Red Sea and Gulf of Aden. A government expert meeting on co-operation in combating marine pollution emergencies in the Gulf of Aden (Djibouti, October) adopted a project to establish a sub-regional center in Djibouti for stockpiling equipment to combat oil pollution.

South Pacific. Eleven Governments had signed the 1986 Convention for the Protection of the Natural Resources and the Environment of the South Pacific Region and its associated protocols;(64) one country had ratified it. The implementation of the Action Plan continued with 28 ongoing projects in the areas of watershed management, inland and coastal water quality and pesticides. UNEP signed a project document with the South Pacific Commission covering activities in the areas of environmental education, awareness, training and information.

South-east Pacific. The 1981 Convention on the Protection of the Marine Environment and Coastal Area of the South-east Pacific,(65) and its supplementary agreement and protocols entered into force. The initial phase of a regional marine pollution research and monitoring programme neared completion. A contingency plan to combat pollution in cases of emergency became operational.

South Asian seas. A meeting of focal points to consider the adoption of the South Asian Seas Action Plan was held (Bangkok, Thailand, December). Bangladesh, India, Maldives, Pakistan and Sri Lanka analysed environmental problems and reviewed progress made in implementing priority activities; however, institutional and financial arrangements required for implementation of the Action Plan were not agreed upon.

Environmental aspects of political, economic and other issues

International ecological security

On 2 November 1987, Czechoslovakia, also on behalf of the Ukrainian SSR, introduced in the General Assembly's Second Committee a draft resolution⁽¹⁾ on international ecological security by which the Assembly would have recognized the necessity of exploring and developing a generally acceptable concept of international ecological security and of defining relevant basic guidelines and principles regarding the conduct of States. It requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the UNEP Executive Director, to outline elements that could lead to the elaboration of a generally acceptable concept of ecological security. On 27 November, the Second Committee decided to recommend to the Assembly that it defer consideration of the draft until its 1988 session.

The Assembly by decision 42/442 of 11 December, decided to defer consideration of the draft until 1988.

Arms race and the environment

UNEP, in collaboration with the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI), prepared a book, Cultural norms, war and the environment, for publication in 1988. The book, an outgrowth of a joint UNEP/SIPRI symposium (Stockholm, Sweden, March), examined the role of cultural norms regarding militarism and the environment.

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 42/93, considered that interaction in the ecological sphere should become an integral part of comprehensive international security.

Material remnants of war

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ reported in September⁽³⁾ on action taken concerning the problem of remnants of war. He stated that he had asked all States Members and non-members of the United Nations to submit information on that problem, including efforts being made to address it. As at 17 August 1987, replies had been received from seven States: Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Fiji, Mexico, the Netherlands, Qatar and Vanuatu. The Secretary-General stated that once again the majority of Member States had not provided information and therefore he was not in a position to evaluate the actual situation nor the needs of the developing countries affected.

In decision 42/445 of 11 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the problem of the remnants of war.

Environment and resources in Africa

Environmental impact of apartheid

In accordance with a 1985 Governing Council decision,⁽⁴⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report⁽⁵⁾ on the environmental impacts of apartheid on black agriculture in South Africa. The report stated that agriculture in South Africa ranked second only to mining in terms of its contribution to the gross domestic product. The basic issue underlying the problems of black agriculture was land. The very limited area of land available for agriculture in the homelands—areas reserved for blacks—coupled with the traditional farming practices of the people and their attitudes towards livestock, had led to serious environmental degradation. The situation facing black agriculture was summed up as follows: lack of land for agriculture and the poor quality of available land; high and rapidly increasing population densities in black areas, with consequent overloading and degradation of land; the siphoning off of most able-bodied men from black areas for work in mines, factories and farms in white areas; traditional resistance to change and modernization; and the refusal of South Africa to make more land available to the blacks. The average amount of land available to every black person was 0.68 hectare and to each white, 22.6 hectares. In the homelands, there was a great need for agricultural education based on an understanding of the natural environment and an urgent need to change attitudes regarding land use and livestock. The report concluded that if

South Africa was to achieve self-sufficiency in food, the whole of its agriculture, and not just the white sector, had to receive careful attention, taking into account environmental implications.

On 18 June,(6) the Governing Council, taking note of the Executive Director's report, reaffirmed its sympathy and solidarity with the victims of apartheid and further reaffirmed its condemnation of the apartheid system. The Council called on all concerned to draw the attention of the white minority regime of South Africa to the long-term adverse environmental impacts of its black agricultural policies, and requested the Executive Director to continue to monitor and report to the Council new developments related to that situation.

In resolution 42/184 of 11 December, the General Assembly noted the Council's decision on the environmental impact of apartheid on black agriculture in South Africa.

Cultural and natural heritage in Africa

In March 1986(7) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council his comments on a 1985 report by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) concerning the United Nations contribution to conservation and management of cultural and natural heritage in Africa.

On 17 June,(8) the Governing Council took note of the JIU report and the Secretary-General's comments.

Occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

On 18 June(9) the Governing Council adopted a decision on the environmental situation in occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories. (See p. 312.)

Transfer of environmental protection technology

On 18 June,(10) the Governing Council encouraged Governments to promote the commercial exchange and transfer of environmental protection technology and to share public research, demonstration results and information on non-proprietary technology. The Council also urged Governments and intergovernmental trade organizations to review terms of trade in pollution control technology with the objective of identifying and minimizing barriers. It further invited the Executive Director to consult Governments to identify specific technology that was unavailable to them and the reasons for its unavailability and to report to the Council in 1989 with recommendations. It also invited the specialized agencies and other members of the United Nations system to promote the transfer of environmental protection technology.

Environment and human settlements

UNEP contributed to the observance of IYSH through a number of activities. One of the themes of World Environment Day 1987 was the environmental aspects of sheltering the homeless. A training course was organized for 15 national IYSH focal points (Moscow, March) on integrating environmental concerns into human settlements planning. The relationship between human settlements and the environment was highlighted by the UNEP Executive Director at the 1987 session of the Commission on Human Settlements in Nairobi, Kenya; UNEP issued his collected statements as One Earth, One Home.

On 18 June,(11) the Governing Council requested the UNEP Executive Director, in consultation with the Executive Director of Habitat, to increase co-operation in the assessment of environmental conditions in human settlements; environmental aspects of policies, planning and management of human settlements-both rural and urban; environmentally sound and appropriate human settlements technology; and research, training and dissemination of information on environmentally sound human settlements planning and management.

Chapter XVI

Human settlements

The year 1987 was observed as the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (IYSH), and the General Assembly, concerned about the alarming situation in which more than a billion people were completely without shelter or living in homes unfit for human habitation, decided that a global strategy was needed to facilitate adequate shelter for all by the year 2000 (resolution 42/191). The Economic and Social Council, in May, called on Governments and institutions concerned to adopt decisive measures to achieve the objectives of IYSH and requested the Secretary-General, when assessing the IYSH results, to pay attention to the social and human aspects of housing for the poor and disadvantaged (1987/137).

The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS), also known as Habitat, performed the role of lead agency in the United Nations system for co-ordinating IYSH activities. It also continued in 1987 to assist developing countries through technical co-operation, research and development (including training) and information dissemination. The Commission on Human Settlements, at its tenth session at Nairobi, Kenya, commemorating the tenth anniversary of the establishment of UNCHS, adopted on 16 April 22 resolutions and five decisions dealing with human settlements activities and UNCHS co-operation.

Topics related to this chapter. Middle East: territories occupied by Israel—living conditions of Palestinians; settlements policy. Development policy and international economic co-operation: international development strategy. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief: disaster preparedness and prevention. Regional economic and social activities. Refugees. Human rights: right to housing.

Commission on Human Settlements

At its tenth session (Nairobi, 6-16 April 1987), the Commission on Human Settlements(1) recommended that the General Assembly adopt a global strategy for shelter for all by the year 2000, as a follow-up to IYSH (see below). It considered the goals of IYSH and the results of the 1986 International Year of Peace,(2) UNCHS cooperation with the Company for Habitat and Housing in Africa (Shelter-Afrique) and with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), regional institutions and national shelter coalition for human settlements, women's participation, and shelter strategies and policies.

It also took up IYSH activities in the occupied Palestinian territories, emergency humanitarian assistance for the homeless in Palestinian camps in Lebanon, and assistance to the Namibian people and to victims of apartheid. The Commission requested States to exchange information on technology and experiences to assist the reconstruction of human settlements in disaster-stricken areas, and asked the UNCHS Executive Director to disseminate the experience gained by Mexico from its 1985 earthquake(3) in coping with massive housing destruction.

The Commission also took action on organizational and programme matters, and recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the Commission and UNCHS, its secretariat, remain separate and distinct within the United Nations system.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1987/172 of 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on its tenth session.(1)

1988 session

In response to a 1985 Commission decision(4) to hold biennial sessions in odd-numbered years as of 1987, with the exception of a short session in 1988 to ensure effective follow-up to IYHS, the Executive Director proposed(5) that the Commission consider including in the 1988 agenda a review of the objectives achieved during IYSH and related updated documents on special themes adopted by the Commission since 1979, based on experience gained during the Year; a medium-term plan for 1990-1995; and a preliminary outline on the roles, responsibilities and capabilities of governmental and non-governmental organizations, and opportunities for co-operation and partnership among them.

On 16 April 1987, the Commission decided to hold its 1988 session from 6 to 12 April at New Delhi, at the invitation of India.

Consideration of special themes

The Commission decided(6) to consider, beginning with its twelfth (1989) session, two special themes—one general and the other more specific—at each session, and called on member States to submit reports and other material reflecting national experience on the given themes. The Executive Director was requested to prepare, based on information provided by States, analytical reviews reflecting world experience and trends. The Commission decided to consider at its 1989 session the roles, responsibilities and capabilities of various levels and organizations in the government and non-government sectors, and opportunities for co-operation and partnership among them at national and international levels in the area of human settlements. It requested the Executive Director to prepare outlines on the following additional themes: problems of comprehensive development of rural settlements under various natural and climatic conditions; maintenance of buildings and infrastructure and its financing and cost recovery; use of new and renewable sources of energy in human settlements and for construction and production of building materials; and any other theme previously discussed by the Commission or that might be proposed in the future.

The Commission had before it a note by the secretariat(7) on themes for future sessions; annexed was a preliminary outline on the theme selected for the 1989 session (see above).

Human settlements activities

As the international community observed International Year of Shelter for the Homeless in 1987, the General Assembly decided that a Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 should be formulated and that human settlement aspects be fully taken into account in development and environmental policies and programmes.

In the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted by the Assembly in December (resolution 42/186), it was estimated that about a billion people were without adequate shelter, and millions practically lived on the streets; by the year 2000, about 2 billion people, or 40 per cent of the developing countries' population, would be living in cities and towns and 15 of the world's 20 largest metropolitan areas would be in developing countries. Between a quarter and a half of all urban residents in developing countries lived in unhealthy and degraded dwellings where disease was common, and the congestion of settlements near factories multiplied the health risks; the stress of living in such conditions added to social tensions and outbreaks of violence and unrest. The Assembly recommended a number of measures to provide improved shelter with access to essential amenities in a clean and secure setting conducive to health and to the prevention of environment-related diseases; urged Habitat, the World Health Organization (WHO) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) to promote the application of technologies relevant to waste disposal and water-quality improvement, among other things; and suggested that regulations should be established to prevent settlements development in high environmental-risk areas, such as those near chemical or nuclear plants.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

The international community observed, in 1987, International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1982(1) to improve the shelter and neighbourhoods of some of the poor and disadvantaged by the end of 1987, particularly in the developing countries, according to national priorities, and to demonstrate by the year 2000 ways of improving the situation.

Action by the Commission on Human Settlements. In January and February 1987, the UNCHS Executive Director issued a series of reports in connection with the IYSH activities. In a report on shelter and services for the poor,(2) he discussed the role of shelter and services in national development, outlining the policy priorities and options identified by Governments during their preparations for IYSH. Areas considered under national strategies included the development of small and intermediate-sized towns, reorienting housing and public works policies, and developing policies regarding industrial development and employment, resource conservation and health and social welfare.

In another report, containing information received from 53 countries on their activities towards attaining the IYSH objectives,(3) the Executive Director focused on major issues of concern to Governments in dealing with inadequate shelter, services and homelessness. He reviewed support to national action by the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and gave an overview of IYSH information activities.

In response to a 1986 Commission request,(4) the Executive Director evaluated(5) 11 selected IYSH demonstration projects (Brazil, Colombia, Honduras, India, Jordan, Philippines, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Zambia, Zimbabwe (2)) dealing with security of land tenure, basic services to low-income families at affordable costs, community participation and the integration of the poor in the formal economy. One of the major lessons drawn from the demonstration projects was the need and potential for a partnership between the public and private sectors in the quest for long-term solutions to the problem of shelter and services to the poor.

In February,(6) the Executive Director reported that the cost of activities leading to the observance of IYSH was estimated at $3.7 million; pledges totalled $4.2 million but the amount actually contributed as at 31 December 1986 stood at $2.2 million.

In April,(7) the Commission endorsed the report on shelter and services for the poor(2) and recommended that Governments consider implementing the measures described therein, seize the momentum created by IYSH and strive to ensure adequate shelter and services for the poor by the year 2000. It called on the international community, including the United Nations system, to provide financial and technical support to human settlements programmes of developing countries, and requested the Executive Director to continue evaluating IYSH activities carried out by Governments as a major input to a future Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000.

The Commission stressed that a peaceful environment was among the prerequisites for successfully carrying out IYSH programmes, and urged the Executive Director to take that relationship into account in future activities and programmes, especially in formulating the Global Strategy.(8)

In two other related resolutions, the Commission recommended that the Executive Director integrate the experiences gained from the Year into the Global Strategy and the medium-term plan for 1990-1995,(9) and requested him to report on activities for IYSH in the occupied Palestinian territories.(10)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1987/37 without vote.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/221 of 20 December 1982, in which the Assembly proclaimed the year 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 41/146 of 4 December 1986 and Council resolution 1986/41 of 23 May 1986,

Recalling further that the objective of activities before and during the Year is to improve the shelter and neighbourhoods of some of the poor and disadvantaged by the end of 1987, according to national priorities, and to demonstrate by the year 2000 ways and means of improving the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and disadvantaged,

Recognizing with regret that a considerable part of the world's population does not have adequate shelter and lives in extremely unhealthy and unsanitary conditions,

Noting that the lack of adequate housing for millions of people constitutes a serious social problem requiring urgent action at both the national and international levels,

Taking note of the fact that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and the Declaration on the Right to Development provide that all persons have the right to an adequate standard of living, including adequate housing, and that States should take appropriate steps to ensure the realization of that right,

Recognizing that the provision of adequate shelter is essential for the promotion and achievement of national economic and social development and human health,

1. Calls upon all Governments and all institutions concerned, both national and international, to adopt decisive measures to achieve the objectives and goals of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless and to inform the Secretary-General thereon;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, when assessing the results of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, to pay due attention to the social and human aspects of housing for the poor and disadvantaged and, in this connection, to the practical follow-up to the Year through the Commission for Human Settlements;

3. Requests the Commission for Social Development to continue to pay attention to the problem of inadequate shelter in the context of the review of the world social situation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/37

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1986 Economic and Social Council request,(11) the Secretary-General, in an August 1987 report on IYSH,(12) reviewed the state 'of human settlements, analysing demographic, economic and physical (shelter, infrastructure, services) trends. He described the challenge that those trends posed for national and international action, and examined the responses to that challenge; reviewed the lessons learned from the Year and their implications for long-term objectives; presented some specific national and international policy measures for action; and outlined the Commission's proposal for a global shelter strategy to the year 2000 (see below). The report also examined the goals and accomplishments of organizations of the United Nations system in areas such as human settlement policies and programmes (Habitat), development assistance (World Bank, United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the regional commissions), industrial development and employment policies (United Nations Industrial Development Organization, International Labour Organisation), natural resource management policies (UNEP, Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations), health and social development policies (WHO, UNICEF, World Food Programme (WFP)).

The Secretary-General considered that the Year had been successful in achieving its goals: it had stimulated improvements in shelter and services in many countries from which the poor and disadvantaged had benefited, and created a strong awareness of the problem of homelessness and inadequate shelter and the need for remedial action. None the less, homelessness and inadequate shelter could be eradicated only through concerted, sustained and massive action over a period of time by Governments, organizations and individuals all acting together.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 42/445 of 11 December 1987, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General on IYSH.

In related action, the Assembly, by resolution 42/146, called on the international community to pay special attention to adequate housing in -developing national strategies and settlement improvement programmes within the framework of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000.

Report of the UNCHS Executive Director. In a wrap-up report on IYSH activities and achievements, based on information provided by 130 countries as at 31 December 1987,⁽¹³⁾ the UNCHS Executive Director concluded that the Year had been a success in creating global and national awareness and the activities had benefited a large number of the poor, though small in comparison with the scale of the need. Substantial practical and technical knowledge had been acquired through some 600 IYSH demonstration projects in over 100 countries, and Governments had shown their commitment to improving the shelter conditions of the poor by adopting new or revising existing strategies and policies. Among the 130 countries having advanced some programmes in that regard, 55 had established new national strategies, 11 had begun preparing new strategies, and the rest had made at least one significant policy change or initiated national or international programmes for dealing with the shelter problem. While no major global conference was held, more than 100 Member States had participated in regional and subregional meetings to discuss practical solutions and co-ordinate activities.

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

In 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Settlements, decided that a Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 should be formulated in an effort to reverse the current alarming trends and produce clear and visible improvements in the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and the disadvantaged.

The Commission had made that recommendation earlier in the year⁽¹⁴⁾ by expressing its conviction of the need for such a strategy as a follow-up to IYSH and by taking note of two reports submitted by the Executive Director.

In a report on shelter and services for the poor⁽²⁾ the Executive Director reported that the population of the less developed regions was expected to increase from 3.7 billion in 1985 to 4.8 billion by the year 2000, and to 6.1 billion by 2015. By 2000, 8 out of every 10 people would be living in developing countries, which would have to provide improved shelter and services for over 1 billion people who were currently homeless or living in slums, while also coping with the additional need created by the expected annual population growth of some 80 million, the majority of them poor and in urban areas. In order to meet the challenge with success, shelter strategies required a co-ordinated contribution from many sectors in their planning and implementation.

The report dealt with the challenge, measures to strengthen national development strategies, international support for national action, and suggested measures for action in 1987 and beyond. For national action, the report suggested, among other things, regular government reviews of housing for the poor; including access to water, sanitation, waste disposal, low-cost energy and transport, health and social services and employment; and adoption of new government policies and strategies aimed at ensuring adequate shelter and services. At the international level, a formal co-ordination arrangement, such as a task force, could be created within the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), and increased emphasis could be placed on shelter and services in individual programmes of relevant United Nations bodies; at the regional level, the United Nations regional commissions could allocate increased resources. Also considered were measures to be carried out by funding organizations and NGOs. The Executive Director stated that regular consultations under UNCHS auspices, to coincide with the biennial sessions of the Commission, might be held to review and co-ordinate human settlements activities undertaken by Governments, United Nations agencies, funding institutions and NGOs.

A second report, on a new agenda for human settlements,⁽¹⁵⁾ had two parts—part one introduced the concept of human settlements as a framework for development management and reviewed current conditions and trends; part two dealt with possible scenarios to the year 2000 and suggested crucial issues on the new agenda. The new agenda, based on perceptions of issues and priorities which had emerged since the 1976 Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements,⁽¹⁶⁾ was intended to guide national human settlements policies and programmes until 2000 and provide a framework for support by multilateral and bilateral agencies; a recurrent theme throughout the new agenda was the need to integrate economic and human settlements planning in development decision-making. The report examined economic, demographic, technological, physical (shelter, infrastructure, environment), social and institutional trends, and identified areas needing priority attention.

The Commission requested the Executive Director to continue evaluating IYSH activities undertaken by Governments as a major input into a future Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, and to accord priority to the objectives of and to the experiences gained during IYSH when preparing the 1990-1995 medium-term plan.⁽¹⁴⁾

On 11 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 42/191.

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 The General Assembly, Bearing in mind the Vancouver Declaration on Human Settlements, 1976 and the recommendations for national action adopted at Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements,

Recalling its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in which, inter alia, the importance of the provision of basic shelter and infrastructure was stressed,

Recalling also its resolution 41/190 of 8 December 1986 on the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Taking note of the reports of the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) entitled "Shelter and services for the poor—a call to action" and "A new agenda for human settlements", as well as the comments made by Governments at the tenth (commemorative) session of the Commission on Human Settlements,

Recognizing that adequate and secure shelter is a basic human right and is vital for the fulfilment of human aspirations,

Recognizing further that a squalid residential environment is a constant threat to health and to life itself and thereby constitutes a drain on human resources, a nation's most valuable asset,

Noting that this lamentable situation can adversely affect the social and political stability of countries,

Deeply concerned about the present alarming situation, in which, despite the efforts of Governments at the national and local levels and of international organizations, more than one billion people find themselves either completely without shelter or living in homes unfit for human habitation, and that, owing to prevailing demographic trends, these already formidable problems will escalate in the coming years unless concerted, determined measures are taken immediately,

Fully aware of the multidimensional nature of the shelter problem, which has its main roots in poverty and, in many countries, is aggravated by the scarcity of resources, inadequate institutional capacities and the lack of a legal and financial framework for alleviating the problem,

Realizing that the problem manifests itself in slums and shanty towns, with inadequate social and technical services, and in a general deterioration of the living environment in rural settlements,

Conscious of the vital role of the self-help efforts of the poor to house themselves and the multiplier effects of shelter development, based on the full mobilization of local resources, and their importance to the economic development of a country, and the lost opportunities for development represented by the neglected shelter sector,

Convinced that the continuous, co-ordinated and widely based efforts of all relevant agencies, bodies, organizations and individuals, when guided by an appropriate strategy, will reverse the alarming trends and produce clear and visible improvements in the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and disadvantaged by the year 2000,

Encouraged by action already taken in many countries to prepare national shelter strategies and launch other measures that will promote achievement of the goal of shelter for all,

1. Decides that there shall be a Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, including a plan of action for its implementation, monitoring and evaluation;

2. Further decides that the objective of the Strategy should be to stimulate measures that will facilitate adequate shelter for all by the year 2000;

3. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to prepare a proposal for a Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and its implementation, including its financial implications, for consideration by the Commission on Human Settlements at its eleventh session;

4. Requests the Commission on Human Settlements to formulate a Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, to be drawn up within existing resources, for submission, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

5. Urges all Governments to commit themselves to the objectives of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 by adopting and implementing shelter strategies in accordance with the guidelines contained in section I of the annex to the present resolution, which will permit the mobilization of all forces and resources in the country for the attainment of the objectives of the Strategy, and to renew this commitment annually by, inter alia, announcing on World Habitat Day the concrete actions to be taken and targets to be achieved during each successive year;

6. Requests all United Nations bodies and agencies and the international community at large to support the formulation and implementation of the Global Strategy along the lines defined in section II of the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

I. Guidelines for national action

1. All Governments that have not already done so should endeavour to prepare national shelter strategies at appropriate levels as an integral part of their development strategies.

2. The national shelter strategies should take into account the multidimensional nature of the problem and fulfil and reflect the wide socio-economic benefits of shelter development.

3. The national shelter strategies should also reflect the criteria of affordability and replicability, particularly for shelter for low-income population groups; special attention should be paid to improving the access of the poor to land with secure tenure and appropriate building materials, as well as to developing housing finance institutions that will mobilize household savings and are responsive to the needs of low-income groups.

4. All efforts should be made to involve, in full partnership, all concerned governmental, non-governmental, public-sector and private-sector bodies, agencies and institutions at all levels and, in particular, the communities and people concerned, in the planning and implementation of national shelter strategies.

5. In the national shelter strategies, special attention should be paid to the problems faced and capacities represented by marginalized groups such as women and youth and disadvantaged groups such as the aged and the disabled.

6. Governments should report biennially at the session of the Commission on Human Settlements on the progress made in implementing the measures mentioned above.

II. Guidelines for international action

1. All United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and institutions should support, as necessary, the Commission on Human Settlements and the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in the formulation and implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and ensure that their relevant country-specific activities are supportive of and co-ordinated with national shelter strategies.

2. The regional commissions of the United Nations should encourage and assist in the formulation of shelter strategies in their respective regions and the exchange of information thereon, and the Executive Director is invited to make full use of contacts with Governments through the regional commissions and their subsidiary bodies.

3. All countries in a position to do so and international funding agencies should give all possible support to Governments in their efforts to plan and implement national shelter strategies for the attainment of the goals of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and, within the framework of an enabling shelter strategy, their endeavours to achieve improvement in the shelter situation of their inhabitants, in particular the poor and disadvantaged, and they should report to the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) on their actions in this respect.

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.7) without vote, 11 November (meeting 34); draft by Commission on Human Settlements (A/C.2/42/L.33); agenda item 82 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 26, 30, 34; plenary 96.

National strategies

National shelter coalitions

On 16 April 1987,(17) the Commission on Human Settlements called for the creation of national coalitions through which Governments might help to mobilize all non-governmental resources in a partnership towards the provision of shelter for all. It urged Governments to put forth explicit shelter policies as part of national development strategies and to enlist the participation of the formal and informal private sector, NGOs, co-operatives and community groups in providing shelter by facilitating, through the public sector, the availability of land, infrastructure, building materials, finance, skilled human resources, appropriate technologies and a supportive legal and regulatory environment.

Financing of national action

The Executive Director, in his report on shelter and services for the poor,(2) recommended measures aimed at expanding financial institutions through domestic savings, according higher priority for shelter in investment programmes, providing employers' assistance for housing employees, encouraging rental housing, developing lending facilities for the poor and establishing revolving funds for land assembly and infrastructure. Further, the Executive Director said that, while national action based on self-reliance should be a goal in developing countries, external aid was needed, such as financial assistance for infrastructure and building materials production plants, and technical assistance for sector studies, institution building, training, evaluation and information dissemination. He suggested, among other things, that bilateral and multilateral funding organizations and regional development banks consider increasing their grants and lending towards shelter and services for the poor in the developing countries to at least 10 per cent of their total assistance.

The Commission requested the Executive Director, in consultation with countries and international financial institutions, to draw up; for consideration in 1989, a report on the financial constraints and needs of developing countries and possible solutions for obtaining the funds required to attain the human settlements aims and goals as set by the Commission.(18)

Housing problems and natural disasters

The Commission, expressing alarm over the intensification of homelessness in disaster-hit areas, requested Habitat to co-ordinate an exchange among States of information on technology and experiences to assist human settlements reconstruction in those areas.(19)

The Commission,(20) recognizing that Mexico, with the extensive participation of its population, had carried out technical, financial and social programmes of reconstruction to meet the urgent housing needs of more than 96,000 families affected by the 1985 earthquake, requested the Executive Director to ensure the dissemination of information on the experiences of Mexico and of other countries in solving the problem of massive housing destruction resulting from seismic phenomena and other natural disasters.

Human settlements and political, economic and social Issues

Assistance to Africa

The Commission on Human Settlements adopted three resolutions on shelter-related assistance to Africa.

Human settlements development in Africa

Urging all concerned to accord high priority to urban development and shelter in Africa, the Commission(22) requested the UNCHS Executive Director and the Managing Director of the Company for Habitat and Housing in Africa (Shelter-Afrique), in co-operation with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), to assist African Governments in finding ways to promote domestic savings and mobilizing loans; to promote the production of low-cost technology and indigenous building materials and the use of local consultants in urban development and shelter projects; and to strengthen co-operation in promoting the role of urban development and shelter in the region, while giving similar consideration to rural housing.

Assistance to victims of apartheid

The Commission(23) strongly condemned South Africa for its inhuman repression there and its illegal occupation of Namibia, for its acts of aggression and destabilization against front-line and other neighbouring States and for its continuous forced removal of the African population from their homes, and called on the international community to extend political and material support to the front-line States. It commended the Organization of African Unity and others for supporting the struggle against apartheid and colonialism in southern Africa and requested the Executive Director to continue providing technical and other forms of assistance to victims of apartheid and colonialism, as well as to national liberation movements in the approval of their human settlements project proposals within a reasonable time.

Assistance to displaced Namibians

In 1987,(24) the Commission condemned any unilateral action by South Africa leading towards an internal settlement outside the terms of a 1978 Security Council resolution concerning Namibia,(25) and again requested the Executive Director to strengthen all forms of assistance to Namibian refugee settlements and to report to the Commission on progress made in that regard.

Homeless Palestinians

IYSH activities in the Israeli-occupied territories

In accordance with a 1986 Commission request,(26) the Executive Director in January 1987 submitted a comprehensive study, prepared by an expert consultant, on institutions needed for financing and implementing a housing programme in the occupied Palestinian territories.(27) The study listed as main features of the housing problems substandard housing, housing shortage and overcrowding; the inadequacy of existing financial arrangements had contributed to a worsening of the problems. In the mean time, permission had been given recently for the reopening of a branch of a Jordanian bank in the West Bank, with other branches of foreign banks likely to open; further, Jordan's Ministry of Planning had promulgated a five-year (1986-1990) plan for the economic and social development of the occupied territories, with assistance of $434 million expected for residential construction.

The study proposed establishing a Palestinian housing bank and associated local housing groups to overcome the problems of inadequate housing for low-income households, weakness in developing Palestinian economic integrity and autonomy, and problems of the Palestinian financial system; outlined in the report were the proposed bank's objectives, sources of finance, structure, and lending and repayments policies.

By 60 votes to 6, with 20 abstentions, the Commission deplored Israel's settlement policies in the occupied Palestinian territories, called for an immediate halt to any new settlements there and for the dismantling of existing ones, and strongly opposed the demolition and sealing off of Palestinian houses. It requested the Executive Director to report on the implementation of his 1986 proposals on IYSH activities in the occupied Palestinian territories,(26) to prepare a study on housing requirements of a future independent Palestinian State, and to continue assisting the Palestinian people in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 42/190, expressed alarm at the deteriorating living conditions of the Palestinian people in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a study on their future infrastructure needs.

Homeless Palestinians in Lebanon

By 59 votes to 2, with 26 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned all parties involved in imposing a siege on a number of Palestinian camps in Lebanon and, while appealing for the lifting of the siege, called for the provision of emergency humanitarian assistance, including shelter units, to those camps. The Commission also requested the Executive Director to prepare a study on reconstruction needed in the camps.(28)

Women and human settlements

On 16 April 1987,(29) the Commission, urging full implementation of its 1986 resolution(26) regarding women's participation in solving human settlements problems, recommended that specific information on that participation be included in Habitat's reporting system. The Commission urged Governments to avoid the marginalization of women, by facilitating their access to employment, training, land, housing, credit, information and full involvement in policy- and decision-making. It recommended the continuation of regional seminars initiated during IYSH in order to exchange experiences on projects and to define and evaluate the role of women and women's organizations in formulating, financing and executing them.

UN global and regional programmes

Global programme

Habitat Centre

The 1986-1987 UNCHS work programme(30) was based on eight subprogrammes: policies and strategies, settlement planning, shelter and community services, the indigenous construction sector, low-cost infrastructure, land, mobilization of finance, and institutions and management.

Under the first subprogramme, the Global Report on Human Settlements was launched by the United Nations Secretary-General on World Habitat Day, 5 October 1987. Guidelines were prepared for allocating investments in infrastructure and community services under integrated national development policies, and the first version of the UNCHS human settlements statistical data base was presented.

Under the settlement planning subprogramme, arrangements were completed for publishing in three volumes a joint report with UNEP: Guidelines on Environmental Aspects of Human Settlements Planning and Management. Bibliographic notes on rural settlements were published and research activities continued on rural resettlement and strategies for local development. A seminar was held on the training needs of subnational planning institutions (Nairobi, 28 September-7 October).

As part of the shelter and community services subprogramme, technical assistance, monitoring and evaluation continued to be provided to four IYSH shelter demonstration projects in Sri Lanka. The Danish International Development Agency continued to support a training programme for community participation in improving housing conditions of urban low-income groups; the programme was implemented in Bolivia, Sri Lanka, Venezuela and Zambia.

With regard to the indigenous construction sector, progress was made towards establishing a network of Commonwealth countries in Africa to facilitate collaboration in promoting local building materials and technologies. UNCHS co-operated with the Commonwealth Science Council and the African Regional Standardization Organization in holding a workshop on standards and specifications for local building materials (Nairobi, March). It also contributed to a number of other major workshops and seminars.

Under the low-cost infrastructure subprogramme, missions were sent to Angola in support of a WFP project on the rehabilitation of coffee plantations and to Afghanistan to assist in formulating projects on sewerage, low-cost sanitation and refuse disposal.

Concerning land, work continued on a manual on low-technology land registration systems and plot allocation procedures. Evaluation of techniques of "land sharing" in central parts of cities continued, with a view to outlining procedures for involving the private sector in low-income shelter development.

Regarding the mobilization of financial resources, preparation continued of case-studies concerning the integration of employment-generating-activities in housing projects and other human settlements development programmes; the studies covered Chile, India, Nigeria, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Zambia. Research in housing finance systems concentrated on mobilizing savings with a view to disseminating information on ways of increasing the flow of funds to the housing finance sector.

Under the institutions and management subprogramme, UNCHS continued to co-operate with the Katholieke Universiteit van Leuven (Belgium), the World Bank, UNDP and various regional and national institutes in conducting training courses on housing in development and urban finance and management. An expert group meeting (Nairobi, September/October) discussed a new agenda for research and training in institutional arrangements for regional and subregional development planning. UNCHS developed and tested, in Jordan and the United Arab Emirates, a preliminary methodology for assessing the training needs for human settlements institutions and conducted a training workshop for assessors in Jordan.

UNCHS information activities included the production of the IYSH Bulletin, UNCHS (Habitat) News, technical publications, audio-visual information material, a special publication—World Habitat Day, 1987—and a World Habitat Day kit in Arabic, English, French and Spanish. The Project Information Report, describing UNCHS projects, was issued to keep Governments informed between Commission sessions.

Software development in 1987 included the release of the Urban Data Management Software, version 5.2 in Spanish and version 5.3, a compiled version which ran much faster than earlier ones; version 2.0 of the Land Suitability Assessment Programme; and version 1.1 of the Housing Finance Savings and Loans package. Notes on the Use of Microcomputer-based Transportation Software for Human Settlements in Developing Countries (Software Notes) was also released. Fifty names were added in 1987 to the Habitat Microcomputer Users Directory. The Habitat News "Micro macro" column continued, advising on practical applications of microcomputers in human settlements data management.

Resources available for special technical advisory services declined in 1987, while demand for such services increased significantly, reflecting a shift in the needs of developing countries from long-term resident experts to short-term highly specialized advisers. During the year, 35 missions were undertaken. Under the sectoral support programme, UNDP continued to provide modest resources to UNCHS for preparatory missions and project documents.

During 1987, UNCHS had under execution some 160 projects in 85 countries in Africa, Asia (including Western Asia and the Pacific) and Latin America and the Caribbean, with an overall budget of over $20 million for the year. One hundred projects were financed by UNDP,⁽³¹⁾ accounting for approximately 77 per cent of the funds budgeted for technical co-operation during the year; 20 projects were also supplemented by trust funds and government and third-party cost-sharing arrangements; and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation funded 40 small-scale projects for preparing project documents for submission to UNDP and donor Governments and agencies.

Among its continuing collaboration with other agencies and organizations in the United Nations system, UNCHS co-operated with UNEP in research and training in environmental aspects of human settlements; with the World Bank in an inter-regional support programme for urban management; and with WHO on guidelines for environmental health aspects of housing and urban planning.

Noting that 1987 marked both the tenth anniversary of Habitat's establishment and the observance of IYSH, the Commission, in April,⁽³²⁾ recommended that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Secretary-General take measures to strengthen Habitat. It urged Governments to make and fulfil their pledges to Habitat, to maximize their voluntary contributions and to strengthen their human settlements policies and activities by providing resources with special emphasis in favour of the lowest-income population. It urged continued co-operation between Habitat and the regional commissions and subregional committees, and reaffirmed that the Commission should retain the responsibility for formulating global policies and strategies.

The Commission⁽³³⁾ reconfirmed the role of UNDP's country programming as an important framework for operational activities for development and underlined the need for UNDP resident co-ordinators to remain informed of human settlements developments. The Commission noted the implications of streamlining and minimizing reporting requirements in operational procedures so as to avoid delays in project preparation and implementation.

Also in April,⁽³⁴⁾ the Commission recommended that Habitat encourage the formulation of shelter strategies and policies and all related infrastructural requirements as well as the creation of job opportunities to advance economic and social development, adding that the formulation of such policies should involve the concerned population so as to bring about a change in the attitude of people from that of petition to one of participation. It also recommended that Habitat organize technical workshops based on field surveys on progress achieved in IYSH projects and co-ordinate human settlements programmes of the United Nations system.

Co-operation with UNEP

In the first joint progress report of the UNCHS and UNEP Executive Directors on their co-operation,⁽³⁵⁾ information was provided on joint activities under four subject areas. As to the assessment of environmental conditions in human settlements, work continued on the Global Report on Human Settlements and the final report of a joint project on the environmental impact assessment of urban development in the Valley of Mexico. In the area of environmental aspects of policies, planning and management of human settlements, three volumes of guidelines were developed, with a follow-up project on the application of those guidelines in four metropolitan areas in developing countries. Concerning environmentally sound and appropriate human settlements technology, a pilot project in Democratic Yemen in the design and construction of a model neighbourhood of housing units demonstrated solutions to human settlements-related environmental problems in an arid region; also under this area, UNEP and UNCHS collaborated in waste management and in land-use planning in disaster-prone areas. As to research, training and dissemination of information on environmentally sound human settlements planning and management, UNEP and UNCHS collaborated with the USSR Commission for UNEP in preparing reports on intermediate settlements and on urban transport systems in the countries with centrally planned economies.

The Executive Directors also dealt with co-operation in a number of United Nations system-wide efforts relevant to the activities of UNCHS and UNEP, and preparation of programme budgets and medium-term plans.

In April,(36) the Commission requested the UNCHS Executive Director, in consultation with the UNEP Executive Director, to continue and increase co-operation in support of system-wide efforts of mutual interest and in the four subject areas of co-operation.

Work programme

On 16 April 1987, the Commission took action on its work programme. It adopted(37) the 1988-1989 work programme proposed by the Executive Director.(38) The programme emphasized shelter, infrastructure and services for the urban and rural poor, urban management and institution building in developing countries, and human resources development. Allocations of regular budget and extrabudgetary resources for the biennium were estimated at $2.82 million.

The Commission urged Governments to participate in informal consultations between its sessions, and requested the Executive Director to report on the results of such consultations.(39)

The Commission approved(40) as the basis for the 1990-1995 medium-term plan, subject to revisions and modifications to accommodate its members' comments, a report of the Executive Director,(41) which proposed, among other things, reorganizing UNCHS activities under seven subprogrammes—global issues and strategies, national policies and instruments, settlements development management, shelter and infrastructure, human resources and software development, financial resources, and construction.

The Commission recommended(9) that, in formulating the medium-term plan, the Executive Director take into account the simultaneous preparation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, integrating the experiences of IYSH in the plan and the Strategy. It requested UNCHS and other international agencies to give high priority to assisting Governments in providing land for building, using local building materials, promoting women's full participation, promoting shelter construction and community participation, and establishing a pattern of institutions to promote those goals.

Regional programmes

The Executive Director reported(30) that during 1986-1987 ECA assisted in designing research programmes, identified suitable cases for studies and submitted documents on housing co-operatives and human settlements finance; research continued on investments in human settlements development on the basis of a comparative analysis of national development plans of African countries. A joint UNCHS/ECA mission to Malawi and Zambia (November/December) ascertained the viability of establishing demonstration programmes in producing and using innovative local building materials in various African countries; the mission tested a methodology for data collection and analysis for proposed demonstration projects. The Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment (fourth meeting, Addis Ababa, 9-13 February)(42) advised ECA to place more emphasis on action-oriented activities in the next medium-term plan.

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean collaborated with UNCHS in carrying out research on designing and managing plans and projects at the local level, municipal planning and community participation, and technologies for shelter construction and the provision of basic services.

The Joint Human Settlements Unit of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) and UNCHS prepared an overview on innovative approaches to housing finance in the region, and identified and analysed cases of employment generation in human settlements programmes. UNCHS collaborated with ESCAP and Japan in organizing an international symposium on housing (Yokohama and Kobe, 29 October-3 November) commemorating IYSH, and contributed to the preparation of guidelines for the ESCAP integrated plan of action on human resources development.

Collaboration continued with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) in preparing country profile reports; reports on Bahrain and Oman were added to those on Democratic Yemen, Egypt and Iraq. UNCHS contributed to the ESCWA expert group meeting on energy-efficient building materials for low-cost housing (Amman, Jordan, 14-19 November).

UNCHS co-operated with the Economic Commission for Europe in organizing a seminar on regulations and technologies for construction and fund development (Paris, 22-26 June); the seminar recommended that a plan of action be formulated to help developing countries in appraising and overcoming constraints in existing regulations.

In April,(43) the Commission requested the Executive Director, in consultation with member States of each geographical region and appropriate United Nations bodies, to identify specific institutions in each region that might be used as centres for regional human settlements research and training, and to identify research programmes and training requirements tailored to the specific needs of the region.

Co-ordination

In a January 1987 report on human settlements activities within the United Nations system,(44) the Executive Director reviewed progress made in conducting a comprehensive study, requested by the Commission in 1985(45) at the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), indicating possible areas and priorities for co-ordination in preparing the 1990-1995 medium-term plan; and analysed the Centre's problem-solving activities in assisting the Commission in its system-wide co-ordination of human settlements activities. Annexed to the report were highlights of co-operation between UNCHS and relevant bodies of the United Nations system.

A March note by the UNCHS secretariat(46) drew to the Commission's attention some 1985 and 1986 resolutions and decisions of relevance to the Commission, as adopted by the United Nations main legislative organs and other intergovernmental bodies.

As requested by CPC in 1986,(47) the Secretary-General in 1987 continued to monitor the follow-up to the cross-organizational programme analysis of the activities of the United Nations system in human settlements. In February,(48) he reported that in preparing the comprehensive study on system-wide co-ordination in human settlements activities, UNCHS had collected information on 1986 and 1987 and had developed a procedure to ensure, at the earliest possible stage, the availability of relevant information and future plans of the organizations of the United Nations system for 1988-1989 and for 1990-1995.

On 30 April,(49) CPC considered the Secretary-General's report and requested that it be informed of the implementation of its recommendations, following consideration by the Commission in 1988 of the comprehensive study.

The ACC Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives (fifteenth session, New York, 8-10 September)(50) stated that each country should develop its own human settlements pattern in accordance with its socio-economic development programme. It noted the role the construction sector played in domestic growth strategies and pointed out that satisfying basic human settlements requirements—shelter, water supply and sanitation—contributed to social and political stability as well as being an essential development objective in its own right; many Governments were taking measures to facilitate the mobilization of resources and application of entrepreneurial skills for increased housing and infrastructure production.

On 16 April,(51) the Commission on Human Settlements welcomed the Executive Director's initiative to convene, during the July session of the Economic and Social Council, a meeting with relevant bodies in the United Nations system to complete the comprehensive study to facilitate a medium-term plan in human settlements. The Commission recommended, pending full and equal membership in ACC, the establishment of appropriate arrangements, such as a task force, with a view to strengthening co-ordination in human settlements at the inter-secretariat level.

In-depth study of the UN intergovernmental structure

By decision 1987/112 of 6 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council established a Special Commission, open to all United Nations Member States, to carry out an in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields in accordance with recommendation 8 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18).(52) The Group of 18 had recommended that the study should, among other things, identify measures to rationalize and simplify the structure and consider consolidating overlapping activities and merging existing bodies in order to make the structure more responsive to current needs.

A March note by the UNCHS secretariat(53) presented human settlements as a priority development issue, outlined the work and gave a historical perspective of the Commission and the Centre, and described the IYSH programme. In dealing with specific issues under recommendation 8, UNCHS expressed the view that merging the Commission with other United Nations bodies might undo much that had been achieved since the 1976 United Nations Conference on Human Settlement(16) and stated that there was no duplication of functions or overlap of activities with other United Nations bodies. UNCHS discussed the drawbacks of transferring the management and control of all operational activities to a single intergovernmental body; stated that co-ordination and co-operation were ensured between UNCHS and agencies concerned with human settlements; and pointed out that the Commission had already decided to hold its sessions only during odd-numbered years, except for a short session in 1988 to follow up on IYSH activities, and had established no subsidiary bodies. It was noted that documentation for Commission sessions had been progressively reduced in both number and length; efforts at further reductions continued. Annexed to the note was a 1986 General Assembly resolution on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations,(54) the Economic and Social Council decision establishing the Special Commission (see above), an extract from a 1977 Assembly resolution(55) on institutional arrangements for international co-operation in human settlements, and a list of UNCHS technical publications between 1980 and 1987.

On 16 April 1987,(56) the Commission adopted, for transmittal to the Council's Special Commission, a statement regarding the objectives envisaged in recommendation 8 and recommending that the Commission and UNCHS remain separate and distinct within the United Nations system.

Financing

The UNCHS work programme was financed from the United Nations regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources. The Executive Director, in a January 1987 report,(57) described the use by the Centre during 1986-1987 of extrabudgetary resources for a total of $4,193,700 coming from four sources: programme support income accrued from the execution of projects financed by UNDP, trust funds and other sources ($3,773,700); a subvention from WFP ($192,000); and programme support from the UNEP Fund ($78,000) and from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees ($150,000). The fifth source of income was the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation (see below).

During 1986-1987, UNCHS expected project delivery amounting to $29,405,000, including projects financed by UNDP ($25,945,000), the UNEP Fund ($212,000) and other sources ($3,248,000).

Projects financed by other sources were funded under various arrangements: trust-fund agreements under which technical co-operation projects were financed by recipient Governments or through agreements with donor agencies such as the World Bank; associate-expert arrangements, with Governments providing experts at their cost; funding from Governments for specific training programmes; and contributions from Governments, agencies and foundations for specific projects. UNCHS expected to earn $3,773,700 from the projects, to be used to support them; a similar income was expected in 1988-1989.

The audited financial statements of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation(58) showed a combined excess of expenditure over income for 1986-1987 amounting to $207,233. However, savings of $362,195 were realized as at 31 December 1987 from the liquidation of obligations unliquidated during the prior financial period. The Foundation had a combined unencumbered fund balance of $6,974,174 available for existing and future commitments. The combined total income of $9,721,178 included contributions to the Foundation and IYSH. Expenditures for 1986-1987 totalled $9,896,350; of that amount, $4,439,158 related to programme and programme support activities and $5,457,192 to project activities of the Foundation and IYSH.

During 1986-1987, pledges by Governments for the Foundation and IYSH amounted to $8,696,738; collection and adjustments of $8,079,670 were made, of which $1,010,809 was for the previous period. In 1987, $4.83 million for the Foundation and IYSH was received from 36 countries and two intergovernmental organizations. Current and previous years' pledged contributions in respect of the Foundation and IYSH in the amount of $1,432,436 and $662,181, respectively, remained unpaid as at 31 December 1987; unpaid pledged contributions for future years for the Foundation and IYSH amounted to $1,847,631 and $20,500, respectively.

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(59) the Executive Director, in March 1987,(60) reported on two comments by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the report of the Board of Auditors, relating to the Foundation's use of experts and consultants and the incidence of recorded obligations for travel and purchase orders outstanding for one year or more.(61)

In April,(62) the Commission took note of the financial report and accounts of the Foundation for the biennium ended 31 December 1985(63) and the Executive Director's comments.

Proposed budget for 1988-1989

In a February 1987 report on the 1988-1989 proposed programme budget of the Foundation,(64) the Executive Director stated that the Foundation's income in 1986-1987, excluding that of IYSH, was projected at $12,732,000, with expenditure estimated at $8,807,300. He noted that, taking into account the statutory reserve of $600,000, the expected surplus balance of income over expenditure at the end of the 1986-1987 biennium was projected at $3,324,700.

The Foundation's income during 1988-1989 was expected to amount to $11,024,700 made up of $3,924,700 in fund balance as at 1 January 1988, to which would be added $6,000,000 in expected contributions and pledges, $900,000 in various income and $200,000 in expected savings from previous years' unliquidated obligations. The expenditure and commitments of $8,665,600 were to be broken down as follows: $2,614,600 for programme costs, $1,251,000 for programme support and $4.8 million in project commitments: $600,000 was allocated for the fund reserve.

On 16 April 1987,(65) the Commission approved the proposed allocation of funds for programme implementation, programme support and reserve purposes and the allocation of the balance of resources for further programme implementation for 1988-1989.

Chapter XVII

Human rights

In 1987, United Nations activities aimed at bringing the widest compliance with the Universal Declaration on Human Rights and other United Nations human rights instruments, had gathered further momentum the Secretary-General said in his report on the work of the Organization (see p. 10).

The drafting of an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families continued, as did work on a draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment. Elaboration of a convention on the rights of the child moved forward, as did work on a draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations continued to review developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous populations. Work also progressed on the drafting of a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms.

During the year, the Secretary-General established a Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights to provide additional financial support for activities focused on implementing international conventions and other human rights instruments promulgated by the United Nations, its specialized agencies or regional organizations. He also submitted a plan of activities for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination during 1990-1993, the remaining years of the Decade.

Protection of detained persons was again a substantive part of the United Nations work in human rights. The Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment entered into force on 26 June 1987, as did the optional provisions of its articles 21 and 22. The Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances continued to investigate cases, and a sessional working group examined further the draft body of guidelines, principles, guarantees of the rights of persons detained on the grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder.

Situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again

examined. The Secretary-General urged that, in order to increase the benefits brought by the Universal Declaration on Human Rights, the complementary instruments agreed on, further defining the rights to which all are entitled and providing procedures to encourage respect for them, be universally ratified and rigorously observed.

The Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development held its tenth session, and the rights to adequate housing, ownership of property and education were considered among other economic, social and cultural rights.

Action on these and other human rights issues taken by the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-third session, held at Geneva from 2 February to 13 March 1987, was embodied in 61 resolutions and 12 decisions; those by its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its thirty-ninth session, held also at Geneva from 10 August to 4 September, numbered 33 resolutions and 13 decisions.

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: South Africa and apartheid; Asia and the Pacific: Kampuchea situation; Afghanistan situation; Iran-Iraq armed conflict. Mediterranean: Cyprus question. Middle East: territories occupied by Israel; Palestinian detainees. Social and cultural development: crime prevention and criminal justice. Women. Children, youth and aging persons: youth. Refugees. Namibia. Other colonial territories. Legal aspects of international political relations: draft convention against mercenaries.

Implementation of the Programme for the Decade

In 1987, United Nations efforts to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination were carried out in accordance with the plan of activities for 1985-1989, put forward in 1984.(1) The Secretary-General submitted a plan of activities for the remainder of the Decade, 1990-1993.

Communications. On 2 January 1987,(2) the United States transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a joint resolution adopted by the United States Congress in 1985, denouncing and condemning any linkage between zionism and racism and stating that a 1975 General Assembly resolution(3), which equated zionism with racism, was itself a form of bigotry. The United States considered the Assembly resolution inconsistent with United Nations principles, formally repudiated that resolution and called on all countries to do the same.

Responding on 6 February,(4) Yemen, as Chairman of the Group of Arab States, charged the United States with attempting to pressure and embarrass the United Nations, and pointed out that the 1975 Assembly resolution had been adopted democratically.

In a written statement to the Secretary-General, the Women's International Democratic Federation, on 12 January,(5) described its activities to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade, which included seminars and international conferences, solidarity campaigns through its publications and political support at international forums.

Issues relating to racial discrimination were also covered at the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of the Non-Aligned Countries to the forty-second session of the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October),(6) and at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Vancouver, Canada, 13-17 October).(7)

Reports of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to 1984(8) and 1986(9) General Assembly requests, the Secretary-General submitted in April 1987 to the Economic and Social Council his annual report, with later addenda,(10) summarizing activities undertaken or contemplated by Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs to achieve the Decade's objectives.

In a February 1987 report to the Commission on Human Rights,(11) he outlined a plan of activities for the remainder of the Decade, 1990-1993. Based on the Programme of Action for the Decade, activities during that period were to focus on: action to combat apartheid; education, teaching and training; dissemination of information and the role of the mass media in combating racism and racial discrimination; measures for the promotion and protection of human rights of persons belonging to minority groups, indigenous populations and peoples and migrant workers who were subjected to racial discrimination; the elaboration of recourse procedures for victims of racial discrimination; implementation of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination(12) and other related international instruments; the adoption of national legislation and establishment of national institutions; the organization of seminars and studies; action by non-governmental organizations (NGOs); and international co-operation.

The Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights, in a statement before the Commission in February, offered concrete suggestions for implementing the proposed activities. The statement was annexed to a report of the Secretary-General, submitted to the Economic and Social Council in April.(13) Also annexed to the report was a decision adopted by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) in March, inviting the Secretary-General, the Council and the Assembly to devote priority attention to ways to secure universal ratification of the Convention against racial discrimination.

Comments on the Secretary-General's draft plan of activities by the Human Rights Committee, in a statement of 8 April, and by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), were contained in an addendum to the Secretary-General's report.

In September,(14) the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly an updated report on implementation of the Programme of Action and a revised plan of activities for 1990-1993, incorporating comments and suggestions made on his draft plan. For 1990-1991, he suggested the following activities: a global survey of the extent to which children of migrant workers were able to receive education in their mother tongue; a meeting of experts to review national experience in operating schemes of local self-government for indigenous populations; an expert study on the impact of article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in providing guarantees of equality to persons belonging to minorities; regional workshops on adopting legislation to combat racism and racial discrimination; a seminar on community relations commissions and their functions; a seminar to assess experience gained in implementing the Convention against racial discrimination; an exchange of views on how United Nations or United Nations-related bodies could better function with regard to their responsibilities related to implementing the programme on racial discrimination. For 1992-1993, he proposed the following activities: a round-table of experts to discuss the preparation of teaching materials; publication in three additional languages of the handbook of recourse procedures available to victims of racism; two regional workshops on legislation to combat racism; a seminar on the main obstacles to the full eradication of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid; a study on the treatment of conscientious objectors in South Africa and Namibia; and a global survey on the extent of the dissemination of the Convention against racial discrimination.

Also in September,(15) the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly a report on the effects of racial discrimination in education, training and employment as it affected the children of minorities, particularly those of migrant workers (for further information on migrant workers, see p. 738), summarizing information and views received from Governments, specialized agencies, one regional intergovernmental organization and NGOs. The report updated information contained in a 1985 preliminary study(16) and a 1986 progress report,(17) summarized measures taken and recommended future action on ways of dealing with the effects of racial discrimination on children.

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February 1987,(18) the Commission on Human Rights commended all States that had ratified or acceded to the international instruments relevant to the Decade and appealed to others to do the same. It urged co-operation from States and international organizations in implementing the plan of activities for 1985-1989, and appealed for generous contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. Within the plan of activities for 1985-1989, the Commission selected as its topic for 1988 the main obstacles to total elimination of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid and asked the Secretary-General to envisage organizing a seminar on the topic; as its topic for 1989, the Commission decided on the political, historical, economic, social and cultural factors contributing to racism, racial discrimination and apartheid.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August 1987,(19) the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, having considered the final progress report on a study assessing the achievements made and obstacles encountered during the first Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983),(20) undertaken by Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway), expressed appreciation for the progress made and approved an outline of the study as proposed in the report. It recommended to the Commission on Human Rights adoption of a draft resolution calling on the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Special Rapporteur to complete his study and to request the Secretary-General to provide the necessary assistance.

Other action. On 19 March 1987,(21) the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) decided that, as part of its annual consideration of efforts to implement the Programme of Action, it would pay particular attention to its own contribution to the Programme's implementation, as well as to the way activities under the Programme could contribute to realizing the objectives of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.(12)

Under the Programme for the Decade, a training course for legislative draftsmen took place, which focused on preparing national legislation against racism and racial discrimination (New York, 8-18 September),(22) as requested by the Assembly in 1985.(23) In an April note to the Economic and Social Council,(24) the Secretary-General drew attention to the financial requirements for conducting the course, totalling some $92,100, to be financed from the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and appealed for urgent contributions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/2 without vote.

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination The Economic and Social Council, Reaffirming the purpose set out in the Charter of the United Nations of achieving international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling the proclamation by the General Assembly, in its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Recalling also the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/14 to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade,

Reaffirming the plan of activities for the period 1985-1989, to be implemented by the General Assembly in accordance with General Assembly resolution 39/16 of 23 November 1984,

Conscious of the responsibilities conferred upon it by the General Assembly for co-ordinating and, in particular, evaluating the activities undertaken in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Having examined the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Having taken note of the observations and suggestions of the Secretary-General aimed at identifying the sectors within which activities might be undertaken during the second half of the Second Decade and of the reaction of certain United Nations bodies and organizations in that connection,

Emphasizing the need to ensure co-ordination of activities undertaken by various United Nations bodies and specialized agencies for the purpose of implementing the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Noting that, despite the efforts of the international community, the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the first years of the Second Decade have not attained their principal objectives and that millions of human beings continue to be victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Aware of the efforts of the international community to improve the protection of the human rights of migrant workers, including those from the developing countries,

1. Reaffirms the importance of achieving the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a comprehensive and updated report on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade and a revised report outlining a proposed plan of activities to be implemented during the second half (1990-1993) of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, taking into account the relevant comments and observations made during the deliberations of the Council;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to solicit observations, views and proposals of the United Nations bodies and specialized agencies concerned on the preparation of the draft plan of activities for 1990-1993 and to communicate them to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that the Centre for Human Rights shall abide by the letter and spirit of the resolutions on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade;

7. Commends those Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have intensified and expanded their efforts to ensure the rapid elimination of apartheid and all forms of racism and racial discrimination and urges them to redouble such efforts;

8. Invites all Governments to take or continue to take all necessary measures to combat all forms of racism and racial discrimination and to support the work of the Second Decade by making contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination to ensure further implementation of activities adopted for the Second Decade;

9. Decides, as a matter of priority, to give particular attention to the specific activities of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade that are directed towards the elimination of apartheid, in view of the present explosive situation in southern Africa;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in his revised reports, to continue to pay special attention to the situation of migrant workers and members of their families;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to present, in his future annual reports to the Council on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade, more detailed information on the relevant activities of all Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/2

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Draft by Guinea, for African States (E/1987/L.23), orally revised; agenda item 2

Meeting numbers. ESC 10, 14.

The United States did not join the consensus; it said it had not participated in activities related to the first and second Decades since the Assembly's 1975 resolution equating zionism with racism.⁽³⁾ The Federal Republic of Germany supported the text but considered the reference to migrant workers inappropriate; it did not believe that there was a connection between the status of migrant workers and racial discrimination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1987, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/47 without vote.

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objective set forth in the Charter of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism in all its forms, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, and the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, on the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, on the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Recalling further the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and 1983, respectively,

Bearing in mind the Report of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Convinced that the Second World Conference represented a positive contribution by the international community towards attaining the objectives of the Decade, through its adoption of a Declaration and an operational Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Noting with concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination were not attained and that millions of human beings continue to this day to be the victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling its resolutions 39/16 of 23 November 1984 and 41/94 of 4 December 1986,

Emphasizing once again the necessity of attaining the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Noting that the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 1987/2 of 26 May 1987, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a revised report outlining a proposed plan of activities to be implemented during the period 1990-1993,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the study, submitted within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Convinced of the need to take more effective and sustained international measures for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination and the total eradication of apartheid in South Africa,

Aware of the importance and the magnitude of the phenomenon of migrant workers, as well as the efforts undertaken by the international community to improve the protection of the human rights of migrant workers and their families,

1. Declares once again that all forms of racism and racial discrimination, particularly in their institutionalized form, such as apartheid, or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity, are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

2. Decides that the international community, in general, and the United Nations, in particular, should continue to give the highest priority to programmes for combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and to intensify their efforts, during the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to provide assistance and relief to the victims of racism and all forms of racial discrimination and apartheid, especially in South Africa and Namibia and in occupied territories and territories under alien domination;

3. Appeals to all Governments and to international and non-governmental organizations to increase and intensify their activities to combat racism, racial discrimination and apartheid and to provide relief and assistance to the victims of these evils;

4. Takes note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General containing information on the activities of Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, as well as United Nations organs, to give effect to the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

5. Urgently requests the Secretary-General to ensure the effective and immediate implementation of those activities proposed for the first half of the Decade which have not yet been undertaken;

6. Takes note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General on the study on the effects of racial discrimination in the field of education, training and employment as it affects the children of minorities, in particular those of migrant workers, and requests him to continue the study and to submit, inter alia, specific recommendations for the implementation of measures to combat the effects of that discrimination;

7. Again requests the Secretary-General to transmit his study on the role of private group action to combat racism and racial discrimination to Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council in order to obtain their views and an indication from them of further relevant materials, and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a final report on this topic;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and issue as soon as possible a collection of model legislation for the guidance of Governments in the enactment of further legislation against racial discrimination;

9. Takes note of the training course held in New York from 8 to 18 September 1987 that focused on the preparation of national legislation against racism and racial discrimination and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the subject to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1988;

10. Renews its invitation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to expedite the preparation of teaching materials and teaching aids to promote teaching, training and educational activities on human rights and against racism and racial discrimination, with particular emphasis on activities at the primary and secondary levels of education;

11. Again requests the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights to consider the need for updating the study on racial discrimination;

12. Also requests the Sub-Commission to complete as soon as possible the study of the results achieved and the obstacles encountered during the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the first half of the Second Decade;

13. Once again authorizes the Secretary-General to organize in 1988 a global consultation on racial discrimination involving Representatives of the United Nations system, regional intergovernmental organizations and interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to focus on the co-ordination of international activities to combat racism and racial discrimination, and requests him to disseminate widely the results of that consultation;

14. Again requests the Economic and Social Council to envisage the organization, within the framework of its plan of activities for the period 1985-1989, of a seminar on cultural dialogue between the countries of origin and the host countries of migrant workers;

15. Emphasizes the importance of adequate recourse procedures for victims of racism and racial discrimination and therefore requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the results of the seminars held on this topic, to prepare and finalize, with the appropriate assistance of qualified experts if possible, a handbook of recourse procedures;

16. Considers that all the parts of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination should receive equal attention in order to attain the objectives of the Second Decade;

17. Approves the plan of activities proposed for the period 1990-1993 contained in the annex to the present resolution;

18. Invites the Secretary-General to proceed with the implementation of the activities for the period 1990-1993 listed in the annex to the present resolution;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to accord the highest priority, in executing the plan of activities, to measures for combating apartheid,

20. Reaffirms the necessity of co-ordinating the full range of programmes under implementation by the United Nations system as they relate to the objectives of the Second Decade, and emphasizes the importance of an operational, viable and effective institutional machinery to this end;

21. Invites all Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate fully in the implementation of the plans of activities for the periods 1985-1989 and 1990-1993 by intensifying and broadening their efforts to bring about the speedy elimination of apartheid and all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

22. Considers that voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination are indispensable for the implementation of the above-mentioned programmes;

23. Strongly appeals to all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Trust Fund and, to this end, requests the Secretary-General to undertake appropriate contacts and initiatives to encourage contributions;

24. Reiterates its request to the Economic and Social Council, throughout the Second Decade, to submit annually to the General Assembly a report containing, inter alia:

(a) An enumeration of the activities undertaken or contemplated to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade, including the activities of Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other international and regional organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations;

(b) A review and appraisal of those activities;

(c) Its suggestions and recommendations;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;

26. Decides to keep the item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination" on its agenda throughout the Second Decade and to consider it as a matter of the highest priority at its forty-third session.

ANNEX

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/703) without vote, 23 October (meeting 23); draft by Madagascar for Group of African States (A/C.3/42/L.10), orally revised; agenda item 87.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 3-13, 15, 23, 24; plenary 85.

The United States again stated that it had not participated in the adoption of resolutions or in activities pertaining to the Decade since the adoption of a 1975 resolution⁽³⁾ equating zionism with racism.

Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1987,⁽²⁵⁾ there were 124 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination adopted by the General Assembly in 1965⁽¹²⁾ and in force since 1969.⁽²⁶⁾ No States became parties during 1987.

The Commission on Human Rights, in February,⁽¹⁸⁾ appealed to those States that had not yet done so to ratify, accede to and implement the Convention, among other international instruments to combat racism.

Implementation of the Convention

CERD activities. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up under article 8 of the Convention, held two sessions in 1987, both at Geneva: the thirty-fourth from 2 to 20 March and the thirty-fifth from 3 to 7 August. The August session was curtailed from three weeks to one week owing to the non-payment of assessed contributions by a number of States parties over several years.

At its March session, most of the Committee's work was devoted to examining reports submitted by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions. After considering reports by 26 States under article 9 of the Convention, the Committee provided, in its report to the General Assembly on its 1986-1987 activities,⁽²⁷⁾ a summary of its members' views on each country report and of statements made by the States parties concerned, and described action taken to resolve the problem of delays and non-submission of reports.

In conformity with article 15 of the Convention, CERD considered, on 19 March and 6 August, petitions and reports, and other information related to Trust and Non-Self Governing Territories transmitted by the Trusteeship Council (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter II) and by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The Committee approved the appointment of members of its three working groups—Atlantic Ocean and Caribbean Territories, including Gibraltar; Pacific and Indian Ocean Territories; and African Territories—to examine documentation submitted under article 15 and to report on their findings. On 6 August, the Committee adopted the working groups' reports with some amendments and noted that it found it very difficult to fulfil its functions under article 15 as, in most cases, the documents furnished by United Nations bodies did not contain relevant information. It requested the competent bodies to furnish it with the material expressly referred to in article 15, paragraph 2(b) of the Convention (i.e. petitions as well as reports concerning legislative, judicial, administrative or other measures related to the Convention's principles and objectives applied by the administrative Powers within the territories).

Concerning the reporting obligations under article 9 of the Convention, the Committee was informed of a decision adopted on 29 April by the eleventh meeting of States parties recommending that, after submitting initial reports to the Committee, States parties should submit further reports on every second occasion thereafter on which reports were due (every four years), and brief interim reports on each intervening occasion.

In March, the Committee continued to consider, in conformity with article 14 of the Convention, communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD competence to receive and consider such communications. Twelve of the 124 States parties—Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Iceland, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Senegal, Sweden and Uruguay—had declared such recognition. The Committee adopted a decision establishing time-limits for a State party's submission on the merits of a communication and for any comments that the author of a communication might wish to make. In 1987, the Committee's work under article 14 had not reached the reporting stage.

CERD also considered activities to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see p.727).

At both of its 1987 sessions, CERD continued to consider the critical financial situation, which affected its ability to discharge its monitoring functions under the Convention. On 20 March,⁽²⁸⁾ it adopted a decision on the financial obligations of States parties addressed to the eleventh meeting of States parties to the Convention, by which it authorized the CERD Chairman to address the meeting and recommended ways to overcome the Committee's financial crisis.

In accordance with a 1986 Assembly resolution,⁽²⁹⁾ the eleventh (emergency) meeting of the States parties met on 29 April 1987 in New York. It strongly appealed to the parties to fulfil their financial obligations and asked its Chairman to convey that appeal to the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of those parties in arrears and to urge them to pay their assessed contributions before the end of June 1987.

In August, CERD again discussed its critical financial situation and noted that, despite numerous appeals, the situation continued to worsen. On 6 August,(30) the Committee recommended that the Assembly, pending a satisfactory solution to its financial difficulties, consider authorizing the Secretary-General to continue advancing the expenses of CERD members, as was done previously, to enable the Committee to continue its work.

In response to a 1986 Assembly request,(29) the Secretary-General reported in September 1987 on his efforts to solve the Committee's financial problem.(31) He noted that as at 30 September 1987, outstanding assessments and arrears totalled $151,623 from 48 States parties.

In a later report,(32) he stated that, as at 12 November, $150,611 in assessments for 1987 and prior years remained outstanding from 46 States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/57, without vote.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and resolution 41/104 of 4 December 1986 on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, as well as its other relevant resolutions on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Reiterating the importance of the Convention, which is the most widely accepted human rights instrument adopted under the auspices of the United Nations, as well as of the contribution of the Committee to United Nations efforts to combat racism and all other forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin,

Welcoming the report of the Committee covering its 1986 and 1987 sessions,

Reiterating once again the need to intensify the struggle for the elimination of racism and racial discrimination throughout the world, especially the elimination of apartheid in South Africa and Namibia,

Mindful of the obligation of all States parties to comply fully with the provisions of the Convention,

Recalling the urgent appeals made by the Secretary-General, the General Assembly, the eleventh meeting of States parties to the Convention and the Committee itself to the States parties to honour their financial obligation under the Convention,

Gravely concerned that, in spite of all the urgent appeals for payment of assessed contributions under the Convention, the situation impeding the proper functioning of the Committee continues to deteriorate,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the question of financing the expenses of the members of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination,

1. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that a number of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination have not fulfilled their financial obligations under the Convention, which led to the cancellation of the August 1986 session and the curtailment by two weeks of the August 1987 session of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

2. Expresses once again its concern that such a situation prevented the Committee from submitting an annual report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session as required by the Convention and led to further delay in discharging its substantive obligations under the Convention;

3. Commends the Committee for its work with regard to the implementation of the Convention and the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee covering its 1986 and 1987 sessions;

5. Calls upon States parties to fulfil their obligations under article 9, paragraph 1, of the Convention and to submit in due time their periodic reports on measures taken to implement the Convention;

6. Strongly appeals to all States parties to fulfil without delay their financial obligations under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention so as to enable the Committee to continue its work;

7. Calls upon States parties to explore, at their next meeting on 15 January 1988, all appropriate avenues and to take a decision that would enable the Committee to meet regularly in the future;

8. Invites the States parties to consider, pending a fully satisfactory solution to the current financial difficulties, the possibility, as an exceptional measure, of the Committee holding one extended session per year;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the financial situation of the Committee;

10. Decides to consider the report at its forty-third session under the item entitled "Elimination of all forms of racial discrimination".

Measures against nazism

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August 1987,(33) the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, expressing concern over the resurgence of Nazi ideas and their diffusion, urged all States to take steps to secure the just punishment of war criminals and persons who had committed crimes against mankind. It called on Governments to take initiatives in conformity with internal and international law to end neo-Nazi propaganda and other activities, and invited civil and religious authorities to join efforts to that effect and to co-operate closely to that end with youth organizations.

On the same date,(34) the Sub-Commission, by a vote of 15 to none, with 4 abstentions, recommended to the Commission on Human Rights for adoption a resolution by which it would acknowledge the significance of gathering information on violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms from all sources and that files assembled by the War Crimes Commission might contain important sources of such information on violations during the Nazi regime; recognize the importance of broader access to the War Crimes Commission's files; encourage the Secretary-General to pursue his efforts to set new guidelines for such access; and suggest to the Secretary-General that the Sub-Commission might contribute its expertise in standard-setting by advising him on draft guidelines concerning who, if anyone, other than Member States should have access to the War Crimes Commission's files and under what circumstances.

Other aspects of discrimination

Religious freedom

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1986,(35) the Secretary-General submitted in 1987 an addendum(36) to the 1986 compendium of national legislation and regulations on freedom of religion or belief, highlighting measures taken to combat intolerance or discrimination;(37) the addendum contained the legislative and regulatory texts of 26 countries.

Reports of Special Rapporteurs. As requested by the Commission in 1986,(37) Special Rapporteur Angelo Vidal d'Almeida Ribeiro (Portugal) submitted a 1987 report(38) examining factors hampering the implementation of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief.(39) Those factors included legislative provisions; governmental policies; political, economic and cultural factors; and intolerance towards other religions and beliefs. Also examined were infringements of the rights defined in the Declaration, religious intolerance and infringements of the right to life, physical integrity, liberty, security of person and of the right to freedom of movement and of opinion or expression.

In light of his findings, the Special Rapporteur recommended the development of an international convention on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief. Governments, he noted, should implement standards already established by the United Nations and disseminate the texts of all existing international instruments concerned with the problem. He called for the prohibition of legislative and administrative provisions incompatible with international standards and constitutional principles relating to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, and recommended establishing national mechanisms for implementing appropriate conciliation procedures. He also recommended promoting ideals of tolerance and understanding in school and university curricula and by the media, NGOs and religious bodies, and called for inter-denominational dialogue.

The Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur, Elizabeth Odio Benito (Costa Rica), in a report on the dimensions of the problems of intolerance and of discrimination on grounds of religion or belief,(40) authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1984,(41) outlined accomplishments made in creating and implementing international legal standards concerning the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief. The report also included information on manifestations of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief and on specific rights violated, using the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination based on Religion or Belief as a standard. The Rapporteur attempted to identify the root causes of those manifestations and made a series of recommendations as to specific national and international measures that could be adopted, with special emphasis on action in education. The report contained a summary of constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, and an exposition of the concept of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief. The report was based on information received from Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, and included an overview of pertinent activities of CERD and the Human Rights Committee.

Human Rights Commission action. As requested by the General Assembly in 1986,(42) the Commission on Human Rights continued in 1987 to consider measures to implement the 1981 Declaration. On 4 March 1987,(43) the Commission decided to extend its Special Rapporteur's (Angelo Vidal d'Almeida Ribeiro) mandate for one year, requesting the Secretary-General to provide him with the assistance required. The Commission asked the Sub-Commission to examine the report of its Special Rapporteur(40) (Elizabeth Odio Benito) and to transmit it, together with its observations, to the Commission's 1988 session. The Secretary-General was asked to prepare an addendum to the compendium of the national legislation and regulations of States on freedom of religion or belief, emphasizing measures taken to combat intolerance or discrimination; to accord high priority to disseminating the text of the 1981 Declaration in all official United Nations languages and in national languages; to invite NGOs to consider what further role they could play in disseminating the Declaration; and to report to the Commission in 1988.

On 29 May 1987, by decision 1987/143, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of its Special Rapporteur and its request that the Secretary-General provide him all the necessary assistance.

Sub-Commission action. On 4 September 1987,(44) the Sub-Commission welcomed the recommendations in the study of its Special Rapporteur Elizabeth Odio Benito—particularly those relating to the needs for further study of the issue, for developing a binding international instrument and for educational measures to promote tolerance, understanding and respect in matters relating to religion. It requested its Chairman to entrust one of its members with considering which aspects of the issue should be studied in greater depth; with examining information by Governments, intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies, NGOs, academic institutions and religious bodies; with examining which issues and factors should be considered before any definitive drafting of a binding international instrument; and with reporting to it in 1991. The Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to inform it of any further views, information or activities relevant to its consideration of measures to eliminate all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion. It recommended to the Commission that the Special Rapporteur's study be published in all United Nations official languages and be widely disseminated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/97, without vote.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance
The General Assembly,

Conscious of the need to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling its resolution 41/112 of 4 December 1986, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration,

Encouraged by the efforts being made by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to study relevant developments affecting the implementation of the Declaration,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/15 of 4 March 1987 and Economic and Social Council decision 1987/143 of 29 May 1987, whereby the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate, was extended for one year,

Noting with satisfaction that the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities examined at its thirty-ninth session the study concluded by the Special Rapporteur, in accordance with Sub-Commission resolution 1983/31 of 6 September 1983, on the current dimensions of the problems of intolerance and of discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief and laid the foundation in its resolution 1987/33 of 4 September 1987 for future in-depth study of aspects of the issues raised in the study,

Emphasizing that non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups at every level have an important role to play in the promotion of tolerance and the protection of freedom of religion or belief,

Seriously concerned that intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief continue to exist in many parts of the world,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief,

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a right guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States, therefore, in accordance with their respective constitutional systems and with such internationally accepted instruments as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief to provide, where they have not already done so, adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies where there is intolerance or discrimination based on religion or belief;

3. Stresses, in this connection, the value of the work in progress in the Commission on Human Rights on the preparation of a compendium of national legislation and regulations on the question of freedom of religion or belief and invites States to provide the necessary information to the Secretary-General, with particular regard to the measures taken to combat intolerance or discrimination in this field;

4. Urges all States to take all appropriate measures to combat intolerance and to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and, in this context, to examine where necessary the supervision and training of their civil servants, educators and other public officials to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, they respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

5. Invites the United Nations University and other academic and research institutions to undertake programmes and studies on the encouragement of understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

6. Considers it desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to the dissemination of the text of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, in all the official languages of the United Nations, and to take all appropriate measures to make the text available for use by United Nations information centres, as well as by other interested bodies;

8. Requests the Secretary-General in this context to invite interested non-governmental organizations to consider what further role they could envisage playing in the implementation of the Declaration and in its dissemination in national and local languages;

9. Urges all States to consider disseminating the text of the Declaration in their respective national languages and to facilitate its dissemination in national and local languages;

10. Welcomes the renewal of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate;

11. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth session to consider the study of the current dimensions of the problems of intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief in the light of the observations transmitted to it by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

12. Notes that the Commission on Human Rights intends to consider also at its forty-fourth session the question of a binding international instrument in this field and emphasizes, in this connection, the relevance of General Assembly resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986 entitled "Setting international standards in the field of human rights";

13. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration and to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance" and to consider the report of the Commission on Human Rights under that item.

Indigenous populations

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(45) the Commission on Human Rights urged the Sub-Commission's Working Group on Indigenous Populations to intensify its efforts to elaborate international standards to promote and protect the human rights of indigenous populations. It encouraged Governments to review and comment on the preliminary draft principles contained in the Working Group's 1985 report.(46) The Secretary-General was requested to provide assistance to the Working Group, and to appoint five members to the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (see p. 738). as called for by the Assembly in 1985.(47)

Working Group activities. At its fifth session (Geneva, 3-7 August 1987)(48) the Working Group on Indigenous Populations continued to review developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous populations, and considered the evolution of standards concerning indigenous rights. Annexed to the Group's report were its recommendations to the Sub-Commission that the Group's Chairman/Rapporteur, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), prepare a set of draft principles and preambular paragraphs for inclusion in a future declaration on indigenous rights, that the General Assembly proclaim 1992 the international year of indigenous rights and that the Sub-Commission undertake a study on the contemporary significance of treaties concluded between indigenous peoples and States. Also annexed were, among others, the preliminary versions of 14 draft principles for inclusion in a future declaration and a Declaration of Principles adopted by the Indigenous Peoples' Preparatory Meeting (Geneva, 27-31 July 1987).

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August 1987,(49) the Sub-Commission proposed that the Commission request the Economic and Social Council to ask the Secretary-General to ensure that the recognition and promotion of the rights of indigenous peoples were included in future United Nations activities under the Programme of Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see p.727) and to organize in 1988, within the programme of advisory services, a seminar on the effects of racism and racial discrimination on the social and economic relations between indigenous peoples and States.

On 2 September,(50) the Sub-Commission proposed to the Commission that it recommend for adoption by the Assembly a proposal to proclaim 1992 as the international year of the world's indigenous populations.

On the same date,(51) the Sub-Commission endorsed the Working Group's recommendation to complete a draft declaration on indigenous rights and requested the Secretary-General to transmit the Group's report and its annexes to Governments, specialized agencies, organizations of indigenous peoples and other NGOs, and to assist the Group in discharging its tasks. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council request the Group's Chairman/Rapporteur to prepare a working paper containing a set of principles and preambular paragraphs for inclusion in a draft declaration.

Also on 2 September,(52) the Sub-Commission, endorsing the Group's recommendation to undertake a study on treaties between indigenous peoples and States, proposed that the Commission recommend that the Council authorize the appointment of a Special Rapporteur, Miguel Alfonso Martínez (Cuba), for that study. The Sub-Commission requested the Special Rapporteur to present a preliminary report to it in 1991 and asked the Secretary-General to assist the Rapporteur in discharging his mandate.

On 4 September 1987,(53) the Sub-Commission decided to delegate one or more of its members to observe United States Congressional Hearings scheduled, both on site and in Washington, D.C., to consider further implementation of laws providing for the relocation of Hopi and Navajo families.

UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

In accordance with a 1985 Assembly resolution,(47) the Secretary-General, in a September note,(54) reported that he had appointed on 4 June 1987 for a three-year term a five-member Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations. The Board was expected to hold its first session in 1988 to establish working methods and selection criteria to choose beneficiaries of travel assistance for representatives of indigenous groups or communities to participate in the 1988 Working Group on Indigenous Populations. The Secretary-General noted that a total of $52,067 had been contributed to the Fund by Australia ($7,067), the Netherlands ($15,000), Norway ($20,000) and Sweden ($10,000).

By decision 42/425 of 7 December 1987, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Migrant workers

Draft convention

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(55) the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the progress made by the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, established by the General Assembly in 1979,(56) on the second reading of the draft convention. It invited all Member States to continue co-operating with the Group, reiterated its hope for a speedy completion of the convention and requested the Secretary-General to report on further progress in 1988:

Working Group activities. The open-ended Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers held its sixth inter-sessional meeting from 1 to 12 June,(57) and its eighth session from 22 September to 2 October,(58) both in New York

At those meetings, the Group adopted in second reading articles 17-35 of part III, on the fundamental human rights of all migrant workers and members of their families, and articles 36 to 49 of part IV, on other rights of migrant workers and their family members in a regular situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/140 by recorded vote.

Measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers
The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and standards set forth in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Bearing in mind the principles and standards established within the framework of the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and the importance of the task carried out in connection with migrant workers and their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that, in spite of the existence of an already established body of principles and standards, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling its resolution 34/172 of 17 December 1979, in which it decided to establish a working group open to all Member States to elaborate an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/198 of 15 December 1980, 36/160 of 16 December 1981, 37/170 of 17 December 1982, 38/86 of 16 December 1983, 39/102 of 14 December 1984, 40/130 of 13 December 1985 and 41/151 of 4 December 1986, in which it renewed the mandate of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and requested it to continue its work,

Having examined the progress made by the Working Group at its sixth inter-sessional meeting, held from 1 to 12 June 1987, and at the current session of the General Assembly, from 22 September to 2 October 1987, during which the Group continued with the second reading of the draft convention,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the two most recent reports of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and, in particular, of the progress made by the Working Group on the drafting, in second reading, of the draft convention;

2. Decides that, in order to enable it to complete its task as soon as possible, the Working Group shall again hold an inter-sessional meeting of two weeks' duration in New York, immediately after the first regular session of 1988 of the Economic and Social Council;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments the two most recent reports of the Working Group so as to enable the members of the Group to continue the drafting, in second reading, of the draft convention during the inter-sessional meeting to be held in the spring of 1988, as well as to transmit the results obtained at that meeting to the General Assembly for consideration during its forty-third session;

4. Also invites the Secretary-General to transmit the above-mentioned documents to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the international organizations concerned, for their information, so as to enable them to continue their co-operation with the Working Group;

5. Decides that the Working Group shall meet during the forty-third session of the General Assembly, preferably at the beginning of the session, to continue the second reading of the draft international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to do everything possible to ensure adequate Secretariat services for the Working Group for the timely fulfilment of its mandate, both at its inter-sessional meeting to be held after the first regular session of 1988 of the Economic and Social Council and during the forty-third session of the General Assembly.

beria, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of, United Kingdom.

The United States voted negatively based on the opinion that ILO was the appropriate forum for any substantive discussion of issues relating to migrant workers; it was not convinced of the need for an additional convention.

In Canada's opinion, the Working Group would do better to take account of the standards and principles already established by ILO. The Federal Republic of Germany said the protection of migrant workers was amply guaranteed by other United Nations instruments, which protected the rights of all human beings; those instruments should be further developed and all States should be urged to implement them. The Federal Republic of Germany particularly objected to the draft convention's provisions on so-called illegal migrant workers, which, it felt, tended to sanction illegal immigration.

The United Kingdom had reservations about the usefulness of the work done by the Working Group; it was also concerned at the resources required to implement the resolution, which it considered excessive, and could not condone a further breach of the Assembly's rules on holding meetings, according to which United Nations bodies were expected to meet at their respective headquarters.

France expressed reservations concerning the administrative and financial contributions linked with the choice of the venue for the Working Group's meeting.

Protection of minorities

Activities related to protection of minorities continued to focus in 1987 on the elaboration of a declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. As in previous years, the Commission on Human Rights set up an informal open-ended working group which met from 16 to 20 February and on 24 February and 6 March 1987. The group adopted provisionally in first reading draft article 2 of the declaration and considered draft article 3. Annexed to the group's report(59) were the texts of articles 1 and 2, on which preliminary agreement had been reached, and proposals relating to the remaining articles—3 to 7—for consideration by the group.

On 10 March 1987,(60) the Commission decided to set up another working group in 1988 to continue consideration of the draft declaration, and asked the Secretary-General to provide the group with the assistance it needed.

Civil and political rights

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocol

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1987, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966(1) and in force since 1976,(2) had been ratified or acceded to by 87 and 40 States, respectively Democratic Yemen and Equatorial Guinea became parties to the Covenant in 1987.(3) Austria ratified and Equatorial Guinea acceded to the Optional Protocol, and Belgium made the declaration under article 41 of the Covenant recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant.

In his report to the Assembly on the International Covenants on Human Rights,(4) the Secretary-General provided information on the status of the Covenant and the Protocol as at 31 July 1987 (see p. 788).

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(5) the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant and Optional Protocol and to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant. A similar appeal was made by the Assembly later in the year, in resolution 42/103. The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to provide technical assistance to States not parties to the Covenant with a view to assisting them to ratify it or accede thereto and requested him to report in 1988 on the Status of the Covenant and its Protocol.

Implementation

Human Rights Committee activities. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions at Geneva in 1987: the twenty-ninth session from 23 March to 10 April; the thirtieth from 6 to 24 July; and the thirty-first from 26 October to 13 November. Although the Committee's spring session was usually held in New York, the Committee, in view of the financial crisis of the United Nations, changed the venue of its twenty-ninth session to the United Nations Office at Geneva.

In 1987, the Committee considered reports from twelve States—the Congo, Denmark, El Salvador, Iraq, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Zaire and Zambia—under article 40 of the Covenant. The Committee also adopted views on ten communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated. The cases concerned Bolivia, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Madagascar, the Netherlands (3), Uruguay (2) and Zaire. The Committee decided that four other such communications were inadmissible.

On 24 July 1987, the Committee unanimously adopted its eleventh annual report to the Assembly(6)

Taking note of the Committee's report, the Assembly, in resolution 42/103, urged those parties that had not yet submitted their reports under article 40, to do so. As the Commission had done earlier in the year,(5) the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to give more publicity to the Committee's work.

State of siege or emergency

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(7) the Commission on Human Rights requested its Sub-Commission to give further attention to states of siege or emergency, in accordance with a 1986 Commission decision.(8)

The Commission,(5) as did the Assembly later in the year in resolution 42/103, also underlined the necessity of strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the Covenant, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency, so that the justification and appropriateness of measures taken in those circumstances could be assessed.

Report of the Special Rapporteur and Sub-Commission's action. As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1985,(9) Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy (Argentina) submitted in August 1987, the first annual report and list of States which, since 1 January 1985, had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency.(10) He had compiled initial information on 28 such countries, received from Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. Annexed to his report was a summary table, by country, indicating the name and legal nature of the decisions taken, their date and officially announced duration; the table also gave the territory under the jurisdiction of the State concerned, the officially declared grounds for the state of emergency, and the measures taken and rights concerned. Also annexed was a list of Governments that had replied to the Special Rapporteur. In a later report,(11) the Special Rapporteur provided updated and revised information, as requested by the Sub-Commission on 3 September 1987.(12)

Paraguay

Pursuant to a 1985 Sub-Commission request(13) for information on new developments in Paraguay, the Secretary-General reported to the Sub-Commission in May 1987(14) that he had received two replies from the Government in response to his invitation to submit such information; in May 1986, the Government had informed him that the state of siege remained in force, and later it had reported that the siege had been lifted as at 9 April 1987.

Self-determination of peoples

By five resolutions adopted in 1987, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the right to self-determination for the people of Afghanistan,(15) Kampuchea,(16) Palestine,(17) South Africa and Namibia,(18) and Western Sahara.(19) A sixth resolution(20) adopted under the item pertained to the use of mercenaries to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination (see p. 748).

The Commission's action and debate on the right of peoples to self-determination, as well as action taken by the Economic and Social Council in 1987, were summarized by the Secretary-General in a report to the General Assembly.(21) The report also contained a summary of responses from 17 Governments, five specialized agencies and two NGOs. submitted pursuant to the Assembly's 1986 request(22) for information on their assistance to colonial territories and peoples.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following the pattern of previous years, the General Assembly adopted in 1987 two resolutions on the right to self-determination, a right it repeatedly reaffirmed for individual Non-Self-Governing territories (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV).

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/94 without vote.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second and forty-third sessions,

Reiterating its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985 and 41/100 of 4 December 1986,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of these acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this issue to the General Assembly at its forty-third session under the item entitled "Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights".

Also on 7 December, on the Third Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/95 by recorded vote.

Commends the efforts of the democratic forces within various sections of the South African society that are striving towards the abolition of apartheid and the creation of a united non-racial democratic society in South Africa and, in this connection, takes note with satisfaction of the Dakar Declaration, adopted at the meeting organized by the Institute for a Democratic Alternative for South Africa at Dakar from 9 to 12 July 1987;

Abstaining: Austria, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Greece, Honduras, Ireland, Japan, Malta, New Zealand, Spain.

Explaining its position, the United States said that the text was selective, making no mention of the plight of the people of Afghanistan and Cambodia, and seeking to legitimize the use of violence when the United Nations principal purpose was the search for peaceful solutions. It also singled out Israel for criticism, making no mention of its right to exist within secure borders, and mentioned Israel and Western relations with South Africa, ignoring the fact that over 100 countries maintained economic relations with South Africa. Denmark, on behalf of the 12 member States of the European Community (EC), said the text was negative and unbalanced, referring to individual cases where the right of self-determination was violated but omitting any reference to Afghanistan and Kampuchea. Regarding South Africa, EC could not accept the text's assertion that maintaining relations with a State implied encouragement or approval of its policies. Israel regretted that the elimination of racism had been harnessed to the service of those who sought not only to tarnish its image, but to obliterate it as a State.

Endorsing the EC views, Spain said it specifically could not accept paragraph 2 which countenanced the use of armed force and expressed reservations on paragraph 26 because it did not consider that maintaining political relations with South Africa implied support for it; had there been separate votes, Spain would have voted against both paragraphs. Regarding paragraph 30, Spain said it had not approved all the Assembly resolutions on Western Sahara. Austria could not support some of the text's provisions and had particular reservations on the wording of paragraphs 2 and 8.

Argentina and Ecuador also voiced reservations regarding the wording of some paragraphs, Ecuador saying that there were references to conferences in which it had not participated, and matters were dealt with that fell within the exclusive jurisdiction of States in the exercise of their sovereignty. Colombia objected to the selective naming of countries, as did Turkey which also expressed reservations on paragraph 30. Mexico had reservations on paragraphs 5 and 25.

By a draft resolution on genuine and periodic elections and freedom of association,(23) sponsored by the United States joined by the Dominican Republic and the Netherlands, the Assembly would have, among others things: appealed to Member States to provide constitutional and legal protections to guarantee full respect for the free expression of the will of the people in genuine and periodic elections and to provide similar protections securing full respect for the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association. States would have been called on to promote the realization of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, in accordance with the Charter, in particular on behalf of peoples who were being deprived of their right to self-determination.

Zimbabwe, on behalf of 40 States, proposed insertion of a paragraph by which the Assembly would have reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Palestine to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the Charter principles and relevant United Nations resolutions, in particular the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,(24) as well as insertion of a phrase by which the Assembly would have affirmed that apartheid totally negated the Charter principles and was a crime against humanity.(25) By a sub-amendment, Belgium proposed adding Afghanistan and Kampuchea to the countries whose self-determination and independence the Assembly would have reaffirmed. Further oral amendments were suggested by Cameroon Following a third revision of the draft,(26) Zimbabwe proposed amendments similar to the ones it had already put forward.(27)

Denmark moved that no action be taken on Zimbabwe's amendment reaffirming the rights of the peoples of Namibia and Palestine, and on the sub-amendment proposed by Belgium. Democratic Yemen also moved that no action be taken on the sub-amendment. The Committee rejected the motion by a recorded vote of 56 to 45, with 21 abstentions. The United States then withdrew the draft.

Afghanistan

On 19 February 1987,(15) the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 30 to 5, with 6 abstentions, reaffirmed its profound concern that the people of Afghanistan continued to be denied their right to self-determination, to determine their own form of government and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint. It called for a political settlement based on immediate withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan, full respect for the country's independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned status, and strict observance of the principle of non-interference. Expressing support for the Secretary-General's efforts and the diplomatic process he had initiated, the Commission requested him to continue searching for a political solution, urged all concerned to continue co-operating with him, and appealed for humanitarian relief assistance to alleviate, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the hardships of Afghan refugees.

(See also, p. 800 and, for details of the situation in Afghanistan, see p. 210.)

Kampuchea

During 1987, a number of communications were addressed to the Secretary-General concerning the situation in Kampuchea and allegations of human rights violations there (see p. 200).

The Commission on Human Rights, by a 19 February resolution adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 8, with 3 abstentions,(16) reiterated its condemnation of persistent human rights violations in Kampuchea and reaffirmed that the continued illegal occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived Kampucheans of their right to self-determination and constituted the primary human rights violation in that country. It emphasized that the withdrawal of all foreign forces, restoration of Kampuchea's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, recognition of the Kampucheans' right to self-determination and the commitment by all States to non-interference in its internal affairs were essential for a solution to the Kampuchean problem. The Commission reaffirmed its call for a cessation of hostilities and an immediate withdrawal of foreign forces, to enable Kampucheans to exercise their fundamental rights free from foreign interference, to determine their future through free and fair elections under United Nations supervision to make possible the return of all refugees, and to allow for efforts towards a political solution within the framework of the 1981 Declaration on Kampuchea.(28) The Secretary-General was asked urgently to intensify efforts towards a political settlement and restoration of human rights in Kampuchea, and the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea (see p. 204) was requested to continue its work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1987/155 by recorded vote.

Right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation

At its 18th plenary meeting, on 29 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council fully endorsed Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/6 of 19 February 1987, by which the Commission, inter alia, reaffirmed that the continuing occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived the people of Kampuchea of the exercise of their right to self-determination and constituted the primary violation of human rights in Kampuchea at present. The Council reaffirmed its decisions 1981/154 of 8 May 1981, 1982/143 of 7 May 1982, 1983/155 of 27 May 1983, 1984/148 of 24 May 1984, 1985/155 of 30 May 1985 and 1986/146 of 23 May 1986 and reiterated its call for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea in order to allow the people of Kampuchea to exercise their fundamental freedoms and human rights, including the right to self-determination as contained in the Declaration on Kampuchea adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea on 17 July 1981 and in General Assembly resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979, 35/6 of 22 October 1980, 36/5 of 21 October 1981, 37/6 of 28 October 1982, 38/3 of 27 October 1983, 39/5 of 30 October 1984, 40/7 of 5 November 1985 and 41/6 of 21 October 1986.

The Council expressed its grave concern at the unresolved dilemma of the approximately 250,000 Kampuchean civilians still stranded in Thailand as a result of the armed attacks by the foreign forces in Kampuchea on the Kampuchean civilian encampments along the Thai-Kampuchean border since 1984. The Council recalled the statements made by the Secretary-General on 27 December 1984 and 13 March 1985 in which, inter alia, he appealed to all concerned to avoid endangering the lives of those Kampuchean civilians and adding to the misery and deprivation that already afflicted those most unfortunate people.

The Council also expressed its grave concern at the continued inhuman acts perpetrated by the foreign occupying force in Kampuchea against Kampuchean nationals in their motherland, as well as against innocent Kampuchean displaced persons, in particular the deliberate artillery shellings of Khmer civilian camps along the border, such as those committed against Site 2 camp, housing 153,000 Khmer civilians, on 26 January 1987.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council any further violations of humanitarian principles perpetrated against Kampuchean civilian refugees by the foreign occupying troops along the border, and also requested him to continue to monitor closely the developments in Kampuchea and to intensify efforts, including the use of his good offices, to bring about a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem and the restoration of fundamental human rights in Kampuchea.

The Council recalled the communiqués issued by the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea on 17 January 1985 and 15 February 1985. The Council noted the visits undertaken by the Chairman and members of the Committee to a number of countries in 1986 in an effort to find a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean problem. The Council also noted with appreciation the ongoing efforts of the Committee and requested that the Committee continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference.

The USSR rejected the text saying it contradicted reality, was based on interference in the internal affairs of the Kampucheans and sought to have Kampuchea revert to the Pol Pot dictatorship.

Palestinians

By a resolution of 19 February 1987, adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 6 with 7 abstentions,(7) the Commission on Human Rights condemned Israel for its continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories and for its non-compliance with United Nation resolutions, and called on it to withdraw, complying with its obligations under the Charter. The Commission reaffirmed the right of the Palestinians to self-determination, to regain their rights by all means in accordance with the Charter and United Nations resolutions, and to return to their homes and property. It recognized the right of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), as the legitimate and sole representative of the Palestinian people, to full participation in all efforts and international conferences concerning the Palestine question and the future of the Palestinians. Reaffirming its support for an international peace conference on the Middle East (see p. 258), the Commission regretted the negative attitude of some States towards such a conference. States, United Nations bodies and other international organizations were urged to support the Palestinians, through PLO, in the struggle to restore their rights.

(For other action on human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories, see p. 818; see also p. 296.)

South Africa and Namibia

The Commission on Human Rights, by a 19 February resolution adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 5, with 6 abstentions,(18) called on States to take steps to enable the dependent peoples of South Africa and Namibia to exercise fully and without further delay their right to self-determination and independence. It reaffirmed the right of Namibians to self-determination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia, as well as the legitimacy of their struggle and that of the oppressed people of South Africa by all means, including armed struggle. It urged States to assist them and called for the full implementation of the 1986 Paris(29) and Vienna Declarations(30) and the Programme of Action adopted in the same year by the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia.(30) The Commission rejected the so-called "new constitution" in South Africa as null and void and reiterated that majority rule through full and free adult suffrage was the only guarantee of peace. It condemned the killing of peaceful demonstrators and workers on strike. It also condemned the arbitrary arrests of leaders and activists of mass organizations and demanded their immediate and unconditional release, as well as the release of all people detained or imprisoned because of their struggle for independence, and the guarantee of their fundamental rights. The imposition of censorship and other restrictions on the media was also condemned.

The Commission reaffirmed that continued colonialism in all forms and manifestations was incompatible with the Charter, the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights(31) and the 1960

Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.(24) It condemned South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, declaring it an act of aggression. It also condemned its attempts to dismember the territory, its repression, torture and killing of workers, schoolchildren and other opponents of apartheid, and the policy of bantustanization.

The Commission condemned collaboration with South Africa and the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the 1960 Declaration, calling on States to sever relations with the regime and to cease collaboration in nuclear, military and economic areas. Condemning South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization against front-line and other neighbouring States, it demanded the withdrawal of South Africa's occupation forces from Angola.

In a related resolution,(32) the Commission reaffirmed the inalienable right of the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia to self-determination and independence (see p. 789); in another,(33) it reiterated that that right could be exercised by the Namibians only in accordance with conditions determined by the Security Council in 1978.(34)

Sub-Commission action. By a 31 August resolution,(35) adopted by a roll-call vote of 19 to none, with 1 abstention, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all Namibian political prisoners from detention and concentration camps in Namibia and South Africa. It called on Member States to take legislative, administrative and other measures against South Africa to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally in accordance with United Nations resolutions and to implement fully the Declarations adopted in 1986 by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa(29) and the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia.(30) The Sub-Commission requested the Commission's Chairman to convey to the Secretary-General, the General Assembly and Economic and Social Council Presidents its concern at the continuing failure to bring about Namibia's independence. It asked the Secretary-General to give the widest possible dissemination to its resolution.

Pursuant to a 1986 Commission resolution(36) on self-determination as it applied to South Africa and Namibia, 10 Governments provided information on measures against mercenaries, which the Secretary-General summarized in a 1987 report.(37)

(For human rights violations in South Africa and Namibia, see p. 794. For details on the situation in Namibia, see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III.)

Western Sahara

On 19 February 1987,(19) by a roll-call vote of 27 to none, with 15 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that the question of Western Sahara was one of decolonization to be completed through the exercise of the people's right to self-determination and independence. It also reaffirmed that a political solution lay in the implementation of the 1983 OAU resolution quoted in a General Assembly resolution of that year(38) and joined in the Assembly's appeal to the parties to the conflict to display the political will to implement that resolution, as well as two others adopted by the Assembly in 1985(39) and 1986.(40) The Commission requested the parties to the conflict to negotiate directly with a view to bringing about a ceasefire and creating conditions for a referendum for self-determination. It decided to consider the question in 1988. (See also TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV.)

Mercenaries

On 9 March 1987,(20) the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 30 to 11, with 1 abstention, decided to appoint for one year a special rapporteur to examine the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and of impeding the right to self-determination, requesting its Chairman to appoint an individual of recognized international standing. The Commission decided that the special rapporteur should seek and receive reliable information from Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. It asked the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the special rapporteur and to appeal to Governments to assist him in the performance of his duties. It requested the special rapporteur to report in 1988, at which time it would consider the question as a high priority matter. (See also LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter II.)

Following approval by the Economic and Social Council (see below), and after consultation with the members of the Board of the Commission, the Chairman, on 1 September, appointed Enrique Bernales Ballesteros (Peru) as Special Rapporteur.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/61 by recorded vote.

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples and their liberation movements for their independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid, and foreign intervention and occupation and that their legitimate struggle can in no way be considered as or equated to mercenary activity,

Deeply concerned about the increasing menace that the activities of mercenaries represent for all States, particularly African, Central American and other developing States,

Recognizing that mercenarism is a threat to international peace and security,

Recognizing also that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and seriously impede the process of self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Recalling all relevant General Assembly resolutions, particularly resolution 41/102 of 4 December 1986, in which the General Assembly denounced the practice of using mercenaries, in particular against developing countries and national liberation movements,

Reaffirming the decision of the General Assembly, in its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, to accord priority to the search for solutions to the mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and persons affected by situations such as those resulting, inter alia, from aggression and threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Organization of African Unity and the convention adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its fourteenth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 2 to 5 July 1977, condemning and outlawing mercenarism and its adverse effects on the independence and territorial integrity of African States,

Deeply concerned at the loss of life, substantial damage to property and long-term negative effects on the economy of southern African countries, particularly the front-line States, resulting from mercenary aggression,

Strongly condemning the racist regime of South Africa for its increasing use of groups of armed mercenaries against national liberation movements and for the destabilization of the Governments of southern African States,

Recalling its resolution 1986/143 of 23 May 1986,

1. Condemns the increased recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries, as well as all other forms of support to mercenaries for the purpose of destabilizing and overthrowing the Governments of southern African, Central American and other developing States and fighting against the national liberation movements of peoples struggling for the exercise of their right to self-determination;

Calls upon all States to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to ensure, by both administrative and legislative measures, that the territory of those States and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries, or the planning of such activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State and to fight the national liberation movements struggling against racism, apartheid, colonial domination, foreign intervention and occupation for their independence, territorial integrity and national unity;

4. Urges all States to take the necessary measures under their respective domestic laws to prohibit the recruitment, financing, training and transit of mercenaries on their territory and other territories under their control;

5. Endorses the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a Special Rapporteur;

6. Calls upon the General Assembly to pay due attention to the matter at its forty-second session under the appropriate item of its agenda.

Recalling all of its relevant resolutions, particularly resolution 41/162 of 4 December 1986, in which it denounced the practice of using mercenaries, in particular against developing countries and national liberation movements,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 239(1967) of 10 July 1967, 405(1977) of 14 April 1977, 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, 496(1981) of 15 December 1981 and 507(1982) of 28 May 1982, in which the Council, inter alia, condemned any State that persisted in permitting or tolerating the recruitment of mercenaries, and the provision of facilities to them, with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations,

Welcoming the adoption by the Economic and Social Council of resolution 1987/61 of 29 May 1987, in which the Council condemned the increased recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries,

Reaffirming its decision, in its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, to accord priority to the search for solutions to the mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and persons affected by situations such as those resulting, inter alia, from aggression and threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Organization of African Unity and the convention adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its fourteenth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 2 to 5 July 1977, condemning and outlawing mercenarism and its adverse effects on the independence and territorial integrity of African States,

Deeply concerned at the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the short-term and long-term negative effects on the economy of southern African countries resulting from mercenary aggression,

1. Condemns the increased recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries, as well as all other forms of support to mercenaries for the purpose of destabilizing and overthrowing the Governments of southern Africa and Central America and of other developing States and fighting against the national liberation movements of peoples struggling for the exercise of their right to self-determination;

2. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its increasing use of groups of armed mercenaries against national liberation movements and for the destabilization of the Governments of southern African States;

3. Denounces any State that persists in the recruitment, or permits or tolerates the recruitment, of mercenaries and provides facilities to them for launching armed aggression against other States;

4. Calls upon all States to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to ensure, by both administrative and legislative measures, that the territory of those States and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries, or the planning of such activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State and to fight the national liberation movements struggling against racism, apartheid, colonial domination and foreign intervention and occupation for their independence, territorial integrity and national unity;

5. Urges all States to take the necessary measures under their respective domestic laws to prohibit the recruitment, financing, training and transit of mercenaries on their territory;

6. Calls upon all States to extend humanitarian assistance to victims of situations resulting from the use of mercenaries, as well as from colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation;

7. Considers it inadmissible to use channels of humanitarian and other assistance to finance, train and arm mercenaries;

8. Welcomes with satisfaction the appointment by the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1987/16 of 9 March 1987, of a special rapporteur to study the matter with a view to preparing a report for consideration by the Commission at its forty-fourth session and requests that the report be transmitted to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

9. Decides to pay due attention to the matter at its forty-third session under the item entitled "Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights".

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 125-10-19 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/773) by recorded vote (104-10-19), 28 October (meeting 27); 37-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.14); agenda item 91.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guyana, India, Kenya, Lesotho, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Peru, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, El Salvador, Finland, Greece, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Mauritius, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sweden, Turkey.

Before acting on the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraph 8 by a recorded vote of 118 to 17, with 11 abstentions; the Committee had approved that paragraph by a recorded vote of 99 to 17, with 11 abstentions.

On behalf of the 12 EC members, Denmark said that although they unequivocally condemned the recruitment, use and financing of mercenaries, they could not support the text. The sponsors had ignored the fact that mercenarism was regularly on the Sixth (Legal) Committee's agenda and the co-sponsors had departed from the consensus language previously achieved; this would seriously undermine the chances of maintaining consensus in the Sixth Committee and would hamper the drafting of an international convention. The EC members objected particularly to the fourth preambular paragraph which purported to define mercenarism when there was no agreed definition of the term, and they regarded as inappropriate the appointment of a special rapporteur on a question which was a matter concerning relations between States rather than human rights. Australia, Austria, Japan, the Netherlands and Sweden, on behalf of the five Nordic countries, voiced similar concerns.

Chad said that the Third Committee was not the proper forum to discuss mercenarism and Oman believed that the Sixth Committee's efforts were being duplicated. Turkey was concerned that the text would complicate defining the term mercenary. In Pakistan's opinion, the text did not come close to the goal of establishing the necessary broad basis for action to eliminate mercenarism and Cameroon said if paragraph 7 had been put to a separate vote, it would have abstained.

Honduras felt that the third preambular paragraph tended to distort the reality of the Central American situation, as it was not possible to generalize that all States in that area were being destabilized by armed groups which the text qualified as mercenaries; such a distortion hampered the search for peace. Ecuador found it unacceptable that the text covered self-proclaimed national liberation movements in independent countries which were receiving financing from outside those countries and which had often become terrorist or subversive in nature and were acting outside the law. Chile said it did not participate in the vote because the text duplicated the Sixth Committee's work and was a political document; it also believed that some of the sponsors were encouraging the use of mercenaries.

Rights of detained persons

Administration of justice

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, on 10 March 1987,(7) requested its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to consider urgently the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers, with a view to making recommendations in 1988, and to give further attention to a declaration against unacknowledged detention of persons and to the question of states of siege or emergency (see p. 740). It asked the Sub-Commission to give attention to various standards adopted in this area, particularly those by the Fifth (1975) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,(41) with a view to recommending, in 1988, measures to be taken for their most effective application. The Sub-Commission was requested, when carrying out its annual review of the human rights of persons subjected to detention or imprisonment, to consider the work of the Human Rights Committee (see p. 740) and CERD (see p. 733), developments elsewhere in the human rights programme and activities within the United Nations programme on crime prevention and control (see p. 623), and the Secretary-General was asked to make available to the Sub-Commission succinct information on those matters. The Commission called on its special rapporteurs and working groups to give attention to the effective protection of human rights in the administration of justice, particularly the unacknowledged detention of persons, and asked the Secretary-General to ensure close co-operation between the United Nations Centre for Human Rights and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, further requesting him to invite the Human Rights Committee and regional human rights institutions to comment on possible areas of co-operation with human rights bodies in the United Nations system.

The Commission invited the Secretary-General to establish a focal point within the Centre for Human Rights to monitor human rights in the administration of justice within the United Nations human rights programme, the programme on crime prevention and control, specialized agencies, regional organizations and NGOs, and to provide advice on co-ordination and other issues. It requested him to continue assisting Member States in implementing those standards, in particular under the programme of advisory services, and to report in 1988 on progress made. It invited the Economic and Social Council to take into account the Commission's resolution when reviewing the United Nations crime prevention and control programme in 1987 (see p. 626), and asked the Secretary-General to report in 1988 on its implementation.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission, the Secretary-General presented to the Sub-Commission in July succinct information on the work of the Human Rights Committee and CERD, the developments elsewhere in the human rights programme and the activities within the United Nations programme on crime prevention and control as they related to human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment. (42) Specifically, he reported on the general comments adopted by the Human Rights Committee relating to articles 6, 7, 9, 10 and 14 (on the rights to life, not to be subjected to torture or inhuman treatment, to liberty and security, to be treated humanely, and to a fair and public hearing, respectively) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; no specific information on CERD's work in that area was available at the time of the report's completion. The Secretary-General covered extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions; safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty; reports of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (see p. 763); torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders; (43) juvenile justice; treatment and protection of detainees; the declaration of basic principles of justice for victims of crime and abuse of power; the independence of the judiciary; a code of conduct for law enforcement officials (see p. 759); and fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/143 without vote.

Human rights in the administration of justice

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in articles 3, 5, 9, 10 and 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in particular article 6, which explicitly states that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Considering the importance of progress with regard to the draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment,

Further calling attention to the prohibition under article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of the imposition of the death penalty for crimes committed by persons below 18 years of age,

Recognizing the significant contributions of the programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice to international co-operation in the field of human rights in the administration of justice, as reaffirmed, inter alia, by the Economic and Social Council in its resolutions 1987/49 and 1987/53 of 28 May 1987,

Acknowledging the important work accomplished by the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-third session in this field, as reflected in its resolutions 1987/33 of 10 March 1987 on human rights in the administration of justice and 1987/57 of 11 March 1987 on summary or arbitrary executions,

Convinced of the need for further co-ordinated and concerted action in promoting respect for human rights in the administration of justice,

1. Reiterates its call upon Member States to bring to an end the continued use of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, prohibited under international law, and strongly condemns the practice of summary or arbitrary executions;

2. Urges Member States to spare no effort in providing for effective legislative and other mechanisms and procedures and adequate resources to ensure more effective implementation of existing international standards relating to human rights in the administration of justice;

3. Welcomes the recommendations made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1987/33 on more effective implementation of existing international standards relating to human rights in the administration of justice and the need for strengthening co-ordinated national and international action in this regard;

4. Encourages the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, as well as regional and interregional human rights, crime prevention and criminal justice institutes and other entities of the United Nations system concerned to intensify their co-operation in matters relating to human rights in the administration of justice and invites the Economic and Social Council to co-ordinate such efforts;

5. Encourages the continuing development of strategies for the practical implementation of United Nations standards and norms on human rights in the administration of justice and of measures to assist Member States, at their request, in this implementation, as well as in evaluating their impact and effectiveness, in particular under the advisory services of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, the Centre for Human Rights and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat;

6. Notes with appreciation the steps initiated by the Centre for Human Rights and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs to ensure closer co-operation in this field, including preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

7. Recognizes the important role of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in promoting human rights in the administration of justice and invites them to continue to co-operate with the Secretary-General to this effect;

8. Decides to consider at its forty-third session the question of human rights in the administration of justice.

Treatment of prisoners and detainees

Report of the Secretary-General. In connection with the Sub-Commission's review of developments in the administration of justice and the human rights of detainees, the Secretary-General submitted in April 1987 a report, with later addenda,(44) summarizing information from 20 Governments, one specialized agency and two intergovernmental organizations. In July, he presented a synopsis of material from NGOs.(45)

for the protection of detainees

Sub-Commission's activities. A five-member sessional Working Group on Detention, set up by the Sub-Commission, met from 12 to 20 August to consider, among other questions, a draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment. (46)

On 3 September, the Sub-Commission adopted a decision(47) proposed by the Working Group expressing concern that the Working Group of the General Assembly's Sixth Committee (see below) which was reviewing the draft Body had, in its last (1986) revision,(48) limited the scope of the principles and had made amendments which fell short of existing norms. In particular, the Sub-Commission's Working Group raised questions regarding the scope of the principles; the definition of a judicial or other authority; and the safeguards concerning incommunicado detention and habeas corpus proceedings.

The Sub-Commission decided to ask the Secretary-General to convey to the Sixth Committee's Working Group the hope that it would consider the above concerns, and to prepare a report informing the Sub-Commission in 1989 on matters concerning the Working Group, specifically on an inventory of available information sources and trends for future work.

The Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to obtain documentation prepared by the United Nations Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and by the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs concerning the development of international standards for adequate investigations into all cases of suspicious deaths in detention, for comparison with the draft standards contained in the Working Group's report, and to distribute comments thereon to all Working Group members in advance of the Sub-Commission's 1989 session.

By the same decision, the Sub-Commission also dealt with the use of force by law enforcement officials (see p. 759).

Sixth Committee Working Group. In 1987, a Working Group open to all members of the General Assembly's Sixth Committee continued work on the draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment. The draft originated from a text adopted by the Sub-Commission in 1978,(49) which had since undergone revisions by a succession of working groups: of the Third Committee in 1980;(50) and of the Sixth Committee in 1981,(51) 1982,(52) 1983,(53) 1984,(54) 1985(55) and 1986. (48) between 23 September and 19 November 1987. It reviewed those principles provisionally agreed on at previous sessions which still contained alternative wordings or bracketed language, using as a basis the text of the principles, as provisionally agreed upon, annexed to the Group's 1986 report (48) The Group agreed on principles 8 through 12; 14 through 18; 23; 29, paragraph 1; principle 30; and principle 32, paragraph 1, which covered, respectively: treatment of unconvicted persons; recourse to a judicial or other authority; prompt information concerning charges for one's arrest; right to defend oneself; records about initial arrest; right to an interpreter; right to notify one's family; right to legal counsel; right to be visited by family members; medical care and treatment; specification and publication of disciplinary offences during detention or imprisonment; assistance to minors; and the right to complain regarding treatment. At the beginning of the draft, a new provision was added, specifying the body of principles, which were to apply to all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment.

The text of the body of principles, as provisionally approved by the Group, was annexed to its report to the Sixth Committee.(57)

The Group also addressed concerns raised by the Sub-Commission and its Working Group. Some Group members shared those concerns and observed that the goal was a standard-setting body, not a document representing the lowest common denominator of national legislations and that the Group's mandate was to deal with all persons under any kind of detention or imprisonment. There was general agreement that the text should not fall short of existing instruments. It was pointed out that the Sub-Commission's comments were addressed to a provisional and incomplete text to which some key elements had yet to be added.

Following agreement on a provisional definition of "a judicial or other authority", the Group made a number of technical changes in several principles. It also provisionally adopted a new definition of the term "arrest" and added a new principle (39) stating that nothing in the body of principles should be construed as restricting or derogating from any right defined in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 42/426 without vote.

Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under

Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment

At its 94th plenary meeting, on 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee:

(a) Took note with appreciation of the report of the Working Group on the Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment and of the progress achieved by the Working Group during the forty-second session of the Assembly;

(b) Decided that a working group of the Sixth Committee would be established at the beginning of the forty-third session in order to complete the elaboration of the draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment during that session;

(c) Requested the Secretary-General to circulate to Member States the report of the open-ended Working Group established at the forty-second session;

(d) Decided to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment".

General Assembly decision 42/426

Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/42/819) without vote, 24 November (meeting 56); draft by Sweden (A/C.6/42/L.19), orally revised; agenda item 139. Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 6th Committee 3, 56; plenary 94.

Torture and cruel treatment

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January 1987, Special Rapporteur Peter H. Kooijmans (Netherlands), appointed by the Commission on Human Rights in 1985,(55) submitted his second report to the Commission,(58) based on additional information received from Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs, his first report having been presented in 1986.(59) Having received from different sources allegations of torture, the Rapporteur asked 19 countries, which the allegations concerned, for clarification. In addition, he retransmitted allegations which he had sent to 15 Governments in 1985. He also considered information from 30 countries on their domestic legislation, and requests for urgent action, 19 of which he decided to bring to the immediate attention of the Governments concerned.

The Rapporteur arrived at several conclusions and made a number of recommendations, some of which were taken up by the Commission in a March resolution (see below).

Human Rights Commission action. Commending the Special Rapporteur for his report, the Commission on Human Rights, on 10 March 1987,(60) extended his mandate for another year. In carrying out his mandate, he should continue to seek and receive credible and reliable information from Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. He was requested to report in 1988 on the occurrence and extent of torture, submitting further conclusions and recommendations.

The Commission's decisions and requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council on 29 May by decision 1987/146.

By its resolution, the Commission also took note of the Special Rapporteur's conclusions and recommendations pertaining to a system of periodic visits and the establishment at the national level of an independent authority to receive complaints of torture by individuals. It underlined his recommendation that Governments and medical associations should take strict measures against all persons belonging to the medical profession who had had a function in practising torture, and underlined his conclusion stressing the importance of limiting the period of incommunicado detention. The Commission endorsed his recommendation that all States sign and ratify as soon as possible the Convention against torture (see below), and emphasized the importance of training programmes for law and security personnel.

Convention against torture

As at 31 December 1987, 59 States had signed the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment; 28 States had ratified or acceded to it, 14 of them during 1987.(3) The Convention, which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1984(61) and opened for signature in 1985,(62) entered into force on 26 June 1987, the thirtieth day after the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession. The optional provisions of articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture, to be set up under the Convention, to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) entered into force on the same date, more than five parties having made the required declarations. The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 31 July 1987,(63) at which time 57 States had signed and 22 States had ratified or acceded to it.

The 10-member Committee against Torture was established at the first meeting of States parties to the Convention on 26 November (see APPENDIX III).

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(64) the Commission on Human Rights asked States that had not yet done so to sign and ratify the Convention as a matter of priority; it invited all ratifying or acceding States to consider making the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22, and requested the Secretary-General to continue submitting to the Assembly and to the Commission annual reports on the Convention's status.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/123 without vote.

Status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of which provide that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Recalling further its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and called upon all Governments to consider signing and ratifying the Convention as a matter of priority, as well as its resolutions 40/128 of 13 December 1985 and 41/134 of 4 December 1986,

Mindful of the relevance, for the eradication of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and of the Principles of Medical Ethics relevant to the role of health personnel, particularly physicians, in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Convinced of the desirability of early finalization and subsequent adoption of the draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment,

Seriously concerned about the alarming number of reported cases of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment taking place in various parts of the world,

Determined to promote the full implementation of the prohibition, under international and national law, of the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Welcoming the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1987/29 of 10 March 1987, to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur to examine questions relevant to torture and taking note of other important provisions of the Commission in the same resolution, including those relating to practical measures recommended by the Special Rapporteur to deal with this abhorrent phenomenon,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

2. Welcomes with deep satisfaction the entry into force on 26 June 1987 of the Convention as a major step in international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Recognizes the importance of the establishment by States parties to the Convention of appropriate administrative and financial arrangements to enable the Committee against Torture to carry out in an effective and efficient manner the functions entrusted to it under the Convention, and to ensure the long-term viability of the Committee as an essential mechanism for overseeing the effective implementation of the provisions of the Convention;

4. Also recognizes the need for the Committee against Torture to give early attention to the development of an effective reporting system on implementation by States parties to the Convention, taking due account of the draft guidelines of the Secretary-General on reporting and the activities of the Human Rights Committee, as well as of the other human rights treaty bodies, established under the relevant international instruments in the field of human rights;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee against Torture;

6. Again requests all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority;

7. Once again invites all States, upon ratification of or accession to the Convention, or subsequently, to consider the possibility of making the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 thereof;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth session and to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

9. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-third session under the item entitled "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

Fund for victims of torture

On 10 March 1987,(65) the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to transmit its appeal to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981.(66) It also asked him to help make the Fund's humanitarian work better known and to inform it annually of the Fund's operations.

