Guatemala expressed concern about reports of marginalization of minorities and indigenous peoples in Algeria.
73. Honduras welcomed the consultative process undertaken in the revision of the Constitution and the establishment of the National Human Rights Council.
74. Hungary welcomed the national strategy for combating human trafficking and the law criminalizing domestic violence against women and encouraged the State to ensure their full implementation.
75. India commended the earmarking of 30 per cent of the gross domestic product for social policy and encouraged Algeria to sustain its efforts to raise the general quality of education by streamlining selection and training.
76. Indonesia welcomed constitutional amendments providing greater access to participatory democracy, gender parity in employment, and child protection services.
77. The Islamic Republic of Iran expressed appreciation for the enactment of provisions that legally defined offences such as the use of a child to beg, kidnapping, and sexual assault of a minor.
78. Iraq commended constitutional amendments encouraging local participatory democracy, the establishment of the high independent authority for elections oversight and the National Human Rights Council.
79. Ireland urged that a standing invitation be extended to special procedures mandate holders and outstanding visit requests be accepted. It also urged the State to decriminalize consensual same-sex relations and to create a safe and enabling environment for human rights defenders and civil society.
80. Israel stated that Algeria still needed to address many serious deficiencies, including a lack of freedom of religion and the unequal rights of women.
81. Italy welcomed the prohibition of child labour, the establishment of a national delegate for child protection, the State's objective of gender parity in employment and the criminalization of violence against women.
82. Jordan commended the establishment of the high independent authority for elections oversight and the National Human Rights Council.
83. Kenya made recommendations.
84. Kuwait welcomed that the State continued its reforms through the adoption of institutional, political and economic reforms that had led to improvement in the legislative framework, to increased citizens' participation and to improved living conditions and that facilitated access to public services.
85. Lebanon commended the constitutional amendments strengthening participatory democracy, freedom of expression and freedom of the media, and the State's cooperation with the Human Rights Council mechanisms.
86. Libya commended the State's efforts in implementing institutional, political, economic and social reforms and constitutional amendments.

87. Luxembourg welcomed constitutional amendments establishing the National Human Rights Council and the national organization to combat and prevent corruption.
88. Madagascar noted with satisfaction the implementation of the right to education, and improvements in the health sector.
89. Maldives appreciated the establishment of the National Human Rights Council and the Office of the National Child Protection Ombudsman.
90. Mauritania congratulated Algeria on its efforts to combat social scourges and all forms of extremism, indoctrination and radicalization.
91. Mauritius welcomed legislative measures to protect children and to criminalize violence against women. It noted the provision, free of charge, of universal access to education and health care.
92. Mexico welcomed the establishment of the National Human Rights Council and urged Algeria to guarantee the Council's independence, autonomy and impartiality.
93. Montenegro noted that more progress and reforms related to the realization of the rights of the child were needed, particularly in the areas of the juvenile justice system, violence against children and the development of inclusive education.
94. Mozambique welcomed the new Constitution, which, inter alia, provided for presidential term limits and the right to invoke unconstitutionality, thus deepening democracy.
95. In response, and in relation to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, the Minister said that his Government's position was in conformity with the relevant decision of the African Union. Algerian citizens were not subjected to any ethnicity-based distinctions or discrimination in terms of their rights and obligations. The delegation stated that the Constitution guaranteed the freedom of worship and religion, without discrimination. A social housing development policy had been launched with the goal of reducing the housing shortage and eradicating slums.
96. Namibia applauded the legislative reforms that had culminated in the 2016 Constitution, which had resulted in the establishment of many institutions, including the National Human Rights Council.
97. The Netherlands welcomed reforms to bring the State's legislation into line with its international obligations, in particular the amendments to the Constitution and the Code of Criminal Procedure.
98. The Niger welcomed measures concerning local participatory democracy, the strengthening of parliamentary opposition, the objective of gender parity in employment and the consolidation of the independence of the judiciary.
99. Norway commended legislation against domestic violence and progress to ensure women's rights, as well as recent constitutional revisions establishing human rights principles.
100. Oman commended the comprehensive reforms aimed at strengthening the rule of law and good governance, human rights and human development, including the constitutional reforms.
101. Pakistan welcomed the strengthening of the judiciary and the establishment of the National Human Rights Council and laws to protect the rights of women, children and persons with disabilities.
102. Paraguay welcomed the law that criminalized domestic violence and the introduction by law of a 30 per cent quota for women on the lists of parties for legislative and other elections. The removal of the State's reservation to article 9 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women was welcomed.
103. Peru welcomed the reform that incorporated into the Constitution fundamental rights, such as to freedom of expression, gender parity and the recognition of Tamazight as an official language.

