Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, United Kingdom.

The United States wondered what purpose was served by putting forward the text; in its view, most of the preamble was untenable, while paragraphs 2, 6, 8 and 9 were contrary to the goal of UNESCO reform.

The Netherlands saw no need for a separate resolution on UNESCO'S work in the area of information, given the UNESCO consensus on the subject; it objected to references to documents and declarations which, it said, it could not fully support and expressed reservations on paragraphs 3, 6 and 9.

Norway regretted the reference to a declaration issued by the June 1987 Harare Conference, equating zionism with racism. Denmark could not accept the reference to an appeal to the mass media to take note of their role in promoting peace, understanding and co-operation, as if a threat to world peace stemmed from, inter alia, zionism.

While voting in favour of the draft, Finland expressed reservations on the second preambular paragraph and paragraph 2; the reservation was based on the formulation equating zionism with racism. Sweden said its vote did not reflect any change in its position regarding various decisions referred to in the text.

Proposed new world information and communication order

Action by the Committee on Information. The Committee on Information⁽¹⁾ recommended that all countries and the United Nations system co-operate in establishing a new world information and communication order, based on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing diversity of sources and access to information and, in particular, recognizing the need to change the dependent status of developing countries in the area of information.

The Committee also recommended that the mass media be encouraged to give wider coverage to global development and the efforts of developing countries to achieve economic, social and cultural progress.

The General Assembly approved the Committee's recommendations by resolution 42/162 A.

UN public information

The Committee on Information⁽¹⁾ recommended that the United Nations system, through its information services, co-operate in promoting a more comprehensive and realistic image of the activities and potential of the United Nations. Other recommendations dealt with co-operation by DPI with the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries and with UNESCO, the dissemination by DPI of information concerning United Nations activities regarding human rights, the right to freedom of opinion and expression under the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽⁷⁾ the serious economic situation in Africa and other global economic problems, the World Disarmament Campaign, the Middle East situation, apartheid, the illegal occupation of Namibia and peace-keeping operations. The Committee made a number of other recommendations concerning the organization and operation of DPI.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/162 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on questions relating to information,

Recalling the recommendations of the Committee on Information as adopted by the General Assembly in paragraph 1 of its resolution 41/68 A of 3 December 1986, as well as the provisions of that resolution, and taking into account the views expressed by delegations on 3 December 1986 at the forty-first session of the Assembly,

Reaffirming the mandate given to the Committee on Information by the General Assembly in its resolution 34/182 of 18 December 1979,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

Encouraging the Secretary-General to continue necessary action in order to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the Department of Public Information, with particular emphasis on securing a co-ordinated approach to priority issues before the Organization,

1. Takes note of the comprehensive report of the Committee on Information which served as an important basis and stimulated further deliberations, and urges the full implementation of the following recommendations as adopted by the Committee at its substantive session in 1987:

(1) All countries, the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned should co-operate in the establishment of a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process, and based, inter alia, on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing diversity of sources of information and free access to information and, in particular, the urgent need to change the dependent status of the developing countries in the field of information and communication, as the principle of sovereign equality among nations extends also to this field, and intended also to strengthen peace and international understanding, enabling all persons to participate effectively in political, economic, social and cultural life and promoting human rights, understanding and friendship among all nations. The ongoing efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which retains the central role in this field, to eliminate gradually the existing imbalances in the field of information and communication and to encourage a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information in accordance with the relevant resolutions of that organization, adopted by consensus, should be reaffirmed;

(2) Fully aware of the important role that the media world-wide can freely play, particularly under the present situation, it is recommended that:

(a) The mass media should be encouraged to give wider coverage to the efforts of the international community towards global development and, in particular, the efforts of the developing countries to achieve economic, social and cultural progress

(b) The United Nations system as a whole should co-operate in a concerted manner, through its information services, in promoting a more comprehensive and realistic image of the activities and potential of the United Nations system in all its endeavours, in accordance with the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, with particular emphasis on the creation of a climate of confidence, the strengthening of multilateralism and the promotion of the development activities in the United Nations system;

(c) All countries should be urged to extend assistance to journalists for the free and effective performance of their professional tasks;

(3) Aware of the existing imbalances in the international distribution of news, particularly that affecting the developing countries, it is recommended that urgent attention should be given to the elimination of existing inequalities and all other obstacles, both internal and external, to the free flow and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, ideas and knowledge by, inter alia, diversifying the sources of information and respecting the interests, aspirations and socio-cultural values of all peoples, as a step towards the attainment of a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information;

(4) The United Nations system as a whole, as well as the developed countries, should be urged to co-operate in a concerted manner with the developing countries towards strengthening the information and communication infrastructures in the latter countries, in accordance with the priorities attached to such areas by the developing countries, with a view to enabling them to develop their own information and communications policies freely and independently and in the light of their history, social values and cultural traditions, taking into account the principle of freedom of the press and information. In this regard, full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which constitutes an important step in the development of these infrastructures, should always be emphasized;

(5) It is recommended that the need be stressed to promote the access of the developing countries to communications technology, including communication satellites, modern electronic information systems, informatics and other advanced information and communication facilities with a view to improving their own information and communication systems in accordance with the specific conditions prevailing in each country;

(6) It is recommended that the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, should explore further ways and means of strengthening co-operation and co-ordination with the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries, with the Eco-Pool of the News Agencies of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as with the regional news agencies of developing countries, as this constitutes a concrete step towards the elimination of existing imbalances. It is also recommended that the Department of Public Information should establish adequate co-operation with the developing countries in the audio-visual field, especially with the Broadcasting Organization of the Non-Aligned Countries;

(7) Reaffirming the primary role that the General Assembly is to play in elaborating, co-ordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information and emphasizing the central role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the field of information and communication, it is recommended that the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned should be urged to give the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization adequate support and assistance in the field of information and communication. The Department of Public Information, in particular, should co-operate more regularly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, especially at the working level, with a view to maximizing the contributions of the Department to the efforts of that organization in further promoting the attainment of a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information;

(8) Article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression and that this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers, and article 29, which stipulates that these rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations, should be recalled;

(9) The Department of Public Information should be requested to disseminate information about the United Nations activities in the field of human rights and to make broad use of the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which will be observed in 1988, for the dissemination of information on human rights;

(10) The United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, should aim at providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to action already taken within the United Nations system, including, in particular:

(a) Development of human resources as indispensable for the improvement of information and communication systems in developing countries, and support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes, such as those already operating under both public and private auspices throughout the developing world;

(b) Creation of conditions that will gradually enable the developing countries to produce, by using their own resources, the communications technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, specifically for radio and television broadcasting;

(c) Assistance in establishing and promoting telecommunication links at subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries;

(11) The Secretary-General should be requested to ensure that the activities of the Department of Public Information, as the focal point of the public information tasks of the United Nations, are strengthened and improved, keeping in view the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the priority areas such as those stated in section III, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 35/201 of 16 December 1980 and other pertinent resolutions of the Assembly and the recommendations of the Committee on Information, so as to ensure an objective and more coherent coverage of, as well as a better knowledge about, the United Nations and its work. It is recommended further that no new public information units independent of the Department should be created in the Secretariat of the United Nations;

(12) The Secretary-General should be requested to provide the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1988 with a feasibility study on the consolidation and co-ordination of all public information activities within the United Nations with specific reference to the financial implications as well as to the effectiveness of the Department of Public Information as the focal point for public information activities;

(13) The Department of Public Information should be requested to continue its co-operation with the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as with intergovernmental organizations and regional organizations, and should monitor, as appropriate, important meetings of that Movement, as well as of intergovernmental and regional organizations, with a view to promoting a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information;

(14) In the light of the serious economic situation prevailing in Africa, the Secretary-General should be requested to ensure that the Department of Public Information continues to do its utmost in bringing to the attention of the international community the real dimensions of the plight of the African people and the tremendous efforts of the African countries towards recovery and development, as well as the positive response by the international community, with a view to increasing its contribution to alleviating this human tragedy. In this regard, the Secretary-General should be requested to ensure that the Department of Public Information continues to do its utmost to disseminate widely and to publicize the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990. In this respect, the efforts of the Department should be commended;

(15) The Department of Public Information should be urged to ensure the widest possible dissemination of information pertaining to acute world economic problems in general and, in particular, to the severe economic difficulties of the least developed countries and the need for strengthening the international economic co-operation aimed at resolving external debt problems of developing countries;

(16) The relevant paragraphs of General Assembly resolution 59(I) of 14 December 1946, in which the Assembly stated, inter alia, that freedom of information is a fundamental human right, must be reiterated;

(17) The relevant provisions of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975, and those of the Concluding Document of the meeting of representatives of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, held at Madrid from 11 November 1980 to 9 September 1983, should be recalled;

(18) The relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace should also be recalled;

(19) The final documents of the first Conference of the Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 26 to 30 January 1984, and of the Second Conference, held at Harare from 10 to 12 June 1987, should be recalled;

(20) The Conference of Ministers of Information of States members of the Organization of African Unity, held at Addis Ababa from 27 to 30 March 1985, which expressed its conviction of the importance of a new world information and communication order, should be noted;

(21) The relevant resolutions on the question relating to information of the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference, held at Casablanca, Morocco, from 16 to 19 January 1984, and the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference, held at Kuwait from 26 to 29 January 1987, should be recalled;

(22) The relevant section of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, should be recalled;

(23) The Department of Public Information should continue to maintain consistent editorial independence and accuracy in reporting for all material produced by the Department and should promote, to the greatest possible extent, an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations system among the peoples of the world, inter alia, the cultural, humanitarian, economic and social programmes of the specialized agencies, taking necessary measures to ensure that its output contains objective and equitable information about issues before the Organization, reflecting divergent opinions where they occur;

(24) The Department of Public Information should, in the context of the review of its role, performance and method of work, study the feasibility of applying modern technologies for the collection, production, storage, dissemination and distribution of information materials, including the use of satellite facilities, bearing in mind the possibility of owning one in the future. The Secretary-General should be requested to submit such a feasibility study, including its financial implications, to the Committee by its next organizational session, at the latest;

(25) In this regard, attention is drawn to the success attained by the ARABSAT, BRASILSAT, INSAT-1B, MORELOS and PALAPA satellite systems and the CONDOR project, designed to promote national and regional integration, and the improvement of communication infrastructures;

(26) In the light of the present financial difficulties of the Department of Public Information, it is recommended that the Department consider expanding the programme of telephone news bulletins that are paid for by its users. The Committee on Information notes with appreciation the positive response of those countries that are assisting the United Nations in resuming the short-wave broadcasts through their respective national networks free of charge. In the light of this successful co-operation, the Department of Public Information is requested to continue its contacts with interested countries and broadcasting organizations, in both the developed and developing countries, especially those with recognized capabilities, to solicit this type of co-operation and to report to the Committee at its substantive session in 1988 on the outcome of those contacts. The Department of Public Information should be requested to ensure that these radio programmes are objective and professional;

(27) The Committee on Information takes note with appreciation of regional efforts; especially among the developing countries, as well as co-operation between developed and developing countries to develop further their media infrastructure, especially in the areas of training and dissemination of information, with a view to encouraging a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information;

(28) The Department of Public Information should continue its annual training programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries. The Committee on Information notes that the workshop for the familiarization of news agencies of developing countries with modern technologies, as recommended by the Committee and approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/68 A, has not been organized owing to financial constraints. The Department of Public Information is once again requested, in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries, to ensure the continuation and expansion of this kind of activity. In this connection, the Department should continue to examine the possibility of allocating a week of the programme for a visit by journalists and broadcasters from developing countries to one of the developing countries that expresses readiness to receive them for the purpose of acquainting them with the ways in which information on the United Nations is received and utilized;

29 In order to enhance awareness and understanding of the lofty objectives of the United Nations, the Department of Public Information should provide assistance, in an objective and equitable way, to educational institutions of Member States for teaching about the structure of the United Nations, as well as the principles and purposes enunciated in its Charter. In order to implement this recommendation, the Department should continue to organize seminars for educators and education policy makers;

(30) Within the World Disarmament Campaign, the Department of Public Information should encourage coverage aimed at the promotion of a climate of understanding, confidence and co-operation, peace and development, and the enhancement of human rights;

(31) The Department of Public Information should be requested to continue to cover adequately and accurately all United Nations activities pertaining to the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine, in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions, and to report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1988;

(32) The Department of Public Information should continue its activities and dissemination of information on the policy and practice of apartheid, giving due attention to the unilateral measures and official censorship imposed on the local and international media with regard to all aspects of this issue;

(33) The Secretary-General should be requested to intensify his efforts in order to alert world public opinion to the illegal occupation of Namibia and to continue to disseminate adequately and accurately, with the full assistance of the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Department of Public Information and the United Nations system as a whole, information relating to the struggle of the oppressed people of Namibia for self-determination, national independence and freedom as well as to the need for the full and speedy implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia;

(34) The Department of Public Information should further cover adequately and with impartiality the activities of all United Nations peace-keeping operations, in view of the paramount importance of such operations for the maintenance of international peace and security;

(35) The Secretary-General should be requested to ensure the continuation and improvement of United Nations radio and television programmes and, inter alia, to strengthen the Middle East/Arabic Unit as the producer of Arabic television and radio programmes. The Department of Public Information should implement the provisions of General Assembly resolution 38/82 B of 15 December 1983 on the Caribbean Unit. In view of the importance of United Nations radio programmes in the Asian and European regions, the functions of the Asian and European Units should not only be maintained, they should also be expanded;

(36) The unique function of the United Nations information centres as one of the most important means of disseminating information about the United Nations among the peoples of the world is recognized. In this regard, United Nations information centres should continue to assist press and information media in their respective countries in accordance with the mandate given by the General Assembly and should intensify direct and systematic communication exchange with local information and educational institutions and non-governmental organizations in a mutually beneficial way. Every effort should be made to establish close co-ordination with other field offices of the United Nations system, particularly those of the United Nations Development Programme, in order to avoid duplication of work. Co-ordination with other United Nations offices should take into account the functional autonomy of the United Nations information centres. The Department should ensure open and unhindered access by all people to all United Nations information centres and to all materials distributed through the centres;

(37) The Department of Public Information should disseminate information concerning the decisions of the United Nations dealing with acts of terrorism in all its forms, taking into account particularly General Assembly resolution 40/61 of 9 December 1985, as well as the relevant statements of the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General;

(38) The Secretary-General should continue to strengthen and accelerate his efforts to develop a system for monitoring and evaluating the effectiveness of the activities of the Department of Public Information, particularly in the priority areas determined by the General Assembly, taking into account the need to improve data collection procedures, analysis of feedback data and end-use of the Department's materials, and maximizing the efficiency of the operations in all their aspects;

(39) Future reports of the Department of Public Information to the Committee on Information and to the General Assembly, in particular on new programmes or on the expansion of existing programmes, should contain:

(a) More adequate information on the output of the Department in respect of each topic included in its work programme, which forms the basis of its programme budget;

(b) The costs of the activities undertaken in respect of each topic;

(c) More adequate information on target audiences, end-use of the Department's products, and analysis of feedback data received by the Department;

(d) A statement detailing the priority level that the Secretary-General has attached to current or future activities of the Department in documents dealing with such activities;

(e) The Department's evaluation of the effectiveness of its different programmes and activities, with particular reference to the need constantly to review internal programme elements and activities;

(40) The steps taken by the Department of Public Information in redressing the imbalance in its staff should be noted. The Department should continue its efforts to that end. The Secretary-General should take appropriate steps to increase the representation of underrepresented developing countries and of other underrepresented groups of countries, especially at the senior levels, in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, and to submit a report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1988;

(41) Member States should be called upon once again to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Economic and Social Information;

(42) Note is taken of the report on the curtailment of radio programmes and the improvement in the distribution of taped radio programmes produced by the Department of Public Information, and the Department is requested to take steps to improve their distribution, to examine its current effectiveness and to report to the Committee at its substantive session in 1988. In this connection, the Department of Public Information should explore adequate measures to resume radio programmes that have been curtailed, bearing in mind the need to ensure effective utilization, timeliness and maximum audience impact;

(43) Note is taken of the report on the programme and activities of the Joint United Nations Information Committee, and the Secretary-General is urged to continue his efforts to secure a sound and stable financial basis for Development Forum, the only inter-agency publication of the United Nations system that concentrates on development issues. The Secretary-General should continue to ensure that Development Forum retains its editorial policy of intellectual independence, thus enabling this publication to continue to serve as a world-wide forum in which diverse opinions on issues relating to economic and social development can be freely expressed;

(44) In order to ensure a better image of the United Nations and to promote a more accurate understanding of its activities, the Department of Public Information should guarantee daily coverage of all United Nations meetings through issuance of the daily press releases and the weekly news digest in all working languages. The Department of Public Information should continue to co-operate closely with and provide assistance to the members of the United Nations Correspondents Association, taking into account their needs and requirements, especially in the area of press releases, which provide them with the necessary raw material for adequate reporting. The Department of Public Information should be requested anew to use the official languages of the General Assembly adequately in its documents and audio-visual documentation in order to inform the public better about the activities of the United Nations. The Department of Public Information should again be requested to make balanced use of the two working languages of the Secretariat, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2(I) of 1 February 1946, in its written and audio-visual documents and to provide the two press sections with the means of producing and distributing press releases and, accordingly, to arrange appropriate staffing. The Department of Public Information should co-operate with delegations when they request that their views be reflected with accuracy and objectivity, by issuing addenda or corrigenda in the language of the press releases;

(45) The Department of Public Information should improve the timely distribution of its materials to subscribers and United Nations information centres, in particular the UN Chronicle, a major source of information on the United Nations to its recipients, and should reassess the effectiveness of this publication and report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1988;

(46) The Secretary-General should be encouraged to continue and intensify his efforts to explore all possibilities of securing adequate resources for the continuation of the World Newspaper Supplement project. The World Newspaper Supplement should be properly labelled to identify its sources;

(47) It is recognized that free distribution of materials is necessary in the public information activities of the United Nations, but, as demands increase and whenever it is desirable and possible, the Department of Public Information should actively encourage the sale of its materials;

(48) It is requested that the recommendations relating to the activities of the Department of Public Information be implemented within existing resources;

2. Requests that the recommendations relating to the activities of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat be implemented within existing resources;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information, at its substantive session in 1988, on the implementation of the above recommendations;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Requests the Committee on Information to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Questions relating to information".

General Assembly resolution 42/162 A

8 December 1987 Meeting 95 136-1-15 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/42/814) by recorded vote (109-1-151, 25 November (meeting 34); draft by Guatemala for Group of 77 (A/SPC/42/L.20 & Corr.1); agenda item 78.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: SPC 20, 22, 24-28, 30, 34; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom.

The United States said that while the text represented some improvement over the 1986 resolution,⁽⁸⁾ elements remained which made it unacceptable, including the call for the establishment of a new world information and communication order. The United States was committed to redressing imbalances in information infrastructures by practical rather than theoretical or ideological approaches. At a time of financial constraint, DPI should not be hamstrung with programmes that could not be implemented.

The Netherlands said it objected to references in the text to appeals with which it did not wish to be associated. The text should have limited the number of recommendations and should have more clearly set out the priorities for the work of DPI.

Norway said it felt obliged to abstain because it could not fully endorse the language contained in paragraph 1. It regretted the introduction of a reference to the provisions of the Second Conference of the Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries, whose Declaration had equated zionism with racism.

Denmark said it had abstained because paragraph 1 did not reflect the latest consensus resolution adopted by UNESCO; moreover, in dealing with DPI matters, the text included far too many items, which would not help DPI in its current situation.

The United Kingdom stated that it was principally concerned about the continued use of the word "establishment", rather than a word such as "development", in relation to a new world information and communication order; the implication that earlier UNESCO resolutions, other than the latest consensus text of 1985, were relevant to work in that field; the excessive number of recommendations on DPI; and the introduction into those recommendations of political issues.

Sweden said it had voted in favour of the text in the light of its vote on the same question in the past few years. However, had there been a separate vote on paragraph 1, it would have abstained. Citing its reservation regarding the principles contained in recommendation 19, Finland said it too would have abstained had there been a separate vote on paragraph 1.

Referring to recommendations 8 and 16, Iran said it supported them only to the extent that they remained consistent with Islamic laws. Guatemala, on behalf of the Group of 77, regretted that it had not been possible to adopt the text by consensus.

The Federal Republic of Germany and Japan noted that they had abstained on both texts concerned with information issues. Japan declared that some of the provisions of the drafts were not consonant with its position. The Federal Republic of Germany said both texts, in referring to a new world information and communication order, had again failed to reflect accurately the language which UNESCO had adopted by consensus; moreover, both repeated the practice of recalling meetings in which the Federal Republic of Germany had not taken part and declarations extraneous to information questions.

The Assembly adopted a number of other resolutions and a decision relating to information issues.

In resolution 42/14 D, it requested the Secretary-General to direct DPI to assist the United Nations Council for Namibia in implementing its information dissemination programme. In resolution 42/72, it requested him to continue to give widespread publicity to the work of the United Nations in the area of decolonization, and, inter alia, to continue to publish the periodical Objective: Justice, as well as other publications, special articles and studies, including the Decolonization series.

By resolution 42/23 E, the Assembly appealed to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, information media and individuals to co-operate with the Centre against Apartheid and, DPI in disseminating information on the deteriorating situation in South Africa. It requested, in resolution 42/66 B, that the Secretary-General ensure the continued co-operation of DPI in covering the question of Palestine and, in resolution 42/66 C, requested DPI to continue its special information programme on the Palestine question during the biennium 1988-1989, with emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America.

The Assembly, by resolution 42/39 G, noted that the Secretary-General had instructed United Nations information centres (UNICS) to give wide publicity to the World Disarmament Campaign, adapting as far as possible United Nations information materials to local languages.

In decision 42/417, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, through DPI, to publicize the facts concerning military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. (9)

DPI activities

During 1987, DPI, through its radio, visual and publications services and information centres (see below under the respective headings for details), continued to formulate and implement United Nations information activities.

Pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(8) the Committee on Information had before it in 1987 reports on: the timeliness and effectiveness of three DPI publications-the UN Chronicle, the Yearbook of the United Nations and the News Digest;(10) the charges to Member States and the media for United Nations video and audio tapes and news photographs;(11) the curtailment of certain DPI radio programmes and improvement in the distribution of taped ones (see below);(12) and DPI progress in recruiting nationals from developing countries to achieve a more balanced geographical distribution of its staff.(13) The percentage of staff in posts subject to geographical distribution on 1 January 1987 (as against 1 January 1986) was as follows: Africa, 17.8 (17.6); Asia and the Pacific, 17 (16.8); Eastern Europe, 8.3 (7.6); Western Europe, 19.1 (19.8); Latin America, 8.3 (8); Middle East, 4.2 (4.6); North America and the Caribbean, 25.3 (25.6).

Following its consideration of United Nations public information policies and activities, the Committee on Information recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to ensure that DPI activities were strengthened and improved, and that DPI continue to maintain editorial independence and accuracy, promote an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations, apply modern technologies for the collection, production, storage and distribution of information materials, including the use of satellite facilities, and continue its annual training programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries.

In addition, the Committee recommended that future DPI reports contain more adequate information on its output, costs, target audiences, end-use of products, analysis of feedback data, priorities and evaluation of effectiveness.

The Secretary-General, also in response to the 1986 Assembly resolution,(8) submitted to the Assembly in August 1987 a report on the implementation of the Committee's 1986 recommendations.(14) Among the topics dealt with were co-operation with the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries, activities in connection with the African economic crisis, short-wave radio broadcasting and telephone news bulletins, a workshop and training programme for media, a fellowship programme for educators, press releases and UNICS (see below).

Radio and Visual Services Division

The Committee on Information(1) recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to ensure the continuation and improvement of United Nations radio and television programmes and to strengthen the Middle East/Arabic Unit as the producer of Arabic television and radio programmes, and that DPI implement the provisions of a 1983 Assembly resolution concerning the Caribbean Unit.(5) The Committee also recommended that the Asian and European Units should be expanded.

DPI, in May 1987, reported the results of a review of its decision to curtail certain radio programmes while improving the distribution of taped ones.(12)

During the past year, it said, DPI in New York and at Geneva had produced 35 continuing taped radio-programme series in 18 languages: Afrikaans, Arabic, Bengali, Chinese, English (10 programme series), French (five programme series), Hindi, Indonesian, Portuguese (for Africa), Russian, Sesotho, Setswana, Spanish (five programme series), Swahili, Thai, Turkish, Xhosa and Zulu. In addition, three special ad hoc series of four to six programmes each were produced: two on Namibia (one in English, and the other in English, Herero and Ovambo), and one on Palestine (in Arabic, English, French and Spanish).

Owing to the United Nations financial emergency, the production of taped programmes remained suspended in Filipino, Greek, Hebrew, Lingala, Portuguese (three programme series for Latin America and one for Portugal), Serbo-Croat and Urdu. For the same reason, no taped programmes were produced in Arabic, French and Spanish on the subject of women. Also, taped programming in French (two programme series) and Dutch for the Caribbean were deferred again.

As a rule, taped programmes were distributed by airmail or pouch, the least expensive method, which, however, entailed delays ranging from several days to several weeks between production and broadcast. For that reason, all but one of the 35 continuing taped radio-programme series were in the category of information-in-depth (documentaries, features), rather than news. The single exception was a weekly, 15-minute news magazine in English, produced in New York and distributed to radio stations in North America.

The distribution of all 35 continuing series had been kept under review. The sources for feedback concerning the utilization of those programmes included contacts with broadcasting stations and organizations, listeners' mail, reports from UNICs, and information provided by delegations and individual staff members.

Analysis confirmed most of the findings of the 1985 review of taped radio-programmes distribution. @) The majority of the programmes were regularly broadcast by radio stations and organizations. Of the 10 continuing programme series identified as lacking feedback in the 1985 review, one (an occasional taped programme in Somali) had been terminated and two others (a taped programme in Portuguese for Portugal and the women's programmes in Arabic) had been suspended for lack of funds. There had been some feedback concerning the utilization of the regular taped programme in Arabic, and broadcasters' as well as listeners' mail had been received continuously with regard to the programme in Indonesian. Feedback was minimal, or lacking, in the case of the taped anti-apartheid programmes in Afrikaans, Sesotho, Xhosa and Zulu.

The delays inherent in the distribution of taped radio programmes by airmail or pouch accounted for the majority of complaints received from broadcasting organizations. To the extent that the vagaries of the distribution system prevented broadcasters from reserving regular time-slots for United Nations material, the system was not effective. Consequently, DPI was studying more effective distribution methods.

UN information centres and services

The Secretary-General reported in August 1987(14) that, in the second half of 1986, the United Nations financial crisis had resulted in a 51 per cent decrease in press releases produced by UNICS in English and French, a 28 per cent decrease in those produced in local languages, a 22 per cent decrease in the distribution of United Nations publications and, for lack of travel funds, a 38 per cent reduction in the number of lectures and speeches.

Discussions were under way on consolidating facilities wherever possible and on establishing common services among UNICs and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other United Nations organizations. That was in line with recommendation 12 of the Group of High-Level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18).(17) Every effort would be made in that context, and in line with recommendation 35 of the 1986 Assembly resolution,(8) to avoid duplication of work, within the framework of the review of UNICs.

The Committee on Information recommended that UNICs continue to assist press and information media and intensify communication exchange with local information and educational institutions and NGOs. Every effort should be made to co-ordinate with other United Nations field offices, particularly those of UNDP, to avoid duplication of work. However, co-ordination should take into account the functional autonomy of UNICs and DPI should ensure access by all people to UNICs and to the materials distributed through them.

Programme evaluation

The Committee on Information recommended that the Secretary-General accelerate his efforts to develop a system for monitoring and evaluating DPI activities, particularly in the priority areas determined by the General Assembly, taking into account the need to improve data collection procedures, analysis of feedback and end-use of DPI materials, and the need to maximize efficiency.

CPC consideration. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) concluded in May(18) that the current review of the activities and structure of DPI afforded an opportunity to examine the whole public information programme. It recommended that ways be considered to consolidate within DPI the various information activities scattered throughout the Secretariat, that a principal objective of DPI's programme be global, comprehensive dissemination of information, and that steps be taken to carry out the work called for by the Assembly in 1983(15) regarding the Caribbean Unit in the DPI Radio Services Division.

In September, CPC decided to examine the question of DPI's programme structure at its 1988 session.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General discussed the question of public information in an April 1987 report(19) on the implementation of a 1986 General Assembly resolution on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations.(20) Adoption of that resolution had followed the report and recommendations of the Group of 18.

The Secretary-General recalled that in recommendation 37,(21) the Group of 18 had called for a complete overhaul of DPI functions, working methods and policies; he stated that if the United Nations were to develop a tight, realistic and acceptable agenda for the 1990s, it must enlarge the circle of active public opinion in its support.

A review of DPI activities began in March 1987 when a new Under-Secretary-General assumed direction of the Department. The review would be divided into three phases: the first, to cover DPI's major activities and management system; the second, to examine the distribution of human, technical and financial resources; and the third, to put into place a new structure.

By resolution 42/211, the General Assembly noted that, with regard to recommendation 37, reform in DPI should respect its mandated work programme in section 27 of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989, and requested the Secretary-General to complete the review of DPI and UNIC functions, working methods, policies and activities as a priority matter.

Co-ordination in the UN system

JUNIC activities. The inter-agency Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), which co-ordinated information activities in the United Nations system, held its fourteenth session in New York from 28 to 30 April 1987.(22) It considered the current public image of the United Nations system, preparation of a comprehensive information support programme for Africa, and the publications Africa Recovery, Development Forum and Development Business. In addition, it considered the work of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services (Geneva and New York), which dealt with NGOs in the industrialized countries concerned with issues of international economic development and co-operation; development education; women's issuess; audio-visual matters; and international expositions, conferences, years, decades and other special events.

JUNIC noted the status of implementation of various projects, with a view to presenting a unified, coherent image of the United Nations, and hoped that funding would be made available for activities that had been postponed. It decided that it was no longer necessary to hold separate meetings, such as the Development Forum Project Group or the Non-Governmental Liaison Service Sponsors' meeting, before its regular annual session. The items would be dealt with in plenary. Meetings of ad hoc working groups or task forces, when needed, would take place immediately before the JUNIC session.

Action by the Committee on Information. A report on JUNIC'S programme and activities was presented to the Committee on Information.(23) The Committee,(1) noting the report, urged the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to secure a sound financial basis for Development Forum, the only inter-agency United Nations-publication concentrating on development issues. It recommended that the Secretary-General continue to ensure that Development Forum retained its intellectual independence, serving as a forum in which diverse opinions on economic and social development could be freely expressed.

REFERENCES

- (1)A/42/21. (2)YUN 1986, p. 356, GA res. 41/68 B, 3 Dec. 1986. (3)A/42/571. (4)A/42/411. (5)A/42/431 & Corr.1. (6)A/42/681. (7)YUN 1948-49, p. 535, GA res. 217 A (III), 10 Dec. 1948. (8)YUN 1986, p. 359, GA res. 41/68 A, 3 Dec. 1986. (9)YUN 1960, p. 49, GA res. 1514(XV), 14 Dec. 1960. (10)A/AC.198/118. (11)A/AC.198/119. (12)A/AC.198/117. (13)A/AC.198/116. (14)A/42/494. (15)YUN 1983, p. 366, GA res. 38/82 B, 15 Dec. 1983. (16)YUN 1985, p. 385. (17)YUN 1986, p. 880. (18)A/42/16. (19)A/42/234 & Corr.1. (20)YUN 1986, p. 1024, GA res. 41/213, 19 Dec. 1986. (21)Ibid., p. 1022. (22)ACC/1987/11 & Corr.1. (23)A/AC.198/120.

Zone of peace

The General Assembly in 1986 had adopted a resolution(1) declaring the Atlantic Ocean, in the region between Africa and South America, a zone of peace and co-operation and calling on States of the zone to promote regional co-operation for social and economic development, the protection of the environment and the conservation of resources. Other States were called on to respect the region as a zone of peace, especially through the reduction and eventual elimination of their military presence there, the non-introduction of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction and the non-extension into the region of rivalries and conflicts that were foreign to it.

Pursuant to the resolution, the Secretary-General, in January 1987, requested that Member States submit their views on the question of the declaration, and submitted in September a report⁽²⁾ based on the replies received from 21 Governments.

Guyana, on 18 June,⁽³⁾ forwarded the final communique of the Special Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, 9-12 March), noting with satisfaction the declaration of the South Atlantic as a zone of peace and urging further action in pursuance of the objectives of the declaration. In its final communique, the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October)⁽⁴⁾ expressed a similar view.

The importance of the declaration was emphasized in the Acapulco Commitment to Peace, Development and Democracy, signed on 29 November by the heads of State of Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela.⁽⁵⁾ They reaffirmed the need to prevent the introduction of nuclear weapons into the region and to protect it from the tensions inherent in confrontation between military blocs and supported the establishment of similar mechanisms in the South Pacific and in other zones of the region.

On 7 August,⁽⁶⁾ Argentina and Brazil transmitted a Declaration on Nuclear Policy, signed on 17 July at Viedma, Argentina, by the Presidents of their countries. The Declaration emphasized their commitment to use nuclear energy exclusively for peaceful purposes, reiterated their satisfaction with the progress of a joint working group on nuclear policy, underscored the importance of the exchange of information on nuclear projects, stressed the progress made in the legal and technical aspects of nuclear co-operation, and drew attention to public and private participation in the integration of the industries of the two countries.

On 4 September, at a ceremony commemorating the achievements of Brazil's nuclear technology programme, the President of Brazil said it was through Brazil's initiative that the Assembly had adopted the resolution declaring the South Atlantic a zone of peace and co-operation, free from nuclear weapons. (7)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/16.

Zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/11 of 27 October 1986, in which it solemnly declared the Atlantic Ocean, in the region situated between Africa and South America, the "Zone of Peace and Co-operation of the South Atlantic",

1. Commends the efforts undertaken by States of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic to promote peace and regional co-operation pursuant to resolution 41/11, as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Urges the States of the region to continue their actions aiming at fulfilling the goals of the declaration of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic, in particular through the adoption and carrying out of concrete programmes to that end;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Calls upon all States to co-operate in the promotion of the objectives of the zone;

5. Calls upon all States to refrain from any action inconsistent with the Charter and relevant resolutions of the United Nations and which may create or aggravate situations of tension and potential conflict in the region;

6. Requests the relevant organizations, organs and bodies of the United Nations system to render all necessary assistance that the States of the region may seek in their joint endeavours to implement the declaration of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep the implementation of resolution 41/11 under review and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, taking into account the views expressed by Member States as well as information from other sources;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic".

General Assembly resolution 42/16

10 November 1987 Meeting 63 122-1-8 (recorded vote)

23-nation draft (A/42/L.22 & Add.1); agenda item 27.

Sponsors: Angola, Argentina, Benin, Brazil, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Nepal, Nigeria, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo, Uruguay, Zaire.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Barbados, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Finland, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal.

The United States declared that once again it had felt compelled to vote against the text on the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic. It did not accept the premise that a zone of peace could be created by means of an Assembly resolution rather than through multilateral negotiations.

France stated that it had abstained because of ambiguities in the text, especially regarding the limits of the zone, the obligations of the States concerned and the application of international law.

REFERENCES

(1)YUN 1986, p. 369, GA res. 41/11, 27 Oct. 1986. (2)A/42/557 & Corr.1.2. (3)A/42/357-S/18935. (4)A/42/681. (5)A/42/844-S/19314. (6)A/42/464. (7)A/42/599.

Radiation effects

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, in response to a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ continued its work with a view to increasing knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources.

Technical discussions took up most of the Committee's thirty-sixth session (Vienna, 23-27 March);⁽²⁾ they were based on 10 scientific documents, dealing with a variety of topics. In physics, the Committee discussed natural sources of radiation, including the technologically modified ones; current exposures received from the production of nuclear power; exposures predicted for the future as a result of peaceful uses of the nuclear fuel cycle; exposures due to the use of radiation sources for medical applications; and an analysis of how to assign a biological weight to radiation doses received by the various body organs.

In biology, the Committee reviewed a paper containing risk estimates for the induction by radiation of genetic diseases, with an appraisal of the evolution of those estimates in the course of time; a study of radiation-induced carcinogenic effects of radiation, including an update of risk estimates for tumour induction in man; and a study of the early effects produced by high doses of radiation delivered to the human body.

Expressing its sympathy to the USSR in connection with the 1986 accident at Chernobyl,⁽³⁾ the Committee considered how information on the accident could be collected and studied to advance knowledge about the effects of radiation. The discussion focused on a Secretariat draft outlining the possible methodology for assessing the long-term consequences of the accident. When sufficient data were available, they would be analysed by the Committee and the findings reported to the Assembly.

The Committee stated that it was concerned about the inadequacy of its current resources. It had economized by reductions in the scope and schedule of its programme, but those were palliative measures. Meanwhile, the need to respond to the demands for information had increased since the Chernobyl accident. The Committee expressed its appreciation for short-term financial support from the United Nations Environment Programme and the co-operation of the International Commission on Radiological Protection and the International Commission on Radiation Units and Measurements.

In its final communique, the eighteenth South Pacific Forum (Apia, Samoa, 29 and 30 May)⁽⁴⁾ welcomed Solomon Islands as the eleventh signatory to the South Pacific Nuclear-Free-Zone Treaty (see p. 59). The Forum also welcomed the conclusion in 1986 of the Convention for the Protection of the Natural Resources and Environment of the South Pacific Region and its Protocols;⁽⁵⁾ it stated that nine countries had signed and one had ratified the Convention and called on all eligible countries to join it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/67 without a vote.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 41/62 A of 3 December 1986, by which it, inter alia, requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations, resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on man and his environment,

Bearing in mind the decision of the Scientific Committee to submit, as soon as the relevant studies are completed, shorter reports with supporting scientific documents on the specialized topics mentioned by the Committee,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past thirty-two years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

4. Endorses the Scientific Committee's intentions and plans for its future activities of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

5. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

6. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the Scientific Committee's work and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their co-operation in this field;

8. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of the Scientific Committee's future reports to the General Assembly.

General Assembly resolution 42/67

2 December 1987 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/42/777) without vote, 28 October (meeting 10); 27-nation draft (A/SPC/42/L.2); agenda item 74.

Sponsors: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, China, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, India, Indonesia, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Oman, Poland, Samoa, Swaziland, Sweden, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: SPC 3-5, 10; plenary 89.

Iraq submitted amendments,(6) which would have had the Assembly recognize that acts of armed aggression against nuclear installations might lead to radiation emissions harmful to man and the environment, express dismay at the failure to take international measures to safeguard nuclear installations against attack, and call on the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Conference on Disarmament to elaborate a draft convention prohibiting such acts. Following consultations with the sponsors, Iraq indicated that it would not insist on the amendments, although it maintained its reservations on the draft resolution.

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1986, p. 371, GA res. 41/62 A, 3 Dec. 1986. (2)A/42/210. (3)YUN 1986, p. 584. (4)A/42/417. (5)YUN 1986, p. 669. (6)A/SPC/42/L.4.

Antarctica

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted two reports on the question of Antarctica to the General Assembly in 1987.

In accordance with a 1986 Assembly resolution requesting the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to keep the Secretary-General informed on all aspects of Antarctica,(1) he presented in September 1987 a report,(2) which included a communication from Australia, on behalf of the Parties (Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, China, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, India, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, South Africa, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay).

Australia recalled that, before the Assembly voted on the 1986 resolution, it made a statement on the Parties' views in which it declared that, in order to reflect their continuing disappointment at the lack of consensus in the Assembly's consideration of Antarctica, most of the Parties had decided not to participate in the voting. It said that Assembly consideration of Antarctica could proceed usefully and realistically only on the basis of consensus. That remained the conviction of the Parties, which were therefore not in a position to respond to the 1986 resolution. None the less, they indicated that they would continue to provide information about Antarctica to the international community under long-standing arrangements with United Nations bodies.

Also included in the Secretary-General's report was updated information on Antarctica provided by 11 specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental bodies.

The second report(3) was submitted in response to another 1986 resolution,(4) in which the Assembly had viewed with concern the continued participation of the apartheid regime of South Africa in the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties and appealed to the Parties to take urgent measures to exclude South Africa from such meetings. The report contained a further communication from Australia, on behalf of the Parties, which explained that a number of them had voted for the resolution, based on their abhorrence of the apartheid system. Others, which likewise abhorred and condemned apartheid, decided not to participate in the vote; their decision was based on support for the principle of universality in the United Nations and the view that there was no valid basis under international law for limiting a Party's rights under the Antarctic Treaty. Australia said that countries hosting meetings under the aegis of the Treaty made the arrangements strictly in compliance with the relevant obligations that applied to such meetings and could not in any way be interpreted as having a bearing on broader foreign policy objectives.

Communications. Brazil, on 11 November, submitted the final report of the fourteenth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting (Rio de Janeiro, 5-16 October). (5)

On 3 March,(6) Kuwait transmitted the final communique and resolutions adopted by the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January), requesting members to support the establishment of an Antarctic treaty allowing for the involvement of the United Nations and other international organizations and urging them also to support the establishment of an equitable, non-exclusive and internationally accepted minerals and other resources regime for Antarctica.

In their final communique, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the Assembly's 1987 session (New York, 5-7 October)(7) reaffirmed that Antarctica should be accessible to all nations, urged the Antarctic Treaty Parties to exclude South Africa from their meetings forthwith, and hoped that all States would resume participation in the Assembly debate on the question of Antarctica.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolutions 42/46 A and B, each by roll-call vote, on the question of Antarctica.

A

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 41/88 C of 4 December 1986,
Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Noting with regret that the racist apartheid regime of South Africa, which has been suspended from participation in the General Assembly of the United Nations, has continued to participate in the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties,

Recalling the resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 10 to 17 July 1985,

Recalling also the relevant paragraphs of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986,

Recalling further that the Antarctic Treaty is, by its terms, intended to further the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting further that the policy of apartheid practised by the racist minority regime of South Africa, which has been universally condemned, constitutes a threat to regional and international peace and security,

1. Views with concern the continuing participation of the apartheid regime of South Africa in the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties;

2. Appeals once again to the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to take urgent measures to exclude the racist apartheid regime of South Africa from participation in the meetings of the Consultative Parties at the earliest possible date;

3. Invites the States parties to the Antarctic Treaty to inform the Secretary-General on the actions taken regarding the provisions of the present resolution:

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report in this regard to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

General Assembly resolution 42/46 A

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 122-0-9 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/758) by roll-call vote (96-0-71, 18 November (meeting 48)); draft by Zambia for African Group (A/C.1/42/L.86); agenda item 70.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 46-48; plenary 85.

Roll-call vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Canada, Côte d'Ivoire, Ireland, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malta, Mauritius, Portugal.

B

The General Assembly,
Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Recalling its resolutions 38/77 of 15 December 1983, 39/152 of 17 December 1984, 40/156 A and B of 16 December 1985 and 41/88 A and B of 4 December 1986,

Recalling the relevant paragraphs of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, and the resolution on Antarctica adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 10 to 17 July 1985, as well as the decision of the Council of Ministers of the League of Arab States held at Tunis on 17 and 18 September 1986 and resolution 25/5-P(IS) adopted by the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, held at Kuwait from 26 to 29 January 1987,

Welcoming the increasing awareness of and interest in Antarctica shown by the international community,

Taking into account the debates on this item held at its thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first and forty-second sessions,

Convinced of the advantages to the whole of mankind of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Affirming its conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue for ever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

Conscious of the significance of Antarctica to the international community in terms, inter alia, of international peace and security, environment, economy, scientific research and meteorology,

Reaffirming that the management, exploration, exploitation and use of Antarctica should be conducted in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and of promoting international co-operation for the benefit of mankind as a whole,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of Antarctica,

Also taking into account all aspects pertaining to all areas covered by the Antarctic Treaty system,

Reaffirming the principle that the international community is entitled to information covering all aspects of Antarctica and that the United Nations be made the repository for all such information in accordance with General Assembly resolution 41/88 A,

Reaffirming further that any eventual minerals regime on Antarctica should take fully into account the interests of the international community and that a moratorium on the negotiations to establish a minerals regime should be imposed until such time as all members of the international community can participate fully in such negotiations, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 41/88 B,

1. Calls upon the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to invite the Secretary-General or his representative to all meetings of the Treaty parties, including their consultative meetings and the minerals regime negotiations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on his evaluations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

3. Also calls upon the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to impose a moratorium on the negotiations to establish a minerals regime until such time as all members of the international community 'can participate fully in such negotiations';

4. Urges all States Members of the United Nations to co-operate with the Secretary-General and to continue consultations on all aspects relating to Antarctica;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

General Assembly resolution 42/46 B

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 100-0-10 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/758) by roll-call vote (73-0-10), 18 November (meeting 48); 16-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.87); agenda item 70.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, Brunei Darussalam, Congo, Ghana, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mali, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Uganda, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 46-48; plenary 85.

Roll-call vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Angola, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint

Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Canada, China, Fiji, Ireland, Luxembourg, Portugal, Solomon Islands, Turkey, Venezuela.

In the First Committee, Australia, on behalf of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, stated that they would reflect their views on the first draft in ways which did not prejudice their position on the successful functioning of the Treaty. They would not participate in the vote on the second draft, thus reflecting their disappointment at the failure to achieve consensus. They believed that the Assembly's consideration of Antarctica could proceed realistically only by consensus and did not accept the suggestion by several speakers that the Parties were the sole obstacles to consensus. Such consensus could be based only on resolutions which gave full regard to the Antarctic Treaty and the continuing operation of the Treaty system.

During the vote in the plenary on resolution 42/46 A, the following 24 States announced that they were not participating: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Chile, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

The same States, with the exception of Paraguay and Turkey, plus 22 others did not participate in the voting on resolution 42/46 B. The additional States were Afghanistan, Argentina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, German Democratic Republic, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

While voting for the first draft and abstaining on the second, China explained that wide differences between States on international co-operation in Antarctic activities still existed, preventing consensus. It held that further study should be given to those differences, including ways to strengthen co-operation between the Treaty Parties and the Secretary-General to promote participation by more countries in the Antarctic system and to ensure that the future regime for Antarctic mineral resources would conform to the Treaty in the interests of all mankind.

Antigua and Barbuda submitted a draft resolution,(8) by which the Assembly would have considered that the Treaty Parties should establish an authority for sharing Antarctica resources and called on the Parties to begin negotiations with Antigua and Barbuda on an agreement to be signed and ratified by States not party to the Treaty before September 1988. Antigua and Barbuda subsequently withdrew the draft, saying that though it firmly believed in the principles enunciated in the text it was convinced that the approach to the matter should be one of negotiation and not one of confrontation.

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1986, p. 372, GA res. 41/88 A, 4 Dec. 1986. (2)A/42/586 & Corr.1. (3)A/42/587. (4)YUN 1986, p. 373, GA res. 41/88 C, 4 Dec. 1986. (5)A/C.1/42/7. (6)A/42/178-S/18753. (7)A/42/681. (8)A/C.1/42/L.88.

Chapter XI

Institutional machinery

During 1987, the Security Council held a total of 49 meetings, 26 of which were devoted to the situation in South Africa and related questions, 11 to the Middle East and related questions, five to the election of members to the International Court of Justice, two to the application of Nauru to become a party to the Court's Statute, two to extending the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, two to the situation between Iran and Iraq, and one (private) to consideration of the Council's draft report to the General Assembly.

The Assembly resumed and concluded its forty-first session in 1987 and held the major part of its forty-second session, with 144 items on its agenda. On 21 December, the Assembly suspended that session, retaining six items on the agenda (decision 42/460).

The Secretary-General stated (see p. 13) that it was a matter of Member States' individual national interest to work together within a multilateral framework since global challenges could not otherwise be successfully met. Countries that had the experience of putting aside national differences in dealing with global threats to economic and social well-being would more easily do the same in seeking resolutions to political problems.

During the year, the Secretary-General continued to exercise his good offices towards resolving the situations involving Afghanistan, Cyprus, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Iran and Iraq, and Kampuchea. In November, he was asked by the Assembly to make available his good offices with regard to the question of the Comorian island of Mayotte.

The Assembly, in October, requested continued co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (resolution 42/4) and the League of Arab States (42/5). Also in October, it invited the African Development Bank to participate in its work in the capacity of observer (42/10).

As there were no new admissions to the United Nations during 1987, its membership remained at 159. On the decision of its Government, the formal and official designation of Saint Christopher and Nevis was changed to Saint Kitts and Nevis.

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: Comorian island of Mayotte; co-operation between OAU and the UN system. Americas: co-operation with OAS. Asia and the Pacific: Iran-

Iraq armed conflict. Mediterranean: Cyprus question. Middle East: credentials of Israel. Regional economic and social activities: Africa-co-operation between the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and the United Nations; Latin America and the Caribbean-co-operation between the Latin American Economic System and the United Nations. Institutional arrangements: Economic and Social Council-co-operation with other organizations. Other colonial Territories: Falkland Islands (Malvinas). International organizations and international law: strengthening the role of the United Nations. Other administrative and management questions: calendar of meetings.

Security Council

The Security Council held 49 meetings in 1987 and adopted 13 resolutions.

Meeting numbers. SC 2731-2779.

In his annual report on the work of the Organization, presented to the General Assembly in September (see p. 3), the Secretary-General suggested that the Security Council could make fuller use of possibilities available within the meaning of the Charter of the United Nations, including peace-keeping forces, to head off violence and facilitate the resolution of disputes before armed conflict occurred.

On 12 June,⁽¹⁾ the Council President stated that he was placing on record that the Council had held consultations⁴ on issues raised in the Secretary-General's five annual reports covering 1982 to 1986. Members had explored possible ways to enhance the Council's effectiveness in accordance with the powers entrusted to it under the Charter and consultations were being pursued informally.

The question of enhancing the Council's role in limiting international conflict continued to be considered in 1987 by the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization (see p. 1071).

Meanwhile, the Assembly, by resolution 42/92, stressed the urgent need to enhance the Council's effectiveness in discharging its principal role of maintaining international peace and security and its authority and enforcement capacity in accordance with the Charter. It emphasized that the Council should consider holding periodic meetings in specific cases to consider and review outstanding problems and crises, enabling it to play a more active role in preventing conflicts, and reiterated the need for the Council, particularly its permanent members, to ensure the effective implementation of its decisions.

Further, by the Declaration on the Enhancement of the Effectiveness of the Principle of Refraining from the Threat or Use of Force in International Relations, as approved in resolution 42/22, the Assembly called for the enhancement of the Council's fact-finding capacity on an ad hoc basis in accordance with the Charter. It declared that States should strive to enhance the effectiveness of the collective security system through implementation of Charter provisions, particularly those relating to the Council's special responsibilities, and should accept and carry out its decisions in accordance with the Charter; States should give the Council every possible type of assistance in all actions taken by it for the just settlement of crisis situations and regional conflicts, strengthen the part it could play in preventing disputes, and facilitate its task of reviewing situations of potential danger to international peace and security at as early a stage as possible.

On 30 September,(2) Colombia, Denmark, Luxembourg, Singapore and the United Republic of Tanzania transmitted a summary of the final report of an international panel, convened by the United Nations Association of the United States of America, to study ways to strengthen the United Nations. Among suggestions related to peace and security was one calling for the establishment of ad hoc review groups under the Council's aegis to examine reports of questionable practices or apparent violations related to multilateral agreements and questions, initiate consultations between parties and refer serious breaches to the Council.

Agenda

During 1987—its forty-second year—the Security Council considered 12 agenda items. It continued the practice of adopting at each meeting the agenda for that meeting. (For list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.)

One item concerning the Republic of Nauru's application to become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) was included for the first time in the Council's agenda.(3)

On 11 September,(4) the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter, of seven matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification.(5) He listed 126 other matters not discussed during the period but of which the Council remained seized. By decision 42/411 of 27 November, the Assembly took note of those matters.

By several resolutions, the Assembly recommended that the Council, in fulfilment of its responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and security, take certain measures, as follows.

In connection with disarmament, the Assembly called on the Council to contribute to establishing and maintaining international peace and security with the least possible diversion of human and economic resources to armament, and to take steps to implement Article 26 of the Charter with a view to enhancing the central role of the United Nations in facilitating solutions to arms limitation as well as the strengthening of international peace and security. It recommended that the Council consider establishing subsidiary bodies to perform its functions to facilitate a solution to disarmament issues (resolution 42/39 A).

The Assembly endorsed the call for setting up a preparatory committee, within the framework of the Council and with the participation of its permanent members, to take the necessary action to convene a proposed international peace conference on the Middle East (42/66 D and 42/209 B). It asked the Council to ensure Israel's compliance with all the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, and to halt Israeli policies and practices in those territories (42/160 D). It also once more asked the Council to ensure that Israel complied with its resolution 487(1981)(6) and placed its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards (42/44).

With regard to Namibia (42/14 A), the Assembly called on the Council to declare Walvis Bay to be an integral part of Namibia rather than leave the question to be negotiated between an independent Namibia and South Africa. It expressed dismay at the Council's failure to discharge its responsibilities for maintaining peace and security in southern Africa, owing to the vetoes of two of its Western permanent members, and urged the Council to fulfil the United Nations direct responsibility over Namibia and to ensure that the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence was fully implemented. The Council was urged to act against any dilatory manoeuvres and fraudulent schemes of the illegal occupation regime to frustrate the Namibian struggle for self-determination and national liberation. It was also called on to tighten the arms embargo against South Africa and to ensure strict compliance by all States.

The Assembly urgently requested the Council to set a date not later than 31 December 1987 to commence implementation of its resolution 435(1978),⁽⁷⁾ to commit itself to applying the relevant Charter provisions, including comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII, in the event that South Africa continued to defy the Council, and to undertake consultations forthwith for the composition and emplacement of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group in Namibia (42/14 B). Council action with regard to sanctions and an arms embargo against South Africa was also urged (42/23 C and 42/23 G), as was action on the imposition of a mandatory embargo on the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa (42/23 F).

Members

In 1987, the question of equitable representation on the Security Council and increase in its membership again was not considered. Draft resolutions proposing an increase in membership from 15 to 21 had been discussed in 1979⁽⁸⁾ and 1980⁽⁹⁾ by the General Assembly, but no action had been taken.

By decision 42/459 of 21 December 1987, the Assembly decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-third (1988) session.

Report for 1986/87

At a private meeting on 25 November 1987, the Security Council unanimously adopted its report covering the period 16 June 1986 to 15 June 1987.⁽¹⁾ The General Assembly took note of the report by decision 42/414 of 2 December.

REFERENCES

(1)A/42/2. (2)A/42/620. (3)Resolutions and Decisions of the Security Council, 1987: S/INF/43. (4)A/42/547. (5)YUN 1986, p. 376. (6)YUN 1981, p. 282, SC res. 487(1981), 19 June 1981. (7)YUN 1978, p. 915, SC res. 435(1978), 29 Sep. 1978. (8)YUN 1979, p. 435. (9)YUN 1980, p. 461.

PUBLICATION

Index to Proceedings of the Security Council, Forty-second Year, 1987 (ST/LIB/SER.B/S.24), Sales No. E.88.I.11.

General Assembly

The General Assembly met in two sessions during 1987, to resume and conclude its forty-first (1986) regular session and to hold the major part of its forty-second.

The first part of the forty-first session had been held from 16 September to 19 December 1986⁽¹⁾ and resumed in 1987 on 14 September, when it was declared closed after concluding consideration of the remaining items on its agenda.

The forty-second regular session was opened on 15 September and continued until its suspension on 21 December. During the general debate, from 21 September to 9 October, the Assembly heard 152 statements by heads of State or Government and heads or members of delegations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following a statement by its President that, with the exception of six items, consideration of the agenda had been concluded, the General Assembly adopted decision 42/460 without vote.

Suspension of the forty-second session

At its 99th plenary meeting, on 21 December 1987, the General Assembly decided to retain on the agenda of its forty-second session the following agenda items:

Item 28: Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security;

Item 34: The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives;

Item 43: Current financial crisis of the United Nations;

Item 46: Question of Cyprus;

Item 47: Consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq;

Item 136: Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country.

General Assembly decision 42/460

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 8.

Agenda

As decided by the General Assembly in 1986,⁽²⁾ six items and one sub-item remained on the agenda for its resumed forty-first session on 14 September 1987. On that day, the Assembly, by decision 41/402 B, included in the agenda of its forty-first session an additional sub-item entitled "Election of a member of the International Court of Justice" (item 15 (c)).

Also on 14 September, the Assembly, by a series of decisions, included items in the draft agenda of its forty-second session on: a comprehensive programme of disarmament (decision 41/421 B); the current financial crisis of the United Nations (41/466 B); review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations (41/471); the question of Cyprus (41/472); consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq (41/474); and the ICJ Judgment of 27 June 1986 concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua: need for immediate compliance (41/475). In addition, the Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third (1988) session the item entitled "Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations" (41/473).

The forty-second session initially had 143 items on its agenda, which was adopted by the Assem-- bly on 18 September; an additional item and two sub-items were later included.(3) (For list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.) Inclusion of the items and their allocation to the Assembly's Main Committees or plenary meetings(4) had been recommended by the General Committee,(5) on the basis of preliminary(6) and annotated preliminary(7) lists of items a 144-item provisional agenda(8) and a three-kern supplementary list.(9)

The Committee recalled that the Assembly, by decision 41/473 (see above), had decided to defer consideration of the item on implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations to the 1988 session and to include it in that session's provisional agenda. The Committee recommended: that one sub-item (need for result-oriented political dialogue to improve the international situation) and one item (question of East Timor) be deferred to the 1988 session; and that one item (convening, under the auspices of the United Nations, of an international conference to define terrorism and to differentiate it from the struggle of peoples for national liberation) should be a sub-item of another (measures to prevent international terrorism which endangers or takes innocent human lives or jeopardizes fundamental freedoms and study of the underlying causes of those forms of terrorism and acts of violence which lie in misery, frustration, grievance and despair and which cause some people to sacrifice human lives, including their own, in an attempt to effect radical changes), rather than two separate agenda items (see p. 1063).

On 2 October, the Committee, on the proposal of the Secretary-General,(10) recommended that a sub-item on appointment of members of the International Civil Service Commission be included in the agenda and allocated to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. On 19 October,(11) the Security Council President proposed that an item on the application of the Republic of Nauru to become a party to the Statute of ICJ be added to the agenda, and, on 7 December,(12) the Secretary-General suggested the inclusion of an additional sub-item on the appointment of a member of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), for consideration in plenary meeting.

By decision 42/406 of 21 October, the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the item on the question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia and to include it in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following examination of the recommendations of the General Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 42/402 without vote.

Adoption of the agenda and allocation of agenda items

At its 3rd and 24th plenary meetings, on 18 September and 5 October 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its first and second reports, adopted the agenda and the allocation of agenda items for the forty-second session.

At its 3rd plenary meeting, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations".

At the same meeting, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the sub-item entitled "Need for result-oriented political dialogue to improve the international situation".

At the same meeting, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Question of East Timor".

At its 24th plenary meeting, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee and the proposal of the Secretary-General, decided to include in the agenda of its forty-second session an additional sub-item of item 17 entitled "Appointment of members of the International Civil Service Commission".

At its 49th plenary meeting, the General Assembly, on a proposal submitted by the Security Council, decided to include in the agenda of its forty-second session an additional item entitled "Application of the Republic of Nauru to become party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice".

At its 95th plenary meeting, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, decided to include in the agenda of its forty-second session an additional sub-item of item 17 entitled "Appointment of a member of the Joint Inspection Unit".

At its 98th plenary meeting, the General Assembly, in the light of decision 42/450, decided to amend the wording of agenda item 16 (c) to read "Election of twenty members of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination".

General Assembly decision 42/402

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/42/250 & Corr.1 & Add.1) without vote, 16, 17 September, 2 October (meetings 1-5); proposals by Secretary-General (A/42/241 & A/42/243) and Security Council (A/42/242); agenda item 8.

1988 agenda

On 2 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, decided to include "Question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India" (decision 42/415) and "Question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations" (decision 42/416) in the provisional agenda of its forty-third (1988) session. On 21 December, the Assembly decided to place three more items on the 1988 provisional agenda: "Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the present United States Administration in April 1986" (decision 42/457); "Launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development" (decision 42/458); and "Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council" (decision 42/459).

Organization of work

In both of its report(5) the General Committee made recommendations concerning the organization of the forty-second session, based on suggestions by the Secretary-General(13) and recommendations submitted by the Committee on Conferences (14)

The General Committee's recommendations provided for a schedule of daily meetings, fixed the duration of the general debate and drew attention to the recommendations relating to rationalization of the General Assembly's work made by the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18) in 1986 (recommendations 2, 3, 4 and 7).(15) With regard to the closing date of the session, the Committee recommended that, in view of the financial problems still being faced by the United Nations and the renewal and reform process under way, every effort should be made to curtail the session's duration. The Committee drew attention to the provisions of a 1979 Assembly decision(16) dealing with explanations of vote, right of reply and length of statements, election of Chairmen of Main Committees, concluding statements, programme budget questions, documentation and resolutions. It also drew attention to the Secretary-General's proposals regarding meeting records(17) as approved by the Assembly in 1986,(18) and recommended that the practice not to reproduce in extenso statements made in a Main Committee, decided by the Assembly in 1983,(19) be maintained for the 1987 session. The Assembly's attention was also drawn to its 1979 decision,(20) 1985 resolution,(21) and a Group of 18 recommendation regarding special conferences (recommendation 2).(22) The Committee recommended authorization for a number of subsidiary bodies to meet during the session (see p. 1171).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the General Committee's recommendations, the General Assembly adopted decision 42/401 without vote.

Organization of the forty-second session

At its 3rd and 24th plenary meetings, on 18 September and 5 October 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its first and second reports, adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the forty-second session.

General Assembly decision 42/401

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/42/250 & Corr.1 & Add.11 without vote, 16, 17 September, 2 October (meetings 1-5); suggestions by Secretary-General (A/BUR/42/1); agenda item 8.

In related action, the Assembly, by resolution 42/42 N, adopted a number of recommendations concerning rationalization of the work of the First Committee.

Representatives' credentials

At its first meeting on 7 October 1987, the Credentials Committee examined a memorandum of the previous day from the Secretary-General indicating that formal credentials of representatives to the General Assembly's forty-second session had been submitted by 109 Member States. At that meeting, the Legal Counsel provided supplementary information that credentials had subsequently been received from six other Member States.

The Committee heard statements in connection with the credentials of Afghanistan, Chile and Democratic Kampuchea. China reiterated that permitting Afghanistan to participate in the current Assembly session should not be interpreted as acquiescence in the situation created by foreign armed invasion and occupation of that country. The United States did not object to Afghanistan's credentials in view of the technical nature of the credentials exercise, although that country's Government had been installed as a result of foreign aggression. The USSR said that the statements by China and the United States were an attempt to distort historical and political realities; Afghanistan was a sovereign and non-aligned State and a full-fledged Member of the United Nations.

The USSR objected to accepting Democratic Kampuchea's credentials; there was no doubt as to the artificiality of the presence of representatives of a regime overthrown by the Kampuchean people. China and the United States said previous Assembly sessions had taken correct decisions on the legality of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials, which were clearly in order. Singapore said it, and the majority of the international community, fully recognized Democratic Kampuchea's legitimacy and found the credentials in order.

The USSR also reconfirmed its non-acceptance of Chile's credentials, while the United States said there was no basis for their being called into question. The Committee's task, said the Federal Republic of Germany, was to examine whether the credentials met the formal requirements of the rules of procedure; the credentials submitted were in order and should be accepted.

On an oral proposal by its Chairman, the Committee adopted without vote a resolution by which it accepted the credentials received, taking into account the various reservations expressed. It also recommended for adoption a draft resolution by which the Assembly would approve the Committee's first report .(23)

On 1 December, at its second meeting, the Committee examined a further memorandum from the Secretary-General reporting that, since the Committee's first meeting, formal credentials from 36 other Member States had been received. The Legal Counsel stated that credentials had subsequently been received from two other Members. Credentials had also been received from a further five 'Member States. The USSR reaffirmed its non-acceptance of Grenada's credentials, while the United States stated that they were obviously in order and that it was deplorable that some delegations sought to politicize the Committee's functions.

Acting without vote on an oral proposal by its Acting Chairman, the Committee adopted a resolution by which it accepted the credentials received, taking into account statements by delegations. It also recommended to the Assembly a draft resolution approving its second report.(24)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendations of the Credentials Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on credentials of representatives to its forty-second session.

On 13 October, it adopted resolution 42/2 A without vote.

The General Assembly

Approves the first report of the Credentials Committee.

General Assembly resolution 42/2 A

13 October 1987 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Draft by Credentials Committee (A/42/630); agenda item 3.

Before adopting the resolution, the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 80 to 39, with 10 abstentions, decided not to act on an amendment sponsored by 20 States to reject the credentials of Israel.(25) That decision was taken on a motion by Finland, also on behalf of Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden. Two communications outlining reservations concerning those credentials had been received by the Secretary-General (see p. 262).

Explaining its position following adoption of the resolution, Egypt said its support for Finland's motion was in line with its position regarding the approach to finding a peaceful settlement in the Middle East and a just solution to the question of Palestine through the convening of an international peace conference under United Nations auspices.

Referring to Afghanistan's credentials, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom indicated that the fact that they had not challenged those credentials did not imply recognition of the current Afghan regime.

With regard to Democratic Kampuchea's credentials, Ethiopia stated that its joining in the consensus on the Credentials Committee's report should not be taken as acceptance of that country's representatives. Democratic Kampuchea said that the Assembly had again confirmed it as a full-fledged Member of the United Nations and its Government as the sole and authentic representative of the people of Kampuchea.

On 11 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/2 B without vote.

The General Assembly

Approves the second report of the Credentials Committee.

General Assembly resolution 42/2 B

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Draft by Credentials Committee (A/42/630/Add.1); agenda item 3.

Explaining its position, Cuba said that the present regime in Grenada was the result of foreign military intervention and did not represent the interests of the people.

Observer status for the African Development Bank

By a 12 May letter,(26) Côte d'Ivoire requested that an item entitled "Observer status for the African Development Bank in the General Assembly" be included in the Assembly's agenda. Introducing a draft text on the subject to the Assembly, Côte d'Ivoire stated that the broadening of the sphere of common interests of the Assembly and the Bank made an institutional link desirable, enabling the Bank's representatives to take part in the Assembly's work when it dealt with questions pertaining to Africa.

On 28 October, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/10 without vote.

Observer status for the African Development
Bank in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Noting the desire of the African Development Bank for co-operation between the United Nations and the Bank,

1. Decides to invite the African Development Bank to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to implement the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/10

28 October 1987 Meeting 51 Adopted without vote

66-nation draft (A/42/L.8 & Add.1); agenda item 140.

Sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, India, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, Netherlands, Niger, Nigeria, Portugal, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Swaziland, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Rationalization of UN procedures

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,(27) the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization continued to review the question of the rationalization of United Nations procedures, devoting two meetings to the topic in February 1987(28) (see p. 1071). The Committee's Working Group had before it a revised working paper submitted by France and the United Kingdom, parts of which had been discussed at the Committee's 1986 session(29) and which had originally been submitted in 1985.(30)

Some Committee members stressed that the impact of the Organization depended on the effectiveness of its procedures. Others agreed that the topic was important but expressed doubts as to the advisability of pursuing in the Special Committee an activity that was also being carried out in the General Committee. Following a discussion of the revised working paper, the co-sponsors introduced a second revised version, which was favourably received by some members who found that it contained worthwhile ideas. Others considered it to be in need of further reflection and study. It was hoped that it could serve as a basis for reaching agreement at the Special Committee's 1988 session.

In resolution 42/157 on the report of the Special Committee, the Assembly again requested the Committee to keep the question under active review.

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1986, p. 377. (2)Ibid., GA dec. 41/470, 19 Dec. 1986. (3)A/42/251 & Add.3. (4)A/42/252 & Add.1-3. (5)A/42/250 & Corr.1 & Add.1. (6)A/42/50. (7)A/42/100 & Add.1. (8)A/42/150. (9)A/42/200. (10)A/42/241. (11)A/42/242. (12)A/42/243. (13)A/BUR/42/1. (14)A/42/548 & Add.1. (15)YUN 1986, pp. 891, 1084 & 1089. (16)YUN 1979, p. 440, GA dec. 34/401, 21 Sep., 25 Oct., 29 Nov. & 12 Dec. 1979. (17)YUN 1986, p. 1090. (18)Ibid., p. 1091, GA dec. 41/466, 11 Dec. 1986. (19)YUN 1983, p. 1206, GA res. 38/32 E, 25 Nov. 1983. (20)YUN 1979, p. 1214, GA dec. 34/405, 1 Nov. 1979. (21)YUN 1985, p. 1256, GA res. 40/243, 18 Dec. 1985. (22)YUN 1986, p. 1084. (23)A/42/630. (24)A/42/630/Add.1. (25)A/42/L.3. (26)A/42/142. (27)YUN 1986, p. 1000, GA res. 41/83, 3 Dec. 1986. (28)A/42/33. (29)YUN 1986, p. 381. (30)YUN 1985, p. 397.

PUBLICATIONS

Index to Proceedings of the General Assembly, Forty-second session-1987/1988, Part I-Subject Index; Conclusion of the Forty-first session-1986/1987 (ST/LIB/SER.B/A.42 (Part I), Sales No. E.88.I.16 (Part I); Part II-Index to Speeches (ST/LIB/SER.B/A.42 (Part II), Sales No. E.88.I.16 (Part II).

Secretary-General

In his annual report (see p. 3), the Secretary-General said that the United Nations Charter defined the principles to be followed in gaining peace in the fullest meaning of what true peace entailed, principles that had lost none of their relevance or validity. What had too often been lacking was the readiness of Member States to put aside national differences and national ambitions and work together within the United Nations in accordance with those principles towards common goals.

Good offices

During 1987, the Secretary-General continued the missions of good offices entrusted to him by either the Security Council or the General Assembly Those missions concerned Afghanistan, Cyprus, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), the Iran-Iraq conflict and Kampuchea.

Through the intermediary of his Personal Representative, the Secretary-General continued his efforts to achieve a political solution to the situation in Afghanistan. Two rounds of talks were held with the principals, mainly on the time-frame for withdrawal of troops (see p. 214). With regard to Cyprus, he continued high-level meetings with the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities on overcoming the political impasse there (see p. 244). During the year, the Secretary-General continued to consult with the emissaries of Iran and Iraq in order to end the conflict between them. In July, the Security Council called on those two countries to co-operate with him in his mediation efforts (see p. 223).

In his renewed mission to assist Argentina and the United Kingdom to initiate negotiations on the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), the Secretary-General maintained close contact with the two Governments and discussed the question with their Foreign Ministers and Permanent Representatives to the United Nations (see p. 1027). He and his Special Representative also maintained close contacts with the States most directly concerned with the situation in Kampuchea and with other interested parties (see p. 205).

In November, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful negotiated solution to the question of the Comorian island of Mayotte (see p. 179).

Co-operation with other intergovernmental organizations

Co-operation between the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations was the subject of six 1987 General Assembly resolutions. Those organizations were the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (see below); the Organization of African Unity (see p. 182); the Organization of American States (see p. 194); the Latin American Economic System (see p. 554); and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (see p. 531).

League of Arab States

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in July 1987 a report on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States.⁽²⁾

The report described consultations and exchanges of information that had taken place between the two organizations since 1986 and summarized follow-up action on proposals for co-operation agreed by them in 1983.⁽³⁾ Information was given on multilateral proposals in the areas of disarmament, population, water resources, technical co-operation, new and renewable sources of energy, mineral resources, environment, maritime transport, labour matters, and promotion of equality for women in employment training and welfare services.

The report described the status, based on information received from United Nations organizations and agencies, of bilateral proposals in six main areas of co-operation. They included: political matters, particularly matters pertaining to the Middle East and Persian Gulf areas, but also outer space and apartheid economic, financial and technical co-operation for development; food and agriculture; social development, health, labour matters, human resources and cultural affairs; refugees, disaster prevention and emergency relief, and human rights; and information and communication. The report also summarized information on progress made on proposals adopted at a 1985 joint United Nations/Arab League meeting on social development,^(*) and on a proposed joint sectoral meeting on development of human resources in the Arab region.

In a September 1987 report on implementation of JIU recommendations,^(5) the Secretary-General stated that seven of the eight recommendations contained in the 1986 JIU report⁽⁶⁾ on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States were being implemented. With regard to the recommendation that support for joint inter-agency working groups be entrusted to a senior headquarters specialist in technical co-operation, the Secretary-General believed that the Office for Special Political Questions should continue to maintain close contact with the League.

Statements in the Security Council. In 1987, the League's Permanent Observer to the United Nations made statements at three Security Council meetings, to which he had been invited to participate in accordance with rule 39a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Those meetings dealt with the Middle East situation, including the occupied Arab territories, and the situation in South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/5 by recorded vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the' League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, in particular resolution 41/4 of 17 October 1986,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Recalling the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional arrangements for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the desire of the League of Arab States to consolidate and develop the existing ties with the United Nations in all areas relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, and to co-operate in every possible way with the United Nations in the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East,

Aware of the vital importance for the countries members of the League of Arab States of achieving a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict,

Realizing that the strengthening of international peace and security is directly related, inter alia, to disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Convinced that the maintenance and further strengthening of co-operation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the work of the United Nations system and to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in realizing the ^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

goals and objectives set forth in the Strategy for Joint Arab Economic Development adopted by the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference, held at Amman from 25 to 27 November 1980,

Having heard the statement of the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States of 15 October 1987 on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, and having noted the emphasis placed therein on follow-up actions and procedures on the recommendations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields adopted at the meeting between representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, held at Tunis from 28 June to 1 July 1983, as well as on the recommendations relating to political matters contained in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Express its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the follow-up action taken by him on the proposals adopted at the meeting between representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system held at Tunis and the sectoral meeting on social development in the Arab region, held at Amman from 19 to 21 August 1985, as well as to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system for their efforts to facilitate the implementation of the Tunis and Amman proposals;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen co-operation with the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States for the purpose of implementing United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East in order to achieve a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict;

4. Requests the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, further to intensify their co-operation towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to co-ordinate the follow-up action to facilitate the implementation of the proposals of a multilateral nature adopted at the Tunis meeting in 1983, and to take appropriate action regarding the multilateral proposals relating to social development adopted at the Amman meeting in 1985, including the following measures:

(a) Promotion of contacts and consultations between the counterpart programmes, organizations and agencies concerned;

(b) Setting up of joint sectoral inter-agency working groups;

7. Calls upon the specialized agencies, and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system:

(a) To continue to co-operate with the Secretary-General and the programmes, organizations and agencies concerned within the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in the follow-up of multilateral proposals aimed at strengthening and expanding co-operation in all fields between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations;

(b) To maintain and increase contacts and consultations with the counterpart programmes, organizations and agencies concerned regarding projects of a bilateral nature in order to facilitate their implementation;

(c) To inform the Secretary-General, not later than 15 May 1988, of the progress of their co-operation with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in particular the follow-up action taken on the multilateral and bilateral proposals adopted at the Tunis and Amman meetings;

8. Takes note with appreciation of the arrangements for the convening of a regional workshop on human resources development in the Arab region in Kuwait on 28 and 29 November 1987, in implementation of paragraph 6 (c) of resolution 41/4;

9. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to arrange for a joint meeting in 1988 of the representatives of the United Nations system and the representatives of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to review and appraise progress achieved in their co-operation during the past five years, with the objective of enhancing future co-operation;

10. Requests both the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States to initiate consultations for the purpose of drafting an agreement of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States;

11. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in close co-operation with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, to hold periodic consultations, as and when appropriate, between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States on follow-up policies, projects, actions and procedures;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States".

General Assembly resolution 42/5

15 October 1987 Meeting 40 153-2 (recorded vote)

20-nation draft (A/42/L.5); agenda item 23.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Explaining its vote, Israel said that the Arab League's political and economic warfare against a Member State violated the Charter's most elementary principles; it was untenable that any United Nations funds should be devoted to such co-operation with the League. The United States said it voted negatively because in paragraph 3 the Secretary-General was requested to implement Assembly resolutions which the United States had voted against.

Australia, Canada, Denmark, on behalf of the European Community (EC), Japan, New Zealand and Sweden, also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway, while supporting the text, also had reservations about paragraph 3. Denmark added that EC would prefer such resolutions to deal with co-operation in terms which avoided introducing contentious elements.

Organization of the Islamic Conference

In response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(7) the Secretary-General submitted in July 1987 a report on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference.(8)

The report described consultations which had taken place between representatives of the two organizations and their representation at meetings since the Secretary-General's 1986 report(9) it also outlined co-operation in political and security matters and in the areas of economic, social and cultural development.

On 3 March,(10) Kuwait transmitted to the Secretary-General the final communique and resolutions dealing with political and economic matters and information, cultural and social affairs adopted by the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January). On behalf of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, Kuwait transmitted a 19 October communique regarding the status of the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine

Liberation Organization to the United Nations,(11) and a 15 December communique on the situation in the occupied Palestinian territories.(12)

During 1987, the Permanent Observer of the Conference participated in three Security Council meetings under rule 39b of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. The meetings dealt with the question of South Africa, the situation in Namibia and the situation in the occupied Arab territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 October, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 42/4.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference
The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking into account the desire of both organizations to co-operate more closely in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order,

Recalling the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional co-operation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting the strengthening of co-operation between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking note of the encouraging progress made in the five priority areas of co-operation as well as in the identification of other priority areas for developing trade and technical co-operation among the Islamic countries,

Convinced that the strengthening of co-operation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 37/4 of 22 October 1982, 38/4 of 28 October 1983, 39/7 of 8 November 1984, 40/4 of 25 October 1985 and 41/3 of 16 October 1986,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with satisfaction the active participation of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in the work of the United Nations towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to continue co-operation in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order;

bSee footnote a on p. 368.

4. Encourages the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to expand their co-operation with the Organization of the Islamic Conference, particularly by negotiating co-operation agreements, and invites them to multiply the contacts and meetings of focal points for co-operation in priority areas of interest to the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

6. Recommends that the third general meeting between the representatives of the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the representatives of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system should be organized in 1988 at a time and place to be determined through consultations;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General in the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, and expresses the hope that he will continue to strengthen the mechanisms of co-operation between the two organizations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the state of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference".