In his annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Fund,(67) the Secretary-General said that at its sixth session (Geneva, 23-25 February 1987), the Fund's Board of Trustees had recommended grants of some $800,000, which closely corresponded to available resources. To continue the Fund's activities, the Board said it was important to receive contributions from as many States as possible, preferably on a regular basis.

The focus of the Fund's grants was on therapy and rehabilitation projects; close to 90 per cent of the grants recommended in 1987 were for such projects, as opposed to training projects. Projects were carried out in places where resources for rehabilitation or training were limited.

Under the rehabilitation projects, medical treatment, physiotherapy, psychiatric and psychological help, as well as social assistance and economic relief, were provided to victims of torture and their families. Certain projects contained specialized programmes for children, and some included income-producing workshops and assistance in social reintegration.

The Fund continued its assistance to refugee victims of torture. Projects for tortured refugees and their families in Argentina, Central America, the Caribbean and Mexico were implemented by UNHCR. Funds for medical and psychological assistance to refugee victims in Belgium, France, Sweden and the United Kingdom were approved.

The Fund also supported the training of medical professionals in specific techniques required in treating torture victims. It underwrote travel and living expenses for doctors, psychiatrists and psychologists from countries where funds for such training were limited, to attend courses organized by the Rehabilitation Centre for Torture Victims (Copenhagen, Denmark). The Fund also supported teaching missions by the Centre's staff to other countries. The Board approved a project for an in-depth training course for doctors and other medical professionals in Africa, and a training project for professionals working in rehabilitating torture victims in Argentina.

The United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) assisted in producing a leaflet entitled How Can You Help Torture Victims?, which explained the Fund's activities and provided information on how contributions could be made. Similar information was included in a DPI brochure entitled Outlawing an Ancient Evil: Torture and in other publications on the United Nations human rights programme.

Since Fund operations began in 1983, 96 grants totalling $2.8 million had been authorized for 57 projects in 27 countries. During the period from 2 October 1986 to 15 October 1987, the Fund received $1,051,540 in contributions from 23 States. Contributions were also received from a number of individuals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/122 without vote.

United Nations Voluntary
Fund for Victims of Torture

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Noting with satisfaction the entry into force on 26 June 1987 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims of torture in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

Convinced that the struggle to eliminate torture includes the provision of assistance in a humanitarian spirit to the victims and members of their families,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its gratitude and appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have already contributed to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture;

2. Calls upon all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to respond favourably to requests for initial as well as further contributions to the Fund;

3. Invites Governments to make contributions to the Fund, if possible on a regular basis, in order to enable the Fund to provide continuous support to projects that depend on recurrent grants;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Board of Trustees of the Fund for the work it has carried out;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the support given to the Board of Trustees of the Fund;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make use of all existing possibilities, including the preparation, production and dissemination of information materials, to assist the Board of Trustees of the Fund in its efforts to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known and in its appeal for contributions.

Torture and inhuman treatment of detained children in South Africa

Communication. In a 4 February 1987 letter(68) to the United Nations Assistant-Secretary-General for Human Rights, South Africa stated that it had noted allegations about the detention of children in South Africa and the conditions under which they were held. According to official statements by South Africa's Minister of Law and Order and the Commissioner of Police, the number of children below the age of 16 held in terms of emergency regulations totalled 256. South Africa claimed that the next of kin were immediately advised of the detentions, but that some children had supplied the security forces with incorrect names and addresses. The detention of children was only permitted to maintain public order, for the safety of the public or the person himself, or for the termination of the state of emergency. The detention of a person in terms of emergency regulations was also of a preventive nature. South Africa added, and all formal complaints of alleged misconduct by security forces were fully investigated and detainees were treated in accordance with internationally accepted standard minimum rules. The detention was reviewed regularly. Parents or next of kin could apply to visit their children at any time, and no child was held in detention for longer than absolutely necessary. However, the Government had no option but to act against any persons, regardless of age, who jeopardized the safety of others.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/124 without vote.

Torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Declaration on the Rights of the Child,

Welcoming the holding of the International Conference on Children, Repression and the Law in Apartheid South Africa at Harare, from 24 to 27 September 1987,

Appalled at evidence that children in South Africa are subjected to detention, torture and inhuman treatment,

1. Expresses its profound outrage at reports of detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa;

2. Calls upon the South African authorities urgently to release children held in detention in that country;

3. Calls for the immediate dismantlement of the so-called "rehabilitation camps" or "re-education centres";

4. Requests all relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to draw attention to, monitor and expose these inhuman practices;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Commission on Human Rights the final documents of the International Conference on Children, Repression and the Law in Apartheid South Africa, for action by the Special Rapporteur on Torture.

Detention on grounds of mental illness

The sessional working group set up by the Sub-Commission in 1984(69) to examine further a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees of the right of persons detained on the grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder, was reconvened in four meetings between 18 and 25 August 1987,(70) to consider in second preliminary reading the remaining 40 articles of the draft body, the first 7 articles having been approved in 1985.(71)

During its 1987 session, the group approved amended articles 8 (standards of mental institutions), 9 (standards of treatment) and 10 (medications).

Sub-Commission action. On 3 September 1987,(72) the Sub-Commission, noting that the working group had made only limited progress, recommended to the Commission for adoption a resolution requesting the Sub-Commission to attach much greater emphasis in 1989 to the group and its drafting assignments and to complete the work on the draft body of guidelines, taking into account information provided by the World Health Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/98 without vote.

Implications of scientific and technological developments for human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/53 of 14 December 1978, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to urge the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to undertake, as a matter of priority, a study of the question of the protection of those detained on the grounds of mental ill-health, with a view to formulating guidelines,

Mindful of the Principles of Medical Ethics relevant to the role of health personnel, particularly physicians, in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also its resolution 41/114 of 4 December 1986, in which it again urged the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission to expedite their consideration of this question, so that the Commission could submit its views and recommendations, including a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/12 of 10 March 1986,

Taking note of resolution 1987/22 of 3 September 1987 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Expressing deep concern at the repeated evidence of the misuse of psychiatry to detain persons on non-medical grounds, as reflected in the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission,

Reaffirming its conviction that detention of persons in mental institutions on account of their political views or on other non-medical grounds is a violation of their human rights,

Noting that, because the Working Group of the Sub-Commission has made only limited progress so far, the Sub-Commission is still far from concluding its consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees,

1. Again urges the Commission on Human Rights and, through it, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to expedite their consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, so that the Commission can submit its views and recommendations, including a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

2. Invites the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth session to consider the question of the emphasis to be attached to the Working Group, in the light of the Sub-Commission's discussion at its thirty-ninth session.

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Draft declaration against unacknowledged detention

On 10 March 1987,(7) the Commission on Human Rights requested its Sub-Commission to give further attention to a draft declaration against unacknowledged detention of persons. Following consideration of a revised version of a draft declaration, completed by the Working Group on Detention in 1985,(71) the Commission had invited the Sub-Commission in 1986(73) to reconsider the question, with a view to submitting a new text in 1987.

Detention without charge or trial

Report of the Special-Rapporteur. Pursuant to a 1985 Sub-Commission request,(71) Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France) submitted in July 1987 a paper on the practice of administrative detention without charge or trial.(74) He classified the purposes of such detention into six categories: prevention of serious disturbances of public order and security of State; measures relating to the status of foreigners; disciplinary measures; medical-social measures; measures to combat social maladjustment; and protection of civilian populations in time of war. He also presented a comparative analysis of the legal features of administrative detention, based on a sample taken from 82 countries. He suggested that recommendations to the Commission regarding administrative detention exclude all cases in which the proceedings were under the direct responsibility of a judge or court, even in cases of recognized irregularities, and that any detention which, in law, was not determined on the responsibility of a judge or a court be deemed to be administrative.

Concerning the preparation of guidelines, the Rapporteur pointed out that data differed depending on whether they concerned judicial or administrative detention. The requisite guarantees were similar in both cases, but in judicial detention the judge was the direct guarantor of the decision, whereas in administrative detention, he was only the guarantor of the proper enforcement of a decision by another authority.

Annexed to the report was a table showing international and regional provisions related to administrative detention without charge or trial, relevant articles of the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, a list of other international and regional instruments, and a list of the 82 countries whose legislation had been studied.

On 3 September 1987,(75) the Sub-Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to send a questionnaire to Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for further information and views relating to his explanatory paper, and to report to the Sub-Commission in 1989.

Hostage-taking

On 10 March 1987,(76) the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned those responsible for hostage-taking in all circumstances and demanded the release of those being held. It called on States to take preventive and punitive measures and put an end to cases of abduction and unlawful restraint. It asked the Secretary-General, whenever a State so requested, to use all available means to obtain the release of hostages and decided to take up the question again in 1988.

Following reports of further incidents of hostage-taking and abduction at Beirut, Lebanon, the Security Council President, in a 28 January statement, condemned such acts and called for the immediate safe release of all hostages (see p. 1063).

Detained UN staff members

By a resolution of 3 September 1987,(77) adopted by 11 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, the Sub-Commission, expressing deep concern that some 50 staff members were still detained, imprisoned or reported missing, appealed to Member States to respect their rights. It requested the Commission to urge Romania not to prevent staff member Liviu Bota, Director of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research until 31 December 1986,(78) from returning to his place of official assignment and to his family in Geneva, and to fully respect the human rights and privileges and immunities of all United Nations staff. The Sub-

Commission asked the Secretary-General to redouble efforts to ensure those rights and to submit to it in 1989 a detailed report on international civil servants and their families who were detained, imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will.

Following consideration of a report of the Secretary-General on United Nations personnel detained or missing (see p. 1148), the General Assembly, in resolution 42/219, called for scrupulous respect of the privileges and immunities of all United Nations officials, and called on those States that were holding such officials under arrest or detention to enable the Secretary-General to exercise his right of protection and to grant him immediate access to detained staff members.

Use of force by law officials

In June 1987, the Secretary-General reported on a 1985 Sub-Commission proposal(79) that the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders(43) study ways to promote international technical co-operation in the area of restraints on the use of force by law enforcement officials and military personnel.(80) The Secretary-General noted that no specific decision had been taken by the Congress regarding the proposal, but the issue of international technical co-operation and restraints on the use of force had been addressed in documents adopted by the Congress, including the Milan Plan of Action,(43) the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order,(81) and Congress resolutions on the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, and on technical co-operation in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice. (82)

In a 3 September decision,(47) on the human rights of detained or imprisoned persons (see p. 753), the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission and the Economic and Social Council a declaration to the effect that arbitrary or abusive use of force by law-enforcement personnel against persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment in any country should be punished as a criminal offence. The Working Group on Detention was asked to examine the feasibility of a booklet on the restraints on the use of force by law enforcement officials, with a sample and cost estimate to be presented to the Sub-Commission in 1988, if possible.

Abolition of the death penalty

Proposed second optional protocol to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(83) the Commission decided to consider in 1988 elaborating a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aimed at abolishing the death penalty, and requested the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly of its decision. The idea of a second optional protocol had originated in the General Assembly's Third Committee in 1980(84) and was considered by various bodies dealing with human rights in the years that followed, most recently in 1985. (79)

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June 1987, Special Rapporteur Marc J. Bossuyt (Belgium) presented to the Sub-Commission an analysis concerning the elaboration of a second optional protocol,(85) as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1985. (86) He analysed international law provisions relevant to the death penalty and its abolition, especially the provisions of article 6 (on the right to life) of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.(1) He also presented the views of 35 Governments on the proposed second optional protocol, which mainly concerned the desirability of abolishing capital punishment; they were almost evenly divided between retentionist (17) and abolitionist (18) countries.

Annexed to the report was a draft second optional protocol prepared by the Special Rapporteur, and the draft submitted in 1980(84) by Austria, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Portugal and Sweden.

Sub-Commission action. On 3 September 1987,(87) the Sub-Commission decided to take no action on a draft resolution by which the Special Rapporteur's analysis and the draft optional protocol would have been transmitted to the Commission.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1984 General Assembly request,(88) the Secretary-General submitted an October report(89) summarizing the action taken by the Commission and Sub-Commission to elaborate a second optional protocol.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted decision 42/421 by recorded vote.

Elaboration of a second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights aiming at the abolition of the death penalty

At its 93rd plenary meeting, on 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee and pursuant to its resolution 39/137 of 14 December 1984, decided to continue its consideration of the question of elaborating a second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty, at its forty-fourth session under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights", in the light of action taken by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

64-15-57 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/806) by recorded vote (62-17-35); 20 November (meeting 53); draft by Federal Republic of Germany (A/C.3/42/L.47); agenda item 101.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3th committee 39-41, 43, 46, 52, 53; plenary 93.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia,^a Luxembourg, Mali, Malta, Mexico, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Spain, Sweden, Togo, Turkey, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Against: Bangladesh, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Maldives, Oman, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bahrain, Barbados, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, China, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guyana, Hungary, India, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Kuwait, supported by Egypt and Yemen, said the abolition of the death penalty was contrary to Islamic tradition and religion. A similar reason was given by Iran for its negative vote.

China believed that individual Governments and peoples should decide the issue of abolishing the death penalty in ways appropriate to their national conditions.

Australia, also on behalf of Austria, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and the Netherlands, said that the elaboration of a second optional protocol deserved serious and urgent consideration; while a number of countries had declared that they were unable to abolish the death penalty within their own jurisdiction, such national positions should not prevent the efforts of others to promote an optional international instrument to that end.

Extra-legal executions

Pursuant to a 1986 Economic and Social Council request,(90) Special Rapporteur S. Amos Wako (Kenya) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights in January 1987 a report on summary or arbitrary executions,(91) based on information received from Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, his fifth since his appointment in 1982.(92) He described allegations of actual or imminent executions, which had been communicated to the Governments concerned, and summarized replies by those Governments.

On the basis of the information received, he analysed the phenomenon of summary or arbitrary executions, drawing particular attention to the absence of investigation, prosecution and/or punishment in cases of death in suspicious circumstances, and death sentences as a result of trials without adequate safeguards to protect the right to life. He also analysed situations in a number of countries where summary or arbitrary executions had been widely reported in the past and newly-established Governments had publicly pledged their commitment to human rights, with a view to identifying achievements, obstacles and needs in those situations.

In his conclusions, the Rapporteur observed that the interest of Governments and other parties in his mandate had continued to spread and had led to a marked increase in understanding the causes of summary or arbitrary executions; however, reactions to urgent appeals were not as many or as prompt. He also observed that armed conflict in a number of countries had caused the largest loss of life, including persons not directly involved in such conflicts. The second principal cause of loss of life was attributable to indiscriminate violence, such as terrorism, and the third cause was executions without trial or after a trial which did not afford adequate safeguards to protect the accused. Another principal cause was an inability of the authorities to control groups which violated the right to life and to enforce order and respect for that right, especially in countries emerging from periods of non-democratic or authoritarian forms of government.

The Special Rapporteur made a number of recommendations that were taken up by the Economic and Social Council in a May resolution, and later in the year by the Assembly (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1987, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/60 without vote.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which guarantees the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in which it is stated that every human being has -the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law, and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/175 of 17 December 1979, in which the Assembly reaffirmed that mass and flagrant violations of human rights were of special concern to the United Nations and urged the Commission on Human Rights to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases of mass and flagrant violations of human rights.

Mindful of General Assembly resolutions 36/22 of 9 November 1981, 37/182 of 17 December 1982, 38/96 of 16 December 1983, 39/110 of 14 December 1984, 40/143 of 13 December 1985 and 41/144 of 4 December 1986,

Taking note of resolution 1982/13 of 7 September 1982 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission recommended that effective measures should be adopted to prevent the occurrence of summary or arbitrary executions,

Recalling Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty set out in the annex thereto, which were endorsed by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in its resolution 15, and welcoming the ongoing work on summary and arbitrary executions done by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the Centre for Human Rights, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in efforts to bring an end to summary or arbitrary executions,

Deeply alarmed at the occurrence on a large scale of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions,

Convinced of the need for appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of summary or arbitrary executions, which represents a flagrant violation of the most fundamental human right, the right to life,

1. Strongly condemns, once again, the large number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, which continue to take place in various parts of the world;

2. Appeals urgently to Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take effective action to combat and eliminate summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S. Amos Wako, and welcomes his recommendations for the elimination of summary or arbitrary executions, in particular the recommendations that Governments:

(a) Ratify international human rights instruments, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, including the Optional Protocol thereto, and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

(b) Review national laws and regulations with a view to strengthening the preventive measures against deaths caused by illegal or excessive use of force by security, law enforcement or other government officials;

(c) Review the machinery for investigation of deaths under suspicious circumstances in order to secure an impartial, independent investigation of such deaths, including an adequate autopsy;

(d) Review the trial procedures of tribunals, including those of special tribunals, in order to ensure that they embody adequate safeguards to protect the rights of the accused in the trial proceedings, as stipulated in the relevant international instruments;

(e) Emphasize the importance of the right to life in the training of all law enforcement personnel and inculcate in them respect for life; that international organizations:

(a) Strengthen their co-ordination in dealing with the immediate problems and the root causes of summary or arbitrary executions, in particular by sharing information, publications, studies and expertise;

(b) Make a concerted effort to draft international standards designed to ensure proper investigation by appropriate authorities into all cases of suspicious death, including provisions for an adequate autopsy; and that, in addition, Governments, individually and through the international community, should support and encourage peace initiatives and political solutions to situations of armed conflict; they should be encouraged to take appropriate and effective measures, at the national, regional and international levels, to combat terrorism and/or terrorist acts; they should also be encouraged to enter into bilateral or regional agreements with a view to extending mutual assistance and co-operation to enhance the capacity of their authorities to safeguard the individual's right to life; at the international level, organs within the United Nations system should take action with a view to assisting Governments to reconstruct the infrastructure that would enable the authorities concerned to carry out effectively their basic obligation to protect the right to life of individuals in their societies;

4. Decides to renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S. Amos Wako, for another year, in order to enable him to submit further conclusions and recommendations to the Commission;

5. Requests the Special Rapporteur in carrying out his mandate to continue to examine situations of summary or arbitrary executions;

6. Also requests the Special Rapporteur in carrying out his mandate to respond effectively to information that comes before him, in particular when a summary or arbitrary execution is imminent or threatened or when such an execution has occurred;

7. Endorses the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur on the need to develop international standards designed to ensure effective legislation and other domestic measures so that proper investigations, including provisions for adequate autopsy, are conducted by appropriate authorities into all cases of suspicious death;

8. Invites again the Special Rapporteur to receive information from appropriate United Nations bodies and other international organizations and to examine the elements to be included in such standards and to report to the Commission on Human Rights on progress made in this respect;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

10. Urges all Governments and all others concerned to co-operate with and assist the Special Rapporteur so that he may carry out his mandate effectively;

11. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standards of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appears not to be respected;

12. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to consider the question of summary or arbitrary executions as a matter of high priority at its forty-fourth session under the item entitled "Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in any part of the world, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/60

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/97) without vote, 22 May (meeting 19); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1987/18 & Corr.1); agenda item 17.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/141 without vote.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in which it is stated that every human being has the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in which it is stated that every human being has the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling also its resolution 341/75 of 17 December 1979, in which it reaffirmed that mass and flagrant violations of human rights are of special concern to the United Nations and urged the Commission on Human Rights to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases of mass and flagrant violations of human rights,

Deeply alarmed at the continued occurrence on a large scale of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions,

Recalling resolution 1982/13 of 7 September 1982 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission recommended that effective measures should be adopted to prevent the occurrence of summary or arbitrary executions,

Welcoming Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty annexed thereto, which resolution was endorsed by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in its resolution 15, as well as the ongoing work on summary or arbitrary executions within the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the Centre for Human Rights and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in efforts to bring an end to summary or arbitrary executions,

Convinced of the need for appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of

summary or arbitrary executions, which represents a flagrant violation of the most fundamental human right, the right to life,

1. Once again strongly condemns the large number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, that continue to take place in various parts of the world;

2. Demands that the practice of summary or arbitrary executions be brought to an end;

3. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/35 of 7 May 1982, in which the Council decided to appoint for one year a special rapporteur to consider the questions related to summary or arbitrary executions;

4. Also welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/60 of 29 May 1987, in which the Council decided to continue the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S. A. Wako, for a further year and requested the Commission on Human Rights to consider the question of summary or arbitrary executions as a matter of high priority at its forty-fourth session;

5. Urges all Governments and all others concerned to co-operate with and assist the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights in order that he may carry out his mandate effectively;

6. Requests the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, to respond effectively to information that comes before him, in particular when a summary or arbitrary execution is imminent or threatened, or when such an execution has recently occurred;

7. Welcomes the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur in his report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-third session with a view to eliminating summary or arbitrary executions;

8. Endorses the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur on the need to develop international standards designed to ensure effective legislation and other domestic measures so that proper investigations are conducted by appropriate authorities into all cases of suspicious death, including provisions for adequate autopsy;

9. Invites the Special Rapporteur to continue to receive information from appropriate United Nations bodies and other international organizations and to examine the elements to be included in such standards and to report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth session on progress made in this respect;

10. Considers that the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, should continue to seek and receive information from Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur so that he may effectively carry out his mandate;

12. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appear not to be respected;

13. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth session, on the basis of the report of the Special Rapporteur to be prepared in conformity with Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/35, 1983/36, 1984/35, 1985/40, 1986/36 and 1987/60, to make recommendations concerning appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of summary or arbitrary executions.

Disappearance of persons

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(93) the Commission on Human Rights requested the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to submit in 1988 a report on its work, with conclusions and recommendations, bearing in mind its obligation to discharge its mandate with discretion, so as to protect persons providing information, or to limit the dissemination of information, provided by Governments, while observing United Nations standards and practices in dealing with communications. The Group was also asked to present to the Commission all information it deemed necessary, as well as concrete suggestions and recommendations.

Urging Governments to co-operate with the Group, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite countries with numerous cases of disappearance to envisage establishing a national body to investigate reports of disappearances and to ensure that the Group received all necessary assistance and resources. It encouraged Governments to consider with special attention any wish expressed by the Group to visit their country, and urged the Governments concerned to protect the families of disappeared persons against intimidation or ill-treatment.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980,(94) held three sessions in 1987: its twenty-first (New York, 4-8 May) and twenty-second and twenty-third (Geneva, 14-18 September and 25 November-4 December). (95)

During those sessions, the Group held 13 meetings with government representatives and 15 meetings with representatives of human rights organizations, families of missing persons and relatives or witnesses directly concerned with reports on enforced or involuntary disappearances. Two members of the Group visited Guatemala from 5 to 9 October and provided the Commission with a report on the problem of disappearances in that country.

In 1987, the Group received some 3,500 reports on enforced or involuntary disappearances and transmitted 1,094 newly reported cases to the Governments concerned. It also transmitted to Governments 215 cases under its urgent action procedure. During the year, the Group processed some 261 cases reported in 14 countries. Between 7 and 8 per cent of all cases before the Group were eventually clarified; for those cases, in which the Group had acted within three months of the disappearance, clarifications totalled about 25 per cent.

The Group recommended to the Commission that the Secretary-General be encouraged to improve public information activities on the human rights programme, having regard also to the purpose and objectives of the Group; that further consideration be given to drafting an international instrument on enforced or involuntary disappearances; and that the Group's mandate be extended for two years. Annexed to the Group's report were graphs showing the development of disappearances for the period 1974 to 1987 in countries with more than 50 transmitted cases.

Sub-Commission action. On 3 September 1987 (96) the Sub-Commission, expressing deep concern over reports of disappeared children in Argentina who had been located in Paraguay, and desirous of facilitating family reunions and preventing any new risk of disappearance of those children, requested its Chairman to appoint one or several members to establish urgently and to maintain contact with the competent authorities and institutions, including humanitarian organizations, which would report to him on the situation, and to ensure that there were no further risks of disappearances. It requested the authorities concerned to facilitate implementation of the decision.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/142 without vote.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons, and its resolution 41/145 of 4 December 1986 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Deeply concerned about the persistence, in certain cases, of the practice of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Expressing its/profound emotion at the anguish and sorrow of the families concerned, who are unsure of the fate of their relatives,

Convinced of the need to continue implementing the provisions of its resolution 33/173 and of the other United Nations resolutions on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, with a view to finding solutions for cases of disappearances and helping to eliminate such practices,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/27 of 10 March 1987,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for its humanitarian work and to those Governments that have co-operated with it;

2. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend for two years the term of the mandate of the Working Group, as defined in Commission resolution 20(XXXVI) of 29 February 1980, while maintaining the principle of annual reporting by the Group;

3. Also welcomes the provisions made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1986/55 of 13 March 1986 to enable the Working Group to fulfil its mandate with greater efficiency;

4. Appeals to the Governments concerned, particularly those which have not yet replied to the communications addressed to them by the Working Group, to co-operate fully with the Group so as to enable it, with respect for its working methods based on discretion, to perform its strictly humanitarian role;

5. Encourages the Governments concerned to consider the wish of the Working Group, when such a wish is expressed, to visit their countries, thus enabling the Group to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

6. Appeals to the Governments concerned to take steps to protect the families of disappeared persons against any intimidation or any ill-treatment of which they may be the target;

7. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any step it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group when it considers the report to be submitted by the Group to the Commission at its forty-fourth session;

8. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary facilities.

Other aspects of civil and political rights

Slavery

Working Group activities. The Sub-Commission's five-member Working Group on Slavery, at its twelfth session (Geneva, 3-6 and 25-26 August 1987),⁽⁹⁷⁾ reviewed developments in slavery and the slave trade, including the sale of children and child labour (see p. 824), traffic in persons and the exploitation of prostitution of others, slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism and debt bondage.

The Group made a number of recommendations, which were approved by the Sub-Commission in September (see below).

Sub-Commission action. On 4 September,(98) the Sub-Commission drew particular attention to the following recommendations of the Group: that the Group's name be changed to working group on contemporary forms of slavery, in order to reflect its actual interests, and that female representation in the Group be assured; that a fund be established, after the model of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (see p. 738), to assist NGOs to attend the Working Group's sessions; that the Commission on Human Rights transmit to Member States the Group's recommendation that any step taken to interfere with the freedom of attendance and speech before the Working Group be strongly condemned; and that steps be taken to enforce the Working Group's actions by providing means to ensure the presence of all five members at Group sessions and by facilitating the participation of indigenous peoples in the Group.

The Secretary-General's attention was drawn to the following recommendations, among others: that several United Nations bodies and the International Criminal Police Organization be urged to attend the Group's sessions; that he call on States parties to the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery,(99) and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others(100) to submit regular reports on the situation in their countries; that those States which had not signed or ratified the relevant Conventions be invited to consider doing so, or to explain in writing why they felt unable to do so; and that intergovernmental organizations, United Nations agencies and NGOs be asked to supply information to the Group.

The Sub-Commission further highlighted the following recommendations: that a protocol be attached to the above Conventions, providing for a means of implementation through the establishment of a committee which could receive and consider communications to the effect that a State party was not fulfilling its obligations under the convention, as well as communications from individuals who claimed to be victims of a violation by a State party, after the measures set forth in the 1984 Convention against torture;(61) and that urgent consideration be given to the implementation of the Convention against prostitution. The Commission's attention was also drawn to the recommendations that it adopt a draft resolution on the prevention of child prostitution and the sale of children, for adoption by the Economic and Social Council; and that the Commission Chairman be authorized to pressure South Africa to release Nelson Mandela, the leader of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), and Zephania Mothopeng, the leader of the Pan Africanist Congress, and all other political prisoners, to pardon 32 individuals sentenced to death and awaiting execution for offences committed in opposition to apartheid and to engage in a dialogue with black majority leaders.

Slavery-like practices in Mauritania

Final report. The Sub-Commission's expert, Marc Bossuyt (Belgium), presented to the Sub-Commission in July his final follow-up report on slavery-like practices in Mauritania.(101) He provided a summary of views expressed on the issue in the Sub-Commission and the Commission on the basis of his previous reports, the most recent of which had been submitted in 1985,(102) and his report on a 1984 mission to Mauritania,(103) particularly with respect to assistance that could be provided to the country. The expert also summarized replies from Mauritania itself and two other Governments, from two United Nations bodies and four specialized agencies, as well as from the Economic Commission for Africa.

While congratulating Mauritania on its ratification of a number of international conventions dealing with slavery and noting the Government's conviction that the legal abolition of slavery, together with political action, would be insufficient unless accompanied by measures guaranteeing effective emancipation for former slaves, the expert regretted that it had not seen fit to set up a specific body to co-ordinate the struggle against slavery and that it had supplied no information on the recommendations to develop sociological research on Mauritanian society and to involve former slaves in the struggle against the consequences of slavery.

He also regretted that few UNDP donor countries had responded to the invitation to examine how they could assist Mauritania in eradicating the consequences of slavery, in conformity with its national economic development plan. Similarly, he noted that certain United Nations bodies and agencies felt reluctant to announce specific assistance and that it once again appeared that bodies concerned with human rights were paying substantially greater attention to development assistance issues than vice versa.

Sub-Commission action. Following consideration of the report, the Sub-Commission, on 4 September,(104) expressed appreciation to the expert and to Mauritania for its co-operation and for the measures taken to eliminate the consequences of slavery. It invited Governments, United Nations organs and agencies to undertake additional and specific efforts to assist Mauritania in accelerating its development and eliminating the consequences of slavery. The Sub-Commission encouraged Mauritania to implement the adopted measures and policies and to intensify efforts to guarantee the emancipation of former slaves.

Freedom of movement

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July 1987, Special Rapporteur Chama L. C. Mubanga-Chipoya (Zambia), appointed in 1983,(105) submitted the first part of his final report on current trends and developments regarding the right to leave any country including one's own, and to return to one's own country,(106) as requested by the Sub-Commission in 1985.(102)

The Rapporteur defined the right to leave, noting that the provisions of international law dealing with the right to leave were characterized by a considerable degree of uniformity and universality. Following a brief description of the historical, philosophical and legal background of that right and the consideration given to it within the United Nations since 1952, he discussed its legal content as contained in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights(31) and the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,(1) as well as implementation of that right.

A preliminary draft declaration on freedom and non-discrimination in respect of the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, was annexed to the report.

Sub-Commission action. On 2 September 1987,(107) the Sub-Commission decided to consider' at its 1989 session, as a matter of priority, the Special Rapporteur's report and the preliminary draft declaration. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to give him all the assistance he required.

Freedom of speech

On 10 March 1987,(108) the Commission on Human Rights, expressing concern at the extensive occurrence of detention of persons who exercised their right to freedom of opinion and expression, called on States to allow the full realization of that right, appealed to them to ensure respect and support for those who exercised it and to release those who had been detained solely for doing so. The Commission requested the Sub-Commission to continue considering that right and affirmed that further national and international measures might be required to ensure respect for it.

Conscientious objectors

On 10 March 1987,(109) the Commission on Human Rights, by a recorded vote of 26 to 2, with 14 abstentions, appealed to States to recognize that conscientious objection to military service should be considered a legitimate exercise of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, and invited States to take measures aimed at exemption from military service on the basis of a genuinely held conscientious objection to armed service. It recommended to States with a system of compulsory military service that they consider introducing alternative service for conscientious objectors and establish within their national legal system impartial decision-making procedures to determine whether a conscientious objection was valid in any specific case. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to report in 1989 on the question of conscientious objection, taking into account comments provided by Governments and further information received by him.

Independence of the judicial system

Sub-Commission action. By a 3 September 1987 resolution,(110) adopted by 12 votes to 1, with 5 abstentions, the Sub-Commission expressed its appreciation to Special Rapporteur L. M. Singhvi (India) for his study on the independence of justice, submitted in 1985.(111) It decided that the draft declaration he had proposed be transmitted to Member States and to the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs for comments and suggestions, which were to be sent to the Special Rapporteur for his report on the draft declaration, to be presented by 30 May 1988. It further decided to consider the draft declaration in 1989 on a priority basis.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1986 Commission on Human Rights request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission's 1987 session a report⁽²⁾ containing replies from five Governments, six United Nations bodies, four specialized agencies and two NGOs on their policies regarding the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,⁽³⁾ by a roll-call vote of 27 to 10, with 5 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States to pursue policies directed towards implementing economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights, and called on them to co-operate in promoting social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs which had not yet done so to comment on their policies for the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights and to report to the Commission in 1988. It also requested him to submit, in 1989, proposals for more effective promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights, based on the views of Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs.

The Commission urged its Sub-Commission to pursue the study on the right to food as a matter of priority and to submit it as soon as possible. It requested the Sub-Commission to examine the conclusions and recommendations of a 1974 Commission report on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights,⁽⁴⁾ and to consider preparing a study of the impact on human rights of the policies and practices of the major international financial institutions, notably the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank.

Sub-Commission action. By a 3 September 1987 resolution,⁽⁵⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 17 votes to 1, the Sub-Commission recommended that it be authorized by the Commission and Economic and Social Council to appoint a special rapporteur to study problems, policies and progressive measures relating to a more effective realization of economic, social and cultural rights. It further recommended that the special rapporteur present to it in 1991 a substantial progress report and a final report in 1993, taking into account relevant studies and reports on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights, the new international economic order and the promotion of human rights, and on the right to adequate food as a human right, as well as material related to the implementation of the International Covenants on Human Rights, the integration of human rights concerns in the policies of United Nations development and financial agencies and institutions, and of the specialized agencies and the impact on human rights of the policies and practices of international financial institutions. The Sub-Commission requested the special rapporteur to give special attention to the interrelationship between structural adjustment and food security, employment, health care, education and cultural development, and to elaborate on the indivisibility and interdependence of all human rights in light of the problems and needs of people living in extreme poverty, both in industrialized and developing countries.

The Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission take account of the so-called Limburg Principles on the Implementation of the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,⁽⁶⁾ adopted in June 1986 at a meeting convened by the International Commission of Jurists, the Faculty of Law of the University of Limburg (the Netherlands) and the Urban Morgan Institute for Human Rights, University of Cincinnati (United States), which had been transmitted to the Commission by the Netherlands. (7) The following considerations were also specified: that economic, social and cultural rights were an integral part of international human rights law and that consequently all States were to make every effort to implement those rights; that States parties were to comply in good faith with their obligations to implement the International Covenant and co-operate in its international implementation; that full use be made of the expertise of relevant specialized agencies and financial institutions; that the Secretary-General assist the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights; that high-level seminars be convened periodically to carry out global assessments of progress made and difficulties encountered in realizing the rights contained in the Covenant; and that the Commission periodically review questions relating to the realization of economic, social and cultural rights, and make recommendations to the Economic and Social Council.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

As at 31 December 1987, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966(6) and in force since 1976,(8) had been ratified or acceded to by 91 States. Democratic Yemen, Equatorial Guinea and Uganda became parties to it during 1987.(9)

In an August report to the General Assembly(10) on the International Covenants on Human Rights (see p. 788), the Secretary-General provided information on the status of ratifications or accessions to and signatures of the Covenant as at 1 August, as well as on other questions related to its implementation.

Implementation of the Covenant

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(11) the Commission on Human Rights encouraged States parties to the Covenant, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and regional commissions to support and co-operate with the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights established in 1985(12) to oversee implementation of the Covenant from 1987 on. The Commission renewed its invitation to the Committee to consider, as a priority matter, the development of general guidelines for preparing reports under the Covenant, taking into account the Secretary-General's guidelines for preparing reports and the proposal that brief country profiles be prepared containing information on the geography, population, economic situation and legal framework of States parties. Emphasizing the relevance of the Committee's work to activities throughout the United Nations system concerning economic, social and cultural rights and the need to improve co-ordination of such activities, the Commission urged the Economic and Social Council, when reviewing its activities, as called for by the General Assembly in 1986,(13) to bear in mind its central responsibility in relation to the implementation of the Covenant. The Commission requested its Sub-Commission to take stock of its various studies on economic, social and cultural rights and, taking into account the results of the first session of the Committee, to make recommendations to the Commission in 1988 on how to promote implementation of the Covenant's provisions.

Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, established in 1985(12) to succeed the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, held its first session in Geneva from 9 to 27 March 1987.(14) The Committee examined 11 reports from 8 States parties on their implementation of the Covenant's provisions. On each report, the Committee heard statements by, and put questions to, the State representatives concerned. Under a programme established by the Economic and Social Council in 1976(15) and modified in 1985,(16) the initial reports (first cycle) required under article 16 of the Covenant were to be submitted in three biennial stages, each stage covering a related group of articles of the Covenant, while reports for the second and subsequent cycles were to be submitted every third year.

For the first stage of the first cycle (due 1 September 1977 or 1 September 1983), the Committee considered initial reports from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea,(17) Jordan,(18) and the Netherlands (dealing with the Netherlands Antilles),(19) concerning rights covered by articles 6 to 9 (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, trade union rights, the right to social security). At the request of Afghanistan, the Committee postponed consideration of that country's initial report(20) to its 1988 session. For the first stage of the second cycle (due 1 September 1983), the Committee considered the second periodic report from Czechoslovakia concerning rights covered by articles 6 to 9.(21)

The Committee examined initial reports (due 1 September 1979 or 1 September 1985) for the second stage of the first cycle from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea(22) and Jordan(23) on rights covered by articles 10 to 12 (protection of the family, mothers and children, and the right to an adequate living standard, and to physical and mental health). Also examined were second periodic reports concerning rights covered by articles 10 to 12 (due 1 September 1986) from Czechoslovakia,(24) the German Democratic Republic,(25) the Federal Republic of Germany,(26) the Ukrainian SSR(27) and the USSR (28) Consideration of the second periodic reports of Cyprus(29) and Poland(30) was postponed at their request to the Committee's 1988 session. The Committee also deferred to 1988 consideration of the second periodic reports of the Byelorussian SSR,(31) Denmark,(32) Mongolia(33) and Sweden,(34) and postponed consideration of initial reports (due 1 September 1981 or 1 September 1987) from Austria,(35) Jordan(36) and Yugoslavia,(37) on articles 13 to 15 of the Covenant (covering the rights to education, including compulsory education, and cultural participation).

The Committee approved a number of suggestions and recommendations. Concerning the submission of reports, it suggested that the Economic and Social Council might wish to: remind States parties of their obligation to submit reports; urge them to cover the entire cycle of initial reports before submitting second periodic reports, and instruct the Committee not to consider those reports if that condition was not met; draw to the attention of reporting States the views expressed by Committee members on their reports, so that those views might be taken into account in preparing future reports; encourage States parties to present their reports at the earliest possible session and to avoid postponements; request them to inform the Council of any difficulty they might face in preparing and submitting reports; emphasize the need for the Secretary-General to devise and implement a programme of advisory services and technical assistance for those States parties that might request it; and request the Secretary-General to send reminders to parties with two or more reports overdue.

With regard to the content of reports, the Committee decided to consider in 1988 improvement of the reporting guidelines and to appoint a sessional working group to assist it in that task. It recommended that the Council request parties to: comply with the Secretary-General's guidelines concerning form and content of reports; request parties to submit balanced reports, which should be more than a mere transcription of legislative or administrative measures or a reproduction of detailed statistical data in narrative form; and provide, in a brief introduction, general information on the country and data on its basic economic, social and constitutional conditions.

The Committee suggested that the Council urge the specialized agencies to extend their full support and co-operation to the Committee. It requested the Council to advise it as to whether a 1968 Council resolution(38) applied to the Committee so as to authorize NGOs to submit written statements. The Committee also recommended that it be authorized to meet for up to four weeks at its 1988 session to allow adequate time to consider reports.

On 27 March 1987, the Committee adopted its report,(14) which included a summary of its consideration of reports and an annex indicating the status of the submission of reports.

ILO report. In April 1987,(39) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the ninth report of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, on progress in achieving observance of the Covenant provisions, within ILO's scope of activities. The report detailed progress made in observing the provisions of articles 6 to 10, based on information from 14 States; it was not submitted in time to be considered by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights at its March session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/5 without vote.

International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of its central responsibilities under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling its resolution 1985/17 of 28 May 1985, by which it established the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, to be entrusted, as from 1987, with the important task of overseeing the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling also its resolutions and decisions relating to its Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, including resolution 1979/43 of 11 May 1979, which remain in force in so far as they are not superseded or modified by resolution 1985/17,

Reaffirming the importance of increasing public awareness of the Committee and the role that non-governmental organizations can play in that regard,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/121 of 4 December 1986 on reporting obligations under United Nations instruments on human rights, which is of relevance to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and in which the Assembly reaffirmed the importance of maintaining summary records, and bearing in mind the relevance to the work of the Committee of the activities and experience of other United Nations treaty bodies,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its first session, including suggestions and recommendations of a general nature approved by the Committee;

2. Urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

3. Invites States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to follow the recommendations made by the Committee to address the problems of non-submission and extended delays in the submission of periodic reports, in particular those recommendations regarding the need for States parties to submit and present their reports in a timely manner and to cover the entire cycle of initial reports before submitting second reports;

4. Invites also States parties to the Covenant to review the processes followed in the preparation of their periodic reports on implementation of the Covenant, including consultation and co-ordination with relevant governmental departments and agencies, compilation of data and training of staff, with a view to ensuring full compliance with relevant guidelines, improving the quality of description and analysis in such reports and limiting reports to a reasonable length;

5. Urges the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other relevant United Nations bodies to extend their full co-operation and support to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights by, inter alia, enabling their representatives to attend meetings of the Committee and submitting relevant information to the Committee;

6. Invites non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Council to submit to it written statements that might contribute to full and universal recognition and realization of the rights contained in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and requests the Secretary-General to make those statements available to the Committee in a timely manner;

7. Takes note of the recommendation of the Committee with regard to future sessions of the Committee but considers that the current provision of one annual session of three weeks' duration should be maintained for the time being and invites the Committee to explore further ways of expediting its consideration of periodic reports, such as imposing time limits on oral interventions, avoiding duplication in questioning, requesting supplementary written material, and encouraging States parties to present reports that are as succinct as possible;

8. Welcomes the proposal of the Committee to set up a sessional working group to consider its methods of work and invites the Committee to develop as a matter of priority its general guidelines for the preparation of reports pursuant to articles 16 and 17 of the Covenant, taking due account of the compilation of guidelines prepared by the Secretary-General and focusing on such specific information as would assist the Committee to carry out its mandate more effectively;

9. Invites the Committee to consider again at its next session the compilation of recommendations in the summary records of the Committee relating to its future work, paying particular regard to practices followed by other treaty bodies, including the preparation of general comments by the Human Rights Committee;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the report of the Committee to the attention of the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and other United Nations organs and their subsidiaries, specialized agencies concerned with providing technical assistance and the regional commissions;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights to assist States parties in discharging their reporting obligations under the Covenant, including holding training courses on the preparation of reports on the implementation of the Covenant, and to advise States parties of the availability of such assistance;

12. Encourages the Secretary-General to give publicity to the proceedings of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to ensure that it receives full administrative support so as to enable it to discharge its functions as effectively as possible;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to provide a compilation from official United Nations sources of statistics relevant to the Committee's consideration of the reports of States parties;

14. Decides to transmit the report of the Committee to the General Assembly at its forty-second session for consideration under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights".

Interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/102 by recorded vote.

Indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the obligations of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Recalling that in the preambles to the International Covenants on Human Rights it is recognized that the ideal of free human beings enjoying freedom from fear and want can only be achieved if conditions are created whereby persons may enjoy their economic, social and cultural rights as well as their civil and political rights,

Recalling its resolutions 40/114 of 13 December 1985 and 41/117 of 4 December 1986,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977 that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights can never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Convinced that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights,

Desirous of removing all obstacles to the full realization of human rights, in particular colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, racial discrimination in all its forms, apartheid, foreign intervention, occupation, aggression and domination,

Recognizing the fundamental rights of every people to exercise full sovereignty over its natural wealth and resources,

Reaffirming that there is a close and multidimensional relationship between disarmament and development, that progress in the field of disarmament would considerably promote progress in the field of development and that resources released through disarmament measures could contribute to the economic and social development and well-being of all peoples, in particular those of the developing countries,

Recognizing that the realization of the right to development may help to promote the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1985/42 of 14 March 1985, 1986/15 of 10 March 1986 and 1987/19 and 1987/20 of 10 March 1987, in which the Commission stated that the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights have not received sufficient attention within the framework of the United Nations system,

Requesting the Secretary-General to enhance his efforts under the programme of advisory services to States in the implementation, promotion and protection of the human rights and fundamental freedoms set forth in the International Covenants on Human Rights and other United Nations instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Notes the essential importance of national efforts and international co-operation to achieve the full and effective realization of all human rights recognized in the International Covenants on Human Rights;

2. Appeals to all States to pursue policies directed towards the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights recognized in the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international instruments;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give more attention to the realization of economic, social and cultural rights under the relevant agenda items;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its first session, including the suggestions and recommendations of a general nature approved by the Committee;

5. Endorses the invitation to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights by the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 1987/5 of 26 May 1987, to consider again at its next session the compilation of recommendations in the summary records of that Committee relating to its future work, paying particular attention to practices followed by other treaty bodies, including the preparation of general comments by the Human Rights Committee;

6. Requests the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to take due account of the experience gained in the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and in particular of the suggestions and recommendations of the Sessional Working Group;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to take determined steps, within existing resources, to give publicity to the Human Rights Committee and to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to ensure that they receive full administrative support in order to enable them to discharge their functions effectively;

8. Affirms the importance and relevance, to programmes and activities being undertaken throughout the United Nations system in the field of human rights, of reports submitted by States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

9. Decides to discuss at its forty-third session, under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights", the question of the indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights.

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 129-1-22 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/806) by recorded vote (118-1-22), 20 November (meeting 54); 7-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.49/Rev.1 orally revised by sponsors and orally amended by Australia; agenda item 101. Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

The eighth preambular paragraph was adopted by the Committee by a recorded vote of 117 to 9, with 13 abstentions, and by the Assembly by 128 votes to 9, with 13 abstentions.

Denmark, on behalf of the EC members, expressed serious reservations about the text saying they could not accept the assertion in the title and in the fifth preambular paragraph that all human rights were interdependent; the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights-the implementation of which was gradual-could not be a precondition for the enjoyment of civil and political rights. They also could not accept that the principal obstacles to the full realization of human Rights-were those listed in the seventh preambular paragraph; a complete list would include other elements, such as totalitarian practices. Further, they could not support the eighth preambular paragraph on the grounds that its language did not correspond to that of the Covenant, nor the ninth preambular paragraph which, they felt, painted an overly simplistic picture of the complex relationship between disarmament, security and development.

Right to development

Working Group activities. In 1987, the 15-member Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, established by the Economic and Social Council in 1981,(41) held its tenth session at Geneva from 5 to 20 January, in accordance with a 1986 Commission on Human Rights decision.(42)

The Group recommended to the Commission on Human Rights the dissemination of the Declaration on the Right to Development proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1986(43) to Governments, United Nations agencies, other governmental organizations and NGOs in all official United Nations languages, as well as dissemination of general information on the nature and content of the right to development. It recommended the 'organization of educational and research activities to familiarize countries with the Declaration's provisions. Agreeing that it was necessary to take measures to deepen and widen the understanding and acceptance of the right to development, the Group recommended that: Governments be requested to translate and publish the Declaration in all national, regional and subregional languages; a series of seminars and workshops be organized beginning in 1988-1989; audio-visual material be published in as many languages as possible; and special publications be prepared. The Group agreed that a broad-based study should be carried out on problems with regard to the realization of the right to development, particularly in developing countries.

The Group also recommended that the Commission ask the Secretary-General to invite comments and views from States, specialized agencies, international organizations and NGOs on the Declaration's implementation, and that a detailed questionnaire be formulated, eliciting information on different aspects of the realization of the right to development and listing obstacles to the realization of that right and ways of overcoming them. The United States declared that it could not join the consensus on the proposals; its statement was annexed to the Group's report.(44)

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(45) the Commission on Human Rights decided to convene the Group for two weeks in 1988. It agreed to ask the Secretary-General to circulate the 1986 Declaration and the Group's report to Governments, United Nations organs and specialized agencies and other governmental organizations and NGOs in all United Nations official languages, inviting them as a matter of high priority to offer their comments and views. It also asked him to ensure that an analytical compilation of all replies be circulated to Governments and interested parties in advance of the Group's next meeting and directed the Group to study the compilation in 1988 and to recommend which proposals would best contribute to further enhancing and implementing the Declaration. It also directed the Group to consider further recommendations to the Commission in 1988 on practical measures to implement the Declaration, including specific proposals concerning future work. It decided to consider in 1988 the Group's further activities and its possible enlargement, taking into account the interest of States.

By decision 1987/145 of 29 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council decided to transmit to the General Assembly the Working Group's report and approved the Commission's decision to convene the Working Group for two weeks in January 1988, as well as its request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance.

Note by the Secretary-General. In a July note,(46) the Secretary-General gave a brief overview of United Nations activities related to the right to development, including activities of the Working Group and related action by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/117 without vote.

Right to development

The General Assembly,

Welcoming the proclamation by the General Assembly at its forty-first session of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights relating to the right to development, especially Commission resolution 1987/23 of 10 March 1987, approved by the Economic and Social Council, Reiterating the importance of the right to development for all countries, in particular the developing countries.

Convinced of the importance of the future work of the Commission on Human Rights and its Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, including practical measures to implement the Declaration,

Having considered the report of the Working Group and all other relevant documents submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-second session,

Aware of the great interest shown by several Member States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations which desire to contribute to the work of the Working Group,

1. Expresses the hope that the replies of Governments, United Nations bodies and specialized agencies and other governmental and non-governmental organizations, submitted at the request of the Secretary-General based on Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/23 to offer their comments and views on the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, will contain practical proposals and ideas that should contribute substantively to further work on the implementation of the Declaration;

2. Calls upon the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, at its eleventh session, to study the analytical compilation to be prepared by the Secretary-General of all replies received, if necessary together with the individual replies, and to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth session its recommendations and suggestions on which proposals would best contribute to the further enhancement and implementation of the Declaration;

3. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to consider at its forty-fourth session the report, recommendations and suggestions of the Working Group, as well as all other relevant materials, including the analytical compilation, with a view to deciding on practical measures to implement the Declaration, including specific proposals concerning future work;

4. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, on organizational and substantial measures to implement the Declaration at all levels;

5. Decides to consider this question at its forty-third session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/C.3/42/L.36), orally revised; agenda item 105.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 36-39, 41, 42, 44; plenary 93.

The United States said it would not participate in the vote, recalling that it had not voted in favour of the 1986 resolution⁽⁴³⁾ proclaiming the Declaration on the Right to Development.

The Federal Republic of Germany explained that while it had joined in the consensus in an effort to be constructive, its position as stated in 1986 remained unchanged.⁽⁴⁷⁾ Japan also recalled its reservations on the 1986 Declaration,⁽⁴⁷⁾ and said it did not believe that individuals or States had any legitimate rights to development other than those set out in the International Covenants on Human Rights; the co-operation to which article 56 of the Charter referred must be encouraged by sovereign States on a voluntary basis-it did not constitute an inalienable human right.

In resolution 42/119, the Assembly reaffirmed that the right to development was an inalienable human right.

Right to food

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July 1987, ⁽⁴⁸⁾ Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway) submitted the final study on the right to adequate food as a human right, as requested by the Sub-Commission in 1982.⁽⁴⁹⁾ He concluded that the right to food was widely recognized in international law but that corresponding obligations were vague, diverse and found in many different instruments. Plans for national food security had gained increased attention and in many States there existed the beginning of national arrangements for monitoring the progressive realization of the right to food. He pointed out a need for international monitoring and supervision to enhance compliance with international and external obligations of States. The relevant body for that was, in the Rapporteur's opinion, the newly created Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (see p. 768).

He outlined recommendations for action by States, the Economic and Social Council, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Sub-Commission, United Nations agencies, NGOs, universities and research institutions. Among those recommendations were that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights pay particular attention to the right to food, improve its guidelines for dealing with that right in States parties' reports, and encourage the provision of technical assistance to States parties which encountered difficulties in realizing that right. To the Sub-Commission, the Special Rapporteur recommended that it seek authorization to draft a legal instrument on the right to food, taking account of the efforts within the International Law Association to prepare a model draft instrument on that right.

Sub-Commission action. On 3 September 1987 ⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Sub-Commission submitted the study to the Commission. It asked the Secretary-General to request States to describe any of their laws pertaining to the right to food and to ask the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to provide all such information at its disposal. The Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to report on the information obtained in 1991 and decided to debate the right to food at a subsequent session. It recommended to the Commission a draft resolution recommending that Governments draw up plans for national food security along the lines suggested in the study and their own development plans, urging them to comply with their obligations related to international co-operation and under international instruments, and calling on NGOs to support efforts to realize the right to food.

The Sub-Commission also recommended that the Commission recommend a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, by which the Council would: decide that the study be published by the United Nations and given the widest possible circulation; decide to take steps to ensure better co-ordination between specialized agencies, other United Nations organs dealing with food-related matters and human rights bodies; and call on the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to examine, as a matter of priority, the recommendations concerning its methods of work contained in the study, and to submit its observations on those recommendations.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(51) by a roll-call vote of 30 to none, with 11 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights urged States to provide adequate constitutional and legal provisions to protect the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, and the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's property. Noting a 1986 General Assembly resolution(52) calling for a report by the Secretary-General that would take into account views of Member States, United Nations agencies and bodies, the Commission appealed to them to respond as constructively and factually as possible and to give his report careful consideration. It decided to consider in 1988 the right to own property and its contribution to the economic and social development of Member States.

On the same date,(53) by a roll-call vote of 28 to 11, with 2 abstentions, the Commission called on States to ensure that their national legislation regarding property precluded any impairment of the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, without prejudice to their right freely to choose and develop their political, social, economic and cultural systems. It urged transnational corporations (TNCs) to ensure that they did not adversely affect the implementation of human rights in developing countries, and vigorously condemned TNCs that collaborated with racist South Africa. It decided to consider in 1988 the influence of various forms of property on the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/114 without vote.

Respect for the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and its contribution to the economic and social development of Member States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/132 of 4 December 1986, in which it expressed the conviction that the full enjoyment by everyone of the right to own property alone as well as in association with others, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, is of particular significance in fostering widespread enjoyment of other basic human rights and contributes to securing the goals of economic and social development enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/17 of 10 March 1987, in which the Commission urged States, in accordance with their respective constitutional systems and in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to provide, where they have not done so, adequate constitutional and legal provisions to protect the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's property,

1. Recalls that, in its resolution 41/132, it requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report to be submitted to the Assembly at its forty-third session that would take into account the views of Member States, specialized agencies and other competent bodies of the United Nations system, within existing resources, on:

(a) The relationship between the full enjoyment by individuals of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the economic and social development of Member States;

(b) The role of the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in ensuring the full and free participation of individuals in the economic and social systems of States;

2. Takes note of the preliminary, oral report on this question made by the Under-Secretary-General for Human Rights;

3. Appeals to Member States, on the basis of their national experience, and to specialized agencies and other competent bodies of the United Nations system to respond as constructively and as factually as possible to the invitation in its resolution 41/132 to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on the subject of his report;

4. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to report his findings to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

5. Decides to consider this question at its forty-third session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/792) without vote, 12 November (meeting 44); draft by United States (A/C.3/42/L.33); agenda item 105. Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 36-39, 44; plenary 93.

On the same date, also on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/115 by recorded vote.

The impact of property on the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms
The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, and the Declaration on the Right to Development, which assign property a role in the exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/18 of 10 March 1987,

Mindful of the obligations of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development, as well as solutions of international economic, social, health and related problems,

Recognizing the need to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Recognizing also that all peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of which they may freely determine their political status and may freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Noting with concern that the concentration of economic power in the hands of transnational corporations may impede the comprehensive and meaningful realization of the right to self-determination of peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recognizing further that the right of peoples to self-determination includes the exercise of their inalienable right to full sovereignty over all their natural wealth and resources,

Convinced that social justice is a prerequisite for lasting peace and that people can achieve complete fulfilment of their aspirations only within a just social order,

Convinced also that social development can be promoted by peaceful coexistence, friendly relations and co-operation among States with different social, economic or political systems,

Reaffirming, in accordance with article 28 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Declaration can be fully realized,

Bearing in mind that in no case may human rights and fundamental freedoms be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations or to the rights and freedoms of others,

Recalling its resolution 34/137 of 14 December 1979, on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries, in which it emphasized the importance of an efficient public sector in the development process,

Reaffirming, in accordance with article 6 of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, that social progress and development require the establishment, in conformity with human rights and fundamental freedoms and with the principles of justice and the social function of property, of forms of ownership of land and of the means of production which preclude any kind of exploitation of man, ensure equal rights to property for all and create conditions leading to genuine equality among people,

1. Reaffirms the obligation of States to take effective steps with a view to achieving the full realization of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights;

2. Recognizes that there exist in Member States many forms of legal property ownership, including private, communal and State forms, each of which should contribute to ensuring the effective development and utilization of human resources through the establishment of sound bases for political, economic and social justice;

3. Calls upon States to ensure that their national legislation with regard to all forms of property shall preclude any impairment of the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, without prejudice to their right freely to choose and develop their political, social, economic and cultural systems;

4. Vigorously condemns the transnational corporations that maintain or are increasing their collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa, thus encouraging that regime to persist in its inhuman and criminal policy of brutal oppression of the peoples of southern Africa and denial of their human rights and becoming accomplices in the inhuman practices of racial discrimination, colonialism and apartheid;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing his report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, in accordance with resolution 41/132 of 4 December 1986, to take into account Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/18, as well as the present resolution.

Right to adequate housing

On 10 March 1987,(54) the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 40 to none, with 2 abstentions, expressed deep concern that millions of people did not enjoy the right to housing and reiterated the need to take measures to promote the right of all persons to an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families, including adequate housing. It called on States and international organizations to give special attention to the realization of that right in carrying out measures for the observance of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (IYSH) (1987) (see p. 715), inter alia, by developing shelter strategies and settlement improvement programmes. It invited States, in their reports on the Year, to reflect the measures they had taken for realizing the right to adequate housing and urged them to co-operate with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) in observing IYSH. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to give attention to promoting that right in the information he was to provide to the General Assembly on the realization of IYSH objectives and to transmit that information to the Commission in 1988.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1987/62 by a show of hands.

Realization of the right to adequate housing

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/221 of 20 December 1982, in which the Assembly proclaimed the year 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Recognizing the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Recognizing that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights provide that all persons have the right to an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families, including adequate housing, and that States should take appropriate steps to ensure the realization of that right,

Recognizing that the provision of housing for the homeless is an integral part of national economic and social development and represents an important step towards the realization of the right to development,

Noting that the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless are closely related to the realization of the economic, social and cultural rights set out in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling its resolution 1986/41 of 23 May 1986,

Recognizing the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Bearing in mind that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights provide that all persons have the right to an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families, including adequate housing, and that States should take appropriate steps to ensure the realization of this right,

Noting that the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless are closely related to the realization of the economic, social and cultural rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling its resolution 41/146 of 4 December 1986,

Taking into account Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/62 of 29 May 1987,

4. Requests the Economic and Social Council and its appropriate functional commissions to keep the question of the right to adequate housing under periodic review;

5. Decides to consider the question again, following consideration thereof by the Economic and Social Council.

Explaining its vote, the United States said that adoption of the text would elevate what should be a matter of government policy to a government obligation to individuals.

Japan pointed out that it was inappropriate to refer to a global strategy for shelter to the year 2000 in the terms used in paragraph 3; UNCHS was the most appropriate party to draft such a strategy.

Popular participation and human rights

On 10 March 1987,(55) the Commission on Human Rights invited Governments, United Nations bodies and agencies and NGOs which had not done so to submit their comments on the Secretary-General's 1985 final study on popular participation as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights.(56) The Commission requested the Secretary-General to submit in 1988 a report containing those comments and to prepare a study of laws and practices on the extent to which the right to participation had been established and had evolved at the national level to be submitted in 1989.

Comments received as at 1 November 1986 from three Member States, three United Nations bodies and one NGO were summarized by the Secretary-General in a November 1987 report,(57) prepared pursuant to a 1986 Commission request.(58)

Advancement of human rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1987, (1) the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly an overview of current international conditions and human rights, which was a follow-up to three previous reports submitted in 1981,(2) 1983(3) and 1985. (4)

The Secretary-General observed that progress had been made in advancing civil and political rights and women's rights, but that terrorism and violent practices, such as arbitrary and summary executions, torture, and enforced and involuntary disappearances, continued to take place. Situations of international and internal armed conflicts continued in several areas of the world and the cost in human lives as well as in disregard for the basic rights and freedoms of the individual had been high. Although much had been done to promote the principle of equality and non-discrimination, the human rights situation in South Africa had deteriorated. Situations continued to exist in which peoples were unable to exercise their right of self-determination because of colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation. Stresses on the international economic system had resulted in large numbers of people living daily without adequate food, drinking-water, medicines, health services, clothing or shelter.

It must be a continuing purpose of the United Nations to encourage universal respect for human rights and bring to this and other major social problems the force of international co-operation, the Secretary-General stated in his report on the work of the Organization (see p. 9).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/119 by recorded vote.

Alternative approaches and ways and means
-within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling also the purposes and principles of the Charter to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Emphasizing the significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution,

Recalling also its resolutions 34/46 of 23 November 1979, 35/174 of 15 December 1980, 36/133 of 14 December 1981, 38/124 of 16 December 1983, 39/145 of 14 December 1984, 40/124 of 13 December 1985 and 41/131 and 41/133 of 4 December 1986,

Taking into account Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/43 of 14 March 1985,

Emphasizing that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of development opportunities is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals within nations,

Recognizing that the human being is the main subject of development and that everyone has the right to participate in, as well as to benefit from, the development process,

Reiterating once again that the establishment of the new international economic order is an essential element for the effective promotion and full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reiterating also its profound conviction that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights,

Emphasizing the need for the creation, at the national and international levels, of conditions for the promotion and full protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples,

Recognizing that international peace and security are essential elements for the full realization of human rights, including the right to development,

Considering that the resources that would be released by disarmament could contribute significantly to the development of all States, in particular to that of the developing countries,

Recognizing that co-operation among all nations on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system and to exercise full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources, subject to the principles referred to in article 1, paragraph 2, and article 25 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, is essential for the promotion of peace and development,

Convinced that the primary aim of such international co-operation must be the achievement by all human beings of a life of freedom and dignity and freedom from want,

Concerned, however, about the occurrence of violations of human rights in the world,

Reaffirming that nothing in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or in the International Covenants on Human Rights may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person the right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at destroying any of the rights and freedoms proclaimed therein,

Affirming that the ultimate aim of development is the steady improvement of the well-being of the entire population, on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom,

Considering that the efforts of the developing countries for their own development should be supported by an increased flow of resources and by the adoption of appropriate and substantive measures for creating an external environment conducive to such development,

Taking into account the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986,

Emphasizing the special importance of the purposes and principles proclaimed in its Declaration on the Right to Development,

Taking into account Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1987/19 and 1987/23 of 10 March 1987,

Reaffirming the importance of furthering the activities of the organs of the United Nations in the field of human rights in conformity with the principles of the Charter,

Emphasizing that Governments have the duty to ensure respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

1. Reiterating its request that the Commission on Human Rights continue its current work on overall analysis with a view to further promoting and strengthening human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the programme and working methods of the Commission, and on the overall analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in accordance with the provisions and concepts of General Assembly resolution 32/130 and other relevant texts;

2. Affirms that a primary aim of international co-operation in the field of human rights is a life of freedom, dignity and peace for all peoples and for every human being, that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from promoting and protecting the others;

3. Affirms its profound conviction that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Reaffirms that it is of paramount importance for the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms that Member States should assume specific obligations by acceding to or ratifying international instruments in this field, and, consequently that the work within the United Nations system of setting standards in the field of human rights- and universal-acceptance and implementation of the relevant international instruments should be encouraged;

5. Reiterates once again that the international community should accord, or continue to accord, priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those mentioned in paragraph 1 (e) of General Assembly resolution 32/130, paying due attention also to other situations of violations of human rights;

6. Reaffirms its responsibility for achieving international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and expresses its concern at serious violations of human rights, in particular mass and flagrant violations of these rights, wherever they occur;

7. Expresses concern at the present situation as regards the achievement of the objectives and goals for the establishment of the new international economic order, and at its adverse effects on the full realization of human rights, in particular the right to development;

8. Reaffirms that the right to development is an inalienable human right;

9. Reaffirms also that international peace and security are essential elements for achieving full realization of the right to development;

10. Recognizes that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent;

11. Considers that all Member States must promote international co-operation on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system and to exercise full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources, subject to the principles referred to in article 1, paragraph 2, and article 25 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, with a view to solving international economic, social and humanitarian problems;

12. Expresses concern at the disparity existing between established norms and principles and the actual situation of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in the world;

13. Urges all States to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

14. Reiterates the need to create, at the national and international levels, conditions for the full promotion and protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples;

15. Reaffirms once again that, in order to facilitate the full enjoyment of all human rights without diminishing personal dignity, it is necessary to promote the rights to education, work, health and proper nourishment through the adoption of measures at the national level, including those that provide for the participation of workers in management, as well as the adoption of measures at the international level, including the establishment of the new international economic order;

16. Decides that the approach to future work within the United Nations system on human rights matters should also take into account the content of the Declaration on the Right to Development and the need for the implementation thereof;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Denmark, speaking for the EC countries, doubted that the text and the resolutions it referred to contributed to the advancement of human rights; the text did not indicate that human rights violations were the concern of the United Nations, while mentioning questions relating to the world economy and disarmament, which had nothing to do with the Committee's work. The Twelve also rejected all provisions designed to establish pre-conditions for the enjoyment of human rights.

Similarly, Turkey remarked that certain elements of the text did not fall within the purview of the Third Committee's mandate and its wording appeared to set pre-conditions for the development of the human person. Sweden, on behalf of the Nordic States, regretted the tendency to emphasize the rights of States rather than those of individuals, and economic and social rights over civil and political rights, even though the two categories of rights merited equal attention. Japan had reservations about several paragraphs which emphasized the right to development. Canada considered it inappropriate to mention the new international economic order and disarmament in a text relating to human rights and, with regard to paragraph 16, it did not feel that the text offered an appropriate framework for the future work of United Nations human rights bodies and hoped that the Commission would prepare a more balanced text. New Zealand also expressed reservations on paragraph 16 which, it believed, was premature since the right to development had not yet been defined.

National institutions for human rights protection

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,(5) the Secretary-General submitted a July 1987 report on national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights.(6) He stated that he had prepared for publication a handbook for the use of Governments on various types and models of national and local institutions for promoting and protecting human rights.(7) The handbook, in the form of a consolidated report, had been submitted to the Commission on Human Rights and was to be made available to the Assembly for consideration during its 1987 session.

Human Rights Commission action. Welcoming the Secretary-General's report,(7) the Commission on Human Rights, on 10 March 1987,(8) encouraged all Member States to establish or strengthen national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights. It also encouraged States, as well as the United Nations Centre for Human Rights, to promote the exchange of information and experience concerning such institutions.

Other provisions of the resolution, on the role of national institutions, the role of NGOs in relation to them, and assistance to Member States, were taken up later by the Assembly in a December resolution (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Commission's request that the Secretary-General's report be transmitted to the Assembly at its 1987 session, with a view to its early dissemination as a handbook of the United Nations, was approved without vote by the Economic and Social Council, on 29 May 1987, by decision 1987/156, on the recommendation of its Second Committee.

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its forty-third session at Geneva from 2 February to 13 March 1987. At that session, it adopted 61 resolutions and 12 decisions. In addition, the Commission recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council 3 draft resolutions and 14 draft decisions.

On 29 May, by decision 1987/153, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-third session.(9)

Organization of work of the 1988 session

On 29 May 1987, by decision 1987/154, the Economic and Social Council authorized 20 fully serviced additional meetings, including summary records, for the Commission's forty-fourth (1988) session. The Council noted the Commission's decision to request its Chairman to make every effort to organize the work of the session within the time normally allotted, additional meetings to be utilized only if absolutely necessary.

Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

Sub-Commission session

The Sub-Commission on Prevention and Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its thirty-ninth session at Geneva from 10 August to 4 September 1987. At that session, it adopted 33 resolutions and 13 decisions, contained in its report(10) to its parent body, the Commission on Human Rights. In addition, the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission 11 draft resolutions for adoption.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,(11) the Commission on Human Rights requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the Sub-Commission and its working groups held their sessions in 1987 as scheduled, to permit the Sub-Commission to continue its work and minimize the disruptive effect of the deferral of its 1986 session. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide the Sub-Commission and its working groups with the necessary assistance and services. It drew the attention of the Sub-Commission to the guidelines for its work contained in a 1986 Commission resolution and invited the Sub-Commission to continue its efforts to provide expert assistance to the Commission. It decided to consider in 1988 as a matter of high priority the Sub-Commission's report of its 1987 session.

Election of Sub-Commission members

Taking note of a 1986 General Assembly resolution on the Sub-Commission,(12) the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/102 of 6 February 1987, extended the term of office of the Sub-Commission members for one year to ensure their participation in the Sub-Commission's 1987 session, and postponed until 1988 the election of new members, which was to follow a procedure established by the Council in 1986.(13)

Public information activities

The Secretary-General presented to the Commission on Human Rights in 1987 an overview of public information activities in the human rights field by the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) and United Nations information centres, as well as by Governments, specialized agencies, regional commissions and NGOs.(14) In addition, he reported on promotional activities carried out by the Information Service of the United Nations Office at Geneva, and the Centre for Human Rights.

On 10 March 1987,(15) the Commission requested States to facilitate and encourage publicity for United Nations human rights activities and to accord priority to disseminating in their national and local languages the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,(16) the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights(17) and other international conventions. It asked the Secretary-General to establish a register of national focal points to disseminate human right material and to make available adequate funding for public information activities. It requested him to give a detailed status report in 1988 on the availability of the principal international human rights instruments in the official and other languages and an assessment of human rights activities of the information centres.

Other provisions of the Commission resolution corresponded to provisions of a resolution adopted by the General Assembly later in the year (see below). They dealt with the establishment of collections of basic reference works and materials at the information centres; the inclusion of human rights components in educational curricula and training; the production and dissemination of a personalized (pocket) version of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in national and local languages; and the public presentation of human rights material on Human Rights Day.

By another resolution, adopted on 11 March by a roll-call vote of 41 to none, with 1 abstention,(18) the Commission expressed the conviction that the media and NGOs could play a role in enhancing promotion and protection of human rights and contribute to better mutual understanding, confidence and respect and invited the media to give more publicity to its work and that of other United Nations human rights bodies. Calling on Member States to base their activities for the promotion and protection of human rights on relevant international instruments and to refrain from activities that were inconsistent with that international legal framework, it appealed to States to ensure respect and support for all persons in the exercise of their right to freedom of opinion and expression.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/118 without vote.

Development of public information activities in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that activities to improve public knowledge in the field of human rights are essential to the fulfilment of the purposes of the United Nations set out in Article 1, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations and that programmes of teaching, education and information are central to the achievement of lasting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the relevant resolutions on this subject, in particular its resolution 41/130 of 4 December 1986 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/39 of 10 March 1987,

Recognizing the catalytic effect of United Nations initiatives on national and regional public information activities in the field of human rights,

Recognizing also the valuable role that non-governmental organizations can play in these endeavours,

Believing that the fortieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights should provide a focus and renewed impetus to the promotional activities of the United Nations system in the field of human rights,

Taking note of the successful United Nations regional training course on the teaching of human rights held at Bangkok from 12 to 23 October 1987,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the development of public information activities in the field of human rights, and notes that, despite its repeated appeals, adequate resources and priority for these activities continue to be denied;

2. Invites all Member States to make special efforts during 1988 to publicize and to facilitate and encourage publicity for the activities of the United Nations in the field of human rights and to accord priority to the dissemination, in their respective national and local languages, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international conventions;

4. Reaffirms the need for materials on human rights to be made available in simplified, attractive and accessible form, in national and local languages, and for effective use to be made of the mass media, in particular radio and television and audio-visual technologies, in order to reach a wider audience, with priority given to children, young people and the disadvantaged, including those in isolated areas;

7. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to establish, within available resources, collections of basic reference works and United Nations materials at each United Nations information centre by the end of 1988, taking into account the list of basic human rights materials;

8. Invites all relevant bodies of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies and regional commissions, as well as Member States and non-governmental organizations, to facilitate the dissemination of United Nations materials on human rights and to improve the co-ordination of their activities in this field;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to finalize the draft teaching booklet on human rights without delay and to draw the attention of Member States to the booklet, which could serve as a broad and flexible framework within which teaching could be structured and developed in accordance with national circumstances;

10. Urges all Member States to include in their education curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights issues and encourages all those responsible for training in law and its enforcement, the armed forces, medicine, diplomacy and other relevant fields to include appropriate human rights components in their programmes;

Further requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States to nominate national focal points which could be supplied with copies of relevant human rights materials and to publish the list of such focal points in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to arrange for the reprinting as soon as practicable of the publication entitled Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments;

14. Emphasizes the importance of maintaining adequate stocks of basic human rights materials in New York and Geneva, and expresses its concern about the serious limitations placed on the storage capacity of the United Nations in New York for such documents;

16. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution;

17. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-third session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

The Byelorussian SSR, expressing reservations on paragraph 10, said that the fact that only three categories of individuals-members of armed forces, medical professionals and diplomats-were mentioned in connection with educational curricula might give the impression that those groups were the most vulnerable to human rights violations.

Regional arrangements

Asia and the Pacific

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987, (19) the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of a 1986 report by the Secretary-General on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asia and Pacific region, (20) requested him to assist and encourage the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) to pursue the establishment of a depository centre within ESCAP at Bangkok, Thailand, to collect, process and disseminate United Nations human rights materials. The Commission took note of United Nations development agencies' efforts in the region to promote human rights more actively and systematically, and encouraged those agencies to co-ordinate their promotion activities with ESCAP. It invited the Secretary-General to finalize as expeditiously as possible preparations for a training course on human rights teaching, to be held at Bangkok in 1987, and asked him to report on the results of the course in 1988. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit a further report in 1988 incorporating information on progress achieved.

Fortieth anniversary

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/131 without vote.

Fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Considering that the year 1988 will mark the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which, conceived as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations and having provided the basis for the development of the International Covenants on Human Rights, has been and rightly continues to be a fundamental source of inspiration for national and international efforts for the protection and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling, in this respect, its resolution 217 A (III) of 10 December 1948, by which it officially proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, its resolutions 36/169 of 16 December 1981 and 38/57 of 9 December 1983, relating to the thirty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration, as well as its resolution 41/150 of 4 December 1986, relating to the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration,

Convinced of the continuing need to promote the universal observance and enjoyment of human rights, which contribute to peaceful and friendly relations among nations,

Recalling that in its resolution 41/150 it decided to celebrate in 1988 the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration,

1. Resolves that the celebration in 1988 of the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights shall be used as an occasion to highlight the achievements of the United Nations in its efforts to promote and protect human rights universally, to renew the commitment of the Organization in this area and to encourage Member States to ensure the promotion and protection of the rights enshrined in the Declaration;

2. Once again invites Member States, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take appropriate measures, such as those set forth in the annex to resolution 41/150, and to support appropriate activities aimed at encouraging the promotion of the universal observance and enjoyment of civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights;

3. Urges the Secretary-General to carry out the activities indicated in the annex to resolution 41/150 in order to assure the success of the activities commemorating the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration;

4. Reiterates its report to the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to disseminate appropriate public information, broadcasting and audio-visual material designed to draw attention to, and emphasize the importance of, the Declaration and the role played and the work done by the United Nations to ensure the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Urges the United Nations Postal Administration to give special attention to the issuance of commemorative postage stamps on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration;

6. Confirms its decision to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights";

7. Further confirms its decision to devote one plenary meeting during its forty-third session to the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration, which falls on 10 December 1988, and requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary preparations for the programme of that meeting;

8. Encourages Governments in a position to do so to include in their delegations participating in the above-mentioned commemorative plenary meeting of the General Assembly persons from their respective countries who were associated with the drafting of the Declaration.

Reporting obligations of States parties

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/105 without vote.

Reporting obligations of States parties to United Nations instruments on human rights
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/121 of 4 December 1986 and other relevant resolutions,

Reiterating the fundamental importance it attaches to the fulfilment of reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights,

Recognizing that effective periodic reporting by States parties to relevant treaty bodies not only enhances international accountability in relation to the protection and promotion of human rights, but also provides States parties with a valuable opportunity to review policies and programmes affecting the protection and promotion of human rights and to make any appropriate adjustments,

Expressing concern about the increasing backlog of reports on implementation by States parties of United Nations instruments on human rights and about delays in consideration of reports by the treaty bodies,

Recognizing the burden that coexisting reporting systems place upon Member States that are parties to various instruments and noting that this burden will become more onerous as additional instruments come into force,

Welcoming the decision taken by the States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, at their tenth meeting, to approve the practice of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination of considering multiple overdue reports in consolidated form, and the decision taken by the States parties, at their eleventh meeting, to recommend that in order to facilitate the current work of the Committee, States parties, as a general practice, after submitting initial reports to the Committee, should submit further comprehensive reports on every second occasion thereafter when reports are due, that is, every four years, with a brief updating report at each intervening occasion when reports are due,

Reaffirming the importance of providing adequate resources for all bodies supervising implementation of United Nations instruments on human rights, including maintaining summary records for their proceedings, in particular for the presentation and consideration of periodic reports by States parties,

Reaffirming also the independent, expert character of the treaty bodies,

1. Urges States parties to United Nations instruments on human rights with reports overdue to make every effort to present their reports as soon as possible and to take advantage of opportunities whereby such reports can be consolidated;

2. Invites States parties to United Nations instruments on human rights to review the processes followed in the preparation of their periodic reports with a view to ensuring compliance with relevant guidelines, improving the quality of description and analysis and limiting reports to a reasonable length;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to revise, as a matter of priority and in consultation with the treaty bodies, the draft compilation of general guidelines elaborated by the various supervisory bodies and the list of articles dealing with related rights under the United Nations instruments on human rights, and to include in of the supervisory bodies in order to assist States parties in compiling reports;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To propose a draft agenda for the meeting of the persons chairing the treaty bodies to be held at Geneva in October 1988, which reflects, inter alia, the following objectives:

- (i) To give priority attention to consideration of remedial measures, including co-ordinated action when appropriate, to deal with the problems highlighted in the reports of the Secretary-General;
- (ii) To give further consideration to harmonizing and consolidating reporting guidelines on the basis of the suggestions in the above-mentioned reports, with a view to providing clearer and more comprehensive guidelines for more concise reporting by States parties;

International Covenants on Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. In a 10 March 1987 resolution,⁽²⁵⁾ corresponding largely to the resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly later in the year (see below), the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the importance of the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights⁽¹⁷⁾ in promoting human rights. It appealed to States to become parties, emphasizing the importance of strict compliance, and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. It recommended that they periodically review their reservations to the Covenants' provisions and encouraged Governments to publish and distribute the texts of the Covenants in as many languages as possible. The Commission urged the Secretary-General to improve administrative arrangements for the supervisory committees and give more publicity to their work. It asked him to consider ways to assist parties in preparing their reports, including awarding fellowships and organizing regional training courses, and to report in 1988 on the status of the Covenants and on the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which it encouraged to strive towards the application of universally recognized criteria in implementing the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August 1987 (26) the Sub-Commission, by a roll-call vote of 13 to none, with 4 abstentions, recommended for adoption by the Commission a resolution calling on the Assembly to request the Secretary-General to communicate to the Sub-Commission lists of countries which had ratified the Covenants and Optional Protocol, those which had not yet done so, and those States parties which had not submitted their reports to the supervisory bodies. By the resolution, the Assembly would also suggest to the Secretary-General that a world-wide campaign be launched aimed at the universal ratification of international human rights instruments.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/4 without vote.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Human Rights,

Recalling its decision 1985/105 of 8 February 1985, its resolutions 1986/3 and 1986/5 of 21 May 1986, General Assembly resolution 41/119 of 4 December 1986 and

Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/26 of 10 March 1986,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 2200 A (XXI) of 16 December 1966, by which the Assembly adopted and opened for signature and ratification or accession the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Noting, in this regard, that only half of the States Members of the United Nations have acceded to the International Covenants,

Noting with concern the critical situation with regard to reports overdue under the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the important responsibilities of the Council in relation to the co-ordination of activities to promote the International Covenants on Human Rights,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as major elements in the international effort to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Appeals strongly to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, so that those instruments acquire genuine universality;

3. Also appeals to all States to respect, implement, promote and protect economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties to the Covenants with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

5. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation and the necessity for strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency, so that the justification and appropriateness of measures taken in those circumstances can be assessed;

6. Recommends that States parties continually review whether any reservation made in respect of the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights should be upheld;

7. Recognizes the important role of the Human Rights Committee in the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, and expresses its satisfaction with the serious and constructive manner in which the Committee is continuing, to exercise its functions;

8. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the Human Rights Committee to strive for uniform standards in the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and appeals to other bodies dealing with similar questions of human rights to respect those uniform standards, as expressed in the general comments of the Human Rights Committee;

9. Welcomes the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which is entrusted with the important task of examining the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

10. Encourages the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to strive towards the application of universally recognized criteria in the implementation of the Covenant, and to give due consideration to improving the efficiency of its proceedings;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to consider ways and means, within existing resources, of assisting States parties to the Covenants in the preparation of their reports, including the awarding, upon request, of fellowships to government officials engaged in the preparation of such reports, the arrangement of regional and subregional training courses and the exploration of other possibilities available under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

12. Again urges the Secretary-General, taking into account the suggestions of the Human Rights Committee, to take determined steps, within existing resources, to give more publicity to the work of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to improve administration and related arrangements so as to enable them to carry out their respective functions effectively under the International Covenants on Human Rights;

13. Encourages once again all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which have important and specific tasks entrusted to them, are provided with the necessary sessions and summary records;

15. Decides to include the question of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the provisional agenda for its first regular session of 1988 and to consider under that question the general comments adopted by the Human Rights Committee and by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

Meeting numbers. ESC 5-10, 14.

The United States remarked that, in its view, paragraph 3 came within the scope of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and that, with regard to paragraph 8, the use of uniform standards in implementing the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as expressed in the general comments of the Human Rights Committee, in no way reduced States' obligations to respect civil and political rights.

Report of the Secretary-General. In August 1987, (27) the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the status of the International Covenants as at 31 July, as well as on questions related to their implementation. (See also pp. 740 and 768).

6. Notes with satisfaction that the majority of States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and an increasing number of States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, have been represented by experts in the presentation of their reports, thereby assisting the respective monitoring bodies in their work, and hopes that all States parties to both Covenants will arrange such representation in the future;

7. Again urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; and also to transmit the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to those bodies;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

Commemoration of the International Covenants

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Responding to a 1986 General Assembly invitation, the Economic and Social Council, on 6

February 1987, adopted resolution 1987/1 without vote.

Commemoration of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/32 of 3 November 1986 on the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights, in particular paragraph 2 thereof,

Aware of the importance of ensuring the universality of the Covenants by broadening accession to them,

Convinced that the implementation of the Covenants could contribute to the achievement of the goals and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to give appropriate consideration to the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights during its deliberations in 1987, with a view to continuing and strengthening measures aimed at the implementation, promotion and protection of the provisions of those instruments;

2. Invites its subsidiary organs to take appropriate measures to observe the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Covenants;

3. Endorses the appeal made by the General Assembly to all States that have not yet become parties to those instruments to do so, so that the Covenants acquire genuine universality, and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

4. Also endorses the appeal addressed to Governments to make the Covenants known as widely as possible;

5. Reaffirms its conviction that, to contribute to the realization of the purposes and to the implementation of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, States should pursue policies directed towards the full implementation of the rights contained in those instruments;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange, within existing resources, for the dissemination of appropriate public information on the Covenants with a view to emphasizing their importance.

Advisory services

In 1987, under the United Nations programme of advisor services in human rights-established in 1955,(29) training courses were held, expert advisory services were provided (see below), 30 fellowships were awarded to candidates from 28 countries (14 candidates from Africa, 6 from Asia, 6 from Latin America and 2 each from Eastern and Western Europe), and a Voluntary Trust Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights was established (see below).

A training course on human rights teaching in the Asia and Pacific region was held at Bangkok

(12-23 October), and a subregional training course on preparing and presenting national reports pursuant to United Nations human rights instruments was organized at San Jose, Costa Rica (23 November-4 December), in collaboration with the Inter-American Institute of Human Rights, for officials in Spanish-speaking countries in Central America and the Caribbean. A similar subregional training course for government officials from 19 English-speaking African countries was held at Lusaka, Zambia (9-20 November).

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(30) the Commission on Human Rights invited United Nations bodies to make suggestions and proposals for carrying out advisory services, encouraged Governments to avail themselves of those services, for example for drafting legal texts, and requested its special rapporteurs and representatives, as well as the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, to inform Governments of the possibility of doing so, and to include in their recommendations proposals for specific projects which should be realized under the programme. The Commission appealed to Governments to consider making use of the possibility offered by the United Nations of organizing national information and/or training courses for government personnel on the application of human rights standards. The Secretary-General was asked to pursue his efforts to co-ordinate and facilitate bilateral assistance to States which indicated a need for technical assistance and to report to the Commission in 1988 on progress made in implementing the advisory services programme.

Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services

Due to the increasing interest in the advisory services programme, the Commission on Human Rights, on 10 March 1987,(31) requested the Secretary-General to establish and administer a voluntary fund for advisory services and technical assistance in the human rights field, and to report to it annually on the fund's operation and administration as part of his report on advisory services. The fund's objective was to provide additional financial support for practical activities focused on implementing international conventions and other human rights instruments promulgated by the United Nations, its specialized agencies or regional organizations. The Commission authorized the Secretary-General to receive voluntary contributions from Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and individuals, and to solicit contributions or make such representations and appeals as he deemed appropriate. It asked him to bring regularly to the attention of Governments and human rights organs the possibilities under the fund of providing advisory services and technical assistance to Governments at their request.

The Commission resolution was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council on 29 May 1987, by decision 1987/147.

The Secretary-General, accordingly, established the Voluntary Fund and, as authorized by the Commission, on 16 November 1987 notified Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and appealed for contributions to the newly established Fund.

Equatorial Guinea

Taking note of a report by the Secretary-General containing recommendations of two experts who had gone to Equatorial Guinea in 1986 to assist in drafting basic legal texts,(32) the Commission on Human Rights, on 10 March 1987,(33) requested the country to consider implementing the plan of action for full restoration of human rights, proposed by the United Nations in 1981,(34) taking particular account of the recommendations and proposals submitted by expert Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica) in 1985.(35) It asked the Secretary-General to continue his contacts with Equatorial Guinea to explore ways of assisting the Government to implement the plan, and to report to the Commission in 1988.

On 7 April 1987,(36) Equatorial Guinea communicated its observations on the 1986 report of the legal experts. It also announced the establishment of a National Conciliation Commission.

Guatemala

Under a 1986 Commission on Human Rights mandate,(37) Special Representative Viscount Colville of Culross (United Kingdom) submitted to the 1987 Commission a report on the human rights situation in Guatemala,(38) suggesting that the international community support the efforts of the country's current leaders to implement a new legal order for the protection of human rights and to guarantee full enjoyment of fundamental freedoms.

On 11 March,(39) the Commission expressed gratitude to the Special Representative for his report and appreciation to Guatemala for its collaboration. It welcomed the process of democratization and return to constitutionality and encouraged the Government to continue taking measures for the effective application of its Constitution and other laws aimed at safeguarding human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as measures to ensure that its authorities and agencies fully respected those rights and freedoms. The Commission took into account that the new Guatemalan Amparo, Habeas Corpus and Constitutionality Act established guarantees and means of defence of the constitutional order and of individual human rights protected by the Constitution. It welcomed the enactment of the Law on the Commission on Human Rights of the Congress of the Republic and on the Procurator for Human Rights, expressing confidence that an appointment would be made to that position in the near future. It hoped that the authorities would investigate reported human rights violations and attempt to clarify the fate of disappeared persons. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to provide such advisory services and other assistance as might be requested by Guatemala, to foster advances in democracy and strengthen the institutions responsible for ensuring respect for human rights. It also decided to terminate the Special Representative's mandate and asked the Secretary-General to appoint an expert to assist the Government in further restoring human rights, requesting that expert to report on his contacts and formulate recommendations.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/149 of 29 May 1987, having approved the Commission's request, the Secretary-General appointed in June Hector Gros Espiell (Uruguay) as the expert to assist Guatemala in further restoring its human rights.

The Sub-Commission, on 2 September,(40) decided to take no action on a draft resolution concerning the situation in Guatemala.

Technical assistance to strengthen legal institutions

In April 1987, the Secretary-General submitted to the Sub-Commission a report(41) on technical assistance for the strengthening of legal institutions following up a 1985 report on the subject.(42) As requested by the Sub-Commission, he had invited Governments receiving aid from UNDP to indicate their needs with regard to establishing or strengthening law faculties, developing law libraries, training judges, drafting legal texts, publishing official law journals, and collecting and classifying legal material. In all, 39 States had responded to that request as at 25 April 1987; 14 of them indicated their need to establish or strengthen law faculties, 32 to develop adequate law libraries for schools, judges and lawyers and other auxiliaries of justice, 20 for the training of judges, 9 for the drafting of legal texts in conformity with international human rights instruments, 13 for the publication of official law journals, and 20 for collecting and classifying legal material. Six States and five international organizations indicated the extent to which they had provided or were willing to provide assistance for those activities.

Sub-Commission action. On 3 September 1987,(43) the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to transmit his 1985 and 1987 reports to all States and organizations mentioned in them, inviting them to contact one another, and requested him to remind them of the possibility of using the Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights (see above) and to ask them to keep him informed of projects they might undertake. The Secretary-General was requested to report on the results of his action in 1988.

Responsibility to promote and protect human rights

In 1987, work on a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms continued. An open-ended Working Group, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1984,(44) met at Geneva from 26 to 30 January and again on 6 March,(45) electing its Chairman/Rapporteur and focusing on the drafting of the first chapter of the declaration. Within the Working Group, an informal drafting group was established to attempt to amalgamate the various proposals made under that chapter. Annexed to the Group's report were a text of the operative part of the draft declaration proposed by Canada and Norway, a proposal by the Byelorussian SSR and Czechoslovakia on the structure of the draft instrument, a proposal by the USSR for chapter I, several amendments and statements, and the consolidated text proposed by the drafting group.

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 February 1987,(46) the Commission on Human Rights again set up an informal open-ended working group to continue elaborating a draft declaration, and invited several special rapporteurs, special representatives and experts to participate.

Noting the progress made by the group, the Commission, on 11 March,(47) decided to continue work on the draft declaration in 1988 as a matter of 'highest priority. It requested the Economic and Social Council to authorize a one-week session of the working group prior to the Commission's 1988 session and to ask the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the group.

On 29 May 1987, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/59 without vote.

Question of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/52 of 11 March 1987,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group to meet for a period of one week prior to the forty-fourth session of the Commission on Human Rights, with a view to continuing the elaboration of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the working group for its meeting prior to and during the forty-fourth session of the Commission and, to enable the group to continue its work on the elaboration of the draft declaration, to transmit to all member States in advance of the meeting the report of the working group that met prior to and during the forty-third session, together with the annexes thereto.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/59

29 May 1987 Meeting 18 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/97) without vote, 22 May (meeting 19); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1987/18 & Corr.1,2); agenda item 17.

Sub-Commission action. On 4 September 1987,(48) the Sub-Commission decided to defer consideration of the agenda item on promotion, protection and restoration of human rights until 1989.

Respect for the rights of peoples

On 27 November 1987, the General Assembly's Third Committee decided to take no action on a draft text(49) on the promotion of the universal recognition of, and respect for, the rights of peoples, their equality and dignity, consideration of which the Assembly had deferred in 1986.(50)

Proposed establishment of a new international humanitarian order

In 1987, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions under the agenda item on a new international humanitarian order, consideration of which it had deferred in 1986.(51) Following a proposal advanced by Jordan in 1981,(52) the Secretary-General had presented several reports on the subject, including views and comments of Governments, the most recent one in 1986.(53) The Committee also considered a report of the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues, whose members were eminent persons from all parts of the world and which had been established in 1983 to assist in the search for a more adequate framework to deal with humanitarian problems.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/120 without vote.

New international humanitarian order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/136 of 14 December 1981, 37/201 of 18 December 1982, 38/125 of 16 December 1983 and 40/126 of 13 December 1985,

Recalling further the reports of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the comments communicated by Governments to the Secretary-General regarding a new international humanitarian order,

Recognizing the urgent need further to improve and strengthen the international framework relating to humanitarian issues while taking fully into account existing instruments and mechanisms,

Noting with concern that emergencies and disasters, mostly man-made, have increased in frequency in recent years, posing a growing challenge to mechanisms of international responses to them,

Aware that institutional arrangements and actions by governmental and non-governmental bodies require further strengthening, as well as adjustment to new realities, in order to respond more effectively and speedily to contemporary humanitarian problems,

Noting the efforts of the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues to promote public awareness of humanitarian issues, analyse relatively neglected aspects and identify alternative approaches for resolving humanitarian problems,

Noting further the establishment, outside the United Nations, of an Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues to disseminate and follow up the work of the Independent Commission,

Taking note of the report of the Independent Commission, as well as the sectoral reports on specific humanitarian issues,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the co-chairmen and members of the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues for their humanitarian endeavours;

2. Draws the attention of Governments and intergovernmental organizations, including those functioning at the regional level, to the report of the Independent Commission;

3. Requests the Independent Commission to transmit its report to Member States and to the executive heads of specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system in order to enable them to consider its analyses and conclusions;

4. Invites all non-governmental organizations concerned with the humanitarian issues examined by the Independent Commission to bear in mind the recommendations and suggestions made in its report in the context of their policies and actions in the field;

5. Invites Governments to make available to the Secretary-General, on a voluntary basis, information and expertise on humanitarian issues of concern to them, in order to identify opportunities for future action and to strengthen international co-operation in the humanitarian field;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to remain in contact with Governments, relevant specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations concerned and the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, on the basis of information made available to him, on the progress made in the humanitarian field;

7. Decides to review at its forty-third session the question of a new international humanitarian order.

Human rights violations

Situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined in 1987 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by special bodies and officials appointed to examine some of those situations.

In addition, situations of alleged human rights violations involving the self-determination of peoples (see above, under "Civil and political rights") were discussed with regard to Afghanistan, Kampuchea, South Africa and Namibia, the Western Sahara and the Palestinian people.

Under a procedure established by the Council in 1970(1) to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Commission held closed meetings in 1987 to study confidential documents, observations thereon submitted by Governments and a confidential report by a working group set up in 1986(2) to examine the material.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/141 of 29 May 1987, adopted on the recommendation of its Second Committee, approved a 2 March decision⁽³⁾ of the Commission to set up a similar five-member working group to meet for one week prior to its 1988 session to examine particular situations that might be referred to it by the Sub-Commission under its procedure for dealing with confidential documents, and those situations of which the Commission was seized.

On 2 March 1987, the Commission Chairman announced that the Commission had taken action in closed session, under the 1970 Council resolution, with regard to the following countries: Albania, Haiti, Paraguay and Zaire. In August, a report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights,⁽⁴⁾ submitted pursuant to a 1986 Commission confidential decision on Haiti,⁽⁵⁾ was made public (see p. 816) in accordance with Council decision 1987/140 adopted on 29 May 1987.

The Sub-Commission, on 31 August,⁽⁶⁾ postponed consideration of a draft resolution on a procedure for dealing with communications relating to human rights violations. On 4 September,⁽⁷⁾ it decided that the summary records of its 1987 session dealing with human rights violations should be made available to the Commission in 1988.

Africa

South Africa and Namibia

Working Group activities. In 1987, the six-member Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1967,⁽⁸⁾ prepared an interim report to be submitted to the Commission in 1988.⁽⁹⁾ The Working Group met at Geneva from 10 to 14 August, and again from 7 to 18 December 1987, following Economic and Social Council decision 1987/195 of 25 November, by which the Council rescheduled the meeting which had originally been scheduled for January 1988. At its 1987 meetings, the Group re-examined its mandate, which had been reviewed by the Commission in March, and examined information on developments in the situation in South Africa and Namibia. (For details on that situation, see p. 529 and p. 982.)

By decision 1987/142 of 29 May 1987, the Council approved the Commission's decision (see below) to renew the Working Group's mandate.

With regard to South Africa, the Working Group dealt with the right to life, physical integrity and protection from arbitrary arrest and detention; apartheid, including bantustanization and forced population removals; the right to education, freedom of expression and freedom of movement; and the right to work, the situation of black workers and trade-union rights. Concerning the situation in Namibia, it examined human rights violations affecting individuals, consequences of the militarization of the territory; the right to work; apartheid policies and practices; and information on persons suspected of being guilty of the crime of apartheid or a serious human rights violation.

In drafting its interim report, the Group analysed first-hand information collected at its meetings, in the form of verbal testimony and written communications from individuals or organizations. It also analysed documents of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, official gazettes, publications, newspapers and magazines.

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 36 to 30, with 3 abstentions, taken on 3 March 1987,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Commission congratulated the Working Group for the commendable and impartial manner in which it had prepared its progress report on the 1986 human rights situation in South Africa and Namibia.⁽⁵⁾ It denounced the policy of "bantustanization", the forced removals of the black population and the policy of denationalization, condemned the escalation of human rights violations since the imposition of the state of emergency in June 1986 and the widespread detention and incarceration of children, and rejected South Africa's so-called reforms, which, it said, fell short of terminating the state of emergency, abolishing apartheid laws, dismantling the "bantustans", lifting bans on political organizations and parties, on the return of political exiles and freedom fighters, and demanded the unconditional release of all political prisoners.

The Commission demanded that South Africa abolish apartheid, end its brutal repression, torture and harassment of organizations and individuals opposed to apartheid, repeal its ban on popular organizations and release unconditionally all political prisoners. It also demanded that South Africa ensure that all South Africans were afforded a unified, free educational system and recommended to the Economic and Social Council that an "Academic Year against Apartheid" be declared and that the evils of apartheid be taught in all educational institutions throughout the world. It further called on South Africa to respect international standards on trade union rights and urged States to stop collaborating with or assisting South Africa.

The Commission endorsed, pending the adoption of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, measures adopted by certain countries such as: prohibition of the transfer of technology to South Africa; cessation of exports, sales or transport of oil and oil products to it; cessation of further investments and financial loans and of support for trade with it; prohibition of the sale of the kruggerand and other coins minted there; prohibition of imports from there; termination of visa-free entry and of the promotion of tourism to South Africa; termination of air and shipping links; cessation of academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations; suspension or abrogation of agreements with South Africa; termination of double taxation agreements; and a ban on government contracts with majority-owned South African companies.

The Commission renewed the Working Group's mandate to study human rights violations in South Africa and Namibia, requesting it to continue to bring to the Commission Chairman's attention particularly serious violations. It asked the Group, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to continue investigating cases of torture and ill-treatment of detainees and the deaths of detainees in South Africa and authorized the Group Chairman to participate in events connected with action against apartheid organized under the Committee's auspices. It renewed its request to South Africa to allow on-the-spot investigations by the Group of treatment and living conditions in prisons of South Africa and Namibia and asked the Group to submit its final report in 1988 and asked the Secretary-General to assist it.

Reaffirming the Namibian people's right to self-determination and independence under conditions determined by the Security Council in 1978,(11) the Commission, by a resolution of 26 February 1987,(12) adopted by a roll-call vote of 35 to none, with 7 abstentions, condemned South Africa for the militarization in Namibia; the use of mercenaries; the recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies; the proclamation of a security zone in Namibia; the forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes; torture and brutality against the population and captured freedom fighters; the military conscription of Namibians; and the exploitation and depletion of natural resources. The Commission strongly condemned the continued collaboration of certain States and institutions with South Africa and expressed its conviction that such collaboration helped prolong South Africa's domination and control over Namibia. It demanded that South Africa co-operate with the United Nations to bring about Namibia's independence and that it unconditionally terminate all acts of aggression against neighbouring countries, particularly Angola, and withdraw its armed forces from there. The Commission demanded that South Africa account for all "disappeared" Namibians and release those who were still alive, and declared South Africa to be liable to compensate the victims and their families and the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia for losses sustained. It also demanded again that South Africa immediately release all Namibian political prisoners.

The Commission asked Member States to ensure that all corporations and individuals within their jurisdiction fully applied and complied with the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.(13) It requested South Africa to allow the Working Group to make an on-the-spot investigation of living conditions in Namibian prisons and the treatment of prisoners. The Working Group was asked to bring to the attention of the Commission Chairman human rights violations which might come to its attention and to report in 1988 and submit recommendations.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August 1987,(14) the Sub-Commission demanded the immediate lifting of the state of emergency, cessation of all acts of brutality by South African security forces and release of all political prisoners. It called on the international community to assist the frontline States to safeguard their independence and territorial integrity against South African aggression and destabilization, and urged States to provide moral and material assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia. It appealed to the international community to put pressure on South Africa not to proceed with the execution of 32 apartheid opponents and to continue its efforts towards total economic, cultural and political isolation of South Africa until it abandoned apartheid, colonialism and its illegal occupation of Namibia. The Sub-Commission called for immediate and complete disinvestment in South Africa by foreign companies, urging them to ensure that financial and other benefits that had accrued to the black labour force were fully respected. It condemned all collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the nuclear, military and economic fields, and called on all countries that had not yet done so, particularly Israel and Equatorial Guinea, to cut all military links with South Africa.

On the same date,(15) by a roll-call vote of 19 to none, with 1 abstention, the Sub-Commission called for full implementation of the Declaration adopted by the 1986 World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa(16) and the 1986 Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia (17) It demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all Namibian political prisoners, again called on States to take legislative, administrative and other measures against South Africa in order to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally, and requested the Commission Chairman to convey to the Secretary-General, and to the Presidents of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council, the Sub-Commission's deep concern at the continued failure to bring about the independence of Namibia.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1987, there were 86 parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,(18) which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973(19) and entered into force in 1976.(20) In 1987, Yemen acceded to the Convention. In his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention,(21) the Secretary-General provided a list of States that had signed, ratified or acceded to it as of 1 August.

The Secretary-General also transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights in 1987 replies received from five Governments in response to his invitation to States parties to express their views on the extent and nature of the responsibility of transnational corporations (TNCs) for the continued existence of apartheid, and to provide information on the types of the crime of apartheid committed by TNCs. (22) The Commission had requested him in 1986 to renew that invitation.(23)

Activities of the Group of Three. The Group of Three-established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention and in 1987 composed of Algeria, Nicaragua and Sri Lanka-held its tenth session at Geneva from 26 to 30 January.(24)

The Group examined, in the presence of the representatives of the reporting States: initial reports from Chad, China, Ethiopia, Ghana, Jamaica, Maldives, Seychelles and Venezuela; second periodic reports from Cameroon, Mexico and Rwanda; fourth periodic reports of Poland and Qatar; and fifth periodic reports of Cuba and the USSR.(25)

The Group also continued to examine whether actions of TNCs operating in South Africa and Namibia came under the definition of the crime of apartheid and whether legal action could be taken under the Convention. It noted that several United Nations organs had repeatedly drawn the attention of the international community to the close interconnection between TNC activities and South Africa's persistence in pursuing its policy of apartheid.

The Group was of the view that economic, technological and military collaboration and support by international and national monopolies and some countries to South Africa strengthened apartheid/& and helped perpetuate the oppression of the African majority. It also believed that legal action against TNCs and banks which collaborated would be conducive to the struggle of the people of South Africa and Namibia and to United Nations efforts to eliminate apartheid. The Group concluded that TNCs, in conformity with article III of the Convention (on international criminal responsibility), must be considered accomplices in the crime of apartheid and be prosecuted. It noted that many countries had taken far-reaching measures towards the total isolation and boycott of the apartheid regime, and that State and local authorities, trade unions, religious bodies, co-operatives and other organizations and institutions had also stepped up their actions against apartheid.

Noting with concern that 122 reports from States parties were overdue as at 1 February 1987, the Group strongly urged the parties to fulfil their reporting obligations and recommended that, when preparing their reports, they take into account the general guidelines for form and content and provide information on legislative, judicial and administrative measures against apartheid. It also called for more information on concrete cases in which measures to prosecute, bring to trial and punish persons responsible for, or accused of, the acts enumerated in article II of the Convention as "crimes of apartheid" had been applied. The Group called on States whose TNCs continued to do business with South Africa and Namibia to consider terminating their dealings and urged developing countries to pressure TNCs to end their operations there. It urged all States to consider adopting legislation dealing with South Africa and Namibia.

The Group recommended that States parties be invited to express their views on the responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of apartheid, and that States parties, specialized agencies and NGOs be invited to provide information on the types of the crime of apartheid committed by TNCs in South Africa.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 26 February 1987 resolution,(26) adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights took note with appreciation of the Group of Three's conclusions and recommendations. It urged States, especially those which had jurisdiction over TNCs operating in South Africa and Namibia, to adhere to the Convention against apartheid without delay and to ratify the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.(27)

The Commission urged States parties to take account of the guidelines laid down by the Group of Three in 1978 for submission of reports,(28) and reiterated its recommendation that parties be represented during consideration of their reports by the Group. It requested the Secretary-General once more to invite States parties to express their views on the extent and responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of apartheid. The Group was asked to continue examining the extent and nature of TNCs' responsibility for the apartheid system and legal actions that could be taken against TNCs whose operations came under the crime of apartheid, and to report to the Commission in 1988.

The Commission called on States parties to strengthen co-operation in order to implement fully United Nations decisions concerning the prevention, suppression and punishment of the crime of apartheid, drew their attention to the desirability of disseminating further information on the Convention, its implementation and the Group's work, and noted the importance of education for fuller implementation of the Convention. It appealed to States, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs to step up their activities to enhance public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by South Africa. The Group was to meet for up to five days before the Commission's 1988 session and the Secretary-General was asked to give it the necessary assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/56 by recorded vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3068(XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, by which it adopted and opened for signature and ratification the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and its subsequent resolutions on the status of the Convention,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, a gross violation of human rights and a crime against humanity, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Alarmed by the aggravation of the situation in South Africa, in particular the further escalation of ruthless repression by the Fascist-like apartheid regime,

Strongly condemning South Africa's continued policy of apartheid and its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its policy of aggression, State terrorism and destabilization against independent African States,

Mindful of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/11 of 26 February 1987, in which the Commission expressed its conviction that the crime of apartheid is a form of the crime of genocide,

Stressing that the racist apartheid regime is the root cause of the conflict in southern Africa and that as long as it exists there will be neither peace nor security for any country in the region nor early independence for Namibia and that it must, therefore, be eradicated,

Condemning the continued collaboration of certain States and transnational corporations with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, economic, military and other fields as an encouragement to the intensification of its odious policy of apartheid,

Firmly convinced that the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa against apartheid, racism and colonialism and for the effective exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence demands more than ever all necessary support by the international community and, in particular, further action by the Security Council in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Underlining that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and the implementation of its provisions without any delay are necessary for its effectiveness, and therefore will contribute to the eradication of the crime of apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

2. Commends those States parties to the Convention which have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;

3. Appeals once again to the States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay, in particular those States which have jurisdiction over transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia and without whose co-operation such operations cannot be halted;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights, established in accordance with article IX of the Convention, and, in particular, of the conclusions and recommendations contained in that report;

5. Draws the attention of all States to the opinion expressed by the Group of Three in its report that transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia must be considered accomplices in the crime of apartheid, in accordance with article III (b) of the Convention;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to intensify, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, its efforts to compile periodically the progressive list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the Convention, as well as those against whom or which legal proceedings have been undertaken;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate the above-mentioned list to all States parties to the Convention and to all Member States and to bring such facts to the attention of the public by all means of mass communication;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the States parties to the Convention, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide the Commission on Human Rights with relevant information concerning the forms of the crime of apartheid, as described in article II of the Convention, committed by transnational corporations operating in South Africa;

9. Notes the importance of measures to be taken by States parties in the field of teaching and education for fuller implementation of the Convention;

10. Appeals to all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities in enhancing public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the racist régime of South Africa;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraphs 5 and 8 by recorded votes of 124 to 18, with 9 abstentions, and 124 votes to 16, with 9 abstentions, respectively; the Committee had approved the same paragraphs by recorded votes of 106 to 18, with 8 abstentions, and 107 to 16, with 10 abstentions. The fifth preambular paragraph was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 123 to 16, with 13 abstentions, having been approved by the Committee by a recorded vote of 105 to 15, with 13 abstentions. By a recorded vote of 123 to 16, with 15 abstentions, the Assembly decided to retain the words "State terrorism" in the fourth preambular paragraph, which had been approved by the Committee by a recorded vote of 100 to 16, with 15 abstentions.

A number of States—Australia, Austria, Finland, also on behalf of Norway and Sweden, and Turkey—said they had abstained on the text, because they were not parties to the Convention. Australia expressed reservations on paragraphs 5 and 8, as well as on the fifth preambular paragraph, and had difficulty with the concept of State terrorism in the fourth preambular paragraph. Austria explained that some provisions of the Convention were incompatible with its constitutional law, causing it to vote against paragraphs 5 and 8. Rejecting the concept of State terrorism, it abstained on the fourth preambular paragraph. Finland, also on behalf of Norway and Sweden, stressed that the voting did not reflect their positions on the substance of the text, which, they felt, had potentially far-reaching international legal implications. Turkey explained that its vote was motivated by legal considerations and reservations.

Denmark, speaking for the 12 EC members, said they continued to believe that the Convention made no contribution to eliminating apartheid. They noted the continued tendency to include new, unacceptable elements in the resolution and could not accept the reference in the fifth preambular paragraph to genocide which, they believed, was clearly defined in the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide; an Assembly resolution could not purport to extend that definition or the Convention's scope of application. As to paragraphs 5 and 8, the Convention, like other international agreements, was applicable only to States which had ratified it and to their citizens. Referring to the reference to State terrorism in the fourth preambular paragraph, Japan did not consider it appropriate to include in an Assembly resolution terminology on which the international community had not reached agreement.

Honduras stated that categorizing certain forms of terrorism as State terrorism did not mean that other types of terrorism could be permitted or encouraged. Democratic Kampuchea expressed strong reservations on Viet Nam being among the sponsors, as it believed that that country's deeds and policies totally contradicted the text's essence.

Foreign support of South Africa

Human Rights Commission action. By a resolution of 26 February, (29) adopted by a roll-call vote of 30 to 6, with 6 abstentions, the Commission vigorously condemned assistance to South Africa by major Western countries and Israel, particularly in the military field, and demanded that that assistance, which it was convinced was a hostile action against the people of South Africa, Namibia and the neighbouring States, be immediately terminated. Condemning the continuing nuclear collaboration of certain Western States, Israel and others with South Africa, the Commission urged them to stop supplying it with nuclear equipment and technology. It strongly condemned the activities of all foreign economic interests exploiting Namibia's resources and demanded that TNCs refrain from new investment or activities in Namibia, withdraw from it and end their co-operation with the South African administration. Noting with appreciation recent measures taken by some States, parliamentarians, institutions and NGOs to exert pressure on South Africa, the Commission called on them to intensify their efforts to force South Africa to comply with United Nations resolutions and decisions. It called on Governments to take legislative, administrative or other measures to prevent their nationals and corporations under their jurisdiction from trading, manufacturing and investing activities in South Africa and Namibia, to end technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies there, and to cease nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

The Commission rejected all policies that encouraged South Africa to intensify its repression of South Africans and Namibians and to escalate its aggression against neighbouring States. It welcomed the General Assembly's request that the Security Council consider mandatory sanctions against South Africa, in particular regarding collaboration in arms manufacture, military supplies and in the nuclear field, loans (including IMF loans), investments, trade, petroleum and petroleum products and other strategic goods, and called for mobilizing international public opinion in favour of sanctions.

The Commission appealed to States, specialized agencies and NGOs to co-operate with the liberation movements of southern Africa. Strongly condemning South Africa for its persistent aggression against Angola, the Commission called on it to withdraw its troops from there and demanded that it cease destabilizing the political institutions of neighbouring States. It expressed appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission, Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt), and welcomed the renewal of his mandate by the Assembly in 1986. (30)

Also on 26 February,(31) the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 5, with 6 abstentions, expressed its satisfaction to the Special Rapporteur for his report on adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to South Africa, (32) submitted in 1986,(33) and appreciation for his attention to comments expressed during debates on the subject. It invited him to: continue updating the list of banks, TNCs and other organizations assisting South Africa; use all available material to indicate the volume, nature and adverse consequences resulting from such assistance; and intensify contacts with the United Nations Centre on TNCs and the Centre against Apartheid. The Commission called on Governments to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur and to give the updated report the widest publicity. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and make available to him two economists to help him expand his work on the analysis and annotation of certain selected cases as reflected in his report. It also asked him to continue giving the updated report the widest distribution and publicity as a United Nations publication.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In May 1987, the Special Rapporteur presented to the Sub-Commission an updated report,(34) with an addendum listing banks and TNCs which had been deleted from the list of those assisting South Africa, and citing recent disinvestment actions by TNCs in South Africa and Namibia.

Sub-Commission action. By a 31 August 1987 resolution,(35) adopted by a roll-call vote of 11 to 3, with 6 abstentions, the Sub-Commission, noting the proposal in a February report of the Secretary-General on TNCs(36) (see also p. 507) that further study was needed on the impact of disinvestment and the replacement of investment by non-equity links in South Africa and Namibia, declared that disinvestment should be done in such a way as to hasten complete elimination of apartheid. It asked its Chairman to invite the Special Rapporteur to examine the feasibility of the Sub-Commission making such a study, which would include the practice of racially discriminatory or fictitious disinvestment, particularly through misuse of procedures and recourse to franchises. It asked the Special Rapporteur to report to it in 1989.

Also on 31 August,(37) the Sub-Commission, expressing its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for his updated report and to all Governments and organizations supplying him with information, recommended that the Commission recommend to the Economic and Social Council a resolution requesting the Special Rapporteur to continue updating his report and calling on all Governments to co-operate with him.

Trade union rights

Report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts. The Ad Hoc Group of Experts on southern Africa (see p. 794) continued in 1987 to study the situation relating to the right to work and trade union rights, conditions of black workers, strikes, arrests, detentions and trials of workers, and consumer boycotts. Its findings, included in its report to the Commission as requested by the Council in 1985,(38) were submitted to the Economic and Social Council separately in April 1987.(39)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1987/63 without vote.

Infringements of trade union rights in South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1985/43 of 30 May 1985,

Having examined the extract from the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa,

Noting with indignation that dehumanizing conditions continue to be imposed on black workers by the Government of South Africa and that police intervention in industrial disputes has become a regular practice,

Aware of the importance of the role of the independent black trade union movement in the struggle against apartheid,

Gravely concerned at the intensification of the repression against the independent black trade union movement since the proclamation of the state of emergency by the Government of South Africa,

1. Takes note of the extract from the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa;

2. Condemns the repression of the independent black trade union movement by the Government of South Africa;

3. Demands once again the cessation of persecution of trade unionists and repression of the independent black trade union movement;

4. Requests once again the immediate recognition of the unimpeded exercise of freedom of association and trade union rights by the entire population of South Africa, without discrimination of any kind;

5. Demands the immediate release of all trade unionists imprisoned for exercising their legitimate trade union rights;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to continue to study the situation and to report thereon to the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council;

7. Also requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, in the discharge of its mandate, to consult with the International Labour Organisation and the Special Committee against Apartheid, as well as with international and African trade union confederations;

8. Decides to consider at its first regular session of 1988 the question of allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights in South Africa as a sub-item of the item entitled "Human rights".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/63

29 May 1987 Meeting 18 Adopted without vote

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

Communications. On 18 February 1987,(40) Afghanistan submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a text from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning national reconciliation, a cease-fire and peace and amnesty talks. On the same date,(41) it submitted another text from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs alleging human rights violations by counter-revolutionary elements, and on 11 March(42) it submitted a letter from 10 former leaders of armed opposition groups, urging the Commission to bring pressure on those who continued their undeclared war against the country and forcibly detained Afghans in Iran and Pakistan.

On 17 November,(43) the United States transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Independent Counsel on International Human Rights-an independent ad hoc multinational panel of experts in international law-intended to assist Governments considering the question of human rights in Afghanistan. The panel dealt with a variety of issues related to the human rights situation in the country, such as torture, attacks on civilians, executions of captured combatants, use of weapons, unlawful targets, the obligation to disseminate the laws of war, and possible genocide.

The situation in Afghanistan was also the subject of a number of other communications submitted throughout the year (see p. 210).

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a 1986 Commission request,(44) as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council,(45) Special Rapporteur Felix Ermacora (Austria) presented a February report(46) to the Commission on the human rights situation in Afghanistan before and after the announcement of the reconciliation process, following which the Revolutionary Council, a government body of the highest rank within Afghanistan's constitutional framework, had announced on 3 January 1987 that the Government was prepared to accept a unilateral "cease-fire" from 15 January on for a six-month period. Furthermore, a new general amnesty decree was issued on 25 January.

The Special Rapporteur had visited Pakistan from 3 to 7 February 1987; before his visit, he had addressed a questionnaire to 21 organizations and individuals.

Despite, political declarations concerning peaceful reconciliation, the Special Rapporteur observed, there had not been a marked change in the human rights situation. Fighting continued, particularly in the border areas. Many wounded persons were crossing the border; the number of refugees was increasing; the full effect of a proclaimed amnesty was not evident; and political declarations had not been put into effect. The unchanged situation continued to be a source of deepest concern because of the suffering of the civilian population and the magnitude of the economic, social and cultural problems confronting some 5 million refugees. One new development, he reported, was the closer contact between Afghanistan and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).

Concluding, the Special Rapporteur reiterated his recommendations made in 1986,(44) and expressed regret that none of them had been implemented. He stated his conviction that an important element for restoring and maintaining respect for human rights in Afghanistan would be a permanent neutral status of the country. He recommended that the Commission monitor the effects of the most recent political developments, the announced cease-fire and proclaimed amnesty. Such observation should focus particularly on whether the bombardments had ceased, civilian casualties had been reduced significantly, brutalities resulting from warfare had been halted, a considerable number of refugees had begun to return, the use of torture had been stopped and prison conditions had improved, and the economic, social and cultural situation in areas not controlled by the Government had changed for the better. He further recommended that advisory services be offered to encourage the restoration of human rights, and considered it of paramount importance that a way be found to ensure the representation of the over 5 million refugees.

Human Rights Commission action. By an 11 March 1987 resolution,(47) adopted by a roll-call vote of 26 to 8, with 7 abstentions, the Commission commended the Special Rapporteur for his report and expressed deep concern that the Afghan authorities, with heavy support from foreign troops, were acting with great severity against their opponents and without respect for international human rights obligations and that the methods of warfare used were contrary to humanitarian standards and the relevant instruments. It expressed concern about the consequences of indiscriminate bombardments and military operations on civilians, about the number of persons detained for seeking to exercise their fundamental human rights and their detention under conditions contrary to internationally recognized standards. It noted with concern that widespread human rights violations had caused millions of people to flee their homes and were still giving rise to large flows of refugees and displaced persons. It was also concerned that the educational system did not respect the liberty of parents to ensure their children's religious and moral education. The Commission shared the Special Rapporteur's conviction that the duration of the conflict had increased the seriousness of rights violations and expressed alarm at the widespread violations of the right to life, liberty and security of person, which included torture and summary executions of the regime's opponents, as well as continuing evidence of a policy of religious intolerance.

It called again on the parties to the conflict to apply fully the principles and rules of international humanitarian law. Deciding to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur and to have him report to the Assembly in 1987 and the Commission in 1988, the Commission welcomed a 4 March invitation by the Government to the Special Rapporteur to visit Afghanistan(48) and requested the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance.

On 11 March 1987,(49) the Commission decided, by a roll-call vote of 22 to 9, with 10 abstentions, to take no action on a draft concerning the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms of the people of Afghanistan.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1987, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/151, approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request that the Secretary-General give him all necessary assistance.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In October 1987, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly an interim report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan,(50) prepared by the Special Rapporteur in accordance with the Commission's request.