104. The Philippines lauded the constitutional amendments, including those relating to the strengthening of the independence of the judiciary, guarantees of participatory democracy, gender equality and the establishment of an independent elections oversight body.

105. Portugal appreciated the adoption of a law criminalizing domestic violence against women and welcomed efforts in the areas of education and health. It expressed regret about the absence of a legislative framework and administrative institutions for the protection of refugees, asylum seekers and stateless persons.

106. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela applauded the constitutional reform. It noted that access to education and to health was free and universal and that the Millennium Development Goals in those areas had been reached before the deadline.

107. The Republic of Korea welcomed the reinforcement of human rights through institutional and socioeconomic reform processes and constitutional amendments, the criminalization of domestic violence, and the State's cooperation with human rights mechanisms.

108. The Republic of Moldova welcomed the constitutional amendments and noted many remaining challenges, particularly regarding the freedoms of expression, religion or belief and peaceful assembly. It expressed concern regarding persecution of journalists, limited civil society space, and discrimination and violence against religious minorities.

109. Rwanda commended the constitutional review that promoted the rule of law and consolidated democratic process. While noting progress in combating violence against women, it encouraged the State to fully implement, and eliminate loopholes in, national legislation.

110. Saudi Arabia commended efforts to reinforce the right to education and considered the constitutional reforms a positive step at the institutional, political, social and economic levels. It commended improvements in health indicators.

111. Senegal welcomed the 2016 constitutional revision and the criminalization of violence against women.

112. Serbia commended the efforts to guarantee access to education and welcomed that gender equality had largely been achieved at all educational levels. It encouraged the implementation of policies aimed at protecting women.

113. Sierra Leone welcomed the national action plan aimed at child protection, health and quality education. It encouraged the State to continue to work with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for effective registration of Saharawi living in precarious conditions.

114. Slovenia welcomed the new Constitution, which included provisions on creating the National Human Rights Council, and the criminalization of domestic violence against women.

115. South Africa commended the constitutional review process and the State's steadfast support and courageous defence of the people of Western Sahara regarding self-determination.

116. South Sudan applauded the adoption of institutional, political and socioeconomic reforms, and welcomed the establishment of the National Human Rights Council and the provision of training at law enforcement institutions.

117. Spain welcomed the 2016 constitutional reform and the establishment of the National Human Rights Council.

118. Sri Lanka welcomed the constitutional amendments, including the establishment of the Constitutional Council and the high independent authority for elections oversight.

119. The State of Palestine noted the progress in the area of education and welcomed that a large amount of the national budget was dedicated to that right. It welcomed amendments to the Criminal Code aimed at protecting women.

120. The Sudan commended the constitutional amendments and the establishment of the high independent authority for elections oversight and the Office of the National Child Protection Ombudsman.

121. Sweden commended the constitutional guarantees for freedoms of opinion and expression, the press and information, but noted that implementation had been inconsistent.

122. Switzerland welcomed the 2015 law on combating violence against women. It noted that the new Constitution guaranteed the freedoms of expression, association, assembly and peaceful demonstration. However, it remained concerned at restrictions on these freedoms and restricted civil society space.

123. The Syrian Arab Republic commended efforts to incorporate human rights norms into national programmes and plans, in accordance with the State's commitments.

124. Timor-Leste expressed appreciation for the constitutional amendments and welcomed the promotion of education among detainees, as well as the criminalization of domestic violence and the development of a national strategy to combat trafficking in persons.

125. Togo expressed satisfaction with the State's efforts deployed in education, amounting to an investment of 16 per cent of the budget. It welcomed the establishment of judicial mechanisms and amendments to the Criminal Code and Criminal Code of Procedure.

126. Uganda welcomed the 2016 constitutional amendment and encouraged the State to engage in further improvement through a national implementation framework aligned with its international human rights obligations.

127. The delegation said that the National Human Rights Council had constitutional status and that the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (Paris Principles) were fully respected. Foreign funding of Algerian associations was regulated by law, and NGOs that benefited from public funding would only have their accreditation renewed if the funds were used in conformity with the objectives of the organization. A working group was examining the withdrawal of reservations to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. Human rights awareness was promoted through school curricula and through regular training of law enforcement officers. As a host country, Algeria had facilitated access by OHCHR to the Saharawi refugee camps and the Government had reiterated its appeal to all United Nations mechanisms, including the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, to address the issue of human rights in Western Sahara. Birth registration was compulsory, including for births out of wedlock. A working group had been set up to draft a law on the right of asylum.

128. In conclusion, the Minister thanked the secretariat and the speakers and recalled the challenges facing his country, such as diminishing resources and the expectations of young people. He said that having defeated colonialism and terrorism, both of which represented the absolute negation of human rights, Algeria by its very nature could only be a bastion for their promotion and protection.