General Assembly resolution 42/4

15 October 1987 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Draft by Kuwait (A/42/L.4); agenda item 22.

Other intergovernmental organizations

At the request of the host Governments of several intergovernmental conferences, the main documents of those meetings were transmitted to the Secretary-General in 1987 for circulation as documents of the General Assembly, the Security Council, or both, as follows:

-Joint Political Declaration of the Third Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Central America, the European Community and the Contadora Group, and the Joint Economic Communique of the European Community and the countries parties to the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration and Panama, following the Conference on Political Dialogue and Economic

Co-operation between the European Community, Central America and the Contadora Group (Guatemala City, 9 and 10 February);(13)

-Final communique and other documents of the Special Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, Guyana, 9-12 March);(14)

-Documents issued at the Twentieth Ministerial Meeting of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (Singapore, 15 and 16 June);(15)

-Final communique adopted by the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the forty-second session of the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October);(16)

-Vancouver Declaration on World Trade, the Okanagan Statement on Southern Africa and Programme of Action, and the communique of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Vancouver, Canada, 13-17 October);(17)

-Final Declaration issued by the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference (Amman, Jordan, 8-11 November). (18)

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1986, 384, GA res. 41/4, 17 Oct. 1986. (2)A/42/394 & Add.1,2. (3)YUN 1983, p. 394. (4)YUN 1985, p. 731. (5)A/42/526. (6)YUN 1986, p. 383. (7)Ibid., p. 386, GA res. 41/3, 16 Oct. 1986. (8)A/42/388 & Add.1. (9)YUN 1986, p. 385. (10)A/42/178-S/18753. (11)A/42/666. (12)A/42/892-S/19348. (13)A/42/156-S/18726. (14)A/42/357-S/18935. (15)A/42/477-S/19048. (16)A/42/681. (17)A/42/677. (18)A/42/779-S/19274.

Other institutional questions

Composition of UN organs

In 1987, as in previous years since 1979, consideration of the question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations was deferred, based on a recommendation of the Special Political Committee, which reported that none of its members had requested to speak on the substance of the item.(1) Acting on that recommendation, the General Assembly on 2 December adopted decision 42/416, by which it included the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-third (1988) session.

REFERENCE

WA/42/700.

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic co-operation

The slow growth path in which the world economy appeared to be set and the likelihood of its delaying the great adjustment required at the national and international levels was the subject of discussion in several United Nations bodies during 1987. In major economic reports, the international debt situation and high unemployment rates were identified as serious problems which had been exacerbated by the economic slow-down.

The Secretary-General said that economic growth, finance and trade were crucial elements for raising world standards of living, yet those elements had been faltering (see p. 8). On the whole, although inflation had been brought under control or eliminated in a large number of countries and a few developing countries had experienced a sustained period of rapid economic growth, the state of the global economy was highly unsatisfactory. Under the circumstances, he said, it was important that a greater understanding had emerged of the interrelationship among economic and social problems, many of which could not be dealt with in isolation.

The seventh (July/August) session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD VII) (see p. 465) undertook an assessment of economic trends and of global structural change and, in its Final Act, agreed that multilateral economic co-operation should be a continuing endeavour from which important benefits could be expected for the development process and for the world economy as a whole.

With the end of the decade in sight, the General Assembly decided that in 1988 it would consider action to assess the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) and begin preparations for a strategy for the fourth decade (the 1990s). Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report on international economic security, the Assembly asked him to continue his efforts to enhance the United Nations capacity to focus on problems in the world economy to assist Governments to take concerted measures, particularly to solve development problems of developing countries. The Assembly also considered his report on economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries and called on the international community to take action to eliminate the use of such measures, which had increased and taken new forms.

Although the question of launching global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, originally scheduled to start in 1980, remained on the Assembly's agenda, no progress was made. It was therefore decided to consider the matter again in 1988. The proposed new international economic order, including its legal aspects, continued to be discussed.

The World Economic Survey 1987, which analysed current trends and policies in the world economy, was the background document for the annual discussion in the Economic and Social Council of international economic and social policy. The Trade and Development Report, 1987 also addressed developments in the world economy and devoted considerable attention to the issue of technology, growth and trade. At its annual meeting, the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) was concerned with the constraints imposed by and opportunities available in a changing global economy.

In May, the Economic and Social Council emphasized the catalytic role of the United Nations programme in public administration and finance and invited the United Nations Development Programme and donor countries to provide funds to implement the Action Programme in Public Administration for Sub-Saharan Africa. It also asked the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on a draft declaration on local self-government. In July, the Council invited United Nations organizations to provide opportunities to exchange experience and information on the role of the public sector in the economic and social development of developing countries.

The problems of the least developed countries (LDCs) were a major focus of UNCTAD VII. Based on recommendations by UNCTAD VII and the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, the Assembly decided to convene a second United Nations conference on LDCs in 1990. In December, on the recommendation of CDP and the Economic and Social Council, the Assembly added Burma to the United Nations list of LDCs, bringing the total to 41. The problems of land-locked developing countries were also considered by the Assembly, which urged international development bodies to expand their support, including technical assistance programmes in the transport and communications sectors of those countries.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: disarmament and development. Operational activities for development. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief: critical economic situation in Africa. International trade and finance. Regional economic and social activities: economic and social trends-Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, Western Asia; development policy and regional economic co-operation-Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, Western Asia. Social and cultural development: social aspects of development. Health and human resources: human resources development. Human rights: right to development. Women: women and development. Statistics: economic statistics. International economic law: legal aspects of the new international economic order.

International economic relations

Development and economic co-operation

During 1987, several United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and UNCTAD VII, discussed various aspects of development and economic co-operation. By resolution 42/193, the Assembly decided that, in 1988, it would consider action both to assess the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and to prepare a strategy for the fourth development decade. The Secretary-General's report on a concept of international economic security was considered by the Council and transmitted by it (decision 1987/162) to the Assembly, which requested him to consult with eminent persons representing all regions on principles of international economic security and to report in 1989 (resolution 42/165). A report by the Secretary-General on economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries was also before the Assembly, which called on the international community to eliminate such measures, which had increased and taken new forms (resolution 42/173).

CDP activities. At its April 1987 session,⁽¹⁾ CDP noted that the world economy in 1987 showed alarming signs of strain and stress, with huge imbalances persisting in trade flows and international payments, while major exchange rates had undergone drastic realignments. Since short-term concerns such as domestic problems and internal disputes over trade and macro-economic policy were preoccupying the major actors in the world economy, economic growth, investment for future growth and spending on health and education had fallen victim to extreme austerity and import strangulation in many developing countries. That was a serious set-back to an international development policy which sought to improve living conditions in developing countries through development assistance and a vast array of other efforts.

Remedying the disarray in the global economy was, said CDP, the responsibility of those countries having the greatest influence on world trade and finance markets. As the United States was tackling its budget and current account deficits, Japan and other main surplus countries could take initiatives to restore order. Channelling greater global savings into financing productive capital formation in developing countries would relax their severe import constraints and boost industrial countries' stagnant export growth.

CDP drew attention to three dimensions of the need to augment financial resources available to developing countries: a workable global strategy for a growth-oriented solution to the debt problem had to be found, taking account of the ability to pay, the need for growth and the mutual interests of expanding trade and employment; flexible measures for immediate liquidity needed to be devised for hard-pressed low-income countries whose debt-service arrears were assuming alarming proportions; and multilateral financial institutions had to be provided with the resources to enable them to play an expanded role in international adjustment.

With regard to the international trading system, there was need for more open, non-discriminatory and predictable arrangements that would promote the growth of trade. Multilateral trade negotiations would be made particularly difficult by the large structural changes in process and by the need to enlarge the régime for international economic co-operation to include services.

The prospect of a protracted process of adjustment lasting well into the 1990s had important implications for development planning: domestic resource mobilization efforts would need strengthening; public sector policies would need re-examination, with unnecessary bureaucratic regulations being phased out; public expenditures would need greater scrutiny in relation to national development objectives (excessive defence spending was often an example of the mismatch between public expenditures and development objectives); and intrasectoral priorities would need careful examination with respect to cost-effectiveness.

ACC activities. In its annual overview report to the Economic and Social Council on its 1987 work,(2) the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) noted that while the world economic situation and international trade had improved slightly during the year, the performance was not adequate to create a supportive environment for substantial progress in trade, debt, poverty alleviation and development. The volatility of the financial markets was largely the result of accumulated tensions in the world economy owing, among other things, to persistent imbalances among major economies and the slowness of Governments in addressing them in a co-ordinated fashion that would stimulate overall expansion of the world economy.

The outcome of recent international meetings of the United Nations system in the economic and social fields, including UNCTAD VII, reflected the positive political atmosphere which characterized their proceedings. The meetings also reflected the need for sustainable, non-inflationary growth in the developed countries and for an environment supportive of accelerated development in the developing world. ACC emphasized that policy agreements reached in such multilateral forums should be implemented promptly by all Governments.

At its fifteenth session (New York, 8-10 September),(3) the ACC Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives, in accordance with a 1986 ACC request,(4) studied the long-term conditions for balanced growth and examined, from the social as well as the economic and financial angle, lessons to be learned from structural adjustment programmes.

The Task Force stated that the low rate of global economic growth during the preceding six years and that projected for the remainder of the 1980s should be cause for deep concern in the United Nations system, given its far-reaching social implications. The situation called for ways to accelerate growth in both developed and developing countries, and for appropriate development policy responses to prolonged economic slow-down and social decay. In addition to the need to deal with current economic and financial imbalances (trade, debt) and social dislocations, the long-term implications of the rapid pace of technical and demographic change were important.

The Task Force noted that several broad themes were likely to affect international co-operation in the coming decade: global structural change; employment; 'internationalization and convergence; constrained government finances; scarce development finance; and special emphasis on LDCs.

Following consideration of the Task Force's report, ACC agreed that the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation should convene, early in 1988, a group of senior officials to prepare some reflections on the issues involved in formulating a new international development strategy (see p. 378 and to review the mandate of the Task Force.(5)

World Economic Survey 1987. During its June/July 1987 discussion of international economic and social policy (see below), the Economic and Social Council had before it the World Economic Survey 1987(6) prepared by the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs and based on information available as at early April.

The Survey analysed trends and prospects in the world economy (see p. 383) and also raised the topics of macro-economic policy co-ordination, international trade, finance and debt (see Chapter IV of this section), world energy markets, redirection of policies in planned economies, sources of economic growth in developing countries and persistent unemployment in some developed market economies.

The Council's general discussion of international economic and social policy(7) focused on the world economic situation, the interaction of economic and social phenomena, the short- to medium-term outlook and the policy initiatives required at the domestic and international levels to achieve sustained growth and development, particularly in developing countries. International trade and resource transfer questions figured prominently in the deliberations. Food and agriculture, the development of human resources and the role of women, the environment, the role of multilateral co-operation and co-ordination and the streamlining of United Nations activities in the economic and social fields also received special attention from a large number of countries.

There was widespread concern about the unsatisfactory state of the world economy, with economic growth in most countries remaining modest and international trade sluggish, despite reductions in inflation and nominal interest rates. Two particularly disturbing features were the high unemployment levels in many developing countries and most European market economies, and the still negative rate of interest in the per capita gross domestic product (GDP) of the majority of developing countries. An encouraging development was that several developing countries, especially the most populous countries in Asia, had experienced a rate of economic growth well above that of industrialized countries.

By decision 1987/188 of 9 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of a number of documents considered by it in connection with its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including the World Economic Survey 1987.

UNCTAD action. Two documents on economic development issues were prepared for UNCTAD VII. A report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on reviving multilateral co-operation for growth and development⁽⁸⁾ described in its first chapter the constriction of growth and development during the 1980s. Another chapter suggested elements of a policy response to that constriction taking into account the growing level of interdependence among segments of the world economy, linkages between short-term adjustments and longer-term growth in developing countries, and the role that could usefully be played by market forces and public decisions. A further chapter proposed action to renew the development process in the four principal areas of the Conference's main substantive agenda item: expanding resources for development; strengthening the commodity sector; improving the international trading framework; and supporting the development of LDCs. The report concluded by suggesting a number of policy approaches and concrete measures in the same four areas.

A report by the UNCTAD secretariat on revitalizing development, growth and international trade⁽⁹⁾ noted that there had been many manifestations of the development set-back during the 1980s: the number of countries experiencing GDP growth below that of their populations rose sharply; the gap between average living standards in developing countries and the rest of the world had widened significantly; rises in unemployment and underemployment had accompanied sharp declines in earnings; those declines had been accompanied by increases in hunger and malnutrition in several countries; cuts in health, education and other social services in developing countries had been caused by austerity policies pursued in response to external financial stringency; widespread import compression had affected categories of imports essential to investment and to many branches of production; and falls in investment and in public expenditure on education, training, and research and development had adversely affected technological development in many developing countries. The report noted that the 1980s had also been marked by a number of development achievements in agriculture and the strengthening of the industrial base, even in some countries whose overall economic growth had slowed.

The report suggested that interactions between money, finance, debt, commodities and trade, which had been depressing development, could work positively if interdependence were better managed. That would require of UNCTAD member States: a renewed and extended commitment to multilateral co-operation designed to reverse the disarray of development; an evaluation of the problems and of the interrelationships among them and their possible solutions; and the sketching at UNCTAD VII of a strategy to enhance growth and restore momentum to development. Such a strategy should cover expansionary measures in developed market-economy countries and consider measures to address structural and systemic problems, as well as those dealing with the immediate crisis, including policies in the areas of resources for development, commodities and the trade régime, and in support of a more favourable economic and social situation for LDCs.

The Final Act of UNCTAD VII, adopted on 3 August 1987,⁽¹⁰⁾ contained an assessment of relevant economic trends and of global structural change. The findings of that assessment were that the world economy in the 1980s had been characterized by a slow-down in growth of demand and output, compared with the preceding two decades, generally lower rates of inflation, difficulties in many countries in adapting to structural changes, a mounting stock of debt, high real interest rates, inadequate net flows of financial resources, shifts in exchange rates, high and increasing levels of protection, commodity prices depressed to their lowest level in 50 years, terms-of-trade losses sustained by commodity-exporting countries, and a generally insecure economic environment in which millions of people lacked the basic conditions for a decent life.

Drawing on its findings, UNCTAD VII reached a number of general policy conclusions constituting a basis for continuing action by Governments, individually and collectively, and in international organizations, to pursue the objective of revitalizing development, growth and international trade.

The Conference reached a broad understanding on the need for: major market-economy countries to adopt co-ordinated policies to promote stable, sustainable, non-inflationary growth, to enhance the positive impact on development of measures to deal with their mutual imbalances, and to strengthen mechanisms for the ongoing process of multilateral surveillance of economic policies; developed market-economy countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe to contribute to strengthening the production potential of developing countries, improve access for those countries' imports and undertake structural adjustment in agriculture and industry where appropriate, enhance the flow of resources and intensify economic assistance to developing countries, bearing in mind their particular resource needs; and developing countries, in fulfilment of their primary responsibility for their own development, to strengthen policies and measures to mobilize domestic financial and human resources, provide a suitable policy environment for external financial resources, improve the effectiveness of domestic and external resource use, continue to improve their mutual economic co-operation in pursuance of national and collective self-reliance, and promote the development of human resources.

In the context of its assessment and general policy conclusions, the Conference reviewed key issues in the four substantive areas of its agenda: resources for development, including financial, and related monetary questions; commodities; international trade (see Chapter IV of this section); and problems of LDCs, bearing in mind the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs (see p. 390).

Report of the Secretary-General. In his September 1987 report to the General Assembly on the Organization's work (see p. 3), the Secretary-General stated that it was evident from the discussions at UNCTAD VII and the preceding session of the Economic and Social Council that his concerns about the problem-filled state of the world economy were shared by Member States. Under the prevailing economic circumstances, he found it important that a greater understanding had emerged of the interrelationship among economic and social problems. There had also been a movement towards greater integration of differing economic and trade systems, a distancing from rigidity in conforming with doctrine.

Communications. During 1987, many documents and communications dealing with general aspects of international economic relations were received by the Secretary-General. Among them were: the final communique and resolutions adopted by the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January);(11) the Economic Declaration of the Economic Summit of the seven major industrialized countries and representatives of the European Community (EC) (Venice, Italy, 8-10 June);(12) a document on the elimination of underdevelopment and the establishment of a new international economic order adopted by the Political Consultative Committee of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty on Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance (Berlin, 28 and 29 May);(13) a 23 June letter from the German Democratic Republic transmitting information on its assistance to developing countries and national liberation movements in 1986;(14) a 25 June letter from the USSR transmitting a document concerning its economic co-operation with the developing countries;(15) the Pyongyang Declaration and Plan of Action on South-South Co-operation adopted by the Extraordinary Ministerial Conference of Non-Aligned Countries on South-South Co-operation (Pyongyang, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, 9-13 June)(16) (see p. 382); the final statement of the fifth session of the InterAction Council (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 19-21 April);(17) the final communique of the eighteenth South Pacific Forum (Apia, Samoa, 29 and 30 May);(18) documents issued at the Twentieth Ministerial Meeting of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (Singapore, 15 and 16 June);(19) a 30 September letter from Czechoslovakia forwarding a paper on its economic assistance to the developing countries and national liberation movements in 1986;(20) the Declaration adopted by the eleventh annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 developing countries (New York, 28 September-1 October);(21) a statement issued at the conclusion of the Second Ministerial Meeting of the Cairns Group (14 countries committed to furthering the objective of liberalized trade in agricultural products) (Ottawa, Canada, 21-23 May);(22) a 16 October letter from Bulgaria transmitting a document on its assistance to developing countries in 1986;(23) the communique of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Vancouver, Canada, 13-17 October);(24) the final communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 session of the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October);(25) and the Acapulco Commitment to Peace, Development and Democracy, signed by the heads of State of Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela at the first meeting of the Permanent Mechanism for Consultation and Concerted Political Action (Acapulco, Mexico, 29 November).(26)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee devoted a major part of its work during the General Assembly's 1987 regular session to development and international economic co-operation, making recommendations on a number of topics (see APPENDIX IV, agenda item 82). A list of pertinent documents was included in art I of the Committee's report on that item,(27) which the Assembly took note of on 11 December by decision 43/436.

By resolution 42/186, the Assembly adopted the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, detailing issues, outlooks, goals and recommended action in six main sections, one of which dealt with international economic relations (see p. 661).

In resolution 42/93, the Assembly called on States and economic forums to use all opportunities to promote a stable and equitable world economic environment and to strengthen international economic co-operation for development and work towards a new international economic order.

Preparations for a strategy for the fourth UN development decade

The first steps towards preparing a new international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (1991-2000) began in November 1987 when Guatemala, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, introduced a draft resolution on the subject in the General Assembly's Second Committee.

The review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) had been completed in 1985.(28)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/193 without vote.

Preparation of the new international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and its decision 40/438 of 17 December 1985 concerning the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Strategy,

Concerned that the goals and objectives of the Strategy remain largely to be fulfilled,

Recognizing the crucial and urgent need for the reactivation of the economic and social development process of the developing countries,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with all the concerned organs and organizations of the United Nations system, to provide information which would be appropriate for the preparation and elaboration of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (1991-2000), including that which would be relevant for the assessment of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, taking into account the above-mentioned resolutions;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the information requested above;

3. Decides to consider, at its forty-third session, appropriate further action for the assessment of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and the preparation and elaboration of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade.

General Assembly resolution 42/193

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.10) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.75), based on informal consultations on draft by Guatemala for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.51); agenda item 82.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 38, 43; plenary 96.

Proposed global economic negotiations

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly decision,(29) consideration of the question of launching a round of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, originally scheduled to begin in 1980,(30) had been deferred to the 1987 session.

Speaking in the Assembly on behalf of the Group of 77, Guatemala regretted that the international community had been unable to agree on the launching of the negotiations and proposed that the item be deferred once again. Accepting the proposal without vote, the Assembly, by decision 42/458 of 21 December, decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-third (1988) session.

Proposed new international economic order

During 1987, aspects of a new international economic order, called for by the General Assembly in 1974,(31) continued to be discussed in several United Nations bodies.

In August, the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law adopted the Legal Guide on Drawing Up International Contracts for the Construction of Industrial Works as prepared by its Working Group on the New International Economic Order.

In December, the Assembly, in resolution 42/149, requested the Secretary-General to continue seeking Member States' proposals concerning procedures with regard to the consideration of a 1984 study by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on international law relating to the new order.

(See LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI.)

International economic security

In response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,(32) the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in June 1987 a preliminary report on the concept of international economic security.(33)

In 1986,(34) the Assembly had requested him, in preparing the report, to analyse approaches and contributions to economic development and identify common elements in those approaches, to take into account views expressed at the 1986 Assembly session on ways to strengthen the dialogue on development and international economic co-operation, and to keep in mind the role of international and regional organizations, institutions and forums. Twenty-six Governments and 25 United Nations organizations responded to the Secretary-General's request for their views on international economic security.

The report briefly discussed the problems and potential of the world economy, drew an analogy between national security and international economic security, gave national and international sources of economic instability, and described national and international efforts to enhance economic security and emerging trends and common interests. In concluding remarks, the report stated that one example of a practical step towards the objectives underlying the concept of international economic security would be to encourage discussion of "early warning systems". Also, a more committed discussion in the United Nations on long-term global trends would make the international community better able to foresee potential problem areas. Thought could also be given to examining some provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to enable them to play more stabilizing roles in international economic relations. Finally, concrete results from the August/September International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development (see p. 82) would help channel resources away from military purposes towards growth and development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July, by decision 1987/162, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report and invited the Assembly, when considering it, to bear in mind the need to promote the dialogue on international economic co-operation, with emphasis on the development interests of the developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

For its consideration of the concept of international economic security, the General Assembly had before it, in addition to the Secretary-General's report,(33) an addendum(35) containing a synopsis of major points raised in replies submitted by Governments and United Nations organizations and summaries of those replies. In addition, a 16 October letter(36) from Hungary to the Secretary-General requested the circulation of a joint statement of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR on the topic.

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/165 by recorded vote.

International economic security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Bearing in mind the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987,

Recalling its resolutions 40/173 of 17 December 1985 and 41/184 of 8 December 1986, and taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1987/162 of 8 July 1987,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on a concept of international economic security,

Reaffirming that co-operation among all countries should be based on respect for independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-interference in the internal affairs of each State, and on the right of the people of each country to choose freely their own social, economic and political system,

Convinced that the efforts of States to co-operate in all areas of economic activity contribute to the reinforcement of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and recalling, in this connection, the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

Further convinced of the need to strengthen the United Nations and the United Nations system to achieve the purposes set out in the Charter, in particular in Article 55, to create conditions of stability, well-being and economic and social progress, and to promote the development of developing countries,

Recognizing that the increasing complexity of the interrelated issues of money, finance, external debt, trade, commodities and development calls for a universal, more comprehensive and continuing dialogue to address these issues on the basis of common interest, equality, non-discrimination and collective responsibility and to the mutual benefit of all countries,

Aware that both national and international policies should be growth-oriented and mutually reinforcing in order to make interdependence, in contrast to the experience of the recent past, a vehicle for transmitting and cumulating positive impulses and benefits for all countries, with special emphasis on the development needs of developing countries,

Reiterating that the alleviation of the most urgent economic problems of developing countries is a major factor in ensuring international economic stability and a better political climate,

Calling for the reinforcement of multilateral co-operation in promoting a common understanding and determining practical approaches and measures to deal with problems of growth, development, in particular of developing countries, and other international economic issues,

Recognizing that the strengthening of co-operation within the United Nations system, including its operational activities, would help to create a more predictable and more supportive international economic environment and increase confidence in international economic relations designed to bring about a healthy, secure and equitable future for the world economy,

Reaffirming that regional and subregional economic integration could in appropriate cases serve as an essential element in strengthening economic and technical co-operation, in particular in the sphere of science and technology for development, as it contributes to a more predictable international economic environment,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on a concept of international economic security;

2. Emphasizes that the Charter of the United Nations provides a basis for conducting relations among States in a manner that would promote the shared objective of revitalizing development, growth and international trade in a more predictable and supportive environment through multilateral co-operation and thus also promote peace, security and stability;

3. Expresses its conviction that the search for international economic security should be based on a constructive, universal, more comprehensive and continued dialogue within the United Nations and the United Nations system aimed at developing practical approaches and measures that contribute to improvements in the international economic system through reform and strengthening of the framework of principles and rules governing trade, monetary and financial relations within which countries operate;

4. Recognizes that the United Nations should make a greater contribution to the efforts of Governments to improve their capacity to manage the interrelationships among different economies and the linkages between various sectors and issues;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in monitoring the development of international and multilateral economic co-operation, to continue his efforts to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to focus on current and potential problem areas in the world economy in order to assist Governments in taking concerted measures, in particular to solve development problems of developing countries;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to consult with eminent persons representing all regions on principles of international economic security in the light of the present resolution, keeping in mind the existing mandates on development and international economic co-operation, and to submit the findings thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session through the Economic and Social Council.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, France, Israel, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Canada, Chile, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Liberia, Norway, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sweden, Togo, Turkey.

Denmark, on behalf of the 12 EC members, said they were unable to vote in favour of the text since, while recognizing the economic aspects of security, they objected to the use of the concept of international economic security in economic relations as the concept was itself controversial. Israel thought the concept was another hollow formula which was not even aimed at the promotion of the economic development of the developing countries. China abstained as it had difficulty in accepting the notion of international economic security.

Colombia supported the text but wished to make it clear that the establishment of a group of eminent persons, as provided for in paragraph 6, should be used only in special and important cases. Argentina said that paragraph 6 would help to secure an international consensus on the question. Guyana had no doubt that the proposal to use eminent persons would benefit the objective being pursued by the resolution. Poland, also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said the text's adoption would help efforts to strengthen confidence and trust among States in international economic relations and make it possible to establish a genuinely universal economic dialogue in the United Nations.

Coercive economic measures against developing countries

In response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General in October 1987 submitted a report on economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries. (38) The report comprised: a summary-of replies received from 13 Member States and 18 United Nations bodies responding to a request for comments relating to the forms and impact of coercive economic measures; a com-

General Assembly resolution 42/165

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 119-10-20 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/820/Add.1) by recorded vote (101-10-19), 27 November (meeting 43); draft by USSR (A/C.2/42/L.38/Rev.2); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 27, 43; plenary 96.

pilation of relevant provisions in United Nations documents; and a summary of responses from Governments and United Nations entities relating to measures to prevent the application of such coercion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/173 by recorded vote.

Economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries
The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolutions 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Reaffirming article 32 of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, which declares that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing international trade and trade policies for development contained in its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolution 152(VI) of 2 July 1983 on rejection of coercive economic measures, and the principles and rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and paragraph 7 (iii) of the Ministerial Declaration adopted on 29 November 1982 by the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement at their thirty-eighth session,

Reaffirming its resolutions 38/197 of 20 December 1983, 39/210 of 18 December 1984, 40/185 of 17 December 1985 and 41/165 of 5 December 1986,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the adoption and effects of economic measures taken by developed countries for coercive purposes, including their impact on international economic relations, and considering that further work should be undertaken in order to implement resolutions 38/197, 39/210, 40/185 and 41/165,

Gravely concerned that the use of coercive measures adversely affects the economies and development efforts of developing countries and that, in some cases, those measures have worsened, creating a negative impact on international economic co-operation,

1. Calls upon the international community to adopt urgent and effective measures in order to eliminate the use of coercive measures against developing countries, which have been increasing and have taken new forms;

2. Deplores the fact that some developed countries continue to apply and, in some cases, have increased the scope and magnitude of economic measures that have the purpose of exerting, directly or indirectly, coercion on the sovereign decisions of developing countries subject to those measures;

3. Reaffirms that developed countries should refrain from threatening or applying trade restrictions, blockades, embargoes and other economic sanctions, incompatible with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and in violation of undertakings contracted multilaterally and bilaterally, against developing countries as a form of political and economic coercion that affects their economic, political and social development;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive, in-depth report, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, on effective measures to eliminate the use of coercive measures against developing countries, as mentioned in paragraph 1 above, and on the economic measures that adversely affect the development efforts of developing countries, mentioned in paragraph 3 above, taking into account existing information and including:

(a) Relevant information from Governments;
(b) Information from all the pertinent organs and organizations of the United Nations system;
(c) Suggestions for monitoring the application of the measures referred to in paragraph 3 above;
(d) If he deems it appropriate, opinions and suggestions of competent internationally recognized experts in this field;

5. Appeals to Governments and to the pertinent organs and organizations of the United Nations system to provide the necessary information to the Secretary-General, so that he may prepare the report called for in paragraph 4 above.

General Assembly resolution 42/173

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 128-21-5 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.1) by vote (103-21-4), 20 November (meeting 42); draft by Guatemala for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.50); agenda item 82 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 38, 42; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Greece, Spain, Turkey.

a/ Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Israel stated that while it was legitimate to wish to prevent the adoption of coercive measures damaging to the economy of developing countries, it was surprising that, in paragraphs 2 and 3, only the developed countries were invited to take action in that connection. Denmark, on behalf of EC, said it was impossible to reach a consensus on a text which, in a pre-emptory and selective manner, defined the rights and duties of States in international economic relations.

Poland, also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said they approved the Group of 77 initiative aimed at prohibiting the adoption of economic measures to exert political and economic pressure on developing countries. If States wished to improve international economic relations, they should stop using blockades, embargoes and other measures which affected not only the developing countries but also the socialist countries.

Proposed new international human order

Responding to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,(39) the Secretary-General submitted a note(40) summarizing the views of one Member State (Ukrainian SSR) on a draft declaration on a new international human order: moral aspects of development, which had been transmitted to the Assembly by the Economic and Social Council in 1983 (41) The comments of other States had been submitted in 1983(42) and 1985(43)

In part X of its report on the topic of development and international economic co-operation,(44) the Second Committee noted that no action was taken on the sub-item, new international human order: moral aspects of development. On 11 December, the Assembly took note of the Second Committee's report (decision 42/444) and the Secretary-General's note on the subject (decision 42/445).

Enhancing competition in economic relations

At the June/July 1987 session of the Economic and Social Council, the United States put forward a draft resolution on enhancing competition in economic relations.(45) By that text, the Council would have called on the Secretary-General to ensure that United Nations developmental and technical assistance activities supported and encouraged competition in international economic relations and refrained from supporting those which would reduce competition or otherwise impose restrictions on the free interaction of all enterprises in international economic relations. The United States subsequently withdrew the draft, expressing disappointment at what it said was the refusal of the Group of 77 to discuss the matter by saying that the concept was ill-defined; it remained convinced that the ideas contained in the draft were important and it would revert to the issue at a later stage.

Guatemala said the Group of 77 considered that the text had been vague, had raised issues of principle and could have given rise to various interpretations; the Group was prepared to discuss the issues provided that the proposals presented were more specific and realistic.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

During 1987, the United Nations continued to promote economic co-operation among developing countries, mainly through UNCTAD. Technical co-operation among developing countries received the support of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) (see next chapter).

The UNCTAD Co-ordination Committee on Multilateral Payments Arrangements and Monetary Co-operation among Developing Countries met at Montevideo, Uruguay, from 2 to 4 November.(46) It discussed the role of commercial enterprises in expanding trade among developing countries, commercial banks and South-South trade, and the possible establishment of a South-South co-operation programme to enhance the role of trade among developing countries.

On 6 July,(16) Zimbabwe transmitted to the Secretary-General the Pyongyang Declaration and Plan of Action on South-South Co-operation adopted by the Extraordinary Ministerial Conference of Non-Aligned Countries on South-South Co-operation (Pyongyang, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, 9-13 June). The Declaration comprised a section on South-South co-operation and the current international economic situation and recommendations for immediate action programmes for economic co-operation within the framework of the co-operation programmes of the developing countries.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/1987/23. (2)E/1988/42. (3)ACC/1987/14. (4)YUN 1986, p. 392. (5)ACC/1987/DEC/16-27 (dec. 1987/16). World Economic Survey 1987: Current Trends and Policies in the World Economy (E/1987/62 & Corr.1), Sales No. E.87.II.C.1 & corrigendum. (7)A/42/3/Rev.1. (8)TD/329/Rev.1. (9)Revitalizing Development, Growth and International Trade: Assessment and Policy Options (TD/328/Rev.1), Sales No. E.87.II.D.9. (10)Proceedings of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Seventh Session, Geneva, 9 July-3 August 1987, vol. I, Report and Annexes (TD/352, vol. I), Sales No. E.88.II.D.1. (11)A/42/178-S/18753. (12)A/42/344. (13)A/42/354-E/1987/110. (14)A/42/359-E/1987/112. (15)A/42/386-E/1987/114. (16)A/42/411. (17)A/42/407. (18)A/42/417. (19)A/42/477-S/19048. (20)A/42/603. (21)A/42/604 & Corr.1. (22)A/42/625. (23)A/C.2/42/5. (24)A/42/677. (25)A/42/681. (26)A/42/844-S/19314. (27)A/42/821. (28)YUN 1986, p. 418. (29)YUN 1986, p. 394, GA dec. 41/467, 19 Dec. 1986. (30)YUN 1979, p. 468, GA res. 34/138, 14 Dec. 1979. (31)YUN 1974, p. 324, GA res. 3201(S-VI), 1 May 1974. (32)YUN 1985, p. 421, GA res. 40/173, 17 Dec. 1985. (33)A/42/314-E/1987/77. (34)YUN

1986, p. 394, GA res. 41/184, 8 Dec. 1986. (35)A/42/314/Add.1-E/1987/77/Add.1. (36)A/C.2/42/4. (37)YUN 1986, p. 397, GA res. 41/165, 5 Dec. 1986. (38)A/42/660. (39)YUN 1985, p. 424, GA res. 40/206, 17 Dec. 1985. (40)A/42/527. (41)YUN 1983, p. 410, ESC dec. 1983/171, 25 July 1983. (42)Ibid., p. 409. (43)YUN 1985 p. 423 (44)A/42/821/Add.9. (45)E/1987/L.38. (46)UNCTAD/ST/ECDC/39.

OTHER PUBLICATIONS

Development Under Siege: Constraints and Opportunities in a Changing Global Economy (ST/ESA/199), Sales No. E.87.II.A.18. Multilateralism and the United Nations (ST/ESA/201), Sales No. E.87.II.A.22.

Economic and social trends and policy

Two major economic reports, prepared by the United Nations Secretariat in 1987 as background to the annual discussion of international economic and social policy in the Economic and Social Council and the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, noted the continuing slow rate of economic growth, which was likely to delay the great adjustments required at the national and international levels. The continuing effects of the debt crisis on the developing countries were discussed in both reports (see Chapter IV of this section).

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic Survey 1987(I) stated that in 1986 the world economy slowed down for the second year running. Global output grew by only 3 per cent, compared with 3.4 per cent in 1985, while world output per capita increased by about 1 per cent, representing half the average pace achieved in the 1970s and only a third of that of the 1960s. The onset of economic depression in many energy-exporting developing countries and a significant deceleration in the pace of economic growth in China, Japan and North America were the major factors behind the decline. Large swings in terms of trade, caused by unprecedented changes in key raw material prices and exchange rates, and policy responses to them were the major determinants of economic change in the world economy in 1986. The slow-down in global economic activity exacerbated two serious problems: the international debt situation and high unemployment rates, especially among the young, in many developed and developing countries.

Owing to the slow-down in Japan and North America, the developed market economies grew by only 2.4 per cent in 1986 compared with 2.9 per cent in 1985. Several Western European economies, however, experienced a modest acceleration in economic activity, with most countries in the group entering their fourth or fifth year of continuous expansion; as at early 1987, there were no clear signs of an impending generalized slump. The industrialized countries as a group continued to experience significant gains in per capita income in 1986 and greater convergence in their real output growth rates emerged, though at a lower rate than in 1985.

The aggregate GDP of the developing regions grew by only 2.5 per cent in 1986, which implied virtually no gain in per capita output that year. More significantly, average per capita income fell by some 4 per cent, largely as a result of a deterioration in their terms of trade. Diversity continued to characterize the economic performance of individual developing countries, with more than half having a growth rate of output equal to or less than that of population, but with most energy-importing developing countries expanding output significantly faster than population. Whole areas were affected by the decline in oil prices and the per capita GDP of the majority of energy-exporting developing countries fell considerably in 1986. The deterioration in terms of trade of that group of countries and of other exporters of primary commodities was the cause of the overall decline in per capita income in the developing countries during the year. On the other hand, per capita GDP increased by close to 10 per cent in the Republic of Korea and by between 2.5 and 6 per cent in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Cyprus, India, Pakistan, Turkey and Uruguay.

The centrally planned economies were also affected by developments in international trade and world energy prices, although less than other country groups. The decline in oil prices reduced the hard-currency earnings of the two main energy exporters, China and the USSR. China's growth rate of 7 per cent was still one of the highest in the world, despite a slow-down compared with recent years. The centrally planned economies of Europe grew by about 4 per cent. Most centrally planned economies continued to experience rising per capita net material product in 1986.

Regarding the short-term outlook for the world economy, the Survey stated that projections indicated that, without a major policy change, the world economy would continue to grow at a much slower pace than in the 1970s. World trade would also grow sluggishly, with a significant slow-down expected in 1987. The economic expansion of the developed market economies, which entered its fifth year in 1987, was expected to continue slowly, with the average rate of output growth of the industrial countries remaining below 3 per cent in 1987 and improving only marginally in 1988. While the average inflation rate was projected to remain below 4 per cent, high unemployment rates would not fall. Projections indicated that there would be a significant correction in trade imbalances of the Federal Republic of Germany,

Japan and the United States in volume terms starting in 1987; in nominal terms the imbalances were more persistent and their correction seemed to lie further in the future.

Developing countries as a group were also expected to grow at below 3 per cent in 1987. A moderate acceleration was anticipated in 1988 because of a partial recovery in the energy-exporting developing countries, but the average growth rate of GDP in energy-importing countries as a group was expected to decelerate by about 1 percentage point below 1986 as the favourable effects of lower oil prices began to fade. The great diversity of experience characterizing the developing countries' performance in recent years was expected to continue: average GDP growth in Africa was expected to remain well below the rate of population growth; Asian economies would grow at rates in the range of 4.5 to 5 per cent; and the Latin American region, with an expected average expansion of some 3.5 per cent, would continue to be dominated by the performance of the major debtor countries in the region, which, with high real interest rates internationally and expected low levels of capital inflows, would have little room for manoeuvre.

For the European centrally planned economies, the projected data for 1987-1988 largely showed stability in growth. China's growth was expected to exceed that of the 1970s but would be below the performance of the early 1980s. The change was largely predicated on the need to regain domestic and external balance in order to make headway with urban economic reforms.

Other chapters of the Survey were devoted to international trade and international finance, debt and balance-of-payments adjustment (see Chapter IV of this section).

In a chapter on recent developments in the world economy, the Trade and Development Report, 1987(2) noted that an unsatisfactory and declining pace of economic growth had during 1986 and the early months of 1987 characterized the world economy, which was moving close to the edge of recession. In addition, investment remained depressed in both developed and developing countries, commodity prices had declined, new lending to developing countries had contracted and debt servicing had become more onerous.

The world's economic performance was dominated by steep declines in two key prices: oil and the United States dollar. Those price movements had been expected to contribute towards reviving growth, eliminating imbalances and reducing uncertainty, but had failed to do so. Developing and developed countries had been transmitting slow growth to each other. The decline in commodity prices, closely connected to the slow pace of expansion in the world economy, reduced the developing countries' real income, and external constraints made it difficult for them to revive investment and combat inflation. The drop in exports to developing countries was a main reason why growth in developed market economies had slowed, raising unemployment even further. Lower import costs contributed to profits and disinflation in developed countries but failed to fulfil their promise of accelerating recovery.

The outlook would remain bleak, said the Report, unless a rapid evolution took place in the policies of the major market economies regarding budget balances and the domestic money supply, and the flow of finance to and from developing countries: if net capital flow to debtor developing countries did not rise substantially, even the minimal growth rate projected would not be achieved and those countries could fill their resource gap at the expense of debt-service payments; and there was a clear risk of recession if the pace of improvement of the United States external balance was so slow as to cause exchange markets to lose patience and oblige the United States to raise interest rates sharply.

To avoid disrupting the world economy, there was need for more expansionary macro-economic policies in the developed market economies, led by the surplus countries. Japan had already announced a programme of public expenditure and tax reduction and it remained for other surplus countries, particularly the Federal Republic of Germany, to follow suit and for other countries to adjust their policies accordingly. Faster growth was the most practical means to arrest the slide of commodity prices, stem protectionism and stabilize the dollar. The cost to debtors and their trading partners of meeting debt-service obligations was receiving increasing recognition and there was a broad consensus on the need for a substantial flow of finance from surplus countries to developing ones, both to revive the development of developing countries and to avoid a conflict among developed market economies over the size of their individual trade balances.

Other chapters of the Report dealt with problems of capital market formation in market economies (see Chapter IV of this section) and technology, growth and trade (see Chapter XI of this section).

Development issues and policies

At the first part of its twenty-seventh session (27 April to 29 May),⁽³⁾ the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) had before it a progress report of the Secretary-General on an in-depth evaluation study of the major programme of the United Nations on development issues and policies⁽⁴⁾ which had been requested in 1984. The report was prepared as part of a regular review, to be conducted two years prior to the completion of an in-depth study, and described progress made in preparing the evaluation up to February 1987 and the future phases of work. It stated that work on the evaluation had commenced in August 1986 and would consist of five phases. In 1988, the final report would be submitted to CPC, whose recommendations on the evaluation would be transmitted to substantive units and intergovernmental bodies to be taken into account when they reviewed the proposed programme budget for 1990-1991.

CPC endorsed the approach proposed in the progress report and recommended that the Economic Commission for Africa be selected as the representative regional commission for the activities carried out at the regional level. It also recommended that the evaluation examine the effectiveness of the Secretariat's research and policy analysis work in meeting the needs of Governments in development issues and policies and assess whether technical co-operation activities had increased the recipient country's capacity to carry out policy analysis in decision-making as well as in development activities.

REFERENCES

- (1) World Economic Survey 1987 Current Trends and Policies in the World Economy (E/1987/62 & Corr.1), Sales No. E.87.II.C.1 & corrigendum. (2) Trade and Development Report, 1987 (UNCTAD/TDR/7), Sales No. E.87.II.D.7. (3) A/42/16. (4) E/AC.51/1987/6.

Development planning, administration, education and information

The broad questions of how to improve the general functioning of the world economy and how developing countries could respond to the prevailing international environment were explored by CDP at its 1987 session. The Eighth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance was held in 1987 to discuss the needs of developing countries in that area and to review the United Nations work programme. In May, the Economic and Social Council considered the Experts' report and invited the international community to intensify and implement programmes and projects to help solve problems identified in the Action Programme in Public Administration for Sub-Saharan Africa (resolution 1987/55). Also in May, the Council requested the Secretary-General to communicate a draft declaration on local self-government to Member States for their views (decision 1987/135). In July, the Council considered the Secretary-General's report on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries and invited the United Nations system to provide opportunities for exchanging experience and information on that subject (resolution 1987/92).

Development planning

The Committee for Development Planning held its twenty-third session in New York from 21 to 24 April 1987.(1)

Composed of 24 experts appointed by the Economic and Social Council, CDP made a series of recommendations for international action aimed at remedying the disarray in the global economy in order to support the development process (see p. 374). It also considered including Burma and Zambia in the list of LDCs (see p. 389).

Addressing the issue of development planning under international constraint, CDP stated that the prospect of a protracted process of adjustment lasting well into the 1990s had important implications for development planning: domestic resource mobilization efforts would need strengthening; public sector policies would need to be re-examined, phasing out unnecessary bureaucratic regulations and reforming the public sector; public expenditures would need greater scrutiny in relation to national development objectives; and intrasectoral priorities needed careful examination with respect to the cost-effectiveness of alternative development programmes.

In decision 1987/188 of 9 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of CDP's 1987 report.

Technical co-operation. During 1987,(2) the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) executed 182 projects in development issues and policies, with total budgets of $36.4 million. Of total project expenditures, 44 per cent was for Africa, 11 per cent for the Americas, 21 per cent for Asia and the Pacific, and 24 per cent for the Mediterranean, Middle East and interregional projects. In the area of national planning, DTCD supported government measures to deal with public investment planning and management, foreign exchange and international debt, budget deficits, civil service reform, privatization, international assistance and improvements in income distribution and levels of employment. International aid co-ordination included assistance to international donors' round tables in Benin, Equatorial Guinea and Guinea-Bissau. In regional or local planning, promotion and support of local grass-roots development activities were increasingly undertaken in the context of nationally co-ordinated regional planning in, for example, Guinea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Sri Lanka. In the Trickle-Up Programme - a scheme for funding and facilitating very small grass-roots investment initiatives - DTCD assisted a project enabling the world-wide replicability of the scheme through increasing involvement of governmental agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

Development administration

In 1987, DTCD, whose main source of funds was UNDP, implemented 142 projects in the public administration and finance sector with budgets of $9.3 million. Of that, 51 per cent was spent in Africa, 23 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 11 per cent in the Americas and 15 per cent in the Mediterranean and Middle East and for interregional projects. DTCD interregional advisers in development administration undertook 37 missions (compared with 48 in 1986) in the following areas: tax reform and resource mobilization; management development and training; government budgeting and financial management, including accounting and auditing; public enterprise; and administrative reform. (2)

The Eighth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance was held in New York from 11 to 20 March 1987(3) in accordance with a 1985 Economic and Social Council resolution.(4) The Experts met to review issues and priorities in developing countries, national measures required to promote administration for development and the United Nations work programme for the late 1980s. They were also to make recommendations on national and international action, and new modalities of technical co-operation to increase the effectiveness of United Nations technical co-operation activities in public administration and finance.

The Meeting noted that the challenges facing public administration and finance systems arose from diverse national situations and it was necessary for developing countries to follow a pragmatic approach in planning strategies to improve their development administration systems. Since challenges and constraints were ever changing, the Meeting recommended that the role of public administration be reviewed periodically.

The Meeting endorsed the current priorities in public administration and finance, the encompassing priority being productivity in its broadest sense. It recommended a number of policy and programme actions in the area of government structure to maximize productivity and effectiveness of national policies and programmes. The key areas identified were: administrative structures and networks; decentralization and local government; human resources development and public service management; resource generation and management; management of information systems; and administration and the citizen.

With regard to the Action Programme in Public Administration for Sub-Saharan Africa, the Meeting considered that the priorities identified by the Seventh (1984) Expert Meeting(5) remained valid, and recommended that country-level operational activities should be intensified and enforced. On follow-up action, it was proposed that the Meeting's report(3) be commended to all Governments for action.

The Meeting recommended four themes for future action in the United Nations programme in public administration and finance: increased productivity and performance in the public sector; training/consultancy and human resources development in the public sector; the use of information management in public administration; and public participation.

The Meeting recommended that a proposed draft declaration on local self-government (see below) be considered by the Ninth Meeting, which should be convened in 1989 to consider the impact of the Meeting's deliberations and pertinent decisions of the Economic and Social Council on national and international public administration, the Meeting's usefulness as a forum for coordinating international public administration and finance activities, and the feasibility of a strategic plan to improve public administration.

Commenting on the discussions and major recommendations of the Eighth Meeting,(6) the Secretary-General agreed with the proposal on follow-up action with regard to the Sub-Saharan Action Programme.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/55 without vote.

Public administration and finance for development The Economic and Social Council,

Reiterating the importance of flexible, effective and responsive public administration systems for economic and social development and of improving the productivity and effectiveness of development administration structures,

Welcoming the Special Action Programme in Public Administration for Sub-Saharan Africa,

Noting with appreciation the establishment of the trust fund of the United Nations Development Programme to enhance public administration, planning and management in Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Eighth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance, held in New York from 11 to 20 March 1987, and the report of the Secretary-General thereon;

2. Emphasizes the catalytic role of the United Nations programme in public administration and finance in the improvement of systems of public administration and finance for development, in particular of developing countries;

3. Invites all organizations of the United Nations system and the international community to follow up the diagnoses made within the Action Programme in Public Administration for Sub-Saharan Africa by intensifying and implementing programmes and projects to help solve the problems identified;

4. Invites also the United Nations Development Programme and donor countries to provide adequate funds to implement the Action Programme in Public Administration for Sub-Saharan Africa, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council in 1988 on developments in this regard and on activities undertaken to improve public administration and finance systems in Africa;

5. Decides to consider the question of public administration and finance further at its second regular session of 1987.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/55

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/90) without vote, 22 May (meeting 10); 3-nation draft (E/1987/C.1/L.7), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 10.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, India, Somalia.

In accordance with paragraph 5 of the resolution, the Council's First Committee held a general discussion on public administration and finance for development at its June/July session. No proposals were submitted under the item.

Local self-government

The 1987 Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance(3) also had before it a Declaration on Local Self-Government which had been adopted by the International Union of Local Authorities, an NGO in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. The Meeting took note of the efforts to enhance local governments as instruments of economic and social development and recognized the desirability of having a statement on the subject. However, given the subject's complex nature, the Meeting recommended that the proposed draft declaration be referred to Member States for their views before any action was taken by the United Nations. The document and their-comments would be considered by the 1989 Expert Meeting if the Council so decided.

The Council agreed to these suggestions by decision 1987/135 of 28 May, in which it asked the Secretary-General to communicate the draft declaration and the Meeting's recommendations to Member States.

Role of the public sector in promoting economic development

In response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council invitation,(7) the Secretary-General submitted in March 1987 his third comprehensive report on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries.(8)

The report discussed: structural adjustment, planning, regulation and promotion within a national economic framework; mobilization of national resources; public enterprises as the main instruments of the public sector;- and improving efficiency and effectiveness of the public sector.

The report concluded that the public sector's leading role in the economic development of developing countries had customarily taken several forms: it mobilized a large proportion of a country's economic resources in the form of government revenues; in allocating those resources, and also through its policies, it determined the principal directions of economic and social development; it provided planning for development, laid down economic and social infrastructure, determined critical prices and regulated the activities of other sectors; and it undertook, through public enterprises, direct production and distribution of certain goods and services. In many developing countries, the public sector constituted the major force for bringing about structural change.

The economic crisis of the 1980s, as reflected in increased national budgetary deficits and changes in international commodity and financial markets, had renewed debate on the role of the public sector and demands for reform had been made in many developing countries. In response to those demands, developing countries had made changes in macro-economic management, micro-economic regulation, scope and character of public enterprises, organization of the public service and public financial and personnel management. Although measures taken in many countries were impressive, much remained to be done.

It was increasingly recognized that economic development required the resolution of structural constraints and the provision of conditions for effective economic management. Short- and medium-term economic development would owe as much to improved productivity as to innovative and sound economic management. The critical challenge facing the public sector was provision of a co-ordinated policy framework for increased productivity, strengthening capacities for effective economic management and enhancing the effectiveness and efficiency of the public management system in consonance with a country's national objectives.

Developing countries had accumulated a rich variety of experience concerning the public sector's role in economic and social development which had not been systematically reported to those who could best profit from it. The analysis, discussion and dissemination of such information would contribute to a better understanding of that role.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/92 without vote.

Role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1983/61 of 28 July 1983,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 34/137 of 14 December 1979,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 41/182 of 8 December 1986,

Bearing in mind that every State has the sovereign and inalienable right to choose its economic and social system in accordance with the will of its people, without outside interference,

Recalling also that in paragraph 31 of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade it was stated that due account should be taken of the positive role of the public sector in mobilizing internal resources, formulating and implementing overall national development plans and establishing national priorities,

Noting that the public sector plays an important role in the economic development of many developing countries,

Noting with satisfaction that the developing countries continually assess the role of the public sector in economic development with a view to achieving their national development objectives and priorities and increasing the standard of living of their population,

Bearing in mind the need to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the public sector in the light of the various difficulties which have been encountered by developing countries,

Concerned about the practical restraints that the public sector in its role of promoting economic and social development has confronted in developing countries, owing to the persistent economic difficulties of those countries and the financial burden on their own Governments,

Bearing in mind the importance of analysis, discussion and dissemination of the experience acquired by developing countries concerning the role of the public sector in economic and social development,

Recognizing the usefulness of the activities of the United Nations system for facilitating the exchange of experience and information on the role of the public sector in the economic and social development of developing countries and its relation to other sectors and the need to continue those activities,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to study the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries and to submit an updated report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, taking into account the different efforts made and the experience gained by the developing countries in improving the efficiency of the public sector and, inter alia, paying special attention to the provisions of paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 34/137;

3. Invites the regional commissions and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system to assist the Secretary-General in studying the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries, in accordance with Council resolution 1978/60 of 3 August 1978;

4. Invites the appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to provide, within their spheres of competence, opportunities for the exchange of experience and information on the role of the public sector in the economic and social development of developing countries; that exchange should take place in the framework of the sovereign right of all countries to establish an appropriate role for the public sector and other sectors in accordance with their development programmes and plans in order to stimulate initiative and dynamism in their economies.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/92

9 July 1987

Meeting 37

Adopted without vote

3-nation draft (E/1987/L.40/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 3.

Sponsors: German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Syrian Arab Republic. Meeting numbers, ESC 33, 37.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In decision 42/434 of 11 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the Secretary-General's report.(8)

Development education and information

At its April 1987 session,(9) the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC) (see p. 354) decided to abolish its Ad Hoc Working Group on Development Education and agreed that JUNIC would continue to discuss development education each year. The Non-Governmental Liaison Service Sponsors' meeting would also discuss the subject regularly.

In resolution 42/162 A, the General Assembly urged the United Nations Department of Public Information to disseminate widely information on acute world economic problems, particularly the severe economic difficulties of LDCs and the need to strengthen international economic co-operation to resolve the external debt problems of developing countries.

REFERENCES

(1)E/1987/23. (2)DP/1988/45/Add.1. (3)E/1987/38/Add.1. (4)YUN 1985, p. 431, ESC res. 1985/10, 28 May 1985. (5)YUN 1984, p. 409. (6)E/1987/38. (7)YUN 1983, p. 425, ESC res. 1983/61, 28 July 1983. (8)A/42/138-E/1987/50. (9)ACC/1987/11 & Corr.1.

PUBLICATIONS

Guidelines for Development Planning: Procedures, Methods and Techniques (ST/TCD/SER.E/5), Sales No. E.87.II.H.1. Audit Standards in the Public Sector: An Analysis of Comparative Experience (ST/TCD/SER.E/4), Sales No. E.87.II.H.2. Planning and Control of Public Current Expenditure: Lessons Of Country Experience (ST/TCD/SER.E/7), Sales No. E.87.II.H.3.

Rural development

The ACC Task Force on Rural Development (Paris, 2 and 3 April 1987)(1) reviewed work accomplished since its 1986 meeting(2) in three areas: joint action at the country and regional levels, people's participation in rural development, and monitoring and evaluation. The Task Force noted that during 1986 three inter-agency policy review missions were fielded by the lead agency—the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations—to El Salvador, Panama and the Philippines as a follow-up to the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development.⁽³⁾ It noted with satisfaction progress by the panels on people's participation in rural development and on monitoring and evaluation. The reports of those panels were annexed to the Task Force's 1987 report.⁽¹⁾

The Task Force discussed progress achieved in inter-agency co-operation to implement the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women (see p. 829) as they pertained to rural women. It noted the check-lists and guidelines available in most organizations for designing rural development projects, staff training at senior levels in the United Nations system, and emphasis on investment project interventions of economic and social benefit to rural women.

The Task Force adopted a detailed work programme and time frame for 1987.

In resolution 1987/40, the Economic and Social Council called on Governments and the regional commissions to give particular attention to the social aspects of rural development. The Secretary-General was asked to consider holding an interregional seminar on national experience related to the social aspects of rural development and to give special emphasis to the subject in the 1989 report on the world social situation.

REFERENCES

(1)ACC/1987/PG/8. (2)YUN 1986, p. 405. (3)YUN 1979, p. 500.

Developing countries

The problems of the least developed countries continued to be considered by several bodies during 1987, including the General Assembly and UNCTAD VII. On the recommendation of UNCTAD VII and the Trade and Development Board, the Assembly, by resolution 42/177, decided to convene a second United Nations conference on LDCs in 1990. By decision 42/428, it decided, on the recommendation of CDP and the Economic and Social Council, to add Burma to the list of LDCs, bringing the total of such countries to 41. The Assembly also considered the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries and appealed to the international community to extend all possible support to them in their efforts to implement economic measures and policies to promote a pattern of growth that rendered them less vulnerable to adverse consequences of their land-locked situation (resolution 42/174). By resolution 42/194, the Assembly welcomed the establishment in Argentina of the Raúl Prebisch Foundation to promote the study of development issues.

Least developed countries

The special problems of the officially designated least developed countries were considered in several United Nations forums during 1987, including UNCTAD, the UNDP Governing Council and ACC.

With the General Assembly deciding in December to act on CDP and Economic and Social Council recommendations to include Burma in the United Nations list of LDCs, the number rose to 41. The others were: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen.

Identification of LDCs

Following the transmittal of letters to the Secretary-General from Burma (18 December 1986)⁽¹⁾ and Zambia (3 February 1987),⁽²⁾ asking that the Economic and Social Council consider their requests to be included in the list of LDCs, the Council took up the matter at its 1987 organizational session.

On 3 February, the Council requested CDP to consider, as a priority, the inclusion of Burma in the list of LDCs (decision 1987/101) and, on 6 February, also requested CDP to consider adding Zambia (decision 1987/109).

CDP action. In April,⁽³⁾ CDP examined the eligibility of Burma and Zambia for inclusion in the list. From data supplied by the Secretariat on the three criteria for determining eligibility—per capita GDP, share of manufacturing output in GDP, and adult literacy rate—CDP concluded that Burma qualified. It decided to suspend judgement with regard to Zambia for at least one year to see how the economic situation evolved.

CDP expressed reluctance to continue to assume responsibility for qualifying countries for the list based on criteria formulated over 15 years previously under the constraint of data then available on developing countries; it considered the criteria inadequate for the purpose they were meant to serve. Therefore, CDP stated its willingness to reappraise the issue with a view to formulating new criteria and reiterated its 1985 view⁽⁴⁾ that new criteria should involve a clear definition of the purposes that the list of LDCs was meant to serve.

On 8 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed CDP'S conclusion that Burma be added to the list of LDCs and recommended that the General Assembly approve its inclusion (decision 1987/163).

On 11 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, included Burma in the list of LDCs (decision 42/428).

Programme of Action for the 1980s

Throughout 1987, United Nations bodies continued monitoring the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCs, adopted in 1981 by a United Nations conference⁽⁵⁾ and endorsed by the General Assembly later that year.⁽⁶⁾ In response to a 1985 Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1987 a report,⁽⁸⁾ prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat, on SNPA implementation.

In a section on recent economic performance and national action in LDCs, the report stated that, despite strenuous development efforts and policy reforms, the economic performance of LDCs had fallen short of expectations, although progress had been registered in some. Per capita GDP in LDCs declined in the first half of the 1980s, averaging only slightly above $200 in 1985, a dismal growth performance which was widespread inasmuch as almost three fifths of those countries registered declines. The adverse external environment, particularly the state of primary commodity markets, was a major determinant of poor growth, while the unfavourable situation in the agricultural sector was another important factor. However, provisional estimates for 1986 indicated that the decline had halted.

With regard to international support measures, the report stated that official development assistance (ODA) increased in 1985 to $8.4 billion, exceeding the 1980 level for the first time. That was mainly due to emergency relief and structural adjustment aid to African countries. Preliminary estimates for 1986 pointed to an increase almost entirely due to the appreciation of currencies against the United States dollar. A major development in the 1980s was the increase in recourse by LDCs to multilateral agencies, to which contributions fluctuated around a rising trend. The share allocated to LDCs by those programmes increased, exceeding one third of total assistance on average in 1985. UNDP was the largest provider of multilateral technical assistance and its share allocated to LDCs increased steadily during the 1980s, reaching 38 per cent in 1985. Disbursements to LDCs, however, fluctuated between some $230 million and $200 million between 1982 and 1985.

The total external debt of LDCs was estimated at the end of 1985 to have reached $41.7 billion, a small amount in absolute terms but which exceeded 50 per cent of the combined GDP of LDCs, imposing a severe burden on their economies. Some LDCs had obtained debt relief through retroactive terms-adjustment measures and multilateral renegotiations of debt. Other action was urgently called for, such as partial write-offs and interest-subsidy and refinancing schemes. However, a lasting solution to the debt problems of LDCs required adjustment and sustainable growth; to enable the resumption of growth, substantially increased finance was needed. Careful borrowing and strengthening debt management had become a major preoccupation in many LDCs and co-operation from donors in that area was crucial.

The report summarized information received from United Nations bodies on measures taken by them to implement SNPA and also outlined measures taken at the national, regional and global levels to facilitate its follow-up and monitoring. Also included was information on action taken on LDCs by UNCTAD VII (see below).

In conclusion, the report noted that the global review of SNPA would take place in 1990 and would provide a unique opportunity for the international community to examine the magnitude of the response to commitments made at the time of SNPA'S adoption. It was time to think of the 1990s and make adequate preparations for the global review.

In decision 42/445 of 11 December, the General Assembly took note of the report.

UNDP action. To achieve dialogue between individual LDCs and their aid partners on economic policies, round-table-related activities were held with UNDP assistance in 16 LDCs during 1987. Other countries elected to have the World Bank assist them with review meetings. By the end of the year, 21 countries had already participated in round-table meetings: 16 in Africa and 5 in Asia.

Improvements made in the round-table process and institutional support to it were set out in an April report by the UNDP Administrator,⁽⁹⁾ submitted in response to a 1986 UNDP Governing Council request.⁽¹⁰⁾ On 18 June,⁽¹¹⁾ the Council took note of that report.

Funding for the round-table process and other activities benefiting LDCs was provided by the UNDP Special Measures Fund for LDCs. Contributions to the Fund in 1987 totalled $14.5 million and 15 countries pledged $7.5 million for 1988. Resources from a trust fund established in 1983⁽¹²⁾ for a special contribution from the Netherlands for LDCs were used to prepare round-table conferences and to finance follow-up activities to conferences held in recent years.

During 1987, UNDP continued to give highest priority to assisting the poorest countries (see next chapter). Assistance to LDCs was also provided by the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office and the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme.

UNCTAD action. The problems of LDCs, bearing in mind SNPA, was one of the four sub-items of the main substantive agenda item of UNCTAD VII (see Chapter IV of this section). The Conference had before it a report by the UNCTAD secretariat on revitalizing development, growth and international trade,⁽¹³⁾ a chapter of which was devoted to LDCs. The chapter included a short description of economic and social trends in LDCs and then discussed national policies in selected areas, such as mobilization of domestic resources, expansion of food and agricultural production, development of external trade and efforts to develop and implement adjustment programmes and similar programmes in LDCs. The chapter went on to describe international action, including financial flows, access to export markets and compensatory finance for commodity-export earnings shortfalls. It then suggested a number of national and international policy options relevant to the specific problems of LDCs.

UNCTAD VII also had before it a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on reviving multilateral co-operation for growth and development,⁽¹⁴⁾ which stated that special treatment of LDCs was particularly relevant in the areas of: volume and modalities of concessional finance, including ODA targets; debt relief, including cancellation or equivalent measures for bilateral concessional debt; compensatory financing, including full compensation for commodity export-earnings shortfalls; and access to markets, including specific improvements in the generalized system of preferences (see Chapter IV of this section).

On 3 August,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Final Act of UNCTAD VII was adopted. The section of the Final Act dealing with LDCs gave some basic features of the general economic situation and trends in relation to LDCs and agreed on the need for full and expeditious implementation of SNPA and of the recommendations of the 1985 mid-term global review of SNPA.⁽¹⁶⁾

UNCTAD VII reached a number of conclusions aimed at improving the economic and social conditions in LDCs. With regard to national efforts, LDCs should continue to implement adjustment programmes or take other necessary measures in accordance with their long-term social and economic objectives. It appeared imperative to: accelerate agricultural development and enhance food security; design structural adjustment and diversification programmes; mobilize human resources through education and training in required skills; strengthen the role of women in the development process; encourage external financial flows; promote appropriate economic incentive systems; develop institutional arrangements to improve the efficiency of the public sector and encourage indigenous entrepreneurship; give priority to the advancement of the poorest and adopt measures to protect the most vulnerable part of the population during adjustment; take account of environmental issues; and develop and strengthen social and economic planning capability.

Regarding international efforts in the area of financial and technical assistance, UNCTAD VII urged donors to enlarge substantially financial assistance to LDCs in a volume and on terms corresponding to their immediate and long-term development needs. Developed countries were requested to attain the internationally agreed targets of 0.7 per cent of GNP for total ODA and of 0.15 per cent of GNP for ODA to LDCs, or doubling their ODA to those countries as soon as possible. The Conference stated that multilateral development institutions should be strengthened and that the overall volume of multilateral assistance to LDCs through the International Development Association, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, regional development banks, UNDP, the Special Measures Fund, UNCDF, UNV and others should be adequate to meet the substantially increased development needs of LDCs. Donors should take further steps to provide bilateral ODA to LDCs in the form of grants and to provide loans on highly concessional terms; they were urged to ensure that such loans and grants were untied to the maximum extent possible. Donors were particularly recommended to support domestic-adjustment measures and to provide aid in more flexible forms. The positive contribution of NGOs to the development of LDCs was recognized and NGOs of donor countries were invited to reinforce their role in consciousness-raising in their countries and in mobilizing increased resources for the benefit of LDCs.

In connection with the debt and debt-servicing situation of LDCs, UNCTAD VII noted with satisfaction that a number of donors, in response to a 1978 Trade and Development Board resolution,⁽¹⁷⁾ had cancelled ODA debts and it invited other donors to implement commitments undertaken in pursuance of the resolution. The Conference noted that repayments of debt to multilateral assistance institutions was an element in the overall debt-service burden of LDCs; those institutions should take into account the financial requirements in their lending programmes to LDCs. Measures should be taken to facilitate non-debt-creating capital flows, especially direct investment in LDCs, and measures to alleviate their debt-servicing burden should be supplemented by technical assistance and by action in other fields, such as trade and commodities.

The Conference noted improvements in the country review meetings (see above) but recognized the need for further strengthening to make them more effective. UNDP and the World Bank should expand their technical assistance to LDCs to enable them to prepare for the meetings, and donor countries should be represented at an adequately high level. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to continue to prepare reports on the situation in LDCs as well as on the implementation of SNPA.

With regard to land-locked and island LDCs, the Conference said that transit countries should intensify co-operation with land-locked countries to alleviate transit problems, donors should focus on capital input in infrastructural development when providing assistance to land-locked and island countries, and international bodies, particularly UNDP and the regional commissions, should continue to support LDCs with measures needed to alleviate their transit-transport and communications problems.

In view of their vulnerability to declines in basic commodity export prices, LDCs should endeavour to promote diversification of their economic structures, and the international community should support those efforts through improved co-operation in the commodities sector. Trade relations with LDCs should be further developed and their special needs taken into account when implementing the UNCTAD Integrated Programme for Commodities. The Conference recognized that compensatory finance questions deserved full consideration, particularly as they related to LDCs.

With regard to market access, the Conference said that developed countries which had not done so should make efforts to provide access for products of LDCs in the context of their generalized system of preferences (GSP) schemes (see p. 473). The promotion of South-South trade through the global system of trade preferences among developing countries (see p. 474) and regional integration could also make an important contribution to expanding trade among developing countries. LDCs were invited to utilize opportunities already available in the area of market access, particularly under GSP schemes; increased technical assistance should be given to them through the UNCTAD/GATT International Trade Centre and UNCTAD to promote trade, expand production facilities for export and improve capacity to benefit from existing preferential arrangements. Developed countries and international organizations should assist LDCs to create industries for on-the-spot processing of raw materials and foods and to develop integrated projects to expand exports.

The Conference recommended that a United Nations conference at a high level on LDCS should be convened in 1990 to appraise and review the implementation of SNPA and welcomed France's offer to host it.

ACC action. In its annual overview report for 1987,(18) ACC announced that the eighth Inter-Agency Consultation on the Follow-up to the SNPA, scheduled for September 1987, had been postponed until May 1988. In the light of the UNCTAD VII recommendation to convene a United Nations conference on LDCs in 1990, it was felt advisable that the Consultation should concentrate on substantive contributions that United Nations organizations would make to that conference.

Preparations for the Second UN Conference on LDCs

UNCTAD action. On 16 October 1987,(19) the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board recommended to the General Assembly that a second United Nations conference on LDCs be convened in 1990 to review progress at the country level and in international support measures, particularly in ODA. It also recommended consideration and formulation and adoption of national and international policies and measures for accelerating the development process in LDCS during the 1990s. In addition, the Board recommended that France's offer to host the conference be accepted and that it be held in September 1990. In order to prepare for the conference, the Board stated that one session of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of LDCs should be held in the spring of 1989, followed by one session of the Intergovernmental Group on LDCs, acting as the preparatory committee for the conference, in early 1990. The meetings would last one and a half and two weeks respectively; their terms of reference were annexed to the decision.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution⁷ 42/177 without vote.

Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/205 of 17 December 1985, in which it decided to carry out a global review and appraisal of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries at a high level in 1990 and to determine the precise level, mandate, date and venue for such a review, as well as the preparatory process, at its forty-second session, in the light of the consultations that would take place under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, including those of the seventh session of the Conference.

Bearing in mind the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, in which it was recommended that the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should meet at a high level to carry out the mid-term global review of progress towards the implementation of the Programme of Action, and consider the possibility of holding a global review at the end of the decade, which might, inter alia, take the form of a second United Nations conference on the least developed countries,

Recalling also the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987, in which the Conference recommended that a second United Nations conference on the least developed countries should be convened at a high level in 1990 to review and appraise the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action,

Taking note of Trade and Development Board decision 349(XXXIV) of 16 October 1987 on the preparations for the global review and appraisal of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action,

Expressing deep concern at the continuing deterioration in the overall socio-economic situation of the least developed countries,

1. Decides:

(a) To convene the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at a high level in 1990. The mandate of the Conference should be as follows:

- (i) To review progress at the country level thus far in the decade;
- (ii) To review progress in international support measures and particularly in official development assistance;
- (iii) In the light of (i) and (ii) above, to consider, formulate, and adopt appropriate national and international policies and measures for accelerating the development process in the least developed countries during the 1990s in accordance with their long-term national social and economic objectives;
- (b) To accept the generous offer made by the Government of France to act as host to the Conference;
- (c) To hold the Conference in September 1990;
- (d) To convene one session of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of the Least Developed Countries in the spring of 1989 followed by one session of the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries, as Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, early in 1990 in order to prepare for the Conference; the duration of these two meetings will be one and a half weeks and two weeks respectively; the terms of reference of these meetings are annexed to the present resolution;

2. Decides to designate the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as the focal point for the preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to designate the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to serve as Secretary-General of the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and, in that capacity, to make all necessary arrangements for the holding of the Conference;

3. Calls upon all Governments, intergovernmental and multilateral institutions and others concerned to take appropriate steps to ensure that adequate preparations are made for the Conference and to participate effectively in the two above-mentioned preparatory meetings;

4. Requests all concerned organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to submit, before the first preparatory meeting, reports containing a review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries within their fields of competence and proposals for further action as input to the preparations for the Conference;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to ensure the full mobilization and co-ordination of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in the preparations for the Conference;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to obtain, as has been the past practice, extrabudgetary resources to ensure the effective participation of the representatives of the least developed countries through provision of the resources necessary to finance the travel expenses of at least two representatives from each least developed country to attend the preparatory meetings referred to in paragraph 1 above;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the state of preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

ANNEX

Terms of reference

A. Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of the Least Developed Countries

The purpose of the Meeting is to provide substantive inputs to the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be held in 1990. Taking into account the Substantial New Programme of Action, the Meeting will be devoted to:

- (a) Assessment of progress in the socio-economic situation of the least developed countries during the 1980s in the light of ongoing national and international measures;
- (b) Consideration of the requirements of the least developed countries that are of particular relevance to their development and that call for strengthened efforts during the 1990s;
- (c) Consideration and identification of appropriate national and international measures for accelerating the development process in the least developed countries during the 1990s;

The results of the deliberations under (a), (b) and (c) above will be reported to the Conference through the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

B. Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries)

The Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries will serve as the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be held in 1990. The Preparatory Committee will consider the following matters:

- (a) Substantive preparation for the Conference on the basis of the report of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of the Least Developed Countries, and of all other relevant inputs;
- (b) Provisional agenda for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;
- (c) Provisional rules of procedure of the Conference;
- (d) Organization of work of the Conference,

General Assembly resolution 42/177

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.2) without vote, 2 December (meeting 44); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.84), based on informal consultations on draft by Guatemala for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.65); agenda item 82 (b).

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/42/856; S-G, AK.2/42/L.83, A/C.5/42/57.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 42-44; 5th Committee 54; plenary 96.

Land-locked developing countries

In response to a 1985 General Assembly request,(20) the UNCTAD Secretary-General submitted in September 1987 a report on progress in the implementation of specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries.(21) The report's first part dealt with geographical constraints of those countries and their impact on trade and growth. The second part comprised summaries of replies received from countries and international and intergovernmental organizations to a request for information on specific action by the international community in favour of land-locked developing countries, and from Member States on the report of a 1984 ad hoc expert group (22) which had studied ways to improve transit-transport infrastructures and services for the countries in question.

The report pointed out that the majority of donor countries had reiterated that they did not recognize the land-locked developing countries as a category for which they had established special assistance programmes. They all agreed, however, that those countries faced particular problems resulting from their geographical handicaps and, in that context, they continued to provide assistance to them. That basic consideration also applied to the assistance policies of the World Bank and IMF. Other United Nations bodies, particularly the regional commissions, UNDP and UNCTAD, had special technical assistance programmes specifically designed for land-locked developing countries. Replies from United Nations specialized agencies and related organizations and intergovernmental organizations indicated that assistance was generally given as part of the overall programmes for developing countries and not on the basis of specific preferential treatment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/174 by recorded vote.

Specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reiterating the specific actions related to the particular needs of the land-locked developing countries set out in United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 63(III) of 19 May 1972, 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, 123(V) of 3 June 1979 and 137(VI) of 2 July 1983 and Trade and Development Board resolution 319(XXXI) of 27 September 1985,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 31/157 of 21 December 1976, 32/191 of 19 December 1977, 33/150 of 20 December 1978, 34/198 of 19 December 1979, 35/58 of 5 December 1980, 36/175 of 17 December 1981, 39/209 of 18 December 1984 and 40/183 of 17 December 1985 and other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries,

Bearing in mind that the land-locked developing countries, most of which are also least developed countries, have been severely affected by the current socio-economic crisis,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987,

Recalling also the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, adopted on 10 December 1982,

Noting that the report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts to Study Ways and Means of Improving Transit-transport Infrastructures and Services for Land-locked Developing Countries and the recommendations therein, and the various views and comments of Governments on the report, could be a basis for an approach towards resolving the problems that the land-locked developing countries face,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and prohibitive transit, transport and transshipment costs and risks impose serious constraints on export earnings, private capital inflow and domestic resource mobilization of the land-locked developing countries and therefore adversely affect their growth and socio-economic development,

Recognizing also that most transit countries are themselves developing countries facing serious economic problems, including the lack of adequate infrastructure in the transport sector,

Noting with concern that the measures taken thus far have not adequately addressed the problems of land-locked developing countries,

1. Reaffirms the right of access of land-locked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit States by all means of transport, in accordance with article 125 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

2. Appeals to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries envisaged in United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 63(III), 98(IV), 123(V) and 137(VI) and the Final Act adopted by the Conference at its seventh session, in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries and in other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

3. Urges the international community, in particular donor countries and multilateral financial and development organizations, to provide land-locked and transit developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport and transit infrastructures and facilities, including alternative routes;

4. Invites transit countries and the land-locked developing countries to co-operate effectively in harmonizing transport planning and in promoting joint ventures, where appropriate, in the fields of transport and communications at the regional, subregional and bilateral levels;

5. Urges the international development bodies, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions, to further expand their support, including technical assistance programmes in the transport and communications sectors of the land-locked developing countries;

6. Appeals to the international community to make available to all transit and land-locked developing countries, as required and on appropriate terms, including concessional arrangements, new scientific and technological know-how relating to specific transit-transport and communication problems;

7. Appeals to the international community and, in particular, donor countries, multilateral financial and development institutions, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions, to extend all possible support to land-locked developing countries in their efforts to implement economic measures and policies designed to promote a pattern of growth that renders their economies less vulnerable to adverse consequences of their land-locked situation;

8. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on progress in the implementation of specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries, submitted pursuant to resolution 40/183, and requests him to prepare another report, taking into account the provisions of the present resolution, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

General Assembly resolution 42/174

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 152-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.1) by recorded vote (135-1), 27 November (meeting 43); 17-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.54/Rev.1); agenda item 82 (a).

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Mali, Mongolia, Nepal, Paraguay, Rwanda, Swaziland, Uganda, Zambia.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 38, 43; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Because of a lack of agreement in the Second Committee on paragraph 1 of the draft, it was put to a separate recorded vote, resulting in its adoption by 110 to 1, with 21 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United States said that, while it had opposed the draft as a whole, it was not unaware of the problems of land-locked countries, but saw no need to make a distinction between them and other developing countries. Turkey said its vote in favour in no way prejudiced its position on the Convention on the Law of the Sea, which it had not signed.

Several States explained their abstentions on paragraph 1. India and Pakistan said it made no mention of the sovereign territorial rights of transit States and of the need in that regard for bilateral agreements between land-locked and transit countries. Mauritania, too, felt that the paragraph's purposes would be better served by bilateral agreements. The United Kingdom, on behalf also of the Federal Republic of Germany, stated that problems as fundamental as those raised in the paragraph should be settled by consensus, and that specific action in favour of land-locked developing countries had to be related to their individual level of development and should aim at offsetting their specific geographical handicaps.

Peru voted in favour of paragraph 1 on the understanding that agreements in force between the parties concerned and the rights of transit States had to be respected.

Algeria, Iran and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, voting in favour of paragraph 1 and the text as a whole, stressed that the right of access to and from the sea and freedom of transit were rights deriving from agreements concluded between the States concerned and on the basis of the principle of reciprocity.