Following Afghanistan's 4 March invitation,(48) the Special Rapporteur had visited Afghanistan from 30 July to 9 August and Pakistan from 8 to 17 September. He observed that Afghanistan's Government had been trying to implement a policy of national reconciliation, through measures including general amnesty decrees, a unilateral cease-fire and an appeal for the return of refugees. There were some improvements in the human rights situation in government-controlled areas, but in combat zones there were still serious contraventions of humanitarian law and human rights. Many political detainees were still serving sentences not handed down in conformity with international human rights instruments and periods of pre-trial detention went beyond international standards. Conditions during such detention did not conform to the concept of detention on remand, and brutality in prisons appeared to be common. The armed conflict continued to cause destruction, with civilian targets being hit by better equipped resistance forces; its new feature, an increase in acts of terrorism inside and outside the country, resulted in more than 4,000 deaths in border areas and cities in Pakistan. The Special Rapporteur noted that the new draft constitution did not contain real safeguards for full realization of human rights, with no provisions for appeal against arbitrary detention, while the envisaged Loya Jirgah (Grand Assembly) lacked universality. He believed that the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan was the main reason for the intensity of the armed conflict and the existence of 5.5 million refugees, as well as an obstacle to the free exercise of the right to self-determination.

In the view of the Special Rapporteur, Afghanistan should facilitate the voluntary return of refugees through a general amnesty, which should also be applied to political prisoners. He recommended that all parties to the conflict apply humanitarian law fully and that captured members of the resistance be treated as prisoners of war under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, with ICRC being given full access to any prisoner, prison or place of detention. He suggested that Afghanistan conclude an agreement with ICRC, allowing it to carry out its activities on a regular basis, in accordance with its established criteria. He favoured the development of a new constitution in co-operation with representatives of the refugee population and suggested that provisions referring to human rights instruments include guarantees set out in article 2 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,⁽⁵¹⁾ i.e., guarantees of measures to give effect to the rights recognized in the Covenant and of remedies against rights violations. Independent judges should be appointed to ascertain the legality of detention pending investigation and examine conditions in places of detention, while the duration of such detention should be drastically reduced. Finally, he recommended that the parties to the conflict follow the path of dialogue and unity through peaceful means.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/135 by recorded vote.

Question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and resolved to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Emphasizing the obligation of all Governments to respect and protect human rights and to fulfil the responsibilities they have assumed under various international instruments,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/55 of 15 March 1984, in which the Commission expressed its concern and anxiety at the continuing presence of foreign forces in Afghanistan, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/37 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council requested the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the situation of human rights in Afghanistan,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1985/38 of 13 March 1985 and 1986/40 of 12 March 1986,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council decisions 1985/147 of 30 May 1985 and 1986/136 of 23 May 1986,

Recalling its resolutions 40/137 of 13 December 1985 and 41/158 of 4 December 1986,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/58 of 11 March 1987 and Economic and Social Council decision 1987/151 of 29 May 1987, by which the Council approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan,

Having carefully examined the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, in which, while it is recognized that there have been some improvements in the human rights situation in Afghanistan, continuing grave and massive violations of fundamental human rights in that country are revealed,

Recognizing that a situation of armed conflict continues to exist in Afghanistan, leaving large numbers of victims without protection or assistance, and that the continuation of the conflict increases the seriousness of the gross and systematic violations of human rights already existing in the country,

Welcoming the resumption of some of the activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross in Afghanistan in the field of medical assistance,

1. Commends the efforts of the Special Rapporteur to fulfil his mandate and takes note of his interim report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan;

2. Welcomes the co-operation that the Afghan authorities have begun to extend to the Commission on Human Rights by permitting its Special Rapporteur access to facilities for conducting his investigation when he visited Afghanistan from 30 July to 9 August 1987;

3. Expresses its deep distress and continuing alarm at the continued violations of the right to life, liberty and security of person, as well as of the right to freedom of expression, freedom of assembly, freedom of movement and freedom of association reported by the Special Rapporteur;

4. Expresses its deep concern about the large number of persons detained without due process of law for seeking to exercise their fundamental human rights and their detention under conditions contrary to internationally recognized minimum standards, while noting a reduction in the number of political prisoners and the release of some prisoners as a result of limited amnesties;

5. Notes with great concern that such widespread violations of human rights, which have already caused millions of people to flee their homes and country, continue to cause large flows of refugees and displaced persons;

6. Expresses once again its deep concern that the Afghan authorities, with heavy support from foreign troops, are acting with great severity against their opponents and suspected opponents, in a manner contravening humanitarian law and without any respect for the international human rights obligations that they have assumed;

7. Expresses its grave concern at the intensification of the armed conflict, which is causing death and material destruction, leading to acts of brutality and to maltreatment of prisoners and which, in particular, has severe consequences for the civilian population, with rising numbers of wounded and dead as well as the destruction of houses, mosques, livestock and crops;

8. Also expresses its grave concern, in particular, at the severe consequences for the civilian population of indiscriminate bombardments and military operations primarily directed against villages and the agricultural structure;

9. Continues to note with great concern that the educational system does not appear to respect the liberty of parents to ensure the religious and moral education of their children in conformity with their own traditions and convictions;

10. Calls once again upon the parties to the conflict, in order to alleviate the suffering of the people of

Afghanistan, to apply fully the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and to co-operate fully and effectively with international humanitarian organizations, in particular to facilitate the protection activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross;

11. Urges the authorities in Afghanistan to co-operate fully with the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur, in particular by permitting the Special Rapporteur access to all the places he wishes to visit;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

13. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-third session, the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan in order to examine this question anew in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/803/Add.1) by recorded vote (85-21-28), 27 November (meeting 61); 19-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.40); agenda item 12.

Afghanistan said the text was one-sided, biased and politically motivated, did not reflect reality and ignored the positive aspects of the Rapporteur's report, particularly his evaluation of the national reconciliation programme; nevertheless, it would continue to co-operate with United Nations bodies concerned with human rights. The USSR also remarked that the text made no objective appraisal of the Rapporteur's report or of the changes for the better which he had recorded. The text ignored the true origin of the situation, failed to mention who was financing the armed gangs and made no reference to the crimes and human violations they had committed; those factors made the text tendentious and one-sided, and scarcely conducive to a peaceful solution. In Mongolia's view, the text failed to explain that the rights violations in Afghanistan stemmed from an undeclared war waged against the Government by mercenaries with the support of foreign Powers; the text lacked objectivity, impartiality and realism and ignored the measures adopted by Afghanistan to end the fratricidal struggle and establish conditions in which all Afghans could enjoy human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Colombia said it viewed with disquiet the hypocrisy which governed the Third Committee's human rights deliberations. Expressing serious concern that the item concerning human rights was being used as a political weapon in the struggle between various centres of powers, rather than focusing on humanitarian aspects, the Dominican Republic declared that it would not participate in the vote. Pakistan stated that the reference to some improvements in certain aspects of the human rights situation in Afghanistan was incorrect—military operations by foreign forces had been stepped up and the number of victims of human rights violations had increased; Afghanistan was waging a propaganda campaign designed to mask the true situation and part of that campaign was the national reconciliation plan which was rejected by the vast majority of the country's people. Singapore considered that the human rights violations in Afghanistan were due to armed aggression and foreign occupation.

East Timor

Sub-Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 6 to 4, with 9 abstentions, on 2 September 1987,(52) the Sub-Commission, expressing its preoccupation with new allegations put forward regarding human rights violations in East Timor, welcomed action taken by the Secretary-General (see p. 1028) and asked him to continue his efforts to encourage all parties concerned—Indonesia and the East Timor representatives—to co-operate in order to achieve a durable solution taking into full consideration the rights and wishes of the people of East Timor. The Sub-Commission requested the Indonesian authorities to facilitate without restrictions the activities of humanitarian organizations in East Timor and recommended that the Commission study in 1988 the evolution of the human rights situation there.

Iran

Report of the Special Representative. Special Representative Professor Reynaldo Galindo Pohl (El Salvador), in fulfilling his mandate extended by the Commission on Human Rights in 1986,(53) presented in January 1987 a report on the human rights situation in Iran.(54) In the absence of any formal reply from Iran regarding allegations submitted to it, the Special Representative had analysed written and oral information and material available to him, on alleged violations affecting various rights, including violations affecting the medical profession, such as arrests, torture and ill-treatment of physicians. The detailed allegations had been transmitted to Iran to enable it to verify their accuracy; following their transmittal, the Special Representative said he had received allegations of a general nature to the effect that members of the Jewish religious minority had been persecuted. He observed that the number of alleged violations of the right to life had diminished over the past two years, and although allegations of executions continued, there were fewer than during the years 1979 to 1984.

The Special Representative also analysed the co-ordination of international law and Islamic law. Concerning charges of the Baha'i International Community that Iran had taken legislative action imposing a ban on all their administrative and community activities, he said that Iran considered the Baha'is merely as a political group at the service of foreign interests and objectives; it seemed that Baha'ism had been the subject of hostility, including violence, based on the conviction that it was a dissident and heterodox movement separate from Islam.

In conclusion, the Special Representative noted that Iran, as a United Nations Member and party to the Covenants and other treaties, was legally bound to observe the relevant international human rights instruments and had to co-operate with the competent organs entrusted with the promotion and surveillance of human rights and fundamental freedoms. In the absence of replies from Iran, he considered that most of the numerous and grave allegations of human rights violations might be exaggerated but contained a nucleus of truth; he believed that acts continued to occur which were inconsistent with the treaties and Covenants by which the country was bound.

The Special Representative recommended that Iran consent to establishing an Iranian Commission on Human Rights, composed of independent and representative personalities, to collect and verify information in and outside the country. He expressed satisfaction at the agreement allowing ICRC to resume visits to Iraqi prisoners of war held captive in Iran, and recommended that ICRC be authorized to visit members of opposition groups and persons detained because of their opinions, beliefs or religion. Finally, he recommended that the Commission repeat its appeals to Iran to permit the Special Representative to visit the country and continue monitoring the human rights situation there.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution adopted on 11 March 1987(55) by a roll-call vote of 18 to 5, with 16 abstentions, again expressed deep concern over the numerous and detailed allegations of grave human rights violations in Iran, particularly those related to: the right to life; freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; liberty and security of person; freedom from arbitrary arrest or detention; fair trial; and freedom of thought, conscience, religion and freedom of expression. Endorsing the Special Representative's conclusion that acts continued to occur in Iran which were inconsistent with the provisions of treaties and covenants by which the country was legally bound, the Commission decided to extend his mandate, asking him to present an interim report to the General Assembly in 1987, including the situation of minority groups, such as the Baha'is, and new elements such as allegations of violations affecting the medical profession, and a final report in 1988. The Commission renewed its appeal to Iran to co-operate fully with the Special Representative, in particular by responding to his request for information and by permitting him to visit that country. It requested the Secretary-General to give the Special Representative all the assistance he needed.

On 30 July, Iran presented its view on the Commission resolution and the Special Representative's report, denying the allegations made and charging that the section on allegations was prepared without sufficient care and lacked objectivity. It asserted that there were no violations affecting the medical profession. With regard to the Baha'is, it said that as the Sub-Commission was still debating on an agreed definition of minority, there was no basis for using that status for a group which was only recognized as an NGO by the United Nations. The analysis of the compatibility of international law with Islamic law was inconclusive and based on insufficient knowledge and understanding of Islamic law. The Commission resolution lacked balance and a constructive attitude and all quotations from the report were selective and subjective; among other things, there was no conclusion in the report that acts continued to occur which were inconsistent with treaties and covenants, as stated in the resolution.

Sub-Commission action. Expressing strong concern over Iran's grave violations of human rights and basic freedoms, the Sub-Commission, on 1 September 1987,(57) by a roll-call vote of 6 to 1, with 9 abstentions, urged determined protest by the Commission to Iran concerning its continued disrespect for the United Nations Charter in relation to human rights. It requested the Secretary-General to inform the Assembly, the Commission and its Special Representative of the information obtained from the Sub-Commission on the grave violations in Iran.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted decision 1987/150 by roll-call vote.

Situation of human rights in the
Islamic Republic of Iran

At its 18th plenary meeting, on 29 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/55 of 11 March 1987, approved the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Representative on the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran, as contained in Commission resolution 1984/54 of 14 March 1984, for a further year. The Council also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1987/150

22-7-16 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/97) by recorded vote (23-6-151, 22 May (meeting 19); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1987/18 & Corr.1); agenda item 17.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Belgium, Belize, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Norway, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda, Spain, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Iran, Oman, Pakistan, Romania, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic.

Abstaining: Bangladesh, Brazil, Bulgaria, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, India, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Turkey, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Iran said that the Council's decision was based on a series of resolutions it had rejected because of their political nature and because they prejudged the situation; Iran was not prepared to co-operate with any political measures passed off as a defence of human rights.

Brazil believed that the international community should explore all possibilities of co-operation before passing judgement on any given situation; the Council should accent Iran's offer to receive the Special Representative, taking into account its request that any expert sent to evaluate its internal situation must be an expert in Islamic law.

Report of the Special Representative (October). As requested by the Commission, the Special Representative presented to the General Assembly in October an interim report on the human rights situation in Iran from September 1986 to October 1987.(58) The report was again based on oral and written information concerning various rights. Also considered was material made available to the Special Representative by Iran, as well as statements and declarations by Iranian officials at various United Nations bodies.

The Special Representative stated that Iran had reacted to some extent positively to his activities and that it had improved its partial co-operation with him, through both written material and personal contacts. He considered the problem affecting the medical profession to be solved and noted that many prisoners had been pardoned and released. He did not agree, however, with Iran's selective adherence to certain provisions of international human rights instruments. Detailed allegations of violations were transmitted to Iran for verification of their accuracy and for further information and comments; Iran denied all allegations without specifically referring to any of them.

The Special Representative observed that the number of alleged violations of the right to life continued to diminish, but that the treatment of prisoners and violations of fair trial continued to be matters of concern, with physical and psychological torture being common in prisons. The information received also affirmed the existence of extremely summary and informal proceedings, unawareness of specific accusations, lack of legal counsel and other irregularities in respect to fair trial. The information received did not change his view that acts continued to occur that were inconsistent with international instruments, and although the frequency and number of allegations of violations had somewhat diminished, the persistence of certain facts justified continued international concern.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/136 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the
Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Recalling its pertinent resolutions, as well as the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Taking note, in particular, of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/55 of 11 March 1987, in which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of its Special Representative for one year and requested him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is and on new elements contained in his report to the Commission at its forty-third session, for example, the allegations of violations affecting the medical profession, and to submit a final report to the Commission at its forty-fourth session,

Taking note of the opinion of the Special Representative that legal obligations and commitments on human rights do not foresee or admit of partial acceptance of instruments that have been conceived, drafted and adopted as a unified, coherent and complete set of norms,

Noting the opinion of the Special Representative that the persons appearing before him described violations of which they were truly victims and that their declarations were convincing,

Taking note of the Special Representative's view that the partial co-operation he received in 1986 from the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran had improved, through both documents and personal contacts, and that, therefore, there are grounds to hope that it may improve further in the months preceding the presentation of the final report,

Concerned, none the less, at the Special Representative's conclusion that the co-operation extended to him has not reached the level that the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights have consistently requested in the resolutions concerning this matter,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Representative and the considerations and the observations contained therein;

2. Notes that the Special Representative observes that the problem concerning the medical profession appears to have been solved;

3. Welcomes the pardoning of prisoners and shares the Special Representative's hope that this may be the first stage of a process leading to a general amnesty for political prisoners;

4. Again expresses its deep concern about the numerous and detailed allegations of grave human rights violations in the Islamic Republic of Iran to which the Special Representative has referred in his report and, in particular, those related to the right to life, the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the right to liberty and security of person and to freedom from arbitrary arrest or detention, the right to a fair trial, the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion and to freedom of expression, and the right of religious minorities to profess and practise their own religion;

5. Expresses its grave concern, in particular, that although the Special Representative indicates that the number of alleged violations of the right to life has diminished over the past two years, according to information made available to him, some one hundred persons were alleged to have been executed in the period October 1986-September 1987 because of their political and religious convictions;

6. Expresses its deep concern at allegations that maltreatment and torture, both physical and psychological, are common practice in Iranian prisons during interrogation and before and after the final verdict, and at the existence of extremely summary and informal proceedings, unawareness on the part of the prisoners of specific accusations, lack of legal counsel and other irregularities with respect to fair trial;

7. Shares the opinion of the Special Representative that the denial by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran of the allegations of violations of human rights as a whole, without details, is not sufficient for a sensible assessment of the situation on human rights in that country;

8. Endorses the conclusion of the Special Representative that acts continue to occur in the Islamic Republic of Iran that are inconsistent with the provisions of international instruments by which the Government of that country is bound, and that the persistence of certain facts continues to justify continuing international concern;

9. Urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, as a State party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to respect and ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in that Covenant;

10. Once again urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to extend its full co-operation to the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights and, in particular, to permit him to visit that country;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative;

12. Decides to keep under consideration the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, during its forty-third session in order to re-examine this situation in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 64-22-45 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/803/Add.1) by recorded vote (58-22-42), 27 November (meeting 61); 15-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.48); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Iceland, Ireland, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Samoa, United Kingdom.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 51-53, 56, 61; plenary 93.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Botswana, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Colombia, Comoros,^a Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Togo, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Brunei Darussalam, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Indonesia, Iran, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Niger, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania.

Abstaining: Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Congo, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Japan, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Suriname, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

The Committee, by a recorded vote of 57 to 19, with 37 abstentions, rejected a motion by Pakistan that no action be taken on the text.

Iran considered the text, like its predecessors, to be political and imposed upon the international community by a minority; if the international community sought to depoliticize the issue, it was prepared to give it its full co-operation. The Sudan felt that the text lacked balance as the Special Representative's report was an interim one, there were only certain allegations and Iran could not be condemned before a final judgement had been made; co-operation between the Special Representative and Iran should be encouraged and no steps should be taken that would obstruct it. In Indonesia's view, the text infringed on the sovereignty and domestic jurisdiction of the State in question.

The Dominican Republic did not participate in the vote as it felt that the human rights item was being used as a political weapon in the struggle between various centres of power. Abstaining, Japan considered it inappropriate to express its position on a text which referred to a specific problem faced by one of the parties to the Iran-Iraq conflict when it was continuing diplomatic efforts to create a climate conducive to a solution. Morocco stressed that its abstention in no way signified indifference to inhumane behaviour and sufferings caused by human rights violations. Singapore opposed the selective condemnation of small countries, while Ecuador felt that human rights matters should be discussed in a universal fashion, with a view to achieving full implementation of human rights in all States.

Iraq

On 2 September 1987,(59) the Sub-Commission decided to take no action on a draft resolution concerning the situation of human rights in Iraq.

Kampuchea

Both the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed that continued occupation by foreign forces constituted the primary human rights violation in Kampuchea (see p. 746).

Sri Lanka

Human Rights Commission action. Taking note of the reports of the Special Rapporteur on torture (see p. 754) and of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (see p. 763), which contained allegations of human rights violations on Sri Lanka, the Commission on Human Rights, on 12 March 1987,(60) called on all parties and groups to respect fully the universally accepted rules of humanitarian law, renounce the use of force and acts of violence and pursue a negotiated political solution. It invited Sri Lanka to intensify its co-operation with ICRC in disseminating and promoting international humanitarian law and to consider favourably ICRC's offer of services to protect humanitarian standards and assist and protect the victims of all affected parties. The Commission expressed the hope that Sri Lanka would continue to provide it with information.

Europe and the Mediterranean area

Cyprus

Human Rights Commission action. By an 11 March 1987 resolution,(61) adopted by a roll-call vote of 25 to 3, with 15 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of a report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus during 1986,(62) reiterated previous calls for the full restoration of all human rights to the population of Cyprus, in particular to refugees. It called for the immediate cessation of attempts to settle any part of Varosha by people other than its inhabitants, for the tracing of and accounting for missing persons in Cyprus, and for the restoration and respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms of all Cypriots, including freedom of movement, freedom of settlement and the right to property. It asked the Secretary-General to provide the Commission with information concerning the implementation of its resolution.

On 11 March 1987,(63) Turkey transmitted a letter from the representative of the Turkish Cypriot community to the United Nations rejecting the Commission's resolution on the grounds that it was adopted without the participation of the Turkish Cypriots, one of the main parties to the conflict.

Sub-Commission action. On 2 September 1987,(64) the Sub-Commission, by a roll-call vote of 16 to none, with 3 abstentions, demanded the full restoration of human rights in Cyprus, including freedom of movement, freedom of settlement and the right to property, urged the immediate tracing and accounting for missing persons there, and expressed concern at the policy and practice of implanting settlers from Turkey in the occupied territories of Cyprus in an attempt to change their demographic structure.

In a 4 September letter to the Sub-Commission Chairman, transmitted to the Secretary-General on 23 October,(65) Turkey contended that the Sub-Commission's resolution was one-sided, politically motivated, misleading and unjust. Similarly, the representative of the Turkish Cypriot community, in a 26 October letter to the Secretary-General,(66) objected to the Sub-Commission expressing grave concern about gross and systematic rights violations in Cyprus and termed as misleading the references in the resolution's second preambular paragraph to the return of refugees to their homes and the full restoration of human rights.

On 14 October,(67) Cyprus forwarded the Sub-Commission's resolution for circulation in the General Assembly. In a 10 November letter,(68) it characterized the resolution as a landmark in the field of human rights. (See also p. 244.)

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported(69) that the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus during its nine working sessions in 1987 continued to investigate 169 cases of missing persons, discussing reports submitted by both sides and ways to accelerate the investigations. At the end of November, the number of Greek Cypriots living in the northern part of the island had further diminished to 661. The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (see p. 246) continued, under its mandate, to discharge humanitarian functions on behalf of the Greek Cypriots remaining in the north, as well as to make periodic visits to the Turkish Cypriots living in the south.

Turkey

On 3 September 1987,(70) the Sub-Commission decided to take no action on a draft resolution concerning the situation in Turkey.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Chile

Report of the Special Rapporteur (February). In February 1987, Special Rapporteur Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a preliminary report on the question of human rights in Chile, covering mainly the second half of 1986.(71)

He reported that on 31 December 1986 it was announced that the declaration of the state of siege would not be renewed, that the ban on entry into Chile for most of the people in exile would be lifted within 90 days, and that on 15 January 1987 a Political Parties Constitutional Organizational Act had been adopted. With the end of the state of siege, a number of opposition magazines re-emerged, arrests under an administrative decree could no longer last indefinitely, and applications for amparo were fully viable. As from 3 January 1987, the curfew was lifted.

However, the Special Rapporteur pointed out that under an Exempt Decree by the Ministry of the Interior of 8 September 1986, the declaration of a state of a threat to internal law and order had been extended for another six months, permitting arrests for 5 or, in the event of serious terrorist attacks, 20 days, restricting the right of assembly and of freedom of information, prohibiting entry into or ordering expulsion from Chile of persons engaged in acts contrary to Chile's interests and ordering particular persons to stay in an urban area for not more than three months. Another decree, issued on 10 December 1986, extended the state of emergency by three months, allowing the adoption of all measures relating to a state of siege, except the arrest of persons, their transfer from one part of the territory to another, expulsion from the country and restrictions on the rights of association and unionization.

The Special Rapporteur examined complaints from judicial or other documents received from the persons concerned, their lawyers or human rights organizations, regarding violations of the rights to life, physical and moral integrity, liberty, security, proper trial and procedural guarantees, the right to enter and leave the country freely, and freedom of expression and information. He noted that Chile had continued to co-operate fully and had agreed to allow him to visit in March 1987.

The Special Rapporteur reported that there had been no further disappearances in 1986 but that judicial inquiries into 663 cases of alleged disappearances, referred to in previous years, were still pending. Also, there were no further cases involving administrative measures of restricted residence or mass raids on settlements since the second week of October 1986. The adoption of laws with constitutional status relating to the electoral process and the restoration of democratic normality had been speeded up. Progress had been made to end the exile of Chileans and the 3,099 cases still pending were expected to be disposed of; 618 names appeared on a list of persons who had been allowed to return to Chile. An agreement had been reached that ICRC would periodically visit detention centres.

Despite the progress, the Special Rapporteur noted that serious acts of violence against individuals were committed by persons linked to government agencies and that persons opposed to the Government were arrested. According to statistics, during 1986 there had been 7,019 arrests, 688 cases of intimidation, 109 cases of unlawful ill-treatment, and 62 violent deaths; 418 detainees were under investigation and held in prison. The Special Rapporteur had also received complaints which appeared to reveal a pattern of intimidation and harassment of members of the Catholic Church. However, he found in general that there were positive and encouraging signs pointing to a new political will on the part of the Government, although the task in the area of fundamental freedoms was far from complete and necessary measures had to be taken promptly. He recommended the completion of organizational laws with constitutional status and their entry into force without delay. He called for a prompt end to exile and investigation of terrorism and recommended that the Government make it easier to ascertain the facts surrounding the disappearance of persons. Concluding, he stated that, due to the fundamental problem that the political regime and institutional system was not democratic, the Government did not succeed in removing the sense of insecurity which prevailed among broad sectors of the population, and any advances in the observance of freedoms were hampered.

Replying on 3 March 1987 to the Special Rapporteur's report,(72) Chile said that all complaints of further violations followed the same pattern, presenting as proven what was merely alleged, and that some of them were completely unimportant. With regard to the alleged harassment of the Catholic Church, Chile claimed that when lay members allegedly committed criminal acts, the summons was addressed to them, not to the Church, and Church dignitaries were allowed to give testimony in places of their choice or before the court; it was for the courts to determine the procedure to be adopted. As to the Rapporteur's conclusion that its judiciary lacked independence, Chile stated that as a general rule the courts did not accept applications made by the Government in respect of specific persons and the Government abided by court decisions.

Concerning the statistics presented by the Special Rapporteur, Chile said that of the 7,019 persons arrested during 1986, 6,600 were freed immediately, being held for a limited time only and for a very precise purpose. The Rapporteur's claim that freedom of expression was restricted also lacked justification, it stated; since the lifting of the siege, there was full freedom of expression.

Pointing out that it was in the final stage of transition, in which legislative and administrative measures were being taken with a view to restoring the democratic system, Chile joined the Rapporteur in urging all democratic elements to participate in that process and in calling for an end to violence and terrorism.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, on 12 March,(73) expressed appreciation for the Special Rapporteur's efforts and welcomed the fact that Chile had authorized him to visit again and had provided the co-operation and freedom of access to persons necessary for his investigation. However, it regretted that such authorization would not grant him opportunity to prepare his report in accordance with his mandate and that the Government's co-operation had not led to a substantial improvement in the human rights situation. The Commission expressed concern at the persistence of serious violations and urged the Government to honour requests from social and political sectors for the peaceful re-establishment of a pluralist democracy.

It emphasized the need to: restore and respect human rights in conformity with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; amend legislation so as to bring it into conformity with human rights guarantees; and immediately end all physical and psychological torture, respect the right to life and physical and moral integrity, desist from intimidation and persecution, abductions, arbitrary arrests, detention in secret locations and detention incommunicado for prolonged periods. It urged Chile to: investigate all reports of death, torture, abductions and other rights violations by the military, police and security forces and punish those found guilty; end activities of groups and bands reported to be responsible for rapes, abductions, searches, interrogations, intimidation and ill-treatment of persons; end persistent violations by reorganizing the security and police forces and establishing a permanent system to monitor their conduct; co-operate fully with investigations of violations, ensuring the independence of the judiciary and maximum effectiveness of judicial remedies, particularly amparo and habeas corpus; guarantee that anti-terrorist legislation not be used against those who had not committed terrorist acts and that persons accused of terrorism be accorded due process of law; allow Chileans their right to enter and leave the country freely and end forced exile; restore labour rights and freedom of information and preserve the socio-cultural identity of indigenous people; and respect activities related to the protection and promotion of human rights.

The Commission asked Chile to increase its co-operation with the Special Rapporteur and fully implement his recommendations, and invited it to submit its comments in 1988. It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year, requesting him to report to the General Assembly in 1987 and to the Commission in 1988, and recommended that the Economic and Social Council ensure that the necessary resources and staff were provided.

On 29 May 1987, by decision 1987/152, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur and to provide him with the necessary financial resources and sufficient staff.

Sub-Commission action. On 2 September 1987,(74) by 13 votes to 1, with 4 absentions, the Sub-Commission requested the Commission to urge Chilean authorities to: end human rights violations; conduct investigations and facilitate the trial and punishment of persons responsible for such violations; restore economic, social and cultural rights to the indigenous population; refrain from applying the death penalty at political trials; and end states of emergency, as well as forced relegation and exile and imprisonment incommunicado for long periods. It recommended that the Commission continue to study, as a high-priority matter, the human rights situation in Chile whose authorities it urged to respect and promote human rights in accordance with the international instruments to which Chile was a party. The Sub-Commission requested specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to submit to the Secretary-General any information about rights violations in Chile. It asked the Secretary-General to inform the Sub-Commission in 1989 of the results of the Special Rapporteur's investigations, as well as of General Assembly and Commission deliberations and resolutions.

cial Rapporteur submitted to the General Assembly in September a report on the situation of human rights in Chile during the first half of 1987.⁽⁷⁵⁾ During his 10-day visit to Chile in March, he had held 32 meetings with official bodies and met with 69 officials. In addition, he had held working meetings with senior officials of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Ministry of the Interior, and had been granted audiences by the President of the Supreme Court, three investigating judges and two military prosecutors. He had visited seven penal establishments in four cities, and met with some 261 people representing 77 Chilean human rights, social, professional, trade union and community organizations. In addition, he had received 82 individuals. In all, he had interviewed 385 people in Chile representing all sectors of society. Apart from a few occurrences, Chile had given him its continued co-operation.

In May, Chile had submitted to the United Nations Centre for Human Rights a document dealing with advances in human, social, political and economic rights between 1984 and 1987. In 1987, those advances included, among other things, the lifting of the state of siege and the curfew, and authorization for a large number of exiles to enter the country. The Rapporteur noted, however, that in March the declaration of a state of danger of disturbance of law and order had been renewed for six months, and in June the state of emergency was extended for 90 days. Also in June, the National Information Agency was established and any individual apprehended by the Agency, pursuant to an order from the competent authority, was to be detained or held at his home or taken immediately to a prison or public place of detention.

Once again the Rapporteur examined complaints concerning violations of the rights to: life; physical and moral integrity; liberty; security; proper trial and procedural guarantees; free entry and departure; freedom of movement; and freedom of expression and information.

The Rapporteur noted two conflicting currents of opinion concerning the democratization process and hence the protection of human rights—one favouring the registration of citizens and of political parties, the other opposing both. A third opinion advocated a violent solution, considering anything to do with elections anathema. The purpose of the Electoral Registration Act adopted by the Government was to organize the ongoing public registration of electors so that they could participate in the transitional electoral system, beginning with a plebiscite announced for 1989.

The Rapporteur said that the process of ending the exile of Chilean citizens continued uninterrupted; according to official figures, 2,854 exiles were authorized to return between January and 1 September, bringing the number of those prohibited from re-entering the country to around 464. Also, the Government had decided not to allow the National Information Agency to continue to hold detainees on its premises; they had to be handed over to either the Policía de Investigaciones or the Carbineros. According to agreements concluded with those three bodies, ICRC could periodically inspect detention centres. The Government had announced that some 400 cases being tried by the military courts would be transferred to civil courts. No new disappearances were confirmed during the first half of 1987, but the Rapporteur continued to note a lack of progress in judicial investigations pending on 663 cases of alleged disappearances which had taken place in previous years. He repeated his statement that the Chilean judiciary was not independent and expressed concern that most of the mass media, particularly the press, operated under the permanent threat of restrictions on freedom of information under the state of emergency which was still in force. Violence in the form of terrorism and by private gangs continued. Administrative banishments had resumed as a tool to suppress freedom. Complaints had been received about rights violations in the treatment of Mapuche and Huilliche Indian minorities. Changes in the health sector, particularly in social security, had adversely affected the poorest groups. He expressed concern about the dismissal of a large number of teachers, by way of political reprisal or as part of the process of privatizing public schools and high schools.

The Special Rapporteur noted that a number of recommendations made in his earlier reports were put into effect, but much remained to be done. He recommended the adoption and implementation of constitutional fundamental acts relating to voting rights and the establishment of a representative democracy. He also recommended that the electoral registration system be improved and that voter registration be conducted according to the system which was beginning to be introduced, on a compulsory basis and free of charge, in order to educate citizens about their civic rights. He called for reform of the constitutional and legal order, to allow the Chilean judiciary to recover its independence, and recommended that the Government support the investigation and punishment of rights violations. He further urged the Government to transfer to the civil courts a large number of cases before the military courts.

Commenting on the report on 9 November,⁽⁷⁶⁾ Chile remarked that it continued to be the object of a discriminatory, unjust procedure; while it was kept on the Commission's agenda, no mention was made of other States in which the situation was infinitely worse. The procedure of appointing a Special Rapporteur was in itself discriminatory, as were the 1986 General Assembly(77) and 1987 Commission (see above) resolutions which departed from the Rapporteur's reports. With regard to alleged violations of the rights of certain individuals, the events mentioned had occurred in September and October 1973, long before the Rapporteur's appointment, marking a departure from the terms of his mandate.

Chile also put forward comments on the Rapporteur's conclusions concerning its judiciary, emergency measures, disregard for detainees' procedural guarantees, violence, freedom of expression, health, labour and the publication of human rights instruments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/147 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile

The General Assembly,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and determined to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Noting the obligation of the Government of Chile to respect and protect human rights in accordance with the international instruments to which Chile is a party,

Bearing in mind that the concern of the international community at the situation of human rights in Chile was expressed by the General Assembly in a number of resolutions, particularly resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 on disappeared persons and resolution 41/161 of 4 December 1986, in which the Assembly invited the Commission on Human Rights to take the most appropriate steps for the effective restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country, including the extension of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur,

Considering that the Special Rapporteur proposes to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth session a final report on the situation of human rights in Chile,

Recalling the pertinent resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, particularly resolution 1987/60 of 12 March 1987, in which the Commission decided, inter alia, to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year and to consider that subject as a matter of high priority, in view of the persistence of serious violations of human rights in Chile,

Deploing once again the fact that the repeated appeals of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and other international organs to re-establish human rights and fundamental freedoms have been ignored by the Chilean authorities,

Considering the reports prepared by various non-governmental organizations which have made public the serious violations of human rights in Chile,

Observing that the maintenance of states of emergency constitutes a source of frequent violations of human rights and gives rise to the arbitrary intervention of the authorities in the free exercise of democratic activities,

Noting that, although opposition publications have in some cases been authorized, these are frequently subjected to arbitrary restrictions and limitations, including the detention and prosecution of their editors,

Regretting that measures taken by the Government of Chile, such as signing international instruments against torture and authorizing the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit places of detention in some cases, have not put an end to the practice of torture and arbitrary detention,

Noting that, in the absence of an institutional framework for holding free elections, the adoption of laws on political parties and electoral registration does not constitute an expression of the people's sovereignty or meet the basic requirements of a democratic rule of law or comply with the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of political or other opinions recognized in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

1. Takes note with interest of the preliminary report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile, submitted in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/60;

2. Welcomes the positive fact that the Government of Chile permitted the Special Rapporteur to visit the country again in March 1987, providing him with its continuing co-operation and free access to the facilities for conducting his investigation and expresses its confidence that a further visit will be authorized on the same conditions in the immediate future; at the same time, it regrets that this co-operation of the Government of Chile with the efforts of the United Nations has not led to a substantial improvement in human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Expresses its deep distress at the absence of a legal and political structure that protects the unrestricted exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms, a basic condition for the free expression of the people's sovereignty;

4. Again expresses its conviction that a legal and political order based on the expression of the people's will through an electoral process open, on an equal footing, to all citizens and on free elections is fundamental to the full respect for human rights in Chile as it is in any other country;

5. Expresses its deep concern at the seriousness of the significant and well-documented complaints of serious violations of human rights in Chile, as described in the report of the Special Rapporteur, which refers to violations of the rights to life, physical and moral integrity, liberty, security, due process and procedural guarantees, the right to enter and leave the country freely, and the rights to freedom of movement and freedom of speech and information;

6. Expresses its distress at the denial of fundamental rights and freedoms through the maintenance of arbitrary executive powers during the prolonged period in which states of emergency have been in force, at the climate of insecurity, the use of unlawful coercion, torture and ill-treatment by the security forces, the renewal of administrative banishments and the practice of forced disappearances, as well as the existence of bands and groups, whether private or connected with the security forces, that engage with impunity in actions ranging from intimidation to assassination;

7. Expresses its concern at the denial by the Chilean authorities of the exercise of the rights of free expression, assembly and association, through the use of repressive methods and violent responses to demonstrations of social and political opposition, in particular military searches of marginal settlements and university premises and acts of intimidation against journalists and religious and lay human rights bodies;

8. Expresses its grave concern at the ineffectiveness of the governmental authorities in preventing the ill-treatment of individuals by the military, police and security forces and expresses particular concern that the judiciary has often failed to act independently and that the competent authorities have failed to take the necessary steps to conduct full investigations and prosecute those responsible for the numerous unsolved cases of abduction, torture, disappearance and murder;

9. Urge the Chilean Government to respond to the requests of various social and political sectors for the early, unconditional re-establishment of a pluralist democracy;

10. Emphasizes the need for the Government of Chile to restore and respect human rights in conformity with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and to comply with the obligations it has assumed under various international instruments, so that the principle of legality, democratic institutions and the effective enjoyment and exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms may be restored, and, in particular:

(a) To put an end immediately to the application of articles 8 and 9 of the Constitution, and supplementary legislation, under which serious and continuing violations of human rights, in particular the rights to life and freedom of thought, are being committed in the country;

(b) To put an immediate end to the state of emergency and to the arbitrary practice of declaring "constitutional states of emergency", and amend the legislation, including the laws permitting the arbitrary use of such states of emergency, so as to bring it into line with guarantees of human rights, as defined in international instruments;

(c) To end immediately all forms of physical and psychological torture and to respect effectively the right to life and to physical and moral integrity, and to desist, furthermore, from intimidation and persecution, abductions, arbitrary arrests, detention in secret locations, as well as the practices of detention incommunicado and assassination;

(d) To proceed as a matter of urgency, through judicial and administrative action, to investigate all reports of deaths, torture, abductions and other human rights violations by the military, police and security forces, as well as by bands and groups, whether private or connected with the security forces, and to punish those found guilty of such violations;

(e) To investigate and clarify without further delay the fate of persons arrested for political reasons who have subsequently disappeared;

(f) To ensure the independence of the judiciary and the maximum effectiveness of judicial remedies, particularly amparo or habeas corpus, and to prevent the intimidation of judges, defence lawyers and witnesses;

(g) To reorganize the police and security forces so as to help put an end to persistent human rights violations;

(h) To re-establish the jurisdiction of the civilian courts over matters within their competence that have been delegated to the military courts and to put an end to the appointment of ad hoc prosecutors by military judges, as well as to arbitrary procedural measures and death sentences imposed for political reasons;

(i) To guarantee that anti-terrorist legislation is not used against persons who have not committed terrorist acts, that persons accused of acts of violence or terrorism are accorded due process of law and respect for their rights, and that the accusation of terrorism is not adduced as justification for any abuse of authority, torture or inhumane treatment;

(j) To respect fully the right of nationals to live in and freely enter and leave their country, and to put a definite end to the practice of administrative banishment or internal exile and to forced exile;

(k) To restore the full enjoyment and exercise of economic, social and cultural rights, particularly labour and trade union rights and freedom of speech and information, and to preserve the socio-cultural identity of the indigenous population;

(l) To respect the activities of institutions, non-governmental organizations and persons related to the protection and promotion of human rights;

11. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to consider, as a matter of high priority, the report of the Special Rapporteur, taking account of the relevant information at its disposal; to take the most appropriate steps for the effective restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile, including extending the mandate of the Special Rapporteur; and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, with a view to examining the human rights situation in Chile.

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 93-5-53 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/803/Add.1) by recorded vote (81-5-471, 27 November (meeting 62); IS-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.88), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Chile deplored the fact that the text ignored its positive response to the Commission or the progress noted by the Special Rapporteur, that it was selective, biased and not related to the country's reality; to ignore the Special Rapporteur's findings and not to mention Chile's regular compliance with its obligations under the International Covenants was an act of bad faith. In Indonesia's view, the text infringed on the sovereignty and domestic jurisdiction of the State in question.

The United States believed that nations should not be singled out for discriminatory treatment when other countries in which human rights were gravely abused went unmentioned. The text was inappropriate, inadequate and lacked balance and objectivity, pointing out many serious and continuing problems but failing to recognize the steps taken to enhance respect for human rights as outlined in the Special Rapporteur's report. Japan also felt that the text lacked balance and failed to refer to anti-government terrorist activities. Ecuador said human rights matters should be discussed with a view of achieving full implementation of human rights in all States. The Dominican Republic, which did not participate in the vote, expressed concern that the human rights question was being used as a political weapon in the struggle between various centres of power.

The United Kingdom regretted that the text was not fully balanced, failing to reflect the Rapporteur's concern that insufficient international attention was given to terrorism in Chile; the text also contained a reference to the Special Rapporteur which sought to prejudice the Commission's decision on his mandate. Uruguay thought that some of the wording was superfluous and weakened the text.

El Salvador

Communications. On 23 February 1987,(78) El Salvador charged Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación National-Frente Democrático Revolucionario (FMLN-FDR) with having abducted in January four Salvadorian mayors and one judge, asking the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to call on FMLN-FDR to free them.

FMLN-FDR were charged with further acts of violence in a communiqué of 26 March.(79) (See also p. 187.)

Report of the Special Representative (February). Special Representative Jose Antonio Pastor Ridruejo, fulfilling his mandate extended by the Commission on Human Rights in 1986,(80) submitted his final report to the Commission in February 1987,(81) giving mainly an overview of the situation in 1986 and reiterating recommendations made in a 1986 report.(82)

Human Rights Commission action. Expressing deep concern over continued serious and numerous human rights violations taking place in El Salvador, the Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution adopted on 11 March 1987 by a roll-call vote of 36 to none, with 7 abstentions,(83) requested the Government and the insurgent forces to adopt measures conducive to humanizing the conflict by observing the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols, and to take measures to avoid death or physical harm to the non-combatant population. Deploring the continuing unsatisfactory capacity of the judicial system to investigate, prosecute and punish human rights violations, the Commission urged the authorities to hasten the adoption of measures for investigating such violations. It asked States to refrain from intervening in El Salvador's internal situation and to encourage the continuation of the dialogue between the parties to the conflict which had been interrupted, and recommended the early resumption of open talks in order to reach a negotiated comprehensive political settlement.

The Commission recommended that the Special Rapporteur continue to observe and inform the General Assembly and the Commission of the extent to which the contending parties were respecting the humanitarian rules of war. It emphasized that, as indicated in the Special Rapporteur's report, the human rights question was an important part of government policy, which was achieving increasingly significant and commendable results, and welcomed the fact that the Government and the insurgent forces had reached an agreement whereby ICRC could evacuate the war-wounded to places where they could receive medical care.

The Commission called on the authorities to make the national legislation compatible with international human rights instruments, and recommended the continuation and broadening of reforms, including agrarian reform. It requested the Government to continue granting facilities to Salvadorians wishing to return to their homes and asked all States to co-operate in receiving refugees and to support the autonomous organizations dealing with displaced persons in El Salvador. Renewing its appeal to the Government and other parties concerned to continue co-operating with the Special Representative, the Commission asked United Nations bodies to assist the Government to promote and protect human rights.

Commending the Special Representative for his report, the Commission decided to extend his mandate for another year and requested him to report to the Assembly in 1987 and to the Commission in 1988.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1987, by decision 1987/148, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Representative's mandate for another year.

Sub-Commission action. By a 2 September 1987 resolution,(84) adopted by a recorded vote of 11 to 2, with 6 abstentions, the Sub-Commission expressed deep concern that serious and massive human rights violations still occurred in El Salvador, although their number had decreased. It recommended that the Special Representative include in his next report information presented by humanitarian organizations concerning such violations, and asked the Secretary-General to report in 1989 on the results of the Special Representative's investigation and the relevant deliberations of the Assembly and the Commission.

The Sub-Commission confirmed that, in accordance with humanitarian law, civilians who did not participate directly in combat must not be subjected to military attacks and forced displacement. In view of the massive recruitment policies of the Government of El Salvador, the Sub-Commission stressed the importance of recognizing conscientious objection to military service. It expressed the hope that the dialogue between the Government and FMLN-FDR would be renewed on 15 September.

Report of the Special Representative (October). As requested by the Commission, the Special Representative presented to the Assembly in October a report on the human rights situation in El Salvador during 1987.(85) He had visited the country from 27 September to 5 October, interviewing the President of the Republic, the Presidents of the Legislative Assembly and of the Supreme Court, delegates of the FDR and commanders of FMLN, as well as political prisoners and witnesses presented to him by humanitarian organizations. He had also received oral and written information from human rights organizations operating in the country.

Following evaluation of the information gathered, the Special Representative concluded that, with regard to economic, social and cultural rights, the situation had deteriorated as a result of a number of factors, such as the world economic crisis, the persistence of the military conflict, an October 1986 earthquake,(86) and drought. Concerning violations of civil and political rights, executions of civilians had been carried out by members of the armed forces and Civil Defence, although fewer than in 1986. He noted that no summary executions had been reliably attributed to members of the security forces. The guerrilla organizations had persisted in executions, in the form of the widespread practice of "ajusticiamientos". There were indications of some resurgence of "death squad" activities which, however, were fought by the Government. The Special Representative did not rule out that death squads were involved in the disappearances of left-wing individuals, among them trade unionists. The guerrilla organizations had also abducted individuals, among others, mayors belonging to the Christian Democratic Party; although most of them had been released, there had been some deaths. With regard to the treatment of prisoners, the Special Representative had encountered cases of intense psychological pressure, equivalent to inhumane or degrading treatment, during police interrogation. He also noted that activities of the criminal justice system to investigate and punish serious violations remained highly unsatisfactory, although judicial actions against individuals presumed guilty of collaborating with the armed opposition had been accelerated, resulting in a marked decline in the number of political prisoners.

The Special Representative noted that, as in 1986, the regular army was generally endeavouring to apply humanitarian standards in conducting hostilities, but that did not prevent unjustifiable civilian fatalities from time to time. The number of deaths, however, was appreciably lower than in previous years. To an alarming extent, civilians were maimed and killed through contact with mines planted by guerrilla organizations; the Special Representative noted that the number of persons seriously maimed was appreciably higher than the number killed and that the average number of casualties was lower than in 1986.

Outlining efforts to strengthen human rights, the Special Representative reported that, as part of the democratic normalization process, the constitutional authorities continued to be firmly committed to a policy of respect for human rights. He noted that, in June, the Government had submitted two bills to the Assembly: one on amnesty for political prisoners except those involved in more serious crimes such as murder etc., and another on the reintegration of armed rebels in democratic life. The commitments entered into by the Government in the so-called "Procedure for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", signed on 7 August at Guatemala City by the Presidents of the five Central American States (see p. 188), had given the amnesty bill a new boost. The signing of the document, the Special Representative stated, demonstrated El Salvador's concern for the consolidation of democracy and the elimination of all types of human rights violations. Both the insurgent forces and the Government had expressed their support for those commitments, pursuant to which El Salvador had set up a National Reconciliation Commission, entrusted with verifying implementation of the national reconciliation process and respect for civil and political rights. With regard to FMLN, the Special Representative noted the establishment of a secretariat to protect and promote human rights, the objectives of which included educating FMLN combatants about human rights.

Government representatives and FMLN had met on 26 January in Panama and agreed that future evacuations of the war-wounded and war-injured for medical attention would not be contingent on prisoner exchanges and negotiations. On 3 February, both sides agreed to exchange Colonel Omar Napoleón Avalos, captured by guerrilla forces in 1985, for 57 arrested trade union leaders. On 26 May, FLMN-FDR communicated through the Archbishop of San Salvador to the Government proposals for humanizing the war and for a comprehensive dialogue. As evidence of the Government's intentions to humanize the conflict, it allowed 98 injured or wounded members of the guerrilla forces to leave the country in June. The Special Representative stated that a political dialogue was under way in which a cease-fire was also being dealt with. Following an October meeting, a joint communiqué was issued announcing the establishment of two commissions with the task of working out a cease-fire agreement and helping implement the other provisions of the Esquipulas document.

Expressing the hope that the dialogue between the Government and FMLN would lead to a complete cease-fire, the Special Representative recommended that both parties strictly comply with the 1949 Geneva Conventions on the protection of war victims and the Additional Protocols. He urged the Government and all sectors and political forces in the country to end attempts on the lives, physical and mental integrity and freedom of non-combatants, recommended the speedy repeal of legislation incompatible with international human rights standards and the adoption of laws compatible with those standards, particularly with regard to the prosecution of political offences, increased monitoring of police interrogations of political prisoners, and the continuation and expansion of social reform, particularly judicial reform. To FMLN, he recommended that it refrain from planting contact mines and from attacking El Salvador's economic infrastructure. Finally, he recommended that all countries, particularly the most developed, provide assistance to alleviate and improve the living conditions of displaced Salvadorians or those made refugees by the conflict.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/137 without vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the humanitarian rules laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocols I and II thereto, of 1977,

Recalling that, in its resolutions 35/192 of 15 December 1980, 36/155 of 16 December 1981, 37/185 of 17 December 1982, 38/101 of 16 December 1983, 39/119 of 14 December 1984, 40/139 of 13 December 1985 and 41/157 of 4 December 1986, it expressed its deep concern at the situation of human rights in El Salvador,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 32(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, in which the Commission decided to appoint a special representative on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, 1982/28 of 11 March 1982, 1983/29 of 8 March 1983, 1984/52 of 14 March 1984, 1985/35 of 13 March 1985, and 1986/39 of 12 March 1986, as well as Commission resolution 1987/51 of 11 March 1987, whereby it extended the mandate of the Special Representative for another year and requested him to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session and to the Commission at its forty-fourth session,

Considering that there is an armed conflict of a non-international character in El Salvador in which the parties involved are under an obligation to apply the minimum standards of protection of human rights and humanitarian treatment provided for in article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and in Additional Protocol II thereto, of 1977,

Noting that the Special Representative points out in his report that the question of respect for human rights continues to be an important element of the current policy of the Government of El Salvador, which, within the process of democratic normalization, is achieving increasingly significant and commendable results,

Concerned, however, because violations of human rights are continuing in El Salvador, particularly through the non-compliance with the humanitarian rules of war,

Recalling that on 7 August 1987 at Guatemala City the Central American Governments signed the agreement on the "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", thus manifesting the political will and good faith to fulfil its provisions in order to achieve peace and stability in the region,

Convinced that the strict fulfilment of the commitments assumed by the Government of El Salvador in the agreement signed at Guatemala City will contribute to the promotion, respect and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country,

Recognizing that the resumption of the dialogue between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario in the context of the agreement signed at Guatemala City is one of the best ways of achieving a solution that will help to improve the situation of human rights of the Salvadorian people,

Aware that the negotiated political solution of the Salvadorian conflict can be cut short if external forces do not support the resumption of the dialogue but instead seek in different ways to spur the prolongation or intensification of the war, with ensuing grave effects on the situation of human rights and the possibilities of economic recovery in El Salvador,

1. Commends the Special Representative for his report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador;

2. Notes with interest and emphasizes that it is important that the Special Representative indicated in his report that the question of respect for human rights is an important part of the policy of the Government of El Salvador, which is achieving increasingly significant and commendable results;

3. Expresses, nevertheless, its concern at the fact that violations of human rights are continuing in El Salvador because, inter alia, of the non-observance of the humanitarian rules of war;

4. Trusts that the fulfillment of the undertaking assumed in the agreement on the "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" will lead to an improvement of the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador;

5. Expresses its consternation at the assassination of the Co-ordinator of the Commission of Human Rights of El Salvador (non-governmental) and trusts that the authorities of El Salvador will continue investigations leading to the punishment of those responsible;

6. Recognizes the efforts made by the Government of El Salvador related to the result of the most recent investigations designed to determine the responsibility of the instigators of the assassination of Monsignor Romero and also recognizes the importance of the return to El Salvador of the political leaders of the Frente Democrático Revolucionario;

7. Express its satisfaction at the fact that, with the intention of humanizing the conflict, the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional agreed this year that future evacuations of the war-wounded and war-injured for medical attention would not be made contingent on further prisoner exchanges and negotiations;

8. Urges the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario to continue the dialogue, within the framework of the agreement, signed at Guatemala City, until the achievement of a global political solution that will end the armed conflict and promote the broadening and strengthening of a pluralistic and participatory democratic process that will involve the promotion of social justice, respect for human rights and the full exercise of the right of the Salvadorian people to determine freely and without external interference of any kind its economic, political and social system;

9. Requests the competent bodies of the United Nations system to provide any advice and assistance that the Government of El Salvador may require in order to enhance the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

10. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth session to consider the situation of human rights in El Salvador, and the mandate of its Special Representative, taking into account the evolution of the situation of human rights in El Salvador and the developments linked to the fulfillment of the agreement signed at Guatemala City;

11. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-third session, the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador in order to re-examine this situation in the light of the information provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/803/Add.1) without vote, 30 November (meeting 64); 5-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.62), as amended by 8 nations (A/C.3/42/L.93); agenda item 12.

Sponsors of draft: Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Honduras.

Sponsors of amendment: Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Meeting numbers, GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 51-53, 62, 64; plenary 93.

The adopted text was based on a draft introduced by El Salvador as amended by Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela. Following introduction of the amendment, El Salvador withdrew its draft. The text, including the amendment, was reintroduced by Peru under rule 122 of the Assembly's rules of procedure. Another amendment to the original draft, by which the Assembly would have requested the Commission in 1988 to continue considering the human rights situation in El Salvador, was put forward by Norway also on behalf of Denmark, Greece, Mexico, Netherlands, Panama, Spain, Sweden and Yugoslavia,⁽⁸⁷⁾ and was later withdrawn.

Sweden said the human rights situation in El Salvador was still a matter for great concern—the Special Representative had reported that no significant changes had taken place. Expressing reservations on paragraph 3, it did not find the link established with the non-fulfillment of the humanitarian rules of war satisfactory, since other rights violations were also occurring. It also felt that paragraph 2 did not reflect the Special Representative's findings.

Cuba did not believe that the violations in El Salvador were due to the non-fulfillment of the humanitarian rules of war, as stated in paragraph 3 and the sixth preambular paragraph, but that there were other causes. It interpreted paragraph 10 to mean that the Commission's conclusions concerning the fulfillment of the Special Representative's mandate could not be prejudged.

In the opinion of the United States, El Salvador continued to receive unfair treatment at the hands of the Assembly; the country was the only democracy—one which had repeatedly demonstrated its firm commitment to democracy and justice—that was the subject of annual reports to the Assembly. Pointing to El Salvador's willingness to join the sponsors of the text as another example of its commitment to promoting human rights, the United States suggested that the Commission consider moving its case to advisory services.

Haiti

Report of the Special Representative. In accordance with a 1986 confidential Commission decision,⁽⁵⁾ Special Representative Michel Gauvin (Canada), appointed on 12 August 1986, submitted to the Commission in 1987 a report on the human rights situation in Haiti.⁽⁴⁾ He reported that during his visit to Haiti from 1 to 15 December 1986 he had had contacts with the head of State, members of the National Governing Council (CNG)—a provisional Government following a change of Government on 7 February 1986—government ministers and officials, and representatives of the legal profession, trade unions, churches, human rights NGOs, leaders of political parties and other eminent personalities.

In an overview of the country's situation, the Special Representative noted that Haiti had passed through nearly 30 years of a brutal dictatorship, and that its illiterate population—illiteracy being estimated at 77 per cent—had suffered from large-scale poverty, neglect and misery. Under the former President, enforcement of law and order had been left to the special security officers or militia, the so-called Volontaires de la sécurité nationale (VSN), known as the Tontons Macoutes, which numbered between 250,000 and 300,000, while armed forces numbered between 7,000 and 8,000. With the end of the dictatorship and the abolition of VSN, the army had become solely responsible for maintaining law and order. However, the Special Representative pointed out, only about 1,000 soldiers were trained in police duties and a significant part of the lower ranks of the armed forces was illiterate. The Special Representative had received a number of complaints about individual acts of misconduct by armed forces members, including arrests without warrants, intimidation of citizens, maltreatment during detention, two cases of disappearances and reported incidents of torture. Noting that those incidents appeared to stem from ineptitude and breach of discipline, rather than from policy, and that the Government had sought outside help in training its police and armed forces, the Special Representative suggested that the armed forces be better trained in order to improve respect for human rights and underlined the need for a trained and more efficient police force.

Following comments on various issues affecting the realization of economic, social and cultural as well as civil and political rights, the Special Representative offered a number of suggestions for assisting the country in its transition from dictatorship to democracy. He recommended that: the new Constitution being studied by the Constituent Assembly contain guarantees of human rights corresponding to the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights;(88) election laws be promulgated well in advance of legislative elections; international observers be invited to legislative and presidential elections; seminars on the administration of justice, training of judicial personnel and legal education be encouraged and assisted; past human rights abuses by VSN be investigated; treatment of prisoners and detainees be improved; and a constructive dialogue between trade unions and employers' organizations be encouraged. An independent national human rights commission could do much to promote respect for human rights, the Special Representative said in his concluding observations. He also considered that, as part of the United Nations human rights advisory services programme, assistance be given to establishing a reference library on human rights, for human rights fellowships and for seminars and training courses.

With regard to advisory services, immediate emphasis should be placed in 1987 on awarding three fellowships and on organizing a national training course in human rights.

Human Rights Commission action. By a resolution adopted at a closed meeting on 1 March and made public on 2 March 1987,(89) the Commission on Human Rights expressed appreciation to the Special Representative for his report and to Haiti for its co-operation. It invited Haiti to continue developing full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to consider adopting measures indicated by the Special Representative, particularly: training and instruction of police, military and prison personnel in respect for human rights; measures to strengthen the independence of the judiciary; absolute prohibition of torture; establishment of a panel of eminent Haitians to investigate and report on past human rights abuses; and the possibility of inviting international observers to forthcoming legislative and presidential elections. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to maintain contacts with Haiti with a view to responding to any request for advice or technical assistance in the field of human rights. It invited Governments and organizations to respond positively to requests by Haiti for assistance in the field of human rights coming through the Secretary-General. It invited the Secretary-General to facilitate the establishment of contacts between Haiti, UNDP and the United Nations Centre for Human Rights to ensure that human rights were taken into account in assistance projects, and invited him to award three fellowships to qualified Haitians for training in the following areas, as indicated by the Special Representative: the role of the police in promoting and protecting human rights; human rights of prisoners and detainees; and human rights in the administration of justice. It further invited him to request DPI to assist in disseminating information on human rights in Haiti, and urged him, in co-operation with the Government, to finalize the dates and arrangements for a training course on human rights in Haiti.

Recommending that Haiti actively consider becoming a party to international human rights instruments, the Commission decided, in view of the Special Representative's findings and the information provided by the Government, to discontinue its consideration of the situation in Haiti. It recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the Special Representative's report be made public to encourage assistance to Haiti in its efforts to bring about full respect for human rights. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to appoint an expert to assist Haiti, through direct contacts, to take the necessary action to restore fully human rights, requesting that expert to report in 1988 on those contacts and formulate recommendations for the full restoration of human rights.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/140, decided that the Special Representative's report on the situation of human rights in Haiti should be made public and approved the Commission's decision to request the Secretary-General to appoint an expert.

In accordance with that request, the Secretary-General, on 8 October, entrusted Mr. André Braunschweig (France), a member of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, with the expert mission to Haiti.

Middle East

Lebanon

Communication. On 13 February 1987,(90) Iraq transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights a letter of the same date from PLO drawing the Commission's attention to the siege of four Palestinian refugee camps in Beirut and southern Lebanon. The situation in the camps was the subject of a number of communications by the Security Council during the year (see p. 286).

Human Rights Commission action. On 11 March,(91) the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 29 to 2, with 12 abstentions, expressed its dismay at the grave situation in the Palestinian camps in Lebanon and strongly condemned the repeated attacks on them, including a siege which had prevented the delivery of food and medical supplies for 155 days.

By a resolution on the situation in southern Lebanon, adopted on the same date by a roll-call vote of 26 to 1, with 15 abstentions,(92) the Commission strongly condemned Israel for its human rights violations manifested in acts of aggression, bombardments of civilians, detentions and other arbitrary practices and called on it to end such practices immediately and implement relevant Security Council resolutions requiring its immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal from all Lebanese territory and respect for the Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity. The Commission called on Governments to refrain from providing Israel with economic, political and military aid that encouraged it to persevere with its aggression and expansion policy. The Secretary-General was requested to bring the resolution to Israel's attention and invite Israel to provide information on the extent of its implementation. He was asked to report to the General Assembly in 1987 and to the Commission in 1988 on the results of his efforts.

In accordance with the Commission's request, the Secretary-General reported(93) that he had asked Israel in July for information on the implementation of the Commission's resolution; as at 25 August he had received no reply.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 42/425 of 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Territories occupied by Israel

In 1987, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and other bodies (see p. 296).

Communications. In January,(94) Iraq transmitted to the Centre for Human Rights for consideration by the Commission three reports by PLO: two containing allegations of Israeli practices in violation of human rights in the occupied Palestinian territories during 1986, and a third(95) describing the conditions of detention of Palestinian prisoners and detainees in Israeli prisons in the occupied territories.

In a February document(96) submitted to the Commission Chairman, Israel stated its position on the applicability of the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention in Judaea, Samaria and Gaza.

The Syrian Arab Republic in March(97) described the situation in the Golan Heights and alleged Israeli human rights violations there, charging that they had recently intensified.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In January 1987,(98) the Secretary-General reported that, as requested by the Commission in 1986,(99) he had brought the Commission's two 1986 resolutions on human rights violations in the Israeli occupied territories to the attention of Governments, General Assembly and Security Council members, the Special Committee on Israeli practices and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; they had also been transmitted to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) and intergovernmental organizations and were well publicized through United Nations press releases, publications, audio-visual programmes and journalists' encounters on the question of Palestine.

Also in accordance with a 1986 Commission request,(99) the Secretary-General submitted a list of all United Nations reports issued since 14 March 1986 on the situation of the population of the occupied Arab territories.(100)

Human Rights Commission action. By a 19 February resolution,(101) adopted by a roll-call vote of 28 to 8, with 6 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that occupation itself was a fundamental violation of the human rights of the civilian population of the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine, and that Israel's continuous grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) and the 1977 Additional Protocols to the Conventions(102) were war crimes and an affront to humanity. Denouncing Israel's continued refusal to allow the Special Committee on Israeli practices access to the territories, it called on it to allow the Committee to visit the territories. The Commission reiterated the Special Committee's concern at Israel's policy based on the so-called "homeland" doctrine envisaging a monoreligious (Jewish) State that included territories occupied by Israel since 1967—a policy which, the Committee affirmed, not only denied the population its right to self-determination but was also the source of systematic human rights violations.

The Commission rejected and reiterated its condemnation of Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and its attempts to subject the West Bank and Gaza Strip to Israeli laws, and strongly condemned the "iron-fist" policy against the population of the occupied territories. It strongly condemned Israeli policies and practices and administrative and legislative measures to promote and expand the establishment of settler colonies, as well as the following practices: annexation of parts of the territories, including Jerusalem; continued establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements on Arab lands and the transfer of an alien population there; arming of settlers to commit violence; attacks against Moslem and Christian religious and holy places; evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants and the denial of their right to return; confiscation and expropriation of Arab property and the destruction and demolition of Arab houses; mass arrests, collective punishments, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population, as well as attacks and use of tear-gas against prisoners; pillaging of archaeological and cultural property and systematic repression of cultural and educational institutions; attacks against Palestinian students; expropriation and exploitation of the territories' natural wealth, water and other resources; dismantling of municipal services by dismissing elected mayors and municipal councils; and prevention of the flow of Arab aid to the territories.

The Commission called on Israel to: take immediate steps to return displaced Arab inhabitants to their homes and properties; arrange for the immediate return of elected mayors to their municipalities; and refrain from policies and practices which violated human rights in the occupied territories. It again called on all States, particularly the parties to the fourth Geneva Convention, and on international organizations not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the territories, including Jerusalem, and to avoid action or aid that might be used by Israel in its annexation and colonization policies. It requested the Assembly to recommend that the Security Council adopt measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, and asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of Governments, United Nations bodies and agencies and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations, to give it wide publicity and to report to the Commission in 1988, also bringing to its attention all United Nations reports on the situation appearing until then.

By another resolution adopted on the same day, by a roll-call vote of 29 to 1, with 12 abstentions,(103) the Commission, reaffirming the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories, including Jerusalem, strongly condemned Israel for its refusal to apply that Convention and for its ill-treatment and torture of Palestinian detainees, urging it to grant prisoner-of-war status to all captured Palestinian fighters and to treat them accordingly. It called on Israel to respect its obligations under the Charter and other international instruments, requested it to release all Arabs detained for fighting for self-determination and liberation, pending which to accord them prisoner-of-war status, and demanded that it cease all acts of torture and ill-treatment of Arab prisoners. It strongly condemned Israel for deporting Palestinians, calling on it to rescind its deportation decisions. The Commission urged Israel to co-operate with and allow ICRC to visit all Palestinian prisoners in Israel. It requested the Secretary-General to report in 1988 on progress in implementing the resolution, after bringing it to the attention of Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, intergovernmental humanitarian organizations and NGOs.

By a third resolution, also adopted on 19 February, by a roll-call vote of 28 to 1, with 13 abstentions.(104) the Commission condemned Israel for persistently disregarding and defying United Nations resolutions on the Syrian Golan Heights. It again demanded that Israel allow the Special Committee on Israeli practices access to the occupied territories and requested the Secretary-General to provide all financial facilities to the Committee. It called on Israel to rescind its 1981 decision⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the territory, which, the Commission said, had resulted in effective annexation and which it declared null and void; it reaffirmed its request to United Nations Members not to recognize any such measures. The Commission strongly deplored the negative vote and pro-Israeli position of a permanent Security Council member, which had prevented the Council from adopting measures against Israel under Chapter VII of the Charter. It deplored the inhuman treatment, terror and practices contrary to human rights that Israel continued to apply against Syrian citizens in the occupied Golan Heights by reason of their refusing Israeli nationality, and called for an end to such practices. It emphasized that Israel must allow evacuees from among the Golan Heights population to return and recover their property and residences, and firmly emphasized the necessity of total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from all Palestinian and Syrian territories. It asked the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to the attention of Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations, to give it wide publicity and to report to the Commission in 1988.

Sub-Commission action. The Sub-Commission, by a resolution adopted on 1 September by 13 to 1, with 3 abstentions,⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ reaffirmed that Israeli occupation constituted a gross violation of the human rights of the population of the occupied territories. It strongly condemned Israel for: its human rights violations there; its "iron-fist" policy; the annexation of Jerusalem, confiscation of land and establishment of Israeli settlements; its disregard of United Nations resolutions; and its continued occupation and effective annexation of the Golan Heights and the treatment of Syrian citizens there, declaring null and void Israel's 1981 decision⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration there and asking States and international organizations not to recognize any of those laws. Reaffirming that the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to the occupied territories, the Sub-Commission condemned Israel for its refusal to implement it and for the ill-treatment and torture of Palestinian detainees. Expressing alarm at the severe danger faced by the Palestinians, the Sub-Commission reaffirmed their inalienable rights to return to their homeland, to self-determination and the establishment of an independent and sovereign State, and the right of PLO to participate fully in all international efforts concerning the Palestinian issue. It supported the call to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East (see p. 258) and requested the Secretary-General to supply the Sub-Commission in 1989 with an updated list of reports, studies, statistics, documents, and United Nations decisions and resolutions on Palestine and other Arab territories.

Pursuant to a similar request made in 1985,⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ the Secretary-General presented such a list in May 1987.⁽¹⁰⁸⁾

Other alleged human rights violations

Human Rights Commission action. On 11 March 1987,⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights decided by a roll-call vote of 19 to 18, with 6 abstentions, to take no action on a draft text concerning the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Cuba. On the same date,⁽¹¹⁰⁾ by a roll-call vote of 17 to 15, with 11 abstentions, it decided to take no action on a draft text on human rights violations by the United States Government.

In November, Chile introduced in the Third Committee a draft resolution on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Mexico.⁽¹¹¹⁾ By that text, the General Assembly would have deplored actions in Mexico which were incompatible with the provisions of international instruments, requested the Government of that country to respect and promote observance of human rights, and urged it to take various types of actions to deal with human rights violations. The Commission on Human Rights would have been asked to appoint a special rapporteur. The draft was subsequently withdrawn.

Mass exoduses

Welcoming steps taken by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons (see Chapter XX of this section), and a 1986 recommendation of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees⁽¹¹²⁾ that the main organs of the United Nations should make fuller use of their respective competences under the Charter for preventing new massive flows of refugees, the Commission on Human Rights, on 11 March 1987⁽¹¹³⁾ invited Governments and international organizations to intensify their co-operation and assistance in efforts to address the problem of mass exoduses, and requested Governments to ensure the effective implementation of the relevant human rights instruments. It asked the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly of action taken pursuant to the Group's 1986 report and to inform the Commission in 1988 of developments concerning the efforts to enable the United Nations to anticipate and react more adequately and speedily to cases requiring humanitarian assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/144 without vote.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Mindful of its general humanitarian mandate under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing scale and magnitude of exoduses of refugees and displacements of population in many regions of the world and by the human suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons,

Conscious of the fact that human rights violations are one of the multiple and complex factors causing mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, as indicated in the study of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on this subject and also in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Aware of the recommendations concerning mass exoduses made by the Commission on Human Rights to its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and to special rapporteurs to be taken into account when they are studying violations of human rights in any part of the world,

Deeply preoccupied by the increasingly heavy burden being imposed, particularly upon developing countries with limited resources of their own and upon the international community as a whole, by these sudden mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Stressing the need for international co-operation aimed at averting new massive flows of refugees in parallel with the provision of durable solutions to actual refugee situations,

Taking note once again of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and mass exoduses,

Recalling that the General Assembly at its forty-first session took note of the recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Recalling its resolutions 35/196 of 15 December 1980, 37/186 of 17 December 1982, 38/103 of 16 December 1983, 39/117 of 14 December 1984, 40/149 of 13 December 1985, 41/70 of 3 December 1986 and 41/148 of 4 December 1986, and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 30(XXXVI) of 11 March 1980, 29(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, 1982/32 of 11 March 1982, 1983/35 of 8 March 1983, 1984/49 of 14 March 1984, 1985/40 of 13 March 1985, 1986/45 of 12 March 1986 and 1987/56 of 11 March 1987,

Welcoming the steps taken by the Secretary-General to establish an early warning system, as mentioned in his report on the work of the Organization submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-first session,

1. Welcomes the steps taken so far by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons in all its aspects, including its root causes;

2. Recalls the recommendation of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees that the principal organs of the United Nations should make fuller use of their respective competencies under the Charter for the prevention of new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

3. Invites all Governments and international organizations concerned to intensify their co-operation and assistance in world-wide efforts to address the serious problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, and also the causes of such exoduses;

4. Requests all Governments to ensure the effective implementation of the relevant international instruments, in particular in the field of human rights, as this would contribute to averting new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

5. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to keep the question of human rights and mass exoduses under review with a view to making appropriate recommendations concerning further measures to be taken in this matter;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on any developments relating to the recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees;

7. Decides to continue consideration of the question of human rights and mass exoduses at its forty-third session.

Genocide

Strongly condemning genocide, the Commission on Human Rights, on 10 March 1987,(114) affirmed the necessity of international co-operation towards its elimination. Noting that many States had ratified or acceded to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,(27) the Commission urged those that had not done so to become parties without delay.

Status of the 1948 Convention

As at 31 December 1987,(18) 97 States had acceded to or ratified the Convention. An additional four had signed it. During the year, Democratic Yemen acceded to the Convention. A list of States that had signed or become parties was annexed to a July report of the Secretary-General(115)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/133 without vote.

Status of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/142 of 13 December 1985 and 41/147 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1986/18 of 10 March 1986 and 1987/25 of 10 March 1987,

Recalling its resolution 260 A (III) of 9 December 1948, by which it approved and proposed for signature, ratification or accession the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,

Reaffirming once again its conviction that genocide is a crime under international law, contrary to the spirit and aims of the United Nations,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Once again strongly condemns the crime of genocide;
2. Reaffirms the necessity of international co-operation in order to liberate mankind from such an odious crime;
3. Notes with satisfaction that many States have ratified the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide or have acceded thereto;

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

Following up a 1986 report,(1) the Secretary-General reported in September 1987(2) on the status of the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims.(3) A list of States that had ratified or acceded to the Protocols as at 21 August 1987 was annexed to his report.

As at 31 December 1987, 70 States and the Council for Namibia had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts). Five States—Burkina Faso, Guatemala, Iceland, Netherlands and Saudi Arabia—did so in 1987. All of these parties—except nine—also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts). Two States—France and the Philippines—adhered only to Protocol II.

Rights of the child

Draft convention

Working group activities. As authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1986,(4) an open-ended working group met from 26 to 30 January and on 6 March 1987(5) to continue drafting a convention on the rights of the child.

The group adopted amendments to articles 6 bis, 9, 10, 12 bis, 16, 16 bis, 18 ter, 18 quater, 18 quinto and 21 ter, concerning, respectively: the right of a child and his parents to leave any country and to return to their own country; encouragement of the production and dissemination of children's books; due regard for a child's ethnic, religious or linguistic background; abolishment of traditional practices prejudicial to children's health; respect for a child's cultural identity and values and those of other civilizations, and for human rights and fundamental freedoms; minority and indigenous children's cultural, religious and educational rights; protection from sexual and other forms of exploitation; prevention of abduction, sale of or traffic in children; and States parties making the convention widely known.

The group also discussed proposals for articles 5 bis, 7 ter, 14, 21, 21 bis, 22, 23, 23 bis and a new unnumbered article, concerning, respectively: protection of the family as the fundamental unit of society; protection of the child's rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly; parents' responsibilities; the convention in relation to States parties' laws or international conventions, treaties or agreements; illegal entry into and presence in a State; establishment of an implementation body and reports under the convention; and rehabilitation of exploited children. Annexed to the group's report(5) were proposed draft articles and amendments which the Group could not discuss for lack of time.

Human Rights Commission action. On 11 March 1987,(6) the Commission on Human Rights decided to continue in 1988 its work on the draft convention with a view to completing it. The Commission requested the Economic and Social Council to authorize a one-week session of an open-ended working group prior to the Commission's 1988 session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1987, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/58 without vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/116 of 4 December 1986, by which the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority to, and to make every effort at its forty-third session to complete, the draft convention on the rights of the child and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session,

Considering that it was not found possible to complete the work on the draft convention during the forty-third session of the Commission on Human Rights,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/48 of 11 March 1987,

1. Authorizes a meeting of an open-ended working group for a period of one week prior to the forty-fourth session of the Commission on Human Rights, with a view to completing the work on the draft convention on the rights of the child at that session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the working group for its meeting prior to and during the forty-fourth session of the Commission to enable it to fulfil its task successfully, and notes the usefulness of providing the working group, in advance of its session, with such working documents as a compilation of all amendments and new proposals and relevant provisions of other international instruments;

3. Draws attention to the need for new proposals to be submitted early in the session of the working group.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/58

29 May 1987 Meeting 18 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/97) without vote, 22 May (meeting 19); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1987/18 & Corr.1, 2), orally amended by Poland; agenda item 17.

On 2 July, Poland introduced and withdrew in the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee a draft text(7) by which the Council would have: authorized a two-week meeting of the working group prior to the Commission's 1988 session; requested the group to make recommendations to the Commission on ways of accelerating the drafting of the convention so that it could be adopted by the General Assembly in 1989; and asked the Secretary-General to make suggestions to the group on ways of preparing background documents which might be useful in the drafting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/101 by recorded vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/166 of 20 December 1978, 34/4 of 18 October 1979, 35/131 of 11 December 1980, 36/57 of 25 November 1981, 37/190 of 18 December 1982, 38/114 of 16 December 1983, 39/135 of 14 December 1984, 40/113 of 13 December 1985 and 41/116 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 20(XXXIV) of 8 March 1978, 19(XXXV) of 14 March 1979, 36(XXXVI) of 12 March 1980, 26(XXXVII) of 10 March 1981, 1982/39 of 11 March 1982, 1983/52 of 10 March 1983, 1984/24 of 8 March 1984, 1985/50 of 14 March 1985, 1986/59 of 13 March 1986 and 1987/48 of 11 March 1987, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1978/18 of 5 May 1978, 1978/40 of 1 August 1978, 1982/37 of 7 May 1982, 1983/39 of 27 May 1983, 1984/25 of 24 May 1984, 1985/42 of 30 May 1985, 1986/40 of 23 May 1986 and 1987/58 of 29 May 1987 and Council decisions 1980/138 of 2 May 1980 and 1981/144 of 8 May 1981,

Reaffirming that children's rights require special protection and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of unsatisfactory social conditions, natural disasters, armed conflicts, exploitation, hunger and disability and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations in promoting the well-being of children and their development,

Convinced of the positive contribution which an international convention on the rights of the child, as a standard-setting accomplishment of the United Nations in the field of human rights, would make to protecting children's rights and ensuring their well-being,

Noting with appreciation that further progress was made during the forty-third session of the Commission on Human Rights in the elaboration of a draft convention on the rights of the child,

Bearing in mind that 1989 marks the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Rights of the Child and of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Child,

Considering that these anniversaries could constitute an appropriate target date for completion of the work on a draft convention on the rights of the child and for its adoption by the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session in 1989,

1. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/58, in which the Council authorized a meeting of an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights for a period of one week prior to the forty-fourth session of the Commission in order to facilitate completion of the work on a draft convention on the rights of the child;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to authorize convening, if necessary and within existing resources, the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights for an additional week at its January 1988 session in order to complete a draft convention so as to facilitate its conclusion in 1989, the year of the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Rights of the Child and of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Child;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority to, and to make every effort at its sessions in 1988 and in 1989 to complete, a draft convention on the rights of the child and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

4. Invites all Member States to offer their active support to the completion of a draft convention on the rights of the child in 1989;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the working group in order to ensure its smooth and efficient work in the fulfilment of its important task;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Question of a convention on the rights of the child".

Sale of children and child labour

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1983 Economic and Social Council request,(8) the Secretary-General submitted to the Sub-Commission in May 1987 a report on the sale of children and child labour based on information from States, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional commissions and NGOs. After giving a synopsis of the replies received and following an examination of the three main manifestations of the sale of children—adoption, forced labour, prostitution—and the causes of the problem, he pointed to relevant provisions in international human rights instruments, including the 1959 declaration of the rights of the child.(10)

Questions related to the sale of children and child labour were also considered by the Sub-Commission's Working Group on Slavery and Slavery-like Practices. The Sub-Commission, in a 4 September resolution on the Working Group,(11) drew the Secretary-General's attention to the Group's recommendation that his report on the sale of children be put back on the drawing board and, with the help of United Nations agencies and NGOs, be given a deeper and broader accent, including matters related to organ transplant and the foetus trade.

Youth and human rights

On 10 March 1987, the Commission on Human Rights adopted two resolutions related to youth and their enjoyment of human rights. By the first,(12) adopted by a roll-call vote of 34 to none, with 8 abstentions; it reaffirmed the role of youth in promoting full enjoyment of human rights and the fact that youth attached crucial importance to promoting international peace and co-operation, the full enjoyment of human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order. The Commission appealed again to Governments to consider measures to ensure that young people had equal opportunities to participate in the economic, social, cultural, civil and political life of society, as well as in promoting human rights, international peace and co-operation, understanding, tolerance and friendship among nations. Taking note of a 1985 Sub-Commission resolution(13) requesting one of its members to prepare a report on human rights and youth, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Sub-Commission's Rapporteur in completing his task.

By a second resolution,(14) adopted by a roll-call vote of 41 to none, with 1 abstention, the Commission called on States, governmental and non-governmental organizations, United Nations organs and agencies to devote constant attention to the exercise and use by young people of all human rights, including the right to education and vocational training and the right to work, with a view to ensuring full employment and solving unemployment among them. It called on States to take legislative, administrative and other action for the exercise by youth of all human rights, in order to create conditions for their active participation in economic and social development.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1987/44, called on States, governmental and non-governmental organizations and interested United Nations bodies and agencies to continue to give priority to formulating and implementing measures to secure the exercise by youth of the rights to life, education and work in conditions of peace.

A similar appeal was made by the General Assembly in resolution 42/52, by which the Commission for Social Development was asked to consider on a regular basis the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work.

Women

On 3 September 1987,(15) the Sub-Commission decided to consider in 1991 and at its future sessions the role and equal participation of women in development in connection with the new international economic order and the promotion of human rights. It asked the Secretary-General to make available at each of its future sessions the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and of the Commission on the Status of Women.

Sexual minorities

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1983 Economic and Social Council request.(8) the Secretary-General submitted to the Sub-Commission in March 1987 a report on the legal and social problems of sexual minorities, including male prostitution(16), based on information received from Governments, specialized agencies, regional commissions and NGOs.

Analysing the information made available to him, the Secretary-General noted that it did not shed light on de facto cases of discrimination against persons belonging to sexual minorities; communications received from Governments generally referred to the judicial situation regarding prostitution and most of the organizations reported that they had no relevant material or facts on the subject. The Secretary-General also gave a synopsis of views expressed by the Human Rights Committee in 1982 on an alleged case of discrimination regarding homosexuality.

Human rights and science and technology

Implementation of the Declaration on the use of scientific and technological progress

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1980 General Assembly request(17) and subsequent annual reminders for information concerning implementation of the 1975 Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly seven additional replies—from six Governments and one United Nations body—received as at 4 November 1987.(19)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/100 by recorded vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is one of the decisive factors in the development of human society,

Recalling once again the great importance of the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3384(XXX) of 10 November 1975,

Considering that implementation of the Declaration will contribute to the strengthening of international peace and the security of peoples and to their economic and social development, as well as to international co-operation in the field of human rights,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Realizing that the science and technology of our times create possibilities for providing an abundance of wealth on Earth and establishing material conditions for the prosperity of society as well as the all-round development of every person,

Seriously concerned that the results of scientific and technological progress could be used for the arms race and development of new types of weapons to the detriment of international peace and security and social progress, human rights and fundamental freedoms and the dignity of the human person,

Emphasizing the growing importance of intellectual work, of interaction between science, technology and society and the humanistic, moral and ethical orientation of science and of scientific and technological progress,

Convinced that in the era of modern scientific and technological progress the resources of mankind and the activities of scientists should be used for the peaceful economic, social and cultural development of countries and for the improvement of the living standards of all people,

Recognizing that the establishment of the new international economic order calls in particular for an important contribution to be made by science and technology to economic and social progress,

Bearing in mind that the exchange and transfer of scientific and technological knowledge is one of the important ways to accelerate the social and economic development of the developing countries,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and scientific and technological developments,

1. Stresses the importance of the implementation by all States of the provisions and principles contained in the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind in order to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Calls upon all States to make every effort to use the achievements of science and technology in order to promote peaceful social, economic and cultural development and progress and to put an end to the use of these achievements for military purposes;

3. Also calls upon States to take all necessary measures to place all the achievements of science and technology at the service of mankind and to ensure that they do not lead to the degradation of the natural environment;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take into account in their programmes and activities the provisions of the Declaration;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention, in its consideration of the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments", to the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration;

6. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to take appropriate measures and to assist the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in preparing the study requested by the Commission in its resolutions 1982/4 of 19 February 1982, 1984/29 of 12 March 1984 and 1986/11 of 10 March 1986;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

Human rights and peace

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1985 Sub-Commission request,(20) the Secretary-General submitted in 1987 a report on the Sub-Commission's contribution to strengthening international peace and security and the achievement of the objectives and tasks of the International Year of Peace (1986)(21), based on information received from Governments, United Nations bodies, the Human Rights Committee, specialized agencies, a regional commission and NGOs as at 26 August.

Sub-Commission action. Taking note with appreciation of the Secretary-General's report, the Sub-Commission on 31 August 1987,(22) said it looked forward to receiving the Secretary-General's report on the relationship between human rights and international peace, requested by it in 1985.(23)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/99 by recorded vote.

Human rights and use of scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination of the peoples of the United Nations to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to reaffirm faith in the dignity and worth of the human person, to maintain international peace and security and to develop friendly relations among peoples and international co-operation in promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind and the Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace, as well as other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 38/75 of 15 December 1983, the General Assembly resolutely, unconditionally and for all time condemned nuclear war as being contrary to human conscience and reason, as the most monstrous crime against peoples and as a violation of the foremost human right—the right to life,

Recalling its resolutions 37/189 A of 18 December 1982, 38/113 of 16 December 1983, 39/134 of 14 December 1984, 40/111 of 13 December 1985 and 41/113 of 4 December 1986,

Taking note with appreciation of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1982/7 of 19 February 1982, 1983/43 of 9 March 1983, 1984/28 of 12 March 1984, 1986/10 of 10 March 1986 and 1986/29 of 11 March 1986,

Conscious that the widening availability of technology and the achievement of scientific and technical advances bring new possibilities for peaceful and productive enterprise, open new perspectives for the progress of civilization and provide increasing opportunities to better the conditions of life of peoples and nations, but, at the same time, present new dangers, if used for the creation of new types of weapons deadlier than those which already are capable of transforming an armed conflict from human tragedy to human annihilation,

Conscious that, while it is only the creative genius of man that makes progress and the development of civilization possible in a peaceful environment, human life must be recognized as supreme,

Convinced that all rights and freedoms, as well as all material goods and spiritual wealth that both man and nations possess, have a common foundation—the right to life, freedom, peace and aspiration for happiness,

1. Reaffirms that all peoples and all individuals have an inherent right to life and that the safeguarding of this cardinal right is an essential condition for the enjoyment of the entire range of economic, social and cultural, as well as civil and political, rights;

2. Stresses once again the urgent need for the international community to make every effort to strengthen peace, remove the growing threat of war, particularly nuclear war, halt the arms race and achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control and prevent violations of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and the self-determination of peoples, thus contributing to ensuring the right to life;

3. Stresses further the foremost importance of the implementation of practical measures of disarmament to bring an end to the waste of valuable resources and to streamline them to fight economic backwardness and poverty and to accelerate social and economic progress, particularly for the benefit of developing countries;

4. Calls upon all States, appropriate United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to take the necessary measures to ensure that the results of scientific and technological progress, the material and intellectual potential of mankind, are used to solve global problems exclusively in the interests of international peace, for the benefit of mankind and for promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Stresses that a world without nuclear weapons and violence would open vast opportunities for the joint efforts of all nations aimed at solving urgent humanitarian problems and at co-operating in the areas of science, education, medicine, arts and others, thus guaranteeing the necessary conditions for the harmonious development of the individual;

6. Again calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take effective measures with a view to prohibiting, in accordance with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, any propaganda for war, in particular the formulation, propounding and dissemination of and propaganda for doctrines and concepts aimed at unleashing nuclear war;

7. Looks forward to further efforts by the Commission on Human Rights to ensure the inherent right of all peoples and all individuals to life;

8. Decides to consider this question at its forty-third session under the item entitled “Human rights and scientific and technological developments”.

Japan did not believe that the main thrust of the text was directly related to the agenda item—human rights and scientific and technological developments.

Speaking for the Nordic countries, Sweden said that although they supported proposals which could help stop the arms race, they were of the opinion that those issues should be considered in the relevant forums. They had reservations on paragraph 6 similar to those they had on article 20 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights(24) on the same subject. They also had reservations on the third preambular paragraph which referred to Assembly resolutions they had not been able to support.

International co-operation in human rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1987,(25) by a roll-call vote of 40 to none, with 2 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights called on States to base their activities for promoting and protecting human rights on relevant international human rights instruments and to refrain from activities inconsistent with that legal framework. Considering that such co-operation should make an effective contribution to preventing mass and flagrant human rights violations, to promoting human rights and fundamental freedoms and to strengthening international peace and security, the Commission emphasized that such co-operation should be guided by justice and equality with due respect for the dignity of all peoples without any discrimination. It noted the importance that the promotion of human rights had secured on the international agenda and in relations between States, and invited all States, when communicating their views on strengthening international co-operation, to reflect the measures they had taken for achieving such co-operation.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(26) the Secretary-General submitted in 1987 replies from 11 Governments giving their views on the means and methods of strengthening international co-operation in the field of human rights as at 4 November 1987.(27)

Chapter XVIII

Women

During 1987, the United Nations continued to take steps to implement the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, strengthening focal points, which served as both channels and advocates for the advancement of women, improving procedures for monitoring the implementation of the Strategies and endeavouring to establish five-year targets to increase the percentage of women in professional and decision-making positions within the United Nations system. Resolutions on the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies were adopted by both the General Assembly (42/62) and the Economic and Social Council (1987/18).

In addition, the Assembly and Council each adopted resolutions on the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (42/60 and 1987/3, respectively), the United Nations Development Fund for Women (42/63 and 1987/26) and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (42/65 and 1987/25).

Other action by the Assembly dealt with the participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation (42/61), the role of women in society (42/64) and the mobilization and integration of women in development (42/178).

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its 1987 session (New York, 12-16 January), recommended eight resolutions and two decisions to the Economic and Social Council. Acting on those recommendations, the Council adopted resolutions on the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and system-wide co-ordination of the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies (1987/86); the improvement of the status of women in the United Nations (1987/19) (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter III); future world conferences on women (1987/20); improving the Commission's ability to carry out its mandate (1987/21); measures to strengthen the Commission's role and functions (1987/22); the enlargement of the Commission (1987/23); and the Commission's long-term work programme (1987/24).

The Council also adopted resolutions on strengthening the work of the United Nations in integrating women in economic development programmes and activities (1987/65); the co-ordination of intergovernmental activities to integrate women in economic development (1987/182); and the programme budget proposals for the 1988-1989 biennium concerned with monitoring and review and appraisal of the Forward-looking Strategies (1987/120).

The United Nations Development Fund for Women observed its tenth anniversary in 1987, supporting 27 projects valued at $40,000 or more; new activities valued at $5.1 million were approved.

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, at its sixth session, considered the initial reports of eight States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women on their implementation of the Convention. Three States became parties to the Convention in 1987, bringing the total number to 94.

Advancement of Women

Implementation of the Nairobi Strategies

In response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General, in September 1987, submitted a report⁽²⁾ on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women. The Strategies had been adopted by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women and endorsed by the Assembly in 1985.⁽³⁾ The report covered action taken by the United Nations system to strengthen focal points for the advancement of women, to monitor, programme and co-ordinate implementation of the Strategies and to establish new five-year targets for the participation of women in management and decision-making positions.

The Secretary-General concluded that despite financial constraints, progress had been achieved in implementing the Strategies. Several United Nations organizations had strengthened their focal points in terms of both internal and external communication channels and modes of co-operation, and 64 United Nations organizational units listed such focal points in the 1987 Directory of Focal Points within the United Nations System on Questions relating to Women. However, several focal points, especially at the regional level, needed resources and authority to incorporate the interests of women into the activities of their respective organizations.

There was a need for a simplified system of reporting on the monitoring of the Strategies, and improved procedures should be established system-wide for direct reporting to the Commission on the Status of Women. The systems for reporting on the system-wide medium-term plan and cross-organizational programme analyses (COPAs) and the inter-agency meetings on women should be used to determine the extent to which the Strategies had been translated into the medium-term plans, programme budgets and projects of the system.

While a number of United Nations organizations had improved their recruitment and promotion of women, few had established five-year targets; only the General Assembly and the World Health Assembly had set 30 per cent targets. Therefore, inter-agency consultations on the recruitment of women should be continued, and progress should be reported to the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions and the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination.

The advancement of women was also discussed at the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in September (see p.616). The Consultation stated that social welfare policies should include the promotion of the equality of women and men and that social welfare programmes should promote changes in social and economic structures to make possible the equality of women and their access to all fields of social, political and economic life. Special attention should be paid to implementing that right for young women.

The Commission on the Status of Women, in January,(4) recommended three draft resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council relating to the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for 1990-1995 and the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1987, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Questions) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/62 without vote.

Implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women
The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 40/108 of 13 December 1985 and 41/111 of 4 December 1986, in which, inter alia, it endorsed the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000 and set out measures for their immediate implementation and for the overall achievement of the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, Taking into consideration Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987/18, 1987/19, 1987/20, 1987/21, 1987/22, 1987/23, 1987/24, 1987/25 and 1987/26 of 26 May 1987,

Taking note of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, adopted by the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes, held at Vienna from 7 to 15 September 1987,

Noting with concern the serious impact of the world economic situation on the programmes and plans for the advancement of women, especially in the global context,

Conscious of the important and constructive contribution to the advancement of the status of women made by the Commission on the Status of Women, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system, Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Emphasizing once again the priority of the implementation, monitoring, review and appraisal of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies,

Welcoming the significant progress made by the Commission on the Status of Women at its special session in 1987 in restructuring its agenda along functional lines, developing a systematic long-term programme of work, strengthening and rationalizing its role and functions and mobilizing the resources of the United Nations system as a whole towards the advancement of women by integrating this objective into the programme planning and budgeting processes of the Organization,

Welcoming also the designation by the Secretary-General of the advancement of women as one of two priorities of the Organization for the next biennium,

Recognizing the need for the Commission on the Status of Women to consider at its regular sessions the priority themes for the next five sessions of the Commission, contained in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/24,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

2. Takes note also of resolutions 1, 2 and 4 adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its special session in 1987, in particular its recommendation that the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and the status of women in general should be incorporated as a global priority for the period 1990-1995 in the introduction of the Organization's next medium-term plan;

3. Reaffirms the need for the Forward-looking Strategies to be translated immediately into concrete action by Governments, as determined by overall national priorities, as well as by the organizations of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

4. Reaffirms also the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in matters related to the advancement of women and calls upon the Commission to promote the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies to the year 2000 based on the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and the subtheme "Employment, Health and Education", and urges all organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate with the Commission in this task;

5. Reaffirms further, in the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies, the role of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, in particular the Branch for the Advancement of Women, as the substantive secretariat of the Commission on the Status of Women and as a focal point for matters on women, the catalysing role of the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the role of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women in the promotion of the role of women in the context of the participation of women in development;

6. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/21, in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Commission on the Status of Women, commencing with its thirty-second session, should meet annually until the year 2000, with a long-term programme of work that would allow sufficient preparation for each session;

7. Endorses also Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/24, in particular the annex thereto containing the priority themes for the next five sessions of the Commission on the Status of Women, which should be considered at regular sessions of the Commission under an agenda item entitled "Priority themes", notwithstanding world conferences and preparatory meetings or any process of review and appraisal that might take place;

8. Requests the relevant United Nations bodies to provide focused and action-oriented input when reporting to the Commission on the priority themes;

9. Reaffirms the need for the United Nations to develop an integrated reporting system with the Commission on the Status of Women at its centre and, building upon existing information and resources, to monitor the review and appraisal of progress with regard to the advancement of women, based on clear and relevant statistical and other measurable indicators which will assist Member States in identifying problems and in developing remedial measures, at the national, regional and international levels;

10. Encourages the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields to take into consideration the unique multidisciplinary and cross-organizational mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women, which is of particular importance in co-ordinating the efforts of the United Nations in the economic and social fields towards the advancement of women;

11. Emphasizes, in the framework of the Forward-looking Strategies, the importance of the total integration of women in the development process, bearing in mind the specific and urgent needs of the developing countries, and calls upon Member States to establish specific targets at each level in order to increase the participation of women in professional and decision-making positions in their countries;

12. Emphasizes also the need to give urgent attention to redressing socio-economic inequities at the national and international levels as a necessary step towards the full realization of the goals and objectives of the Forward-looking Strategies;

13. Urges that particular attention be given by the United Nations and Governments to the situation of disabled women, and that Governments take steps to ensure the equalization of opportunities and social justice for and political participation of disabled women in each sector of society;

14. Once again calls upon the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to establish five-year targets at each level for the percentage of women in Professional and decision-making positions, in accordance with the criteria established by the General Assembly, in particular that of equitable geographical distribution, in order that a definite upward trend in the implementation of Assembly resolution 41/206 D of 11 December 1986 be registered in the number of Professional and decision-making positions held by women by 1990, and to set additional targets every five years;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to extend the term of office of the Co-ordinator for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat of the United Nations for a satisfactory period to ensure that the action programme, in which, inter alia, it is recommended that the situation of women in the Secretariat be improved, will continue to be implemented;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to report periodically, through the Commission on the Status of Women, to the Economic and Social Council on activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Forward-looking Strategies;

17. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies an assessment of recent developments that are relevant to the priority themes to be considered at the subsequent session of the Commission on the Status of Women and to transmit to the Commission a summary of relevant views expressed by delegations during the Assembly's debate;

18. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on measures taken to implement the present resolution;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide for the existing weekly radio programmes on women in the regular budget of the United Nations, with adequate provisions for broadcasts in different languages, and to develop the focal point for issues relating to women in the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, which, in concert with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, should provide a more effective public information programme relating to the advancement of women;

20. Decides to consider these questions further at its forty-third session under the item entitled "Forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000".

Monitoring, review and appraisal

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/18 without vote.

Monitoring and review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women
The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the importance attached by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace to monitoring and review and appraisal, as outlined in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, in which the Assembly recommended, inter alia, the further development of the integrated reporting system for monitoring and review and appraisal of progress in the advancement of women, and noting Assembly resolution 41/111 of 4 December 1986,

Stressing the importance of the submission of regular and relevant reports to the Commission on the Status of Women by all Member States and organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, to provide statistical information and analysis on the situation of women at the national, regional and international levels,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the reporting system for periodic review and appraisal of progress in the advancement of women, which identifies past and present problems and suggests remedial measures,

Recognizing that effective monitoring and review and appraisal should be conducted at the sectoral, national, regional and international levels to achieve optimal results,

Mindful of the need to avoid duplication of reporting obligations, especially given the burden that coexisting reporting systems place on Member States, especially those with limited resources, and the financial stringencies facing the United Nations system,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in further developing and implementing the reporting system for monitoring and review and appraisal of progress in the advancement of women, to take into account the following guidelines:

(a) Questionnaires and data-gathering instruments should be as simple, clearly focused and practical as possible, and, to the extent possible, existing reporting systems should be relied on;

(b) A clear and relevant set of statistical and other measurable indicators, such as the level of participation of women in decision-making, in the paid labour force and in the informal sector, comparative earnings of women and men, literacy, training and education and life expectancy, should be identified to facilitate the collection, comparison and analysis of data and the identification of shortfalls in information requirements;

(c) United Nations focal points should be strengthened and regular inter-agency meetings should be held to promote co-ordination among organizations of the United Nations system in review and appraisal;

(d) Reporting at the global level should address the priority themes identified by the Commission on the Status of Women in its future programme of work, and the reports should be made available to the Commission for its consideration of those themes;

(e) The reports submitted by States to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women are of direct relevance to the Commission's task of monitoring and appraising the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

2. Affirms the appropriateness of a two-year cycle of system-wide monitoring of progress made in implementing the Forward-looking Strategies and a five-year cycle of longer-term review and appraisal to continue the cycle established by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace;

3. Invites Member States to co-operate fully with the Commission on the Status of Women in its monitoring and review and appraisal activities and, in particular, to take into account the needs of the United Nations in this regard when developing national machinery and reporting systems;

4. Invites the Secretary-General, the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, and the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to develop and implement, as an integral part of their programmes, a simple, concise and direct system of reporting to the Commission on the impact of their programmes and activities on women and the effectiveness of those programmes and activities in bringing the interests and needs of women into the mainstream of their organizations, and to ensure that such reports are submitted in a timely manner to permit them to be taken into account in the United Nations programming and budgeting process;

5. Authorizes the Commission on the Status of Women, in consultation with the Statistical Commission, the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and other appropriate bodies, to establish formal arrangements for the collection and distribution of the information required for the Commission on the Status of Women to carry out its monitoring and review and appraisal functions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report, through the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-second session, to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1988 on the implementation of the present resolution, with particular regard to paragraph 1.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/18

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/99) without vote, 13 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1987/15); agenda item 19.

Also on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1987/120 without vote.

Proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 26 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, reaffirming the importance attached to the monitoring and co-ordination of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and by the General Assembly in resolutions 40/108 of 13 December 1985 and 41/111 of 4 December 1986, convinced of the need to expand the terms of reference of the Commission on the Status of Women to include the function of monitoring the status of women at the national, regional and international levels, noting that the strategies for subprogrammes 3, 4 and 5 of programme 1 of chapter 21 of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989 place great emphasis on the function of monitoring the status of women at the, national, regional and international levels, and taking note of the statement made by the representative of the United Nations Secretariat to the Commission on the Status of Women, on 16 January 1987, on the incorporation of activities concerned with monitoring and review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989, decided to request the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and other bodies reviewing the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989 to examine the relationship between the programme budget proposals concerned with monitoring and review and appraisal of the Forward-looking Strategies in the light of the views expressed by the Third Committee at the forty-first session of the General Assembly and by the Assembly in its resolution 41/203 of 11 December 1986.

Economic and Social Council decision 1987/120

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/99) without vote, 13 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1987/15); agenda item 19.

The Secretariat representative's statement was annexed to the Commission's report. According to the Secretariat's interpretation of a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(5) the Secretary-General was to implement the revisions to the medium-term plan as modified by the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), taking into account the views expressed by the Assembly's Third Committee. Though a separate subprogramme was excluded, the full content of the work on monitoring, review and appraisal should be included in the programme budget.

System-wide co-ordination

An ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women (New York, 19-20 January 1987)(6) reiterated a 'recommendation of the 1986 inter-agency meeting(7) that women's issues bearing on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies be regularly included in its agenda and that the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs should continue to identify monitoring, review and appraisal methods. In addition, the meeting adopted recommendations on priority themes of the Commission on the Status of Women, the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development (see below) and the update of the world survey on women in development (see below). The Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (Geneva, 16-20 March)(8) took note of the meeting report.

CPC, on 14 September,(9) requested the Secretariat to prepare a COPA on the advancement of women for consideration in, 1989 (see below).

In resolution 42/215 IV, the General Assembly agreed with CPC'S recommendation that a COPA on the advancement of women be submitted to the Committee in 1989.

By resolution 1987/86, the Council requested CPC to initiate the preparation of a COPA on the advancement of women.

Periodic assessments

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/20 without vote.

Future world conferences on women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, in which the Assembly endorsed the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recognizing the importance of periodically assessing at the global level the activities undertaken to implement the Forward-looking Strategies,

1. Recommends that a session of the Commission on the Status of Women of extended duration be held in 1990, with high-level representation of member States, to review and appraise the progress achieved in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

2. Calls upon non-governmental organizations to co-operate in and support activities undertaken to implement the Forward-looking Strategies and the preparations for the session of the Commission in 1990;

3. Recommend that world conferences to review and appraise the progress achieved in the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies be held during the decade of the 1990s, at a date to be determined by the General Assembly not later than 1990, and in 2000;

4. Decides that the Commission on the Status of Women shall be designated as the preparatory body for those world conferences.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/20

26 May 1967 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/99) without vote, 13 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1987/15); agenda item 19.

National machinery

At its 1987 session, the Commission on the Status of Women selected the issue of national machinery for monitoring and improving the status of women as its first priority theme in the area of equality. An interregional seminar (Vienna, 28 September-2 October)(10) made recommendations for action to strengthen national machinery, which should facilitate, among other things: promotion of education and training; creation of adequate mechanisms; allocation of resources; participation of women in policy and decision making and in national development; information and evaluation activities; development of government policies; and measurable targets for implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies. The seminar further recommended that the regional commissions take the lead in developing regional and subregional arrangements for exchanging experiences. International organizations were urged to take the initiative in helping to strengthen national machinery. It was recommended that the Commission's monitoring and evaluation role and its linkages with national machinery be strengthened.

Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) held its seventh session at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 2 to 6 February 1987.(11) The Board reviewed INSTRAW's 1986 activities, long-term perspectives for the Institute's programme, its information programme, co-operation with the regional commissions and network building with correspondents and focal points.

The Board adopted a series of decisions, which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. It examined and approved the priorities for INSTRAW'S 1987 work programme, and recommended that the information, documentation and communication programme be given priority in 1988-1989. It also recommended that the regional commissions, in co-operation with INSTRAW, give priority to indicators and statistics on women and conduct research on national machineries for the advancement of women and the training of women leaders. The regional commissions were invited to assist in disseminating INSTRAW training materials and modules to Member States and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

Discussing long-term perspectives, the Board reiterated the need to strengthen national capabilities of developing countries in the areas of research, training, information and communication on issues relating to women and development and the need to concentrate on network building at the international, regional and national levels. It also stressed that INSTRAW should continue to pay particular attention to innovative training methodologies and the preparation of training materials related to women and development. It invited INSTRAW to co-operate with the correspondents and approved national focal points and recommended that it strengthen joint activities.

INSTRAW activities

Pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,(12) the Secretary-General, in August 1987,(13) transmitted a report on the results of INSTRAW'S programme of action during 1986-1987. The report considered the scope of the work programme, training, information, documentation and communication, network building, long-term perspectives and administrative matters.

Reporting on INSTRAW'S work during 1987, the Director indicated that breakthroughs had been made in statistics and indicators on women, which would be reflected in the system of national accounts and in major international standard classification systems. Moreover, the Institute's training activities had increased sharply; some 30 meetings had been organized in different regions of the world.

National training workshops were held for users and producers of statistics, focusing on the economic activity of women (Jakarta, Indonesia, 5-9 October; Colombo, Sri Lanka, 12-16 October). INSTRAW participated in an Economic Commission for Europe meeting on statistics and indicators on the situation of women (Geneva, 18-20 May).

A consultative meeting on developing materials for training women managers and entrepreneurs was organized (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, 1-5 June) in co-operation with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. INSTRAW and the International Institute for Labour Studies held seminars on training in women and development studies and in elaborating a prototype curriculum (Geneva, 1-3 and 13-15 July). Curriculum development was also the subject of a training course organized by INSTRAW and the Simone de Beauvoir Institute (Montreal, Quebec, 8-11 June).

A training seminar on women in development and planning was organized by INSTRAW, the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (Quito, Ecuador, 16-17 November).

Under the priority programme of the role of women in the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), INSTRAW organized two national training seminars, using materials on women, water supply and sanitation prepared with the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training (Nairobi, Kenya, 9-13 November; Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 23-28 November).

Total income of INSTRAW in 1987 was $921,441, while expenditures totalled $1,501,205. At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities in November, 21 Member States pledged $827,857 to INSTRAW for 1988.

Women and development

Commission action. The Commission on the Status of Women⁽¹⁾ made a number of recommendations concerning the inclusion of women and development in the proposed programme budget for 1988-1989. It proposed that the Secretary-General ensure that the programmes of the regional commissions include women's activities; make provisions for work related to the advancement of women; identify activities related to women where not apparent in output citations; fully implement the revisions to the medium-term plan for 1984-1989; and accord the highest priority to the programme elements concerned with policy developments. In other resolutions, the Commission made further recommendations in regard to women and equality, integration of women in economie and social development in programmes and the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development.

UNICEF action. At its 1987 session,⁽²⁾ the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund discussed a paper⁽³⁾ outlining an implementation strategy for the Fund's policy on women in development. The paper reviewed the objectives of women in development programmes; outlined a multi-pronged strategy; provided operational strategy at the field level; described the monitoring of programme formulation and performance; suggested regional meetings, workshops and symposia to support country programmes; and contained a chronology of activity which would permit verification and scheduling. The Board endorsed the strategy and reaffirmed the need to explore the women's and girls' dimension in all programmes.⁽⁴⁾

UNDP action. During 1987, the Division for Women in Development of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), established in 1986,⁽⁵⁾ prepared a policy paper outlining its goals, according to the UNDP Administrator.⁽⁶⁾ Training activities began for headquarters staff, resident representatives and senior and junior economists. Initiatives to develop a gender-responsive approach to country programming started, for which Norway approved a grant of $62,700.

At the programme level, the Administrator reported^(*) that action had been taken to ensure that women-in-development issues were considered at the outset of programming. Revised programming guidelines were to draw the attention of the Government concerned to General Assembly and UNDP Governing Council actions regarding the role of women in the development process. Draft programme documents were to be reviewed in order to determine the extent to which women-in-development issues were considered.

On 19 June,⁽⁸⁾ the Governing Council noted the establishment of the Division for Women in Development. It also noted the need to avoid duplication between the Division and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM). The Council stressed the need for co-operation between the Division and United Nations organizations and agencies, and emphasized the importance of training in the process of integrating women in development and of applying appropriate perspectives in programme and project design.

UNEP action. In 1987, the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) established an Ad Hoc Group for the Advancement of Women to support the role of women within UNEP, examine women's roles in its programme activities and co-ordinate with its external Committee of Senior Women Advisers on Sustainable Development.(9)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/178 without vote.

Effective mobilization and integration of women in development

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the cross-sectoral and multidisciplinary nature of the issue of women in development and the need to consider the issue in its economic as well as social context,

Emphasizing the vital importance of national as well as world economic growth and development to the effective mobilization-and integration of women in the economy,

Also recognizing the various initiatives taken in other United Nations bodies aimed at improving the integration of women in the process of development,

Bearing in mind paragraph 9 of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recognizing that women contribute significantly to the overall economy, including sectors where the value of their production is not fully accounted for, and that the development process should improve and encourage their greater participation in the labour market and active involvement in all areas of the economy,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on progress in the preparation of the first regular update of the World Survey on the Role Of Women in Development,

1. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/24 of 26 May 1987, particularly the agreement that the Commission on the Status of Women should place appropriate emphasis on issues of women and development, as addressed in chapter II of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

2. Emphasizes the need for a focused, action-oriented approach in the preparation of the update of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development and, in this regard, urges the Secretary-General, in preparing the first draft, to ensure its full conformity with General Assembly resolution 40/204 of 17 December 1985 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/64 of 23 July 1986, in particular by concentrating the update on the issues identified therein;

3. Urges the sectoral, functional and regional inter-governmental bodies of the United Nations in the economic and development fields to contribute actively to the work of both the Economic and Social Council and the Second Committee of the General Assembly relating to the integration of women in economic development, in line with the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development, as agreed to by the Council in its resolution 1987/86 of 8 July 1987;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in order to strengthen further the work of the United Nations in integrating women effectively in economic programme and operational activities, as outlined in his report, to prepare biennially, as an annex to the report called for in paragraph 9 (b) of the present resolution:

(a) An update of mandates governing the integration of women in economic development adopted by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on the Status of Women and by world conferences of the United Nations system;

(c) A compilation of decisions taken by United Nations intergovernmental bodies other than the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly relating to the integration of women in development, beginning with those adopted in 1986;

5. Urges the executive secretaries of the five regional commissions to increase their efforts to integrate women in the development process of their regions, inter alia, by continuing to ensure that activities to integrate women in development are included at all levels of the overall work programme of each commission, and to include in their annual reports an analysis of changes in the situation of women in their regions;

6. Urges Governments to implement fully the economic development objectives outlined in chapter II of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and, in particular, to include measures for the involvement of women, both as agents and as beneficiaries, in their national development plans, and to review the impact on women of development policies and programmes;

7. Recommends that the governing bodies of the development assistance organizations-of the United Nations system continue and intensify efforts to promote the integration of women in development, including their participation in all phases of development programmes and technical co-operation activities;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in exercising his responsibilities relating to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, and the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, in the light of his responsibilities under General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, to ensure that the organizations of the United Nations system continue to implement fully the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development, as agreed to by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1987/86, in their programme, operational and administrative aspects;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To include in the World Economic Survey a brief section summarizing relevant economic indicators reflecting the level of economic attainment of women worldwide, taking into consideration the eighth preambular paragraph of the present resolution, and to keep the section under close review and update it when necessary;

(5) To submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

(c) In that connection, to propose the necessary arrangements, in organizing the work of the Second Committee on the item entitled "Development and international economic co-operation", for a focused discussion under the sub-item entitled "Effective mobilization and integration of women in development";

10. Decides to transmit the present resolution and the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening the work of the United Nations in integrating women effectively in economic development programmes and activities to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields, and to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-second session.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 26, 39; plenary 96.

Updating the world survey on women and development

In January, the Ad Hoc Inter-agency Meeting on Women(10) (see p. 833), bearing in mind the guidelines contained in a 1986 Economic and Social Council resolution,(11) made a number of recommendations for updating the 1985 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development.(12) It recommended, among other things, that the interrelationship, unity and interdependence of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: equality, development and peace be adequately reflected in the update and that special attention be given to population issues. It further recommended that the Advancement of Women Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs should prepare a progress report for the 1987 General Assembly and finalize an outline of the update.

The Secretary-General, in a September report(13) described the approach and process of the update and provided an outline of its chapters, which included an overview and focused on emergency development issues as they related to the role of women in the economy, such as international debt and adjustment, technology, culture, equal working opportunities, food systems and agricultural and industrial development. Other chapters were to discuss the participation of women in major service sectors and in decision-making, women in the informal sector and statistics and indicators regarding women's participation in the economy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, by resolution 42/178, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report, emphasized the need for an action-oriented approach to the update and urged the Secretary-General to ensure its conformity with the 1986 Economic and Social Council resolution(11) and a 1985 Assembly resolution.(14)

Women and science and development

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1986 request by the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development,(15) submitted a report(16) in May 1987 on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies in the area of science and technology for development. The report reviewed approaches taken on the issue of science, technology and women, and provided an overview on progress made and obstacles encountered by the United Nations system. It stated that if women were to advance in science and technology, policy measures must be adopted in favour of women at the national level in the form of incentives and support programmes. International organizations should focus their activities for women on those countries that had shown lack of progress in adopting such measures. The report suggested that possible co-operative efforts between the United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development and INSTRAW included research on the socio-economic implications of science and technology policies of developing countries for women involved in the production process and the development of training exercises to encourage greater awareness among decision-makers responsible for incorporating women's issues into science and technology policy.

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, at its July/August session (see p. 601), recommended(17) that implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies in the area of science and technology for development should be one of the overall priorities for 1988-1989.

Integration of women in economic development programmes

In response to a 1986 Economic and Social Council resolution,(18) the Secretary-General, in June 1987, submitted a report(19) on strengthening United Nations work in integrating women in economic development programmes and activities. It discussed the incorporation of women-related activities in the programme budget for 1988-1989 and the Forward-looking Strategies in the medium-term plan for 1990-1995, the integration of women in decision-making and policy formulation, and co-ordination of United Nations programmes dealing with women. The report stated that the number of subprogrammes containing work related to women had increased from 34 in the 1986-1987 biennium to 40 in the 1988-1989 proposals out of a total of 320 sub-programmes in the economic and social sectors. The number of major programmes that included activities related to women and development had increased from seven to 13 out of a total of 16. All of the five regional commissions had activities related to women, which had also been expanded.

In an October addendum,(20) the legislative mandates governing integration of women in economic development derived from United Nations resolutions and decisions and by special United Nations conferences were completed, as were major programmes and their respective sub-programmes in the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget.

In a May 1987 report on co-ordination,(21) the Secretary-General discussed inter-agency arrangements for co-ordinating activities related to the integration of women in economic development, which, he said, was one of the areas that cut across sectoral lines, and as such deserved more active co-ordination. In order to integrate women, it was necessary to train staff, develop up-to-date data systems and establish a monitoring and evaluation system; those were areas where joint undertakings would be possible. Noting that NGOs and national development agencies played a crucial role in enhancing the role of women in development, the Secretary-General considered that it would be advantageous to establish closer co-ordination of efforts between them and the United Nations system.

The Secretary-General's suggestions were considered by CPC in the framework of co-ordination (see p. 928).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/65 without vote.

Strengthening the work of the United Nations in integrating women effectively in economic development programmes and activities

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware of its central role in co-ordinating the activities of United Nations organizations and programmes to integrate women in economic development,

Recalling paragraph 338 of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in which the Economic and Social Council is encouraged to play a more forceful and dynamic role in reviewing and co-ordinating all activities of the United Nations system relevant to women's issues,

Aware of the continued importance of the interrelatedness of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women—equality, development and peace,

1. Takes note of the information contained in the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening the work of the United Nations in integrating women effectively in economic development programmes and activities;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, bearing in mind the goals and principles of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, to prepare for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, on the basis of the information already included in his report, an addendum containing a compilation of all legislative mandates governing the integration of women in economic development, including the appropriate sections of international strategies, plans and programmes of action, in order to assist the General Assembly in assessing their continuing relevance for the work programme of the Commission on the Status of Women, and to identify all subprogrammes and major programmes in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989 which contain activities related to the integration of women in economic development, including regional subprogrammes, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1986/65 of 23 July 1986;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to make specific recommendations aimed at enhancing co-ordination in the implementation of the economic development measures contained in the Forward-looking Strategies, having due regard to the matters set out in paragraph 4 (a), (b) and (c) of its resolution 1986/65 and bearing in mind the proposals relating to co-ordination at the intersecretariat level made in section IV of the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination in the United Nations and the United Nations system;

4. Decides to consider those questions and, in particular, the activities related to the integration of women in economic development set out in the relevant chapters of the draft medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995 at its second regular session of 1988, in the light of the views expressed at the thirty-second session of the Commission on the Status of Women.

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/120) without vote, 2 July (meeting 22); draft by Canada (E/1987/C.1/L.S/Rev.1); agenda item 7.

Also, on 8 July, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Council adopted decision 1987/182 without vote.

Co-ordination of intergovernmental activities to integrate women in economic development

At its 36th plenary meeting, on 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, bearing in mind the proposals relating to co-ordination at the intergovernmental level made in section III of the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination in the United Nations and the United Nations system and the recommendations made thereon by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-seventh session, decided to request the Secretary-General to report on existing arrangements among intergovernmental bodies to co-ordinate activities relating to the integration of women in economic development and to propose measures to improve those arrangements, for consideration at its second regular session of 1988.

Medium-term plan for women and development

Following consideration of a note(22) by the Secretary-General transmitting the draft system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and his report on integrating the Nairobi Strategies into the medium-term plan,(23) the Commission on the Status of Women, in January 1987,(24) requested that in preparing the final draft, the guidelines for presentation of the plan as well as specific recommendations for amendments annexed to the resolution be taken into account, with particular attention to the overall introduction to the plan, the introductory analytical narrative for each programme and the elements of each subprogramme.

High-level Committee action. In May 1987,(25) the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (see p. 428) decided to monitor progress made through technical co-operation to integrate women-in-development activities. The Committee requested the UNDP Administrator and the heads of the United Nations development organs to implement the relevant measures of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and to develop guidelines based on the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries.(26) It recommended that the Secretary-General, in formulating his proposals on technical co-operation for the 1990-1995 medium-term plan, specify measures to increase the participation of women.

ACC action. In January,(27) the Ad Hoc Inter-agency Meeting on Women adopted a series of recommendations on the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development (1990-1995). In April,(28) ACC submitted the proposed plan to the Economic and Social Council. The plan was to constitute the framework for system-wide implementation of the Nairobi Strategies; it was composed of 23 subprogrammes organized into six programme areas covering a variety of sectors, including employment; health; education; food, water and agriculture; industry; trade and commercial services; science and technology; communications; housing, settlement, community development and transport; energy; environment; and social services.

CPC consideration. Following consideration of ACC's report on the proposed medium-term plan for women and development, CPC, in April,(29) discussed whether its competence included proposing amendments to the plan. Some proposals were made, but did not receive agreement within the Committee. The Committee agreed, however, that once adopted by the Economic and Social Council, the plan would guide the translation of the developmental aspects of the Nairobi Strategies into the plans and programmes of the individual organizations; the extent of that translation depended on the commitment of the organizations and the decisions of their governing bodies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, by decision 1987/122, the Economic and Social Council deferred until its second regular 1987 session consideration of a draft resolution on the system-wide medium-term plan.

On 8 July, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1987/86 without vote.