Island developing countries

UNDP action. The special needs of island developing countries were the subject of a section of a March 1987 report on the implementation of UNDP's fourth programming cycle, 1987-1991.(23) The report, submitted by the UNDP Administrator in response to a 1986 Governing Council decision,(24) addressed the longer-term development issues related to efforts by those countries to achieve self-sustaining economic growth as well as the recent economic conditions experienced by small island developing countries (populations of under 5 million) and the potential effects on them of a 1985 Governing Council decision on the fourth programming cycle,(25) which had imposed certain financial obligations on those countries. A study by a consultant to the Administrator indicated that economic performance and conditions of development of small island developing countries varied appreciably. Thus, the only broad conclusion reached was that many small island developing countries were under greater financial pressure than in the recent past. The financial impact of the obligations imposed by the 1985 Governing Council decision appeared to be modest because of the size of the amounts compared to the overall budgetary responsibilities of Governments. However, it could be of relevance that many of those economies had recorded successive budgetary deficits in recent years.

With regard to special measures taken by UNDP in favour of island developing countries, the report stated that UNDP policies and actions fully recognized the constraints imposed on the development efforts of small island developing countries and provided compensatory mechanisms through indicative planning figure calculations, special programmes of assistance to individual or groups of countries and other actions. Special programme resources were established by the Governing Council to enable the Administrator to respond to requirements resulting from natural disasters, to which island developing countries were especially susceptible. During the third programming cycle (1982-1986), 17 such countries received a total of $4.1 million in essential technical assistance in support of longer-term rehabilitation and reconstruction projects and some $0.7 million in short-term emergency relief. In addition, of the countries designated as LDCs (see p. 389), nine were island countries which had received a total of $7.4 million in assistance from the Special Measures Fund for LDCs between 1973 and 1986. The report also gave information on specific measures in favour of island developing countries in Asia and the Pacific, the Caribbean and Africa.

The Administrator considered that the extent to which the net contributor provisions of the 1985 Governing Council decision could exacerbate the special problems of island developing countries and inhibit the achievement of self-sustaining economic growth was difficult to assess, since relatively small magnitudes of development assistance funds were involved. It appeared that some island developing countries faced greater pressure in their choice of budgetary priorities because of declining economic performance since 1983.

In a 19 June 1987 decision,(26) the Governing Council reiterated its continuing support for UNDP'S measures and programmes to respond to the special needs of island developing countries.

Raúl Prebisch Foundation

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On behalf of the Group of 77, Guatemala introduced a draft resolution in the General Assembly's Second Committee welcoming the establishment in Argentina of the Raúl Prebisch Foundation. Mr. Prebisch, who died in April 1986, had served as the first Secretary-General of UNCTAD (1963-1969) and as Executive-Secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America (1950-1963).

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 42/194, on the recommendation of the Second Committee.

Raúl Prebisch Foundation

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the important and valuable contribution of Raúl Prebisch, first Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and former Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America, to the United Nations system, in particular to development and international economic co-operation,

1. Warmly welcomes the establishment in Argentina of the Raúl Prebisch Foundation to promote the study of development issues, especially those which affect the developing countries;

2. Invites all States and relevant agencies, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to support the activities undertaken by the Raúl Prebisch Foundation in the cause of development.

General Assembly resolution 42/194

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.10) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.71), based on informal consultations on draft by Guatemala for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.62); agenda item 82.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 42, 43; plenary 96.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/1987/12. (2)E/1987/14. (3)E/1987/23. (4)YUN 1985, p. 433. (5)YUN 1981, p. 406. (6)Ibid., p. 410, GA res. 36/194, 17 Dec. 1981. (7)YUN 1985, p. 436, GA res. 40/205, 17 Dec. 1985. (8)A/42/576. (9)DP/1987/18. (10)YUN 1986, p. 406. (11)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/52). (12)YUN 1983, p. 431. (13)Revitalizing Development, Growth and International Trade Assessment and Policy Options (TD/328/Rev.1), Sales No. E.87.II.D.9. (14)TD/329/Rev.1. (15)Proceedings of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Seventh Session, Geneva, 9 July-3 August 1987, vol. I, Report and Annexes (TD/352, vol. I), Sales No. E.88.II.D.1. (16)YUN 1985, p. 434. (17)YUN 1978, p. 429. (18)E/1988/42. (19)A/42/15, vol. II (dec. 349(XXXIV)). (20)YUN 1985, p. 452, GA res. 40/183, 17 Dec. 1985. (21)A/42/537. (22)YUN 1984, p. 418. (23)DP/1987/22. (24)YUN 1986, p. 407. (25)YUN 1985, p. 471. (26)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/25).

OTHER PUBLICATION

The Least Developed Countries - 1987 Report (TD/B/1153), Sales No. E.87.II.D.12.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 1987, a total of $6.3 billion in net transfers of concessional assistance for development, in the form of concessional loans and grants to developing countries, was channelled through the United Nations system. Such assistance focused on the poorest countries, with 40 per cent being provided to countries classified as least developed.

Case-studies were carried out on the functioning of the system's operational activities. Having reviewed the studies, the General Assembly requested the United Nations Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to ensure effective leadership of the system in that area and to exercise overall co-ordination to provide a multidisciplinary approach to development problems (resolution 42/196).

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) - the central funding and co-ordinating body in the system in matters of technical co-operation - saw another record year in 1987 with contributions and pledges estimated at $1.1 billion. Complementing that surge in income, the number of project approvals rose by 29 per cent and their value rose by 54 per cent. Expenditures from UNDP central resources totalled $934.4 million, of which $702.1 million was spent on field programme activities. The year was the first of the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) and, against a background of global economic uncertainty and heavy indebtedness, most programmes featured more efficient economic management and promotion of greater agricultural and industrial production.

The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development delivered some $136 million in project expenditures, a drop of 7 per cent compared with 1986, a record year. Significant progress was made during the year in support of human resources development. Also noteworthy were the increasing efforts to co-ordinate research and development in energy programmes and to stimulate investment follow-up, as well as to promote contacts with non-governmental organizations and interaction between operational activities and research analysis.

The United Nations Volunteers programme (UNV) expanded in 1987 with 1,269 volunteers in service. The thrust of UNV assistance was aimed at such sectors as agriculture, education and health, and priority continued to be accorded to the least developed countries.

In May, the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (TCDC) held its fifth session and adopted decisions on a range of issues. In July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Committee's decisions and urged United Nations organizations to implement the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC and to inform UNDP of their activities in that regard (resolution 1987/88). In December, the Assembly endorsed the Council's action and asked that regional, interregional and global intergovernmental programming exercises for TCDC continue to be held and evaluated (resolution 42/179). The Assembly further requested United Nations organizations to ensure implementation of the High-level Committee's decisions (42/180).

In 1987, actual project expenditures by the United Nations Capital Development Fund totalled $41.1 million, with an additional $59.1 million approved in new commitments.

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: aid programmes and inter-agency co-operation. Middle East: aid programmes for Palestinians. Development policy and international economic co-operation: economic co-operation among developing countries; special economic areas. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief. International trade and finance: UNCTAD technical co-operation and development finance. Regional economic and social activities: technical co-operation. Natural resources: United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration. Energy: energy resources development. Food: food aid. Science and technology: financing science and technology. Health and human resources: AIDS prevention and control; human resources development. Environment: terrestrial ecosystems. Women: women and development. Namibia: international assistance.

General aspects

In his report on United Nations operational activities for development in 1987,(1) the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) stated that some $6.3 billion in concessional resources (grants and loans) was made available to developing countries through the United Nations system, representing about 14 per cent of total official development assistance (ODA) to those countries. Those resources comprised: development grants, $2.8 billion; concessional loans, $3.5 billion; non-concessional loans, minus $2 billion; and grant-financed refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities, $0.6 billion (net transfers only were counted for loan expenditures).

The distribution of grant expenditures in support of development activities in 1987 was: UNDP, including UNDP-administered funds, $789 million; World Food Programme (WFP), $719 million; United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), $365 million; United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA), $107 million; regular budget, $320 million; and extrabudgetary, including agency trust funds and government "self-supporting" funds, $484 million.

An analysis of contributions to the system's grant organizations⁽²⁾ indicated that, following an increase of some 7 per cent in United States dollar terms in 1986, there was a further increase of about 8 per cent in 1987, bringing total contributions for operational activities for development to $6.9 billion. Those increases were partly offset by movements in exchange rates, particularly the depreciation of the United States dollar against other major donor currencies. Given those exchange rate fluctuations, the complex mix of contributions in cash and in kind, and the variety of currencies in which contributions were made and expenditures incurred, it was almost impossible to measure whether there had been an increase or decrease in real terms in contributions to the United Nations system.

Policy review. As requested by the General Assembly in 1986,⁽³⁾ the DIEC Director-General, in his annual report to the Assembly in 1987,⁽⁴⁾ highlighted policy matters affecting the coherence and functioning of system-wide operational activities. He examined some issues relating to financing of operational activities, including the central funding role of UNDP, and reviewed some issues regarding the administration and management of those activities, including the participation of developing countries.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Director-General identified a number of issues for Member States' consideration, including: ensuring a fair share of total ODA composed of contributions to the United Nations system and an adequate share for UNDP in keeping with its role as the central funding mechanism for operational activities for development; closer co-operation between UNICEF, WFP and UNDP; the need for Member States to take steps to consolidate autonomous units and funds in the United Nations under one of its main organizations; intensification of contacts and exchanges between the United Nations and regional development banks; ensuring a balance between the funding of multilateral financial institutions and the funding of United Nations organizations engaged in grant-financed operations; steps to increase developing countries' share in United Nations procurement; consideration of possible changes to the system of fixed percentage remuneration of agencies for execution of projects and rationalization of the organizations' field representation, including the use of common services; working out by UNDP and other funding agencies of the elements of country programmes, if they were to serve as frames of reference for technical co-operation activities; strengthening of resident co-ordinators' role if they were to receive support for their functions from both recipient Governments and bilateral donors; and exploration by Member States of the possibility of selecting one or two themes for the Director-General's annual report for the years between the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development.

Also in accordance with a 1986 Assembly request,⁽³⁾ the Director-General submitted a report of a consultant on case-studies on the functioning of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system,⁽⁵⁾ carried out in Argentina, Morocco, Nepal, Pakistan, Togo and Zimbabwe, and in the South Pacific region (Fiji, Solomon Islands and Tuvalu). The report discussed the role and importance of assistance provided by the system, provision of assistance by the system, aid co-ordination, agency representation, interaction with Governments on matters of development policy, and the flow of information relating to development.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the report stated that: the importance of United Nations assistance went beyond its value in terms of its contribution to the volume of aid flow because of its multilateral and non-political character; efforts should continue towards greater integration of the system's operational activities through joint programming and other methods; the leadership role and operational functions of resident co-ordinators should be more exactly defined through an inter-agency agreement; there should be greater decentralization of the management of operational activities and gradual harmonization of procedures among agencies; there should be sufficient emphasis on sectoral, subsectoral and thematic programming rather than the project-by-project method; trends in the concept and modalities of technical assistance should be reviewed continuously; UNDP'S role as the central funding agency should be reinforced, with donors being asked to channel trust funds through it; UNDP should achieve a higher degree of decentralization to increase efficiency at the country level; if joint programming methods became prevalent in the system, it might be necessary to consider a different type of document for country programmes based on a programme rather than a project approach; possibilities for closer co-operation between the World Bank and regional banks and the United Nations agencies should be further explored; the system's capacity for analytical work at the country level should be enhanced; there should be greater interaction with Governments in development policy matters; the flow of development information to the field needed to be improved; the system should provide maximum assistance to Governments to strengthen their role as co-ordinators of external aid; and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) should become part of aid co-ordination arrangements.

The report noted that the findings regarding agency representation were inconclusive, but there was considerable support among government officials and agency staff for maintaining the pattern of offices and field representation. However, some island Governments and bilateral donor representatives favoured consolidation of some parts of the United Nations system at the country level with particular reference to technical assistance agencies.

Addenda to the report(6) contained comments of United Nations organizations on the report's findings.

UNDP Council action. The UNDP Governing Council, on 19 June 1987,(7) brought implementation of the 1986 Assembly resolution on operational activities for development(3) to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. The Governing Council considered the resolution to be an important element of the framework for UNDP'S participation in the United Nations system's operational activities. In addition, its 1986 decision on issues of importance in the context of the triennial review of operational activities(8) outlined its views on several issues raised in the resolution.

The Governing Council drew the attention of the Economic and Social Council to several decisions taken at its 1987 session which responded to various operational activities matters, including co-ordination of technical assistance, the organizational and financial structure of the system administered by UNDP, programme and project quality, procurement from developing countries and United Nations technical co-operation activities (see under relevant headings below).

The Council reaffirmed its support for improved co-ordination by the system at the country level and for the role and responsibilities of the resident co-ordinator envisaged by the Assembly in 1977.(9) It urged Governments and organizations of the system to provide resident co-ordinators with the authority to carry out their responsibilities and believed that the Assembly's 1986 resolution enumerated essential measures in that respect.

The Council was of the view that the main responsibility for defining the resident co-ordinator's activities at the country level resided with host Governments. It also recognized that an important step towards strengthening the resident co-ordinator involved the governing bodies of the United Nations system instructing their secretariats and field staff to interact with resident co-ordinators in the manner envisaged in 1977.(9) The Council noted that the resident co-ordinator's authority within the system had been enhanced by his designation as the Secretary-General's representative. As a further step towards strengthening his team leadership role, his views were to be solicited on projects proposed for United Nations funding if the recipient Government so desired.

The importance of the UNDP country programme as the framework for promoting a more coherent and co-ordinated approach to technical co-operation activities was stressed by the Council. More complete participation by the system's members in the country programme process would help in using the programme as the framework for the system's technical co-operation activities.

Inter-agency collaboration at the programme level needed further development and the Council encouraged members of the Joint Consultative Group on Policy (JCGP) to engage in more systematic exchanges 'to ensure a coherent and complementary approach to development efforts. Active co-operation at the field level was encouraged, including co-ordinated programming practices. The Council welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to review through JCGP the field representation of organizations under his authority and awaited concrete proposals from that review. While welcoming his approach regarding consolidation of United Nations information centres with offices of resident co-ordinators, the Council noted that additional information functions would not be funded from UNDP income or voluntary contributions. It drew the attention of the Economic and Social Council to its 1987 decision on Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) reports, including one on field representation (see p. 406).

The Council stated that harmonized and simplified procedures for programming and delivery of technical co-operation should be more actively pursued, and urged other governing bodies, through the Economic and Social Council, to review their field representation and to consider with UNDP the feasibility of co-location and/or common services in consultation with host Governments.

Economic and Social Council consideration. In response to a 1986 Economic and Social Council resolution,(10) the Secretary-General submitted in June 1987 a note, with later addenda,(11) containing the views of the governing bodies of six organizations of the system on the resolution's implementation, particularly on the role of the resident co-ordinators, the use of the UNDP country programming process as a framework for operational activities, the co-location of field offices and the further harmonization of operational procedures.

In decision 1987/184 of 9 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note, as well as of the DIEC Director-General's report on operational activities for development in 1986.(12)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/196 without vote.

Operational activities for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 320(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system and 41/171 of 5 December 1986 on operational activities for development,

Recalling further its resolution 2688(XXV) of 11 December 1970 on the capacity of the United Nations development system,

Reaffirming that the operational activities for development of the United Nations system are carried out for the benefit of developing countries, at their request and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development,

Emphasizing the need to keep under periodic review the structures and modus operandi of the organizations of the United Nations system in relation to their operational activities so as to ensure efficiency and responsiveness to the needs and priorities of the developing countries,

Deeply concerned that the targets for official development assistance spelt out in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade have not been met, and stressing the urgent need to strengthen multilateral co-operation for development through, inter alia increased voluntary contributions to the operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Emphasizing also the need for a significant, continuous, predictable and real increase in resources for operational activities for development to meet the growing requirements for development of the developing countries, in particular the least developed countries,

Emphasizing further the need to increase the proportion of grants in overall official development assistance,

Considering that all countries should continue to make efforts to participate in operational activities for development in accordance with their financial and developmental capacities,

Reaffirming that, at the national level, the allocation of resources for operational activities must be based on the national development plans, priorities and objectives of the recipient countries, to which the assistance provided by the United Nations system should conform,

Reaffirming also that economic and technical co-operation among developing countries should be a significant dimension of operational activities for development and that technical co-operation among developing countries as understood in the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 33/134 of 19 December 1978, is an important instrument in this respect, and taking note with appreciation of the report of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries on its fifth session,

Reiterating that the activities of the resident co-ordinators in fulfilling their role relating to operational activities, as defined in General Assembly resolutions 32/197 and 41/171, vary according to the development needs and priorities determined by the recipient countries,

Mindful of the special needs of the least developed countries,

Aware of the acute problems of island and land-locked developing countries and their particular needs for development to overcome their economic difficulties,

Deeply concerned about the falling share of developing countries in the procurement of equipment and services for the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, as reported,

Stressing the urgent need for harmonized, flexible and simplified procedures for the operational activities for development of the United Nations system in order to respond better to the needs of developing countries and particularly to reduce the administrative burden on Governments and facilitate their participation in these activities,

Noting with deep concern the shortcomings reported by the Secretary-General in the discharge by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, through its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities), of the responsibilities envisaged for it as the forum for the consideration by the organizations of the United Nations system of central matters relating to operational activities for development, particularly their co-ordination,

Noting with appreciation the important contribution made by the World Commission on Environment and Development,

Aware that a substantial part of world resources, human as well as material, continues to be diverted to armaments, with a detrimental effect on international security and on bilateral and multilateral co-operation, including the operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

I

Report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation:
case-studies on operational activities and follow-up action

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on the operational activities of the United Nations system and of the case-studies on the functioning of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, undertaken in accordance with General Assembly resolution 41/171;

2. Invites the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations development system to discuss in detail, at their next sessions, the conclusions and recommendations of the report on the findings of the case-studies, and to submit their views to the Economic and Social Council;

3. Welcomes the announced intention of the Director-General to organize in early 1988 an informal discussion of the report's findings, with the participation of delegations, the authors of the report and the relevant programmes and agencies of the United Nations system;

4. Requests the Director-General to continue to carry out the tasks entrusted to him under resolution 41/171 and to ensure, in accordance with resolution 32/197, effective leadership of the United Nations system in the field of development and international economic co-operation and in exercising overall co-ordination within the system in order to ensure a multidisciplinary approach to the problems of development on a system-wide basis;

5. Takes note of the comments provided by organizations of the United Nations system in response to elements of resolution 41/171;

II

Priorities, resources and guiding considerations for operational activities for development

6. Reaffirms that the operational activities for development of the United Nations system are undertaken at the request of developing countries and are designed to respond solely to their development needs and priorities as determined by them;

7. Reaffirms the central role of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council as forums for overall policy guidance and co-ordination of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and emphasizes the need to strengthen further the co-ordination functions of the Council in this respect;

8. Affirms the importance of the operational activities of the United Nations system in strengthening the capacities of recipient countries to plan and implement development policies and programmes in accordance with their goals and objectives, and recognizes the important role of the United Nations development system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, in assisting recipient Governments, at their request, in determining and meeting their technical co-operation needs, including human resources development, institution building and transfer of technology, as defined by them;

9. Invites the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to report to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation by the Committee of its decision of October 1986 to improve the overall functioning and efficiency of its subsidiary machinery for operational activities and on further measures to improve performance in inter-agency co-operation in this regard, particularly through a review of the work of the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities);

10. Emphasizes that a substantial and real increase in the flow of concessional resources, particularly grants, on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, is important for the development process of developing countries, and calls for increased contributions from a broader range of countries in order to provide such resources;

11. Reaffirms the central funding and co-ordinating role of the United Nations Development Programme in technical co-operation within the United Nations system in conformity with the consensus of 1970 and General Assembly resolutions 32/197, 33/202 of 29 January 1979 and 35/81 of 5 December 1980, recommends to the intergovernmental bodies concerned that the need to preserve this role should be taken fully into account in the consideration of new funding arrangements for technical co-operation activities, and requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, an analysis of the issues relating to the implementation of the central funding concept;

12. Affirms that the functioning of operational activities for development of the United Nations system should be guided, inter alia, by the following considerations, taking into account the particular development needs, priorities and policies of recipient countries:

(a) Developing countries have the primary responsibility for co-ordinating the operational activities for development of the United Nations system at the national level, and the main role of the United Nations system in that regard should be to reinforce and strengthen the capability of developing countries to co-ordinate international co-operation and assistance in accordance with their priorities and needs;

(b) The programming procedures for the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should be made more flexible within established principles of accountability so that they may correspond to the policies, procedures and objectives of recipient countries in order to permit the allocation of external assistance and co-operation in the context of a programme approach, either on a project-by-project basis or on a sectoral basis; this will also enable these countries to manage their programmes, to exploit substantive linkages among projects and sectors and to have a coherent and integrated approach;

(c) The United Nations system should improve its ability, at the field level, to respond to requests from developing countries for advice on developmental issues by, inter alia, enhancing its capacity for, and performance in, providing sectoral, multisectoral and integrated advice to Governments at their request, through, inter alia, increased co-ordination among the organizations of the system and improved technical backstopping;

(d) To facilitate the task of developing countries in co-ordinating development co-operation and assistance, multilateral and bilateral donors concerned should endeavour to harmonize and simplify their rules and procedures in order to respond as fully as possible to conditions and practices in recipient countries;

(e) To maximize the efficiency and effectiveness of the operational activities of the United Nations system, the resident co-ordinators should receive the necessary support from the United Nations system and donor and host countries in order to discharge their functions in accordance with the needs, priorities and objectives of the recipient countries;

13. Urges the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations development system, in co-operation with the Economic Commission for Africa and the existing subregional economic groupings, as appropriate, to provide increased support, as a matter of priority, to African countries in the implementation, follow-up and monitoring of the priority themes of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

14. Urges the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations development system to place priority emphasis on the full and expeditious implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries and the recommendations of the mid-term review of its implementation;

III

Programming

15. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, in consultation with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the executive heads of other organizations of the United Nations system, to assess the constraints on the use of the United Nations Development Programme's country programme and programming process as a frame of reference for the operational activities of the United Nations system, to consider the nature, scope and feasibility of a wider, more effective process in terms of improved coherence of action and effective integration of the various sectoral inputs of the United Nations system, to identify the grant organizations and resources that such a process might take into account, and to report thereon for the next triennial policy review of operational activities for development, in 1989;

16. Welcomes as a potentially significant contribution towards improved coherence and co-ordination the joint and collaborative programming of activities undertaken by the Joint Consultative Group on Policy, and requests the Director-General, in co-operation with the executive heads of the organizations that are members of the Group, to inform the Economic and Social Council of the nature and scope of their joint and collaborative activities and to comment on the possibility of more systematic exchanges at the headquarters level among those organizations on a broader agenda;

17. Reiterates the importance attached to the integration of women in United Nations development programmes, both as agents and as beneficiaries of development, calls upon the funding and executing agencies to intensify efforts to increase the participation of women, especially those from developing countries, and requests the Director-General, taking into account the requirements of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/86 of 8 July 1987 in this regard, to report on such efforts and on the establishment of mechanisms for generating baseline information and measuring results;

18. Invites the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system that provide grant assistance for technical co-operation to report to the Economic and Social Council on the content and nature of their current and prospective co-operation with the World Bank, including the criteria for the selection of the Bank as an executing agency and also indicating whether project agreements for World Bank-executed projects differ in character from those for projects executed by other United Nations agencies;

19. Requests the Director-General to examine in detail urgent measures that can be taken to ensure further flexibility, simplification and harmonization of procedures for programme and project formulation, approval, implementation, monitoring and evaluation, so as to adapt them to the needs and priorities of developing countries, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session through the Economic and Social Council;

IV

Organization at the field level

20. Considers that decentralization of operational activities at the field level should, within established principles of accountability, foster appropriate flexibility and responsiveness to the needs of developing countries, and requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to provide information on the measures taken by organizations of the system in this regard;

21. Urges funding and executing agencies to consider additional measures to ensure that expertise for all aspects of the project cycle, particularly project execution, is of the highest standard of quality and that project inputs are provided on a timely basis;

22. Invites Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to avail themselves, as envisaged in General Assembly resolutions 32/97 and 41/171, of the services of the resident co-ordinators and to solicit the views of the resident co-ordinators in considering projects to be funded or implemented by the United Nations system;

23. Also requests the Director-General, in consultation with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, to assess the resources required by the resident co-ordinators to carry out their increasing responsibilities, taking into account differing national situations;

24. Invites the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system urgently to review and rationalize their field office structure to enhance co-operation, coherence and efficiency through, inter alia, increased sharing of facilities and services, and in this connection:

(a) Expresses the need for such a review to take full account of the need for the provision, at the field level, of ongoing technical advice by the organizations of the United Nations system in accordance with the needs identified by developing countries;

(b) Emphasizes that this advice should be offered in an integrated and multisectoral manner, as envisaged in resolution 32/197;

(c) Requests the governing bodies to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988;

(d) Also requests the Director-General to report periodically to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on developments related to the field office structure of the United Nations system;

25. Invites the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to review the inter-agency arrangement concerning resident co-ordinators, with a view to enabling them to discharge better their leadership role and functions, and requests the Secretary-General to formulate specific proposals for the consideration of the Committee in that regard and to report orally to the Economic and Social Council;

26. Requests the Director-General to report on the progress made in the review undertaken by the member organizations of the Joint Consultative Group on Policy and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees of the structure of their field offices, and invites other organizations of the United Nations system to participate in this review process;

V

Procurement and project execution

27. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to consult with recipient countries and the relevant funding and executing agencies of the United Nations system and to make recommendations for innovative, practical and effective measures to increase substantially the procurement from developing countries in the operational activities of the United Nations system, taking into account the need for the full implementation of the preferential arrangements for these countries and making maximum use of national institutions and firms, and giving due regard to regional comparative advantages, consistent with the principle of competitive international bidding and maximum effectiveness;

28. Considers in that respect that the data base for assessing procurement trends system-wide needs significant improvement and requests the Director-General, in consultation with the executive heads of the organizations of the United Nations system concerned, to develop proposals for common practices within the United Nations system for the compilation and reporting of procurement information related to operational activities, including information on the sources of experts, training, services and equipment;

29. Affirms that all countries should have equal opportunities in and access to the procurement process of operational activities of the United Nations system and that the flow of information on procurement opportunities, including competitive international bidding, and on countries' capacities and offers should be facilitated as appropriate and that the information should be made available to all interested countries, all of which would facilitate obtaining the desired increase in the procurement from all sources, including under-utilized donor countries;

30. Requests all organizations of the United Nations system concerned to provide full support for the activities of the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Unit so as to enable it to provide more comprehensive and reliable information on the procurement activities of the United Nations system;

31. Considers that the technical capacities of the United Nations system in the field could more fully be brought to bear in support of the modality of government execution of projects, and requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme at its thirty-fifth session to consider what further support can be offered to Governments and what further flexibility may be called for to facilitate government execution of projects;

32. Requests United Nations funding organizations, especially the United Nations Development Programme, to adhere rigorously to established criteria and procedures in the selection of executing agencies to be recommended to recipient Governments so as to ensure the provision of technical expertise and appropriate project support, including technical backstopping, as well as the reliability and accountability of the executing agencies;

33. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to examine modalities for enhancing the implementation of its inter-country programme, taking fully into account the technical skills and capabilities existing within the United Nations system and in other appropriate organizations and bodies and also taking into account the different characteristics of each region;

34. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, given the expiry in 1991 of current arrangements for project support costs, to begin considering successor arrangements designed to ensure enhanced project quality and maximum cost-effectiveness, with a view, inter alia, to ensuring the full utilization of technical and managerial capacities at all stages of the project cycle;

35. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to provide information to its field offices on programmes promoting or facilitating technical co-operation among developing countries offered by various developing countries;

36. Requests the 'Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to report on the implementation of the present resolution, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/196

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/822) without vote, 4 December (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.92), following informal consultations on drafts by Canada, Denmark, Netherlands and Norway (A/C.2/42/L.58) and by Guatemala for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.59 & Corr.1); agenda item 83.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 29-34,40,44,45; plenary 96.

Financing of operational activities

Expenditures

In his report on operational activities covering 1987,(1) the DIEC Director-General stated that net transfers of concessional assistance for development through the United Nations system amounted to $6.3 billion, a decrease of nearly 5 per cent from the 1986 level. Of that amount, development grants represented $2.8 billion compared with $2.6 billion in 1986 and concessional loans $3.5 billion, up by $0.5 billion from 1986. Non-concessional loans, on the other hand, had a negative balance of $2 billion in 1987, and grants to finance refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities amounted to $0.6 billion.

Grant assistance through UNDP and UNDP-administered funds in 1987 totalled $789 million, or 28 per cent of all grant expenditure compared with 31 per cent in 1986, and grants through other agencies were as follows: WFP, $719 million (26 per cent compared with 25 per cent in 1986); UNICEF, $365 million (13 per cent as in 1986); UNFPA, $107 million (4 per cent as in 1986); and specialized agencies, $805 million (29 per cent compared with 28 per cent in 1986), of which $484 million was financed from extrabudgetary contributions and $320 million from regular budgets.

Expenditures on technical co-operation, including the expenditures on training and consultants included in World Bank loans and credits of the International Development Association (IDA), but excluding WFP expenditures, totalled $3.2 billion in 1987 compared to $3 billion in 1986.

Total expenditure of the member organizations of JCGP (UNDP, UNFPA, WFP, UNICEF) in 1987 was $1.92 billion. Increases in grant funds had yet to be fully reflected in expenditures. However, measures adopted to ensure more rapid commitment and disbursement of funds were expected to have a significant impact from 1988 onwards. The 6.3 per cent rise in total expenditure in 1987 again concealed major differences in performance, with UNICEF expenditures rising by 12 per cent, WFP by 11 per cent, UNFPA by 5 per cent and the extrabudgetary expenditures of the specialized agencies by 7 per cent. After a major increase of 25 per cent in 1986, expenditures on UNDP core funds remained virtually unchanged in 1987, the first year of its new resource planning cycle.

The anticipated increases in grant expenditures from 1988 on were particularly important in view of developments in funding through the World Bank group. Although net transfers from IDA increased by 16 per cent from $2.8 billion in 1986 to $3.3 billion in 1987, net transfers of non-concessional loans from the World Bank moved from a positive balance of $194.1 million in 1986 to a negative balance of $2.2 billion in 1987. That reversal meant that overall expenditures on operational activities for development of the United Nations system declined for the third successive year from $7.8 billion in 1984 to $4.3 billion in 1987.

Contributions

Contributions from Governments and other sources in 1987 for operational activities for development of the United Nations system increased by 8 per cent, from $6.6 billion in 1986 to $6.9 billion in 1987.(2)

Contributions to UNDP, UNDP-administered funds and trust funds, UNFPA, UNICEF, WFP and other United Nations funds and programmes totalled $2.6 billion, compared with $2.3 billion in 1986. Continued increases in contributions to core funds of UNICEF and UNDP were reported; increases for UNICEF in dollar terms were 23 and 24 per cent for 1986 and 1987, respectively, and for UNDP, 19 and 12 per cent, respectively. Efforts by other countries to offset the continued withholding of a contribution to UNFPA by one major donor enabled the Fund to maintain the encouraging levels attained in 1986. Contributions through the specialized agencies for operational activities also rose in 1987, reaching $3.3 billion compared with the 1986 total of $3.1 billion.

The increases, however, were in part offset by movements in the exchange rate, particularly the depreciation of the United States dollar against other major donor currencies. Given the complex mix of contributions received in cash and in kind and the variety of currencies in which contributions were received and expenditures incurred, it was practically impossible to measure whether there had been an increase in real terms in contributions to the system.

Contributions to IDA and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) and capital subscription payments to the World Bank and the International Finance Corporation (IFC) rose to $3.6 billion from $3.5 billion in 1986.

Contributions to United Nations bodies for refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities totalled $611 million in 1987.

Communications. The Secretary-General received a number of communications during 1987 concerning economic assistance to developing countries. Among them were: a 3 March(13) letter from Kuwait transmitting the final communique and resolutions of the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 16-29 January); a 23 June letter(14) from the German Democratic Republic and a 30 September letter(15) from Czechoslovakia transmitting information on assistance rendered by them to developing countries and national liberation movements in 1986; a 3 July letter(16) from Australia, Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Japan, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States transmitting information on contributions to the development activities of the United Nations system; a 2 October letter(17) from Guatemala transmitting the Declaration adopted by the eleventh annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 developing countries (New York, 28 September-1 October); and a 19 October letter(18) from Canada transmitting the communique of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Vancouver, 13-17 October).

UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities

The 1987 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held in New York on 3 and 4 November to receive government pledges for 1988 to United Nations funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance.

As at 30 June 1988, pledges for 1988 from 137 countries for 23 programmes amounted to over $1,532 million, with $956.6 million designated for UNDP.

Inter-agency co-operation

The Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), at its first 1987 session (Geneva, 27-29 April),⁽¹⁹⁾ discussed the policy review of operational activities for development (see p. 399) and agreed to request the DIEC Director-General to transmit the findings and conclusions of the case-studies being carried out in that regard to its second 1987 session. At that session (New York, 5-7 October),⁽²⁰⁾ the Committee considered the case-studies on the functioning of the operational activities for development of the system.⁽⁵⁾ While giving its broad support to the study, the Committee felt that further clarifications and assessments were needed on a number of points and on several conclusions. It was agreed that questions raised and recommendations made in the report would require continuing in-depth consideration by the Committee during 1988.

During 1987, JIU issued three reports on technical co-operation between UNDP and three regional commissions: the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (see Chapter VII of this section).

In May, ACC reported to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) on progress made in creating a United Nations system register of development activities (see p. 1181).

Field representation

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly decision,⁽²¹⁾ a JIU report on field representation of organizations of the United Nations system⁽²²⁾ was transmitted to the governing bodies of those organizations for their comments.

In May 1987,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the ACC comments on the report. Most of the JIU recommendations were generally acceptable to ACC. With regard to the recommendation calling for the DIEC Director-General to establish a roster of possible candidates for resident co-ordinator posts, some ACC member organizations emphasized that the roster should include all organizations and entities of the United Nations system. UNDP proposed that it receive proposals for candidates for resident representative posts from the Director-General and from heads of organizations to enable it to maintain an informal roster of candidates from the United Nations system. The Director-General and the UNDP Administrator would keep the matter under review. With regard to the JIU recommendation for a single accreditation to Governments covering the work of both the resident co-ordinator and the director of the United Nations information centre, it was noted that the Secretary-General had decided, in agreement with the UNDP Administrator, to consolidate United Nations information centres with the offices of the resident co-ordinator/resident representative wherever that was not already the case. He had also decided that the resident co-ordinator would represent him at the field level in his country of assignment, except in situations where other arrangements were more appropriate.

On 18 June,⁽²⁴⁾ the UNDP Governing Council expressed support for two of the JIU recommendations, regarding a stay in establishing new arrangements for field representation until prescribed criteria were established, and recommended that the Assembly appeal to Governments and urge United Nations organizations to adopt measures to achieve full implementation of those recommendations. The Council noted the ACC comments regarding establishment of a roster and welcomed the Administrator's intention to pursue consultations with the DIEC Director-General to ensure the selection of well-qualified and experienced candidates for resident co-ordinator posts from a broader roster.

In decision 1987/184 of 9 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council took note of the JIU report and of the ACC comments.

REFERENCES

- (1)A/44/324/Add.1-E/1989/106/Add.1. (2)A/43/426/Add.2-E/1988/74/Add.2. (3)YUN 1986, p. 414, GA res. 41/171, annex, 5 Dec. 1986. (4)A/42/326-E/1987/82 & Add.3. (5)A/42/326/Add.1-E/1987/82/Add.1. (6)A/42/326/Add.2,4-E/1987/82/Add.2,4. (7)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/11). (8)YUN 1986, p. 419. (9)YUN 1977, p. 438, GA res. 32/197, 20 Dec. 1977. (10)YUN 1986, p. 411, ESC res. 1986/74, 23 July 1986. (11)E/1987/89 & Add.1,2. (12)YUN 1986, p. 415. (13)A/42/178-S/18753. (14)A/42/359-E/1987/112. (15)A/42/603. (16)A/42/381-E/1987/117. (17)A/42/604 & Corr.1. (18)A/42/677. (19)ACC/1987/8. (20)ACC/1987/16. (21)YUN 1986, p. 417, GA dec. 41/444, 5 Dec. 1986. (22)Ibid., p. 417. (23)A/42/290. (24)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/12).

Technical co-operation through UNDP

In his annual report for 1987,⁽¹⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that UNDP had another record year for income received in 1987 with an estimated total income of $1,149 million. The volume and value of projects approved also increased during the year. Pledges to UNDP for 1988 activities were a record $1.1 billion, an increase of 7.6 per cent in dollar terms and almost 7 per cent in real terms over pledges for 1987. Adjustments in exchange rates subsequent to the November Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see above) resulted in a further appreciation in the value of pledges in United States dollar terms.

Five major donor countries (Austria, Denmark, Finland, Norway, Spain) raised their contributions by 8 per cent or more in United States dollar terms. Among recipient donors, four countries increased their contributions by over 40 per cent (Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Jamaica, Portugal, Somalia) and 14 by 8 per cent or more.

Expenditures from UNDP central resources in 1987 totalled $936.4 million, of which $702.1 million was spent on field programme activities, $79.9 million on agency support costs, $150.5 million on UNDP administrative and programme support costs, and $3.9 million on sectoral support and other field-level costs. Of the $702.1 million in field programme expenditures, $590.7 million was delivered under indicative planning figure (IPF) resources.

Project expenditures rose for the third straight year, from $571.7 million in 1985 to $702.1 million in 1987, an increase which enabled UNDP to field 8,417 international experts and consultants and 4,878 national experts during the year. The number of national experts increased by 40 per cent over 1986, while the number of international experts declined by 6 per cent. Fellowship placements for study abroad totalled 11,656.

The value of new projects approved in 1987 rose by 54 per cent compared with 1986, from $465.4 million to $714.6 million. New approvals increased by 29 per cent, from 1,530 in 1986 to 1,977. During the year, the three leading sectors by their numerical share of new approvals were: development strategies, policies and planning; agriculture, forestry and fisheries; and industry.

For UNDP, Governments and United Nations agencies, 1987 marked the first year of the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991). Against a background of global economic uncertainty and heavy indebtedness, the majority of UNDP programmes featured more efficient economic management and the promotion of greater agricultural and industrial production as prominent objectives. Strategies varied within and between regions, reflecting differences in the type and degree of industrialization, the extent of food self-sufficiency, the availability of qualified human resources, the structure of external trade and the size of external debts.

Certain areas continued to receive priority in most country programmes, including public sector efficiency measures, economic reactivation through the diversification of industry and exports, greater incentives for the private sector and the use of technology in development. With budget economies being practised as part of the adjustment process in many countries, social equity and living conditions among the rural and urban poor were further important considerations in UNDP programming. Greater stress was also placed on incorporating women in development projects, co-operation with NGOs as partners in development, utilizing more United Nations volunteers, transfer of knowledge through expatriate nationals and short-term advisory services volunteers as a means of providing highly skilled, low-cost services to development efforts world-wide.

In Africa, the overall economic performance remained poor in 1987, as the debt burden, unfavourable terms of trade and a net outflow of resources restricted growth severely. Country and inter-country programmes in the fourth cycle (1987-1991) supported African countries in their implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD), adopted by the General Assembly in 1986.(2) Programmes also reflected UNDP's concern to help African Governments to implement structural adjustment measures and address social issues emanating from economic reform or adjustment.

Although a number of developing countries in Asia and the Pacific felt the damaging effects of floods and drought, the region's average growth rate of 6 per cent in 1987 stood in sharp contrast to the sluggish expansion of other parts of the world economy. UNDP-supported projects operating in the region during 1987 reflected a changing pattern of development. Industry, science and technology, which had accounted for 19 per cent of UNDP project approvals in 1982, claimed 26 per cent of the 1987 total, overtaking agriculture, forestry and fisheries. The emphasis of the regional programme for the fourth cycle was on human resources development and the transfer of technology.

The economies of Latin America and the Caribbean continued to evolve unfavourably in 1987; the rate of economic growth declined, inflation accelerated and external sector improvements were concentrated in a small number of countries. By the end of the year, the region's external debt was estimated at $410 billion. The UNDP programme for the region emphasized alleviation of critical poverty, science and technology, infrastructure, agriculture and industry, macro-economic management and rationalization of the public sector-crucial areas that had to be strengthened to redress negative trends and provide a basis for more sustained growth.

In 1987, responsibility for the Arab States and for European programmes was again vested in a single organizational unit within UNDP. Adverse economic factors continued to influence developments in the Arab States during the year, with hostilities and the deteriorating security situation in the Persian Gulf making the economic situation worse, especially for countries already affected by the fall in remittances from their workers abroad. On the European side, some of the Eastern European countries initiated their own economic reforms in 1987. Improved technologies, for both agriculture and industry, were seen as a key to their economic development plans. Planning was begun for missions to determine the needs of the Arab countries and how European countries could share their experience and technologies with them. In that connection, focus was placed on co-operation between the countries bordering the Mediterranean.

UNDP administered six funds during 1987: the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) (see p. 434), the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities (see p. 707), the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE) (see p. 564), the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) (see p. 842), UNV (see p. 426) and the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) (see p. 599). Four sub-trust fund arrangements were established on behalf of UNCDF (one) and the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) (three). In addition, nine new trust funds were established in 1987 with contributions amounting to $14.5 million (see p. 419).

In the area of emergency and disaster relief, UNDP collaborated with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and other international agencies, approving some 24 relief projects while following up on similar assistance to countries struck by disasters in previous years. Disasters to which UNDP responded included locust invasions in Algeria, Mauritania and Morocco; flooding in Bangladesh; winter storms in Chile; landslides caused by heavy rain in Colombia; and cyclones in the Cook Islands, Fiji, Tokelau, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and Vanuatu (see Chapter III of this section).

On 18 June,⁽³⁾ the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report for 1986⁽⁴⁾ and urged him to continue measures to improve performance by the executing agencies in regard to UNDP-funded activities. It also urged him to continue encouraging execution of projects by Governments and to intensify measures to increase delivery rates. It appealed to Governments to intensify efforts to achieve higher implementation rates for projects executed by them.

The Council reaffirmed its support for the Administrator's measures to involve grass-roots organizations and NGOs in UNDP-supported activities and supported his plans to strengthen co-operation with NGOs through small-scale development activities, asking him to report thereon in 1988. The importance of improved management of the environment and the supportive role to be played in it by UNDP in co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the World Bank and other bodies was affirmed.

The Administrator was asked to pursue efforts to extend technical assistance to Governments and to alleviate the human and social consequences of their economic recovery and development programmes, including debt management strategies. He was also asked to facilitate the availability of information on aid requirements arising from debt problems in order to attract additional financing. The Administrator was urged to review efforts to increase public awareness of UNDP activities and its contribution to economic and social development, and to make proposals in 1988 on further steps in that regard.

UNDP Governing Council

In 1987, the UNDP Governing Council held in New York organizational meetings on 17 and 20 February, a special session to consider pending issues from 17 to 20 February and its regular thirty-fourth session from 26 May to 19 June.⁽⁵⁾ At the organizational meetings, the Council adopted decisions on the schedule of meetings in 1987 and the biennialization of documentation,⁽⁶⁾ its agenda and organization of work in 1987,⁽⁷⁾ and election of the members of the Working Group of the Committee of the Whole.⁽⁸⁾

At its special session, the Council adopted five decisions on: country, inter-country, interregional and global programmes and projects (see p. 410); recent trends in the recruitment, cost and utilization of project personnel and other personnel working in development co-operation (see p. 422); the Project Development Facility (see p. 419); implementation of the results of the job classification exercise for the General Service and related categories in UNDP and UNFPA (see p. 422); and representation of African national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) (see p. 160).

At the thirty-fourth session, the Budgetary and Finance Committee met between 26 May and 18 June to consider financial, budgetary and administrative matters, the Committee of the Whole met between 5 and 19 June to consider evaluation matters and country and inter-country programmes and projects, and the drafting group met between 2 and 21 June to consider proposals for draft decisions.

Forty-six decisions were adopted at the May/June session; those not covered in this chapter dealt with: women in development and UNIFEM (see pp. 836 and 841); human resources development (see p. 651); assistance to national liberation movements recognized in its area by OAU (see p. 159); assistance to the Palestinian people (see p. 263); the role of UNDP in implementing the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (see p. 437); the IPF for Namibia (see p. 1023); co-operation against acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) (see p. 644); UNFPA (see Chapter XIII of this section); UNRFRNRE (see p. 564); UNFSTD and the Energy Account (see pp. 578 and 599); and the activities of UNSO and assistance to other drought-stricken countries in Africa (see p. 707).

On 26 May,(9) the Council approved the agenda and organization of work for its thirty-fourth session. On 18 June,(10) it requested the Administrator to ensure simultaneous distribution of documents in all languages and recommended that he take measures to eliminate duplication of material and rationalize its presentation. It urged him and the heads of other organizations and programmes reporting to it to rectify the problem of timely distribution of documentation and asked to be informed at its 1988 organizational meeting of the measures taken. Decisions were also taken on future Council session(11) and the provisional agenda for 1988.(12) The Council also took note of several reports and other documents.(13)

Review of the Committee of the Whole. Following a 1986 Governing Council decision(14) to review the experience of its Committee of the Whole and its Working Group, the Administrator submitted in April 1987 a note(15) to facilitate that review. The Administrator stated that the Committee had worked smoothly since 1984, facilitating the approval of 86 country programmes, taking note of nine extensions of country programmes and of one regional programme, and considering four regional programmes, the global and interregional programmes and several projects, as well as other matters. The Working Group provided an informal setting for a free exchange of views on items before it. However, there was repetition in some debates as they moved from the Working Group through the Committee of the Whole to the Council's plenary. It was the Administrator's view that the Committee and its Working Group had been a useful mechanism, allowing a thorough consideration of matters assigned to them.

On 19 June,(16) the Council recognized that, although there was room for refinement in its working methods, the Committee had expedited the Council's work and strengthened its role in programme planning and review. It decided to continue the Committee with its current mandate, in addition to which it would consider UNFPA programming matters on an experimental basis. It decided to review the Committee in 1990.

The Council considered that the Committee's Working Group had carried out its work acceptably in its year of existence and decided to continue the Group on an experimental basis and review its functioning in 1989 in the light of the General Assembly's review of the structure and functioning of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations (see below). The Council expressed the need for active participation of UNDP and executing agencies regarding issues taken up by the Working Group and decided to convene no more than two meetings of the Group per year for durations of up to one week each. It decided that, to facilitate participation of representatives from capitals of UNDP members, the Group's agenda items should be clearly focused and grouped according to subject-matter, particularly UNFPA items. The Administrator was authorized to facilitate, to the extent of available extrabudgetary resources, participation of officials from developing countries to attend the Group's meetings.

Intergovernmental structure and functions

At its May/June session, the Governing Council reviewed the question of its response to Economic and Social Council decision 1987/112 on the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields. On 19 June,(17) the Council adopted its submission and asked the Administrator to transmit it to the Economic and Social Council's Special Commission on the subject. It agreed to consider at its 1988 organizational meeting how a number of areas for improvement listed in the submission could be implemented.

In its submission, the Council described its intergovernmental structure, including the Committee of the Whole and its Working Group (see above). With regard to interrelationships with other United Nations bodies, the Council said that the Special Commission might consider how the Economic and Social Council could consider more thoroughly the Council's report, preferably in conjunction with reports by other governing bodies dealing with operational activities. The Council would ensure that its future reports would be submitted with an introduction containing the main issues discussed by it. It was suggested that UNDP could benefit if the Economic and Social Council considered reports on operational activities of the different organizations of the system using a sector-by-sector approach. In addition, given the short interval between the UNDP Governing Council session and the Economic and Social Council discussion of operational activities, it was suggested that the Special Commission might consider how best to organize the calendar of meetings. Other areas requiring attention were improved co-operation between UNDP and the regional commissions, more active agency participation in the Council's work, including subsidiary bodies, and more active UNDP participation in the work of governing bodies of organizations of the system. It was noted that UNDP and funds administered by it supported a number of activities on which other intergovernmental bodies set substantive and sectoral policy—another area where a higher degree of co-ordination and rationalization should be achieved.

With regard to secretariat support structure, the Council noted that, by a decision of 17 February(6) it had approved proposals on biennialization and further streamlining of Council documentation. It stated that, since its conduct of business was affected by late receipt of documents, the Special Commission might wish to consider steps to avoid future problems. It might also consider how to strengthen the authority of resident co-ordinators vis-à-vis local representatives of the United Nations system, and ways of locating, in a common facility, representatives of the system for operational activities in consultation with host Governments. The reinstitution of agency review meetings was considered useful to achieve better co-operation between UNDP and agencies and allowed agencies to express their views on operational matters.

On 9 July, by decision 1987/184, the Economic and Social Council took note of an extract from the report of the Governing Council covering its organizational meeting for 1987 and its May/June-session

UNDP operational activities

Country and inter-country programmes

In a report to the Governing Council's February 1987 special session,(18) the Administrator analysed 28 country programmes and a Caribbean multi-island programme, which he submitted for approval. Of the 28 programmes, 14 were from Latin America and the Caribbean, 5 were from Africa, 4 from Asia and the Pacific, 3 from the Arab States and 2 from Europe. The largest IPF in the programmes submitted was $60.35 million for Burma. Argentina topped the list of total resources programmed, with $83.8 million, including large sums of non-IPF resources. None of the 10 programmes from the Caribbean subregion had an IPF of over $2 million, although many of them were much larger, owing to the inclusion of substantial resources from other donors. The report included information on the timing, preparations, financing, major development objectives and orientation of the submitted programmes, distribution of resources by sector, use of resources by stages of programming, and attention to global priorities.

On 20 February,(19) the Council approved the 28 new country programmes and the programme for the eastern Caribbean within the limits of their illustrative IPFs for 1987-1991 and took note of the extension of certain ongoing country and regional programmes. It also took note of inter-country programmes for Asia and the Pacific, Europe and Latin America and the Caribbean. The Council approved the global and interregional programme for the fourth cycle (1987-1991) covering the areas of agricultural research and technology transfer, health, water and sanitation, energy development, trade and economic co-operation, fisheries development, management development and training and other programmes. Global project recommendations on the special programme for research and training in tropical diseases, the diarrhoeal diseases control programme: biomedical and epidemiological research (phase III), and research and training in fertilizer technology and utilization were also approved.

In a report to the May/June session,(20) the Administrator analysed a further 42 country programmes which were submitted to the Council for approval. Of those programmes, 19 were from Africa, 11 from Latin America and the Caribbean, 7 from the Arab States, 4 from Asia and the Pacific and 1 from Europe. Only 7 of the 42 programmes were from countries having IPFs of below $10 million. Of the 13 programmes from countries designated by the United Nations as least developed countries (LDCs), 10 were in Africa, 2 were in the Arab States and 1 was in Haiti, the only LDC in the western hemisphere. The report did not include the country programmes for the Comoros and Mauritius which were submitted to the Council later.

In a section of his annual report for 1987(1) on project results of global/interregional programmes and special funds, the Administrator stated that agricultural research continued to receive high priority in 1987, with the global programme in agriculture supporting research on food crops important to developing countries and on the development of safe and non-chemical methods of controlling insects affecting crops, animals and human beings. All the global agricultural programmes provided substantial resources for training national personnel of developing countries through training courses, workshops and conferences. In 1987, the joint UNDP-World Bank Water Supply and Sanitation Programme was launched to increase the capacity of countries to deliver water supply and sanitation services to low-income groups, using primarily low-cost, community-based approaches. At the end of 1987, total UNDP support since 1980 for drinking-water and sanitation projects reached $171.8 million.

In the health sector, the UNDP/World Bank/WHO Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases (TDR) selected for attack malaria, schistosomiasis, filariasis, trypanosomiasis, leishmaniasis and leprosy. TDR had achieved concrete results in the form of vaccines, drugs, diagnostic methods and new vector control techniques and had also produced some 50 products, including potential malaria and leprosy vaccines and new drugs for malaria, river blindness, sleeping sickness and schistosomiasis. The programme also supported research on social and economic factors in disease control programmes. Some $3.6 million was allocated to prepare and implement joint UNDP/WHO interregional and regional programmes and to forge linkages with national AIDS programmes. UNDP would also help to disseminate information on the status of blood transfusions world-wide and support blood-screening services to ensure safe supplies. Development programmes involving fisheries, trade, environment and public works were also supported by UNDP in 1987. Resources were also channelled to developing countries to assist special efforts in specific areas through the six funds administered by UNDP or its Administrator (see p. 408).

On 18 June,(21) the Council approved 44 country programmes and that of national liberation movements (African National Congress of South Africa, Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, South West Africa People's Organization (Namibia)) within the limits of their illustrative IPFs for 1987-1991, taking into account the balance of overexpenditure and underexpenditure of their 1982-1986 IPFs. It took note of the regional programme for Africa and the extension of 16 country programmes, and approved global projects for the improved control of animal trypanosomiasis, development of wheat varieties for marginal areas, technology transfer on selected food crops for the semi-arid tropics and human resources development for generation and transfer of root and tuber crops technology. The Council agreed that, in the absence of a country programme for Afghanistan for the fourth cycle, the Administrator would continue to appraise and approve projects consistent with UNDP rules.

Country programmes by region

Africa

In a report on implementation of selected country programmes in the Africa region during 1987,(22) the UNDP Administrator stated that, for the fourth (1987-1991) planning cycle, 31 country programmes with total UNDP resources of $768.6 million were approved by the Governing Council in 1986 and 1987. A total of 1,200 projects continued from the third (1982-1986) to the fourth cycle and an additional 486 newly approved projects began in 1987. When projects financed under the Special Measures Fund for LDCs, Special Programme Resources and Special Industrial Services were included, the number of projects with budgets for 1987 reached 1,754. The further inclusion of projects financed by other resources and trust funds brought the total to about 1,900.

The sectoral allocation of resources for Africa took into account the priorities identified in UN-PAAERD(2) and were concentrated as follows: food and agriculture (including water), 45.2 per cent; support sectors (agro-industries, transport and communications, trade and finance), 18.3 per cent; human resources development, 14.8 per cent; economic planning and administration, 15.2 per cent; and other sectors, 6.5 per cent.

Highest importance was attached to improving co-ordination of assistance to African countries and to mobilizing additional resources in support of their economic recovery efforts. During the year, round-table conferences were held for the Central African Republic and the Niger. For the former, announcements of annual assistance amounting to $190 million were made against the financing requirements of the public investment programme estimated at $160 million per year for the following three years. Financing announced for the Niger exceeded $390 million per year against external financing requirements for the public sector estimated at a yearly average of $350 million for the period 1987-1991. During 1986-1987, sector or special programme consultations were organized in Benin, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Chad, the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe and Togo.

Total resources under UNDP inter-country programmes for Africa in the fourth cycle amounted to $211.9 million, of which $195.7 million represented IPF resources and $16.2 million Special Programme Resources, third-party cost-sharing and UNDP trust funds. The inter-country programme focused on four areas of concentration: research and development for food production, productivity and management for production of goods and services, natural resources and infrastructure.

At the regional level, UNDP provided funding for a number of projects in a variety of areas to be executed by ECA and for others being formulated in collaboration with ECA and OAU. The regional programme also supported a series of consultative processes to strengthen co-ordination in respect of African economic recovery, both within the United Nations system and between the system and Governments, donors, regional and subregional groups and NGOs.

Arab States and Europe

The Administrator, in a report on implementation of selected country programmes in the Arab States and Europe during 1987,(23) said that responsibility for the Arab States and for the European programmes was once again vested in a single organizational unit within UNDP, an arrangement which had been in place until 1978 when it had been divided into two units.

Twenty-one country programmes had been approved for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) by the end of 1987. Of the remaining 10 programmes, 9 would be ready for presentation in 1988. Bearing in mind the situation in Lebanon, the Governing Council had renewed an ad hoc arrangement authorizing the Administrator to approve the use of UNDP funds from the IPF on a project-by-project basis. The report assessed the region's country programmes approved by the Council in 1987 and the European regional programme (1987-1991). The latter programme, approved by the Council in February, involved all 33 member Governments of the Economic Commission for Europe and was developed by task forces of specialists in the priority areas of energy, the environment, science and technology, transport and communications, and management. The programme's main principles were that high-priority technologies should be selected for development and application, that the substantive workload should be divided among the countries according to their specific comparative advantages, and that self-sustaining networks should be created to continue the development process. By the end of 1987, 27 of the 35 projects were either well into their preparatory phase or already in their main phase.

The report stated that some 35 projects were the subject of in-depth reviews or evaluations during 1987 and described four of them as examples: strengthening of the geological survey (Somalia); training in post-investment maintenance (Morocco); information network (Albania); and an inter-country project, upgrading of industrial property systems in Arab countries.

The report also described preparations for the fourth inter-country programme for the Arab States (1988-1992), co-ordination of assistance, and management actions taken within the UNDP Regional Bureau for Arab States and European Programmes.

Asia and the Pacific

In his annual report on implementation of selected country programmes in Asia and the Pacific,(24) the Administrator said that during 1987 nine country programmes and the inter-country programme for the region were approved by the Governing Council, leaving only one country programme (Maldives) to be approved. For the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), $1,180 million of assistance was earmarked for the region, 11 per cent higher than for the previous cycle (1982-1986). Of that amount, $997 million (84 per cent) was for country-specific projects and $183 million was for inter-country projects. In addition, for 1987, cost-sharing expenditures on projects by recipient countries and third parties amounted to some 3.5 per cent of total funds disbursed in the region. UNDP resources for the region were also supplemented by special funds.

In 1987, the value of project-delivered assistance amounted to $234 million, of which $201 million was through country projects and $33 million through regional projects, comparing favourably with the record levels of 1986. Sectoral allocation of resources continued to give prominence to primary activities (agriculture and natural resources), which absorbed one third of budgeted funds. Special themes assuming more importance in the region during the fourth cycle included the promotion of women in development, the wider utilization of NGOs, private sector facilitation, economic reconstruction and TCDC.

Project approvals for the fourth inter-country programme for Asia and the Pacific (1987-1991), which was approved by the Governing Council in February, reached $144 million by the end of 1987, representing 85 per cent of the programmed resource level of $170.1 million. 'The fourth cycle regional programme comprised 97 ongoing projects and 108 project proposals, with a total approximate value of $170 million. It encompassed all the major development sectors, with the largest share—21 per cent or $35 million—reserved for support to transport and communications, in keeping with the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994) (see p. 537). Other sectors receiving major shares were agriculture, forestry, fisheries, natural resources, development planning and science and technology.

At the subregional level, in addition to regional projects in which member countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) participated individually, the ASEAN subprogramme was allocated $10.27 million, compared with $7.55 million in the previous cycle. With regard to the Pacific island developing countries, a subregional meeting of aid co-ordinators of those countries endorsed 29 projects to form the South Pacific component of the regional programme, amounting to $28.8 million.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Administrator, in a report on implementation of selected country programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean during 1987,(25) stated that the region's high capacity to implement an increasing programme was demonstrated by the fact that the 1987 actual expenditure of IPF resources was likely to reach $63 million, almost $4 million over the expenditure target. Total delivery in 1987 would exceed $100 million. Of the 1987-1991 IPF resources totalling $288 million, $155.7 million had been committed in approved project budgets which, as of December, represented 54 per cent of the total.

As of December 1987, 100 projects had been approved for a total cost of $154.9 million, of which $58.4 million came from IPF funds and $96.5 million were under cost-sharing arrangements with various sources. The sectoral distribution of the total amount approved was as follows: science and technology, 18.6 per cent; infrastructure, 16.9 per cent; agriculture, 16.1 per cent; planning and public sector, 11.8 per cent; education, 8.6 per cent; TCDC, 7.9 per cent; industry, 6.6 per cent; social development, 5.4 per cent; disaster and humanitarian aid, 2.9 per cent; health, 2.3 per cent; employment and culture, 1.9 per cent; and private sector, 1 per cent. While IPF funds were primarily allocated to agriculture ($16.8 million), cost-sharing was concentrated in infrastructure and science and technology ($42.5 million).

Of the country programmes presented to the Governing Council in 1987 (see p. 410), the priority areas of attention were economic reactivation; public sector management; critical poverty, including the informal sector; science and technology; and external debt management.

A review of the Jamaica country programme was carried out in September 1987 to examine progress in promoting its three major themes-human resources development, export promotion and technology. The review also considered the three regional themes of science and technology, critical poverty and public policy/administrative reform and the overall UNDP focus on private sector development, new partners (NGOs), women in development and the environment. The review proved useful in enabling the Government and UNDP to confirm the validity of the programme's overall direction while making adjustments to accommodate new needs.

The report also gave a brief account of selected individual projects: social emergency fund (Bolivia); training courses in project formulation and management (Brazil); development of biological processes and their industrial application in the bacterial leaching of copper ores (Chile); support to the national rehabilitation plan (Colombia); small-scale fisheries development (El Salvador); reactivation of the industrial zone in the southern outskirts of Lima (Peru); the regional programme on biotechnology; and Caribbean rural development and advisory training services.

The Administrator also reported on co-ordination activities carried out for Bolivia, Haiti and the Caribbean.

Indicative planning figures

In a March 1987 note to the Governing Council on implementation of the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991),(26) the Administrator described revisions made to certain country indicative planning figures for the fourth cycle since their establishment by the Council in 1985.(27) In 1986,(28) the Council had designated the front-line States as economically disadvantaged States in southern Africa, resulting in Lesotho, Swaziland and the United Republic of Tanzania being awarded one supplementary point as new beneficiaries under that category. Also in 1986,(29) the General Assembly had included Kiribati, Mauritania and Tuvalu in the list of LDCs. Three additional supplementary points were awarded to Kiribati and Tuvalu. Since Mauritania had already been treated as if it were an LDC, no change occurred in its IPF calculation. Suriname informed the Administrator, and the World Bank confirmed, that the 1983 per capita gross national product (GNP) for Suriname had been revised from $3,420 to $2,750. Suriname's fourth cycle IPF had therefore been recalculated so that it would receive no less than 100 per cent of its IPF for the third cycle.

The revisions resulted in no net IPF increase for Kiribati, Lesotho, Swaziland and Tuvalu. The IPF increases for Suriname and the United Republic of Tanzania would be financed from funds set aside for that purpose under unallocated resources.

On 19 June,(30) the Council took note of the Administrator's recalculation of fourth cycle IPFs. It also noted an oral presentation by the Associate Administrator regarding a request by Nicaragua that it be allowed to spread repayment of $3 million in IPF resources previously borrowed over both the fourth and fifth programming cycles to avoid curtailment of IPF-financed activities. The Council asked the Administrator to effect during the fourth cycle full repayment of the IPF amount borrowed by Nicaragua and authorized him to permit Nicaragua to borrow up to $2 million from the fifth cycle IPF.

Also in June, the Council considered the IPF for Namibia (see p. 1032).

Programme implementation

In accordance with a 1986 Governing Council request,(31) the Administrator submitted a review of programme and project activities,(32) which included a section on implementation of measures to improve programme/project quality. He outlined work being carried out by the Programme Review Committee, by project appraisal committees, established in each of the Regional Bureaux, and by the Action Committee, which reviewed country, regional, interregional and global IPF-funded projects not covered by the authority delegated to resident representatives.

The report also mentioned consideration of various proposals to ensure improved performance by executing agencies, including the introduction of disincentives and penalty schemes. However, it was concluded that penalty schemes were not practicable in the UNDP context and that UNDP should pursue other options to ensure performance accountability by the executing agencies.

Also discussed were: a review of selected projects approved by resident representatives within their approval authority in 1984-1985; programme management information; revision of the Policies and Procedures Manual; and development of a training programme.

The Administrator concluded that satisfactory progress was being made in implementing measures to improve programme/project quality. Some aspects which either involved major policy or procedural shifts or were linked to other management considerations under review required more deliberation. He presented no specific recommendations but assured the Council that he would continue to give priority to improving the quality and effectiveness of UNDP-financed programmes and projects.

On 18 June,(33) the Council noted the Administrator's decision to ensure that the Programme Review Committee was involved early in the country programming process and asked that the next annual report on programme quality include information on the procedural framework established by the Administrator for mid-term reviews of country and inter-country programmes. It welcomed the strengthened mechanism for project appraisal, which should lead to its speeding up, and noted that proposed changes in project development procedures should be undertaken to increase the capacity of recipient Governments in the critical early stages of project design. The Administrator was asked to report in 1988 on the outcome of initiatives to improve management information systems relating to programme activities, specifically the substantive and qualitative aspects, and urged him to ensure completion of the revision of the Policies and Procedures Manual by the end of 1987 and its prompt distribution in all working languages. The Council reiterated its 1986 decision(34) urging the Administrator to initiate measures to improve performance by executing agencies so that they were fully accountable for fulfilling their obligations in executing UNDP-supported projects. The resumption of annual agency review meetings was welcomed and the Administrator was asked to report thereon in 1988, including proposals to ensure agency accountability.

Co-ordination of technical assistance

In accordance with a 1985 Governing Council decision,(35) the Administrator submitted in April 1987 a report on co-ordination of technical assistance.(36) The report stated that developing countries were responsible for determining their own policies and priorities and the central responsibility for aid co-ordination lay with them. Also, as multilateral ODA in 1985 was a mere 15 per cent of the total provided to developing countries, aid co-ordination problems could not be solved by the United Nations system alone-the fullest collaboration among the members of the United Nations system, bilateral donors and recipient Governments had to be obtained. The solution was to assist Governments to strengthen their capabilities to co-ordinate external assistance more effectively; there was also a need for more discipline on the part of both the United Nations system and donor countries to respect the stated priorities of Governments. Other conclusions showed that: the national technical co-operation assessments and programmes (NATCAPs) scheme should be considered as an effective means of establishing priorities in technical co-operation and thereby assisting co-ordination; the UNDP yearly development co-operation report could be utilized to provide data on levels and nature of aid; JCGP represented a significant mechanism for more complementary and effective joint programming; and donors should adopt a more consistent approach in terms of trust funding and co-financing when advocating an expanded role for UNDP as the central funding agency.

On 18 June,(37) the Governing Council welcomed the report's emphasis on the need for recipient Governments to determine their own policies and priorities and to co-ordinate technical assistance programmes and projects, and supported the Administrator's efforts to assist recipient countries to strengthen their co-ordination mechanisms. The Council supported the principle behind co-ordinating mechanisms such as NATCAPS and round-table meetings and urged their expanded coverage after review and modification. It endorsed the Administrator's proposals to improve the quality of development co-operation reports and to issue annually a UNDP report on the state of technical co-operation and called on donors to follow a consistent approach in United Nations system governing bodies regarding the establishment of trust funds. The Administrator's initiative to present proposals on rationalizing the terms and conditions of technical co-operation with a view to encouraging donors to adopt standard modalities for technical co-operation and his intention to hold bilateral discussions on the subject with donors and recipient countries were noted. He was asked to submit those proposals in 1988. The Administrator and the DIEC Director-General were asked to promote the use of UNDP country programmes as a frame of reference for the programming of technical assistance by the organizations, organs and bodies of the United Nations system.

Programme planning and management

Evaluation

In March 1987, the UNDP Administrator submitted to the Governing Council a report on evaluation,(38) dealing with the status of steps taken by him to improve evaluation policies and procedures. In response to a 1986 Council request,(31) the report also gave information on harmonization of monitoring, evaluation and reporting procedures, criteria for selecting projects for evaluation, the integration of evaluation results into UNDP activities, and strengthening of government evaluation capacity.

The report also gave the results of the UNDP review of evaluations in three major areas of concern: the sustainability of project results; training as an aspect of human resources development; and issues affecting the role of women in development.

Short-term advisory services

In response to a 1985 Governing Council request (39) the Administrator submitted in March 1987 a note(40) in which he evaluated the activities of the focal point for short-term advisory services (STAS), established for a trial period of two years in 1985.

The Administrator stated that, considering that STAS was a new type of service which largely addressed itself to the private sector, which previously had had no reason to request UNDP assistance, the response during the trial period could be considered encouraging. New requests were averaging four to six per month and were expected to grow at a rapid rate as the performance and potential of the programme became more widely known. He therefore recommended an extension of the trial period.

On 19 June,(41) the Council asked that efforts be made to procure STAS from underutilized countries in order to achieve a better geographical distribution on the supply side. It extended the experimental period until 31 December 1989 and approved a maximum of $450,000 from Special Programme Resources to finance the focal point's activities in 1988-1989.

Government execution

In his review of programme and project activities in April 1987,(32) the Administrator stated that a review and assessment of government execution had been carried out as requested by the Council in 1985.(42) A desk study was undertaken at UNDP headquarters and replies to a questionnaire which had been sent to field offices on the subjects of government execution and add-on funds were analysed. The Administrator recommended that the arrangement whereby add-on funds were provided be retained and that resident representatives be permitted to utilize add-on funds at any stage of a project's life in order to strengthen Governments' execution capabilities through the provision of resources to them for improved project implementation, through increased involvement of agencies and the Office for Projects Execution, or through the direct support of the field office. He also recommended that 1 percentage point of the 13-percentage-point "add-on" in respect of government-executed projects be applied to cover the Division of Finance's additional staff costs associated with that method of project execution.

On 19 June,(43) the Governing Council extended until 31 December 1988 the add-on arrangements as described in a 1982 decision(44) and took note that the Administrator was undertaking an evaluation study to assess the impact and cost-effectiveness of government-executed projects and a detailed quantitative and qualitative assessment of government execution. It asked the Administrator to report in 1988 on the outcome of that evaluation, giving specific attention to the question of auditing and to the UNDP headquarters' work-load associated with it. The Administrator was authorized to charge the Division of Finance's additional staff costs associated with government execution to UNDP support costs to a maximum of $600,000 from 1 July 1987 for 18 months, pending decisions on the long-term financing of those costs to be taken by the Council in 1988 on the basis of the requested evaluation report.

Procurement

In response to two 1986 Governing Council decisions,(45) the Administrator submitted a report on procurement of equipment and services with special reference to procurement from developing countries.(46) The report gave the legislative background to the subject of procurement, including increased procurement from developing countries, listed the constraints faced, discussed steps being taken by UNDP and the executing agencies to increase procurement from developing countries, and suggested ways in which developing countries themselves could promote that effort. The Administrator stated that UNDP was committed to increasing procurement from developing countries and that both UNDP and the agencies had taken steps to expand such procurement, with further steps planned to strengthen those efforts. He believed that the United Nations system's efforts to improve the situation needed to be supplemented by those of the developing countries themselves in working on constraints that were wholly or in part external to the system. The subject was also discussed by the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC (see p. 428).

On 18 June,(47) the Council noted with concern the drop in 1986 in procurement from developing countries. It invited executing agencies to contribute to the work of the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Unit (IAPSU), which was planning to produce country binders of supply Sources in developing countries, and asked the Unit to extend missions for that purpose to as many countries as possible. The Administrator was 'urged to take further steps to increase procurement from developing countries and the participating agencies were urged to intensify their efforts in that regard. The Council considered it important that Governments take steps to promote procurement from developing countries and invited them to collect and disseminate information on local procurement capabilities/bidding opportunities in their countries. It asked the Administrator to assist Governments to collect data for directories of local procurement sources and to channel that information to IAPSU and executing agencies. Agencies were asked to provide the permanent missions of developing countries with notices on business/bidding opportunities and to ensure that statistical data submitted to the Council reflected the country both of procurement and of origin as well as source of funds. The Council noted steps taken by the Administrator to modify the procurement practices of the Office for Projects Execution, including evaluation criteria, and asked him to report in 1988 on steps taken, results and further action planned to promote more procurement from developing countries.

Also in response to a 1986 Council request,(48) the Administrator submitted an analysis of responses to a questionnaire on agency procurement practices.(49) Responses were received from 28 agency procurement services in answer 'to questions regarding procurement requests, identification of suppliers/vendors/bidders, the procurement process, preparation for bids, receipt of bids or proposals, evaluation, the contracts committee,' contract awards, post-contract follow-up and other matters.

On 19 June,(50) the Council urged IAPSU to work with the agencies to expand the area of commonality in procurement, particularly with a view to increasing procurement from developing and underutilized donor countries. The Administrator was asked to include in the report requested in the Council's 18 June decision on procurement (see above) detailed information on IAPSU.

Financing

In his annual review of the financial situation in 1987,(51) the Administrator stated that total income was $1,196.3 million ($95.5 million higher than forecast) and total expenditures $933.7 million ($49.6 million lower than forecast). As a result of the surplus of main programme income over expenditure, the balance of UNDP general resources increased from $313.9 million at 31 December 1986 to $533.2 million at 31 December 1987. Income from voluntary contributions totalled $887.1 million. After applying the accounting linkage for local office costs, income amounted to $880.7 million ($28.3 million higher than forecast). That resulted from Governments meeting their commitments to UNDP for the year and significantly reducing amounts outstanding from prior years. Most significant, however, was the impact of the continued weakness of the United States dollar which affected the UNDP resource base in two ways: the value of pledges made in national currencies increased by $52.3 million in dollar terms; and the value of assets held by UNDP in various currencies increased by $96.6 million in dollar terms. For the second year in a row, pledges made to UNDP in dollar terms increased substantially; pledges for 1987 were 11.7 per cent higher than for 1986 and the 1986 increase was 14.7 per cent. The 1987 increase resulted from exchange rate changes of 6.7 per cent and an average increase in pledges in national currency of 5 per cent. The Administrator cautioned, however, that the benefits gained from the weakening United States dollar could not be expected to continue.

Field programme expenditures in 1987 totalled $702 million, of which $592 million represented expenditures against IPFS (including $1 million in respect of add-on funds), $79 million against cost-sharing and $31 million against supplementary programmes in the UNDP account. The IPF programme expenditure of $592 million represented an increase of 5 per cent over 1986.

In his annual report,(1) the Administrator noted that 1987 was another record year for income received, with an estimated total income of $1,149 million. That amount comprised contributions to UNDP and UNDP-administered funds, including voluntary pledges, cost-sharing arrangements and sub-trust funds. Complementing the surge in income were the greater volume and value of projects approved; approvals rose in number and value by 29 and 54 per cent, respectively.

Total expenditure from UNDP central resources totalled $936.4 million, of which $702.1 million was spent on field programme activities, $79.9 million on agency support costs, $150.5 million on UNDP administrative and programme support costs, and $3.9 million on sectoral support and other field-level costs.

Through its 112 field offices serving 152 countries and Territories, UNDP offered Governments and their other development partners numerous services extending beyond its central responsibilities. Field offices played a major role in catalysing, co-ordinating and promoting linkages to obtain parallel financing. Figures reported by 49 field offices indicated that at least $133 million in parallel financing could be attributed directly to UNDP-assisted activities during 1987. Field offices continued to support non-UNDP-financed projects through UNDP'S field infrastructure. In 1987, 69 offices reported assistance in implementing 1,238 non-UNDP-financed projects with total expenditures of $206 million. Of that amount, major services were provided for 842 projects with expenditures of $149 million. A further 396 projects were assisted to a lesser degree. UNDP assisted recipients of World Bank loans by placing at their disposal its field-based delivery system to support implementation of technical co-operation projects. Those management services were also available to recipients of bilateral assistance. The value of management services agreements signed in 1987, excluding IFAD, amounted to $15.6 million.

Investment commitments related to UNDP-assisted projects amounted to $10.4 billion in 1987, almost the same as 1986. Developing countries provided the largest component of investment commitments with $5.2 billion reported for 1987, a 15.5 per cent increase over 1986. Multilateral organizations constituted the second largest source of financing, with a $3.8 billion commitment in 1987 as against $4.3 billion for 1986; loans and credits from the World Bank group of $2.4 billion accounted for almost 63 per cent of reported commitments from those sources. Investment commitments from bilateral sources totalled $1.3 billion as against $1.6 billion in 1986. As in previous years, the public sector was the principal source of reported investment commitments in 1987, with $10.2 billion contributed—about 98 per cent of reported investment commitments.

In 1987, project expenditures by the Office for Project Services reached $159 million, a 26 per cent increase over 1986. Levels of expenditures increased for all sources of funds, with the largest amount, $64.5 million, disbursed under projects financed from UNDP core funds, an increase of 12.4 per cent over 1986. As in 1986, the most significant rise in project expenditures was accounted for by activities undertaken through management services, which rose to $53 million in 1987, an 80 per cent increase over the previous year.

The audited financial statements of UNDP for 1987(52) showed that the total of unexpended UNDP resources increased from $461.1 million in 1986 to $723 million as at 31 December 1987.

Contributions. The audited financial statements for 1987(52) showed that total income from contributions to the UNDP account was $1,024.9 million. That included contributions from Governments and other sources as follows: voluntary contributions, $880.7 million ($887.1 million, less transfers to government local office costs of $6.5 million); voluntary contributions to the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries (SMF/LDC), $14.5 million; cost-sharing contributions, $118 million; and cash counterpart contributions for projects, $14.1 million. Exchange adjustments on the collection of contributions of $2.3 million were deducted to derive the total.

As at 31 December 1987, pledges made in 1987 to the UNDP account for use in 1988 amounted to $496 million; pledges for 1988 for SMF/LDC amounted to $7.5 million. The financial statements gave a breakdown of contributions by Governments in 1987 and of pledges for 1988.

In his annual report,(1) the UNDP Administrator stated that during 1987 five major donor countries raised their contributions by 8 per cent or more in United States dollar terms. Among recipient donors, 18 countries increased their contributions appreciably. Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden confirmed their commitment to UNDP'S forward planning by announcing future years' contributions, and the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom made supplementary pledges for 1988 totalling $22.3 million.

Adjustments in exchange rates subsequent to the November 1987 Pledging Conference resulted in a further appreciation in the value of pledges in United States dollar terms.

In a 19 June decision,(30) the Governing Council confirmed the principles established with regard to achieving net contributor status during the fourth (1987-1991) programming cycle for recipient countries with 1983 per capita GNP above $3,000, excluding island developing countries with a 1983 population of 1 million or less and with a 1983 per capita GNP between $3,000 and $4,200. It strongly urged Governments affected by those provisions to make voluntary contributions to UNDP to achieve net contributor status and asked the Administrator to continue consultations with those countries and report on the outcome in 1988. The Administrator was also asked to establish a programming profile for those countries that had not achieved net contributor status.

Budgets

Revised 1986- 1987 budget

Revised budget estimates of UNDP for the biennium 1986-1987 and budget estimates for 1988-1989(53) included for the first time UNIFEM and UNFSTD. The revised estimates for 1986-1987 amounted to $342.7 million (gross) and $288.5 million (net) for the organization as a whole. The 1.1 per cent increase in gross estimates over estimates given in 1986(54) was attributable to a $2.4 million volume increase in respect of the Office for Projects Execution, cost adjustments amounting to $3.5 million, offset by a currency release of $1 million and a downward inflation adjustment of $2 million.