System-wide medium-term plan for women and development and system-wide co-ordination of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the measures to promote institutional co-ordination contained in chapter V of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recognizing the need to systematize intersecretariat arrangements for the co-ordination of administrative, operational and programme activities having a bearing on the status of women,

Welcoming the significant contribution made by the formulation of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for the period 1990-1995 and emphasizing the need to focus on activities at the regional and international levels,

Having considered part one of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on its twenty-seventh session,

1. Requests the Secretary-General and the other members of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, when translating the relevant provisions of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for the period 1990-1995 into the respective planning and programming documents of the United Nations and the organizations of the United Nations system, to take into account the views expressed by delegations at the second regular session of 1987 of the Council and at the twenty-seventh session of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

2. Urges the five regional commissions to implement the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and to make every effort to develop fully its regional dimensions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the plan to the attention of all intergovernmental bodies of the United Nations working in the field of economic development;

4. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include a section on women and development in his annual report on operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

5. Recommends the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to make appropriate arrangements for implementing the system-wide medium-term plan, including, as necessary, the designation of lead agencies and arrangements for ad hoc meetings of focal points on women, and for monitoring the implementation of the plan, including the assignment of that responsibility to a subsidiary body, and to report thereon to the Council through the Commission on the Status of Women;

6. Requests the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to initiate the preparation of a cross-organizational programme analysis on matters related to the advancement of women to be examined in 1989, in order to provide baseline data for verifying and monitoring the extent to which progress has been made towards the achievement of the objectives of the system-wide medium-term plan and, in that context, requests the Secretary-General to transmit a report on the cross-organizational programme analysis to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-second session;

7. Invites the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system to give due consideration to the system-wide medium-term plan, particularly as it affects their own work programmes, and to make provision for its implementation in their medium-term plans, or equivalent documents, and programme budgets;

8. Requests all organizations concerned to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the measures taken or proposed to implement the system-wide medium-term plan.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/86

8 July 1987 Meeting 36 Adopted without objection

Approved by Third Committee (E/1987/128) without vote, 3 July (meeting 13); draft by Commission on women (E/1987/15), orally amended; further orally amended in Council following informal consultations; agenda item 15.

Following adoption of the text, Poland, on behalf of the socialist countries, stressed that United Nations organizations should not overlook the fact that their objective must be implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies and that the plan was one instrument among others for implementing them.

Denmark, on behalf of the member States of the European Economic Community, and supported by Norway and Australia, regretted that the text did not contain a clear endorsement of the plan, but considered that it implied its de facto acceptance. Denmark also believed, as did Norway and Australia, that the text authorized the secretariats of the United Nations system to implement the Strategies through the plan—a view confirmed by the Director General for Development and International Economic Co-operation.

The United States expressed the opinion that operative paragraph 1 was not binding, with which the USSR agreed.

UN Development Fund for Women

UNIFEM observed its tenth anniversary in 1987.

The Consultative Committee on UNIFEM met twice during the year in New York, from 30 March to 8 April and from 31 August to 4 September. The Committee considered that UNIFEM should continue for the time being to focus its catalytic efforts on activities involving UNDP. However, once all new posts had been filled and UNDP's Division of Women in Development, established in 1986, was operational, UNIFEM could shift its focus to other institutions, including regional development banks and the World Bank. The Committee requested that its mandate as a policy advisory body should be reflected by moving policy questions up on its agenda. It agreed to changes in the timing of future sessions to coincide with UNDP's budgeting cycle. It stressed the need for UNIFEM to share its findings more widely including processes to group promotion, management capacities of NGOs, project duration and revision of goals during project implementation.

In a report on the 1987 activities of the Fund,⁽³⁰⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that UNIFEM began 1987 with 280 ongoing activities, about two thirds of which were implemented either by Governments or NGOs. Of the 122 project proposals received during the year, 27 projects valued at $40,000 or more were supported and an additional 42 small-scale activities were assisted. The total value of newly approved projects was $5.1 million. Evolving from a project-centred to a programming approach, UNIFEM designed an operational framework for Asia and the Pacific, with agriculture and food security, industry, the environment and tourism as its major areas.

The Fund's total income in 1987 amounted to $6.2 million and expenditures to $6.3 million. At the end of the year, the Fund's balance was $12.2 million, of which unspent allocations totalled $6.9 million. Contributions from 36 Member States amounted to $4.8 million, a 17 per cent increase over 1986, exclusive of special contributions earmarked for specific projects. At the November 1987 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, 40 countries pledged $4.7 million to UNIFEM general resources for 1988. Total pledges were expected to reach $5.6 million.

In October,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the Administrator's report on UNIFEM's 1986 activities to the General Assembly, which by decision 42/446 of 11 December took note of that report.

UNDP Council action. On 18 June 1987,⁽³²⁾ the UNDP Governing Council commended UNIFEM's new programming approach, urged the Fund to focus on the active consideration of women in mainstream programmes and projects and noted the measures taken by the Administrator to finalize and implement guidelines on the working relationship between UNDP and the Fund. The Council requested the Administrator and the UNIFEM Director to review the recommendations of a recent study evaluating the Fund and to determine how the issues raised therein could be addressed.

In December,(33) the UNDP Administrator and Fund Director submitted a review of the study. They discussed UNIFEM's operational policies and organization, its relationship with UNDP and co-operation with United Nations organizations, Governments and NGOs. Annexed to the report were an examination of the steps taken by UNDP and the Fund to address the issues raised in the study and an analysis of the implications for UNIFEM of a potential change-over from a full to a partial funding base, prepared by the Fund's secretariat in response to a May request of the UNIFEM Consultative Committee.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/26 without vote.

Observance of the tenth anniversary of the United Nations Development Fund for Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 31/133 of 16 December 1976, establishing the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and setting forth the criteria and arrangements for its management,

Recognizing the dual priorities set forth for the United Nations Development Fund for Women in General Assembly resolution 39/125 of 14 December 1984, namely, to serve as a catalyst in the entire United Nations development co-operation system with the goal of ensuring the appropriate involvement of women in mainstream development activities at pre-investment stages, and to support activities directly benefiting women in line with national and regional priorities,

Recognizing also the achievements of the Fund during its first operational decade and its response to the priorities of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, including its new directions based on a programming approach and substantive priority areas of work, with emphasis on the strengthening of national human and institutional capacities to effect the appropriate involvement of women in mainstream development efforts,

1. Recommends to the General Assembly that it observe, at its forty-second session, during one of its regular meetings, the tenth anniversary of the operational activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

2. Invites non-governmental organizations, including national committees, also to observe the anniversary of the Fund;

3. Urges Member States to pledge contributions to the Fund at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities to be held in November 1987.

The United States doubted the usefulness of observing yet another anniversary in the United Nations system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/63 without vote.

United Nations Development Fund for Women

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the United Nations Development Fund for Women is to serve as a catalyst in the United Nations development co-operation system, with the goal of ensuring the appropriate involvement of women in mainstream development activities at the pre-investment stages, and to support activities directly benefiting women in line with national and regional priorities,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/26 of 26 May 1987 on the observance of the tenth anniversary of the United Nations Development Fund for Women,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General containing the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the report of the Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women at its twenty-first session, and welcomes the constructive co-operation between the Programme and the Fund;

2. Takes note also with satisfaction of the success of the ceremonies celebrating the tenth anniversary of the Fund and expresses its appreciation to all who participated in the ceremonies;

3. Expresses its appreciation also for the financial contributions to the Fund made by Governments, inter-governmental organizations, national committees on the Fund and individuals, all of which have vital roles to play in maintaining and increasing the financial viability of the Fund and the effectiveness of its work;

4. Invites States to continue and, where possible, to increase their contributions to the Fund, and calls upon Governments that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Fund in the future, in order to enable it to give greater support to deserving project requests for technical assistance;

5. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Secretary-General, a report on the activities of the Fund and on the implementation of the present resolution.

Status of women

Commission on the Status of Women

In accordance with a 1986 Economic and Social Council resolution,(1) the Commission on the Status of Women met in New York from 12 to 16 January 1987.(2) It recommended eight draft resolutions and two draft decisions for adoption by the Council. They dealt with: the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and system-wide co-ordination of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies; monitoring, review and appraisal of the implementation of the Strategies; improvement of the status of women in the United Nations (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter III); future world conferences on women; improving the ability of the Commission to carry out its mandate; measures to strengthen the Commission; its possible enlargement; and its long-term work programme. The draft decisions concerned the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's 1988 session and its draft work programme for the biennium 1988-1989.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted four resolutions on the Commission. Resolution 1987/21 was adopted without vote.

Improving the ability of the Commission on the Status of Women to carry out its mandate

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women, which is to promote the rights, status and the advancement of women, matters of the highest priority for the United Nations,

Recalling also the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, in which it was stated that the functions of the Commission should include the monitoring of the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies to the year 2000,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, by which the Assembly approved the recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the need to minimize financial implications and maximize substantive results, as well as the importance of giving higher priority to the concerns of women in United Nations programmes,

Bearing in mind the need for the Commission to monitor and review and appraise the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies in order to ensure that it is carried out expeditiously,

Aware that, as currently scheduled, the Commission will meet only seven times between 1988 and 2000,

Convinced that the current schedule of meetings is inadequate if the Commission is to carry out its mandate and to monitor and review and appraise the implementation by the United Nations of the recommendations contained in the Forward-looking Strategies,

1. Decides that, commencing with its thirty-second session, the Commission on the Status of Women shall meet annually until the year 2000, with a long-term programme of work that will allow sufficient preparation for each session;

2. Recommends that, in order to enhance the effectiveness of the work of the Commission, the officers elected to the bureau of the Commission serve for a term of office of two years.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/21

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/99) without vote, 13 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1987/15); agenda item 19. Financial implications. S-G, E/1987/L.26.

Belgium and the Federal Republic of Germany believed that the decision to have the Commission meet annually was premature and untimely.

Norway would have preferred the question of annual sessions to be considered by the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (see p. 947); it felt that any other procedure was not in accordance with the aim of improving the Council's work. The United Kingdom similarly found that it would have been more appropriate to defer a decision, but that it had joined in the consensus because the majority wished a decision to be taken immediately.

The Council adopted resolution 1987/22 without vote.

Measures to strengthen the role and functions of the Commission on the Status of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Commission on the Status of Women on its 1987 session,

Recalling its resolutions 11(II) of 21 June 1946, 48(IV) of 29 March 1947, 76(V) of 5 August 1947, 304 I (XI) of 14 and 17 July 1950 and 1983/27 of 26 May 1983, concerning the terms of reference of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Considering that over the years the functions of the Commission on the Status of Women have in practice been expanded to include monitoring of the implementation of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year and the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, as well as reviewing and appraising progress made in achieving the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Considering also the necessity of strengthening the capacity of the Commission on the Status of Women to carry out the tasks deriving from the world conferences on women and of improving its effectiveness and its efficiency,

1. Decides to expand the terms of reference of the Commission on the Status of Women to include the functions of promoting the objectives of equality, development and peace, monitoring the implementation of measures for the advancement of women, and reviewing and appraising progress made at the national, subregional, regional, sectoral and global levels;

2. Decides to structure the agenda for the future sessions of the Commission around its functions, namely programming, co-ordination, monitoring and policy development, as shown in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Decides that all requests for documentation for the Commission on the Status of Women shall:

(a) Take into account all ongoing and planned research activities, in order to avoid duplication, rationalize procedures and reduce the reporting burden on Governments;

(b) Where appropriate and feasible, be explicitly related to the United Nations medium-term plan and programme budget.

Enlargement of the Commission on the Status of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in promoting and monitoring the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Bearing in mind the responsibilities of the Commission as the competent intergovernmental body on matters concerning the status of women,

Also bearing in mind that any decision on increased representation should be based on the principle of equitable, balanced geographical representation,

Accepting, in principle, the need for an increase in the membership of the Commission,

Decides to refer the matter to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-second session, and requests the Commission to submit proposals to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1988.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/23

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/99) without vote, 13 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1987/15); agenda item 19.

The Council adopted resolution 1987/24 without vote.

Long-term programme of work of the Commission on the Status of Women to the year 2000

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in promoting and monitoring the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985,

Bearing in mind the responsibilities of the Commission as the competent intergovernmental body on matters concerning the status of women, especially with regard to its policy development function,

Aware of the continued importance of the interrelationships between the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women—equality, development and peace—and the subtheme—employment, health and education,

Mindful of the importance of adopting a co-ordinated and integrated approach to the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies by the United Nations system, whereby recommendations of the Commission would take into account the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and relate to the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Reaffirming its resolution 1982/50 of 28 July 1982 on the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council, especially as it relates to the subsidiary bodies of the Council, and particularly paragraph 4 of the annex thereto, in which the Council called for the streamlining of documentation and programmes of work in order to enable its subsidiary bodies to perform effectively the functions entrusted to them,

1. Endorses the priority themes for the next five sessions of the Commission on the Status of Women set out in the annex to the present resolution; the themes should be considered at regular sessions of the Commission under an agenda item entitled “Priority themes”, notwithstanding world conferences and preparatory meetings or any process of review and appraisal that might take place; the first set of priority themes should be considered by the Commission at its thirty-second session;

2. Decides that the work of the Commission in relation to the priority themes should be closely related to the relevant provisions of the Forward-looking Strategies and of other policy documents, the programmes elaborated in the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and the relevant chapters of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, with a view to ensuring the effective implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies and lasting improvement in the situation of women; the recommendations of the Commission should be addressed, at the national level, primarily to Governments, but also to non-governmental organizations-in particular women’s groups-and research institutions, and, at the regional and international levels, to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and research institutions;

3. Agrees that in the discussion of the priority themes, appropriate emphasis should be placed on issues of women and development, in recognition of the number and complexity of subject areas addressed in chapter II of the Forward-looking Strategies and in the programmes of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development;

4. Recommends, as part of the regular programme of work of the United Nations Secretariat in areas related to the advancement of women, in particular that of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, when regular budgetary or extra-budgetary resources are available, the convening of expert group meetings, as required by the Commission, to assist in the preparation of the work of the Commission on priority themes; the expert groups should be composed of an appropriate number of specialists, taking into account equitable geographical distribution and the involvement of non-governmental organizations, in the field or fields of study addressed under specific priority themes in order to prepare an analysis and preliminary proposals to assist the Commission in making informed, practical and action-oriented policy recommendations; each expert group meeting should be structured like the Expert Group Meeting on Violence in the Family, held at Vienna from 8 to 12 December 1986, and should be timed so as to permit the results of the meeting to be made available to Member States in advance of sessions of the Commission;

5. Recommends that every effort be made to avoid duplication in the collection of data and production of documentation for expert group meetings and for sessions of the Commission, and that the documentation include, where possible, an indication of the extent of major research undertaken or planned in the fields of study addressed under a particular priority theme;

6. Invites the Commission, at each session, when considering the provisional agenda for its next session, to identify and develop the specific work programme required to prepare for the in-depth consideration of the priority themes scheduled for that session.

Women and society

On 30 November, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/64 without vote.

The role of women in society

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the validity of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Noting the importance of the documents adopted by the world conferences held during the Decade,

Stressing that just and lasting peace requires the active participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation,

Stressing also that sustained economic and social progress, including the establishment of a new international economic order, requires the integration of women in the development process,

Bearing in mind that economic inequality, colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, foreign intervention, occupation, alien domination, terrorism in all its forms, acts of aggression and interference in the internal affairs of others and violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms constitute impediments to the achievement of real and genuine equality and to the active integration of women in all spheres of life,

Convinced of the necessity of securing for all women full realization of the rights embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant instruments in this field,

Emphasizing that the achievement of equal and full participation of women in all spheres of activity constitutes an integral part of the political, economic, social and cultural development of all countries,

Aware that efforts to promote the status of women in all its aspects and their complete integration in society go beyond the problem of legal equality and that deeper structural transformations of society and changes in present-day economic relations, as well as elimination of traditional prejudices through education and the dissemination of information, are required to create conditions for women to develop fully their intellectual and physical capacities and to participate actively in the decision-making process in political, economic, social and cultural development,

Mindful, according to respective national legislation, of the need to increase possibilities for both men and women of combining parental duties and household work with paid employment and social activities, and to ensure that the role of women in childbearing should not be the cause of inequality and discrimination and that child rearing demands shared responsibilities among women, men and society as a whole,

Commending and encouraging the increasing participation of women in political, economic, social and cultural life and in the promotion of international peace and co-operation,

Taking note of the meetings, including those of non-governmental organizations, at the World Congress of Women held in Moscow from 23 to 27 June 1987,

Bearing in mind the resolution on equal opportunities and equal treatment for men and women in employment, adopted on 27 June 1985 by the International Labour Organisation,

Reiterating that the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women should be among the developmental and policy priorities of Governments, United Nations organizations, including the specialized agencies, and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Appeals to all Governments, international organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to pay due attention in their activities to the importance of the role of women in society in all its interrelated aspects—as mothers, as participants in political, economic, social and cultural development and as participants in public life;

2. Reaffirms that the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women should contribute to the achievement of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, leading to the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women, to genuine equality of women and men and to the full integration of women in the development process;

3. Invites all Governments to encourage such social and economic development as will ensure the equal participation of women in all spheres of work, equal pay for work of equal value and equal opportunities for education and vocational training, taking into consideration the necessity of combining all aspects of the role of women in society as well as the challenges faced by women in all countries when seeking to combine parental duties and family responsibilities with their full involvement in political, social, economic and cultural development;

4. Appeals to all Governments to promote conditions that will enable women to participate as equal partners with men in public and political life, in the decision-making process at all levels and in the management of different spheres of life in society;

5. Urges all Governments to recognize the special status and social importance of childbearing and child rearing and to take all necessary measures to encourage the support of parenthood, including paid maternity, parental and child-care leave, and to provide women with security for their jobs as long as necessary with a view to allowing them, if they so wish, to fulfill their role as mothers without prejudice to their professional and public activities;

6. Appeals to Governments to promote the establishment of appropriate facilities for the care and education of children as a means of combining parenthood with economic, political, social, cultural and other activities, and thus to assist women towards full integration in society;

7. Calls upon Member States to adopt the necessary effective measures with a view to implementing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies as a matter of priority, including the establishment or strengthening of appropriate mechanisms for the advancement of women, in order to ensure the full participation of women in all spheres of life in their countries;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, when preparing surveys on the role of women in development as well as reports on the world social situation and other relevant surveys, to pay due attention to all the interrelated aspects of the role of women in society;

9. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women to pay due attention to the provisions of the present resolution during the consideration at its next sessions of the priority themes under the heading “Equality”, with a view to formulating recommendations for appropriate action by concerned United Nations organs and bodies.

Women and peace

In accordance with 1986 resolutions of the Economic and Social Council⁽³⁾ and the General Assembly⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General invited Member States to inform him of activities undertaken to implement the 1982 Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation.⁽⁵⁾

In a September 1987 report,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stated that replies had been received from 21 Governments: Byelorussian SSR, Cyprus, Denmark, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iraq, Madagascar, Mexico, Panama, Poland, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zambia. The replies described activities undertaken and results achieved in efforts towards the advancement of women, focusing on the issue of de facto and de jure equality of women and on their political participation in decision-making processes and peace-related NGO activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/61 without vote.

Participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation

The General Assembly,

Confirming the noble goal enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations to maintain peace and security in the world and the determination of the States Members of the United Nations expressed therein to save present and succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

Recalling that the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, in adopting the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000, recognized that women should participate fully in all efforts to strengthen and maintain international peace and security and to promote international co-operation,

Reaffirming the interrelationship of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Expressing the need for equal opportunity for participation by women in the decision-making process, including that related to peace, disarmament and security at national, regional and international levels, including the United Nations system,

Reaffirming its resolution 37/63 of 3 December 1982, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation,

Bearing in mind its resolution 40/102 of 13 December 1985, in which it, inter alia, requested the Commission on the Status of Women to consider measures which may be necessary to implement the Declaration in the context of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/109 of 4 December 1986, in which it recommended that future medium-term plans of the United Nations and the specialized agencies should, in accordance with the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, contain intersectoral presentations of the various programmes dealing with issues of concern to women, including those relating to the participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/24 of 26 May 1987, in which the Council decided that the work of the Commission on the Status of Women relating to the priority themes of the long-term programme of work of the Commission should be closely related to the relevant provisions of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and of other policy documents,

Wishing to encourage the active participation of women in promoting international peace, security and co-operation,

Convinced that increased efforts are required to eliminate still existing forms of discrimination against women in every field of human endeavour,

Conscious of the need to implement the provisions of the Declaration,

1. Pledges its determination to encourage the full participation of women in the economic, social, cultural, civil and political affairs of society and in the endeavour to promote international peace and co-operation;

2. Appeals to all Governments to take the necessary measures to put into practice the principles and provisions of the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation;

3. Invites all Governments to give wide publicity to the Declaration and its implementation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take adequate steps to ensure that publicity is given to the Declaration;

5. Invites all appropriate bodies of the United Nations system that have not yet done so, including the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, to develop and implement comprehensive policies on the three objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and to incorporate them in their medium-term plans, statements of objectives, programmes and other major policy statements;

6. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women to give adequate attention to all the priority themes under the headings of equality, development and peace on account of the complexity of all the matters addressed in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and in other policy documents, including the participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation;

7. Decides to consider the further implementation of the Declaration at its forty-third session, as a sub-item of the item entitled "Forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000".

Elimination of discrimination against women

Convention on discrimination against women

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982(1) under the Convention of the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,(2) held its sixth session at Vienna from 30 March to 10 April 1987.(3)

The Committee had before it eight initial reports of States parties—Bangladesh, Colombia, France, Greece, Poland, Republic of Korea, Spain and Sri Lanka—on legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures they had adopted to give effect to the Convention.

After examining the reports, CEDAW adopted a general recommendation that, in preparing reports, the States parties should follow the general guidelines adopted in 1983(4) and the general recommendation adopted in 1986(5) and that additional information supplementing a report should be sent to the Secretariat at least three months before the CEDAW session that would consider it. By another general recommendation, CEDAW expressed concern over the significant number of reservations which appeared incompatible with the Convention, and welcomed the decision of the States parties to consider reservations at its 1988 meeting. The Committee also urged all States parties to adopt education and public information programmes.

CEDAW also adopted four decisions: it requested the Economic and Social Council to recommend to the General Assembly a draft resolution by which the Assembly would approve eight additional meetings of CEDAW in 1988 (decision 1); invited specialized agencies to submit reports on the implementation of the Convention (decision 2); recommended that States parties consider actions to ensure that adequate time was available to the Committee to consider reports (decision 3); and requested the United Nations system to promote or undertake studies on the status of women under Islamic laws and customs, in particular on such issues as marriage, divorce, custody and property rights, and participation in public life (decision 4).

Communication. On 1 July,(6) France stated that the positions it set forth at the 1987 CEDAW session were not accurately reflected in the Committee's report.(3) It drew attention to certain changes that it would have welcomed in the report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/3 without vote.

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979, by which the Assembly adopted the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 35/140 of 11 December 1980, 36/131 of 14 December 1981, 37/64 of 3 December 1982, 38/109 of 16 December 1983, 39/130 of 14 December 1984, 40/39 of 29 November 1985 and 41/108 of 4 December 1986, and Council resolutions 1983/1 of 17 May 1983, 1984/8 of 22 May 1984, 1984/10 of 24 May 1984, 1985/18 of 28 May 1985 and 1986/4 of 21 May 1986,

Aware of the important contribution that the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women can make to eliminating all forms of discrimination against women and to achieving legal and de facto equality between women and men,

Noting the emphasis placed by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace on the ratification of and accession to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its sixth session, notably general recommendations 2, 3 and 4 of the Committee on ways and means of implementing article 21 of the Convention,

Noting the concern expressed by delegations during the first regular session of 1987 of the Economic and Social Council that certain references to Islamic law as contained in the report of the Committee, in particular in paragraphs 511, 516 and 517, are inappropriate,

1. Welcomes the ratification of or accession to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women by an increasing number of Member States;

2. Urges all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to consider doing so as soon as possible;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention;

4. Urges States parties to make all possible efforts to submit their initial implementation reports in accordance with article 18 of the Convention and the guidelines of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women;

5. Takes note of the report of the Committee on its sixth session and the views expressed by delegations at the first regular session of 1987 of the Economic and Social Council;

6. Takes note also of the general recommendations adopted by the Committee pursuant to the discussion at its sixth session on ways and means of implementing article 21 of the Convention;

7. Recommends to the General Assembly at its forty-second session that no action be taken on decision 4 adopted by the Committee and that the Committee be required to review that decision, taking into account the views expressed by delegations at the first regular session of 1987 of the Economic and Social Council;

8. Recommends also that the General Assembly, at its forty-second session, consider the request of the Committee for additional meetings, on an exceptional basis, as contained in its report, taking into account the views expressed by delegations, the financial situation of the United Nations and the priorities identified by the Secretary-General in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989;

9. Notes with concern the Committee's account of the present constraints within which it operates with regard to the backlog of reports awaiting consideration and encourages a continuing discussion of ways and means of dealing with that problem, including possible adjustment of the reporting system;

10. Welcomes the efforts made by the Committee to rationalize its procedures and expedite the consideration of periodic reports, and encourages the Committee to continue its endeavours to those ends;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to ensure adequate servicing of the Committee;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources and drawing in particular on funds available to the Department of Public Information, to provide, facilitate and encourage public information activities relating to the Committee and the Convention, giving priority to the dissemination of the Convention in the official languages of the United Nations;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General to transmit the report of the Committee to the General Assembly at its forty-second session and to the Commission on the Status of Women.

Iran stated that it had serious reservations about the Convention and was not a party to it, while Pakistan said it had not ratified the Convention since many of its provisions were in conflict with Islamic principles. Oman expressed reservations about CEDAW's report, particularly the references to Islamic society.

The USSR felt CEDAW's terms of reference had been exceeded in the debate on the relationship between the Economic and Social Council and bodies based on international treaties; the Council could not assume the role that must be played by States and by the bodies based on the Convention. Bulgaria remarked that no provision was made under the Convention for CEDAW to submit draft resolutions to the Council; if such an approach was taken, the differences between treaty bodies and the Council's subsidiary bodies would be eliminated. For procedural reasons, the Council should merely take note of CEDAW's report as a whole.

Canada pointed out that CEDAW could make suggestions and general recommendations and could also take decisions on the organization of its own work; nevertheless, the two functions should be clearly separated and it was regrettable that the Committee's conclusions on its work had been presented in decision form.

In Australia's view, which was endorsed by Egypt, paragraphs 7 and 8 of the Council's resolution replaced CEDAW decisions 1 and 4, and the remaining two decisions were covered by paragraph 5, which took note of the Committee's report.

The Council, in resolution 1987/66, recommended that those States which had not done so accede to and implement the Convention, in particular those parts having to do with education, employment and political and economic activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/60 without vote.

The Federal Republic of Germany voiced serious reservations concerning the increased number of CEDAW meetings, and the United States hoped that the meetings would be held without any expenditures additional to the Secretary-General's initial estimates.

The Secretary-General submitted revised estimates for the cost of holding eight additional meetings of the Committee; they included $44,100 for staff travel and subsistence, including $26,600 additional subsistence for the Committee members, and $167,500 for conference servicing.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions recommended that the additional subsistence allowance be reduced from $26,600 to $23,800.(7)

Ratifications, accessions and signatures

As at 31 December 1987, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women had received 94 signatures and 94 ratifications or accessions. During the year, the Convention was signed by Switzerland and ratified or acceded to by Burkina Faso, Malawi and Paraguay.(8)

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report on the status of the Convention,(9) containing information on signatures, ratifications and accessions as at 31 August 1987; reservations and objections made from 1 September and 16 July 1986, respectively, to 31 August 1987; withdrawals of reservations from 27 July 1986 to 31 August 1987; and a statement by France, the United Kingdom and the United States with reference to an objection by the USSR of 15 April 1986.

Chapter XIX

Children, youth and aging persons

Each week of 1987, more than a quarter of a million young children died in the developing countries from frequent infection and prolonged undernutrition. One of every three deaths in the world was that of a child under the age of five. The United Nations Children's Fund tried to reduce infant and child mortality through accelerated immunization programmes and the use of low-cost oral therapies for diarrhoeal and other similar diseases. Breast-feeding and improved weaning practices were also among the crucial strategies, as were health education, maternal health interventions, pregnancy monitoring and child spacing support. Efforts to keep the needs of children on nations' political agendas were stressed, and the significance of safe water supplies and improved sanitation, improvements in the status of women and protection of the female child were reaffirmed as priorities.

Youth unemployment was another area of concern. The Economic and Social Council requested United Nations bodies and national co-ordinating committees to give priority to the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to life, education and work (resolution 1987/44). In other action, it proposed adequate follow-up to the International Youth Year observed in 1985 (1987/45), and stressed the importance of youth's participation in implementing the guidelines for follow-up, affirming at the same time the importance of freedom of association, expression, movement and religion, as well as of economic, social and cultural rights, for the development of young people in all aspects of society (1987/51).

Measures to secure youth's right to education and work (resolution 42/52) and employment opportunities for young people (42/53) were called for by the General Assembly. The Assembly also called for a strengthening of youth programmes (42/54) and for the establishment of communication channels between the United Nations and youth organizations (42/55).

Member States also sought to adjust to the increasing number of elderly people, aged 60 years and over. In the United Nations, work continued on this issue, as did efforts to implement the 1982 International Plan of Action on Aging. In May, the Council confirmed the need to implement a recommendation calling for centres to train personnel in the field of aging (1987/41) and, in November, the Assembly welcomed the establishment of an International Institute on Aging at Malta and noted a proposal for the creation of a world foundation on aging (42/51).

Topics related to this chapter. Human rights: rights of the child, youth and human rights.

Children

Quality of life, as measured by the health and development prospects of children in many parts of the developing world, declined, especially in Africa and Latin America, with Asia generally being the exception. Field reports for 1987 of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) reflected widespread reductions in national health spending and further cuts in education, especially in Africa. Malnutrition had increased and educational levels deteriorated throughout the 1980s in at least 31 countries—16 of them in sub-Saharan Africa, 8 in Latin America and 7 in other regions. As in previous years, United Nations programmes for children were primarily carried out by UNICEF, which provided assistance for child survival and development, primary health care, water supply and sanitation, education, social welfare, household food security and emergency relief. Its programmes reached some 1.4 billion children from birth to 15 years old.

UN Children's Fund

In 1987, UNICEF co-operated in programmes in 119 countries and territories: 42 in Africa, 34 in Asia, 30 in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 13 in the Middle East and North Africa. In addition, it provided technical or advisory services in 18 higher-income developing countries.

Programme expenditure totalled $374 million in 1987, of which 41 per cent was expended on child health; 17 per cent on water supply and sanitation; 13 per cent on planning and programme support services; 9 per cent on education; 7 per cent each on community based services and emergency relief; and 6 per cent on child nutrition.

In his report on 1987 activities,⁽¹⁾ the UNICEF Executive Director noted that the Fund had strengthened ties with decision makers and opinion leaders, increased dialogue with parliamentarians and co-operated with a growing number of non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Through its meetings with the World Bank in May, with the Inter-American Development Bank in June and with NGOs in September, UNICEF continued its involvement in the global advocacy for development adjustments. At the country level, it assisted in the analysis and negotiation related to structural adjustments in Jamaica, Madagascar, the Niger, Sierra Leone and Somalia. In the Philippines, it co-operated in the implementation of alternative adjustment programmes. In Ghana, a model programme of action to moderate the social costs of adjustment was developed by a World Bank-led inter-agency mission, including UNICEF.

The UNICEF Executive Board held its 1987 regular session in New York from 20 April to 1 May and also met on 10 June to elect officers for the period 1 August 1987 to 31 July 1988.

Programme policy

Medium-term plan

At its 1987 regular session, the Board reviewed UNICEF's performance in 1986 and endorsed(2) the programme objectives of the medium-term plan for 1986-1990,(3) having as its basic goal the promotion of development of children, particularly the most vulnerable groups among them.

The Board decided that UNICEF should emphasize the reduction of maternal, infant and child mortality and improvement of maternal and child health; the protection of the well-being of children and their environment; improvement of the well-being of women and their role in development; and appropriate child spacing. To achieve those aims, the Fund should work towards retaining the child and its needs on the political agenda; strengthening the capacities of countries to implement child survival and development (CSD) activities; continue CSD programmes in both rural and urban areas—aimed at reducing infant and child death rates by half by the year 2000; stress basic services and integrate CSD activities into the primary health care system; stress the roles of water supply and sanitation, nutrition and education; further strengthen programme linkages between CSD activities and other relevant sectors; improve the situation of women, especially taking into account the constraints of poorer women and female heads of household; give special attention to the sustainability of CSD activities and to the roots of infant and child mortality; strengthen evaluative activities; refine and extend social mobilization; link the work on "adjustment with a human face" with CSD approaches; and co-ordinate activities with other agencies and organizations.

By the same decision, the Board reaffirmed the retention of UNICEF's basic country programming approach, namely the formulation, in co-operation with respective Governments, of country programmes based on situation analysis at the country level, taking into account the approved priorities. The Board also noted the possible future orientation of the Fund's activities, described in a policy review (see below).

Policy reviews

The UNICEF Board considered in 1987 papers on an implementation strategy for UNICEF policy on women in development (see p. 836); priorities and focus in UNICEF programmes of co-operation; the child survival and development revolution (CSDR); and UNICEF's communication strategy in industrialized countries.

Prepared in response to a 1986 request of the Board,(4) the review of priorities and focus in programmes of co-operation(5) examined emphasis and balance in programme implementation and outlined likely future orientation of UNICEF activities. In terms of expenditure, the three major areas of focus were child health, education, and water supply and sanitation. CSD was estimated to remain a major priority until 1990. The review recommended that UNICEF continue its basic programming approach, formulating, in co-operation with Governments, country programmes, within the priorities of the medium-term plan.

UNICEF's CSDR strategy, endorsed by the General Assembly in 1983,(6) was the subject of a progress review(7) requested by the Board in 1985. The strategy took advantage of technological advances for growth monitoring, oral rehydration therapy (ORT) and immunization. Among its most pronounced results was the attention child health received from high-level decision makers. The review recommended that this work continue to be a major priority and be closely linked with education, water supply and sanitation, and the broader health sector.

In April 1987,(2) the Board took note of the progress review, as well as of the policy review of priorities and focus in programmes of co-operation.

Following consideration of another policy review paper,(8) the Board(9) affirmed the objectives of UNICEF's communication strategy in industrialized countries, designed to raise awareness of the needs of children and women in developing countries, and decided to give highest priority to mobilizing support for those objectives through strategies worked out with national committees, media support and development education. The paper's main conclusion was that UNICEF advocacy should have a more systematic approach, with specific goals and assessment of its impact.

Having considered the report of the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy (twenty-sixth session, Geneva, 27-29 January),(10) the Board stressed the importance of maternal health and nutrition and the need to incorporate measures to desist from smoking in UNICEF-supported programmes.(11)

Maurice Pate Memorial Award

The Maurice Pate Memorial Award—established in 1966(12) to commemorate the first UNICEF Executive Director—was presented in 1987 to the Archdiocese of San Salvador on behalf of the Catholic Church of El Salvador for its role in accelerating the expanded programme of immunization in that country.

UNICEF programmes by region

Africa

In 1987, many African countries were still recovering from the drought of three years earlier and were pursuing measures to bring about healthier economies. As Governments struggled in the climate of austerity to improve agricultural production, institute more efficient infrastructure management and meet the adjustment demands of the International Monetary Fund, the UNICEF message focused on improving the people's knowledge and their social mobilization. Low-cost, grass-roots approaches to children's and women's health became firmly established for emergencies and for longer-term development. Total expenditures in 1989 for UNICEF's programmes in Africa amounted to $135 million.

Immunization, breast-feeding, growth monitoring and ORT—a method of preventing dehydration caused by diarrhoea, a major cause of child mortality—remained corner-stones of programmes. In addition, special attention was given to nutrition programmes as necessary components of all health strategies. In view of the important role of women in meeting the food needs of children in particular, UNICEF embarked on a wide range of activities designed to assist women in food production and organizational and mothering roles. Among other key programme areas was basic education for health through formal and non-formal learning systems, including the provision of water, sanitation and hygiene education, so as to encourage communities to participate actively in their construction, use and maintenance.

Primary health care (PHC) continued to progress in 1987, with an emphasis on decentralized management at the district level. Maternal and child health (MCH) was improved by training community health workers, traditional birth attendants and traditional healers. Antenatal care became more widely available in several countries.

In eastern and southern Africa,(13) gains were made in many specific areas of health care. Several countries made efforts to integrate PHC, MCH, expanded programmes of immunization (EPI), control of diarrhoeal diseases (CDD), family planning, nutrition and health education. UNICEF support for social mobilization, health education and training activities brought the achievement of universal child immunization (UCI) nearer in all countries and helped increase oral rehydration use. More rehydration units were established and a number of countries began production of oral rehydration salts (ORS). Essential drug programmes (in Kenya, Somalia and the United Republic of Tanzania) and the cost-recovery system for essential drugs (in Mozambique) were successful. To cope with the growing problem of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), health workers were trained, school education programmes were implemented and blood screening was initiated in major towns and cities to reduce transmission of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) by transfusions.

UNICEF continued to address the most pressing and persistent problems. Various low-cost, community-based projects and approaches improved drinking-water supplies in a number of drought-stricken countries, including Ethiopia, Mozambique and Uganda, although inadequate sanitation continued to contribute to high rates of illness and death. Severe droughts and refugee concentrations renewed the spectre of famine, threatening millions in Botswana, Ethiopia, Malawi, Somalia and Uganda. Continued armed conflict and destabilization in many countries, particularly in southern Africa, further exacerbated the crisis and imperilled millions more. UNICEF responded with emergency relief and longer-term development and rehabilitation programmes. In a report entitled "Children on the front line: the impact of apartheid, destabilizing and warfare on children in southern and South Africa", UNICEF highlighted the plight of children in the region and proposed measures to alleviate their suffering. Subsequently, in co-operation with Radda Barnet and the African Network for Prevention and Protection against Child Abuse and Neglect, it organized an international conference on children in situations of armed conflict in Africa (Nairobi, Kenya, July), which was attended by more than 100 participants from Governments, NGOs, United Nations agencies and African nationalist movements.

Other ongoing UNICEF commitments included efforts to help protect the nutritional status of women and children, through the commissioning of studies in countries undergoing economic adjustment, the organization of food and nutrition seminars, and the promotion of growth monitoring and exclusive breast-feeding to the age of four to six months.

Universal primary education and adult literacy were priority programmes of co-operation between the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and UNICEF, with equality of education opportunities for women and girls a key goal. Strategies were supported to achieve basic education for all in the face of severe resource constraints, including initiatives to improve health education and early childhood development. Emergency assistance was provided for children in especially difficult circumstances. The growing numbers of migrants and displaced persons seeking shelter in urban areas resulted in a growing demand for urban basic services, with the result that those services formed one of the largest components in new country programmes.

In west and central Africa,(14) child health remained the central focus of UNICEF programme support. Considerable effort was made to improve the collection and analysis of data concerning immunization. Accelerated EPI was a common objective in all countries and immunization coverage improved through the organization of national immunization days and/or campaigns (Benin, Burkina Faso, Togo, etc.), targeting children up to two or three years old rather than children up to five, and improved training of personnel.

With regard to the achievement of UCI, by the end of 1987 many countries had reached immunization coverage of 50 per cent for tuberculosis, diphtheria/pertussis/tetanus and poliomyelitis vaccines. Seven countries—Botswana, Lesotho, Mauritius, Rwanda, Seychelles, Swaziland and Zimbabwe—however surpassed the target of 75 per cent immunization coverage set by African health ministers for 1990.(15) Major strides were made in combating diarrhoea, which accounted for more than one third of child deaths in Africa. In a July 1987 resolution, the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity resolved to designate 1988 as the Year for the Protection, Survival and Development of the African Child, using immunization programmes as one vehicle towards that end, and requested UNICEF to facilitate the implementation of the resolution and to complement national and international efforts in that regard.(16)

Another focus was on extending health units capable of offering ORT. Essential drug programmes were substantially developed and cost recovery models were tested. Some countries developed integrated PHC programmes which, while limited in scale, were none the less very dynamic and opened new perspectives. In addition, important progress was achieved in improving co-operation with other agencies and organizations.

UNICEF activities also included improved and broadened programmes for women; the drilling of boreholes and the provision of pumps, notably in Burkina Faso, the Central African Republic, Mali and the Niger; and support for the purchase of primary school equipment, teacher training and informal education initiatives. Strategies were examined in a number of countries for developing affordable pre-school centres for less advantaged communities.

The situation in all Sahelian countries remained precarious, with drought and crop loss constant threats, and economies exceedingly vulnerable to the failure of rains and fluctuations in commodity prices. UNICEF-supported rehabilitation programmes aimed at helping rural populations improve food production through seed supplies and technical assistance and at providing improved health care. The Fund was also involved in programmes to alleviate the effects of the drought and protect the environment (see p. 701).

Americas and the Caribbean

The most severe economic crisis the Americas and the Caribbean had faced since the 1930s deepened its hold, with per capita growth rates in most countries negative or negligible and many countries confronting external debt servicing that absorbed over one third of domestic savings. At the same time, commodity prices for the region's exports were at their lowest levels. Adjustment policies had some success in controlling inflation, but real wages dropped and government social expenditures fell. As a result of those developments, an estimated 130 million people continued to live in poverty in spite of economic adjustment programmes, and the large number of children forced on to the streets to beg or work for a living had become a reality in every Latin American city. To meet the challenges, UNICEF helped develop innovative programmes to mobilize national resources and capacity for CSD and other PHC interventions, making headway in a growing number of countries. UNICEF programme expenditure devoted to the region totalled $31 million in 1987.

In April,(17) the Executive Board urged UNICEF to heighten the international community's awareness of the causes of the impoverishment of Latin America and the Caribbean. The Fund's efforts in the region should be intensified in accordance with the national priorities set by Governments.

A major achievement for the Latin American region(18) during the year was the formulation of EPI and national action plans for UCI and polio eradication by 1990. The Central American countries held a Vaccination Day on 5 April, with all of the region's heads of State appearing on television to advocate CSD actions. EPI coverage was above 50 per cent for all antigens in children under one year, and polio vaccination coverage climbed to a regional average of more than 80 per cent in the same age group. Despite that increase, the actual number of polio cases grew; by October, more than 700 cases had been reported. Argentina, Belize, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Panama, Uruguay and most of the eastern Caribbean islands achieved or were close to achieving UCI, while Ecuador, El Salvador, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Paraguay and Venezuela exceeded 50 per cent coverage.⁽¹⁹⁾

Although programmes based primarily on promoting ORT to reduce diarrhoeal dehydration-related deaths had been established in 24 countries, rates of ORT access and use remained low and efforts continued to expand ORS distribution and availability. Through the UNICEF/WHO Joint Nutrition Support Programme, nutrition strategies were implemented in Bolivia, Dominica, Nicaragua, Peru and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines. Child development remained a priority as UNICEF offices continued emphasizing integrated actions for children under six years old, through the evaluation of child-care programmes and development of strategies involving parents, young people and the community as a whole in child development efforts.

Progress was made towards providing clean drinking-water and sanitation in a number of countries, including Belize, Bolivia, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras and Mexico, through technologies which included the installation of hand-pumps, tanks and gravity-fed systems, and latrine construction. UNICEF and UNESCO co-operated in supporting universal primary education and women's literacy activities in Bolivia, Nicaragua and Peru, and conducted a critical analysis of primary education. Advocacy, basic service projects focusing on the needs of women, and strategies to incorporate women into economic and development activities and to eliminate discrimination formed the basis of UNICEF's strategy for women.

The consolidation and expansion of programmes for children in especially difficult circumstances, advocacy efforts and training seminars were used to assist some of the millions of children believed to be at high risk from the social problems, including violence and family disintegration, caused by the region's economic crisis. Interventions for those children were locally developed in Costa Rica, Guatemala and Honduras, and in Brazil an evaluation of 11 projects was undertaken. UNICEF-supported urban basic services programmes were strengthened and/or expanded, influencing significantly the policies and priorities of Governments in this area. Programme communication and social mobilization continued to be important factors in the acceleration, expansion and maintenance of CSD actions and other programmes for children.

Asia

With UNICEF programme expenditures amounting to $155 million, the overall situation of women and children continued to improve in Asia in 1987 and, although political volatility, heavy debt burdens and natural disasters affected women and children in a number of countries in the East Asia and Pakistan region, progress was made in many areas, most notably in immunization programmes, with coverage levels high enough to put the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Malaysia, Pakistan and Thailand in a position to reach the UCI target even before the end of 1990.

Although most countries had established national CDD programmes, morbidity and mortality due to diarrhoea remained high. Only Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand reached self-sufficiency in ORS production. UNICEF provided supplies and raw materials for the manufacture of 11.2 million half-litre packets of salts in Bangladesh, and supplied 900,000 packets of ORS to the Lao People's Democratic Republic. In Indonesia, UNICEF helped train nearly 15,000 cadres to help implement CDD activities among a population of more than 6 million. However, studies in the Philippines and Pakistan disclosed that the rate of use of ORS was less than expected.

UNICEF support to CSD and PHC activities focused on strengthening community health infrastructures, while supporting family involvement in health management and increasing demand for PHC services. The training of health workers and volunteers was an important feature of programmes in Indonesia and Thailand. Traditional birth attendants (TBAS) and peripheral health workers were trained in Bangladesh, Burma, Indonesia, Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, bolstering MCH services. A key intervention in several countries, notably Bangladesh, Burma, Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, was the provision of essential drugs.

Nutrition interventions, as part of integrated PHC services, attempted to foster community participation and awareness. UNICEF was involved in assessing the feasibility of community-based nutrition programmes, supporting nutrition rehabilitation and supplementary feeding programmes and promoting nutrition education. In the Philippines, the promotion of breast-feeding received an impetus with the adoption of a national code for the marketing of breast-milk substitutes. In Pakistan, a modified growth chart was introduced for use in the PHC system, and in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, a national nutritional surveillance system was initiated. Programmes to control iodine deficiency, mainly through the iodation of salt, were widely implemented. In the Lao People's Democratic Republic, a plant capable of handling 40 per cent of national salt production was scheduled to open.

Water supply and environmental sanitation programmes in the area produced dramatic successes. In Bangladesh, an estimated 2.5 million people benefited from the sinking of tubewells and the provision of latrines. In Indonesia, almost 100 per cent of targeted water and sanitation facilities were installed. In Kampuchea, local staff were trained in drilling techniques and about 600 wells were either drilled or rehabilitated.

UNICEF produced textbooks and teaching aids, helped improve the professional skills of teachers and other educational personnel and supported the rehabilitation of the educational infrastructure to help countries attain the global goal of 75 per cent literacy by the year 2000. In co-operation with UNESCO, it sponsored a regional workshop on young child education, with participants from Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand. In the Lao People's Democratic Republic, an innovative teacher-training programme incorporated a pilot food-gardening element to encourage self-reliance in meeting nutritional needs. Improved child care and development services were established in many countries in 1987, and women's activities, including literacy programmes and income-generating projects, were supported.(20)

In South Central Asia, a steady though not spectacular decline in infant mortality and a perceptible heightening of political and planning interest in children's development and in activities for the development of women were among the positive trends. Helping Governments to focus on the needs of women and children and assisting NGOs in the region to improve skills and capacity in project formulation, implementation and evaluation were two important areas of UNICEF activity. Educational and literacy activities, including the National Literacy Mission in India, whose goal was to make 30 million people literate by 1990, were supported to meet the challenge of often staggering illiteracy rates. Women's development activities, such as Nepal's women's groups for community development and economic production, were another important focus.

Immunization activities received strong government support. The first phase of those activities, in which basic delivery structures were implemented, ended, and a steady acceleration in coverage became a realistic prospect. Great effort was seen in the pursuance of universal immunization in all countries of the subregion. Sri Lanka achieved near universal coverage except for measles and tetanus toxoid for pregnant women, and coverage in Nepal ranged from 10 per cent for tetanus toxoid to 67 per cent for tuberculosis. In Bhutan, the respective figures were 7 and 39 per cent and India, which still had the largest aggregate of non-immunized women and children, had coverages ranging from 30 per cent for polio to 49 per cent for tetanus toxoid, while measles coverage stood at 9 per cent. Though ORT was accepted in all countries, its practice remained limited to about 25 per cent of mothers in urban areas and even less in rural villages. UNICEF support helped increase access to safe water supplies, with coverage ranging from 10 per cent of the rural population in Sri Lanka to an estimated 47 per cent in India; levels of piped water supply in urban areas varied from 47 per cent in Sri Lanka to around 80 per cent in India.

At Kathmandu, Nepal, in November, the heads of State or Government of the seven member countries of the South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation—Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan and Sri Lanka—discussing the first annual review of the situation of children in their countries, reiterated their commitment to accord highest priority to the needs of children in national development planning and emphasized the need to intensify action to improve the welfare and well-being of children.(21)

Middle East and North Africa

In 1987, UNICEF programme expenditure in the Middle East and North Africa amounted to $40 million. Despite the serious economic recession facing the region due to the sharp fall in oil revenues in some cases and drops in remittances in others, rapid progress was made towards UCI/1990, with the 22 countries of the region pursuing two routes towards the goal: sustained national EPI efforts and accelerated national campaigns. Coverage for most antigens reached 80 per cent or more in Algeria, Bahrain, Cyprus, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Morocco, Oman and Saudi Arabia. Immunization lagged, however, in Democratic Yemen, the Sudan and Yemen, with coverage ranging from 10 to 35 per cent for most antigens. Egypt, the most populated nation of the region, conducted an acceleration campaign that raised the immunization level to over 80 per cent and Morocco similarly launched a successful campaign in 1987. Despite civil unrest prevailing in the country, Lebanon also struggled to immunize against childhood diseases; after three campaigns were completed by November, coverage had risen from 53 to over 80 per cent for combined diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus/oral polio vaccines and from 39 to 70 per cent for measles. A number of countries also managed to raise the very low levels of tetanus toxoid coverage among women.

CDD programmes were relatively active in 15 of the region's countries. In Egypt, more than 80 per cent of mothers used ORT and 80,000 child deaths were thus avoided annually.(19) Social mobilization activities contributed to the success of UCI and ORT campaigns. In Oman, ORT awareness increased from zero to 97 per cent because of communication materials on EPI and CDD. Efforts to promote growth monitoring in Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Turkey and Yemen focused on training staff in MCH services. In two provinces of the Sudan, the UNICEF/WHO infant and child nutrition activities combined emergency food distribution with a longer-term approach, including nutrition education.

Other examples of UNICEF assistance included major water supply and sanitation programmes in Egypt, Lebanon and the Sudan, training of TBAs to take CSD messages directly into households, and female literacy activities in Democratic Yemen, Djibouti and the Sudan. In 1987, major emergency operations took place in the Sudan, where UNICEF supported water, immunization and nutrition activities, both directly and through NGOs.

An Arab Council for Children and Development was established in April 1987, with Prince Talal Bin Abdul Aziz Al Saud (Saudi Arabia) as President of the Board Trustees, Crown Prince Hassan of Jordan as Honorary President and the First Lady of Egypt, Suzanne Mubarak, as Vice-President of the Council. In another significant development, the Council of Arab Ministers for Social Affairs proclaimed the target of reducing the infant mortality rate in the Arab world to 50 per 1,000 by 1990; that goal was endorsed by the Gulf Council of Health Ministers Conference in December, which advocated that the infant mortality rate should replace the gross national product as the criterion for progress and development.

UNICEF programmes by sector

Child survival and development

In 1987, child survival and development gained momentum, with EPI and ORT programmes forming the leading edge in most countries. The linkages between its different elements became more pronounced, with immunization efforts spawning stronger health delivery systems and invigorating PHC and MCH services. Countries were encouraged to move to national scale in developing and expanding low-cost approaches which, despite prevailing economic difficulties and constraints, could help reduce mortality and improve child health and welfare. Global support for CSD was evident in strong support from NGOs and industrialized countries such as Canada, Finland, Italy, Norway, Sweden and the United States. UNICEF continued to strengthen its ties with decision makers and opinion leaders, parliamentarians and key NGOs to develop a "Grand Alliance for Children" and raise awareness of children's problems and priorities.

Immunization

The momentum towards UCI/1990 accelerated during 1987, with all regions reporting increased levels of activity. It was estimated that global coverage for combined diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus vaccine—an indicator of the effectiveness of EPI and PHC—was more than 50 per cent, while measles coverage was about 45 per cent. Immunization programmes also helped invigorate CDD and other health promotion activities. Health ministries developed strong alliances with information and media organizations, ministries of education, religious leaders and other key groups in society. In 1987, a national immunization campaign in Egypt produced notable success, with coverage levels for the combined diphtheria/pertussis/tetanus and polio vaccines estimated at more than 80 per cent. In Lebanon, where a break in the fighting was organized on three occasions to immunize children, coverage levels were also reported to be above 80 per cent.

Control of diarrhoeal diseases and oral rehydration therapy

At the end of 1987, it was estimated that 97 per cent of children in the developing world lived in countries with operational CDD programmes and half of those under five years of age had access to ORS and trained health workers who could show parents how to use it. However, access varied widely by region, from over 75 per cent in Asia to only 25 per cent in Africa. Although Africa fell behind in implementing ORT, ORT units which monitored and submitted returns on diarrhoea cases increased by 300 per cent and the number of diarrhoea cases treated almost doubled. The case fatality rate in Africa, which had exceeded 2 per cent in many hospitals before 1985, dropped to 0.41 per cent in 1987. About 20 per cent of the diarrhoea cases in developing countries in 1987 were treated by ORT, and the use of either home-made solutions or ORS averted at least 500,000 child deaths from dehydration. Forty-seven countries produced ORS, many with UNICEF assistance in the form of technical advice, raw materials, equipment and packaging.

Breast-feeding, nutrition and growth monitoring

The risk of morbidity and death from diarrhoea being respectively 15 and 25 times higher in children not receiving breast-milk, UNICEF stressed as priorities social mobilization, information services and the training of health workers in lactation management and counselling skills, to help reverse declines in the prevalence and duration of breast-feeding. In a successful breast-feeding campaign in Brazil, the systematic use of mass media and advertising techniques was combined with training for health workers and counselling services for mothers. Regulation of the marketing of baby foods through enforceable national codes remained a key part of UNICEF's strategy.

Interest grew within UNICEF in systematic growth monitoring and promotion, as implementation strategies for community-level nutrition programmes and studies to improve the quality of implementation were under way in many countries, including Bangladesh, Brazil, China, Kenya, Liberia, Nigeria, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe. There was also growing awareness of the need to strengthen the link between growth monitoring and programmes to improve weaning practices. UNICEF participated in the development of an inter-agency food and nutrition surveillance programme, together with WHO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the secretariat of the Sub-Committee on Nutrition of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC). The long-term aim of the programme was to strengthen countries' capacity to collect, analyse and use nutrition and other data while collecting and analysing the data already available.

In 1987, mid-term reviews were completed of half of the 18 country projects of the WHO/UNICEF Joint Nutrition Support Programme funded by Italy. With regard to vitamin-A deficiency, WHO and UNICEF published a joint statement recommending that vitamin-A supplements be provided to all children diagnosed with measles in countries with 1 per cent or higher measles fatality rates, and at the country level UNICEF continued to be a major supplier of high-potency capsules and education, usually as components of more comprehensive programmes.

UNICEF also provided support to the International Council for Control of Iodine Deficiency Disorders for a continuing programme of publications and advocacy. In Africa, where 150 million people were estimated at risk of iodine deficiency, a task force was formed, prompting project proposals from a number of countries.

Primary health care

Interregional meetings, particularly in Africa, reaffirmed the growing political commitment to child survival initiatives and to PHC in general. A meeting was held at Harare, Zimbabwe, on the strengthening of district health systems based on PHC. Two conferences took place at Nairobi, Kenya, on women's health, and at WHO's regional meeting at Bamako, Mali, in September, African Ministers of Health launched a major initiative (known as the Bamako Initiative) to improve the health of women and children through community-level funding and management of essential drugs.

Despite the economic crises confronting them, a number of countries displayed resourcefulness and resolve in developing PHC systems. The primary strategies combined political commitment, preventive medicine and multisectoral approaches to basic needs, and local financing of PHC, among other activities. UNICEF continued to explore openings for complementary activities at all levels to meet health challenges such as acute respiratory infection, CDD, the resurgence of malaria, outbreaks of cholera, yellow fever and the enormous problems associated with AIDS. UNICEF coordinated its activities closely with other key United Nations agencies such as WHO, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) and the World Bank.

Essential drugs

UNICEF helped launch the Bamako Initiative, the centrepiece of which was a new form of community funding and management for the supply and delivery of essential drugs, with African nations joining together to make low-cost bulk drug purchases. The drugs, bought with external assistance over a multi-year period, would then be distributed through community outlets, ensuring lower prices for consumers but allowing the profit to pay for replenishing the drugs and financing the development of community and district health services. UNICEF supported essential drug programmes designed to lower costs or develop the capacity for producing drugs locally in a number of countries. The UNICEF Supply Division at Copenhagen, Denmark continued to provide essential drugs and vaccines to more than 100 developing countries around the world, both as part of UNICEF-assisted programmes and on a reimbursable basis on behalf of Governments.

Acquired immunodeficiency syndrome

During 1987, with advice from WHO, UNICEF monitored the potential interaction of AIDS with immunization and breast-feeding. The two agencies, after extensive study, concluded that the potential for HIV infection to be spread by childhood immunization was extremely low and that, given their benefits, EPI programmes—which prevented over a million deaths a year—should continue to be pursued vigorously. A similar study group organized by WHO concluded that breast-feeding was not a significant route of HIV transmission and that it should continue to be promoted.

UNICEF participated in a number of meetings and forums on AIDS and established an internal task force at headquarters to explore policy and programme-related issues. A full-time senior project officer was hired to work on AIDS. In the field, UNICEF helped develop national AIDS plans in Ethiopia, Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, and assisted in the development of AIDS health education projects in Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Formal and non-formal education

Illiteracy, particularly of women, remained a major stumbling-block to development, with over 889 million illiterate adults by the mid-1980s, 98 per cent of them living in developing countries. Improvements in child health and welfare being linked also to the educational level of mothers, UNICEF worked with Governments to obtain a political commitment to re-examine educational priorities and cost benefits, improve administrative capacities to sustain and expand universal primary education and literacy, focus on the socio-economic returns of education for adolescent girls, and accelerate education programmes for women.

As to early childhood development, efforts were made to establish linkages between survival and developmental programming, and to extend programme coverage to children from birth to age six. In countries such as Bangladesh, Bolivia, China and Ethiopia, UNICEF supported the development of standard curricula. Health and nutrition topics were incorporated into the curriculum of 4,000 rural pre-schools in Zimbabwe, and Brazil included early childhood stimulation and disability prevention in its PHC curriculum.

Water supply and sanitation

During 1987, UNICEF co-operated in water and sanitation projects in 93 countries, 36 of which were in Africa, 21 in the Americas and the Caribbean, 25 in Asia, and 11 in the Middle East and North Africa. About 69,427 water supply systems were completed, including 59,932 wells with hand-pumps, 861 standpipes, 7,165 improved traditional sources and 1,469 yard-taps and household connections. An estimated 12 million persons benefited from these activities. Also completed in 1987 were 201,193 sanitation facilities benefiting about 1.3 million persons. The financial input amounted to $64 million, against a projected estimate of $59 million. UNICEF's strategy for water supply and sanitation stressed inter-agency co-ordination, strengthening of sanitation and hygiene elements and a commitment to cost-effective, village-level operation and maintenance technology within the context of community participation.

Women and development

UNICEF succeeded in merging programme elements of CSD while helping lay the foundation of a stronger socio-economic resource base for women in several countries during the year. Programmes in Africa supported community-based systems for household food security, training of women's groups and female agronomists. UNICEF assisted household-oriented technologies for women, for example, by encouraging local production of stoves in Ethiopia, or by installing grinding mills for women's community groups in Burkina Faso, Burundi, Ethiopia and Ghana. It also promoted household technologies for women through a national campaign in Chad, and encouraged the formation of co-operatives by extending credit facilities and other technical assistance to nation-wide integrated community programmes in Bangladesh, through the large-scale union of co-operatives in Mozambique and a women's world banking affiliate in Rwanda. In India, national poverty alleviation programmes promoting credit for women continued to receive UNICEF support. In a district of western Kenya, UNICEF initiated field surveys to identify women's needs, concerns and priorities, with particular emphasis on the resources available 'for women to care for their children and on the division of household labour. In Latin America, UNICEF supported activities in Peru with regard to health training, creation of employment opportunities through NGOs and fostering of women's organizations.

Urban basic services

UNICEF involvement in urban CSD services continued, in line with a strategy adopted at an interregional urban workshop (Covelong, Chingleput, India, 1-5 March). It worked with Governments and communities to improve urban slum environments, helping provide secure shelter, safe drinking-water and sanitation, while reinforcing local ingenuity. In many countries, including Brazil, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia and Sri Lanka, urban services programmes and community-based economic activities were expanded through effective social mobilization and essential inputs by the urban poor themselves. Activities included PHC and CSD initiatives, with emphasis on EPI and ORT in Ecuador and Brazil; an urban services programme in Indonesia served some 150,000 children and about 512,000 women with EPI, MCH, nutrition and non-formal education.

Children in especially difficult circumstances

UNICEF continued to be involved in programmes for children in armed conflict and street children. Its involvement with the needs of street children in Latin America expanded both geographically and conceptually to include the needs of children affected by armed conflicts and natural disasters. In 1987, there were 15 countries with specific activities for street children, and about half a dozen others were preparing projects to address the problem. UNICEF provided financial and technical assistance to a pilot street children's project in the Philippines and a project to help prevent and reduce violence in Brazil, and to child victims of armed conflicts in Africa, where 900 adopting families received support and "family kits" containing essential household items. In India, it co-operated with the Ministry of Labour and the International Labour Organisation to conduct studies on child labour. In Lebanon, where 13 years of war had produced more than 30,000 fatherless families, UNICEF worked through its emergency programme to support children and their mothers by providing access to clean water, immunization and essential drugs. UNICEF offices in all regions stepped up their advocacy for "zones of peace" and "days of tranquillity" to accelerate CSD initiatives in war-torn areas.

UNICEF finances

UNICEF income in 1987 totalled $572 million(23), compared to $455 million in 1986. Income comprised $345 million for general resources and $227 million for supplementary funds, including $29 million in emergency contributions, mostly for Africa. Contributions from Governments and intergovernmental organizations represented 77 per cent of the total ($442 million) and those from private sources 18 per cent ($105 million). Around 1 per cent ($5 million) was received from the United Nations system and 4 per cent ($20 million) from miscellaneous sources, including exchange rate revaluation of assets and liabilities.

Expenditures in 1987 totalled $479 million, compared with $447 million in 1986. Of that amount, $253 million was for general resources programme co-operation and $180 million for supplementary funds programme co-operation. For administrative services, expenditures were $46 million, and for write-offs and miscellaneous charges $9 million.

New programme commitments of $128.8 million,(24) to be financed from general resources, were approved in April.(25) In addition, the Board approved $1,771,485 for the Emergency Reserve Fund, which was automatically replenished every year. Also approved were "noted" programmes, valued at $351 million, for financing from specific-purpose contributions.

Budget appropriations

In April 1987,(26) the UNICEF Executive Board approved revised budget expenditure estimates for 1986-1987 totalling $231,696,328, $847,305 less than originally approved in 1986.(27) An amount of $6 million was transferred from staff costs to general operating costs. The Board noted an increase in general operating costs of $3.4 million, required to absorb gross investments in computer equipment and expansion of UNICEF offices in Mozambique and Democratic Yemen, and approved an additional $1.5 million for packing and assembly costs.

The Executive Director had proposed revised estimates amounting to $228.2 million, in order to eliminate a shortfall of income from general resources and to build up cash balances. The savings were to be achieved through a major reduction in staff. Commenting on his proposals, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a March 1987 report,(28) noted that it was highly unusual for major revisions to be made to an approved budget in the middle of a biennium. It expressed certain reservations with regard to the proposed deletion of 180 posts, including 150 core posts, stating that unless the work programme was reduced, some of the abolished posts might have to be restored in the future, at additional expense. ACABQ noted that UNICEF'S amortization policy was not proper budget practice; following its recommendation, the Board decided not to amortize capital assets from 1986 on.

The Board approved revised income estimates for 1986-1987(29) of $19,151,000, down from $22,140,000 approved in 1986.

Budget expenditure estimates proposed for 1988-1989 amounted to $244,175,500. The Board approved commitments totalling $243,574,487 for the biennium,(30) i.e. $601,013 less as a consequence of adjustments recommended by ACABQ. The Board decided not to amortize capital assets and authorized the Executive Director to administer in the most efficient manner the provisions under each of the cost categories and, under specified conditions, to transfer amounts among expenditure categories. Total income approved by the Board for 1988-1989 was $20,104,000.(31)

Accounts

In April 1987,(32) the Executive Board took note of the Board of Auditors' report on UNICEF'S financial report and audited financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1985.(33) The Board noted the views expressed by its Committee on Administration and Finance and in the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, and requested the Executive Director to report on the initiatives taken to improve budgetary and accounting controls.

1986

In July 1987,(34) the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Board of Auditors' findings on the financial report and financial statements of UNICEF accounts for the year ended 31 December 1986. The Board recommended discontinuance of a number of accounting and budgetary practices that it said were not in accordance with the United Nations Financial Regulations and Rules and noted a number of material errors in the accounts.

Following ACABQ's recommendation,(35) the Assembly, in resolution 42/206, requested an expanded audit of the 1986 accounts of UNICEF, including its Greeting Card Operation. The expanded audit was to be submitted in 1988.

Financial policy decisions

The Executive Board in April 1987(36) adopted a set of financial rules and regulations specific to UNICEF, with amendments proposed by ACABQ.(28) It reconfirmed(37) that the current liquidity policy was adequate for UNICEF cash-flow requirements and recommended an increase in year-end general resources cash balances to a level equivalent to 10 per cent of the projected general resources income by the year 1990. It noted(38) the methodology developed by the secretariat to apportion general operating costs to supplementary-funded projects and approved a 6 per cent recovery rate to be charged to all supplementary-funded projects, excluding those funded by UNICEF national committees and those funded for emergencies. The Board resolved(39) that without its prior approval no posts might be added to the administrative and project support posts allocated to specified supplementary-funded projects, and that all project posts at headquarters must be included in future budget proposals. This decision was taken in accordance with a recommendation of ACABQ,(28) which had expressed concern about the growth of project posts involving administration or support functions and had pointed out that those posts were not subject to the same degree of control by the Board.-

In a related matter,(40) the Board approved a number of situations as justifying the status of staff awaiting reassignment or "supernumerary staff"; decided that the number of international Professional staff in that category should not exceed 10 at the end of any financial year; and decided that a staff member should not remain in the category longer than 12 months. ACABQ had noted that there were no appropriate controls to deal with the supernumerary staff situation and had expressed concern that purchase orders, normally used for the acquisition of supplies, had been used to re-tain staff services.

Organizational questions

UNICEF structure

In April 1987,(41) the Executive Board expressed appreciation of the review and the resulting restructuring of the Eastern and Southern Africa Regional Office at Nairobi. It requested the Executive Director to review other regional offices and to examine the existing external relations structure with a view to optimizing the results of fund-raising and advocacy activities, as had been recommended by ACABQ.(28)

Also in April(42) the Board considered a request in Economic and Social Council decision 1987/112 that it submit its views on achieving the objectives envisaged in recommendation 8 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations,(43) regarding the functioning of the intergovernmental machinery in the economic and social fields (see p. 947). The Board concluded that UNICEF's current structure was well-suited to fulfil its mandate.

UNICEF Board

At its regular 1987 session, the Executive Board of UNICEF adopted 23 decisions on programme, administrative and budgetary matters. Acting on the recommendation of its Working Group on the Future Work and Procedures of the Executive Board, it decided to streamline its procedures, rationalize time and improve its decision-making process.(44) It also took several decisions aimed at rescheduling its sessions and exploring the possibility of a biennial concentration of work, in phase with the biennial budget cycle. The Working Group having fulfilled its mandate, the Board terminated it. By decision 1987/184 of 9 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Board's report.(42*)

Greeting Card Operation

For the second consecutive year, UNICEF's Greeting Card Operation(45) made a record profit, of $32.8 million net. This was due mainly to an increase in sales volume as well as higher gross proceeds as a result of price increases.

In response to a 1986 Board request,(46) the Executive Director reported in April 1987(47) on steps taken to improve the profitability of the Operation.

The Board approved work-plan expenditure estimates of $28.3 million for the financial year 1987/88(48) and noted that gross revenues were estimated to be $53.3 million.(49)

During 1987, 162 artists from 66 countries donated the reproduction rights to original works of art for publication as greeting cards and the UNICEF calendar.

NGO relations

During 1987, UNICEF collaboration with NGOs increased at the local, national, regional and international levels. The NGO Committee on UNICEF represented more than 160 international organizations in consultative status. Areas of joint UNICEF-NGO activity ranged from promotion of CSD services to activities for children in especially difficult circumstances. UNICEF continued to strengthen its relationships with both grass-root groups and international NGOs concerned with the African recovery and issues of economic adjustment. In addition, it worked closely with a consortium of NGOs to promote education programmes to combat the spread of AIDS.

Inter-agency co-operation

In 1987, the Joint Consultative Group on Policy, comprising UNDP, UNFPA, the World Food Programme and UNICEF, focused on training, women in development, collaboration in Africa and harmonization of programming. The Group adopted, through a sub-committee chaired by UNICEF, four basic principles for each agency: raising its own funds, employing the country programming approach, maintaining autonomous programming, and seeking co-ordination of programming through complementarity of inputs. In May, UNICEF and the World Bank co-sponsored a Consultative Group meeting on Ghana, leading to the development of a programme of action to moderate the social costs of adjustment. UNICEF also continued to co-operate with the World Bank in health, nutrition, education, water supply and sanitation, and urban development.

The long-standing collaboration between UNICEF and WHO continued across a broad span of programme fields. The two organizations developed joint training modules and the institutional networking for the UNICEF/WHO technical consultative group on emergencies in Africa. The UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy met at Geneva in January.(10)

Co-operation with UNESCO emphasized female enrolment in schools, improving the education system and education for CSD. UNICEF continued to support the UNESCO/UNICEF co-operative unit in its activities for children. As a member of the International Working Group on Education, which comprised the major donor agencies on education, UNICEF was responsible for basic and female education.

Establishment of an International Child Development Centre

The UNICEF Executive Board "noted" $8 million for the establishment of a proposed International Child Development Centre at Florence, Italy, for which Italy had pledged $2.7 million per year for three years. It requested the Executive Director to work out the financial, institutional, administrative, programme and statutory arrangements for the Centre.(50)

JIU report

In a report on UNICEF'S activities and structure,(51) transmitted to the General Assembly in February 1987, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) stated that the increase in indirect costs of the Fund continued to be troubling. Though UNICEF had substantially modernized its equipment and methods, the anticipated gains in administrative productivity barely seemed to offset corresponding increases in costs relating to documentation, monitoring, research and training, organization and support. Experiences in the field, as reflected in the financial tables, showed that the notion of low-cost operations was not relevant to the welfare of women and children. The poorer the beneficiary country, the greater the insecurity and the higher the price of development, a fact which the UNICEF secretariat should become more aware of and communicate clearly to the Executive Board.

Analysing the Fund's structure, JIU noted that its support cost/programme cost ratio ranked among the worst of the United Nations agencies, and that it seemed as though more and more time was being devoted to planning, evaluating, reporting and monitoring of activities for which there was less time. Consolidating UNICEF'S best features, reducing indirect costs, delineating areas of responsibility and simplifying procedures would be part of the solution, which could be facilitated to the extent that the principles of the country approach, decentralized responsibility and integrated development with and for children were respected.

JIU offered detailed recommendations for a restructuring of UNICEF headquarters and field services, monitoring and follow-up of programme implementation, and to the role and work of the Executive Board. It recommended that the Fund's financial and human resources be increasingly concentrated on Africa, in view of the natural disasters and emergencies, shortages and armed conflicts there. With regard to UNICEF'S budgetary documents, it recommended that they be improved as to volume, accuracy, readability and in particular concerning the method of calculating indirect costs, and made suggestions for information to be furnished in the annual country reports and for the calculation of overhead costs.

Youth

In 1987, United Nations activities on youth—persons aged 15 to 24 years—concentrated on implementing the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, endorsed by the General Assembly during International Youth Year (IYY) in 1985.(1)

Follow-up activities to IYY were well under way at national, regional and international levels. The United Nations Office at Vienna/Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (UNOV/CSDHA), as the focal point on youth matters within the United Nations system, continued to play an important role in promoting a concerted approach for the integration of youth in development. The efforts of CSDHA were directed towards assisting Governments and national machineries on youth to enhance national capacities in developing comprehensive youth policies and programmes through the provision of policy guidance and information, technical expertise and direct operational support.

As part of its technical co-operation activities, CSDHA continued to monitor project proposals for funding by the United Nations Youth Fund. The Fund, as an instrument to further the implementation of the 1985 guidelines, continued to provide grants to reinforce youth-related concerns in development projects and programmes and to support catalytic and innovative activities that had potential for further replication, with particular focus on capacity-building in the least developed countries.

An adequate follow-up to IYY was vital in order to sustain the momentum achieved despite the reduction in resources and publicity devoted to the special event, the Secretary-General stated in a note to the 1987 session of the Commission for Social Development;(*) such follow-up entailed, at least, periodic evaluation of the use of the guidelines, continuous review of the situation of youth and ongoing comprehensive assessment of progress achieved at all levels.

Follow-up to International Youth Year (1985)

report(4) discussed policies and programmes involving young people, especially in relation to their participation in development and peace. He described action taken by intergovernmental bodies and activities of Member States and the United Nations system concerning implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up to IYY, the role of CSDHA as a focal point, and regional and international events. The momentum of IYY was being sustained by the guidelines, which were used as a framework for action by many Governments. United Nations agencies and bodies had developed new youth programmes and strengthened regular programme and information activities. Co-ordination with Governments, in many cases, entailed technical, substantive and material support to various national committees, better utilization and dissemination of research information on youth, and promotion of technical co-operation activities benefiting youth.

The challenge before the international community was to ensure both an adequate follow-up and a continued advocacy of youth programmes and issues at all levels. In that regard, the Secretary-General suggested that the national co-ordinating committees be provided with technical expertise and assistance to ensure a proper follow-up; that technical co-operation activities related to youth be strengthened at the field level, using the United Nations network; and that youth-related components in UNDP country programmes be reinforced. He further recommended that the resources of the United Nations Youth Fund be increased, that future meetings of the informal inter-agency working group at the technical level reinforce past and present initiatives to ensure a comprehensive and co-ordinated approach, and that the United Nations improve at the regional level modalities for inter-agency co-operation on youth-related matters. The Secretary-General further suggested that CSDHA undertake every four years a comprehensive review of the global situation of youth, to be appraised by the Commission for Social Development, the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1987/45.

Youth in the contemporary world

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/16 of 9 May 1979, 1981/16 of 6 May 1981, 1983/14 of 26 May 1983 and 1985/23 of 29 May 1985,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 40/14 of 18 November 1985, by which the Assembly requested the Commission for Social Development to examine, on a regular basis, specific youth issues, in keeping with the objectives of the International Youth Year: Participation,

Development, Peace, and 41/97 of 4 December 1986, by which the Assembly called upon all States, all United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth,

Recognizing the profound importance of the direct participation of youth in public life and the valuable contribution that youth can make in all sectors of society, as well as the willingness of youth to express its ideas concerning the building of a better and more just world,

Convinced that the opportune and significant impetus generated by the activities of the International Youth Year should be maintained and reinforced with appropriate follow-up action, particularly at the national level,

Recognizing that the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth provide a conceptual framework for a long-term strategy in that field,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting his report on the evaluation of the results of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace;

2. Emphasized its satisfaction at the results obtained at the local, national, regional and international levels during the preparations for and observance of the International Youth Year;

3. Considers that an adequate follow-up to the International Youth Year should take place in order to maintain the momentum achieved during its preparation and observance, within the mandate of the Commission for Social Development;

4. Considers it appropriate for the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat, within existing resources:

(a) To review continuously the situation of youth;

(b) To provide an overall assessment of ongoing activities on the basis of results from national committees;

(c) To evaluate the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth;

(d) To consider ways and means to further develop co-operation in the field of youth;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session an interim report on the stage of implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, so that the Commission may adopt action-oriented recommendations;

6. Decides that the Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-first session, shall discuss the question of youth in the contemporary world as part of the review of the follow-up of the International Youth Year.

3. Requests the Secretary-General to promote intensively the inclusion of youth-related projects and activities in the programmes of the United Nations bodies and of the specialized agencies, specifically on such themes as communication, health, housing, culture, youth employment and education, and to monitor closely their implementation by using the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs as a focal point;

4. Urges, in this context, all Member States to take the necessary measures, in co-operation with United Nations agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in particular youth organizations, to strengthen their focus on youth programmes and policies;

5. Stresses again the importance of the active and direct participation, in accordance with the right to freedom of association, of youth and youth organizations at all stages of implementation of the projects and activities organized at the local, national, regional and international levels in the field of youth;

Co-ordination and information

In a March 1987 report on co-ordination and information in the field of youth,⁽⁵⁾ submitted in accordance with a 1986 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, on the basis of information from United Nations bodies and NGOs, described progress achieved during the period following IYY and listed suggestions for further co-ordination regarding follow-up activities.

The Secretary-General concluded that follow-up activities to IYY had in many instances intensified and improved the co-ordination of efforts on youth, both within the United Nations system and among the United Nations, Member States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. This was manifested in co-operative efforts at all levels in information exchange, joint projects and activities, including surveys, reports, studies, seminars, conferences and advisory missions. Those activities were made possible through special institutional arrangements and procedures in various forms, such as co-operation with national co-ordinating committees, consultation among non-governmental youth organizations through umbrella organizations, United Nations inter-agency consultations, the informal inter-agency working group at the technical level, and similar mechanisms at the regional level.

To ensure the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, the Secretary-General recommended that the national co-ordinating committees or similar mechanisms continue and that the relationship between the committees and the United Nations system be consolidated. He further suggested that future inter-agency co-operation focus on identifying and elaborating the specific types of supportive services to be provided to the structures created at the national level, that the regional commissions be encouraged to establish mechanisms for inter-agency co-operation and that the informal inter-agency working group at the technical level continue to meet once a year.

Recommendations were also made on channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations.

Through an Interregional Adviser on Youth Policies and Programmes, sponsored under the regular programme of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DIED), CSDHA advised Governments, at their request, in developing long-term integrated national youth policies within the framework of IYY objectives. The Adviser focused on strengthening institutionalized arrangements, structures and procedures designed to secure the effective integration of youth into national development planning. During 1987, he undertook missions to Barbados, Cape Verde, Costa Rica, Mali, the Netherlands Antilles, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia and Suriname.

Throughout 1987, CSDHA continued to publicize the goals and strategies of IYY and the guidelines, through exchange of information between Member States, United Nations agencies and bodies, regional commissions and NGOs. It prepared and published a directory of centres and institutes engaged in youth research, while a directory of national co-ordination mechanisms on youth—an instrument for fostering information exchange and co-operation among national counterparts and other interested bodies—was updated and reissued.

The United Nations regional commissions promoted IYY'S objectives within the context of both the regional plans of action and the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up. Governments and regional NGOs were actively involved in that process. The regional commissions provided substantive support for technical co-operation activities and strengthened relations with CSDHA through exchange of information, the organization of regional meetings on youth and advisory missions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1987/51.

Co-ordination and information in the field of youth

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/27 of 9 May 1979, 1980/25 of 2 May 1980, 1981/25 of 6 May 1981, 1982/28 of 4 May 1982, 1983/26 of 26 May 1983, 1984/44 of 21 May 1984, 1985/30 of 29 May 1985 and 1986/13 of 21 May 1986,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 34/151 of 17 December 1979, 36/28 of 13 November 1981, 37/48 of 3 December 1982, 38/22 of 22 November 1983, 39/22 of 22 November 1984 and 41/97 of 4 December 1986, as well as resolution 40/14 of 18 November 1985, adopted by the General Assembly, acting as the United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year,

Considering it necessary to disseminate among young people the ideals of peace, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, human solidarity and dedication to the objectives of progress and development, and considering also the importance of the free flow of objective and accurate information, regardless of frontiers, to the achievement of those objectives through better understanding, mutual respect and friendship among all peoples,

Conscious of the need to consolidate and build further on the positive results achieved in the process of preparing for and observing the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace at the local, national, regional and international levels,

Convinced that the timely and significant impetus generated by the activities of the International Youth Year should be maintained and reinforced with appropriate actions for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth endorsed by the General Assembly, acting as the United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year, in its resolution 40/14,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination and information in the field of youth;

2. Calls upon all United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional commissions, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, and to consider at their meetings appropriate ways and means for the improvement of co-ordination and information in the field of youth;

3. Stresses the importance of the active and direct participation of youth and youth organizations in the projects and activities organized at the local, national, regional and international levels in the field of youth at all stages of implementation of the guidelines, and the importance of undertaking practical measures to encourage the voluntary association of youth and youth organizations in this process;

4. Recommends that the Secretary-General continue to direct the attention of the competent United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to the need for continued co-ordination and information in the field of youth, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 41/97;

5. Decides to consider at its first regular session of 1988 practical ways and means for improving co-ordination and information in the field of youth, on the basis of a specific report of the Secretary-General, under the item entitled "Social development";

6. Affirms the importance of freedom of association, expression, movement and religion, as well as of economic, social and cultural rights, for the full development of young people in every aspect of society and for their active participation in efforts to ensure economic development, social justice and human rights.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/51

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98/Add.1) without vote, 21 May (meeting 18); 39-nation draft (E/1987/C.2/L.5/Rev.1); agenda item 18.

ria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Uruguay, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Following a revision of the original draft, the United States withdrew amendments(7) by which the Council would have stressed the importance of the voluntary nature of associations of youth, of the free flow of information across national boundaries to achieve the objectives of progress and development, and of the freedom of association, expression, movement and religion for the full development of young people in every aspect of society.

Strengthening communication between youth and the United Nations

The scope of channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, trends and developments connected with those channels, and the role of the Secretariat in strengthening them were considered, among other youth-related matters, in an October 1987 report of the Secretary-General.(4)

The report, submitted in response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(8) gave an overview of national, regional and international activities geared towards strengthening those communication channels. Their further improvement, the Secretary-General said, continued to be vital as an instrument for the information of young people and their participation in the work of the United Nations system, and as a tool for informing the United Nations of the problems confronting young people. He recommended that they be reinforced and that co-operation between Governments and NGOs in the areas of information exchange, research and promotion of youth issues be encouraged. A similar recommendation had been made in a March 1987 report to the Economic and Social Council.(5)

Among the most important communication channels mentioned were the Geneva Informal Meeting, which served as a platform for co-operation between youth organizations through regular meetings, workshops and participation in United Nations meetings, and the Vienna NGO Committee on Youth. CSDHA provided assistance to both and participated in their meetings. The NGO Committee formulated a plan of action for 1987, focusing on unemployment, the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (see p. 715) and the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (see p. 900). A major activity was a round table on youth unemployment (Vienna, September).

CSDHA'S Youth Information Bulletin continued to serve as a principal communication channel by providing publicity for and about youth, highlighting major youth issues, facilitating information exchange, and reporting on youth programmes and activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 42/55.

Channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/135 of 16 December 1977 and 36/17 of 9 November 1981, in which it adopted guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, as well as its resolution 41/99 of 4 December 1986,

Bearing in mind the importance of the existence of effective channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations as a necessary instrument for the information of young people and their participation in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies at the national, regional and international levels, and also for informing the United Nations of the problems facing youth with a view to finding solutions to such problems,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Policies and programmes involving young people: Participation, Development, Peace", in particular the section dealing with the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations,

Convinced that the effective and efficient functioning of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations at the national, regional and international levels forms a basic prerequisite for the adequate information of young people and their active involvement in the work of the United Nations,

Convinced also of the importance for youth and youth organizations of freedom of association, in accordance with the relevant national legislation, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, so as to enable them to participate in the United Nations system and to act effectively as channels of communication,

Convinced further that the participation of youth representatives from Member States in international conferences and meetings dealing with youth-related issues, wherever appropriate, can enhance and strengthen the channels of communication through the discussion of such issues, with a view to finding solutions to problems confronting youth in the contemporary world,

Recognizing that the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth provide a constructive framework for a long-term strategy in the field of youth,

Bearing in mind the important role that non-governmental youth organizations can play in co-operation with United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies in solving the problems of young people,

1. Calls upon Member States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other governmental and intergovernmental organizations to implement fully the guidelines relating to the channels of communication adopted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 32/135 and 36/17, not only in general terms but also by concrete measures that take into account the issues of importance to young people;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue in this respect to make use at the national, regional and international levels of the already existing structures of co-operation between youth and the United Nations system in accordance with the additional guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, contained in the annex to resolution 36/17, and to encourage other United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to do the same;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to develop methods that specifically indicate how the channels of communication could efficiently be attuned to youth-related projects and activities of United Nations organs and of the specialized agencies, and to include in his report thereon to the General Assembly concrete suggestions for co-operation between the United Nations system and the non-governmental youth organizations;

4. Calls upon youth mechanisms that have been set up by youth and youth organizations at the national, regional and international levels to continue to act as channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations by putting forth their proposals for co-operation with the United Nations system, and, where such mechanisms do not exist, recommends that national co-ordinating committees of the International Youth Year should similarly continue to act as channels of communication;

5. Decides to consider at its forty-third session the item entitled "Policies and programmes involving youth" on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General.

The right of youth to education and work

Concerned about unemployment among youth, especially those who had not received adequate training and education, Austria organized an international event, HOPE '87 (Hundreds of Original Projects for Employment) (Vienna, 28 April-2 May), to share with other countries its expertise on educational and vocational training and to develop education and training programmes that could serve as models. The event consisted of an international competition to generate ideas for youth employment projects, an exposition and a symposium on youth employment. A total of 406 projects from participants from 80 countries were submitted to the symposium. The Secretary-General described the event in his October report on policies and programmes involving young people,(4) as he had been requested by the General Assembly in 1985.(9)

Recalling also Council resolutions 1983/17 of 26 May 1983 and 1985/27 of 29 May 1985 concerning youth participation in social and economic development and their exercise of the rights to life, education and work,

Recognizing that in many countries young people, under prevailing critical social and economic conditions, are facing serious problems in the exercise of their right to education and to work,

Aware of the fact that insufficient education and the improvement of young people limit their ability to participate in the development process, and, in this regard, emphasize the importance of secondary and higher education for young people, as well as access for them to appropriate technical and vocational guidance and training programmes,

Expressing its serious interest in consolidating and building further on the results of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace in order to contribute, inter alia, to the increasing participation of young people in the socio-economic life of their country,

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1987, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions dealing with rights and opportunities of youth, both on the recommendation of the Third Committee.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/52 by recorded vote.

Efforts and measures for securing the implementation by States and the enjoyment by youth of human rights in conditions of peace, particularly the right to education and to work

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/29 of 13 November 1981, 37/49 of 3 December 1982, 38/23 of 22 November 1983, 39/23 of 23 November 1984, 40/15 of 18 November 1985 and 41/98 of 4 December 1986, in which it, inter alia, recognized the need to adopt appropriate measures for securing the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work,

Recalling also its resolution 34/151 of 17 December 1979, by which it decided to designate 1985 as International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Recognizing that in many countries the majority of young people, under prevailing critical social and economic conditions, are facing serious problems in the exercise of their right to education and to work,

Convinced that it is necessary to ensure full enjoyment by youth of the rights stipulated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, with special regard to the right to education and to work,

Aware of the fact that insufficient education and the unemployment of young people limit their ability to participate in the development process, and, in this regard, emphasizing the importance of secondary and higher education for young people, as well as access for them to appropriate technical and vocational guidance and training programmes,

Expressing its serious interest in systematically consolidating and building further on the results of the International Youth Year in order to contribute, inter alia, to the increasing active participation of young people in the socio-economic life of their countries,

1. Calls upon all States, all governmental and non-governmental organizations, interested United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies to continue to give priority to the formulation and implementation of effective measures for securing the exercise by youth of the right to education and to work, in conditions of peace, with a view to resolving the problem of unemployment among youth;

2. Requests the Commission for Social Development, the Economic and Social Council and all other relevant United Nations bodies to give adequate consideration on a regular basis to the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, when preparing his interim report on the stage of implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session, to take account of the implementation by States and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work, so that the Commission may adopt recommendations aimed at a solution to youth unemployment;

4. Invites national co-ordinating bodies and bodies implementing policies and programmes in the field of youth to give appropriate priority in the follow-up activities to the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace to the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work.

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 156-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/772) by recorded vote (131-1), 3 November (meeting 32); 19-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.17), orally revised, and orally amended by Netherlands; agenda item 90.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 14-22, 28, 32; plenary 85.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe. Against: United States.

Explaining its vote, the United States said it believed that opportunities to work and receive an education were best provided by a society which respected individual liberty and fundamental freedoms; the provision of such opportunities was a worthy goal for all societies and that goal was best achieved by unleashing the talents of individuals so that they could produce economic growth and expansion which created opportunities for all.

Ireland said that as a result of the revisions, the text better expressed the fact that the enjoyment of human rights by youth should be brought to the attention of the Commission for Social Development; the inclusion of the words "in conditions of peace" in the title was not conducive, however, to maintaining a sharp focus on States' obligations for implementing human rights.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/53 without vote.

Opportunities for youth

The General Assembly,

Recalling the achievements of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace, in particular the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth,

Recalling also its resolution 40/16 of 18 November 1985 on opportunities for youth,

Aware that insufficient education and unemployment of young people limit their ability to participate effectively in the development process, and emphasizing the importance of adequate education of young people and access for them to appropriate technical and vocational guidance and training programmes,

Recognizing that greater awareness should be brought about by Member States in the various sectors of the economy in order to accord the highest priority to the elimination of youth unemployment,

Noting with serious concern the existence of a rapidly growing number of young people in the world, many of whom have never had work, and that with growing unemployment it is becoming increasingly difficult to meet the basic social and economic aspirations of young people,

Noting with appreciation the results of the international competition for youth employment projects, "HOPE '87", held at Vienna from 28 April to 2 May 1987, referred to in the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note of the establishment at Vienna, with the assistance of the Government of Austria, of an Institute of HOPE '87, for the purpose of promoting the participation of youth in development through income-generating activities, particularly in developing countries, through, inter alia, comprehensive data-collection and analyses, the organization of competitions and the provision of technical and financial assistance in the implementation of youth employment projects,

1. Calls upon Member States to pay increased attention to the promotion of youth employment through pragmatic measures in all sectors of the economy in order to enable more young people to obtain appropriate education and vocational training, thereby facilitating their integration into social and professional life;

2. Urges Member States and governmental and non-governmental organizations to increase, wherever possible, technical co-operation activities with a view to narrowing the gap between the demand for and supply of educational and training opportunities at all levels in developing countries, particularly in the least developed ones, and thus to contribute to the achievement of greater equality of employment opportunities for young people in those countries;

3. Calls upon Member States to promote greater awareness of the need to preserve and increase work opportunities for young people, whenever possible, with particular emphasis on equal opportunities for girls and young women;

4. Further calls upon Member States to pay increased attention to conditions that will create work opportunities for young people, inter alia, by facilitating the realization of income-generating projects for young people;

5. Recommends that the Secretary-General explore the possibilities for the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to support, within the framework of its activities, the work of the Institute of HOPE '87, including, if appropriate, the question of affiliating, on the basis of the relevant regulations of the United Nations, the Institute of HOPE '87 to the Centre, on the understanding that the financial resources for the Institute would be raised exclusively from special voluntary contributions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on youth, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, an account of the work undertaken by the Institute of HOPE '87.

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/772) without vote, 3 November (meeting 32); 16-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.18), orally revised; agenda item 90. Sponsors: Algeria, Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Finland, Indonesia, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Senegal, Turkey, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 14-22, 28, 32; plenary 85.

Explaining its position, the United States said it considered the premise of paragraph 4 to be seriously flawed: government-funded make-work projects for youth did not contribute to economic growth, which was the only lasting generator of job opportunities.

UN Youth Fund

In 1987, the United Nations Youth Fund continued to provide technical and material support to catalytic and innovative youth-related activities.(10) Special attention was paid to strengthening international capacities, promoting the integration and participation of youth in national development, and expanding the body of knowledge on youth and development. Particular importance was also attached to data collection and information exchange activities, as well as applied research on youth.

Since becoming operational in 1984, the Fund had received about 250 requests for assistance, of which 36 were approved for funding as at the end of 1987, involving total resource commitment of approximately $300,000. Although grants were modest, $7,500 on average, they served to mobilize an additional three to four times in matching resources.

During the year, funding was provided for a project in Mali aimed at promoting the participation of youth in agriculture and enhancing their earning capacity. Another project in Nepal was aimed at promoting community action and youth participation for the development and testing of methods to slow down deforestation. The Fund also supported a global project on surveys and manuals on youth and co-operatives. During 1986-1987, the Fund dispersed $152,895 for 22 projects, of which 7 were in training, 6 in support and assistance to youth organizations and bodies concerned with youth, 4 in income-generating activities, and 1 each in promotional activities and information exchange.

Income, which peaked during the celebration of IYY in 1985, remained far below the Fund's expenditures. In 1987, only one Member State contributed to its resources. As a result, the Fund sought to establish co-financing agreements to obtain earmarked contributions for selected projects and activities in developing countries.

During 1987, the managerial responsibilities for the Fund were transferred from the Under-Secretary-General for International Economic and Social Affairs to the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna, thereby consolidating the managerial and substantive aspects of the Fund's operations at one duty station. A Trust Fund operations committee was set up within CSDHA, which reviewed project funding proposals prior to submission for financial approval.

Aging persons

The United Nations continued in 1987 to consider the question of the aged-persons aged 60 and over—in the context of the Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging, adopted in 1982 by the World Assembly on Aging(1) and endorsed later that year by the General Assembly.(2) The Plan's primary aim was to assist States in adjusting national plans and programmes to increasing aging populations.

An International Institute on Aging was established at Valletta, Malta, as had been proposed at an expert group meeting in 1986.⁽³⁾ The Institute was to be funded from voluntary contributions by Governments, NGOs and individuals. The Assembly welcomed the Institute's establishment and noted a proposal for the creation of a world foundation on aging.

In December 1987, in response to a request by Senegal, CSDHA organized in co-operation with DTC and UNDP a two-week advisory mission to the country, to identify a tentative set of rules and procedures for a proposed African gerontological society.

Implementation of the Plan of Action

Reflecting their different approaches and specialized concerns, several United Nations bodies and agencies dealt with the question of aging and implementation of the Plan of Action. CSDHA, as the focal point within the United Nations system, carried out two research projects, on living arrangements for the aging and on their participation in development, which were to constitute the basis for a comprehensive study of the world aging situation requested by the General Assembly in 1986.⁽⁴⁾

In order to facilitate the exchange of information, the Centre was preparing a global directory of organizations active in the field of aging and issued twice during the year the Bulletin on Aging, which reported on activities of the United Nations system, the NGO community and Member States, particularly from developing regions. CSDHA also continued co-operating with a number of networks, including approximately 70 national committees on aging and NGO committees on aging in New York and Vienna.

In a September 1987 report,⁽⁵⁾ compiled in response to a 1986 Assembly request,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General described national and international activities related to the question of aging, and updated information received from Member States on their implementation of the Plan of Action. He suggested that the Assembly urge States that had not done so to establish national committees to promote policies on aging; invite NGOs to associate themselves with United Nations activities; invite Governments to participate in the second review of the implementation of the Plan of Action beginning in 1988; consider a declaration on the rights of the aged; establish and strengthen regional and international institutes as a means for greater exchange of knowledge, particularly among developing countries; encourage Governments to introduce and strengthen training programmes in gerontology; and invite them to give priority to projects and activities on aging within the framework of bilateral assistance. The Secretary-General also asked the Assembly to note his plan for appointing an adviser on aging.

The Commission for Social Development, at its February/March 1987 session, adopted a resolution,⁽⁶⁾ by which it recommended that the Secretary-General, when preparing the medium-term plan for 1990-1995, give priority to the elaboration of strategies to implement the Plan of Action, to the co-ordination of United Nations activities concerning aging, and to adequate budget allocations. The Commission also recommended that he propose a phased implementation of research and policy analysis of aging issues, bearing in mind the work of the specialized agencies, and that he include issues related to aging in his preparations for the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes (see p. 616). It urged Governments and the United Nations to involve NGOs to a greater extent in the implementation of the Plan of Action.

As suggested by the Commission, the question of aging was discussed at the Interregional Consultation. In its Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, the Consultation noted that, in some countries, a greater share of resources would need to be directed to programmes for the aged. A population structure that included more old people required rethinking of assumptions on the normal working life-span; the demarcation between paid work and retirement; the method of financing pensions; the type of services to be provided; older people meeting their own needs; and the role of older people in family and society.

The ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters), in March,⁽⁷⁾ recommended that an inter-agency meeting on system-wide co-ordination of aging policies and programmes be convened in early 1988, in conjunction with the thirty-second session of the Commission on the Status of Women.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1987, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/41 without vote.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting with appreciation the results of the World Assembly on Aging, held at Vienna from 26 July to 6 August 1982, including the International Plan of Action on Aging, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982.

Acknowledging the need to implement recommendation 57 of the Plan of Action, which calls for practical training centres to train personnel in the field of aging, especially personnel from developing countries,

Endorsing the recommendations contained in the Report of the Interregional Seminar to Promote the Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging, Kiev, 9-20 September 1985, and recalling General Assembly resolution 41/96 of 4 December 1986, in which the need for training centres was again confirmed,

Taking note of the report of the Expert Group Meeting on the Feasibility of Establishing an Institute on Aging, held at Valletta, Malta from 15 to 19 December 1986,

Taking note with appreciation of the work of the Aging Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat, in spite of a shortage of resources to perform its duties in implementing the Plan of Action,

Recalling the recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations, approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

Noting that the institute on aging, as proposed by the Expert Group Meeting, would be financed solely by voluntary contributions and by the Government of Malta,

1. Confirms the need to implement recommendation 57 of the International Plan of Action on Aging;
2. Thanks the Government of Malta for its continuing efforts in the field of aging;

3. Recommends to the Secretary-General that he take into consideration the conclusions contained in the report of the Expert Group Meeting on the Feasibility of Establishing an Institute on Aging, bearing in mind that the proposed institute in Malta would essentially be a training institute to fulfil the training needs of developing countries in implementing the Plan of Action and that the proposed institute would not preclude the establishment of other institutes or training centres related to the United Nations and voluntarily financed in other countries or regions of the world;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to consider additional ways of solving the great need for world-wide training of staff in the gerontological area and of using the existing structures within and outside the United Nations system to help fulfil this task better, and to report thereon to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session;

5. Urges the entities involved to avoid any duplication of work in the areas of research, data collection and information within the United Nations system;

6. Requests the Commission for Social Development to consider the question of aging, including the experience of the proposed institute, at its thirty-first session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/51 without vote.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging and related activities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982, by which it endorsed the International Plan of Action on Aging, adopted by consensus by the World Assembly on Aging,

Reaffirming its resolution 40/29 of 29 November 1985, in which it stressed the importance of the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging-in assisting Member States, in particular developing countries, in formulating and implementing policies and programmes on aging,

Reaffirming further its resolution 40/30 of 29 November 1985, which it expressed its conviction that the elderly must be considered an important and necessary element in the development process at all levels within a given society, and reaffirming also that developing countries, in particular, need assistance in order to implement the Plan of Action,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/96 of 4 December 1986, in which it urged Governments to intensify their efforts, within the context of their own national priorities, cultures and traditions, to implement the recommendations contained in the Plan of Action,

Taking note of Commission for Social Development resolution 30/1 of 4 March 1987 relating to the preparation by the Secretary-General of the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of aging,

Recognizing the importance of the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action, which will be undertaken by the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session, in 1989,

Taking note of the importance accorded to the question of aging in the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, adopted by the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes, held at Vienna from 7 to 15 September 1987,

Convinced that the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging is a valuable mechanism for promoting activities in the implementation of the Plan of Action, and concerned that the resources of the Trust Fund are being depleted without adequate replenishment,

Acknowledging with appreciation the invaluable role played by non-governmental organizations in promoting greater awareness of issues that involve the aging and in advocating measures to implement the Plan of Action,

1. Reaffirms once again its endorsement of the International Plan of Action on Aging, and requests the Secretary-General, through the Commission for Social Development, to continue to monitor progress in the implementation of the Plan of Action, particularly through the review and appraisal process requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/51;

2. Invites Member States to participate actively in the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action;

3. Welcomes the establishment in Malta of the International Institute on Aging in pursuance of recommenation 57 of the Plan of Action and of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/41 of 28 May 1987;

4. Supports the recommendation made to the Secretary-General by the Commission for Social Development in its resolution 30/1 that, in preparing the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995, he should give priority to the careful elaboration of practical strategies to implement the Plan of Action by providing fuller co-ordination of aging activities in the United Nations system and maintaining adequate programme budget allocations;

5. Takes note with satisfaction of the recommendation made by the Commission for Social Development in its resolution 30/1 that the Secretary-General, in preparing the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995, should propose a phased implementation of research and policy analysis activities in the field of aging, bearing in mind the work of the specialized agencies;

6. Requests the Commission for Social Development to convene an informal open-ended ad hoc working group at its thirty-first session in order to consider adequately the support of the Secretary-General on the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action and propose to the Commission at its thirty-first session appropriate measures to advance further the cause of the aging;

7. Considers that the tenth anniversary of the 1982 World Assembly on Aging should be marked by appropriate follow-up activities in order to maintain awareness on a global level of issues affecting the aging;

8. Calls upon those governments which have not already done so to establish and strengthen national mechanisms in order to promote policies and programmes in the field of aging;

9. Once again requests the Secretary-General to respond favourably to the request of the African Regional Conference on Aging, held at Dakar in December 1984, for assistance in establishing an African gerontological society;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the existing programmes on aging, as well as the United Nations system-wide co-ordination in this field, with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat serving as the focal point in the United Nations system for activities in the field of aging;

11. Strongly appeals to Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging;

12. Calls upon the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other funding organizations concerned to continue to support activities relating to the question of aging, in particular by providing assistance for projects that fall within their mandate;

13. Welcomes initiatives by non-governmental organizations that encourage the private-sector to support the work of the United Nations system in the field of aging by mobilizing resources for implementing the Plan of Action, and in this respect takes note of a proposal for the creation of a world foundation on aging;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Question of aging".

UN trust funds

As at June 1987, the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging supported nine projects, of which three were global, four were in Latin America and the Caribbean, and one each was in Asia and the Pacific and Western Asia.

Among the projects supported were an expert seminar on the promotion of national infrastructures for aging populations in Asia and the Pacific, convened by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) (Bangkok, Thailand, 8-12 December). Attended by 16 experts and representatives of United Nations agencies and bodies, the seminar adopted a guide for future activities on aging in the region, which emphasized a human resources development perspective and the strengthening of relationships between governmental and non-governmental sectors in providing alternative support systems for the elderly. Other projects supported by the Fund included an evaluation of the socio-economic situation of the aging population in Argentina; training courses on gerontology in Argentina, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Jamaica, Mexico and Uruguay; a needs assessment survey of the urban elderly in Latin America and the Caribbean; a multiple activities centre for the elderly in Bolivia; and the development of innovative, responsive and comprehensive services in Lebanon. Global projects included promotion of co-operatives for the aging, development of care for the elderly, and a sample survey on the conditions of the elderly in 700 towns.

The Director-General of UNOV continued to carry out the managerial responsibilities of the Fund. In 1987, a Social Development Trust Funds Operations Committee was established, which served to halve the time required to appraise and approve projects.

The trend of the Fund's expenditures exceeding income continued, reflecting the Fund's response to the growing number of requests for assistance. Expenditures in 1987 totalled $315,133, while income amounted to $158,669, leaving a balance of $311,392 available as of 31 December 1987. The operations of the Fund would have to cease, unless additional and substantial contributions were received in the near future, the Secretary-General stated in a September report on the question of aging.⁽⁵⁾ At the 1987 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, pledges of $27,858 were made by seven States.

The Trust Fund for the Promotion of a United Nations Programme for the Aging, established in July 1986(8) on a provisional basis until 31 December 1987, was extended through 1988, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General.(5) He reviewed options for using the Fund's resources of $17,000; among them was the creation of a world foundation on aging, to encourage the private sector to support United Nations activities in the field.

No action was taken by the Assembly's Third Committee on a draft sponsored by Cameroon, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Panama, Paraguay, Swaziland and the United States,(9) consideration of which had been deferred by the General Assembly in 1986.(10). By that text, the two trust funds would be merged as a United Nations International Fund for Aging administered by UNDP and included among the programmes for which funds were pledged at the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities.

Chapter XX

Refugees and displaced persons

The year 1987 marked a series of successes in finding solutions to the plight of refugees, the advent of new and serious refugee situations and, in a number of instances, a deterioration in the treatment of refugees. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued to co-operate actively with concerned Governments and the international community in efforts to meet the humanitarian needs of refugees throughout the world and sought to provide international protection to refugees to compensate for their lack or the denial of national protection.

The promotion of durable solutions, such as voluntary repatriation, local integration and resettlement, remained the primary and long-term objective of UNHCR's assistance programme. UNHCR responded to requests for emergency assistance for many new arrivals and continued to pursue care and maintenance programmes for refugees for whom no immediate solution could be found. More than a quarter of a million people shed their status as refugees in 1987 and started new lives through voluntary repatriation and resettlement in third countries.

The Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme condemned military and armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements and considered, among other things, international protection, the situation of refugee children, refugee aid and development and durable solutions.

In December, the General Assembly called on the Secretary-General to give all possible assistance to preparations for an international conference on the plight of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in southern Africa (resolution 42/106), as well as to the follow-up to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (42/107). It also called for assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons of Central America (42/110), emergency assistance to Chad (42/128), humanitarian assistance to Djibouti (42/126), and assistance to Ethiopia (42/139), Malawi (42/132), Somalia (42/127), the Sudan (42/129) and student refugees in southern Africa (42/138).

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1987/89 and decision 1987/158, requested the enlargement of the Executive Committee, as did the General Assembly by resolution 42/130. In addition, the Assembly urged States to support the High Commissioner in his efforts to achieve durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons and called on them to contribute to UNHCR's programmes with the aim of ensuring that the needs of refugees were met (42/109). It decided to continue UNHCR for a further period of five years from 1 January 1989 (42/108).

The Nansen Medal for 1987—awarded since 1954 in honour of Fridtjof Nansen, the first League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—went to King Juan Carlos I for developments in Spain, which spanned a decade and had had a profound impact on the world's refugee problem.

UNHCR programme and finances

Programme policy

Executive Committee action. At its thirty-eighth session (Geneva, 5-12 October 1987), the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme, recognizing that the complexity of the refugee problem underscored the importance of the High Commissioner's international protection function, called for the strengthening of that function. The Committee appealed to Governments to promote conditions conducive to attaining durable solutions such as providing adequate resettlement quotas with flexible selection criteria, including a more liberal policy towards disabled and medically at risk refugees, and distinguishing between refugees and ordinary immigrants.

The Committee called on the international community and UNHCR, in co-operation with development agencies, to review and redefine refugee self-sufficiency and to devise a mechanism to provide financial support to host countries to meet the cost of refurbishing infrastructures located in organized rural settlements.

The Committee expressed concern regarding continued violation of the principle of non-refoulement—whereby refugees and asylum-seekers would not be forcibly returned to countries where they faced persecution or other danger; the deteriorating situation of refugees and asylum-seekers in southern Africa; and lack of protection for groups of refugees, including a large number of Palestinians.

Regarding refugee children, the Committee expressed serious concern about human rights violations and called on the High Commissioner to develop further guidelines to promote co-operation between UNHCR and concerned organizations to improve their international protection, physical security and well-being.

The Committee called on States and concerned agencies to support the High Commissioner's efforts to improve protection and assistance programmes for refugee women.

The Committee condemned military and armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements and called on States and international organizations to provide assistance to victims. It welcomed a proposal to convene an international conference on the situation of refugees and war victims in southern Africa under the auspices of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the United Nations Secretary-General and UNHCR.

Concerning development projects for refugees and returnees, the Committee urged the High Commissioner to intensify efforts to promote such activities in co-operation with the World Bank and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other organizations specialized in development assistance. It also requested Governments of asylum countries to consider formulating and implementing in their regional or national development plans, with the assistance of the international community, development-oriented programmes addressed to refugees and local populations. The Committee called on the international community and the United Nations system, particularly UNDP and UNHCR, to pursue the establishment of a link between refugee aid and development in follow-up action to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (ICARA II).⁽²⁾

The Committee acknowledged the adoption by several States of national administrative and legislative measures to implement the provisions of international refugee instruments, including the establishment of procedures to determine refugee status, and emphasized the need for States, intergovernmental, national and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to sensitize public opinion to the special circumstances and needs of refugees and asylum-seekers.

In meeting refugee needs, UNHCR continued co-operating with other United Nations organizations, in particular with the World Food Programme (WFP) in providing food aid, with the World Bank and the International Labour Organisation in promoting self-reliance and income-generating or employment opportunities and with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) in responding to primary health care, water supply and basic sanitation needs. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) worked with UNHCR to produce textbooks and educational programmes for refugees. Ways of incorporating a number of established refugee settlements into the normal development process were being studied by UNHCR and UNDP. UNHCR collaborated closely with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, with the World Health Organization (WHO) on nutrition and guidelines on mental health in refugee camps, and with the United Nations Fund for Population Activities in family planning programmes. It also co-operated with OAU, the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration, the Organization of American States (OAS), the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the European Parliament and the Council of Europe, as well as liberation movements and NGOs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 June 1987, by decision 1987/160, the Economic and Social Council transmitted the High Commissioner's report for 1986/87(3) to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 42/109 without vote.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office, as well as the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner on the work of its thirty-eighth session, and having heard the statements made by the High Commissioner on 13 and 17 November 1987,

Recalling its resolution 41/124 of 4 December 1986,

Reaffirming the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner, which are undertaken in the common interest of humanity,

Noting with satisfaction that, following recent accessions, at least one hundred States are now parties to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

Deeply concerned that refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner continue to face, in certain situations, distressingly serious problems in various parts of the world,

Particularly concerned that in various regions the safety and welfare of refugees and asylum-seekers continue to be seriously jeopardized on account of military or armed attacks and other forms of violence, and noting that further efforts should be made in dealing with the problem of rescuing asylum-seekers in distress at sea,

Stressing the fundamental importance of the High Commissioner's function to provide international protection, particularly in the context of the increasing complexity of the contemporary refugee problem, and the need for States to co-operate with the High Commissioner in the exercise of this essential function,

Noting the efforts of the High Commissioner to continue to address the special problems and needs of refugee and displaced women and children, who in many cases are exposed to a variety of difficult situations affecting their physical and legal protection as well as their psychological and material well-being,

Emphasizing the need for States to assist, on as wide a basis as possible, the efforts of the High Commissioner to promote speedy and durable solutions to the problems of refugees,

Realizing in this context that voluntary repatriation or return remains the most desirable solution to the problems facing refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner, and welcoming the fact that in various parts of the world it has been possible for significant numbers of them to return voluntarily to their countries of origin,

Commending States that, despite severe economic and development problems of their own, continue to admit large numbers of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner into their territories, and emphasizing the need to share the burden of these States to the maximum extent possible through international assistance in accordance with the conclusions on refugee aid and development adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-eighth session,

Stressing the need for the international community to continue to provide adequate resettlement opportunities for those refugees for whom no other durable solution may be in sight, with particular attention given to refugees who have already spent an inordinately long time in camps,

Welcoming the valuable support extended by Governments to the High Commissioner in carrying out his humanitarian tasks, as well as the continuing and increasing co-operation between the Office of the High Commissioner and other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Noting the High Commissioner's continuing efforts to reorganize and improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Office, particularly with respect to activities in the field,

Commending the High Commissioner and his staff for the dedicated manner in which they discharge their responsibilities, and paying tribute to those staff members who lost their lives in the course of their duties,

1. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental nature of the function of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to provide international protection and the need for Governments to co-operate fully with his Office in order to facilitate the effective exercise of this function, in particular by acceding to and implementing the relevant international and regional refugee instruments and by scrupulously observing the principles of asylum and non-refoulement;

2. Notes with particular concern the continued violation of the principle of non-refoulement in certain situations, and stresses the need to strengthen measures to protect refugees against such action;

3. Appeals to all States that have not yet become parties to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees to consider acceding to these instruments in order to enhance their universal character;

4. Condemns all violations of the rights and safety of refugees and asylum-seekers, in particular those perpetrated by military or armed attacks against refugee camps and settlements and other forms of violence;

5. Endorses the conclusions on military and armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-eighth session, and calls upon all States to observe these principles:

6. Endorses the conclusions on refugee children adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-eighth session, and urges States to extend their full co-operation to the High Commissioner so as to ensure that the special needs of refugee children are met;

7. Urges the High Commissioner to continue his efforts to identify and meet the special needs of refugee women;

8. Recognizes the importance of fair and expeditious procedures for determining refugee status and/or granting asylum in order, inter alia, to protect refugees and asylum-seekers from unjustified or unduly prolonged detention or stay in camps, and urges States to establish such procedures;

9. Recognizes the importance of achieving durable solutions to refugee problems and in particular the need to address in this process the causes that force refugees and asylum-seekers to flee their countries of origin, in the light of the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees;

10. Urges all States to support the High Commissioner in his efforts to achieve durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons of concern to his Office, primarily through voluntary repatriation or return, including assistance to returnees as appropriate or, wherever appropriate, through integration into countries of asylum or through resettlement in third countries;

11. Expresses deep appreciation for the valuable material and humanitarian response of receiving countries, in particular those developing countries which, despite limited resources, continue to admit, on a permanent or temporary basis, large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers;

12. Urges the international community, in accordance with the principle of international solidarity and burden-sharing, to assist the above-mentioned countries in order to enable them to cope with the additional burden that care for refugees and asylum-seekers represents;

13. Recognizes with appreciation the work done by the High Commissioner to put into practice the concept of development-oriented assistance to refugees and returnees, as initiated at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, and urges him to continue that process, wherever appropriate, in full co-operation with appropriate international agencies, and further urges Governments to support these efforts;

14. Emphasizes the essential role of development-oriented organizations and agencies in the implementation of programmes that benefit refugees and returnees and urges the High Commissioner and those organizations and agencies, in accordance with their respective mandates, to strengthen their mutual co-operation towards the attainment of durable solution; and calls upon the High Commissioner to continue to promote such co-operation;

15. Calls upon all Governments to contribute, in a spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing and in every way feasible, to the High Commissioner's programmes with the aim of ensuring that the needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner are met.

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/808) without vote, 23 November (meeting 56); 28-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.78), orally revised; agenda item 103. Sponsors: Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Thailand, United Kingdom.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 45, 47-50, 52, 54, 56; plenary 93.

The United States said it would join the consensus on the understanding that paragraph 4 would be read in the light of the conclusions on armed attacks adopted by the UNHCR Executive Committee (see p. 898), which were endorsed in paragraph 5 and were consistent with international law. Its support of the text should not be construed as support for the view that it was unlawful under any circumstances to use force against a refugee camp or settlement, even if it was being used in a manner inconsistent with its civilian purpose.

Malaysia said it had joined the consensus but questioned the use of the term "asylum-seekers" in the sixth preambular paragraph as it appeared to include all those who were rescued at sea; a growing number of people leaving their countries of origin were not refugees but were seeking a better life abroad.

In a related action, the General Assembly, in the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond (resolution 42/186), recommended that countries hosting large numbers of refugees receive more assistance through UNHCR and other bodies to improve environmental conditions in refugee settlements.

Continuation of UNHCR

In accordance with a 1982 General Assembly resolution,(4) the Assembly reviewed the arrangements for UNHCR to determine whether the Office should continue beyond 31 December 1988.

On 7 December 1987, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/108 without vote.

Continuation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/196 of 18 December 1982, in which it decided to review, not later than at its forty-second session, the arrangements for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with a view to determining whether the Office should be continued beyond 31 December 1988,

Recognizing the need for concerted international action on behalf of the increasing numbers of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner,

Considering the outstanding work that has been performed by the Office of the High Commissioner in providing international protection and material assistance to refugees and displaced persons as well as in promoting permanent solutions to their problems,

Noting with deep appreciation the effective manner in which the Office of the High Commissioner has been dealing with various essential humanitarian tasks entrusted to it,

1. Decides to continue the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for a further period of five years from 1 January 1989;

2. Decides to review, not later than at its forty-seventh session, the arrangements for the Office of the High Commissioner with a view to determining whether the Office should be continued beyond 31 December 1993.

Financial and administrative questions

UNHCR voluntary funds expenditure in 1987(5) amounted to $461.4 million compared with $441.5 million in 1986. Of the total, some $335.6 million was spent on General Programmes and $125.8 on Special Programmes and other trust funds. Total income for 1987 was $475.6 million compared with $449.9 million in 1986.

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee called on Governments to make additional funds available to cover a shortfall of $51 million under the General Programmes as at October 1987, to meet fully 1987 projected requirements and possibly prepare for an adequate carry-over of funds to 1988.

The Committee noted the allocations made by UNHCR from its Emergency Fund during the period 1 June 1986 to 31 May 1987, and the observations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).(6)

It adopted conclusions proposed by its Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters concerning the issues of management, programme support and administration.

Contributions

Contributions in cash and kind in 1987 totalled $428 million. Paid contributions in cash totalled $330.5 million, while outstanding pledges amounted to $41 million. Contributions in kind were $43 million with an additional $13 million in outstanding pledges. In addition, $746,269 was received from Canada, $298,507 from Norway, $782,473 from Sweden, and $3 million from the United States for a World Bank project for refugees in Pakistan. Contributions in cash and kind from government sources totalled some $376 million in 1987. Intergovernmental organizations provided $44 million, and NGOs and private sources made donations valued at $7.7 million.

At its 1987 session(1) the UNHCR Executive Committee approved a target of $368 million (not including the $10 million for the Emergency Fund) for 1988 General Programmes and called on Governments to contribute generously.

Government pledges of $121 million were announced at a 19 November 1987 meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to the 1988 Programme of UNHCR.

Accounts

1986 accounts

The audited financial statements on funds administered by UNHCR for the year ended 31 December 1986 showed a total expenditure of $441.5 million and total income of $449.9 million.(7)

In July 1987,(8) the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a synthesis of the main observations of the Board of Auditors on the audit of various United Nations funds; comments relating to UNHCR concerned, among other things, delivery and distribution of food aid items, programme evaluation and procurement and accounting records.

Concurring with the Board's findings, ACABQ in a September report,(9) recommended improving management, procurement and accounting methods.

In October,(1) the UNHCR Executive Committee took note of the accounts and reports, and recognized further current efforts to improve financial and programme management, in particular in the areas of food aid and programme evaluation.

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 42/206, accepted the financial report and the Board's audit opinions, concurred with ACABQ's observations and requested the High Commissioner to take the required remedial action.

Special programme audit examination

As requested by ACABQ the Board of Auditors conducted a special programme audit examination of the voluntary funds administered by UNHCR in order to evaluate the effectiveness of UNHCR and the efficiency of its operations in the field. The report on the results of the examination, which was annexed to an ACABQ report to the General Assembly,(9) covered UNHCR field operations in two countries. A representative sample of the 31 organizations assisting refugees in one of the countries was selected to review the working relationships with such organizations.

The Board found UNHCR succeeding in providing protection for refugees and making regular efforts towards finding durable solutions. It noted that UNHCR was prevented from achieving the highest level of efficiency in delivering immediate assistance owing to major physical, geographical and infrastructural obstacles and its inability always to select its implementing partners. Under those circumstances, it was felt that UNHCR was achieving an acceptable minimum level of effectiveness.

Six key areas for special attention were identified: improving working relationships with implementing partners; simplifying and standardizing operating structures and procedures in field offices; matching staff postings with field operations requirements; enhancing the responsiveness of the UNHCR planning cycle; improving procurement procedures; and reviewing purchasing policy.

Commenting on the Board's findings, ACABQ stated that of the six areas identified by the Board, that of improving working relationships with implementing partners, particularly ensuring more support for partners who were weak in technical and management skills, and closer monitoring of their performance was regarded as being the most important. ACABQ requested UNHCR to submit in 1988, a comprehensive report on its implementation of the Board's recommendations.

In October, UNHCR's Executive Committee(1) noted the ACABQ report on the special programme audit examination.

Administrative and personnel issues

UNHCR's Executive Committee(1) authorized an increase in the working capital of the Revolving Fund for Field Staff Housing and Basic Amenities from the 1987 General Programmes up to a ceiling of $3.5 million, while confirming that the Fund's resources should be used strictly for hardship duty stations. It supported the High Commissioner's efforts to reorganize and improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Office, and urged him to take special measures to increase the number of women in the Professional and higher categories, especially in policy-making and senior management positions, and to report to the Committee on progress made. The Committee expressed support for the practice of staff rotation and for the High Commissioner's efforts to improve conditions for staff at difficult field duty stations.

Executive Committee

Enlargement of the Executive Committee

On 26 May,(10) Somalia requested that the Economic and Social Council consider enlarging UNHCR's Executive Committee. Citing the excessive number of African and Asian countries shouldering the burden of UNHCR work by hosting the largest refugee population in the world and which therefore had a paramount interest in the Committee, Somalia hoped the Council would recommend enlarging the Committee to allow at least two more members from Africa and Asia to participate in its work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1987/158 of 29 May, the Economic and Social Council decided to consider at its second regular session the question of enlarging the Executive Committee. On 9 July, the Council adopted resolution 1987/89 by roll-call vote.

Enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations
High Commissioner for Refugees

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 1166(XII) of 26 November 1957, in which the Assembly provided for the establishment of an Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, as well as Assembly resolutions 1958(XVIII) of 12 December 1963 and 2294(XXII) of 11 December 1967, in which it provided for subsequent increases in the membership of the Executive Committee,

Noting the note verbale dated 26 May 1987 from the Permanent Representative of Somalia to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General regarding the enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

1. Recommends the General Assembly to take a decision at its forty-second session on the question of enlarging the membership of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees from forty-one to forty-three;

2. Recommends the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to consider ways and means of improving the possibilities for observers to participate effectively in its work

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/89

9 July 1987 Meeting 37 30-0-19 (roll-call vote)

4-nation draft (E/1987/L.48), orally amended by India, sub-amended by Denmark; agenda item 5.

Sponsors: Pakistan, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic.

Meeting numbers. ESC 20, 36, 37.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, China, Denmark, Djibouti, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guinea, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Morocco, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Philippines, Senegal, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Colombia, Egypt, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Jamaica, Panama, Peru, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Prior to adopting the text, Ethiopia had moved that no action be taken at that session on the draft. The motion was rejected by 22 votes to 6, with 21 abstentions.

Colombia noted that an entire regional group had abstained, which, it said, was an indication of the importance they attached to avoiding any disturbance of the balance established in the Executive Committee. It believed that the Committee should continue to make its decisions by consensus. Egypt said it had abstained to maintain its neutrality as Vice-President in charge of informal consultations.

Although Japan voted for the resolution, it regretted that it had not been possible to adopt it by consensus and hoped that this would not set a precedent for the Executive Committee, which should maintain its tradition of taking decisions by consensus. Denmark expressed similar views.

Executive Committee action. In October,(1) the Executive Committee established a working group to consider ways to improve possibilities for observer delegations to participate in its work and asked the group to make proposals to be considered at the Committee's 1988 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/130 without vote.

Enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations
High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/89 of 9 July 1987 on the enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

1. Decides to increase the membership of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees from forty-one to forty-three;

2. Requests the Economic and Social Council to elect the two additional members at its first regular session of 1988;

3. Notes with satisfaction that the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner has begun to consider ways and means of improving the possibilities for observers to participate effectively in its work.

In-depth study of the UN intergovernmental structure

By decision 1987/112 of 6 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council established a Special Commission, open to all United Nations Member States, to carry out an in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields in accordance with recommendation 8 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18).⁽¹⁾ The Group of 18 had recommended that the study should, among other things, identify measures to rationalize and simplify the structure and consider consolidating overlapping activities and merging existing bodies in order to make the structure more responsive to current needs. The study also aimed to improve the system of reporting by reducing the number of reports.

In response, the UNHCR Executive Committee in October⁽²⁾ outlined its structure, agenda, calendar of meetings and work programme, and described UNHCR'S co-ordination of assistance activities with other United Nations bodies. The Executive Committee said it had already taken steps to rationalize its work, including reducing the duration of its meetings and documentation and streamlining its agenda. It did stress, however, that despite efforts by UNHCR, the Committee's work was seriously affected by late receipt of documents in five United Nations official languages (Arabic, English, French, Russian and Spanish).

The Committee had decided to maintain its summary records and had communicated that decision to the Chairman of the United Nations Committee on Conferences.

Refugee assistance and protection

Assistance

During 1987,⁽¹⁾ UNHCR continued to co-operate with concerned Governments and the international community in efforts to meet the humanitarian needs of refugees throughout the world. The promotion of durable solutions, namely, voluntary repatriation, local integration and resettlement, remained the primary and long-term objectives of 3 UNHCR assistance programmes. UNHCR responded to requests for emergency assistance for many new arrivals and continued to pursue care and maintenance programmes for refugees for whom no immediate solution could be found. Relief-oriented programmes also included measures to promote basic self-sufficiency activities among refugees.

Total UNHCR expenditure in 1987 amounted to $461.4 million, an increase of some $20 million over 1986, which reflected additional requirements due to the emergence of new refugee situations, changes in programme content and a higher rate of programme delivery. In 1987, General Programmes expenditure totalled $335.6 million, including $6.3 million obligated from the Emergency Fund. Of that $6.3 million, the largest amounts included $678,631 for assistance to Mozambican refugees in the United Republic of Tanzania, $1.9 million for relief to returnees and displaced persons in Sri Lanka, $540,000 for emergency relief supplies for newly arrived Iraqi refugees in Iran, $475,000 for assistance to Afghan refugees in Pakistan and almost $1 million to Yemen to assist refugees from Democratic Yemen.

Pending the identification and implementation of durable solutions, UNHCR continued to provide intermediate assistance in the form of care and maintenance (food, water, shelter, health services, sanitation, education). In 1987, the largest single care and maintenance programme was for Afghan refugees in Pakistan, for which $51.3 million was obligated under General Programmes. Ethiopia, Somalia and Thailand also received major care programmes, as did Mozambican refugees in several neighbouring countries, particularly Malawi.

UNHCR's primary objective remained the promotion of durable solutions through voluntary repatriation, local integration in a country of first asylum or resettlement in a third country. In 1987, over $110.6 million was obligated under General Programmes and some $19.9 million was made available under Special Programmes for rehabilitation assistance to returnees in their countries of origin. Voluntary repatriation movements in 1987 included the return of 81,000 Ugandan refugees, 47,000 Mozambicans, 37,000 Ethiopians and some 10,000 Chadians. In addition, 5,000 Zairean refugees registered for voluntary repatriation, of whom some 900 returned to Zaire. Over 13,000 Nicaraguans, Salvadorians, Guatemalans and Haitians returned to their countries, while repatriation of Argentinian and Uruguayans continued. Resettlement remained the principal durable solution for Indo-Chinese refugees—some 45,800 Indo-Chinese were resettled in 1987, as were an additional 12,961 Vietnamese under the Orderly Departure Programme. Over 19,000 Europeans, about 3,000 Africans, 5,300 from the Middle East and some 700 from the Americas also benefited from resettlement, as did 2,400 persons under assistance programmes for disabled refugees and their families. Expenditure on local integration activities in 1987 totalled some $88.8 million, while resettlement assistance amounted to approximately $16.5 million.

Elementary education continued to be provided mainly in local government schools or in specially established settlement schools. UNHCR had 108 projects in post-primary, vocational/technical and academic education. Some $10.2 million was spent to enable 18,800 refugee students to study at secondary and tertiary levels—31 per cent of them took technical training courses, 58 per cent attended secondary schools and 11 per cent were enrolled in universities.

Of the 42 counselling activities carried out in the field by UNHCR's operational partners, 22 were in Africa for an amount of $3.3 million. An additional 26 counselling projects totalling $4.1 million were implemented by UNHCR through its professional social services staff. Both types of projects facilitated the provision of case management assistance to refugees. Assistance to handicapped refugees continued with the provision of medical facilities and services in asylum countries. In 1987, the needs of some 10,000 refugees were met at a cost of $1 million. In addition, 24 refugees were evacuated from one country to another for medical treatment, and another 9 refugees were treated in their country of asylum at a cost of $100,000.

The annual amount of food aid to refugees, including that from WFP, totalled about $200 million; some $59.2 million in food aid was channelled through UNHCR.

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee(2) urged the High Commissioner to intensify efforts to promote activities benefiting refugees and returnees, in co-operation with the World Bank, UNDP, the International Fund for Agriculture and Development (IFAD), the European Economic Community and other organizations specializing in development assistance.

In 1987, UNHCR's assistance activities in Africa totalled $171.6 million, of which $112 million was spent on local settlement activities, $1.2 million on resettlement, $17.7 million on voluntary repatriation and $40.6 million on relief and other assistance. Somalia and the Sudan received the most assistance, $48 million and $42 million, respectively.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, $36.8 million went for assistance activities, of which $15.4 million was spent on local settlement, $261,500 on resettlement, $4 million on voluntary repatriation and $17 million on relief and other assistance. Honduras and Mexico received the highest amounts—$15 million and $2.6 million, respectively.

In Europe and North America, UNHCR expenditures totalled $13.7 million, of which $2.5 million was spent on local settlement, $4 million on resettlement, $676,000 on voluntary repatriation and $6.6 million on relief and other assistance. Turkey and Italy received the most assistance with allocations of $2.8 million each, and Yugoslavia received $2.1 million.

In Asia and Oceania, assistance expenditures amounted to $66.3 million, of which $7 million was spent on local settlements, $11.8 million on resettlement, $2.7 million on voluntary repatriation and $44.7 million on relief and other assistance. Thailand and the Philippines received the most assistance, with allocations totalling $27 million and $6.5 million, respectively.

In South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East, expenditures amounted to $111 million, of which $72 million was spent on local settlement, $441,600 on resettlement, $3,600 on voluntary repatriation and $38.5 million on relief and other assistance. Pakistan, Iran and Algeria received the most assistance with totals of $79.4 million, $16.1 million and $6.9 million, respectively.

UNHCR promoted greater public awareness of the refugee problem by producing and distributing a variety of written and audio-visual materials, arranging for journalists' visits to refugee settlements and organizing a number of special events. Special events included a major exhibition in Paris entitled "Refugees in the World", two benefit concerts hosted by the Federal Republic of Germany and Switzerland, and a round-table on the protection of refugees: humanitarian action and political considerations. The magazine Refugees continued to be published monthly in English, French and Spanish, with special editions in Arabic, German, Italian and Japanese. New language versions of a booklet produced for schoolchildren were published in French, German, Italian and Spanish, as were posters, a world refugee map and a calendar. A series of country fact sheets was produced and updated on a quarterly basis to provide information on UNHCR's main programmes around the world.

Refugee aid and development assistance

In an August 1987 report to the Executive Committee,⁽³⁾ the High Commissioner stated that he had augmented his efforts to promote development activities benefiting refugees and returnees in co-operation with the World Bank, UNDP and other international, regional and governmental and non-governmental organizations. He described UNHCR's activities in that regard in Pakistan, Somalia and the Sudan and in connection with follow-up action to ICARA II (see below). In March, an agreement was reached to foster collaboration between UNHCR and IFAD.

In October 1987,⁽²⁾ the Executive Committee, stressing the essential role of development-oriented organizations and agencies in implementing programmes benefiting refugees and returnees, urged them to strengthen their co-operation with the High Commissioner. It requested Governments of countries of asylum to consider formulating and implementing, in co-ordination with UNHCR, development-oriented programmes for refugees and local populations in their regional and national development plans.

Assistance to refugees in Africa

In 1987, the already substantial portion of the refugee population in Africa witnessed an increase of well over half a million refugees, bringing the total refugee population to 3.5 million. At the same time, close to 150,000 refugees returned voluntarily to their respective countries of origin.

Continuing insecurity and conflict within Mozambique led over 300,000 Mozambicans to seek asylum in neighbouring countries. The largest influx was in Malawi where the numbers rose from 150,000 to 452,000. The UNHCR emergency programme for Mozambique was characterized by rapidly increasing needs, with a number of technical missions revising and updating requirements to ensure a rapid response. Some 72,000 Mozambican refugees were living near the Tanzanian border, of whom 15,000 received UNHCR emergency assistance. In addition, 30,000 remained in Zambia, 65,000 in Zimbabwe and 20,000 in Swaziland, and several thousands sought asylum in South Africa. Another major exodus was that of southern Sudanese fleeing the effects of civil strife, exacerbated by drought in some regions; they sought asylum in Ethiopia. The number of Sudanese refugees in Ethiopia was reported at 140,000 in April 1987 but by year's end this rose to 250,000.

However, progress was recorded in several areas. The organized repatriation of Ethiopian refugees from Djibouti and Somalia benefited 4,450 persons. Some 65,000 Ugandans were repatriated from the Sudan, as were 7,000 from Zaire. Repatriation efforts continued for Chadians, thus UNHCR was assisting only 20,000 in western Sudan, some 8,500 in Cameroon, and much smaller numbers elsewhere in the region. During the year, some 42,000 South African refugees were reported to be living in various countries of asylum in southern Africa; 31,000 of them received UNHCR assistance. The majority of 75,000 Namibian refugees were assisted in Angola and Zambia. In addition, progress was made in promoting measures to address the needs of areas affected by the presence of refugees in an integrated manner, and within the framework of national development plans, and in encouraging national and international development institutions to take the lead in their area of competence.

Concerning the deteriorating conditions particularly within South Africa, and southern Africa in general, UNHCR was directly involved with the United Nations, OAU and UNDP in organizing an international conference on the plight of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in southern Africa (see p. 886).

In a September report to the General Assembly,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General described major developments in the situation of refugees in Africa since July 1986. He stated that durable solutions, particularly voluntary repatriation, should be actively pursued. There was a need for closer co-operative arrangements, covering returnee and refugee programmes. While giving UNDP primary responsibility for assistance to refugee-related development projects, UNHCR would continue to assist host countries in Africa with the task of caring for and maintaining refugees.

During 1987, total UNHCR expenditure in Africa amounted to $183.4 million, of which $120.2 million was obligated under General Programmes and $63.2 million under Special Programmes.

Communication. In July,⁽⁵⁾ Burundi transmitted the text of an article which had appeared in a June 1987 newspaper in that country, reflecting Burundi's position on refugees.

Follow-up to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

At the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa in 1984,⁽⁶⁾ the international community in a spirit of solidarity had sought to launch a process of burden-sharing on a strategy for solving the problems of refugees in Africa.

In a September report,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General discussed the follow-up to ICARA II taken since July 1986. A steering committee initially set up for the preparatory work for the Conference had encouraged the integration of refugee assistance into development. Action continued to be taken by the Secretary-General, UNHCR and UNDP to that end. UNDP continued to give due consideration to refugee-related development needs and to assist in co-ordinating refugee-related development activities. Donor resources earmarked for ICARA II projects were spent in part on emergency relief programmes, thus modifying or delaying implementation of refugee programmes. UNDP estimated that the international community had met 45 per cent of the project needs presented at ICARA II. Since 1984, UNDP had received a total of $7.6 million for refugee-related development activities. Among UNDP activities were four review missions in Chad, Ethiopia, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia and an additional mission to Ethiopia to prepare a rehabilitation and recovery programme for the repatriation of Ethiopian refugees from Djibouti and Somalia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/107 without vote.

Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its resolutions, particularly resolution 41/122 of 4 December 1986, relating to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to refugees in Africa,

Mindful that the fundamental purpose of the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984, was to launch collective action by the international community aimed at achieving lasting solutions,

Gravely concerned at the persistent and serious problem of large numbers of refugees on the African continent,

Aware of the heavy burden borne by African countries of asylum on account of the presence of these refugees and its consequences for their economic and social development, and of the great sacrifices made by them, despite their limited resources,

Deeply concerned that the refugee situation has been severely affected by the critical economic situation in Africa, as well as by drought and other natural disasters,

Bearing in mind the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, adopted by the General Assembly at its thirteenth special session, devoted to the critical economic situation in Africa, which refers in particular to the need for the speedy implementation of the recommendations of the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa,

Recognizing that the efforts of the countries of asylum require the concerted support of the international community to meet the needs for emergency relief, and for medium-term and long-term development aid,

Taking note of the declarations, decisions and resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-third ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 27 to 29 July 1987, and of the resolutions adopted by the Council of Ministers of that organization at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987, on the situation of refugees in Africa,

Emphasizing the collective responsibility of sharing the urgent and overwhelming burden of the problem of African refugees through effective mobilization of additional resources to meet the urgent and long-term needs of the refugees and to strengthen the capacity of countries of asylum to provide adequately for the refugees while they remain in those countries, as well as to assist the countries of origin in rehabilitating voluntary returnees,

Reiterating once again the vital importance of the complementarity between refugee aid and development assistance,

Noting once again with deep concern that many of the projects submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa have yet to be funded and implemented,

Desirous of ensuring the speedy implementation of the recommendations and pledges made at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa,

Noting the initiative taken by the Secretary-General to promote increased and effective co-operation between the United Nations Development Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees through the signing of an agreement on co-operation, as well as the measures he has taken to revitalize the Trust Fund of the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa,

1. Expresses its deep appreciation to African host countries, which are the biggest donors, for their generous contribution and continuous efforts to alleviate the plight of refugees in spite of their critical economic situation;

2. Reiterates its appreciation to all donor countries, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, regional organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their initial support and response to the projects submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa;

3. Urges the international community to maintain the momentum created by the Conference and to translate into reality the projects submitted as well as the principles of the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Conference;

4. Emphasizes the vital importance of the complementarity of refugee aid and development assistance and of achieving durable solutions to the problem of refugees in Africa and the necessity of providing assistance for the strengthening of the social and economic infrastructures of African countries receiving refugees and returnees;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for their concerted action aimed at revitalizing and further strengthening the mechanisms of implementation of the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa;

6. Requests the High Commissioner to continue to keep the situation of refugees in Africa under constant review so as to ensure that adequate assistance is available for care and maintenance and for bringing about durable solutions;

7. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to increase its efforts to mobilize additional resources for refugee-related development projects and, in general, to promote and co-ordinate with the host countries and the donor community the integration of refugee-related activities into national development planning;

8. Calls upon all Member States and organizations of the United Nations system concerned, as well as relevant regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to intensify their support for the speedy implementation of the recommendations and pledges made at the Conference;

9. Again requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Conference, to monitor, in consultation and close co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Development Programme, the effective follow-up to the Conference;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/107

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/808) without vote, 20 November (meeting 54); draft by Senegal for African Group (A/C.3/42/L.68); agenda item 103. Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 45, 47-50, 52, 54; plenary 93.

Refugees in southern Africa

1988 international conference

In October,⁽¹⁾ Madagascar submitted resolutions adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 20-25 July 1987). Among other things, the Council commended the OAU Secretary-General for steps he had taken to convene an international conference on the situation of refugees and displaced persons in southern Africa and asked him to enlist the support of the international community, particularly UNHCR, the United Nations and the secretariat of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference.

Also in October,⁽²⁾ the UNHCR Executive Committee welcomed the proposal to convene an international conference on the situation of refugees and war victims in southern Africa, under the auspices of OAU, the United Nations Secretary-General and UNHCR.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/106 without vote.

International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned at the deteriorating situation in southern Africa arising from the continued domination and oppression of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia by the minority racist régime of South Africa,

Conscious of the need to provide increased assistance to the peoples of the region and the liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia in their struggle against colonialism, racial discrimination and the policies of apartheid,

Conscious also of its responsibility to provide economic, material and humanitarian assistance to independent States in southern Africa in order to assist them in coping with the situation resulting from the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid régime of South Africa,

Aware that apartheid in South Africa, the illegal occupation of Namibia and acts of destabilization carried out by South Africa and its surrogate elements continue to be the main causes of refugee flows and the displacement of persons in the southern region of Africa,

Taking note of the decision of the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987, to convene an International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa and to enlist the active support of the international community, in particular the United Nations, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, to that end,

Taking note also of the decision by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to endorse the proposal for the convening of an international conference to address the specific situation of refugees and displaced persons in southern Africa,

Appreciating the current efforts of the international community to provide humanitarian assistance to refugees and other persons displaced by armed conflict in the countries of southern Africa,

Recognizing that the task of caring for refugees is a matter of international concern and solidarity in keeping with the Charter of the United Nations, international and regional instruments, in particular the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, as well as the Organization of African Unity Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, of 1969,

Convinced that there is an urgent need for the international community to extend maximum and concerted assistance to southern African countries sheltering refugees, returnees and displaced persons and also to highlight the plight of the refugees, returnees and displaced persons in southern Africa,

1. Welcomes the decision of the Organization of African Unity to convene in September 1988 an International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa;

2. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts, on behalf of the international community, to organize and mobilize special programmes of economic assistance for those African States facing grave economic difficulties, the front-line States and other independent States of southern Africa to help them to withstand the effects of the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid régime of South Africa;

3. Welcomes the decision by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the convening of the Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in close co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to give all possible assistance to the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity in the preparation and organization of the Conference;

5. Appeals to all Member States, the specialized agencies of the United Nations system and regional, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to provide all the necessary support and resources needed for the convening and success of the Conference;

6. Calls upon the international community to provide increased assistance to the countries of southern Africa to enable them to strengthen their capacity to provide the necessary facilities and services for the care and well-being of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in their countries;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988 and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/106

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/808) without vote, 20 November (meeting 54); draft by Senegal for African Group (A/C.3/42/L.67), orally revised; agenda item 103.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 45, 47-50, 52, 54; plenary 93.

Explaining their positions, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States emphasized that their support for the draft did not imply support for armed struggle.

Southern African student refugees

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽⁸⁾ the High Commissioner reported in August 1987 on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa—Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe—from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987.⁽⁹⁾ During that period, there was no substantial increase in the number of South African or Namibian refugees and asylum-seekers, despite the escalation of violence in both countries.

The number of South African refugees remained stable (some 1,000 urban refugees and 130 in Dukwe) in Botswana, but the number of Namibians receiving UNHCR assistance had increased from 63 to 106. UNHCR sponsored five South African refugees at the primary level and 22 at the lower secondary level, as well as eight Namibian students at the lower secondary level. In addition, 89 South Africans and 65 Namibians received educational assistance from various intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, with more than half studying outside Botswana, their country of asylum.

In Lesotho, the number of persons in a refugee-like situation remained stable at 11,500. Of these, 274 were registered as refugees and some 242 received assistance from UNHCR. Seventy-one South Africans were sponsored in primary schools, 49 of them by UNESCO and 22 by UNHCR. Of the 378 South Africans and five Namibians sponsored, 96 students were at the secondary level and 130 at the university level. Eleven students were sponsored for agricultural and technical/vocational studies, and 65 for business. Another 10 students were sponsored at the university level in the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Registered refugees in Swaziland numbered some 13,000, with an estimated equivalent number having spontaneously settled in border areas. The official case-load, comprising 6,500 South Africans, 5,500 Mozambicans and others of various nationalities, represented an increase of some 30 per cent since 1984. South Africans receiving educational assistance from UNHCR rose from 193 to 274; of these, 44 were at the primary school level and 230 at the secondary level. Other United Nations, governmental and non-governmental agencies sponsored 378 South African refugee students at the secondary and post-secondary levels and in vocational schools.

The number of South African refugees in Zambia increased as a result of young refugees being evacuated there from Lesotho. The majority of those 3,400 refugees were affiliated with the African National Congress of South Africa. Namibian refugees, mainly affiliates of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), remained unchanged at about 7,400. The urban case-load consisted of some 430 South Africans and non-affiliated refugees. For Namibian refugees, UNHCR funded the construction of two primary school classroom blocks and one girls' dormitory and provided textbooks and other school materials at the SWAPO Health and Education Centre at Nyongo. UNHCR sponsored two Namibian students, one at the secondary and one at the post-secondary level. The United Nations Institute for Namibia sponsored 500 Namibian students at the post-secondary level. Other United Nations, governmental and non-governmental agencies sponsored 76 South African and 164 Namibian students at all educational levels.

In Zimbabwe, the number of refugees had greatly increased due to an influx of some 60,000 displaced Mozambicans. Urban refugees, mainly South Africans, declined from nearly 470 to 266, either through local integration or resettlement in other countries. Educational programmes for South Africans focused on formal education and on vocational and technical training. UNHCR sponsored 24 student refugees (22 South Africans and 2 Namibians), 3 at the primary level, 8 at the secondary level and 13 in vocational training. A further 249 students (230 South Africans and 19 Namibians) were sponsored by other United Nations, governmental or non-governmental agencies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/138 without vote.

Assistance to student refugees in southern Africa
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/136 of 4 December 1986, in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from South Africa and Namibia who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Having considered the report of the High Commissioner on the assistance programme to student refugees from South Africa and Namibia,

Noting with appreciation that some of the projects recommended in the report on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa continue to be successfully implemented,

Noting with concern that the discriminatory and repressive policies that continue to be applied in South Africa and Namibia cause a continued and increasing influx of student refugees into Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Conscious of the burden placed on the limited financial, material and administrative resources of the host countries by the increasing number of student refugees,

Appreciating the efforts of the host countries to deal with their student refugee populations, with the assistance of the international community,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for granting asylum and making educational and other facilities available to the student refugees, in spite of the pressure that the continuing influx of those refugees exerts on facilities in their countries;

3. Also expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for the co-operation that they have extended to the High Commissioner on matters concerning the welfare of the refugees;

4. Notes with appreciation the financial and material support provided for the student refugees by Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from South Africa and Namibia who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

6. Urges all Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue contributing generously to the assistance programme for student refugees, through financial support of the regular programmes of the High Commissioner and of the projects and programmes, including unfunded projects, that were submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984;

7. Also urges all Member States and all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist the countries of asylum materially and otherwise to enable them to continue to discharge their humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

8. 9. Calls upon agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to continue co-operating with the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in the implementation of humanitarian programmes of assistance for the student refugees in southern Africa;

Refugees in other African countries

Chad

Pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly request,(10) the Secretary-General submitted in August 1987 a report(11) on emergency assistance to returnees and displaced persons in Chad. He reported that a November 1985 national reconciliation policy and improved climatic conditions had resulted in the return of over 120,000 Chadian refugees early in the year. During the first half of 1987, 17,000 people returned from the Central African Republic and 15,000 from the Sudan, while smaller numbers continued to return from Cameroon, Nigeria and other countries. Under a joint UNHCR/Chad special programme of assistance to returnees, some 70,000 persons who returned to the south after the 1986 planting season received limited relief assistance. Immediate assistance was provided to those returning from Cameroon, the Central African Republic and the Sudan. Basic food needs were covered by WFP. The UNHCR programme provided non-food items such as blankets, household utensils, seeds, agricultural tools and funds for transportation, including the transportation of food within Chad. Support was also provided to assist in rehabilitating and developing a rural water supply in the home areas of returnees in southern Chad.

Concerning the population of Borkou-Ennedi-Tibesti prefecture, displaced as a result of a conflict in northern Chad, about half of the 120,000 people moved south into other prefectures. Initial assistance to that new group of displaced people was provided by Chad, the Federal Republic of Germany, UNICEF, WFP, WHO, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the League of Red Cross Societies. An additional 10,000 to 15,000 people left the combat zones and moved south in early 1987. When Chad assumed control over large parts of the prefecture at the end of March 1987, more emergency assistance became necessary as no crops had been planted for the duration of the conflict. Bilateral aid was provided by Japan and channelled through WFP. Health, housing, agricultural recovery, education and transportation efforts for repatriation were made by France, Médecins du Monde (a French NGO), ICRC, WHO, CARE-Chad and the United States Agency for International Development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/128 without vote.

Emergency assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/140 of 4 December 1986 on emergency assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad, as well as all its previous resolutions on this question,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on emergency humanitarian assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the drought and the invasion of locusts and predators, which are compounding the already precarious food and health situation in Chad,

Conscious that the large number of voluntary returnees and displaced persons resulting from the war and the drought in Chad poses a serious problem of integrating them into society,

Considering the mass return to their home villages of persons displaced as a result of war and drought in the northern region of Chad,

Bearing in mind the many appeals made by the Government of Chad for international emergency assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad, who are victims of the war and of natural disasters,

1. Endorses the appeals made by the Government of Chad for emergency assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

2. Reiterates its appeal to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support, by generous contributions, the efforts being made by the Government of Chad to assist and resettle the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

3. Takes note with satisfaction of the action undertaken by the various organizations of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies with a view to mobilizing emergency humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

4. Again requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to mobilize emergency humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

5. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize special humanitarian assistance for the resettlement of displaced persons in the northern region of Chad;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Djibouti

In an August 1987 report on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti,⁽¹²⁾ submitted in response to a 1986 Assembly request,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the voluntary repatriation of Ethiopian refugees had continued and by mid-year 3,223 persons had returned home. Djibouti's commitment to an asylum policy also continued with 292 new asylum-seekers entering the country. A multi-purpose assistance programme provided improvements in preventive health and nutrition and primary education, vocational training and library facilities for new asylum-seekers.

In terms of durable solutions, physical and economic obstacles to successful local integration through self-reliance continued throughout the country. Resettlement remained a durable solution for only a small percentage of the refugee population—for cases of family reunion or for security reasons.

At the end of the year, the Government estimated that there were 11,356 refugees in Djibouti.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/126 without vote.

Noting with appreciation the steps taken by the Government of Djibouti, in close co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to implement appropriate and lasting solutions in respect of the refugees in Djibouti,

Appreciating the assistance provided by Member States, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to the relief and rehabilitation programmes for the refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti,

Ethiopia

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(14) the Secretary-General, in an August 1987 report on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,(15) noted that UNHCR continued to provide emergency assistance to Sudanese refugees. By July 1987, 136,700 persons had been recorded at the Itang Settlement, 31,000 at Dimma, almost 20,000 at As-sosa town and some 400 of various origins at Addis Ababa. In addition, relief was requested for some 6,000 Somali refugees in the Hararghe region.

Activity in 1987 concentrated on settling some 1,000 refugee families under a horticulture project in Itang; establishing new refugee sites at Dimma; improving road, logistical, water and environmental sanitation systems; and providing shelter, health, food and domestic needs.

In April, UNHCR launched a special appeal for $10.5 million for rehabilitation assistance to Ethiopian returnees from neighbouring countries. By July, some 3,170 persons repatriated voluntarily from the Gedo region of Somalia to the Sidamo region. That repatriation operation was suspended in June because of heavy rains and flooding of the Dawa and Genale rivers. Some 6,830 refugees had returned from the Sudan to Eritrea and over 3,220 refugees had returned home from Djibouti. According to Government estimates, there were 310,500 refugees in Ethiopia at the end of the year.

Malawi

The High Commissioner, in a September report,(17) stated that in mid-June 1987, an estimated 235,000 refugees from Mozambique had entered Malawi, and by August the figure had risen to 280,000. By year's end that figure had risen to 401,600. The two most severely affected areas, Nsanje and Ntcheu/Dedza were each supporting more than 150,000 refugees.

During 1987, UNHCR provided food supplies with a commercial value of about $4 million to Mozambican refugees. In March, it launched an appeal for $2.3 million to provide relief for some 100,000 persons to the end of 1987.

A United Nations inter-agency mission visiting Malawi from September to December found that the rural subsistence economy was under severe strain and food production and water resources in the affected areas were insufficient to satisfy the needs of the Malawi population and the refugees. The mission recommended that UNDP and UNHCR work together on programmes linking emergency aid to refugees with long-term development assistance of benefit to all concerned. It called for a series of actions to relieve Malawi's situation and foster long-term development and economic growth.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/132 without vote.

Assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi

The General Assembly,

Having hard the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees regarding the refugee situation in Malawi,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the Government of Malawi in providing shelter and asylum to thousands of refugees and displaced persons,

Recognizing the consequences of the social and economic burden placed on the Government and people of Malawi as a result of the influx of refugees and displaced persons and the subsequent impact on national development and the infrastructure of that country,

Noting with appreciation the action already taken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international humanitarian organizations in establishing a programme of emergency assistance to the refugees and displaced persons in Malawi,

Noting that a United Nations inter-agency team is currently visiting Malawi to discuss with the Government ways and means of strengthening its capacity to cope with the burden imposed on its economy, vital resources and public services by the presence of refugees and displaced persons and to prepare a comprehensive programme of assistance, which will respond both to refugee-related humanitarian and to development needs for eventual submission to the international community,

1. Commends the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Development Programme for their timely action in sending an inter-agency mission to Malawi to ascertain the needs of the refugees and displaced persons in Malawi and the magnitude of assistance required;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, to give the report of the inter-agency mission the widest possible circulation to all States, all pertinent international organizations and voluntary agencies;

Somalia

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(18) the High Commissioner submitted in August 1987 a report on assistance to refugees in Somalia.(19) He stated that an umbrella agreement was concluded on 17 March with the Government covering the re-enumeration of the refugee population in Somalia, and it was decided, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to send a high-level inter-agency mission to review existing refugee programmes and to prepare a comprehensive assistance programme.

A large proportion of refugees were women and children being accommodated in 41 centres located in four regions. Following discussions between the Governments of Ethiopia and Somalia, voluntary repatriation of refugees began in the Gedo region in December 1986. At mid-July 1987, 2,753 of the 7,000 initial applicants had returned to Sidamo. A memorandum of understanding was signed with the World Bank on 29 May, under which the Bank agreed to appraise and implement a local settlement project for 500 to 1,000 refugee families in the Furjano area, while UNHCR would finance the project on a grant basis. WFP and other donors continued to provide basic food supplies. The material assistance programme continued to focus on health services, water supply systems, shelter and domestic needs, transport and logistics, education, construction, community development and income-generating and agricultural projects. Little progress was made towards local settlement or self-sufficiency because of the limitations of Somalia's natural resources.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1987 report,(20) the Secretary-General stated that an inter-agency mission, made up of representatives from UNDP, WHO, FAO, UNESCO, WFP and UNHCR, had visited Somalia from 13 to 20 September. The report of the mission, annexed to the Secretary-General's report, reviewed the refugee situation and the burden it imposed on Somalia. It described the assistance required to strengthen services and infrastructures to meet refugee needs and proposed a comprehensive programme of action. The greater part of the proposed programme of action was directed towards meeting the needs of refugees in established camps and settlements. Since there was no means of identifying the number of unregistered refugees, the mission recommended strengthening communal services that would benefit both that group and the local population. The mission concluded that in the light of the tremendous pressure created by the refugee presence, the situation called for a structured and co-ordinated approach in formulating the programme and mobilizing resources. As Somalia was among the poorest of the least developed countries, the mission recommended that assistance needed to cope with the refugee situation should be sought over and above the resources provided under regular assistance programmes. The mission emphasized UNDP's leading role in refugee-related development projects and stated that the mobilization of financial and technical means required should be assumed by UNDP, in close co-operation with the World Bank.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/127 without vote.

Assistance to refugees in Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/180 of 15 December 1980, 36/153 of 16 December 1981, 37/174 of 17 December 1982, 38/88 of 16 December 1983, 39/104 of 14 November 1984, 40/132 of 13 December 1985 and 41/138 of 4 December 1986 on the question of assistance to refugees in Somalia,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on assistance to refugees in Somalia,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the refugee situation in Somalia and the comprehensive programme of assistance required to enable Somalia to cope with the situation,

Deeply concerned about the heavy burden that has been placed on the fragile economy of Somalia by the continuing presence of large numbers of refugees,

Aware of the additional burden imposed by the continued influx of refugees and the consequent urgent need for additional international assistance,

Concerned about the continuing and serious shortfalls in the provision of food assistance, which have resulted in severe ration restrictions, malnutrition and extreme hardship in refugee camps in Somalia,

Conscious of the pressure that the refugee presence continues to impose on the public services, in particular education, health, transport and communications, and water supplies,

Noting with concern the deleterious effect of the refugee presence on the environment, which has resulted in widespread deforestation, soil erosion and the threat of destruction to an already fragile ecological balance,

1. Commends the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for their reports;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Somalia for the measures it is taking to provide material and humanitarian assistance to refugees, in spite of its own limited resources and fragile economy;

3. Appeals to Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to render maximum and timely material, financial and technical assistance to enable the Government of Somalia to carry out the projects and activities described in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Endorses for urgent and favourable consideration the list of projects contained in the report of the Secretary-General as the basis for a comprehensive programme of action;

5. Recommends for urgent and favourable consideration by the Government of Somalia, as well as by the United Nations system and the international donor community, the suggestions proposed in paragraphs 67 to 69 of the report of the Secretary-General, which would facilitate the implementation of the programme of action recommended in the report;

6. Calls upon the High Commissioner to ensure, as appropriate, that the care, maintenance and rehabilitation needs of the refugees are adequately covered;

7. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme to assume the leading role, as required by the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, in the conceptualization, implementation and monitoring of refugee-related projects, and to be involved in the mobilization of the financial and technical means required, in close co-operation with the High Commissioner and the World Bank;

8. Requests the pertinent organizations of the United Nations system, namely the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, as well as the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Food Programme, to prepare, in consultation with the Government of Somalia, detailed project documentation for the implementation of those projects and activities identified in the report of the Secretary-General as priority endeavours for a comprehensive programme of action;

9. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to consult with the Government of Somalia on how best the international community can assist Somalia in protecting and rehabilitating its damaged environment;

10. Recognizes the important role that non-governmental organizations are playing with regard to programmes for the care, maintenance and rehabilitation of refugees, particularly in activities related to small-scale development projects, and in the fields of health and agriculture;

11. Calls upon the international community to support the activities of non-governmental organizations, both local and international, in Somalia, in the planning and implementation of refugee projects and refugee-related development activities;

12. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988 of the progress made in their respective fields of responsibility with regard to those provisions of the present resolution which concern them;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations High Commissioner and United Nations Development Programme, to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Sudan

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(21) the Secretary-General submitted in October 1987 a report on the situation of refugees in the Sudan.(22) During 1987, he arranged for a review mission to visit the Sudan from 22 to 30 September to define an operational approach for immediate implementation. The report of the mission, annexed to the Secretary-General's report, described the refugee situation, the burden it imposed on the Sudan, and assistance required to strengthen services and infrastructures to meet the needs of refugees.

The Government estimates the refugee population at nearly 1 million, more than half of whom were assisted by UNHCR through the Sudanese Commissioner for Refugees. Although these figures reflected a downward trend, it was feared that the imminence of another drought in the region might cause a large influx of refugees.

The mission recommended technical missions and activities to draw up concrete projects in priority sectors, including food, agriculture and livestock, water, health, education, transport and communications, and training, employment and income-generation. It stated that there was an urgent need for sectoral follow-up missions, but the preparatory work would have to be carried out by Government ministries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/129 without vote.

Situation of refugees in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/139 of 4 December 1986 and its other previous resolutions on the situation of refugees in the Sudan,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of refugees in the Sudan and the report of the inter-agency mission annexed thereto,

Appreciating the important measures that the Government of the Sudan is taking in order to provide shelter, protection, food, education and health and other humanitarian services to a very large and persistent number of refugees in the Sudan,

Recognizing the heavy burden placed on the people and Government of the Sudan and the sacrifices they are making in caring for the refugees and the need for adequate international assistance to enable them to continue their efforts to provide assistance to the refugees,

Gravely concerned at the continuing serious social and economic impact of the massive presence of refugees, as well as its far-reaching consequences for the country's development, security and stability,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance rendered by Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of the refugee programme in the Sudan,

Bearing in mind the findings and recommendations of the inter-agency mission to the Sudan reported to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, particularly the suggestion that the international community should explore new and effective approaches to ensure that the burden of dealing with refugees is shared more equitably,

Recognizing the need to view refugee-related development projects within local and national development plans.

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 41/139 and welcomes the report of the inter-agency mission annexed thereto;

2. Commends the measures that the Government of the Sudan is taking to provide material and humanitarian assistance to refugees, in spite of the effects of the drought and the serious economic situation it faces, and stresses the need for additional resources to lessen the impact of the presence of refugees on the economy of this least developed country;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their efforts to assist the refugees in the Sudan;

4. Expresses grave concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of the massive presence of refugees in the country for its security, stability and development, as reflected in the reports of the inter-agency missions;

5. Also expresses grave concern at the shrinking resources available for refugee programmes in the Sudan and the serious consequences of this situation for the country's ability to continue to act as host and provide assistance to refugees;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in following up on the reports of the inter-agency missions and furthering the integration of developmental and refugee aid, to take concrete steps, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, for the early implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the 1987 inter-agency mission;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the necessary financial and material assistance for the full implementation of ongoing projects in the areas affected by the presence of refugees;

8. Appeals to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial institutions to provide the Government of the Sudan with the necessary resources for the implementation of development assistance projects in regions affected by the presence of refugees;

9. Requests the High Commissioner to continue co-ordination with the appropriate specialized agencies in order to consolidate and ensure the continuation of essential services to the refugees in their settlements;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asia and Oceania

UNHCR activities in Asia and Oceania continued to focus on Indo-Chinese asylum-seekers. Frustrations resulting from the unabated influx of Indo-Chinese led to an aggravation of protection problems in East and South-East Asia. During the year, UNHCR confronted the most serious infringements on humanitarian norms since 1979, including the principle of non-refoulement, despite a 5 per cent decrease in the refugee population since 1986, the result of a large resettlement. At year's end, the refugee population stood at 138,248.

A total of 45,836 Indo-Chinese, of whom 51 per cent were Vietnamese, 36 per cent Lao and 13 per cent Kampuchians, were resettled in 1987. Under the Orderly Departure Programme, 12,961 persons left Viet Nam for family reunion abroad. A total of 2,429 refugees were rescued at sea, of whom 793 benefited from the Rescue at Sea Resettlement Offers (RASRO) scheme, while 586 persons were disembarked and resettled under the Disembarkation Resettlement Offers (DISERO) scheme.

Thailand allowed some 7,000 Kampuchians, previously denied access to resettlement screening, to be processed for resettlement in third countries. It also agreed to regularize the status of 10,000 Hilltribe Laotian asylum-seekers.

UNHCR stepped up its efforts to promote voluntary repatriation through closer consultations with Governments of countries of origin. The number of Irian Jayans in Papua New Guinea at the end of 1987 decreased to about 9,600, of whom over 7,000 continued to receive UNHCR assistance. After the voluntary repatriation of 1,325 persons to Irian Jaya under UNHCR auspices in 1987, total repatriates numbered 2,700.

Following the signing of an Indo-Sri Lankan Peace Accord in July, UNHCR, at the request of Sri Lanka, initiated a programme of assistance to promote the return of Sri Lankan Tamils from India. After the opening of a UNHCR office in Colombo in November 1987, the organized repatriation movement started with a group of 252 repatriates from the State of Tamil Nadu in India in December. With UNHCR assistance, 112 Afghans, 12 Iranians and one Somali were voluntarily repatriated to their countries of origin. In addition, 960 refugees departed for resettlement in third countries.

In November, a joint China/UNHCR mission reviewed the impact of UNHCR assistance projects in that country to assess their effectiveness concerning local settlement and refugee self-sufficiency. The mission reported certain continuing problems in bringing the refugee case-load to full self-sufficiency.

In October,(2) the Executive Committee of UNHCR expressed concern about the number of so-called long-stayers among the Indo-Chinese refugees in camps in South-East Asia and, for humanitarian reasons, called on Governments that were not doing so to participate in resettlement efforts on a regular basis by applying criteria which allowed the admission of refugees who did not have links in any third country.

In 1987, UNHCR expenditure in the region stood at $61.8 million under General Programmes and $9.9 under Special Programmes.

Communication. On 13 August,(23) Thailand transmitted various documents issued at the Twentieth Ministerial Meeting of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) (Singapore, 15 and 16 June 1987). The ASEAN Foreign Ministers noted that since the invasion of Kampuchea in 1978, hundreds of thousands of Indo-Chinese refugees had fled their countries and had taken temporary refuge in ASEAN countries. They expressed concern that while resettlement in third countries was waning, the influx of Vietnamese refugees and illegal immigrants by sea to the ASEAN countries, especially Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand, had continued unabated.

Europe and North America

In Europe, the number of asylum-seekers decreased from 204,000 in 1986 to 183,000 in 1987, with over two thirds originating from countries outside Europe. The largest number of arrivals was 57,400 recorded in the Federal Republic of Germany.

In North America, Canada and the United States continued to act as resettlement countries, registering asylum claims by 26,000 persons. In addition, persons who might otherwise have qualified for admission as refugees were admitted under categories such as family reunion. During 1987, 6,000 and 28,000 refugees were admitted for resettlement in Canada and the United States, respectively.

UNHCR expenditures in the region for 1987 totalled $18 million, of which $16.4 million was under General Programmes and $1.6 million under Special Programmes.

Latin America and the Caribbean

By the end of 1987, 119,400 refugees had received UNHCR assistance in the Central American/Mexican region. For the first time in the last several years, the total refugee population reflected a decreasing trend, as voluntary repatriates outnumbered new arrivals. In Costa Rica, 23,100 refugees were assisted, and a labour insertion programme enabled 500 to obtain official work permits. In Honduras, 40,400 remained at the end of 1987, 15,150 of whom were Salvadorians, 24,865 Nicaraguans and 416 Guatemalans. There were also over 40,990 Guatemalans in Mexico.

The number of repatriates increased considerably in 1987, with 5,595 Salvadorians repatriated and 3,737 Miskitos and Sumos from the Honduran Mosquitia. About 2,050 Haitians were repatriated from the Dominican Republic. Smaller repatriation movements took place from Mexico (853 Guatemalans) and Costa Rica (267 Salvadoreans, Guatemalans and Nicaraguans). The total number of repatriates in the region during the year was 12,937.

In southern Latin America, the estimated refugee population stood at 25,000, of whom 6,739 received UNHCR assistance. While new Chilean asylum-seekers were registered, approximately 670 refugees were assisted to repatriate.

During 1987, UNHCR expenditures in Latin America and the Caribbean totalled $40.1 million, of which $35.5 million was under General Programmes and $3.8 million under Special Programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/110 without vote.

Assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons of Central America

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its resolution 42/1 of 7 October 1987 on the current peace initiatives undertaken in connection with the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 by the Central American Presidents, at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, and in particular point 8 thereof concerning refugees and displaced persons in the region,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the decision taken by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-eighth session concerning refugees in Central America, in which the Executive Committee, inter alia, reaffirmed the importance of continuing to apply regional approaches for the consideration of this problem and the initiative to organize a conference on this question in 1988,

Bearing in mind further the principles contained in the 1984 Cartagena Declaration on refugees and the conclusions and recommendations of the colloquium held in Mexico in 1981 on asylum and international protection of refugees in Latin America,

Recognizing the generous efforts made by the countries receiving Central American refugees despite the enormous difficulties facing them, especially the present economic crisis,

Aware of the complexity and seriousness of the situation of the refugees and displaced persons in the Central American region and its effects on the social and economic development of the area,

Considering that voluntary repatriation is the most appropriate solution to the problem of refugees, provided that it is on the basis of individual volition and with the collaboration of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and that it is carried out under conditions of complete safety, preferably to the country of origin,

Bearing in mind the means of co-operation established in the region through the setting up of tripartite commissions, composed of representatives of the country of origin, the country of asylum and the Office of the High Commissioner, to facilitate and co-ordinate activities relating to the repatriation of refugees,

Recognizing the urgent need for co-operation with the countries of Central America and Mexico in the various phases involved in the repatriation, relocation, local integration and resettlement of refugees within the framework of lasting solutions,

Aware of the adverse situation of persons displaced within their own country and of the need for assistance in order to reintegrate them in their places of origin,

Underlining the paramount importance of humanitarian and apolitical considerations in dealing with the problem of refugees and displaced persons, and the need to ensure that this approach is strictly observed by the authorities of the countries of origin and of asylum, and of all participating agencies,

Noting that the Executive Commission established pursuant to the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting decided to establish a sub-commission on refugees and displaced persons, composed of representatives of the Central American countries, in order to study and propose formulas for promoting and facilitating voluntary repatriation and to propose machinery for regional co-operation as well as joint activities with the international community,

1. Expresses its satisfaction at the commitments made by the Presidents of the Central American countries to protect and aid refugees and displaced persons, as stated in point 8 of the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting;

2. Commends the valuable humanitarian work carried out by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, governmental and non-governmental organizations and countries of asylum as well as the important contribution of the donor countries in solving the most critical problems involved in rendering assistance to Central American refugees and displaced persons;

3. Also commends the important initiative taken by the Central American countries, the Contadora Group and the Support Group on the refugee question as part of the efforts made to restore peace in the region;

4. Appeals to the international community and governmental and non-governmental organizations, drawing upon their humanitarian and apolitical character, to provide and increase co-operation and assistance to Central American refugees, returnees and displaced persons;

5. Invites Member States to co-operate with the countries of the region in solving the social and economic problems arising from the flows of refugees and displaced persons;

6. Appeals to the international community to intensify its co-operation in the process of voluntary repatriation and rehabilitation of returnees in their country of origin, and urges it to facilitate the resettlement or transfer of refugees within the framework of lasting solutions and, while that process is taking place, to continue international humanitarian assistance for the benefit of the refugees;

7. Stresses the need to co-ordinate humanitarian assistance projects with the national development plans of the countries of the region and emphasizes that the assistance provided for refugee-related projects must be considered special and independent of co-operation for the development of the countries of the region;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the competent organizations of the United Nations system, to take the necessary measures to prepare programmes of assistance to persons displaced in their own country and facilitate the reintegration and rehabilitation of returnees;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner and competent bodies, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East

During 1987, UNHCR obligated a total of $114.2 million, $72.8 million under General Programmes and $41.5 under Special Programmes, to assist over 5 million refugees in South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East.

Afghan refugees in Pakistan, estimated at 2.9 million, continued to be the world's largest single concentration. In 1987, UNHCR increased efforts to promote self-reliance among Afghan refugees, providing primary and secondary education, veterinary services for Afghan-owned livestock, vocational training and income-generating projects. Another 2.2 million Afghans living in Iran received UNHCR assistance amounting to $14 million for health, water supply, agriculture and vocational training. Also in Iran, some 10,000 Kurds from Iraq received emergency assistance of $500,000.

Some 5,900 refugees living in Lebanon continued to receive UNHCR assistance. A regional office at Manama, Bahrain, became operational during 1987, monitoring UNHCR activities in that area.

In Yemen, 2,400 refugees of Eritrean origin received assistance for health, education, shelter, community development and income-generating activities.

UNHCR continued to co-ordinate humanitarian assistance for Cyprus, providing aid to persons displaced as a result of the 1974 events (see also p. 246).

Also in 1987, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to assist over 2.2 million Palestinian refugees (see p. 325).

Refugee protection

During 1987, the magnitude and complexity of the refugee problem demonstrated that concerted international action was the sole means of creating conditions to solve refugee problems, thereby facilitating the High Commissioner's task of providing international protection. As in previous years, UNHCR continued to provide refugees and asylum-seekers with various measures of protection, against a growing trend among countries to be restrictive in granting asylum.

Most States continued to adhere to the principle of non-refoulement. Nevertheless, some countries continued to push back asylum-seekers. Others occasionally resorted to the refoulement of larger groups of asylum-seekers and even some recognized refugees. The number of people subjected to refoulement exceeded several thousand, higher than in recent years. Many hundreds of refugees and asylum-seekers were detained, and in several instances detention was enforced to discourage further arrival or was part of a deliberate government policy to deny asylum to persons coming from certain countries or regions.

In South-East Asia where several refugee flows had lasted for over 13 years, further restrictive measures were taken to stem the flow of asylum-seekers. Africa continued its policy of hospitality towards refugees, although their reception often entailed great sacrifices for receiving countries. Central America continued to be the main source of concern for UNHCR in the Americas where the refugee problem was part of a larger political, social and economic situation that rendered the task of providing international protection extremely difficult. In Europe, the High Commissioner continued to hold consultations with countries to reach humane solutions to the problems of refugees and asylum-seekers.

A UNHCR/Thai Government Anti-Piracy Programme continued to deal with piracy attacks against asylum-seekers at sea. Similarly, the RASRO and DISERO schemes benefited large numbers of asylum-seekers in distress at sea.

The Sub-Committee of the Whole on International Protection(24) of the UNHCR Executive Committee, at its twelfth meeting (Geneva, 29 September-1 October 1987), discussed refugee children, military and armed attacks on refugee settlements, and travel documents for refugees, and recommended draft conclusions on these issues for adoption by the Executive Committee (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November 1987, the General Assembly had before it a draft text on international procedures for the protection of refugees,(25) on which action had been deferred in 1986.(26)

By that draft, the Assembly would request the Secretary-General, with UNHCR's co-operation, to draw up a report evaluating the costs involved in setting up enough United Nations refugee-processing centres to deal with the existing flow of refugees and indicating the number of refugees that each Member State, according to its population, population density and gross national product, might be able to receive. Introducing the draft in the Third Committee, Denmark said, in its view, it contained the elements of a comprehensive approach to the refugee problem. The Third Committee decided to take no action on the draft.

Refugee law

International instruments

As of 31 December 1987, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees(27) had been ratified or acceded to by 100 States as a result of the 1987 accession by Malawi and Mauritania. The 1967 Protocol(28) to the Convention had 101 States parties as a result of the 1987 accession by Cape Verde, Malawi and Mauritania.(29) While the majority were parties to both instruments, some were parties to only one; the number of parties to one or both instruments, therefore, totalled 101.

Other intergovernmental legal instruments of benefit to refugees included the 1969 OAU Convention governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, the 1957 Agreement relating to Refugee Seamen and its 1973 Protocol, the 1959 European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas for Refugees, the 1980 European Agreement on Transfer of Responsibility for Refugees, and the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights, Pact of San José, Cost Rica.

As at 31 December 1987, there were 34 States parties to the 1954 Convention Relating to the Status of Stateless Persons(30) (Madagascar had acceded to the Convention in 1962, but denounced it in 1965) and 14 States parties to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness.(31)

By 1987, over 50 countries had established procedures with respect to the determination of refugee status. UNHCR continued to emphasize the need for such procedures to ensure that all claims to refugee status were dealt with in an efficient, expeditious, fair and humane manner.

Promotion and dissemination of refugee law

In 1987, UNHCR intensified efforts to promote respect for refugee law and protection. Some activities were undertaken in co-operation with UNESCO, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs and the United Nations Centre for Human Rights, others with regional organizations such as OAU, OAS, the League of Arab States and the Council of Europe and various NGOs, universities and research centres.

UNHCR organized regional refugee law seminars and training courses for government and NGO officials in South America and southern Africa. Field offices around the world also organized courses for operational-level governmental and NGO officials. Training of UNHCR staff in refugee law and protection was improved. In addition, UNHCR strengthened its Centre for Documentation on Refugees, expanding both holdings and services. The Centre published a bibliography on refugee children, initiated work on a multilingual thesaurus of refugee-related terms, and continued to publish the quarterly Refugee Abstracts. In co-operation with Oxford University Press, UNHCR planned and prepared for the first issue of the International Journal of Refugee Law, to be published in 1989.

Travel documents for refugees

In October,(2) the UNHCR Executive Committee expressed satisfaction that the majority of countries parties to the 1951 Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees and/or the 1967 Protocol had met or exceeded the provisions regarding travel documents for refugees. It noted, however, that problems continued to exist concerning arrangements for their issue, geographical and temporal validity, extension or renewal, a return clause, transfer of responsibility for their issue and obtaining visas.

The Committee urged States which had not done so to take legislative or administrative measures to implement the provisions of the Convention and Protocol.

Protection of refugee camps

In October,(2) the UNHCR Executive Committee condemned violations of the rights and safety of refugees and asylum-seekers, particularly military or armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements, and urged States to abstain from such violations against the principles of international law. It also called on States and international organizations to provide all necessary assistance to victims of these attacks. The Committee set forth a number of considerations to enhance protection of refugee camps and settlements and urged States and other parties to be guided by them.

Protection of refugee women and children

Although specific measures had been adopted in a number of refugee situations, refugee women and girls continued to suffer physical violence, sexual abuse and discrimination. Refugee children were exposed to physical violence, exploitation, forced recruitment and detention and also faced problems concerning registration, determination of their refugee status and nationality,

In October,(2) the Executive Committee, reiterating the necessity to give particular attention to refugee women's needs and to improve protection and assistance programmes, called on all States and concerned agencies to support the High Commissioner's efforts in that regard. It recognized the need to collect reliable information and statistics about refugee women, to increase awareness of their situation and to incorporate information concerning their needs in UNHCR training programmes, and called on the High Commissioner to report in 1989 on the protection and assistance problems and needs of refugee women and on measures taken to meet them.

Also in October, the Committee noted with concern the human rights violations of refugee children and their special needs as well as their vulnerability within the broader refugee population. It also urged States to register the births of refugee children born in countries of asylum and recommended that children who were accompanied by their parents be treated as refugees if either parent was determined to be a refugee. The Committee reaffirmed their right to education and called on States to intensify efforts to ensure that all refugee children benefited from quality primary education while respecting their cultural identity. It also asked host countries to develop and support programmes to address nutritional and health risks. The Committee called on the High Commissioner to maintain and strengthen the UNHCR Working Group on Refugee Children at Risk as his focal point on refugee children and to keep members of the Committee apprised of its work.

Chapter XXI

Drugs of abuse

The abuse of drugs, both natural and synthetic, had increased so rapidly over the past decades that it imperilled all countries and all segments of society, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) stated in 1987. Drug abuse was not limited to urban areas, to the educated or the uneducated, or to the rich or poor; it was prevalent everywhere—in schools, at work, in the entertainment field and in sports arenas.

The United Nations convened the first global conference to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking (Vienna, 17-26 June). The International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, attended by 138 nations at every stage of political development, adopted a declaration, agreeing to intensify efforts against drug abuse and illicit trafficking, and an outline of future activities in drug abuse control.

The Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to give priority, in allocating United Nations resources, to the follow-up activities of the Conference and stressed the importance of co-ordination between the drug control units of the United Nations (resolution 1987/29). The General Assembly affirmed its commitment to the Conference's declaration, urged Governments and organizations to take account of its outline of future activities and decided to observe 26 June each year as the International Day against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (42/112).

The Assembly underlined the Conference's appeal, calling for the urgent preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and requested the Secretary-General to prepare for the convening of a plenipotentiary conference in 1988 for the signing of the convention (42/111). The Economic and Social Council had established an open-ended intergovernmental expert group on the articles of the draft (1987/27), and decided that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs should hold a special session in 1988 to expedite the preparation of the new convention (1987/33).

Acting as the preparatory body for the Conference, the Commission, in February, adopted one decision and four recommendations for action by the Council. At its thirty-second session, also in February, the Commission considered the preparation of a new convention, the implementation of international treaties on the control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, trends in drug abuse and illicit traffic, action related to international drug control, and future work and priorities; it recommended for adoption by the Council seven resolutions and four decisions.

INCB continued its evaluation and overall supervision of the implementation of drug control treaties. The Council requested INCB to accord priority to monitoring its earlier call for restraint in the production of opiate raw materials for export (1987/31). The Council further requested Governments to improve mechanisms for control of certain psychotropic substances (1987/30).

During 1987, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC) revised its total budget upward from $31.6 million to $39.8 million and expanded its programme: 35 countries were assisted through 85 multisectoral projects for rural development, preventive education and public information, treatment and rehabilitation of drug-dependent persons and law enforcement. In the area of public information, the Council urged Governments to ensure that preventive information did not evoke curiosity or the desire to experiment with narcotic drugs and did not contain details that might facilitate access to illicit drugs (1987/28).

The Council encouraged UNFDAC to continue building its capacity to respond to needs with regard to drug abuse control, assisting comprehensive and mandatory sanctions and regions in their fight against drug abuse, furthering the implementation of policy recommendations and acting as a catalytic agent for the United Nations system (1987/32). The Assembly, in a resolution on an international campaign against drug abuse and illicit trafficking (42/113), commended UNFDAC for its work and called for increased support of the Fund.

International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking

In 1985, following a proposal by the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁾ the General Assembly decided⁽²⁾ to convene in 1987 a world conference to deal with all aspects of drug abuse.

The Economic and Social Council, in 1986,(3) had invited the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to act as the preparatory body.

As the preparatory body, the Commission held its first session in 1986(4) and its second session at Vienna from 12 to 18 February 1987.(5) At the second session, it considered preparations for the Conference and a draft comprehensive multidisciplinary outline of future drug abuse control activities. It offered one decision and four recommendations to the Economic and Social Council for its consideration. The decision and one of the recommendations concerned the procedure for revising and formulating, respectively, the draft outline of future activities. The other recommendations dealt with the Conference's provisional draft declaration, the chairmanship of pre-Conference consultations, and the availability to the Conference of the report of the 1986 Inter-regional Conference on the Involvement of Non-Governmental Organizations in Prevention and Reduction of the Demand for Drugs.(6)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1987, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1987/127 without vote.

Preparations for the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 26 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council decided:

(a) To take note with appreciation of the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs: Preparatory Body for the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking on its second session;

(b) To approve the decision of the Preparatory Body on the procedure for revising the draft Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control;

(c) To adopt recommendations I to IV made by the Preparatory Body at its second session.

The International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking was held at Vienna from 17 to 26 June 1987,(7) preceded on 15 and 16 June by consultations on organizational and procedural matters open to all States invited to the Conference.

Participants included 138 States members of the Secretariat, the regional commissions, United Nations bodies and programmes, 7 specialized agencies, 12 intergovernmental organizations and 178 non-governmental organizations (NGOs) (for participants and officers, see APPENDIX III).

On 26 June, the Conference adopted the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control and the Declaration of the Conference. The Outline's recommendations were drafted in terms consistent with the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs (8) and the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances.(9)

The Outline comprised four chapters: the prevention and reduction of illicit demand; control of supply; suppression of illicit trafficking; and treatment and rehabilitation. Each chapter indicated specific targets, 35 in all, at the national, regional and international levels. The targets included assessment of the extent of drug abuse, prevention programmes and role of the media (chapter I); strengthening of international controls, identification of illicit narcotic plant cultivation and redevelopment of areas formerly under drug crop cultivation (chapter II); disruption of major trafficking networks, mutual judicial and legal assistance, and controls over international mails, ships and aircraft (chapter III); and treatment policy, personnel training and care for drug-addicted offenders within the prison system (chapter IV).

Two suggestions, to be undertaken by the United Nations Secretary-General, concerned high-resolution satellite imagery and environmentally safe methods of eradicating illicit plants.

The Declaration expressed the determination of the participating States to take action against drug abuse and illicit trafficking and recognized the importance of the role of the United Nations. It emphasized the significance of the roles of the United Nations Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Division of Narcotic Drugs, INCB and UNFODAC. The Declaration also described eight concepts-two for each of the four chapters of the Outline-that should guide international action. The Secretary-General was requested to propose how the priority attached to drug abuse control could best be carried out. In addition, the Conference recommended that the General Assembly consider the designation of a day for the annual observance of the international fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking.

Following the Conference, responsibility for overall co-ordination of United Nations drug control-related activities was given to the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna. That was in conformity with the Secretary-General's view that the Vienna Office, which also comprised the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, should be the nucleus for all programmes relating to social policy and development.

Pursuant to a 1986 Assembly resolution,(10) the Secretary-General submitted in September 1987 a report(11) on the Conference. He discussed its background and organization, its consideration of how drug abuse control could be carried out, and specific proposals by Member States. He summarized possible actions by the Assembly with respect to the role of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs as the policy-making body on drug control and in follow-up activities referred to in the Declaration and Outline; to the role of the Secretary-General in facilitating co-ordination and interaction among Member States and within the United Nations system; and to Member States' specific proposals. The proposals included deciding on the observance of an annual day on the fight against drug abuse, considering the designation of an international year for that purpose, and convening a second conference in five years. The Secretary-General added that it would be necessary to constitute on 1 January 1988 a small unit to support the system-wide follow-up.

ACC action. A number of developments related to co-ordination of United Nations activities drug abuse control occurred in 1987.

An Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Co-ordination in Matters of International Drug Abuse Control (Vienna, 14 February)(12) recommended that it reconvene following the International Conference. The meeting was approved by the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) in March.(13) The Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting (Vienna, 16 and 17 September)(14) reviewed the Conference's Outline of Future Activities and considered follow-up activities, the role of the regional commissions in those activities, and progress towards a new draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

In October, responding to a 1979 General Assembly resolution,(15) the Secretary-General submitted a report on international co-operation in drug abuse control,(16) covering co-ordination within the United Nations and its specialized agencies. He said that 18 entities of the system had devoted particular attention to action required by each agency and collectively to achieve the targets set forth in the Outline.

Communications. Communications dealing with the International Conference were received by the Secretary-General in 1987.

On 13 August,(17) Sweden transmitted the report of an NGO forum held during the Conference. The report summarized the forum's findings and approach to aspects of the drug abuse problem, such as research, prevention, reducing risks and limiting harm, education and training, information and communication, rural development and supply reduction, and future activities.

In their communique, the Commonwealth heads of Government (Vancouver, Canada, 13-17 October)(18) welcomed the successful conclusion of the Conference and expressed support for the Outline. They committed themselves to working for the early conclusion of a convention against illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances (see p. 909).

Zimbabwe transmitted the final communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 General Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October),(19) welcoming the successful conclusion of the Conference and calling for the early implementation of the Outline.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/112 without vote.

International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/122 of 13 December 1985, by which it decided to convene in 1987, in response to the initiative of the Secretary-General, an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking at the ministerial level, at Vienna, with the mandate to generate universal action, and as an expression of the political will of nations to combat the drug menace and as a means of tackling the serious and complex international drug problem in all its forms,

Drug abuse and international control

The Secretary-General, in a note⁽²⁰⁾ to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, explained that INCB reported to the Economic and Social Council through the Commission under the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs,⁽⁸⁾ as amended by the 1972 Protocol,⁽²¹⁾ and the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances.⁽⁹⁾

The INCB report for 1987⁽²²⁾ provided an overview of drug abuse world-wide and operations of the international drug control system. It said drug abuse had increased so rapidly over the preceding two decades that it currently imperilled all countries and segments of society. Illicit production of drugs was taking place in a growing number of countries, financed by criminal organizations with international links and with accomplices in financial circles. Drug traffickers corrupted officials, spread violence and terrorism, influenced compliance with international drug control treaties, and even exercised political and economic power in some regions of the world.

More countries were assigning higher priority and greater resources to drug control. However, more vigorous action to locate and destroy illicit crops was urgently needed. Most countries were co-operating with one another and with INCB to prevent the diversion of psychotropic substances into the illicit traffic. During 1986 and the first eight months of 1987, almost 19 tons—more than 100 million dosage units of methaqualone, secobarbital and fenetylline—were prevented from being diverted. Those successes were possible because most countries provided assessments of their medical requirements for psychotropic substances, which were published by INCB, providing guidance to exporting countries so that exports could be limited to medical needs.

Increased support by more countries to UNFDAC had resulted in an expansion of its annual budget by some 300 per cent since 1984. Financial and technical field co-operation activities had been extended to 35 countries through 85 multisectoral projects for rural development, preventive education and public information, treatment and rehabilitation, and law enforcement. In addition, UNFDAC supported training projects, research seminars and workshops.

Division of Narcotic Drugs. During 1987, the Division of Narcotic Drugs carried out its responsibilities deriving from the international drug control treaties and from mandates adopted by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. The Division provided advice and assistance to Governments and United Nations specialized agencies on the application of the international drug control system; provided them with information and advice on supply and demand reduction; gave professional and technical advice to UNFDAC and executed projects for it; contributed to the improvement of drug law enforcement by strengthening national and regional narcotics laboratories and by organizing regional training seminars for law enforcement officials; and analysed and published data on illicit drug traffic, seizures, countermeasures and trends. It also published a quarterly Bulletin on Narcotics as well as period Letters.

In the area of demand reduction, the Division organized a workshop on the utilization of community resources for the prevention and reduction of drug abuse in Asia and the Pacific (Manila, Philippines, 7-11 December). It also participated in drug control meetings organized by various intergovernmental bodies.

The Division organized several meetings on law enforcement. They included: the meetings of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies (HONLEA), Africa region (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 30 March-3 April); Latin America and Caribbean region (Santiago, Chile, 28 September-2 October); and Asia and the Pacific region (Tokyo, 30 November-4 December) (see below). The Division also continued its follow-up of the first interregional HONLEA meeting held in 1986.(23)

Requests for material, information and audio-visual services were received in growing numbers from Member States, groups and individuals. Responses were supplied to assist in training programmes, public awareness campaigns and other activities providing a greater understanding of drug abuse.

Annual reports for 1987 on the functioning of the international treaties on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances were received from 94 countries and territories. The Division was currently computerizing the cumulative index of national laws and regulations on drug control.

In 1987, groups of chemists and pharmacists from national narcotics laboratories of 13 African Member States received training at Vienna in laboratory techniques for the identification and analysis of seized drugs. Another group from four Asian States received similar training in the regional training centre at Bangkok, Thailand. Arrangements were being made to establish a regional training centre at Buenos Aires, Argentina.

National laboratories in Argentina, Colombia, Ghana, the Sudan and Thailand received technical assistance in the form of laboratory equipment, chemicals and reagents. Scientific documents and reference books on the identification and analysis of drugs of abuse were provided to national laboratories and other institutions in more than 50 countries.

Three expert group meetings on testing methods for drugs of abuse were held: on rapid testing methods (Vienna, 25-29 May), on recommended methods for testing cocaine, opium, morphine and amphetamine-related compounds (Buenos Aires, 14-18 September), and on guidelines for establishing national testing programmes and laboratories (Brussels, Belgium, 26-30 October).

UNDP activities. In 1987, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) continued to assist in the execution of projects financed by UNF-DAC as well as financing programmes from its own resources. UNDP and the Fund concluded a new working arrangement for UNDP resident representatives and the Fund's field advisers; the arrangement aimed at supporting the Fund's goal of securing greater operational visibility and more direct control of field programmes.

Activities were concentrated in Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean. Under its interregional programme, UNDP contributed $120,000 to the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute for a research project on drug abuse in the context of development: prevention, treatment and rehabilitation.

Two projects were carried out by UNDP in Asia and the Pacific. One provided $599,598 for the training of drug rehabilitation professionals; the other aimed at increasing airport security in 19 countries to reduce illegal drug trafficking. A total of $1,146,000 was approved.

At the national level, UNDP approved almost $1 million for the prevention of the use of illicit drugs in Indonesia. In Sri Lanka, it approved a project to institutionalize a system for monitoring the trends in drug abuse and to establish an early warning system to activate programme response.

WHO activities. In 1987, the World Health Organization (WHO) continued to emphasize the importance of maintaining a strong public health response to drug abuse problems.

A WHO consultation group on the WHO global programme on prevention and control of drug abuse (Geneva, January) reviewed work undertaken in 1986 and recommended priorities for 1987. Both the consultation group and the WHO advisory group on the alcohol programme (Geneva, May) noted the decision by WHO to create a more integrated global programme on alcohol and drug abuse.

As recommended by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking in June, WHO made renewed efforts to improve the quality of local, national and international reporting systems on relevant health indicators. An expert consultation (September) was held to discuss methods of achieving such improvements within the context of mental health statistics.

A WHO report on the adverse health consequences of cocaine abuse was issued; it related current trends in cocaine abuse to prevention programmes and innovative treatment approaches. A document on the process of formulating, implementing and assessing national policies of drug abuse was also completed. It contained guidelines for the different phases of policy development. The WHO regional office for Europe prepared a report on drug abuse research and policy.

In 1987, WHO designated two new collaborating centres on research and training in alcohol and drug abuse—at San José, Costa Rica, and at Auckland, New Zealand. In addition to an assessment of the drug abuse situation in six European countries, WHO, with support from UNFDAC, carried out national programmes in Afghanistan, the Bahamas, Burma, China, Colombia, Jamaica and Sri Lanka, as well as drug-related activities in Malaysia, the Philippines, the Republic of Palau and Spain.

Two reports were completed in 1987 on topics on which international opinion had been divided and of which a comprehensive review was lacking. They concerned the prevention of drug abuse and the role of methadone in treating opioid dependence.

The Expert Committee on Drug Dependence (Geneva, March) recommended five designer drugs for control under the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs.⁽⁸⁾ It also recommended that secobarbital be moved from Schedule III to Schedule II of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances,⁽⁹⁾ and that racemate of metamphetamine be added to Schedule II.

A meeting was organized (Geneva, January) to review collaboration between the pharmaceutical industry and international agencies in reducing drug abuse. A conference organized by the United States Drug Enforcement Administration and WHO was held (Rabat, Morocco, September) to discuss problems caused by controlled substance analogues.

A WHO team visited medical schools in Beijing and elsewhere in China to provide training sessions on the rational use of psychoactive drugs.

Publications were issued on the rational use of psychotropic drugs, with emphasis on tranquilizers in non-psychiatric settings; psychoactive drugs and health problems, and the rational use of anxiolytics and hypnotics in medical practice.

ILO activities. The International Labour Organisation (ILO) continued to expand its programme on drug abuse control, focusing on drug rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug-dependent persons, and prevention and reduction of alcohol problems in the workplace. The International Labour Conference (Geneva, 3-23 June) adopted an action plan, which was endorsed by the ILO Governing Body in November.⁽²⁴⁾ The plan was to assist member States and organizations in developing policy, strategies and programmes for drug-dependent persons, drug rehabilitation staff training, expansion of regional collaboration, and analysis and dissemination of latest developments and trends. Workplace initiatives would be promoted and supported along three lines: preparation of training material and training of resource persons; implementation of plant-level, union-based or community-based action programmes and assessment of the impact of those programmes; and further refinement of responses and methodologies through comparative analyses and cross-cultural exchanges of experiences.

ILO produced a multi-media resource kit on drug abuse control programmes in the work setting, and devoted an issue of Conditions of Work Digest (vol. 6, No. 1) to the subject of alcohol, drugs and programmes of assistance for workers. It also provided a curriculum on drug rehabilitation and lecturers for a West African/Nigerian training course on drug dependence (Porto-Nova, Benin, 14-25 September) and the eastern and southern African training course on substance abuse (Port Louis, Mauritius, 26 October-6 November). Activities funded from extrabudgetary resources were carried out in Burma, Thailand and Zimbabwe.

UNESCO activities. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) took part in preparations for the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking. During the Conference, UNESCO distributed the July issue of The Courier, containing articles on drug abuse prevention, the publication Educating against Drug Abuse, and UNESCO Memo on steps taken by UNESCO relating to prevention. An audio-visual montage on young people and drugs was displayed in English, French and Spanish.

In Africa, an epidemiological survey on the use of drugs by young people was undertaken in Ghana and Senegal. Educational and informational aids on the question of drug abuse were produced in Senegal, and new approaches to reduce drug demand, such as increased community participation and production of audio-visual aids, were tried in Benin.

In the Caribbean, UNESCO collaborated with the community in drawing up projects for preventive education to deal with drug abuse.

ICAO activities. The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) submitted to the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking a document on its activities in the suppression of illicit transport of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances by air. The Air Navigation Commission reviewed existing ICAO provisions to identify areas in which it might be necessary to develop, upgrade or strengthen provisions or provide guidance material to assist States in detecting or suppressing illicit transport. The Commission considered flight operations, airworthiness, accident investigations and air traffic services and prosecution. It stated that any measures that might be taken to prevent or suppress the illicit traffic of drugs by air could be instituted with little or no change in existing ICAO provisions.

The Air Transport Committee reviewed the need for guidance material in the area of facilitation. The ICAO Council decided to refer for consideration by the Facilitation Committee in 1988 the question of developing any additional material relating to narcotics control.

Other activities. The Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs continued to work on drug control within the areas of crime trends and the assessment of crime prevention strategies. The Interregional Adviser on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice continued to advise countries in all regions on various issues related to drug abuse and illicit drug traffic.

The United Nations Social Defence Research Institute (UNSDRI) submitted two documents to the International Conference: a report on the international survey on drug-related penal measures and a research study on drug abuse in the context of development. The study emphasized the need to strengthen or initiate comprehensive national information systems to improve policies and programmes for prevention, treatment and rehabilitation. UNSDRI convened a working group (Rome, Italy, 4 and 5 June) to discuss that proposal. The working group consisted of experts from India, Italy and Poland, the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs, WHO and UNESCO. It advocated the production of a model pro forma for use by Governments in monitoring trends in the non-medical use of dependence-producing drugs, collecting information on existing resources and activities, assessing national needs, evaluating programmes and activities, and formulating policies and programmes of prevention, treatment and rehabilitation.

The forty-third session of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) (Bangkok, April) approved proposals involving information development, data development for treatment and rehabilitation, and drug abuse prevention. In October, representatives of ESCAP, UNFAC and WHO decided to commission comparative studies of rehabilitation techniques in Burma, Hong Kong, India, Malaysia and Thailand.

The Universal Postal Union (UPU) continued its collaboration with custom authorities in the Customs Co-operation Council/UPU Contact Committee, which held its twelfth session (Brussels, 19-21 February). The Committee considered methods of training postal officers in the detection of narcotic drugs.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) submitted to the International Conference a document on issues related to the substitution of illicit crops. During the year, FAO continued to provide assistance to Burma in drug crop substitution. An informal inter-agency meeting was held to discuss FAO follow-up to the Conference in the areas of rural development and crop substitution, the use of satellite imagery techniques for drug crop identification, and environmentally safe methods of eradicating illicit plants, particularly through herbicides.

Measures to prevent the smuggling of drugs on board merchant ships were considered by the International Maritime Organization's Facilitation Committee (seventeenth session, 14-18 September).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/28 without vote..

Education and information on drug abuse and illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting with great concern the continued massive abuse of narcotic drugs in most parts of the world, and its harmful effect, particularly on youth,

Aware of the urgent need to protect society from the harm caused by abuse of narcotic drugs,

Emphasizing the need to take effective measures to reduce the demand for illicit narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Recognizing that in some cases information about narcotic drugs and drug abuse gives a result that is the opposite of the one desired, evoking undesirable curiosity, and leading to young people experimenting with drugs,

1. Calls upon States to make every effort to ensure that preventive educational work in respect of narcotic drugs and drug abuse is carried out by persons with appropriate training and skills, taking into account the particular needs of groups of people of similar age, skills and psychological characteristics who are at particular risk of abuse of drugs;

2. Urges Governments to encourage efforts to ensure that preventive information does not involve elements that evoke curiosity or the desire to experiment with narcotic drugs, such as detailed descriptions of euphoria, but clearly indicates the negative, harmful consequences of drug abuse and emphasizes the positive effects of alternative activities and a life-style free from narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

3. Recommends that Governments ensure that preventive information does not contain details that might facilitate access to illicit drugs, such as detailed descriptions of methods and routes of illicit traffic in narcotic drugs, places of origin of illicit production and non-medical uses of narcotic drugs;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their consideration and corresponding action;

5. Requests Governments to inform the Secretary-General of their experience, so that draft special methodological guidelines for a preventive public information programme on the evils of drug abuse may be compiled for consideration and adoption by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/28

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/102) without vote, 7 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1987/17); agenda item 20.

United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control

During 1987, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control continued to provide assistance to a number of Member States through individual country programmes or programmes involving assistance for the mutual benefit of several countries. The total UNFDAC budget for 1987 was $39.8 million ($18.4 million greater than in 1986), providing assistance for 85 projects in 30 countries in addition to 30 general co-operation projects in the areas of training, research, seminars and workshops. According to the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁶⁾ UNFDAC'S efforts under its technical co-operation programmes involved an intensification of its operations in Latin America and the Caribbean, Asia, the Middle East and Africa. Covered by the Fund's programmes were, inter alia, treatment, rehabilitation, public awareness, law enforcement and crop substitution.

Of the total 1987 budget, 45 per cent was allotted to reduce illicit supply; 28 per cent to strengthen control measures; 18 per cent to reduce illicit demand; 5 per cent to a working arrangement with UNDP; 3 per cent to administration and programme evaluation; and 1 per cent to research.

UNFDAC's new activities in 1987 included: approval of a $12 million multisectoral programme in Brazil; design of a regional plan in the Caribbean; launching a $5 million drug control project in China; signing a memorandum of understanding with India providing the framework of a $20 million assistance programme; approval of treatment and rehabilitation projects in Argentina, Colombia, Mauritius and Sri Lanka; approval of law enforcement projects in Pakistan and Turkey; signing a memorandum of understanding with Morocco under which UNFDAC committed $2.5 million to an assistance programme; preparatory work for the design of a $3 million programme in Nigeria; concluding an agreement committing an additional $20 million to new activities in Peru; and approval of two highland development projects and three projects on demand reduction in Thailand.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, the Fund supported operations in the countries of the Andean subregion aimed at reducing illicit coca cultivation, enhancing the effectiveness of drug law enforcement agencies, improving the facilities for the treatment and rehabilitation of addicts and heightening public awareness of the dangers of drugs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/32 without vote.

United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control
The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the importance of the Declaration on the Control of Drug Trafficking and Drug Abuse contained in General Assembly resolution 39/142 of 14 December 1984, in which the Assembly declared, inter alia, that the illegal production of, illicit demand for, abuse of and illicit trafficking in drugs impeded economic and social progress, constituted a grave threat to the security and development of many countries and peoples and should be combated by all moral, legal and institutional means at the national, regional and international levels, and that the eradication of trafficking in narcotic drugs was the collective responsibility of all States, especially those affected by problems relating to illicit production, trafficking or abuse,

Convinced that the world-wide character and the new dangerous dimensions of the drug-related phenomena require urgent action for the implementation of a dynamic and comprehensive international response, based on a concerted effort by all States,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2719(XXV) of 15 December 1970, in which the Assembly welcomed the establishment of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in pursuance of the request made by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1559(XLIX) of 11 November 1970,

Recalling also the numerous resolutions of the General Assembly, the Council and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs commending the positive action of the Fund in supporting prevention, law enforcement, treatment and rehabilitation programmes, as well as integrated rural development projects, including projects for the substitution of illegal crops, in the most severely affected areas,

Acknowledging the vital role of the Fund in enhancing the multilateral approach to the provision of international assistance in this field,

Noting with satisfaction that, in recent years, the Fund has considerably extended its activities and programmes, thus becoming an effective, flexible and operational tool of multilateral co-operation, as well as a repository of a high degree of professionalism and specialization, in combating illegal drug production, trafficking and abuse,

Noting also the continuing collaboration and calls for increased co-operation between the Fund and the other entities of the United Nations system responsible for drug abuse control, in particular the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the International Narcotics Control Board, as well as the close co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme,

Recognizing that the increased level of voluntary contributions and the growing political support from many Governments to the Fund, its expanded programme of action and the broadened scope of its technical co-operation activities, make it necessary to adapt the administrative and operational procedures of the Fund so that they are commensurate with the increasing responsibilities entrusted to it and the rising expectations of Member States, thus strengthening its operational flexibility and reinforcing its capacity to respond to the urgent needs of developing countries,

Noting with concern that only a very small number of Governments are currently providing the bulk of the financial contributions to the Fund and that its resources are not yet sufficient to enable it to respond adequately to the serious existing needs,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the Executive Director of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control for the initiative and leadership that have characterized the development of the Fund;

2. Endorses the recently adopted policy approach of the Fund, based on the formulation and implementation of national and regional plans, referred to as "master plans", in which both donor and assistance-receiving countries are actively involved;

3. Encourages the Fund to continue:

(a) To build up, on an international basis, with the assistance of the competent bodies of the United Nations system and other international bodies, and the continuous collaboration of interested Governments, in terms of political and financial support, the capacity to respond to national, regional, interregional and global needs in the field of drug abuse control;

(b) To extend systematic and sustained assistance to countries and regions, with particular attention to developing countries and regions, at their request, so as to enable them to combat more effectively their drug abuse problems through the formulation and execution of technical co-operation activities, the direct monitoring of the implementation of projects and programmes, the close supervision of the execution of projects and programmes, the evaluation of the results achieved, the designation, as appropriate, of executing agencies, including Government institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, fund-raising and the proper management of the resources of the Fund;

(c) To play its important role in the United Nations system as an effective operational instrument to further the implementation of policy recommendations that deal with drug abuse and to act as an innovative and catalytic agent for the United Nations system as a whole;

4. Decides that the Executive Director of the Fund shall report regularly on the activities and programmes of the Fund to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and to the Economic and Social Council when the Council considers the report of the Commission;

5. Recommends that the General Assembly give appropriate consideration to the Fund under the relevant item of its agenda;

6. Recommends that the Executive Director of the Fund, in view of the very delicate nature of his responsibilities, should be able to report direct to the Secretary-General, when appropriate and necessary;

7. Requests the Executive Director of the Fund to take the necessary steps to strengthen its technical capability and enhance its effectiveness and usefulness in the delivery of drug abuse control programmes;

8. Reiterates the invitation to the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system concerned to initiate and continue programmes aimed at the reduction of illicit production and demand for drugs, in close co-operation with and incorporating the experience of the Fund;

9. Expresses its appreciation to Governments for both regular and earmarked contributions to the Fund;

10. Appeals to Governments to continue and substantially to increase their contributions to the Fund;

11. Calls upon those Governments that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Fund;

12. Requests the Executive Director of the Fund, in preparing the next report on the activities of the Fund for submission to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, to highlight the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/32

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/102) without vote, 7 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1987/17); agenda item 20.

Supply and demand

Narcotic raw materials for licit use

Under the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs(8) and resolutions of the Economic and Social Council and General Assembly, INCB had the responsibility of monitoring the supply and demand of opiates for legitimate needs. However, for lack of resources, that task was accorded low priority.(16)

INCB reported that the demand for opiates for medical use had stabilized since the mid-1970s at approximately 190 tons per year in morphine equivalent. With regard to the production of opiate raw materials, provisional statistics submitted by the major producing countries indicated that global production in 1987—approximately 170 tons in morphine equivalent—declined by 10 tons as compared with 1986, reaching its lowest level since 1974.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/31 without vote.

Demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, 1983/3 of 24 May 1983, 1984/21 of 24 May 1984, 1985/16 of 28 May 1985 and 1986/9 of 21 May 1986,

Bearing in mind the supplement to the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1980 on demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs and the recommendations contained therein, as well as the special report on the same subject prepared by the Board in 1985,

Having considered the report of the Board for 1986, in particular paragraphs 38 to 42 on the demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific purposes, as well as the report of the Board on statistics on narcotic drugs for 1985,

Noting that the Board again reports that supply and demand are in approximate balance,

Noting with concern that the Board has been provided with insufficient resources, and that this affects the priority given to the implementation of the request of the Council contained in its resolution 1986/9,

Bearing in mind the burden already borne by the traditional supplier countries faced with the question of excessive stocks of raw materials,

Reaffirming the fundamental need for international co-operation and solidarity in the effort, consistent with the relevant provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, to maintain a balance between legitimate supply and demand of opiates and in overcoming the problem of excessive stocks,

1. Urges all Governments that have not yet done so to seriously consider ways of implementing the above-mentioned resolutions and, as far as their constitutional and legal systems permit, to bring about an expeditious improvement in the current situation;

2. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to accord priority to the monitoring of the implementation of Council resolution 1986/9 and to report thereon to the Council, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in 1988;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/31

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/102) without vote, 7 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1987/17); agenda item 20.

Illicit traffic

Illicit production and manufacture of drugs were taking place in a growing number of countries, according to INCB. Those activities, which had reached alarming proportions, were financed and master-minded by criminal organizations with international links and accomplices in financial circles. Major drug traffickers maintained the flow of drugs around the world, ensuring the availability of drugs in high-demand areas and the "drug of choice" in specific geographical locations. Traffickers corrupted officials, spread violence and terrorism, influenced compliance with international drug control treaties and even exercised political and economic power in some regions. Destruction of illicit cultivation of the cannabis plant, opium poppy and coca bush was being carried out on a larger scale, but cultivation remained vast. More vigorous action to locate and destroy illicit crops was urgently needed. Equally determined action was needed to prevent and reduce drug abuse.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, on the recommendation of its Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East, adopted in February three resolutions relating to illicit traffic. The Commission(25) urged all Governments to improve their reporting procedures, their export/import controls and their facilities for exchanging drug law enforcement information with regard to psychotropic substances and essential precursor chemicals. It also urged Governments to improve and facilitate ways in which their drug law enforcement officers could exchange intelligence in a secure and expeditious manner. The Commission urged Governments(26) to give full support to UNFEDAC, particularly by increasing or making contributions, to consider ways to improve training facilities for drug law enforcement agencies, and to assist in the development of communication systems in order to strengthen drug law enforcement agencies in the Near and Middle East. The Commission(27) recommended that the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs give high priority to training drug law enforcement officers. The training programme should include the detection and identification of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances as well as certain precursors and essential chemicals.

In addition, the Commission(28) decided that States concerned should submit draft provisions for a convention (see below) for suppressing illicit transit drug traffic through their territories to the next meeting of an intergovernmental group of experts.

Draft convention against illicit traffic

In February 1987, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1987/104 without vote.

Draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

At its 3rd plenary meeting, on 6 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 41/126 of 4 December 1986, decided to request the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to continue at its thirty-second session its work on the preparation of the draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in the most expeditious manner, so that it might be effective and widely acceptable and enter into force at the earliest possible date, and to report thereon to the Council at its first regular session of 1987.

Economic and Social Council decision 1987/104

Adopted without vote

Draft in informal working paper; agenda item 2.

At its February session, the Commission of Narcotic Drugs discussed the preparation of the draft convention, the text of which had been circulated in 1986.(23) It also considered a compilation of comments and textual changes submitted by Governments on the draft text.

In a resolution on the preparation of the convention,(29) the Commission invited States to consider the main causes of abuse, illicit production and traffic of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances so that their comments might assist an intergovernmental expert group provided for in a draft resolution submitted to the Economic and Social Council (see below). It also asked the expert group, when preparing the draft convention, to give attention to the enhancement of national, regional and international efforts against drug abuse.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1987/27 without vote.

Preparation of an international convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances
The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 39/141 of 14 December 1984, in which the Commission on Narcotic Drugs was requested to initiate, as a matter of priority, the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs,

Taking note also of General Assembly resolutions 33/168 of 20 December 1978, 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982, 38/93 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983, 39/143 of 14 December 1984, and 40/120, 40/121 and 40/122 of 13 December 1985,

Recalling the Declaration on the Control of Drug Trafficking and Drug Abuse, in which it is stated, inter alia, that the eradication of trafficking in narcotic drugs is the collective responsibility of all States and that States shall utilize the legal instruments against the illicit production of and demand for, abuse of and illicit traffic in drugs and adopt additional measures to counter the new manifestations of this crime,

Recalling also Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 1(S-IX) of 14 February 1986 on guidance on the drafting of an international convention to combat drug trafficking, by which the Secretary-General was requested to compile comments and/or textual changes received from Governments and to circulate them for consideration at the thirty-second session of the Commission, so that the Commission might give direction on the further development of the draft convention,

Considering General Assembly resolution 41/126 of 4 December 1986, by which the Commission, through the Economic and Social Council, was requested to continue, at its thirty-second session, its work on the preparation of the draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in the most expeditious manner, so that it might be effective and widely acceptable and enter into force at the earliest possible time,

Bearing in mind the Quito Declaration against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs of 11 August 1984, the New York Declaration against Drug Trafficking and the Illicit Use of Drugs of 1 October 1984, and the Lima Declaration of 29 July 1985, in which profound alarm was expressed at the seriousness of the problem,

1. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General for the efficient way in which he dealt with the request made in paragraph 4 of Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 1(S-IX);

2. Also expresses its thanks to the States that responded to the appeal made in paragraph 5 of Commission resolution 1(S-IX) to submit their comments on the draft convention or proposals for textual changes thereto;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a working document that would consolidate the draft prepared by the Secretary-General in response to paragraph 4 of Commission resolution 1(S-IX), the comments made by Governments as well as the comments made by States participating in the thirty-second session of the Commission, and information on the results of the session and the working group, established by the Commission to examine article 1 of the draft convention, and to circulate that document to States by 1 May 1987; the document should also include a draft preamble, a section on the implementation mechanism and draft final provisions;

4. Decides to establish an open-ended intergovernmental expert group to meet in 1987, twice if necessary (perhaps in July and October), each session lasting one to two weeks, within available resources, to review the working document, to reach agreement on the articles of the draft convention, wherever possible, and to prepare a revised working document;

5. Invites all interested States to submit any comments on and/or textual changes to the working document to be circulated for consideration at the meetings of the expert group;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, to be held at Vienna in June 1987, on the progress made in the preparation of the draft convention

7. Requests the Secretary-General to distribute to States, by 1 November 1987, the revised draft prepared by the expert group, for review;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the next session of the Commission on the results of the meetings of the expert group and to provide any comments from Governments on the revised draft;

9. Requests the Commission, at its next session, to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the progress achieved by the expert group and the comments from Governments on the work of the group, and to make recommendations on the steps to be followed in the further elaboration of the draft convention, including the possibility of convening a plenipotentiary conference in 1988 to adopt it;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to allocate sufficient funds from the programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987 for the expert group to meet; if necessary, the Secretary-General should seek to provide the funding from voluntary contributions or from the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to make provisions for the convening of a plenipotentiary conference during the biennium 1988-1989.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/27

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/102) without vote, 7 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1987/17); agenda item 20.

Communication. On 18 June 1987.(30) Guyana transmitted the final communique of the Special Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, 9-12 March). The Ministers urged the early conclusion of a convention against traffic in narcotic and psychotropic substances and related activities. They also stressed the need to extend technical and economic co-operation to countries most affected by drug abuse and the illicit production and traffic in drugs; urged the industrialized countries to increase their financial contribution to those programmes; and, in particular, urged that attention be paid to effective programmes of crop substitution.

Expert group activities. The expert group established by the Economic and Social Council (see above) held its first session (Vienna, 29 June-10 July), attended by 135 experts from 57 States, and its second session (Vienna, 5-16 October), attended by 183 experts from 65 States.(31) The group examined various articles and sections of the draft convention; it was the consensus at the second session that a third session would be desirable and that if authorized could be held before the tenth special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 1988.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an August report,(32) the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of progress in preparing the draft convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/111 without vote.

Preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/168 of 20 December 1978, 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982, 38/93 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983, 39/141 and 39/143 of 14 December 1984, 40/120, 40/121 and 40/122 of 13 December 1985, 41/125, 41/126 and 41/127 of 4 December 1986 and other relevant provisions,

Recalling also the provisions of its resolution 41/126, in which it is recognized that the preliminary draft convention prepared by the Secretary-General in compliance with Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 1(S-IX) of 14 February 1986 constitutes a positive step in the preparation of the convention and that the elements included in the draft correspond to many of the interests of the international community in its efforts to confront the problem of illicit drug trafficking,

Emphasizing the importance of the contribution that will be made by the convention in supplementing the existing international instruments on the subject, namely the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971,

Recalling that in paragraph 3 of its resolution 41/126 it requested the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to continue the preparation of the draft convention so that it might be effective and widely acceptable, and might enter into force at an early date,

1. Expresses its appreciation to and commends the Secretary-General for the report submitted to the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking on progress achieved in the preparation of a new convention against illicit traffic in drugs;

2. Underlines the importance of the appeal made in paragraph 3 of the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, in which the Conference called for the urgent but careful preparation and finalization, taking into account the various aspects of illicit trafficking, of the draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances to ensure its entry into force at the earliest possible date as a complement to existing international instruments;

3. Welcomes the report of the meeting of the Intergovernmental Expert Group on the preparation of the draft convention, drawn up in accordance with Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 1(XXXII) of 10 February 1987, and urges Member States to submit in due course their observations on the draft revised by the Expert Group;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, using existing resources, to consider the possibility of convening the Intergovernmental Expert Group for a period of two weeks immediately prior to the tenth special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in order to continue the revision of the working paper on the draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and, if possible, to reach agreement on the convention;

5. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, through the Economic and Social Council, to consider and, if possible, approve at its tenth special session the draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and to prepare recommendations on the next measures to be taken with a view to concluding the preparation of the convention, including the possibility of convening a plenipotentiary conference in 1988 for its adoption;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary administrative arrangements for the convening of any agreed plenipotentiary conference in 1988 for the signing of the convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

7. Once again urges all States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

International campaign

By a March note to the Economic and Social Council,(33) the Secretariat gave an overview of legislative action in relation to the international campaign against traffic in drugs. On 26 May, by decision 1987/128, the Council took note of the note.

In August,(34) the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of a 1986 General Assembly resolution(35) on the campaign. By decision 42/422 of 7 December, the Assembly took note of the report.

Communications. During the year, the Secretary-General received a number of communications concerning the campaign against drug traffic.

On 15 July,(36) Malaysia transmitted the final statement of the InterAction Council (fifth session, Kuala Lumpur, 19-21 April). The Council, comprising former heads of State or Government, recommended that Governments adopt stronger national and international measures and collaborate and co-ordinate to combat illegal drug trafficking.

On 13 August,(37) Thailand transmitted the joint communique and statements of the Twentieth Ministerial Meeting of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) (Singapore, 15 and 16 June). The ASEAN Foreign Ministers commended the efforts of the Secretary-General and of various United Nations bodies in combating the drug problem.

Bolivia and Paraguay, in a joint declaration transmitted on 8 September following a meeting of their Foreign Ministers (Asunción, Paraguay, 14-17 August),(38) condemned drug trafficking as a crime against humanity and called on other countries and international organizations to continue efforts to put an end to the problem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/113 without vote.

International campaign against drug abuse and illicit trafficking

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the adverse effects of the global problem of drug abuse, illicit production of and trafficking in drugs and psychotropic substances, both on individuals, in that it has pernicious physical and psychological effects and limits creativity and the full development of human potential, and in relation to States, as it is a threat to their security and is prejudicial to their democratic institutions and their economic, social, legal and cultural structures,

Considering that the situation continues to deteriorate, owing, inter alia, to the growing interrelationship between drug trafficking and transnational criminal organizations that are responsible for much of the drug traffic and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and for the increase in violence and corruption, which injure society,

Recognizing the collective responsibility of States for providing appropriate resources for the elimination of illicit production and trafficking and of the abuse of drugs and psychotropic substances,

Recognizing also that measures to prevent and control supply and to combat illicit trafficking can be effective only if they take into consideration the close link between illicit production, transit and the abuse of drugs and the social, economic and cultural conditions in the States affected, and that they must be formulated and implemented in the context of the social and economic policies of States, taking due account of community traditions, harmonious development and conservation of the environment,

Recognizing once again that transit routes used by drug traffickers are constantly shifting and that an increasing number of countries in all regions of the world and even entire areas, because of their geographical location and other considerations, are particularly vulnerable to the illicit transit traffic,

Considering that regional and international co-operation is required in order to reduce the vulnerability of States and regions to the illicit transit traffic and to provide necessary support and assistance, particularly to countries hitherto unaffected,

Taking into account the need to reaffirm the effectiveness of human, moral and spiritual values for preventing the consumption of narcotic drugs, at the national and international levels, through information, guidance and educational activities,

Considering the importance of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control as a catalyst in the United Nations system, and that it has become one of the major sources of multilateral financing for technical co-operation programmes in the context of the international campaign against abuse of and illicit trafficking in drugs and psychotropic substances,

Recognizing that the policy adopted by the Fund for the formulation of master plans takes into account the principal social, economic and cultural factors of countries, as well as their national and regional programmes, and that in those plans both donor countries and recipients of technical assistance are actively involved in concerted action with a view to combating the problem at all stages,

Taking note of the close link existing between Governments, public institutions and the Fund and the United Nations Development Programme, in co-ordination with other organizations of the United Nations system concerned with controlling abuse of drugs and psychotropic substances,

Recalling its resolution 41/127 of 4 December 1986 and the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and of the Economic and Social Council adopted to advance the international campaign against abuse of and illicit traffic in drugs and psychotropic substances,

1. Condemns unequivocally once again drug trafficking in all its forms—illicit production, processing, marketing and consumption—as a criminal activity and requests all States to pledge their political will in a concerted and universal struggle to achieve its complete and final elimination;

2. Urges States to acknowledge that they share responsibility for combating the problem of illicit consumption, production, transit and trafficking and therefore to encourage international co-operation in the struggle to eliminate illicit production and trafficking and the abuse of drugs and psychotropic substances, in accordance with the relevant international and national norms;

3. Acknowledges the constant and determined efforts of Governments at the national, regional and international levels to cope with the increase in drug abuse and illicit drug trafficking and its increasingly close links with other forms of organized international criminal activities;

4. Notes with appreciation the unanimous adoption of the Declaration and the adoption by consensus of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, and urges States to carry out the recommendations contained in those documents in a determined and sustained manner;

5. Takes note of the First Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, African Region, held at Addis Ababa from 30 March to 3 April 1987, the First Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Latin American and Caribbean Region, held at Santiago from 28 September to 2 October 1987, and the Meeting of the Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Asia and the Pacific Region, held at Tokyo from 30 November to 4 December 1987, and requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to consider their recommendations at its tenth special session, in order to determine the specific measures required for implementation thereof, for possible adoption by the Economic and Social Council at its next session;

6. Encourages States to use the meetings of the working group of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs for the purpose of exchanging experiences in their struggle against the illicit transit of drugs and psychotropic substances and to increase regional and interregional co-operation in this matter;

7. Reiterates once again its request to the Secretary-General to continue to make the necessary arrangements for holding, within the framework of advisory services, interregional seminars on the experience gained within the United Nations system in integrated rural development programmes that include the substitution of illegal crops in affected areas, including the Andean region;

8. Commends the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control for the productive work that it has done as one of the main bodies of the United Nations system providing technical co-operation in the field of drug abuse control, and encourages it to continue its activities, paying particular attention to requests from developing countries;

9. Calls upon all States to continue and increase their political support of and financial contributions to the Fund, and encourages its Executive Director to continue systematically and consistently strengthening the activities of the Fund in affected countries and regions, so as to enable them to combat all aspects of the problem effectively;

10. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/32 of 26 May 1987;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure that the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat includes in its publications information designed to prevent the abuse of narcotic drugs, especially by young people;

12. Calls upon the Governments of countries facing problems of drug abuse, particularly those most seriously affected, as part of their national strategy, to take the necessary measures to reduce significantly the illicit demand for drugs and psychotropic substances with the aim of creating in society a deep respect for its own health, fitness and well-being and to provide appropriate information and advice for all sectors of their communities with regard to drug abuse, its harmful effects and the way in which appropriate community action can be promoted;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to provide, within existing resources, appropriate support for strengthening the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the International Narcotics Control Board, including through redeployment;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution and decides to include in the provisional agenda of that session the item entitled "International campaign against traffic in drugs".

Regional issues

Africa

The African region was highly vulnerable to international developments in illicit traffic, INCB stated in its 1987 report.(22) Narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances originating in Asia, Europe and, to a lesser extent, South America, were becoming increasingly available to consumers in Africa, despite the fact that the intended final destination of some of the drugs was outside the continent. The continent itself, as a whole, had become a major source of cannabis for other regions. Nationals of a large number of African countries were active in the traffic in opiates, cocaine, cannabis and psychotropic substances. Those factors also encouraged the spread of drug abuse.

In many African countries, the drug control system required substantial improvements, as adequate national legislation and regulations were lacking in several countries.

Current developments in illicit trafficking and drug abuse confirmed the trends of recent years. Heroin trafficking affected an increasing number of African countries, which also were becoming stages in the transit of heroin to European and North American markets. In addition to Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Mauritius and Nigeria, new transit countries included Cameroon, Kenya, the Niger, Senegal and Somalia. Cocaine trafficking was a no less serious threat, with an increasing number of transit countries.

Cannabis remained the drug most widely cultivated and trafficked in Africa, with significant illicit production occurring in a number of countries. Cultivation was expanding to meet demands in Western Europe.

With regard to psychotropic substances, large quantities—mostly secobarbital and methaqualone—continued to be trafficked to the African region.

Asia

East and South-East Asia. During 1987, the eradication of opium poppy and cannabis cultivation in East and South-East Asia was extended further and drug seizures remained high. Nevertheless, illicit poppy cultivation and opium production was estimated to be on the increase in comparison with the previous crop year. Opiates and increasing quantities of cannabis continued to be available for domestic consumption and for trafficking abroad, mainly to the United States, Europe and Australia. In view of the growing traffic in and abuse of psychotropic substances, control measures needed to be improved and the sources of production identified. An INCB mission visited China, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Hong Kong, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand in April/May.

China reported increasing attempts by international traffickers to use it as a transit country. Drugs had been seized mainly in the southern provinces. Meanwhile, the Government, in collaboration with UNFDAC, was designing a plan for prevention and control of abuse. The first phase, extending over three years and costing $5 million, would aim at strengthening control mechanisms in Yunnan province. In the Lao People's Democratic Republic, opium poppy cultivation, which had been practised for at least two centuries by mountain people in border areas, was being discouraged by the Government. In Thailand, a 10-year plan (1985-1994) for alternative development of poppy cultivating areas was progressing. Nevertheless, Thailand remained the conduit for opiates illicitly produced in the region.

South Asia. Heroin abuse was spreading in India, not only in the major cities of Bombay, Calcutta, New Delhi and Madras, but in other parts of the country. Extremely large seizures of heroin and cannabis resin reflected the extent of trafficking, much of which was reported to originate in the Near and Middle East. The Government worked out a plan to reduce the illicit demand and supply of drugs; UNFDAC provided $20 million for its implementation.

Europe

Eastern Europe. In general, drug addiction did not constitute a major public health problem in Eastern Europe. However, some countries were concerned at instances of abuse of certain narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances diverted from local sources. In Czechoslovakia, the number of narcotic abusers known to health authorities had reached 6,000. In Poland, there were some 8,000 registered addicts; the number of unregistered addicts was estimated at 30,000. In the USSR, 46,000 were registered as drug addicts.

Western Europe. While heroin and cannabis abuse seemed to be decreasing slightly, or at least remaining stable, in most countries of Western Europe, cocaine and stimulant abuse were increasing. Drug abuse no longer affected only large urban populations; it was spreading to small towns and villages. The proportion of women addicts, especially to prescription drugs, was growing. Studies in Scandinavian countries and the Federal Republic of Germany showed that young people were more aware of the risks of abuse than they had been three to five years earlier.

Near and Middle East

The enormous quantities of locally produced opiates and cannabis resin seized both within the Near and Middle East region and abroad continued to reflect the ready availability of those drugs. That again raised the question of the extent and location of illicit cultivation. INCB reiterated its view that a systematic survey of areas where illicit poppy cultivation was believed to take place was required if an effective attack was to be mounted against illicit opium production. Seizures abroad of large amounts of heroin and cannabis originating in Afghanistan indicated widespread cultivation of the opium poppy and cannabis plant. Iran remained committed to making the country drug-free, but despite intense law enforcement, trafficking of opiates from its eastern borders by armed groups had not diminished. In Pakistan, an estimated 75 to 80 tons of opium were estimated to have been produced in 1987 from the illicit cultivation of some 9,000 hectares of poppy.

North America

Widespread illicit consumption of a variety of drugs, often taken in combination, remained a serious public health concern in the United States. Cannabis was by far the most widely abused drug and the potency of street samples had continued to increase. Heroin abuse continued to cause great concern, as did the relationship of intravenous abuse of that drug to acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS). Drugs such as methamphetamine and phencyclidine were increasingly abused, while abuse of depressants appeared to have declined. There was evidence that cocaine was becoming more widely available and that prices had been decreasing and purity increasing. Cocaine accounted for higher rates of overdose deaths, drug emergency cases and other serious medical problems than any other drug abused.

The cocaine originated in Latin America. Heroin originated in Mexico and in South-West and South-East Asia. Synthetic narcotics and psychotropic substances were manufactured for the most part in clandestine laboratories in the United States.

The illicit trafficking and abuse of drugs remained a relatively serious problem in Canada. Cannabis was the most widely used drug. The abuse of hashish and of cocaine was increasing. Diversion from licit supplies of various types of opiates, as well as some benzodiazepines, occurred mainly in metropolitan areas.

In June 1987, Canada acceded to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances.⁽⁹⁾ A month earlier, it had announced a comprehensive national drug strategy, introducing a multidisciplinary approach to drug abuse control in the areas of law enforcement, treatment, rehabilitation and education.

Mexico increased resources for the fight against illicit cultivation and drug trafficking. More than half of the budget of the Office of the Attorney-General was directed to drug law enforcement. Transit of drugs through Mexico posed a difficult problem, and in an effort to contain it, the army, air force and navy carried out support operations. Cannabis continued to be the most widely abused drug.

South America

In some countries of South America, illicit drug-related activities took on new dimensions as criminal syndicates challenged the authorities. In addition to the multiplicity of economic, social and cultural problems posed, the distortion of national economies by money from drug trafficking had become a serious danger. In some areas alliances between traffickers and guerrillas threatened regional security.

Against this background, the vast areas cultivated with coca bush appeared to be expanding, not only in the Andean countries but in other parts of the region.

Bolivia, in recent years, had launched several campaigns to reduce cultivation and trafficking of coca leaf. Unfortunately, those campaigns had not achieved the desired effects and the vast areas planted with the coca bush were expanding. The widespread and increased smoking of coca paste was Bolivia's most acute drug abuse problem. It was estimated that about 11 per cent of Bolivians between the ages of 12 and 25 were users of illicit drugs and that a growing number were becoming addicted to coca paste.

Peru's north-eastern jungles and the Upper Huallaga Valley had been the scene of a bitter struggle against drug trafficking waged through a series of operations called "Condor". Begun in 1985, the operations had resulted in the destruction of over 170 clandestine airstrips, the shutting down of many large-scale laboratories and smaller installations for coca-leaf processing, and the confiscation of several tons of coca paste and cocaine. In retaliation, however, the traffickers unleashed a wave of terror, murdering peasants, workers involved in coca eradication and policemen.

Brazil was increasingly a base for traffickers. Cultivation of coca as a cash crop was a recent development in the Amazon region. Cannabis appeared to be a staple crop both for farmers and for commercial-scale cultivators in the north-east.

Colombia continued to fight against illicit drug production and trafficking in spite of a wave of killings of judges, law enforcement and prosecutorial officers, journalists and private citizens. In 1984, the Government invoked an extradition treaty that had been signed with the United States in 1979; under the treaty, a number of suspected traffickers were extradicted. In June 1987, however, Colombia's Supreme Court declared unconstitutional a law ratifying the 1979 treaty. The Government set up a special commission to study the implications of the Court's ruling.

In a February resolution,⁽³⁹⁾ the Commission on Narcotic Drugs invited Latin American and Caribbean and other interested Governments to participate in a meeting establishing a HONLEA in the region. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to adopt the measures needed and allocate the financial resources so that the meeting could be convened, and asked the Economic and Social Council to recognize a Latin American and Caribbean regional HONLEA as a subsidiary body of the Commission, similar to those already recognized.

The first meeting of HONLEA, Latin American and Caribbean region (Santiago, Chile, 28 September-2 October),⁽⁴⁰⁾ was attended by 23 States members and one associate member of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean. It recommended for adoption by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs draft resolutions on measures for improving co-operation and co-ordination in combating drug abuse in the region; development of investigation techniques and methods; co-operation through training programmes; harmonization of the laws of different countries; a course on multilateral international conventions against illicit traffic in drugs; the 1973 South American Agreement on Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances; measures to improve co-operation among organizations operating in the Americas; the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking; and the place and date of its second (1988) meeting.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/34 without vote.

Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Latin America and Caribbean Region The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind recommendation 19 of the first Inter-regional Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, resolution VIII/4 of the Eighth Conference of the States Parties to the South American Agreement on Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and, in particular, Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 3(XXXII) of 11 February 1987,

1. Invites the Governments of the Latin American and Caribbean countries and other interested Governments to participate in the regional meeting of the heads of national drug law enforcement agencies with a view to establishing the Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Latin America and Caribbean Region;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to adopt the necessary measures and to provide the financial resources required for holding the regional meeting during the second half of 1987 at the headquarters of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean or at the capital of any State in the region that may wish to act as host;

3. Decides to grant to the Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Latin America and Caribbean Region, the status of a subsidiary organ of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, similar to that accorded the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East and the Meetings of Heads of National Narcotics Law Enforcement Agencies, Asia and the Pacific Region and Africa Region.

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/102) without vote, 7 May (meeting 4); 16-nation draft (E/1987/C.2/L.1); agenda item 20.

The United States said it strongly supported co-operation in narcotics matters at the national, bilateral, regional and international levels. The fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking, a priority of the United Nations, must receive the necessary funds from its programme budget for 1988-1989. Regarding the financial implications of the resolution on the Latin American and Caribbean HONLEA, the United States expected that travel and subsistence costs would be covered by extrabudgetary resources.

Conventions

To reduce the complexity arising from the existence of several treaties on narcotic drugs, the international community brought together most of the provisions of those treaties in the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs.(8) In 1987, Brunei Darussalam, Liberia, Nepal and Oman became parties to the Convention, bringing the total number of States parties to 122.(41) During the year, four States—Brunei Darussalam, Hungary, the Netherlands and Oman—became parties to the 1972 Protocol(21) amending the Convention; the number of States parties totalled 88. The number of States parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances(9) also rose to 88, with the adherence in 1987 of the Bahamas, Brunei Darussalam and Burkina Faso.

At its February 1987 session, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs welcomed the deletions and simplifications which had been proposed by the secretariat in the annual reports questionnaire on the functioning of the international treaties on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. The Commission agreed that the revised questionnaire could be used in the collection of annual reports for 1986. Nevertheless, it said, the questionnaire required further simplification and should be redrafted. As at 1 October 1987, annual reports for 1986 on the functioning of the treaties had been received from 95 countries and territories.

1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances

In some regions of the world, in particular in southern and south-eastern parts of Asia and Oceania, less than 30 per cent of States were parties to the Convention on Psychotropic substances. In the Americas, Europe and North Africa, the majority of countries had acceded to or ratified the Convention. Nevertheless, according to INCB, it was essential for the effectiveness of international control that all major manufacturing and exporting countries be bound by the treaty. In that regard, the announcements by Belgium, the Netherlands and Switzerland that they were taking steps to ratify or accede was encouraging.

On 27 August 1987, fenetylline became subject to the control measures for substances under Schedule II of the Convention. However, some parties were not able to implement fully the applicable controls as of the date when they became effective under the Convention. In view of the serious consequences of abuse in certain countries, INCB urged Governments to accelerate the setting up of the required control mechanisms and, as a high priority, those relating to the export or re-export of fenetylline, of which large quantities were smuggled into the Near and Middle East from Europe.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/30 without vote.

Improvement of the control of international trade in psychotropic substances listed in Schedules III and IV of the

1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1985/15 of 28 May 1985 and 1986/8 of 21 May 1986,

Having considered the report of the International Control Board for 1986, especially that part concerned with trade in psychotropic substances,

Recognizing with concern that the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances does not require import and export authorizations for international trade in substances listed in Schedules III and IV, thus facilitating the diversion of some of those substances into illicit channels,

Concerned that this lack of a treaty obligation makes it difficult for the competent authorities of both exporting and importing countries to prevent shipments of substances prohibited under article 13 of the Convention,

Bearing in mind that the International Narcotics Control Board needs relevant information in order to monitor effectively the international trade in substances listed in Schedules III and IV,

1. Reiterates its request to all Governments, to the extent possible, voluntarily to extend the system of import and export authorizations provided for in article 12, paragraph 1, of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances to cover international trade in substances listed in Schedules III and IV,

2. Requests all Governments to establish, in any event, mechanisms for monitoring exports of substances listed in Schedules III and IV and to take the necessary steps to alert importing countries, in advance, of shipments that may be a cause of concern;

3. Also requests all Governments, to the extent possible, voluntarily to furnish information to the International Narcotics Control Board on the countries of origin of imports and the countries of destination of exports of substances listed in Schedules III and IV,

4. Further requests all Governments that have decided to prohibit the import of substances listed in Schedules III and IV of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances to notify the Secretary-General of this decision, in accordance with article 13, paragraph 1, of the Convention;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for their consideration and implementation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/30

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/102) without vote, 7 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1987/17); agenda item 20.

Scheduling of psychotropic substances

In February 1987, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs decided that 5-allyl-5-isobutylbarbituric acid (butalbital)(42) should be included in Schedule III of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances, and that 5,5-diallylbarbituric acid (allobarbitol),(43) 5-butyl-5-ethylbarbituric acid (butobarbital),(44) 5-sec-butyl-5-ethylbarbituric acid (secbutabarbitol)(45) and 5-(1-methyl-butyl)-5-vinylbarbituric acid (vinylbital)(46) should be included in Schedule IV.

In 1986,(47) the Commission had requested Governments to comply with article 3, paragraph 3, of the Convention, obliging parties to notify the Secretary-General of exemptions granted by them, and requested them to consider not granting exemptions from the export and import requirements provided by article 12. It recommended, among other things, that WHO defer the evaluation of exemption notifications until such time as a substantial number of such notifications were presented to the Secretary-General. At its 1987 session,(48) the Commission decided that, in the absence of other notifications, WHO should be invited to review the pending notification from Finland. It also decided to request the Secretary-General to ask all Governments to make suggestions to improve the system of review of preparations exempted under article 3 of the Convention.

Organizational questions

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its thirty-second session at Vienna from 2 to 11 February 1987.(49)

Also in February, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1987/105.

International campaign against traffic in drugs

At its 3rd plenary meeting, on 6 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 41/127 of 4 December 1986, decided to request the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its thirty-second session:

(a) To consider convening, within available resources, a sessional working group to facilitate the exchange of information on experience gained by States in combating the illicit transit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and to report thereon to the Council at its first regular session of 1987;

(b) To consider also, in the light of comments from Governments and United Nations bodies, the recommendations of the first Interregional Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, held at Vienna from 28 July to 1 August 1986 pursuant to General Assembly resolution 39/143 of 14 December 1984, so that the specific measures required for their implementation might be identified with a view to their inclusion, for possible adoption, in the report to be submitted to the Council at its first regular session of 1987.

Economic and Social Council decision 1987/105

Adopted without vote

Draft in informal working paper; agenda item 2.

On 26 May, the Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1987/33 without vote.

Special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2001(LX) of 12 May 1976,

Recognizing that the social and human problems associated with drug abuse require the continuous attention of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs,

Aware of the need for the Commission to expedite the preparation of the new convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and to consider the question of the scheduling of a number of substances under the provisions of the international drug control treaties, following receipt of recommendations to that effect from the World Health Organization, as well as to consider appropriate action to give effect to recommendations of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking,

Decides that the Commission shall hold a special session of ten working days in 1988 at a time when it will not overlap with other meetings, and within existing United Nations resources, to expedite the preparation of the new convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and to consider appropriate measures to give effect to relevant recommendations of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, the question of the scheduling of a number of substances, the report of the International Narcotics Control Board, an interim report of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, and other urgent matters.

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/102) without vote, 7 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1987/17); agenda item 20.

Also on 26 May, the Council, by decision 1987/123, approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the thirty-third (1989) session of the Commission; by decision 1987/124, it approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the tenth special session; and by decision 1987/126, it took note of the report of the Commission on its thirty-second session.

International Narcotics Control Board

In 1987, INCB held two sessions, at Vienna, its forty-first from 18 to 22 May and its forty-second from 12 to 23 October. It discussed the operation of the international drug control system and analysed the drug control situation world-wide.

On 26 May, by decision 1987/125, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of INCB for 1986.(50) By decision 1987/128 of the same date, the Council took note of a summary(51) of the 1986 INCB report.

UN drug control bodies at Vienna

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/29 without vote.

Role of the drug control bodies of the United Nations at Vienna

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/122 of 13 December 1985, by which the Assembly decided to convene an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking in 1987,

Aware of the intensive preparations being made for that Conference, within the United Nations system and by Governments and non-governmental organizations,

Bearing in mind that the implementation of the results of the Conference will require the best use of existing resources through the redeployment of available United Nations resources from lower priority activities or the use of voluntary contributions, and increased efforts by the United Nations, Governments, international organizations and other parties concerned to implement the recommendations of the Conference,

Taking fully into account the recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the recommendations contained in General Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

Reaffirming its conviction of the importance of the activities of the United Nations in the field of drug abuse control,

1. Notes with appreciation the valuable work of the United Nations drug control bodies located at Vienna;

2. Stresses the importance of close co-ordination between the drug control units of the United Nations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 41/213, to continue his efforts to further improve the efficiency of the United Nations drug control bodies in order to strengthen their effectiveness in dealing with the drug problem;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide adequate financial information about current and future drug control activities so that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs can make recommendations on priorities on the basis of all relevant information;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General, in order to strengthen the activities and existing mechanisms of the United Nations in the area of international control of drug abuse and illicit trafficking, and with a view to the implementation of the follow-up activities of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, to give this sector priority, as a matter of urgency, in the allocation of available United Nations resources;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its next session, an analysis of practical ways and means of implementing the results of the Conference, through the United Nations system, bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 41/213.

Chapter XXII

Statistics

In 1987, the United Nations Statistical Commission reviewed developments in economic, social and demographic statistics that had taken place since it last met in 1985. Discussing such issues as communications between national and international agencies and the development of data bases and special problems in the statistically least developed countries, the Commission examined its terms of reference and effectiveness and concluded that no radical changes in its mode of work were warranted.

Meeting in June, the Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) discussed policy issues and follow-up matters raised by the Statistical Commission. In October, the Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination reviewed the provisional agenda for the Commission's 1989 session.