In May,(56) the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) said it had no objection to the revised estimates but, should the Governing Council accept ACABQ's recommendation regarding amortization under the 1988-1989 budget estimates (see below), the appropriations for 1986-1987 would have to be adjusted upward.

UNDP Council action. On 19 June,(56) the Governing Council approved revised appropriations in the amount of $343,694,000 (gross), to finance the 1986-1987 biennial budget, and resolved that income estimates in an amount of $54,445,800 should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $289,248,200.

1988- 1989 budget

Budget estimates presented to the Governing Council for 1988-1989(53) included a number of organizational and other changes intended to improve the cost-effectiveness and efficiency of the organization. Estimates for the organization as a whole totalled $395.9 million (gross) or $326.6 million (net), which included an overall volume increase of $6.5 million (1.9 per cent), consisting principally of the incorporation of the Africa strengthening package in UNDP's core budget, as well as staff increases for UNV, UNCDF and UNIFEM. There was a slight staff decrease for UNRFRNRE.

In May 1987,(55) ACABQ recommended that a clearer explanation be provided for currency and inflation adjustments, including the rationale governing elements which were designated as cost adjustments and those included under inflation. It noted that, although the programme for office automation was discussed under the Division of Management Information Services, resources for its implementation were divided among various units; it trusted that future budgets would contain information on the totality of resources involved.

While not disputing the importance of aid co-ordination and providing support services to members of the United Nations family, ACABQ hoped that field offices' capacity to discharge IPF-related responsibilities would not be adversely affected by those demands on staff resources. It trusted that, wherever feasible, UNDP would seek reimbursement for services provided to other programmes.

With regard to core activities, ACABQ did not disagree with strengthening UNDP'S operational capability in Africa but would have welcomed a proposal for additional field posts instead of a Deputy Director headquarters post. It noted that the Division for Women in Development would maintain close working liaison with UNIFEM and stated that such a relationship was essential to avoid duplication of the two units' activities. Noting that, although the UNDP Geneva office would be relieved of its programme responsibilities because of reorganization, it would continue to be headed by an Assistant Administrator, ACABQ believed that the situation should be reviewed in the context of the overall responsibilities of the other seven Assistant Administrator posts. With regard to the amortization of capital costs associated with altering newly acquired space, ACABQ stated that such a mechanism should be used in the budget only if the amount approved for investment was to be expended in the same pattern as the amortization schedule; the appropriation decisions for both 1986-1987 and 1988-1989 should be revised to reflect accurately estimated expenditures.

Also before the Council was a note from the Secretary-General(57) drawing attention to a 1986 General Assembly resolution(58) calling for implementation of a recommendation of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18) which dealt with the need to reduce the number of posts at the Under-Secretary-General and Assistant Secretary-General levels (recommendation 15). (59)

UNDP Council action. On 19 June,(60) the Governing Council approved appropriations in the amount of $394,057,400 (gross) to finance the 1988-1989 biennial budget, and resolved that income estimates in an amount of $62,368,000 be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $331,689,400. The Council decided that the budgetary grading of the Director of the Geneva office should be retained at the Assistant Secretary-General level for the 1988-1989 biennium or until the departure of the incumbent, whichever was earlier, and asked the Administrator to review the role and functions of the Geneva office as a whole, including staffing grades, and to report to the Council in 1988. The Council authorized, on a temporary basis, the establishment of one additional Professional post and one additional General Service post for IAPSU, charged to the UNDP support-cost line. The Administrator was asked to review all types of expenditure charged to the support-cost line, especially in relation to the organization's administrative and programme support budget, and to present an action-oriented report in 1988. The Administrator was also asked to prepare a subject index of all Council decisions for distribution prior to the regular 1988 session and to report on progress on the index to the special session in February 1988.

Review of 1986 financial situation

In an April 1987 report,(61) the Administrator provided a comprehensive financial review of activities financed from the UNDP account during 1986 and of the financial position as at the end of that year. The report included estimates of anticipated resources and expenditures for 1987 and 1988, as well as information on cost-sharing activities, the status of SMF/LDC and Special Programme Resources, the placement of UNDP funds and the operational reserve, and the utilization of accumulated non-convertible currencies. Information was also provided on agency support-cost arrangements, the status of the reserve for construction loans to Governments, and management and other support services.

In accordance with a 1984 Council decision,(62) the Administrator provided information on the flow of contributions to and payments from the UNDP system in respect of each participating Government and on the shortfall of contributions to local office costs.

On 19 June,(63) the Council asked the Administrator to monitor the resource situation and report to it in February 1988 to seek guidance on whether a review of IPFs for the fourth cycle should be undertaken for the Council's consideration in June 1988. He was also asked to report on problems relating to utilization of currencies and to provide in 1988 a comprehensive review of experience gained on providing management services. The Council agreed that the formula for establishing the level of the operational reserve during the fourth cycle should be the same as that for the third cycle and approved the Administrator's proposal to use up to $650,000 from the reserve for construction loans to Governments to purchase appliances for rental to international staff.

Special Programme Resources

In response to a 1986 Governing Council request,(64) the Administrator, in a report on implementation of the fourth programming cycle 1987-1991,(26) proposed broad criteria for Special Programme Resources (SPR) allocations under the category of contingencies, namely, activities had to be of a priority nature, requiring special action by UNDP within the context of special programmes and/or initiatives undertaken by the donor and/or recipient community; activities should address either specific or sectoral development issues, with the need for action to address such issues having been identified by the General Assembly, the Governing Council or other international forums dealing with development issues; activities would not normally qualify for financing from IPF or other resources available to UNDP; and activities would be geared towards the special needs of regional or other selected target audiences which ordinarily might qualify for alternative sources of financing in UNDP, but for which funds were not readily available, in which cases bridge financing could be approved which would be reimbursable to SPR. The Administrator said that while the criteria were sufficiently broad to accommodate important activities for which there was sufficient priority interest and for which IPF or similar financing was not readily available, they would not encourage a proliferation of SPR allocations for what should be considered normal country or inter-country technical assistance activities.

With regard to fourth cycle carry-overs, the Administrator said that to the SPR funds authorized by the Council in 1986(64) to be carried over from the third to the fourth cycle was added the category of funds budgeted but not expended. The amounts carried over to the fourth cycle totalled $22.6 million.

On 19 June,(30) the Governing Council authorized the Administrator to implement his proposed criteria for future SPR allocations under contingencies, pending further review of those criteria in 1988. It approved the allocation of an additional $500,000 for the Project Development Facility from the fourth cycle SPR earmarking for programme development activities. The Administrator was asked to report in 1988 on the experience with the Facility, particularly with regard to the timely development of an adequate pipeline of projects as required for increased IPF programme delivery in line with fourth cycle delivery targets.

By a decision of 20 February,(65) the Council had authorized the Administrator to incur additional expenses, until June 1987, up to $500,000 for the Project Development Facility.

UNDP-administered funds

During 1987, nine new trust funds were established by the Administrator on behalf of UNDP.(66) They were: the Finland/UNDP trust fund for the construction of an agro-veterinary school in Rushashi, Rwanda; the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA)/UNDP trust fund to support the project entitled "Development of underground water resources in Mali"; the Netherlands trust fund for the special action programme for public administration and management; the trust fund for emergency assistance to Mozambique; the UNDP trust fund for receipt of payments by users of the African Project Development Facility; the CIDA/UNDP trust fund for the Bangladesh National Household Survey Capability Programme; the trust fund for the implementation-phase of the Nicosia master plan; the UNDP trust fund for participation of officials from developing countries in the Working Group of the Committee of the Whole; and the Finland trust fund for NATCAP activities. In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(58) the administration of the special economic assistance programmes became the responsibility of UNDP. Effective 1 August 1987, the trust fund for those programmes ($282,355) was transferred to UNDP. Contributions to those-funds received during the year, including the amount for the trust fund for special economic assistance programmes, amounted to $14.8 million. A trust-fund arrangement was established on behalf of UNCDF and three on behalf of UNSO. The value of those arrangements was approximately $4.6 million.

Voluntary contributions to the special purpose funds in 1987 (UNCDF, UNIFEM, UNFSTD, UNV, UNSO, UNRPNRE and the UNDP Energy Account) rose to $48.9 million from $41.4 million in 1986; income received by the funds from cost-sharing and sub-trust funds fell slightly to $26.6 million from $28.9 million in 1986.

In accordance with a 1986 Governing Council request,(67) the Administrator submitted in March 1987 a report(68) describing actions he had taken and proposed to take to rationalize and streamline the organizational and management arrangements in UNDP. It provided information on the establishment of various mechanisms in UNDP for review, appraisal and approval of programmes and projects financed from all sources of funds administered by the organization.

The Administrator had introduced changes in UNDP's organizational structure to ensure more effective management of trust funds and closer co-ordination between them and the main UNDP programme. He had also established mechanisms by which the criteria applied to the formulation and approval of programmes and projects financed from all funding sources were rigorous, uniform and consistent. Several measures had also been taken to harmonize policies, procedures and systems among the various funds. The Administrator expected the introduction of those improvements to make UNDP programmes more coherent and effective but, recognizing that the development environment was constantly changing, he would keep the management arrangements under continuous review and continue to consult with the Governing Council.

On 19 June,(69) the Council took note of the Administrator's conclusions regarding management and staffing arrangements for the programmes and funds under his responsibility and asked him to report in 1989 on experience gained in that regard. Also on 19 June,(70) the Council took note of the Administrator's report on trust funds established by him in 1986.(64)

Emergency Operation Trust Fund

In a May 1987 report,(71) the Administrator informed the Governing Council of action taken to implement a 1983 General Assembly resolution(72) on liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund and allocation of its remaining balance. With regard to the sum allocated to the UNDP Trust Fund for Countries Afflicted by Famine and Malnutrition, the Administrator reported that out of the slightly over $41 million in funds as at 31 December 1986, 138 projects with total budgets of $41 million had been approved or accepted in principle, leaving only a small balance unprogrammed. As to the amount allocated to the Pérez-Guerrero Trust Fund for Economic and Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (ECDC/TCDC), the balance as at 31 December 1986 was $6.5 million. A total of $2.4 million had been approved as of that date for three projects.

On 19 June,(73) the Council expressed satisfaction at the Administrator's action in approving assistance to urgently needed projects in countries afflicted by famine and malnutrition as a result of severe drought, with special emphasis on African countries. It took note of the status of projects concerning ECDC/TCDC and further noted the decision of the Group of 77 developing countries that only interest income earned on their share of the Pérez-Guerrero Trust Fund would be utilized to finance additional ECDC/TCDC projects for countries members of the Group, leaving intact the unencumbered funds as at 31 December 1986 of $4,998,652.

Agency support costs

ACC action. In April 1987, ACC adopted a decision(74) inviting the UNDP Administrator to bring to the attention of the Governing Council the requests of executing agencies for it to consider extending for a further five-year period (1987-1991) the minimum arrangements foreseen in a 1980 Council decision,(75) whereby no executing agency would receive for each of the years 1982 to 1986 less reimbursement in United States dollar terms than the amount received for 1981, unless 14 per cent of the amount of actual programme expenditures would provide a lower amount.

In May 1987,(76) the Administrator transmitted to the UNDP Governing Council a letter from the Chairman of the ACC Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary Questions) containing the ACC request. The Administrator also provided information showing the approximate additional amount of support-cost reimbursement which would be payable to the executing agencies in 1987 ($3.55 million) if the Council were to agree to the proposed extension.

Also before the Council was a request from the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) for reimbursement of additional support costs for 1986 as a result of currency fluctuations.⁽⁷⁷⁾ The Administrator, in his annual review of the financial situation, 1986,⁽⁶¹⁾ noted that the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) had projected deficits in its support-cost reimbursement from UNDP for 1986 and 1987 as a result of the weakening of the United States dollar against the Swiss franc, the currency of the agency's headquarters. While recognizing WMO's difficulties, the Administrator was aware that similar difficulties were to be faced by other agencies as a result of that and other factors and was therefore reluctant to recommend that an exception be made for one agency alone to the established principles of support-cost reimbursement.

On 19 June,⁽⁷⁸⁾ the Council, noting that the provisions of its 1980 decision on support-cost reimbursement were intended to provide temporary relief to executing agencies during a transitional period of five years, decided that the provisions should remain unchanged and not apply to the years 1987-1991. With regard to the UNIDO request, the Council noted that the average annual exchange rate of the UNIDO headquarters location had appreciated by more than 11 per cent against the United States dollar between 1985 and 1986 and authorized the Administrator to reimburse UNIDO for its 1986 support costs on the basis of 14 per cent of its UNDP-financed project delivery in that year. As to WMO, the Council invited it to prepare a financial statement for the years 1984 to 1986 showing actual support costs incurred by WMO in respect of UNDP-financed projects, delivery of such projects, similar information in respect of non-UNDP-funded projects, and support-cost reimbursement from non-UNDP sources. The WMO external auditors were asked to verify the amounts shown. The Council authorized the Administrator to make an additional reimbursement for support costs to WMO equal to the difference between amounts already reimbursed for 1984-1986 and the amounts to which WMO would be entitled, taking into account the support costs claimed by WMO; he should be satisfied that such support costs were in keeping with UNDP's definition of support costs used in the case of other agencies.

Sectoral support

In April 1987,⁽⁷⁹⁾ the UNDP Administrator transmitted to the Governing Council a report summarizing a review of the Senior Industrial Development Field Adviser (SIDFA) programme, undertaken in accordance with 1986 Council decision⁽⁸⁰⁾ and carried out by consultants hired jointly by UNIDO and UNDP. Based on the review and on extensive internal consultations held by both organizations, it was concluded that the programme should continue. The Administrator made a number of recommendations, including: SIDFAs should be an integral part of the UNDP field office team, performing their functions under the direction of the UNDP resident representative; the location of SIDFAs should be periodically reviewed to ensure their optimal utilization; UNIDO should administer the programme and all SIDFAs should have UNIDO contracts, but UNDP's clearance would be required in selecting, locating, transferring and promoting them; UNIDO staff members, project team leaders and candidates from the market should constitute sources for selecting SIDFAs, who should be appointed at the P-5/D-1 level, with initial contracts of two years; UNDP's financial contribution should not exceed the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) allocation; and the sum of $6.4 million, withheld in accordance with the Council's 1986 decision,⁽⁸⁰⁾ would be allocated to implement the programme in 1990 and 1991. The Administrator would review the programme in 1990 and inform the Council on the nature and scope of UNDP's involvement in it during the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996).

On 19 June,⁽⁸¹⁾ the Council endorsed the Administrator's proposals, with the amendment that SIDFA posts be classified only up to the P-5 level, with current D-1 incumbents retaining that level. It agreed that the $6.4 million should be used for 1990 and 1991 to cover a maximum number of SIDFA posts. The Administrator was asked to provide in his annual review of the financial situation details on implementing the SIDFA programme, including the status of financial contributions from UNDP, UNIDO or other sources. He was also asked to review the whole sectoral support programme and report to the Council in 1990 on the nature and scope of UNDP support to the sectoral programmes of the specialized agencies during the fifth programming cycle.

UNDP/UNIDO manufactures evaluation

In accordance with a 1984 Economic and Social Council request,⁽⁸²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to CPC (New York, 27 April-29 May) a report on implementation of its recommendations on the UNDP-financed technical co-operation activities of UNIDO in the field of manufactures.⁽⁸³⁾ In the light of UNIDO's having become a specialized agency in 1986,⁽⁸⁴⁾ the report was a factual review rather than a critical analysis of initiatives taken to implement the CPC recommendations. It found that UNIDO and UNDP had in-initiated and implemented action on the recommendations of CPC, the UNDP Governing Council and the UNIDO Industrial Development Board. While many of the actions taken were too recent to make a valid assessment, it was found that UNIDO and UNDP had taken the CPC recommendations seriously into account, both at the secretariat level and at the level of their intergovernmental bodies. Efforts to ensure that improved standards and procedures were accompanied by an adequate support system for co-ordination and backstopping, as well as adequate training of field and headquarters staff and government officials in order for the whole process to be effective, should be fully supported, said the report. Attention should also be given to changing circumstances, particularly in terms of increased technical capacity of developing countries, so that the roles and responsibilities of UNIDO, UNDP and Governments could be adapted accordingly.

CPC action. CPC endorsed(85) the Secretary-General's conclusions and recommendations, with particular reference to the following: the UNDP training programme should be extended to additional recipient countries as resources permitted; UNDP and UNIDO should undertake a series of evaluations of projects in a particular sector or area of interest, the results of which should be combined into thematic evaluations of the entire sector or area; UNDP was urged to expedite its work on revising the Policies and Procedures Manual for programme and project design, formulation, implementation, monitoring and evaluation, recognizing Governments' role in determining their own development goals and objectives; UNDP and the specialized agencies should consider establishing sectoral guidelines; to enhance the effectiveness of the UNDP Central Evaluation Office, consideration should be given to relocating it to the Office of the Administrator; and the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly should invite the Industrial Development Board and the Governing Council to consider the review's recommendations, together with the CPC conclusions.

Accounts and auditing

Accounts for 1986

The financial statements of UNDP for the year ended 31 December 1986, together with the report of the Board of Auditors, were submitted to the General Assembly in August 1987.(86) The statements also covered UNDP-administered trust funds.

ACABQ, in September,(87) commented on the Board's findings.

By resolution 42/206, the Assembly accepted the financial report and audited financial statements and the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors and asked UNDP'S governing body to require its executive head to take steps to correct situations or conditions that gave rise to the qualification of the Board's audit opinions.

Audit reports for 1985

In April 1987, the UNDP Administrator submitted to the Governing Council the audited accounts and audit reports of executing agencies relating to funds allocated to them by UNDP as at 31 December 1985.(88) He included comments on substantive observations of the auditors, UNDP follow-up with agencies with respect to such observations, and a summary of action taken by UNDP in response to a 1986 Council decision (80) on the need for long-form narrative audit reports that included observations on the effectiveness of financial management.

On 19 June,(89) the Council reaffirmed its wish that increasing emphasis be given by the external auditors of funds allocated to executing agencies by UNDP to preparing such long-form reports.

Staff-related matters

Job classification

In January 1987,(90) the UNDP Administrator drew the Governing Council's attention to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(91) by which it approved the results of the job classification exercise for the General Service and related categories in the United Nations Secretariat with effect from 1 January 1985. In view of that decision, the Administrator considered it appropriate to request the same effective date for UNDP, rather than the 1 January 1986 implementation date authorized by the Council in 1986.(92)

On 20 February,(93) the Council authorized the Administrator to revise the implementation date of the results of the job classification exercise for the General Service and related categories in New York to 1 January 1985.

Project personnel

In accordance with a 1985 Governing Council request(94) for a report on trends in the recruitment, cost and utilization of project personnel and other personnel working in development co-operation, the Administrator submitted a number of proposals, which were approved by the Council on 20 February.(95) The proposals, which were annexed to the Council decision, were: for the Council's 1987 regular session, 1986 information on project personnel should be updated and refined to remove inconsistencies and supply additional information; because of inadequacies of the data base and lack of precision in defining certain terms, UNDP should consult with agencies to es-establish a data base containing the kind of information required by the Working Group of the Committee of the Whole; case-studies should be undertaken by projects with varying component mixes of different categories of personnel to determine the extent to which projects' objectives had been achieved, whether the right mix of experts had been used, and whether a different personnel mix would have achieved the same or better results and would have been more cost-effective; and UNDP should take steps to ensure that the best mix of personnel was always identified and used.

REFERENCES

- (1)DP/1988/18 & Add.1-6. (2)YUN 1986, p. 446, GA res. S-13/2, annex, 1 June 1986. (3)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/10). (4)YUN 1986, p. 418. (5)E/1987/25. (6)Ibid. (dec. 87/1). (7)Ibid. (dec. 87/2). (8)Ibid. (dec. 87/3). (9)Ibid. (dec. 87/9). (10)Ibid. (dec. 87/51). (11)Ibid. (dec. 87/53). (12)Ibid. (dec. 87/54). (13)Ibid. (dec. 87/52). (14)YUN 1986, p. 420. (15)DP/1987/64. (16)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/20). (17)Ibid. (dec. 87/50). (18)DP/1987/4 & Add.1. (19)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/4). (20)DP/1987/25 & Add.1. (21)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/27). (22)DP/1988/27. (23)DP/1988/29. (24)DP/1988/28. (25)DP/1988/30. (26)DP/1987/22. (27)YUN 1985, p. 471. (28)YUN 1986, p. 441. (29)Ibid., p. 406, GA res. 41/186, 8 Dec. 1986. (30)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/25). (31)YUN 1986, p. 425. (32)DP/1987/16. (33)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/13). (34)YUN 1986, p. 421. (35)YUN 1985, p. 472. (36)DP/1987/15/Add.1. (37)3/1987/25 (dec. 87/17). (38)DP/1987/21. (39)YUN 1985, p. 781. (40)DP/1987/17. (41)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/18). (42)YUN 1985, p. 474. (43)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/14). (44)YUN 1982, p. 643. (45)YUN 1986, pp. 426 & 427. (46)DP/1987/19. (47)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/19). (48)YUN 1986, p. 426. (49)DP/1987/10. (50)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/46). (51)DP/1988/51 & Add.1.2. (52)A/43/5/Add.1. (53)DP/1987/55 (vol. I) & (vol. I)/Corr.1 & (vol. II) & (vol. II)/Corr.1 & (vol. II)/Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1. (54)YUN 1986, p. 428. (55)DP/1987/56. (56)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/44). (57)DP/1987/67. (58)YUN 1986, p. 1024, GA res. 41/213, 19 Dec. 1986. (59)Ibid., p. 1050. (60)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/43). (61)DP/1987/54 & Add.1. (62)YUN 1984, p. 449. (63)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/42). (64)YUN 1986, p. 429. (65)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/6). (66)DP/1988/53. (67)YUN 1986, p. 430. (68)DP/1987/53. (69)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/35). (70)Ibid. (dec. 87/45). (71)DP/1987/61. (72)YUN 1983, p. 537, GA res. 38/201, 20 Dec. 1983. (73)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/24). (74)ACC/1987/DEC/I-12 (dec. 1987/8). (75)YUN 1980, p. 592. (76)DP/1987/69. (77)DP/1987/68. (78)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/49). (79)DP/1987/58. (80)YUN 1986, p. 431. (81)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/48). (82)YUN 1984, p. 972, ESC res. 1984/61 A, 26 Jul 1984. (83)E/AC.51/1987/3. (84)YUN 1986, p. 1201. (85)A/42/16. (86)A/42/5/Add.1. (87)A/42/579. (88)DP/1987/9 & Add.1. (89)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/47). (90)DP/1987/62. (91)YUN 1986, p. 1058, GA res. 41/209, sect. IX, 11 Dec. 1986. (92)Ibid., p. 432. (93)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/7). (94)YUN 1985, p. 484. (95)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/5).

PUBLICATIONS

Planning and Control of Public Current Expenditure: Lessons of Country Experience (ST/TCD/SER.E/7), Sales No. E.87.II.H.3. Compendium of Approved Projects, 1987, Sales No. E.87.III.B.2.

Other technical co-operation

UN programmes

The United Nations, mainly through its Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), continued to provide technical assistance to developing countries during 1987. The Secretary-General reported to the UNDP Governing Council(1) on policy issues, DTCD's technical co-operation programme and those of other entities in the United Nations Secretariat.

In 1987 the United Nations delivered a technical co-operation programme of $229 million, compared with $232 million in 1986, a decrease of 1 per cent in project expenditures. Of that amount, DTCD executed a programme of $136.2 million. UNDP-financed projects represented $87.9 million; projects financed by UNFPA accounted for $15.5 million; $26.7 million was financed by trust funds; and $6.1 million was expended under the United Nations regular programme for technical co-operation. In comparison with 1986, budgets decreased by $12.9 million (7.4 per cent) to $163 million, and the delivery decreased by 6.7 per cent. The implementation rate was 84 per cent.

The United Nations regular programme for technical co-operation financed activities totalling $12.2 million through DTCD, the regional commissions, the Centre for Human Rights, the Division of Narcotic Drugs, the Office of Legal Affairs, the Centre for Human Settlements, the Centre on Transnational Corporations, UNCTAD and UNEP. UNDP-financed projects carried out by those entities totalled some $123 million.

DTCD activities

The Secretary-General stated in his report on technical co-operation activities(1) that in 1987 DTCD had under execution 998 technical co-operation projects with total budgets of $162.8 million. The budget, and therefore expenditures, returned to more normal levels in 1987, after the record performance of 1986. Total delivery was expected to be about $136 million in project expenditures, a drop of 7 per cent. Despite small budget reductions, the delivery rate increased to 84 per cent. In addition, for the second year in a row, DTCD maintained an operational surplus in its overhead account, thereby increasing its cumulative surplus from 1986.

In 1987, DTCD had under execution projects in the areas of development issues and policies, natural resources and energy, public administration and finance, statistics, population, ocean economics and technology, and social development and humanitarian affairs.

By sector, natural resources and energy represented 43.6 per cent of total expenditures, or $59.4 million in project expenditures. Development planning was the second largest sector, representing 18.9 per cent or $25.7 million. Statistics had expenditures of $16.1 million (11.8 per cent); public administration and finance, $14.1 million (10.4 per cent); population, $7.9 million (5.8 per cent); social development, $5.7 million (4.2 per cent); the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, $5.4 million (3.9 per cent); and others $1.9 million.

By geographic area, the DTCD-executed programme included expenditures of $64.5 million for Africa, $32 million for Asia and the Pacific, $25.2 million for the Middle East, Mediterranean, Europe and interregional projects, and $14.5 million for the Americas. The largest growth was in Africa, where the programme increased by $5.8 million over 1986. Project delivery in Africa remained the largest, and its share of the total increased from 40.2 per cent to 47.4 per cent.

DTCD executed 182 projects in development issues and policies during 1987, with a total budget of $36.4 million: 44 per cent for Africa; 11 per cent for the Americas; 21 per cent for Asia and the Pacific; and 24 per cent for the Mediterranean, Middle East and interregional programme. Of those projects, 54 per cent were newly initiated. Assistance to national planning, particularly in Africa, focused on measures dealing with foreign exchange, budget deficits, civil service reform, privatization, public investment management, international assistance and improvements in income distribution and levels of employment. In the NATCAP exercise in Africa, DTCD provided assistance to strengthen institutional and managerial capacity in development planning of African countries. In relation to its projects in eight Pacific island countries, DTCD began developing a macro-economic model specifically for island developing countries. In Africa and the Americas, particularly, assistance was provided in investment project planning, using such techniques as investment project banks, rolling plans and other planning and monitoring techniques. In international aid co-ordination, DTCD assisted international donors' round-table meetings in Benin, Equatorial Guinea and Guinea-Bissau. In regional and local planning, promotion and support of local grass-roots development activities were increasingly undertaken in the context of nationally co-ordinated regional planning. DTCD assisted the Trickle-Up Programme in broadening the reach of a scheme for funding and facilitating very small grass-roots investment initiatives and many projects in local development activities were undertaken in co-operation with other agencies, both bilateral and international. The emphasis in local development projects was on institution-building. Training continued to be emphasized throughout DTCD activities and was increasingly provided to national staff who would be trainers in the future. The role of women in development was emphasized through enhancing their participation in the development process and by increasing the number of women serving as international experts and consultants in DTCD projects.

In the area of natural resources and energy, DTCD had 82 mineral resources projects under execution in 1987 with overall budgets of $12 million, a 16 per cent decrease compared with 1986. The largest share, 63 per cent, was for projects in Africa; 18 per cent went to Asia and the Pacific; 13 per cent to Latin America and the Caribbean; and 6 per cent for Europe, the Middle East and the Mediterranean region. A total of 69 technical advisory missions were undertaken by staff members and 20 by specialist consultants. Mineral exploration continued, particularly in African and selected Asian countries, resulting in the discovery of gold mineralization targets in Mali, the Philippines and the United Republic of Tanzania, diamonds and non-metallic minerals in Cameroon, gold and other minerals in Gabon, bauxite in Mozambique, non-metallic minerals in Somalia, and gemstones in Pakistan.

In energy, the budget was $26.3 million, compared with $23.5 million in 1986, and was allocated as follows: $10.8 million for Africa; $8.4 million for Asia and the Pacific; $3.6 million for the Americas; and $3.5 million for the Mediterranean, Middle East and interregional programme. Technical assistance was provided in petroleum, coal, electricity, geothermal energy, energy planning and new and renewable sources of energy, and covered aspects such as contract negotiations, manpower training, technology transfer and the survey and evaluation of energy resources. There were 126 water resources projects under execution in 1987, with total UNDP budgets of $24 million. Those funds were distributed as follows: Africa, $13.4 million; Asia, $6.3 million; the Americas, $2.2 million; and the Middle East, Mediterranean, Europe, interregional and regional, $2.1 million. Fifty-six interregional missions advised on issues such as water legislation, well drilling, computerized data bank management and hydrogeology. A total of 64 projects were operational in the area of cartography, remote sensing and public works, with budgets of $8 million.

In 1987, DTCD implemented projects in public administration and finance with budgets of $9.3 million. Of that, 51 per cent was in Africa, 23 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 11 per cent in the Americas and 15 per cent in the Mediterranean, Middle East and interregional programme. DTCD interregional advisers in development administration undertook 37 missions in the following areas: tax reform, and resource mobilization; management development and training; government budgeting and financial management, including accounting and auditing; public enterprise; and administrative reform. Improved productivity and performance in public services continued to persist as a priority objective of reform in developing countries. That required urgent action on trimming public service and/or limiting its growth without necessarily reducing its responsibilities. A number of developing countries sought new approaches to technical co-operation in that area. Several countries attempted to carry out basic activities to strengthen their personnel management and training systems; in others, technical co-operation assistance focused on maximizing the use of modern computer-based information technologies to accelerate administrative development.

There were 172 projects in statistics and data processing during 1987, with $18.7 million in budgets, the distribution of which was: Africa, 40 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 21 per cent; the Mediterranean, Middle East and interregional programme, 27 per cent; and the Americas, 12 per cent. Basic data collection and data processing projects assisted countries in organizing and conducting population and housing censuses and demographic and related surveys, and in strengthening civil registration and vital statistics systems. Technical expertise was provided in census cartography and organization, data processing, post-census evaluation surveys and publication and dissemination of results. Major efforts continued to assist developing countries to make statistical information available to users. Computer hardware, software and related technical skills were provided to speed the processing of data from population and housing census programmes and from economic and social surveys.

In the population area, DTCD had 98 projects under execution, with total budgets of $8.5 million: 34 per cent was for Africa, 22 per cent for Asia and the Pacific, 9 per cent for the Americas and 35 per cent for the Mediterranean, Middle East and interregional programme. Population and development training and related research included activities at the country level and at the Cairo Demographic Centre and the United Nations/USSR Interregional Training and Research Programme in Population and Development. The use of microcomputer software for demographic analysis increased the ability of programmes to conduct policy-oriented research. Many research monographs, papers and related studies were published by individual population training projects and their staff during the year. The second phase of an evaluation of United Nations activities in population training began with the mailing of 3,000 questionnaires to developing country officials, with final results anticipated in 1988. Increased use was also made of computers in completing the analysis of the 1980 round of censuses and in preparing population projections. Dissemination of census results through publications, meetings of policy-makers, technical seminars and workshops was made an integral part of the census analysis programme. Population projects also provided on-the-job training to many nationals through their full participation in census analysis, preparation of analytical reports and seminars, leading to improvements in the capacity of Governments to execute their own projects. DTCD continued to assist some 25 countries to analyse the relationship between demographic variables and socio-economic factors, define population policies and integrate population variables into the national development planning process.

In 1987, the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea provided support to DTCD to implement projects in ocean economics and technology. Assistance to Ghana in strengthening its Minerals Commission was in the form of studies and reports to the Commission, including a report on revitalizing the State Gold Mining Corporation of Ghana. Recommendations from the report were under implementation in 1987 through loans from IFC. Ghana was also assisted with regard to coastal stabilization. Support to the Institute of Marine Affairs in Trinidad and Tobago also continued. The Institute had become fully functional and an important governmental agency for environmental studies, marine resources assessment and coastal area and exclusive economic zone policy making and planning.

In the area of social development and humanitarian affairs, budgets for the 12 DTCD projects financed by UNDP, to which the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs provided substantive support, totalled $1 million in 1987. Of that amount, 19 per cent was for Africa, 7 per cent for Asia and the Pacific and 73 per cent for the Mediterranean, Middle East and interregional programme. Support was provided in the areas of advancement of women, crime prevention and criminal justice, youth, aging and disabled persons.

In 1987, budgets for project personnel totalled $76.5 million, of which $35.1 million was for Africa, $13.5 million for Asia and the Pacific, $9.9 million for the Americas and $18 million for the Mediterranean, Middle East and interregional programme. Budgets for equipment for technical co-operation projects totalled $38.5 million and for contracts $9.8 million. Equipment accounted for 23.6 per cent of total budgets and contracts for 6 per cent.

A total of 3,773 training awards were implemented in 1987, including fellowships, study tours, seminars and workshops. Fellows and participants from 149 countries were trained in 98 host countries.

UNDP Council action. On 18 June 1987,(2) the Governing Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on United Nations technical co-operation activities during 1986,(3) and welcomed steps taken by DTCD to increase effectiveness and productivity, the elimination of support cost deficits and increased project implementation rate. DTCD was urged to continue to give attention to its performance, especially with regard to its level of programme delivery in the context of project budgets at the outset of the 1987-1991 country programme cycle. Given the sizeable staff cuts already sustained by DTCD, the Council urged that recommendation 15 of the Group of 18(4) on staff reduction should be applied flexibly in the case of DTCD. It welcomed steps taken to improve analysis and reporting of project evaluation results and encouraged further such efforts. It also welcomed DTCD's implementation of recruitment measures and urged further action, particularly in increasing the participation as technical co-operation personnel of women, personnel from developing countries, and personnel from other countries whose potentials had not been sufficiently utilized.

The shares of developing countries and under-utilized donor countries in providing equipment and subcontracting services was noted with concern and the Council urged that efforts be pursued to improve the situation, particularly through wider use of information on the potentials of those countries. The Council welcomed the preparation of a departmental implementation strategy on participation of women in development and encouraged its application at the headquarters and field levels. It asked UNDP and donor countries to contribute funds to implement the Special Action Programme for Administration and Management in Africa and urged DTCD to intensify its efforts to assist African countries to enhance public administration. The Council noted the augmentation of DTCD's programme in Africa and urged continuation of any necessary special efforts in that regard. It welcomed DTCD's new emphasis on support and follow-up to intergovernmental programming exercises for TCDC in conjunction with UNDP and encouraged further such efforts and allocations of resources. The Council recognized the importance of identifying opportunities for wider co-operation between UNDP and DTCD and urged that guidelines on such co-operation be finalized, bearing in mind DTCD's technical capabilities as executing agency and the financial and co-ordinating role of UNDP. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to make available information on the role, experience and competence of DTCD to assist Governments of developing countries and others to become more aware of the possibilities for technical co-operation available through its services.

By decision 42/446 of 11 December 1987, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on United Nations technical co-operation activities in 1986.(3)

Evaluation

In an April 1987 report,(5) the Secretary-General reviewed implementation of 1984 CPC recommendations on DTCD's work.(6) The report reviewed implementation of recommendations concerning DTCD's internal structure and field and evaluation activities and of those involving its relations with other entities.

The Secretary-General recommended that: the remaining parts of the assignment of the Secretariat task force on the financial, organizational and operational aspects of DTCD should be completed; DTCD should establish a central evaluation mechanism to evaluate all its activities and to ensure that all projects' design, programme and project monitoring and evaluation conformed to UNDP standards and procedures; quantitative criteria such as delivery and delivery rates should be supplemented by criteria on the quality and impact of projects executed; following reviews mandated by the General Assembly in 1986,(7) the Secretary-General should issue terms of reference for all units in the economic and social sectors and responsibility for all matters pertaining to technical co-operation should be clarified in collaboration with UNDP and reflected in bulletins of the Secretary-General; and the Secretary-General should be asked to report to the UNDP Governing Council on the conclusions of the joint UNDP/DTCD task force and on the guidelines for field and headquarters practices to be established.

At its April/May session,(8) CPC decided that the Secretary-General's recommendations should be considered with the results of the ongoing review of DTCD as mandated by the Assembly in its 1986 resolution.(7) The need for more meaningful criteria to measure DTCD's performance was noted. Concern was expressed about the fragmented arrangements for evaluation within DTCD, although co-operation in that area with other bodies was welcomed.

United Nations Volunteers

During 1987, the United Nations Volunteers programme continued to grow and, by the end of the year, its established posts had increased by 15 per cent to 2,068 and its serving volunteers by 13 per cent to 1,269. An additional 130 candidates had been accepted and were en route to assignment and 669 were under recruitment.(9) The thrust of UNV assistance was directed to basic sectors such as agriculture, education and health. Agriculture, forestry and fisheries, and education each absorbed 15 per cent, followed by health (14 per cent), social conditions and equity (13 per cent) and general development issues, policy and planning (12 per cent).

Priority continued to be accorded to the 40 LDCs, which had 836 serving volunteers at the end of the year (66 per cent of the total). The 21 landlocked developed countries, 15 of which were also LDCs, had 469 volunteers or 37 per cent of UNV assistance.

The geographical flow of UNV assistance again favoured the Africa region, with 53 per cent of all volunteers assigned to 42 countries. The project of UNV emergency assistance to the drought-affected countries in sub-Saharan Africa was operationally completed in December 1987. During its duration (1984-1987), some 87 volunteers served in 24 countries and their activities included emergency aid co-ordination, water supply and sanitation, health, livestock management, anti-desertification, forestry and administration. In the wake of emergency conditions engendered by renewed drought and internal strife in parts of the region, UNV was called on, during the last quarter of 1987, to provide additional emergency assistance to two of the most seriously affected countries— Angola and Ethiopia.

The UNV domestic development services (DDS) programme in Asia and the Pacific entered a new phase in 1987 with the initiation of two projects—strengthening of indigenous NGOs and governmental bodies promoting self-reliance at the community level in the Asia region (nine countries), and assistance to youth participation in development in the Pacific region (six countries). In the Africa region, a full-scale project covering 23 countries—strengthening of national NGOs and governmental organizations for community-level activities—commenced in 1987, following a two-year pilot phase. The network of grass-roots initiatives being engendered by the project demonstrated the potential for increasing self-reliance at the village level with the minimum external input.

Under UNV's youth mandate, new project activities in Africa included assignment of UNV youth specialists to projects on assistance to youth training and on promotion of youth in the socio-economic development process, as well as placement of a UNV youth specialist in the regional DDS Africa project headquarters. In Asia, preparations were completed under a project on rural youth participation in national development, while a project on youth development for training and self-employment of youth was positively evaluated and an extension recommended.

In April 1987, UNV organized the fifth annual consultative meeting with co-operating organizations and interested Governments which endorsed the recommendations of the 1986 Maseru Declaration⁽¹⁰⁾ and agreed to elaborate a code of standards on international volunteerism to serve as a guide for Governments and volunteer-sending organizations.

UNV assisted Governments, organizations and other partners in voluntary work to organize the observance of the second International Volunteer Day on 5 December 1987. The Day was observed in most countries and was marked by festivities, including television and radio broadcasts, exhibitions depicting voluntary work, socio-cultural activities aimed at community groups and contributions towards promoting voluntary activities.

Estimated total expenditure for the 1,269 serving volunteers and related project costs totalled $19.8 million, comprising $12.2 million allocated to projects directly executed by UNV and external costs of volunteers from developing countries, and $7.6 million for financing volunteers assigned to projects executed by other United Nations agencies. Funds for the $19.8 million were obtained from UNDP resources ($14.6 million), the UNV Special Voluntary Fund ($2.7 million), government cash counterpart contributions ($0.5 million), the agencies' own resources ($1.3 million) and other resources ($0.7 million).

A breakdown of contributions by Governments to UNV in 1987 and of pledges for 1988 was set out in the audited financial statements for 1987. (11)

UNDP Council action. By a decision of 19 June,⁽¹²⁾ the UNDP Governing Council reaffirmed its recognition of UNV as an important source of cost-effective operational expertise for development co-operation activities, asked the Administrator to continue to arrange annual consultation meetings with other volunteer-sending organizations and Governments, and endorsed the view that the use of volunteers should be expanded. The Administrator was asked to identify, and possibly eliminate from programmes, any unnecessary administrative and financial mechanisms restricting the use of volunteers. Other United Nations organs were invited to review their arrangements for project preparation to ensure that use of volunteers was considered and the Administrator was asked to hold operational-level meetings with other agencies to encourage their use of volunteers where possible. He was also asked to make efforts to increase the proportion of women volunteers. The Council urged UNDP to promote the volunteer concept in all regions by bringing to the attention of Governments and resident representatives the possibility of UNV as a source of technical expertise. The Administrator was asked to undertake a review of the UNV programme, the terms of reference of which were annexed to the decision. The Council recognized the need for UNV to continue to meet the existing and future demand for volunteers in developing countries, and, pending the results of the review, agreed to continue bridging arrangements until December 1988 to enable orderly operations and recruitment of volunteers.

The Administrator was asked to report in 1988 on action taken to implement the decision.

In another 19 June decision,⁽¹³⁾ the Council noted the Administrator's projection that volunteers in the field would reach at least 1,500 before the outcome of the review and agreed to continue bridging arrangements to December 1988 to enable UNV to cope with the growing demand for volunteers by maintaining extrabudgetary posts and increasing them by a maximum of four additional Professional and two additional General Service posts. For that purpose, it approved an exceptional allocation of up to $1.3 million in 1988 to be charged against UNDP support-costs resources and to be treated as extrabudgetary income for UNV. The Council decided that, before recruiting the additional staff, the Administrator should satisfy himself as to the number of staff needed to meet UNV needs.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

In his annual report for 1987,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Administrator said that the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC assisted TCDC programming in Nicaragua, Peru, Tunisia, Turkey and Venezuela. Over 630 new TCDC projects emerged from those exercises in which 23 developing countries participated. The SPR project, managed by the Special Unit, made available the seed money to promote those activities, but the principal costs for their implementation were borne by the participating countries.

Data for 1985-1986 indicated that 30 countries were engaged in action-oriented TCDC activities, for which they had committed $11.97 million or 3.45 per cent of their collective IPFs, 1.42 per cent of total IPFs available to all developing countries and Territories. Figures for regional and interregional and global IPFs for the same period were $41.7 million and $2.3 million, or 25.49 and 5.4 per cent respectively. The Governing Council had approved $6.6 million in SPR for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), of which $5 million was for action-oriented TCDC activities and $1.6 million for information support activities.

The Information Referral System (INRES)-South data base continued to improve, with 800 new institutions registered during 1987, bringing the number of data base entries to 3,300 institutions in 107 developing countries. INRES-South responded to 985 inquiries during the year, an increase of 115 per cent over the 457 handled in 1986.

In December, the Special Unit helped the Group of 77 to convene the first meeting of representatives of its chambers of commerce and industry (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil). Over 140 delegates from 60 developing countries met to conclude some 320 bilateral business contacts.

Action by the Committee on TCDC. The fifth session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries was held in New York from 18 to 22 and on 27 May 1987.⁽¹⁵⁾

The Committee had before it a report by the UNDP Administrator⁽¹⁶⁾ on progress in implementing the tasks entrusted to the United Nations development system by the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC⁽¹⁷⁾ The report, covering the period 1 November 1984 to 31 October 1986, contained information from 23 United Nations agencies and organizations on their activities in promoting TCDC, their support for implementing operational TCDC activities, activities of special interest, and organizational and financial issues. The report stated that 7 of the 23 organizations providing information reported aggregate expenditures of approximately $41 million in support of TCDC activities, of which $34 million was for promotional activities and $7 million was for operational activities.

The report concluded that the information received reflected tangible progress in using the TCDC modality in the development activities of several United Nations organizations. However, those organizations were mainly those that had showed progress in the preceding period and limited or absent responses from some organizations made it difficult to draw overall conclusions on the quantity and extent of progress in implementing the Buenos Aires Plan of Action during the review period.

Promotional efforts of many organizations aimed to strengthen developing country institutions, equipping them with viable TCDC capacities, and to build institutional networks in developing countries in different sectors for sustained co-operation among institutions. There remained room for more sustained efforts by organizations in placing trainees in other developing countries' institutions and in promoting the use of developing countries' experts, consultants and equipment in project operations on a TCDC basis. There was evidence of renewed efforts in some organizations to strengthen internal secretariat mechanisms to introduce and adopt TCDC modalities in programming activities, project formulation and implementation procedures. In other organizations, progress on any or all of those fronts ranged from marginal to adequate, due partly to continuing attitudinal problems and partly to financial or structural problems or both. It appeared that TCDC continued to progress in its transitional phase in the United Nations development system as the decade following the adoption of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action drew to a close. The Administrator believed that additional resources continued to be needed to optimize the role of TCDC in development efforts in the United Nations system.

An addendum to the Administrator's report provided information, in response to a 1985 Committee request,(18) on the use of the capacities of developing countries, in terms of experts, consultancies, fellowships and equipment, in the technical co-operation activities of the organizations of the United Nations development system.

In response to a 1985 Committee decision,(18) the Administrator submitted a report(19) outlining activities by Governments and intergovernmental organizations (IGOs) at bilateral and multilateral levels in support of TCDC, both promotional and operational. Activities covered almost all major socio-economic sectors and related, in particular, to exchange of expertise, skills and training. Information was made available by 71 countries and 13 IGOs. Activities reported on were financed primarily from budgetary sources, but instances were also reported involving the use of UNDP IPFs to supplement national efforts.

The report concluded that the pulse of TCDC activities appeared to have accelerated and human resources development in general appeared to constitute the largest segment of activities globally. National focal points for TCDC largely appeared to be ill-equipped to organize and backstop TCDC as envisaged in the Buenos Aires Plan of Action. The establishment or strengthening of national focal points appeared to be of the highest priority.

On 27 May, the Committee adopted eleven decisions. In one,(20) it requested the United Nations development system to implement the Buenos Aires Plan of Action and to indicate in legislative provisions tasks to be accomplished in TCDC. It recommended that United Nations bodies carry out, biennially, base reviews of TCDC activities and report results to the Committee. United Nations organizations were invited to establish or strengthen their focal points for TCDC in order to disseminate the principles of TCDC throughout their programmes and to assist Governments to prepare and execute TCDC projects. The UNDP Administrator and United Nations organizations were asked to improve on the methodology for presenting TCDC-related data in future reports to the Committee. The Committee urged the system to establish greater transparency regarding resources available for TCDC activities and asked the UNDP Governing Council to ensure flexibility in the Programme's rules and procedures to enable developing countries to make fuller use of IPFs for TCDC. The Committee asked United Nations organizations to explore additional sources of finance for TCDC activities, including those of an interregional and global nature, and to allocate a greater proportion of their resources to such activities. It took note of a 1985

JIU report on support to the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action and ACC comments on it (see also below),(21) and asked the UNDP Administrator to include in a 1988 report to the Governing Council the views of the United Nations development system on those documents. The Secretary-General and organizations of the system were called on to increase procurement in the developing countries by overcoming the lack of information on possibilities offered by those countries in the procurement area, and to achieve greater dissemination of information on procurement possibilities and practices of the system. The UNDP Administrator was asked to provide to the Governing Council in 1988 an expanded version of the report on procurement called for by the Committee in 1985 (18) The Committee urged the international community, UNDP and all United Nations development organizations to give full support, including sufficient resources, to facilitating implementation of UNPAERD (22) within the framework of TCDC. It decided to include in its 1989 agenda an item on overall appraisal and assessment of the implementation by the United Nations development system of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action and asked the UNDP Administrator to submit a report on implementation of the current decision. The Committee also asked that all requested reports be made available well in advance of the 1989 session.

In another decision,(23) the Committee urged developed countries to make available to UNDP information on their TCDC activities and to support implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action. It invited developing countries to continue to strengthen their TCDC focal points to promote TCDC-related activities at the country level and emphasized the increasing importance of TCDC for those countries in the light of the critical economic situation affecting them, particularly LDCs. Developing countries were invited to promote participation of the private sectors of their economies in TCDC activities and projects. The Committee recommended that UNDP and other United Nations organizations continue to support TCDC co-ordinating activities carried out by developing countries, particularly the biennial meetings of heads of national technical co-operation organs, and to undertake follow-up action on recommendations of those meetings relating to United Nations support of TCDC. The UNDP Administrator was asked to report to the Committee in 1989 on progress attained by Governments in their TCDC activities.

By a further decision,(24) the Committee urged United Nations organizations to adopt and implement the recommendations of the 1986 TCDC focal points meeting(25) for strengthening TCDC within the United Nations system and with respect to procuring goods and services from developing countries. The UNDP Administrator was asked to convene TCDC focal points meetings every two years and to report in 1989 on the decision's implementation. The Committee invited UNDP, the United Nations development system and developed countries to assist developing countries to strengthen their TCDC focal points to enable them to participate effectively in TCDC activities.

In another decision,(26) the Committee recognized that intergovernmental programming exercises could constitute a useful modality to promote TCDC, that such exercises required an evaluation of the concrete execution of agreed projects and activities and that they should be closely linked with priorities and planning for national development objectives. It invited developing countries to participate in such programming exercises and take follow-up actions in accordance with their capacities and requirements. The Committee asked that regional, interregional and global programming exercises for TCDC continue to be held in accordance with the needs of developing countries and that evaluations of the exercises be made. It emphasized the importance of UNDP'S role in the exercises and in the execution of projects and recommended that the implementation of projects resulting from the exercises be incorporated into UNDP programmes. Other United Nations bodies were invited to participate in TCDC programming exercises and to provide financial support for resulting projects. Developed countries were also invited to support and finance projects and activities resulting from the exercises. The Committee called on international and regional financing institutions to join United Nations efforts to assist developing countries in their TCDC activities and invited participating countries to share information and experience related to the exercises. The UNDP Administrator was asked to submit to the Committee in 1989 an analytical report containing an evaluation of intergovernmental programming exercises and the state of implementation of resulting projects.

With regard to strengthening and improving TCDC activities undertaken by the United Nations system, the Committee adopted a decision(27) in which it considered that its 1989 session could be preceded by a two-day meeting of United Nations executing agencies with the developing countries to ensure the adoption of measures to achieve the objectives of ECDC/TCDC. It invited executing agencies to participate at the highest level at such a meeting and to present a comprehensive assessment of their TCDC activities since the adoption of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action. By a further decision,(28) the Committee approved the provisional agenda for its 1989 session.

Other Committee decisions (see below) dealt with the co-operative exchange of skills, staffing of the Special Unit for TCDC, a JIU report on TCDC and use of UNDP funds for TCDC activities. A further decision concerned the role of women in TCDC: (see p. 841).

JIU report. On 27 May,(29) the High-level Committee took note of the 1985 JIU report on TCDC and of the ACC comments on it.(21) It supported the ACC view that the JIU report and the discussion on its findings should lead to a useful re-examination of policies and practices in the United Nations development system to support and assist developing countries to formulate and implement TCDC projects. It supported the JIU view that the Buenos Aires Plan of Action should be considered a binding legislative framework for United Nations support for TCDC, leaving no need for a new system-wide mandate. It expressed appreciation of the JIU recommendations and believed that their implementation by the system should have a salutary effect on strengthening TCDC, particularly the use of TCDC modalities and the establishment of co-ordinating units for promoting and implementing TCDC. The Committee urged all United Nations organizations to support the implementation of the JIU recommendations and to inform the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC of their implementation. The UNDP Administrator was to report in 1989 on their implementation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 July, the Economic and Council, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, adopted resolution 1987/88 without vote.

Strengthening and improving intergovernmental programming exercises for technical co-operation among developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the role and importance of technical co-operation among developing countries in the social and economic development of developing countries and in strengthening South-South co-operation,

Reaffirming the validity of the recommendations contained in the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries,

Noting with satisfaction the results of recent programming exercises for technical co-operation among developing countries and for the reinforcement of the individual and collective self-reliance of developing countries,

Recognizing that intergovernmental programming exercises for technical co-operation among developing countries constitute a useful modality for promoting such technical co-operation,

Recognizing also the importance of the continued involvement of developed countries in supporting, where appropriate, activities relating to technical co-operation among developing countries,

Recognizing further the importance of the catalytic and supporting role of the United Nations development system in promoting technical co-operation among developing countries and the need to enhance its activities in that field,

Taking into consideration the need for improved integration of the potential and capacity of technical co-operation among developing countries in operational activities for development of the United Nations system in the framework of country programming,

1. Takes note of the report of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries on its fifth session and endorses the decisions contained in the report;

2. Urges all organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to participate actively, within their respective fields of competence, in supporting the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and to inform the Special Unit for Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries of the United Nations Development Programme of their activities in this regard so that complete information on the effectiveness of all the functions of the United Nations development system in support of technical co-operation among developing countries will be available to the High-level Committee at its sixth session, which will take place ten years after the adoption of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/88

9 July 1987 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1987/126) without vote, 6 July (meeting 14); lo-nation draft (E/1987/C.3/L.15), orally revised; further orally revised in Council; agenda item 14.

Sponsors: China, Egypt, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Senegal, Somalia, Tunisia, Turkey, United Republic of Tanzania.

In other action, the Council, by decision 1987/184(of 9 July 1987, took note of the the 1985 JIU report on United Nations development system support to the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action and the comments of ACC thereon ,(2l)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/179 without vote.

Strengthening and improving intergovernmental programming exercises for technical co-operation among developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries,

Recognizing the role and importance of technical co-operation among developing countries in their social and economic development and in the reinforcement and final achievement of the individual and collective self-reliance of developing countries,

Taking note with satisfaction of the results of the intergovernmental programming exercises for technical co-operation among developing countries in recent years,

Emphasizing that the intergovernmental programming exercises should be guided by the principle of equality and mutual benefit among participating developing countries, while laying stress on practical results,

Reaffirming that developing countries have the primary responsibility for promoting technical co-operation among themselves, that developed countries and the United Nations system should assist and support such activities, and that in addition the United Nations system should play a prominent role as promoter and catalyst of technical co-operation among developing countries, in accordance with the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,

Recalling recommendations 35 and 36 of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, in which, inter alia, Governments of developed countries were invited to give full support to technical co-operation among developing countries,

Recognizing the importance of the continued involvement of developed countries in supporting and financing, where appropriate, projects resulting from the intergovernmental programming exercises for technical co-operation among developing countries,

Recalling also the particular responsibility of the United Nations Development Programme for catalysing and promoting technical co-operation among developing countries throughout the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the importance of the catalytic and supporting role of the United Nations development system in promoting technical co-operation among developing countries and the necessity of enhancing its activities in this field,

Considering that the support and involvement of international and interregional financing institutions would further enhance the promotion and implementation of activities for technical co-operation among developing countries,

Considering also the need for further strengthening and improving intergovernmental programming exercises for technical co-operation among developing countries to meet the growing requirements of developing countries in their socio-economic development,

1. Endorses the decisions adopted by the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries at its fifth session and Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/88 of 9 July 1987;

2. Recognizes that intergovernmental programming exercises constitute a useful and effective modality for further promoting technical co-operation among developing countries, and that the further strengthening and improvement of such exercises requires an adequate evaluation of the execution of the agreed projects and activities;

3. Recognizes also that intergovernmental programming exercises for technical co-operation among developing countries should continue to be closely linked with national priorities and planning for national development objectives;

4. Requests that regional, interregional and global intergovernmental programming exercises, sectoral and/or comprehensive, for technical co-operation among developing countries continue to be held in accordance with the expressed needs of the developing countries and that an adequate evaluation of these exercises be made;

5. Recommends that the execution of the projects resulting from these exercises be incorporated, whenever possible or appropriate, in the country, regional, interregional and global programmes of the United Nations Development Programme;

6. Encourages developing countries to support and participate in intergovernmental programming exercises for technical co-operation among developing countries and to take appropriate follow-up action in accordance with their own capacities and requirements;

7. Emphasizes the importance of the catalytic and promotional role of the United Nations Development Programme in these exercises and its role in the execution of projects resulting from the exercises;

8. Requests the United Nations development system to support actively, within their respective fields of competence, the implementation of the recommendations of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and to finance, with available resources, project activities resulting from intergovernmental programming exercises;

9. Encourages and calls upon the international and regional financing institutions to join in the efforts of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to assist developing countries in their activities for technical co-operation among developing countries;

10. Invites developed countries to continue to provide support and financing for projects and activities resulting from these exercises;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

General Assembly resolution 42/179

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.4) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.72), based on informal consultations on 16-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.21); agenda item 82 (d).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 34, 38, 39, 43; plenary 96.

Also on 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/180 without vote.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, and its resolutions 34/117 of 14 December 1979 and 35/202 of 16 December 1980 on technical co-operation among developing countries,

Reaffirming the importance of technical co-operation among developing countries and the catalytic role of the United Nations system in supporting such activities in accordance with the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,

Reaffirming that developing countries have the primary responsibility for promoting technical co-operation among themselves, that developed countries and the United Nations system should assist and support such activities, and that, in addition, the United Nations system should play a prominent role as promoter and catalyst of technical co-operation among developing countries, in accordance with the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,

1. Reaffirms the validity and pertinence of all the recommendations of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries;

2. Endorses the decisions adopted by the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries at its fifth session;

3. Urges the Governments of developing countries to give full support to the implementation of recommendations 1 to 14 of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action;

4. Urges the Governments of developed countries to give full support to the implementation of recommendations 35 and 36 of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action;

5. Invites the developing countries to continue to strengthen their focal points for technical co-operation among developing countries with a view to promoting their activities at the country level;

6. Recommends that the United Nations Development Programme and other appropriate organizations of the United Nations system continue to support all co-ordinating activities for technical co-operation carried out by developing countries among themselves, particularly the biennial meetings of the heads of national technical co-operation organs, and to take appropriate follow-up action on the recommendations adopted at such meetings relating to the support provided by the United Nations system for the promotion of technical co-operation among developing countries;

7. Requests all organizations of the United Nations development system to explore additional sources of financing for projects and activities for technical co-operation among developing countries, including those of an interregional and global nature, and to allocate an increasing proportion of their resources to activities and projects for technical co-operation among developing countries;

8. Reiterates the need to make full use of the potential of developing countries and, in this context, invites the organizations of the United Nations development system to strive more actively to use the equipment, services, experts and consultants available in the developing countries, in keeping with existing rules and regulations, and to continue to review their procurement practices and policies;

9. Requests the Secretary-General and calls upon all organizations of the United Nations development system to take the steps necessary, in keeping with existing rules and regulations, to increase procurement of equipment and services from the developing countries by, inter alia, moving to obtain information about the procurement possibilities offered by those countries and by disseminating information about the procurement possibilities and practices of the United Nations system;

10. Requests the United Nations Development Programme and the organizations of the United Nations development system to take the necessary measures to enable each developing country to have the choice of executing each project on technical co-operation, totally or in part, within the framework of technical co-operation among developing countries or according to the traditional method of technical assistance;

11. Recommends that the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme consider the allocation for technical co-operation among developing countries of at least 25 per cent of the regional, inter-regional and global indicative planning figures, and requests the Secretary-General to include in the report called for in paragraph 18 of the present resolution, the suggestions of the Governing Council on ways and means of achieving this goal;

12. Urges all organizations of the United Nations development system, in their relevant spheres of competence, to participate actively in support of the implementation of decision 5/9 of 27 May 1987 of the High-level Committee;

13. Emphasizes that technical co-operation among developing countries is a means of improving the integration of women in development, and requests the Secretary-General, in formulating his proposals on technical co-operation among developing countries for the next medium-term plan, clearly to specify measures to increase the participation of women in all aspects of technical co-operation among developing countries in the major programmes;

14. Requests the organizations of the United Nations development system to participate actively in the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, to be carried out at the sixth session of the High-level Committee in 1989;

15. Requests the organizations of the United Nations development system to take the necessary action, in their particular fields of activity, to ensure the implementation of the decisions of the High-level Committee and the present resolution;

16. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, at its thirty-fifth session, to give the necessary attention to the implementation of the resolutions and decisions of the High-level Committee, including decision 5/2 of 27 May 1987;

17. Requests the Secretary-General, in formulating his proposals for the next medium-term plan, to give the necessary priority to technical co-operation among developing countries;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/180

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.4) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.74), based on informal consultations on draft by Guatemala for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.53); agenda item 82 (d).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 34, 38, 39, 43; plenary 96.

Use of UNDP funds for TCDC

In response to a 1985 High-level Committee decision,(30) the UNDP Administrator submitted a report describing progress made in using country, regional, interregional and global IPFs for TCDC activities during 1985 and 1986.(31) It indicated that, while UNDP'S policies and procedures concerning TCDC remained in effect and the number of countries using TCDC modalities in their IPF-financed projects increased from 17 to 30 during the review period, the reduction of illustrative third-cycle IPFs to 55 per cent continued to limit the amounts available for new projects which could use the modality for their full or partial implementation.

The report concluded that the increasing level of IPF commitments for TCDC activities was facilitated by the availability of resources from completed projects and was indicative of a trend that was expected to gain momentum as new projects with potential for using the TCDC modality were designed, approved and implemented.

On 27 May,(32) the High-level Committee urged UNDP to incorporate in its programming new activities relating to TCDC and recommended that the Governing Council review its 1981 decision on IPFs for TCDC.(33) UNDP and the United Nations development system were asked to take measures to enable developing countries to have the choice of executing each technical co-operation project totally or in part within the framework of TCDC or according to traditional technical assistance methods. The UNDP Administrator was invited, in accordance with the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, to prepare adjustments of UNDP policies and mechanisms and to help other United Nations organizations to achieve the Plan's objectives. The Committee recommended that the Governing Council consider allocating at least 25 per cent of UNDP funds for regional, interregional and global IPFs for TCDC activities and asked the Administrator to report in 1989 on implementation of the decision.

Staffing of the Special Unit for TCDC

In response to a 1985 High-level Committee decision,(30) which called for the strengthening of the Special Unit for TCDC, the UNDP Administrator submitted a report(34) stating that he had reviewed the Unit's staffing situation. In relation to overall resources available, he was of the view that no additional staffing would be possible for the Unit, or indeed for other hard-pressed headquarters units. He would, however, continue his practice of relieving pressure on the Unit when possible by temporary assignment of staff until the budgetary situation improved, permitting a staffing level that would correspond to the Unit's mandated responsibilities.

On 27 May,(35) the Committee expressed regret at the Administrator's inability to provide additional staffing for the Unit, urged him to take into account the high priority that should be accorded to ensure adequate staffing, and requested him to report in 1989 on the Unit's ability to fulfil its mandate in view of its staffing capacity.

Skilled workers

In accordance with requests by the High-level Committee in 1985(36) and the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board in 1986,(25) the UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the Board a study on some development aspects of skill exchange in TCDC.(37) The Board took note of the study, which was also made available to the High-level Committee.

The study examined the role of the exchange of skills among developing countries and its contribution to their technological transformation, and reviewed the expansion of the skill base in developing countries over the preceding two decades. It examined some demand and supply factors in the exchange of skills among developing countries, identified and examined the principal forms for such exchange, provided illustrations of country experiences on a broad geographical basis and dealt briefly with international and regional support to promoting exchanges.

The study concluded that, although increasing, the exchange of skills among developing countries encountered constraints, particularly regarding its integration into the technological development of countries involved. Better information on the potential for supply of skills and on actual and future demands for skilled personnel could offer greater possibilities for exchange. The strengthening and diversification of financing arrangements to implement the modalities would also be needed. Some countries, in response to an UNCTAD questionnaire on the issue, had indicated that formulating a policy regarding co-operative exchange of skills -would help to-facilitate implementation of existing bilateral agreements or to take new initiatives in the area.

To tackle specific issues related to the different components of an integrated approach to co-operative exchange of skills, it was suggested that countries convene seminars or workshops to deal with the various facets of skill exchange in a comprehensive fashion. Future research work would also be needed on the implications of rapid technological change for skill exchanges among developing countries. There were various possibilities for co-operation among developing countries in areas such as joint research and development work, pooling of training facilities, exchange of expertise and sharing of information in new technologies, particularly micro-electronics. Such co-operation was a promising area requiring systematic attention and exploration by Governments, funding agencies and international organizations in order to contribute to improving the skill profile of developing countries in an era of rapid technological change.

On 27 May,(38) the High-level Committee expressed satisfaction with the study and its conclusions and recommendations and invited United Nations organizations to support the implementation of an integrated approach to the co-operative exchange of skills among developing countries.

REFERENCES

- (1)DP/1988/45 & Add.1-3. (2)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/34). (3)YUN 1986, p. 433. (4)Ibid., p. 1050. (5)E/AC.51/1987/7. (6)YUN 1984, p. 456. (7)YUN 1986, p. 1024, GA res. 41/213, 19 Dec. 1986. (8)A/42/16. (9)DP/1988/46. (10)YUN 1986, p. 436. (11)A/43/5/Add.1. (12)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/36). (13)Ibid. (dec. 87/43). (14)DP/1988/18 & Add.1-6. (15)A/42/39 & Corr.1. (16)ICDC/5/2 & Add.1. (17)YUN 1978, p. 467. (18)YUN 1985,

- p. 489. (19)ICDC/5/3 & Corr.1. (20)A/42/39 (dec. 5/5). (21)YUN 1985, p. 490. (22)YUN 1986, p. 446, GA res. S-13/2, annex, 1 June 1986. (23)A/42/39 (dec. 5/3). (24)Ibid. (dec. 5/6). (25)YUN 1986, p. 437. (26)A/42/39 (dec. 5/8). (27)Ibid. (dec. 5/7). (28)Ibid. (dec. 5/11). (29)Ibid. (dec. 5/9). (30)YUN 1985, p. 492. (31)ICDC/5/5 & Corr.1 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1 & Add.2. (32)A/42/39 (dec. 5/10). (33)YUN 1981, p. 467. (34)ICDC/5/7. (35)A/42/39 (dec. 5/2). (36)YUN 1985, p. 493. (37)TD/B/II.28. (38)A/42/39 (dec. 5/1).

UN Capital Development Fund

In his annual report for 1987,(1) the UNDP Administrator said the United Nations Capital Development Fund, which provided concessional capital assistance for small-scale investment projects, particularly in LDCs, approved 25 projects valued at $59.1 million in 1987. New joint-financing arrangements of $2 million were concluded during the year, bringing the total value of such arrangements since 1981 to $37 million. Project expenditures for all budgetary items and from all funding sources totalled $41.1 million. Of the 205 UNCDF-financed projects under way at the end of the year, 94 benefited from UNDP-financed technical assistance.

UNCDF was involved in private sector promotion, assisting private entrepreneurs mainly in the agricultural and industrial sectors. Credit was a crucial component of projects focusing directly on increasing the income and productivity of the poor or those aiming to develop small- and medium-scale businesses. Of approximately $230 million in project commitments to agriculture, irrigation, industries and housing, some $108 million represented projects with credit components. Countries which had projects under way included Bhutan, Nepal and Yemen.

UNCDF'S relations with UNDP and other sources of financing were characterized by complementarity, some examples of which were: projects supported by the World Bank, the Danish International Development Agency (DANIDA), UNDP, FAO and UNCDF to develop fishing off the north coast of Somalia; a labour-intensive road construction project and reforestation programme in Burundi, undertaken by UNDP and UNCDF with assistance from Belgium, the European Development Fund, DANIDA and the Netherlands; and a UNCDF project to develop women's co-operatives in the rural areas of Senegal, with technical assistance from UNDP/ILO.

On 18 June,(2) the UNDP Governing Council commended the Administrator on progress achieved regarding programme delivery and expansion of UNCDF activities, decided that the Fund should modify the partial funding system as proposed by the Administrator in his report on 1986 activities,(3) and asked him to report in 1990 on implementation of the modified system. The Administrator was asked to include in future reports to the Council information on results obtained in the Fund's various fields of action and on experience gained with different funding modalities. The Council called on countries making voluntary contributions to the Fund to increase them and appealed to others to contribute to enable UNCDF to maintain the momentum achieved in channelling concessional capital assistance to LDCs in order to accelerate their economic and social development.

REFERENCES

(1)DP/1988/18 & Add.I-6. (2)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/37). (3) 1986, p. 439.

Chapter III

Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief

In 1987, countries facing severe economic difficulties and those requiring aid for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development continued to receive special assistance from the United Nations system. Many of them were the least developed in the world, and assistance was often needed in the aftermath of natural or man-made disasters.

The General Assembly, by a December resolution on assistance to Benin, the Central African Republic, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, the Gambia, Madagascar, Nicaragua and Vanuatu (resolution 42/205) urgently appealed to all international organizations to continue and increase assistance in response to the reconstruction, economic recovery and development needs of those countries. The Assembly also requested continued assistance for Chad (resolution 42/200), and asked the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to organize a round-table meeting to formulate an emergency assistance programme to reconstruct and rehabilitate Chad's northern region and resettle persons displaced by war. The international community was also urged to increase assistance to the Central American countries (resolution 42/204) as a way of bolstering their efforts to achieve peace and development.

During the year, action by the international community was reviewed in response to the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990. In December, the Assembly called for necessary resource flows to African countries to implement the Programme of Action and established an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole to review and appraise it in 1988 (resolution 42/163). In his annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General said there should be a comprehensive approach to the problem of financial flows to Africa, one that would accelerate Africa's implementation of its priority programme for adjustment and place the region on a path to more rapid development.

The United Nations system, particularly the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, continued to assist countries stricken by disasters. Recognizing the importance of reducing the impact of natural disasters, the Assembly designated the 1990s as the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (resolution 42/169), the objective of which would be to reduce, through concerted international action, loss of life, property damage and social and economic disruption caused by natural disasters. The Secretary-General was asked by the Assembly (decision 42/433) to implement his recommendations concerning arrangements within the United Nations system for disaster and emergency assistance and co-ordination; his initiative in establishing a focal point in the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to ensure effective response in disaster and other emergency situations was welcomed.

In other action, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to mobilize international support and assistance to Maldives for disaster relief and the strengthening of its coastal defences in the aftermath of tidal waves (resolution 42/202).

In May, the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1987/14) urged Governments, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to support the implementation of a plan of action adopted by Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda to combat the effects of the prolonged drought and other related natural disasters in their countries. Member States, NGOs and the United Nations system were again asked to participate in alleviating the adverse effects of the drought in Somalia in a July Council resolution (1987/73). In May, the Council also called for assistance to Vanuatu following a February cyclone (resolution 1987/15) and to Ecuador following a devastating March earthquake (resolution 1987/17).

Both the Council and the Assembly (resolutions 1987/74 and 42/199, respectively) called for continued assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon. The Council asked Governments and concerned organs and organizations to provide contributions to alleviate the consequences of the 1986 earthquake in El Salvador (resolution 1987/16), a request which was echoed by the Assembly in December (resolution 42/203).

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: South Africa and the front-line and other States of southern Africa. Development and international economic co-operation: developing countries. Operational activities for development: technical co-operation through UNDP. Regional economic and social activities: Africa; Asia and the Pacific-environment. Environment: terrestrial ecosystems—desertification and drought control. Children, youth and aging persons: children—UNICEF programmes by region. Refugees and displaced persons.

Economic assistance

In 1987, the United Nations continued to implement special economic assistance programmes in countries facing circumstances that had a serious negative effect on their development efforts. In accordance with a recommendation of the 1986 Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General, in an April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations⁽²⁾ stated that administration of special economic assistance programmes would be the responsibility of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) except in cases of political sensitivity.

In an August report⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General summarized the main developments in the economies and assistance programmes of the 18 countries for which UNDP had assumed responsibility (see below). Eleven countries covered by the programme were in Africa, four were in Latin America and the Caribbean, two were Arab States and one was in the Pacific. Of the total, 14 were classified by the United Nations as least developed countries (LDCs) (see p. 389). Some programmes were directed towards reconstruction after natural or man-made disasters, while others were designed to help overcome obstacles to national development posed by weak infrastructure—physical, institutional, technical and administrative. A number of countries for which programmes had been initiated were coping with problems attendant on their situation as small island developing or landlocked countries.

Critical economic situation in Africa

In accordance with a 1986 resolution⁽⁴⁾ by which the General Assembly adopted the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD), the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1987⁽⁵⁾ in which he reviewed progress in the Programme of Action's implementation.

The report summarized action taken by African countries, the international community and the Secretary-General. It concluded that in the relatively short period of time since the Programme of Action's adoption, a number of important trends in its implementation had become discernible. The most reassuring trend was the determination with which African countries had engaged in the Programme's implementation. A large and growing number of them had embarked on significant policy reforms and structural adjustment measures to bring about accelerated recovery of their economies and to set new foundations for more sustainable development.

Despite some positive trends, however, there were grounds for serious concern. The external environment, already adverse when the Programme of Action was adopted, became even more aggravated. Evidence suggested that the financial requirements indicated in the Programme were increasing at a time when commodity and other export earnings were dangerously inadequate and when Africa's debt and debt-servicing problems had worsened and were in many cases becoming increasingly unmanageable. Total official development assistance (ODA) had stagnated in real terms, while bilateral ODA had increased slightly. Although some donors had significantly increased assistance to Africa and had announced higher pledges within the framework of round-table and consultative group meetings, overall net resource flows to Africa actually declined in real terms compared with 1985 levels and were grossly inadequate given the dramatic fall in Africa's export earnings from commodities and the sharp rise in its debt-servicing obligations. Serious initiatives had yet to be taken by the international community to respond to Africa's debt, commodity and resource flow problems. The convergence of those problems had caused severe balance-of-payments difficulties and further depression of import and investment levels so that recovery and development programmes were at serious risk. The Secretary-General had, therefore, established an Advisory Group on Resource Flows to Africa and would submit recommendations to Governments when he had received the Group's assessment and advice.

There was a need for the international community to act quickly to make available net additional financial resources and to increase their flexibility, the Secretary-General reported, and he reminded all concerned of their commitment in the Programme of Action to a greater emphasis on programme support in its priority areas. Noting that a number of countries also faced continued or re-emergent natural and man-made emergency situations, he urged the international community, in responding to such emergencies, to avoid diverting resources from the Programme of Action. In conclusion, he warned that Africa's margins for manoeuvre to implement the Programme were being reduced. The human and social consequences were unacceptable, and nothing less than the best co-ordination of resource flows and the most energetic partnership between Africa and the international community would ensure adequate forward momentum towards the Programme's goals. He urged the Assembly to examine all means to remove the road-blocks that had appeared in the path of its Programme, and pledged his unrelenting efforts to expedite urgently the necessary solutions.

In accordance with a recommendation made by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (April/May) (6) the Secretary-General submitted a further report on implementation of UNPAAERD, (7) giving information on measures he intended to take in the context of the proposed programme budget for 1988-1989 to ensure that consideration was given to the priority he had assigned to UNPAAERD. The report summarized information on activities and programmes of the United Nations system received from the following: Economic Commission for Africa (ECA); United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF); World Food Council; UNDP; the United Nations Departments of International Economic and Social Affairs, Special Political Questions, Regional Co-operation, Decolonization and Trusteeship, and Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD); and the United Nations Centres for Human Settlements, Transnational Corporations and Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs.

ACC activities. The Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), at its first regular session of 1987 (Geneva, 27-29 April), (8) discussed the follow-up to the General Assembly's 1986 special session on the critical economic situation in Africa. (9) It had before it an information paper which summarized actions taken by several organizations of the system in response to the Programme of Action and outlined several policy issues relevant to the situation in Africa, including the need for sectoral consultations and collaboration on round-table meetings and consultative groups. The Committee endorsed proposals for further action contained in the secretariat paper, particularly the suggestion to set up inter-agency task forces at the local level along sectoral lines.

In its annual overview report for 1987, (10) ACC said it had reviewed developments in the African region, particularly the situation of financial flows and policy developments, as well as United Nations activities at the field level. ACC was briefed by its members on their activities in implementing UNPAAERD and expressed concern that, in spite of efforts by African countries to adjust their economic policies and some increase in the volume of available resources, the response of the international community had not been adequate to alleviate constraints on African countries' efforts to implement the Programme.

UNDP activities. In a March report to the Governing Council on UNDP'S role in implementing the Programme of Action, (11) the UNDP Administrator stated that UNDP resources totalling more than $1.3 billion would be oriented during the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) to support implementation of the Programme's priorities and themes. Special UNDP activities to implement particular components of the Programme included the round-table process for which UNDP served as lead agency at the request of 18 sub-Saharan African Governments. That process included consultation and co-ordination with respect to national macro-economic policies, strategies and programme priorities, as well as in-country sectoral and special programme consultations. Round-table conferences aimed to ensure a dialogue and achieve mutually reinforced commitments among principal donors and African Governments for a medium-term plan of action. UNDP also conducted the initial phase of National Technical Co-operation Assessment and Programme (NATCAP) exercises for seven African Governments. The trial period with NATCAPs demonstrated that the exercises provided African Governments with the means to establish or strengthen their methodology and capacity to plan, co-ordinate, manage and monitor their technical co-operation, which usually constituted 20 to 35 per cent of their ODA and totalled more than $100 million annually for several African countries. UNDP also assisted African countries in strengthening government planning and economic management, fostering larger private investment and a more effective role of the non-governmental sector and promoting more effective involvement of untapped development resources.

The report further stated that actions were launched to develop a data base and information to permit African Governments, the donor community and the Secretary-General to monitor implementation of the Programme of Action. Activities to monitor implementation would be funded by a large-scale UNDP project with staff inputs from the World Bank; ECA would also play a lead role, and bodies such as DTCD, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), UNICEF and the International Labour Organisation would be involved. African Governments and United Nations organizations and agencies gathered data that should be incorporated, and UNDP and the World Bank would help interested African Governments to maintain that essential data in the future.