The Statistical Office of the United Nations continued to collect and publish a wide range of statistical data on energy, the environment, industry, sea-borne trade, national accounts and balances, price statistics, and demographic and social statistics. Continuing its work on the development of standards and methods for improving international economic classifications, the Office promoted the co-ordination of international statistical activities among international organizations and provided statistical services to the United Nations Secretariat and intergovernmental expert bodies. Updated information on the work of the Office was outlined in a January 1987 report of the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁾ In co-operation with the Office, technical co-operation was provided by the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) and the regional commissions.

In May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/6 on patterns of consumption and qualitative indicators of development. Emphasizing the significance of development indicators and the progress achieved in that field, the Council recommended that extrabudgetary resources be allocated for compiling data on development indicators and patterns of consumption. Interested donor countries and international and other organizations that wished to participate in the research should provide voluntary contributions to the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development.

Statistical Commission

Holding its twenty-fourth session in New York from 23 February to 4 March 1987,⁽²⁾ the Statistical Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a decision on the report of its 1987 session and the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1989 session. The Commission drew the attention of the Council to the recommendations made at its 1987 session, as well as to the views and conclusions submitted to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (see p. 948).

The Commission's recommendations pertained to communications between national and international statistical agencies and the development of data bases; special problems in the statistically least developed countries; dissemination of international statistics; national accounts and balances; the United Nations System of National Accounts (SNA), the System of Balances of the National Economy (MPS) and links between the two; international economic classifications; price statistics; industry, energy and environment statistics; demographic and social statistics; technical co-operation statistics; co-ordination and integration of international statistical programmes; programme planning and implementation; and the provisional agenda for the Commission's twenty-fifth (1989) session.

The Commission reviewed its terms of reference; the mode of conducting its deliberations and decision-making; its relationship with the United Nations Statistical Office and with the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination; and its effectiveness and use of resources. The Commission concluded that no radical changes in its functions, frequency of its sessions or mode of work were warranted.

On 26 May 1987, by decision 1987/117, the Council took note of the Commission's report and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1989 session.

Working Group on Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination

In February/March 1987 the Commission examined the report(3) on the eleventh (1985) session of its Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination. It noted that the Group had set out its views on the co-ordination of the statistical data-collection activities of international organizations and had stated in its report that more complete and detailed information needed to be included for the inventory of those activities to serve as a co-ordination tool for national statistical offices.

At its twelfth session (Geneva, 6-9 October 1987),(4) the Group reviewed the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's 1989 session and made suggestions on its content, considered the co-ordination of statistical activities, discussed special topics that the Commission might consider at future sessions, and reviewed progress on environment statistics and the revision of SNA.

ACC Sub-Committee

The ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities (twenty-first session, Geneva, 22-26 June 1987)(5) considered a number of statistical issues, including follow-up to issues discussed by the Commission in February/March; work plans in the light of financial cuts; co-ordination of statistical data bases and review of communication and dissemination policy and practice; the use of microcomputers in statistical work; manuals on statistics; co-ordination of international economic classifications; international trade and transport statistics; co-ordination of social statistics and indicators, and development of indicators on special population groups; the National Household Survey Capability Programme and the Living Standards Measurement Study; price statistics; tourism and migration statistics; the 1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme; environment statistics; and indicative patterns of consumption.

The Sub-Committee also reviewed its functions and future organization. It recognized the need to upgrade communication which would facilitate collaboration among international organizations and lead to the effective utilization of statistical resources. It felt that annual meetings were essential for maintaining co-ordination of ongoing programmes and for initiating special co-ordination of new programmes.

The Sub-Committee recommended that its twenty-second session be held at Geneva in 1988.

Economic statistics

Energy, environment and industry statistics

Following its review of a 1986 report by the Secretary-General on energy statistics,(6) the Commission requested the Statistical Office to continue its work programme in the area of energy statistics, including publication of methodological studies and the establishment of an information system on energy data sources. It urged the Office to increase its efforts in the area of technical co-operation for energy statistics, in accordance with national plans and priorities, to assist developing countries in establishing comprehensive energy information systems.

Having examined the Secretary-General's 1986 report on environment statistics,(7) the Commission reconfirmed the importance of the environment statistics programme and regretted the lack of progress in implementing the programme over the recent biennium. The Commission requested the Statistical Office to focus on: completing the Manual of Environmental Statistics; supporting developing countries in applying the methodologies it had developed in national environment statistics programmes; and co-ordinating international statistical activities concerning the environment.

The Commission requested that the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination and the Statistical Office discuss with the United Nations Environment Programme the development and implementation of a global programme on environment statistics. It endorsed a proposal that the United Nations invite the International Statistical Institute to assist the Statistical Office in further work on environment statistics.

Another 1986 report of the Secretary-General, which was reviewed by the Commission, introduced draft recommendations for a statistical programme for household and small-scale industries.(8) The Commission requested that the draft be circulated to individual national experts, the national statistical offices concerned, regional commissions and interested international organizations, and that the Secretariat revise the draft and recirculate it to regional commissions and international organizations for a final review. In addition, the Commission requested that the final version be issued as a handbook to supplement the International Recommendations for Industrial Statistics issued in 1983.(9) It urged that training and other forms of technical co-operation be provided to developing countries.

National accounts and balances

At its 1987 session, the Statistical Commission examined four reports by the Secretary-General dealing with: the revision of SNA, the links between SNA and related statistics,(6) the state of basic economic information used in developing countries and updated information on the work of the Statistical Office.(9) SNA played a major role in macro-economic description, analysis and policy-making both at the national and international levels.

The Commission endorsed the organizational arrangements and work schedules for the review of SNA, stressing high priority to the timetable established for it. It requested that the needs of developing countries be given full attention, that efforts continue to harmonize SNA with related systems of statistics and that the review of basic statistical information suitable for the preparation of national accounts in developing countries be continued in the context of the review.

In a follow-up report on progress in reviewing SNA,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General dealt with organizational matters, the conclusions of various global and regional expert meetings, the progress made in writing the revised SNA and handbooks on national accounting, and the activities of the Statistical Office aimed at developing a compilation methodology to assist countries in implementing SNA.

The Inter-Secretariat Working Group on National Accounts, composed of the Statistical Office, the statistical offices of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), the European Communities (EUROSTAT), the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the World Bank and the United Nations regional commissions, continued to co-ordinate the SNA review.

Two global expert meetings, dealing with guidelines for the revised SNA, preparation of the handbooks and approaches to technical issues, were held in 1987—one on external sector transactions, sponsored by IMF (Washington, D.C., 23 March-2 April), the other, sponsored by the World Bank, on household sector accounts (Florence, Italy, 31 August-4 September). EUROSTAT held two meetings in Luxembourg (March/April; September) to facilitate discussion on the subject-matter of the global expert meetings. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean organized a regional meeting, co-sponsored by the Latin American Centre for Monetary Studies (Santiago, Chile, 23-27 November).

Taking note of the SNA review, the ACC Subcommittee⁽⁵⁾ stressed that it was a major undertaking of the international statistical system with implications for all international organizations in economic or social spheres. The Sub-Committee concluded that the review was entering a critical stage and decided to consider the matter again in 1988.

Following consideration of a 1986 report on the links between SNA and MPS,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission requested that work continue on the elaboration of the conceptual framework for comparing the two systems. It endorsed the holding of a meeting on links between SNA and MPS as part of the SNA review to harmonize further the concepts and classifications of the two systems, and requested the Secretary-General to submit to it in 1989 a report on the progress in linking the two systems. It also requested that priority be given to the revision of the publication entitled Comparisons of the System of National Accounts and the System of Balances of the National Economy, Part One: Conceptual Relationships.⁽¹¹⁾

Price statistics

Having considered a 1986 report of the Secretary-General on price statistics,⁽⁷⁾ the Statistical Commission at its 1987 session expressed continued support for the International Comparison Project (ICP), comparing real product and purchasing power in order to assess the relative economic development of countries. The Commission agreed that the benchmark years for the start of a new phase of the project should continue to be at five-year intervals, and that the preparatory work for phase VI, with 1990 as reference year, should start as early as 1988. The project had encountered financial difficulties which had caused the total absence of Latin American results and other consequences for phase V, during which regional comparisons were made. The Commission expressed concern that continued deterioration in the financial situation could jeopardize the co-ordinating role of the Statistical Office and of the regional commissions and further reduce the level of participation of developing countries. It requested the Secretary-General to continue efforts to obtain extrabudgetary resources to support ICP.

International economic classifications

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's 1986 report on the harmonization of international economic classifications,⁽¹²⁾ the Statistical Commission in 1987 approved the overall structures of the revised International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities (ISIC) and the Central Product Classification (CPC). Concerning the overall coverage of CPC, which had originally been conceived as a classification of goods based on industrial origin, the Commission approved its extension to services and decided that the classification should maintain three basic categories: transportable and non-transportable goods, and services.

The Commission indicated that the work on service statistics should be undertaken with the revision of SNA since many aspects had a strong relationship, including trade and transport margins, banking transactions and international trade in services related to balance of payments. It stressed that the work on services should be a co-operative effort between international organizations and individual countries.

The Commission requested that the Secretary-General submit reports in 1989 on the harmonization of economic classifications and on plans for further development of service statistics; that the final drafts of the revised ISIC and CPC also be submitted at that time; and that the Statistical Office prepare a technical report on the collection, availability and use of service statistics.

Two expert meetings were held in 1987 by the Voorburg Group on service statistics—in Voorburg, Netherlands (January) and in Stockholm, Sweden (November). The first meeting undertook to determine the contributions countries could make to the work on service statistics; the second meeting discussed first drafts of service classifications. In December in Luxembourg, the Statistical Office of the United Nations and EUROSTAT discussed a range of issues, including those related to the classification of services.

Sea-borne trade statistics

In a January 1987 report,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General provided updated information on sea-borne trade statistics.

The short-term objective of the Statistical Office's programme in the area was to assess the demand for shipping services. The long-term objective was to provide, at least in developing countries, a uniform system of collecting economic statistics on shipping where the individual shipments of commodities could be linked to the respective ships that carried the goods in question. Despite problems in implementing the uniform system, the project had produced aggregates of the annual flow of goods on the world sea lanes. Although the uniform system had been implemented in a modified form in a number of countries, it had not, as yet, reached maturity. Reassessing the project's original objectives, it was concluded that there was a need to change the objectives and to rearrange the methodology of the project to achieve more realistic outputs. The Secretary-General recommended new immediate and long-term objectives.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General to retain, in the immediate programme of the Office, the development of sea-borne trade statistics, with the implementation of the uniform system as part of its longer-term goal, and to raise extrabudgetary funds for those activities. The Commission also expressed its appreciation to Norway for its $1.6 million contribution to the shipping statistics project between 1978 and 1985.

Social and demographic statistics

Social indicators

The Statistical Commission reviewed a report of the Secretary-General⁽¹³⁾ on social statistics and indicators, submitted in response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution.⁽¹⁴⁾ The report summarized current work of the United Nations Secretariat on indicators of living conditions, household income, consumption, patterns of consumption and poverty; in spite of advances in statistical methodology and development of household survey programmes, the availability of national indicators in those areas was still confined mainly to developed countries. The report also summarized work on international co-ordination and dissemination of social statistics, including those for special population groups and various international strategies and events. Progress had been made in the development and compilation of indicators on women, youth, children and disabled persons, on Health for All by the Year 2000 (see p. 646) and on agrarian reform and rural development, but serious problems of basic concepts and methodology, data gaps and co-ordination remained.

The Commission endorsed the results achieved in the development of social statistics and indicators; stressed the importance of the development of statistics on the situation of women; and urged countries to develop further their data collection on disabled persons and disability through their basic census and survey programmes.

Development indicators and patterns of consumption

The Statistical Commission in 1987 agreed that patterns of consumption and related socioeconomic indicators were a matter of priority for developing countries. It commended the work of the Statistical Office, the World Bank, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD), the World Health Organization (WHO) and United Nations regional commissions for progress in resolving problems of methodology and data availability for such indicators. The Commission also agreed that the issues raised by the General Assembly in 1985⁽¹⁴⁾ should take into account social, economic and environmental factors in development. Indicators should be seen as part of an information system to support development through assisting in the formulation and monitoring of specific policies and programmes. The choice of indicators was a critical matter if structural shifts and trends in the development process were to be accurately assessed. In assessing information needs, a long-term view should be taken in order to address issues that would be relevant in the twenty-first century.

The Commission drew the attention of the Economic and Social Council to the list of fields, topics and selected illustrative series for indicators to be issued in the Handbook on Social Indicators: Studies in Methods as a basis for compiling indicators in the specific fields identified by the Assembly in 1985 (14) It also drew the Council's attention to the continuing need in the developing and least developed countries, in particular in Africa, for the development of basic data collection programmes. It recommended that the Office explore the possibility of an in-depth study of the development process itself so that the indicators would reflect the stage or level of development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/6 without vote.

Indicative patterns of consumption: qualitative indicators of development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/179 of 17 December 1985 on patterns of consumption and qualitative aspects of development,

Noting with satisfaction the report of the Statistical Commission on its twenty-fourth session, in particular the section on development indicators,

1. Takes note of the information on action to be taken in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 40/179, contained in the report of the Statistical Commission on its twenty-fourth session;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Statistical Office of the United Nations Secretariat, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development, the World Bank, the World Health Organization and the regional commissions for the considerable progress achieved in the elaboration of development indicators, in accordance with the guidelines defined by the General Assembly;

3. Recommends that a report setting forth the views of Governments and containing a small number of case studies or national monographs on the preparation of a set of indicators in the fields identified in paragraph 2 of Assembly resolution 40/179 and the indicative patterns of consumption referred to in paragraph 3 thereof be prepared by the Secretary-General and the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development, in consultation with other appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the regional commissions and other appropriate research institutes;

4. Recommends that appropriate extrabudgetary resources be allocated for the preparation of the above-mentioned case studies or national monographs, and invites interested donor countries, appropriate international organizations and other organizations wishing to participate in the research work on patterns of consumption and qualitative indicators of development, to provide voluntary contributions to the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development for that purpose;

5. Also recommends that the report be considered by the Statistical Commission at its twenty-fifth session, and that the recommendations of the Commission on the report be submitted to the Council at its first regular session of 1989, the results of the Council's consideration thereon to be presented to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/6

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/91) without vote, 15 May (meeting 6); draft by Morocco (E/1987/C.1/L.5), orally amended by United States and further orally revised; agenda item 11.

Population and housing census

Following consideration of a 1986 report by the Secretary-General⁽¹²⁾ on preparations for the World Population and Housing Census Programme to be carried out from 1985 to 1994, the Statistical Commission in 1987 approved the draft supplementary principles and recommendations for population and housing censuses contained in the report, as modified by its comments which were aimed at ensuring global and regional uniformity to the extent possible. It requested additional technical documentation, emphasized the study of sampling methods employed in censuses, and supported census training workshops and seminars and other technical co-operation activities proposed in the report.

National Household Survey Capability Programme

The Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCO) continued to execute the National Household Survey Capability Programme (NHSCP) on the global level as an interregional project.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Programme, co-sponsored by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), was being carried out in co-operation with the regional commissions and interested specialized agencies. It aimed at developing the household survey capabilities of developing countries as a means of collecting demographic, social and economic data required for policy formulation, planning, programme implementation and evaluation.

Having considered a 1986 report of the Secretary-General on the Programme,⁽¹²⁾ the Statistical Commission in 1987 emphasized the need for continued support for implementing NHSCP country projects and urged all interested donor agencies to accord high priority to NHSCP. The Commission stressed the importance of technical co-operation among developing countries in promoting NHSCP and recommended further work in the preparation of technical studies and documentation and promotion of experimentation.

Living Standards Measurement Study

Having examined a 1986 report⁽¹²⁾ of the World Bank on its Living Standards Measurement Study (LSMS), the Statistical Commission in 1987 expressed its support of LSMS as a way of refining and testing statistical methodology and of promoting policy-oriented research using household survey statistics. The Commission invited the World Bank, in consultation with the Statistical Office and other interested national and international specialists, to report in 1989 on the methodology used and the results achieved, as well as on the best way of integrating the methodology into continuing survey programmes, such as those carried out under NHSCP (see above).

Other statistical activities

Technical co-operation

Technical co-operation in statistics and statistical data processing was provided by DTCD in co-operation with the Statistical Office and the regional commissions. Projects were primarily aimed at assisting developing countries to strengthen and extend national services and capabilities for collecting, processing, disseminating and using a broad range of development-related statistics.⁽¹⁶⁾ The United Nations technical co-operation programme in statistics provided technical support for the formulation and execution of country projects at a cost of $21.4 million for 1987. In addition, technical co-operation in statistics was provided by specialized agencies such as WHO ($9 million), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations ($7.1 million), the International Labour Organisation ($670,000), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization ($630,000), the Universal Postal Union ($115,000), the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

To help national statistical offices respond to shortages of experienced staff, technical co-operation in statistics emphasized internal on-the-job training, international training when available and the assistance of international advisers.. Most technical co-operation projects included funds specifically earmarked for training.

A major UNFPA-funded project continued to provide software and training for editing, cross-tabulation, demographic analysis and development of population data bases. Under the project, a workshop for francophone West African countries was held in Togo, while individual national training workshops were conducted in Algeria, Anguilla, China, Egypt and Tunisia; also held were an international workshop in Ethiopia and a subregional workshop in Ghana. In all, some 90 people were trained under the project in 1987 and 350 units of statistical and demographic software copies were distributed to 120 organizations and institutions in 85 developing countries.⁽¹⁵⁾

In a January 1987 report to the Statistical Commission,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General assessed the effectiveness of technical co-operation in statistics and described plans for a comprehensive assessment and for identifying indicators of national statistical capabilities.

The Commission stressed the importance of technical co-operation programmes and of strengthened co-ordination in multilateral and bilateral technical co-operation statistical activities. It requested the Secretary-General to report in 1989 on technical co-operation. Dealing with the assessment of the effectiveness of technical co-operation in statistics, the Commission emphasized the continuing need for evaluation; requested the Secretary-General to encourage preparation, perhaps by a non-governmental organization, of one or two country case-studies, analysing progress made in statistical development; and also requested him to continue work on indicators of national statistical capability and to report in 1989 on the results of the review of the state of statistics and statistical development in developing countries, as proposed in his report.

Special issues

The Secretary-General submitted a January 1987 report⁽¹⁸⁾ to the Statistical Commission, concerning the work of the Secretariat on the special problems of the statistically least developed countries. The report reviewed statistical priorities and requirements, identifying particular areas in which data were most urgently needed for economic and social development and the administration of public programmes; the organizational aspects and operational problems of statistical development; and personnel development and training. It presented the recommendations of an inter-regional workshop on statistical development for action by national and international organizations. The Commission endorsed the recommendations, requested the Statistical Office to give particular attention to the needs of the statistically least developed countries and expressed support for assistance to those countries.

Following consideration of a 1986 report⁽¹²⁾ on communication between national and international statistical agencies and data base development, the Commission requested international organizations to continue to improve their data collection activities and expressed support for adopting communication and computer technology.

Dissemination of in international statistics

The Secretary-General submitted a January 1987 report⁽¹⁹⁾ to the Statistical Commission on the dissemination of international statistical data. The report reviewed the publications of the Statistical Office in terms of their timeliness and content and described current production methods and steps taken to provide wider dissemination.

The Commission endorsed the collation and dissemination of international statistics by the Statistical Office as meeting a well-established need, and requested that special attention be given to the quality and timeliness of data published, that additional efforts be made to make potential users aware of the statistical publications of the United Nations, and that international statistical data be disseminated through media other than publications, making expanded use of microfiche, magnetic tapes, diskettes and on-line access.

Chapter XXIII

Institutional arrangements

In 1987, the institutional arrangements put into operation over the years by the United Nations began undergoing a reform process designed to give them greater cohesion, enhance their efficiency and facilitate co-ordination of the programme activities they administered. The reform process was begun in response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution approving the recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18).

Early in the year, the Economic and Social Council set in motion the study called for in the resolution by creating the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (decision 1987/112). The Assembly affirmed that its 1986 resolution in that respect should be implemented in a timely, orderly and well co-ordinated manner (resolution 42/170) and reiterated the Council's request that Assembly and Council subsidiary bodies should submit to the Special Commission their views and proposals on achieving the objectives envisaged by the Group of 18 (decision 42/431). In conjunction with that study, the Council also authorized its own study of its structure and functioning (decision 1987/189).

Implementation of the 1986 resolution gathered pace as the Secretary-General proceeded to institute those changes recommended to be made without delay. In response to an earlier Assembly request, he reported comprehensively to the Assembly and the Council, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), on the question of co-ordination in the United Nations and the United Nations system, making a number of practical suggestions for improvement. With CPC'S comments, the report was forwarded by the Council to the Special Commission (resolution 1987/83), which was requested to review the roles of the Assembly, the Council and the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation with a view to enhancing co-ordination of the system's activities (decision 1987/180). The Secretary-General also gave his assessment of the various analytical tools for co-ordination.

During 1987, the Secretary-General further advanced the suggestion that, for optimum effectiveness, the Council might become a Council of Ministers for Economic and Social Affairs—a proposal he hoped would receive early and serious consideration.

Meanwhile, CPC, in co-operation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and in the yearly Joint Meetings with it, continued efforts to harmonize system-wide work programmes and activities. Its conclusions and recommendations at its 1987 session were endorsed by the Council (resolution 1987/83) and by the Assembly (resolution 42/215, section VI). In December, in order to broaden geographic representation in CPC, its membership was increased from 21 to 34 by recommendation of the Council (resolution 1987/94), as approved by the Assembly (decision 42/450).

In keeping with the established practice of promoting complementarity between the work of the Council and the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) and Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committees, the Assembly approved the Second Committee's biennial work programme for 1988-1989 (decision 42/435), but deferred consideration of the Third Committee's proposed work programme (decision 42/423).

Co-operation with non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations continued to broaden during the year, with the Council granting five intergovernmental organizations participation in its deliberations without the right to vote (decision 1987/161). Following the February biennial session of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs) and the Council's granting of consultative status to 53 new applicants in May (decision 1987/113), the number of NGOS in consultative status with the Council rose to 827.

Also in 1987, the Assembly invited the Council to consider in 1988 guidelines for the designation of future international decades (resolution 42/171).

Topics related to this chapter. United Nations programmes: programme planning and budgeting; medium-term plan; programme evaluation; administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the UN system.

Co-ordination in the UN system

Reports of the Secretary-General. In 1987, CPC had before it two comprehensive reports by the Secretary-General relating to the question of co-ordination. One report, submitted pursuant to a 1985 Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ dealt with co-ordination in the United Nations and the United Nations system.⁽²⁾ It described the established authorities for co-ordination at the intergovernmental and secretariat levels as well as interrelationships between them, identified causes of co-ordinating difficulties, particularly those confronting the Economic and Social Council, and ongoing measures to alleviate them, and it set out the Secretary-General's views on current mechanisms and practical suggestions for improvement.

At the intergovernmental level, the Assembly, the highest authority in co-ordination matters within the system, was the principal forum for providing policy frameworks for co-operation and co-ordination of activities, as derived from the mandates, concerns and priorities of the system's intergovernmental organs and specialized agencies. It was thus important for the Assembly, when formulating policy frameworks—such as the international development strategies for the second and third United Nations development decades—to establish a continuous dialogue, at the intergovernmental and secretariat levels, between the United Nations and relevant organizations, to consider varying sectoral concerns and arrive at some common understanding.

The Council, under the Assembly's guidance, was the central body for the effective co-ordination of the system's activities, with authority to negotiate relationship agreements and co-ordinate activities with the specialized agencies and obtain reports from them. It was responsible for overseeing activities of subsidiary bodies in the United Nations, including the regional commissions, and for taking final decisions regarding their work. Because the Council had so far failed to bring the system's economic and social activities closer together, it might consider devoting the general debate at its second regular session, every two or three years, to a review of the economic and social dimensions of the world situation, based on an integrated summary of economic and social development issues to be prepared by the Secretariat. In addition, it could convene its first and second sessional committees in joint meetings to consider the economic and social dimensions of selected issues.

To relate activities at the regional level to substantive issues at the global level, the Council at its second regular session could, where possible, allocate parts of the regional commission reports for discussion under the appropriate agenda items, with the remaining parts to be considered under the item on regional co-operation proper; it could also transmit parts of those reports to other relevant intergovernmental bodies for consideration. A thematic approach to the yearly discussion of international co-operation and co-ordination would enable the Council to address co-ordination issues directly.

CPC, the intergovernmental body supporting the Council's co-ordinating role, was responsible for the technical review of the programmatic aspects of co-ordination to ensure that the system's activities constituted a coherent approach to system-wide mandates and to avoid duplication and overlap. It used several analytical tools for this purpose, notably the cross-organizational programme analysis (COPA), developed in 1978. In view of COPA's evolution towards increasingly complex undertakings and cumbersome methodology, its cost-effectiveness had become questionable. Therefore, CPC might wish to undertake a critical review of that tool so as to rationalize its scope, methodology and analytical framework.

The yearly Joint Meetings between CPC and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), instituted in 1965 to keep under review system-wide activities in the economic, social, human rights and related areas and to draw attention to major questions requiring Council action, also assisted the Council in carrying out its co-ordinating function. While the conduct and outcome of the Meetings in the past two years had improved, further improvements could be brought about by raising the representation at the Meetings to a sufficiently high level of rank and expertise, by a more precisely chosen topic for discussion that was better related to questions for Council consideration, by a constructive dialogue based on a well-prepared background paper and by specific and readily implemented recommendations.

At the intersecretariat level, all system-wide co-ordination arrangements on a vast variety of subjects were worked out and supervised through ACC and its subsidiary bodies. Given the shortcomings of ACC that had become apparent over time, it should continue to rationalize its work, streamline its subsidiary machinery and keep its meetings to a minimum; it should further make maximum use of ad hoc arrangements to meet specific requirements.

The resident co-ordinator, charged with co-ordination of operational activities for development at the local level, required full support from both the recipient country and the donors represented in that country for the effective discharge of that role. Other mechanisms for co-ordination outside ACC included ad hoc arrangements, personal contacts and correspondence, all of which enabled quick and effective programme implementation by permitting better information exchange and co-ordination of initiatives.

Within the United Nations itself, a number of co-ordination instruments were available to the Secretary-General and, under his authority, to the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC). These included regular meetings of senior United Nations officials in the economic and social sectors, of executive secretaries of the regional commissions, and of steering committees for the preparation of major world conferences. To intensify joint and co-operative efforts among various United Nations entities, it had been decided recently that the senior officials' meeting should serve also for strategic planning and monitoring of major activities.

Meetings on specific clusters of subjects could be convened at the level of programme managers on a rotational basis every two years, as part of the programme budget preparations. Since the regional commissions were the main centres of policy analysis and expertise in their respective regions, relationship agreements could be concluded between them and other entities working in similar fields. Guidelines for such agreements should be drawn up for consideration by a senior officials' meeting.

The report also discussed measures for closer co-operation and co-ordination of efforts to integrate women in the mainstream of all development activities (see p. 836).

In a related report,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General examined the origins and development of, as well as experience with, the various analytical tools at CPC'S disposal for improving co-ordination, with emphasis on COPA, the cross-organizational review (CORE) of medium-term plans, system-wide medium-term plans, the ACC annual overview report and the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC—with a view to improving their usefulness. In addition, it described the process of prior consultation on work programmes and plans, although not an analytical tool in the strict sense and limited in its impact.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Secretary-General stated that, in view of the desirability of integrating the various tools of co-ordination and the need to conserve scarce resources, CPC might recommend that COPA and CORE reports on the same subject should be prepared using a single integrated methodological framework and incorporated in a single report. It might also consider adopting a more flexible methodology according to the particular circumstances of the subject to be analysed.

The new and complex tool of system-wide medium-term planning should be reserved for areas of high priority to Member States that involved many organizations. For such a major effort to have an impact, the programmes of individual organizations must be available at the time of review.

As to CPC's conclusions and recommendations arising from the application of these analytical tools, the Secretary-General felt it important to ensure that those concerning organizational units within the United Nations be given appropriate programmatic effect through the medium-term plan and programme budget. CPC might wish to request the Secretary-General to report to it on implementation follow-up in this regard. It had already requested ACC to take action and report on follow-up to its recommendations affecting other organizations of the system.

In addition, the process of prior consultations on plans and programmes provided a potentially important means of giving programmatic effect to CPC's conclusions and recommendations where a system-wide medium-term plan appeared inappropriate. CPC might review the effectiveness of such consultations, including ACC follow-up arrangements of conclusions and recommendations of a system-wide character.

CPC consideration. CPC, which considered the Secretary-General's reports at its April/May 1987 session,⁽⁴⁾ felt that the report dealing with all aspects of co-ordination⁽²⁾ was of common concern to all entities in the United Nations economic and social sectors, and should be made available to the Special Commission set up to examine the intergovernmental structure and functions of the United Nations in the economic and social fields (see p. 948).

CPC agreed with the report's practical suggestions relating to operational activities for development; the Joint Meetings, with CPC emphasizing the need for them to produce recommendations for adoption by the Council to ensure their implementation; and intersecretariat co-ordination through an improved ACC. Noting the observation that the Council had never been satisfied with its own performance, CPC suggested that the Council's co-ordinating role should be further strengthened and consolidated and pointed to the desirability for more interaction and mutual feedback among its sessional committees.

CPC was of the view that the principle of bienialization of work programmes—among the measures established to help resolve co-ordination difficulties—should be pursued for suitable issues, with the Council working closely with the Assembly's Third Committee. The Council should improve co-operation and co-ordination between Headquarters and the regional commissions and obtain regular reports from the specialized agencies, including reports on steps taken to give effect to its recommendations. In stressing the key co-ordinating role of the Office of the DIEC Director-General, CPC recommended that he should exercise a more effective leadership by ensuring coherence, co-ordination and efficient management of all economic and social activities performed by the system's secretariat components.

Commenting on the Secretary-General's report on the analytical tools for co-ordination,⁽³⁾ CPC concluded that the subject for a COPA and its conclusions and recommendations should be relevant to the programmes of the system's organizations. It decided that it was premature to institutionalize and widely apply system-wide medium-term planning. While agreeing that the various tools should be used as part of an integrated process, from the diagnoses made in COPAs to the use of system-wide medium-term plans to implement the changes needed to improve co-ordination, CPC did not believe in an automatic link between those tools. It agreed that, where feasible, COPA and CORE reports should be combined, using a single integrated methodological framework. It further agreed that prior consultations, rather than functioning as an analytical tool, should be regularly held in connection with the programme planning and budgeting process.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1987/83, the Economic and Social Council decided to transmit the Secretary-General's report on co-ordination,⁽²⁾ together with the relevant parts of the CPC report,⁽⁴⁾ to the Special Commission on the structure and functions in the economic and social fields.

In decision 1987/180 of 8 July, the Council requested the Commission to review the roles of the General Assembly, the Council and the DIEC Director-General with a view to enhancing the co-ordination of the system's activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In decision 42/434 of 11 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on co-ordination.

ACC activities

In 1987, during its yearly consideration of the question of development and international economic co-operation, ACC was apprised of the outcome of recent meetings of the United Nations system in the economic and social fields. The international debt problem and the adverse impact of required structural adjustments on the most vulnerable groups in debtor countries, initiatives for concerted action to tackle poverty, and ACC's contribution to the formulation of a new international development strategy for the fourth

United Nations development decade were among the main topics discussed. ACC also reviewed the activities of its Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives and began preparations for a new international development strategy. (See p. 375.)

ACC considered the matter of human resources development, an ambitious programme for which, in its view, the United Nations system had a considerable capacity to support (see p. 651), and prepared a background paper on the topic for the 1987 Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC (see p. 934). It considered policy issues and participatory activities to alleviate the critical economic situation in Africa (see p. 437) and took a decision relating to a global strategy for the prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) (see p. 645). ACC gave its view on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, considered the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond (see p. 661), and continued its co-ordinating role in implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see p. 703).

Through its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ(OPS)), ACC considered the implications for operational activities of the General Assembly's special session on the critical situation in Africa (see p. 438) and took part in elaborating terms of reference for the country case-studies on the functioning of operational activities for development. It reviewed proposals for statistical and procedural improvements of the practice of using national professional project personnel for technical co-operation activities, as well as current policies and procedures governing local and recurrent costs. It focused attention on: basic policy issues for enhancing collaboration with NGOs in operational activities; increasing the use of the entrepreneurial sector; the impact of operational activities on the environment; and women and development (see p. 836).

In the area of programmes, ACC in October 1987 issued the inventory of arrangements for system-wide programme co-ordination,⁽⁵⁾ which had been prepared in 1986.⁽⁶⁾ It continued to review activities in water resources development, in particular the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan (see p. 571). Through its Sub-Committee on Nutrition, ACC monitored the five priority areas of work on nutrition (see p. 643) as outlined in 1986.⁽⁷⁾ Through its Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities, it proposed steps to improve co-ordination and efficiency in the collection of statistics from Member States (see p. 921).

ACC continued to formulate policy guidelines for the harmonization of the system's policies in science and technology for development (see p. 597), to promote broad-based rural development and to monitor progress of regional rural development centres (see p. 388). It also monitored support activities for an international conference on drug abuse (see p. 902), the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (see p. 715), follow-up to the International Youth Year (p. 864), and the United Nations decades for women (see p. 833) and of disabled persons (see p. 649). Other activities concerned CoPAs and medium-term planning (see p. 935).

With respect to management and institutional policy issues, the effects of the financial difficulties in the United Nations system—the disruption of work and output, the serious impact on planning, programme delivery and the provision of support for technical co-operation activities, and the difficulties facing the executive heads in the effective management of operations and finances—were given continuing consideration (see p. 1094). In view of the general worsening in the global security situation and the number of staff members arrested or detained by Governments, ACC held an ad hoc inter-agency meeting on security matters (see p. 1148). It approved a revised calendar which would advance the existing consultation procedures for the selection of candidates to the International Civil Service Commission. It continued to harmonize administrative, financial, personnel, planning and procurement procedures.

ACC also considered issues related to action in response to Assembly resolutions on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa (see p. 125), enhancing the public image of the United Nations (see p. 346), development of a more integrated public information and communication planning process, and co-ordination of information systems (see p. 1181). In addition, ACC issued comments on the reports of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on field representation of the organizations of the United Nations system (see p. 406), management of the system's interpretation services (see p. 1173) and storage problems (see p. 1178).

At the direction of ACC, its Organizational Committee continued to review the functioning of ACC machinery and its efforts to rationalize the scheduling of inter-agency meetings, their agenda and venues.

ACC described the foregoing activities in its annual overview report for 1987. (8) It met during the year in a first regular session (Rome, Italy, 22 and 23 April), a special session (Geneva, 21 June) and a second regular session (New York, 22 and 23 October), at which it adopted 27 decisions(9) relating to the topics mentioned above and to ACC machinery.

ACC's principal subsidiary bodies met as follows:

Organizational Committee (New York, 9 and 10 February, 13, 14 and 23 October; Geneva, 7-9 April; Rome, 24 April); Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ (Personnel and General Administrative Questions) (sixty-sixth session, New York, 2-20 March; sixty-seventh session, Geneva, 26 and 27 May, New York, 29 June-17 July); CCAQ (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (sixty-sixth session, London, 30 March-3 April; sixty-seventh session, New York, 8-11 September); CCSQ(OPS) (first regular session, Geneva, 27-29 April; second regular session, New York, 5-7 October); CCSQ (Programme Matters) (PROG) (Geneva, 16-20 March).

Bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women, New York, 19 and 20 January; ad hoc inter-agency meeting on co-ordination in matters of international drug abuse control, Vienna, 14 February and 16 and 17 September; fifth inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, Vienna, 18-20 February; Sub-Committee on Nutrition and its Advisory Group on Nutrition, thirteenth session, Washington, D.C., 2-6 March; Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, sixth session, Geneva, 18-20 March; Task Force on Rural Development, fifteenth meeting, Paris, 2 and 3 April; Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources, eighth session, New York, 8-13 April; Joint United Nations Information Committee, fourteenth session, New York, 28-30 April; Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities, twenty-first session, Geneva, 22-26 June; Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives, New York, 8-10 September (a technical working group met in New York between 8 and 10 June); Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems, Geneva, 23-25 September; inter-agency meeting on outer space activities, London, 7-9 October.

Report for 1986

The ACC annual overview report for 1986(10) was considered on 27 May 1987 by CPC,(4) which noted improvements in the report's presentation. CPC, urging ACC to continue rationalizing its work and streamlining its subsidiary machinery, noted with satisfaction ACC's decision to include in its yearly agenda an item on the follow-up to CPC conclusions and recommendations.

The report was taken note of by the Economic and Social Council (decision 1987/183) on 8 July.

CPC activities

In 1987, CPC met in New York for an organizational meeting on 30 March and for its twenty-seventh session, from 27 April to 29 May for the first part and from 14 to 30 September for the second part. (4)

At the first part of the session, CPC discussed a progress report by the Secretary-General on implementation of the economy measures he had proposed to alleviate the Organization's financial crisis and their implications for the 1986-1987 programme budget (see p. 1194). It undertook a section-by-section examination of the programme aspects of the proposed programme budget for the 1988-1989 biennium, setting out its conclusions and recommendations on the sections covered (see p. 1121). Discussed in this connection was the Secretary-General's proposal for a contingency fund to accommodate all additional expenditures within the overall level of the budget (see p. 1111).

CPC examined a number of other reports by the Secretary-General. These included—besides two reports on co-ordination (see p. 928)—in-depth evaluations of: the human rights programme, the programme on development issues and policies (see p. 384) and the programme on electronic data processing and information systems services; and several progress reports on implementation of the 1986 General Assembly resolution approving the recommendations of the Group of 18 to improve the Organization's administrative and financial functioning⁽¹¹⁾ (see p. 948), and the CPC recommendations on technical co-operation activities of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in manufactures financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) (see p. 421), on the work of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) (see p. 423) and on recurrent United Nations publications (see p. 1177).

CPC gave its assessment of a JIU report on technical co-operation between UNDP and the Economic Commission for Africa (see p. 530), the ACC 1986 annual overview report (see above) and a progress report on the United Nations system register of development activities (see p. 1181).

In response to Economic and Social Council decision 1987/112, CPC recalled that it had made a detailed examination of its methods of work in 1986.⁽¹²⁾ It reiterated the resultant recommendations with a request that they be made available to the Special Commission on the structure and functions in the economic and social fields (see p. 948). CPC noted that implementation of the 1986 Assembly resolution⁽¹¹⁾ with respect to its role and functions outside the Special Commission's mandate would require a transition period before all the implications for CPC's work became evident; it therefore agreed to re-examine the entire question.

Other matters discussed concerned past and future COPAS, system-wide medium-term plans (see p. 935) and the 1988 Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC (see p. 935).

At the second part of the session, CPC focused on the programmatic aspects as set forth in certain sections of the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget in line with the reform measures called for by the 1986 General Assembly resolution. In addition, it considered a note by the Secretary-General proposing supplementary rules and regulations necessary for improvement of the planning, programming and budgeting process (see p. 1117), as well as a note on the preparation of the next (1990-1995) medium-term plan (see p. 1123).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July 1987, acting on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/83 without vote.

Report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-seventh session

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered part one of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-seventh session,

Reiterating the importance of the programming and co-ordinating functions carried out by the Committee as the main subsidiary organ of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination,

Emphasizing the importance of the additional responsibilities assigned to the Committee by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

1. Approves part one of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-seventh session;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report;

3. Authorizes the Committee, subject to established procedures, to resume its twenty-seventh session for two weeks, starting on 14 September 1987, in order to consider the issues included in the provisional agenda for its resumed twenty-seventh session and to finalize its report;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the documentation necessary for the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to finalize its work is provided in good time;

5. Decides to transmit the relevant parts of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-sixth session concerning the detailed examination of its method of work to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Inter-governmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields;

6. Also decides to transmit the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination in the United Nations and the United Nations system, together with the relevant parts of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-seventh session, to the Special Commission.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/83

8 July 1987 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1987/128) without vote, 3 July (meeting 13); draft by Bangladesh (E/1987/C.3/L.13); agenda item 15.

By decision 1987/194 of 20 October, the Council, having examined the conclusions and recommendations contained in the CPC report on its resumed twenty-seventh session,(4) endorsed them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By section VI of resolution 42/215 on programme planning, the General Assembly endorsed those 1987 CPC conclusions and recommendations which it had not approved elsewhere and decided that the relevant ones, as well as the related portions of the CPC report, should be brought to the attention of the Assembly's Main Committees; reiterated the need to implement the provisions of section II of the 1986 Economic and Social Council resolution on the report of CPC,(13) in particular those concerning priority setting; and requested CPC to keep under review its schedule of meetings, taking into account its new responsibilities, and to report to the Assembly in 1988 through the Council.

In resolution 42/211, the Assembly reaffirmed the relevant provisions of its 1986 resolution approving the Group of 18 recommendations(11) concerning CPC's role and mandate.

CPC membership

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

At its resumed second regular session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a 15-nation revised draft resolution to increase the membership of CPC from 21 to 36 Member States. A similar text, sponsored by Bolivia, had been introduced in the General Assembly in 1986.(14) Following six weeks of intensive consultations, the 15-nation text was further revised to increase the membership to 34, beginning in 1988.

On 4 December, the Council adopted resolution 1987/94 by vote.

Broad representation in the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, entitled "Review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations",

Bearing in mind the views expressed during the discussion at the forty-first session of the General Assembly on the representativeness of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination,

Recognizing the need for the broadest possible geographical representation in the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination,

1. Recommends to the General Assembly that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should, from 1988 onward, be composed of thirty-four States Members of the United Nations, elected for three-year terms on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, as follows:

Nine seats for African States;

Seven seats for Asian States;

Seven seats for Latin American and Caribbean States;
Seven seats for Western European and other States;
Four seats for Eastern European States;

2. Also recommends to the General Assembly that it elect the new members of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its forty-second session;

3. Requests that, for the purpose of electing the new members, the General Assembly dispense with the requirement of nomination by the Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/94

4 December 1987 Meeting 41 45-1

15-nation draft (E/1987/L.50/Rev.1), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 16.

Sponsors: Antigua and Barbuda, Algeria, Bangladesh, Belize, Bolivia, Colombia, Cuba, Mexico, Morocco, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Syrian Arab Republic, Venezuela.

Financial implications. S-G. E/1987/L.51, orally revised.

Meeting numbers. ESC 39-41.

Before the vote, the United States stated that it would have accepted an addition of 10 seats in CPC, but not 13, which it regarded as liable to affect CPC's operation adversely. Therefore it could not join the consensus and requested the vote. Malta, speaking for the Group of Western European and Other States, echoed that view and regretted that a vote was necessary. Romania stated that the Eastern European Group had advocated an increase of fewer seats but would go along with the majority.

Bangladesh, speaking for the Asian Group, said the proposed increase did not ensure equitable representation of all States in CPC, since the Asian countries, representing 25.48 per cent of the Organization's membership, would receive the equivalent of only 24.59 per cent of the seats; they were, however, prepared to accept the will of the majority. Mozambique, speaking for the African Group, said it would vote for the text to maintain a consensus, but was not satisfied with the number of seats allocated to African countries, which were underrepresented in nearly all United Nations organs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By a letter of 7 December,(15) the President of the Economic and Social Council transmitted its recommendations as embodied in resolution 1987/94 to the General Assembly for consideration.

Later that month, the recommendations were adopted by the Assembly as decision 42/450 by recorded vote.

Broad representation in the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

At its 98th plenary meeting, on 17 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council concerning broad representation in the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, decided that:

(a) The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should, from 1988 onward, be composed of thirty-four States Members of the United Nations, elected for three-year terms on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, as follows:

Nine seats for African States;

Seven seats for Asian States;

Seven seats for Latin American and Caribbean States;

Seven seats for Western European and other States;

Four seats for Eastern European States;

(b) The new members of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should be elected at the forty-second session of the Assembly;

(c) For the purpose of electing the new members, the Assembly would dispense with the requirement of nomination by the Council.

General Assembly decision 42/450

152-1 (recorded vote)

Recommendation by ESC in resolution 1987/94; agenda items 12 & 16 (c). Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 59; plenary 98.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

The United States, which had called for the vote, said that the expansion of CPC represented a radical deviation from the established practice of giving due regard not only for equitable geographical distribution but for such other factors as the assessed contributions of Member States; it was an unwarranted departure from the consensus underlying the 1986 Assembly resolution a proving the Group of 18 recommendations,(11) which gave CPC responsibility for determining the overall level of the Organization's budget because it was expected that its small but representative composition would facilitate the give and take needed to work through complicated issues; enlarging CPC would not make consensus-based budgeting easy and entailed questionable costs.

Mozambique, for the African Group of States, clarified that their accepting their additional four seats in no way signified that the Group accepted being underrepresented, as it was in the whole United Nations system.

Bolivia, speaking for the sponsors, said it was clear that although the formula for distributing seats in CPC was not in accordance with strict geographical representation, it was part of a process that should prompt an examination of how the nations of Africa, Asia and Latin America might participate with their correct proportional representation within the system, while allowing correct representation of the countries of Western and Eastern Europe.

As a result of the enlarged membership and in view of existing arrangements whereby the Organization bore the travel and subsistence expenses of each Member attending CPC sessions, the Secretary-General revised his estimates under section I (overall policy-making, direction and co-ordination) of the proposed programme budget for the 1988-1989 biennium.(16) Those arrangements, authorized by the Assembly in 1976,(17) had been recommended for continuation by the Economic and Social Council in 1984.(18) While a full-cost estimate of $214,500 would be required for session attendance by all 13 additional CPC members, in practice not all availed themselves of the arrangements. Therefore, based on the assumption that 9 of the 13 would do so, the Secretary-General requested an additional appropriation of $148,500 for 1988-1989.

On the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ),(19) the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 10 December approved the requested additional appropriation by a recorded vote of 79 to 1, with 18 abstentions.

Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC

The twenty-second (1987) series of Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC was held at Geneva on 22 and 23 June.(20) As decided by the Economic and Social Council in 1986,(21) the topic for deliberation was co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations system in human resources development. ACC reviewed and transmitted the background paper that served as a framework for discussion, which the International Labour Organisation, acting as the lead agency, had prepared. (For details of the Meetings' discussion, see p. 652.)

The future schedule, venue and content of the Meetings were also discussed. The Secretary-General, as ACC Chairman, suggested that as an alternative to the current arrangements, the Meetings could be convened in New York in October so as to facilitate full attendance, not only by the executive heads of the specialized agencies but also by the permanent representatives of the CPC members. Topic selection should take account of the Economic and Social Council's agenda for the year following the Meetings so that the Council might better perform its co-ordinating role on related or complementary items. Informal consultations should be held between the two Committees during the Council's current (June/July) session so that it could reflect the agreed topic in a decision.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, having considered the report of the CPC and ACC Chairmen on the Joint Meetings,⁽²⁰⁾ adopted without vote two resolutions on the recommendation of its Third Committee. The first of these was resolution 1987/82.

Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1986/50 of 22 July 1986,

Stressing the importance of the Joint Meetings for co-ordinating the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Having considered the report of the Chairmen of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the twenty-second series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees,

1. Reiterates that further improvements are needed if the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination are to accomplish their objectives, in view of the present United Nations administrative reforms;

2. Takes note of the report of the Chairmen of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the twenty-second series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees, which includes the views expressed by participants on the schedule, venue and content of the Joint Meetings;

3. Recommends that all participation in the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination be at a high level and requests the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields to consider and make recommendations on the organizational aspects of the question, in particular the venue of future sessions of the Joint Meetings;

4. Emphasizes that the Joint Meetings should continue to be oriented more towards the co-ordination of important issues and should provide for more in-depth discussion among the participants.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/82

8 July 1987 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1987/128) without vote, 3 July (meeting 13); draft by Japan (E/1987/C.3/L.12), orally revised; agenda item 15.

By the second resolution—resolution 1987/85—the Council decided that the follow-up to the 1987 series of Joint Meetings should be considered by CPC and ACC in the context of choosing a topic for the twenty-third (1988) series.

The resolution was based on a draft by Bangladesh,⁽²³⁾ whose operative paragraph was orally amended by the USSR. As originally worded, the Council would have requested the Secretary-General to prepare for the 1988 Joint Meetings a report on the follow-up to the recommendations of the 1987 Meetings.

1988 Joint Meetings

On 14 September 1987, CPC(4) recommended that the subject for consideration at the 1988 Joint Meetings should be: "The response of the United Nations system to development problems, with special attention to the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990".

The recommendation, conveyed to ACC, was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council by virtue of decision 1987/194 of 20 October 1987.

By section V of resolution 42/215, the General Assembly, besides taking note of Council resolutions 1987/82 and 1987/85, accepted the topic for the 1988 Joint Meetings as agreed by CPC and ACC and endorsed by the Council.

Cross-organizational programme analyses

In 1987, ACC's consultative subsidiary body CCSQ(PROG)(8) reviewed preliminary proposals on the scope and approach of a COPA of United Nations environmental activities for submission to CPC. It also discussed follow-up to the 1986 COPA of economic and social research and policy analysis.⁽²⁴⁾

CPC(4) considered three reports by the Secretary-General dealing with COPAS. One concerned the proposed analysis of environmental activities (see p. 693). Another was a follow-up to the analysis of human settlements activities (see p. 724). A third combined a CORE of the medium-term plans and a COPA of activities in science and technology for development (see p. 596).

Medium-term plans

In 1987, ACC(8) transmitted the second system-wide medium-term environmental programme for the period 1990-1995, prepared after an extensive process of consultation among the organizations concerned, to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) for its consideration and approval. An ACC report on the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development, also for 1990-1995, together with relevant sections of the 1987 report of the Commission on the Status of Women, was before CPC(4) for consideration (see p. 843).

Economic and Social Council

In his 1987 report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General underscored the absence in the United Nations of a representative intergovernmental body able to provide authoritative guidance to Member States and organizations of the United Nations system in respect of priorities of global programmes, allocation of responsibilities and utilization of assistance resources. The Economic and Social Council, entrusted by the Charter of the United Nations with co-ordination and policy formulation for the system's economic and social activities, was not constituted by representatives with the authoritative rank to discharge that role effectively. He felt compelled to state that the intellectual leadership and co-ordination provided by the Council in recent years had been inadequate and that the incremental reforms heretofore undertaken to improve its functioning had not had the desired effect.

Believing that this situation should be corrected, the Secretary-General proposed that, for optimum effectiveness, the Council might become, in practice, a Council of Ministers for Economic and Social Affairs with authority to review the medium-term plans or equivalent documents of the system's organizations and thus contribute to the rational utilization of resources in the light of global priorities and give greater coherence to the system as a whole. With enhanced participation of the specialized agencies, the Council could keep world economic and social developments under review and suggest programme modifications to meet changing circumstances and new exigencies. The cabinet-rank Council members, who might vary or be augmented according to the economic or social issue under consideration, would be able to speak with greater authority than was currently the case. The Council's deliberative function might be assumed by the Second and Third Committees of the General Assembly.

The Secretary-General put the proposal forward because the past year's events had shown the need for greater integration of United Nations activities to correspond with the need for more integrated approaches to economic and social problems. He hoped that the proposal, along with other suggestions that had been made on the subject, would stimulate early and serious consideration by Member States of the direction in which the Organization should move. It needed to focus, he said, on what the Council should do rather than on how it could better perform what it had been doing.

Co-operation with other organizations

Non-governmental organizations

The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations met twice in New York in 1987: from 17 to 27 February for its biennial session(1) and on 4 May. (2)

At the session, the Committee reviewed applications from NGOS for consultative status with the Economic and Social Council or for a reclassification of their status. These included applications brought forward from the Committee's 1985 session,(3) of which the Committee recommended six NGOs for category II consultative status and five for the Roster; it invited one to apply for consultative status with the World Health Organization (WHO) and one to resubmit its application for placement on the Roster; it deferred consideration of 10 applications to 1989 and did not approve two. It further recommended four NGOs to be reclassified from the Roster to category II and three to remain on the Roster.

Of the new applicants, 27 were recommended for category II consultative status and 15 for the Roster, one was asked to apply for consultative status with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, six were deferred for consideration in 1989 and two were rejected. The unanimous rejection of the Sikh Commonwealth, one of the two rejected, reflected the Committee's belief that that organization's objectives were incompatible with the purposes and principles of the United Nations and with the consultative arrangements set forth by the Council in 1968.(4) One NGO was recommended for reclassification to category I consultative status and five to category II, and one for maintaining its category II status.

The Committee also examined the quadrennial reports from 218 NGOS on their United Nations-related activities during 1980-1984(5) and 1981-1985.(6) Eight reports required additional information and were therefore deferred for consideration in 1989. Twelve NGOS, which did not submit reports, were asked to provide them for review, also in 1989. Failure to do so would mean withdrawal of their consultative status in accordance with past practice.

At its May meeting, the Committee heard requests from NGOS with consultative status to address the Council or its sessional committees in connection with items on the Council's agenda. Four were recommended to be heard at the Council's May session and two at its June/July session. In addition, the Council received seven NGO statements(7) concerning specific areas of its work.

Economic and Social Council decision 1987/113

Adopted without vote

Draft by Committee on NGOs (E/1987/32), orally amended by President; agenda item 7.

The first paragraph of the adopted text had been orally amended by the Council President to incorporate the phrase "having considered the report of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations".

As a result of decision 1987/113 and of the addition of a number of other NGOs to the Roster by action of the Secretary-General and by virtue of their status with other United Nations bodies or specialized agencies, the number of NGOs in consultative status with the Council rose to 827 during 1987.(8) They were divided into three groups: category I—organizations representative of major population segments in a large number of countries, involved with the economic and social life of the areas they represented; category II—international organizations having special competence in a few of the Council's areas of activity; and organizations on the Roster—considered able to make occasional and useful contributions to the Council's work.

Agenda for the 1989 session

Acting without vote on the recommendation the Committee on NGOs, the Economic and Social Council adopted on 19 May 1987 decision 1987/114, by which it approved the provisions of the agenda and documentation for the Committee's 1989 session.

The agenda items included election of officers (adoption of the agenda and other organizational matters) NGO applications for consultative status and requests for status reclassification, NGO quarterly reports, the Committee's future activities, provisional agenda and documentation for 1990 and adoption of the Committee's report.

Liaison with NGOs

As provided for by General Assembly resolution 42/211 of 21 December 1987, the Secretary-General

General was invited to consider the location of the functions related to liaison with NGOS in the context of the implementation of a 1986 recommendation of the Group of 18 concerning establishment at a single location of all offices dealing with economic and social matters (recommendation 25).(9) The Secretary-General was further invited to review his decisions on the matter in the context of decisions to be taken by the Economic and Social Council on the intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields (see below), as they pertained to the functioning and servicing of the Committee on NGOs.

Intergovernmental organizations

In July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, having examined a draft decision on the applications of five intergovernmental organizations to participate in its work, adopted without vote decision 1987/161.

Participation of intergovernmental organizations in the work of the Economic and Social Council

At its 35th plenary meeting, on 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, having considered the applications of the African Accounting Council, the African Cultural Institute, the African Development Bank, the Council of Arab Ministers of the Interior and the International Bauxite Association, decided, in accordance with rule 79* of the rules of procedure of the Council, that those organizations might participate, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Council on questions within the scope of their activities, as follows:

(a) The African Development Bank, on a continuing basis;

(b) The African Accounting Council, the African Cultural Institute, the Council of Arab Ministers of the Interior and the International Bauxite Association, on an ad hoc basis.

*Rule 79 of the Council's rules of procedure states: "Representatives of intergovernmental organizations accorded permanent observer status by the General Assembly and of other intergovernmental organizations designated on an ad hoc or a continuing basis by the Council on the recommendation of the Bureau, may participate, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Council on questions within the scope of the activities of the organizations."

Other organizational matters

Institutional machinery

On 21 August 1987,(10) Jamaica requested that an item entitled "In-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields: the Economic and Social Council" be included in the Council's 1988 agenda.

An accompanying explanatory memorandum stated that the 1986 General Assembly resolution approving the Group of 18 recommendations to improve the Organization's administrative and financial functioning(11) provided for such a study to be undertaken (see p. 948) but not for the Council-the only intergovernmental body charged by the Charter with responsibility for economic and social issues-to carry out its own study of its structure and functioning. The item would fill this lacuna and allow the Council the self-examination essential to an assessment of its appropriate role and function in the economic and social areas.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

In October, having examined Jamaica's request, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1987/189 without vote.

In-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields: the Economic and Social Council

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 1 October 1987, the Economic and Social Council, having considered the letter dated 21 August 1987 from the Permanent Representative of Jamaica to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Economic and Social Council, decided to accept the proposal contained therein in the provisional agenda of its regular sessions of 1988 an item entitled:

"In-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields: (a) report of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields; (b) the Economic and Social Council."

Work programme for 1987-1988

At its 1987 organizational session, held in New York from 3 to 6 February the Economic and Social Council considered its draft basic programme of work for 1987 and 1988 as submitted by the Secretary-General(12) On the basis of the draft, the Council on 6 February adopted without vote decision 1987/108.

By section I of the decision, the Council approved the list of items for consideration in 1987-22 items at the first regular session, and 18 and 2 at the second and resumed second regular session-and allocated the items to its sessional committees and plenary meetings. It decided to review at its second session the reports of the World Food Council, the UNEP Governing Council, the Commission on Human Settlements-and the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, but not to consider the draft proposals put forward except those requiring Council action or relating to the co-ordination aspects of the work covered. It would not consider those parts of the report of the UNDP Governing Council dealing with technical co-operation activities, except for recommendations requiring Council action.

Under the item on regional co-operation, the Council decided to consider the question of information technology (informatics) and to ask the executive secretaries of the regional commissions for information on developments in interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries. It directed its subsidiary bodies to take account of or act on relevant 1987 Assembly resolutions and decisions.

By section II of the decision, the Council took note of the list of questions for inclusion in its 1988 work programme.

The Council held its first regular session in New York from 4 to 29 May, its second regular session at Geneva from 23 June to 9 July, and its resumed second regular session in New York on 1 and 20 October, 25 November and 4 December. The First (Economic) and Second (Social) Committees met during the first session, and the First and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees during the second session.

Agenda of 1987 sessions

On 3 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council adopted a five-item annotated agenda for its organizational session.⁽¹³⁾ It included for consideration, under the appropriate item, the question concerning the inclusion of Burma and Zambia in the list of least developed countries (see p. 389).

-The agenda for the first and second regular sessions, adopted by the Council at the opening of each session, listed the same items it had approved by decision 1987/108.

The agenda for the first session, as annotated,⁽¹⁴⁾ was adopted on 4 May. Two additional questions, concerning assistance for the reconstruction of Vanuatu (see p. 449) and a proposed amendment to the rules of procedure of the Committee for the United Nations Population Award (see p. 640), were approved for consideration under specific items. The question of the proclamation of an international literacy year, approved for inclusion in the provisional agenda of the first session under the item "International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights", was later deferred to the second session (see p. 767).

By decision 1987/160, the Council on 23 June adopted the agenda for the second session⁽¹⁵⁾ with later annotations,⁽¹⁶⁾ and decided: to transmit the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to the 1987

General Assembly session (see p. 877); and to consider in plenary meetings the fortieth anniversary of WHO (see p. 646) and the global strategy for AIDS prevention and control (see p. 645). It further noted, on 9 July, the agenda items (items 4, 16, 20, 21 and 22) to be considered at its resumed second regular session.⁽¹⁷⁾ The second session's draft provisional agenda and proposed organization of work⁽¹⁸⁾ had been approved earlier, on 29 May, by decision 1987/157.

For the agenda lists, see APPENDIX IV.

Calendar of meetings

By decision 1987/107 of 6 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council waived, on an exceptional basis, rule 2a of its rules of procedure in order to reschedule its first regular session from 4 to 29 May instead of from 5 to 29 May 1987. In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁹⁾ the second regular session was to be held at Geneva from 23 June to 9 July instead of from 1 to 24 July; a resumed session not exceeding three days was to be convened in New York in September.

Limitation of documentation

On 1 May 1987,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretariat reported on the state of preparedness of documentation for the first regular session of the Economic and Social Council, and on 19 May⁽²¹⁾ for the second regular session. The reports were submitted pursuant to 1979 Council resolutions⁽²²⁾ on the limitation of documentation and its circulation in all working languages six weeks in advance of the sessions of the Council and its subsidiary bodies.

The reports noted that, to allow adequate time for policy and other clearances and editing, documents for the first session should have been submitted by 16 February and circulated by 23 March, and, for the second, submitted by 7 April and circulated by 12 May. A table on the status of documentation, annexed to each report, showed the documents that failed to make the circulation dates; explanations for the delay were to be provided by the offices concerned.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council in July adopted decision 1987/179.

aRule 2 of the Council's rules of procedure states: "Subject to rule 3 (governing requests to alter the date of a regular session), the organizational session shall be convened on the first Tuesday in February, the first regular session on the first Tuesday in May and the second regular session on the first Wednesday in July. The second regular session shall be adjourned at least six weeks before the opening of the regular session of the General Assembly."

Summary records of sessional committees and subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council

At its 35th plenary meeting, on 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, recalling its resolutions 1979/69 of 2 August 1979 and 1981/83 of 24 July 1981 and its decisions 1983/1/84 of 29 July 1983 and 1985/200 of 26 July 1985, decided to discontinue for a further period of two years, from 1988, summary records for its sessional committees (First (Economic) Committee, Second (Social) Committee and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee) and for the following subsidiary bodies:

Commission on the Status of Women;
Commission on Narcotic Drugs;
Economic Commission for Europe;
Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific;
Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;
Economic Commission for Africa;
Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations;

Financial implications of resolutions and decisions

In October 1987, the Secretary-General submitted a report,(23) with a later addendum,(24) giving a summary of estimates of programme budget implications of resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1987. The Council took note of the report by decision 1987/197 of 4 December.

For items other than conference-servicing, the estimated requirements for 1987 amounted to $593,200, of which $40,000 was expected to be provided from extrabudgetary resources and $553,200 from within resources appropriated by the General Assembly in 1986. Of the estimated $1,256,100 required for the 1988-1989 biennium, $328,100 would be absorbed from resources already requested in the proposed programme budget for that biennium as follows: $84,000 under section 20 (International drug control); $241,600 under section 23 (Human rights); and $2,500 under section 24 (Regular programme of technical co-operation). The remaining $928,000—broken down by object of expenditure in a 20 October(25) report by the Secretary-General on revised estimates attributable to Council resolutions and decisions—was subsequently recommended for reduction to $752,000 by ACABQ.(26)

On 10 December, the Fifth Committee approved without vote the recommended additional appropriation of $752,000 for the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget.

The addendum to the summary of estimates(24) and an addendum to the revised estimates(27) dealt with financial implications of Council resolution 1987/94 enlarging CPC (see p. 933).

Conference-servicing costs were dealt with separately (see p. 1172).

Report for 1987

The work of the Economic and Social Council at its organizational session and two regular sessions in 1987 was summarized in its annual report to the General Assembly.(28) Parts of the report were considered by the plenary Assembly, others by the Second, Third and Fifth Committees.

In December, the Assembly adopted without vote three decisions by which it took note of the chapters of the report as follows: on 11 December, chapters I, II, III (sections B, F to H and J to L), IV, VI, VII and VIII, following consideration of part I of the Second Committee's report(29) (decision 42/427); on 17 December, chapters I, II, III (section B), VI (sections C and D), VII and VIII (decision 42/449), considered in plenary meetings; and, on 21 December, chapters I, IV (section I), V (section A), VI (sections C and E), VII and VIII (decision 42/451), on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee.(30)

Other institutional arrangements

Institutional machinery

At its February 1987 organizational session, the Economic and Social Council set in motion implementation of an in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields, as called for by a 1986 General Assembly resolution approving the recommendations of the Group of 18 to improve the Organization's administrative and financial functioning.(1) The in-depth study (recommendation 8)(2) was a priority recommendation.

As a first step, the Council established an intergovernmental body—the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields—to undertake the study, provided for its composition and first two sessions, and requested reports and support services necessary for the exercise (see below). The Special Commission, which was to submit its final report in 1988, held four sessions in 1987. Among the subsidiary bodies of the Assembly and the Council that transmitted reports to it during the year were the Commission on the Status of Women (see p. 836), the Commission on Transnational Corporations (see p. 507), the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see p. 466) and UNDP (see p. 644).

Meanwhile, in accordance with the same 1986 Assembly resolution,(1) the Secretary-General proceeded to institute reforms recommended by the Group of 18 for implementation without delay.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Based on a draft text arrived at after extensive negotiations, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1987/112 without vote.

In-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields

At its 4th plenary meeting, on 6 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council, in order to carry out the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields and its Secretariat support structures, as called for by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, decided:

(a) To establish a Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields, which would be open to the full participation of all States Members of the United Nations on an equal basis and whose proceedings would be governed in all other respects by the relevant rules of procedure of the Economic and Social Council;

(b) That in undertaking its task, the Special Commission should establish, as appropriate, drafting or working groups;

(c) To invite Governments to participate at the highest possible level in the work of the Special Commission;

(d) To request the Special Commission to consider, in the context of the in-depth study, the relevant provisions of recommendation 2 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations;

(e) That the Bureau of the Special Commission should be composed of five members, one from each regional group, who should serve for the entire duration of the work of the Special Commission;

(f) To appoint Mr. Abdel Halim Badawi (Egypt) Chairman of the Special Commission and to convene an organizational meeting of the Special Commission on 13 February 1987 for the purpose of electing, following consultations, the other members of the Bureau;

(g) To convene the first and second sessions of the Special Commission from 2 to 6 and from 18 to 20 March 1987;

(h) That the Special Commission should inform the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1987 and at subsequent regular sessions, of the progress of its work and should make recommendations to the Council on the future programme of work and calendar of meetings of the Commission;

(i) To request all subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly in the economic and social sectors and all subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council to submit to the Special Commission, within thirty days of the conclusion of their forthcoming sessions, their views and proposals on achieving the objectives envisaged in recommendation 8 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts regarding their functioning and that of their subsidiary machinery;

(j) To request the Secretary-General to submit to the Special Commission:

(i) Information on the intergovernmental machinery of the United Nations in the economic and social fields and its Secretariat support structures, including information concerning terms of reference, programmes of work, agendas, reporting procedures and periodicity of meetings, that information to be submitted to the Special Commission at its first session;

(ii) A list of available United Nations studies on the functioning and restructuring of the intergovernmental bodies in the economic and social sectors, as well as legislative decisions taken in that regard;

(iii) Other studies and analyses as required by the Special Commission;

(k) Also to request the Secretary-General, to the extent possible within existing resources, to provide conference services, facilities and other necessary support on a preferential basis to the Special Commission to enable it to operate with sufficient frequency as from the first half of 1987 to fulfil its mandate in the limited time available;

(l) To request the Special Commission to make its final report available in time for consideration by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988;

(m) That the Special Commission should approach its work with a view to strengthening the effectiveness of the United Nations in dealing with economic and social issues, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the objectives agreed upon by the General Assembly.

Economic and Social Council decision 1987/W

Adopted without vote

Draft prepared in informal consultations, orally amended by Belgium for EEC, India and Norway, sub-amended by USSR (E/1987/L.13); agenda item 2.

The text incorporated the following oral amendments: by Norway as sub-amended by the USSR—the insertion of “and its Secretariat support structures” in the introductory paragraph, and replacement of the opening phrase in subparagraph (j) (i), which had read “Information on the intergovernmental structure of the United Nations”, by “Information on the intergovernmental machinery and its Secretariat support structures”—the addition of “Secretariat” in both instances constituting the USSR sub-amendment; by India—the insertion of “in all other respects” in subparagraph (a); and by Belgium on behalf of the European Economic Community (EEC)—the insertion of subparagraph (b) and the words “as from the first half of 1987” in subparagraph (k).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, acting without vote on a recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 42/170.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/213 in the economic and social fields

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system and 41/213 of 19 December 1986 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations, both of which are elements of a common process,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decisions 1987/112 of 6 February 1987 on the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields and 1987/180 of 8 July 1987 on enhancing the co-ordination of the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Bearing in mind the importance of the full implementation of all aspects of its resolution 41/213,

1. Stresses the common interest of all countries in the effective and efficient functioning of the United Nations in the economic and social fields which are of particular importance to the developing countries;

2. Affirms that its resolution 41/213 should continue to be implemented in the economic and social fields at the intergovernmental and Secretariat levels in a timely, orderly, integrated and well co-ordinated manner in order to enhance the quality and strengthen the implementation of development-oriented programmes and activities of the United Nations in those fields;

3. Considers that the implementation of its resolution 41/213 in the economic and social fields should take into account the fact that the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields, as called for in section I, paragraph 1 (e), of that resolution, is under way;

4. Recognizes that adjustments in the structure of the Secretariat in the economic and social fields will be required as a result of ongoing reviews and of the work of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields.

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/820/Add.2) without vote, 2 December (meeting 44); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.89), based on informal consultations on draft by Guatemala for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.39); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 28, 44; plenary 96.

Activities of the Special Commission. On 19 May 1987, the Chairman of the Special Commission reported orally to the Economic and Social Council on the Commission's work at its first, second and third sessions, held in New York from 2 to 6 March, 18 to 20 March and 27 April to 1 May, respectively.

At the first session, the Commission reached broad agreement on the type of documentation it required and agreed to proceed with its substantive work based on an integrated thematic and functional approach. In addition to background information already received on the terms of reference and Secretariat support structures of intergovernmental bodies in the economic and social sectors, the Commission requested information on past United Nations studies on the functioning and restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery, as well as the related resolutions and decisions, in particular the 1977 General Assembly resolution(3) on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system.

At the second session, the Commission reviewed informal working papers prepared by the Secretariat, including some sample analyses of substantive issues, with a view to providing further guidance to the Secretariat on the format and content of future documentation. The Commission accepted the offer of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to prepare an analytical study summarizing the conclusions and recommendations of evaluations made of the efficiency and effectiveness of United Nations economic and social activities.

Proceeding as agreed from the general to the specific, the Commission at its third session undertook a preliminary review of the functioning of the Assembly and the Council. It reaffirmed that the Assembly should function as the principal forum for policy-making and establishing strategies and priorities for the United Nations system in respect of international co-operation in the economic, social and related fields; and that the Council should monitor and evaluate implementation of the policies, strategies and priorities so established, ensure overall co-ordination of activities and continue to assist in the preparation of the Assembly's work in those areas. The modalities necessary to enhance fulfilment of the Assembly's and the Council's responsibilities were to be elaborated at a later stage.

The Commission recommended that the Council authorize the fourth session to be held from 1 to 4 September and that it arrange for conference services and facilities for about 50 working days in 1988.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

After an exchange of views on the work accomplished by the Special Commission as orally reported by its Chairman, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/64 without vote on 29 May 1987.

In-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields

The Economic and Social Council

1. Takes note with appreciation of the oral report made on 19 May 1987 by the Chairman of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields on the progress of work of the Commission, its future programme of work and its calendar of meetings;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Special Commission a document incorporating the information received thus far from the subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly in the economic and social sectors and the subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with paragraph (i) of Council decision 1987/112 of 6 February 1987;

3. Decides to convene the fourth session of the Special Commission from 1 to 4 September 1987;

4. Recommends that conference services and facilities for at least fifty official meetings be made available to the Special Commission in 1988;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate measures to ensure the provision of adequate full-time support services as requested by the Special Commission for the duration of its work.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/64

29 May 1987 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (E/1987/L.30), based on informal consultations; agenda item 3.

Meeting numbers. ESC 12, 13, 19.

Following the resolution's adoption, the Council President noted the understanding that it was desirable for the sessions of the Commission not to coincide with those of other intergovernmental bodies in the social and economic fields and that the Council, at its 1988 organizational session, would be in a position to review the Commission's work programme and meetings required to complete its work.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an April 1987 progress report,(4) the Secretary-General described action he had taken to implement the 1986 General Assembly resolution(1) approving the Group of 18 recommendations in respect of those pertaining to the economic and social sectors.(5)

The Secretary-General, noting that the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring(3) provided the basic framework for clustering economic and social activities, particularly with regard to the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA), DTCD, UNCTAD and the regional commissions, reported that a review (recommendation 25) was under way aimed at more clearly defining the responsibilities and interrelationships of those basic units in the light of experience and current requirements in order to establish a basis for a more efficient, effective and coherent allocation of responsibilities in the economic and social sectors. Begun in December 1986 under the direction of the DIEC Director-General, the review was expected to be completed by the end of 1987.

At Headquarters, the heads of the Centre for Transnational Corporations and the Centre for Science and Technology for Development (CSTD) were to report to the Secretary-General through the Under-Secretary-General for International Economic and Social Affairs—a procedure entailing an amendment to the 1979 Assembly resolution creating CSTD,(6) shortly to be recommended. The Director-General of the United Nations Office at Geneva had assumed supervisory responsibility for human rights activities, thus giving greater prominence to a key component of the Organization's activities while contributing to the reduction of senior posts and the perceived top-heaviness and fragmentation of current structures.(7) Activities on social policy and development had been concentrated under the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna, incorporating (a) the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, which was detached from DIESA for that purpose; and, after the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking in June 1987, (b) the co-ordination of all drug-related programmes previously undertaken by the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs. Such an arrangement not only heightened the focus on social issues but also fulfilled the recommended reduction of top-echelon posts (recommendation 15).(7)

In addition, an in-depth programmatic review of activities in the economic and social sectors was in progress to clarify responsibilities of the major entities. Scheduled for completion by the end of 1987, the review would serve as a basis for the allocation of specific activities and for adjustments necessary to eliminate duplication and enhance complementarity of action. The broad areas identified for detailed examination and possible reform included: global analysis and reporting, energy and natural resources, science and technology, economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, national development strategies, and the relationship between operational and substantive activities.

The Secretary-General decided that no further enhancement was required of the DIEC Director-General's authority as set forth in the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring.⁽³⁾ The Director-General derived his authority from the Secretary-General, whom he would continue to assist in arranging regular informal consultations among the executive heads of the specialized agencies and among manager groups to promote co-ordination of work programmes. To enhance such co-ordination, the Assistant Secretary-General of the Office of the DIEC Director-General had been designated Secretary of ACC and Chairman of its Organizational Committee.

In order to eliminate the overlapping of DTCD activities with those of other United Nations organs (recommendation 26), DTCD was in consultation with DIESA and UNDP to ensure complementarity of activities between substantive and operational programmes and between funding and executing roles, respectively.

As to the recommendation that UNDP consider taking over the functions performed by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) (recommendation 24), the Secretary-General said UNDRO was being retained as a separate entity at Geneva, but steps would be taken to improve its performance. Specific recommendations in this regard would be based on a 1986 Assembly resolution on UNDRO,⁽⁸⁾ as would steps to co-ordinate and rationalize emergency humanitarian and special economic assistance programmes (recommendation 23).

The recommended study of the regional commissions (recommendation 27)⁽⁵⁾ would be undertaken to consider further implementation of the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring,⁽³⁾ concentrating on areas of regional interest and enhancing complementarities among the commissions and with other United Nations entities.

Responding to the recommendations pertaining to co-ordination,⁽⁹⁾ such as the recommended review of field representation of United Nations programmes (recommendation 12), the Secretary-General had instituted changes based on a United Nations presence able to reach every part of the world and to present a cohesive image of the Organization. Under the aegis of the Joint Consultative Group of Programmes (UNDP, UNICEF, WFP and UNFPA), a country-by-country assessment of field offices was to be undertaken to determine which could be merged without adversely affecting programme delivery. To be co-ordinated with this review was an ongoing study, participated in by UNDP and the Department of Public Information, aimed at consolidating United Nations information centres with offices of the resident co-ordinators/resident representatives where it was deemed efficient and cost-effective. To clarify the authority of the United Nations resident co-ordinator and thus enhance co-ordination at the field level (recommendation 11), the resident co-ordinator would henceforth represent the Secretary-General in the country of assignment, except in cases calling for other, more appropriate arrangements.

In a related action, UNDP would henceforth administer special economic assistance programmes that had been the responsibility of the Office for Special Political Questions (recommendation 22),⁽¹⁰⁾ except where political sensitivity dictated other arrangements.

CPC consideration. CPC considered the Secretary-General's report at its April/May 1987 session.⁽¹¹⁾ It agreed that the Secretary-General should continue with the reform process in an effective and orderly manner, stressing the need to avoid a negative impact on programmes. It also agreed that, for the reform and restructuring to be successful, the financial uncertainties of the Organization should be ended; that is, Member States should fulfil their financial obligations under the Charter. CPC asked the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly's 1987 session information on further implementation of the 1986 Assembly resolution approving the Group of 18 recommendations,⁽¹⁾ including pertinent programme budgetary proposals.

Further activities of the Special Commission. On 1 October 1987, the Chairman of the Special Commission orally reported to the Economic and Social Council on the work of its fourth session (New York, 1-4 September). He stated that, as a result of informal consultations with the executive heads of the specialized agencies and with the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, a special insight had been gained into the complex relationship between the United Nations and its specialized agencies, the agencies' perception of the role of the Council, the functioning of the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC and the need for co-ordination at the national level.

The session's deliberations focused on the role and functions of the Council and its relationship with the Assembly. A working group examined a number of specific proposals on the topic, which were put forward by the Group of 77, the EEC members, the Nordic countries, the socialist countries and individual representatives. A great degree of convergence on a number of issues emerged from the deliberations. There was unanimous agreement that it was crucial to strengthen the Council in such a manner as to complement the functions of the Assembly and its subsidiary organs. There was also agreement on the continued biennialization of the Council's work programme and those of the Assembly's Second and Third Committees, on a more effective control and management of operational activities, on implementation of the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring⁽³⁾ with respect to the Council's role, and on the rationalization of its meetings and those of its subsidiary bodies.

The Chairman gave a summary of the Commission's tentative programme of work for 1988.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1987/190 of 1 October 1987, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Chairman's oral report and of the Commission's 1988 work programme.

The decision was taken following statements on the oral report, including requests for an analytical summary of the various proposals put forward at the fourth session and for the circulation of a detailed agenda well in advance of the Commission's next session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, acting without vote on a proposal by its President and on the recommendations of its Second⁽¹²⁾ and Third⁽¹³⁾ Committees, adopted decision 42/431. By the decision, the Assembly requested all subsidiary bodies in the economic and social fields of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council that had not done so to submit their proposals to the Special Commission, in accordance with Council decision 1987/112.

In other action, the Assembly, in resolution 42/211, stressed the importance of the timely and successful completion of the in-depth study of the intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields, and reaffirmed resolution 42/170, in which it recognized that, as a result of the study, adjustments in the Secretariat's structure would be required.

DIEC Director-General

On 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1987/180, by which it requested the Special Commission, particularly in its review of the co-ordinating role of the General Assembly and the Council, to consider in depth the role of the DIEC Director-General and his support office, as envisaged in the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring,⁽³⁾ with a view to enhancing the co-ordination of activities of the organizations of the United Nations system. The decision was based on a draft by Peru⁽¹⁴⁾ and recommended for adoption by the Council's Third Committee.⁽¹⁵⁾

Restructuring of economic and social sectors

At its 1987 session, the General Assembly had before it a Secretariat note⁽¹⁶⁾ reproducing a draft resolution entitled "Implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system".⁽³⁾ The draft had been deferred for consideration in 1987 pursuant to a 1984 Assembly decision.⁽¹⁷⁾

The note stated that, in view of the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields being undertaken by the Special Commission, as well as by the Economic and Social Council, it was felt that the Assembly might wish to refer the draft resolution for consideration by the Council, with a request that it submit a final report thereon to the Assembly in 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 42/432.

Implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system

At its 96th plenary meeting, on 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided:

(a) To transmit the draft resolution entitled "Implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system" to the Economic and Social Council and, through it, to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields, to be taken into account in its work;

(b) To consider this matter anew at its forty-third session in the light of the report of the Economic and Social Council on the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields.

General Assembly decision 42/432

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/820/Add.2) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.73), based on informal consultations on draft resolution in A/C.2/42/L.4; agenda item 12.

Work programme of the Second and Third Committees of the General Assembly

Second Committee

In 1987, a revised draft biennial programme of work for 1988-1989 for the General Assembly's Second Committee was before that Committee for consideration and approval. It was submitted by a Secretariat note(18) in keeping with practice established by the Assembly in 1984(19) to improve complementarity between the work of the Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council.

By decision 42/435 of 11 December 1987, adopted without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee,(12) the Assembly approved the Committee's biennial programme of work for 1988-1989, annexed to the decision. The adopted text incorporated several oral corrections, as well as an oral amendment by the Netherlands adding the words "and regions" to "Reports of the Secretary-General on individual countries", representing documentation required under the agenda item on special programmes of economic assistance.

Third Committee

In November 1987, the Third Committee had before it a Secretariat note(20) transmitting a draft decision concerning the Committee's programme of work. Submitted in 1986 by Côte d'Ivoire, Morocco and Zaire, the draft had been deferred for consideration in 1987.

By decision 42/423 of 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee,(13) deferred consideration of the draft until 1988.

As originally submitted, the draft would have had the Assembly decide to consider the following items every two years, beginning at its 1986 session: the question of aging; implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons; elimination of all forms of religious intolerance; human rights and scientific and technological developments; and alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms (with the exception of the question related to the right to development).

International decades

On 11 December 1987, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/171.

Guidelines for international decades

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980, by which it adopted the guidelines for international years and anniversaries contained in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980,

Considering it desirable to establish similar guidelines for the designation of international decades,

1. Invites the Economic and Social Council to consider, at its second regular session of 1988, guidelines for the designation of future international decades and to submit its recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, therefore, to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988 a report on guidelines for future international decades, including his recommendations.

General Assembly resolution 42/171

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/820/Add.2) without vote, 2 December (meeting 44); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.90), based on informal consultations; agenda item 12.

Trusteeship and decolonization

Chapter I

General questions relating to colonial countries

Decolonization, based on the General Assembly's 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, remained a concern of the United Nations throughout 1987. The main body dealing with the issue was the Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries). It continued to consider general decolonization questions, among them the implementation of the Declaration by international organizations as well as action impeding implementation by foreign economic and military interests.

In addition, the Committee examined and made recommendations on the situations in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see next chapter); Namibia (see Chapter III of this section); and other Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTS), among them East Timor, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), New Caledonia, Western Sahara and a number of small Territories, mainly islands under United Kingdom or United States administration (see Chapter IV of this section). The question of Puerto Rico was also considered.

In July, the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed the need for United Nations assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories and their national liberation movements and deplored the collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with South Africa (resolution 1987/78).

As recommended by the Committee on colonial countries, the General Assembly in December acted on a number of issues. It requested the Committee to continue seeking means to implement the 1960 Declaration and called on States to follow the Committee's recommendations (resolution 42/71), and reaffirmed that the United Nations system should contribute to the implementation of the Declaration (42/75). The Assembly also called for wider dissemination of information on decolonization (42/72).

Administering Powers were requested to continue transmitting information on their Territories to the Secretary-General (42/73). Those Powers were also urged to safeguard the right of colonial peoples to the natural resources of their Territories (42/74).

The Assembly condemned military activities in colonial Territories as detrimental to the interests of the peoples and called for their termination (decision 42/417). States were again invited to make offers of study and training facilities to inhabitants of NSGTS (42/77).

The 1960 Declaration on colonial countries

During 1987, a number of countries and organizations, in letters to the Secretary-General, dealt with specific colonial situations and in that connection reaffirmed the right of peoples to self-determination. The Movement of Non-Aligned Countries dealt with the question also more generally. In their final communique, the Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Movement to the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October)(1) welcomed the gains made in implementing the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples(2) but expressed concern that colonial Powers continued to hinder the struggle for complete elimination of colonialism. In their view, the situations in Namibia, New Caledonia, Puerto Rico, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Micronesia and others were colonial and had to be overcome. In the final communique of the Special Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, Guyana, 9-12 March),(3) the Ministers stressed that the United Nations was the most appropriate international forum for the achievement of the exercise of the right to self-determination of peoples under colonial domination and foreign occupation.

Committee on colonial countries

Various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration were considered by the Committee on colonial countries at two sessions in 1987: 24 February and 17 March; and 3 to 14 August.⁽⁴⁾

Its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance held 15 meetings between 4 March and 17 June and the Sub-Committee on Small Territories held 29 meetings between 12 March and 25 June. On their recommendation, the Committee took action on the implementation of the Declaration by international organizations, on dissemination of information on decolonization and on reports on Territories supplied by their administering Powers and by visiting missions of the Committee.

In November letters to the General Assembly President, Sweden⁽⁵⁾ and Norway⁽⁶⁾ stated that, in accordance with an established practice of rotation between themselves and Denmark, Sweden would relinquish its membership in the Committee as of 31 December 1987, to be replaced by Norway.

Implementation of the Declaration

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/71 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, and 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, as well as 40/56 of 2 December 1985 on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, in particular resolutions 41/41 A and B of 2 December 1986, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling its resolution S-14/1 of 20 September 1986 on the question of Namibia and taking into account the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, and the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted by the Conference,

Condemning the continued colonialist and racist repression of Africans, particularly in Namibia, by the Government of South Africa through its persistent, illegal occupation of the international Territory, and its intransigent attitude towards all efforts being made to bring about an internationally acceptable solution to the situation obtaining in the Territory,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need to take all necessary measures to eliminate forthwith the last vestiges of colonialism, particularly in respect of Namibia where desperate attempts by South Africa to perpetuate its illegal occupation have brought untold suffering and bloodshed to the people,

Strongly condemning the policies of those States which, in defiance of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, have continued to collaborate with the Government of South Africa in its domination of the people of Namibia,

Reiterating its conviction that the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories will be achieved most expeditiously by the faithful and complete implementation of the Declaration, particularly in Namibia, and by the speediest possible complete elimination of the presence of the illegal occupying regime therefrom,

Conscious that the success of national liberation struggles and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the total elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations in Africa,

Noting with satisfaction the work accomplished by the Special Committee with a view to securing the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting also with satisfaction the co-operation and active participation of the administering Powers concerned in the relevant work of the Special Committee, as well as their continued readiness to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Stressing the importance of the participation of the administering Powers in the related work of the Special Committee and noting with concern the negative impact which the non-participation of certain administering Powers has had on the work of the Special Committee, depriving it of an important source of information on the Territories under their administration,

Keenly aware of the pressing need of the newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions on decolonization and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations-including racism, apartheid, those activities of foreign economic and other interests contrary to the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as the violations of the right to self-determination and basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories and continuous policies and practices to suppress legitimate national liberation movements-is incompatible with the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and poses a serious threat to international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms its determination to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the guiding principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering the work during 1987, including the programme of work envisaged for 1988;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system within their respective spheres of competence, to give effect to the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee for the speedy implementation of the Declaration contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Condemns the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration with respect to the colonial Territories, particularly Namibia;

8. Strongly condemns all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear and military fields, with the Government of South Africa and calls upon the States concerned to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

9. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to withhold assistance of any kind from the Government of South Africa until the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence within a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay, has been restored, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the illegal occupation of Namibia by that regime;

10. Calls upon the colonial Powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories, to refrain from establishing new ones and not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States;

11. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide all moral and material assistance to the oppressed people of Namibia and, in respect of the other Territories, requests the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, to take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

12. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) in all Territories that have not yet attained independence and, in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

(b) To make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial Territories that are likely to threaten international peace and security;

(c) To continue to examine the compliance of Member States with resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization, particularly those relating to Namibia;

(d) To continue to pay special attention to the small Territories, in particular through the dispatch of visiting missions to those Territories whenever the Special Committee deems it appropriate, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

(e) To take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations having a special interest in decolonization, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly as concerns the oppressed people of Namibia;

13. Calls upon the administering Powers to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and to permit the access of visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants and urges, in particular, those administering Powers which do not participate in the work of the Special Committee to do so at its 1988 session;

14. Requests the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide or continue to provide to the newly independent and emerging States all possible assistance in the economic, social and other fields;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the various resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands.

In explanation of vote, the United Kingdom said the text did not reflect that for the few remaining British dependencies the colonial era was already at an end, and it was wrong to assume that for them self-determination always had to mean independence—so far, all had chosen to maintain their links with the United Kingdom. Furthermore, the assertion that the activities of foreign businesses were preventing the British dependencies from choosing their own future was contradicted by daily experience. France did not participate in the vote because of the inclusion of New Caledonia on the list of NSGTs (see p. 1029), whereby France would be considered that Territory's administering Power—a designation which France rejected.

Austria and Sweden (the latter on behalf of the five Nordic countries) understood paragraph 4 as referring exclusively to struggle by peaceful means. Japan and the Netherlands also expressed reservations on that paragraph.

Turkey found paragraph 10 insufficiently balanced, while the Nordic countries found it too categorically formulated. Japan and the Netherlands also had reservations on that paragraph, as well as on paragraph 7. Japan's understanding was that paragraph 7 was not intended as a condemnation of all foreign economic activities; it also expressed reservations on paragraphs 5 and 6.

However, Japan and the Netherlands welcomed that selective name-calling and other controversial elements had been avoided.

The Assembly, in resolution 42/74, condemned the activities of foreign economic and other interests in colonial Territories impeding implementation of the Declaration. In resolution 42/75, it reaffirmed that the United Nations system should contribute to the Declaration's full and speedy implementation.

Implementation by international organizations

Report of the Secretary-General. In May 1987,(7) the Secretary-General forwarded to the General Assembly information submitted by 14 United Nations bodies in response to several 1986 Assembly requests-on action taken in implementation of the 1960 Declaration(8) and on action taken or envisaged regarding Namibia(9) (see p. 1025).

Providing information were: United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Office of United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, United Nations Development Programme, World Food Programme, International Labour Organization, Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, International Civil Aviation Organization, World Health Organization, World Bank, International Monetary Fund (IMF), Universal Postal Union, International Maritime Organization and United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

Report of the President of the Economic and Social Council. In a June report,(10) the Council President reviewed his ongoing consultations with the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries on the implementation of the Declaration by the United Nations system. The two presiding officers noted that, in response to United Nations resolutions, several international organizations and agencies had continued to extend assistance, within their spheres of competence, to the peoples of NSGTs, but that the assistance had been far from adequate and needed to be intensified.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted by roll-call vote resolution 1987/78, as recommended by its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council concerning the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,

Having heard the statements of the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions adopted by United Nations bodies on this subject, including in particular General Assembly resolution 41/15 of 31 October 1986 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/48 of 22 July 1986,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions S-14/1 of 20 September 1986 and 41/39 of 20 November 1986 on the question of Namibia and resolution 41/35 of 10 November 1986 on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa,

Deeply concerned that the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples have not been fully achieved as regards the peoples under colonial and alien domination, particularly those struggling in Namibia and South Africa under the repressive rule of the racist regime of Pretoria,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to assist in the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies,

Noting with deep concern that South Africa continues to present a serious threat to international peace and security owing to its practice of apartheid, its illegal occupation of Namibia and its acts of aggression and destabilization against the front-line and neighbouring States,

Strongly condemning the continuing breach by South Africa of the obligations assumed by it under the Charter of the United Nations and its persistent non-compliance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that the denial of full political and civil rights to the majority of the population of South Africa is the result of the continuation of a colonial situation in that country,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their struggle for liberation from the illegal occupation of their country by the racist minority régime of South Africa,

Appreciating that progress has been maintained through the continuing efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the extension of assistance to refugees from southern Africa,

Deeply concerned that the action taken thus far by the organizations concerned in the provision of assistance to the people of Namibia is still far from adequate to meet their urgent and growing needs,

Gravely concerned at the continued collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the continuing efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to Namibia and the national liberation movements concerned, and commending the initiative taken by that organization in establishing channels for closer, periodic contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and United Nations institutions and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements in the formulation of assistance programmes,

1. Takes note of the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council and endorses the observations and suggestions contained therein;

2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of Namibia and South Africa and their national liberation movements;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in particular the World Bank, the International Finance Corporation and the International Monetary Fund, to contribute to the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Namibia, to do everything possible as a matter of urgency to render increased assistance to the people of Namibia, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Council for Namibia, in particular in connection with the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;

5. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in view of the deteriorating situation in South Africa and the acts of aggression and destabilization by the apartheid régime against States in the region, to increase their assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States and to the liberation movements in South Africa;

6. Also requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue to take, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from the Government of South Africa until that Government restores to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal occupation of Namibia by that régime;

7. Further requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa, to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa and to take such measures as will totally isolate the apartheid régime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid;

8. Condemns the persistent non-compliance of the Government of South Africa with United Nations resolutions and decisions, in particular Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 containing the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, and declares illegal and null and void its installation on 17 June 1985 of a so-called interim Government at Windhoek;

9. Deeply deplores the persistent collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of repeated General Assembly resolutions to the contrary, and urgently calls upon the Fund to put an end to such collaboration;

10. Recommends that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity should be included in the agenda of future high-level meetings of the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations within the United Nations system, with a view to strengthening further the existing measures for co-ordination of action to ensure the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial territories;

11. Notes with satisfaction the inclusion of Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, in the membership of various organizations within the United Nations system and urges those which have not yet granted full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia to do so without delay;

12. Notes with satisfaction also the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and United Nations institutions which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those international institutions which have not yet done so to make such arrangements without delay, including arrangements to defray the cost of the participation of those representatives;

13. Recommends that all States should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

14. Urges those specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system which have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress made and action to be taken by those organizations in their implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

15. Also urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions;

16. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution and to the discussion on the subject at the second regular session of 1987 of the Economic and Social Council;

17. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue consultations on these matters with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid and to report thereon to the Council;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution, with particular attention to co-ordination and integration arrangements for maximizing the efficiency of the assistance activities provided by various organizations of the United Nations system aimed at enabling the Namibian people to achieve their independence speedily, and to report thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1988;

19. Decides to keep these questions under continuous review.

Before adopting the draft as a whole, the Council held separate roll-call votes on three of its paragraphs. The seventh preambular paragraph was adopted by 39 votes to 2, with 8 abstentions, and the thirteenth preambular paragraph and paragraph 9 each by 35 to 1, with 13 abstentions. Those paragraphs had been similarly approved by the Third Committee by votes of 28-2-11, 28-1-12 and 29-1-12, respectively.

In explanation of vote, Norway stated it had voted in favour of the resolution but did not regard the situation inside South Africa as a question of decolonization; it had objections to the thirteenth preambular paragraph and operative paragraph 9, which were contrary to the established autonomy of the international financial institutions. Australia and Canada, as well as Denmark (speaking on behalf of the 12 member States of the European Community (EC)), commented similarly.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. In August, the Committee on colonial countries considered the role of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies in implementing the 1960 Declaration, based on the reports of the Secretary-General(7) and the President of the Economic and Social Council,(10) as well as of its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance.⁽¹¹⁾ It endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Sub-Committee, and, on 14 August, adopted a resolution⁽¹²⁾ which became the basis for a draft recommended to the General Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, acting on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/75.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations",

Having examined the reports submitted on the item by the Secretary-General, the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance,

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980, and its resolution 40/56 of 2 December 1985 on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions adopted by the General Assembly on this subject, in particular resolution 41/15 of 31 October 1986,

Recalling also its resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981, S-14/1 of 20 September 1986 and 41/39 of 20 November 1986 on the question of Namibia,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia, the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, and the Luanda declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its extraordinary plenary meetings, held at Luanda from 18 to 22 May 1987,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, and of the resolution on the question of Namibia adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987, as well as of the Declaration on Southern Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization at its twenty-third ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 27 to 29 July 1987,

Aware that the struggle of the people of Namibia for self-determination and independence is in its crucial stage and has sharply intensified as a consequence of the stepped-up aggression of the illegal colonialist régime of Pretoria against the people of the Territory and the increased support rendered to that régime by its allies, coupled with efforts to deprive the Namibian people of their hard-won victories in the liberation struggle, and that it is therefore incumbent upon the entire international community decisively to intensify concerted action in support of the people of Namibia and their sole and authentic representative, the South West Africa People's Organization, for the attainment of their goal,

Concerned that the policy of "constructive engagement" with the apartheid régime of South Africa and the "linkage", as well as economic and military collaboration maintained by certain Western Powers, Israel and other countries with Pretoria, have only encouraged and strengthened the racist régime in its continued illegal occupation and massive militarization and exploitation of Namibia in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Gravely concerned at the continued imperialist and neo-colonial support for South Africa's oppressive and aggressive policies in Namibia and with respect to independent States in southern Africa, in particular the front-line States, as exemplified by the discussions and resolutions of the Security Council,

Conscious of the worsening of the situation in southern Africa because of South Africa's racist policies of oppression, aggression and occupation, which constitute a clear threat to world peace and security, and condemning the continuing breach by South Africa of the obligations assumed by it under the Charter of the United Nations and its persistent non-compliance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the Namibian people and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, and of the peoples of other colonial Territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations-system in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule and in their efforts to achieve and consolidate their national independence,

Deeply concerned that, although there has been progress in the extension of assistance to refugees from Namibia, the actions taken hitherto by the organizations concerned in providing assistance to the people of the Territory through their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, still remain inadequate to meet the urgent and growing needs of the Namibian people,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the necessary measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, 'particularly those relating to the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements,

Expressing its firm belief that closer contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, on the one hand, and the Organization of African Unity and the South West Africa People's Organization, on the other, will help these agencies and organizations to overcome procedural and other difficulties which have impeded or delayed the implementation of some assistance programmes,

Recalling its resolution 41/39 C of 20 November 1986 in which it requested all specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to grant full membership to Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, so that the Council may participate, as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia, in the work of those agencies and organizations,

Expressing its appreciation to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued co-operation and assistance it has extended to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in connection with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Expressing its appreciation also to the Governments of the front-line States for the steadfast support extended to the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, in their just and legitimate struggle for the attainment of freedom and independence despite increased armed attacks by the forces of the racist régime of South Africa, and aware of the particular needs of those Governments for assistance in that connection,

Noting the support given by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/9 A of 4 November 1977,

Deploring the continued co-operation with and assistance rendered to South Africa by certain specialized agencies in the financial, economic, technical and other fields in contravention of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, thus enhancing neo-colonialist practices in the system of international relations,

Gravely concerned at the continued financial support from the International Monetary Fund to the Government of South Africa in disregard of relevant General Assembly resolutions, in particular resolution 37/2 of 21 October 1982,

Bearing in mind the importance of the activities of non-governmental organizations aimed at putting an end to the assistance which is still being rendered to South Africa by some specialized agencies,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item;

2. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute, within their spheres of competence, to the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirms also that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

5. Expresses its concern that the assistance extended thus far by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, is far from adequate in relation to the actual needs of the peoples concerned;

6. Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to withhold from the racist régime of South Africa all forms of co-operation and assistance in the financial, economic, technical and other fields and to discontinue all support to that regime until the people of Namibia have exercised fully their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia and until the inhuman system of apartheid has been totally eradicated;

7. Reiterates its conviction that the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should refrain from taking any action that might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of the domination of the Territory of Namibia by the racist régime of South Africa;

8. Regrets that the World Bank continues to maintain certain financial and technical links with the racist régime of Pretoria and expresses the view that those links should be discontinued;

9. Deplores the financial and other collaboration and condemns the financial support from the International Monetary Fund to South Africa in disregard of repeated resolutions of the General Assembly, and calls upon the Fund to put an end to such collaboration, as the apartheid system implies a serious instability in the South African economy, including its balance of payments, and thus the International Monetary Fund, according to its rules, should not, as long as apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa continue to exist, extend any credits to South Africa;

10. Urges once again the executive heads of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to draw the particular attention of their governing bodies to the present resolution with a view to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial Territories, particularly Namibia;

11. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render or continue to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples struggling for liberation from colonial rule, bearing in mind that such assistance should not only meet their immediate needs but also create conditions for development after they have exercised their right to self-determination and independence;

12. Requests once again the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to provide all moral and material assistance to the newly independent and emerging States so as to enable them to achieve genuine economic independence;

13. Reiterates its recommendation that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements directly or, where appropriate, through the Organization of African Unity, and review and introduce greater flexibility in their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes and projects so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay to help the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

14. Recommends that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity should be included in the agenda of future high-level meetings between the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to strengthening further the existing measures of co-ordination of action to ensure the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories;

15. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress they have made in the implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

16. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to extend, as a matter of priority, substantial material assistance to the Governments of the front-line States in order to enable them to support more effectively the struggle of the people of Namibia for freedom and independence and to resist the violation of their territorial integrity by the armed forces of the racist regime of South Africa directly or, as in Angola and Mozambique, through puppet groups in the service of Pretoria;

17. Welcomes the establishment by the non-aligned countries of the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund and invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate with the Fund in the common objective of providing emergency assistance to the front-line States and national liberation movements in southern Africa in their struggle against the apartheid regime;

18. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those agencies and organizations that have not yet done so to follow this example and to make the necessary arrangements without delay;

19. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to assist in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of colonial Territories, particularly in the development of their economies;

20. Draws the particular attention of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to Security Council resolution 566(1985) of 19 June 1985, in which the Council condemned the racist régime of South Africa for its installation of a so-called interim government in Namibia and declared that action to be illegal and null and void;

21. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connection, should accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

22. Reiterates its proposal, under article III of the Agreement between the United Nations and the International Monetary Fund, for the urgent inclusion in the agenda of the Board of Governors of the Fund of an item dealing with the relationship between the Fund and South Africa, further reiterates its proposal that, in pursuance of article II of the Agreement, the relevant organs of the United Nations should participate in any meeting of the Board of Governors called by the Fund for the purpose of discussing the item, and urges the Fund to discuss its relationship with South Africa at its annual meetings, in compliance with the above-mentioned Agreement, and to report to the Secretary-General of the United Nations on the actions taken;

23. Draws the attention of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/118, in particular to those provisions calling upon the agencies and organizations to render all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and to their national liberation movements;

24. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the provisions of paragraph 14 above, to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity where appropriate, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and organizations, a report on the action taken in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution, since the circulation of his previous report;

26. Requests the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, appropriate measures for co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

27. Requests the specialized agencies to report periodically to the Secretary-General on their implementation of the present resolution;

28. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

Before adopting the resolution as a whole, the Assembly decided, by a recorded vote of 72 to 52, with 27 abstentions, to retain the word "Israel" in the eighth preambular paragraph. The Fourth Committee had similarly approved the word's retention by 72 to 52, with 21 abstentions; the vote was requested by Israel.

Explaining their votes in the Committee, the following objected to the singling out of an individual country: Chile, Colombia, Finland (on behalf of the Nordic countries), France, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Israel, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and Zaire. Kuwait and the Syrian Arab Republic supported the reference to Israel.

A number of countries objected to the references to IMF and the World Bank, calling for respect for their autonomy and the principle of universality of membership. Among them were Canada, Chile, France, Ireland, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Turkey and the United Kingdom.

Finland (for the Nordic countries) stated that IMF loans to South Africa should be prohibited or discouraged, while the USSR said it shared the concern expressed about IMF in the resolution.

Canada and the Netherlands suggested that the agenda item under consideration and the item dealing with activities of foreign economic interests impeding implementation of the 1960 Declaration (see below) should be considered in alternate years.

In resolution 42/71, the Assembly called on the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations to give effect to the recommendations of the Committee on colonial countries, to withhold assistance from South Africa and to provide assistance to the Namibians and the newly independent and emerging States. In resolution 42/72, it requested the agencies to disseminate information on decolonization.

Foreign interests impeding implementation of the Declaration

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. In 1987, the Committee on colonial countries continued to consider the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in colonial territories and South Africa, which, it said, were obstructing the political independence of the indigenous populations. It reaffirmed its concern at those activities and, on 12 August, adopted a resolution(13) which became the basis of a draft recommended to the General Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/74.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa",

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item,

Taking into consideration the relevant chapter of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, and 40/56 of 2 December 1985 on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the item,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming that any economic or other activity that impedes the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories is in direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of all Territories under colonial and racist domination are the heritage of the peoples of those Territories and that the depletive exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests, in particular in Namibia, in association with the occupying régime of South Africa, constitutes a direct violation of the rights of the peoples and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on the question of Namibia, held at New Delhi from 19 to 21 April 1985, the final documents of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, and the relevant resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-third ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 27 to 29 July 1987,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the documents adopted by the Second International Conference on Namibia, held at Brussels from 5 to 7 May 1986, the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, the Seminar on Support for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Effective Application of Sanctions against South Africa, held at Buenos Aires from 20 to 24 April 1987, and the Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its extraordinary plenary meetings, held at Luanda from 18 to 22 May 1987,

Noting with profound concern that the colonial Powers and certain States, through their activities in the colonial Territories, have continued to disregard United Nations decisions relating to the subject and that they have failed to implement, in particular, the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 and 41/14 of 31 October 1986, by which the Assembly called upon the colonial Powers and those Governments that had not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories,

Condemning the intensified activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests that continue to exploit the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories and to accumulate and repatriate huge profits to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants, particularly in the case of Namibia, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning the support that the racist minority regime of South Africa continues to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests that are collaborating with the régime in the exploitation of the natural and human resources of the international Territory of Namibia, in the further entrenchment of its illegal racist domination over the 'Territory and in the strengthening of its system of apartheid,

Strongly condemning the investment of foreign capital in the production of uranium and the collaboration by certain Western and other countries with the racist minority regime of South Africa in the nuclear field which, by providing that regime with nuclear equipment and technology, enable it to develop nuclear and military capabilities and to become a nuclear Power, thereby promoting South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of Namibia, including its marine resources, are the inviolable and incontestable heritage of the Namibian people and that the exploitation and depletion of those resources, particularly the uranium deposits, as a result of their plunder by South Africa and certain Western and other foreign economic interests, in violation of the Charter, of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, are considered to be illegal, that they contribute to the maintenance of the illegal occupation regime and are a grave threat to the integrity and prosperity of an independent Namibia,

Recalling its endorsement of the decision by the United Nations Council for Namibia that, in the exercise of the Council's rights under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, the Council would proclaim an exclusive economic zone for Namibia, the outer limit of which would be 200 miles, and recalling also its statement that any action for the implementation of the Council's decision should be taken in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the people of Namibia,

Taking note of the legal proceedings instituted by the United Nations Council for Namibia in the district court of The Hague against Ureco Nederland V.O.F. and Ultracentrifuge Nederland N.V., as well as against the Government of the Netherlands, as part of its effort to give effect to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,

Concerned about any foreign economic, financial and other activities which continue to deprive the indigenous populations of colonial Territories, including certain Territories in the Caribbean and the Pacific Ocean regions, of their rights over the wealth of their countries, where the inhabitants of those Territories continue to suffer from a loss of land ownership as a result of the failure of the administering Powers concerned to restrict the sale of land to foreigners, despite the repeated appeals of the General Assembly,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of natural and human resources, which impedes the independence of colonial Territories and the elimination of racism, particularly in South Africa and Namibia, and emphasizing the importance of actions by local authorities, trade unions, religious bodies, academic institutions, mass media, solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, in applying pressure on transnational corporations to refrain from any investment or activity in South Africa and Namibia, in encouraging a policy of systematic divestment of any financial or other interest in corporations doing business with South Africa and in counteracting all forms of collaboration with the occupation regime in Namibia,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

2. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power that deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the perpetuation of colonial domination and racial discrimination in the Territories, the foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in the colonial Territories, particularly in Namibia, constitute a major obstacle to political independence and racial equality, as well as to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

4. Condemns the activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial Territories impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

5. Condemns the policies of Governments that continue to support or collaborate with those foreign economic and other interests engaged in exploiting the natural and human resources of the Territories, including, in particular, illegally exploiting Namibia's mineral and sea resources, violating the political, economic and social rights and interests of the indigenous peoples and thus obstructing the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of those Territories;

6. Strongly condemns the collaboration of certain Western and other countries with the racist minority regime of South Africa in the nuclear field and calls upon those and all other Governments concerned to refrain from supplying that regime, directly or indirectly, with installations, equipment or material that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

7. Strongly condemns the collaboration with the racist minority regime of South Africa of certain Western and other countries as well as transnational corporations that continue to make new investments in South Africa and supply the régime with armaments, nuclear technology and all other materials that are likely to buttress it and thus aggravate the threat to world peace;

8. Calls upon all States, in particular certain Western and other States, to take urgent, effective measures to terminate all collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa in the political, economic, trade, military and nuclear fields and to refrain from entering into other relations with that régime in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and of the Organization of African Unity;

9. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

10. Calls upon all States to terminate, or cause to have terminated, any investments in Namibia or loans to the racist minority regime of South Africa and to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with that regime;

11. Requests all States that have not yet done so to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to the racist minority régime of South Africa, which uses such assistance to repress the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement;

12. Strongly condemns South Africa for its continued exploitation and plundering of the natural resources of Namibia, leading to the rapid depletion of such resources, in complete disregard of the legitimate interests of the Namibian people, for the creation in the Territory of an economic structure dependent essentially upon its mineral resources and for its illegal extension of the territorial sea and its proclamation of an economic zone off the coast of Namibia;

13. Reiterates that all activities of foreign economic interests in Namibia are considered to be illegal under international law and declares that consequently South Africa and all the foreign economic interests operating in Namibia are liable to pay damages to the future legitimate Government of an independent Namibia;

14. Calls upon those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that have not yet done so to take effective measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist régime of South Africa;

15. Reiterates that the exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of Namibia by South African and other foreign economic interests, including the activities of those transnational corporations that are engaged in the exploitation and export of the Territory's uranium ores and other resources, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, are considered to be illegal, that they contribute to the maintenance of the illegal occupation régime and are a grave threat to the integrity and prosperity of an independent Namibia;

16. Condemns the plunder of Namibian uranium and calls upon the Governments of all States, particularly those whose nationals and corporations are involved in the mining and processing of Namibian uranium, to take all appropriate measures in compliance with the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, including the practice of requiring negative certificates of origin, to prohibit and prevent State-owned and other corporations, together with their subsidiaries, from dealing in Namibian uranium and from engaging in uranium prospecting activities in Namibia;

17. Appeals to the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which operate the Urenco uranium enrichment plant, to have Namibian uranium specifically excluded from the Treaty of Almelo, which regulates the activities of Urenco;

18. Reiterates its request to all States, pending the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa, to take legislative, administrative and other measures, individually or collectively, as appropriate, in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981, 36/121 B of 10 December 1981, 37/233 A of 20 December 1982, 38/36 A of 1 December 1983, 39/50 A of 12 December 1984, 40/97 A of 13 December 1985, S-14/1 of 20 September 1986 and 41/39 A of 20 November 1986, and encourages those Governments that have recently taken certain unilateral sanction measures against the South African regime to take further measures;

19. Calls once again upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial and trade co-operation with the racist minority régime of South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into any relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, that may lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that Territory;

20. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolution 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of

States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, to ensure, in particular, that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

21. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the colonial Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over their future development, and requests the administering Powers to take all necessary steps to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

22. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to abolish all discriminatory and unjust wage systems and working conditions prevailing in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, a sustained and broad campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign economic interests and, in respect of Namibia, the support they render to the racist minority régime of South Africa;

24. Appeals to mass media, trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to co-ordinate and intensify their efforts to mobilize international public opinion against the policy of the apartheid régime of South Africa and to work for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against that régime and for encouraging a policy of systematic and genuine divestment from corporations doing business in South Africa;

25. Decides to continue to monitor closely the situation in the remaining colonial Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interests of the indigenous peoples, at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories and at speeding their accession to independence and, in that connection, requests the administering Powers concerned to ensure that the peoples of the Territories under their administration are not exploited for political, military and other purposes detrimental to their interests;

26. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

During the explanation of vote in the Fourth Committee, a number of States said that, although they condemned the activities of foreign economic interests impeding the process of self-determination, the draft resolution failed to recognize that such activities were beneficial and even essential to the economic and social development of NSGTS. That argument was put forward by Australia, Canada, Denmark (for the 12 EC member States), Japan, New Zealand, Norway (for the Nordic countries) and Turkey.

Chile, Colombia, Denmark (for EC), Norway (for the Nordic countries) and Turkey objected to the selective singling out of countries by name. Chile, Colombia and Uruguay would have preferred a more balanced text. Denmark (for EC) and Norway (for the Nordic States) drew attention to the importance of respecting the division of competence between the General Assembly and the Security Council.

Botswana pointed out that it could not implement the paragraphs on sanctions against South Africa.

During its consideration of the topic, the Fourth Committee heard a statement by J. A. González-González, a journalist, whose request for a hearing(14) had been approved by the Committee.

In resolution 42/71, the Assembly reaffirmed that activities of foreign economic interests contrary to the United Nations Charter and the 1960 Declaration posed a threat to international peace and security, and called on all States to implement the recommendations of the Committee on colonial countries.

Military activities in colonial countries

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. As requested by the General Assembly in 1986,(15) the Committee on colonial countries in 1987 continued to consider military activities and bases in colonial countries. On 12 August,(16) it approved a decision on the subject, which became the basis of a draft recommended to the Assembly. On 13 August,(17) the Committee Chairman transmitted the decision to the Security Council, drawing particular attention to a paragraph in which the Committee urged the Council to make the arms embargo against South Africa more effective and comprehensive (see paragraph 6 of Assembly decision 42/417, below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in December, adopted decision 42/417 by recorded vote.

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

At its 92nd plenary meeting, on 4 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples' and recalling its decision 41/405 of 31 October 1986 on the question, deplores the fact that the colonial Powers concerned have taken no steps to implement the request that the Assembly has repeatedly addressed to them, most recently in paragraph 10 of its resolution 41/41 B of 2 December 1986, to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones.

"2. In recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, the General Assembly reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of military bases and installations in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories could constitute a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and that it is the responsibility of the administering Powers to ensure that the existence of such bases and installations does not hinder the populations of the Territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration. Furthermore, aware of the presence of military bases and installations of the administering Powers concerned and other countries in those Territories, the Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States and to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Declaration and the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration.

"3. The General Assembly reiterates its condemnation of all military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration that are detrimental to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the colonial Powers concerned to terminate immediately and unconditionally such activities and eliminate such military bases in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Assembly, in particular with paragraph 9 of the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in the annex to Assembly resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980.

"4. The General Assembly declares that the colonial Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction.

"5. The General Assembly notes with serious concern that, in southern Africa in general, and in and around Namibia in particular, a critical situation continues to prevail as a result of South Africa's continued illegal occupation of the Territory and its inhuman repression of the people of South Africa. The racist régime has resorted to desperate measures in order to suppress by force the legitimate aspirations of those peoples and, in its escalating war against them and their national liberation movements, struggling for freedom, justice and independence, the regime has repeatedly committed acts of armed aggression against neighbouring independent African States, particularly Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe, which have caused extensive loss of human lives and destruction of the economic infrastructure. The Assembly condemns in particular the repeated acts of aggression carried out by racist South Africa against Angola. It emphasizes the particular gravity of this violation of the Charter, carried out from illegally occupied Namibia. It declares the destabilization of Angola and the occupation of part of its territory to be an extension of the hegemonistic scheme of apartheid on which the continuing illegal occupation of Namibia is based.

"6. The General Assembly strongly condemns South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia, its persistent acts of aggression and subversion, particularly against Angola and Mozambique, its introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians, its proclamation of a so-called security zone in Namibia, its forced recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, its use of mercenaries to suppress the Namibian people and carry out its attacks against independent African States, in particular the front-line States, its illegal use of Namibian territory for acts of aggression against independent African States and its forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes. The Assembly calls upon all States to take effective measures to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia. It condemns the continued military, nuclear and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain countries, which constitutes a violation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa by the Security Council in its resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, and which poses a threat to international peace and security. The Assembly urges that the Security Council consider, as a matter of urgency, the report of the Committee established under its resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 and that it adopt further measures to widen the scope of resolution 418(1977) in order to make it more effective and comprehensive. The Assembly also calls for the scrupulous observance of Security Council resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 enjoining States to refrain from importing armaments from South Africa. The Assembly is particularly mindful in that regard of a series of resolutions adopted by the Council during 1985, in which the Council strongly condemned the acts of armed aggression committed by the racist régime, and of the relevant documents adopted by the Organization of African Unity, the Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on the question of Namibia, held at New Delhi from 19 to 21 April 1985, the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the Forty-first Session of the General Assembly held in New York on 2 October 1986, the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, and the extraordinary plenary meetings of the United Nations Council for Namibia, held at Luanda from 18 to 22 May 1987.

"7. The General Assembly demands the urgent dismantling of all military bases in the international Territory of Namibia and calls for the immediate cessation of the war of oppression waged by the racist minority régime against the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative. Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of Namibia to achieve their freedom and independence, the Assembly appeals to all States to render sustained and increased moral and political support, as well as assistance in all fields, to the South West Africa People's Organization to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia.

"8. The General Assembly considers that the acquisition of nuclear weapons capability by the racist régime of South Africa, with its infamous record of violence and aggression, constitutes a further effort on its part to terrorize and intimidate independent States in the region into submission while also posing a threat to all mankind. The Assembly condemns the continuing support to the racist regime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields. In this context, the Assembly expresses its concern at the grave consequences for international peace and security of the collaboration between the racist regime of South Africa and certain Western Powers, Israel and other countries in the military and nuclear fields. It calls upon the States concerned to end all such collaboration and, in particular, to halt the supply to South Africa of equipment, technology, nuclear materials and related training, which increases its nuclear capability.

"9. The General Assembly, noting that the militarization of Namibia has led to the forced conscription of Namibians, to a greatly increasing flow of refugees and to a tragic disorganization of the family life of the Namibian people, strongly condemns the forcible and wholesale displacement of Namibians from their homes for military and political purposes and the introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians and declares that all measures by the illegal occupation régime to enforce military conscription in Namibia are null and void. In this connection, the Assembly urges all Governments, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of refugees who have been forced by the apartheid régime's oppressive policies in Namibia and South Africa to flee into the neighbouring States.

"10. The General Assembly, in recalling its resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981 and S-14/1 of 20 September 1986, by which it strongly urged States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in order totally to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally, strongly condemns the continuing collaboration of certain countries with the racist régime in the political, economic, military and nuclear fields. The Assembly expresses its conviction that continuing military collaboration, in addition to strengthening the aggressive military machinery of the Pretoria régime, thereby constituting a hostile action against the people of Namibia and the front-line States, is also in violation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418(1977). It calls for the termination forthwith of all such collaboration as it undermines international solidarity against the apartheid régime and helps to perpetuate that régime's illegal occupation of Namibia.

"11. The General Assembly deprecates the continued alienation of land in colonial Territories for military installations. The large-scale utilization of local economic and manpower resources for this purpose diverts resources that could be more beneficially utilized in promoting the economic development of the Territories concerned and is thus contrary to the interests of their populations.

"12. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, an intensified campaign of publicity with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV).

"13. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-third session."

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Malta, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden.

In explanation of vote, Australia, Canada and Denmark (for the 12 EC member States) pointed out that the decision concerned an issue that was not on the Fourth Committee's agenda. Australia added that it also had substantial difficulties with the text. Canada, Chile and Uruguay criticized what they called the unbalanced language of the text. Turkey made a similar remark, with special reference to paragraphs 2, 3 and 11. Turkey and Canada also objected to the singling out of a specific country.

Norway (for the Nordic countries) said they had reservations about the implicit endorsement of armed struggle. New Zealand said it abstained for the same reasons as in previous years.(18)

In resolution 42/71, the General Assembly called on the colonial Powers to withdraw their military bases from colonial Territories and refrain from establishing new ones.

Information dissemination

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries considered the question of the dissemination of information on decolonization on 6 August 1987,(4) hearing, among other speakers, representatives of the South West Africa People's Organization, the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania. It approved recommendations and adopted reports on information dissemination by its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance, dealing with the Sub-Committee's consultations with the United Nations Secretariat, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Organization of African Unity and national liberation movements.

From the United Nations departments concerned, the Committee requested intensified publicity efforts regarding decolonization, wider dissemination of information on the remaining colonial Territories, strengthened efforts to counteract the campaigns by South Africa and some

Western countries aimed at depicting the national liberation movements as terrorist organizations, and strengthened co-operation with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies.

The Committee urged all States to increase their support to the peoples of Namibia and South Africa and their liberation movements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/72 by recorded vote.