By an 18 June decision, (12) the UNDP Governing Council endorsed NATCAPS as an important new instrument and requested the Administrator to extend that initiative to other interested African countries. It urged UNDP, in co-operation with ECA, to provide increased support to African countries for implementation, follow-up and monitoring of the priority themes of the Programme of Action and authorized the Administrator to continue to support ECA in enhancing its capacity to implement regional and subregional projects within the Programme's framework. UNDP was also asked to help interested African Governments strengthen their capacities to formulate and implement economic reforms and sectoral plans. The Council asked the Administrator, in co-operation with other United Nations bodies, including the Joint Consultative Group on Policy—UNDP, UNICEF, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the World Food Programme (WFP)—to continue to assist African countries and subregional and regional organizations to assess the possible adverse effects of adjustment programmes, particularly on the social sectors of their economies and their institutional capacities, and to identify specific recommendations for remedial measures. The Administrator was urged to ensure that UNDP and its funds and programmes provided more integrated and efficient support to African countries, that efforts were made to achieve more coherence and co-operation with other United Nations funding organizations, and that co-ordination and co-operation continued to be strengthened with ECA and other multilateral and intergovernmental organizations in the follow-up to and implementation of the Programme of Action. The Council urged UNDP to use technical co-operation among developing countries as fully as possible to carry out its operations at national, interregional and intra-African levels, invited it to take concrete measures to integrate and enhance the role of women in all aspects of economic and social development in Africa, and asked the Administrator to report in 1988 on action taken to implement the decision.

UNCTAD action. In a March 1987 report(13) to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) Trade and Development Board (TDB), the UNCTAD Secretary-General described UNCTAD'S contribution to implementing the Programme of Action. He stated that he had established an UNCTAD Task Force on UNPAAERD and described its programme of work in the areas of trade, development and other issues.

On 3 April,(14) TDB noted with appreciation the UNCTAD Secretary-General's arrangements for implementing the Programme and asked him to report to TDB'S October/November session and subsequent sessions on progress concerning UNCTAD'S contribution to its implementation.

In a September report to TDB,(15) the UNCTAD Secretary-General outlined some elements of the Final Act of UNCTAD VII (see Chapter IV of this section) as they related to UNCTAD'S contribution to UNPAAERD and described activities within programmes of the UNCTAD secretariat which contributed to the implementation.

On 16 October,(16) TDB endorsed the programme elements for UNPAAERD follow-up within UNCTAD and asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to implement such programme elements, which were annexed to the programme budget for 1988-1989 (see p. 497), giving particular attention to policies on commodity production and trade, debt management and the use of the generalized system of preferences. TDB stressed the importance of strengthening UNCTAD'S technical assistance activities within the context of the Programme of Action, making full use of UNDP and other available resources. It endorsed the UNCTAD Secretary-General's initiative to prepare a report on the interaction between the external environment and the efforts of African countries in implementing UNPAAERD, and asked him to convene consultations to assist TDB in monitoring and considering activities relevant to the Programme, with a view to strengthening and accelerating its implementation within UNCTAD. States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs were invited to contribute resources to support the UNCTAD secretariat's activities.

Communications. A number of communications dealing with the critical economic situation in Africa were received by the Secretary-General. Among these were a 3 March letter from Kuwait transmitting the final communique and resolutions adopted by the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January);(17) a 6 July letter from Zimbabwe transmitting the Pyongyang Declaration and Plan of Action on South-South Co-operation adopted at the Extraordinary Ministerial Conference of Non-Aligned Countries on South-South Co-operation (Pyongyang, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, 9-13 June);(18) a 16 July letter from Nigeria transmitting the Abuja Statement on Economic Recovery and Long-term Development in Africa issued at the International Conference on Africa: the challenge of economic recovery and accelerated development (Abuja, 15-19 June);(19) a 23 September letter from Canada transmitting a background paper on the outcome of the second Francophone Summit of Heads of State and Government (Quebec, 2-4 September);(20) a 28 September letter from Zambia transmitting a document entitled "Africa's Preliminary Assessment of the Implementation of UNPAAERD", presented at the tenth ordinary session of the Permanent Steering Committee of the Organization of African Unity (New York, 21-25 September);(21) a 2 October letter from Guatemala transmitting the Declaration of the eleventh annual meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 developing countries (New York, 28-30 September);(22) and a 23 October letter from Zimbabwe transmitting the final communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the forty-second session of the United Nations General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October).(23)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1987/39 on the critical social situation in Africa, the Economic and Social Council asked the Secretary-General to continue to pay special attention to implementing the social aspects of the Programme of Action. In resolution 1987/52 on the world social situation, the Council noted with deep concern that the economic and social situation in Africa continued to be critical and that it had been exacerbated by the world recession and by famine, drought and desertification. It called for full implementation of the 1984 General Assembly resolution on the critical economic situation in Africa(24) and of the 1986 resolution containing UNPAAERD. (4) In resolution 1987/67 on the international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa, the Council reaffirmed the individual and collective commitment of African Governments and the international community to UNPAAERD.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/163 without vote.

Critical economic situation in Africa: United Nations Programme of Action for, African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/29 of 3 December 1984, 40/40 of 2 December 1985, S-13/2 of 1 June 1986 to which is annexed the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, and 41/29 of 31 October 1986,

Having considered the progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Appreciating the considerable efforts and sacrifices made by African countries that have implemented their commitments as set forth in the Programme of Action, often at high social and political costs, and their will to continue these reform efforts,

Noting with appreciation the initiatives, proposals and efforts of those donor countries and multilateral financial and development institutions which are assisting African countries in implementing the Programme of Action and stressing the need for continued efforts and the urgent translation of such initiatives, proposals and efforts into concrete actions and measures,

Noting with concern that thus far the response of the international community has not been adequate to alleviate the severe constraints on the efforts of the African countries to implement the Programme of Action,

Concerned that the critical economic situation in Africa still persists,

Deeply concerned by the fact that the situation in southern Africa continues to be adversely affected by the policies of political and economic destabilization and acts of aggression pursued by the South African regime, thus undermining the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Emphasizing that a close relationship exists between development prospects and the availability of external resources to Africa, including increasing concessionality of external assistance, export earnings, especially from primary commodities, debt-servicing capability and a country's policies of mobilization and utilization of its resources,

Noting the continued commitment to the common points of reference outlined in paragraph 13 of the Programme of Action, and with reference to paragraph 113 of the report of the Secretary-General,

Aware that a large number of African countries are still being stricken by natural calamities, in particular drought, desertification, and grasshopper and locust infestations, which are serious obstacles to economic and social development,

Recognizing that the implementation of the Programme of Action is affected adversely by continuing unfavourable developments in the international economic environment,

Regretting the worsening external debt situation of most African countries in spite of the measures undertaken nationally and internationally and recognizing the need to continue efforts towards further innovative approaches, emphasizing the objectives of long-term, self-sustaining development and the joint responsibility of all parties concerned with a view to finding effective and durable solutions to the economic, financial and debt problems of African countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and in this regard recognizes the several initiatives he has taken in pursuance of the mandate entrusted to him under the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, including the establishment of the Advisory Group on Financial Flows to Africa;

2. Takes note of the endeavours of the donor community and the action taken by international financial and development institutions in the implementation of the Programme of Action, but notes with concern that the international community has not been able so far to provide sufficient resources to support and supplement African development efforts;

3. Commends African countries that have done their utmost to implement the Programme of Action, and stressing the need to continue its implementation, welcomes the continued determination of those countries to implement their commitments, including the reform efforts provided for in the Programme of Action;

4. Reaffirm that the implementation of the Programme of Action based on mutual commitments and shared responsibility requires that all parties concerned respect their commitments and discharge their responsibilities accordingly, and in this regard reaffirms the determination of all parties to continue to honour their commitments under the Programme;

5. Regrets that overall net resource flows to African countries have declined, in real terms, while their terms of trade have worsened, export earnings from commodities have decreased substantially and debt-servicing obligations have risen significantly;

6. Notes with concern that some African countries are currently net transferors of resources to certain multilateral financial institutions;

7. Calls upon donor countries in this regard to continue their support to multilateral financial and development institutions to enable them to increase their resources to African countries and to improve the possibilities of adopting flexible and effective measures that will assist African countries in dealing with their financial obligations, giving due regard to the economic, social and development needs of each country, and, in this respect, notes that the International Monetary Fund is undertaking a thorough examination of adjustment programmes and their supporting arrangements, including a comprehensive review of conditionality;

8. Calls upon the international community to intensify its efforts to provide the necessary resource flows to African countries and underlines the importance of increasing urgently official development assistance to Africa, as well as the need for all countries to work to create the terms and conditions which would encourage the flow of non-concessional resources with a view to meeting the commitments under the Programme of Action as soon as possible, with the aim of making progress towards this end by the mid-term review of the Programme of Action in 1988;

9. Welcomes the use of existing subregional economic groupings in Africa in the implementation of the Programme of Action, and invites the donor community, multilateral institutions and the operational bodies of the United Nations system to provide resources for projects and programmes identified at the subregional level in the priority areas of the Programme;

10. Urges the international community, in particular the creditor countries, to take into consideration development and investment needs of African countries as well as the repayment capacity of each country, its export earnings, import requirements and external resource flows when considering terms and conditions of debt rescheduling, and to ensure that such terms and conditions do not preclude the flow of additional resources;

11. Calls upon the international community to continue its efforts, inter alia in the context of the Paris Club, to grant adequate terms of rescheduling and other effective debt-relief measures as appropriate to African countries undertaking growth-oriented adjustment and reform efforts, in particular for the poorest and the most indebted of them retroactive terms adjustment, including converting into grants the official development assistance loans or taking equivalent actions having the same impact, and also considering the possibility of applying lower interest rates to their existing debt;

12. Appeals to the international community, in order to deal effectively with problems in the commodity area, to seek lasting solutions aimed at:

(a) Improving the functioning of commodity markets and achieving stable and more predictable conditions in commodity trade, including avoidance of excessive price fluctuations;

(b) Adequate expansion of resources for diversification and participation in the processing, marketing, distribution and transportation of the commodities of African countries;

(c) Improving market access conditions for commodities of export interest to African countries;

(d) Promoting diversification programmes in the context of growth-oriented structural adjustment, taking fully into account the developmental objectives of each country and long-term dynamic comparative advantage considerations of all countries;

13. Calls upon the international community to extend, as a matter of priority, humanitarian, economic and financial assistance to the countries of southern Africa;

14. Decides to establish an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly as the most appropriate mechanism to prepare the review and the appraisal of the Programme of Action to meet for a period of ten working days in September 1988 prior to the forty-third session;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the concerned organs and organizations of the United Nations system, to ensure the necessary preparation of this meeting;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with paragraph 24 (c) of the Programme of Action, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report including concrete recommendations for a speedy and full implementation of the Programme of Action and taking into account provisions of this resolution, which should be made available to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole;

17. Further requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to ensure closer co-operation and co-ordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity in the implementation and monitoring of the Programme of Action;

18. Requests the Economic and Social Council at its organizational session of 1988 to consider the appropriate contributions to be submitted to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole by all parties concerned and to make provisions for proper co-ordination of the contributions;

19. Further requests the Economic and Social Council at its first and second regular sessions of 1988 to consider, as appropriate, the adoption of the necessary arrangements for the meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole.

General Assembly resolution 42/163

8 December 1987 Meeting 95 Adopted without vote

36-nation draft (A/42/L.11/Rev.1 & Rev.1/Add.1); agenda item 21.

Sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Mozambique, Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/42/854; S-G, A/C.5/42/55/Rev.1. Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 54; plenary 48-50, 95.

Benin

In his August 1987 report on special economic assistance programmes, (3) the Secretary-General submitted information on external assistance to Benin in 1985 (25) In a later report, (26) he stated that Benin's economic and financial situation deteriorated further in 1987. Gross domestic product (GDP) declined in real terms by some 0.5 to 2 per cent, following a decline of some 0.2 per cent in 1986. The deficit on the budget of the central administration increased to $125 million, or 7 per cent of GDP, and the deficit on the external current account increased to $190 million, or 11 per cent of GDP, compared with the 1986 deficit of $140 million. Of particular concern was the burden of external public debt; debt servicing for 1987 totalled some $70 million, or 40 per cent of total export earnings, and the accumulation of external payment arrears totalled $235 million.

With regard to agriculture, the harvest was adversely affected by unfavourable rainfall patterns and growing conditions. The output of maize, Benin's principal cereal, was reduced by an estimated 25 per cent compared with the previous year. The output of cotton fell by about 47 per cent compared with 1986; the fall was attributed to a number of factors, including a reduction in prices paid to producers and difficulties in collecting and stocking. Output of sorghum, millet and rice was more satisfactory.

Benin's industrial sector failed to show any growth in real terms, suffering generally from weak demand both at home and abroad and confronting financing difficulties. In association, commercial activity continued to stagnate. Companies engaged in producing sugar, oil and soap, and soft drinks continued to suffer from underutilization of plant capacity and difficulties in procuring markets both domestically and abroad, encountering competition from products produced in neighbouring countries. Cement production also suffered from underutilization of plant capacity as well as from financing difficulties and a lengthy interruption in electricity supply. Production of crude petroleum at the offshore Semé oilfield averaged 5,500 barrels a day during the first half of 1987 compared with an average 7,500 in 1986.(27)

Since the round-table conference in 1983,(28) consultations had taken place on a wide range of sectors; the most recent ones, on integrated rural development and on telecommunications, were held in October and November 1987, respectively. Another round-table conference was scheduled for late 1988/early 1989 to provide an opportunity for dialogue between the Government and bilateral and multilateral donors on programmes to stimulate economic recovery and the country's needs for external assistance to support those programmes. Within its ongoing country programme, UNDP was to implement a project to enhance the Government's planning capacity and another to strengthen aid co-ordination.

For General Assembly action on economic assistance to Benin, see resolution 42/205.

Central African Republic

In addition to being classified as an LDC, the Central African Republic's major development handicaps were its land-locked position, poor transportation, sparse population, small domestic market and largely untrained human resource base, the Secretary-General observed in an August 1987 report.(3)

In a later report,(26) he said that the programme of economic and social rehabilitation embarked on by the Central African Republic in 1981 had achieved some noteworthy results, although some were somewhat less than targeted. Weakness in world prices for cotton and coffee, which normally provided about one third of the country's export revenues, constituted a major set-back. Reacting to the drop in prices, cotton and coffee production in 1987 were 26 and 11 per cent below target, respectively. Total export revenues fell off by some 30 per cent compared with 1986. A shift in agricultural production in favour of food and fuelwood resulted in increased supplies and, to some extent, cheaper staples cushioned the impact of the structural adjustment programme on urban populations. Owing mainly to increased agricultural productivity, the growth of GDP in 1987 was estimated at a little over 2 per cent; the target set under the structural adjustment programme was at least 3.5 per cent.

The results of the first phase of the five-year structural adjustment programme, which started in 1986,(27) were evaluated by the Government and concerned donors at the end of 1987. While some of the programme's aspects had been disrupted by external factors, the Government's implementation of a number of its measures was deemed satisfactory. Areas covered by those measures included fiscal and budgetary policies, the gradual withdrawal of the State with regard to internal price mechanisms and the reform of public institutions and enterprises. Faster progress was hoped for in some areas, particularly in respect of the use of State resources and the sources of budgetary revenue. Budgetary discipline had reduced the central budget deficit from 4 per cent of GDP in 1981 to 2.3 per cent in 1986. Public revenues had increased by 32 per cent between 1982 and 1985, after which receipts fell off as a result of the decline in export revenues. In 1984/85, just before the collapse of cotton and coffee prices, financial stabilization efforts had curbed the growth of the external debt from 43 per cent of GDP to 39 per cent. However, debt-service payments, which were to have represented 13.9 per cent of export earnings after a rescheduling negotiated with Paris Club creditors, represented over 20 per cent of export revenues in 1987.

A round-table meeting of countries and institutions desiring to support the Central African Republic's economic development was organized by UNDP, (Geneva, 18 and 19 June 1987). Requirements for external financing of the investment programme for the Republic were estimated at about $160 million annually over three years: preliminary indications given by participants showed that those requirements would be more than covered. As a follow-up to the round-table's decisions, sectoral meetings were to be organized on rural development and on education, training and employment. In the context of the NATCAP exercise for the country, organized by UNDP, a seminar on national planning was held in November 1987. Under its fourth country programme (1987-1991), which called for $22.3 million in total resources, UNDP was providing support to strengthen the Ministry of Planning, Statistics and Economic and Financial Co-operation, which was responsible for aid co-ordination.

For General Assembly action regarding economic assistance to the Central African Republic, see resolution 42/205.

Chad

Land-locked Chad was an LDC, ranking near the lowest in terms of life expectancy, literacy and health indicators, stated the Secretary-General in an August 1987 report.⁽³⁾

In a later report,⁽²⁶⁾ he said that recurrence of drought conditions in Chad resulted in a marked reduction in agricultural production in 1987, with food crops as well as the principal export crop, cotton, affected. Owing to the fall in agricultural production, which accounted for 43 per cent of total output, GDP was estimated to have declined in 1987. Reduced cotton exports depressed both export revenues (of which they constituted 60 per cent) and state fiscal receipts (to which they contributed 20 per cent). State revenues declined for the third consecutive year, and the situation with respect to the external trade account, estimated by the World Bank to have been in deficit since 1981, worsened. At the end of 1986, external debt outstanding and disbursed amounted to $171.8 million. Total debt-service payments due in 1986 totalled $3.2 million.

The framework for the co-ordination of external aid for public investment in Chad was an interim plan of the Government for 1986-1988, prepared with UNDP assistance and presented at the round-table conference in 1985.⁽²⁹⁾ The UNDP fourth country programme for Chad (1987-1991) was structured around the three central national priorities: agro-sylvo-pastoral development; development of communications and transportation infrastructure; and development of human resources. Under a new project on planning support, UNDP was helping the Ministry responsible to the President for planning to update the macro-economic background and clarify sectoral strategies, define an annual investment programme and develop a method for following up and improving co-ordination of assistance. The budget for the three-year project was $3.5 million, and the World Bank was the executing agency.

The emergency conditions following the drought of 1984-1985 and the large-scale displacement of people as a result of armed conflict imposed a heavy strain on the national economy. Assistance for victims of armed conflict was provided by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO), while UNICEF collaborated with the World Bank and FAO to provide rural areas with wells and with equipment and training facilities to promote health education and small-scale farming. UNICEF also assisted the Government in carrying out a nation-wide immunization programme and was active in maternal and child health care, nutrition and training of primary school teachers. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) reported that by the end of 1987 it had assisted in the reintegration of some 97,000 Chadians who had returned to their country. Contributions of close to $3 million from the donor community were used to meet the basic domestic needs of returnees and to provide agricultural tools and seeds. Relief foods were distributed in conjunction with WFP.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/200 by recorded vote.

Special economic assistance to Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/198 of 8 December 1986 and its previous resolutions on assistance in the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Chad, emergency humanitarian assistance to Chad and special economic assistance to that country,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on special economic assistance to Chad, relating, inter alia, to the economic and financial situation of Chad, the status of assistance provided for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country and the progress made in organizing and executing the programme of assistance for that country,

Considering that the war and the drought are compromising all the reconstruction and development efforts of the Government of Chad,

Concerned at the recent invasion of locusts, which has aggravated the already precarious food and health situation in Chad, in particular that of the people displaced as a result of the war and the drought,

Taking note of the numerous appeals launched by the Government of Chad and governmental and non-governmental organizations regarding the seriousness of the food and health situation in Chad,

Taking note also of the appeal made by the Government of Chad for a round table on the rehabilitation and reconstruction needs of the northern region, which has suffered the most from the effects of the war,

Recognizing the need for emergency humanitarian assistance to Chad,

Also recognizing the need for assistance in the reconstruction and development of Chad,

Recalling the round table on assistance to Chad convened by the United Nations Development Programme at Geneva on 4 and 5 December 1985, in accordance with the arrangements agreed upon at the International Conference on Assistance to Chad, held in November 1982,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and governmental and non-governmental organizations that responded and are continuing to respond generously to the appeals of the Government of Chad and of the Secretary-General by furnishing assistance to Chad;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties of Chad and to mobilize assistance for that country;

3. Renews the request made to States, competent United Nations organizations and programmes and international economic and financial institutions to continue:

(a) To provide the necessary humanitarian assistance to the people of Chad, who have suffered as a result of the war, the effects of the drought and the invasion of locusts and predators;

(b) To contribute to the reconstruction of Chad;

4. Again invites States and agencies to take part in the sectoral meetings scheduled at the round table on assistance to Chad and to honour the commitments they made;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to implement the interim development plan submitted at Geneva;

(b) To continue to assess, in close collaboration with the humanitarian agencies concerned, the humanitarian needs, particularly in the areas of food and health, of the people displaced by the war and the drought;

(c) To mobilize special humanitarian assistance for persons who have suffered as a result of the war, the drought and the invasion of locusts and predators and for the resettlement of displaced persons;

6. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to organize, in collaboration with the competent United Nations organizations and programmes and the Government of Chad, a round table to formulate an emergency assistance programme for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the northern region and for the resettlement of persons displaced by the war;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to keep the situation in Chad under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/200

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 150-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/796) without vote, 30 October (meeting 26); 21-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.15), orally revised; agenda item 86. Sponsors: Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, France, Gabon, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Japan, Mali, Mauritania, Senegal, Togo, Tunisia, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 15, 16, 20, 25, 26; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Djibouti

The adverse climatic conditions that impeded any meaningful agricultural activities, the lingering effects of recurrent drought and the presence of large numbers of refugees had had a devastating impact on the economic and social development of Djibouti, said the Secretary-General in an August report.(3)

In a later report,(26) he noted that Djibouti's economy had shown no real growth in 1987. The Government's budgetary austerity campaign and an unfavourable global economic environment were not conducive to expansion in the industrial and commercial sectors; exceptions to that trend were increased receipts from port-related facilities and services due to increased use of the port of Djibouti during the year.

The Government instituted a number of measures to improve the country's budgetary and financial situation during the year. They extended to economies in the civil service administration, improvements in collecting indirect taxes and rebuilding reserve funds. It also studied the situation of public enterprises and public industrial enterprises in financial difficulty. Measures to encourage investment in the private sector were also receiving attention.

Of Djibouti's planned public investment programme for 1987, amounting to $356 million, 74 per cent was to be financed by external loans, 18 per cent by grants and 8 per cent from domestic resources. Sixty per cent of the 1987 plan was implemented. Servicing of Djibouti's long-term external debt (State and public enterprises) increased in 1987 to $13.5 million. Payments due in 1988 were expected to increase by a further 9.6 per cent to $14.8 million.

In December 1987, principal donors met to discuss the development of the geothermal energy sector. An investment programme of about $60 million was envisaged, and donors expressed interest in participating. UNDP was asked to continue the technical direction of the project and to finance a feasibility study.

Drought was a chronic condition in Djibouti, but 1987 was a particularly dry year. In November, a joint WFP/Djibouti mission noted that 50,000 nomads were seriously affected and that many of their cattle had died. The situation in the northern region was deemed as catastrophic as in the regions bordering Ethiopia, where a state of emergency existed.

Large numbers of refugees placed further pressure on Djibouti's resources, and repatriation efforts continued. Of the 16,715 refugees enumerated by the Government at the end of 1986, 3,591 had been repatriated by the end of 1987. Some 13,000 refugees in Djibouti were being assisted by WFP.

For General Assembly action regarding economic assistance to Djibouti, see resolution 42/205.

Gambia

Classified as an LDC, the Gambia was among the world's poorest countries, with per capita GDP well under $300, said the Secretary-General in an August 1987 report.⁽³⁾ With no known important mineral or other natural resources, it was heavily dependent on one cash crop, ground-nuts, which was the major source of income for two thirds of the population and accounted for 85 to 90 per cent of domestic exports.

In a later report,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General said that the economic recovery programme adopted by the Government in 1985⁽³⁰⁾ and extended in mid-1986 for a further three years⁽³¹⁾ was showing positive results. As a result of the adjustment efforts, the return of favourable weather and the availability of substantial financing on concessionary terms, economic growth had resumed. However, the country continued to face economic uncertainties because of the narrowness of its production base and the economy's vulnerability to external developments.

The Gambia's real growth in GDP was estimated at 6 per cent in 1986/87 and was expected to rise by at least 4 per cent in 1987/88. Important to the strong 1986/87 growth rate was the sharp increase in ground-nut production, which resulted from a combination of favourable weather conditions and higher prices paid to producers. In addition, private and public construction activities expanded, receipts from tourism increased and commercial activity generally shared in the economic expansion. Liberalized exchange rate and interest rate policies helped revive private sector confidence. Inflation fell from an annual rate of 70 per cent in 1985/86 to 20 per cent in 1986/87 and to about 10 per cent for the period from July to December 1987. The balance-of-payments deficit declined from 19.3 million special drawing rights (SDR) in 1985/86 to SDR 7.2 million in 1986/87; it was expected to decline further in 1987/88 to SDR 1.4 million. However, the current account deficit widened in 1986/87, owing in part to a strong expansion in imports associated with more buoyant domestic activity.

The flow of bilateral, multilateral and United Nations assistance remained in line with the country's priority development objectives: the World Bank provided support to the agriculture sector; the European Community helped to increase food production and productivity, including fisheries; and the United States Agency for International Development assisted in agricultural research and the introduction of new crops. UNDP's fourth country programme (1987-1991) for the Gambia included support for water resources and for animal health and horticulture. UNDP was also assisting the Government to strengthen its institutional structure, and, with the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the United Kingdom's Overseas Development Agency, provided support in planning, finance and economic management. In the context of the round-table process, a sectoral consultation on agriculture and water was held at Banjul in October 1987.

For General Assembly action regarding economic assistance to the Gambia, see resolution 42/205.

Guinea

In an August 1987 report,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the Government of Guinea's objectives for 1987-1991 centred on providing the basic needs of the population and achieving structural equilibrium in the nation's macro-economic and financial affairs. Basic needs included food security; reorganized and more efficient public services for health, education and vocational training, sanitation, water supply and electric power; job creation, particularly in urban areas; and improved housing. Structural disequilibrium in public finance and the balance of payments was so acute that Guinea's efforts would need to be supplemented over the five years of the medium-term development strategy, 1987-1991, to cover public expenditures, meet external commitments and carry out the investment policy to achieve economic recovery. Over that period, Guinea planned to invest some $1.2 billion, 90 per cent of which would be financed from external sources at essentially concessional terms. In addition, more than $300 million would be needed in balance-of-payments and government budget assistance.

The first meeting of the Consultative Group for Guinea, organized under World Bank auspices, was held in Paris on 18 and 19 March. The meeting was successful in receiving indications of support for the $670 million of investment financing and $200 million of balance-of-payments funding necessary to implement Guinea's economic programme for 1987-1989. It was agreed that efforts were needed to improve aid co-ordination through meetings to discuss sectoral development prospects.

Guinea-Bissau

Despite recent gains, Guinea-Bissau, an LDC with a per capita GDP of less than $200, continued to face enormous structural obstacles to its development, particularly growing imbalances that could not be sustained, said the Secretary-General in an August 1987 report.(3)

As a major step in reinforcing its economic and financial stabilization programme, the Government, in May 1987, concluded an agreement with the World Bank and IMF for a structural adjustment programme whose first phase was aimed at economic and financial stabilization and at re-establishing macro-economic equilibrium. Donor support for the programme was favourable; the World Bank announced three new International Development Association credits, and support was also received from the African Development Fund of the African Development Bank, IMF, the Federal Republic of Germany, Saudi Arabia and Switzerland. UNDP held informal co-ordination meetings on the programme and prepared many projects in its support, particularly to reduce its negative effects: a project for retraining laid-off officials; financing for a special public works programme; aid for the creation of small enterprises; and a study of the social effects of the programme in collaboration with the World Bank and the National Institute for Studies and Research. In June, a three-year technical assistance project, partly funded by UNDP, was approved to help the Government in financial planning, budgetary control, investment project selection and evaluation, and external debt management. The UNDP country programme for Guinea-Bissau for 1987-1991, approved by the Governing Council in June 1987, totalled $19.3 million. In order to strengthen aid co-ordination, UNDP also approved a project of support for the Secretary of State for Co-operation in the amount of $145,000.

In the context of the round-table process, sectoral consultations on agriculture and fisheries took place in Guinea-Bissau in May 1987. Participants included almost all major donors.

Madagascar

The major economic crisis faced by Madagascar since the beginning of the 1980s had been exacerbated by a number of natural disasters, said the Secretary-General in an August 1987 report (3) In a later report,(26) he said that in real terms Madagascar's economy had grown by 1.4 per cent in 1987; however, with population growing at an estimated annual rate of 3 per cent, real per capita income continued to decline. Agricultural output, with an annual increase of 2 per cent, was also growing at a slower rate than population.

Climatic conditions were not favourable to Madagascar's agricultural output in 1987. Floods in the high plateau areas in January damaged the main rice crop and in the southern tip of the country chronic drought until April resulted in malnutrition.

Serious adjustment measures, formulated in co-operation with the World Bank and IMF, continued within the structural policy framework for 1987-1990. Their main objective was to increase the growth rate of GDP and exports. It was hoped that continuation of the trade liberalization process and a further devaluation of the Malagasy franc, by 45 per cent in May/June 1987, would encourage producers and exporters to focus on processing and marketing export items, followed by new investment in those activities in which Madagascar enjoyed comparative advantage. In the 1987-1990 phase of adjustment, attention would be given to increasing the efficiency of allocation and use of public resources. Other issues receiving attention were social problems emanating from successive devaluations of the Malagasy franc, nutritional deficiencies and health problems affecting children, and environmental degradation, particularly deforestation.

Two new UNDP-funded projects relating to enhanced management of external aid were started in 1987. One was to strengthen the capacity of Madagascar's Directorate General of Planning to evaluate projects, while the other was to strengthen its capacity to co-ordinate external aid. The projects were prepared and implemented jointly by the Directorate and the World Bank.

For General Assembly action regarding economic assistance to Madagascar, see resolution 42/205.

Uganda

In an August 1987 report,(3) the Secretary-General summarized the situation in Uganda, which, he said, faced arduous tasks of rehabilitation and reconstruction following years of conflict that had resulted in loss of life, ravaging of the country's socio-economic infrastructure and uprooting of large segments of the population.

On 11 and 12 June in Paris, the Government's economic recovery programme was presented to the Consultative Group for Uganda, chaired by the World Bank. According to indications given at that meeting, commitments for 1987 would exceed the recommended target figure of $250 million. Uganda said that, having undertaken a number of economic and financial stabilization measures in May, it would seek to overcome severe supply shortages that were hindering efforts to expand output, improve marketing and distribution and increase export revenues. The Government also wished to address problems of relief for Ugandans returning either from abroad or from other regions to areas that were without homes, food, schools or medical facilities; some $15 million would be required in 1987/88 for relief.

The UNHCR-assisted operation to repatriate Ugandan refugees from southern Sudan and Haut Zaïre to the West Nile region was extended until the end of 1987 and would be further extended as necessary. Of approximately 120,000 returnees, half were assisted in organized rural settlements and half were settled spontaneously.

Countries and areas in other regions

Central America

In a February 1987 report to the General Assembly on the situation in Central America (32) (see also p. 186), the Secretary-General mentioned the deep impression made on him by the natural disasters which had befallen the capitals of some countries in the region: Managua, Nicaragua, much of which was destroyed in 1972; and San Salvador, El Salvador, with thousands of homeless people and ruined buildings as a result of the 1986 earthquake (see also p. 460). Those disasters, he said, underscored the need to draw up an emergency plan for the reconstruction and large-scale economic development of the region, which in turn would help facilitate the solution of the political crisis there.

On 27 August, (33) Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua transmitted to the Secretary-General a document entitled "Procedure for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", signed by the Presidents of those countries plus Honduras (see also p. 188) and stating that in the climate of freedom guaranteed by democracy, they would adopt agreements to speed up development in order to make their societies more egalitarian and free from misery. Strengthening democracy entailed creating a system of economic and social well-being and justice. To achieve those goals, they would jointly seek special economic assistance from the international community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/204 by recorded vote.

Special economic assistance to Central America
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/1 of 7 October 1987 entitled "The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives", in particular paragraph 6, in which it urged the international community to increase technical, economic and financial assistance to the Central American countries and requested the Secretary-General to promote a special plan of co-operation for Central America,

Bearing in mind the need to contribute effectively to peace, co-operation, respect for human rights, the implementation of genuine democratic and pluralist processes and economic and social development, which are indispensable for ensuring the well-being of the peoples of the Central American region,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Central America, in particular with regard to the need to implement an emergency plan for the reconstruction and large-scale economic development of the region, which in turn will facilitate the resolution of the political and security crisis facing the region,

Recalling the terms of the recent agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 by the Central American Presidents, which stressed the need to adopt agreements that would accelerate development in order to create more egalitarian societies that are free of poverty,

Convinced of the urgent need to improve the standard of living of the Central American peoples,

Emphasizing the importance of appropriating additional resources for development and of the full use of human resources, as recognized in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and recognizing the economic co-operation efforts being made to this end by the European Economic Community and others with the countries of the region,

Commending the concerted efforts being made by the countries of the Central American region to deal with adverse economic and social conditions through economic and social integration and co-operation,

Convinced that peace and development are inseparable,

1. Supports the implementation of mechanisms essential to achieving the economic and social objectives agreed to by the Governments of Central America in the Document of Objectives of 9 September 1983, sponsored by the Contadora Group;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme, to send a technical mission to the Central American countries for the purpose of determining, in consultation with each of the Governments of the region, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and such integration bodies as the Permanent Secretariat of the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration, the Central American Bank for Economic Integration, the Latin American Economic System and the Action Committee for the Support of Economic and Social Development in Central America, the economic and social priorities of the countries of the region;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, on the basis of the priorities identified, to formulate, in close consultation with the Governments of the region and the appropriate organs and organizations of the United Nations system, a special plan of co-operation for Central America to be submitted, in view of the immediate needs, no later than 30 April 1988 for consideration by the General Assembly during its current session;

4. Urges the international community to increase technical, economic and financial assistance to the Central American countries, as a way of bolstering their efforts to achieve peace and development;

5. Appeals to the organs and organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate in implementing the special plan of co-operation for Central America and to continue and expand their assistance programmes;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/204

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 154-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/796) without vote, 18 November (meeting 40); 29-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.25/Rev.1); agenda item 86.

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, El Salvador, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Portugal, Spain, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 15, 16, 20, 25, 26-28, 30, 37, 39, 40; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Democratic Yemen

Poor in natural resources, Democratic Yemen—one of the LDCs—was characterized by a very harsh climate with an average rainfall of less than 3 inches; approximately 75 per cent of the 70,000 hectares under cultivation were irrigated by river flooding and the rest by ground water. Its population, estimated at 2 million, was growing at a rate of 2.6 per cent per year, according to an August 1987 report of the Secretary-General.⁽³⁾

The problems facing the country had been compounded by the consequences of disastrous floods in 1982, which had undermined the targets of the second five-year plan (1981-1985), the Secretary-General said in a later report.⁽²⁶⁾ Implementation of the third five-year plan (1986-1990) was delayed by civil disturbance; in January 1986, and the Government proceeded with a one-year investment plan. In the light of a new resources situation, a revised plan was approved in October 1987. With the support of a number of bilateral and multilateral donors, Democratic Yemen was able progressively to resume its developmental activities.

Despite austerity measures imposed to restrict foreign currency spending, imports increased in 1987 by 24 per cent over 1986 in terms of national currency, while the value of non-oil products exported declined by 13 per cent. Remittances from expatriate Yemenis remained at about the 1986 level of $282 million, reflecting the slow-down of economic growth in neighbouring countries of employment. Foreign currency reserves decreased for the third consecutive year and, at $104 million in September 1987, represented just under two thirds of debt-service payments due in 1988.

A positive development was the discovery of oil in April. The extent of reserves was not announced, but in late 1987 an average of 10,000 barrels per day began to be trucked to the refinery, and the amount was expected to increase. Plans were approved to construct two pipelines, and concessions were awarded for further exploration activities.

In December, consultations took place at Aden under UNDP/FAO auspices as part of a major effort to reduce the vulnerability of the country's spate irrigation systems to flood disasters.

For General Assembly action regarding economic assistance to Democratic Yemen, see resolution 42/205.

Ecuador

In his August 1987 report,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General assessed the damages caused by earthquakes in Ecuador on 5 and 6 March 1987 (see p. 457). In a later report,⁽²⁶⁾ he stated that the earthquakes compounded existing social, economic and financial problems. Rehabilitation and reconstruction necessitated unplanned capital expenditures by the Government, and export revenues were considerably lower than anticipated prior to the earthquakes as a result of extensive damage to the oil pipeline. Exports of crude petroleum and derivatives in 1987 totalled $764 million compared with $980 million in 1986. Non-oil exports totalled $1.2 billion, about the same as in 1986. The import bill rose to $1.88 billion in 1987, the increase being due mainly to purchases of capital equipment for the earthquake reconstruction programme, imports of petroleum and petroleum products, and the higher cost of imports. The 1987 deficit on the current account amounted to $776 million, despite the Government's decision to defer payment of some $1 billion in principal and interest on the external debt.

By resolution 1987/17, the Economic and Social Council called on all States to participate in projects and programmes for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of areas in Ecuador affected by the March 1987 earthquake. For General Assembly action regarding economic assistance to Ecuador, see resolution 42/205.

Nicaragua

In his August 1987 report,(3) the Secretary-General observed that in recent years Nicaragua's economy had been adversely affected by various events and natural disasters which had worsened and impeded the normalization of its economic situation.

In a later report,(26) he stated that Nicaragua's GDP increased by 1.7 per cent in 1987, reversing the deteriorating trend of the previous three years. Output of the agricultural sector (including fisheries) rose by 2 per cent, despite the negative effects of armed conflict in production areas, the limited availability of inputs and agricultural machinery and a pattern of irregular rainfall, with drought resulting in the loss of an estimated 244,000 tonnes of basic cereals. The external sector was characterized by restrictions related to the blocking of commercial credit, the global economic environment and the reduced volume and lack of diversification of exportable items. Both the balance of trade and the current balance deteriorated further in 1987.

Government compilations indicated that Nicaragua's rate of inflation accelerated during 1987 to an annual rate of 1,340 per cent as a result of the gap between domestic production and the impossibility of supplementing it through imports on the one hand and the expansion of domestic expenditures occasioned by the state of strife on the other. The Government identified the state of conflict, prevailing since 1981, as the most significant factor affecting the economy in recent years, estimating that it had cost Nicaragua $3.6 billion in property damage and lost production.

Despite a series of measures launched by the Government in 1985 to reduce internal and external disequilibrium and curtail price distortions, the economy by the end of 1987 continued to be characterized by large and growing imbalances, shortage of resources, hyper-inflation and price distortion.

For General Assembly action regarding economic assistance to Nicaragua, see resolution 42/205.

Vanuatu

Vanuatu, an archipelago vulnerable to cyclones, had experienced two in 1985(34) and a particularly damaging one in February 1987 (see p. 456), the Secretary-General said in an August report.(3).

According to a later report,(26) a joint aid donor meeting was held at Port Vila on 1 and 2 June, organized with UNDP assistance. Bilateral donors, multilateral aid agencies and the United Nations system pledged financial and technical assistance totalling $9.7 million to help meet Vanuatu's reconstruction needs.

With regard to the longer-term developmental needs of Vanuatu, an LDC, UNDP was assisting the Government to organize and finance a round-table meeting to be held in 1988.

By resolution 1987/15, the Economic and Social Council urged States to participate generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, in projects and programmes for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Vanuatu.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/205 by recorded vote.

Assistance to Benin, the Central African Republic, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, the Gambia, Madagascar, Nicaragua and Vanuatu
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/200 of 8 December 1986 on assistance to Benin, the Central African Republic, the Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, the Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Madagascar, Nicaragua, Sierra Leone and Vanuatu and its previous resolutions on assistance to the countries concerned,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987/15 of 26 May 1987, on assistance for reconstruction in Vanuatu, and 1987/17 of 26 May 1987, on assistance to Ecuador,

Having considered the relevant report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with satisfaction the financial, economic and technical support that Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional, interregional and intergovernmental organizations have provided to those countries,

Deeply concerned that those countries continue to face special economic and financial difficulties owing to a variety of factors,

Noting the efforts made by the Government of Ecuador to improve and accelerate the process of reconstruction and rehabilitation of the areas affected by the devastation caused by the earthquake in March 1987, in particular its efforts with respect to co-operation and assistance required owing to the damage caused to the economic infrastructure of the country,

Noting the efforts made by the Government of Democratic Yemen in its rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes in response to the devastating consequences of the floods in 1982,

Noting the particularly difficult problems faced by island developing countries in responding to negative and special economic circumstances, as referred to in General Assembly resolution 41/163 of 5 December 1986 on specific measures in favour of island developing countries,

Noting that Vanuatu, an island developing country, continues to experience severe constraints in its economic and social development, particularly as a consequence of the devastation and loss of life caused by cyclone "Uma", which struck it on 7 and 8 February 1987,

Noting that Benin continues to experience serious economic and financial difficulties, characterized by a marked balance-of-payments disequilibrium, the heavy burden of its external debt and a lack of resources necessary for the implementation of its planned economic and social development programme,

Noting that despite serious efforts undertaken by the Government of the Central African Republic since 1982 to re-establish economic stability, the results of which were recognized at the round-table meeting held at Geneva in June 1987, the situation of the country remains precarious, and that more assistance from the international community, including international organizations, is required to enable it to achieve its objectives in development programmes,

Noting that adverse climatic conditions that impede any meaningful agricultural activities, the lingering effects of recurrent drought and the presence of large numbers of refugees are having a devastating impact on the economic and social development of Djibouti,

Noting that, owing to the lack of external financial assistance, the Government of the Gambia has not been able to implement the six projects recommended by the Secretary-General in his report submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session,

Noting that Madagascar's economic and social development efforts are being thwarted by the adverse effects of the cyclones and floods that afflict that country periodically, particularly those of December 1983, January and April 1984 and March 1986, and that the execution of reconstruction and rehabilitation programmes requires the mobilization of sizeable resources exceeding the country's real possibilities,

Noting also that, in recent years, the economy of Nicaragua has been adversely affected by various events and natural disasters, such as drought and the intense rains and floods that occurred in 1982, 1985 and 1986, as well as the floods that affected the Atlantic coast of the country in August 1987, all of which have worsened the economic situation and impeded its normalization, for which international assistance is required to complement national development efforts,

Noting that Benin, the Central African Republic, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, the Gambia and Vanuatu are among the countries classified as least developed countries,

Having heard the statements of Member States at the forty-second session of the General Assembly on the situations currently prevailing in those countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize resources for carrying out the special programmes of economic assistance to those countries;

2. Also expresses its appreciation for the assistance provided or pledged to those countries by Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional, interregional and intergovernmental organizations;

3. Further expresses its appreciation for the efforts undertaken by the Governments of those countries to overcome their economic and financial difficulties;

4. Notes with concern that the assistance made available to those countries has fallen short of their urgent requirements and that additional assistance is still needed;

5. Reaffirms the need for all Governments and international organizations to fulfil the commitments undertaken within the framework of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

6. Appeals to Member States, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to respond generously and urgently to the needs of those countries as identified in the reports of the Secretary-General;

7. Invites the international community to contribute to the special accounts established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to the countries facing special difficulties;

8. Urgently appeals to all international organizations, in particular the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, regional organizations, humanitarian organizations and voluntary agencies to continue and increase, to the extent possible, their assistance in response to the reconstruction, economic recovery and development needs of those countries;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps, in collaboration with the organs, agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 41/192 of 8 December 1986 on special programmes of economic assistance, to provide assistance for all disasters, natural or otherwise, striking those countries and to mobilize the necessary resources to enable them to meet their short-, medium- and long-term needs;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep the question of assistance to those countries and their economic situation under review and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/205

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 154-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/796) without vote, 9 November (meeting 30); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.45), following informal consultations; agenda item 86.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 15, 16, 20, 25, 26-28, 30; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

In the plenary session of the Assembly, a motion by the United States calling for separate votes on the sixth, seventh and ninth to fifteenth preambular paragraphs was rejected by 113 votes to 6, with 22 abstentions. A vote on the motion had been requested by the Ukrainian SSR, supported by Democratic Yemen and Guatemala. In putting forward its request, the Ukrainian SSR pointed out that the text—the result of dialogue and co-operation—had been adopted in the Committee without a vote. The United States said that its response to the call for assistance differed according to the individual countries, and a paragraph-by-paragraph vote would allow those differences to be adequately reflected.

Explaining its vote following the adoption of the text, the United States said that, if its request for separate votes had been agreed to, it would have abstained on the text as a whole and would have voted against the seventh, ninth, fourteenth and fifteenth preambular paragraphs, and abstained on the sixth and tenth to thirteenth.

Australia, speaking also on behalf of Canada and New Zealand, said they would have voted in favour of all nine paragraphs on which a separate vote had been requested; however, they supported the motion for separate votes because they believed that every delegation had the right to present its position to the Assembly for action. They voiced concern that, for the second consecutive year, it was necessary to reopen a text adopted by consensus in the Committee.

In other action, the Assembly, in resolution 42/201, appealed to States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to support the national and collective emergency programmes prepared by the front-line States and other bordering States to overcome critical problems arising from the situation in South Africa.

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1986, p. 1022. (2)A/42/234 & Corr.1. (3)A/42/442. (4)YUN 1986, p. 446, GA res. S-13/2, 1 June 1986. (5)A/42/560 & Corr.1. (6)A/42/16. (7)A/42/674. (8)ACC/1987/8. (9)YUN 1986, p. 442. (10)E/1988/42. (11)DP/1987/20. (12)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/23). (13)TD/B/1131 & Corr.1. (14)A/42/15, vol. I (dec. 345(XXXIII)). (15)TD/B/1146. (16)A/42/15, vol. I (dec. 348(XXXIV)). (17)A/42/178-S/18753. (18)A/42/411. (19)A/42/410. (20)A/42/582. (21)A/42/614. (22)A/42/604 & Corr.1. (23)A/42/681. (24)YUN 1984, p. 470, GA res. 39/29, 3 Dec. 1984. (25)YUN 1986, p. 458. (26)A/43/483. (27)YUN 1986, p. 459. (28)YUN 1983, p. 492. (29)YUN 1985, p. 509. (30)Ibid., p. 513. (31)YUN 1986, p. 461. (32)A/42/127-S/18686. (33)A/42/521-S/19085. (34)YUN 1985, p. 532.

Disasters

In 1987, UNDRO continued to be the focal point and clearing-house for information on relief needs arising from natural disasters and other disaster situations, such as drought, floods, storms, earthquakes and civil conflicts. It continued to mobilize and co-ordinate the relief assistance of the various organizations of the United Nations system and co-ordinated that with assistance given by others. UNDRO also promoted the study, prevention, control and prediction of natural disasters and provided Governments that requested it with assistance in pre-disaster planning.

In his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (see page 3), the Secretary-General said that although natural disasters could not be prevented, their destructive effect could be lessened through predictive and preventive measures. He lauded proposals to stimulate study, planning and preparations on mitigation of the effect of natural disasters over the next decade under United Nations auspices.

Review of disaster and emergency assistance

In October 1987,(1) the Secretary-General submitted a report on implementation of a 1986 General Assembly resolution on UNDRO,(2) including a comprehensive review and assessment of existing mechanisms and arrangements within the system for disaster and emergency assistance and co-ordination. To undertake the review, the Secretary-General engaged a consultant who recommended the holding of periodic meetings of executive heads of the relevant United Nations agencies; establishment of an inter-agency emergency advisory group; further development of regional information and training arrangements; demarcation of responsibilities for the various early-warning systems; consideration of the establishment of a United Nations logistical service; review of telecommunications facilities; extension of regular and systematic evaluation of individual and system performance; improvement of relations with NGOs and the media.

In his report, the Secretary-General also took into account the 1986 recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations that work of offices administering emergency, humanitarian and special economic assistance programmes be rationalized to avoid duplication and that UNDP consider taking over the functions of UNDRO,(3) which were endorsed by the Assembly in 1986.(4) After giving an overview of United Nations disaster and emergency assistance, he concluded that mechanisms and arrangements for disaster and emergency relief and co-ordination had evolved in response to intergovernmental directive as well as changing perceptions of requirements; it had generally been hoped that the creation of UNDRO would provide greater coherence and direction to those efforts. While some progress had been made, further efforts were required, and it was expected that implementation of the consultant's recommendations would further improve performance.

To complement those activities and assist in identifying practical measures to enhance the timeliness and effectiveness of United Nations action, the Secretary-General proposed that a technical panel be convened to advise him on ways to take advantage of technological advances in order to improve the United Nations system's capacity to respond to disaster, i.e., by creating an international emergency communications system. The Secretary-General stated his intention to seek extrabudgetary resources to support the establishment of such a panel.

In order to provide a focal point at Headquarters and to be kept fully informed of potential and existing disaster situations, the Secretary-General had decided to entrust this responsibility on a continuing basis to the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, who would also organize inter-agency meetings of concerned United Nations entities. The various entities would retain responsibility for monitoring and assessing developments in their respective spheres of competence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 42/433 without vote.

Report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/301

At its 96th plenary meeting, on 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/201, and decided:

(a) To request the Secretary-General to proceed with the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein, taking into account the views expressed during the forty-second session of the Assembly and paying special attention to developing a more effective capacity of the United Nations system in the area of disaster relief, preparedness and prevention, and in that context, welcomed the initiative of the Secretary-General to establish a central focal point in the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to ensure effective response by the United Nations system in the field of disaster and other emergency situations;

(b) To request the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988 to consider the matter on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General, and to consider the matter at its forty-third session together with a progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present decision.

General Assembly decision 42/433

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/820/Add.2) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.82), based on informal consultations and orally amended by Morocco; agenda item 12. Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 26, 28, 29, 34, 43; plenary 96.

Office of the UN Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

During 1987, UNDRO continued to cover all aspects of disaster relief as well as preparedness and prevention activities. Its 1987 activities were described in a report of the Secretary-General for 1986-1987.⁽⁵⁾ Disaster preparedness and prevention activities were significantly higher than in the previous biennium, as indicated by the number of requests received from developing countries to strengthen their national emergency services.

During the two-year period, some 30 projects, both national and regional, were in various stages of implementation. In medium- and long-term aspects of disaster mitigation, priority was given to regional, interregional and global activities, such as seismic risk reduction in the Mediterranean region and the pan-Caribbean disaster preparedness and prevention project.

Disaster relief co-ordination constituted the core of UNDRO'S activities, and was thus accorded the highest priority in the allocation of human and financial resources. During 1986-1987, UNDRO was involved in 110 disaster situations, 58 of which were in 1987; the biennial total represented an increase of 11 per cent over the previous biennium.

In order to reinforce co-operation with national emergency relief services for foreign disaster assistance and to make maximum use of their collective experience and advice, meetings of the heads of those services were held on a periodic basis. The first such meeting had been convened in 1986.⁽⁶⁾ The second meeting (Geneva, 6-10 April 1987) took place with the participation of the heads of the emergency services of United Nations specialized agencies and other organizations as well as humanitarian NGOs. Issues discussed included how to discourage the practice of sending unsolicited relief supplies, how to avoid diverging assessments of unmet relief needs and the delivery of large-scale assistance to inaccessible or insecure areas, and the conditions of deployment, utilization and training of foreign search and rescue teams.

Contributions in 1987 for disasters in 20 countries which affected some 38 million people totalled $530 million, as compared to $888.1 million in 1986.

More than half of the 1987 contributions went to Mozambique for expenses related to civil strife.

Major disasters requiring the involvement of UNDRO in 1987 included continued locust infestations in Africa; a tidal wave followed by heavy rains in Bangladesh; a forest fire in China; an earthquake in Ecuador; a drought in Ethiopia; flooding in Guatemala, Haiti and Maldives; cyclones in Fiji and Vanuatu; a typhoon in Viet Nam; a snowstorm in Lesotho; military intervention and hostilities in Lebanon (see p. 274); and continued relief operations in Mozambique.

In an October report on implementation of a 1986 Assembly resolution on UNDRO,⁽¹⁾ including a review of existing mechanisms and arrangements in the United Nations system for disaster and emergency assistance and co-ordination (see above), the consultant who had conducted the review also made recommendations on UNDRO, saying that the focus of its activities should be on sudden natural disasters and related preparation and prevention measures, which would include the preparation of country profiles for countries subject to sudden natural disasters. For UNDRO to be effective, it must act on behalf of the Secretary-General, which would require improved communication between UNDRO and United Nations Headquarters; acting with the Secretary-General's authority, UNDRO should be recognized as the system's lead agency. Emphasizing the need for a continuum of response to disasters and emergencies, rehabilitation and the resumption of development, the consultant said that steps needed to be taken to develop a more effective UNDRO capacity in prevention and preparedness as well as in disaster follow-up. Given the complementary responsibilities of UNDRO and UNDP in particular, he recommended that a joint UNDP/UNDRO task force be established to work out improved co-operation modalities.

Improvements were needed in communication and co-operation at the field level, with closer interaction between UNDRO headquarters and the United Nations resident co-ordinators and the full involvement of other field representatives, the donor community and other relevant United Nations organs through the establishment of emergency operations groups.

In collaboration with UNDRO and other international agencies, UNDP participated in a significant number of emergency and disaster relief operations. In 1987 UNDP approved some 24 relief projects while following up on similar assistance to countries struck by disasters in previous years.⁽⁷⁾

UNDRO financing

UNDRO activities continued to be financed mainly from the United Nations regular budget and voluntary contributions to the United Nations

Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance. For 1986-1987, the General Assembly, in resolution 42/213, appropriated $6,418,300.

Extrabudgetary resources were credited to the United Nations Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance, which included the Trust Fund for General Disaster Relief and the UNDRO Trust Fund. Income under the Trust Fund totalled $17,859,301 in 1987, while expenditures were $11,576,979, including $6,200,772 in disaster relief assistance to 40 countries. The three largest recipients in 1987 were Mozambique ($1,469,896), Lebanon ($902,531) and Haiti ($810,528).

Under the Trust Fund's sub-accounts, 1987 expenditures were $3,753,958 for disaster prevention and pre-disaster planning; $1,101,477 for the strengthening of UNDRO; $426,780 for the UNDRO pan-Caribbean disaster preparedness and prevention project; $243,630 for general disaster relief operations; $57,957 for the Sasakawa-UNDRO Disaster Prevention Award-Operating Fund; and $37,308 for UNDRO/United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) projects.

Disaster relief efforts

Drought-stricken areas

In a September 1987 report⁽⁸⁾ on implementation and financing of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see p. 703), the Secretary-General said that total areas prone to desertification covered 4.5 billion hectares, or about 35 per cent of the earth's land surface. Areas at least moderately damaged included 3.1 billion hectares of rangelands, 335 million hectares of rain-fed croplands, and 40 million hectares of irrigated farmlands. Human populations in these territories numbered more than 850 million in 1987, compared with 650 million 10 years earlier.

Sudano-Sahelian region

The United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) continued in 1987 under UNDP supervision to assist countries in medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programmes and in implementing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see p. 707).

According to a report by the UNDP Administrator,⁽⁹⁾ UNSO in 1987 undertook measures in support of the drought-related medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sahel countries and assisted the countries in the Sudano-Sahel region in implementing the Plan of Action. Recovery and rehabilitation measures included the construction, improvement and maintenance of all-weather roads in the Sahel, drought and desertification monitoring and other regional actions to support sustainable growth.

In carrying out those projects, UNSO co-operated with the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development (IGADD), a grouping of six eastern African countries—Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda (see below). UNSO attended or was represented at their meetings and those of their subsidiary organs, including an IGADD donor conference in March (see below). It also assisted the Ministerial Conference of peri-Saharan countries (Conference ministérielle sur la désertification (COMIDES)) in the development of an integrated strategy for desertification control for western Africa, the Maghreb, Egypt and the Sudan; in 1987, the main task was the definition of an institutional structure. In response to a COMIDES resolution to study the pattern of exchanges between forest and non-forest countries, in close collaboration with UNDP, UNSO supported preparatory assistance activities executed by the International Trade Centre (ITC) to study flows and constraints to these exchanges between the two contiguous ecological zones in order to develop proposals to strengthen such strategic co-operation. UNSO also consulted with other regional and subregional organizations and institutions, including the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Central African Development Bank.

In 1987, in addition to a $6.8 million contribution to its general resources and $7.7 million for the roads programme, UNSO received $3.2 million for new projects or for new phases of ongoing projects under its mandate to combat desertification. In addition, contributions were made to UNSO by the UNDP/UNEP joint venture to combat desertification. In 1987, budgeted amounts by UNDP and UNEP for the joint venture totalled $1 million each for programme and institutional support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 42/189, dealt with the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, financing and support of the Plan, and the implementation of the Plan in the Sudano-Sahelian region. Support for efforts to combat desertification was also called for in Assembly resolution 42/188.

East Africa

Having participated in establishing IGADD and its secretariat and having helped formulate IGADD'S first plan of action for the recovery of the drought-stricken economies of the area, UNSO continued in 1987 to co-operate with IGADD. The plan of action was the basis of the documents submitted to a donor conference held in Djibouti from 16 to 18 March.

As requested by the General Assembly in 1985,(11) UNSO established a unit within its administration specifically to cover the IGADD countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/14 on 26 May 1987 without vote.

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 35/90 and 35/91 of 5 December 1980, 36/221 of 17 December 1981, 37/147 of 17 December 1982, 38/216 of 20 December 1983, 39/205 of 17 December 1984, 40/221 of 17 December 1985 and decision 41/455 of 8 December 1986 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1983/46 of 28 July 1983 and 1986/145 of 22 July 1986 on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda,

Having heard the oral report on the conference of donors, held in Djibouti from 16 to 18 March 1987 to contribute to the implementation of the Plan of Action adopted by the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development, made before the First (Economic) Committee of the Council, on 4 May 1987, by the representative of the United Nations Development Programme,

Deeply concerned about the serious effects of the recurrent droughts in the region, which have precipitated food shortages and famine and hindered the development efforts of the countries members of the Authority,

Commending the political will demonstrated by the countries members of the Authority to undertake joint efforts to combat the effects of drought and other related natural disasters,

Taking note of the commendable steps taken by the countries members of the Authority to mobilize the necessary financial and technical support for the implementation of the Plan of Action to combat the effects of the prolonged drought and other related natural disasters,

Expressing appreciation to the international community for its effective participation in the conference of donors,

1. Takes note of the positive response and good will that donor Governments and international organizations demonstrated at the conference of donors for the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development, and expresses appreciation to those donors that have contributed or expressed their intention to contribute to the implementation of the Plan of Action adopted by the countries members of the Authority;

2. Commends the countries members of the Authority for adopting a Plan of Action oriented towards development and for the steps taken at the subregional level to mobilize the financial and technical support needed to tackle the problems of drought and other related natural disasters;

3. Urges all Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to adopt an integrated appreach in giving full support to and providing adequate financial and technical resources for the implementation of the Plan of Action in the countries members of the Authority;

4. Notes also with appreciation the assistance provided by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office for the establishment of the Authority, in line with the recommendations of the Secretary-General and pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme and other appropriate organs and organizations of the United Nations system, to intensify his efforts to mobilize assistance for the implementation of the Plan of Action;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988 on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/14

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/95) without vote, 13 May (meeting 4); lo-nation draft (E/1987/C.1/L.2), orally revised; agenda item 15. Sponsors: Djibouti, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, Italy, Kenya, Morocco, Somalia, Sudan, Uganda.

Drought in Somalia

On 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, adopted resolution 1987/73 without vote.

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Somalia
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/192 of 8 December 1986 on special programmes of economic assistance,

Deeply concerned that drought is again threatening life and causing serious loss of livestock and property in Somalia,

Bearing in mind that the Government of Somalia estimates that 1.6 million people, including 700,000 children, are affected by the drought and that 800 people have died,

Noting that on 29 April 1987 the Government of Somalia appealed for emergency assistance and has taken steps to co-ordinate, together with the United Nations and the donor community, the relief efforts, including the establishment on 30 April 1987 of a drought action committee,

Aware of the relief needs as set out in the information report of 5 May 1987 of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

1. Commends the strenuous efforts of the Government of Somalia to alleviate the hardship suffered by the victims of the drought;

2. Requests Member States, non-governmental organizations and organizations of the United Nations system to participate in the concerted effort to alleviate the adverse effects of the drought on the population of Somalia;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988 on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/73

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1987/118) without vote, 30 June (meeting 8); 27-nation draft (E/1987/C.3/L.3), orally revised; agenda item 13.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bahrain, Cameroon, China, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, United States, Yemen.

Storms and floods

Treacherous weather again took a serious toll in Asia during 1987 with some of the worst flooding in the memory of most inhabitants. Floods in Bangladesh began in July and came in three successive and highly damaging phases, destroying crops, water control systems, railways, roads and housing. Nearly 30 million people were directly affected.

Heavy winter storms covered major portions of Chile, affecting more than 100,000 people and destroying or damaging more than 22,000 houses, washing out several bridges and interrupting railroad service. Total damage was estimated at $18 million. In December, after several days of heavy rain, a landslide of 25 tons of earth from the Sugarloaf Hill covered the slum quarter of Villa Tina at Medellin, Colombia; an estimated 210 people died, while more than 2,400 lost their homes and personal goods.

In the Pacific, cyclones cut destructive paths across several islands, causing extensive damage.

UNDP activities. In his annual report for 1987,(12) the UNDP Administrator said that UNDP Special Programme Resources were made available to a number of countries struck by floods and storms in 1987. In Bangladesh, UNDP responded to the floods with a total of $1.15 million for studies of damage assessment, detailed identification of reconstruction needs and the reconstruction of flood-resistant rural housing.

At Chile's request, UNDP provided an emergency allocation of $50,000, which was used to purchase blankets for the victims of the winter storms. Another $50,000 was made available to the landslide victims in Colombia to help construct temporary shelter and relocate the affected population.

In the Pacific, UNDP granted $1.75 million to the Cook Islands, Fiji, Tokelau, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and Vanuatu for relief from cyclones and tropical storms. The aid was used to support the assessment process as well as to purchase immediately needed food, clothing and construction materials.

Tidal swells in Maldives

By a note verbale of 15 October 1987,(13) Maldives offered to the Secretary-General background information on the damage caused by tidal swells in April, June and September 1987. The high water had caused much damage to the capital, Malé, an island with an area of a little over 1 square mile with a population of 45,000, to the international airport at Hulule and to a number of outlying islands. Floods had caused erosion of land and retaining walls and the outbreak of diarrhoeal diseases.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 42/202 by recorded vote.

Special assistance to Maldives for disaster relief and the strengthening of its coastal defences
The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned by the damage caused to the archipelago of Maldives by unexpected tidal waves in April, June and September 1987,

Acutely aware of the threats posed by such tidal action to the low-lying islands of Maldives and to their inhabitants,

Mindful of the need to commence urgent protective measures to minimize the hazards of such tragic events,

Noting that Maldives is one of the least developed countries, with severely limited natural endowments and a narrow-based economic backbone,

Recognizing the efforts of the Government and the people of Maldives to improve and accelerate the socio-economic development of their country,

Taking note of the emergency relief operations undertaken by the Government of Maldives to assist those affected in the episodes of April, June and September 1987, and of its determination to strengthen its defences against such disasters in the future,

Convinced that long-term solutions are imperative,

1. Expresses its gratitude to those States and organizations which rendered support and assistance to the Government of Maldives in its relief and subsequent rehabilitation work;

2. Draws the attention of the international community to the fact that additional resources are required to carry out the envisaged plan for preventive action, and that the assistance already provided or pledged falls short of the requirements;

3. Requests agencies and organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to the formulation and implementation of a planned programme of action;

4. Strongly appeals to the international community to contribute generously to that goal;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 41/192 of 8 December 1986, to mobilize international support and assistance in favour of the efforts of the Government of Maldives to implement the plan of action;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/202

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 153-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/796) without vote, 30 October (meeting 26); 38-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.17); agenda item 86.

Sponsors: Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Brunei Darussalam, Canada, China, Comoros, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, India, Indonesia, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, New Zealand, Oman, Pakistan, Philippines, Qatar, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Thailand, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 15, 16, 20, 25, 26.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Cyclone in Vanuatu

Cyclone Uma struck Vanuatu with devastating intensity from 5 to 8 February 1987, leaving 48 people dead or missing. The Government estimated that about 48,000 people, or 34 per cent of the population, were directly affected and that total damage amounted to $37.4 million.

Responsibility for the co-ordination of disaster relief fell primarily on the national disaster co-ordinating committee, comprising representatives of government ministries and NGOs.

In response to the need for reconstruction, a reconstruction committee was established with the initial focus of convening a joint aid donor meeting, which took place at Port Vila on 1 and 2 June. At that meeting, the Government pointed out that the full cost of minimal reconstruction was beyond its means in the short term and that, without external assistance, the country faced a sharp reversal in economic growth and living standards and a postponement of the launch and implementation of the Second National Development Plan. The Government presented a reconstruction programme, comprising 52 projects in 10 sectors at a total cost of $15.3 million, to be spread over 2 1/2 years starting in mid-1987. Because of the lack of skilled personnel, technical assistance was required as a component of a number of the projects.

Of the $15.3 million sought for reconstruction, commitments of nearly $10 million, plus a possible $4 million in soft loans from the Asian Development Bank and the World Bank were announced at the meeting, in addition to the normal assistance programmes and emergency relief.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1987/15 without vote.

Assistance for reconstruction in Vanuatu

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned at the devastation caused to Vanuatu by the cyclone "Uma" on 7 and 8 February 1987, which resulted in the loss of many lives, destruction of housing and extensive damage to the economic and social infrastructure as well as to the agricultural, stock-farming, transport and industrial sectors,

Concerned at the serious impact of the damage on the economic and social development of Vanuatu,

Recalling that Vanuatu was included in the list of the least developed countries by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/233 of 17 December 1985,

Noting with appreciation the emergency assistance provided by several States, international and regional organizations, specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies,

Noting the efforts of the people and Government of Vanuatu to deal with the emergency situation and to initiate a reconstruction and rehabilitation programme,

Affirming the need for prompt and concerted international action to assist the people and Government of Vanuatu in carrying out the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the regions and sectors affected by the cyclone,

Welcoming the intention of the Government of Vanuatu to act as host to a meeting of its development assistance partners in June 1987 to continue co-ordination of rehabilitation programmes,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States, the programmes and organizations of the United Nations system and the intergovernmental, non-governmental and voluntary organizations that provided assistance to Vanuatu during the emergency;

2. Urges all States to participate generously through bilateral or multilateral channels in projects and programmes for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Vanuatu;

3. Requests international organizations, in particular the appropriate organs and bodies of the United Nations system, regional organizations and voluntary agencies, to continue and increase their assistance in response to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs of Vanuatu;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 41/192 of 8 December 1986, to take the necessary steps, in co-operation with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, to mobilize the financial, technical and material assistance needed for implementing the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development programme of Vanuatu;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the question of assistance for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Vanuatu under constant review and to apprise the General Assembly at its forty-second session of the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/15

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/96) without vote, 11 May (meeting 2); draft by Chairman (E/1987/C.1/L.1), based on informal consultations; agenda item 16.

Other disasters

Earthquake in Ecuador

A severe earthquake struck four north-eastern provinces of Ecuador during the night of 5 and 6 March 1987. Two major shocks measuring 6 and 6.8 on the Richter scale were followed by a series of aftershocks. More than 1,000 people were killed, and 26,000 were rendered homeless. Approximately 75,000 people living in the Amazon region were cut off from the rest of the country, and the rupture of Ecuador's major oil pipeline resulted in considerable loss of export earnings.

In response to a government request, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean arranged for a multidisciplinary mission to visit Ecuador from 21 to 31 March. The product of the mission was an extensive report⁽¹⁴⁾ detailing damages by sector, the effects on economic and social development and co-operation from the international community. The mission assessed direct damage to Ecuador's social and economic infrastructure at $185 million and indirect damages at $815 million.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1987/17 without vote.

Assistance to Ecuador

The Economic and Social Council,

Stressing the need for the international community to take measures to provide effective assistance for the reconstruction and development of Member States that have suffered natural disasters, in accordance with the spirit and the letter of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, inter alia, resolutions 36/225 of 17 December 1981 and 38/202 of 20 December 1983,

Deeply concerned at the devastation caused by the earthquakes of 5 and 6 March 1987 in Ecuador, which resulted in widespread loss of life, as well as of goods and services,

Noting the report of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean on the natural disaster of March 1987 in Ecuador and its effects on economic and social development, in which it was stated that the country would not be in a position to meet reconstruction needs by itself,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts of the people and Government of Ecuador to alleviate the adverse effects of the disaster on the well-being, health and economy of the population affected and to meet the reconstruction requirements of the regions and services destroyed,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts made to provide prompt assistance to Ecuador;

2. Expresses its appreciation to States and organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental, non-governmental and voluntary organizations for their timely assistance;

3. Calls upon all States to participate fully in the projects and programmes for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the areas affected by the earthquake;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to adopt, in accordance with the evaluation of the disaster made by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, such measures as he deems appropriate to increase the necessary financial, technical and material assistance for programmes for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the areas affected by the earthquakes;

5. Requests the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system and the competent intergovernmental, regional and voluntary organizations to maintain and increase their participation in the reconstruction and rehabilitation programmes;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the programmes carried out and the assistance provided in implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/17

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/96) without vote, 18 May (meeting 7); 18-nation draft (E/1987/C.1/L.6); agenda item 16.

Sponsors: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Morocco, Peru, Spain, Suriname, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 42/205, the General Assembly urgently appealed to the international community to respond to the needs of countries affected by natural disasters, including Ecuador.

locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa

In April 1987,(15) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a report of the Director-General of FAO on the fight against the locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa, pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly resolution.(16)

The report discussed the December 1986 meeting of donors and Sahelian countries at FAO headquarters in Rome, at which the 1986 grasshopper campaign was evaluated and a 1987 plan of action was agreed upon. As in 1986, activities were to be conducted in two phases: phase I (after the beginning of the rains, when the young hoppers attacked the newly sown seedlings) involved control activities largely implemented by farmers; and phase II (when the grasshoppers attacked the ripening crops) involved aerial intervention. It was estimated that some 3.7 million hectares would need treatment, at a total cost of about $22 million, i.e., 30 per cent less per hectare than the previous year. By the end of February 1987, donors had pledged some $9 million.

The FAO Director-General also evaluated the situation with regard to desert locusts, African migratory locusts and red and brown locusts, and offered forecasts for 1987. He stated that the FAO Emergency Centre for Locust Operations would continue to function and that FAO would continue to assist in developing and implementing control programmes and in co-ordinating external assistance. Special emphasis would be placed on developing medium- and long-term capabilities through improving national plant protection services and through the regional organizations concerned.

On 9 July, by decision 1987/186, the Economic and Social Council took note of the FAO report.

Disaster preparedness and prevention

The Secretary-General, in his report on UNDRO activities in 1987,(5) stated that prevention and preparedness continued to be the two primary components of the disaster mitigation programme of UNDRO, whose role in that area encouraged disaster-prone countries to consider pre-disaster planning in the high-risk areas and brought together the various disciplines involved in finding the most appropriate methods of responding.

For disasters that crossed national boundaries, a regional approach was often employed. In the Asian region, the Asian Disaster Preparedness Centre (Bangkok, Thailand), established in 1986,(17) continued to cater to the needs of the region. Towards the end of 1987, UNDRO began to lay the groundwork for a disaster mitigation programme for the Pacific region to strengthen the capabilities of the Pacific islands to cope with disasters, particularly those caused by cyclones. The pan-Caribbean disaster preparedness and prevention project was consolidated by securing direct contributions from the 29 countries and territories participating in its management and financing. During 1986-1987 the project focused on hazard mapping programmes, improving resistance of buildings to earthquakes and hurricanes by training building contractors and inspectors, implementing public awareness measures and setting up a regional disaster information centre. In addition to regional projects, UNDRO co-ordinated single-country activities in Egypt, Haiti, Indonesia, Madagascar, Nepal and the Niger, and organized or contributed to various single or multi-country disaster mitigation seminars and training activities.

International decade for natural disaster reduction

With a view to providing concerted international action to reduce the human and material losses caused by natural disasters, through the wider diffusion and application of scientific and technical knowledge, the 1990s were designated by the General Assembly as an international decade for natural disaster reduction. The report(18) of the World Commission on Environment and Development called for similar action in its appeal for new approaches in dealing with environmental problems, including natural disasters (see p. 661).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/169 without vote.

International decade for natural disaster reduction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3345(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, in which it requested the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to provide facilities for co-ordinated multidisciplinary research also at the regional level aimed at synthesizing, integrating and advancing existing knowledge on the interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development, in order to assist Member States, particularly the developing countries, and the organizations of the United Nations system in their efforts to cope with the complex and multidimensional problems related to this field in the context of social and economic development,

Noting with appreciation the important contribution made by the World Commission on Environment and Development, as reflected in its report, which calls for new national and international approaches in dealing with the various factors affecting the environment, including natural disasters,

Considering that natural disasters, such as earthquakes, windstorms (cyclones, hurricanes, tornadoes, typhoons), tsunamis, floods, landslides, volcanic eruptions, wildfires and other calamities of natural origin, have claimed about 3 million lives worldwide in the past two decades, adversely affected the lives of at least 800 million more people and resulted in immediate damages exceeding $23 billion,

Considering also that, among disasters of natural origin, drought and desertification are resulting in enormous damage, particularly in Africa, where the recent drought threatened the lives of more than 20 million people and uprooted millions of others,

Recognizing that the effects of such disasters may damage very severely the fragile economic infrastructure of developing countries, especially the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, and thus hamper their development process,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, particularly the section concerning natural disasters and the merits of proposals that have been made to stimulate international study, planning and preparations on this subject over the next decade under the auspices of the United Nations,

Also taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the existing mechanisms and arrangements within the United Nations system for disaster and emergency assistance and co-ordination,

Recognizing the responsibility of the United Nations system for promoting international co-operation in the study of natural disasters of geophysical origin and in the development of techniques to mitigate risks arising therefrom, as well as for co-ordinating disaster relief, preparedness and prevention, including prediction and early warning,

Convinced that concerted international action for the reduction of natural disasters over the course of the 1990s would give genuine impetus to a series of concrete measures at the national, regional and international levels,

Recognizing that the primary responsibility for defining the general goals and directions of efforts undertaken in the framework of an international decade for natural disaster reduction and for implementing the measures that would result from the activities of the decade lies with the Governments of the countries concerned,

Considering that the concept of a global programme for natural disaster reduction is predicated on collaborative efforts among culturally and economically diverse nations, together with relevant organizations of the United Nations system and concerned national and international non-governmental organizations, including scientific and technological institutions,

1. Recognizes the importance of reducing the impact of natural disasters for all people, and in particular for developing countries;

2. Recognizes further that scientific and technical understanding of the causes and impact of natural disasters and of ways to reduce both human and property losses has progressed to such an extent that a concerted effort to assemble, disseminate and apply this knowledge through national, regional and world-wide programmes could have very positive effects in this regard, particularly for developing countries;

3. Decides to designate the 1990s as a decade in which the international community, under the auspices of the United Nations, will pay special attention to fostering international co-operation in the field of natural disaster reduction, and to take a decision at its forty-third session on the content and modalities of United Nations participation therein after having considered the report of the Secretary-General referred to in paragraph 9 of the present resolution;

4. Decides that the objective of this decade is to reduce through concerted international actions, especially in developing countries, loss of life, property damage and social and economic disruption caused by natural disasters, such as earthquakes, windstorms (cyclones, hurricanes, tornadoes, typhoons), tsunamis, floods, landslides, volcanic eruptions, wildfires and other calamities of natural origin, such as grasshopper and locust infestations, and that its goals are:

(a) To improve the capacity of each country to mitigate the effects of natural disasters expeditiously and effectively, paying special attention to assisting developing countries in the establishment, when needed, of early warning systems;

(b) To devise appropriate guidelines and strategies for applying existing knowledge, taking into account the cultural and economic diversity among nations;

(c) To foster scientific and engineering endeavours aimed at closing critical gaps in knowledge in order to reduce loss of life and property;

(d) To disseminate existing and new information related to measures for the assessment, prediction, prevention and mitigation of natural disasters;

(e) To develop measures for the assessment, prediction, prevention and mitigation of natural disasters through programmes of technical assistance and technology transfer, demonstration projects, and education and training, tailored to specific hazards and locations, and to evaluate the effectiveness of those programmes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system and relevant scientific, technical, academic and other non-governmental organizations, to develop an appropriate framework for attaining the objective and goals referred to in paragraphs 3 and 4 above and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session through the Economic and Social Council;

6. Recommends that, if necessary, extrabudgetary resources be provided for the preparation of the above-mentioned report and considers that, for this purpose, voluntary contributions from countries, international organizations and other organizations are highly desirable;

7. Calls upon all Governments to participate during the decade in concerted international action for the reduction of natural disasters and, as appropriate, to establish national committees, in co-operation with the relevant scientific and technological communities, with a view to surveying available mechanisms and facilities for the reduction of natural hazards, assessing the particular requirements of their respective countries or regions in order to add to, improve or update existing mechanisms and facilities and develop a strategy to attain the desired goals;

8. Further calls upon Governments to keep the Secretary-General informed of their countries' plans and of assistance that can be provided so that the United Nations may become an international centre for the exchange of information, the storing of documents and the co-ordination of international efforts concerning the activities in support of the objective and goals referred to in paragraphs 3 and 4 above, thus enabling each Member State to benefit from the experience of other countries;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on progress made in the preparations outlined above with particular emphasis on defining the catalytic and facilitating role envisaged for the United Nations system.

General Assembly resolution 42/169

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/820/Add.2) without vote, 2 December (meeting 44); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.86), based on informal consultations on 93-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.32/Rev.1); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 26, 28, 29, 34, 43, 44; plenary 96.

Explaining its position after approval of the text in Committee, Sweden, speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries, expressed doubts about the title, which, they felt, did not accurately reflect the text's content; also, in their view, the proclamation of another decade was not the best way to mobilize the international community for further co-operation. As to the role of the United Nations in disaster relief, the text was without prejudice to findings of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (see p. 949) and subsequent decisions on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations system.

Jamaica would have preferred the original title, "International Decade for Natural Hazard Reduction", to be retained; mankind was not in a position to reduce natural disasters, as was implied by the revised title. The United Kingdom stated that however worthy the aims of international decades, they had to be carefully planned in order to ensure practical benefit. New Zealand would have considered it useful to know exactly how the United Nations would be involved in the decade; it also hoped that in the future the Committee would be able to carry out its work without going through the difficult negotiations which had been necessary on the text.

Belgium believed that adoption of the text by consensus should not affect implementation of the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in his report on implementation of a 1986 resolution on UNDRO (see p. 451). Morocco strongly urged the Secretary-General to take the steps he had outlined in that report, particularly the idea of equipping the United Nations with an international emergency communications system, the initiative to integrate and expand national capabilities for preventing natural disasters and the proposal to convene a technical panel to take advantage of technological advances to improve the United Nations capacity to respond to disaster and emergency situations.