Dissemination of information on decolonization

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization, in particular General Assembly resolution 41/42 of 2 December 1986,

Reiterating the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the aims and purposes of the Declaration and mindful of the continuing pressing need to take all possible steps to acquaint world public opinion with all aspects of the problems of decolonization with a view to assisting effectively the peoples of the colonial Territories in achieving self-determination, freedom and independence,

Noting with deep concern the increased measures of censorship imposed by the racist régime of South Africa upon the local and international media with respect to all aspects of the policies and practices of apartheid and developments in Namibia,

Aware of the increasingly important role being played in the widespread dissemination of relevant information by a number of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization, and noting with satisfaction the intensified efforts of the Special Committee in enlisting the support of those organizations in that regard,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization;

2. Considers it incumbent upon the United Nations to continue to play an active role in the process of self-determination and independence and to intensify its efforts for the widest possible dissemination of information on decolonization, with a view to the further mobilization of international public opinion in support of complete decolonization;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, having regard to the suggestions of the Special Committee, to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal, including publications, radio and television, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization, and, inter alia:

(a) To continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, to collect, prepare and disseminate basic material, studies and articles relating to the problems of decolonization and, in particular, to continue to publish the periodical Objective: Justice and other publications, special articles and studies, including the Decolonization series, and to select from them appropriate material for wider dissemination by means of reprints in various languages;

(b) To seek the full co-operation of the administering Powers concerned in the discharge of the tasks referred to above;

(c) To intensify the activities of all United Nations information centres;

(d) To maintain a close working relationship with the Organization of African Unity by holding periodic consultations and by systematically exchanging relevant information with that organization;

(e) To enlist, with the close co-operation of United Nations information centres, the support of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization in the dissemination of the relevant information;

(f) To continue to provide full press release coverage for all meetings of the Special Committee and its subsidiary bodies;

(g) To ensure the availability of the necessary facilities and services to that end;

(h) To report to the Special Committee on the measures taken in implementation of the present resolution;

4. Requests all States, in particular the administering Powers, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization to undertake or intensify, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and within their respective spheres of competence, the large-scale dissemination of the information referred to in paragraph 2 above;

5. Requests the Special Committee to follow the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands.

The Netherlands expressed reservations on the resolution and the report of the Committee on colonial countries on which it was based, stating that some of the recommendations aimed at a campaign of selective criticism against one particular group of countries. Japan and Sweden (on behalf of the Nordic countries) indicated similar reservations, specifically on paragraph 1. The United Kingdom argued that as the colonial era drew to an end, efforts to spread information about decolonization should diminish-at a time of limited financial resources the United Nations had more pressing priorities.

In resolution 42/74, the Assembly requested the United Nations Secretariat to inform world public opinion about the pillaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign economic interests. In decision 42/417, it also requested the Secretariat to inform world public opinion about the military activities in colonial Territories which were impeding implementation of the 1960 Declaration.

Week of Solidarity with the peoples of Namibia and other colonial Territories

Between 25 and 29 May a series of public information activities was undertaken by the United Nations Secretariat, assisted by United Nations information centres throughout the world, in observance of the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Namibia and All Other Colonial Territories, as well as Those in South Africa, Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights. Events included photo exhibitions, film screenings and NGO briefings. In a statement issued on 22 May, the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries reviewed developments regarding decolonization, particularly in southern Africa, and appealed to all Member States and the United Nations system, as well as NGOs, to mobilize support for those peoples.

Role of NGOs

The Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance held consultations with a number of NGOs, which provided information on their particular areas of concern. NGO representatives supported United Nations activities in that regard, while expressing concern that the decolonization process had not been concluded and that the future political status of a number of Territories had not been decided. In its conclusions and recommendations, adopted by the Committee on 6 August (4) the Sub-Committee stated that NGOS played an important role in decolonization, particularly by disseminating information and by assisting colonial peoples and their liberation movements. It encouraged NGOS to intensify their efforts.

The General Assembly, in resolution 42/72, asked the Secretary-General to publicize the work of the United Nations in decolonization and to enlist the support of NGOS in such dissemination.

Puerto Rico

The Committee on colonial countries in 1987 considered a separate item dealing with its 1986 decision on Puerto Rico.(19) It heard statements by representatives of 27, mostly Puerto Rican, organizations. On 11 August, it adopted a resolution(20) by 9 votes to 1, with 10 abstentions, in which it reaffirmed the right of the Puerto Ricans to self-determination and independence in conformity with the 1960 Declaration and expressed the hope that they might exercise that right without hindrance and with the recognition of the people's sovereignty and full political equality. The text was transmitted to the United States.

In a July report,(21) the Committee Rapporteur stated that, by a September 1986 letter, the United States had noted that Puerto Rico had been removed from the list of NSGTS by the General Assembly in 1953,(22) a decision which had been reaffirmed several times, most recently in 1982.(23) The United States considered that the Committee on colonial countries had no jurisdiction over Puerto Rico.

On 14 August 1987,(24) Cuba transmitted to the Committee a letter signed by 19 of the petitioners heard by the Committee. Attached was what the petitioners said was part of the official evidence documenting allegations of persecution and repression against the patriotic movement of Puerto Rico and a copy of the 31 July judgement by the Superior Court of San Juan, condemning those practices and ordering the Government to stop them.

Other general questions concerning NSGTs

Scholarships

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of NSGTs.⁽²⁾ The report, covering the period from 1 October 1986 to 31 August 1987, listed the following 35 Member States as having over the years offered scholarships: Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, German Democratic Republic, Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Malta, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United States, Uruguay, Yugoslavia. Information about these offers was included in the handbook Study Abroad, published by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The scholarships were for study and training of university standard as well as for post-primary, technical and vocational training of immediate practical value.

In the period under review, 107 students, mostly not inhabitants of NSGTs, requested information and application forms from the United Nations. Applications from NSGTs were transmitted to the offering States and, for information, to the respective administering Power. Namibian students were referred to the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia and to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see p. 181). Applicants who wished to study in Ghana, Poland, the USSR and the United States were requested to apply directly to the Government concerned, and a number of other States offering scholarships also received applications directly.

The Secretary-General informed the Assembly that Bulgaria had made five scholarships available, Czechoslovakia 20, and Cyprus and the Sudan one each. Turkey had awarded two scholarships to Namibians.

Yugoslavia stated in 1987 that in the previous three years an average of 120 students per year had been enrolled in graduate courses on scholarship grants from the Socialist Alliance of the Working People of Yugoslavia. In addition, during 1985/86 and 1986/87 another 150 to 200 members of liberation movements had attended various short-term courses and pursued specializations in Yugoslavia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 42/77 without vote.

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/28 of 31 October 1986,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Considering that more scholarships should be made available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories in all parts of the world and that steps should be taken to encourage applications from students in those Territories,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;
3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories which have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;
4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;
6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Information to the United Nations

States responsible for the administration of Territories which had not attained full self-government

continued to be required, under Article 73 e of the United Nations Charter, to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General information on the Territories' economic, social and educational conditions. In 1986, the General Assembly had requested the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments.⁽³⁾ In a September 1987 report,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he had received information on the following NSGTs:

New Zealand: Tokelau

United Kingdom: Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Turks and Caicos Islands

United States: American Samoa, Guam, United States Virgin Islands

The Secretary-General noted that Spain had informed him in 1976⁽⁵⁾ that it had terminated its presence in Western Sahara and considered itself exempt from any international responsibility in connection with that Territory's administration (see also p. 1032).

On 5 March 1987,⁽⁶⁾ Portugal informed the Secretary-General that it had nothing to add to the information provided in 1979⁽⁷⁾ when it had stated that conditions in East Timor had prevented it from assuming its responsibilities for the Territory's administration (see also p. 1028).

The Committee on colonial countries considered the question of information from NSGTs and on 6 August adopted a resolution⁽⁸⁾ which became the basis for a draft recommended to the General Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/73.

Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and the action taken by the Committee in respect of that information,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General on the question,

Recalling its resolution 1970(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, in which it requested the Special Committee to study the information transmitted to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73 e of the Charter and to take such information fully into account in examining the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 41/13 of 31 October 1986, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII),

Noting with concern that the working papers on Territories, prepared for the Special Committee by the Secretariat, do not, in some instances, contain adequate, timely information, due in large measure to the late transmission of information under Article 73 e of the Charter,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;

3. Requests the administering Powers concerned to continue to transmit to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73 e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in connection with the preparation by the Secretariat of the working papers for the Special Committee on the Territories concerned, to ensure that adequate information is drawn from all available published sources;

5. Requests the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under General Assembly resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/73

4 December 1987 Meeting 92 154-0-3 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/42/726) by recorded vote (134-0-4), 28 October (meeting 22); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/42/23); agenda item 108.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 4th Committee 10, 12-23; plenary 92.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome

and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: France, United Kingdom, United States.

The United Kingdom said it had abstained because the resolution implied that it was for the Assembly to decide when an NSGT had attained a certain measure of self-government; such decisions should be left to the administering Power and the local government.

Visiting missions

In a report to the Committee on colonial countries,(9) the Acting Chairman stated that New Zealand and the United States would continue to receive visiting missions in Territories under their administration, provide the Committee with information on them and participate in the related work of the Committee. The United Kingdom did not participate in the Committee's work in 1987.

On 6 August, the Committee adopted a resolution(10) in which it stressed the need to dispatch periodic visiting missions to colonial Territories and called on the administering Powers concerned to continue to co-operate with the United Nations in that regard. It urged the United Kingdom to permit the access of visiting missions to Territories under its administration and to reconsider its decision not to participate in the Committee's work. The appeal was transmitted to the United Kingdom.

In resolution 42/71, the General Assembly called on the administering Powers to co-operate and to permit the access of visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes of their inhabitants. It urged in particular those administering Powers which did not participate in the Committee's work to do so in 1988.

The Assembly also dealt with the topic in resolutions on individual Territories (see Chapter IV of this section).

Chapter II

International Trusteeship System

On behalf of the Security Council, the Trusteeship Council continued during 1987 to supervise the one Trust Territory remaining under the International Trusteeship System—the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, a strategic territory administered by the United States.

The Trusteeship Council held its fifty-fourth regular session in New York from 11 to 28 May and from 14 to 16 December 1987; it held its eighteenth special session, also in New York, on 13 August.

On two occasions in 1987, at the invitation of the United States, the Council dispatched a visiting mission to observe a plebiscite in Palau, having taken decisions to that effect (resolutions 2185(LIV) and 2187(S-XVIII)).

Of the Council's five members (China, France, USSR, United Kingdom, United States), China did not participate in the Council's sessions.

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

Conditions in the Territory

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, designated as a strategic area and administered by the United States in accordance with the Trusteeship Agreement approved by the Security Council in 1947,⁽¹⁾ comprised three archipelagos of more than 2,100 islands and atolls (about 100 of which were inhabited) scattered over some 7.8 million square kilometres of the western Pacific Ocean, north of the Equator. The Territory, collectively known as Micronesia, had 168,431 inhabitants in 1986.

There were four constitutional Governments within the Territory—the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands and Palau. As a result of referendums, each had its popularly elected legislature and executive head.

In 1986,⁽²⁾ the United States had signed legislation enacting the Compact of Free Association with the Marshall Islands and with the Federated States of Micronesia, which had entered into force in October and November, respectively; the Commonwealth Covenant with the Northern Mariana Islands had also entered into force in November. In February and December 1986, plebiscites were held in Palau to vote on the Compact of Free Association, under the observation of visiting missions dispatched by the Trusteeship Council (see p. 977).

Communication. On 29 January 1987,⁽³⁾ Afghanistan, referring to what it called the arbitrary declaration of the Trust Territory's annexation by the United States, accused the United States of using various islands as testing grounds for nuclear weapons and as military bases.

Trusteeship Council action. In April,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General forwarded to the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council the report by the United States on the administration of the Trust Territory for the year ending 30 September 1986.

On 16 December, the Trusteeship Council adopted its report to the Security Council.⁽⁵⁾ The report, covering the period 1 July 1986 to 16 December 1987, contained conclusions and recommendations prepared by its Drafting Committee (France and the United Kingdom) and adopted by the Council by 3 votes to 1 on 28 May. Recalling a 1986 resolution,⁽⁶⁾ the Council recommended that the process of approval of the Compact of Free Association between Palau and the United States be completed at the earliest possible date. In response to a request from the President of Palau, the Council decided to dispatch a visiting mission to observe a plebiscite on the Compact in June (see p. 977). The Council noted that the people of the Trust Territory, in exercise of their right to self-government, had elected to assume full responsibility for economic, social and educational matters. It also noted the assurances given by the Administering Authority that it would continue to fulfil its responsibilities under the Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement.

In explanation of its negative vote on the Drafting Committee's conclusions and recommendations, the USSR emphasized that they did not reflect the actual situation in Micronesia and were intended to conceal United States annexationist activities. It believed the Committee's political recommendations were designed to ensure that the Palauans yielded their inalienable right to independence, capitulated on their anti-nuclear Constitution and turned their islands into a nuclear hostage of the United States. However, under the Charter, any change in the status of the Trust Territory could be decided only by the Security Council. France and the United Kingdom refuted the USSR allegation that the Committee sought to mislead the international community regarding United States actions. The United States said that the conclusions and recommendations were rooted firmly in the reality of Micronesia and in the processes of self-determination that had taken place.

Consideration by the Committee on colonial countries. The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries)⁽⁷⁾ considered the Trust Territory on 3 and 4 August and adopted conclusions and recommendations made by its Sub-Committee on Small Territories. In considering the question, the Committee had before it a Secretariat working paper on developments in the Territory.⁽⁸⁾

The Committee reaffirmed the right of the people of the Territory to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Charter and the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,⁽⁹⁾ as well as the importance of ensuring that the obligations of the Administering Authority were duly discharged. Noting the Authority's intention to terminate the Trusteeship Agreement, the Committee urged that it be done in strict conformity with the Charter. The Committee called on the Administering Authority: not to take any action which might impede the Territory's unity or the people's rights, in accordance with the Declaration; to reinforce programmes to inform and educate the people about the options open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence; to ensure that the existence of military bases and installations did not hinder the people from exercising that right; and to participate at meetings of the Committee to provide up-to-date information in accordance with its obligations under the Charter. The Committee expressed regret at the lack of co-operation between it and the Trusteeship Council.

Those views were also incorporated in a draft resolution adopted by the Committee for General Assembly action.

In transmitting the conclusions and recommendations to the President of the Security Council on 4 August,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Committee Chairman noted that communications and reports on the Trust Territory were among the matters brought to the Security Council's attention but not discussed in the Council during the period covered by the report of the Sub-Committee on Small Territories; he observed that the Security Council was empowered, under Article 83 of the Charter, to exercise all United Nations functions relating to strategic areas.

General Assembly consideration. On 28 October, the Chairman of the General Assembly's Fourth Committee—following consultations with the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries and with concerned delegations—suggested that no action be taken on the draft resolution recommended by the latter Committee. That suggestion was adopted without objection.⁽¹¹⁾

1986 mission

The Trusteeship Council, by resolution 2186(LIV), adopted on 21 May 1987 by 3 votes to 1, took note of the report of its Visiting Mission to observe the December 1986 plebiscite in Palau, Trust Territory of, the Pacific Islands,⁽¹²⁾ and expressed appreciation of the work accomplished by the Mission on its behalf.

The USSR, which voted negatively, said the report was superficial and lacked serious analysis of the conditions under which the plebiscite took place. Objecting to the Mission, the USSR asserted that the United States was using the United Nations to help turn Palau into a nuclear springboard.

1987 missions

On two occasions in 1987, the Trusteeship Council decided to send a visiting mission to observe a plebiscite in Palau.

Political status of Palau

The Compact of Free Association between Palau and the United States provided for the United States to exercise defence responsibilities for Palau. However, the Compact conflicted with the non-nuclear provisions of Palau's Constitution; local courts had ruled that the Compact needed approval by the same margin required for a constitutional amendment—75 per cent. In three previous plebiscites—February 1983,⁽¹³⁾ and February and December 1986⁽¹⁴⁾—61.4 per cent, 72 per cent and 65.9 per cent, respectively, voted in favour. In none of the plebiscites was the required majority vote obtained.

June

On 4 May 1987,⁽¹⁵⁾ the United States conveyed to the Security and Trusteeship Councils an invitation from the President of Palau to observe a plebiscite to be held there on 31 May and 2 June on the Compact of Free Association.

On 19 May, the United States informed the Trusteeship Council that according to the President of Palau the plebiscite would take place on 23 June.⁽⁵⁾

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, the Trusteeship Council adopted resolution 2185(LIV) by vote.

Arrangements for the dispatch of a visiting mission to observe the plebiscite in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, June 1987
The Trusteeship Council,

Aware of the plebiscite that will be held on 23 June 1987 in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands,

Having been invited by the Administering Authority to dispatch a mission to observe the plebiscite,

Considering that it would be desirable to include in such a mission representatives of countries of the region that are not members of the Trusteeship Council,

1. Decides to send to Palau a visiting mission of approximately two weeks' duration to begin on or about 17 June 1987 and to end as soon as practicable after the declaration of the results of the plebiscite;

2. Further decides that the Visiting Mission to Palau should be composed of not more than four members, the members to be representatives of France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and two countries of the South Pacific region;

3. Directs the Visiting Mission to observe the plebiscite, specifically the polling arrangements, the casting of votes, the closure of voting, the counting of ballots and the declaration of results;

4. Requests the Visiting Mission to submit to the Trusteeship Council as soon as practicable a report on its observation of the plebiscite, containing such conclusions and recommendations as it may wish to make;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and facilities to assist the Visiting Mission in the performance of its functions.

Meeting 1638

3-1

Draft by France and United Kingdom (T/L.1258); agenda item 13.

Financial implications. S-G, T/L.1259.

Meeting numbers. TC 1637, 1638.

The USSR, which voted negatively, considered that United Nations missions were being used to cover up attempts to impose on Micronesia conditions of economic and political pressure by the United States; the people of Palau were being forced to vote again because it was hoped that the answer would be satisfactory to the United States strategic interests.

Report of the Visiting Mission. The Council's Visiting Mission,(16) composed of one representative each from Fiji, France, Papua New Guinea and the United Kingdom, was in Palau from 20 June to 4 July 1987.

The plan to hold the plebiscite on 23 June was upset by a decision taken on 21 June by the Supreme Court of Palau, which ruled that the use of service stations by absentee voters in delivering their ballots to a representative of the Referendum Commissioner outside Palau was illegal. In order to make new arrangements which would comply with the law, the Government postponed the plebiscite to 30 June, the last day allowed by a Palau public law. On 24 June, a revised set of rules and regulations for the plebiscite was published.

The Mission concluded that the plebiscite was conducted fairly and reflected the freely expressed wishes of the people of Palau; that voter turn-out was 76.15 per cent; and that 67.59 per cent of the total votes cast were in favour of the Compact.

August

Following the June plebiscite, Palau enacted legislation authorizing a referendum on 4 August on a constitutional amendment that would permit the Compact to be adopted by a simple majority; it also authorized, if the amendment was successful, another plebiscite on 21 August on the Compact. Upon notification of that legislation, the United States, on 24 July,(17) informed the Trusteeship Council of the 4 August referendum and of its willingness to facilitate a Council visiting mission to observe it.

Unofficial results of the referendum indicated that 70.3 per cent of the electorate had voted. Of those, 73.3 per cent had voted for the proposed constitutional amendment, which also received a majority of votes in 14 of Palau's 16 States. Therefore, Palau arranged a further plebiscite for 21 August. The United States, on 7 August,(18) requested the convening of a special session of the Trusteeship Council to consider dispatching a mission to observe the plebiscite. The Council held its eighteenth special session in New York on 13 August.

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 August, the Council adopted resolution 2187(S-XVIII) by vote.

Arrangements for the dispatch of a visiting mission to observe the plebiscite in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands,
August 1987

The Trusteeship Council,

Aware of the plebiscite scheduled for 21 August 1987 in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, on the Compact of Free Association with the United States of America,

Having been invited by the Administering Authority to dispatch a mission to observe the plebiscite,

Considering that it would be desirable to include in such a mission representatives of countries of the region that are not members of the Trusteeship Council,

1. Decides to send to Palau a visiting mission to begin on or about 17 August 1987 and to end as soon as practicable after the declaration of the results of the plebiscite;

2. Further decides that the Visiting Mission to Palau should be composed of four members, the members to be representatives of Fiji, France, Papua New Guinea and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland;

4. Requests the Visiting Mission to submit to the Trusteeship Council as soon as practicable a report on its observation of the plebiscite, containing such conclusions and recommendations as it may wish to make;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and facilities to assist the Visiting Mission in the performance of its functions.

Trusteeship Council resolution 2187(S-XVIII)

Meeting 1642

3-1

Draft by France and United Kingdom (T/L.1261); agenda item 3.

Financial implications. S-G, T/L.1262.

Meeting numbers. TC 1641, 1642.

The USSR, which voted negatively, felt that such plebiscites were not acts of the freely expressed will of the Palauan people and had nothing to do with genuine self-determination of colonial peoples. It had opposed sending special missions to Palau since they were intended to put the United Nations imprimatur on United States attempts to impose economic and political pressure and a nuclear bridgehead on Palau.

The United Kingdom said the plebiscite represented another opportunity for the people of Palau to express their will regarding their political future.

Report of the Visiting Mission. The Council's Visiting Mission,(19) composed of one representative each from Fiji, France, Papua New Guinea and the United Kingdom, was in Palau from 20 to 25 August.

The Mission concluded that the plebiscite held on 21 August was conducted fairly and that the results reflected the wishes of the people of Palau; voter turn-out was 74 per cent, with 73 per cent of the total votes cast in favour of the Compact.

A legal challenge to the constitutional amendment procedure (see p. 977) was filed by Palauans who supported the anti-nuclear ban. In September, after isolated instances of violence, the suit was dropped.

The United States, on 8 October,(20) transmitted the texts of two addresses by Palauan officials marking final approval by the Palau Government of the Compact of Free Association with the United States.

On 16 December, the Trusteeship Council adopted, by votes of 3 to 1 (USSR), resolution 2188(LIV) and resolution 2189(LIV) concerning the Visiting Missions sent in June and August, respectively. By those texts, the Council took note of the report of the Mission concerned and expressed appreciation of the work accomplished on its behalf.

Hearings

Between 12 and 20 May and on 14 and 15 December 1987, the Trusteeship Council(5) heard 23 petitioners on various issues concerning conditions in, and the future status of, the Trust Territory, and compensation to victims of atomic tests and radiation

On 9 and 12 October,(21) the General Assembly's Fourth Committee heard three petitioners. The United Kingdom and the United States objected to the Committee's consideration of the Trust Territory, contending that it was beyond the Committee's competence to deal with the matter, which was reserved, under Article 83 of the Charter, to the Security and Trusteeship Councils.

Petitions and communications

During its fifty-fourth session, the Trusteeship Council considered and took decisions on 21 written communications and 123 written petitions; and on 13 August during its eighteenth special session, on 44 written petitions and four written communications.(5)

Other aspects of the International Trusteeship System

Fellowships and scholarships

Under a scholarship programme launched by the General Assembly in 1952,(1) 11 Member States had in past years made scholarships available for students from Trust Territories: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, USSR, Yugoslavia. In a report to the Trusteeship Council covering the period from 13 May 1986 to 11 May 1987,(2) the Secretary-General stated that he had requested up-to-date information, receiving responses from three offering States—Czechoslovakia, the USSR and Yugoslavia. The USSR said that no inhabitant from the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands was studying in that country.

In the Council,(3) the USSR asked in which of the 11 States were Micronesian students studying, since none were studying in the USSR despite the offer of scholarships.

The United States said that only one of the States offered courses in English, while some offers stipulated conditions for accepting scholarships, such as membership in liberation movements; there were no such movements in the Trust Territory. Micronesians studied independently in other countries and attended specialized training courses offered by regional and international agencies. Over the previous three to four years, the growth of local post-secondary institutions in the Territory had reduced the need for Micronesians to seek opportunities elsewhere.

The USSR believed that language was not an insuperable problem; hundreds of persons from non-Russian-speaking countries were studying in the USSR. It felt that the problem appeared to be the Administering Authority's policy.

On 21 May,(4) the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report without objection.

Information dissemination

A report of the Secretary-General covering the period from 1 May 1986 to 30 April 1987(5) described the distribution by the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) of United Nations documents, official records and information materials, including audio and video cassettes, throughout the Trust Territory. The Secretary-General noted that the United Nations financial crisis (see p. 1091) had hampered the dissemination of such information. Annexed to the report was a list of United Nations information materials distributed in the Territory.

In the Trusteeship Council, the USSR criticized the report for not providing complete information. It noted that no basic United Nations documents, such as the Charter, Security Council resolutions containing the Trusteeship Agreement or the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, (6) were listed as having been sent. The USSR suggested that copies of information disseminated in the Territory by DPI be made available to Council members for consultation. France and the United Kingdom supported that suggestion.

A DPI representative said that the report was complete; the only information not listed was materials sent from the specialized agencies over which the United Nations had no control. Basic United Nations documents had been sent to the Territory on several occasions and DPI considered it inappropriate to send them again.

The United States said that it received and redistributed to the Territory material sent from DPI, including the 1960 Declaration and materials from other related United Nations organizations.

On 19 May, the Council,(4) acting without objection, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Co-operation with the Committee on colonial countries

At its 1987 annual session, the Trusteeship Council(3) again considered together the attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory and co-operation with the Committee on colonial countries.

During the discussion, the USSR charged the Administering Authority with violating the provisions of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (6) stipulating that all peoples had the right to self-determination, independence and the free establishment of their political status and to pursue freely their economic, social and cultural development; also, in violation of the Charter, the Trusteeship Agreement and the Declaration, the Administering Authority had complicated United Nations monitoring of what it termed the Authority's illegal actions by refusing to co-operate with the Committee on colonial countries.

The United Kingdom considered that the peoples of Micronesia had chosen their future status according to Article 76 b of the Charter—they had freely expressed their wishes and had chosen self-government over independence. Agreeing, France added that Article 83 stated that all functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas would be exercised by the Security Council, with the assistance of the Trusteeship Council.

On 28 May,(4) the Trusteeship Council drew the Security Council's attention to the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Trusteeship Council at the end of its fifty-fourth session concerning the attainment, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, in particular Article 83, of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory and to the statements made by the Council's members on that question.

Co-operation with CERD and the Decade against racial discrimination

In 1987, the Trusteeship Council(3) again considered together the question of co-operation with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) and the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993) (see also p. 727).

During the debate, the USSR claimed that the Administering Authority had been silent on measures being taken to prevent racial discrimination and to protect human rights in the Trust Territory. The USSR hoped that the Council would show greater concern for preventing discrimination in the Territory and would co-operate with CERD by supplying it with information on economic, political, social and constitutional processes there.

On 21 May, the Council(4) took note, without objection, of that statement.

Chapter III

Namibia

The United Nations continued in 1987 to work for the independence of Namibia, the largest Territory remaining under colonial rule. As the Territory's legal Administering Authority, the United Nations Council for Namibia monitored the situation there and participated in formulating United Nations policy on Namibia. The Council's activities were aimed at generating maximum support from the international community for the Namibian people and at ending South Africa's illegal occupation. In addition to representing Namibian interests in international forums and disseminating information on the Territory, the Council held extraordinary plenary meetings at Luanda, Angola, where it adopted a Declaration and Programme of Action, outlining its current and future policies.

Meanwhile, diplomatic efforts towards Namibian independence continued. In February and March, the Secretary-General consulted with representatives of the front-line States (Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe), Nigeria, the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) and South Africa, reporting that South Africa's insistence on making the independence of Namibia conditional on the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola—the so-called linkage pre-condition—had prevented any progress. Meeting in April, the Security Council considered, but did not adopt because of the negative votes of two permanent members, a draft resolution to have the Council call for comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa to force it to co-operate with the United Nations in leading Namibia to independence. Following the Council's meetings, the Secretary-General sent a further mission to the region, which visited South Africa, the front-line States, Nigeria and SWAPO; South Africa maintained its linkage pre-condition. In October, after a ministerial meeting of the Council for Namibia had suggested setting a firm and early deadline for South Africa to co-operate with the United Nations and backing up this call with the threat of sanctions in the case of non-compliance, the Security Council authorized the Secretary-General, in its resolution 601(1987), to proceed to arrange a cease-fire between South Africa and SWAPO.

Five resolutions on Namibia were adopted by the General Assembly in November. In resolutions 42/14 A and B, the Assembly, with wording similar to that of previous years, outlined the United Nations position: South Africa's occupation of the Territory was illegal, the United Nations Council for Namibia was the legal Administering Authority, SWAPO was the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, and Security Council resolution 435(1978) was the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement. The Assembly strongly rejected the linkage pre-condition and urged the Security Council to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

The work programme of the Council for Namibia was approved with the adoption of resolution 42/14 C and, in resolution 42/14 D, the Assembly requested the Council to increase the dissemination of information on Namibia and the liberation struggle. In resolution 42/14 E, the Assembly appealed for increased contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia and urged United Nations organizations to co-operate closely in strengthening its programme of activities. It also allocated $1.5 million from the regular United Nations budget to the Fund.

Assistance to Namibians outside their country continued through various United Nations programmes, financed primarily by voluntary contributions administered by the United Nations Fund for Namibia. In 1987, the Fund spent more than $8.5 million for assistance to Namibia, with States contributing more than $7 million. Additional funding was provided from the regular budget, the United Nations Development Programme and specialized agencies. The Fund operated the Nationhood Programme, financing training programmes and surveys of the economic and social sectors in preparation for independence, and the United Nations Institute for Namibia, involving research, training and planning activities. In addition, the Fund had a programme for educational, social and relief assistance which dealt with the immediate needs of Namibians.

Namibia question

Activities of the UN Council for Namibia. Throughout 1987, the United Nations Council for Namibia continued to act as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, the function assigned to it by the General Assembly in 1967.⁽¹⁾ Its report to the Assembly detailed its activities and developments in Namibia from 1 September 1986 to 31 August 1987.⁽²⁾ Later 1987 developments were contained in its report covering September 1987 to August 1988.⁽³⁾ The Council participated in Security Council meetings on Namibia. It also took part in the proceedings of other United Nations bodies, in particular the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) and the Special Committee against Apartheid. Similarly, it invited those bodies to its own meetings and events. The Council continued to represent Namibia in a number of specialized agencies, other intergovernmental bodies and conferences. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1987/78, noted with satisfaction the inclusion of Namibia, represented by the Council for Namibia, in the membership of various organizations within the United Nations system and urged those which had not granted full membership to the Council to do so without delay. The Council for Namibia also continued to co-operate closely with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and consulted with SWAPO, recognized by the General Assembly as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people.

In the course of the year, the Council was represented at various meetings, including the seventeenth African-American Conference (Gaborone, Botswana, 12-16 January); the International Conference on Solidarity with Women and Peoples of South Africa, Namibia, the Front-line States and Neighbouring Countries (London, 31 January-2 February); a symposium on children in detention in South Africa (Washington, D.C., 25 and 26 June); a briefing on United States foreign policy and South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia (Washington, D.C., 23 July); an international symposium on the United Nations at work-peace, development and human rights (Ottawa, Canada, 17-22 August); and the Parallel Commonwealth Conference on Southern Africa (Vancouver, Canada, 10-17 October).

The Council held a Seminar on Support for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Effective Application of Sanctions against South Africa at Buenos Aires, Argentina, from 20 to 24

April. Thirty-four representatives of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and support groups, trade unionists, parliamentarians, scholars and media representatives participated, as did observers from 32 Member States. The Seminar adopted a Call for Action, recommending urgent measures to be taken by NGOs, parliamentarians and legislators, the media and the Council for Namibia.

In co-operation with NGOs, the Council organized a number of workshops. In Bonn, Federal Republic of Germany (28-30 April), 70 participants from NGOs, national support groups and trade unions, as well as a member of the Parliament, scholars and media representatives, examined the Namibia situation and discussed what should be done by the international community to assist the independence struggle. The participants adopted a programme of action in which they rededicated themselves to increasing their efforts to strive through solidarity actions and through pressure on the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany for an end to South Africa's occupation of Namibia.

In London (11-13 May), two workshops were organized. A one-day conference focused on forwarding political and diplomatic initiatives for Namibia's independence; the other concentrated on ways to increase media coverage of the liberation struggle led by SWAPO. The one-day conference was attended by over 50 participants, including members of Parliament and representatives of NGOs, trade unions, churches and the media. The Chairman, summarizing the consensus of the meeting, called for increased activity and closer co-operation of NGOs and others in support of the Namibian cause. The media and Namibia workshop was attended more than 100 participants, including journalists, editors, church leaders, parliamentarians and solidarity organizations. They adopted proposals for future action, aimed at ensuring adequate public coverage of the Namibia question in the United Kingdom.

A one-day workshop in Tokyo (30 May) informed the Japanese public about Namibia and explored with NGOs possibilities for the Council to organize a non-governmental activity on the question in 1988. The workshop was attended by representatives of academic, diplomatic and NGO communities, as well as journalists specializing in African affairs.

A workshop in Chicago, United States (23-25 July), aimed at mobilizing public opinion in support of Namibia's independence; increasing the dissemination of information on Namibia; intensifying the campaign for sanctions against South Africa; co-ordinating the efforts of NGOs towards a boycott of Namibian products; exposing collaboration with South Africa in all areas; and cam-paing against the United States policy of linkage. The workshop was attended by approximately 140 participants from a variety of organizations, including NGOs, trade unions, national support groups, the news media and universities. The participants adopted a programme of action in which they pledged to intensify their work in support of SWAPO and for the isolation of South Africa.

Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action. As decided by the General Assembly in 1986,(4) the Council for Namibia held extraordinary plenary meetings at Luanda, Angola, from 18 to 22 May 1987, adopting by acclamation the Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action.(5)

In the Declaration, the Council reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence in a united Namibia and that Security Council resolutions 385(1976)(6) and 435(1978)(7) constituted the sole internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the problem, which was a decolonization question, not part of a global East-West confrontation. The Council condemned South Africa's continued occupation of Namibia and all manœuvres aimed at perpetuating it; its militarization of the Territory; its brutal repression of the people; its acts of aggression against Namibia and neighbouring States; the collaboration between Western countries and South Africa, especially military and nuclear; and the policy of constructive engagement. The attempts made by South Africa and the United States to establish a linkage between the implementation of resolution 435(1978) and extraneous issues, particularly the presence of Cuban forces in Angola, was rejected. The Council declared that the illegal occupation of Namibia constituted an act of aggression and reaffirmed that the struggle for its liberation was an international conflict. It supported the armed struggle under the leadership of SWAPO, the people's sole and authentic representative, and emphasized the need for intensified political and material assistance to Namibians, their liberation movement, Namibian refugees and the front-line States. The Council reaffirmed that Namibia's resources were the inviolable heritage of its people and requested all Governments to ensure that the Council's Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia(8) was enforced. It also reaffirmed that adopting comprehensive and mandatory sanctions was the most effective peaceful way of making South Africa comply with United Nations decisions. Measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter were also necessitated by the threat to peace and security posed by South Africa's use of Namibia as a base for launching acts of aggression, destabilization and subversion against independent African States. The Council was concerned that the Security Council was prevented from acting effectively owing to the negative votes of some of its Western members, particularly the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Programme of Action consisted of four parts.

In the first, the Council committed itself to pursue its efforts to ensure that the Namibia question continued to be accorded top priority by the Assembly; to continue efforts to have the Security Council take strong measures to implement its resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978), including the imposition of sanctions; to support action by the Secretary-General to ensure the latter resolution's implementation; and to mandate its President to consult on convening a ministerial-level Council meeting. The Council would endeavour to commit the international community to work to end South Africa's occupation; to denounce and reject all manœuvres whereby South Africa sought to perpetuate its presence; to oppose the establishment of a linkage between Namibia's independence and extraneous issues; to prevent recognition of any administration or entity created by South Africa in Namibia; to recognize officially SWAPO as the people's sole and authentic representative; and, pending action by the Security Council, to adopt individual and collective sanctions against South Africa. For that purpose, the Council would strengthen its contacts with Governments, parliamentarians and NGOs and would try to mobilize them further to pressure certain Western countries to stop co-operating with South Africa; to work for the adoption of legislation to penalize Pretoria for its occupation; to expand the process of foreign disinvestment in South Africa; to organize a boycott of companies operating in Namibia; to oppose all manœuvres aimed at according legitimacy to puppet institutions established by South Africa in Namibia; and to forbid entry into their countries of representatives of the puppets. The Council called on the Federal Republic of Germany and South Africa not to proceed with a reported plan to create a depository for nuclear waste in Namibia; in September, the Federal Republic of Germany denied this allegation (see p. 986). Stressing the importance of the media in promoting a settlement of the Namibia question and noting with concern the low level of interest in certain branches of the media, the Council announced that it would continue its information efforts (see p. 1011).

In the second part, the Council stated that in order to strengthen international support for the SWAPO-led liberation struggle, it would try to maintain and increase the aid provided to SWAPO and to inform the international public about the struggle and the United Nations position on it. The Council also drew the attention of the international community to the difficult living conditions of Namibian refugees and the need for increasing international assistance to meet their needs (see p. 1021). The Council called for the strengthening of the defensive capabilities of the front-line States, renewed its solidarity with the objectives underlying the establishment of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and appealed for generous contributions to the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund (AFRICA Fund), established by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries for peoples and national liberation movements of southern Africa. The Council appealed to the international community to combat the use of Namibia for aggression against independent States and demanded a halt to attempts to link its independence to irrelevant issues.

In the third part of the Programme, concerning action to implement its mandate in Namibia, the Council recalled that the full implementation of its mandate as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia had been prevented solely by South Africa's intransigence. The Council decided to take specific measures (not spelt out in the Programme) to establish its administration in Namibia and to ensure the full implementation of Decree No. 1 (see p. 1019). The Council reaffirmed its decision to proclaim an exclusive economic zone for Namibia with an external limit of 200 sea miles. It also decided to increase its participation in international conferences and inter-governmental bodies.

The last part of the Programme dealt with action to strengthen co-operation and consultation with SWAPO. The Council stated that it would develop initiatives to strengthen co-operation by more regular high-level consultations between the Council and other United Nations bodies and SWAPO; regularly inviting high-level SWAPO delegations to the United Nations; continuing co-ordination in international organizations; and continuing to consult with SWAPO in preparing the Council's work.

In the course of its meetings at Luanda, the Council, on 19 May, commemorated the twentieth anniversary of its establishment and adopted an appeal by acclamation.⁽⁹⁾ Speaking at the meeting were, among others, the Presidents of Angola and Zambia, the Prime Minister of the Congo, the President of the General Assembly and the President of SWAPO.

In the appeal, the Council stated that its creation had marked a decisive new stage in the international community's efforts to achieve Namibia's independence and a fitting support for the liberation struggle. South Africa had brutally suppressed that struggle and delayed the United Nations independence plan. The Council again called for an end to South Africa's occupation because of its repression of the Namibian people and the explosive situation in southern Africa. The United States was urged not to support the linkage policy and the Security Council was again urged to impose sanctions. The Council called for aid of every kind to Namibians through SWAPO and for support for the front-line States. Finally, it recalled the solemn obligation of the international community to promote and defend the inalienable rights of the Namibian people.

Ministerial meeting of the Council. On 2 October, the Council held the first ministerial-level meeting in its history. In the final communiqué,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Ministers condemned South Africa for its occupation, emphasized that Namibia was the direct responsibility of the United Nations and reaffirmed resolutions 385(1976)(6) and 435(1978)(7) as the only basis for a peaceful settlement. They rejected the linkage which made the implementation of those resolutions conditional on the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. Deeply concerned about the repression of the Namibians, the Ministers supported the armed liberation struggle under SWAPO's leadership. They urgently requested the Security Council to set an early date for the commencement of the implementation of resolution 435(1978), no later than 31 December 1987, and requested the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions in the event that South Africa continued its defiance. In that connection, they urged the Security Council to undertake consultations for the composition and emplacement of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG). Pending such action, the Ministers urged all States to apply sanctions individually.

Missions. In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁴⁾ high-level missions were dispatched by the Council for Namibia to India (25-27 May), Japan (28-30 May) and China (31 May-5 June)⁽²⁾ to consult with the Governments on Namibia and on the need for speedy and effective implementation of United Nations resolutions dealing with it.

In India, the Council's delegation was received by the Prime Minister and the External Affairs Minister and held substantive discussions with other senior officials of the Ministry of External Affairs. Both sides reaffirmed the responsibility of the United Nations to bring about Namibia's independence and rejected South Africa's attempts to perpetuate its illegal occupation. India reaffirmed its support for the Namibian independence struggle under the leadership of SWAPO.

In Japan, the delegation met with the Foreign Minister and other senior officials of the Foreign Ministry. The delegation was assured that Japan fully supported the immediate implementation of resolution 435(1978) without pre-conditions. Japan was exercising self-restraint in both travel and trade with South Africa. After the Council delegation raised the issue of the importation of uranium from Namibia by Japanese commercial interests, Japanese officials stated that they were unaware of that and would investigate the matter.

In China, the delegation was received by the Acting Premier and held substantive discussions with the Vice Foreign Minister and other senior officials of the Foreign Ministry. China expressed its firm support for the Council, promising to continue co-operating with it in seeking Namibia's independence, and for resolution 435(1978) as a realistic and feasible basis for a peaceful settlement, rejecting the introduction of extraneous issues. China urged the Council to continue to expose South Africa's destabilization of the front-line States.

Communications. During the year, many countries and organizations sent letters concerning Namibia to the Secretary-General. Nicaragua transmitted a 29 March joint communique by Nicaragua and SWAPO, issued at the end of a visit by the SWAPO President.(11) The Presidents of SWAPO and Nicaragua agreed on all matters of common concern. They condemned South Africa for its failure to comply with Security Council resolution 435(1978),(7) rejected attempts by the United States and South Africa to delay Namibian independence through the policy of so-called constructive engagement, and reaffirmed their support for Council resolution 566(1985),(12) which stated that the decision to install a so-called interim government in Namibia was null and void.

Ghana forwarded a joint communique by the heads of State of Zambia and Ghana issued on 13 March,(13) in which they reiterated their support for the SWAPO-led independence struggle. They, too, reaffirmed that resolution 435(1978) was the only acceptable basis for a solution of the Namibian problem and they unreservedly rejected linking independence with the question of Cuban troops.

On 23 July,(14) the Netherlands clarified its position on the legal proceedings instituted by the Council for Namibia against Urenco Nederland V.O.F, Ultracentrifuge Nederland N.V. and the State of the Netherlands, in order to halt operations deemed to be in violation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia(8) (see p. 1091). The Netherlands announced its continuing support for the Namibian cause, in particular resolution 435(1978), although the legal proceedings against it would justify a reconsideration of its position with regard to the Council for Namibia.

The Federal Republic of Germany forwarded a statement it made before the Council for Namibia on 9 September,(15) in which it refuted allegations by SWAPO that the Federal Government planned to establish a nuclear waste depot in Namibia. It also pointed out that no private companies intended to export nuclear waste to Namibia and that the Federal Government would in any case prohibit such export.

Madagascar transmitted a message by its Foreign Minister issued on 5 November,(16) stating that he had learned with consternation that South Africa had killed some 150 SWAPO members in southern Angola. In that connection, he took the view that genuine, meaningful implementation of resolution 435(1978) was the best way to restore the fundamental rights of the Namibian people. Madagascar assured the people of Namibia and SWAPO of its total support and militant solidarity.

In an 18 November communiqué from the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs,(17) dealing mainly with military action by South Africa in Angola (see p. 167), Spain called for the cessation of the illegal occupation of Namibia.

In addition to these letters by individual countries, documents relating to Namibia from the following organizations and conferences were sent to the Secretary-General: Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (final communiqué of the Co-ordinating Bureau, New York, 21 August; final communiqué of the meeting of Foreign Ministers and heads of delegation to the forty-second session of the General Assembly, New York, 5-7 October);(18) OAU (statements and resolutions by the Council of Ministers, forty-fifth and forty-sixth sessions, Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 23-28 February and 20-25 July; declarations and resolutions by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government, twenty-third session, Addis Ababa, 27-29 July);(19) Organization of the Islamic Conference (final communiqué and resolutions of the Fifth Summit Conference, Kuwait, 26-29 January);(20) Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Vancouver, Canada, 13-17 October);(21) and Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference (Amman, Jordan, 8-11 November).(22) The documents of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries were forwarded by Zimbabwe, those of OAU by Madagascar and Guinea, and the others by the respective host countries.

The Non-Aligned Movement, OAU, the Islamic Summit and the Commonwealth heads of Government condemned South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, reaffirmed the continuing validity of resolution 435(1978) and demanded its implementation without linking it to extraneous issues. In order to pressure South Africa to co-operate with the United Nations, the Non-Aligned Movement, OAU and the Islamic Summit called on the Security Council to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, whereas the Commonwealth heads stated that if South Africa continued to obstruct Namibia's independence, appropriate measures under the United Nations Charter had to be considered.

The Non-Aligned Movement, OAU, the Islamic Summit and the Arab Summit expressed support for SWAPO and the armed Namibian liberation struggle. In addition, the Non-Aligned Movement condemned South Africa for its use of Namibian territory for committing acts of State terrorism against neighbouring States and for its installation of a so-called interim government. It urged all Governments to ensure that Decree No. 1 for the protection of Namibia's natural resources was enforced and that corporations under their jurisdiction terminated all investments in Namibia.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a September 1987 report (23) forwarded replies he had received from 18 Governments on action taken by them to implement two 1986 General Assembly resolutions. (24)

The Secretary-General in 1987 also reported twice to the Security Council (see below and p. 993).

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries devoted eight 1987 meetings to Namibia, with SWAPO and the Council for Namibia participating. By a 12 August decision,(25) it reiterated that because of non-compliance with United Nations resolutions on Namibia, South Africa had created a situation seriously threatening international peace and security. South Africa was condemned for imposing the so-called interim government and reminded that there were only two parties to the conflict in Namibia: the people, led by SWAPO, and South Africa, which illegally occupied the Territory. The United Nations plan, embodied in Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978), was the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement and the Committee demanded its immediate implementation without pre-condition or modification. In this connection, the Committee rejected attempts to establish linkage with extraneous issues, particularly Cuban forces in Angola.

The Committee appealed to all States to intensify their support for SWAPO and condemned the South African administration for attempting to destroy it.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, in a 19 February resolution on the situation in southern Africa,(26) reaffirmed the right of the Namibian people to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands, and the legitimacy of struggle by all means at its disposal, including armed struggle, against the occupation by South Africa. Condemning the occupation and South Africa's attempts to dismember the territory, the Commission declared that it constituted an act of aggression, a threat to international peace and security and an affront to the United Nations.

In a resolution adopted one week later,(27) on the human rights situation in Namibia, the Commission reiterated its affirmation of the people's right to self-determination and independence, declared that the right could be legally exercised only in accordance with resolutions 435(1978) and 439(1978)(28) and demanded that South Africa co-operate to bring about Namibia's immediate independence. The Commission again condemned South Africa for various political decisions and activities. It strongly urged the Security Council to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions, because of South Africa's refusal to comply with United Nations decisions.

Also on 26 February, the Commission adopted a resolution on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa.(29) The Commission stated that assistance to South Africa constituted a hostile action against the peoples of South Africa, Namibia and the neighbouring States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1987/78, the Economic and Social Council requested the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to render increased support to the people of Namibia, to withhold assistance from South Africa until it restored independence and self-determination to Namibia, and to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of the illegal occupation of Namibia. The Council condemned South Africa's persistent non-compliance with Security Council resolution 435(1978) and declared null and void its installation of a so-called interim government. In resolution 1987/56, on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, the Council urged Governments of home countries of transnational corporations that had not done so to ensure that those corporations did not contribute to perpetuating the illegal occupation.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (April)

On 31 March, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council(30) on developments concerning the implementation of its resolutions 435(1978)(7) and 439(1978)(28) since September 1985, the previous time he had reported on the subject.(31) After recapitulating the events of 1985 and 1986, the Secretary-General stated that he had met on 12 February 1987 with representatives of the front-line States, Nigeria and SWAPO, who informed him that, in the absence of further progress towards the implementation of the United Nations plan, they intended to initiate the convening of the Security Council. Meeting with South Africa on 13 March, the Secretary-General emphasized that resolution 435(1978) remained the only basis for a peaceful settlement. He stressed in particular the need for South Africa to reconsider its position on the linkage pre-condition. South Africa stated its willingness to co-operate in implementing the resolution, provided that a firm and satisfactory agreement could be reached on the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. South Africa was ready to enter into direct talks with Angola on the matter. That position was reiterated at a further meeting on 30 March. Concluding, the Secretary-General again rejected the linkage pre-condition, called for a determined effort by all concerned to emplace UNTAG in Namibia in 1987, and reiterated his commitment to persevere towards attaining independence for Namibia.

At eight meetings from 6 to 9 April, the Security Council considered the situation in Namibia. The Council convened at the request of Gabon, on behalf of the Group of African States, on 25 March,(32) and Zimbabwe, Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement, on 31 March.(33)

Meeting numbers. SC 2740-2747.

The following countries were invited, at their request, to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Bangladesh, Barbados, Burkina Faso, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, India, Jamaica, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Qatar, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zimbabwe. At the request of the Congo, Ghana and Zambia,(34) Theo-Ben Gurirab, Secretary for Foreign Affairs of SWAPO, and Francis Meli, of the National Executive Committee of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), were invited to participate under rule 39a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Also invited under that rule, at the request of Kuwait,(35) as Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, was Ahmed Engin Ansay, the Permanent Observer of that organization to the United Nations. At their own request, invitations under rule 39 were extended to the President of the Council for Namibia, the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid.

A draft resolution(36) was submitted by Argentina, the Congo, Ghana, the United Arab Emirates and Zambia. By the draft, the Security Council would have strongly condemned racist South Africa for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia and its persistent refusal to comply with Security Council resolutions and decisions; reaffirmed the legal and direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and the legitimacy of the Namibian liberation struggle; reiterated that, in accordance with its resolutions 539(1983)(37) and 566(1985),(12) Namibian independence could not be made conditional upon issues totally alien to resolution 435(1978);(7) called on those countries insisting on extraneous and irrelevant issues to desist; reiterated that resolution 435(1978), embodying the United Nations independence plan, was the only internationally accepted basis for peaceful settlement of the question; again condemned the Pretoria regime for its installation of a so-called interim government in Namibia; reiterated that such action was illegal, null and void; called on States not to recognize that entity; and demanded that South Africa rescind that action.

The Council would have determined that South Africa's occupation was a breach of international peace and security and that its refusal to comply with United Nations decisions constituted a serious threat to such peace and security; and that the militarization of Namibia and the repeated attacks from it by South Africa against neighbouring States were grave acts of aggression. The Council would have decided, under Chapter VII of the Charter, to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa. It would have called on States and United Nations specialized agencies to ensure effective implementation of the current and all other Council resolutions on Namibia; urged States not Members of the United Nations to act in accordance with the resolution; established a Security Council committee to monitor its implementation; and called on Member States to report to the Secretary-General, and on him to report to the Council, on its implementation.

On 9 April, the Council voted on the draft, as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Ghana, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela, Zambia.

Against: Germany, Federal Republic of, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: France, Italy, Japan.

aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Owing to the negative votes of permanent members, the draft was not adopted.

The debate was opened by Ghana, speaking as Chairman of the African Group. It said that the purposes of the meeting were to outline the indignation felt by the Group and to reawaken the international community's conscience to the frustration and resentment felt by Namibians; to emphasize that the main obstacle to Namibian independence had been South Africa's refusal to implement resolution 435(1978); and to state that Namibia remained the Council's responsibility. Ghana refused to discuss the presence of Cuban forces in sovereign Angola because that could inadvertently lead some to conclude that the linkage was still recognized as a legitimate precondition. Among the troubling aspects of the delay in Namibia's independence mentioned by Ghana was the continuing plunder of its wealth and natural resources, especially by powerful transnational corporations within the jurisdiction of a number of Member States that professed opposition to South Africa's policy in Namibia. It was the view of the African States that the Security Council should increase pressure on South Africa to end its illegal occupation by imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against it under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The President of the Council for Namibia pointed out that the Secretary-General had reported that all outstanding issues relevant to the United Nations plan had been resolved. The Council for Namibia, therefore, expected the Security Council to end the illegal occupation by South Africa. It attributed the failure to do so to the success of the South African public relations machine, which had gained the admission that, in illegal occupation and continued theft, South Africa was entitled to demand the linkage precondition. It appealed to those Security Council members opposed to sanctions to reconsider their position, because sanctions would be the only peaceful and effective way of bringing about a positive change in South Africa and Namibia.

Mr. Gurirab, of SWAPO, charged those Western States which, in pursuit of their policies aimed at control of access to raw materials and strategic minerals, remained bent on practising the discredited imperialist doctrine. It was sad to note that they viewed Namibia as a treasure-house of strategic minerals. Reviewing the activities of the Western contact group—Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, which negotiated the United Nations plan for Namibia—and developments since its adoption in resolution 435(1978), he stated that in retrospect the whole exercise appeared to have been a carefully contrived stratagem whose real objective was to stop what some members of the group considered an unacceptable and precipitate radicalization of the situation in southern Africa. What had been presented in 1977 as a plan of action to save the oppressed Namibian people had turned out to be a rescue operation contrived to protect the status quo. SWAPO called on South Africa to meet it at the conference table as the first step towards implementation of resolution 435(1978) and urged the Council to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions.

SWAPO'S views on the contact group were echoed by the Congo, which stated that the clearest efforts made by many of the group's members consisted in secretly sending supplies and prohibited military equipment to South Africa or in issuing licences for the production of matériel supposed to be banned from export to South Africa. SWAPO'S allegations regarding the contact group were rejected by the Federal Republic of Germany as untrue and unfortunate. It pointed out that, without the activities of the group, the basis for all further efforts towards achieving Namibia's independence—namely resolution 435(1978)—would not exist.

South Africa said it was ready to implement resolution 435(1978) and bring about internationally recognized independence in the Territory. The only remaining obstacle was the lack of commitment on the withdrawal from Angola of over 40,000 Cubans. Free and fair elections—an important element of the United Nations plan—could not be held in the shadow of the menacing presence of such a major Soviet surrogate force. South Africa recalled that Angola had conceded the principle of the Cuban withdrawal but that it had not taken any concrete steps to that end. Referring to what it called unfounded accusations, South Africa stated that it was assisting the Territory to protect its people against armed attacks from Angolan territory and that SWAPO was given active support by Angolan and Cuban forces; that it made substantial contributions towards the well-being of the people; that it annually provided financial assistance for the functioning of the administration and infrastructure; and that, despite severe droughts, the people had food, their medical needs were cared for and the children went to school. Sanctions would harm the Territory's economy, would deal a blow to the aspirations of its people, would have a negative effect on genuine efforts to resolve the problem and would retard eventual independence. Sanctions would also be debilitating in respect of the resistance of all southern African States against the intervention of foreign elements which did not have the interests of the peoples of southern Africa at heart. South Africa was ready to enter into discussion with southern African leaders. Ultimately it was the people and the leaders of Namibia who had to decide on their country's future. If all other endeavours failed to break the existing deadlock, South Africa and other parties would have to consider alternative means of achieving internationally recognized independence for the Territory.

Angola said that what happened inside its borders with the officially invited Cuban internationalist forces had nothing to do with Namibian independence. Their presence had not been an issue before and during the negotiations that led to the United Nations plan, until South Africa, desperate for excuses, settled for the linkage pre-condition. Angola recalled that in November 1984, while rejecting the linkage, it had presented a platform⁽³⁸⁾ in which it proposed a phased withdrawal of all Cuban forces from the south parallel and the complete withdrawal of South African troops from Namibia. South Africa and the United States, its main supporter, had, however, neglected to undertake any negotiations or actions based on the platform. The menace to free and fair elections had been deliberately misidentified by South Africa; that menace was the armed machinery of the racist régime. In Angola's view, the only real solution that would work towards Namibian independence was sanctions, unless South Africa agreed to the immediate implementation of resolution 435(1978) as it stood.

The United States stated that the South African announcement of 1 August 1986 as the date to commence implementation of resolution 435(1978)—provided prior agreement could be reached on Cuban troop withdrawal⁽³⁹⁾—had offered a critical opportunity to achieve Namibian independence. It regretted that Angola had not responded to that opportunity. In the platform proposal of 1984, the Angolans themselves had accepted the reality that Namibian independence could be achieved only in the context of a Cuban withdrawal from Angola. In the United States view, many United Nations resolutions were unhelpful to achieving the peaceful implementation of resolution 435(1978), because they condemned the linkage despite the Angolan proposal referred to above, because they declared SWAPO the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, which was disputed by many Namibians and flew in the face of democratic principles, because they criticized the United States by name, contrary to established custom in the United Nations, and because they tried to legitimize the armed struggle which was a perilous call to arms in a volatile region. The United States reiterated its opposition to mandatory sanctions, whether in the context of apartheid or Namibia. It believed that each Member State should remain free to enact or alter the policies it deemed most appropriate. Mandatory sanctions would seriously limit the initiative of nations, such as the United States, that sought to bring about South Africa's implementation of resolution 435(1978).

Cuba, rejecting the linkage pre-condition and recalling earlier attempts by South Africa to delay or prevent Namibia's independence, quoted a statement by its President, according to which the gradual withdrawal of 20,000 Cuban fighters defending strategic lines in southern Angola would begin when resolution 435(1978) were implemented, the threats of aggression against Angola had ceased, and the dirty war in Angola and the support for mercenary bands were halted. The remainder of the Cuban military personnel would be withdrawn, unconditionally, only when the sovereign Governments of Angola and Cuba saw fit. In Cuba's view, there remained no other alternative but to apply comprehensive mandatory sanctions to compel South Africa to comply with Security Council decisions.

The United Nations plan for Namibia's independence, as embodied in resolution 435(1978), was unanimously supported by all speakers in the Council's debate. It was regarded as the only internationally accepted way of reaching independence and States felt that it had to "be implemented without any modifications. There was, however, disagreement between the United States and South Africa, on the one side, and the rest of the speakers in the debate, on the other, whether resolution 435(1978) should be implemented with or without pre-conditions. There was further disagreement, between South Africa and some Western States on the one side and the rest of the speakers on the other, whether the introduction of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions would speed implementation of the resolution.

With regard to the linkage pre-condition, Zimbabwe claimed that the Cuban withdrawal from Angola was not, even for South Africa, a necessary condition for granting independence to Namibia. What was really crucial for South Africa was the emergence and survival of an amenable puppet régime in Namibia so that the Territory would continue to serve as a buffer for South Africa. To prove its point, Zimbabwe quoted a statement of the South African President to the effect that if it should become evident that a Cuban withdrawal could not be attained, other possibilities for reaching an internationally acceptable independence would have to be considered. The South African representative had made a similar point in his statement earlier in the debate. Such other possibilities, Zimbabwe continued, could be an illegal, unilateral declaration of independence by the so-called interim government. In Zimbabwe's view, the decision to establish ministries of external affairs and internal security by that entity were unmistakable initial steps in that direction. That view was shared by Ghana and SWAPO.

Many speakers recalled that the Security Council itself in resolution 539(1983)(37) had rejected linkage as an irrelevant and extraneous matter and that it was brought up long after the adoption of resolution 435(1978), although Cuban troops had been in Angola before the United Nations plan had been worked out. France pointed out that because of the linkage question it had suspended its participation in the contact group, whose mandate did not include that issue. Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom, also members of the contact group, rejected linkage as an extraneous question. Uganda regretted that the United States, which during the negotiations that led to the United Nations plan had seemed an honest broker, had prompted South Africa to introduce the linkage with a view to achieving its own strategic objectives; it was unacceptable to barter a people's freedom for strategic objectives of unilateral benefit and interest.

The advisability of imposing sanctions to force South Africa to end its illegal occupation of Namibia was the most contentious issue in the debate. Both groups of countries that had called for the Security Council's convening—the African Group and the Non-Aligned Movement—maintained their position of favouring the imposition of sanctions, with individual States appealing to those permanent Council members opposed to sanctions to change their minds. Zambia called it patronizing and arrogant to say that sanctions would harm the very people they were trying to help, when the body of African opinion continued to call for them. Similarly arrogant was the argument that sanctions would harm the front-line States, since those States had already suffered an estimated $8 billion in economic damage. The idea that sanctions would cause unemployment was grossly exaggerated, since the figures advanced in that argument had been submitted mostly by industrialists who invested in South Africa and the figures had been challenged by academic and research institutes. Also refuted was the argument that sanctions would make white South Africans even more stubborn—no Government, Zambia argued, would want to commit suicide and even the limited action taken by United States banks had produced a flurry of activity. Finally, it had been said that sanctions would increase violence, whereas, on the contrary, it had been the failure of the international community to intervene effectively on the side of freedom and justice that had led liberation movements to embark on armed struggle.

The Sudan stated that the appeal not to impose economic sanctions in order to spare the black population from hardship had no basis. They had been suffering since the beginning of the racist occupation, and the instability which the States of the region were experiencing had been created by South Africa. The Sudan also did not believe that sanctions would delay a peaceful settlement of the problem and widen the vicious circle of violence and terrorism. On the contrary, the main reason for violence was the oppression of the Namibian people and an end to that oppression would mean an end to the violence. Venezuela suggested that the Council, within the context of Article 50 of the Charter and as an exercise in prudent preventive diplomacy, hear the views of the States of the area on the adverse effects that a policy of sanctions against South Africa might have on their respective economies.

Ghana proposed to the opponents of sanctions that they should allow the Council to try comprehensive mandatory ones for a specified period, and if they did not work to abolish them formally; it would be immoral to oppose sanctions and do nothing. Ghana added that sanctions had to be global and mandatory in order not to create possibilities for unscrupulous Governments and companies to rush into areas of trade and business where others had left in deference to the wishes of the international community.

The main reason, for most countries, to advocate comprehensive and mandatory sanctions was the enforcement of a binding Security Council resolution. Others added that sanctions leading to the implementation of resolution 435(1978) were necessary because of the unstable and dangerous situation in southern Africa. Uganda and Bulgaria added that sanctions were also necessary to stop South African aggression against neighbouring States.

Among those not advocating sanctions was Japan, which listed the measures it had taken unilaterally to put pressure on South Africa. It did not extend grants, loans or technical assistance to South Africans in Namibia, it prohibited direct investment in South Africa and Namibia, and no Japanese corporation maintained mining concessions in Namibia. Canada too referred to the strong action it had taken and stated that further measures would be taken if South Africa did not end its illegal practices. France said it had adopted measures in compliance with resolution 566(1985),(12) which contained a list of voluntary sanctions, adding that it did not support comprehensive mandatory sanctions but preferred gradual and limited measures because they were more effective. The Federal Republic of Germany stated that it did not regard general restrictions on economic and commercial relations as appropriate for influencing the South African Government in the desired direction; coercive measures would foster increasing confrontation and hardening of positions regarding Namibia. The United-Kingdom said it would have supported a considerable list of non-mandatory sanctions but that it could not vote for mandatory ones because they would be counter-productive, giving South Africa the excuse to remain intransigent. Italy noted that almost 10 years after the adoption of resolution 435(1978), the case of Namibia required a firmer attitude; before, however, taking recourse to comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, it would have preferred that a further mandate be entrusted to the Secretary-General, accompanied by a specific deadline, at the expiration of which, if the 1978 resolution was not implemented, the sanctions would become operational.

Referring to certain Western members or to some Powers, many speakers criticized their positions. Among them were the Congo, Ethiopia, Ghana, Jamaica, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, the Sudan, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Citing the United States and the United Kingdom, and to a lesser extent the Federal Republic of Germany, were Afghanistan, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, the USSR and Viet Nam. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Viet Nam were among the States that singled out the co-operation between Israel and South Africa.

Many countries criticized South African practices in Namibia. Burkina Faso spoke of thousands of Namibians that had been killed, tortured, imprisoned or driven from their lands. Morocco recalled that South Africa was attempting to impose its model on Namibia, bringing in its wake well-known racial laws, daily attacks on dignity and fundamental human rights, harassment and repression. Mozambique said the situation in Namibia had dramatically worsened, with South Africa turning it into a huge concentration camp, and arbitrary arrests, torture, the wanton killing of defenceless civilians and assassinations were everyday occurrences. Togo said that, dispossessed of land and deprived of political rights, the people of Namibia had for 70 years been subjected to systematic discrimination in education, health care, social services, employment and all other aspects of existence. Angola cited the senseless killing of patriots and freedom fighters in Namibia, the murder of women and children, the denial of fundamental human rights and of basic civil, economic, political and social rights, the daily humiliation of being a prisoner in one's own land and the pain of watching a new generation grow up under apartheid. Other countries that criticized the oppression and discrimination included Algeria, China, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, India, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Pakistan and Yugoslavia.

Another aspect often raised during the debate was the exploitation of Namibia's resources in contravention of Decree No. 1 adopted by the Council for Namibia in 1974.⁽⁸⁾ Barbados said the politics of greed had permitted South Africa to defy the United Nations; the problem of Namibia could be easily defined—it was the systematic and effective application of international finance to the suppression of a people. For the Ukrainian SSR, a main reason for South Africa's refusal to grant independence to Namibia was the wealth to be found there. Speaking of deals between certain Governments and the so-called interim government of Namibia, Nigeria said that the motive for that collaboration was to deplete the enormous resources. Uganda added that South Africa was further emboldened when it saw individual States or transnational corporations joining it in criminal enterprises contravening Decree No. 1, and that it regarded such actions as seals of approval. Guyana called on the Security Council to give its blessing to the Council for Namibia's lawsuit in the Netherlands based on Decree No. 1 (see p. 986) and to United Nations financing for such legal action. Other States that criticized the illegal exploitation of Namibia's resources and economic co-operation with South Africa in general were Angola, Bangladesh, Bulgaria, the Congo, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, the German Democratic Republic, Jamaica, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Qatar, Sri Lanka, Togo, Tunisia, Yugoslavia, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Many countries were concerned about the tense situation in southern Africa in general and the use of Namibia as a staging ground for South African aggression in particular. Senegal said that South Africa had been arrogant enough to use the Territory as a base from which to perpetuate repeated acts of aggression and destabilization against the front-line countries, thereby deliberately violating their sovereignty and territorial integrity. For the United Arab Emirates, South Africa constituted a threat to international peace and security because of its actions. Sri Lanka called on the Security Council to take serious note of the irresponsible and immoral actions of South Africa; because of their proximity, the front-line States were faced time and again with vicious inroads that would lead to social, political and economic chaos for all of southern Africa. Nigeria said that independent African States in the region were being threatened with possible military reprisals because of their support for the legitimate struggle for freedom in Namibia and South Africa; Namibia was used to launch military incursions into Angola. All the front-line States participating in the debate—Angola, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe—condemned South Africa's military activities, as did Algeria, Barbados, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Japan, Mongolia, Morocco, Nicaragua, Senegal, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, the USSR and the United Kingdom.

The Committee on colonial countries, in a decision adopted on 12 August,(25) regretted the Security Council's failure to discharge its responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and security in southern Africa, owing to the vetoes of two of its Western permanent members. The Committee strongly recommended that the Council respond positively to the overwhelming demand of the international community by imposing comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

The OAU Council of Ministers, in a resolution adopted in July,(40) expressed indignation that the Council had been prevented by those vetoes from imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

The Council for Namibia(2) reported that on 18 August key leaders of SWAPO as well as prominent trade union and church officials were arrested in raids conducted by (South African security police in Namibia. They were held under the so-called Terrorism Act, which provided for indefinite detention without access to legal counsel.

On 21 August, following consultations of the Security Council, the President issued a statement on behalf of its members, which read as follows: (41)

"The members of the Security Council express their grave concern over the continuing deterioration of the situation in Namibia resulting from the increasing repression of the Namibian people by South African occupation forces throughout the Territory, including the so-called operational zone in northern Namibia, which has led to the loss of innocent lives, particularly in the last few weeks.

"They condemn all acts of repression of, and brutalities against, the Namibian people, the violation of their human rights and the disregard for their inalienable rights to self-determination and genuine independence. They further condemn South Africa's attempts to undermine the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia.

"They condemn particularly the arrest of five leaders of the South West Africa People's Organization and the repressive measures against student and labour organizations since 18 and 19 August 1987. They demand the immediate release of the detainees.

"They call upon South Africa to put an immediate end to the repression of the Namibian people and to all illegal acts against neighbouring States.

"They recall previous resolutions in which the Council affirmed the primary and direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia.

"They call once again upon South Africa to comply fully with Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978) and to put an end to its illegal occupation and administration of Namibia."

The Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement also met on 21 August in response to those raids and forwarded a final communique to the Secretary-General.(18) It condemned the arrests and detentions and demanded the release of all Namibian political prisoners and the granting of prisoner-of-war status to all captured freedom fighters.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 27 October, the Secretary-General presented a further report to the Security Council.(42) He stated that following its April meetings he had resumed his consultations with South Africa and, referring to disturbing press reports on planned constitutional changes in Namibia, had stressed that any deviations from agreements between the United Nations and South Africa would be in violation of resolution 435(1978). South Africa replied that its President had made it clear to the "interim government" that constitutional steps which might impair South Africa's international obligations were not acceptable. South Africa had reiterated its position on implementing resolution 435(1978)—that position was again rejected. by the Secretary-General. In his report, the Secretary-General also summarized his July discussions with the heads of State and Government of OAU, SWAPO and the Chairmen of the front-line States, OAU and the Non-Aligned Movement.

Further, he reported on a mission he had dispatched during August and September for consultations with South Africa, the front-line States, Nigeria and SWAPO. The mission, headed by Martti Ahtisaari, Special Representative for Namibia, conveyed to South Africa the concerns expressed by African leaders about the delays in implementing the United Nations plan. The Special Representative emphasized that the Secretary-General fully shared those concerns and stressed his position that the presence of Cuban troops in Angola was a separate matter and that Namibia had to be considered as a primary issue in its own right. South Africa was also informed of the Secretary-General's concern regarding various constitutional arrangements envisaged in Namibia. Again, South Africa assured that it would not act in a way that would abrogate its international obligations. However, South Africa stated that Cuban troops in Angola constituted a serious threat to Namibia, making free and fair elections impossible; it remained prepared to discuss the question of their withdrawal, which had to be resolved prior to implementing resolution 435(1978). The mission then briefed the front-line States and Nigeria, as well as SWAPO, on its talks in South Africa, and all expressed support for the Secretary-General's efforts. The Angolan President reaffirmed Angola's commitment to its 1984 platform(38) and the subsequent additions thereto, as a basis for a comprehensive agreement that would ensure Namibia's independence and regional peace and security. He informed the mission that to facilitate a settlement, Angola had updated its platform and had outlined, in co-operation with Cuba, a revised time-frame for the gradual withdrawal of Cuban troops from southern Angola.

The Secretary-General regretted that successive attempts to commence the implementation of the United Nations plan had been blocked by South Africa's insistence on the linkage precondition. He was nevertheless convinced that if the Namibia question was re-examined with realism and sincere concern for the well-being of the Namibians it would be possible to open the way for the plan's implementation. Concerted international action was 'needed to achieve that objective.

The Security Council again took up the question of Namibia at five meetings between 28 and 30 October. It met after requests for its urgent convening had been made by Madagascar, on behalf of the African Group, on 23 October,(43) and Zimbabwe, Chairman of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement, on 27 October.(44) Algeria, Angola, Bangladesh, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan,, Panama, Peru, Senegal, South Africa, Tunisia, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussions without the right to vote.

At the request of the Congo, Ghana and Zambia,(45) Theo-Ben Gurirab, Secretary for Foreign Affairs of SWAPO, and Sally Simelane, of ANC, were invited to participate under rule 39b of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Also under rule 39, the Council invited the following, at their request, to participate: the President of the Council for Namibia, the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries and the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid.

On 30 October, the Security Council adopted resolution 601(1987).

There was once again unanimous agreement during the debate that the United Nations plan for Namibia, embodied in Security Council resolution 435(1978),⁽⁷⁾ was the only way to achieve internationally recognized independence for Namibia. South Africa reiterated its commitment to that resolution and said the only obstacle to its implementation was the presence of Cuban and Soviet military personnel in Angola; it was inconceivable that the conditions provided for in the resolution could be met while that extra-continental force remained. SWAPO used Angola as a springboard for terrorism against the population of Namibia, and South Africa had a responsibility to safeguard the inhabitants from such incursions. With reference to the proposal that the Security Council arrange a cease-fire, South Africa stated that it was not at war with any party in Namibia and the moment SWAPO ceased its violence, the need for action against it would disappear. South Africa continued to make generous financial contributions to the infrastructural development and administration of Namibia and all sectors of its economy were soundly administered and structured to the people's needs.

Opening the debate as Chairman of the African Group, Madagascar regretted that the Council had been unable to compel South Africa to implement the resolutions on Namibia. In the mean time, the Namibians were oppressed and politically dominated, repression, militarization and economic exploitation had reached intolerable levels and the territory of Namibia was used to launch acts of aggression against the front-line States. Madagascar pointed out that at its October ministerial meeting (see p. 985) the Council for Namibia had asked the Security Council to set an early date for the commencement of the implementation of resolution 435(1978)—no later than 31 December 1987—to apply the relevant provisions of the United Nations Charter, including comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, if South Africa continued its defiance, and to undertake consultations for the composition and emplacement of UNTAG.

The President of the Council for Namibia associated that body with the course of action outlined by Madagascar, adding that the next step towards implementing resolution 435(1978) would be the observance of a cease-fire between the parties to the conflict and the emplacement of UNTAG in Namibia to ensure free and fair elections under United Nations supervision and control. Mr. Gurirab, of SWAPO, supported the African proposal and pointed out that at its October ministerial meeting the Council for Namibia had also urged that if the Security Council was unable to adopt concrete measures to compel South Africa to co-operate, the General Assembly should consider the necessary action—a proposal supported by Yugoslavia; as far as the cease-fire was concerned, SWAPO was ready to sign it immediately and to co-operate fully with the Security Council. He also stated that there were two options before the Council: to authorize the Secretary-General to start implementing the 1978 resolution immediately, based on his own conclusions; or, if South Africa again refused to co-operate, to adopt comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against it.

The Congo believed that SWAPO's proposals opened up serious prospects for the Council to extricate itself from the current impasse and, because of that, it was a sponsor of the resolution, even though it did not mention a time-frame or sanctions and was therefore in opposition to the decisions of OAU and the non-aligned summit.

The idea of setting a firm date for implementing resolution 435(1978), together with the threat of sanctions, should South Africa not comply, was supported by many speakers. India reviewed the developments that had led to the long delay in commencing the United Nations plan for Namibia and said that the delay underscored the importance of setting a definite deadline and time-frame. Yugoslavia, too, called for the setting of an early date for the resolution's implementation in order to put an end to the delaying stratagems of South Africa, and, pending Security Council imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions, for voluntary sanctions and measures of boycott and pressure, especially by those countries which co-operated with South Africa. Algeria said the Council had to respond to the persistent appeal of the Namibians and the international community by setting an absolute deadline for implementing the plan, then mandating the Secretary-General to begin the necessary consultations for deploying UNTAG and, finally, mobilizing the necessary means to guarantee that legislative elections were freely held. Cuba felt that the Secretary-General should report before 31 January 1988 on the means of implementing the 1978 resolution and that a strict deadline should be set for South Africa's compliance with the Council's decision. Similar points were made by Zambia and by Zimbabwe, speaking as the Chairman of the Non-Aligned Movement.

The United Kingdom was pleased that the sponsors had not insisted on including elements unacceptable to certain Council members—a view shared by the Federal Republic of Germany—and added that, should the Secretary-General be unsuccessful, the Council would need to reassess the situation and take the action it judged best; the Council in that case would not be obliged to proceed to action under Chapter VII of the Charter. The United Kingdom pointed out that its support of the current resolution did not imply support of those mentioned in the fourth and fifth preambular paragraphs.

The United States stated that the resolution, even without setting a deadline or threatening sanctions, was unrealistic and that it was inappropriate for the Secretary-General to be asked to move to the final procedural steps prior to the establishment of an agreed political settlement. Instead, in order to achieve such a settlement, the United States had been negotiating with Angola and South Africa, which both supported its role as a mediator, and since April it had met with Angola four times. Those discussions, which had helped to clarify what steps had to be taken for an agreement to be reached, were continuing. Such bilateral negotiations, however, were rejected as irrelevant by Zimbabwe, speaking for the Non-Aligned Movement.

The linkage pre-condition was again widely rejected. The President of the Council for Namibia reiterated its position that the Cuban forces were in Angola at the invitation of that Government and South Africa was in Namibia illegally; the linkage was being sustained for commercial gains. Angola, Cuba, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe pointed out that the linkage was brought up only in 1982, although in 1978, when the United Nations plan for Namibia was negotiated, Cuban troops were already in Angola. Angola, Argentina, China, Jamaica, Kuwait, Venezuela and Zimbabwe recalled that the linkage had been rejected by the Security Council itself in resolution 539(1983).⁽³⁷⁾ Angola reiterated that while it rejected the linkage in principle, it nevertheless, in an attempt to move forward, had presented its platform proposal in late 1984,⁽³⁸⁾ which, if accepted, could bring about conditions leading to Namibian independence.

Besides South Africa, the only country supporting the linkage pre-condition was the United States, which stated that a meaningful and lasting agreement on Namibia's future could be achieved only if the security concerns of both South Africa and Angola were addressed. It was difficult to call the presence of Cuban troops in Angola irrelevant when Angola itself, in its platform proposal, had specifically addressed that issue, although in the view of the United States it had done so inadequately.

The imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions was seen as the most promising way to compel South Africa to co-operate with the United Nations in the implementation of resolution 435(1978). Among the countries calling for such action were Angola, Argentina, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, the Congo, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, India, Jamaica, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua, Peru, Senegal, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe. Senegal and Yugoslavia called on States to impose voluntary sanctions until the Security Council made them comprehensive and mandatory. Cuba pointed out that those who argued that sanctions would not work had used them against Cuba and Nicaragua. The Ukrainian SSR suggested that until comprehensive mandatory sanctions were adopted, other measures like an oil embargo could be useful; it suggested making the voluntary measures contained in Council resolution 566(1985)⁽¹²⁾ mandatory.

Many countries expressed concern over the oppression of the Namibians. Bulgaria said the year had witnessed a rapid deterioration of the situation, owing to the mounting brutalities, including the massacre of children and adults, the bombing of houses, schools and hospitals, the destruction of property, attacks on workers' settlements and churches and the arrest and torture of leaders, members and supporters of SWAPO. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, speaking on behalf of the Arab countries, said the Namibians were daily subjected to assassinations, exile, oppression, suffering and arbitrary arrest. Ethiopia stated that the people's daily round was one of terror and fear, with daily arrests, disappearances and detentions the order of the day as South Africa muffled the popular demand for freedom and independence. The USSR drew the Council's attention to the brutality of South Africa and the increase in its acts of violence; its forces were destroying Namibian villages, burning harvests, acting inhumanly against the indigenous population, including women, children, the aged and church and public officials, and arresting and gaoling black workers without trial or investigation. Ghana cited examples of South Africa's harassment of Namibians, based on testimony before the General Assembly's Fourth Committee by the spokesman of the Namibian-based Lutheran World Federation. Other countries that condemned South Africa's oppression in Namibia included Algeria, Angola, Cameroon, Canada, China, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Jamaica, Mozambique, Senegal, Tunisia, Venezuela and Zimbabwe. For its part, South Africa accused SWAPO of conducting an indiscriminate campaign of violence and of employing terrorism as an instrument to usurp power.

Countries from the region, as well as many others, charged South Africa with using Namibia as a base for military action against neighbouring States. Zambia argued that the essence of South Africa's policy was perpetuating white control of political and economic power in South Africa and Namibia, and all its actions, including the destabilization of surrounding countries, were an integral part of the overall plan; while the main target of such aggression had been Angola, none of the independent States of southern Africa had escaped the consequences of South Africa's destabilization, which even included an attempted coup in Seychelles. Mozambique said that Namibia had been systematically used by the occupation authorities for acts of terrorism, aggression and destabilization against neighbouring States, particularly Angola where it had reached unprecedented proportions. Angola itself described the continued aggression by South Africa against Angola and its illegal occupation of parts of southern Angola. Botswana said there could be no question about the commitment of the front-line States to the implementation of resolution 435(1978). It should have been implemented when adopted; every year that had passed since then had been too costly for the front-line States. The United Republic of Tanzania similarly pointed out that South Africa's atrocities were committed in the whole of southern Africa; the destabilization policies caused great loss of life and property damage through methods such as the arming, supporting and financing of armed bandits in Angola and Mozambique.

Among the other countries that referred to and condemned the use of Namibia for aggressive acts were Algeria, Canada, China, Cuba, Italy, Kuwait, Nicaragua, Senegal, Turkey, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United States and Yugoslavia. In South Africa's view, it was the crisis in Angola and the fact that it had attracted the attention of the super-Powers that threatened regional security and stability, South Africa regretted that its appeal for the leaders of southern Africa to enter into discussions to resolve regional differences had fallen on deaf ears.

The exploitation of Namibia's natural resources in violation of the Council for Namibia's Decree No. 1(8) was also discussed. The German Democratic Republic claimed that for the Security Council's Western members it was more important to assure the profits that transnational corporations were extracting than to attain the goal of self-determination and independence for the Namibians. Mozambique reported that among the alarming news from Namibia was that the plunder of its natural resources and the exploitation of its human resources, in collaboration with foreign economic interests, continued unabated. For Burkina Faso, the obvious purpose of South Africa's refusal to grant independence to Namibia was to gain time to pursue its exploitation of the immense and varied wealth. Concern over economic exploitation was also expressed by Angola, Bangladesh, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United Arab Emirates. South Africa pointed out that in fact it continued to make a generous financial contribution to Namibia, which involved a considerable sacrifice on the part of the South African taxpayer.

Countries maintaining relations with South Africa were criticized by several speakers. Cuba, Zambia and SWAPO singled out the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States explicitly. Other countries—among them Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Kenya, the Ukrainian SSR and Venezuela—referred to the major Western Powers, Western States or Western members of the Security Council. Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia criticized the policy of so-called constructive engagement. Cameroon objected to what it called selective name-calling, because it led to vetoes and resolutions without resolve.

SWAPO's position on resolution 601(1987) was reaffirmed in an 11 November letter from its President, forwarded by Zambia.⁽⁴⁶⁾ SWAPO assured the Secretary-General of its readiness to observe an immediate cease-fire, stating that, since all outstanding issues relevant to implementing resolution 435(1978) had been resolved, further procrastination by South Africa was not justified.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 602(1987) adopted in November, the Council, acting after a complaint by Angola against South Africa, strongly condemned South Africa for using Namibia as a springboard for aggression and destabilization of Angola.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly's continuing concern over Namibia was reflected in five 1987 resolutions (42/14 A-E), two of them (42/14 A and B) dealing with the situation there.

On 6 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/14 A by recorded vote.

Situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the Territory by South Africa

18 to 22 May 1987, and the Call for Action adopted by the Seminar on Support for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Effective Application of Sanctions against South Africa, held at Buenos Aires from 20 to 24 April 1987,

Strongly reiterating that the continuing illegal and colonial occupation of Namibia by South Africa, in defiance of repeated resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, constitutes an act of aggression against the Namibian people and a challenge to the authority of the United Nations, which has direct responsibility for Namibia until independence,

Noting that 1987 marks the twenty-seventh anniversary of the formation of the South West Africa People's Organization, the national liberation movement of the Namibian people,

Stressing the solemn responsibility of the international community to take all effective measures in support of the Namibian people in their liberation struggle under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization,

Reaffirming its full support for the armed struggle of the Namibian people, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, and recognizing that 1987 marks the twenty-first anniversary of the launching of the armed struggle by the South West Africa People's Organization against South Africa's colonial occupation,

Indignant at South Africa's persistent refusal to comply with resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976, 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, 439(1978) of 13 November 1978, 532(1983) of 31 May 1983, 539(1983) of 28 October 1983 and 566(1985) of 19 June 1985, and at its manoeuvres aimed at perpetuating its illegal occupation of Namibia and its brutal exploitation of the Namibian people,

Deploring South Africa's continued intransigence and insistence on irrelevant and unacceptable pre-conditions to the independence of Namibia, its attempts to bypass the United Nations and its designs aimed at perpetuating its illegal occupation of the Territory through the establishment of puppet political institutions,

Deeply concerned at racist South Africa's increasing militarization of Namibia, the forced conscription of Namibians, the creation of tribal armies, including the so-called South West Africa Territorial Forces, and the use of the Territory for acts of aggression against neighbouring States,

Strongly condemning the racist régime of South Africa for developing a nuclear capability for military and aggressive purposes,

Expressing its grave concern at the continued occupation of parts of southern Angola by South African troops, which has been facilitated by the support extended to the racist régime and to bandits of União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola to destabilize Angola,

Expressing its strong condemnation of South Africa's use of Namibian territory as a springboard for its continuing acts of aggression against independent African States, particularly Angola, Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe, resulting in loss of human life and destruction of economic infrastructures,

Reaffirming that the resources of Namibia are the inviolable heritage of the Namibian people and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the illegal occupation regime of South Africa, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, is illegal and encourages the occupation regime to be even more intransigent and defiant,

Deeply deploring the continued collaboration between certain Western and other States and South Africa in the political, military, economic and nuclear fields, in disregard of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council,

Indignant at the continuing arbitrary imprisonment and detention of leaders, members and supporters of the South West Africa People's Organization, and the killing, torture and murder of innocent Namibians, as well as other inhuman measures by the illegal occupation régime designed to intimidate the Namibian people and to destroy their determination to fulfil their legitimate aspirations for self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia,

Strongly condemning the racist régime of South Africa for its intensified repression, arrest and detention or murder of the Namibian people, including children and elderly people, leaders and supporters of the South West Africa People's Organization,

Noting with grave concern that the Security Council has been prevented, on account of the vetoes cast by two of its Western permanent members, from carrying out its responsibility under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Commending the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence in the discharge of the responsibilities entrusted to it under the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

1. Approves the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

2. Endorses the final communiqué of the ministerial meeting of the United Nations Council for Namibia held in New York on 2 October 1987, and urges the international community to implement it;

3. Also endorses the Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Luanda from 18 to 22 May 1987, and urges the international community to implement them;

4. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and as recognized by the General Assembly in its resolutions 1514(XV) and 2145(XXI), and in subsequent resolutions of the Assembly relating to Namibia, as well as the legitimacy of their struggle by all the means at their disposal, including armed struggle, against the illegal occupation of their territory by South Africa;

5. Strongly condemns the South African regime for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia in defiance of the resolutions of the United Nations relating to Namibia;

6. Declares that South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia constitutes an act of aggression against the Namibian people in terms of the Definition of Aggression contained in General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, and supports the armed struggle of the Namibian people, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, to repel South Africa's aggression and to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

7. Declares also that the liberation struggle in Namibia is a conflict of an international character in terms of article 1, paragraph 4, of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and, in this regard, demands that the Conventions and Additional Protocol I be applied by South Africa, and in particular that all captured freedom fighters be accorded prisoner-of-war status as called for by the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and the Additional Protocol thereto;

8. Reiterates that, in accordance with its resolution 2145(XXI), Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and national independence are achieved in the Territory and, for this reason, reaffirms the mandate given to the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence under its resolution 2248(S-V) and subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly;

9. Reaffirms its decision that the United Nations Council for Namibia, in fulfilment of its mandate, and in view of racist South Africa's arrogant refusal to withdraw from the Territory, should proceed to establish its administration in Namibia and calls for the early implementation of this provision, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 41/39 A of 20 November 1986 and S-14/1;

10. Also reaffirms that the South West Africa People's Organization, the national liberation movement of Namibia, is the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people;

11. Further reaffirms that the genuine independence of Namibia can be achieved only with the direct and full participation of the South West Africa People's Organization in all efforts to implement the resolutions of the United Nations relating to Namibia;

12. Solemnly reaffirms that Namibia's accession to independence must be with its territorial integrity intact, including Walvis Bay, the Penguin Islands and other offshore islands, and reiterates that, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations, in particular Security Council resolution 432(1978) of 27 July 1978 and General Assembly resolutions S-9/2 of 3 May 1978 and 35/227 A of 6 March 1981, any attempt by South Africa to annex them is, therefore, illegal, null and void;

13. Calls upon the Security Council to declare categorically that Walvis Bay is an integral part of Namibia and that the question should not be left as a matter for negotiation between an independent Namibia and South Africa;

14. Commends the South West Africa People's Organization for its continued intensification of the struggle on all fronts, including the armed struggle, and for its commitment to embrace all Namibian patriots in an effort further to strengthen national unity so as to ensure the territorial integrity and sovereignty of a united Namibia, and welcomes the consolidation of unity in action by the patriotic forces in Namibia under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, during the critical phase of their struggle for national and social liberation;

15. Reaffirms its solidarity with, and support for, the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, and pays tribute to that organization for the sacrifices that it has made in the field of battle and also for the spirit of statesmanship, co-operation and far-sightedness which it has displayed in the political and diplomatic arena despite the most extreme provocations on the part of the racist Pretoria régime;

16. Further commends the people of Namibia who, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, have intensified their struggle at all levels, as clearly demonstrated by the combined actions of workers, youth, students and parents, as well as churches and other professional organizations, demanding the immediate and unconditional implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978);

17. Reaffirms that the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, embodied in Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978), is the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question and demands its immediate implementation without pre-condition or modification;

18. Strongly condemns South Africa for obstructing the implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations, in particular Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 439(1978), 532(1983), 539(1983) and 566(1985), and for its manoeuvres, in contravention of these resolutions, designed to consolidate its colonial and neo-colonial interests at the expense of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people for genuine self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

19. Expresses its dismay at the failure to date of the Security Council to discharge effectively its responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and security in southern Africa, owing to the vetoes of two of its Western permanent members;

20. Urges the Security Council to act decisively in fulfilment of the direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and to take, without further delay, appropriate action to ensure that the United Nations plan, as embodied in Council resolution 435(1978), is not undermined or modified in any way and that it is fully respected and implemented;

21. Reiterates its conviction that racist South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its defiance of the resolutions of the United Nations, its brutal repression of the Namibian people, its acts of destabilization and aggression against independent African States and its policies of apartheid constitute a threat to international peace and security;

22. Strongly condemns the Pretoria régime for the imposition of the so-called interim government in Namibia on 17 June 1985, declares this measure to be null and void and affirms that it constitutes a direct affront and a clear defiance of the resolutions of the Security Council, particularly resolutions 435(1978) and 439(1978), and further affirms that this manoeuvre by South Africa of creating puppet institutions subservient to the interests of the racist régime is intended to consolidate Pretoria's colonial stranglehold over Namibia and to prolong the oppression of the Namibian people;

23. Denounces all fraudulent constitutional and political schemes by which the illegal racist régime of South Africa attempts to perpetuate its colonial domination of Namibia, and, in particular, calls upon the international community to continue to refrain from according any recognition or extending any co-operation to any régime imposed by the illegal South African administration upon the Namibian people in violation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 439(1978), 532(1983), 539(1983) and 566(1985) and of other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Council;

24. Reaffirms that all such manoeuvres are fraudulent and null and void and that they must be rejected categorically by all States as called for in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council;

25. Declares that all so-called laws and proclamations issued by the illegal occupation régime in Namibia are illegal, null and void;

26. Strongly urges the Security Council to act decisively against any dilatory manoeuvres and fraudulent schemes of the illegal occupation régime aimed at frustrating the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination and national liberation, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization;

27. Reiterates that there are only two parties to the conflict in Namibia, namely, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and the racist régime of South Africa, which illegally occupies Namibia;

28. Further reiterates that Member States must exert all efforts to counter any manoeuvres by racist South Africa and its allies, aimed at circumventing the United Nations and undermining its primary responsibility for the decolonization of Namibia;

29. Strongly rejects and condemns the persistent attempts made by the Pretoria régime and its allies to establish a "linkage" between the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) and extraneous and irrelevant issues, particularly the presence of Cuban forces in Angola, which is a matter to be decided solely by that independent and sovereign State;

30. Declares that such "linkage" is a ploy intended to delay the independence of Namibia and to jeopardize the responsibility of the United Nations for this Territory and constitutes interference in the internal affairs of Angola;

31. Rejects all attempts to distort the question of Namibia by portraying it as part of a global East-West confrontation rather than one of decolonization which must be resolved in accordance with the provisions of the Charter and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

32. Firmly condemns and rejects the policy of "constructive engagement", which encourages the racist régime of South Africa to maintain its opposition to the decisions of the international community on Namibia and to continue its apartheid policy, which is a crime against humanity;

33. Strongly condemns the continuing collaboration between South Africa and certain Western countries in the political, economic, diplomatic, military, cultural and financial fields, and expresses its conviction that such collaboration helps to prolong South Africa's domination and control over the people and Territory of Namibia;

34. Deplores, in this context, the establishment and operation by racist South Africa of the so-called Namibia information offices in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, aimed at legitimizing its puppet institutions in Namibia, in particular the so-called interim government for which the racist régime has been condemned by the Security Council and the international community, and demands their immediate closure;

35. Strongly condemns also the sinister and slanderous campaign of disinformation by the racist régime of South Africa and its agents, including the so-called International Society for Human Rights, against the just struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination and national independence;

36. Notes with appreciation the measures taken by some States, international organizations, parliamentarians, institutions and non-governmental organizations to exert pressure on the racist regime of South Africa and calls upon them to redouble their efforts to force the racist regime to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Namibia and South Africa;

37. Calls once again upon all Governments, especially those that have close links with South Africa, to support, in co-operation with the United Nations Council for Namibia, the actions of the United Nations to defend the national rights of the Namibian people until independence and to isolate the racist regime of South Africa;

38. Urges Governments which have in the past used their veto or cast negative votes in the Security Council in regard to the question of the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa to support and respond positively to the international call to isolate racist South Africa;

39. Calls upon the members of the European Economic Community to strengthen and extend, as a matter of urgency, the economic sanctions which they have imposed against the Pretoria regime, so as to include their application to illegally occupied Namibia;

40. Calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany, as a measure of its recognition of the direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and the United Nations Council for Namibia as the sole, legal Administering Authority for the Territory until independence, to discontinue all programmes of development aid and assistance to illegally occupied Namibia, and urges all States to consult the United Nations Council for Namibia regarding any assistance, in order to ensure that such assistance will not help to prolong the illegal occupation of Namibia by the Pretoria régime and the colonial institutions in the Territory;

41. Strongly condemns South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia, its introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians, its proclamation of a so-called security zone in Namibia, its recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, its use of mercenaries to suppress the Namibian people and to carry out its military attacks against independent African States and its threats and acts of subversion and aggression against those States, as well as for the forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes;

42. Strongly condemns South Africa for its imposition of military conscription of all Namibian males between seventeen and fifty-five years of age into the occupying colonial army, in yet further sinister attempts to suppress the national liberation struggle of the Namibian people and to force Namibians to kill one another, and declares that all measures taken by racist South Africa by which the illegal occupation regime attempts to enforce military conscription of Namibians are illegal, null and void;

43. Strongly condemns the illegal occupation regime of South Africa for its massive repression of the people of Namibia and their liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, in an attempt to intimidate and terrorize them into submission;

44. Strongly condemns the recent escalation of violent repression and victimization of Namibian workers by the racist South African regime and by Western transnational corporations operating illegally in Namibia;

45. Strongly condemns the recent arrests and imprisonment of leaders and members of the South West Africa People's Organization and of trade unions by the illegal racist régime of South Africa and calls for the immediate release of those detained or imprisoned;

46. Demands once again that South Africa immediately release all Namibian political prisoners, including all those imprisoned or detained under the so-called internal security laws, martial law or any other arbitrary measures, whether such Namibians have been charged or tried or are being held without charge in Namibia or South Africa;

47. Demands that South Africa account for all "disappeared" Namibians and release any who are still alive, and declares that South Africa shall be liable to compensate the victims, their families and the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia for the losses sustained;

48. Calls upon Member States and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render sustained and increased support, as well as material, financial, military and other assistance, to the South West Africa People's Organization so as to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia;

49. Urges all Governments and the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of Namibian refugees who have been forced by the oppressive policies of the apartheid régime to flee Namibia, especially into the neighbouring front-line States;

50. Expresses its appreciation to the front-line States and the South West Africa People's Organization for their statesmanlike and constructive attitude in the efforts aimed at implementing Security Council resolution 435(1978);

51. Reaffirms its conviction that the solidarity and support of the front-line States for the Namibian cause continue to be factors of paramount importance in the efforts to bring genuine independence to the Territory;

52. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its utilization of the illegally occupied international

Territory of Namibia as a springboard for perpetrating armed invasions, subversion, destabilization and aggression against neighbouring African States, in particular Angola;

53. Denounces the acts of aggression by the racist régime, against Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe, declares that the policy of aggression and destabilization pursued by Pretoria not only undermines the peace and stability of the southern African region but also constitutes a threat to international peace and security, and calls upon South Africa to cease all acts of aggression against the neighbouring African States;

54. Strongly urges the international community to increase, as a matter of urgency, humanitarian assistance, and financial, material, military and political support to the front-line States so as to enable them to resolve their own economic difficulties, which are largely a consequence of Pretoria's policies of aggression and subversion, and to defend themselves better against South Africa's persistent attempts to destabilize them;

55. Requests Member States urgently to extend all necessary assistance to Angola and other front-line States in order to enable them to strengthen their defence capacities against acts of aggression by South Africa;

56. Welcomes the establishment of the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries for the benefit of the peoples and national liberation movements of southern Africa;

57. Expresses its satisfaction at the progress made so far with respect to the Fund and appeals to the international community to contribute generously to it;

58. Expresses its grave concern at the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the racist regime of South Africa and declares that such acquisition constitutes a threat to peace and security in Africa while posing a danger to all mankind;

59. Condemns and calls for an immediate end to the continuing military collaboration on the part of certain Western countries with the racist régime of South Africa, and expresses its conviction that such collaboration, in addition to strengthening the aggressive military machinery of the Pretoria regime, thereby constituting a hostile action against the people of Namibia and the front-line States, is also in violation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977;

60. Declares that such collaboration encourages the Pretoria regime in its defiance of the international community and obstructs efforts to eliminate apartheid and bring South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia to an end, and calls for the immediate cessation of such collaboration;

61. Calls upon all States to implement fully the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolutions 418(1977), and 591(1986) of 28 November 1986;

64. Calls upon all States to comply with Security Council resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 and to refrain from importing arms, ammunition of all types and military vehicles produced in South Africa;

65. Condemns all collaboration with the Pretoria régime in the nuclear field, and calls upon all States that do so to terminate such collaboration, including refraining from supplying the racist minority regime of South Africa, directly or indirectly, with installations, equipment or material that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium or other nuclear materials or reactors;

66. Reiterates its call upon all States to take legislative and other appropriate measures to prevent the recruitment, training, financing and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia;

67. Endorses the decision taken by the United Nations Council for Namibia and contained in paragraph 59 of the final document adopted by the Council at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Vienna from 3 to 7 June 1985, that it will, in the exercise of its rights under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, proclaim an exclusive economic zone for Namibia, the outer limit of which shall be 200 miles, and states that any action regarding the implementation of that decision should be taken in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, the representative of the Namibian people;

68. Reaffirms that the natural resources of Namibia, including its marine resources, are the inviolable heritage of the Namibian people, and expresses its deep concern at the depletion of these resources, particularly its uranium deposits, as a result of their plunder by South Africa and certain Western and other foreign economic interests, in violation of the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971;

69. Declares that all activities of foreign economic interests in Namibia are illegal under international law and that all the foreign economic interests operating in Namibia are liable to pay damages to the future legitimate Government of an independent Namibia;

70. Calls upon the United Nations Council for Namibia, in pursuance of the relevant provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, to continue to take the necessary steps to compile statistical information on the wealth illegally extracted from Namibia with a view to assessing the extent of compensation eventually due to an independent Namibia;

71. Strongly condemns the activities of all foreign economic interests operating in Namibia which are illegally exploiting the resources of the Territory, and demands that these interests comply with all the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations by immediately withdrawing from the Territory and by putting an end to their co-operation with the illegal South African administration;

72. Declares that, by their incessant exploitation of the human and natural resources of the Territory and their continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits, the foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in Namibia constitute a major obstacle to its independence;

73. Once again requests all Member States, particularly those States whose corporations are engaged in the exploitation of Namibian resources, to take all appropriate measures, including legislative and enforcement action, to ensure the full application of, and compliance by all corporations and individuals within their jurisdiction with, the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;

74. Calls upon the Governments of all States, particularly those whose corporations are involved in the mining and processing of Namibian uranium, to take all appropriate measures in compliance with resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, including the practice of requiring negative certificates of origin, to prohibit State-owned and other corporations, together with their subsidiaries, from dealing in Namibian uranium and from engaging in any uranium-prospecting activities in Namibia;

75. Approves the initiation by the United Nations Council for Namibia of legal proceedings in the domestic courts of States against corporations or individuals involved in the exploitation, transport, processing or purchase of Namibia's natural resources, as part of its efforts to give effect to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;

78. Calls upon all specialized agencies, in particular the International Monetary Fund, to terminate all collaboration with, and assistance to, the racist régime of South Africa, since such assistance serves to augment the military capability of the Pretoria regime, thus enabling it not only to continue the brutal repression in Namibia and South Africa itself, but also to commit acts of aggression against independent neighbouring States;

79. Requests all States which have not already done so, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, to take legislative, administrative and other measures individually and collectively, as appropriate, in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2 and 36/121 B, and its resolution 37/233 A of 20 December 1982;

80. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia, in its implementation of paragraph 15 of General Assembly resolution ES-8/2 and of the relevant provisions of Assembly resolutions 36/121 B and 37/233 A, to continue to monitor the boycott of South Africa, and to submit to the Assembly at its forty-third session a comprehensive report on all contacts between Member States and South Africa containing an analysis of the information received from Member States and other sources on the continuing political, economic, financial and

Strongly urges the Security Council, in view of the persistent refusal by the racist regime of South Africa to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, particularly Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 539(1983) and 566(1985), and; in the light of the serious threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that regime as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter;

Implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978)

The General Assembly,

Indignant at South Africa's persistent refusal to comply with Security Council resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976, 431(1978) of 27 July 1978, 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, 439(1978) of 13 November 1978, 532(1983) of 31 May 1983, 539(1983) of 28 October 1983 and 566(1985) of 19 June 1985 and at its manoeuvres aimed at gaining recognition for the illegitimate groups which it has installed in Namibia and which are subservient to Pretoria's interests, in order to maintain its policies of domination and exploitation of the people and natural resources of Namibia,

Reaffirming the imperative need to proceed, without further delay, with the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) which, together with Council resolution 385(1976), is the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Reaffirming that the only parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and, on the other, the racist régime of South Africa, which illegally occupies the Territory,

Strongly condemning racist South Africa for its continued denial to the Namibian people of the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning racist South Africa for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia and for obstructing the implementation of Security Council resolutions, in particular resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978),

Recalling that the "linkage" of the independence of Namibia with totally irrelevant and extraneous issues, such as the presence of Cuban forces in Angola, has been rejected both by the General Assembly and the Security Council and has been condemned world-wide,

Reaffirming that the Cuban forces are in Angola by a sovereign act of the Government of Angola, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, and that any attempts to link their presence in that country with the independence of Namibia constitute a gross and unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of Angola,

Expressing its dismay at the fact that the Security Council has been prevented by some of its Western permanent members from adopting effective measures under Chapter VII of the Charter against the racist regime of South Africa in the discharge of its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling its call upon all States, in view of the threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa in accordance with the provisions of the Charter,

Commending the South West Africa People's Organization for its preparedness to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and his Special Representative, including its expressed readiness to sign and observe a cease-fire agreement with South Africa, in the implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, as embodied in Security Council resolution 435(1978),

Condemning the racist regime of South Africa for its installation and maintenance of a so-called interim government in Namibia, in violation of Security Council resolutions 435(1978), 439(1978) and 566(1985),

Expressing grave concern at the lack of progress in implementing Security Council resolution 435(1978), as indicated in the further reports of the Secretary-General dated 29 December 1983, 6 June 1985, 6 September 1985, 26 November 1985, and 31 March 1987, concerning the implementation of Council resolutions 435(1978) and 439(1978),

Noting that the Secretary-General has reported that all the necessary conditions for the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) have already been fulfilled,

Gravely concerned at the use of the Territory of Namibia by the racist Pretoria régime as a springboard of aggression against, and destabilization of, front-line States, particularly Angola,

Recalling Security Council resolution 566(1985) by which the Council, inter alia, demanded that South Africa co-operate fully with the Security Council and the Secretary-General in the implementation of that resolution and warned that failure to do so would compel the Council to meet forthwith to consider the adoption of appropriate measures under the Charter,

Recalling its request to the Security Council, in view of the persistent refusal by the racist regime of South Africa to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, in particular resolutions of the Council, and, in the light of the serious threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that regime as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter, in fulfilment of its responsibilities under the Charter and in response to the overwhelming demand of the international community,

Noting with appreciation the world-wide political and diplomatic campaign against the continued illegal occupation of Namibia by racist South Africa, and the growing international support for the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination and national independence, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization,

1. Strongly condemns racist South Africa for obstructing the implementation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 439(1978), 532(1983), 539(1983) and 566(1985) and for its manoeuvres, in contravention of those resolutions, designed to prolong its illegal occupation of Namibia and to consolidate its colonial and neo-colonial interests at the expense of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people for genuine self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

2. Reaffirms the direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia until the exercise by the Namibian people of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence;

3. Reiterates that Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978), embodying the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, constitute the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia and demands their immediate and unconditional implementation;

4. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for the installation of a so-called interim government in Namibia on 17 June 1985, in defiance of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, declares this measure null and void, and reiterates its call upon the international community to continue to refrain from according any recognition or extending any co-operation to any régime imposed by the illegal South African administration upon the Namibian people;

5. Firmly rejects any attempt by racist South Africa to impose an internal settlement in Namibia by means of a unilateral declaration of independence outside the framework of the United Nations plan for the independence of the Territory, embodied in Security Council resolution 435(1978);

6. Strongly condemns attempts by the illegal occupation régime of South Africa to impose a bogus constitution on the Namibian people and its intention to conduct bantustan-type elections in violation of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, and once again declares any such actions to be illegal, null and void;

7. Demands that the racist régime of South Africa immediately rescind the aforementioned illegal and unilateral actions;

8. Further demands that South Africa urgently comply fully and unconditionally with the resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978) and subsequent resolutions of the Council relating to Namibia;

9. Emphasizes once again that the only parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and, on the other, the racist régime of South Africa which illegally occupies the Territory;

10. Strongly rejects all manoeuvres by racist South Africa and its allies aimed at diverting attention from the central issue of the decolonization of Namibia by portraying it as part of an East-West confrontation to the detriment of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people to self-determination, freedom and national independence;

11. Firmly rejects and condemns the persistent attempts by South Africa to establish a "linkage" or "parallelism" between the independence of Namibia and any extraneous and irrelevant issues, in particular the presence of Cuban forces in Angola, and emphasizes unequivocally that all such attempts are designed to delay further the independence of Namibia in accordance with Security Council resolution 435(1978), and that they constitute a gross and unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of Angola;

12. Strongly rejects the policies of "constructive engagement" and "linkage", which have served to encourage the racist regime of South Africa to continue its illegal occupation of Namibia, and calls for their abandonment so that resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia can be implemented;

13. Strongly condemns the use of the veto in the Security Council on 15 November 1985 and 9 April 1987 by some of its Western permanent members, as a result of which the Council was prevented from taking effective measures under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations against South Africa, and calls upon the Western permanent members of the Security Council to support the imposition of its enforcement measures in order to ensure compliance by South Africa with resolutions of the Council;

14. Urgently calls upon the international community to act resolutely against the intransigent stance of the Pretoria régime, and stresses the responsibility of the Security Council concerning the implementation of its resolutions on the situation in Namibia in view of the threat to regional and international peace and security created by the racist regime of South Africa;

15. Urgently requests the Security Council to set a date not later than 31 December 1987 for the commencement of the implementation of its resolution 435(1978), bearing in mind that all the necessary conditions have already been met, and to commit itself to applying the relevant provisions of the Charter, including comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII, in the event that South Africa continues to defy the Council and, in this connection, urges the Council to undertake forthwith consultations for the composition and emplacement of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group in Namibia;

16. Strongly urges all States which have not already done so, pending such action by the Security Council, to impose individual and collective sanctions against racist South Africa;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake consultations with members of the Security Council, in particular its permanent members, with a view to securing a firm commitment on the unconditional and speedy implementation of Council resolution 435(1978) and, to this end, urges the three Western permanent members of the Council to take into account their particular responsibility, as the initiators of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, to ensure its unimpeded implementation;

18. Decides to consider at its next session necessary action in accordance with the Charter, cognizant of the fact that this is a unique instance in which the United Nations has assumed direct responsibility for promoting self-determination, freedom and national independence for Namibia, in the event of the inability of the Security Council to adopt concrete measures to compel South Africa to co-operate in the implementation of its resolution 435(1978) by 29 September 1988;

19. Calls upon all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and other institutions, as well as corporations, non-governmental organizations and individuals, pending the imposition by the Security Council of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions- against the racist regime of South Africa under Chapter-VII of the Charter, to cease all co-operation with that régime in the political, economic, diplomatic, military, nuclear, cultural, sports and other fields;

20. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his personal commitment to the independence of Namibia and for his efforts aimed at the implementation of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, particularly Security Council resolution 435(1978), and urges him to continue those efforts;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

On 9 November,(47), South Africa sent to the Secretary-General a press release issued by its Foreign Minister two days earlier regarding the Assembly's resolution to the effect that South Africa's presence in the Territory was illegal, that South Africa had to remove its administration and that SWAPO was the sole representative of the Territory's people. South Africa found the Assembly resolution in conflict with Security Council resolution 435(1978), which entrusted the South African Government with specific functions and responsibilities during its implementation. It recalled its understanding with the Western contact group (which had negotiated the settlement plan embodied in resolution 435(1978)) that the question of the legality of South Africa's administration of the Territory should be set aside. Furthermore, there was no legal basis to the argument that South Africa's administration was illegal, because there was no binding International Court of Justice judgment supporting that view and the Assembly was not competent to rule in that regard. South Africa doubted that the categorical favouritism and support of SWAPO in the Assembly resolution could be reconciled with assurances given that Council resolution 435(1978) envisaged equal treatment of all the parties in South West Africa.

In explanation of vote, Denmark, speaking on behalf of the 12 member States of the European Community (EC), expressed concern at the inroduction of a number of paragraphs which they felt were of doubtful relevance to the central aim of securing Namibia's independence, thus making unanimous approval of the texts impossible and risking accentuating divisions among Member States. The Twelve could not endorse calls for military assistance to SWAPO or lend their support to the armed struggle in general. They also objected to designating one political group as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people. The Twelve could further not accept that the autonomy of the international financial institutions should be compromised. In their view, the total isolation of South Africa would hinder efforts to secure the implementation of the United Nations settlement plan, and they rejected arbitrary and selective singling out of individual countries or groups of countries. The Twelve confirmed that their respect for the division of competence among the main bodies of the United Nations remained unchanged. The Security Council alone was authorized to take decisions binding upon Member States. Those views were reiterated by EC members Belgium, Greece, Ireland and the Netherlands, speaking on their own behalf. Three other EC States-France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom-stated that their abstentions were because of their membership in the Western contact group and that for the same reason they would not comment on the substance of the current resolutions. The two other contact group members-Canada and the United States-made similar comments. The United States added that the texts contained elements with which it disagreed and against which it had voted in other contexts. Among these it mentioned the designation of SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibians, the concept of armed struggle, the condemnation of the relationship between the implementation of resolution 435(1978) and the withdrawal of foreign forces from both Namibia and Angola, the rejection of the so-called constructive engagement, the call for sanctions and the setting of deadlines for the Security Council's work. The United States recognized as an improvement that the texts did not contain explicitly critical references to itself. The United Kingdom, too, was pleased that the wording was less arbitrary and extreme than in earlier years, but regretted that a few instances of name-calling had remained.

The Federal Republic of Germany regretted that it had been singled out in resolution 42/14 A by being called upon to discontinue all aid to illegally occupied Namibia, pointing out that as a contact group member and for historical reasons, it felt especially committed to the Namibian people. For that reason it had been willing to mitigate, on humanitarian grounds, the people's suffering and to prepare them for independence. It attached great importance to the fact that its assistance programmes were benefiting the non-white population. It stated that it did not recognize the so-called interim government and that the partners on both sides in the development projects were non-governmental agencies, preferably churches, that had to fulfil the condition of political neutrality. Supporting that statement and also objecting to singling out certain Member States were Australia and Turkey. Australia, expressing reservations on the paragraph in question, characterized the language of the draft resolutions as unduly colourful - even polemical - and directed against certain States, even if not directly named. None the less, it welcomed the fact that direct references were not included and believed this to be an encouraging trend. Objections against the singling out of certain Member States or groups of States were also raised by Austria, Belgium, Chile, Ireland, Malawi, Malta and New Zealand and by Sweden on behalf of the five Nordic countries.

Guatemala argued that all conflicts should be settled rationally and peacefully. Austria believed that endorsements of armed struggle and calls for military assistance contradicted the principles of the Charter. Chile stated that the United Nations was devoted to peace-keeping; it could not, therefore, support war-like action. Similar criticisms were made by Australia, Belgium, Ireland, Malta, New Zealand and Sweden, for the Nordic countries.

Australia, Belgium and Ireland also shared Sweden's view, on behalf of the Nordic countries, that all parties enjoying support in Namibia should be allowed to take part in the political process leading to independence and to the establishment of a Government through free and fair elections - SWAPO being but one such party; thus the Nordic countries had reservations concerning formulations which could prejudice the outcome of the elections.

Belgium, Ireland, Malawi and the United Kingdom criticized the calls for sanctions. Botswana, Lesotho and Malawi stated that they were not in a position to implement them.

Belgium called for scrupulous respect for the specific mandate of the Security Council, adding that paragraphs 13, 14, 15, 17 and 18 of resolution 42/14 B were not in line with that criterion. Similar views were expressed by Austria, Chile and Sweden, for the Nordic countries.

The Netherlands objected to the initiation of legal proceedings against it by the Council for Namibia and recalled its 23 July letter on the matter (see p. 1020). It did not understand why it had been singled out by the Council or why it had not been offered an opportunity to state its case in the Council prior to the decision to go to court. The Council should concentrate on real and obvious cases of pillage and depletion of Namibia's wealth, like the deteriorating fish stock in Namibian offshore waters; the activities of Netherlands companies by no means fell within that category. Belgium, supporting that position, announced that it would not have voted in favour of paragraph 75 of resolution 42/14 A - by which the Assembly approved the Council's action - had it been put to a separate vote. The United Kingdom termed the initiation of such action misguided. The Federal Republic of Germany also supported the Netherlands position.

In Chile's view, the Assembly should not interfere with the decisions and activities of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, which should bear in mind only the objectives for which they were established by the member States themselves.

Greece, although supporting the statement by Denmark on behalf of EC, pointed out that its abstentions should not be construed as reflecting any reservations on the texts' substance.

Earlier, on 18 September, the Assembly had decided that the Namibia question would be considered in plenary meetings, on the understanding that hearings of the representatives of organizations concerned would be held in the Fourth Committee. Accordingly, between 9 and 16 October, the Fourth Committee heard, at their request,(48) petitioners of the following organizations: National Namibia Concerns, Episcopal Churchpeople for a Free Southern Africa, Lutheran World Federation, Namibia Information Service, Commission of the Churches on International Affairs of the World Council of Churches, Washington Office on Africa, International Association of Democratic Lawyers, American Association of Jurists, American Committee on Africa, Namibia Support Committee, United States Peace Council, Southern Africa Support Project and National Lawyers Guild.

On 4 November, the Assembly took note of the Fourth Committee's report(49) on the hearings (decision 42/408).

Related action was taken by the Assembly in resolution 42/95, by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and its condemnation of the continued illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa. It again condemned South Africa for installing a so-called interim administration at Windhoek and declared that action to be illegal, null and void. It also condemned South Africa for its increased repression of the Namibians and demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all those imprisoned or detained by the Pretoria regime. The Assembly urged all States to support the Namibian people, through SWAPO, in its liberation struggle.

In resolution 42/74, the Assembly called on all States to discontinue all economic, trade and financial co-operation with South Africa that would lend support to its illegal occupation. In decision 42/417, the Assembly noted with serious concern that in southern Africa a critical situation continued to prevail as a result of that occupation.

Work programme of the Council for Namibia

On 5 November, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee decided without a vote to inform the Assembly that, should it adopt the draft resolutions on Namibia, no additional appropriations over and above those already requested in the proposed programme budget for the 1988-1989 biennium would be required for the 1988 activities of the Council for Namibia.

On 6 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/14 C by recorded vote.

Programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia

Referring to the Council for Namibia's work programme, Denmark, on behalf of the 12 EC member States, expressed concern at the unbalanced approach taken by the Council in initiating certain activities. Ireland said it had reservations about the Council's powers in regard to certain issues and saw difficulties in some of its recommendations. New Zealand questioned the practicality of aspects of the resolution.

A number of countries remarked on the proposed expenditure for the Council for Namibia's activities. Canada was pleased to note that requests for budgetary allocations for the Council's work programme appeared to be more modest than in prior years and hoped that trend would continue. Speaking in like manner, Australia said that there were items in the programme which continued to trouble it, such as the unduly high expenditure on conference services. Denmark, for EC, expressed concern at the financial implications and argued that a more thorough scrutiny of the work programme would have enabled them to be reduced without endangering the attainment of the goals that all Member States sought. Sweden, for the Nordic countries, emphasized that in the current financial situation, all activities had to be carefully scrutinized to secure effective and appropriate utilization of resources. The United States, referring to its support for the Fifth Committee's consensus, stated that it was its understanding that the resolution involved no change in the practice of the Council regarding language services entailing costs beyond those listed in the budget implication statement submitted to the Committee, all of which could be accommodated within the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget. Belgium recalled its comments made in the Committee where it had expressed concern about procedural aspects of the consideration of that item - namely the late submission of documentation and the decisions taken in the Council based on informal fragmentary information.

The United Kingdom said it remained concerned at what it said was the continuing extravagance of some Council activities; although estimates based on the 1988 draft programme were somewhat lower than those in the 1988 portion of the proposed programme budget, the provision for regular activities had increased. Furthermore, it was proposed that nearly $170,000 be set aside to meet the costs of the Council's legal action against the Netherlands (see p. 1020); the United Kingdom doubted the utility or wisdom of that expenditure. The Netherlands said the initiation of that legal action was the reason for its abstention; it had supported the respective resolution in earlier years.

In resolution 42/211, the General Assembly invited the Secretary-General to implement recommendation 19 of the Group of 18(50) in consultation with the Council for Namibia. The Group had recommended that the support activities of the Council and of the Office of the Commissioner for Namibia be consolidated.

Information dissemination

The Council for Namibia continued in 1987 to disseminate information to Governments, the media, political and academic institutions, NGOs and directly to the public in order to mobilize world public opinion in support of independence for Namibia.(2) In these efforts, the Council acted through its Standing Committee III(51) and in co-operation with the Department of Public Information (DPI) and the Department of Conference Services (DCS).

Press releases on the Council's activities were distributed to the press, delegations and NGOs at Headquarters and to United Nations information centres (UNICs) around the world. Press releases were also issued during the seminar at Buenos Aires (see p. 983), the extraordinary plenary meetings at Luanda (see p. 984) and the Council's missions to India, Japan and China (see p. 985), on Namibia Day (26 August) and the Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia and Their Liberation Movement, SWAPO (27 October-3 November). Also for the benefit of the press were journalists' encounters held at Buenos Aires and Luanda, which focused mainly on the topics discussed at the events there but dealt also with the role of the media in generating greater public awareness of the Namibian cause.

Material on the question of Namibia was provided regularly to the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies.

DPI completed a number of pamphlets on the military, political, social and economic situation. Such information was also included in its periodicals, the UN Chronicle, Objective: Justice, the Yearbook of the United Nations, Basic Facts about the United Nations and United Nations Today: Suggestions for Speakers.

Radio and visual coverage was provided for the work of the Council for Namibia, the Security Council meetings on Namibia, the Buenos Aires seminar and the Council meetings at Luanda. In addition, two special current affairs feature/documentary radio programmes in the Perspective series were devoted to Namibia. The series was distributed to approximately 345 radio stations world-wide. Radio programmes in English were adapted in German and Herero. Other programmes were produced in Spanish and distributed to radio stations in South America and Spain. A package of four different television spots on Namibia was distributed to UNICs, from which stations could make a choice for occasions such as Namibia Day.

The Council for Namibia distributed books, pamphlets, posters and documentation that it had either produced itself in co-operation with DPI and DCS or acquired from outside sources, such as the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa or the Catholic Institute for International Relations.

As part of its programme of co-operation with NGOs, the Council, in consultation with SWAPO, made financial contributions to a number of them to enable them to advance the Namibian people's cause. Grants were given for symposia and conferences, for research, publication and distribution of information material and for video and radio projects.

The Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia also informed Member States, NGOs and other interested groups of the activities of the Council. It continued to prepare the monthly Namibia Bulletin and the weekly newsletter Namibia in the News. The Office also issued a number of publications in Dutch for distribution in the Netherlands in connection with the legal proceedings initiated by the Council against that country (see p. 1020). It further assisted the Council in publishing and disseminating various United Nations booklets, brochures, posters and maps; in acquiring and translating non-United Nations materials on Namibia; in reproducing and disseminating available films on Namibia; and in producing a half-hour video version of the film Namibia-Independence Now.

The Commissioner's Office distributed 300,000 copies in English and 140,000 copies in other languages of various United Nations and other publications. UNICs distributed 25,000 copies of publications and over 1,000 wallcharts and posters. They also continued to distribute the films Free Namibia and Namibia: A Trust Betrayed.

In its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action(5) (see p. 984), the Council appealed to the organs of the press, particularly those of the Western countries, to give greater coverage to the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa, to the brutal oppression that that regime inflicted on the people and to South Africa's persistent defiance of the authority of the United Nations and of the international community as a whole. The Council committed itself to make information available to States, public opinion and the media, and to mobilize international public opinion in support of the Namibian liberation struggle under the leadership of SWAPO, in particular by disseminating written, filmed or sound material on Namibia, by organizing a data bank on Namibia and by supporting Namibia information days, press conferences and information exercises.

To strengthen international support for the SWAPO-led liberation struggle, the Council would try to inform the international public about the struggle and to counteract the South African campaign against the United Nations position on Namibia.

The Committee on colonial countries, on 12 August,(25) requested the Secretary-General, in view of South Africa's publicity campaign to justify its occupation, to intensify his efforts to mobilize world public opinion against South Africa's policy and, in particular, to increase the world-wide dissemination of information on the liberation struggle. The Committee emphasized the importance of action at the grass-roots level in mobilizing Governments in support of the struggle, in exercising pressure on transnational corporations to refrain from any investment or activity in Namibia and in counteracting all forms of collaboration with the occupation régime.

Ireland stated that, although it could support many of the text's provisions, there were formulations which it could not accept, such as paragraph 12 (c), by which the Assembly appealed to NGOs to expose and campaign against the collaboration of certain Western Governments with South Africa, as well as diplomatic visits to and from it; such a campaign could only be harmful to the pursuit of the common goal. Belgium also said it could not go along with concepts that it felt had been improperly included in the mobilization campaign and which had lessened its efficacy.

In resolution 42/162 A, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to alert world public opinion to the illegal occupation of Namibia and to continue disseminating information relating to the people's struggle for freedom as well as to the need for full and speedy implementation of the United Nations independence plan.

UN Commissioner for Namibia

Activities of the Commissioner

The United Nations Commissioner for Namibia continued to perform the administrative and executive tasks entrusted to him by the Council for Namibia. In 1987, he acted to protect Namibian interests principally by attempts to implement Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,⁽⁸⁾ banning the extraction of those resources without the Council's consent (see p. 1019), and by issuing travel documents through the Council. Between July 1986 and June 1987, offices of the Commissioner renewed 1,690 travel documents and issued 698 new ones.

The Commissioner's Office also administered various assistance programmes under the United Nations Fund for Namibia (see p. 1021). This included project identification, preparation, implementation and evaluation. An additional task of the Commissioner was fund-raising for the assistance programmes. In this connection, the Commissioner participated in the meetings of the Governing Council of UNDP, the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and a number of specialized agencies and other institutions that were executing projects in favour of Namibians, notably UNICEF, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, IMO, the Commonwealth Secretariat and the European Communities.

The Office continued to collect and analyse information relating to Namibia and closely followed internal political, economic and legal developments in South Africa concerning Namibia. It undertook a number of studies, which dealt with the activities of transnational corporations in Namibia (updating the 1985 study on that subject),⁽⁵²⁾ the demographic structure and socio-economic characteristics of the Namibian population, the preparation of a comprehensive economic map and a thematic atlas of Namibia, and the socio-economic and legal situation in Namibia as a result of the South African occupation.

The Commissioner maintained offices in New York, Gaborone (Botswana), Luanda (Angola) and Lusaka (Zambia). The primary function of the Luanda office was serving as liaison between SWAPO headquarters and the New York office and consulting with the Angolan Government. It worked together with other United Nations agencies represented in Angola to ensure a well-integrated inter-agency co-ordination of assistance programmes to Namibia. In this context, it co-ordinated inter-agency emergency assistance for Namibian refugee children affected by severe rain storms and assistance to the Namibian Secondary Technical School in Angola. The Luanda office was directly involved in managing various assistance projects and continued to raise funds - approximately $200,000 - especially for the United Nations Vocational Training Centre for Namibia and SWAPO settlements.

The Lusaka office monitored political and security events in southern Africa affecting Namibia and maintained contacts with international groups and personalities involved in the search for solutions to the problems of the region, including Namibia. These contacts had concrete results, such as offers of financial assistance by the European Economic Community, the Association of West European Parliamentarians and other visiting delegations from donor countries and organizations. Other contacts led to increased and enhanced delivery of aid programmes, to SWAPO in particular and to Namibian refugees in Zambia in general. The Lusaka office continued to assist Namibians and to counsel those in need while managing, monitoring and reporting on various projects under the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

The Gaborone office continued to provide to the New York office up-to-date and detailed briefs on political events in the entire southern Africa region. It maintained close and regular consultations with the Government of Botswana, embassies and institutions on matters vital for the promotion of the interests of the people of Namibia. It participated in the administration of projects aimed at benefiting Namibian refugees and co-operated with other United Nations agencies in Botswana, as well as with non-governmental and other organizations. As in the past, the office worked closely with SWAPO, resulting in close liaison of activities and exchange of information.

Extension of the Commissioner's appointment

On the Secretary-General's proposal,⁽⁵³⁾ the General Assembly, by decision 42/311 adopted without vote on 8 December, extended the appointment of Bernt Carlsson as United Nations Commissioner for Namibia for a one-year term beginning on 1 January 1988. He had first been appointed in 1986 for six months beginning on 1 July 1987⁽⁵⁴⁾.

Political and military aspects

The Council for Namibia continued to monitor the political and military situation in, and relating to, Namibia. Its Standing Committee II submitted reports covering 1987 in April 1987⁽⁵⁵⁾ and July 1988⁽⁵⁶⁾.

There were few new or significant political developments relating to Namibia itself in 1987. Outside the United Nations framework, negotiations involving Angola, South Africa and the United States continued.

The political activities of the Secretary-General concerning Namibia were covered in his reports to the Security Council (see pp. 986 and 993).

Namibia continued to be administered by South Africa through the so-called interim government, installed unilaterally by South Africa in 1985, an action declared by the Security Council to be illegal, null and void⁽¹²⁾. The Council for Namibia reported that the interim government was denounced in Namibia at many public rallies and political demonstrations, organized by SWAPO, as an illegitimate instrument of South African political control and repression. The Council also reported that, demonstrating the Namibian people's determination to win their freedom, up to 25,000 people, nearly all of them under the banner of the SWAPO-affiliated National Union of Namibian Workers, attended rallies and prayer meetings throughout the country to mark May Day 1987. For Windhoek, Tsumeb, Swakopmund and other towns it was the largest ever gathering of workers. Other important mass rallies were held throughout the Territory in August to observe Namibia Day. The Council concluded that the fact that these events had taken place, despite the existence of a state of emergency and martial law in northern Namibia since the 1970s, was testimony to the determination of the Namibians to win their independence.

The Council reported that South Africa continued to impose in Namibia many inhuman measures, such as arbitrary imprisonment, detention without trial, and beatings and torture of innocent Namibians. The police arrested several key leaders of SWAPO in August and held them under the so-called Terrorism Act. Those arrests were strongly condemned by the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (see p. 993). Security forces also raided the homes and offices of officials of the National Union of Namibian Workers as well as workers' hostels in Katatura and Lüderitz. During these raids a number of workers were injured and arrested. A further incident reported by the Council occurred when the police attacked hundreds of young SWAPO members making their way to a political rally in Katatura. More than 20 youths were arrested and 8 hospitalized, 2 with gunshot wounds.

With regard to the military situation, the Council for Namibia reported that Namibia remained occupied by over 100,000 South African soldiers. Recruitment and training of Namibians for the South West Africa Territorial Force was continuing. That force had its own formal command structure and uniforms but remained an administrative subsection of the South African Defence Force without its own operational responsibility. The same held true for the South West Africa Police, which was subject to the authority of the South African Police. South Africa continued to use several counter-insurgency units, among them the notorious "Koevoet" - technically designated a police unit, but in fact the cutting edge of the South African military in Namibia.

The Council reported that South African military personnel were involved in killing civilians, burning people, shooting at civilians from light aircraft and burning homes. Based on reports from a United States newspaper, the Council maintained that the South African military had bombed and burnt 14 schools, three clinics and a post office.

The reports of Standing Committee II cited a war communique of SWAPO according to which in the first three months of 1987 more than 205 South African soldiers were killed and 76 wounded, while 17 military bases and 28 military vehicles were destroyed in 18 sabotage operations and 49 combat actions. In addition, one South African helicopter was shot down. According to another SWAPO publication, SWAPO forces in the first three months of 1987 shot down 3 helicopter gunships, destroyed 54 military vehicles and attacked 20 military bases in over 50 sabotage actions and 130 combat actions. In the course of those actions, 128 South African soldiers had been killed. The Council further reported, also based on SWAPO sources, that between August and October SWAPO killed over 165 South African soldiers, damaged 5 South African bases and destroyed 13 military vehicles.

SWAPO and its armed wing, the People's Liberation Army of Namibia (PLAN), claimed responsibility for a bomb explosion in a Windhoek shopping and parking complex which caused no casualties. In November, SWAPO forces blew up the rail line north of Windhoek which was used by the South African military to ferry troops and weaponry to the north of Namibia.

PLAN also stepped up its actions against property owned by foreign economic interests, destroying equipment of a Rössing Foundation farm and blowing up a petrol station owned by Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa, Ltd.

The bombing and destruction of a Catholic church and the sabotage of a school were attributed to SWAPO by the administration; SWAPO refuted that charge and blamed the security forces for it.

The state of war and repression in Namibia caused thousands of Namibians to seek refuge in neighbouring countries, particularly Angola and Zambia. UNHCR estimated that between 70,000 and 80,000 Namibian refugees lived in neighbouring countries. The South African military had repeatedly used Namibia to carry out acts of aggression against Angola, where the targets were refugees and Angolan civilians. The Council reported that during 1987 South Africa had escalated its military attacks and policy of destabilizing Angola and other neighbouring States. In that year, South Africa's policies directly affected all 10 regional States and caused unprecedented economic and social disruption.

In its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action⁽⁵⁾ (see p. 984), the Council again denounced the so-called interim government, the conscription of Namibians and the recruitment of mercenaries as well as the intensification of the militarization of Namibia. It welcomed the intensified Namibian liberation struggle and congratulated SWAPO on the way in which it had been leading the people. It also drew the international community's attention to the difficult living conditions of Namibian refugees. In the communique adopted at the ministerial meeting of the Council (see p. 985), the Ministers expressed deep concern at South Africa's increased repression and paid tribute to the Namibians, who had intensified their liberation struggle under SWAPO's leadership.

In a decision adopted on 12 August,(25) the Committee on colonial countries demanded that all Namibian political prisoners be released and that all captured Namibian freedom fighters be accorded prisoner-of-war status. South Africa was condemned for its military buildup in Namibia and for its use of Namibian territory for perpetrating acts of aggression and subversion against neighbouring States. The Committee also condemned South Africa for imposing the so-called interim government. It reaffirmed its support for the Namibians in their legitimate struggle by all available means. All States were called on to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia and to intensify their support for SWAPO.

Similarly, the Commission on Human Rights, on 19 February,(26) reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle, by all means, including armed struggle. On 26 February,(27) it demanded that South Africa release all Namibian political prisoners, accord prisoner-of-war status to all captured freedom fighters and account for all "disappeared" Namibians. The Commission reiterated its request that South Africa allow an expert group to investigate the living conditions in Namibian prisons and the treatment of prisoners.(31) The Commission condemned South Africa for the militarization in Namibia, the use of mercenaries and the recruitment and training of Namibians. It called the military conscription of all Namibian males another sinister attempt to suppress the national liberation struggle and to force Namibians to kill one another. The Commission condemned South African attempts to impose the so-called interim government on the people.

The General Assembly, in decision 42/417, condemned South Africa for its military buildup, its use of the Territory for aggression and subversion against neighbouring countries and the compulsory military service for Namibians. The Assembly also called on all States to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia. In resolution 42/75, the Assembly requested the specialized agencies to withhold all forms of assistance from South Africa until the Namibians had exercised their right to self-determination, freedom and national independence. The Assembly reiterated its conviction that those agencies should refrain from taking any action that might imply recognition of the legitimacy of South Africa's domination of Namibia.

In resolution 42/14 A, the Assembly commended SWAPO and the people of Namibia for their intensified struggle on all fronts and condemned South Africa for imposing the so-called interim government, for its military buildup, for its repression of Namibians and for using Namibia as a springboard for aggression against neighbouring States, particularly Angola. The installation of the so-called interim government was also condemned in resolution 42/14 B.

Economic and social conditions

Foreign investment

The United Nations Council for Namibia, in its 1987 report to the General Assembly,(1) described the structure of the Namibian economy as typically colonial, tailored to the needs and demands of foreign capital and based on an export-oriented primary sector. Mining, agriculture and fishing provided the major portion of Namibia's gross domestic product (GDP), generated 90 per cent of its exports and engaged 80 per cent of all paid employment.

The Council reported that foreign economic interests involved in exploiting Namibian resources included some of the world's largest corporations and financial institutions. Three transnational corporations (TNCs) based in South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States accounted for about 95 per cent of the mineral production and exports. South African individuals and corporations owned a substantial portion of the land in the area set aside for white settlement—about 60 per cent of the total land area. South African and other foreign marketing boards controlled virtually all the marketing of cattle, caracul pelts (a valuable type of sheep's fleece) and wool, as well as a major share of the meat-processing plants. The organization of the fishing industry was also controlled by South Africa, and the companies engaged in it were almost entirely of South African origin. South African interests held 11 of 12 pelagic licences and the entire lobster concession. Their quota of the allowable pilchard catch for 1987-1993 was 66 per cent, down from 91 per cent, but this still left 80 per cent of the overall pelagic fishing rights in their hands. Ownership of the inshore processing industry and most of the fishing fleet also was controlled mainly by South African companies and corporate capital.

The Council further reported that Namibia's commercial and manufacturing sectors, which produced 10 to 15 per cent of GDP, were completely dominated by South Africa and other foreign economic interests. Manufacturing comprised fewer than 300 enterprises, accounting for slightly over 5 per cent of GDP and employing nearly 10 per cent of the work-force. Besides a strong presence of large South African corporations in commerce and manufacturing, there were also a number of South African wholesale and retail chains.

In banking, South African and other foreign economic interests again dominated. The Territory's three major banks were subsidiaries of international banking groups operating from the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom. Two other banks active in Namibia were South African. There was one Namibia-based bank, which was 25 per cent owned by another South African bank. Namibia had no central bank. The Reserve Bank of South Africa extended its jurisdiction and functions to Namibia, where the rand was the currency in use. South Africa had, therefore, absolute control over exchange and interest rates and liquidity. The free flow of capital between Namibia and South Africa made it easy for South African-controlled corporations and many individuals to repatriate profits or earnings for investment in South African companies and financial institutions. The Council reported that it had been estimated that between 16 and 20 per cent of Namibia's GDP was remitted abroad, mainly in the form of profits by foreign corporations.

The Council for Namibia concluded that decades of foreign economic exploitation in Namibia and the high profits generated had encouraged South Africa's persistence in its intransigence with regard to the liberation of Namibia. Since foreign economic interests had not taken any measures to integrate the different sectors of the Namibian economy, the economy remained unbalanced and distorted.

As requested in 1986 by the Economic and Social Council,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Transnational Corporations, in February 1987⁽³⁾, a report summarizing the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia. The report stated that, according to available information, there had been no major new investment or disinvestment in Namibia by TNCs, which continued to dominate mining and banking there. The Commission recommended to the Council a draft resolution on the topic that was subsequently adopted as resolution 1987/56.

The Commission on Human Rights, on 19 February 1987,⁽⁴⁾ condemned the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding Namibia's decolonization. A week later,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission again condemned the activities of foreign economic interests operating in Namibia under the South African administration and called on Governments that had not done so to stop their nationals and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction from trading, manufacturing and investing in Namibia.

The Committee on colonial countries, on 12 August,⁽⁶⁾ also condemned the activities of foreign economic interests and declared that, by their exploitation of resources and accumulation of profits, they constituted a major obstacle to Namibia's independence. It demanded that those States whose TNCs continued to operate in Namibia comply with United Nations resolutions by ensuring the immediate withdrawal of all investments from Namibia and by putting an end to co-operation by such corporations with the South African administration. It reaffirmed that such activities were illegal and foreign economic interests would be liable to pay damages to a future lawful Namibian Government.

The General Assembly also took action relating to the activities of foreign corporations in Namibia. In resolution 42/74, it reiterated that such activities were illegal, that they contributed to maintaining the occupation regime and that they endangered the prosperity of an independent Namibia. It called on States to terminate, or cause to have terminated, any investments there and to refrain from relations with South Africa that might lend legitimacy to its occupation. In resolution 42/14 A, the Assembly declared that the activities of South Africa and certain Western and other foreign economic interests in Namibia were illegal under international law and demanded that those interests comply with United Nations decisions by withdrawing and by ending co-operation with the illegal administration.

Natural resources

According to the Council for Namibia's 1987 report,(1) Namibia was endowed with abundant natural wealth, including uranium, gem diamonds and other mineral resources, as well as agricultural and fishery products.

Mining remained by far the largest sector of the Namibian economy, accounting for almost half of its GDP and about 85 per cent of its exports. Exports had risen in 1986 by 22 per cent compared with 1985. Namibia possessed a wide range of minerals, including large quantities of diamonds, uranium, arsenic, lead, cadmium, zinc and copper. Other minerals, including gold, silver, pyrite, tin and tantalite, were also available in significant quantities. In addition the Council reported that it was believed that Namibia was endowed with deposits of coal, iron ore and platinum. Oil was thought to exist in the Etosha basin in northern Namibia, and gas fields had been discovered off the southern coast.

Namibia had about 5 per cent of the world's proven reserves of diamonds; in 1986, 1,010,000 carats were produced, 98 per cent of which were of gem quality, averaging slightly less than one carat apiece. Namibian diamonds had a high average per-carat value and were noted for their good shape, fine colour and lack of impurities and faults. A problem pointed out by the Council was the consistent overmining of Namibia's diamond deposits.

Namibia's production of base metals and other precious minerals accounted for 20 per cent of the total output of the mining sector in value. Those products were of strategic importance to South Africa and its Western allies. The Council's report concluded that one of the major reasons for South Africa's occupation of Namibia and the support it received from its Western allies was the interest both had in perpetuating their unimpeded access to and exploitation of the Territory's key base metals.

Approximately 5 per cent of all the exploitable uranium reserves in the world were located in Namibia, where the only active mine, the world's largest open-cast mine, had a capacity of over 5,000 metric tons of uranium oxide per year; output in 1986, however, was under 3,500 tons. South Africa prohibited the disclosure of uranium export statistics, but the Council stated that it had been estimated that uranium accounted for about a third of all Namibia's exports between 1981 and 1985. The identity of the customers of Namibian uranium was kept secret. The Council provided a table of known and possible uranium contracts as of 1986, which listed customers in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Taiwan and the United Kingdom. In addition, Canada, France, the Netherlands and the United States were listed as processing countries.

On 15 July,(7) Iraq forwarded an article entitled "Namibia uranium may fuel Iran's A-bomb", which appeared on 17 May in the British weekly The Observer. According to the article, Iran was buying uranium from the Rössing mine in Namibia, in which it had a 10 per cent shareholding.

According to the Council, Namibia had considerable potential resources of oil, gas and coal, none of which had currently been developed. Namibia remained therefore completely dependent on imported supplies of oil and coal from South Africa.

The agricultural sector typified the contradictions inherent in Namibia's colonial economy. Blacks, who made up over 95 per cent of the population engaged in agriculture, were subsistence farmers, and their share of the total marketed agricultural output was only about 2.5 per cent. On the other hand, there were around 5,000 white farmers who owned and managed the most important commercially oriented agricultural activities, namely dairy farming, cattle raising and the production of caracul pelts. Livestock farming accounted for 80 to 90 per cent of the overall value of commercial agriculture. It had been severely affected by several years of drought, which had reduced the number of farms in the 10 years before 1987 from 5,200 to under 4,000. The number of cattle and small stock involved increased from 634,000 in 1986 to 710,000 in 1987. The pelts of the caracul lamb were used for manufacturing expensive, high-fashion fur coats. The Namibian caracul industry was one of the largest in the world and caracul prices reached record heights in 1987.

The coastal waters of Namibia, fed by the large quantities of nutrients carried by the Benguela current, had long been known to be a rich fishing area. They contained several species of pelagic fish, including pilchards, anchovies and hake, as well as considerable quantities of rock lobster. The Council reported that pilchards appeared in greater numbers in the 1980s, after overfishing in earlier years had seriously reduced their population. Still, the report stated, restoration to previous levels would require many years. The anchovy stock would be seriously depleted unless drastic changes in fishing practices were made.

During the year, the Council for Namibia continued its efforts to implement Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.(8) On 14 July, the Council's lawyers instituted legal proceedings in the district court of The Hague against Urenco Nederland V.O.F and Ultracentrifuge Nederland N.V. (UCN), its state-controlled managing partner, as well as against the Government of the Netherlands. By instituting the proceedings, the Council sought to prevent Urenco from carrying out orders based on purchases of Namibian uranium. In its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action,(9) the Council decided to continue the legal action. On 23 July,(10) the Netherlands, in a letter to the Secretary-General, outlined its position and stated that Netherlands electricity companies did not buy Namibian uranium, that the processes converting uranium ore into uranium-hexafluoride (the base product with which Urenco and UCN worked) did not take place in the Netherlands, and that subsequent processes that resulted in nuclear fuel for electricity generation were not in conflict with Decree No. 1.

By its resolution 42/14 A, the Assembly approved the initiation by the Council of the legal proceedings.

In a 12 August decision,(6) the Committee on colonial countries reaffirmed that Namibia's natural resources belonged to the Namibians and expressed its concern at their depletion by foreign economic interests in violation of United Nations resolutions and Decree No. 1. It condemned the exploitation of Namibian uranium by State-owned or State-controlled corporations and took note of the legal proceedings instituted by the Council for Namibia in the Netherlands.

The Commission on Human Rights, on 26 February,(11) condemned South Africa for exploiting and depleting Namibia's natural resources and welcomed the Council's decision to initiate legal proceedings against violations of Decree No. 1. In another resolution,(5) the Commission reaffirmed the right of the Namibian people to enjoyment of the natural resources of their territory.

The General Assembly, in resolution 42/34 B, on the nuclear capability of South Africa, demanded that South Africa and all other foreign interests immediately end the exploration for and exploitation of uranium resources in Namibia. In resolution 42/74, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of peoples of dependent Territories to their natural resources, as well as their right to dispose of them in their best interests. It strongly condemned South Africa for its continued exploitation of Namibia's natural resources, which led to their rapid depletion, and for the creation in Namibia of an economic structure dependent essentially on its minerals. The Assembly further called on States, particularly those whose nationals and corporations were involved in mining and processing Namibian uranium, to ensure compliance with Decree No. 1. In two of its resolution on Namibia, the Assembly also referred to natural resources. In wording identical to that of the Committee on colonial countries, it reaffirmed in resolution 42/14 A that those resources were the inviolable heritage of the Namibians and expressed deep concern over their depletion. It declared that, by their incessant exploitation, the foreign economic interests constituted a major obstacle to Namibia's independence. All Member States were requested to act to ensure compliance by corporations and individuals within their jurisdiction with the provisions of Decree No. 1. In resolution 42/14 C, the Assembly decided that the Council for Namibia should continue taking measures to ensure the full implementation of Decree No. 1, including legal proceedings in domestic courts.

Social conditions and exploitation of labour

The Council for Namibia, through its Standing Committee II, continued to monitor Namibia's social situation and the exploitation of labour in the Territory. The Committee in an April 1987 report(12) stated that discriminatory practices against the black population in Namibia had increased. South Africa had segregated schools, hospitals and other amenities and enforced discrimination in education, health, employment and all other aspects of daily life.

Education was compulsory for whites but not for black or so-called coloured children, who were racially separated from services for whites and assigned to different schools on an ethnic basis. Information available to the Committee indicated that some $1,500 per year was spent on each white child, which was seven times more than the allocation for each black or coloured child. Only 22 per cent of black children went on to the higher primary school and only 1 per cent of black adults had completed secondary education. The main language in the schools was Afrikaans, which was regarded by black Namibians as the language of their oppressors and that contributed to the relatively poor progress of many pupils.

Racial discrimination was also evident in the amount of money spent on health services for different races. Whereas such services for the black majority were rudimentary and in many areas even non-existent, whites received the benefits of expensive medical technology. As a result of South Africa's military operations, particularly in the north, health services had deteriorated, some health centres were closed and others had been bombed or burned down by the military. A further reported problem was the dusk-to-dawn curfew in northern Namibia. According to church sources, it had disrupted social life and had led to a marked rise in mental illness. Death among the sick had resulted from the inability to use hospital services because of curfew restrictions.

The Committee stated in its 1988 report(13) that in March 1987 security forces abducted a Namibian from the Lutheran Hospital in Onandjokwe while he was waiting for an X-ray of his leg, which had been wounded by a bullet; he had not been seen since.

The Committee also reported that up to two thirds of the Namibian labour force were migrant workers. The migrant labour system had a devastating and far-reaching effect in the social realm. It forced workers to leave their families for up to 30 months at a time. Living conditions were squalid and police raids on the compounds the rule rather than the exception. Black contract workers were afforded no guarantee of employment beyond the duration of their contracts. White employees, on the other hand, enjoyed permanent jobs, good career prospects, subsidized housing and valuable fringe benefits. They also had access to recognized negotiating machinery and trade union representation, whereas blacks did not. Despite that, black Namibian workers made remarkable efforts to organize themselves and co-ordinate their collective actions. In its 1988 report, the Committee reported of strikes in July and December 1987 in Tsumeb and Oranjemund and of May Day workers' marches.

In its report on social conditions, the Committee also included information on repressive laws and activities of the South African administration, which continued to use a series of statutes, administrative regulations and proclamations to give the police and military forces powers to arrest, detain without charge or trial, interrogate and torture Namibians. Those proclamations provided for preventive detention, the banning of meetings, the imposition of martial law and the establishment of so-called security districts. Despite the repressive legislation, however, the national liberation struggle had intensified and the occupation forces, in attempting to suppress that struggle, had increasingly resorted to measures such as murder of innocent civilians, torture, mass arrests, banning orders, forced removals and disappearances.

mental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their assistance to the Namibian people and SWAPO. It drew the attention of the international community to the difficult living conditions of Namibians whom illegal occupation and South African repression had forced into exile and decided to continue to send visiting missions to Namibian health and education centres in Angola and Zambia. In order to increase international assistance to meet the needs of Namibians and SWAPO for food, health, training and housing, the Council would further mobilize international public opinion, increase missions to solicit governmental assistance for Namibians and continue to request the United Nations system to increase its contributions. While noting with satisfaction Governments' contributions to the different United Nations funds and programmes for Namibia, as well as the support from organizations and specialized agencies for those efforts, the Council stressed the need to increase that assistance.

In the final communique adopted at the Council's ministerial meeting in October(2) (see p. 985), the Ministers urged the international community to increase material and other humanitarian aid to the thousands of Namibian refugees who had been forced into exile, especially into the neighbouring front-line States.

In similar wording, the Committee on colonial countries on 12 August also called for support for Namibians.(3) Two days later,(4) the Committee expressed its concern that the assistance extended so far by certain United Nations specialized agencies and other organizations to colonial peoples, particularly Namibians and SWAPO, was inadequate in relation to their actual needs. It requested those bodies to render all possible assistance to peoples struggling for liberation, bearing in mind that such help should not only meet immediate needs but also create conditions for development after self-determination and independence.

The Economic and Social Council used similar wording in resolution 1987/78.

The General Assembly, in decision 42/417, also called for support to the Namibians, using a formulation similar to the one used by the Ministerial Meeting of the Council for Namibia. In resolution 42/75, the Assembly called for increased assistance to Namibians and SWAPO by specialized agencies and other organizations.

International assistance

The Council for Namibia, in its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action(1) (see p. 984), emphasized the urgent need for all States, organs and bodies of the United Nations and intergovern-

UN Fund for Namibia

Activities of the Fund

The United Nations Fund for Namibia, financed mainly by voluntary contributions, continued to serve in 1987 as the main vehicle through which the Council for Namibia, the Fund's trustee, channelled assistance to Namibians. The Fund's activities were concentrated in three main programmes: the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; the United Nations Institute for Namibia; and educational, social and relief assistance to Namibians (General Account). The Nationhood Programme and the Institute were set up with particular reference to the future attainment of independence, the establishment of State machinery and the assumption of administrative responsibilities by Namibians. The assistance programmes financed by the General Account emphasized the immediate needs and welfare of Namibians. Assistance in that area was administered, to the extent possible, through individual projects. Fund expenditures for the three programmes totalled $8,708,665 in 1987, as follows: Nationhood Programme, $1,874,078; Institute, $4,342,656; and General Account, $2,491,931.

Nationhood Programme

The Nationhood Programme consisted of two major components: manpower training programmes, and surveys and analyses of Namibian economic and social sectors, including identification of development tasks and policy options. The latter accounted for less than 15 per cent of the financial resources of the Programme. With the completion by the Institute for Namibia of a comprehensive study entitled Namibia-Perspectives for National Reconstruction and Development, virtually all economic and social sectors had been covered and a basis provided for programme analysis and evaluation and for the preparation of project proposals for further development assistance.

Under manpower training, hundreds of Namibians continued their training at various institutions, mostly in African countries. They were trained in a variety of professions, trades and crafts, including land use and human settlements development, food distribution labour administration radio programming, rural development, agriculture, truck mechanics, cartography, cargo handling, port management, fish processing, air traffic control, health services, mining, railway operations and leatherwork. The United Nations Vocational Training Centre at Cuacra, Angola, continued to operate at full capacity with an enrolment of about 200 trainees in six trades-auto mechanics, machine shop and fitting, electrical installations, plumbing, carpentry, and building and construction. A group of 97 trainees graduated in December 1987.

UN Institute for Namibia

The United Nations Institute for Namibia, at Lusaka, trained middle-level skilled manpower for an independent Namibia and carried out applied research in various sectors of the Namibian economy. In 1987, 203 new students were admitted to the programme of management and development studies, 40 students to the teacher upgrading programme and 53 to the secretarial programme. This brought the total student body to almost 600. In the same year, 96 were awarded diplomas in management and development studies, 18 were awarded teaching diplomas in basic education 17 received certificates in a special programme for magistrates and 30 received certificates in the secretarial training programmes. The Institute's diploma was underwritten by the University of Zambia. The applied research of the Institute was intended to make available basic documentation for policy formulation by the future Government of an independent Namibia. Studies under way or nearing completion in 1987 dealt with mineral development strategy options, State succession administrative systems and policy options, vocational training and technical education strategies, national development planning policy options, wages and incomes policy, the caracul industry and monetary policy options. The preparation of a book on Namibia covering various aspects of the question as considered by the United Nations had been completed and was published by the Institute in 1987 under the title Namibia: A Direct United Nations Responsibility. The Namibian Extension Unit of the Institute continued to expand its distance education programme, serving several thousand Namibians in Angola and Zambia.

General Account

Educational, social and relief assistance-especially in the form of scholarships-was the main activity financed by the Fund's General Account. It was also used to finance vocational and technical training; to provide assistance in health and medical care, nutrition and social welfare; to acquire books and periodicals for Namibian refugees and SWAPO offices; and to facilitate the attendance of Namibian representatives at international seminars, meetings and conferences.

During the period 1 July 1986-30 June 1987, demand for scholarships increased and 79 new scholarships were awarded while 31 students completed their courses. Thus, as of 1 July 1987, 215 Namibians were being sponsored under the scholarship programme in 15 countries, the majority of them (131) in the United States. Studies included education agriculture, accounting, business administration physics, architecture, chemistry, computers, mining, nursing, public health and animal husbandry. In addition five new students entered into training programmes in economics, politics and law; 57 continued various training; and seven completed training in nursing, higher education weaving and dressmaking. Assistance was also provided to 82 Namibians in need of emergency medical treatment and other forms of humanitarian help.

Financing of the Fund

The major source of financing of the United Nations Fund for Namibia remained voluntary contributions. In 1987, 40 countries paid more than $7 million to the Fund: $1,772,416 for the Nationhood Programme, $4,153,486 for the Institute and $1,098,178 for the General Account. In addition to voluntary contributions, the Fund was financed by the United Nations regular budget ($1.5 million as allocated by the General Assembly in 1986.(5) The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) also provided funding. On 19 June,(6) the UNDP Governing Council established an indicative planning figure for Namibia of $9.3 million for the 1987-1991 programming cycle.

The Committee on colonial countries, on 12 August,(3) urgently called on States and the United Nations system to continue giving generous support to the Fund and all programmes of assistance organized by the Council for Namibia to benefit the Namibian people.

Other UN assistance

UN Educational and Training Programme. In a report to the General Assembly⁽⁷⁾ covering the period 1 October 1986 to 30 September 1987, the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see p. 181) had granted 175 new scholarships to Namibians and extended 285. These were in addition to those financed by the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

UNDP activities. In 1987, UNDP provided assistance to SWAPO through seven projects for a total of $618,400, the UNDP Administrator reported in December.⁽⁸⁾ The projects included two to strengthen and further develop the Namibia Education Centres that SWAPO had established in its settlements in Angola and Zambia; the centres served as primary and secondary schools for 3,260 young Namibians. As a support activity, assistance was given to the strengthening of the SWAPO Women's Council. UNDP also supported the administration of health services in the SWAPO settlements, the commencement of agricultural production at the Vocational Training Centre for Namibians in Angola, and a preparatory mission in connection with a project in the establishment of an aid co-ordination and management unit.

Agency assistance. United Nations specialized agencies and other organizations continued to provide assistance to colonial countries, including Namibia. The Secretary-General reported on that assistance in May 1987.⁽⁹⁾ Supplementary information was provided in a 1988 report.⁽¹⁰⁾ The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) contributed to the education of Namibian refugees in southern Africa, by providing teaching material and educational equipment, by paying for support staff for education centres of SWAPO and by executing UNDP-financed education projects which provided training for candidates sponsored by SWAPO and trained teachers for SWAPO education centres. In addition, UNESCO continued its technical assistance to the SWAPO Women's Council and to Namibian women through a UNDP-financed project. SWAPO cadres participated in UNESCO workshops on the application of the social sciences in analysing and solving problems regarding women's participation in economic, social and cultural life in urban areas, as well as on the use of social science with particular reference to Namibia and South Africa.

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) assisted Namibian refugees in the front-line States. In Angola, where an estimated 69,000 Namibians sought refuge, UNHCR spent $912,500 on assistance programmes aimed at covering basic needs, such as improving health and education levels. SWAPO acted as the implementing agency for UNHCR. Smaller numbers of Namibian refugees in Botswana, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe received similar support. The provision of adequate basic education and vocational training remained a vital component of the UNHCR assistance programme for South African and Namibian refugees, and assistance by the UNHCR to these two groups at the lower secondary level during 1987 amounted to $540,000. UNHCR also maintained its annual contribution of $30,000 to the United Nations Institute for Namibia.

The International Labour Organisation (ILO) continued to assist in the functioning of the Vocational Training Centre for Namibians in Angola, the largest single project within the Nationhood Programme. Regarding vocational rehabilitation, ILO continued to implement another Nationhood Programme project designed to train disabled Namibian war victims and reintegrate them into productive activities. A third ILO-executed Nationhood Programme project, focusing on training the future labour administration for an independent Namibia, resumed operations in April 1987.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) assisted SWAPO with emergency food. A training project executed by FAO concerned the organization of fellowships for high-level fisheries management training for Namibians. In addition, FAO carried out surveys and analyses of policy options on various aspects of Namibia's agriculture. The International Civil Aviation Organization participated in a UNDP-funded programme of civil-aviation training fellowships for Namibians. The World Health Organization provided $514,000 during the 1986-1987 biennium for Namibian refugees, with priority given to health manpower development and the managerial process for national health development, as well as the supply of drugs, materials and equipment. It also assisted SWAPO with medical supplies. As at 31 December 1987, the World Food Programme had committed nearly $33 million for food aid to SWAPO.

Chapter IV

Other colonial Territories

The peaceful settlement of the dispute over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), the questions of East Timor and New Caledonia, the conflict in Western Sahara and the situation in a number of other small colonial Territories continued to be considered in 1987 by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries).

The dispute between Argentina and the United Kingdom over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) remained unsettled, with the Secretary-General reporting that the parties had not initiated negotiations on the future of the islands as proposed by the General Assembly. In November, the Assembly reiterated its request that they undertake talks and that the Secretary-General continue his good offices mission to assist them (resolution 42/19).

France reported that its September referendum in New Caledonia had resulted in an overwhelming majority in favour of staying within the French Republic. In December, the Assembly called on France to resume dialogue with all sections of the population to facilitate rapid progress towards an act of self-determination in which all sections of the community participated (42/79).

In December, the Assembly again requested that Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro negotiate a cease-fire to create the necessary conditions for a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara (42/78).

In addition, the Assembly adopted resolutions on American Samoa (42/88), Guam (42/87) and the United States Virgin Islands (42/89), under United States administration; Anguilla (42/80), Bermuda (42/86), the British Virgin Islands (42/82), the Cayman Islands (42/85), Montserrat (42/81) and the Turks and Caicos Islands (42/83), administered by the United Kingdom; and Tokelau (42/84), under the administration of New Zealand.

Decisions were adopted by the Assembly in relation to Gibraltar (42/418), Pitcairn (42/419) and St. Helena (42/420), administered by the United Kingdom.

The Committee on colonial countries again took up the question of East Timor, consideration of which was deferred by the Assembly until 1988.

The United Nations Secretariat prepared background papers for the Committee on developments in most of the Territories.

Topic related to this chapter. General questions relating to colonial countries.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

Communications. During 1987, the Secretary-General continued to receive communications from Argentina, the United Kingdom and others on the matter of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas).

Argentina forwarded a press release it issued on 3 January,⁽¹⁾ marking the 154th anniversary of what it described as unlawful British occupation of the Malvinas and reaffirming its sovereign rights over the Malvinas, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands as well as its determination to recover the islands through peaceful negotiation.

Two government press communiques were issued by Argentina in January.⁽²⁾ On 30 January, it recalled that in 1986⁽³⁾ the United Kingdom had established a 200-mile zone around the Malvinas for conservation and fisheries management which it had denounced at the time as a usurpation of its territory. Argentina wished to reaffirm its position, which was guided by three principles: negotiated settlement of disputes, firmness in laying claim to its rights through the exercise of maritime jurisdiction, and prudence so as to avoid incidents. On 31 January, Argentina said that to maintain peace and avoid incidents, its patrolling of the South Atlantic would not cover the so-called 150-mile military exclusion zone around the Malvinas imposed by the United Kingdom after the 1982 war;⁽⁴⁾ however, that did not represent recognition of the zone's legitimacy or that the waters in question could constitute a fishing-management zone.

On 14 April, the United Kingdom replied to a 1986 communication⁽⁵⁾ from Argentina concerning its International Year of Peace activities (see p. 123).

Guyana, on 18 June, ⁽⁶⁾ transmitted the final communique of the Special Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, 9-12 March), supporting the 1986 General Assembly declaration of the South Atlantic as a zone of peace⁽⁷⁾ (see also p. 354), reiterating its support for the restoration through negotiations of Argentina's sovereignty over the Malvinas, expressing concern over the United Kingdom's 1986 fisheries' declaration,⁽³⁾ and deploring the United Kingdom's rejection of Argentina's proposals for the resumption of negotiations. On 23 October,⁽⁸⁾ Zimbabwe conveyed the final communique of the Meeting of Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Non-Aligned Movement to the Assembly (New York, 5-7 October), deploring acts aimed at maintaining the British colonial presence in the Malvinas and appealing to the United Kingdom not to alter the situation while the sovereignty issue remained unresolved.

In the Acapulco Commitment to Peace, Development and Democracy, signed at Acapulco, Mexico, on 29 November by their respective heads of State, Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela reiterated their support for Argentina's sovereignty over the Malvinas and stressed the importance of the declaration of the South Atlantic as a zone of peace for bringing the peoples of Latin America and Africa closer together.⁽⁹⁾

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Falkland Islands (Malvinas) question was considered by the Committee on colonial countries at three meetings, on 4, 12 and 14 August⁽¹⁰⁾ It heard statements by Argentina, Committee members, a representative of the Falkland Islands Legislative Council and two other petitioners. The United Kingdom, the administering Power concerned, in conformity with its 1986 decision,⁽¹¹⁾ did not participate.

On 14 August, the Committee reiterated that the way to end the colonial situation in the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) was by a negotiated settlement, regretted that implementation of the Assembly resolutions on the question had not started, urged the parties to resume negotiations and reiterated its support for the renewed good offices mission of the Secretary-General to assist them.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, responding to a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽¹²⁾ submitted in November 1987 a report⁽¹³⁾ stating that during 1987 he had discussed the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) on a number of occasions with the two parties and had concluded that conditions had not sufficiently evolved for him to carry out the Assembly's mandate. The United Kingdom considered that the only way forward was to concentrate on solutions to problems of mutual concern, such as fisheries, while setting aside the sovereignty claim. Argentina expressed readiness to initiate negotiations on all issues, including the future of the islands. While both parties in the past year had shown restraint, the Secretary-General regretted that they had not begun the dialogue consistent with the 1986 Assembly resolution.⁽¹²⁾

On 17 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/19 by recorded vote.

Question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and having received the report of the Secretary-General,

Aware of the interest of the international community in the peaceful and definitive settlement by the Governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland of all their differences, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking note of the interest repeatedly expressed by both parties in normalizing their relations,

Convinced that such purpose would be facilitated by a global negotiation between both Governments that will allow them to rebuild mutual confidence on a solid basis and to resolve the pending problems, including all aspects on the future of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas),

1. Reiterates its request to the Governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to initiate negotiations with a view to finding the means to resolve peacefully and definitively the problems pending between both countries, including all aspects on the future of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his renewed mission of good offices in order to assist the parties in complying with the request made in paragraph 1 above, and to take the necessary measures to that end;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)".

General Assembly resolution 42/19

17 November 1987 Meeting 72 114-5-36 (recorded vote)

14-nation draft (A/42/L.17 & Add.1); agenda item 37.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Against: Belize, Gambia, Oman, Sri Lanka, United Kingdom.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahrain, Belgium, Bhutan, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Cameroon, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Malawi, Maldives, Malta, Nepal, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, Qatar, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Solomon Islands, Swaziland, Thailand, Turkey, United Arab Emirates.

The United Kingdom stated that the significance of the text lay not in what it said but in what it did not say. By calling for negotiations on all aspects of the future of the islands, it opened an agenda which included the dispute over sovereignty. Thus, the draft prejudiced the position of one of the parties, in that it supported Argentina's contention that sovereignty must be discussed. Further, it made no mention of the wishes of the islanders, which were not in doubt, and their right to self-determination. The United Kingdom stated that the Falklands had been British for longer than Argentina had been Argentine, and that there had been no indigenous inhabitants of the islands. The sovereignty question should be set aside, and the parties concentrate on the many issues in which each had an interest and build on them.

Argentina felt that the text set forth the essence of what should be the approach to dealing with problems, tensions and conflicts-negotiation. There was no question that there was a dispute. It was not an arbitrary or unilateral question raised by Argentina alone, but something that began with the occupation of the islands in 1833. The draft did not prejudice the positions of either party, Argentina contended, since it did not refer to the question of either self-determination or sovereignty.

Sri Lanka believed that the wishes of the islanders should take precedence over other considerations and that they should express their views before any decisions were taken towards implementing the text.

Jordan found more grounds for optimism through Argentina's patience and wisdom and the United Kingdom's experience in devising compromise solutions.

Sweden termed the text a constructive attempt to promote a resumption of the dialogue without pre-conditions. Botswana said that a vote for the draft was a vote for negotiations. France supported the modalities proposed by the sponsors for settling the dispute. The Netherlands found that the resolution did not in any way prejudice the outcome of negotiations. Guatemala expressed its solidarity with Argentina on the issue of the Malvinas. Iran was not oblivious to the principle of self-determination, but believed that it was not the only pertinent principle-sovereignty, which already had been violated by the settlers, was of prime importance. Therefore, settlement of claims and counter-claims could best be achieved through negotiations.

Also on 17 November, the Assembly (decision 42/410) took note of the Fourth Committee's report on the question.⁽¹⁴⁾ The Committee had heard statements by four petitioners.

East Timor

Although the question of East Timor was not considered in 1987 by the General Assembly, but deferred until 1988 (see p. 364), it was again taken up by the Committee on colonial countries. Meanwhile, the Secretary-General continued his substantive high-level talks with Portugal-considered by the United Nations to be the legal administering Power-and Indonesia, which maintained that decolonization in East Timor was complete and that its people had chosen independence through integration with Indonesia.

Consideration by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries⁽¹⁾ considered the East Timor question at four meetings on 4, 11, 13 and 14 August. It heard statements by Indonesia, Mozambique (on behalf also of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau and Sao Tome and Principe) and Portugal (as the administering Power). Additionally, it heard statements by a representative of the Frente Revolucionária de Timor Leste Independente (FRETILIN), representatives of nine non-governmental organizations (NGOS), a deputy of the Portuguese Parliament and a Japanese citizen.

In letters to the Committee of 30 July and 3 and 11 August,⁽²⁾ Indonesia reiterated its opposition to the appearance of petitioners to discuss East Timor, stating that the decolonization process there had been carried out under the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and 1960 General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV)⁽³⁾ and 1541(XV),⁽⁴⁾ and that since East Timor had been integrated into Indonesia in 1976, the Committee's consideration of the question would constitute interference in a sovereign State's internal affairs.

The Committee, on 14 August, decided to continue consideration of the item in 1988, subject to Assembly directives.

Other communications. On 5 March,(5) Portugal informed the Secretary-General that it had nothing to add to the information it had provided in 1979,(6) as required by Article 73 e of the Charter.

Mozambique, on 16 June,(7) transmitted the final communique of the Seventh Summit Conference of the Heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe (Maputo, 21 and 22 May), reiterating support for East Timor's struggle for independence, condemning its annexation by Indonesia, calling on Portugal as the administering Power to undertake a dialogue with FRETILIN, and encouraging the Secretary-General to pursue his efforts under a 1982 General Assembly resolution.(8)

On 23 June,(9) Mozambique conveyed two documents on the Indonesian-controlled April 1987 elections in East Timor. The first, an analysis by a London-based observer, concluded that the elections represented illegal action conducted by an occupying Power. As in previous elections, participation was limited to three parties, which excluded parties indigenous to East Timor and West Papua, and voter turnout was calculated to be in excess of 100 per cent of the registered voters in several districts. The document asserted that such elections could not correctly be used to back claims that the people of East Timor had accepted integration as part of Indonesia. The second document, taken from a British Broadcasting Corporation broadcast of 3 May, commented on the excess voter turnout, rejecting the Indonesian Government's explanation that the surplus reflected the votes of visiting civil servants, contractors and seamen.

Responding on 1 July,(10) Indonesia termed the charges misrepresentations and insinuations. The development of a three-party system was described as a decision based on national consensus with the full support of previously existing parties, a process equally relevant to East Timor. Indonesia maintained the elections embodied the true wishes of the people in view of the enthusiastic turnout and the negligible incidence of invalid ballots. The implementation of a special system of casting votes was a response to uneven levels of literacy, and the excess turnout in various districts was not considered significant as the nation-wide and aggregate figures did not show discrepancies.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September progress report on the situation,(11) the Secretary-General stated that during 1987 he had held substantive talks on several occasions with representatives of Indonesia and Portugal, but regretted that the goal of a settlement had not been achieved; however, the talks had enabled both sides to establish a useful dialogue and, in connection with their attempts to bridge their differences, they were considering a possible visit by a parliamentary Portuguese delegation to East Timor, with a view to obtaining first-hand information. The Secretary-General was continuing to follow the humanitarian situation in East Timor. As at the end of August 1987, under a programme for the repatriation of former Portuguese civil servants and their dependants, implemented by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) with funding from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, approximately 380 persons had arrived in Lisbon. ICRC was also continuing to carry out several programmes for the East Timorese people.

New Caledonia

In 1986,(1) the General Assembly had determined that New Caledonia, a group of islands in the south-west Pacific, was a Non-Self-Governing Territory (NSGT) within the meaning of the United Nations Charter and affirmed the right of the people to self-determination and independence in accordance with the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.(2)

France, the administering Power, maintained that it did not consider New Caledonia to be an NSGT and that the people would have the opportunity to express their views during a mid-1987 referendum.(3)

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries considered the question of New Caledonia at seven meetings, on 24 February, 17 March and between 4 and 14 August 1987,(4) with the participation of the seven members of the South Pacific Forum that were United Nations Member States (Australia, Fiji, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Vanuatu), representatives of the Front de liberation nationale kanak et socialiste (FLNKS), and representatives of NGOs interested in the issue. It had before it background information relating to the Territory prepared by FLNKS and transmitted to the Committee by Papua New Guinea, (5) a working paper prepared by the Secretariat,(6) and a letter from Fiji transmitting a summary of key points that arose out of a meeting on New Caledonia of the Foreign Ministers of the South Pacific Forum (Auckland, New Zealand, 3 March).(7)

On 17 March, the Committee requested France's co-operation and urged it to prepare the Territory for a free and genuine act of self-determination in accordance with United Nations principles and practices; it requested the Committee Chairman to hold consultations with France in that regard. On 31 July,⁽⁸⁾ the Acting Chairman informed the Committee that he had received no response from France to the request for consultations, and drew attention to a recent addendum to the Secretariat's working paper on developments in the Territory,⁽⁹⁾ dealing with the procedures established by France for the referendum scheduled for September to consult the population of New Caledonia on the Territory's future status.

On 14 August, the Committee adopted a resolution⁽¹⁰⁾ by 18 votes to 1, with 5 abstentions, which it submitted to France and the General Assembly. The Committee affirmed the right of the people of New Caledonia to self-determination and independence in accordance with the 1960 Declaration and France's obligation to transmit information on New Caledonia under the United Nations Charter. It declared that a long-term solution required a genuine act of self-determination, consistent with United Nations principles, to be preceded by impartial political education. Meanwhile, it was the obligation of the administering Power to promote the social and economic development of the Territory.

Communications. In its final communique, the eighteenth South Pacific Forum (Apia, Samoa, 29 and 30 May)⁽¹¹⁾ - noting that France was preparing a referendum in which a significant proportion of the indigenous population had proclaimed, through FLNKS, that it would not take part - called for a United Nations-sponsored referendum, consistent with universally accepted principles of self-determination.

In October, the South Pacific Forum and France gave their respective assessments of the 13 September referendum.

On 2 October,⁽¹²⁾ Samoa, on behalf of the South Pacific Forum's United Nations Members, stated in a letter to the General Assembly President that the referendum was not a free and genuine act of self-determination because: it was not conducted in co-operation with the United Nations; there were no United Nations observers; there was no prior political education and no real choice; the full range of options prescribed by United Nations practices and guidelines was not offered; and punitive consequences were implicitly attached to the independence option. The seven countries pointed out that over 40 per cent of the eligible voters, and more than 80 per cent of the indigenous people, did not vote. In their view, the referendum had exacerbated the divisions and tensions in the Territory and shown that a less confrontational approach and a resumption of the dialogue by the administering Power was required to find common ground among the communities of New Caledonia.

In a 10 October letter to the Secretary-General,⁽¹³⁾ France stated that the organization of the referendum was unexceptionable and the results clear and conclusive. An overwhelming majority of 98.3 per cent had voted in favour of keeping New Caledonia within the French Republic. The participation of 59.1 per cent of the eligible voters was revealing in view of the boycott instructions by the pro-independence movements, and had to be compared with the rate of participation in previous votes (49.57 per cent in 1984 and 51.38 per cent in 1986). The pro-independence parties were involved at every stage of the process and the referendum was preceded by an intense political campaign and complied fully with United Nations principles. France noted that United Nations observation of a self-determination ballot was not required as a general rule and that no such request had been made by the Organization. It was now up to the New Caledonians to decide what institutions to establish. The reasons which had led France in 1986 to oppose the addition of New Caledonia to the list of NSGTs remained valid, and it therefore rejected the text submitted to the Assembly by the Committee on colonial countries, which, moreover, unjustifiably criticized France and ignored the decision made by the New Caledonian electorate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted, by recorded vote, resolution 42/79, as recommended by the Fourth Committee.

Question of New Caledonia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of New Caledonia,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling also its resolution 41/41 A of 2 December 1986 by which the Assembly considered that, in the light of the provisions of Chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) and 1541(XV), New Caledonia was a Non-Self-Governing Territory within the meaning of the Charter,

Noting the decision adopted by the Special Committee on the question of New Caledonia on 17 March 1987, as well as the resolution adopted by the Special Committee on 14 August 1987,

Noting also the section relating to New Caledonia in the communique issued at the conclusion of the eighteenth South Pacific Forum, held at Apia on 29 and 30 May 1987, and in particular the call for a United Nations-sponsored referendum in the Territory consistent with the universally accepted principles and practices of self-determination and independence,

Noting further the provisions concerning New Caledonia contained in the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986,

Conscious of the responsibility of the administering Power to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in respect of New Caledonia,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories and considering that the possibility of sending a visiting mission to New Caledonia at an appropriate time should be kept under review,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to New Caledonia;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of New Caledonia to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirms that an obligation exists on the part of the Government of France to transmit information on New Caledonia under Chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations and requests that Government to transmit to the Secretary-General such information as is called for under Chapter XI and in the related decisions of the General Assembly;

4. Regrets that the Government of France has not responded to the request to submit such information and calls upon it to do so;

5. Considers that, consistent with the principles laid down in its resolution 1514(XV), the peaceful transition of New Caledonia to self-determination and independence should be undertaken in a manner which guarantees the rights and interests of the people of New Caledonia;

6. Declares that progress towards a long-term political solution in New Caledonia requires a free and genuine act of self-determination consistent with United Nations principles and practices of self-determination and independence;

7. Emphasizes that such an act of self-determination, in which all options should be made available, should be preceded by a comprehensive programme of political education in which all options are impartially presented and consequences fully explained;

8. Calls upon the Government of France to resume dialogue with all sections of the population of New Caledonia in order to facilitate rapid progress towards such an act of self-determination in which all sections of the community participate;

9. Affirms the responsibility of the administering Power to promote economic and social development and calls upon the administering Power to institute programmes designed to benefit all the people throughout the Territory;

10. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a visiting mission to New Caledonia at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/79

4 December 1987 Meeting 92 69-29-47 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/42/730 & Corr.2) by recorded vote (69-27-46) 28 October (meeting 22); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/42/23); agenda item 18.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 4th Committee 10-23; plenary 90-92.

Abstaining: Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Congo, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, Gambia, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Haiti, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Mali, Malta, Morocco, Nepal, Norway, Oman, Panama, Paraguay, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Yemen.

During its consideration of the item, the Fourth Committee heard, at their request,(14) eight petitioners representing FLNKS and NGOS interested in the topic.

In explanation of vote, France said that the draft took no account of the September referendum which had been carried out meticulously and in which a clear majority had indicated their wish to build their future within the French Republic. Canada, Finland, Greece, Iraq, Malta, the Netherlands, Suriname and Sweden also called for respect for the results of the referendum. Some of those countries pointed out, however, that the referendum alone could not solve the 'Territory's problems and that a dialogue between the population groups was necessary. Canada, Greece, Japan, the Netherlands and Solomon Islands noted that France had indicated its willingness to pursue such a dialogue. Finland, Japan, Sweden and Vanuatu stated that France should report to the United Nations as required under Article 73 of the Charter.

Japan felt that the draft prejudged the result of the self-determination exercise. Suriname said that integration into the French Republic was a valid choice under the 1960 Declaration.

Further communication. In a 22 October letter to the Fourth Committee Chairman,(15) Samoa, for the seven South Pacific Forum members which were Members of the United Nations, noted that several times in the Committee's debate France had stated that the September referendum in New Caledonia was uncontested; however, the Forum members wished to point out that there had been appeals to the Council of State of France and to the National Commission for Communication and Liberties over the conduct of the referendum and the matter was still pending.

Western Sahara

The decolonization of Western Sahara and the right of its people to self-determination remained a concern of the United Nations in 1987.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, on 19 February, (1) reaffirmed that Western Sahara was a question of decolonization and once more requested the parties to the conflict, Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO Front), to negotiate directly for a cease-fire and create the necessary conditions for a referendum for self-determination. The Commission welcomed the efforts of the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to promote a solution and decided to consider the situation in 1988 as a high priority matter. (See also p. 741.)

Consideration by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries (2) considered Western Sahara at three meetings on 4, 6 and 13 August, hearing statements by Afghanistan, Cuba, India, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania, as well as by a representative of the POLISARIO Front. During its consideration of the item, the Committee had before it background information on current political and military developments in the Territory. (3)

On 13 August, it decided to take up the item in 1988, subject to General Assembly directives.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly resolution, (4) submitted in October 1987 a report (5) on meetings he and the OAU Chairman had held between January and September 1987 with Morocco and the POLISARIO Front. The Secretary-General and the OAU Chairman said that they were satisfied with the progress achieved, that Morocco was prepared to entrust the United Nations with the conduct of a referendum for the self-determination of the people in the Territory, and that if the parties continued to display political determination and flexibility, they would facilitate the negotiation of a peaceful solution of the Western Sahara question. Noting a rise in tension between the parties in early 1987, the Secretary-General and the Chairman cautioned them that the problem could not be solved through military means.

A technical mission would be sent to the Territory to gather information needed to supplement that already supplied by the parties, the Secretary-General said. Proposals for a cease-fire and referendum would then be formulated.

Communication. In their final communiqué, (6) the Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Non-Aligned Movement to the 1987 Assembly (New York, 5-7 October) also reaffirmed that Western Sahara was a decolonization problem and could be solved only when its people exercised their right to self-determination. They urged Morocco and the POLISARIO Front, guided by a 1983 OAU resolution (7) and the 1986 Assembly resolution, (4) to hold direct negotiations on a cease-fire and referendum.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Fourth Committee, in October, heard four petitioners at their request, including a representative of the POLISARIO Front. (8)

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/78 by recorded vote.

Question of Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered in depth the question of Western Sahara,

Recalling the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 41/16 of 31 October 1986 on the question of Western Sahara,

Recalling resolution AHG/Res.104(XIX) on Western Sahara, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its nineteenth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 6 to 12 June 1983,

Taking note with appreciation of the part concerning Western Sahara of the final communiqué adopted by the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the forty-second session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 5 to 7 October 1987,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the question of Western Sahara,

Noting with appreciation the continuation of the joint good offices process initiated in New York on 9 April 1986 by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the United Nations with a view to implementing resolution AHG/Res.104 (XIX) and General Assembly resolutions 40/50 of 2 December 1985 and 41/16 of 31 October 1986,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of Western Sahara;

2. Reaffirms that the question of Western Sahara is a question of decolonization which remains to be completed on the basis of the exercise by the people of Western Sahara of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

3. Reaffirms also that the solution of the question of Western Sahara lies in the implementation of resolution AHG/Res.104(XIX) of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, in which ways and means were established for a just and definitive political solution to the Western Sahara conflict;

4. Again requests, to that end, the two parties to the conflict, the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro, to undertake direct negotiations, in the shortest possible time, with a view to bringing about a ceasefire to create the necessary conditions for a peaceful and fair referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, a referendum without any administrative or military constraints, under the auspices of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations;

5. Welcomes the efforts of the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the United Nations to promote a just and definitive solution of the question of Western Sahara, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 40/50;

6. Takes note of the joint decision of the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the United Nations to send a technical mission to Western Sahara in order to collect the relevant technical information to assist them in discharging the mandate entrusted to them under General Assembly resolutions 40/50 and 41/16 and the present resolution;

7. Invites the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to exert every effort to persuade the two parties to the conflict, the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro, to negotiate, in the shortest possible time and in conformity with resolution AHG/Res.104(XIX), General Assembly resolution 40/50 and the present resolution, the terms of a ceasefire and the modalities for organizing the said referendum;

8. Appeals to the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to display the political will necessary to implement resolution AHG/Res.104(XIX), General Assembly resolutions 40/50 and 41/16 and the present resolution;

9. Reaffirms the determination of the United Nations to co-operate fully with the Organization of African Unity with a view to implementing the relevant decisions of that Organization, in particular resolution AHG/Res.104(XIX);

10. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara as a matter of priority and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

11. Invites the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to keep the Secretary-General of the United Nations informed of the progress achieved in the implementation of the decisions of the Organization of African Unity relating to Western Sahara;

12. Invites the Secretary-General to follow the situation in Western Sahara closely with a view to the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

Abstaining: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Indonesia, Iraq, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Netherlands, Niger, Pakistan, Paraguay, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire.

The Secretariat orally informed the Fourth Committee that it had been estimated that the technical mission to Western Sahara would be dispatched by the end of 1987 and costs met from existing appropriations under the 1986-1987 budget.

Morocco, declaring that the other side was trying to block peace efforts and sow confusion, did not participate in the vote, since it felt that the text's constructive provisions-the good offices process and the technical mission-were beset with pre-conditions, undermining their substance; it also regretted Algeria's intransigence and its refusal to accept the conclusions of the Secretary-General's report.

Bangladesh did not participate in the voting in the Fourth Committee in October, but abstained in the plenary Assembly in December while awaiting the outcome of the technical mission which had been in the area since mid-November. The Sudan, which had voted in favour in Committee, abstained in the plenary, awaiting the creation of the necessary atmosphere for a solution.

China also did not participate, though it supported the technical mission and hoped that the parties would continue to seek a solution.

The United States said the text tilted towards the Algerian position and failed to accommodate Morocco's concerns; in calling for direct negotiations, it irritated Morocco and circumscribed the Secretary-General's role. Turkey regretted the lack of a consensual text and said it failed to meet expectations. Austria, which would have preferred a consensus, said it voted for the resolution because it favoured a peaceful solution acceptable to all.

Canada wished to leave the search for a solution to the parties and not prejudice the matter. Côte d'Ivoire, stating that Member States must not tie the hands of the Secretary-General or the OAU Chairman, said it would abstain on all Western Sahara drafts until a referendum had been held. Iraq agreed that no obstacles should be put in the Secretary-General's way. Saint Vincent and the Grenadines felt that the text gave only token acknowledgement to his efforts and did not further the cause of peace by calling for direct negotiations between the parties. Sri Lanka believed that Morocco was being invited to implement formulations to which it was not a party. Zaire pointed out that since the text was not acceptable to one of the parties it could temporarily block the good offices process.

Australia, though objecting to elements prejudging the situation, voted for the text because of its positive aspects. Iceland's vote was on the understanding that the POLISARIO Front would co-operate with the Secretary-General. Finland endorsed the decision to send a technical mission to the Territory and was joined by Norway in supporting the joint mediation efforts. The Philippines would have preferred a greater expression of support for the Secretary-General. Sweden decided to support the text even though it did not give enough prominence to the Secretary-General's progress and the agreement of the parties to cooperate with the technical mission. Uruguay saw the decision to send the mission as a meaningful new development.

Malta felt that the text's operative part reflected the difficulties in achieving a solution acceptable to all, but welcomed the efforts of the Secretary-General and the OAU Chairman to overcome them.

It had before it Secretariat working papers on the situation in the Territories under consideration.

In December, the General Assembly adopted resolutions or decisions, most of which were based on drafts proposed by the Committee.

American Samoa

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/88 without vote,

Question of American Samoa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of American Samoa,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to American Samoa, in particular General Assembly resolution 41/23 of 31 October 1986,

Taking into account the statement of the representative of the administering Power relating to American Samoa,

Conscious of the need to promote progress towards the full implementation of the Declaration in respect of American Samoa,

Noting the continuing process of constitutional reviews, through consultations with the people and through the work of a constitutional review committee,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Recalling the dispatch in 1981 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories and considering that the possibility of sending a further visiting mission to American Samoa at an appropriate time should be kept under review,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to American Samoa;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of American Samoa to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to American Samoa;

4. Calls upon the Government of the United States of America, as the administering Power, to take all necessary steps, taking into account the rights, interests and wishes of the people of American Samoa as expressed freely in conditions leading to real self-determination, to expedite the process of decolonization of the Territory in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration and reaffirms the importance of fostering an awareness among the people of American Samoa of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence;

5. Calls upon the administering Power to consider favourably the expressed request of the people of American Samoa to appoint the Chief Justice and other members of the judiciary of the Territory themselves;

6. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power, under the Charter, to promote the economic and social development of American Samoa and calls upon the administering Power to intensify its efforts to strengthen and diversify the economy of the Territory and to make it more viable in order to reduce its heavy economic and financial dependence on the United States and to create more employment opportunities for the people of the Territory;

7. Expresses the hope that the development planning process initiated under the first five-year development plan will be strengthened;

8. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people of American Samoa to the enjoyment of their natural resources by taking effective measures to ensure their right to own and dispose of those resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development with a view to creating conditions for a balanced, diversified and viable economy;

9. Urges the administering Power to continue to promote close relations between the people of the Territory and the neighbouring island communities and to facilitate co-operation between the Government of American Samoa and the regional institutions in order to enhance the economic and social welfare of the people of the Territory;

10. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the dispatch of a further visiting mission to American Samoa at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, taking into account, in particular, the wishes of the people of the Territory, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

Anguilla

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/80 without vote.

Question of Anguilla

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Anguilla,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Anguilla, including in particular General Assembly resolution 41/17 of 31 October 1986,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory,

Noting that the Constitutional Review Committee, which was appointed in October 1985, held a series of public meetings in 1986 in the Territory and with Anguillians residing in the United States Virgin Islands, and noting that the territorial Government recognizes the need to replace the outdated edition of the laws pertaining to the Territory,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of the Territory,

Noting that the economy of the Territory grew in 1985 mainly as a result of an expansion in tourism, and that, while recommending restrictions on foreign investment and tourism, the Government of Anguilla recognizes the importance of balanced sectoral growth and continues to give the highest priority to the development of the Territory's economic and social infrastructure,

Expressing its concern at the illegal operation of foreign fishing vessels within the territorial waters of Anguilla and its offshore fishing banks and welcoming, in view of the importance of the fishing industry to the diversification of the economy, the intention of the Government of Anguilla to introduce appropriate legislation to conserve the Territory's fish stocks,

Emphasizing the importance of elaborating an appropriate strategy for the efficient production and marketing of salt,

Underlining the need for effective instruments to regulate the commercial banking system and noting in that connection the Territory's decision to join the Eastern Caribbean Central Bank,

Noting with satisfaction the contributions of the United Nations Development Programme, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the development of the Territory,

Noting the continued participation of the Territory in the Caribbean Group for Co-operation in Economic Development,

Recalling the dispatch in 1984 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories and considering that the possibility of sending a further visiting mission to Anguilla at an appropriate time should be kept under review,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to Anguilla;

In December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote decision 42/420.

Question of St. Helena

At its 92nd plenary meeting, on 4 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960. The Assembly urged the administering Power, in consultation with the Legislative Council and other representatives of the people of St. Helena, to continue to take all necessary steps to ensure the speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory and, in that connection, reaffirms the importance of promoting an awareness among the people of St. Helena of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination. The Assembly expressed the view that the administering Power should continue to implement infrastructure and community development projects aimed at improving the general welfare of the community, including the critical unemployment situation, and to encourage local initiative and enterprise, particularly in the areas of fisheries development, forestry, handicrafts and agriculture. The Assembly, in view of the serious developments in South Africa, noted with concern the trade and transportation dependency of the Territory on South Africa. The Assembly reaffirmed that continued development assistance from the administering Power, together with any assistance that the international community might be able to provide, constituted an important means of developing the economic potential of the Territory and of enhancing the capacity of its people to realize fully the goals set forth in the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. The Assembly noted with deep concern the continued presence of military facilities on the dependency of Ascension Island and, in that regard, recalled all the United Nations resolutions and decisions concerning military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Assembly urged the administering Power to take all the necessary measures not to involve the Territory in any offensive acts or interference against neighbouring States by the racist régime of South Africa. The Assembly considered that the possibility of dispatching a United Nations visiting mission to St. Helena at an appropriate time should be kept under review, and requested the Special Committee to continue to examine the question of St. Helena at its next session, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly decision 42/420

119-2-30 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/42/730 & Corr.2) by recorded vote (112-2-29), 28 October (meeting 23); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/42/23); agenda item 18.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 4th Committee 10, 12-23; plenary 90-92.

In the Fourth Committee, a separate recorded vote was taken on the sixth sentence, referring to the continued presence of military facilities on Ascension Island. The sentence was retained by 73 votes to 31, with 27 abstentions. The United Kingdom, which had requested that vote and a recorded vote on the draft as a whole, stated that for the past five years that sentence had appeared in the drafts on St. Helena, even though Ascension Island was 1,120 kilometres from St. Helena and had only administrative links with it, no indigenous population and extremely limited facilities, with few personnel; that small base could not be of interest to anyone, least of all to St. Helena. Further, the United Kingdom termed absurd the seventh sentence-whereby it was urged not to involve the Territory in acts against neighbouring States by South Africa-and the fourth sentence, since it was natural for St. Helena, given its geographical location, to trade with South Africa.

Legal questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

In 1987, the International Court of Justice continued to deal with five contentious cases; a sixth such dispute was referred to it in February. In May, the Court delivered an advisory opinion.

The General Assembly and the Security Council held elections in September to fill a vacancy in the Court created by the death on 10 March 1987 of a Judge. They held elections in November to fill vacancies caused by the expiration of terms of office of five other Judges. (See p. 1050.) Also in November, the Assembly determined the conditions on which the Republic of Nauru might become a party to the Statute of the Court (resolution 42/21) - an action recommended by the Security Council (resolution 600(1987)).

Topic related to this chapter. Americas: Nicaragua situation.

Judicial work of the Court

In 1987, the Court or its Chambers-meeting at The Hague, Netherlands-continued considering two cases concerning border and transborder armed actions (Nicaragua v. Costa Rica - which was subsequently removed from the Court's list - and Nicaragua v. Honduras); a case concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States); and two frontier disputes (Burkina Faso/Mali and El Salvador/Honduras). A new dispute referred to it concerned the company Elettronica Sicula S.p.A. (ELSI) (United States v. Italy). In addition, the Court delivered an advisory opinion concerning a judgement of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal.

The 1987 activities of the Court were described in two reports to the General Assembly, covering the periods 1 August 1986 to 31 July 1987(1) and 1 August 1987 to 31 July 1988.(2) By decision 42/405 of 13 October 1987, the Assembly took note of the 1986/87 report.

Military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua

In 1984,(3) Nicaragua had instituted proceedings against the United States with a request for an indication of provisional measures concerning responsibility for military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua. After considering the matter in 1984 and 1985,(4) the Court, in its Judgment delivered in June 1986,(5) found that the United States was obliged to make reparation to Nicaragua for all injury caused to it by breaches of obligations under international law by the United States and that the form and amount of such reparation, failing agreement between the two Parties, would be settled by the Court, reserving for that purpose the subsequent procedure.

On 7 September 1987, Nicaragua informed the Court that no agreement had been reached between the Parties as to the form and amount of reparation and requested the Court to make the necessary orders for the further conduct of the case. On 13 November, the United States declared that it remained of the view that the Court was without jurisdiction to entertain the dispute and that the Nicaraguan Application was inadmissible; accordingly, the United States would not be represented at a meeting of the Court to ascertain the views of the Parties on the procedure to be followed.

By an Order of 18 November 1987,(6) the Court fixed time-limits for written proceedings on the question of the form and amount of reparation, namely 29 March 1988 for a Memorial (written pleading) of Nicaragua and 29 July 1988 for a Counter-Memorial of the United States.

The General Assembly, in November 1987, again called for full and immediate compliance with the Court's 1986 Judgment (resolution 42/18) and, in December, deplored the continuing trade embargo against Nicaragua contrary to that Judgment, requesting once again that such measures be revoked immediately (resolution 42/176). Several 1987 communications also dealt with the 1986 Judgment (see p. 190).

Border and transborder armed actions (Nicaragua v. Costa Rica)

In 1986, Nicaragua having instituted proceedings against Costa Rica alleging border and transborder armed actions, the Court had set time-limits for the filing of pleadings by the Parties.⁽⁷⁾ By an Order of 21 July 1987,⁽⁸⁾ responding to a request by Nicaragua and after Costa Rica's views had been ascertained, the Court's Vice-President extended the time-limits for the written proceedings. However, on 12 August, Nicaragua stated that it was discontinuing the judicial proceedings against Costa Rica. It referred to an agreement by the five States of Central America on the procedure for establishing a firm and lasting peace in the region, signed on 7 August 1987 at Guatemala City by the Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua (see p. 185).

On 19 August, having ascertained that Costa Rica did not object to the discontinuance, the Court's President made an Order⁽⁹⁾ placing the discontinuance on record and removing the case from the Court's list.

Border and transborder armed actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras)

Both the Memorial of Honduras-against which Nicaragua had instituted proceedings in 1986 alleging border and transborder armed actions⁽⁷⁾ - and the Counter-Memorial of Nicaragua were filed within the prescribed time-limits: 23 February and 22 June 1987, respectively. However, the oral proceedings were temporarily adjourned, with the approval of the Court, as a result of the agreement between the five Central American States (see above).

Frontier dispute between Burkina Faso and Mali

By an Order of 9 April 1987,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Chamber, constituted by the Court in 1985,⁽¹¹⁾ nominated three experts to assist Burkina Faso and Mali in the demarcation operation to settle their frontier dispute, which had been referred to the Court by the two countries in 1983.⁽¹²⁾ The Order, made in accordance with a Special Agreement between the two Parties and with the 1986 Judgment of the Chamber,⁽¹³⁾ also authorized the Chamber President to nominate a substitute in the event of a vacancy in the group of experts.

Frontier dispute between El Salvador and Honduras

In 1986, El Salvador and Honduras had submitted to the Court a frontier dispute between them.⁽¹³⁾ Their Special Agreement defined the questions submitted for decision and provided for their submission to a Court chamber-composed of three members and two judges ad hoc - to deal with the case.

On 17 February 1987, the Parties were consulted by the Court's President as to the proposed chamber's composition; they subsequently notified the Court of their choices: El Salvador chose Nicolas Valticos (Greece) and Honduras chose Michel Virally (France).

On 8 May 1987, the Court made an Order⁽¹⁴⁾ whereby it acceded to the Parties' request to form the special Chamber and declared that it had elected Judges Shigeru Oda, José Sette Câmara and Sir Robert Y. Jennings to form, with the judges ad hoc chosen by the Parties, the Chamber. By an Order of 27 May,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Court, having consulted the Chamber, fixed 1 June 1988 as the time-limit for the filing of a Memorial by each of the Parties.

The Chamber, on 29 May, elected Judge Sette Câmara as its President and, by an Order of the same date,⁽¹⁶⁾ fixed 1 February 1989 as the time-limit for the filing of a Counter-Memorial by each of the Parties and 1 August 1989 for the filing of Replies. On 9 November, the Chamber held its inaugural public sitting.

Case concerning Elettronica Sicula S.p.A (United States v. Italy)

On 6 February 1987, the United States filed an Application instituting proceedings against Italy. The dispute concerned Italy's requisition of the plant and related assets of Elettronica Sicula S.p.A. (ELSI), an Italian company stated to be 100 per cent owned by two United States corporations.

By an Order of 2 March,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Court, with the agreement of the two Parties, constituted a Chamber to deal with the case, electing as members: Judges Nagendra Singh (President), Shigeru Oda, Robert Ago, Stephen M. Schwebel and Sir Robert Y. Jennings. By the same Order, the Court fixed the time-limits for the filing of a Memorial by the United States and a Counter-Memorial by Italy at 15 May and 16 November 1987, respectively; both were filed accordingly. On 17 November, the Chamber held its inaugural public sitting and, by an Order of the same date,⁽¹⁸⁾ fixed 18 March 1988 as the time-limit for a Reply by the United States and 18 July 1988 for a Rejoinder by Italy.

Review of a judgement by the UN Administrative Tribunal

In 1984,⁽¹⁹⁾ the General Assembly's Committee on Applications for Review of Administrative Tribunal Judgements had requested an advisory opinion on two questions relating to the Tribunal's Judgement No. 333 in the case of Vladimir Victorovich Yakimetz v. the Secretary General. The case involved the staff member's request for further employment after the expiry of his contract with the United Nations. Various aspects of the matter were considered by the Court in 1985⁽¹¹⁾ and 1986.⁽¹³⁾

On 27 May, at a public sitting, the Court delivered its advisory opinion,⁽²⁰⁾ the operative provisions of which read as follows:

The Court,

A. Unanimously,

Decides to comply with the request for an advisory opinion;

B. Is of the opinion:

(1) with regard to Question 1, unanimously,

That the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, in its Judgement No. 333 of 8 June 1984 (AT/DEC/333), did not fail to exercise jurisdiction vested in it by not responding to the question whether a legal impediment existed to the further employment in the United Nations of the Applicant after the expiry of his fixed-term contract on 26 December 1983;

(2) with regard to Question 2, by eleven votes to three,

That the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, in the same Judgement No. 333, did not err on any question of law relating to the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations.

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President Mbaye; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Oda, Ago, Sette Câmara, Bedjaoui, Ni and Tarassov, Against: Judges Schwebel, Sir Robert Jennings and Evensen.

Judge Lachs appended a declaration to the advisory opinion. Judges Elias, Oda and Ago appended separate opinions and Judges Schwebel, Sir Robert Jennings and Evensen appended dissenting opinions.

Application to become party to the Statute of the Court

By a letter of 21 August 1987 to the Secretary-General,⁽²¹⁾ the Republic of Nauru, which was not a Member State of the United Nations, applied to become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice. Requesting that the Security Council and General Assembly be informed, Nauru stated that it waited to be informed of the conditions required of it.

Whereas the Government of Nauru, by a communication dated 21 August 1987 addressed to the Secretary-General, has expressed the desire to learn the conditions on which Nauru could become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice,

Whereas Article 93, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations provides that a State which is not a Member of the United Nations may become a party to the Statute of the Court on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council,

Elections to the Court

On 27 March 1987, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 595(1987).

The Security Council,

Noting with regret the death of Judge Guy Ladreit de Lacharrière on 10 March 1987,

Noting further that a vacancy in the International Court of Justice for the remainder of the term of office of the deceased judge has thus occurred and must be filled in accordance with the terms of the Statute of the Court,

Noting that, in accordance with Article 14 of the Statute, the date of the election to fill this vacancy shall be fixed by the Security Council, Decides that the election to fill the vacancy shall take place on 14 September 1987 at a meeting of the Security Council and at a meeting of the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Security Council resolution 595(1987)

27 March 1987 Meeting 2739 Adopted unanimously

(For results of the election, see APPENDIX III.)

Publications of the Court

In November 1987, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee took up a 1986 Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report on the Court's publications.⁽²²⁾ In that report, the possibility of publishing the judgments and advisory opinions of the Court in United Nations official languages other than English and French (the official languages of the Court) was examined. The Committee also had before it the comments,⁽²³⁾ which had been presented to the Sixth (Legal) Committee, of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States and of the Office of Legal Affairs. The Group supported JIU's recommendation that the Court's judgments and advisory opinions could be published in all United Nations official languages at no additional cost. The Office of Legal Affairs pointed out that translations of the full judgments and opinions into languages other than the two official ones could not engage the Court's responsibility, and that any expansion or change of those two languages would require a formal amendment to Article 39 of the Court's Statute.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted section IV of resolution 42/225 without vote.

Chapter II

Legal aspects of international political relations

In its continuing efforts to develop legal measures for promoting friendly relations among States, the General Assembly, in November 1987, approved the Declaration on the Enhancement of the Effectiveness of the Principle of Refraining from the Threat or Use of Force in International Relations, as drafted by the Special Committee on the topic (resolution 42/22).

In December, the Assembly again stressed the importance of settling international disputes peacefully (42/150), and decided that its Sixth (Legal) Committee should complete, in 1988, the identification of the elements of good-neighbourliness and begin elaborating an international document on strengthening that concept (42/158). In addition, the Assembly invited the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries to submit such a draft convention to it in 1988 (42/155).

The Assembly invited the International Law Commission to continue elaborating the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, agreeing with the Commission's recommendation to amend the title of the topic in English from "offences" to "crimes" (42/151). The Commission also continued drafting articles on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses.

Concern over various aspects of terrorism was raised by both the Assembly and the Security Council. In January, the Council's members again condemned all acts of hostage-taking, Assembly and abduction. In December, the Council condemned all terrorist acts and requested the Secretary-General to seek Member States' views on international terrorism and on ways of combating it, including the convening of an international conference (42/159).

Topic related to this chapter. International peace and security.

Peaceful settlement of disputes between States

In December 1987, the General Assembly again urged States to observe the provisions of the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes.⁽¹⁾

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its February 1987 session,⁽²⁾ continued work on the peaceful settlement of disputes, in addition to two other main items-proposals on rationalizing the existing procedures of the United Nations (see p. 1071) and ways to maintain international peace and security.

An open-ended Working Group of the Committee discussed a working paper submitted by Romania⁽³⁾ on the resort to a commission of good offices, mediation or conciliation within the United Nations. Romania's paper was a revised version of its 1986 paper,⁽⁴⁾ which itself was based on a proposal originally submitted in 1983 by Nigeria, the Philippines and Romania,⁽⁵⁾ which had been considered by the Committee in each of the intervening years. Based on suggestions made in the discussion, Romania subsequently submitted a further revised version⁽⁶⁾ on which the Working Group held a brief exchange of preliminary views. Romania pointed out, among other things, that the proposed commission was a procedure and not an organ, and that its members would be nominated depending on the case; it believed the Working Group preferred confining the commission's competence to disputes only, rather than extending it to situations and matters.

The Group felt that tangible progress on the topic had been achieved and that work should continue on the revised proposal.

The Group also examined a progress report by the Secretary-General on the preparation of a handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,⁽⁷⁾ in which he informed the Special Committee that, in view of the current United Nations financial situation which affected the availability of personnel for assignments, work on the handbook could not proceed as expeditiously as expected. The United Nations Legal Counsel informed the Working Group that the Consultative Group on the topic was to examine in 1987 those sections of the draft handbook concerning inquiry, mediation, conciliation and good offices.

Communications. The President of Romania,⁽⁸⁾ among proposals he made in September on issues before the General Assembly, asserted that the United Nations should appeal to all parties to conflicts to solve them peacefully, with the Security Council or a special United Nations organ assisting in the cessation of military operations and during negotiations.

The Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Non-Aligned Movement to the Assembly's forty-second session (New York, 5-7 October)(9) urged non-aligned countries to utilize fully the peaceful dispute-settlement procedures provided for under the United Nations Charter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 42/150 by recorded vote.

Peaceful settlement of disputes between States
The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Peaceful settlement of disputes between States",

Recalling its resolution 37/10 of 15 November 1982, by which it approved the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes, annexed thereto,

Recalling also its resolutions 38/131 of 19 December 1983, 39/79 of 13 December 1984, 40/68 of 11 December 1985 and 41/74 of 3 December 1986,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of conflict situations and the emergence of new sources of disputes and tension in international life, and especially at the growing tendency to resort to force or the threat of the use of force and to intervention in internal affairs, and at the escalation of the arms race, which gravely endanger the independence and security of States as well as international peace and security,

Taking into account the need to exert the utmost effort in order to settle any situations and disputes between States on the basis of sovereign equality and exclusively by peaceful means, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, and to avoid any military actions and hostilities against other States, which can only make more difficult the solution of existing problems,

Considering that the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes should represent one of the central concerns for States and for the United Nations and that efforts for strengthening the process of peaceful settlement of disputes should be continued,

1. Again urges all States to observe and promote in good faith the provisions of the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes in the settlement of their international disputes;

2. Stresses the need to continue efforts to strengthen the process of the peaceful settlement of disputes through progressive development and codification of international law and through enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in this field;

3. Calls upon Member States to make full use, in accordance with the Charter, of the framework provided by the United Nations for the peaceful settlement of disputes and international problems;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report containing the replies of Member States, relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, regional inter-governmental organizations and interested international legal bodies on the implementation of the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes and on ways and means of increasing the effectiveness of this instrument;

5. Decides that the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States shall be considered at its forty-third session as a separate agenda item, in conjunction with the item of the provisional agenda entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

The Sixth Committee approved the draft as a whole after approving paragraph 4 by a recorded vote of 89 to 8, with 19 abstentions, and paragraph 5 similarly by 95 to 13, with 11 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, Japan, Jordan and the United States questioned the validity of the request made in paragraph 4, since the Manila Declaration was a recommendation and not a legal document; the United States also considered it improper to solicit States' views on the Declaration when United Nations resources were scarce. Denmark, speaking on behalf of the States members of the European Community (EC), said the procedure envisaged in paragraph 4 would not resolve the underlying problem, which was a lack of political will to use established procedures for the Peaceful settlement of disputes: they favoured the inclusion, in the resolution on the report of the Special Committee on the United Nations Charter (see p. 1072), of an appeal to Governments to use the procedures provided for in the Charter. Sharing that view, Sweden, speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries, questioned the advisability of establishing a reporting procedure. Mexico and the United Republic of Tanzania, while voting affirmatively, agreed that it was unnecessary to keep urging Member States annually to implement the Declaration.

As regards paragraph 5, Japan and Sweden, for the Nordic countries, believed the question should be considered under the agenda item on the report of the Special Committee on the Charter. The United States said it saw no useful purpose being served by the paragraph. Kenya would have liked to see the Sixth Committee take a lead in rationalizing the United Nations work and procedures. Jordan, also for reason of rationalization, doubted the need to include the item in the Assembly's 1988 agenda. Peru reaffirmed its understandings of certain provisions in the Declaration which it had expressed at the time the document was adopted.

Good-neighbourliness between States

In December 1987, the General Assembly decided to complete, in 1988, the task of identifying and clarifying the elements of good-neighbourliness and to begin elaborating a suitable international document on strengthening that concept.

Sub-Committee consideration. The Sixth Committee's Sub-Committee on Good-Neighbourliness,⁽¹⁰⁾ re-established by the Committee on 22 September 1987 to identify and clarify the elements of good-neighbourliness, held eight meetings, basing its work on a list of elements it had compiled in 1986.⁽¹¹⁾ It made progress without reaching general agreement on all elements; particular difficulties surrounded those dealing with arms limitation and disarmament, and the rights of national minority groups. The list of elements—some of which had been modified or renumbered in 1987—were presented under four major headings: legal and other elements, areas of co-operation, ways and means, and action of international organizations. It was understood that the list was not exhaustive and that the positioning of the points in the list was provisional.

Communications. Several communications, submitted under the agenda item on good-neighbourliness, concerned specific subjects, among them, Bolivia's negotiation with Chile on access to the sea (see p. 195), frontier development between Bolivia and Peru (see p. 195), and the involvement of French individuals in an incident in Suriname (see p. 1060).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly, on 7 December 1987, adopted resolution 42/158 by recorded vote.

Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the determination of the peoples of the United Nations, as expressed in the Charter of the United Nations, to practise tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours,

Recalling the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, approved by its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Recalling its resolutions 1236(XII) of 14 December 1957, 1301(XIII) of 10 December 1958, 2129(XX) of 21 December 1965, 34/99 of 14 December 1979, 36/101 of 9 December 1981, 37/117 of 16 December 1982, 38/126 of 19 December 1983, 39/78 of 13 December 1984 and 41/84 of 3 December 1986, as well as its decision 40/419 of 11 December 1985,

Bearing in mind that, for various reasons, there are particularly favourable opportunities for co-operation and mutual advantage between neighbouring countries in many fields and various forms, and that the development of such co-operation may have a positive influence on international relations as a whole,

Considering that the great changes of a political, economic and social nature, as well as the scientific and technological advances that have taken place in the world and led to unprecedented interdependence of nations, have given new dimensions to good-neighbourliness in the conduct of States and increased the need to develop and strengthen it,

Taking into account the working papers concerning the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States, as well as the written replies sent by States and international organizations on the content of good-neighbourliness and on ways and means to enhance it, the views expressed by States on this subject and the reports of the Sub-Committee on Good-Neighbourliness set up by the Sixth Committee,

Recalling its opinion that it is necessary to continue to examine the question of good-neighbourliness in order to strengthen and develop its content, as well as ways and modalities to enhance its effectiveness, and that the results of this examination could be included, at an appropriate time, in a suitable international document,

1. Reaffirms that good-neighbourliness fully conforms with the purposes of the United Nations and shall be founded upon the strict observance of the principles of the United Nations as embodied in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and so presupposes the rejection of any acts seeking to establish zones of influence or domination;

2. Calls once again upon States, in the interest of the maintenance of international peace and security, to develop good-neighbourly relations, acting on the basis of these principles;

3. Reaffirms that the generalization of the long practice of good-neighbourliness and of principles and rules pertaining to it is likely to strengthen friendly relations and co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter;

4. Takes note of the report of the Sub-Committee on Good-Neighbourliness, which functioned within the Sixth Committee during the forty-second session of the General Assembly;

5. Decides to continue and to complete at its forty-third session, on the basis of the present resolution and the report of the Sub-Committee, the task of identifying and clarifying the elements of good-neighbourliness and to begin the elaboration of a suitable international document on the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States within the framework of a sub-committee on good-neighbourliness;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States".

Against: None.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

In the Sixth Committee, the draft was approved as a whole following approval by recorded vote of the seventh preambular paragraph (96-19-6) and paragraph 5 (95-20-5). The plenary Assembly adopted those paragraphs by recorded votes of 126-19-8 and 125-20-7, respectively.

In explanation of vote, France and the United Kingdom questioned whether good-neighbourliness represented a specific concept in, or corresponded to any norm of, international law. The United States said the discussion in the Sub-Committee had failed to reveal any legal content particular to the concept, and Norway, speaking for the Nordic countries, said continued attempts to agree on elements of good-neighbourliness were unlikely to yield practical results.

The Netherlands saw no need for elaborating an international instrument on another principle enshrined in the United Nations Charter. The United States agreed that the concept was already dealt with in existing international instruments, and the Nordic countries added that the Sixth Committee should not use its limited resources on restating principles. Sharing that point, the Federal Republic of Germany said it would have considered joining a consensus, had paragraph 5 been deleted. For Italy, developments in the Sub-Committee had shown that the time was not ripe for drafting a new instrument. France said the text should have simply renewed the Sub-Committee's mandate rather than asking it to begin elaborating an international document. Austria viewed as ambitious the work programme outlined in the text, adding that the Organization's budgetary constraints should also be borne in mind. The United States felt it more prudent to suspend the work of the Sub-Committee so as to enable States to comment on its future. France and the United States believed a draft decision would have been more appropriate. The Netherlands said the question had become politicized and should not be included as a separate item on the Sixth Committee's agenda.

The United Arab Emirates said its affirmative vote and its commitment to good-neighbourliness did not represent its readiness to normalize relations with aggressor regimes or submit to policies which killed innocent people under the pretext of combating terrorism.

Non-use of force in international relations

In November 1987, the General Assembly approved the Declaration on the Enhancement of the Effectiveness of the Principle of Refraining from the Threat or Use of Force in International Relations.

The draft of the Declaration was completed in 1987 by the Special Committee established by the Assembly in 1977(12) originally to consider States' proposals with a view to drafting a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations. In the continued absence of general agreement on the mandate of the Committee, the Assembly in 1985(13) had requested it to prepare a declaration as an intermediate stage in drafting a world treaty. In 1986,(14) the Assembly had simply requested the Committee to submit in 1987 its final report containing a draft declaration.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations, meeting in New York from 9 to 27 March 1987 (15) completed a draft Declaration on the Enhancement of the Effectiveness of the Principle of Refraining from the Threat or Use of Force in International Relations, as requested by the Assembly in 1986.(14)

The Committee's Working Group held 18 meetings, during which it drafted the declaration based on an informal paper prepared by its Chairman and taking into account the various proposals submitted by delegations at previous and current sessions, including two draft texts of a declaration—one by Belgium, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Spain and the United Kingdom;(16) and another by Benin, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt and Nepal(17)—and additional paragraphs proposed separately by Cuba, Greece, Mexico and the USSR. Taking into account the discussion in the Group, the Chairman produced a revised draft which served as a basis for intensive informal consultations. On 27 March, the Committee approved the report of the Working Group, containing the text of the draft declaration (see annex to resolution 42/22 below), and adopted its report to the Assembly.

Communications. During the year, the Secretary-General received a number of communications, including many from Kampuchea and Mozambique, with a request that they be circulated under the agenda item on non-use of force (see pp. 200 and 165, respectively).

The Non-Aligned Movement's Foreign Ministers and delegation heads (New York, 5-7 October)(9) expressed support for a universal declaration on the non-use of force.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 November 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 42/22 without vote.

Declaration on the Enhancement of the Effectiveness of the Principle of Refraining from the Threat or Use of Force in International Relations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/76 of 3 December 1986, in which it decided that the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations should complete a draft declaration on the enhancement of the effectiveness of the principle, including, as appropriate, recommendations on the peaceful settlement of disputes, and submit its final report containing a draft declaration to the General Assembly at its forty-second session,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee, which met in New York from 9 to 27 March 1987,

Considering that the Special Committee has completed a draft Declaration on the Enhancement of the Effectiveness of the Principle of Refraining from the Threat or Use of Force in International Relations and has decided to submit it to the General Assembly for consideration and adoption,

Convinced of the need for the effective universal application of the principle of refraining from the threat or use of force in international relations and of the importance of the role of the United Nations in this regard,

Convinced also that the adoption of the Declaration on the Enhancement of the Effectiveness of the Principle of Refraining from the Threat or Use of Force in International Relations should contribute to the improvement of international relations,

1. Approves the Declaration on the Enhancement of the Effectiveness of the Principle of Refraining from the Threat or Use of Force in International Relations, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations for completing its work by elaborating the Declaration;

3. Recommends that every effort should be made so that the Declaration becomes generally known.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Enhancement of the Effectiveness of the Principle of Refraining from the Threat or Use of Force in International Relations

The General Assembly,

Recalling the principle that States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Recalling that this principle is enshrined in Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations and has been reaffirmed in a number of international instruments,

Reaffirming the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Definition of Aggression and the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes,

Reaffirming the obligation to maintain international peace and security in conformity with the purposes of the United Nations,

Expressing deep concern at the continued existence of situations of conflict and tension and the impact of the persistence of violations of the principle of refraining from the threat or use of force on the maintenance of international peace and security, as well as at the loss of human life and material damage in the countries affected, the development of which may thereby be set back,

Desiring to remove the risk of new armed conflicts between States by promoting a change in the international climate from confrontation to peaceful relations and co-operation and by taking other appropriate measures to strengthen international peace and security,

Convinced that, in the present world situation, in which nuclear weapons exist, there is no reasonable alternative to peaceful relations among States,

Fully aware that the question of general and complete disarmament is of the utmost importance and that peace, security, fundamental freedoms and economic and social development are indivisible,

Noting with concern the pernicious impact of terrorism on international relations,

Stressing the need for all States to desist from any forcible action aimed at depriving peoples of their right to self-determination, freedom and independence,

Reaffirming the obligation of States to settle their international disputes by peaceful means,

Conscious of the importance of strengthening the United Nations system of collective security,

Bearing in mind the universal significance of human rights and fundamental freedoms as essential factors for international peace and security,

Convinced that States have a common interest in promoting a stable and equitable world economic environment as an essential basis for world peace and that, to that end, they should strengthen international co-operation for development and work towards a new international economic order,

Reaffirming the commitment of States to the basic principle of the sovereign equality of States,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of every State to choose its political, economic, and social and cultural systems without interference in any form by another State,

Recalling that States are under an obligation not to intervene directly or indirectly, for any reason whatever, in the internal or external affairs of any other State,

Reaffirming the duty of States to refrain in their international relations from military, political, economic or any other form of coercion aimed against the political independence or territorial integrity of any State,

Reaffirming the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter,

Reaffirming that States shall fulfil in good faith all their obligations under international law,

Aware of the urgent need to enhance the effectiveness of the principle that States shall refrain from the threat or use of force in order to contribute to the establishment of lasting peace and security for all States,

1. Solemnly declares that:

I

1. Every State has the duty to refrain in its international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations. Such a threat or use of force constitutes a violation of international law and of the Charter of the United Nations and entails international responsibility.

2. The principle of refraining from the threat or use of force in international relations is universal in character and is binding, regardless of each State's political, economic, social or cultural system or relations of alliance.

3. No consideration of whatever nature may be invoked to warrant resorting to the threat or use of force in violation of the Charter.

4. States have the duty not to urge, encourage or assist other States to resort to the threat or use of force in violation of the Charter.

5. By virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination enshrined in the Charter, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and every State has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter.

6. States shall fulfil their obligations under international law to refrain from organizing, instigating, or assisting or participating in paramilitary, terrorist or subversive acts, including acts of mercenaries, in other States, or acquiescing in organized activities within their territory directed towards the commission of such acts.

7. States have the duty to abstain from armed intervention and all other forms of interference or attempted threats against the personality of the State or against its political, economic and cultural elements.

8. No State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights and to secure from it advantages of any kind.

9. In accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, States have the duty to refrain from propaganda for wars of aggression.

10. Neither acquisition of territory resulting from the threat or use of force nor any occupation of territory resulting from the threat or use of force in contravention of international law will be recognized as legal acquisition or occupation.

11. A treaty is void if its conclusion has been procured by the threat or use of force in violation of the principles of international law embodied in the Charter.

12. In conformity with the Charter and in accordance with the relevant paragraphs of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, States shall fulfill in good faith all their international obligations.

13. States have the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs, as set forth in the Charter.

II

14. States shall make every effort to build their international relations on the basis of mutual understanding, trust, respect and co-operation in all areas.

15. States should also promote bilateral and regional co-operation as one of the important means to enhance the effectiveness of the principle of refraining from the threat or use of force in international relations.

16. States shall abide by their commitment to the principle of peaceful settlement of disputes, which is inseparable from the principle of refraining from the threat or use of force in their international relations.

17. States parties to international disputes shall settle their disputes exclusively by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered. For this purpose they shall utilize such means as negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice, including good offices.

18. States shall take effective measures which, by their scope and by their nature, constitute steps towards the ultimate achievement of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control.

19. States should take effective measures in order to prevent the danger of any armed conflicts, including those in which nuclear weapons could be used, to prevent an arms race in outer space and to halt and reverse it on Earth, to lower the level of military confrontation and to enhance global stability.

20. States should co-operate in order to undertake active efforts aimed at ensuring the relaxation of international tensions, the consolidation of the international legal order and the respect of the system of international security established by the Charter of the United Nations.

21. States should establish appropriate confidence-building measures aimed at preventing and reducing tensions and at creating a better climate among them.

22. States reaffirm that the respect for effective exercise of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and protection thereof are essential factors for international peace and security, as well as for justice and the development of friendly relations and co-operation among all States. Consequently, they should promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, inter alia, by strictly complying with their international obligations and considering, as appropriate, becoming parties to the principal international instruments in this field.

23. States shall co-operate at the bilateral, regional and international levels in order to:

(a) Prevent and combat international terrorism;

Contribute actively to the elimination of the causes underlying international terrorism.

24. States shall endeavour to take concrete measures and promote favourable conditions in the international economic environment in order to achieve international peace, security and justice; they will take into account the interest of all in the narrowing of the differences in the levels of economic development, and in particular the interest of developing countries throughout the world.

III

25. The competent United Nations organs should make full use of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations in the field of the maintenance of international peace and security with a view to enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of refraining from the threat or use of force in international relations.

26. States should co-operate fully with the organs of the United Nations in supporting their action relating to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the peaceful settlement of international disputes in accordance with the Charter. In particular, they should enhance the role of the Security Council so that it can fully and effectively discharge its duties. In this regard, the permanent members of the Council have a special responsibility under the Charter.

27. States should strive to enhance the effectiveness of the collective security system through the effective implementation of the provisions of the Charter, particularly those relating to the special responsibilities of the Security Council in this regard. They should also fully discharge their obligations to support United Nations peace-keeping operations decided upon in accordance with the Charter. States shall accept and carry out the decisions of the Council in accordance with the Charter.

28. States should give the Security Council every possible type of assistance in all actions taken by it for the just settlement of crisis situations and regional conflicts. They should strengthen the part the Council can play in preventing disputes and situations the continuation of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. They should facilitate the task of the Council in reviewing situations of potential danger for international peace and security at as early a stage as possible.

29. The fact-finding capacity of the Security Council should be enhanced on an ad hoc basis in accordance with the Charter.

30. States should give full effect to the important role conferred by the Charter on the General Assembly in the area of peaceful settlement of disputes and the maintenance of international peace and security.

31. States should encourage the Secretary-General to exercise fully his functions with regard to the maintenance of international peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes, in accordance with the Charter, including those under Articles 98 and 99, and fully co-operate with him in this respect.

32. States should take into consideration that legal disputes should, as a general rule, be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court as an important factor for strengthening the maintenance of international peace and security. The General Assembly and the Security Council should consider making use of the provisions of the Charter concerning the possibility of requesting the Court to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

33. States parties to regional arrangements or agencies should consider making greater use of such arrangements and agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate, pursuant to Article 52 of the Charter;

2. Declares that nothing in the present Declaration shall be construed as:

(a) Enlarging or diminishing in any way the scope of the provisions of the Charter concerning cases in which the use of force is lawful;

(b) Prejudicing in any manner the relevant provisions of the Charter or the rights and duties of Member States or the scope of the functions and powers of the United Nations organs under the Charter, in particular those relating to the threat or use of force;

3. Declares that nothing in the present Declaration could in any way prejudice the right to self-determination, freedom and independence, as derived from the Charter, of peoples forcibly deprived of that right and referred to in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, particularly peoples under colonial and racist regimes or other forms of alien domination; nor the right of these peoples to struggle to that end and to seek and receive support, in accordance with the principles of the Charter and in conformity with the above-mentioned Declaration;

4. Confirms that, in the event of a conflict between the obligations of Members of the United Nations under the Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the Charter will prevail in accordance with Article 103 of the Charter.

General Assembly resolution 42/22

18 November 1987 Meeting 73 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee & Corr.1) without vote, 13 November (meeting 50); 5-nation draft (A/C.6/42/L.4); agenda item 131.

Sponsors: Brazil, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Egypt, Italy.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 6th Committee 16-21, 50; plenary 73.

In explanation of position, many delegations, among them France and the United Kingdom, stressed the non-binding, non-normative nature of the Declaration. Similarly, Israel understood the Declaration to represent the best possible compromise. The Netherlands saw little need for yet another legal instrument when the topic was already dealt with in many others, but supported the Declaration's adoption out of respect for the compromise reached in the Special Committee with a view to completing its work. New Zealand, which had maintained over the years that the drafting of a treaty on the principle would add nothing to the existing prohibition laid down in Article 2, paragraph 4, of the United Nations Charter, said the Declaration might prove useful in highlighting the linkage between the non-use-of-force principle and others. The Federal Republic of Germany felt the Declaration could help enhance the principle's effectiveness.

Speaking on specific paragraphs in the Declaration, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel and the United Kingdom understood the phrase "in contravention of international law" in paragraph 10 to apply both to the acquisition and to the occupation of territory resulting from the threat or use of force. The Netherlands asserted that the term "subversive acts" in paragraph 6 remained undefined and too vague; "interference" and "threats against the personality", in paragraph 7, should be limited to acts involving armed force; and the stipulation in paragraph 24 did not belong in the Declaration.

As regards paragraph 3 of the resolution, immediately following the text of the Declaration, France said the right of peoples under alien domination to seek and receive support required that the supporting States fulfilled all their international obligations, including non-intervention in the internal affairs of another State. For the United Kingdom, that right did not extend to receiving military assistance. The Netherlands felt the first part of the paragraph was self-evident and unnecessary, and the second part beginning with the words "nor the rights of these peoples to struggle" could be interpreted as permitting the use of force under certain conditions. Israel stated that the paragraph in question, along with paragraph 23 of the Declaration, should be construed as an unequivocal condemnation of acts of terrorism as criminal, wherever and by whomever committed. The Syrian Arab Republic said the text should have referred also to foreign occupation.

Draft code of offences against peace and security

In 1987, the International Law Commission (ILC)(18) continued elaborating the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind. In December, the General Assembly invited ILC to continue its work and agreed with its recommendation to change the title in English to draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, in order to achieve greater uniformity and equivalence between different language versions.

The draft Code, originally prepared by ILC in 1954(19) in response to a 1947 Assembly request,(20) defined offences which were crimes under international law and for which the responsible individual was to be punished. ILC had resumed work on the topic in 1982,(21) considering draft articles on the Code at subsequent annual sessions.

ILC consideration. The Commission, at its 1987 session,(18) considered the fifth report submitted by its Special Rapporteur on the topic, Doudou Thiam (Senegal),(22) containing 11 draft articles devoted to the draft Code's introduction, most of which had been proposed in 1986 and modified subsequently on the basis of discussions in ILC and the Assembly's Sixth Committee.

Following consideration of some of the draft articles by its Drafting Committee, the Commission provisionally adopted articles 1 (definition), 2 (characterization), 3 (responsibility and punishment), 5 (non-applicability of statutory limitations) and 6 (judicial guarantees). Owing to lack of time, the Drafting Committee was unable to formulate texts for the six other articles—articles 4 (aut dedere aut punire), 7 (non bis in idem), 8 (non-retroactivity), 9 (exceptions to the principle of responsibility), 10 (responsibility of the superior) and 11 (official position of the perpetrator).

The articles provisionally adopted in 1987 were transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General in July.(23)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in August 1987 a report with later addenda,(24) containing comments received from 10 Governments in response to the Assembly's 1986 invitation for views on the 1986 conclusions of ILC. (25)

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 42/151 by recorded vote.

Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind

The General Assembly,

Mindful of Article 13, paragraph 1 a, of the Charter of the United Nations, which provides that the General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling its resolution 177(II) of 21 November 1947, by which it directed the International Law Commission to prepare a draft code of offences against the peace and security of mankind,

Having considered the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind prepared by the International Law Commission and submitted to the General Assembly in 1954,

Recalling its belief that the elaboration of a code of offences against the peace and security of mankind could contribute to strengthening international peace and security and thus to promoting and implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter,

Recalling also its resolution 36/106 of 10 December 1981, in which it invited the International Law Commission to resume its work with a view to elaborating the draft Code and to examine it with the required priority in order to review it, taking into account the results achieved by the process of the progressive development of international law,

Bearing in mind that the International Law Commission should fulfil its task on the basis of early elaboration of draft articles thereof,

Having considered chapter II of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirty-ninth session,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the subject,

Taking into account the views expressed during the debate on this item at the forty-second session,

Recognizing the importance and urgency of the subject,

1. Agrees with the recommendation in paragraph 65 of the report of the International Law Commission to amend the title of this topic in English, in order to achieve greater uniformity and equivalence between different language versions;

2. Invites the Commission to continue its work on the elaboration of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind including the elaboration of a list of crimes, taking into account the progress made at its thirty-ninth session, as well as the views expressed during the forty-second session of the General Assembly;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States regarding the conclusions contained in paragraph 69 (c) (i) of the Commission's report on the work of its thirty-fifth session;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to include the views received from Member States in accordance with paragraph 3 above in a report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind", to be considered in conjunction with the examination of the report of the International Law Commission.

General Assembly resolution 42/151

7 December 1987 Meeting 94 136-5-14 (recorded vote)

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/42/835) by vote (107-5-14), 25 November (meeting 58); 24-nation draft (A/C.6/42/L.13); agenda item 130.

Sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Bulgaria, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Kenya, Mali, Mongolia, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sudan, Tunisia, Uganda, Viet Nam, Zambia.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 6th Committee 35-49, 58; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey.

Explaining their negative votes, France and the United States saw no reason why the topic should be dealt with separately from the ILC report. The United Kingdom said that by making the question a separate item on the Assembly's agenda, the Sixth Committee seemed to be trying to put political pressure on ILC's work; that the corresponding 1986 Assembly resolution remained unacceptable; that it had reservations to amending the title of the topic; and that it remained unconvinced of the need to elaborate a list of crimes before laying down the general criteria applicable to the definition of such crimes. Similarly, the Federal Republic of Germany said that debating outside the Commission the substance of the question before ILC itself had defined its work would prejudice the content of the draft Code. Israel also felt it unlikely that the approach suggested would lead to the preparation of a logical, effective legal instrument.

Italy was not convinced of the urgency, necessity or appropriateness of making the question a separate agenda item. Norway, speaking for the Nordic countries, felt that the consideration of the question in the context of ILC's report would be more in line with the goal of rationalizing that body's work. Sharing that view, Japan expressed difficulty with the sixth and final preambular paragraphs.

The Ukrainian SSR held that ILC should regard its work on the draft Code as having priority, and Suriname asserted that the topic's importance merited separate treatment. Brazil particularly endorsed paragraphs 3 and 4, and hoped that the Assembly would agree in 1988 to extend the ILC mandate to include the preparation of the statute of an international criminal jurisdiction for individuals.

Draft convention against mercenaries

The General Assembly, in 1987, invited the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries to complete its work and submit a draft convention to the Assembly if possible in 1988.

Ad Hoc Committee consideration. The Ad Hoc Committee against mercenaries held its sixth session in New York from 19 January to 6 February 1987,(26) having not convened in 1986 due to the United Nations financial crisis.(27) It established a Working Group, which, during 14 meetings, discussed the text of the proposed convention, taking as its consolidated negotiating basis the draft articles it had prepared in 1985.(28) In addition, informal consultations were held on several draft articles, and a drafting group held five meetings. The Committee felt that tangible progress had been achieved in 1987 and that it should be asked by the Assembly to continue work in 1988 with the goal of drafting, at the earliest possible date, an international convention.

On 6 February, the Committee approved its report, which included that of its Working Group and the text of the second revised consolidated negotiating basis of a convention. A draft preamble to the convention, proposed by the Committee Chairman, was annexed.

Communications. In the course of the year, the Secretary-General received several communications, with requests that they be circulated under the item on mercenaries; many of them concerned the situation in Afghanistan and Pakistan (see p. 210).

On 4 May,(29) Suriname transmitted a press communication issued by a delegation of the Joint Assembly of African, Caribbean and Pacific States and the European Economic Community, which visited Suriname from 22 to 28 April to assess its economic crisis resulting from the cessation of bilateral aid at the end of 1982 from the Netherlands and from acts of sabotage and guerrilla fighting during 1986. The delegation stated, among other things, that terrorist activities in eastern Suriname were a severe handicap to the country and called for the ending of all outside assistance to the rebels.

On 9 July,(30) Suriname reported that an exchange of fire that morning between its National Army and what it called a terrorist band in the country's eastern region had resulted in the deaths of terrorists, including two white mercenaries. On 13 July,(31) Suriname updated the incident, stating that the five-hour combat involved about 33 terrorists (including at least three white mercenaries) and took place some 125 kilometres from the French Guiana border; that the two dead whites were in French Foreign Legion uniforms and one had a Legion identification card; and that captured weapons were Italian-made, transported via Cayenne to eastern Suriname. It charged that French territory was being used as a hinterland for terrorist activities and that it had information on the movement of weapons to eastern Suriname along the same route.

In response, France stated on 24 July(32) that the men in question were acting on their own without any connection with French authorities; it noted that one of those killed had not been identified, whereas the other carried identification which indicated, as verified by France, that he was a deserter from the Foreign Legion's Sixth Corps of Engineers.

(See also p. 1062.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 42/155 without vote.

Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions, particularly resolutions 2395(XXIII) of 29 November 1968, 2465(XxXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2548(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2708(XXV) of 14 December 1970 and 3103(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, and its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, as well as Security Council resolutions 405(1977) of 14 April 1977, 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, 496(1981) of 15 December 1981 and 507(1982) of 28 May 1982, in which the United Nations denounced the practice of using mercenaries, in particular against developing countries and national liberation movements,

Recalling in particular its resolution 41/80 of 3 December 1986, by which it decided to renew the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries,

Bearing in mind the need for strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples, enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and seriously impede the process of self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Bearing in mind the pernicious impact that the activities of mercenaries have on international peace and security,

Considering that the progressive development and codification of the rules of international law on the activities of mercenaries would contribute immensely to the implementation of the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Welcoming the wide and effective participation of members of the Ad Hoc Committee in the work of the Committee and the participation of a large number of observers in that work,

Taking account of the progress achieved by the Ad Hoc Committee at its sixth session,

Reaffirming the need for the elaboration, at the earliest possible date, of an international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

2. Decides to renew the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee with a view to completing as soon as possible a draft international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee, in the fulfilment of its mandate, to use the draft articles contained in chapter III of its report, entitled "Second revised consolidated negotiating basis of a convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries" as a basis for future negotiation on the text of the proposed international convention;

4. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee to take into account the suggestions and proposals of Member States submitted to the Secretary-General on the subject and the views and comments expressed at the fortieth, forty-first and forty-second sessions of the General Assembly during the debate in the Sixth Committee devoted to the consideration of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee;

5. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall hold its seventh session from 25 January to 12 February 1988;

6. Also decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States, including participation in the meetings of its drafting and working groups;

7. Requesting the Secretary-General to provide, on a priority basis, the Ad Hoc Committee with any assistance and facilities it may require to hold its seventh session in 1988;

8. Reaffirms the importance that pre-session consultations among the members of the Ad Hoc Committee and other interested States may have in facilitating the smooth conduct of its work towards the fulfilment of its task, inter alia, as regards the composition of the Bureau and the organization of work;

9. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee to make every effort to submit its final report containing a draft international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries to the General Assembly if possible at its forty-third session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries".

7 December 1987 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/42/816) without vote, 23 November (meeting 55); 43-nation draft (A/C.6/42/L.8); agenda item 134.

Sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Benin, Cameroon, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/42/846; S-G, A/C.5/42/47, A/C.6/42/L.14.

Meeting numbers, GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 49; 6th Committee 11-15, 55; plenary 94.

Denmark, on behalf of the EC countries, Japan and the United States expressed concern over the treatment of the topic in the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee (see p. 750), which, they asserted, duplicated the work in the Sixth Committee; they reaffirmed that, while the crimes of individuals acting on their own behalf were clearly reprehensible, the activities in question could not be imputed to States or regarded as violating international law. The EC countries added that the Ad Hoc Committee was the proper forum for work on the topic. Sweden, speaking for the Nordic countries, expressed support for the EC views and said they had joined the consensus as they condemned mercenary activities and supported the Ad Hoc Committee's work.

Iran saw an urgent need to elaborate an international convention on the topic and endorsed the fourth and sixth preambular paragraphs.

In other 1987 actions, the Assembly called on States to take legislative or other appropriate measures to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries in their territories for use against other States or national liberation movements (resolution 42/96) or in Namibia (42/14 A). It also called on Governments to enact legislation declaring mercenary activities to be punishable offences and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General (42/95).

Prevention of terrorism

Preventing terrorism in all its aspects remained a concern of the United Nations in 1987.

In January, the Security Council's members condemned all acts of hostage-taking and abduction. In December, the General Assembly condemned all terrorist acts, urged States to eliminate progressively the causes underlying international terrorism, and asked for Member States' views, including on the convening of an international conference to define and differentiate terrorism from the struggle of peoples for national liberation.

Communications. Throughout 1987, the Secretary-General received communications concerning terrorism.

The need to distinguish terrorism from the exercise of the right to self-determination, along with the holding of an international conference to that end, was stressed by Egypt's Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister on 5 January,(33) as well as by the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January).(34)

On 31 March,(35) Belgium transmitted the views of the EC States members on the implementation of the General Assembly's 1985 resolution on terrorism,(36) in connection with which they saw the need for adherence to the relevant existing multilateral conventions relating to international terrorism, and, in view of recent tragic events, to take appropriate measures in the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) and the International Maritime Organization (IMO); annexed to the communication were related statements made by EC at various times and in connection with specific terrorist-related events during 1986.

In May, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya(37) transmitted the text of a declaration on terrorism, adopted at an international conference on the question (Geneva, 19-21 March) held by the non-governmental International Progress Organization, which concluded that the key to ending terrorism was to develop new relations among peoples and nations based on respect for the right to self-determination and on a greater measure of equality on a world scale.

In its final communique, transmitted by Samoa in July, the eighteenth South Pacific Forum (Apia, 29 and 30 May)(38) considered it appropriate, in the light of a recent attempted hijacking of an Air New Zealand aircraft, to adopt a regional approach to terrorism, and decided to establish a working group to help strengthen the capacity of the Forum States to counter the phenomenon.

Italy transmitted a 9 June statement on terrorism, issued at the Venice Economic Summit(39) by the heads of State or Government of Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States and the EC representatives. Declaring that terrorism had no justification regardless of motive, they recalled their 1978 Bonn Declaration on the topic and stated that, in cases where a country refused extradition or prosecution of those who had committed offences described in the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation,(40) their Governments would cease flights to that country.

On 23 July, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, Romania and the USSR(41) condemned State terrorism; stressed the importance of drafting new international legal instruments, including ones within the framework of ICAO and IMO; and urged the resumption of the activities of the Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism, which had last met in 1979.(42)

In September, Kuwait(43) transmitted the report of an international seminar, held by the Organization of the Islamic Conference, on the phenomenon of terrorism in the contemporary world and its impact on individual security, political stability and international peace (Geneva, 23-25 June).

The Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Non-Aligned Movement (New York, 5-7 October)(9) emphasized that terrorist activities should not be confused with legitimate struggles for self-determination, and called on States to forbid mercenary activities, which they viewed as a key element of international terrorism.

The Commonwealth heads of Government (Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada, 13-17 October)(44) urged States to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in terrorist acts in other States or acquiescing in activities within their territories directed towards the commission of such acts. They stressed the need to develop effective extradition arrangements and to pay special attention to the growing nexus between terrorist groups and drug trafficking.

In its Final Declaration, transmitted by Jordan, the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference (Amman, 8-11 November)(45) condemned terrorism in all its forms, irrespective of its source or methods used, affirming at the same time the right to attain independence and sovereignty.

On 18 November, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa(46) deplored what he called the Australian Government's endorsement of indiscriminate violence by radical revolutionaries in South Africa, adding that a terrorist was judged not by his political aims but by his methods and acts to achieve those aims.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September report, with a later addendum,(47) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly views received from six Member States, ICAO, IMO and two other international intergovernmental organizations on the implementation of the 1985 Assembly resolution on terrorism.(36) Annexed to the report was information on the state, as at 28 July 1987, of signatures of, ratifications of or accessions to a number of international conventions relating to terrorism, including two adopted by the General Assembly and for which the Secretary-General served as the depositary: the 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents,(48) and the 1979 International Convention against the Taking of Hostages.(49) As at 31 December 1987, those instruments had 71 (see p. 1067) and 46 parties, respectively.(50) In the course of the year, the 1979 Convention was ratified by Greece, Japan and Senegal; it was acceded to by the Byelorussian SSR, Denmark, Ghana, Hungary, Mexico, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

With reports of increases in incidents of hostage-taking and abduction in Beirut, Lebanon, the members of the Security Council took up the situation and, on 28 January 1987, after consultations, the President made the following statement on their behalf:(51)

"The members of the Security Council have had occasion in the past to draw attention to various acts of hostage-taking and abduction. In resolution 579(1985),(52) the Council condemned unequivocally all such acts and called for the immediate safe release of all hostages and abducted persons wherever and by whomever they are being held. Conscious of the serious implications of this issue, in particular, its humanitarian aspects, they again condemn all acts of hostage-taking and abduction and demand the immediate and safe release of all hostages and abducted persons."

In a related action, the Secretary-General, on 29 January, issued a statement to the press, expressing his grave concern over the latest developments in Beirut and stating that he joined the Security Council members in their appeal for the release of the hostages.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By a letter of 14 August,(53) the Syrian Arab Republic requested the inclusion, under the General Assembly agenda item on terrorism, of a supplementary item(54) on convening an international conference, under United Nations auspices, to define and differentiate terrorism from the struggle of peoples for national liberation. The request was supported by Democratic Yemen on 18 August,(55) by Algeria on 25 August(56) and by the Group of Arab States on 2 September.(57)

On 18 September, the Assembly acceded to the request.

On 7 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 42/159 by recorded vote.