REFERENCES

- (1)A/42/657. (2)YUN 1986, p. 475, GA res. 41/201, 8 Dec. 1986. (3)YUN 1986, p. 892. (4)Ibid., p. 1024, GA res. 41/213, 19 Dec. 1986. (5)A/43/375-E/1988/73. (6)YUN 1986, p. 473. (7)DP/1988/18/Add.1. (8)A/42/501. (9)DP/1988/49. (10)YUN 1986, p. 665. (11)YUN 1985, p. 539, GA res. 40/221, 17 Dec. 1985. (12)DP/1988/18/Add.1. (13)A/C.2/42/3. (14)LC/G.1465. (15)E/1987/57. (16)YUN 1986, 483, GA res. 41/185, 8 Dec. 1986. (17)YUN 1986, p. 484. (18)A/42/427.

Emergency relief and assistance

El Salvador

In an August 1987 report,(1) the Secretary-General described assistance provided to El Salvador in response to General Assembly resolutions adopted in October(2) and December 1986(3) following an earthquake which struck San Salvador, the capital, and adjoining villages on 10 October. (4)

Between 25 and 28 January 1987, the Secretary-General's Special Representative undertook a mission to El Salvador to consult with the Government and representatives of the international community concerning the implementation of international assistance for the country's reconstruction. On 4 May, he presented to the Economic and Social Council an oral status report on such assistance. As at 15 June, bilateral and multilateral resources covering completed, ongoing and pipeline activities reached $524.12 million, of which grants totalled $282.22 million and loans accounted for $241.9 million. Of the total, $328.34 million was from bilateral donors and $195.78 million from multilateral sources.

On 23 December, the Special Representative made an appeal to major donors, multilateral banks and United Nations organizations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, acting on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/16 without vote.

Assistance to El Salvador

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolutions 41/2 of 14 October 1986 concerning emergency assistance to El Salvador and 41/194 of 8 December 1986, in which the Assembly appealed to States and organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to the reconstruction and development of El Salvador,

Having heard the oral report made before the First (Economic) Committee of the Council, on 4 May 1987, by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Assistance to El Salvador,

Concerned at the fact that the serious effects of the earthquake, which occurred on 10 October 1986, have not been overcome despite the efforts of the Government and people of El Salvador and the international assistance received,

Affirming the need for the international community to adopt appropriate measures for effective assistance and co-operation to promote the rehabilitation, recovery and development of Member States that have suffered natural disasters,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for his efforts to provide immediate assistance to El Salvador;

2. Expresses its gratitude for the work done by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Assistance to El Salvador and for the activities undertaken in connection with assistance to El Salvador;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the States and organizations that have contributed to the reconstruction of El Salvador;

4. Notes with concern that the contributions from bilateral and multilateral donors to be provided in 1987 are not sufficient to meet the urgent needs facing the Government of El Salvador, so that additional assistance will be required;

5. Urges Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and governmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute generously to the reconstruction of El Salvador, especially through grants and low-interest, long-term loans, in view of the country's needs and limited resources;

6. Requests all Governments and organs and organizations of the United Nations system to provide voluntary contributions as a matter of urgency, directly or through the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, in order to alleviate the consequences of the earthquake in El Salvador;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take any measures that he may deem necessary to promote the implementation of the present resolution so as to accelate the process of reconstruction in El Salvador, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/16

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/96) without vote, 11 May (meeting 2); 17-nation draft (E/1987/C.1/L.3), orally amended by Chairman following informal consultations; agenda item 16.

Sponsors: Argentina, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Jamaica, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Spain, Uruguay, Venezuela.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/203 by recorded vote.

Assistance to El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 41/2 of 14 October 1986, concerning emergency assistance to El Salvador, and 41/194 of 8 December 1986, in which it appealed to all States and appropriate organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to the reconstruction and development of El Salvador,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/16 of 26 May 1987, in which the Council urged Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and governmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute generously to the reconstruction of El Salvador,

Having considered the summary report of the Secretary-General on international humanitarian assistance activities for El Salvador,

Concerned that the serious effects of the earthquake that occurred on 10 October 1986 have not been overcome despite the efforts of the Government and people of El Salvador and the international assistance received,

Concerned also, that the efforts made by the Government of El Salvador have been restricted and hindered by the existence of serious economic and financial problems that have increased as a result of a substantial fall in agricultural export production and unfavourable conditions in international markets,

Convinced of the outstanding importance of international assistance and co-operation in the processes of national reconstruction following the damage caused by natural disasters,

Reiterating the continuing need for the international community to adopt suitable measures for effective assistance and co-operation to promote the rehabilitation, recovery and development of Member States that have suffered natural disasters,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for the efforts and measures undertaken to provide international assistance to El Salvador;

2. Also expresses its gratitude to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for International Relief Activities in El Salvador and his team for the work done and activities conducted in connection with assistance to El Salvador;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the States and organizations that have contributed to the reconstruction of El Salvador;

4. Notes with concern that the contributions from bilateral and multilateral donors provided during 1987 were not sufficient to meet the urgent needs facing the Government of El Salvador, so that additional assistance is required;

5. Urges Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and governmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute generously to the reconstruction of El Salvador, especially through grants and low-interest, long-term loans, in view of the country's needs and limited resources;

6. Requests all Governments and concerned organs and organizations to provide voluntary contributions as a matter of urgency, directly or through the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, in order to alleviate adequately the consequences of the earthquake in El Salvador;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take any measures that he may deem necessary to promote the implementation of the present resolution so as to accelerate the process of reconstruction in El Salvador, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/203

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 154-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/796) without vote, 30 October (meeting 26); 21-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.18); agenda item 86.

Sponsors: Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Guatemala, Honduras, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Spain, United States, Uruguay.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 15, 16, 20, 25, 26; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Lebanon

In a September 1987 report(5) pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(6) the Secretary-General briefly described various assistance programmes in Lebanon to mid-July 1987. He stated that security problems in Lebanon (see p. 274) made it difficult for the United Nations to carry out its reconstruction and development programme. Other obstacles included the deteriorating economic situation evidenced by extremely high inflation and a large number of displaced persons, which exacerbated problems with education; health, nutrition and housing.

The report reviewed the United Nations role in emergency relief and technical co-operation. With regard to emergency relief activities, the United Nations Co-ordinating Committee at Beirut, established in accordance with a 1978 Assembly resolution,(7) met regularly to assess needs, establish a joint response of the various United Nations bodies providing relief and monitor implementation of their activities.

UNDRO continued to co-ordinate emergency relief assistance operations in Lebanon, and in May 1987 launched a special appeal on behalf of the Secretary-General for some $20 million in assistance to 250,000 Lebanese. As a result of that appeal and two information meetings for the international community, some $17.5 million of emergency assistance was mobilized.

Reviewing the technical co-operation activities of FAO, UNDP, UNICEF, WFP and the World Health Organization in Lebanon, the report concluded that, despite the impediments and the adverse security situation, United Nations organizations continued to render assistance to the extent feasible.

Speaking to the General Assembly's Second Committee on 15 October, the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs and Secretariat Services echoed the Secretary-General's concerns on the impact of the United Nations ability to render assistance to Lebanon and said that efforts made bore no relation to the magnitude of the people's needs, especially since the economic situation had deteriorated further since the report was published. He announced that in view of that situation, the Secretary-General had decided to send an inter-agency mission to assess the immediate emergency relief needs. The mission, which was in Lebanon from 5 to 10 October, met with the highest government authorities, representatives of donor countries and NGOs. Reviewing the findings and conclusions of the mission, which reinforced the Secretary-General's assessment, he said Lebanon was in need of additional help and the Secretary-General was committed to obtaining the resources needed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July, acting on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/74 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The Economic and Social Council,

Referring to General Assembly resolution 41/196 of 8 December 1986 and earlier resolutions of the General Assembly on international assistance for the reconstruction of Lebanon, by which the Assembly requested the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to expand and intensify their programmes of assistance in response to the needs of Lebanon,

Recognizing that the present situation in Lebanon, owing to the events that have occurred in that country, the paralysis of economic activities and the increase in the expenses of the State coinciding with the alarming fall in national income, requires emergency assistance,

Appeals to all Member States and the organizations of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their efforts to mobilize all possible assistance to the Government of Lebanon in its efforts for reconstruction and development, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/74

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1987/118) without vote, 30 June (meeting 8); 20-nation draft (E/1987/C.3/L.4); agenda item 13.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, France, India, Iraq, Japan, Jordan, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Oman, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/199 by recorded vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/146 of 20 December 1978, 34/135 of 14 December 1979, 35/85 of 5 December 1980, 36/205 of 17 December 1981, 37/163 of 17 December 1982, 38/220 of 20 December 1983, 39/197 of 17 December 1984, 40/229 of 17 December 1985 and 41/196 of 8 December 1986,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1980/15 of 29 April 1980, 1985/56 of 25 July 1985 and 1986/46 of 22 July 1986, and decisions 1983/112 of 17 May 1983 and 1984/174 of 26 July 1984,

Noting with deep concern the grave deterioration of the economic situation in Lebanon,

Welcoming the determined efforts of the Government of Lebanon in undertaking its reconstruction and rehabilitation programme,

Reaffirming the urgent need for further international action to assist the Government of Lebanon in its continuing efforts for reconstruction and development,

Considering that filling the vacant post of United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon would facilitate the normal operations of international assistance to Lebanon,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the statement made on 15 October 1987 by the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs and Secretariat Services,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report and for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance to Lebanon;

2. Commends the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs and Secretariat Services for his co-ordination of system-wide assistance for Lebanon;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help the Government of Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts;

4. Invites the Secretary-General, in view of the critical economic conditions prevailing in Lebanon, to consider the urgent need to appoint a United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon so that the functions of the Co-ordinator may be resumed in Lebanon;

5. Requests the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to intensify their programmes of assistance and to expand them in response to the needs of Lebanon, and to take the necessary steps to ensure that their offices at Beirut are adequately staffed at the senior level;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/199

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 152-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/796) without vote, 30 October (meeting 26); 16-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.12), orally revised; agenda item 86.

Sponsors: Bahrain, Brazil, Cyprus, France, Italy, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Madagascar, Mauritania, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, United Kingdom.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 15, 16, 20, 25, 26; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Solomon Islands

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,(8) a UNDP representative gave an oral report to the First Committee of the Economic and Social Council on assistance to Solomon Islands to help alleviate the damage caused by a 1986 cyclone. The Council, by decision 1987/119 of 26 May, took note of that report.

REFERENCES

- (1)A/42/442, (2)YUN 1986, p. 482, GA res. 41/2, 14 Oct. 1986, (3)Ibid., p. 469, GA res. 41/194, 8 Dec. 1986. (4)Ibid, p. 482. (5)A/42/553. (6)YUN 1986, p. 486, GA res. 41/196, 8 Dec. 1986. (7)YUN 1978, p. 373, GA res. 33/146, 20 Dec. 1978. (8)YUN 1986, p. 481, GA res. 41/193, 8 Dec. 1986.

Chapter IV

International trade and finance

Revitalization of development, growth and trade was the theme of the seventh (July/August) session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD VII)—the major United Nations event in 1987 in the area of international trade and finance for development. Following wide-ranging discussions on all aspects of the difficult global economic situation in general, the Conference culminated in the adoption by consensus of a Final Act, which recommended policy approaches to deal with debt problems, resources for development and related monetary issues, commodities, international trade and the problems of the least developed countries.

In his annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 9), the Secretary-General said the Final Act constituted a comprehensive statement on issues facing the world economy and measures needed to address them. The Conference's results could foreshadow a significant advance towards the revitalization of development, economic growth and international trade and, not least, could have a bearing on the critical economic situation in Africa.

In December, the General Assembly welcomed the Final Act as a step forward in co-operation, negotiation and the international dialogue on development and urged Governments to give full and prompt effect to the policies agreed to in it (resolution 42/175).

Having considered a major report by the Secretary-General on the net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries, the Economic and Social Council expressed alarm that in 1986 such transfers were of the order of $118 billion in financial transfers and terms-of-trade losses, and emphasized the urgent need to reverse that transfer (resolution 1987/93). The Council asked the Secretary-General to report further on the issue in 1988 and, in December, the Assembly asked him, when preparing the report, to include a section on linkages between the net transfer from developing to developed countries and the attainment of the growth target for developing countries set in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) (decision 42/429).

UNCTAD VII carried out extensive discussions on international trade issues and agreed on action to be taken in the areas of protectionism and structural adjustment, preferences, trade liberalization, restrictive business practices, and trade relations between countries having different economic and social systems. Those issues were also taken up in other UNCTAD bodies: in March/April, the Trade and Development Board carried out its annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment; in the area of preferences, the Working Group on Rules of Origin under the generalized system of preferences met in November, while under the Global System of Trade Preferences participating countries began to submit their request lists for concessions; an Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Trade and Economic Co-operation between Countries having Different Economic and Social Systems met in January and highlighted the fact that lack of information about the trade system and opportunities for trading with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe hampered the expansion of East-South trade; and the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices met in November/December and called on States to apply the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices.

UNCTAD VII urged countries to sign and/or accede to the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities. During 1987, seven additional States adhered to it, bringing the total to 99, nine above the requirement for the Agreement's entry into force; the third and final requirement to be met concerned directly contributed capital. With regard to individual commodities, the International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1987, was established by the United Nations Conference on Natural Rubber, and the International Sugar Agreement, 1987, was established by the International Sugar Conference. Meetings were also held on copper and tungsten. The Committee on Commodities met in February.

In the area of finance, a series of measures to deal with the external debt problems of developing countries were set out in UNCTAD VII's Final Act and endorsed in December (resolution 42/198) by the Assembly, which also stressed that increased flexibility should be applied in developing innovative approaches to, reduce developing countries' debt burden. The Assembly also expressed concern about the fluctuations which took place in late 1987 in the international financial and stock markets and their implications for the development of the developing countries (resolution 42/195).

The question of development finance was another main point of discussion at UNCTAD VII, whose Final Act stated that developed countries should renew their efforts to achieve the internationally agreed target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance.

Other UNCTAD bodies which dealt with financial issues during 1987 were the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade, which devoted its March session to insurance questions, and the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Compensatory Financing of Export Earnings Shortfalls, which met in September. The United Nations Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters met in November/December.

Topics related to this chapter. Development policy and international economic co-operation. Transport. Regional economic and social activities: international trade and finance-Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, Western Asia. Science and technology: technology transfer. International economic law: international trade law.

Seventh session of UNCTAD

The seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), known as UNCTAD VII, was held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987.⁽¹⁾ The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) served as a preparatory committee for the Conference (see below) and a pre-Conference meeting of senior officials was held from 7 to 13 July, also at Geneva.

The Conference was attended by 141 member States of UNCTAD, as well as by representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, the regional commissions and other United Nations organizations, 10 specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT. Also represented were 32 intergovernmental bodies, 31 non-governmental organizations and four national liberation movements: the African National Congress of South Africa, the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania and the South West Africa People's Organization.

At its opening meeting on 9 July, the Conference elected as its President Bernard T. G. Chidzero (Zimbabwe); on 13 July, it also elected a Rapporteur and 29 Vice-Presidents (for Conference officers, see APPENDIX III).

The Conference's inaugural ceremony was addressed by Pierre Aubert, President of the Swiss Confederation, who welcomed participants on behalf of his Government, and by Lazar Mojsov, President of the Presidency of Yugoslavia and President of the Conference's sixth (1983) session,⁽²⁾ who reviewed the issues on the Conference's agenda.

The United Nations Secretary-General, in his address to the inaugural ceremony, said that under the combined effect of weak world growth and the persistence of uncertainties, the support needed for the accelerated development of the developing countries had not materialized to any significant extent. The fall in commodity prices, stagnation of official development assistance (ODA) and the ever-increasing debt-servicing burden had nullified developing countries' efforts to produce a surplus of national income for investment and growth. Several recent phenomena, such as the disappearance of certain jobs in the industrialized countries as a result of reduced imports from developing countries, had clearly demonstrated that the solution to the serious social and economic problems of the era had to go beyond the framework of national frontiers.

The Conference's main substantive agenda item was revitalization of development, growth and international trade, in a more predictable and supportive environment, through multilateral co-operation: assessment of relevant economic trends and global structural change, and appropriate formulation of policies and measures, addressing key issues in the interrelated areas of resources for development, including financial, and related monetary questions; commodities; international trade; and the problems of the least developed countries (LDCs). On 13 July, the Conference established four sessional committees to consider and report on the agenda item as follows: Committee I—resources for development, including financial, and related monetary questions; Committee II—commodities; Committee III—international trade; and Committee IV—Problems of LDCs, bearing in mind the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs.

UNCTAD VII Final Act. On 3 August, the Conference adopted its Final Act comprising three parts. The first part contained an assessment of relevant economic trends and of global structural change, which resulted in a number of findings and policy implications (see p. 376). The second part set out policies and measures under the four areas of the Conference's agenda: resources for development, including financial, and related monetary questions (see p. 484); commodities (see p. 479); international trade (see p. 475); and problems of LDCs (see p. 391). The third part covered orientations for the future (see p. 468).

For its consideration of the main substantive item, the Conference had before it a report by the UNCTAD secretariat on revitalizing development, growth and international trade⁽³⁾ (see below and pp. 376 and 391), a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on reviving multilateral co-operation for growth and development⁽⁴⁾ (see p. 391), a number of documents transmitted by member States and various groups (see below) and the report of the pre-Conference meeting of senior officials.⁽⁵⁾

Other UNCTAD VII action. In addition to the Final Act, the Conference adopted two resolutions, a proposal and three decisions. In a 3 August resolution (168(VII)), it approved the report of its Credentials Committee, by which it accepted the credentials of the representatives to UNCTAD VII. Also on 3 August, it adopted a resolution (169(VII)) on the economic situation in the occupied Palestinian territories (see p. 324) and a proposal on commodities (see p. 481). On 9 July, the Conference reviewed the lists of States, as amended, contained in the annex to the 1964 General Assembly resolution establishing UNCTAD,⁽⁶⁾ and decided to include in the appropriate lists Brunei Darussalam and Saint Kitts and Nevis, both of which had become UNCTAD members since the 1983 session of the Conference. Also on 9 July, the Conference designated two intergovernmental bodies for participation in its proceedings: the International Tropical Timber Organization and the International Textiles and Clothing Bureau. The UNCTAD calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1987 was also adopted on 3 August.

Preparations for UNCTAD VII

In 1986,⁽⁷⁾ TDB had requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to continue his consultations on outstanding questions related to preparations for UNCTAD VII and to report to the Board—serving as the Conference's preparatory committee. Reporting orally in April 1987,⁽⁸⁾ he suggested that TDB should meet in special session in May (its fifteenth such session) to receive proposals for consideration by the Conference and to settle outstanding organizational questions. It would also decide on a pre-Conference meeting of senior officials, the number of sessional bodies, the establishment of a contact group of the President and the question of the form of the Conference's final outcome. The Secretary-General suggested arrangements for the organization of the Conference's work, relating to the overall calendar, the preparation of summary records for plenary meetings only, and other arrangements relating to the general debate and the composition of the Conference's Bureau.

On 3 April,⁽⁹⁾ TDB endorsed his suggested arrangements, subject to any decisions taken at its May special session or by the Conference itself.

In an oral report to that session (18-20 May),⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General detailed his further arrangements in each of the areas he had outlined in April.

On 20 May,⁽¹⁰⁾ TDB endorsed the arrangements, again subject to any further Conference decisions.

As part of the preparations, regional inter-governmental ministerial-level meetings were held: a meeting of the Asian Group of the Group of 77 developing countries (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 14-16 March); a Latin American co-ordination meeting (San Jose, Costa Rica, 16-20 March); and a conference of African trade and development Ministers (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 16-18 March).

The results of those meetings were considered at the Sixth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77 (Havana, Cuba, 20-25 April), which adopted the Havana Declaration⁽¹¹⁾ and an assessment and proposals relating to UNCTAD VII.⁽¹²⁾ The Declaration was adopted as a basis for concerted action in the Group of 77's economic relations with the developed countries and in their mutual economic co-operation. The assessment and proposals presented the views, expressions and analysis of the Group's Ministers on the international economic environment, which formed the basis for the proposals, policies and measures adopted by the Ministers.

The Council of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development met at the ministerial level (Paris, 12 and 13 May) and issued a communiqué⁽¹³⁾ which was circulated to the Conference. The communique covered strategies to improve growth prospects, macro-economic policies, structural adjustment policies, and relations with developing countries.

The Council for Mutual Economic Assistance held a ministerial-level meeting (Moscow, 26-28 May), at which the final position of the member countries was drawn up. The approach of the socialist countries of Group D (the centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe) and Mongolia,⁽¹⁴⁾ which was circulated to the Conference, assessed the state of international economic relations and discussed monetary and financial questions, trade in commodities, international trade—including structural adjustment, trade in services and trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems—and LDCS.

China also submitted a position paper⁽¹⁵⁾ covering resources for development, commodities, international trade and LDCS.

UNCTAD VII follow-up

On 16 October,⁽¹⁶⁾ TDB decided that UNCTAD intergovernmental bodies, including those responsible for preparing the proposed second (1990) United Nations conference on LDCS (see p. 392), should follow and keep under review the implementation of the Final Act's policies and measures and also keep under review the need to strengthen and adapt them in the light of changing circumstances, and include the requested provisions in their agenda. The Board decided to monitor progress by those bodies in carrying out those tasks and keep under review the Final Act's implementation. In the context of its regular agenda item on interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, the Board would contribute to reviewing the interrelationships among the Act's policies and measures, drawing on the results of work by UNCTAD intergovernmental bodies, and also contribute to international co-operation to improve the systems, structures and arrangements underpinning international economic relations, particularly in those interrelated areas. TDB decided to consider how best to strengthen its regular review of the interdependence of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, taking account of the Final Act's provisions, and to request the UNCTAD Secretary-General to hold consultations under the arrangements established by a 1986 TDB decision on the scheduling of its sessions.⁽¹⁷⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/175 without vote.

Seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as an organ of the General Assembly, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and its decision 40/438 of 17 December 1985 concerning the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Strategy,

Recalling also its resolution 41/169 of 5 December 1986, in which it decided to convene the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Having considered the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987,

Taking note of Trade and Development Board decision 350(XXXIV) of 16 October 1987, in which the Board decided that the intergovernmental bodies of the Conference should follow up and keep under review the implementation of the policies and measures in the Final Act falling within their terms of reference,

Affirming the commitments made by Member States in the Final Act to reinvigorate and strengthen multilateral co-operation to promote and give effect to policies aimed at revitalizing development, growth and international trade,

1. Welcomes the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session as a step forward in co-operation, negotiation and the international dialogue on development;

2. Urges all Governments, bearing in mind their particular contributions, commensurate with their economic weight, and their commitments as embodied in the Final Act, to give full and prompt effect to the policies and measures agreed to therein, through continuing action, individually and collectively and in competent international organizations, in pursuit of the objective of revitalizing development, growth and international trade;

3. Requests the Trade and Development Board and the subsidiary organs of the Conference to take the appropriate necessary action on the Final Act;

4. Invites all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to respond positively to the results of the seventh session of the Conference, within their respective fields of competence.

General Assembly resolution 42/175

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.1) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Guatemala, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.63), orally revised; agenda item 82(a).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 42, 43; plenary 96.

Also on 11 December, the Assembly adopted decision 42/441 by recorded vote.

Preparation of summary records for the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

At its 96th plenary meeting, on 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, approved the preparation of summary records for the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for plenary meetings only, in accordance with Trade and Development Board decision 344(XXXIII) of 3 April 1987.

General Assembly decision 42/441

131-1-22 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.1) by recorded vote (108-1-22), 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Guatemala, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.66), orally revised; agenda item 82 (a).

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/42/855; S-G, A/C.2/42/L.76, A/C.5/42/54.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 42, 43; 5th Committee 54; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Lebanon,^a Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Explaining its vote, the United States said it could not support the text, not because it underestimated the importance of summary records but because the draft's financial implications—$180,000—had not been clearly spelt out; it was a considerable amount which could have been more judiciously used elsewhere.

Norway abstained because it felt that the large amounts to be spent could be put to better use, particularly at a time of budgetary restriction. New Zealand shared Norway's doubts as to the value of the records that would probably not be available before the eighth session of UNCTAD. Canada said the matter should have been settled during the preparations for UNCTAD VII; also, no sufficiently clear explanation had been given of the financial implications.

Finland voted in favour because of the importance it attached to preparing the summary records, but would have preferred the decision to be taken after a cost-benefit analysis of their preparation had been made. Poland regretted that delegations had not had time to obtain an explanation of financial implications.

The USSR said it was clear from the explanation of financial implications that the draft would not involve additional costs. Guatemala and Peru regretted that the text had been put to the vote and trusted that did not mean the consensus which had emerged at UNCTAD VII and the important commitments entered into were being called into question.

REFERENCES

- (1)Proceedings of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Seventh Session, Geneva, 9 July-3 August 1987, vol. I, Report and Annexes (TD/352, vol. I), Sales No. E.88.II.D.1. (2)YUN 1983, p. 539. (3)Revitalizing Development, Growth and International Trade: Assessment and Policy Options (TD/328/Rev.1), Sales No. E.87.II.D.9. (4)TD/329/Rev.1. (5)TD/336. (6)YUN 1964, p. 214, GA res. 1995(XIX), annex, 30 Dec. 1964. (7)YUN 1986, p. 515. (8)A/42/15, vol. I. (9)Ibid., (dec. 344(XXXIII)). (10)Ibid., (dec. 346(S-XV)). (11)TD/335. (12)TD/330 & Corr.1,2. (13)TD/334. (14)TD/333 & Corr.1. (15)TD/331. (16)A/42/15, vol. II (dec. 350(XXXIV)). (17)YUN 1986, p. 517.

International co-operation in trade and finance

The continuation in 1986 and early 1987 of the trade imbalances of the larger industrial economies had added to the strains on the world financial and trade systems, said the World Economic Survey 1987(1) Some adjustments had been introduced in the domestic policies of major industrial countries to reduce disequilibria, but results had proved elusive, with investors remaining hesitant and capital formation sluggish. A high degree of uncertainty regarding exchange rates, interest rates and prices of key primary products prevailed and the debt difficulties of many countries had intensified.

For some countries, changes in per capita income in 1986 were the result of windfall transfers of income and wealth arising from changes in international prices. Changes in prices of traded goods caused shifts of billions of dollars in the distribution of income among countries, commodities, especially oil, being the main source of such transfers. It was estimated that the developing countries lost some $94 billion as a result of such changes in terms of trade in 1986. Other key prices had a similar effect; the increase and subsequent decline in nominal interest rates resulted in large changes in the flow of financial resources among countries and remained one reason for the ongoing net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries. Changes in exchange rates also affected considerably the flow of resources across borders.

UNCTAD VII action. In the part of its Final Act dealing with orientations for the future,(2) the Conference noted that the policies and measures delineated by it, being interrelated, should be pursued so as to make their effects mutually reinforcing. International forums should keep under review the interrelationships among those policies and measures, together with their implementation and the need to adapt them in the light of changing circumstances. UNCTAD, as a universal forum focusing on trade and development, could make a significant contribution to that process. The constructive dialogue at UNCTAD VII was an important step in heightening awareness of problems arising from interactions among national policies adopted by Governments, internationally accepted rules and disciplines, and the operation of markets. The dialogue should be continued in UNCTAD'S intergovernmental machinery to provide fresh impetus to policy formulation and to multilateral co-operation for development. With that in mind, TDB should consider how to strengthen its regular review of the interdependence of economic issues.

The Final Act contained explicit and implicit orientations for the UNCTAD secretariat's future work, which would be acted on by the UNCTAD Secretary-General, initially in the context of the 1988-1989 programme budget, and by UNCTAD'S intergovernmental bodies. UNCTAD VII agreed that multilateral economic co-operation should be a continuing endeavour from which important benefits could be expected for the development process and for the world economy. Member States pledged themselves to a reinvigorated effort to strengthen multilateral co-operation to promote and give effect to policies aimed at revitalizing development, growth and international trade, and to enhance the effectiveness of UNCTAD as an important instrument of international economic co-operation.

Net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries

In accordance with 1986 Economic and Social Council(3) and General Assembly(4) resolutions, the Secretary-General submitted to both those bodies in May 1987 a report on the net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries.(5) In preparing the report, contributions from the International Monetary Fund (IMF), UNCTAD, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific were taken into account.

The report stated that, until the end of 1981, the developing countries as a group were net recipients of resources from abroad. That began to change in 1982 as inflows fell drastically at a time when foreign payments were increasing. By 1984, the difference between aggregate receipts and payments had turned into significant and persistent net outflow. Compared to a net inflow of some $40 billion in 1980, there was an outflow averaging about $24 billion a year in 1985-1986. The report went on to address: the conceptual issues of the net transfer of resources; concern with an earlier adverse net transfer occasioned by the Treaty of Versailles, which imposed large reparation payments on Germany after the First World War; financial flows in the 1970s; the turn-around in the 1980s; the consequences of changes in the net transfer for the development process; and policy implications.

Annexes to the report dealt with other issues related to the transfer of resources—capital flight, brain drain, changes in terms of trade, and transnational corporations and transfer pricing; and with the effect of a transfer of resources on the real sector of the economy.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/93 by roll-call vote.

Net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/56 of 22 July 1986 and General Assembly resolution 41/180 of 8 December 1986,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 41/202 of 8 December 1986,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries, the World Economic Survey 1987 and the report of the Committee for Development Planning on its twenty-third session,

Expressing its profound concern at the persistence of a net overall transfer of real resources from the developing to the developed countries,

Alarmed at the ever-increasing net outflows from the developing countries, which in 1986 were of the order of $24 billion in financial transfers and $94 billion in terms-of-trade losses, and which when added amounted to $118 billion, triggering, inter alia, a decline in standards of living in the developing countries,

Aware that this dangerous situation threatens the economic, social and political stability of the world and subverts the development process in the developing countries,

Deeply concerned that the debt-service burden of the developing countries seriously diminishes the resources available to them for promoting and sustaining economic growth and development and impedes the allocation of adequate resources to social services in such sectors as health, nutrition, education and housing, which are vital to the most vulnerable population groups,

Stressing that a balanced and sustained recovery of the world economy requires the restoration of economic growth and development in the developing countries,

1. Emphasizes the need for the urgent adoption of specific measures to reverse the negative net transfer of resources by reducing the outflow of resources from developing to developed countries and by increasing the flow of resources to developing countries;

2. Urges developed countries, in particular, to adopt measures:

(a) To increase and improve access to their markets for products from the developing countries and to take steps to improve and protect the purchasing power of the export earnings of developing countries;

(b) To increase the flow of official development assistance to developing countries so as to achieve, by the end of the 1980s, the established target of 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of the developed countries;

(c) To encourage the increase of both private finance and non-concessional public long-term lending and, in that regard, to improve the terms of lending, through, inter alia, a substantial reduction of real interest rates and longer grace and repayment periods;

(d) To provide substantial debt relief, bearing in mind the capacity of debtors to pay;

3. Calls upon developed countries to take concrete action directed towards correcting the major imbalances in the world economy which contribute to the net reverse transfer of resources, in particular through the reduction or elimination of their budget deficits and simultaneous reactivation of the economies of countries with trade surpluses and the redirection of trade surpluses to developing countries to help promote accelerated growth and sustained development in the developing countries, and to co-ordinate and harmonize macro-economic policies in a multilateral framework, including policies pertaining to exchange-rate stability, for the benefit of global development;

4. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session to give in-depth consideration to the net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the evolution of that phenomenon and developments having a bearing on the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/93

9 July 1987 Meeting 37 31-11-3 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Guatemala, for Group of 77 (E/1987/L.41), orally revised; agenda item 3.

Meeting numbers. ESC 33, 37.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bangladesh, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Egypt, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Morocco, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Iceland, Norway, Turkey.

Explaining its vote, the United States said that the concept of the net transfer of resources was vague, ill-defined and made no sense at the economic level; rather than being asked to work on that issue, the Secretariat could make better use of its time by dealing with the real issues, which were trade and aid on which agreement was possible. Canada said the text's sponsors should show more readiness to engage in dialogue so that, through mutual concessions, a clearer and more specific concept could emerge.

Norway, recognizing that there had been a net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries for a number of years, said it had been unable to vote for the text because its operative part contained unacceptable procedural provisions and specific policy recommendations that required further consideration within the framework of UNCTAD VII.

By decision 1987/188 of 9 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries.(5)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 42/429 by recorded vote.

Net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries

At its 96th plenary meeting, on 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, requested the Secretary-General, in preparing the report called for by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1987/93 of 9 July 1987, to include a section on the links between the level of a net overall transfer of real resources from developing to developed countries and the attainment of the growth target for developing countries set in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

General Assembly decision 42/429

133-13-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/820/Add.1) by vote (102-13-71, 20 November (meeting 42); draft by Guatemala, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.41); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 28, 42; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Spain, Sweden.

Speaking on behalf of the States members of the European Economic Community (EEC), Denmark said they had doubts regarding the concept of net transfer of resources since it involved two different types of transactions and overlooked important factors such as the beneficial spin-off of investments and the impact of the outflow of capital. The study requested of the Secretary-General would be better left to the competent financial organizations.

REFERENCES

- (1) World Economic Survey 1987: Current Trends and Policies in the World Economy (E/1987/62 & Corr.1), Sales No. E.87.II.C.1 & corrigendum.
- (2) Proceedings of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Seventh Session, Geneva, 9 July-3 August 1987, vol. I, Report and Annexes (TD/352, vol. I), Sales No. E.88.II.D.1.
- (3) YUN 1986, p. 491, ESC res. 1986/56, 22 July 1986.
- (4) Ibid., p. 492, GA res. 41/180, 8 Dec. 1986.
- (5) A/42/272-E/1987/72.

International trade

During 1987, international trade issues were discussed by various United Nations bodies, particularly UNCTAD VII, whose Final Act had sections devoted to international trade and to commodities. The UNCTAD Committee on Commodities held its twelfth session in 1987 and several meetings were held to discuss individual commodities.

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board carried out its annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment. Other UNCTAD bodies met during the year to discuss: the rules of origin under the generalized system of preferences; trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems; and restrictive business practices.

The International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT continued to provide technical assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes.

Trade policy

International trade patterns in 1986 were shaken by a sharp fall in oil prices and continued to be affected by sudden changes in currency values and by the contraction of many debtor countries, said the World Economic Survey 1982(1) Those developments made for significant redistribution of trade and for continued slow growth. World trade as a whole grew by about 3.5 per cent, but country experiences were extremely diverse. While the volume of imports of the developed market economies increased by about 8 per cent, imports of energy-exporting developing countries declined by about 20 per cent. Imports of Japan and the United States increased sharply, those of China declined by some 20 per cent, while those of other centrally planned economies declined marginally.

World exports in 1986 were estimated to have been about $2.15 trillion compared with $2 trillion in 1980. Between 1980 and 1986, world trade in real terms probably increased by about 17 per cent (in a period of rapid changes in exchange rates, figures in real terms were only rough approximations). It was indicated that growth in 1987 would be no better than 3 per cent, if the surge in the volume of trade in oil, which accounted for much of the 1986 increase in world trade, returned to more normal levels. Excluding oil, the growth of world trade in 1986 was less than 2 per cent, which was below the rate of growth of world income.

The persistent weakness of world trade raised major questions of trade and development policy, said the Survey, in particular whether countries should seek a greater degree of stimulation from the domestic economy than in the past.

An UNCTAD secretariat report to UNCTAD VII on revitalizing development, growth and international trade(2) stated that, despite rigorous adjustment efforts, the large size and swift pace of the trade balance improvement required of developing countries depressed both output and investment and, hence, growth potential. Since 1985, heavy emphasis had been placed on policy reforms in developing countries and, to a lesser extent, on ensuring a modest increase in external financing. By contrast, little or no attention was given to the need to improve the overall trading environment and to the question of interest rates—issues of key importance.

Possible policy options put forward in the report in the area of trade were: speedy implementation of commitments on standstill and rollback and other commitments regarding protectionism and structural adjustment; establishment of national mechanisms for evaluating proposals for protection in the context of overall national economy; preparation of programmes of action for facilitating structural adjustment and monitoring the implementation of those programmes; fundamental review of the international trading system with the objective of improving and strengthening it; and elaboration of a programme for the further promotion of trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems.

UNCTAD VII action. In the section of its Final Act(3), related to international trade, UNCTAD VII addressed many aspects of the subject, including protectionism and structural adjustment (see p. 472), the generalized system of trade preferences (GSP) (see p. 473), trade among countries having different economic and social systems (see p. 474), and restrictive business practices (see p. 477).

The Conference stated that structural rigidities and resistance to structural change had exacerbated protectionism, including sectors of particular export interest to developing countries. International trade had been affected by restrictive trade policies and restrictive business practices, which were undermining the functioning of the international trading system and retarding the structural adjustment process, factors which were having a serious impact on the trade and development of developing countries. Although GSP had played an important role in expanding developing countries' exports, its objectives were not fully achieved. The successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations(4) (see also PART TWO, Chapter XVIII) was important to further liberalize and expand trade, to improve the multilateral framework for trade and to strengthen the effectiveness of GATT. The success of the Uruguay Round would be facilitated by a supportive international economic environment which should ensure mutually reinforcing linkages between trade, money, finance and development, the Conference stated. The commitments on standstill and roll-back made in the Round should be fully respected and implemented, and TDB should follow closely developments and issues in the Round of particular concern to developing countries. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to provide technical assistance to developing countries to facilitate their participation in the Round's negotiations and to render technical support required in the negotiations. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was asked to consider favourably requests to provide financial resources to UNCTAD and to individual countries for that purpose.

There should be improved access to markets, particularly for products of export interest to developing countries, including manufactures and semi-manufactures, and full liberalization of trade in tropical and natural resource-based products should be aimed at, while escalation of tariff and non-tariff barriers should be reduced or eliminated. Further trade liberalization was an important objective in textiles and clothing and modalities should be formulated to permit the integration of that sector into GATT.

Negotiations in the Uruguay Round should aim at greater liberalization of trade in agriculture and at bringing all measures affecting import access and export competition under GATT rules and disciplines through: improving market access by reducing import barriers; improving the competitive environment by increasing discipline on the use of all direct and indirect subsidies; and minimizing the adverse effects that sanitary and phytosanitary regulations and barriers could have on agricultural trade. The Conference said that the problems of LDCs and land-locked and island developing countries should be kept in view while undertaking measures to improve market access.

UNCTAD should also, stated the Conference, continue its work on trade in services, as mandated in Conference resolution 159(VI)(5) and in the 1985 TDB decision on the subject.(6) The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to analyse the implications of issues raised in the context of services and to explore problematics for trade in services, keeping in view technological changes. UNCTAD was asked to continue its programme of technical assistance in services and UNDP was invited to consider favourably requests for financial resources for that purpose.

In providing technical assistance, special attention should be paid to the needs of LDCs and the UNCTAD secretariat was asked to keep member States informed of the progress and activities of projects and to report on them annually.

Noting that TDB had been asked to study developments in the international trading system, the Conference said that, in doing so, it could make recommendations on principles and policies related to international trade, and make proposals as to strengthening and improving the system to give it a more universal and dynamic character, and to make it more responsive to the needs of developing countries and supportive of accelerated economic growth and development.

Protectionism and structural adjustment

In March/April 1987, TDB carried out its annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment. In accordance with a 1984 Board resolution,(7) member States supplied the UNCTAD Secretary-General, at his request, with information on actions relevant to agreements and commitments in part I of UNCTAD resolution 159(VI) which dealt with the subject.(5) In an UNCTAD secretariat note,(8) information from 22 countries was supplied to TDB.

The Board also had before it a two-part secretariat report on problems of protectionism and structural adjustment. Supporting information for both parts was contained in an addendum.(9) The report's first part(10) dealt with restrictions on trade and structural adjustment, including developments in trade actions and trade legislation in 1986, an assessment of trade measures, and a number of selected issues: protection against exports of developing countries; voluntary export restraints and orderly marketing arrangements—sectors and countries affected; trade barriers against products at different levels of processing; agricultural trade issues; and textiles and clothing.

The report's second part(11) surveyed the main structural developments in the agricultural, manufacturing and services sectors of the developed market-economy countries, the developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. It then discussed the main policy features of the international restructuring process.

UNCTAD VII action. The question of protectionism and structural adjustment was discussed widely at UNCTAD VII. In its Final Act,(3) the Conference agreed that commitments to halt and reverse protectionism, including those in UNCTAD resolutions 96(IV),(12) 131(V)(13) and 159(VI),(5) should be implemented, in particular taking into account the export interests of developing countries, as should commitments relating to structural adjustment, particularly those in the aforementioned resolutions. TDB should continue its annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment and widen its coverage to take into account developing countries' specific interests and to include analysis of the principal elements and effects of structural adjustment policies, including trade policies, and of the various policy options, bearing in mind the importance of resources and technology in the development process. The importance of a favourable international economic environment and relevance of domestic policies was recognized.

In their fight against protectionism, said the Conference, Governments should consider establishing transparent mechanisms at the national level to evaluate protectionist measures sought by firms/sectors, their implications for the domestic economy and their effects on developing countries' export interests.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In October 1987, the Second Committee had before it a draft resolution⁽¹⁴⁾ on protectionism and structural adjustment, originally submitted in 1980 on behalf of the Group of 77⁽¹⁵⁾ and revised by the sponsors in 1981.⁽¹⁶⁾ It was considered in 1982,⁽¹⁷⁾ 1983,⁽¹⁸⁾ 1984,⁽⁷⁾ 1985⁽⁶⁾ and 1986, when it was referred to the Assembly's 1987 session.⁽¹⁹⁾

By the draft, the Assembly would urge the developed countries to limit protectionist policies and facilitate measures to increase the share of developing countries in international trade. A table containing suggestions by some developed countries for changes in the draft was annexed to it.

On 11 December, by decision 42/438, the Assembly, on the Committee's recommendation, deferred consideration of the draft until 1988.

Trade preferences

Generalized system of preferences

UNCTAD VII action. In its Final Act,⁽³⁾ UNCTAD VII urged preference-giving countries to continue to improve their autonomous GSP schemes through expanded product coverage. The UNCTAD Special Committee on Preferences should consider a study on the subject to be prepared by the secretariat. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to strengthen technical assistance programmes in GSP and to publish information on the programme. UNDP was asked to consider favourably requests to provide adequate financial resources for the purpose.

Technical co-operation

In 1986 and 1987,⁽²⁰⁾ general trust fund contributions for UNCTAD technical co-operation activities on GSP and other trade laws amounted to $249,193, while in-kind contributions and trust funds for specific purposes totalled $527,155 for the two-year period. The 2 to 1 ratio of in-kind and specified trust funds relative to general trust-fund contributions underscored again the need for general trust-fund contributions.

During 1987, 29 seminars (6 regional and 12 national) were held, training 1,385 participants and observers from the private and public sectors of developing countries; 13 advisory or fund-raising missions were also undertaken.

In addition to in-kind contributions from many preference-giving and preference-receiving countries which provided experts to participate in seminars, trust-fund contributions were made by the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Switzerland and the United States to finance regional and national seminars and projects. Two developing countries released experts to participate in seminars on a technical co-operation among developing countries basis under which their experiences were shared with other beneficiary countries. Two Thai officials participated in a regional seminar for low-income Asian developing countries (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 19-24 September) and an Argentine official participated in a regional seminar for Central American and Caribbean countries and Territories (Panama City, 30 November-4 December).

Rules of origin

In accordance with a 1986 recommendation of the Special Committee on Preferences,⁽²¹⁾ the Working Group on Rules of Origin convened its eleventh session at Geneva from 23 to 27 November 1987,⁽²²⁾ its previous session having been held in 1985.⁽²³⁾

The Group had before it a study prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat on priorities regarding improvements in rules of origin under GSP,⁽²⁴⁾ which reviewed the two subjects confronting the Group: consultations aimed at improving the rules of origin, including harmonization, simplification and liberalization; and the need to find solutions to practical problems which would arise as of 1 January 1988, when the process criterion would be expressed in terms of the Harmonized System-based nomenclature instead of the Customs Co-operation Council nomenclature.

On 27 November, the Working Group adopted its agreed conclusions, which included the recommendations of its informal subgroup (see below) and conclusions regarding: documentation; harmonization of the percentage criterion; special arrangements for LDCs; consideration of requests for changes in particular rules; extension of the concept of donor country content; extension of full and global cumulation; liberalization of the 5 per cent rule; liberalization of the percentage and process criterion; information and technical assistance; and administrative co-operation.

The Group noted that further work was needed to provide a final response to the mandate in part

III of UNCTAD resolution 159(VI).(25) It also noted that TDB, in a 20 November resolution (see p. 499), endorsed the report of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields, which recommended that the Working Group be converted into a sessional committee of the Special Committee on Preferences. The Group's understanding was that further work regarding rules of origin should be referred to that sessional committee.

An informal subgroup on the Harmonized System-based origin rules, established by the Working Group on Rules of Origin, adopted agreed conclusions on: amendments proposed by the preference-giving countries to two forms dealing with GSP; transitional arrangements for the period 1 January 1988, when the Harmonized System-based nomenclature would come into effect, to 31 December 1989; and the review procedure should there be inadvertent losses of preferential trade opportunities caused by the transposition of the origin rules to the Harmonized System nomenclature.

Global system of trade preferences among developing countries

During 1987, the first round of negotiations for the Global System of Trade Preferences (GSTP) entered into an intensive phase with the submission by participating countries of their request lists for concessions. The UNCTAD secretariat provided assistance for bilateral negotiations prior to a ministerial meeting on GSTP to be held in April 1988. The GSTP project continued to assist participating countries in the form of data, clarification of issues, advice on selecting export products of interest and identification of trade barriers in partner countries.

The UNCTAD Trade Information System became fully operational in 1987 with a computerized data bank on trade control measures of some 90 developing countries. That data continued to be updated and to provide information for negotiations on GSTP. The UNCTAD Handbook of Trade Control Measures of Developing Countries, 1987(26) was published, covering data for 135 developing countries.

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

In accordance with a 1985 TDB decision,(27) an ad hoc group of experts was convened at Geneva from 20 to 23 January 1987(28) to consider, prior to UNCTAD VII, prospects for trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems, particularly between developing countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

In its conclusions, the ad hoc group gave a brief overview of the world economy stating that, despite negative or negligible growth in world trade, trade among countries having different economic and social systems continued to grow, although moderately compared with the 1970s. Prospects for expanded trade and co-operation would depend on: a supportive international environment in which world trade could grow at a stable and reasonable rate in a more predictable setting; the financial liquidity of indebted countries; stable and adequately remunerative prices for commodities; and increased access to international markets.

The group considered that proposals for further promotion of trade between the groups as put forward in a 1986 UNCTAD secretariat document(21) and the ideas contained in UNCTAD resolution 145(VI)(29) could constitute a basis for formulating a new set of guidelines conducive to expanding intersystem trade and economic co-operation.

The group raised a number of issues and made proposals regarding the achievement of such expansion, including: improvement of the commodity composition of international trade; improvement of GSP; establishment of joint ventures; encouragement of expanding co-operation at enterprise level and of tripartite co-operation; improvements in terms of lending to developing countries and in conditions of economic assistance; improvement of exchange of information relating to trade; and promotion of exhibitions and trade fairs to facilitate access of developing countries to markets of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

UNCTAD'S important role in promoting intersystem trade and economic co-operation should be enhanced, the group said. UNCTAD should continue to work on identifying and analysing issues of intersystem trade and economic co-operation and should enhance the efficiency and scope of its consultative machinery. The scope of the secretariat's analytical reports should be expanded to cover services and joint ventures. In collaboration with UNDP and the International Trade Centre, UNCTAD should prepare market research studies.

The group highlighted the fact that one constraint affecting the expansion of East-South trade was lack of information about the trading system, as well as opportunities for trading with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. In view of innovations in the foreign trade system and management of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, it was stressed that UNCTAD'S technical assistance programme in that area should be continued and enlarged in scope and content and made more business- and result-oriented. UNDP should consider allocating financial resources to UNCTAD to implement the programme on an interregional, regional and national basis.

UNCTAD VII action. In the section of its Final Act relating to international trade,(3) UNCTAD VII stated that the UNCTAD secretariat should further analyse work on developments in trade relations between countries having different economic and social systems, particularly East-South trade; such work was to be based on better and more transparent statistics, paying due regard to the product structure, geographical coverage and the role played in that trade by various developing countries. TDB was asked to examine the possibility of elaborating a programme for further promoting trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems, particularly East-South trade. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to consult with Governments on further strengthening those trade relations. The socialist countries of Eastern Europe were asked: to contribute further to developing countries' efforts to diversify and intensify their economic relations towards increasing socialist countries' imports from developing countries, including manufactures and semi-manufactures; to improve further their GSP schemes; to ensure the best terms and conditions of credits to developing countries; to continue to provide and develop economic assistance; to ensure, in financing and executing developing countries' projects, that consideration was given to flexible and efficient modalities to promote viable economic and technical co-operation; and to pay special attention to the needs of LDCs.

UNCTAD VII invited member States and the UNCTAD secretariat, in co-operation with UNDP, to develop further support for projects and programmes of technical assistance to the developing countries, with particular reference to the needs of LDCs, in their trade and economic co-operation with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

Trade promotion and facilitation

During 1987, United Nations bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and to facilitate the movement of goods in international commerce. The main originator of technical co-operation projects in this area was the International Trade Centre (ITC).

The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices met in 1987, calling on Governments to ensure transparency concerning restrictive business practices by applying the rules and procedures of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices, approved by a United Nations conference and adopted by the General Assembly in 1980.(30)

International Trade Centre

During 1987, ITC, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and GATT, continued its technical co-operation activities, serving as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes.(31)

The value of ITC's technical co-operation activities in 1987 again reached over $21 million, having risen to that figure for the first time in 1986. Trust fund contributions accounted for 54 per cent of expenditures on technical co-operation activities and UNDP funding for 46 per cent. The decline registered in UNDP expenditures compared with 1986 was largely due to the start of the fourth UNDP five-year programming cycle in 1987. A number of new trust fund contributions were recorded in 1987 from developing countries as well as from developed countries.

The value of programme implementation in Africa rose to $5.7 million from $4.9 million in 1986. In Asia and the Pacific, implementation was $5.3 million compared with $7 million. In Latin America and the Caribbean, implementation remained at $2.4 million. In Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East, implementation was $1.4 million as against $1.6 million the previous year. Interregional expenditures rose from $5.5 million to $6.3 million.

ITC assistance to developing countries regarding institutional infrastructure for trade promotion at the national level was generally concentrated on establishing trade promotion organizations, restructuring and strengthening such institutions, creating awareness in other national entities of the importance of trade promotion, and establishing effective co-ordination mechanisms between trade promotion institutions and other relevant national government and business organizations.

Consultations, programming and advisory missions and round-table meetings took place in Angola, Greece, Guatemala, Morocco, Pakistan and Peru. In Saudi Arabia, an advisory mission designed operational procedures for the Export Promotion Council and established the technical secretariat to carry out promotional actions for non-oil products. In Africa south of the Sahara, projects were ongoing in Ethiopia, Ghana, Lesotho, Malawi, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zimbabwe.

Export market development activities accounted for some 55 per cent of ITC'S technical co-operation programme in 1987. Product and market development projects included: floricultural products in Honduras, Sri Lanka and Thailand; processed food in Costa Rica and Guatemala; tropical horticultural products in Brazil; off-season vegetables in Malawi; coconut products in Asian and Pacific countries; livestock and meat in Latin American countries; shrimp in Costa Rica, Guatemala and Honduras; builders' woodwork in Indonesia, Malaysia and Mexico; silk products in China, India and Thailand; rubber products in Malaysia; and technical consultancy services with Argentina, Brazil, Chile, China, India and Indonesia. Other export market development activities included trade information services (training, advisory services, collection and dissemination of information, and a Market News Service), supply and demand survey projects; and export development of commodities.

ITC activities in specialized national trade promotion services included export packaging, export finance services, costing and pricing for export, trade fairs and commercial publicity, export quality control, national commercial representation abroad, legal aspects of foreign trade, export co-operation schemes for small and medium-sized enterprises, and international physical distribution of goods.

With regard to commodity promotion, ITC continued activities under jute market development projects implemented since 1981 to strengthen the competitive position of jute and jute products in Japan, the United States and Western Europe. Action included distributing labels for jute carpet backing to maintain the identification and image of the product and the research and development of jute geotextiles for soil erosion control.

ITC'S human resource development activities emphasized two aspects: in the short term, organizing and implementing training activities to upgrade existing skills of and introducing new skills and techniques to trade promotion personnel, with special attention to the needs of LDCs; and, in the long term, strengthening training institutions.

Activities in national import operations and techniques in 1987 included rationalizing import procedures, improving import procurement and material management methods, providing information on supply market conditions, ensuring maintenance of imported goods and training import staff. Developing professional skills in import management accounted for a major part of the work. Projects were in operation in Angola, Burundi, Djibouti, Egypt, Ethiopia, Malawi, Mauritania, Mozambique, Rwanda and Zimbabwe. Among integrated projects containing import components were those in the Congo, Democratic Yemen, Lesotho, Madagascar, the Niger, Saudi Arabia and Tunisia.

In 1987, the number of national projects under the ITC special programme of technical co-operation with LDCs reached 39. The overall value of ITC assistance to LDCs comprised over 30 per cent of the Centre's programme resources.

ITC'S programme of technical co-operation with national chambers of commerce concentrated largely on training during 1987. Seminars for chamber of commerce officials from developing countries were organized in Austria, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany and Sweden. The second volume of Foreign Trade Services of Chambers of Commerce was published.

Total ITC expenditure in 1987 was $36.8 million, of which technical co-operation activities came to $21.1 million. Trust fund contributions furnished $11.5 million of the 1987 amount for technical co-operation and the remainder was provided by UNDP. The Centre's 1987 budget of $12.3 million, covering operations at its Geneva headquarters, was contributed equally by the United Nations and GATT. As at 31 December 1987, ITC had a headquarters-based staff of 76 Professionals and 134 in the General Service category. It assigned 695 experts to projects during the year,

JAG action. The Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on ITC (twentieth session, Geneva, 6-10 April)(32) had before it the annual report on ITC activities during 1986,(33) and a joint UNDP/ITC thematic evaluation study on trade information services and a report of a meeting of specialists in trade information services (6-8 January 1987).(34)

The Group's recommendations included that ITC should: continue its technical co-operation support towards strengthening national institutional infrastructures for trade promotion in developing countries; develop its emphasis on result-oriented support to enterprises, particularly small and medium-sized ones; ensure that trade promotion organizations were adequately involved in selecting co-operating enterprises and in implementing enterprise-oriented projects; strengthen efforts to promote the export of technical services from developing countries; increase co-ordination activities with import promotion offices to meet more effectively developing countries' market intelligence needs; give high priority to avoiding interruption of ongoing projects for which a clear need had been expressed by developing countries; find ways to help alleviate export production constraints in developing countries; actively promote new products while providing marketing and promotion support for traditional exports; continue assistance to improve basic services in developing countries, such as export packaging and quality control; take into account problems of international physical distribution in its technical co-operation programmes and consider developing regional projects in that area; improve dissemination of information on the results of technical co-operation projects; give special attention to possibilities for exporting processed and semi-processed products in its technical co-operation on marketing and promoting commodities; increase attention to and resources for human resources development; and increase resources for LDC assistance.

The Group also recommended that ITC: continue efforts to utilize expertise in the socialist countries of Eastern Europe in implementing technical co-operation projects and help developing countries take advantage of market opportunities in those countries; continue to foster maximum use of opportunities for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries in its technical co-operation activities; develop innovative approaches to improving women's participation in export development; and keep abreast of information sources on countertrade to provide such information to developing countries.

In addition, the Group said, ITC should conduct an independent evaluation of supply and demand surveys and make efforts to obtain trust fund donor support for a meeting of specialists on the subject. ITC should also conduct a study on the feasibility of charging for some trade information services and report its findings to JAG'S 1988 session.

In other recommendations, the Group stated that ITC should consider merging the subprogramme on technical co-operation with national chambers of commerce with that on institutional infrastructures for trade promotion at the national level, and the subprogramme on commodity promotion with that on export market development. It should also seek support from trust fund donors to organize a technical meeting to consider the draft section on ITC in the United Nations medium-term plan 1990-1995.

UNCTAD VII action. In the section on commodities of its Final Act (see p. 479),⁽³⁾ UNCTAD VII stated that full support should be given to ITC in the areas of market research, market development and promotion, including training in the commodities field. In the Final Act's section on LDCs (see p. 391), UNCTAD VII said that increased technical assistance should be given to LDCs through ITC for promotion of trade and expansion of production facilities.

Tirade facilitation

During 1987, within UNCTAD'S Special Programme on Trade Facilitation (FALPRO), Finland contributed trust funds for trade facilitation advisory services which covered two full-time advisers for seven months. As that trust fund became exhausted, Finland, Norway and Sweden financed one adviser under an emergency trust fund for the balance of the year. Technical co-operation activities were also financed by UNDP and bilateral funds.

Missions concerned with the follow-up of previous trade facilitation work, organization of training events, or initiation of simplification programmes at the country and regional level were undertaken to 21 developing countries or territories.

A major training programme was developed within a UNDP-financed project on trade facilitation in the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), which led to national seminars being held in four of the six ASEAN member States. Other missions to ASEAN countries involved programming and direct technical assistance activities. Programming missions were also undertaken to Nepal to prepare a long-term UNDP-financed project to simplify trade and transit procedures.

Various manuals, directories and code systems in trade facilitation, established jointly by UNCTAD and the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), were updated during the year. Four issues of Trade Facilitation News were published by ECE and FALPRO in 1987.

Restrictive business practices

UNCTAD VII action. In the section of its Final Act⁽³⁾ on international trade, UNCTAD VII said that UNCTAD should continue and strengthen its ongoing work in respect of restrictive business practices, particularly with a view to ensuring transparency and to defining consultations procedures. The UNCTAD secretariat should continue its technical assistance programme in that area.

Intergovernmental Group of Experts. The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices—established as a forum for consultation on matters related to the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set), adopted in 1980⁽³⁰⁾—held its sixth session at Geneva from 11 November to 14 December 1987.⁽³⁵⁾ The Group had before it a note by the UNCTAD secretariat⁽³⁶⁾ containing extracts of replies received from States and regional groups on action taken by them to meet their commitments to the Set, and a revised UNCTAD secretariat study on tied purchasing practices,⁽³⁷⁾ the original version having been considered at the Group's 1984 session,⁽³⁸⁾ and UNCTAD secretariat notes on studies on restrictive business practices related to the Set's provisions,⁽³⁹⁾ reviewing the implementation of technical assistance, advisory and training programmes on restrictive business practices,⁽⁴⁰⁾ and on preparations for a handbook on restrictive business practices legislation and for a revised draft of a model law or laws for the control of such practices.⁽⁴¹⁾

On 14 December, the Group adopted its agreed decisions and conclusions. With regard to its review of the operation of and experience arising from the application and implementation of the Set, the Group called on States to ensure transparency concerning restrictive business practices by applying the Set's relevant rules and improving procedures for obtaining information from enterprises as set out therein, with a view to gathering experience from which the Intergovernmental Group could propose improvements and further development of the Set before the 1990 conference to review the Set, which in 1986 the General Assembly had decided to convene.⁽⁴²⁾ The Group called on States to pay attention to the use of consultation procedures established in the Set as an instrument to find mutually acceptable solutions to control restrictive business practices adversely affecting international trade originating from abroad, and to report to the Group through the UNCTAD Secretary-General their experience with those procedures, with a view to assisting the Group to make proposals to define consultation procedures, as indicated by UNCTAD VII (see above), before the 1990 conference. Noting the secretariat's efforts to collect and disseminate information on restrictive business practices, the Group urged States to implement the portions of the Set providing for communication of information to the UNCTAD Secretary-General.

In connection with studies on restrictive business practices, the Group requested regional groups and member States to submit further comments on the study on tied purchasing.⁽³⁷⁾ The secretariat was asked to complete the study, taking into account views expressed at the Group's session and comments to be received, and to arrange for its publication before the Group's 1989 session, together with the final comments of States and regional groups. The Group noted that lack of information had made it impossible for the UNCTAD secretariat to develop a study on restrictive business practices in the services sector by consulting firms and other enterprises, originally considered by the Group in 1984,⁽³⁸⁾ and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to bring the matter before the Group at future sessions when substantive evidence of anti-competitive practices in that area was available. With regard to possible future studies set out in the secretariat's note,⁽³⁹⁾ the Group asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General, taking into account information to be supplied by Governments, to prepare a study on the concentration of market power through mergers, takeovers, joint ventures and other acquisitions of control, whether of a horizontal, vertical or conglomerate nature, and its effects on international markets, in particular the markets of developing countries. He was asked to bring to the Group's attention his views as to the feasibility of undertaking studies on: restrictive business practices adversely affecting international trade, particularly the trade and development of the developing countries, dealing with ways and means for States to control such practices, particularly when they originated from abroad and had adverse effects on countries' domestic markets and on their exports; the relationship of restrictive business practices' control with industrialization policies and regional integration in developed and developing countries; and restrictive business practices in the food industry.

With regard to its review of technical assistance, advisory and training programmes on restrictive business practices, the Group re-emphasized the need to provide technical assistance to developing countries in establishing legislative, administrative and technical capabilities enabling them to detect and control restrictive business practices, as well as to remedy those adversely affecting their foreign trade and economic development. The Group again urged international organizations and financing programmes, particularly UNDP, to provide resources to finance UNCTAD activities as envisaged in the Set. It reiterated its invitation to all countries, in particular the developed ones, to make financial and other contributions to continue technical assistance programmes and asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to continue efforts to secure more predictable resources to finance those activities in order to ensure their continuation.

Concerning the issuance of the second part of the handbook on restrictive business practices,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Group asked the UNCTAD secretariat to continue compiling the handbook, taking account of comments by regional groups at its current session, and to revise the draft elements for the model law or laws for the Group's 1989 session.

Commodities

The UNCTAD secretariat report to UNCTAD VII on revitalizing development, growth and international trade⁽²⁾ contained a chapter on commodities, which focused on the persistent decline and instability in the prices and earnings of commodity exports of developing countries and on the main factors influencing the evolution of those events, particularly those relating to demand and supply. The report noted that prospects for economic progress, growth and development in the world economy hinged, for a large proportion of the world's population living in developing countries, on the production and export of primary commodities.

From 1980 to 1986, commodity prices in real terms fell by about 30 per cent. Some 10 per cent of that took place in 1986 and was partly caused by the increase in dollar prices of manufactured goods exported by developed market-economy countries, which, in turn, was partly influenced by the fall in the value of the dollar. The price decline was widely spread among commodities, except for coffee, rice and tea.

The report noted that there was an interrelationship between the fall in commodity prices, developing countries' export earnings and their debt servicing. The price fall, and its impact on export earnings, had increased the need for borrowing. The outstanding debt of those countries had almost doubled since 1980. While in 1980 about 75 per cent of developing countries' export earnings from non-fuel primary commodities were required for the servicing of debt, in 1985 that ratio exceeded 130 per cent, and those debt-servicing obligations had led them to expand their commodity export volumes. The least developed and African countries had expanded export volumes less than other developing countries and, as a result, had suffered more from the recession of the 1980s. The annual average loss in export earnings of LDCs in 1981-1986 constituted 15 per cent of their earnings in 1980 as against 11 per cent for all developing countries.

Although the size of trade in petroleum and its strategic role in the world economy distinguished it from other commodities, the features underlying the petroleum market were similar to those in other commodity markets.

Committee on Commodities. The UNCTAD Committee on Commodities held its twelfth session at Geneva from 2 to 17 February 1987(43) and had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on disposal of surpluses, strategic reserves or other Government-held non-commercial inventories of primary products,(44) which dealt with strategic and non-strategic reserves of primary products, intended to alleviate the effects of disruptions in supply. The report summarized information on operations relating to Government-held reserves in a number of countries and noted that, as far as was known, all disposals from reserves had been due to changed reserve targets. Moreover, some countries which had held no reserves had recently initiated programmes. Acquisitions for and disposals from those reserves could have a destabilizing effect on minerals markets, in particular since operations were often not made public and were not preceded by consultations, which gave rise to doubts as to the adequacy of existing procedures for avoiding or minimizing adverse effects on markets.

The report suggested that provision be made for prior notification concerning reserve disposals and that Governments could supply information on existing reserve levels and targets, acquisitions and disposal plans in the medium term, and acquisitions and disposals to be effected in the short term. That information could be made public through normal channels or through intergovernmental bodies dealing with the commodities in question.

Also before the Committee was a commodity survey covering 1986 by the UNCTAD secretariat,(45) which considered production and international trade in commodities, trends in commodity prices, factors affecting commodity trade, and the fall in commodity export earnings and its implications.

The Committee also considered the reports of a number of bodies which had met in 1986: the Working Party on Processing, Marketing and Distribution, including Transportation,(46) the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Iron Ore,(47) the Committee on Tungsten,(48) and the Ad Hoc Review Meeting on Copper.(47)

The Committee Chairman stated that a frank exchange of views on the world commodity situation had taken place; delegations agreed, however, that they did not wish to concretize their views formally, in view of the regional and preparatory meetings due to take place prior to UNCTAD VII.

UNCTAD VII action. In the section of its Final Act(3) relating to commodities, UNCTAD VII noted that commodity prices in real terms were at their lowest level for half a century and a sustained improvement was not expected in the short or medium term. The situation had adversely affected all producing countries, with developing countries heavily dependent on exports of commodities being particularly severely affected. In those countries, sharp declines in commodity prices had caused losses in earnings, decline in capital investment and debt accumulation. Among factors affecting demand and supply and contributing to the downward pressure on prices were: moderate economic growth; fluctuating exchange and interest rates; less intensive use of some commodities as a result of technological change, including recycling and the use of synthetics and substitutes; concentration of growth in sectors such as services and electronics in developed countries; increased productivity; support measures encouraging increased production and exports; protectionism; and the declining role of comparative advantage in primary agricultural products, minerals and metals.

Thus, changes had occurred in production, consumption and trade patterns. The share of non-fuel commodities in world trade in relation to that in manufactures had declined. Developing countries' share in total imports of non-fuel commodities had increased, but that increase had been concentrated in a small number of them. There had also been an increase in local processing of some commodities in some developing countries, but for a large number of them little or no progress had been made.

In view of that situation, there was a need to seek lasting solutions to deal with problems in commodities, and UNCTAD VII recognized that international co-operation between producers and consumers should be strengthened. The Conference reaffirmed the validity of UNCTAD resolution 93(IV)(49) and called for implementation of a number of policies and measures.

With regard to international commodity agreements and arrangements, the Conference recognized the need for better functioning of commodity markets and the desirability of achieving stable and more predictable conditions in commodity trade, including avoiding excessive price fluctuations and seeking long-term solutions to commodity problems. There was agreement that producer-consumer consultations and co-operation should be enhanced, strengthened or established, and UNCTAD VII highlighted that there had been long experience with international commodity agreements as a mechanism for greater stability and predictability in commodity markets. The Conference agreed that the operation and functioning of existing commodity agreements should be improved. Negotiation of new agreements or arrangements should cover economic provisions or developmental measures, or measures to improve market transparency, or a combination of such provisions and measures. They should also receive the participation of as many important producing and consuming countries as possible. UNCTAD VII also agreed to ask the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene ad hoc review meetings and/or preparatory meetings on individual commodities not covered by international agreements or arrangements and which were included in the list contained in UNCTAD resolution 93(IV). He would then prepare a schedule of meetings, for implementation by 1990 as far as possible. Those meetings would decide on international action needed to solve problems faced by those commodities in international markets.

As regards the Common Fund for Commodities, the Conference noted that prospects for entry into force of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund had improved with additional signatures and ratifications (see p. 481). UNCTAD VII urged countries which had not signed the Agreement and/or deposited instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval to do so in the near future. Once entry-into-force conditions were met, efforts should be made by the Agreement's parties to ensure that the Fund was made operational.

The Conference recognized that for most developing countries horizontal and vertical diversification of their economies, and increased participation in processing, marketing and distribution, including transportation, of their commodities, was a long-term development objective towards which international co-operation between producers and consumers should be intensified. It noted that diversification decisions were mainly the responsibility of developing countries; international assistance should be directed to viable diversification programmes within a broad economic policy framework and in a context of growth-oriented structural adjustment. Adequate expansion of official bilateral and multilateral resources, as well as private resources, was called for to finance diversification projects and programmes. The Conference recognized the linkage between diversification efforts and market access conditions. It agreed on the need for financial resources for diversification programmes, including processing, marketing and distribution activities, and that such medium-term and long-term financing should be complemented by technical assistance for the implementation of those programmes and for feasibility studies and infrastructural developments.

UNCTAD VII agreed that UNCTAD should assist in diversification as well as processing, marketing and distribution programmes, including improving information flows to aid investment decisions, and technical co-operation projects and programmes, particularly for human resources development. It agreed that the Committee on Commodities' Working Party on Processing, Marketing and Distribution, including Transportation, should pursue its work in light of those orientations.

UNCTAD VII noted that the Uruguay Round (see PART TWO, Chapter XVIII) was an opportunity to strengthen the multilateral trading system, halt and reverse protectionism and remove distortions to trade, making a significant contribution to improving access to markets. The Round had defined objectives for negotiations in tropical products, natural resource-based products and agriculture. The Conference also emphasized that greater market transparency was a factor in improving access to markets and agreed that the UNCTAD secretariat should undertake analyses of issues relating to access to markets as they affected commodities.

Concerning compensatory financing, the Conference recognized that commodity-related shortfalls in export earnings of developing countries were an important obstacle to their development efforts. Developing countries stressed the need to both strengthen and improve the Compensatory Financing Facility of IMF and for an additional facility because of the limited scope of the existing facilities. The developed market-economy countries expressed the view that there was a need to reconcile the short-term impact of compensatory financing with the long-term requirements of commodity sectors in the context of overall development. The view was also expressed that export earnings shortfalls were a short-term balance-of-payments issue, outside UNCTAD'S operational mandate. Where balance-of-payments problems occurred, they should be dealt with in toto, rather than on a commodity-specific basis. Others expressed the view that compensatory financing could be commodity-related and contribute to diversification in the area of commodities. UNCTAD VII asked the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Compensatory Financing of Export Earnings Shortfalls (see p. 494) to take into account the implications of export earnings shortfalls and to consider the various institutional options, bearing in mind the balance-of-payments and/or commodity-related approaches.

With regard to synthetics and substitutes, the Conference agreed that programmes or actions should focus on improving the competitiveness of natural products with respect to them, and technical and financial support should be extended towards that end. The need for greater transparency in the synthetics and substitutes markets and the beneficial effects of trade liberalization of natural products were also highlighted.

The Conference underlined that disposal of non-commercial stocks should not disrupt commodity markets and should be done in consultation with producers and commodity organizations. It took note of the developing countries' proposal for an international code of conduct to halt the adverse effects on commodity markets and noted that guidelines on disposal existed in GATT and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. The Conference agreed that the disposal of non-commercial stocks should be reviewed in the light of UNCTAD'S mandates.

On 3 August,(3) UNCTAD VII adopted a proposal by which it noted the signature and/or ratification during the Conference of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities (see below) by Bulgaria, Côte d'Ivoire, Peru and the USSR, and the announcements by Costa Rica, Madagascar, Portugal and Thailand of their intent to ratify in the near future. It also noted Switzerland's decision to share in international efforts regarding compensatory financing by committing funds for the poorest countries most dependent on commodity export earnings which had suffered from the highest deficits in commodity exports in Switzerland. The Conference noted Japan's proposal to assist in a programme to improve the processing of commodities in developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly decision,(50) the Assembly's Second Committee had before it in 1987 a draft resolution on commodities(51) submitted by the Group of 77 in 1985.(52)

By decision 42/438 of 11 December, the Assembly, on the Committee's recommendation, deferred consideration of the draft until 1988.

Related action. In resolution 1987/90 of 9 July, the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed that support measures for agricultural exports contributed to an accumulation of excess stocks on the world market and that depressed international prices did not serve the purposes of world food security. It called for implementation of the Integrated Programme for Commodities and appealed to all States to ratify the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities.

Common Fund for Commodities

During 1986, preparations continued on arrangements for the Common Fund for Commodities, a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing. During 1987, seven additional States adhered to the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities,(53) bringing the total adherents to 99, nine above the number required for the Agreement to enter into force. The only remaining requirement to be met was that the countries having ratified represent two thirds of the Fund's directly contributed capital of $470 million. On 8 December, when the USSR became the ninety-ninth Government to ratify, those countries accounted for 66 per cent of the Fund's capital.

Signatures and ratifications

As at 31 December 1987, the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities had been signed by 118 States and EEC, and 99 States had formally adhered by ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to it.(54) Of these, four States (Bulgaria, Côte d'Ivoire, Swaziland, USSR) signed the Agreement during 1987 and seven (Bulgaria, Congo, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Madagascar, Morocco, Peru, USSR) ratified or approved it.

Individual commodities

Agricultural commodities

Cocoa. The International Cocoa Agreement, 1986,(55) entered into force provisionally on 20 January 1987 following a decision(56) that it should do so taken the previous day by nine producing and 17 consuming countries, as well as EEC, at a meeting in London held under UNCTAD auspices. The producing countries (Brazil, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Ghana, Grenada, Mexico, Nigeria, Togo), consuming countries (Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Ireland, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, USSR, United Kingdom) and an intergovernmental organization (EEC) had all either deposited instruments of ratification or stated their intent to apply the Agreement provisionally.

In January, the time-limit for deposit of instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval by signatory Governments and the validity of conditions of accession for non-signatory Governments was extended until 30 September. In September, it was again extended until 30 March 1988.

During 1987,(54) six countries (Belgium, Denmark, Greece, Haiti, Ireland, Luxembourg) and EEC applied the Agreement provisionally. Ten countries (Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Ghana, Jamaica, Japan, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Sweden, Togo) and EEC adhered to it.

Olive oil. The International Agreement on Olive Oil and Table Olives, 1986,(57) entered into force provisionally on 1 January 1987. During 1987,(54) two countries (Algeria, Tunisia) adhered to the Agreement.

Rubber. On 20 March 1987, the United Nations Conference on Natural Rubber, 1985, established the text of the International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1987.(58) By its final resolution,(59) the Conference, which met at Geneva from 9 to 20 March, having met once in 1985(60) and twice in 1986,(57) decided that the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts of the Agreement should be equally authentic and requested that they be forwarded to the United Nations Secretary-General. He was asked to forward copies of the text to all Governments invited to the Conference and to arrange for the Agreement to be open for signature at United Nations Headquarters. The Conference drew the attention of Governments to the procedures laid down in the Agreement and invited them to deposit instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval before 23 October 1987, or to notify that they would apply the Agreement provisionally.

The objectives of the Agreement were: to achieve balanced growth between the supply of and demand for natural rubber; to achieve stable conditions in natural rubber trade through avoiding excessive price fluctuations; to help stabilize the export earnings from natural rubber of exporting members; to ensure adequate supplies of natural rubber to meet the requirements of importing members at fair and reasonable prices and to improve the reliability of those supplies; to take steps in the event of a surplus or shortage to mitigate members' economic difficulties; to expand international trade in and improve market access for natural rubber and processed products thereof; to improve the competitiveness of natural rubber by encouraging research and development on its problems; to encourage the efficient development of the natural rubber economy by facilitating and promoting improvements in processing, marketing and distribution of raw natural rubber; and to further international co-operation in and consultations on natural rubber matters affecting supply and demand, and to facilitate promotion and co-ordination of natural rubber research, assistance and other programmes.

Opened for signature from 1 May to 31 December 1987, the Agreement was to enter into force definitively on 23 October 1987 or on any date thereafter, if Governments accounting for at least 80 per cent of net exports and Governments accounting for at least 80 per cent of net imports had deposited their instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, or had assumed full financial commitment to the Agreement. It was to enter into force provisionally on 23 October 1987, or on any date before 1 January 1989, if Governments accounting for at least 75 per cent of net exports and Governments accounting for at least 75 per cent of net imports had deposited their instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval, or had notified the depositary that they would apply the Agreement provisionally and assume full financial commitment to it. The Agreement was to remain in force provisionally up to 12 months unless it entered into force definitively. If it did not come into force provisionally by 1 January 1989, the United Nations Secretary-General was to invite Governments which had deposited instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval, or had notified him that they would apply the Agreement provisionally, to meet to recommend whether or not they should take steps to put it into force among themselves in whole or in part.

As at 31 December,(54) 22 countries and EEC had signed the Agreement and two countries (Indonesia, Malaysia) had become party to it.

Sugar. On 11 September 1987, the International Sugar Conference, 1987, having met in London on 10 and 11 September, established the International Sugar Agreement, 1987,(61) in English, French, Russian and Spanish. By its final resolution, the Conference asked the United Nations Secretary-General to forward copies of the Agreement to all Governments and intergovernmental organizations invited to the Conference for their consideration. He was also asked to arrange for the Agreement to be open for signature at United Nations Headquarters from 1 November until 31 December 1987. The Conference drew attention to procedures available to States and intergovernmental organizations to become Parties to the Agreement and invited them to deposit the appropriate instruments. It asked the Executive Director of the International Sugar Organization to secure the widest participation and to carry out the necessary consultations as a matter of priority.

The Agreement, like the International Sugar Agreement, 1984,(62) contained no economic provisions in relation to international trade in sugar. Its objectives were: to further international co-operation in connection with world sugar matters and related issues; to provide a framework for the preparation of a possible new international sugar agreement with economic provisions; to encourage the consumption of sugar; and to facilitate trade by collecting and providing information on the world sugar market and other sweeteners.

As at 31 December,(54) 27 countries and EEC had signed the Agreement, nine countries had agreed to apply it provisionally, and six countries (Fiji, Guyana, Japan, Norway, South Africa, Sweden) and EEC had ratified, accepted or approved it.

Minerals and metals

Copper. In accordance with a 1986 recommendation of the first meeting,(47) the Second Ad Hoc Review Meeting on Copper was held at Geneva from 2 to 6 March 1987.(63) The Meeting had before it two notes by the UNCTAD secretariat, containing further views of the United States on issues discussed at the first meeting,(64) and containing information received from the International Wrought Copper Council and the Intergovernmental Council of Copper-Exporting Countries relating to the activities of those bodies, particularly as regards statistics.(65)

A degree of consensus emerged at the Meeting on general objectives and possible functions of an intergovernmental producer-consumer forum for copper. Its basic functions could include: increasing market transparency through improved statistics; undertaking studies on issues of interest to producers and consumers; undertaking regular assessments of the market situation and outlook of the world copper industry; and undertaking activities to develop the market for copper and contribute to improving demand for copper.

The Meeting recommended that a preparatory meeting be convened in September 1987 to elaborate further the objectives, functions, nature, terms of reference and rules of procedure for a future intergovernmental producer-consumer forum. It asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare draft terms of reference and rules of procedure, taking into account the views expressed at both ad hoc review meetings. The Meeting also agreed that provision should be made at the preparatory meeting for a group of experts to advise it on questions of avoiding duplication and on possible areas of activity of a producer-consumer forum.

The Preparatory Meeting on Copper, which was held at Geneva from 16 to 20 November,(66) had before it provisional draft terms of reference for an intergovernmental forum for copper,(67) provisional draft rules of procedure,(68) and a paper by the United States on the initial programme of work for a proposed copper producer-consumer forum and suggested statistical work programme for a copper study group.(69) Also before the Meeting for its consideration of institutional issues relating to the establishment of an intergovernmental forum for copper was an UNCTAD secretariat report on alternative forms of co-operation and dialogue between exporting and importing countries.(70)

The Meeting recommended that a two-week negotiating conference be convened in 1988 on establishing an intergovernmental producer-consumer forum or group for copper. It also agreed that a meeting of experts on market development be convened during the conference's first two days to review activities being undertaken in that area.

Tungsten. At its nineteenth session (Geneva, 9-19 November 1987),(71) the Committee on Tungsten reviewed discussions, proposals and work on stabilizing the tungsten market to enable producing and consuming countries to agree on market stabilization measures and the convening of a negotiating conference.

In accordance with its 1986 request,(48) the Committee had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on: characterization and in-depth analysis of the origins of the current crisis of the market and of the primary tungsten and intermediate products industry;(72) changing patterns of production, trade and marketing of intermediate products;(73) the relationship of exchange-rate variations and local currency prices to supply and demand trends;(74) structural and technological change, particularly in the area of substitution and reduced usage of tungsten, including related research and development and market promotion;(75) and recent developments and short-term outlook in the tungsten market.(76) The Committee also had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note(77) transmitting a United Kingdom proposal for a new format for the presentation of statistics provided by the secretariat.

At its closing meeting, the Committee decided to retain the same agenda for its 1988 session.

REFERENCES

- (1) World Economic Survey 1987: Current Trends and Policies in the World Economy (E/1987/62 & Corr.1), Sales No. E.87.II.C.1 & corrigendum.
- (2) Revitalizing Development, Growth and International Trade: Assessment and Policy Options (TD/328/Rev.1), Sales No. E.87.II.D.9.
- (3) Proceedings of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Seventh Session, Geneva, 9 July-3 August 1987, vol. I, Report and Annexes (TD/352, vol. I), Sales No. E.88.II.D.1.
- (4) YUN 1986, p. 1210.
- (5) YUN 1983, p. 544.
- (6) YUN 1985, p. 557.
- (7) YUN 1984, p. 530.
- (8) TD/B/1127 & Add.1.2.
- (9) TD/B/1126/Add.1.
- (10) TD/B/1126 (Part I).
- (11) Ibid. (Part II).
- (12) YUN 1976, p. 395.
- (13) YUN 1979, p. 560.
- (14) A/C.2/42/L.6.
- (15) YUN 1980, p. 627.
- (16) YUN 1981, p. 542.
- (17) YUN 1982, p. 727.
- (18) YUN 1983, p. 546.
- (19) YUN 1986, p. 495.
- (20) GA dec. 41/437, 5 Dec. 1986.
- (21) TD/B/C.5/112/Add.1.
- (22) YUN 1986, p. 496.
- (23) TD/B/C.5/113.
- (24) YUN 1985,

559. (24)TD/B/C.5/WG(XI)/2. (25)YUN 1983, p. 547. (26)Handbook of Trade Control Measures of Developing Countries, 1987 (UNCTAD/ST/ECDC/33), Sales No. E.87.II.D.5. (27)YUN 1985, p. 560. (28)TD/B/1129. (29)YUN 1983, p. 548. (30)YUN 1980, p. 630, GA res. 35/63, 5 Dec. 1980. (31)ITC/AG (XXI)/110 & Add.1. (32)ITC/AG(XX)/108. (33)YUN 1986, p. 497. (34)ITC/AG(XX)/105 & Add.1. (35)TD/B/1156. (36)TD/B/RBP/39 & Add.1. (37)TD/B/RBP/18/Rev.1. (38)YUN 1984, p. 535. (39)TD/B/RBP/40. (40)TD/B/RBP/41. (41)TD/B/RBP/42. (42)YUN 1986, p. 500, GA res. 41/167, 5 Dec. 1986. (43)TD/B/1132. (44)TD/B/C.1/287. (45)TDIB/C.1/284 & Corr.1. (46)YUN 1986, p. 501. (47)Ibid., p. 504. (48)Ibid., p. 505. (49)YUN 1976, p. 394. (50)YUN 1986, p. 502, GA dec. 41/436, 5 Dec. 1986. (51)A/C.2/42/L.5. (52)YUN 1985, p. 567. (53)YUN 1980, p. 621. (54)Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 31 December 1987 (ST/LEG/SER.E/6), Sales No. E.88.V.3. (55)YUN 1986, p. 502. (56)TD/COCOA.7/23. (57)YUN 1986, p. 503. (58)International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1987 (TD/RUBBER.2/16/Rev.1), Sales No. E.87.II.D.8. (59)TD/RUBBER.2/15. (60)YUN 1985, p. 569. (61)TD/SUGAR/11/5/Rev.1. (62)YUN 1984, p. 539. (63)TD/B/C.1/293. (64)TD/B/C.1/RM/COPPER/6. (65)TD/B/C.1/RM/COPPER/7. (66)TD/B/1165. (67)TD/B/C.1/PM/COPPER/2. (68)TD/B/C.1/PM/COPPER/3. (69)TD/B/C.1/PM/COPPER/4. (70)TD/B/IPC/IRON ORE/19. (71)TD/B/C.1/295. (72)TD/B/C.1/TUNGSTEN/68. (73)TD/B/C.1/TUNGSTEN/69 & Corr.1. (74)TD/B/C.1/TUNGSTEN/70. (75)TD/B/C.1/TUNGSTEN/71. (76)TD/B/C.1/TUNGSTEN/73. (77)TD/B/C.1/TUNGSTEN/72.

OTHER PUBLICATIONS

Operation and Effects of the Generalized System of Preference—Ninth and Tenth Reviews (TD/B/C.5/109), Sales No. E.87.II.D.1. Trade and Development Report, 1987 (UNCTAD/TDR/7), Sales No. E.87.II.D.7. Handbook of International Trade and Development Statistics, 1987 (TD/STAT.15), Sales No. E/F.87.II.D.10. Manual on Trading with the Socialist Countries of Eastern Europe (UNCTAD/ST/TSC/1/Rev.1), Sales No. E.87.II.D.11. UNCTAD Commodity Yearbook, 1987 (TD/B/C.1/STAT.4), Sales No. E.87.II.D.13.

Finance

International financial and monetary issues were discussed in several United Nations bodies during 1987, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and UNCTAD VII. UNCTAD VII identified debt problems, adequacy of external financial resources, mobilization of domestic savings and human resources, and related monetary questions as the main challenges for multilateral co-operation.

The March meeting of the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade was devoted to insurance questions, including insurance and reinsurance statistics and risk management in developing countries. Tax matters, such as preventing abuse of tax treaties, thin (hidden) capitalization, co-operation between tax authorities and international tax arbitration arrangements, were discussed by the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters (November/December). The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Compensatory Financing of Export Earnings Shortfalls met in September.

Financial policy

In the report on its April 1987 session, (1) the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) stated that remedying the disarray in the global economy was the responsibility of those countries having the greatest influence on world markets of trade and finance. As the United States tackled its staggering budget and current account deficits, Japan and other main surplus countries could take initiatives to restore order. Channelling greater global savings into financing productive capital formation in developing countries would relax their severe import constraint and boost the stagnant export growth of industrial countries. It would, said CDP, contribute to greater stability in world trade and capital flows, while permitting surplus countries to maintain growth.

CDP noted that there was a pressing need to augment the financial resources available to developing countries and outlined three dimensions deserving special attention: a workable global strategy for a growth-oriented solution to the debt problem had to be found, one taking account of the ability to pay, the need for growth and the mutual interests of expanding trade and employment; flexible measures for immediate liquidity needed to be devised for hard-pressed low-income countries whose debt-service arrears were assuming alarming proportions; and multilateral financial institutions had to be provided with resources to enable them to play an expanded role in international adjustment.

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Report, 1987,(2) stated that after half a decade of coping with acute debt and payments problems, most developing countries remained unable to achieve vigorous growth and a viable external financial position. For most, the current-account balance continued to be the major obstacle to accelerated growth and the revival of development. Immediate improvement rested on raising primary commodity prices in relation to manufactures and on increasing the net flow of finance.

The net flow of medium- and long-term private capital to developing countries had declined further in 1986 in real terms. Bilateral ODA stagnated, as did foreign direct investment. Multilateral flows rose, but provided only modest relief. The net flow from IMF to the non-oil-exporting developing countries turned into a reverse flow of some 2.5 billion special drawing rights (SDR). Although some developing countries had chosen to cut their net borrowing, for most the contraction of borrowing was involuntary. Many of those countries continued to face a huge negative net transfer of financial resources: for Latin America, the net outflow amounted to around $22 billion in 1986—nearly a quarter of export earnings.

For the majority of developing countries, the continued low level of bank lending was a reflection less of inadequate policy efforts on their part than of the interaction between the large overhang of debt and the persistent worsening of the terms of trade. The fall in export prices had been so sharp that ratios of total outstanding debt to exports—the most widely used measure of the degree of indebtedness—had risen despite sizeable increases in export volumes; the average level in 1986 was more than 70 per cent higher than in 1981 for a group of highly indebted countries, and more than 90 per cent higher for low-income countries.

The debt strategy pursued since 1982 had failed to revive lending from the capital markets and to correct the problem of over-indebtedness. The hope that countries heavily indebted to private capital markets could be restored to creditworthiness in the foreseeable future seemed further than ever from being fulfilled.

For most developing countries, the multilateral agencies had become the one significant source of new external funds. The World Bank had been accorded a central role in lending to help countries meet the two objectives of structural adjustment and growth. If new disbursements from IMF and the World Bank were to rise, they had to ensure that their conditionality was sufficiently flexible and it would be necessary to put larger resources at their disposal.

Most developing countries, said the Report, were caught in a vicious circle, with the very factors that had pushed down investment making it hard for them to raise savings. The needed recovery of savings and investment was dependent both on an improved external environment and on pursuing appropriate domestic policies.

With regard to the developed market-economy countries, it was noted that the United States dollar had again fallen steeply against other major currencies and was being supported by massive dollar purchases by the central banks of surplus countries. However, neither that kind of artificial financing nor deflationary adjustment by the United States could provide a viable solution. Vigorous expansion in the rest of the world was required, together with increased financing for the developing countries. With the United States no longer willing to incur massive trade deficits, Japan needed alternative markets. Although a programme combining a vigorous stimulus to domestic demand with finance for developing countries had been announced, the less the recycling of untied public and private funds and the slower its implementation, the greater would be trade conflicts and the risk of recession. In Western Europe, falling raw material and labour costs had increased business profitability but without triggering the rise in investment that policy-makers were counting on. Adequate growth in output and employment would continue to be absent as long as the more favourable supply-side situation that had been created was not matched by more vigorous growth in demand, at home and from developing countries.

The UNCTAD secretariat report to UNCTAD VII on revitalizing development, growth and international trade⁽³⁾ contained a chapter on resources for development, including financial, and related monetary questions, which stated that during the 1980s reductions in capital flows and in export earnings had combined with rising interest payments on foreign debt to produce a contraction in external purchasing power for most non-oil dominant developing countries. A striking consequence of financial trends was the emergence of negative net transfers in many developing countries, while in most other countries (including LDCs) positive net transfers fell. Financing those negative net transfers entailed reductions in imports and investment, thus reversing the past relationship between external finance and growth in which positive net transfers allowed investment to exceed levels which could be financed by domestic savings alone. The chapter also contained sections on the question of debt (see p. 487) and development resources in the 1980s (see p. 491).

UNCTAD VII action. In the related section of its Final Act,⁽⁴⁾ UNCTAD VII stated that the stringency of external resources for many developing countries had posed difficult challenges for both multilateral co-operation and domestic economic management. The main challenges were the debt problem, the adequacy of external financial resources, mobilization of domestic savings and human resources, and related monetary questions (see below).

International monetary situation

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly decision,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1987 a report on the current international monetary situation.⁽⁶⁾ The report identified some functions and characteristics of the international monetary system and described some key problems in the international economy. It noted that, in the latter half of the 1980s, economic adjustment stood out as the dominant policy priority: adjustment was needed to remove the imbalances between the major economic Powers and to restore economic growth in the developing countries. The two main sections of the report examined the role of the international monetary system in facilitating those adjustments.

In its policy conclusions, the report stated that two issues stood out as critical in mid-1987: the need for a smooth unwinding of the large imbalances among the major industrial countries; and the need to establish a framework in which developing countries with unsustainable balance-of-payments disequilibria and large debts could adjust the structure of their economies and still increase gross domestic product (GDP) at a rate above their population growth rate. There were strong justifications for more emphasis on growth-oriented adjustment. Structural adjustment had to take the form of diversification, which required time, investment and additional financial resources. One cause of concern was that negotiations on trade took place in a separate forum from those on money and finance and that the close interrelations between those fields did not find political or institutional expression. Growth-oriented adjustment had three main requirements: an international environment conducive to growth; improved domestic policies in countries with balance-of-payments difficulties; and a supportive international financial framework. Existing institutional arrangements gave IMF a key role in assisting countries to formulate adjustment programmes requiring international financial support. That arrangement should be supportive of growth-oriented adjustment. Adjustment programmes prepared in consultation with IMF should emphasize the medium-term framework for growth and adequate levels of external finance should be provided so that balance-of-payments adjustments did not thwart growth.

Although there had been intensified consultations and co-operation among the key currency countries to enhance stability in exchange rates, and considerable progress had taken place in the acceptance of common views on issues such as growth-oriented adjustment, improved macro-economic co-ordination among major developed countries and co-operative solutions to debt problems, many major issues remained controversial. The distinction between monetary and financial issues was delicate and to some extent arbitrary and proposals for improving the monetary situation generally involved greater financial commitments. Notwithstanding compelling evidence of need, the reluctance to extend more official financial resources in support of developing countries, whether through bilateral or multilateral channels, was very strong in the majority of developed countries, most of which had suffered sharp budgetary crises in the wake of the 1980s slow-down.

An annex to the report summarized proposals for the convening of an international conference on monetary and financial issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 42/440 by recorded vote.

International conference on money and finance

At its 96th plenary meeting, on 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, having taken note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the current international monetary situation, requested him to continue to monitor the international monetary situation and prepare an updated version of his report thereon for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly decision 42/440

132-18-5 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.1) by recorded vote (113-18-5), 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Guatemala, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.69); agenda item 82(a).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 42, 43; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Finland, Lebanon,^a Norway, Sweden, Turkey.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Speaking on behalf of the States members of EEC, Denmark said that, since various groups and organizations had already stated their position on holding an international conference on money and finance, it was unnecessary for the Secretariat to devote time to the question. Also, it was clear that the matter fell within the purview of international financial institutions.

External debt problems

The debt crisis of developing countries was not being resolved, as the unilateral suspension of interest payments by Brazil and Ecuador in early 1987 had shown, said the World Economic Survey 1987.(7) There was a need for new approaches to solve the debt crisis of the majority of developing countries. In 1986,(8) the General Assembly had recognized the wide dimensions of the problem, the need for common commitment and mutual co-operation and the importance of action in a number of areas. The recognition that growth-oriented adjustment was part of the solution implied that sustained efforts by developing countries to restructure their economies should be supported by net transfers at a level that would allow them to increase their domestic capital investment.

Three lines of action appeared important: more comprehensive relief of the official debt of low-income countries, particularly those in sub-Saharan Africa; contemplation by official and non-official creditors of ways to reduce interest costs in the context of debt-restructuring exercises; and, given the increasing recognition that current levels of external liabilities were unsustainable for debtors and that the market had discounted the value of their commercial debt, there was a case for additional forms of debt relief for non-concessional loans.

A more comprehensive approach would be to establish a multilateral agency—preferably as part of an existing institution—to purchase the debt of developing countries from commercial banks at current market value and to convert it into new forms of liability to allow debtor countries some relief and a different maturity structure. A proposed debt-reconstruction facility containing those elements was being considered by the World Institute for Development Economics Research.

UNCTAD VII action. The UNCTAD secretariat report on revitalizing development, growth and international trade⁽³⁾ stated that the main debt indicators remained at historically high levels. The external debt of all net debtor developing countries amounted to some $835 billion in 1985, or about 203 per cent of their total exports of goods and services, compared with 153 per cent in 1982. While the stock of debt continued to increase in 1985, export earnings declined to such an extent that both debt and debt service to exports ratios rose to peak levels, and indications for 1986 pointed to a continuation of those trends.

The report stated that the debt strategy was in need of major revision. It needed to be conceived as part of broader efforts to accelerate growth in the world economy. Consideration should be given to establishing internationally agreed guidelines on debt which would provide operational guidelines on: the respective roles of creditors and debtors; the achievement of adequate rates of growth by the latter; and procedures for bringing financial policies and practices into line with the external earnings of debtor countries.

In its Final Act,⁽⁴⁾ UNCTAD VII said that the response to the debt crisis should continue to evolve through continuous dialogue and shared responsibility and the strategy should be implemented with flexibility in an environment of strengthened international co-operation, bearing in mind the 1986 Assembly resolution on the subject⁽⁸⁾ To that end, the Conference agreed that: the various parties should co-ordinate their contributions in the context of medium-term development policies and programmes oriented towards adjustment and growth formulated by the country; policy advice should take into account the country's economic, political and social characteristics and needs; maturity, grace and consolidation periods in official debt-restructuring arrangements should be tailored to a country's individual circumstances, with consideration being given to unforeseen changes in its external payments due to factors beyond its control; debtor developing countries had to pursue and intensify efforts to raise savings and investment, reduce inflation and improve efficiency; external financing from official and private sources should be increased in support of those efforts; the international economic environment had to be made more stable and predictable in support of growth through efforts by major market-economy countries, including strengthened multilateral surveillance to correct external and fiscal imbalances, promote non-inflationary sustainable growth, lower real rates of interest, and make exchange rates more stable and markets more accessible; judicious combinations of measures should be worked out to reduce the debt burden; commercial banks of developed countries should be encouraged to apply flexibility in debt-restructuring operations; export credit agencies should be flexible regarding early resumption or increases in cover for developing countries in support of adjustment programmes; terms and conditions of rescheduling operations should be based on the realistic assessment of individual countries' financial situations; the debt-service burden of the poorest countries, primarily in sub-Saharan Africa, should be eased by longer repayments and grace periods; developed donor countries should implement the 1978 TDB resolution⁽⁹⁾ in respect of the ODA debt of poorer developing countries; and, recognizing that the problems of the poorer countries in sub-Saharan Africa were uniquely difficult and needed special treatment, it reaffirmed its agreement to adopt concrete measures, and the importance of increasing ODA to Africa in accordance with the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990.⁽¹⁰⁾

The Conference noted the proposal of the developing countries to establish, within the IMF Interim Committee and the World Bank/IMF Development Committee, a Committee of Ministers from developing and developed countries to examine the debt problem, including solutions for low-income countries, particularly those in sub-Saharan Africa, and recommend appropriate measures. It noted the view of some participants that those issues were being discussed at the ministerial level in those Committees and that they strongly encouraged those efforts on the existing basis. The Conference also noted the view of other participants that an effective solution of the debt problem could be found only within a universal forum.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1987/187 of 9 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to include in the World Economic Survey 1988 a comprehensive analysis of the global effects of the indebtedness and persistent fiscal and external imbalances of developed countries on the international economic environment, particularly on the development process in developing countries.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1987 a report on the international debt situation in mid-1987.⁽¹¹⁾ The report stated that the size of the external debt of the developing countries was estimated at around $1,020 billion for 1987, some $700 billion of which was owed to private creditors, mostly banks, and somewhat over $300 billion to official creditors, including international financial institutions. Total debt amounted to twice the export earnings of the capital-importing developing countries at the end of 1986. Despite debt rescheduling already undertaken, those countries were, at the beginning of 1987, scheduled to repay close to $150 billion of their outstanding debt during 1987-1988. Total debt-service payments on the long-term debt of countries covered by the World Bank's Debtor Reporting System amounted to just over $100 billion in 1986—the equivalent of 24 per cent of the exports of the capital-importing developing countries. Interest payments alone amounted to 12 per cent of export earnings of those countries in 1986 and estimates indicated only a slightly lower figure for 1987.

The growing burden of external debt of a large number of developing countries pointed to the inadequacy of the current international strategy to resolve the problem. That strategy was based on a number of elements: growth in world output and trade would enable developing countries to grow out of their debts by increasing exports; debtors would continue to honour their debt-servicing obligations, debt relief would be applied selectively and debt rescheduling would be undertaken on a case-by-case basis, as debtor countries undertook necessary adjustments; and additional finance would be forthcoming to support the necessary adjustment efforts. Some of those basic premises had not been realized—growth of world output and trade had not picked up, the need for adequate new finance had not been met and there had been a large net outflow of financial resources from the developing countries. The premise that debts should be honoured in full had been questioned both in the market-place and in unilateral action by some debtors.

The report described the critical parameters of the debt situation—growth of world output and trade, commodity prices, interest rates, adjustment in developing countries and flow of external finance—and debt profiles and the debt-service burden in the second half of the 1980s, and gave an overview of recent debt renegotiations.

The report concluded that three key elements of the current international strategy to solve the debt problem remained valid: improved domestic policies; an international environment conducive to smooth debt servicing; and increased net financial flows on concessional and non-concessional terms to debtor countries. A fourth element needed to be added—recognition that the debt-servicing burden of some countries was unsustainable.

While situations differed among countries, the policy orientation gaining ground was that the debt-service burden had to be reduced either by lowering interest payments and related costs or by reducing actual debt levels, or both.

During the preceding year, said the report, the spectrum of options and proposals for dealing with the debt problems of developing countries had widened, as reflected in the emerging consensus in major international forums, the latest of which was UNCTAD VII. Both private and official creditors were ready to discuss with debtors approaches to debt decompression that were not even on the table a year before. There was new recognition that if world economic growth could not be counted on to solve the problem, some degree of debt relief might be necessary.

Communications. During 1987, communications dealing with the external debt crisis were received by the Secretary-General. Among these were: a 24 February⁽¹²⁾ letter from Venezuela transmitting a document on an ethical approach to the international debt question, issued on 27 December 1986 by the Pontifical Commission "Iustitia et Pax" of the Holy See; an 18 June⁽¹³⁾ letter from Guyana transmitting the final communiqué of the Special Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, 9-12 March); a 6 July⁽¹⁴⁾ letter from Zimbabwe transmitting the Pyongyang Declaration and Plan of Action on South-South Co-operation, adopted by the Extraordinary Conference of Non-Aligned Countries on South-South Co-operation (Pyongyang, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, 9-13 June); a 15 July⁽¹⁵⁾ letter from Malaysia transmitting the final statement of the InterAction Council (Kuala Lumpur, 19-21 April); a 16 July⁽¹⁶⁾ letter from Nigeria transmitting the Abuja Statement on Economic Recovery and Long-term Development in Africa, issued by an International Conference on Africa (Abuja, 15-19 June); a 13 August⁽¹⁷⁾ letter from Thailand transmitting documents issued at the Twentieth Ministerial Meeting of ASEAN (Singapore, 15 and 16 June); a 14 September(18) letter from Romania transmitting its President's considerations and proposals regarding the major issues of international life on the Assembly's agenda; a 2 October(19) letter from Guatemala transmitting the Declaration of the eleventh Annual Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 (New York, 28 September-1 October); a 9 October(20) letter from Canada transmitting the statement issued at the Second Ministerial Meeting of the Cairns Group (Ottawa, 21-23 May); a 19 October(21) letter from Canada transmitting the communiqué of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Vancouver, 13-17 October); a 23 October(22) letter from Zimbabwe transmitting the final communiqué of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the forty-second session of the Assembly (New York, 5-7 October); a 30 November(23) letter from Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela transmitting the text of the Acapulco Commitment to Peace, Development and Democracy, signed at the first meeting of the Permanent Mechanism for Consultation and Concerted Political Action (Acapulco, Mexico, 29 November); and a 9 December(24) letter from Mozambique transmitting the Declaration and African Common Position on Africa's External Debt Crisis, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its third extraordinary session (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 30 November and 1 December).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/198 by recorded vote.

Furthering international co-operation regarding the external debt problems

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/202 of 8 December 1986 on strengthened international economic co-operation aimed at resolving external debt problems of developing countries,

Recalling the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987,

Recalling Trade and Development Board resolutions 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978 and 222(XXI) of 27 September 1980 and the relevant recommendations of the mid-term global review of progress towards the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Concerned about the slowing down of the world economy in the 1980s and the persistence of large imbalances, which was noted at the meetings of the Interim Committee of the Board of Governors on the International Monetary System and the Joint Ministerial Committee of the Boards of Governors of the Bank and the Fund on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries in September 1987,

Recognizing that the continuing debt problems of developing countries have become a major obstacle that restricts their economic recovery and long-term development, thereby increasing the vulnerability of the international financial system and adversely affecting the ability of debtor countries to import and creditor countries to export and thereby their growth and employment performance,

Deeply concerned at the increasing debt burden and the deteriorating debt situation of African countries, which impede the recovery and development of the continent and the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Noting that there has been an evolving response from the international community to the debt problem, which recognizes the shared responsibility of the main parties concerned, namely developing debtor countries, developed creditor countries, private and multilateral financial institutions,

Profoundly concerned that, despite significant efforts by developing countries to deal with the debt crisis, the desired results have not yet been achieved and therefore acknowledging the need for continued and evolving international co-operation, particularly to improve the international economic environment, in order to attain a lasting solution to the problems of indebtedness of developing countries,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the international debt situation in mid-1987,

1. Endorses the policies and measures agreed upon and spelt out in section II.A of the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session, entitled "Resources for development, including financial, and related monetary questions";

2. Expresses concern that external debt problems can pose a threat to economic, social and political stability in indebted countries;

3. Stresses that debtor developing countries, creditor developed countries and international private and multilateral financial institutions should strengthen work on an evolving and growth- and development-oriented strategy, through continuous dialogue and shared responsibility, in order to attain a durable, equitable and mutually agreed solution to debt, problems;

4. Reiterates that specific measures to deal with the indebtedness of developing countries should pay particular regard to the relevant factors of the debt-servicing capacity of each individual country;

5. Also reiterates that, in the present circumstances, adjustment efforts are needed on the part of all countries, collectively and individually, each country contributing to the common objective in accordance with its capacities and weight in the world economy;

6. Reiterates that it is essential for the international economic environment to be made more stable and predictable in support of growth through efforts by the major market economy countries, including strengthened multilateral surveillance, aimed at correcting existing external and fiscal imbalances, promoting non-inflationary sustainable growth, lowering real rates of interest and making exchange rates more stable and markets more accessible;

7. Further reiterates that it is essential for debtor developing countries to pursue and intensify their efforts to increase savings and investment, reduce inflation and improve efficiency, taking into account their own individual characteristics and the vulnerability of the poorer strata;

8. Reiterates that it is essential that external financing from official and private sources be increased on appropriate terms and conditions in support of these efforts;

9. Recognizes the competence of multilateral financial institutions and the need for providing them with the adequate resources and instruments necessary, inter alia, to strengthen their contribution to attaining a durable, equitable and mutually agreed solution to the debt problems and, in this context, takes note with interest of:

(a) The agreement on a substantial general capital increase for the World Bank;

(b) The initiative by the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund to increase substantially the resources of the Structural Adjustment Facility;

(c) The work towards an increase of quotas in the context of the Ninth General Review of Quotas in the International Monetary Fund;

(d) The proposal to enlarge the scope of the Compensatory Financing Facility by the creation of a new external contingency facility;

(e) The ongoing examination of adjustment programmes and their supportive arrangements, including a comprehensive review of conditionality in the International Monetary Fund;

10. Stresses that increased flexibility should be applied by the parties concerned in the development of innovative approaches to reduce the debt burden of developing countries, including, as appropriate, the identification of possible regulatory impediments, and that measures such as the introduction of various forms of new financial instruments and of formulas that do not add to the stock of debt, including those devised by banks and debtors to take advantage of discounts prevailing in the secondary market, should be further pursued, and emphasizes that banks should be encouraged to co-operate flexibly with debtor countries according to individual circumstances to achieve this end;

11. Calls upon the international community to continue its efforts, in the context of official debt restructuring exercises, to take appropriate and realistic measures to reduce the burden of official debt, adapted to the specific needs and circumstances of individual countries, inter alia, so as to allow an adequate planning horizon and long-term adjustment; consideration should be given to unforeseen changes in a country's external payments;

12. Urges the international community to give serious consideration to mutually agreed ways and means of assisting debtor developing countries faced with large and bunched debts to the multilateral financial institutions, taking into account the need for increased capital flows on terms adapted to their payment situation and the specific economic circumstances of individual countries;

13. Calls upon the international community to intensify its efforts to provide the necessary resource flows to African countries, including increasing official development assistance in support of their reform efforts, and to continue its efforts to grant adequate terms of rescheduling and other effective debt relief measures, as appropriate, to alleviate the debt burden;

14. Stresses that urgent specific actions in respect of the indebtedness of the least developed and poorest developing countries are required, as contained in the relevant provisions of the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session, including substantial increases of concessional finance, essentially in grant form;

15. Recognizes that the problems of external indebtedness of some other countries with serious debt-servicing problems also give rise to concern, and invites all those involved to take into account, as appropriate, the above in addressing these problems;

16. Stresses the importance of the expansion of world trade and the promotion of a climate conducive to the strengthening of an open and liberalized trading system, including, in particular, the improvement of market access for developing countries' exports, and, in this context, stresses the importance of ensuring effective observance of standstill and rollback commitments and the importance of promoting improved commodity markets;

17. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the agenda for the next session of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to propose that due priority be given to the consideration of the issue of the external debt crisis and development in the Committee's discussions of the international economic situation;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with the relevant bodies and eminent personalities to prepare a comprehensive report on the international debt situation, reviewing also ways and means of advancing the efforts towards finding a durable, equitable and mutually agreed solution to the debt problems of developing countries in the light of the relevant provisions of the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session and of the present resolution, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/198

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 154-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/824) by recorded vote (129-1), 7 December (meeting 46); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.94), based on informal consultations on draft by Guatemala, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.20); agenda item 85.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 10-15, 25, 43, 44, 46; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Explaining its vote in the Second Committee, the United States said that the text failed to recognize the primary role of debtor countries in addressing their economic problems and requested the Secretary-General and the United Nations to undertake activities within the competence of international financial institutions.

Although not completely satisfied, Japan believed the text contained positive elements in line with the Final Act of UNCTAD VII, IMF discussions and other forums. Canada believed that the text would serve as a basis for further constructive action but said that the penultimate preambular paragraph should have referred to the responsibility of both indebted developing countries and the international community to find lasting solutions, while paragraph 3 should have acknowledged more directly the existence of a growth- and development-oriented strategy which was moving towards an agreed solution. On behalf of EEC, Denmark said the text represented a reasonable compromise in a difficult but important area; it should have recognized more explicitly the crucial role of the international financial institutions in promoting growth and development. Australia said the text was not as well balanced as it would have hoped but was a pragmatic effort to come to grips with the debt problem.

Guatemala, on behalf of the Group of 77, regretted that the item on external debt, which required the highest priority for its solution, could not obtain a consensus. It also noted that the Group's original draft on furthering international co-operation regarding the external debt problem between developing and developed countries, multilateral financial institutions and commercial banks, which was the basis for the consultations on the adopted resolution, had not been withdrawn. That document and the draft text on the external debt crisis and development (see below) were still valid and in full force. The Group of 77 wished to keep them under discussion.

The Assembly also had before it two draft resolutions,(25) on the external debt crisis and development and on debt and related issues, consideration of which had been twice deferred in 1986, at the Assembly's reconvened(26) and regular(27) sessions. The drafts were originally submitted in 1985.(28)

By decision 42/447 of 11 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided that the draft resolution on the external debt crisis and development should be made available to the Assembly in 1988.

Financial and stock market fluctuations

In November 1987, Guatemala, on behalf of the Group of 77, submitted to the General Assembly's Second Committee a draft resolution on the consequences of the recent turmoil in the international financial and stock markets and its implications for the development of the developing countries. Recent events on the financial markets, said Guatemala, had caused concern in the developing countries. The United Nations should take a position on the question, particularly in the light of the consequences those events might have for the developing countries.

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/195 without vote.

Consequences of the recent sharp fluctuations in the international financial and stock markets and the implications of those fluctuations for the development of the developing countries
The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the recent sharp fluctuations in the international financial and stock markets and the possible negative impact of those fluctuations on world economic stability, growth and trade and on the development process of the developing countries,

Convinced that strengthened multilateral co-operation has a central role to play in preventing such a possible negative impact and in promoting growth and development,

1. Decides to consider this question further in the light of the relevant discussions of the Trade and Development Board and other appropriate international organs and organizations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the appropriate bodies, to analyse in the World Economic Survey 1988 the effects of these sharp fluctuations on growth and development, in particular in developing countries, and to draw this issue to the attention of the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/195

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.10) without vote, 2 December (meeting 44); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.91), based on informal consultations on draft by Guatemala, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.61); agenda item 82.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 38, 42-44; plenary 96.

Development finance

The UNCTAD secretariat's report to UNCTAD VII on revitalizing development, growth and trade(3) stated that after 1981 net medium- and long-term financial flows to developing countries had contracted sharply, particularly flows of private bank lending, foreign direct investment and official and officially supported export credits. Only a few Asian countries avoided loss of access to capital markets. With regard to non-concessional finance, the only sources to follow an upward trend since 1981, albeit at a reduced pace, were the World Bank and the regional development banks. Meanwhile, IMF had become a net recipient of funds by 1986.

In 1985, total net flows of concessional finance were no higher than in 1981, but trends in performances of donor countries were mixed. Bilateral net ODA flows from countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) increased, while those from donors of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) contracted. However, the estimated collective OECD Development Assistance Committee ODA/GNP ratio dropped to below half the 0.7 per cent target level, whilst that of OPEC donors remained considerably higher than the target.

The fall in total net capital flows accompanied increased financial weakness in many countries. There was downward pressure on official reserves, a sharp increase in the number of countries incurring external payments arrears and rescheduling debt, a collapse in the value of transactions of regional payments arrangements of developing countries, with a consequent reduction in trade, and growing resort to counter-trade.

Many developing countries had embarked on rigorous programmes to improve domestic resource mobilization and increase the efficiency of investment, but external and domestic factors had depressed the capacity to save of both public and private sectors. A downward trend in gross domestic savings relative to GDP since 1982 had been reinforced by sharp increases in interest payments on foreign debt, which had to be financed from domestic savings. For most developing countries, the resulting drop in savings available to the national economy led to depressed investment ratios.

With regard to possible policy options, the report stated that satisfactory future financing of development required both enhanced domestic resource mobilization by developing countries and higher flows of external finance. Improved domestic policies were required to raise the level of public and private sector savings, redirect savings to finance the foreign trade sector and discourage capital flight. That could be done through reforms designed to secure financial stability and an appropriate return to savers, strengthening the environment for investment finance and reorganizing public sector finances.

A prerequisite for increasing domestic savings was the restoration of growth, which depended on alleviating the balance-of-payments constraint on production and investment. To sustain GDP growth of about 3.5 per cent per annum, annual net capital flows to developing countries would have to increase by about $13 billion up to 1990 and by almost $50 billion between 1990 and 1995. Achieving faster growth—6 per cent per annum—would imply an annual increase of over $100 billion in net capital flows to developing countries between 1990 and 1995.

Since private flows were unlikely to expand vigorously, other financial flows became of the utmost importance. There was a clear need for increased volumes and more efficient use of ODA, and expansion of direct lending by multilateral development banks of both concessional and non-concessional finance, and of their catalytic role, appeared to be urgent. For multilateral development banks to lend more, they would need an increase in their capital base and changes in lending policies to achieve quick increases in net disbursement, including revised policy conditionality. They could also become more active in catalysing financial flows from other, primarily private, sources by providing guarantees, expanding co-financing, increasing use of new financial instruments which would better tailor debt servicing to the capacity of borrowers to pay, and creating mechanisms to recycle the growing current-account surpluses of some OECD countries to developing countries.

Foreign direct investment could play an important though modest role in providing external financing. To fulfil that role, improvements in host-country policies would be necessary in a number of countries and actions were required on the part of home countries and at the international level to ensure a favourable global environment.

The report stated that conditions governing IMF assistance had become so exacting that many developing countries were unable to obtain resources needed for adjustment with growth. Review and reform of Fund conditionality to permit stronger support for that generally accepted objective was therefore required. Consideration also needed to be given to increasing the Fund's financial resources and restoring its reserve-creating functions.

UNCTAD VII action. In its Final Act,(4) UNCTAD VII said that ODA would continue to play an important role for a large number of developing countries, especially for the poorer ones and LDCs. Developed countries should renew and make more effective their efforts to achieve the internationally agreed target of 0.7 per cent of GNP for total ODA and the ODA targets for LDCs adopted in the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs(29) and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s).(30)

Multilateral financial institutions should play a central and growing role in supporting the growth and adjustment process, by providing concessional and non-concessional finance and catalysing additional private capital flows. They should be strengthened by endowing them with adequate resources and instruments to fulfil their tasks. Members of the World Bank should support a general increase of its capital when needed and donors should meet expeditiously their commitments to the eighth replenishment of the International Development Association. Resources of regional development banks and funds should be maintained at adequate levels. In particular, negotiations on a capital increase of the Inter-American Development Bank and a replenishment of the African Development Fund should be concluded as soon as possible. All countries were called on to participate in the negotiations on the third replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development and contributors to the Fund were urged to make additional contributions to ensure the highest possible level of resources.

The conditionality criteria of international financial institutions should take into account adverse changes in the external environment affecting the prospects for achieving adjustment with adequate rates of growth and for protecting the poor segments of the population. Increased co-operation between IMF and the World Bank and other multilateral financial institutions was welcomed but should not lead to cross-conditionality.

Developed countries should mobilize additional resources for Africa, in accordance with commitments undertaken in the context of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990.(10)

The Conference expressed concern about the plight of low-income countries and recognized that implementing major reforms in those countries had to be accompanied by additional financing on concessional terms. The IMF Managing Director had proposed tripling the Structural Adjustment Facility's resources; an increase in such resources over the three years from 1 January 1988 would be welcomed. The Conference urged conclusion of discussion on that proposal by the end of 1987.

Developed and developing countries should explore ways to encourage private capital flows to developing countries, said the Conference. Governments of developed countries should encourage the revival of bank lending, and policies regarding export credits should allow such credits to contribute to the financing of investment programmes under suitable terms and conditions.

Welcoming Japan's initiative to increase the transfer of financial resources to developing countries, the Conference hoped that all developed countries would increase such flows. It noted Japan's proposal to establish an independent high-level group, with the support of interested countries and international organizations, to examine ways to encourage the flow.

Among actions required on the domestic front, the Conference identified mobilization of domestic savings and development of human resources. Domestic financial stability was required for the former but was difficult to attain when the external financial situation was seriously disrupted. Although development of human resources in developing countries was primarily their responsibility, developed countries were ready to support their efforts by providing financial and technical assistance through bilateral and multilateral channels.

The Conference stated that a stable international monetary environment was essential to foster global economic growth. Adequate availability of international liquidity was important for sustainable non-inflationary economic growth of the world economy, including the growth of developing countries. In that context the question of international liquidity should be kept under permanent review under IMF auspices.

Volatile exchange rates in the major market economies had contributed to economic imbalances in those countries and to uncertainty in international trade, investment and economic growth, and to the intensification of protectionism. Co-operation to stabilize exchange rates and promote growth should be worked out in the context of strengthened multilateral surveillance with IMF assistance, taking into account trade and capital flows as well as fiscal balance.

A decline in interest rates, keeping in mind sustainable non-inflationary growth objectives, would help stimulate economic activity further in both developed and developing countries.

Most UNCTAD States members reiterated the view that there was a long-term global need to supplement IMF's existing reserve assets on a continuous basis and that many countries had a need for reserve supplementation. They asked that IMF should agree on a new substantial SDR allocation and stressed the costs and risks to the efficient functioning of the international monetary system of building reserve holdings through borrowing on international credit markets or through current-account surplus. Other States members continued to believe that the conditions for SDR allocation had not been demonstrated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 42/439 of 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, deferred until its 1988 session consideration of a draft resolution on an international conference on money and finance for development.(31) By that draft, the Assembly would have asked the Secretary-General to consult at a high level on the terms of reference, format and time-frame of an international conference on money and finance for development, with a view to convening an intergovernmental committee to start preparations by April 1988, and to report on the preparatory process to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly in 1988.

A similar text had been considered in 1986(32) and was brought to the attention of the Assembly in 1987.(33) An earlier version had also been considered in 1985(34) and at the Assembly's resumed session in June 1986.(32) By decision 42/439 of 11 December 1987, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to take no action on that draft.(33)

Capital formation

At the June/July 1987 session of the Economic and Social Council, the United States sponsored a draft resolution entitled "Creating conditions that encourage capital formation for growth and development".(35) After Guatemala, on behalf of the Group of 77, proposed amendments(36) to that text, the United States put forward a revised draft text,(37) by which the Council would have called on Member States to bear in mind the importance of creating conditions that encouraged capital formation when establishing and implementing national development plans and policies and to work in a spirit of common commitment and mutual co-operation to ensure an international economic environment which supported that goal. The Council would have invited the Secretary-General and the United Nations system to provide technical assistance and advice to interested Member States to create those conditions and overcome the constraints faced by developing countries regarding capital formation. A series of amendments to the revised text were then proposed by Guatemala,(38) and, following informal consultations on the revised draft resolution and the amendments thereto, the United States said it would not press for action on its revised draft.

In November, the United States introduced in the General Assembly's Second Committee a draft resolution entitled "Creating an environment that encourages capital formation for growth and development".(39) By that draft, the Assembly would have called on Member States to bear in mind the importance of creating an environment that encouraged capital formation for growth and development and to work in a spirit of common commitment and mutual co-operation to promote international economic conditions which supported that goal. It would have commended the Secretary-General for the impressive work undertaken to assist Member States to improve the environment for encouraging capital formation, and asked him to study further national and international measures that would promote the creation of such an environment and to continue to support the efforts of Member States in that area.

Following informal consultations, the United States withdrew that draft.

Trade-related finance

Export earnings

In its Final Act,(4) UNCTAD VII recognized that commodity-related shortfalls in export earnings of developing countries were an important obstacle to their development efforts. The need to strengthen and improve the IMF Compensatory Financing Facility was stressed by developing countries, which also stressed the need for an additional facility because of the limited scope of existing facilities. In their view, the UNCTAD programme of work aimed at establishing an additional facility to compensate developing countries for their shortfalls in commodity export earnings should be positively concluded. They recognized the value of the ACP-EEC Stabex arrangement (system of stabilization of export earnings concluded between EEC and the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States) and highlighted the desirability of other industrialized countries introducing such schemes.

Developed countries referred to the ongoing review of the IMF Compensatory Financing Facility and stressed the need to reconcile the short-term impact of compensatory financing with the long-term requirements of commodities in the context of overall development. The view was also expressed that export earnings shortfalls were a short-term balance-of-payments issue, outside UNCTAD'S operational mandate. Where balance-of-payments problems occurred, they should be dealt with in toto through existing competent international organizations, an approach which would minimize distortive effects caused by addressing the symptoms of export earnings instability rather than their causes. Others felt that compensatory financing could be commodity-related and contribute to diversification in the area of commodities. UNCTAD VII asked the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Compensatory Financing of Export Earnings Shortfalls (see below) to take into account the implications of export earnings shortfalls and to consider the various institutional options, bearing in mind the balance-of-payments and/or commodity-related approaches, when making its recommendations.

Group of Experts. The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Compensatory Financing of Export Earnings Shortfalls held its second session at Geneva from 14 to 18 September 1987,(40) the first session having been held in 1986.(41) The Group had before it an analytical study by the UNCTAD secretariat(42) which gave calculations of shortfalls, described existing mechanisms providing compensatory financial assistance and their limitations, and outlined the effects of commodity export earnings shortfalls on economic development.

In its agreed conclusions, the Group noted that almost all developing countries experienced sizeable shortfalls in their commodity export earnings and agreed that there was a significant difference between estimates of total commodity export earnings shortfalls experienced and the finance made available under existing compensatory financing facilities. The Group recalled UNCTAD VII's recognition that commodity-related shortfalls in developing countries' export earnings were an important obstacle to their development efforts (see above) and took account of the implications of those shortfalls. The Group agreed that the shortfalls had a severe negative impact on development, especially on LDCs and on countries heavily dependent on commodities for their export earnings and which were highly indebted, and confirmed its first session conclusion⁽⁴¹⁾ that problems created by shortfalls were a matter of concern to the international community as a whole.

Noting UNCTAD VII's request to bear in mind balance-of-payments and/or commodity-related approaches (see above), the Group observed that IMF was reviewing the operations of its Compensatory Financing Facility. Concerning the commodity-related approach, it noted improvements made in the operation of Stabex and that Compex (a unilateral offer made by EEC to non-ACP LDCs to compensate export earnings shortfalls of recipient countries in their trade with EEC for the Stabex commodities plus jute) had entered into operation. It was underlined, however, that those schemes were limited in country and product coverage. The Group also noted Switzerland's decision, announced at UNCTAD VII, to share in the international community's efforts with regard to compensatory financing by committing funds for the poorest countries suffering from export earnings shortfalls in their commodity trade with Switzerland.

The Group considered it would be appropriate to make its recommendations once the IMF review had been completed. As a contribution to that review, it asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to transmit the secretariat's analytical study and the Group's reports on its first and second sessions to IMF and the IMF/World Bank Development Committee.

The Group recommended to TDB that a resumed session of the Group be held, preferably in 1988, to make recommendations. In that regard, it invited IMF to provide it with details of the possible effects on shortfall compensation of any change agreed on to the Compensatory Financing Facility. It asked the UNCTAD secretariat to supplement its analytical work by further studies to assist the Group to fulfil its mandate in accordance with UNCTAD VII's Final Act (see above).

Insurance

The second part of the twelfth session of the UNCTAD Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade (Geneva, 2-6 March 1987)⁽⁴³⁾ was devoted exclusively to questions of insurance, the first part having been held in 1986.⁽³²⁾

By a 6 March resolution,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Committee took note of an UNCTAD secretariat statistical survey on insurance and reinsurance operations in developing countries,⁽⁴⁵⁾ and invited developing countries to intensify their efforts to compile statistics in that area and to exert maximum efforts to improve their system of insurance statistics to make it compatible with the unified international system. It recommended that developed countries continue to inform the UNCTAD secretariat of procedures used to compile statistics for the purpose of strengthening the efficiency of its technical assistance programmes to developing countries. It also recommended that developing countries make use of the secretariat's technical competence in compiling statistics. The secretariat was asked to continue to compile, analyse and disseminate statistics for the insurance sector. The Committee asked in particular that the survey on insurance and reinsurance statistics in developing countries be issued annually.

In another 6 March resolution,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Committee considered that an UNCTAD secretariat study on promoting risk management in developing countries⁽⁴⁷⁾ provided valuable guidance on promoting modern risk-management techniques in developing countries and the role to be played by Governments, commercial and industrial enterprises, the insurance industry and other groups and organizations. Agreeing that measures suggested in the study could benefit developing countries, the international insurance sector and other concerned interests, the Committee recommended that developing countries use on a broader scale those risk-management techniques and that developed countries and others in a position to do so support efforts to promote those techniques. It asked United Nations agencies to extend their co-ordination on the subject and invited countries to keep the UNCTAD secretariat informed of measures and results obtained so that information could be made available to all interested countries, especially developing ones. The Committee recommended that developing countries make use of the secretariat's competence to provide technical assistance in promoting risk management.

Also on 6 March,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Committee took note of an UNCTAD secretariat review of the Committee's work programme in insurance.⁽⁴⁹⁾ It considered that, in view of the persistent difficulties experienced by developing countries regarding insurance, it should pursue its task of achieving the objectives assigned to it. It asked the UNCTAD secretariat to continue to support it through studies on insurance and reinsurance problems in developing countries and through contributions to developing international co-operation in insurance and reinsurance on the basis of equality and mutual advantage, taking into account the specific needs of the developing countries. The secretariat was asked to place greater emphasis on its technical assistance activities in the insurance programme at national and regional levels and to develop ways to promote and facilitate the exchange of business between insurance and reinsurance companies in developing countries. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to accord priority to the secretariat's activities in insurance and to assign the corresponding human and financial resources to perform those tasks. The Committee invited UNDP and donor countries to provide the fullest possible financial support for technical assistance and training programmes in insurance, in order to benefit a larger number of developing countries.

The Committee reached no agreement on a draft resolution on reinsurance security, submitted by Senegal on behalf of the Group of 77, and decided to annex it to its report. By that draft, the Committee would have considered that an UNCTAD secretariat study on reinsurance security⁽⁵⁰⁾ provided valuable information regarding criteria for assessing the security and credibility of reinsurers. It would have reaffirmed its 1965 recommendation⁽⁵¹⁾ relating to the maintenance by ceding companies of the technical reserves and deposits of reinsurers and recommended that ceding companies and supervisory authorities adopt measures to ensure the solvency of reinsurers with which they dealt. The Committee would have considered that international co-operation in information on activities of reinsurers could facilitate assessment of the solvency of reinsurers and would have asked the UNCTAD secretariat to continue work on reinsurance security and to convene an international working group to examine the possibility of establishing an international system for reinsurance security and defining standards for such security.

Taxation

The Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters held its fourth meeting at Geneva from 30 November to 11 December 1987.⁽⁵²⁾ The Group: discussed prevention of abuse of tax treaties and outlined a set of solutions to the problem; commented on problems arising from the phenomenon of thin, or hidden, capitalization and proposed measures to prevent the abuse of tax treaties by that means; exchanged views on the current state of mutual co-operation between tax authorities; and surveyed arbitration arrangements to resolve international tax disputes. The Group also discussed substantive work to be undertaken at its fifth (1989) meeting.

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1987/112, the Group reviewed its structure and functions for the consideration of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields. In that context, the Group suggested that its functions might be redefined to include: periodic examination of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries, adopted by the Group in 1979, and then proposing explanations, guidelines and revisions of the Convention; analysis of double taxation agreements between developed and developing countries; examination and analysis of the functioning of double taxation agreements; examination of the adequacy of opportunities for and means of exchanging information for the implementation of double taxation agreements; improving the machinery for settling disputes arising from the functioning of double taxation agreements; comparative analysis of selected aspects of tax administration in developed and developing countries; examination and analysis of tax measures to encourage effective investment in developing countries; and other steps conducive to promoting international co-operation in tax matters. The Group urged that seminars be conducted on the Model Double Taxation Convention and its revisions.

The Ad Hoc Group also made suggestions regarding its composition, the frequency and duration of meetings, secretariat services and reports.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/1987/23. (2)Trade and Development Report, 1987 (UNCTAD/TDR/7), Sales No. E.87.II.D.7. (3)Revitalizing Development, Growth and International Trade: Assessment and Policy Options (TD/328/Rev.1), Sales No. E.87.II.D.9. (4)Proceedings of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Seventh Session, Geneva, 9 July-3 August 1986 vol. I, Report and Annexes (TD/352, vol. I), Sales No. E.88.II.D.1. (5)YUN 1986, p. 507, GA dec. 41/442, 5 Dec. 1986. (6)A/42/555. (7) World Economic Survey 1987: Current Trends and Policies in the World Economy E/1987/62 & Corr.1), Sales No. E.87.II.C.1 & corrigendum. (8)YUN 1986, p. 509, GA res. 41/202, 8 Dec. 1986. (9)YUN 1978, p. 429. (10)YUN 1986, p. 446 GA res. S-13/2 annex 1 June 1986. (11)A/42/523. (12)A/42/157. (13)A/42/357-S/18935. (14)A/42/411. (15)A/42/407. (16)A/42/410. (17)A/42/477-S/19048. (18)A/42/562. (19)A/42/604 & Corr.1. (20)A/42/625. (21)A/42/677. (22)A/42/681. (23)A/42/844-S/19314. (24)A/42/874. (25)A/C.2/42/L.9. (26)YUN 1986, p. 509, GA dec. 40/474, 20 June 1986. (27)YUN 1986, p. 510, GA dec. 41/460, 8 Dec. 1986. (28)YUN 1985, p. 577. (2)YUN 1981, p. 406. (30)YUN 1980, p. 503, GA res. 35/56, annex, 5 Dec. 1980. (31)A/C.2/42/L.52. (32)YUN 1986, p. 512. (33)A/C.2/42/L.7. (34)YUN 1985, p. 579. (35)E/1987/L.36. (36)E/1987/L.47 & Corr.1. (37)E/1987/L.36/Rev.1. (38)E/1987/L.49. (39)A/C.2/42/L.35. (40)TD/B/1151. (41)YUN 1986, p. 513. (42)TD/B/AC.43/5 & Add.1. (43)TD/B/1133. (44)Ibid. (res. 30 XII). (45)TD/B/C.3/220. (46)TD/B/1133 (res. 31(XII)). (47)TD/B/C.3/218 & Add.1. (48)TD/B/1133 (res. 32(XII)). (49)TD/B/C.3/219. (50)TD/B/C.3/221. (51)YUN 1965, p. 257. (52)E/1988/11.

OTHER PUBLICATIONS

Foreign Direct Investment, the Service Sector and International Banking, Sales No. E.87.II.A.15. International Accounting and Reporting Issues: 1987 Review (ST/CTC/67), Sales No. E.88.II.A.8. International Monetary and Financial Issue for the Developing Countries, Sales No. E.87.II.D.3. Financial Solidarity for Development: 1987 Review (TD/B/C.3/225-TD/B/C.7/85), Sales No. E.88.II.D.4. International Tax Agreements, vol. IX, Supp. 46, Sales No. E.87.XVI.2. Contributions to International Co-operation in Tax Matters (ST/ESA/203), Sales No. E.88.XVI.1.

Programme and finances of UNCTAD

The UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held its 1987 session in two parts (May and September) to discuss the UNCTAD section of the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1988-1989.

In October, TDB established an ad hoc inter-governmental working group to consider possible improvements in UNCTAD's intergovernmental machinery. In November, TDB endorsed the group's report and transmitted it to the Economic and Social Council.

UNCTAD programme

The Trade and Development Board—the executive body of UNCTAD—held three sessions in 1987, all at Geneva. The second part of its thirty-third session was held from 24 March to 3 April and on 14 April; its fifteenth special session from 18 to 20 May to discuss preparations for UNCTAD VII (see p. 466); and the first part of its thirty-fourth session from 5 to 16 October, on 21 October and on 20 November.

The Board adopted one resolution and nine decisions during 1987. In April, one decision dealt with preparations for UNCTAD VII, as did its May decision, and one with UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, as did an October decision (see p. 439). Two October decisions concerned a second United Nations conference on LDCs (see p. 392) and arrangements for the follow-up and review of the implementation of UNCTAD VII's Final Act (see p. 466). The resolution and other decisions pertained to subjects dealt with in this sub-chapter.

By decision 1987/191 of 1 October, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of TDB on the second part of its thirty-third session and its fifteenth special session,⁽¹⁾ and authorized the Secretary-General to transmit the report on the first part of the thirty-fourth session⁽²⁾ to the General Assembly at its forty-second (1987) session. In action on an aspect of the UNCTAD programme not covered in this chapter, the Council, on 28 May, adopted resolution 1987/54 on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods.

In December, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions on aspects of the UNCTAD programme not covered in this chapter; they dealt with an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology (resolution 42/172), specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries (resolution 42/174) and a second United Nations conference on LDCS (resolution 42/177).

Programme policy decisions

At its thirteenth session, which was held in two parts (Geneva, 8 May and 14-24 September 1987),⁽³⁾ the TDB Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget reviewed the UNCTAD section of the proposed United Nations programme budget for the 1988-1989 biennium (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I) and revisions submitted by its Chairman which reflected UNCTAD VII action.

On 24 September, the Working Party adopted a set of agreed conclusions in which it decided that the proposed work programme for UNCTAD follow-up of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD), adopted by the General Assembly in 1986,⁽⁴⁾ be annexed to the 1988-1989 proposed programme budget. The Working Party asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to take into account the requirements of UNPAAERD in implementing the relevant programme elements and invited TDB to take into account the programme elements of the follow-up to UNPAAERD'S implementation. (For TDB action on UNPAAERD, see p. 439.)

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, at its resumed session (14-30 September),⁽⁵⁾ recommended that the Assembly approve the programme narrative of the section relating to UNCTAD of the proposed programme budget for 1988-1989, as revised by the Secretary-General⁽⁶⁾ and amended by the Working Party.

On 23 November, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee approved by a recorded vote of 61 to 2, with 15 abstentions, the inclusion in the section of the programme budget relating to UNCTAD of $511,700 for a programme element concerning the Palestinian people. The Committee then approved without vote an appropriation of $63,215,800 for the UNCTAD 1988-1989 proposed programme budget.

Technical co-operation

Total UNCTAD project expenditure in 1987 for technical co-operation activities amounted to some $11.8 million, an increase of 8.3 per cent or $0.9 million over 1986.(7) Allocations from UNDP totalling $9.4 million were the main source of funds. Activities were also funded from funds-in-trust ($1.7 million) and from the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation ($0.7 million). During 1987, 126 projects were under implementation, compared with 117 in 1986. Activities remained predominantly inter-country. Those in Africa continued to constitute the largest share of country and regional projects, with a delivery of $3.2 million in 1987 compared with $3.8 million in 1986; the decrease arose partly from the completion of various country projects and partly from a delay in approving and implementing new projects. The next largest programme was in Asia and the Pacific which increased from $1.8 million in 1986 to $2.3 million in 1987, owing mainly to a 27.7 per cent growth in regional activities. Project expenditures in Latin America and the Caribbean rose slightly (from $1.31 million to $1.34 million), as did those in the Arab States (from $0.79 million to $0.87 million). In Europe, expenditures totalled $56,000 in 1987 against $35,000 in 1986; the bulk of those expenditures related to a container terminal project in Malta and a project in collaboration with the Institute for Economic Market Research, Budapest, Hungary, on analysing trends in the world economy. Expenditures for interregional projects increased by 28 per cent from $3.2 million in 1986 to $4.1 million in 1987.

The main sectors in which UNCTAD provided assistance were: maritime and multimodal transport; economic co-operation among developing countries; assistance to the least developed, landlocked and island developing countries; money, finance and development; manufactures and semi-manufactures; commodities; transfer of technology; insurance and reinsurance; trade among countries having different economic and social systems; and trade facilitation.

In addition, ITC continued to provide technical assistance for trade promotion (see p. 475).

Organizational questions

Calendar of UNCTAD meetings

By a 3 April decision,(8) TDB approved a calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1987. On 3 August,(9) UNCTAD VII adopted a revised calendar for the remainder of the year. By a 16 October decision,(10) TDB approved a calendar for the remainder of 1987 and for the first half of 1988.

UNCTAD intergovernmental machinery

By a 15 October decision,(11) TDB established an ad hoc intergovernmental working group to report on issues pertaining to possible improvements in the methods of work of UNCTAD's intergovernmental machinery, in its structure and in relations between UNCTAD and other bodies in the United Nations economic and social sectors. The TDB decision outlined the terms of reference and composition of the Ad Hoc Working Group, which was to submit its report to the Board's resumed session in November. The Board took that action following the Economic and Social Council's establishment (decision 1987/112) of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-Depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields and its request for the views of General Assembly subsidiary bodies (see p. 948).

The 19-member Ad Hoc Working Group,(12) which held meetings at Geneva between 16 October and 20 November, reviewed UNCTAD activities and their relationship with similar or related activities of other United Nations bodies. It was apparent to the Group that certain activities needed to be more focused and complementary to each other, both within the organization and between UNCTAD and other bodies and activities, to avoid unnecessary overlapping. It was also apparent that certain functions of subsidiary bodies could be absorbed by their parent bodies.

With regard to the methods of work of UNCTAD'S intergovernmental machinery, the Group agreed on measures to be taken concerning: work programmes and implementation of decisions of main Committees; establishment of the calendar of meetings and of the frequency and duration of meetings; preparation for and conduct of meetings; and documentation.

The Group reviewed TDB'S role and its relationship to the main Committees and other subsidiary bodies of UNCTAD, as well as their functioning and structure. It noted that TDB should focus on global, cross-sectoral dimensions of an issue, while the main Committees should focus on sectoral aspects. Among other things, the Group recommended that the Permanent Subcommittee on Commodities and the Permanent Group on Synthetics and Substitutes should be abolished and their mandates absorbed by the Committee on Commodities.

With regard to UNCTAD'S relationship to other intergovernmental bodies, the Group considered that ways should be found to ensure that the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly made the best use of UNCTAD'S reviews of the interdependence of economic issues. The Council could draw on them in its general discussion of economic and social policies and in exercising its inter-agency co-ordination and monitoring responsibilities, emphasizing the need for a more integrated approach to the economic and social aspects of development and international co-operation.

On the Group's recommendation, TDB, on 20 November,(13). endorsed the Group's report and decided to transmit it to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council. It also decided that the measures in the report and the provisions of previous resolutions and decisions, particularly a 1981 TDB resolution on rationalization of the Board's machinery,(14) should be implemented within the UNCTAD machinery, and asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to ensure full implementation of measures falling within his competence and to bring to the attention of member States any developments that could affect full implementation of those measures. TDB decided to review in 1988, and regularly thereafter, the measures agreed on and to take any action needed with respect to the UNCTAD intergovernmental machinery, and to decide then on the periodicity of further reviews.

REFERENCES

- (1)A/42/15, vol. I. (2)Ibid., vol. II. (3)TD/B/1147. (4)YUN 1986, p. 446, GA res. S-13/2, annex, 1 June 1986. (5)A/42/16. (6)A/C.5/42/5. (7)TD/B/WP/58 & Corr.1 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1. (8)A/42/15, vol. I (dec. 343(XXXIII)). (9)Proceedings of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Seventh Session, Geneva, 9 July-3 August 1987, vol. I, Report and Annexes (TD/352, vol. I), Sales No. E.88.II.D.1. (10)A/42/15, vol. II (dec. 351(XXXIV)). (11)Ibid. (dec. 347(XXXIV)). (12)TD/B/1154. (13)A/42/15, vol. II (res. 352(XXXIV)). (14)YUN 1981, p. 535.

OTHER PUBLICATION

United Nations Conference on Trade and Development: Rules of Procedure, Sales No. E.87.II.D.4.

Chapter V

Transport and tourism

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) continued to deal with international transport issues, particularly maritime transport. In addition to reviewing the world situation and UNCTAD activities concerning maritime transport, UNCTAD subsidiary bodies and its secretariat focused on preparing draft articles for a convention on maritime liens and mortgages, monitoring progress made in establishing a Maritime Fraud Prevention Exchange, harmonizing regulations on the transport of dangerous goods and providing training assistance. For the first time, measures were considered to assist developing countries to achieve equitable participation in world shipping and increase trade relations among themselves.

In May, the Economic and Social Council considered a report on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee in 1986, especially those regarding the transport of environmentally hazardous substances. The Council requested the Secretary-General to incorporate the Committee's 1986 recommendations into existing ones and to publish and circulate them. It also invited Governments, the specialized agencies and other international organizations concerned to transmit to the Secretary-General their views on the Committee's work (resolution 1987/54).

Activities in 1987 to promote tourism included support missions, technical co-operation projects, workshops and seminars, aimed at implementing the 1980 Manila Declaration on World Tourism which provided guidelines for developing tourism, especially in developing countries. Other activities centred on fostering freedom of movement and of travel, as called for in the 1982 Acapulco Document on World Tourism. The General Assembly took note of a report by the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization on progress made in implementing the Manila and Acapulco instruments (resolution 42/167).

Topics related to this chapter. Regional economic and social activities: Africa—Transport and Communications Decade in Africa; Asia and the Pacific—transport and communications.

Transport

Maritime transport

The Review of Maritime Transport, 1987(1) prepared annually by UNCTAD, stated that in 1987 the total volume of international seaborne trade increased slightly, with goods loaded estimated at 3.5 billion tons, a 0.8 per cent rise over 1986. The size of the world merchant fleet continued to decline, from 639.1 million deadweight tons (dwt) in 1986 to 632.3 million dwt at mid-1987, a decrease of 1.1 per cent.

However, ownership of the world merchant fleet remained concentrated in the developed market-economy and open-registry countries, with a combined tonnage amounting to 68.1 per cent at mid-1987. The share of developing countries increased to 20.9 per cent in 1987 from 19.9 per cent in 1986. Socialist countries of Eastern Europe and Asia owned 9.9 per cent.

The participation of developing countries in the world merchant fleet (20.9 per cent of deadweight tonnage) continued to be considerably lower than their share of international seaborne trade (34.8 per cent), whereas developed market-economy countries, which owned 68.1 per cent of world tonnage, generated 57.4 per cent of world trade.

The supply/demand disequilibrium remained a serious problem in the world shipping industry. Surpluses, however, decreased slightly as compared with 1986—partly due to fears of disruption to Persian Gulf supplies which led to a much higher level of buying and tanker demand in July, and also as a result of large amounts of grain imported by China and the USSR which led to some decrease in laid-up and idle tonnage in the dry bulk sector. Average surplus tonnage was estimated at 125.7 million dwt (19.9 per cent of the world merchant fleet) as at 1 July 1987, with surplus tanker tonnage estimated at 74.8 million dwt (29.1 per cent of the world tanker fleet).

The proportion of freight charges to cost, insurance, freight import values for developing countries continued to be approximately twice as high as that for developed market-economy countries (9.1 per cent against 4.4 per cent respectively). Freight rate indices for dry cargo ships and for tankers showed a significant upward movement in 1987, largely the result of an increase in international seaborne trade in dry bulk cargoes and a somewhat more balanced supply/demand relationship for a number of ship types and size categories.

Shipping

In accordance with a 1986 request of the Committee on Shipping,(2) the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group of Senior Officials on Co-operation among Developing Countries in Shipping, Ports and Multimodal Transport (Geneva, 21-25 September 1987),(3) meeting for the first time, considered measures to assist developing countries to achieve equitable participation in world shipping and to increase trade relations among themselves.

The Group considered a report by UNCTAD on co-operation among developing countries in shipping, ports and multimodal transport,(4) which responded to a request for specific information made by the Committee on Shipping in 1984.(5) The report analysed the need for co-operation and the experience gained by developing countries regarding co-operative agreements with shipping companies, shipowners' associations, shippers' councils and commodity groups. It also examined multimodal transport and co-operation in certain aspects of maritime legislation, including combating maritime fraud, promoting model clauses in marine hull and cargo insurance, and harmonizing national maritime legislation. The report observed that maritime fraud was a major problem facing the shipping community, with developing countries being especially vulnerable (see p. 502). It recommended an elaboration of a fair set of model clauses clearly establishing liability obligations and safeguards against commercial risks for operators and users to assist terminal operators in developing countries achieve satisfactory performance levels, reduce potential risks and improve the economic returns on the investments made in terminals. An annex to the report listed major regional and subregional intergovernmental and private organizations with interest in maritime transport in developing countries.

The Group also considered other documents prepared by UNCTAD, including a report on a draft programme of action for co-operation among developing countries in shipping, ports and multimodal transport,(6) another on co-operation between ports,(7) and a note on UNCTAD activities in the area of economic co-operation among developing countries.(8)

The Group noted that the obstacles preventing developing countries from effectively participating in world shipping included: an imbalance of power between shippers and shipowners; barriers to entry based on restrictive practices in various shipping markets; technology acquisition and adaptation to new organizational forms; and ship financing.

On 25 September, the Group recommended that developing countries consider establishing or strengthening co-operation among themselves in maritime transport and legislation, shippers' interests, multimodal transport, ports and training. It invited Governments of developing countries to strengthen and develop economic co-operation in those areas. It also recommended that the Committee on Shipping in 1988 consider reconvening the Group to provide guidance and exchange views on progress made, identify specific areas where co-operation could be established or strengthened in specific groups of countries, and make recommendations to those countries regarding possible co-operation.

Maritime liens and mortgages

In 1987, the Joint Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Maritime Liens and Mortgages and Related Subjects, established by UNCTAD and the International Maritime Organization (IMO), held its second (London, 11-15 May)(9) and third (Geneva, 30 November-11 December)(10) sessions. At both sessions, the substantive discussions took place in a sessional group of the whole.

In May, the sessional group considered a report prepared jointly by IMO and UNCTAD.(11) The report identified various maritime liens recognized by national legislations, together with an explanatory appendix, and contained a comparative table setting out article by article the provisions of the 1926 and 1967 International Conventions for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to Maritime Liens and Mortgages and a draft revision of the 1967 Convention prepared by the Comité Maritime International (CMI). The report also compared the characteristics of mortgages and hypothèques in civil law.

The sessional group examined a number of central issues to be regulated by a new instrument, taking into account the 1926 and 1967 Conventions and the CMI draft revision, and continued its deliberations on preparing draft articles for a convention on maritime liens and mortgages. It requested the IMO and UNCTAD secretariats to prepare a set of draft articles on maritime liens and mortgages/hypothèques for consideration by the Joint Group at its third session.

As requested, the IMO and UNCTAD secretariats forwarded to the Joint Group the draft articles prepared by the Group's Chairman, taking into account the discussions at the Group's second session. Included were the Chairman's comments on the draft articles to facilitate their further consideration.

At the Joint Group's November/December session,(10) the sessional group examined each of the draft articles, covering recognition and enforcement of mortgages, hypothèques and charges (article 1); ranking and effects of mortgages, hypothèques and charges (article 2); change of ownership and registration (article 3); maritime liens (article 4); priority of maritime claims (article 5); other liens and rights of retention (article 6); characteristics of maritime liens (article 7); extinction of maritime liens (article 8); assignment and subrogation (article 9); notice of forced sale (article 10); and effects of forced sale (article 11).

On 11 December, the Joint Group decided to hold its fourth session in London from 16 to 20 May 1988.

Marine insurance

Pursuant to a 1986 recommendation of the Committee on Shipping,⁽¹³⁾ the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board at its March/April 1987 session⁽¹⁴⁾ endorsed the UNCTAD non-mandatory model clauses on marine hull and cargo insurance, adopted in 1984 by the Working Group on International Shipping Legislation,⁽¹⁵⁾ and requested UNCTAD to prepare explanatory material to promote their use.

Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences

The Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences,⁽¹⁶⁾ which entered into force in 1983,⁽¹⁷⁾ had 69 States parties as at 31 December 1987;⁽¹⁸⁾ Belgium became a party on 30 September 1987.

During the year, UNCTAD helped Governments prepare for a review conference, as called for in article 52 of the Convention. The conference, scheduled for October/November 1988, was to review the Convention, particularly its implementation, and consider and adopt amendments.

Convention on Conditions for Registration of Ships

The United Nations Convention on Conditions for Registration of Ships, adopted in 1986,⁽²⁾ was to enter into force 12 months after the date on which no fewer than 40 States, the combined tonnage of which amounted to at least 25 per cent of world tonnage, had become contracting parties.

As at 31 December 1987, 13 States (Algeria, Bolivia, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Indonesia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Morocco, Poland, Senegal, USSR) had signed the Convention and one State (Côte d'Ivoire) had ratified it.⁽¹⁸⁾

Ports

In accordance with a 1986 recommendation of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group of Port Experts,⁽¹³⁾ an informal network—made up of 50 country-based focal points and 10 regional port associations—was established to disseminate UNCTAD port documents. A newsletter containing information on the secretariat's work was prepared and distributed, and monographs were published on container terminal pavement management, measuring and evaluating port performance and productivity and steps for effective shed management.

In addition, research began on four subjects recommended by the Group of Port Experts, including problems in setting up trans-shipment facilities in developing countries, port operation and documentation computerization, port equipment maintenance and co-operation among ports.

Maritime fraud

Pursuant to a 1986 request of the Committee on Shipping,⁽¹³⁾ UNCTAD monitored progress made in establishing the Maritime Fraud Prevention Exchange by attending the preparatory meetings of the founder members. The Exchange aimed to improve the availability and dissemination of shipping information relevant to combating maritime fraud by creating a focal point for such information.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, which did not meet in 1987, published the fifth revised edition of its recommendations⁽¹⁹⁾ and an addendum to its tests and criteria ⁽²⁰⁾

In March 1987, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Economic and Social Council,⁽²¹⁾ describing the work of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies during 1985-1986.

The Committee's Group of Rapporteurs and Group of Experts on Explosives met at Geneva from 3 to 14 August 1987 (thirty-sixth session) and from 17 to 21 August (twenty-seventh session), respectively. The Group of Rapporteurs considered the definition and classification of aerosols, a new system of classifying organic peroxides, the transport of hazardous wastes and environmentally hazardous substances, and civil liability for damage caused during the inland transport of dangerous goods.⁽²²⁾ Annexed to the Group's report was a list of miscellaneous adopted amendments to the Committee's recommendations (see above) and the report of a working group on organic peroxides and self-reactive substances (Geneva, 3-7 August).

The Group of Experts on Explosives discussed, among other things, test methods to classify better certain explosives and suitable packing methods.⁽²³⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/54 without vote.

Work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1983/7 of 26 May 1983, 1985/9 of 28 May 1985 and 1986/66 of 23 July 1986,

Noting the ever-increasing volume of dangerous goods in world-wide commerce and the rapid expansion of technology and innovation,

Bearing in mind the constant need to meet the growing concern for the protection of life and property through the safe transport of dangerous goods, while at the same time facilitating trade,

Aware that in order to achieve internationally harmonized laws, complete reliance is placed on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods by the specialized agencies and other international organizations and by interested Member States that are committed to taking the recommendations of the Committee as a basis for the formulation of their requirements and regulations,

Reaffirming the desirability of widening the decision-making base of the Committee by encouraging the participation of developing countries and other non-member countries in its future work,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods in the biennium 1985-1986 and of the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee for inclusion in its existing recommendations, especially with regard to the transport of environmentally hazardous substances;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To incorporate in the existing recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods all of the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee at its fourteenth session;

(b) To publish the new and amended recommendations in all the official languages of the United Nations, in the most cost-effective manner, not later than the end of 1987;

(c) To circulate the new and amended recommendations immediately after their publication to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned;

3. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned to transmit to the Secretary-General their views of the Committee's work, together with any comments they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

4. Invites all interested Governments and the international organizations concerned, when developing appropriate codes and regulations, to take full account of the recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods;

5. Notes that the requests in Council resolutions 1983/7, 1985/9 and 1986/66 have not yet been implemented, and reiterates the request to the Secretary-General to make available, within existing resources, the funding and staff necessary for the adequate servicing of the Committee of Experts;

6. Recommends that consideration be given to the provision of funding to support the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution for submission to the Council not later than at its second regular session of 1988.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/54

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Io-nation draft (E/1987/L.29); agenda item 9.

Sponsors: Belgium, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Netherlands, Spain, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Meeting numbers. ESC 13, 14, 17.

Also on 28 May, the Council, by decision 1987/134, took note of an oral report by the Senior Adviser to the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Europe regarding the implementation of a 1986 Council resolution.(24) He pointed out that the Netherlands and Sweden had become full members of the Committee of Experts and that there had been increased participation of countries outside Europe, notably Australia, Brazil and China.

Multimodal transport and technological developments

During 1987, multimodal transport continued to expand, with an increasing number of companies operating as combined transport operators, non-vessel-operating common carriers or non-vessel-operating multimodal transport operators, offering door-to-door transport to more destinations. In addition, an increasing number of shipowners offered door-to-door services as vessel-operating multimodal transport operators and some major railways developed into non-vessel-operating multimodal transport operators.

In accordance with a 1986 request by the Group of Experts to Develop and Recommend Model Rules for Multimodal Container Tariffs,(25) the UNCTAD secretariat established a pilot project for a reference library for multimodal transport tariff rules. The library, aimed at promoting uniformity of tariffs, was designed to allow users of multimodal container tariffs to consult existing tariffs in trade at various stages of containerization in order for such users to develop similar tariff rules.

Pursuant to a 1986 Committee on Shipping request(25) UNCTAD continued to develop the MULTISHIP computer programmes, releasing a new version of Model II (version 5C), which combined the concepts of the pure port-to-port model with an inland transport optimization programme.

Concerning commercial risk factors in container terminal management, UNCTAD prepared a report,(26) noting that commercial risk had further escalated. The report summarized developments in container transportation affecting the investment risks of container terminal operators and evaluated their potential impact on the commercial risk profile of container terminals. It recommended terminal and equipment leasing, and hire agreements for port handling equipment, and emphasized the need for a standard framework of contract clauses.

As to the Committee on Shipping's serious concerns regarding the technical and commercial consequences of continued increases in container dimensions and maximum growth mass, particularly for developing countries, UNCTAD drew the attention of the International Organization on Standardization to the necessity of taking into account the implications of any modification of existing container standards on equipment and infrastructure.

To alleviate the lack of statistics on the number of containers transported on combined or multimodal transport documents, UNCTAD was developing a computerized transport statistical package for developing countries. The package was to be based on internationally agreed standards and customs procedures and would offer countries the possibility of processing details of data on cargo, containers and vessels.

In 1987, nine UNCTAD multimodal transport workshops were delivered, with a total of 132 participants from 16 countries.

Technical assistance and training

UNCTAD'S technical co-operation and training activities in shipping, ports and multimodal transport increased during 1987. A total of 34 inter-regional, regional and national projects were undertaken during the year, with an expenditure of $3.55 million compared with $2.44 million in 1986. More than 60 per cent of that amount was spent on training projects.

In 1987, the TRAINMAR programme—a world-wide network of co-operating shipping and ports training centres linked by the use of common methods and the interchange of training materials, students and instructors—was made up of 11 inter-regional, regional or national projects. By the end of the year, 23 port and shipping training centres were associated with TRAINMAR, and 28 courses had been developed, covering ports, shipping, multimodal transport and training technology. More than 220 trainers had been trained through the programme and some 6,000 managers had benefited by attending at least one of the courses.

The "improving port performance" project, funded by the Swedish International Development Authority, designed and produced training courses and then trained developing country instructors to conduct such courses in their own countries. An instructors' seminar on managing general cargo operations took place about 40 times during the year for some 600 managers. A course on container terminal development policy was held four times in 1987 and development work started on a course on managing port equipment.

Other regional projects included: a study on the harmonization of port tariff structures and cost accounting in West Africa; a study on co-operation in optimizing shipping capacity among members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference; a feasibility study for extending the liner services of member liners of the Comisión Latinoamericana de Transportes Marítimos with countries of Eastern Europe; assistance on the protection of shippers' interests in East Africa; and assistance to land-locked African countries in formulating shipping policies. National projects included advice on port planning and operations in Djibouti, Panama, Sao Tome and Principe, and Sri Lanka, and shipping and multimodal transport projects in Benin and Ethiopia.

The United Nations Development Programme provided funds for a project to explore the use of transport logistic techniques for handling cargo management data to promote the more efficient movement of goods, particularly to and from land-locked countries in Africa.

REFERENCES

- (1) Review of Maritime Transport, 1987 (TD/B/C.4/319), Sales No. E.88.II.D.6. (2) YUN 1986, p. 519. (3) TD/B/C.4/311. (4) TD/B/C.4/AC.9/2. (5) YUN 1984, p. 551. (6) TD/B/C.4/273. (7) TD/B/C.4/AC.7/4. (8) TD/B/C.4/AC.9/3. (9) TD/B/C.4/AC.8/7. (10) TD/B/C.4/AC.8/10. (11) TD/B/C.4/AC.8/6. (12) TD/B/C.4/AC.8/9. (13) YUN 1986, p. 521. (14) A/42/15, vol. I (15) YUN 1984, p. 553. (16) YUN 1974, p. 460. (17) YUN 1983, p. 572. (18) Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 31 December 1987 (ST/LEG/SER.E/6), Sales No. E.88.V.3. (19) Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (ST/SG/AC.10/1/Rev.5), Sales No. E.87.VIII.1. (20) Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Tests and Criteria, first edition, addendum 1 (ST/SG/AC.10/11/Add.1), Sales No. E.87.VIII.2. (21) E/1987/37. (22) ST/SG/AC.10/C.2/27. (23) ST/SG/AC.10/C.1/18. (24) YUN 1986, p. 522, ESC res. 1986/66, 23 July 1986. (25) Ibid., p. 523. (26) UNCTAD/ST/SHIP/12.

OTHER PUBLICATION

Catalogue with Abstracts of Studies in the Field of Transport, 1987, Sales No. E.87.II.A.19.

Tourism

As requested by the General Assembly in 1985, (1) the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization (WTO) reported (2) on progress made in implementing the Manila Declaration on World Tourism, adopted in 1980 by the World

Tourism Conference,(3) and the Acapulco Document on World Tourism, adopted by the World Tourism Meeting in 1982.(4)

The report stated that during 1986, 340 million international tourist arrivals were recorded, the highest number in history. International tourism accounted for 5.4 per cent of world trade and ranked as the world's largest export industry, after crude and refined petroleum and motor vehicles. Domestic and international travel together were estimated to have generated some $1,750 billion in 1986, with tourism contributing approximately 12 per cent of the world's gross national product.

Not all regions of the world, however, had benefited equally from the development of tourism. The developing countries, although they constituted a majority of WTO'S 109 members, accounted for only 25 per cent of international tourist receipts. Over the preceding two years, WTO assistance to developing countries to help increase their share of benefits from tourism included 28 support missions (Algeria, Argentina, Aruba, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Cameroon, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cyprus, Ecuador, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malawi, Malta, Mozambique, Niger, Panama, Philippines, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Yemen), 17 technical co-operation projects were completed and 21 others were under way. These projects were intended to strengthen the management and operational capacities of tourism at the national level.

Regional projects continued to predominate WTO technical co-operation activities—three of them, in southern Asia, the southern Pacific and the Caribbean, were extended into new phases which started in 1987.

Workshops and seminars were held in various developing countries and WTO also provided short-term training in tourism administration for representatives from developing countries of various WTO regions.

The report also pointed to a number of new problems confronting tourism. Terrorism had become a major problem, causing losses to tourism in 1986 of some $1 billion, excluding costs of providing security cover, installing security screening devices, insurance and training. WTO had appealed to its members to strengthen their co-operation to combat terrorism and to accede to and implement all relevant international conventions. The acquired immuno-deficiency syndrome (AIDS) had had consequences in a limited number of tourism destinations and WTO affiliate members, at a meeting at Granada, Spain, on 26 March 1987, reviewed the implications of AIDS. WTO was also co-operating with the United Nations system against the illegal use of and traffic in narcotics, and had participated in the June 1987 International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (see p. 900). In addition, WTO was concerned about preventing tourism from being used to exploit persons for sexual purposes, especially women and children in developing countries, and had maintained contact with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on that issue.

Another major problem facing tourism was facilitation, that is, the means of progressively eliminating all obstacles to the free movement of persons for non-migratory purposes, and expanding tourism as a whole. There was a growing consensus that the value of the international market in travel and tourism would be greater if a number of non-tariff restrictions could be eliminated. Key problems identified by tour operators, travel agents and other tourism enterprises included denial of market access to foreign companies; restriction on transborder data flows (flight, hotel and tour information); and limitations on transfer of funds or repatriation of profits. For the first time, WTO had included a study on protectionism in its 1986-1987 research programme and was consulting with the secretariat of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade about the facilitation of trade in tourism services and also was working with UNCTAD.

Regarding information, WTO had assisted its members to standardize their tourist information material, but tourism professionals felt there was a lack of a truly accessible system for acquiring the knowledge they needed. As recommended by its executive bodies, WTO had proposed the establishment of a world tourism information exchange centre, which would be fully integrated with existing information exchanges within the United Nations system and various institutions and associations. Estimates were that it could be functioning fully within five years. The WTO Secretary-General had sent to all members, international organizations and interested institutions a questionnaire seeking more precise views on specific categories of information which might be handled by the centre and the priority attached to each.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the WTO report in decision 1987/183 of 8 July.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 42/167 without vote.

World Tourism Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/156 and 32/157 of 19 December 1977, 33/122 of 19 December 1978 and 34/134 of 14 December 1979 concerning the World Tourism Organization, and, in particular, resolution 40/172 of 17 December 1985 in which it requested the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization to submit to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the Manila Declaration and the Acapulco Document on World Tourism,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization, Requests the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the further implementation of resolution 40/172.

General Assembly resolution 42/167

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/820/Add.2) without vote, 30 October (meeting 26); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.26), based on informal consultations; agenda item 12.

Participation of WTO in the work of ACC

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), taking note of a WTO request to participate in the work of ACC, (~) decided in October 1987@) that WTO should be invited to participate in ACC'S subsidiary bodies and in inter-agency meetings convened under its auspices when items of direct concern to WTO and of common interest to the organizations of the United Nations system were discussed.

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1985, p. 590, GA res. 40/172, 17 Dec. 1985. (2)A/42/227-E/1987/65. (3)YUN 1981, p. 573. (4)YUN 1983, p. 577. (5)ACC/1987/1. (6)ACC/1987/DEC/16-27 (dec. 1987/26).

Chapter VI

Transnational corporations

Transnational corporations (TNCs) continued to have a major impact on global investment flows in 1987. The world economy remained in a precarious state and most developing countries had not recovered from the recession of the early 1980s. External debt, falling primary commodity prices, protectionist measures and harsh domestic policies limited whatever growth prospects might have existed. The flow of investment therefore continued to be directed towards developed economies, rather than developing ones.

In his annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General said it was symptomatic of a more pragmatic approach in the fields of trade and development that Member States had increasingly sought the assistance of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in developing national legislation to facilitate their integration into the growing transnational sector of the global economy. The integration process would be facilitated by the increased predictability and stability that a code of conduct on transnational corporations could bring and he hoped that a final text would be approved before another year passed.

The Commission on Transnational Corporations (thirteenth session, New York, 7-16 April) considered recent developments in TNC activities as they related to international economic relations, activities of the Centre on TNCS, the code of conduct on TNCS, strengthening the negotiating capacity of developing countries in their dealings with TNCS, the role of transnational banks and technical co-operation. International harmonization of accounting and reporting was discussed by the Commission's Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts (fifth session, New York, 2-13 March).

In May, the Economic and Social Council asked member States of the Commission on TNCS to put forward concrete formulations to resolve the outstanding issues in the code of conduct (resolution 1987/57). In February, it deferred action on the cycle of meetings of the Commission (decision 1987/110).

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: transnational corporations. Development policy and international economic co-operation: international development strategy. International trade and finance: trade policy; restrictive business practices. Human rights: human rights violations-Africa.

Draft code of conduct

In 1987, the Commission on TNCs, in a reconvened special session and at its thirteenth session, continued the task of formulating a code of conduct on TNCs, first considered in 1975.(1)

In a January report to the Economic and Social Council,(2) the Secretary-General described 1986 developments in the negotiation of the code(3) and recommended that the Council consider reconvening the Commission's special session to recommend procedures for the code's expeditious finalization.

By decision 1987/106 of 6 February, the Council authorized the Commission to reconvene its special session on 6 April and the special session's Chairman to convene a meeting of the open-ended enlarged Bureau of the special session on 2 and 3 April to discuss matters related to outstanding issues. The Secretary-General was invited to assist the Commission in reaching agreement on the code.

At its reconvened special session on 6 April,(4) the Commission recommended to the Council the adoption of a draft resolution on the code (see below).

On 30 April,(5) Mexico, as Chairman of the resumed special session of the Commission, transmitted to the Council the Secretary-General's report on consultations undertaken on outstanding issues in the draft code, including the reconvened special session and the meeting of the enlarged Bureau. The consultations had shown continued support for finalizing the code and suggestions were made on a number of issues which might serve as the basis for the code's speedy finalization: non-interference in internal political affairs; international law/international obligations; nationalization and compensation; respect for national sovereignty; jurisdiction and dispute settlement; and national treatment.

At its thirteenth session,(6) the Commission on TNCs took note of the Secretary-General's January report(2) and asked the Centre on TNCs to update it for the Commission's 1988 session and to assist the special session's Chairman to implement the tasks assigned to him in the draft resolution recommended to the Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/57 without vote.

Code of conduct on transnational corporations
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1987/106 of 6 February 1987,

Reiterating the importance of an expeditious finalization of the code of conduct on transnational corporations,

Reiterating also that the special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations is the proper forum for the negotiations on the code of conduct,

1. Decides that the special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations should be reconvened at the earliest possible time and that a decision regarding its date should be taken not later than the organizational session for 1988 of the Economic and Social Council on the basis of the results of the consultations to be held for the preparation of the reconvened special session;

2. Requests the Chairman presiding at the special session, together with the Bureau of the special session and the Secretary-General, to hold intensive consultations with the aim of preparing a draft code of conduct on transnational corporations for the reconvened special session of the Commission, taking into account the existing drafts;

3. Requests member States to put forward, if appropriate, in the course of the consultations, concrete formulations aimed at resolving the outstanding issues in the code of conduct.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/57

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/93) without vote, 22 May (meeting 10); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1987/40); agenda item 13.

By decision 1987/196 of 25 November, the Council authorized the Commission to reconvene its special session for one meeting in 1987 to elect two officers to its Bureau in order to conduct the consultations called for in resolution 1987/57.

Definition of TNCs

The Commission on TNCs(6) on 10 April considered the problem of defining TNCs, an issue which it had examined annually since 1975. It had before it a report of the Secretary-General,(7) in which he stated that there had been a progressive narrowing of differences on the question. Although the Commission had established a text to which there was no objection, some delegations had expressed a preference for an alternative text. The final solution to the issue of definitions and scope of application awaited the settlement of other outstanding issues in the draft code of conduct.

International arrangements related to TNCs

In a February report to the Commission on TNCs,(8) the Secretary-General surveyed international arrangements and agreements related to TNCs, which had been adopted during the preceding two years. The report covered the United Nations guidelines for consumer protection,(9) the Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration formulated by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law,(10) the International Code of Conduct on the Distribution and Use of Pesticides adopted by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,(11) the new round of trade negotiations agreed to by members of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade,(12) and the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency.

Presenting the report to the Commission, the Executive Director of the Centre on TNCs noted that all those instruments intended to establish international norms dealing with some aspects of foreign direct investment and TNCs. Some attempted to close in part the gap resulting from the absence of an international global framework. The existing multiplicity of instruments dealing with different aspects of TNC activities emphasized the need to establish such a framework. While the instruments surveyed were complementary to the code of conduct, they could not be substituted for it, and he suggested that the code would reinforce the effectiveness of other international arrangements.

The Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested the Centre on TNCs to continue its work on international arrangements and to update the report for the Commission's 1988 session.

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1975, p. 484. (2)E/1987/9. (3)YUN 1986, p. 525. (4)E/1987/40. (5)E/1987/73. (6)E/1987/22. (7)E/C.10/1987/15. (8)E/C.10/1987/5. (9)YUN 1985, p. 571, GA res. 39/248, annex, 9 Apr. 1985. (10)Ibid., p. 1192. (11)Ibid., p. 1287. (12)YUN 1986, p. 1210.

Standards of accounting and reporting

The fifth session of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting was held in New York from 2 to 13 March 1987.(1) The Group had before it reports by the Secretary-General on current developments in accounting and reporting by TNCs;(2) accounting and reporting for business combinations;(3) revenue recognition and accounting for non-operating gains and losses;(4) valuation of inventories;(5) numerical data on the largest TNCs;(6) and appropriate measures to give effect to the work of the Group.(7)

The Group recommended that the Commission on TNCs approve the provisional agenda and documentation for its sixth (1988) session and drew attention to its views and recommendations to be submitted to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (see p. 510).

With regard to the review of important developments in the field of accounting and reporting by TNCs, the Group approved a proposal that the Centre on TNCs would conduct an international survey of financial statements published by TNCs. The survey would serve as the basis for a report on information disclosures by selected TNCs in their financial statements for 1985 and 1986. Some 200 TNCs would be selected from 20 countries in different regions and from different economic sectors. The Group said the survey should demonstrate the comparability of information concerning TNCs and their activities.

With regard to information disclosure concerning inventories, the Group agreed on the following: inventories should be disclosed in balance sheets with a breakdown of material items and an amount for each category; information should be disclosed regarding accounting policies for inventory valuation, changes in valuation policy and the effect of such changes; where the book value of inventories differed materially from the market value at the balance-sheet date, the amount of the difference should be disclosed in notes to the accounts; and the amount of inventories pledged as collateral for repayment of loans should be disclosed, as should the amount of any exceptional value adjustments. The Group also agreed that income statements should be charged with the amount of inventories sold or used and with the amount of any writedown to net realizable value.

In April, the Commission on TNCs(8) took note of the Group's report and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1988 session.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/C.10/1987/6. (2)E/C.10/AC.3/1987/2. (3)E/C.10/AC.3/1987/3. (4)E/C.10/AC.3/1987/4. (5)E/C.10/AC.3/1987/5 & Corr.1. (6)E/C.10/AC.3/1987/6 & Corr.1. (7)E/C.10/AC.3/1987/7. (8)E/1987/22.

PUBLICATION

International Accounting and Reporting Issues: 1987 Review (ST/CTC/67), Sales No. E.88.IIA.8.

Commission on TNCs

The Commission on TNCs, in addition to a reconvened special session (see p. 507), held its thirteenth session in New York from 7 to 16 April 1987.(1) It discussed recent developments related to TNCs and international economic relations, activities of the Centre on TNCs, the Commission's functioning, ongoing and future research, the role of transnational banks, a comprehensive information system (see p. 511), the code of conduct on TNCs, international standards of accounting and reporting and the definition of TNCs, TNCs in South Africa and Namibia, strengthening the negotiating capacity of developing countries in their dealings with TNCs, and the agenda for the Commission's 1988 session.

On 28 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the reports on the Commission's thirteenth session(1) and on its reconvened special session(2) (decision 1987/139), and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its fourteenth (1988) session (decision 1987/137).

Cycle of meetings

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

At its 1987 organizational session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a draft resolution(3) by which it would have decided that the Commission on TNCs should hold its regular sessions on a biennial instead of annual basis, beginning with the 1987 session.

On 6 February, the Council adopted decision 1987/110 without vote.

Cycle of meetings of the Commission on Transnational Corporations

At its 4th plenary meeting, on 6 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council decided:

(a) To defer taking action on the draft resolution entitled "Cycle of meetings of the Commission on Transnational Corporations" until its first regular session of 1987;

(b) To request the Commission on Transnational Corporations, when reviewing the proposed programme of work of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations for the biennium 1988-1989, to consider, without prejudice to the final decision of the Council, adjustments that would be necessary if the Council adopted a biennial cycle for the meetings of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1987/110

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by United States; agenda item 2.

On 18 May, the draft resolution was withdrawn by its sponsor (United States), in view of the understanding reached by the Commission on TNCs.

The Commission, in April,(1) after reviewing its functioning (see below), had recommended that no fundamental changes be made in its mode of work, although different points of view continued to be expressed on the question of periodicity of sessions.

TNCs in South Africa and Namibia

For its consideration of the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia (see also p. 147), the Commission on TNCs, at its April session,(1) had before it three reports by the Secretary-General. The first, on activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia and their collaboration with the racist minority regime in that area,(4) discussed investment and disinvestment actions by TNCs and changes in foreign direct investment and foreign bank lending in South Africa, summarized the state of the South African economy and the role of key economic sectors, and gave information on TNCs in Namibia. A report on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to TNCs operating in South Africa and Namibia in violation of United Nations decisions(5) was prepared in response to a 1986 Economic and Social Council resolution.(6) It summarized provisions of resolutions and other actions of the United Nations and measures taken by Member States and local authorities in those States. The third report(7) described the follow-up to the public hearings held in 1985 on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia.(8)

On 15 April, the Commission adopted a draft resolution for action by the Economic and Social Council (see resolution 1987/56).

Role of transnational banks

In response to a 1986 Economic and Social Council request,(9) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on TNCs a report on the role of transnational banks.(10) The report addressed the problem of defining a transnational bank in the light of developments in the international financial system, chronicled the surge to prominence of Japanese banks in the 1980s and analysed the factors behind that phenomenon. It also looked at the significant changes that had taken place during the 1980s in international financial markets that had resulted in a considerable degree of unification of domestic markets among the industrial countries, and the major forces behind that development—technological change, deregulation and financial innovation. The report discussed the changing relationship between transnational banks and developing countries, analysing in particular the causes behind the debt crisis and the role of transnational banks. It also described programmes introduced by several debtor countries to convert debt into foreign equity investment. The report's final section briefly assessed the prospects for developing countries to have access to the new international financial markets that had emerged in the 1980s.

The Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report and asked him to continue to study the role of transnational banks in developing countries and to report in 1988 on the basis of the discussion held during the 1987 session.

By decision 1987/138 of 28 May, the Economic and Social Council asked the Secretary-General to make his report available to the General Assembly at its 1987 session.

Functioning of the Commission

In accordance with decision 1987/112, by which the Economic and Social Council established its Special Commission on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields and requested the views of General Assembly subsidiary bodies, the Commission on TNCs conducted a review of its functioning. It reviewed its terms of reference; the mode of conducting its deliberations and decision-making, including the periodicity and length of its session and documentation prepared for it; its relationship with the special session of the Commission on the code of conduct on TNCs, the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting and the Centre on TNCs; and its effectiveness as a forum for the comprehensive and in-depth consideration of issues related to TNCs.

The Commission concluded that both it and the Centre were performing an important service to the United Nations and its Member States and that no substantial changes in its functions, basic agenda or composition were warranted.

In March,(11) the Group of Experts on standards of accounting and reporting also reviewed its functioning. It was of the view that no essential change in its mandate or terms of reference was needed but the matter would be considered again in 1988.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/1987/22. (2)E/1987/40. (3)E/1987/L.11. (4)E/C.10/1987/7. (5)E/C.10/1987/8. (6)YUN 1986, p. 139, ESC res. 1986/1, 19 May 1986. (7)E/1987/13. (8)YUN 1985, p. 149. (9)YUN 1986, p. 529, ESC res. 1986/54, 22 July 1986. (10)E/C.10/1987/13. (11)E/C.10/1987/6.

Centre on TNCs

In February 1987, the United Nations Centre on TNCs—the main Secretariat unit for TNC-related matters—submitted a report on its activities(1) to the Commission on TNCs. In response to a 1986 Economic and Social Council request,(2) the report contained information on ways in which the Centre could take account of the need to minimize the negative effects of TNC activities while maximizing their positive effects in preparing research, analyses and information. The activities of enterprises from developed market economies, developing countries and socialist countries engaged in transnational operations were considered.

The Centre continued to provide services to the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (see p. 508); to collect, monitor and analyse developments in international, regional and bilateral arrangements relating to TNCs; and to conduct research, organize training projects and develop an information system on TNCs.

Information system

The Centre on TNCs continued to supply statistical data on foreign direct investment and related flows. Statistics were collected for 15 variables covering every country and every year since 1970. Besides governmental sources, the Centre had access to International Monetary Fund balance-of-payment and international financial statistics tapes, as well as data from other inter-governmental organizations.

In addition, the Centre expanded to 24 the number of countries on which it gathered data by official national source on the total inward and outward stocks and/or flows of foreign direct investment. The developing countries for which data were collected were Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Indonesia, Panama, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Singapore, Thailand and Venezuela; the developed countries were Australia, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Information on individual TNCs was central to the Centre's work. Basic numerical data were collected on TNCs in the manufacturing and extractive sectors. The Centre also began to gather data on the largest TNCs in the service sectors.

During the year, the Centre completed its work on standardizing line-of-business and geographical classifications in its data bases. Data were updated, checked and reviewed for more than 100,000 parent and affiliate companies. It also continued to expand its collection of reference works summarizing laws and regulations in various countries and providing citations to legislation relating to TNCs, to update its collection of contracts and agreements between TNCs and host country entities, and to update its bibliography on TNCs.

During 1987, the information system received 1,735 requests requiring research; 780 of the requests were from Governments and intergovernmental organizations. An additional 1,800 short-answer requests were received.

In February, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report on the needs of developing countries for information on TNCs.(3)

Joint units with regional commissions

Joint units established between the Centre on TNCs and the United Nations regional commissions continued to operate in 1987 in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Western Asia. Each unit's work programme was tailored to the region's needs and included research on the economic, social and institutional issues of TNCs, information dissemination, and training and advisory services. Activities of the Centre and of the joint units between April 1986 and February 1987 were described in a report of the Secretary-General.(1)

The joint unit of the Centre and the Economic Commission for Africa concentrated on a study of the TNC role in the African development process, upgrading the abilities of host African countries to evaluate the impact of TNCs in the transfer of technology, and strengthening the bargaining position of African countries in their dealings with TNCs. A topical bibliography on the transfer of technology and African development was prepared. Missions to Egypt and Mauritius reviewed issues related to the establishment of joint ventures and transfer pricing practices. The joint unit participated in a training of trainers workshop organized by the Centre at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, in December.

The joint unit with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) completed case-studies on TNCs in selected Asian developing countries and on the socio-economic impact of TNCs in the fast-food industry in Thailand. In co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme and ESCAP, the joint unit organized an expert group meeting to review environmental studies of TNC activity in the region (Bangkok, Thailand, 11-16 November); the studies examined TNC involvement in the manufacturing, handling and distribution of toxic products and hazardous technologies, environmental management practices, national environmental legislation and its effectiveness. With the Centre and China, the unit organized a regional workshop on monitoring foreign investment by TNCs (Guangzhou, 12-20 November), and with the Centre, a seminar on TNCs (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 21-25 September) and a workshop on negotiating joint ventures (Honiara, Solomon Islands, 13-16 October). The joint unit issued the 1987 edition of the Asia-Pacific TNC Review.

The joint unit with the Economic Commission for Europe prepared a study on international co-operation among TNCs and TNC international take-overs as central measures in recent and future strategies of TNCs. The study analysed the two major strategic measures used by TNCs to safeguard their future competitive positions in markets that were becoming more technologically advanced and global: international co-operation agreements and international mergers and take-overs. The joint unit also worked on the forthcoming publication Transnational Corporations in World Development: Fourth Survey and provided information on the technical expertise available in the region and its use to developing countries.

The joint unit with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean focused its efforts on an interregional study of transnational banks. It also contributed to the Fourth Survey and to studies on TNCs in Paraguay, the food industry in Latin America, and regional trends in foreign direct investment, including an analysis of debt equity conversion. It continued to assist the General Reserve Bank of Peru with regard to an analysis of the external sector, the inflationary process and the problem of capital flight.

The joint unit with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia completed case-studies on the impact of TNCs on development in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, as well as a study on the experience of Egypt in regulating technology imports (1970-1985).

Research

The Centre's efforts to complete the publication Transnational Corporations in World Development: Fourth Survey, scheduled for 1988, intensified during 1987. The study—the centre-piece of the Centre's research activities—was to examine changes in the nature of TNCs, their corporate strategies and their patterns of activity, their investment in the service sector and their impact on developing countries. Government policies towards TNCs were also being analysed.

The Centre issued an interregional study on the role of TNCs in the production, processing and marketing of several non-fuel primary commodities.(4) It completed studies of licensing agreements in developing countries(5) and of policy measures of India regarding TNC activities.

The third issue of a consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or not approved by Governments was completed in Arabic, French and Spanish. The Centre participated in its preparation by collecting data on trade names and TNC manufacturers of the products concerned.

Information on the Centre's work in the area of services was published in Foreign Direct Investment, the Service Sector and International Banking.(6)

Two studies were prepared jointly by the Centre and ESCAP. One, based on industrial case-studies in Thailand, examined the mechanisms by which technology was transferred to enterprises of host countries and evaluated the TNC contribution to technology development.(7) The other considered the role of TNCs in the electronics industries of member States of the Association of South-East Asian Nations.(8)

In 1987, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on TNCs a report on transborder data flows(9) and a summary of selected technical papers.(10)

TNCs and international economic relations

In a January 1987 report to the Commission on TNCs,(11) the Secretary-General reviewed developments related to TNCs and international economic relations. The report described the state of the global economy and, within that context, examined macro-economic evidence on the activities of TNCs, focusing on the growing importance of the United States as a host country, the rapid evolution of Japan as a home country, the continuing lack-lustre nature of flows to developing countries and the emergence of China as an important host developing country. The report examined factors influencing the supply of foreign investment and discussed ways in which TNCs were adjusting their strategies to respond to the economic circumstances of the 1980s. Particular attention was given to the impact of competitive pressures, the role of technology and the trend towards increased global oligopoly.

The final section of the report focused on two issues of emerging importance: foreign direct investment as a substitute for official development assistance or commercial bank lending; and the role that domestic policies of developing countries regarding foreign investment might have on the attitudes of TNCs towards investment in their economies.

In April,(12) the Commission took note of the report and asked the Secretary-General to prepare for its 1988 session a further study on the subject, to be based on Transnational Corporations in World Development: Fourth Survey and taking into account comments made at the 1987 session.

By decision 1987/138 of 28 May, the Economic and Social Council asked the Secretary-General to make his report available to it at its June/July session.

Technical co-operation

During 1987, the Centre on TNCs completed or initiated 107 advisory and information projects in developing countries. Of those, 66 were related to policies, laws and institutional arrangements for foreign investment and technology transfer, either overall (35 projects) or pertaining to the specific sectors of petroleum, mining, forestry and tourism or to issues such as transfer pricing, technology transfer, free trade zones and capital market development. The others concerned the negotiation of contractual arrangements with TNCs in specific sectors. Of the total, 40 were in Africa, 41 in Asia and the Pacific, 23 in Latin America and the Caribbean and 3 in Arab States.

The Centre assisted four developing countries in Asia and Africa to assess their regulatory and administrative systems for foreign investment. Each assessment analysed recently approved and non-approved foreign investment projects and the process followed by the Government in negotiating with investors. The objective of each assessment was to assist the Government to compete for economically beneficial investments from TNCs.

The Centre received a growing number of requests for assistance in negotiating hotel management, telecommunications, construction and other agreements. In one African country, it organized a training programme for government legal officials on the pitfalls of negotiating contracts with TNCs. In an Asian country, it assisted the Government in renegotiating construction and service contracts with a TNC for a $1 billion project.

The Centre also carried out 20 training projects—15 workshops and seminars and 5 study tours and fellowships. New teaching materials and methods were introduced to provide national investment authorities with practical and analytical skills.

In a report to the Commission,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General examined the experience gained by the Centre in its technical co-operation programme, with particular reference to the evolution of pragmatic host country policies and institutional mechanisms relating to TNCs and the implications of such measures. The report focused on the petroleum and hard-rock mining industries.

In April,⁽¹²⁾ the Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit to it in 1988 a detailed report on the Centre's technical co-operation activities, taking into account views expressed at the 1987 session).

Financing

The Centre's technical co-operation programme continued to be financed mainly by extra-budgetary resources from the Centre's Trust Fund and allocations from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).⁽¹⁴⁾ Total extra-budgetary resources in 1987 amounted to $3,507,744. Contributions to the Trust Fund were $801,011. The Fund's opening balance was $1,120,834 and interest income amounted to $70,000; resources made available by UNDP totalled $1,515,899.

Total 1987 expenditures amounted to $2,489,892, of which advisory projects accounted for $1,286,991 and workshops and other training activities $835,003.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/C.10/1987/4 & Corr.1. (2)YUN 1986, p. 527, ESC res. 1986/53, 22 July 1986. (3)E/C.10/1987/14. (4)Transnational Corporations and Non-fuel Primary Commodities in Developing Countries (ST/CTC/64), Sales No. E.87.II.A.17. (5)Licence Agreements in Developing Countries: An Analysis of Key Provisions (ST/CTC/78), Sales No. E.87.II.A.21. (6)Foreign Direct Investment, the Service Sector and International Banking (ST/CTC/SER.A/7), Sales No. E.87.II.A.15. (7)Technology Acquisition under Alternative Arrangements with Transnational Corporations: Selected Industrial Case-studies in Thailand (ST/CTC/SER.A/6), Sales No. E.87.II.A.14. (8)Transnational Corporations and the Electronics Industries of ASEAN Economies (ST/CTC/SER.A/5), Sales No. E.87.II.A.13. (9)E/C.10/1987/11. (10)E/C.10/1987/10. (11)E/C.10/1987/2. (12)E/1987/22. (13)E/C.10/1987/9. (14)E/C.10/1988/3.

OTHER PUBLICATIONS

Transnational Corporations and Technology Transfer: Effects and Policy Issues (ST/CTC/86), Sales No. E.87.II.A.4. National Legislation and Regulations relating to Transnational Corporations, Vol. VI (ST/CTC/71), Sales No. E.87.II.A.6. Transnational Corporations: A Selective Bibliography, 1983-1987, Vol. I (ST/CTC/76, Vol. I), Sales No. E/F.88.II.A.9; Vol. II (ST/CTC/76, Vol. II), Sales No. E/F.88.II.A.10. Transnational Corporations in the Man-made Fibre, Textile and Clothing Industries (ST/CTC/63), Sales No. E.87.II.A.11.

Chapter VII

Regional economic and social activities

At a time of continuing economic crisis in some regions, and economic uncertainty in others, accompanied by increasing social pressures and fast-paced technological and scientific advances, the five regional commissions of the United Nations continued in 1987 to promote economic and social development and co-operation.

Four of the five commissions held a regular intergovernmental session during the year: the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), its forty-second session at Geneva (31 March-10 April); the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), its forty-third session at Bangkok, Thailand (21-30 April); the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the thirteenth meeting of its Conference of Ministers and the twenty-second session of the Commission, at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia (23-27 April); and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), its fourteenth session at Baghdad, Iraq (4 and 5 April). The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) held a special conference at Mexico City (19-23 January).

Among the resolutions and decisions adopted in 1987 by the Economic and Social Council involving issues of concern to the regional commissions were: a proposed international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa (resolution 1987/67), a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar (1987/69), the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1987/70), human and financial resources of ESCWA (1987/68) and Israel's proposed membership in ECE (decision 1987/164).

The Council, by decision 1987/188 of 9 July, took note of a number of documents, including the summaries of the economic and social surveys in 1986 of Africa,(1) Asia and the Pacific,(2) Europe,(3) Latin America and the Caribbean,(4) and Western Asia.(5)

The General Assembly adopted resolutions on co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (42/181) and between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System (42/12).

Topics related to this chapter. Development policy and international economic co-operation: economic and social trends and policy. Operational activities for development. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief. Food. Environment.

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1986, p. 532. (2)Ibid., p. 546. (3)Ibid., p. 555. (4)Ibid., p. 561. (5)Ibid., p. 568.

Regional co-operation

The executive secretaries of the five regional commissions, meeting at Bangkok on 12 and 13 February 1987 under the chairmanship of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, reviewed progress made in promoting interregional economic and technical co-operation, as called for by the Economic and Social Council in 1983(2) and by the General Assembly in 1984.(3) They reaffirmed the continuing need to implement the Assembly's 1977 recommendation(4) concerning the role of the regional commissions as catalysts and the main centres of policy analysis and expertise in their regions.

In a June 1987 report to the Council on regional co-operation,(1) the Secretary-General described the work of the commissions and the meeting of their executive secretaries, and drew attention to issues and decisions of the commissions calling for Council action or attention.

He noted that in response to Council decisions the commissions had taken concrete steps in recent years to expand existing arrangements for continuous exchanges between them to promote interregional co-operation. As a basis for such co-operation, the executive secretaries had defined a common approach and a co-ordinated programme of activities whereby joint activities were to be concentrated on promoting and supporting interregional economic and technical co-operation. The preparatory phase of the programme included the setting up of 20 projects to promote such co-operation among developing countries. Each commission, with the exception of ECE, was assigned the role of lead agency for specific projects. At their February meeting, the executive secretaries decided that each lead regional commission should select two projects for priority execution and that the selected projects would be submitted, in a package, to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) for possible financing.

On 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/169, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

UN intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields

In response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution(5) and decision 1987/112 of the Economic and Social Council establishing a Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields, four of the regional commissions took action related to the work of the Special Commission. ECE(6) set up an ad hoc committee to review its own structure and functions. ECA(7) approved the decision of some of the Councils of Ministers of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres to meet on a biennial basis and recommended that the Councils of the remaining Centres do the same.

ESCAP(8) decided to reduce its nine legislative committees to seven, which would meet once in every two years for five working days. ESCWA(9) decided that its regular sessions and the meetings of its Technical Committee should be held on a biennial basis instead of every year.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/1987/79. (2)YUN 1983, p. 418, ESC res. 1983/66, 29 July 1983. (3)YUN 1984, p. 402, GA res. 39/216, 18 Dec. 1984. (4)YUN 1977, p. 438, GA res. 32/197, 20 Dec. 1977. (5)YUN 1986, p. 1024, GA res. 41/213, 19 Dec. 1986. (6)E/1987/79 (dec. B(42)). (7)Ibid. (res. 618(XXII)). (8)Ibid. (res. 262(XLIII)). (9)Ibid. (res. 162(XIV)).

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa held its twenty-second session (thirteenth meeting of its Conference of Ministers) from 23 to 27 April 1987 at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia,(1) where it focused on a review of progress made and constraints encountered in the overall socio-economic development and growth of the region, and on an assessment of the degree of implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD).(2)

Other major issues considered were the mobilization of financial and technological resources for food and agriculture in Africa, mobilization of resources for implementation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990), trade and development, the integration of women in development, natural resources exploration and exploitation and environmental protection, the social, cultural and human dimensions of the development process in Africa, economic planning and management, and the mobilization of domestic financial resources for economic and social development.

The Conference adopted 34 resolutions, dealing with, among other things, the new orientation being given by ECA to the promotion of integration projects in basic sectors and the role of Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MULPOCs) in fostering subregional economic co-operation; the Addis Ababa Declaration of African Ministers Responsible for Trade and Development Preparatory to the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD VII) (see p. 466); proposals on streamlining and rationalizing the intergovernmental structure of the Commission, to be submitted to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (see p. 949); and an appeal to the General Assembly to ensure adequate resources for ECA, especially in view of the important role it was expected to play in implementing UNPAAERD.

Among other resolutions submitted to the Economic and Social Council for action were those dealing with industrial development in Africa, the integration of women in development in Africa and international mobilization of financial and technological resources for food and agriculture in Africa.

Major ECA meetings during 1987 included the Joint Intergovernmental Committee on Human Settlements and Environment (fourth meeting, Addis Ababa, 9-13 February), the Conference of African Ministers of Trade (ninth session, Addis Ababa, 19 and 20 April) and the Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries (seventh meeting, Addis Ababa, 21 and 22 April).

Economic and social trends

In its survey of economic and social conditions in Africa during 1986-1987,(3) ECA reported that socio-economic conditions had changed from the situation of uniform disaster that characterized the previous biennium to one that was distinctly, though marginally, better. However, sluggish performance, marked by an increase in overall output of only 0.8 per cent, in the face of high rates of unemployment and population growth, led to a further deterioration in overall living standards.

In 1987, economic performance was uniformly poor in the oil-exporting as well as non-oil-exporting countries. The latter countries registered an overall 1.6 per cent rate of growth in total output, while in the former output barely expanded at 0.3 per cent. The return of drought conditions in several areas of the region was responsible for the poor economic performance in the non-oil-exporting countries, while weak demand for oil and the reduction in production levels as a result of a restrictive OPEC quota policy were the major factors behind the poor showing in the oil-exporting countries.

Given the importance of the agriculture sector, and the fact that it grew at modest rates in 1985 and 1986, the negligible 0.5 per cent expansion it registered in 1987 was viewed as a serious setback. The export sector, meanwhile, registered a 15.1 per cent increase to $75.3 billion in 1987, which compared favourably with the drop in total export value experienced in 1986 following the virtual collapse in oil prices that year. The export rise in 1987 was largely due to the increase in oil prices.

The debt burden continued to be the most critical factor in the prevailing regional economic crisis. In 1987, the region's total external debt rose to an estimated $218.2 billion, with sub-Saharan Africa accounting for 54.2 per cent of that total. In 1987, the debt service ratio for the region as a whole was 35.8 per cent of the value of exports of goods and services. A number of countries faced scheduled debt servicing in excess of 50 per cent of export earnings. These factors occurred at a time when the developed countries' demand for primary commodities of interest to Africa was in substantial decline and the inflow of official development assistance, in real terms, was either stagnating or in decline. Net flows of direct foreign investment were also declining.

In the social field, population, education and health were among the issues highlighted in the survey. The population of developing Africa increased by almost a quarter between 1980 and 1987 to about 553 million, implying an annual rate of growth of 3.1 per cent, one of the highest growth rates in the world. Despite measures adopted by an increasing number of African countries to deal with the population problem, including implementation of the Kilimanjaro Programme of Action for African Population and Self-Reliant Development,⁽⁴⁾ progress in overcoming it was still slow.

In the education field, a major problem was the fact that it had not been properly aligned with the employment needs of the region. In accordance with the recommendations contained in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery, 1986-1990 (APPER), adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in 1985,⁽⁵⁾ many Governments had reformed school curricula, redirecting their educational systems with a view to meeting the real needs of the economy in key sectors such as agriculture and industry.

Activities in 1987

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

During 1987, ECA continued to strengthen and support MULPOCS by assigning to them more headquarters staff so that they were more able to respond effectively to requests from their respective subregions. The main development issues pertaining to each subregion were discussed at 10 meetings of the MULPOC Councils of Ministers.

ECA continued to provide assistance to the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS), the Economic Community of the Great Lake Countries and other subregional organizations and institutions in the development of their economic activities. In particular, assistance was given to these bodies and to the river and lake basin commissions and authorities to enable them to play an effective role in the implementation of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos,⁽⁶⁾ APPER and UNPAAERD. ECA also collaborated with UNDP and the above-mentioned bodies in drafting project documents for funding by UNDP during its fourth programming cycle, 1987-1991.

In 1987, ECA prepared technical publications on a joint ECA/ITU manpower and training needs survey in telecommunications for ECOWAS countries; a study on improving meteorological telecommunications in Africa in order to improve the African section of the Global Telecommunications System, in collaboration with the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) and the Federal Republic of Germany; and the economic impact of modern technology in African telecommunications networks and services.

In its continued assistance to intergovernmental organizations, ECA executed the UNDP-financed project on assistance to ECCAS. Technical assistance was also given to the Working Party of the African Governors of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (Addis Ababa, 4-6 August).

Collaboration continued to be maintained with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), within the framework of the system-wide medium-term environment programme (SWMTEP). As of 31 December 1987, UNEP had provided support to strengthen the capabilities of the Environment Section of the Commission and programme support for environmental training. As a result, ECA was able to organize workshops with ECA-sponsored intergovernmental institutions on incorporating environmental components into their training programmes.

Two technical consultative meetings on development and health were held with the World Health Organization (WHO) Regional Office for Africa, particularly within the context of the intersectoral and multidisciplinary approach to primary health care and Health for All by the Year 2000 programme. The secretariat, in collaboration with the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank, organized a senior policy seminar on Institutional Reforms for Development Management, in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 6 to 10 July 1987.

In his report for the biennium 1986-1987,(7) the ECA Executive Secretary stated that if the generally discouraging developments in the economies of African countries occurred during that period, it was not because African Governments did not implement the policy prescriptions in APPER and UNPAAERD. Indeed, some far-reaching reform measures were initiated and vigorously pursued during the biennium by most countries of the region to improve resource and macro-economic management, reorder priorities and enhance domestic resource mobilization for medium-term development.

Of particular importance had been the measures taken in favour of agriculture, where special assistance programmes for private small farmers had been initiated at the same time as subsidies on food and agricultural inputs were reduced. In the industrial sector, similar measures had been taken by a number of countries in respect of incentive structures, including especially the rationalization of tariffs, licensing restrictions on imports, investment subsidies, and the revision of investment codes and interest rate and wage policies.

The International Conference on Africa: the Challenge of Economic Recovery and Accelerated Development was convened at Abuja, Nigeria, from 15 to 19 June 1987.(8) The Conference reviewed progress made in the implementation of APPER and UNPAAERD and came to the conclusion that the prospects for recovery depended on the concentration of efforts on issues such as sustenance of domestic policy reforms, continuation of the efforts to improve economic management, amelioration of the debt burden, and intensification of the search for the solution to commodities problems.

In a report on activities undertaken by the United Nations system in implementation of UNPAAERD,(9) it was stated that a United Nations inter-agency task force on the follow-up of UNPAAERD at the regional level, set up in October 1986, had met on 24 and 25 March 1987 at Dakar, Senegal. On 2 April, the Secretary-General announced the formation of a special group of "eminent persons" to advise him on the financial situation of the hard-pressed African countries which were facing a new crisis as a result of a steep decline in commodity prices. The group was to assess the financial situation of those countries and submit practical recommendations designed, within agreed programmes, to alleviate their financial burdens.

During 1987, organizations and agencies of the United Nations system initiated activities in support of UNPAAERD. For example, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) was in the process of actively reviewing its programmes to stress the components which were directly relevant to UNPAAERD, including education, science and technology, culture, communications, the social and human sciences and information. UNDP was reviewing and re-orienting its functions and operations in Africa to make them contribute more effectively to UNPAAERD; the fourth-cycle resources of $200 million for the sub-Saharan Africa regional programme were intended to be utilized on activities which corresponded directly to the priority areas of UNPAAERD.

ECA continued to assist its member States with implementing and monitoring UNPAAERD and initiating follow-up activities. A number of missions were mounted at the request of member States. Special attention was given to the priorities of UNPAAERD in the formulation of ECA'S proposed programme of work and priorities for 1988-1989.

On 24 April,(10) the Conference of Ministers of ECA urged member States to create and/or strengthen the mechanisms for the collection, processing, analysis and dissemination of all information required for the monitoring of UNPAAERD and APPER, and requested the Executive Secretary to prepare a more comprehensive report on their implementation in 1987, including an assessment of the contribution of the international community.

Development planning

During 1987, ECA provided member States with assistance in implementing their programmes in the area of development planning and public administration. In July, an advisory mission to the African Training and Research Centre in Administration for Development prepared a five-year programme of action on administrative reform and redynamization in Africa. Another advisory mission was undertaken (24 September-2 October) to the Kenya Institute of Administration to assist in the planning and organization of a Kenya Staff College seminar. A comprehensive situational review of the United Nations Institute for Namibia was also undertaken (Lusaka, Zambia, 24-30 October). ECA collaborated with the Commonwealth Secretariat in organizing a subregional workshop for heads of management training institutions in West Africa (Topo-Badagry, Nigeria, 2-6 November).

ECA also participated in drawing up a Special Action Programme for Administration and Management in Africa. It prepared a technical publication on strengthening government expenditure control effectiveness in the United Republic of Tanzania.

During 1987, ECA continued to strive to achieve the full integration of women in development. Special emphasis was given to measures recommended by the 1984 Arusha Strategies⁽¹¹⁾ and the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,⁽¹²⁾ as well as UNPAAERD. Advisory services were provided to national machineries in Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, the Niger, Senegal and Somalia to ensure that multisectoral programmes and projects formulated at the country level reflected women's needs. A study on the participation of Ghanaian women in development as agents and beneficiaries and a survey on women in Mauritius were carried out. A study on women as small-scale entrepreneurs in Cameroon, Ghana and Zambia was published, while an evaluation of the ECA programme for the integration of women in development at the subregional level was carried out by a joint team from UNDP, the African Regional Co-ordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development and EGA.

Development planning activities were also carried out by the Pan-African Documentation and Information System (PADIS), which expanded both its system of data bases related to socioeconomic development and the network of institutions contributing to and utilizing the system. During the year, the number of records in the PADIS bibliographic development information system increased to 7,000. In the area of training, PADIS mounted training workshops and courses on information science and documentation for Ethiopia in May, and on the framework for participation in PADIS activities for trainees from Mauritius and Seychelles in September. In December, a PADIS data base was installed in Benin, and training was given to national staff for its maintenance and updating.

During 1987, agreement was reached for the establishment of a Central African Documentation and Information System at Kinshasa, Congo. Site preparation was undertaken and equipment installed to make the subregional centre for eastern and southern Africa at Lusaka and that for West Africa at Niamey, Niger, operational.

Advisory missions were undertaken by PADIS to Cape Verde, Djibouti and Malawi. PADIS played a major role in the evaluation of the Automated System for Customs Data, including a field visit to Togo. Several meetings were held to promote, the North African documentation and information system. Significant collaborative meetings were also held with the International Development Research Centre and with UNESCO towards elaborating joint or complementary work programmes.

On 24 April 1987,⁽¹³⁾ the Conference of Ministers of ECA called on member States and the international community to include PADIS in their pledges to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development and requested the United Nations specialized agencies to intensify their support to PADIS, particularly by making available the data bases and information products they generated to allow for wider dissemination in the region. It also requested the Executive Secretary of ECA to take the necessary measures to make information systems development and user services part of the activities to be financed from the United Nations regular budget, beginning with the 1990-1995 medium-term plan.

least developed countries

The Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries (LDCs) (seventh meeting, Addis Ababa, 21 and 22 April) reviewed the socioeconomic conditions in those countries and the progress achieved in the implementation of the 1981 Substantial New Programme of Action for LDCs⁽¹⁴⁾ in LDCs individually and collectively. The Conference also examined an in-depth study on the implications of structural adjustment and stabilization programmes on long-term growth and development in African LDCs.

On 24 April, the Conference of Ministers adopted two resolutions by which it: requested UNCTAD VII (see p. 465) to explore the possibilities of fully compensating the export earning shortfalls of LDCs;⁽¹⁵⁾ and urged IMF and the World Bank to provide an effective mechanism in support of African LDCs' currencies while they implemented structural adjustment and stabilization programmes.⁽¹⁶⁾

International trade and finance

The Conference of Ministers,⁽¹⁷⁾ on 24 April 1987, recognizing the functional role that the All-Africa Trade Fair could play in developing intra-African trade, approved 16 to 31 July 1988 as the duration of the fifth Fair and endorsed the "Promotion of intra-African trade: a factor for the integration of African economies" as the Fair's theme.

The Conference⁽¹⁸⁾ requested OAU, ECA and UNCTAD and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe to intensify their technical assistance activities in the area of promoting and diversifying Africa's external trade with non-traditional partners, in particular the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. It requested UNDP and those countries to allocate necessary resources to OAU, ECA and UNCTAD in order to implement fully their programmes of training, dissemination of information and advisory services at the national, regional and interregional levels.

The Conference,(19) noting that the Association of African Trade Promotion Organizations (AATPO) did not have the necessary resources to the extent required by its responsibilities and commitments, called on the OAU Secretary-General and the ECA Executive Secretary to give all possible financial and technical support to AATPO and to carry out the studies requested by the Conference of African Ministers of Trade (Addis Ababa, 19 and 20 April) on the harmonization of the activities of AATPO with those of ECA and the Federation of African Chambers of Commerce.

ECA'S programme of work and priorities during 1987 focused on the establishment of an African Monetary Fund and preparations for an international conference on Africa's external debt. ECA held high-level consultations with the World Bank, IMF, UNCTAD and the Commonwealth Secretariat to develop a common data base on the region's external debt and concepts for debt reporting. It also presented two papers, on Africa's debt projections and on a long-term perspective on external debt, for a meeting of heads of State and Government of OAU on the debt issue (Addis Ababa, 30 November and 1 December 1987).

Preferential trade areas

The Conference of Ministers, on 24 April 1987,(20) endorsed a decision of the Council of Plenipotentiaries of the Tangier-based MULPOC (seventh meeting, Tangier, Morocco, 27 and 28 March) regarding the creation of a subregional preferential trade area (PTA) and a payment and clearing arrangement for North Africa. The Council had requested the Executive Secretary of ECA to undertake measures to convene an intergovernmental negotiating team to discuss the modalities of the establishment of the proposed PTA.

The first meeting of an intergovernmental group of experts (Tangier, 9-11 December) formally established a negotiating team, examined the draft rules of procedure for the team, and discussed the protocols and supporting studies to be submitted to it by member States.

Transport and communications

During 1987, ECA activities in transport, communications and tourism centred around the following subprogrammes: general and multimodal transport problems; maritime and inland water transport and ports; land transport; air transport; tourism; and communications. An intergovernmental meeting of experts on port productivity was organized (29-31 October) at which the chief executives of African port authorities assessed the situation, examined the causes of low productivity and proposed measures for improvement, such as elimination of port congestion, upgrading of organizational structures as well as manpower and equipment for port operations.

In the field of inland water transport, ECA organized an Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on the Development of the Congo/Zaire River Basin (Kinshasa, 11-17 November) to review proposals designed to assist the Governments of the riparian States to co-operate in the planning and establishment of an appropriate body capable of ensuring the co-ordinated development of the basin. The African Highway Maintenance Conference (fourth meeting, Harare, Zimbabwe, 7-11 December) exchanged views and experiences on financial allocation and mobilization for road maintenance, organization and management of manpower, and equipment utilization and labour-intensive methods of road maintenance. ECA also organized the first meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Tourism (Kinshasa, November), at which the Ministers agreed on the creation of subregional and regional mechanisms for the joint promotion of African tourism.

On 24 April,(21) the Conference of Ministers requested the Executive Secretary of ECA, in collaboration with the Secretaries-General of UNCTAD, OAU, the Ministerial Conference of West and Central African States on Maritime Transport and the Intergovernmental Standing Committee on Shipping, and other interested organizations, to organize early in 1988 an intergovernmental meeting of African experts, prior to the Diplomatic Conference to review the United Nations Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences scheduled for 1989.

The Conference of Ministers(22) called on ECA member countries urgently to set up multidisciplinary sectoral national co-ordination committees for the Regional African Satellite Communications System feasibility study project, and to formulate national communication policies properly integrated within national development objectives.

The Conference(23) requested the Executive Secretary urgently to reactivate the Trans-African Highway Bureau in ECA. It requested UNDP to provide financial assistance during its fourth programming cycle for the establishment and operation of the Bureau.

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988)

In his annual report(24) to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on the implementation of the programme of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, the Secretary-General noted that with regard to the implementation of the programme for the second phase, 614 projects were monitored in 1986, as against 381 in 1985, an increase of 61 per cent. All United Nations specialized agencies and African intergovernmental organizations continued to contribute to the implementation of that programme.

A focus of the resource mobilization effort for the financing of the programme was the first co-financing meeting (Pointe-Noire, Congo, 3-5 November). Although three of the four countries whose projects were being considered by donors were unable to attend, for the one country that did participate the success rate was very high, as donors expressed interest in five out of six projects. In terms of money that represented 36.5 billion CFA francs out of a total cost of CFAF 41.9 billion, or over 80 per cent. The main contributors continued to be the World Bank (especially for road projects), with the African Development Bank (ADB) also making an impressive contribution.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1987/168 of 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, noted with satisfaction the achievements of all African countries in the implementation of all the resolutions previously adopted by the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning within the framework of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, which achievements would continue to be included among the accomplishments of the Decade.

In the Council's First (Economic) Committee, Morocco submitted, but later withdrew, a draft decision(25) by which the Council would have decided that future reports on the Decade should reflect achievements by all ECA members.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly, by decision 42/434, took note of several documents, including the Secretary-General's report on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa.

Europe-Africa link

In a March 1987 report on a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,(26) the Secretary-General noted that work on such a link should not be considered in isolation but in the general context of transport activities in the Mediterranean region. Morocco and Spain, he said, were pressing ahead with the technical work on the project, which ECA and ECE felt had advanced beyond the mere compilation and application of existing techniques and was helping to move existing technology forward.

While the two countries directly concerned should be left with the primary roles in the project, it would be advisable for the United Nations to become more directly involved in the studies, the Secretary-General stated. ECA and ECE felt that they, working in conjunction with the other parties concerned, were the right agencies for that purpose.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1987/69 without vote.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/57 of 30 July 1982, 1983/62 of 29 July 1983, 1984/75 of 30 July 1984 and 1985/70 of 26 July 1985,

Referring to the conclusions contained in the interim report prepared in compliance with those resolutions by the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe on the development of studies relating to the project for a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Welcoming the co-operation on the project between the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Governments of Morocco and Spain and centres for transport studies in the Mediterranean region,

Conscious of the importance of the project for the development of transport in the region and the consolidation of North-South relations,

Conscious also of the implications of the project for the promotion of scientific and technological research throughout the world,

1. Invites the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa to co-operate with the Governments of Morocco and Spain in establishing groups consisting of research institutes, industrial companies, construction enterprises and financial institutions to follow up and develop project studies;

2. Invites the countries concerned to co-operate with the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa with a view to integrating the project better in land transport networks in the Mediterranean region;

3. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe:

(a) To allocate as far as possible the resources necessary for the evaluation of studies and work relating to the project, with due consideration to the programme of work of the Economic Commission for Europe for 1988-1989;

(b) To submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1989, an interim report on the progress of studies and work relating to the project carried out in co-operation with the competent non-governmental organizations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/69

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/121) without vote, 2 July (meeting 22); 2-nation draft (E/1987/C.1/L.10), orally revised and further orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

Sponsors: Morocco, Spain.

Industrial development in Africa

In 1987, ECA, in collaboration with OAU and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), continued its activities in support of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) (1980-1990).⁽²⁷⁾ Those activities included the provision of advisory services, preparation of reports and technical publications and support of regional industrial development institutions.

ECA undertook field missions to the Congo, Gabon and Zaïre (13 March-3 April 1987) and Cameroon, the Central African Republic and Zaïre (2-26 December) to determine the modalities for co-operation in rehabilitating the Maluku steel plant in Zaïre within a multinational or subregional context. An advisory mission on the improvement of capabilities for formulating policies and strategies within the context of IDDA was also undertaken to Sao Tome and Principe (14-18 April). Another advisory mission to Botswana and Zimbabwe (17 October-6 November) facilitated consultations between the two Governments on implementing joint industrial ventures in the chemicals subsectors.

ECA also prepared background papers for the special session of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Addis Ababa, 15-17 October), which met to prepare an African position for the second regular session of the General Conference of UNIDO (Bangkok, 9-13 November).

Support in the development of the physical infrastructure of the African Regional Centre for Engineering Design and Manufacturing in Ibadan, Nigeria, provided in the context of a UNDP-financed project executed by ECA, led to the commissioning of the Centre in December. ECA also undertook a mission to ADB at Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, in March with a view to finding ways of mobilizing resources for the African Development Fund. In pursuance of a government request, advisory services were provided to Equatorial Guinea in April on the restructuring of the institutional framework within which the objectives of the programme for IDDA could be pursued.

In the area of development of basic industries, the focus of the programme was on the development of chemical, engineering and metal industries, as well as the promotion of subregional industrial co-operation. Advisory missions were undertaken to Burundi (16-22 June), Rwanda (23-30 June) and the Central African Republic (19-25 November) on pharmaceutical industry projects. Progress reports on the implementation of IDDA chemical projects were prepared and presented to a meeting of the Council of Ministers of the Niamey MULPOC (March 1987).

In order to assist African entrepreneurs in small-scale industries to improve their capability, advisory missions were undertaken to Botswana and Zambia in March, the Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire and Mauritius in April, and the Sudan and Uganda in November. A workshop on the promotion of small-scale industries was organized in Burundi in January in co-operation with the Gisenyi MULPOC. To add to inventories of the availability of selected mineral resources for the industrial development needs in the region, a technical publication on Africa's consumption of chloralkalis, soda ash, caustic soda, chlorine and aluminium sulphate was produced in December.

On 24 April, the Conference of Ministers of ECA, by an omnibus resolution on industrial development,⁽²⁸⁾ called for an independent mid-term evaluation of the implementation of the programme for IDDA; recommended that medium- and long-term measures at the national, subregional and regional levels should primarily focus on resource-based industries, especially those directly linked to agriculture; urged all members to strengthen or establish new national mechanisms to ensure a more effective promotion of industrial investment and support projects, and called on UNIDO to intensify its investment promotion activities in Africa; urged UNIDO and UNDP, as well as ADB, the World Bank and other African and international financial institutions, to increase the use of African non-governmental organizations and consultancy organizations in the preparation and execution of projects they financed in Africa; reiterated the priority accorded to the UNIDO system of consultations and urged all African countries and organizations to participate actively in the meetings organized within the framework of that system; and recommended the proclamation of an "African Industrialization Day" to be commemorated each year by all African countries.

The Conference of Ministers also recommended the proclamation of a second industrial development decade in order to accelerate further African industrialization, and requested UNIDO, ECA and OAU to undertake, after appropriate evaluation of the first Decade and in consultation with member States, African organizations and relevant United Nations agencies, the preparation of a programme for the second decade.

Morocco, on 6 July,⁽²⁹⁾ expressed reservations on the resolution which were connected to the question of which rules of procedure would apply in the event of a joint meeting between ECA and a regional intergovernmental organization and to participation in the work of such joint meetings, when the membership of the universal organization and that of the regional organization were not identical.

Again on 24 April, the Conference of Ministers,⁽³⁰⁾ expressing concern that the African Industrial Development Fund had not started operations for want of contributions, requested ADB to explore possibilities of mobilizing from multilateral and bilateral sources an initial amount of $15 million so as to enable the Fund to become operational.

The sixth joint progress report of ECA, OAU and UNIDO on the implementation of the programme for IDDA⁽³¹⁾ noted that the inadequacy of resources made available to ECA and UNIDO for IDDA continued to be a major obstacle to the full implementation of the programme. In keeping with the priority accorded in APPER to the attainment of food self-sufficiency, emphasis continued to be placed on the implementation of Decade programmes concerning the development and rehabilitation of agro- and agro-based industries. The report also reviewed activities in the area of manpower capabilities and managerial skills and the mobilization of financial resources.

On 11 December, the General Assembly by decision 42/434 took note of the sixth progress report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/159, authorized the Secretary-General to transmit directly to the General Assembly the report to be prepared by the Executive Director of UNIDO and the Executive Secretary of ECA on IDDA.

On 8 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1987/70 without vote.

Industrial Development Decade for Africa The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of resolution I(VII) of the Seventh Conference of African Ministers of Industry on the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, held at Addis Ababa from 26 to 28 March 1984,

Recalling resolution 8 adopted on 19 August 1984 by the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and Industrial Development Board resolution 57(XVIII) of 19 May 1984,

Taking note of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos, as well as resolution 442(XVII) of 30 April 1982 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa and General Assembly resolution 35/66 B of 5 December 1980, both concerning the formulation and implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Noting with regret that the allocation of $8.6 million for the Decade in the programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987 of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization was reduced to $2.7 million in view of resource constraints, and concerned about the financial constraints being experienced by that organization and the Economic Commission for Africa, which make the implementation of their Decade-related activities difficult,

Taking note of resolution CM/Res.1047(XLIV) adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-fourth ordinary session and resolution 564(XXI) of 19 April 1986 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa,

Taking into consideration the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, adopted by the General Assembly at its thirteenth special session, in which the socio-economic problems of Africa were reviewed critically and specific measures for restructuring and rehabilitating the economies of African countries were presented,

Recognizing the crucial role that the industrial sector, as a supplier of major factor inputs, has to play in Africa's economic recovery and development, within the context of the programme for the Decade, as emphasized in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery, 1986-1990, and the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Mindful of the fundamentally important link between industry and agriculture in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery, 1986-1990, and of the vital contribution which the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa would make to food production and the rehabilitation of agriculture in Africa,

Reiterating the commitment of the region to transform, through the process of industrialization, the structure of its economies, which are currently overly dependent on the export of primary commodities,

Concerned at the persistent economic crisis facing the continent and the serious constraints that hamper the industrial development of the region, including the shortage of the skills, technological capability and financial resources required and the lack of a well-integrated network of strategic and core industries necessary for the implementation of the programme for the Decade,

Welcoming the conversion of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization into a specialized agency and the decision to convene the second session of the General Conference of that organization at Bangkok in November 1987,

Stressing the need to provide the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Economic Commission for Africa with adequate resources to support the programme for the Decade,

1. Urges Member States, African and international organizations and the secretariats of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to intensify their efforts to accelerate implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa during the remaining four years of the Decade;

2. Reiterates the importance and priority which African countries accord to the industrial sector in view of its fundamental role in the implementation of Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery, 1986-1990, and the full attainment of the objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos;

3. Appeals to the General Assembly to consider the possibility of providing the Economic Commission for Africa with adequate financial resources to enable it to carry out its activities related to the programme for the Decade, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolutions 1985/61 of 26 July 1985 and 1986/63 of 22 July 1986 and the relevant recommendations made by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-seventh session;

4. Notes the approval by the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization of the programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989, from which $8.6 million were allocated for the Decade, and expresses the hope that the General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization will confirm the allocation when it adopts the programme budget;

5. Appeals to the international community and multilateral funding agencies, especially the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and the African Development Bank, as well as bilateral and multilateral donor agencies, financing institutions and development foundations, to increase the flow of investment and technical assistance resources to the industrial sector in Africa to make it possible to implement national and subregional investments and support projects and to facilitate the implementation of the programme for the Decade;

6. Proposes that Member States, subregional and regional organizations and other international organizations should endeavour to ensure that the regional indicative planning figure for the fourth programming cycle contributes substantially to the accelerated implementation of Decade-related activities;

7. Calls for an independent mid-term evaluation of the implementation of the programme for the Decade as proposed at the Sixth Conference of African Ministers of Industry in resolution I(VI), and invites the United Nations Development Programme to consider financing that evaluation and to participate in its implementation in collaboration with the secretariats of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other relevant international bodies;

8. Urges the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the African Development Bank and other African and international financial institutions to increase the use of African non-governmental organizations and consultancy organizations, as appropriate, in the preparation and execution of the projects they finance in Africa;

9. Appeals to donor countries, financial institutions and relevant international organizations, especially the United Nations Development Programme, to provide the necessary catalytic resources to African Governments, subregional and regional institutions and economic groupings dealing with industrial matters so as to facilitate arrangements for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, which will assist in the implementation of the programme for the Decade;

10. Endorses the new orientation being given to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a result of its conversion into a specialized agency, thus enhancing its central co-ordinating role within the United Nations system on matters related to industry, in particular the priority being accorded to technical co-operation activities, development of industrial manpower, the system of consultations, small-scale and medium-scale industries, industrial rehabilitation, investment promotion, development of technological capabilities, technical co-operation among developing countries, greater involvement of non-governmental organizations and the private sector, and the integration of women in the industrialization process;

11. Takes note of the intention of the African countries to proclaim an Africa Industrialization Day, which would be observed each year by all African countries;

12. Recommends that, after appropriate evaluation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, the proclamation of a second such decade should be considered in order to accelerate further the industrialization of Africa, and requests the secretariats of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to undertake, in consultation with Member States, African organizations and the competent United Nations organizations, the preparation of a programme for a second decade, to be submitted to the Conference of African Ministers of Industry.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/70

8 July 1987

Meeting 35

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/121/Add.1) without vote, 6 July (meeting 25); draft by ECA (E/1987/79), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

Science and technology

ECA'S programme in science and technology continued to focus on policies and institutions, manpower development and utilization, and regional and interregional co-operation. The Commission carried out advisory missions to Senegal (30 September-4 October) and Benin (4-10 October) to help strengthen structures and operation of their national institutions for science and technology policy, and to the African Regional Centre for Technology (ARCT) (Dakar, Senegal, 7-11 April and 1-4 July) in order to finalize the technical content of a project document for UNDP funding during the fourth programming cycle.

ECA assisted in the organization and servicing of meetings of the subregional working groups of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development (Yaounde, Cameroon, 3-6 March; Dakar, 6-9 April). The meetings considered the need in the three focus areas designated by the Committee and identified priority projects for their respective subregions. ECA collaborated with OAU in the activities of the scientific committee for the first Congress of African Scientists (Brazzaville, Congo, 6 and 7 January). The Congress sought to mobilize the contribution of African scientists to the development of the region. In collaboration with ARCT, a training workshop was organized (Dakar, 9-13 February) on capacities in the acquisition of foreign technology for Africa.

A paper on inter-African and interregional scientific and technological co-operation was presented by ECA at the Second Conference of Ministers Responsible for the Application of Science and Technology for Development (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 6-15 July).

Environment

During 1987, ECA'S environment in Africa programme continued to focus on the development and strengthening of the capabilities of member States, particularly in the areas of pollution control, environmental protection and desertification control.

The fourth meeting of the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment (Addis Ababa, 9-13 February) considered the ECA programme of work and priorities in those fields and country reports on the national state of human settlements and the environment.

The Conference of Ministers of ECA,(32) on 24 April, established an African Centre of Meteorological Applications for Development to deal with all weather-related phenomena, such as drought, desertification and tropical cyclones, and to strengthen national capabilities in the processing and application of meteorological and hydrological data and information. The Centre was to be located in Niamey, Niger.

The Conference of Ministers(33) also adopted a number of recommendations in support of island countries of the south-western Indian Ocean in their efforts to forecast cyclones and to reduce the adverse effects of such disasters. The Conference called on ECA and United Nations specialized agencies, especially UNDRO, WMO, UNEP and UNCTAD, to take into account natural disasters and ecological hazards peculiar to the Indian Ocean zone, such as cyclones, floods, tidal waves, volcanic eruptions and marine pollution, when designing and implementing their programmes. It requested UNDP to include in the priorities selected for its fourth programming cycle in Africa the forecasting and reduction of the harmful effects of cyclones, floods and tidal waves. It also requested ECA member States to earmark for the island countries of the south-western Indian Ocean region funds from the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development.

Natural resources and energy

During 1987, ECA continued to provide technical and administrative support in the area of natural resources and energy to member States, as well as the Eastern and Southern African Mineral Resources Development Centre (ESAMRDC) at Dodoma, United Republic of Tanzania, and the Central African Mineral Resources Development Centre (CAMRDC) at Brazzaville.

ECA, in collaboration with government representatives of Mozambique, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, undertook an evaluation of the performance, capabilities and constraints of ESAMRDC. The evaluation led to the establishment of a capital development programme for the building of laboratories for the Centre. In co-operation with OAU, ECA provided advisory services to CAMRDC in an effort to improve its performance and achieve a higher rate of implementation of field projects. It also assisted CAMRDC in the convening of a symposium for French-speaking countries on small-scale gold mining, and a seminar for member States of the Central African subregion on geochemistry applied to mineral exploration.

During the year, ECA undertook a regional survey on copper and aluminium processing facilities and on the prospects for intra-African manufacture and trade in copper- and aluminium-based products.

Water and marine resources. During 1987, advisory services were provided to member States and river basin organizations. Assistance was provided to Chad in the assessment of its water resources. The Niger was helped in the preparation of a project proposal for external funding for the construction of water points for pastoral regions. Similar assistance in the preparation of a pre-investment study on costs of rural water supply was given to Burkina Faso and Mali.

River basin development in Africa featured prominently among ECA activities. It participated in an international seminar on water resources in the Lake Chad basin (Ndjamena, June) and in a workshop on development and the environment in the management of international drainage basins in Africa (Kisumu, Kenya, August). In November, member States of the Zaire basin were assisted in convening an intergovernmental meeting of experts to examine the establishment of a common basin organization that would be responsible for the overall integrated development and management of the basin.

On 24 April 1987, the Conference of Ministers of ECA(34) requested the Administrator of UNDP to provide ECA with the necessary financial resources to enable it to assist in the strengthening of existing and the creation of new viable river/lake basin organizations.

Energy In 1987, the energy programme centred on the integration of energy policies into overall socio-economic development and economic growth policies. Missions to West Africa (Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia, Sierra Leone), to assist with petroleum exploration, took place during May and June. Similar missions to eastern and southern Africa (Botswana, Madagascar, Swaziland, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe) dealt with the development of coal resources, while missions to Central Africa (Congo, Zaire) dealt with energy policies and the operational and organizational aspects of the utilization of energy resources.

In the area of research, training and information, a technical publication was prepared on an inventory of mini-hydropower potential in the member States of the Economic Community of the Great Lake Countries. Energy Review in Africa; which considered energy resources, production and consumption, current prices and future outlook, was also published and distributed to member States. ECA also prepared a report on the proposed establishment of an African Nuclear Energy Commission, which was circulated to other United Nations bodies for comment. A regional workshop on aspects of energy management in Africa was organized in November, with 27 experts from six member States participating. The workshop discussed the methodological instruments available to African countries for use in energy management, within the overall framework of national development plans. At the request of the Council of the African Regional Centre for Solar Energy, ECA prepared the work programme and budget of the Centre for 1988.

Cartography and remote sensing. During 1987, ECA assisted the Regional Centre for Training in Aerospace Surveys and the Regional Centre for Services in Surveying, Mapping and Remote Sensing in formulating and preparing project documents for UNDP funding during the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991). It appraised the manpower and material needs required to carry out a survey of Ghana and recommended measures for the rehabilitation of cartographic and related activities there. ECA also convened a seminar and study tour on the role of cartography and remote sensing in socio-economic development in Africa (Minsk, USSR, 24 August-6 September). The seminar, attended by representatives of 19 African countries, made a number of recommendations intended to bring about the centralization of national cartographic and remote sensing services for effective co-ordination, economy and judicious management of scarce resources.

On 24 April 1987, the Conference of Ministers⁽³⁵⁾ requested the Executive Secretary of ECA to convene in 1989 the seventh United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Africa.

Food and agriculture

During 1987, ECA, in close co-operation with FAO, performed a number of activities in the food and agriculture sector. Two reports on land-use policies and farming systems were completed and submitted to the ECA Conference of Ministers. The first covered Djibouti, Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan and stressed the fundamental role played by rain-fed and irrigated farming in the daily lives of rural communities in the four countries. The second report, covering Kenya, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia, analysed such problem areas as land degradation, grazing conflicts in agro-pastoralism, rangeland management and agroforestry development. It recommended the strengthening of member States' capacities in land-use planning as well as policy planning and analysis.

An ECA mission to Mauritius and the Comoros appraised their planning and policy approaches, including their capacity for implementing and monitoring investment programmes and projects and the performance of their agricultural statistical systems. A similar mission was mounted to Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia and Sierra Leone, with a view to advising them on how to improve the effectiveness of their statistical systems. As part of its efforts to enhance the efficiency of intergovernmental institutions, ECA also provided advisory services to the East and Southern African Management Institute for the organization of a course in agricultural policy formulation and analysis for senior government officials in the Lusaka MULPOC subregion.

ECA paid special attention to the strengthening of women's participation in agricultural development and food production. It undertook field missions to Madagascar and Mauritius with a view to identifying projects for expanding food production through increased productivity of women farmers. With the aim of improving agricultural institutions and services, a feasibility study on a subregional programme for production and distribution of selected seeds of rice, beans and soya was completed.

During 1987, ECA organized a technical workshop on the promotion and strengthening of co-operation in the agricultural sector in North Africa (Tangier, Morocco, 30 November-7 December). Among the topics discussed were subregional co-operation in agricultural research and plant protection and the adoption of common policies and strategies for cereals, livestock, fisheries and agricultural mechanization. A second meeting, on subregional co-operation in livestock development in West Africa for increasing animal food availability through prevention, reduction and elimination of losses and waste (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 7-12 December), arrived at a "framework for interventions" based on the pooling of resources for increased national and collective self-sufficiency in the production and supply of livestock inputs, services and products, and agreed on a master plan for reducing the waste and losses occurring in the subsector.

In response to requests by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, in 1983(36) and 1985(37) respectively, the Secretary-General submitted in June 1987 a report(38) on the possible designation of 1991 as an international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agriculture in Africa. He stated that the main immediate causes of the food crisis in Africa were policies and development strategies, both national and international, that had denied agriculture its priority place as an engine of development.

In his view, APPER provided the framework within which any programme of action for the rehabilitation and development of African agriculture must be focused. Broad areas for which enhanced financial resources were urgently needed and on which effort should be concentrated were: increased food production; arable land development and improvement; livestock and animal product development; mechanization; storage and marketing; agricultural research, manpower training and extension; water resource management and low-cost irrigation schemes; reforestation; and drought and desertification control. Summing up his observations, he considered it appropriate that further action on the 1983 Assembly resolution concerning an international year be taken in the context of implementation of UNPAAERD.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July 1987, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/67 without vote.

International year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned at the critical food and agricultural situation in Africa during the past two decades, as evidenced by the drastic decline in self-reliance in food,

Aware, however, of the improvement in the food situation in some countries during the past two years, owing to the improved weather conditions and policy measures taken in those countries,

Convinced of the need to rehabilitate African agriculture, especially by strengthening the foundation for sound development of the food sector,

Noting the success in food production achieved by some countries and hoping to eliminate hunger from the African continent totally and as soon as possible,

Recalling the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, adopted by the General Assembly at its thirteenth special session, which accords high priority to the food and agricultural sector, as envisaged in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery, 1986-1990, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first ordinary session,

Recognizing the critical need for sufficient financial resources to foster the growth of the agricultural sector in Africa,

Recognizing Also that the technological gap in Africa is directly related to declining agricultural productivity, which is aggravated by natural factors such as drought, desertification, floods and cyclones,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa,

Recognizing that the General Assembly, in its resolution 38/198 of 20 December 1983, noted that the year 1991 might be designated international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa, bearing in mind the relevant criteria set forth in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980,

1. Reaffirms the individual and collective commitment of African Governments and the international community to the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, with its focus on food and agriculture, as envisaged in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery, 1986-1990;

2. Requests the Economic Commission for Africa, in collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to take all necessary measures to facilitate and ensure effective co-operation among national and subregional research institutions in Africa;

3. Calls upon the international community to give high priority to the agricultural sector in Africa, in particular to agricultural research and the development of technology;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to consider making concrete proposals to the General Assembly that would be relevant to the international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/67

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/121) without vote, 3 July (meeting 23); draft by ECA (E/1987/79), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, by decision 42/434, took note of the Secretary-General's report on an international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa.

Population

The 1987 ECA population programme dealt with population policies and development planning, demographic analysis in the context of economic and social development planning, and regional training and research. Emphasis was placed on the provision of advisory services to member States, which included, among other things, assistance to sub-Saharan African countries in evaluating and analysing data from population censuses, surveys and registration.

ECA organized the second session of the Advisory Committee of the Population Information Network for Africa (Nairobi, November). It published African population newsletters, the 1987 Directory of African Statisticians and a specialized bibliography on the Sahel. In October, ECA organized a seminar (Addis Ababa) on development planning and demographic analysis in the case of Ethiopia. It continued managing the Regional Institute for Population Studies in Ghana, the Institut de formation et de recherche démographiques in Cameroon and the Sahel Institute in Mali.

Studies conducted during 1987 included: estimates and projections of African population trends as assessed in 1986; methodological problems in evaluating integrated maternal and child health/family planning programmes in Africa; impact of the changing pattern of family formation and structure on fertility trends in Africa; trends in infant and childhood mortality and their implications for population growth in African countries; a comparative evaluation and analysis of the 1980 round of African censuses; and guidelines for integrating population variables in development planning for ECA member States.

Human settlements

The Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment (fourth meeting, Addis Ababa, 9-13 February 1987) considered the ECA programme of work and priorities, as well as individual country reports on the state of human settlements and the environment.

On 24 April, the ECA Conference of Ministers(39) urged member States to remove institutional barriers to the efforts of poor and disadvantaged groups to improve their own shelter and neighbourhoods, and recommended that they promote community participation in human settlements planning, development and management and adopt policies and programmes that would enable the people to participate fully in meeting their own shelter and related needs.

Further, the Conference urged member States to promote policies conducive to the development of the construction sector. It requested the Executive Secretary, in co-operation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), to assist member States in promoting human resources development to meet the requirements of urban and rural settlements.

During 1987, ECA undertook a study on measures likely to facilitate the incorporation of human settlements development programmes into the overall socio-economic development process. Other studies dealt with institutional mechanisms for the formulation and implementation of human settlements policies in Africa, research programmes on human settlements planning for different environments in the region and programmes to promote institutionalized public participation systems in housing for low-income groups.

Human resources and social development

In the area of education and training for development, the focus of ECA remained on the orientation of educational policies, programmes and practices; non-formal education for integrated rural development; policies and capability development for effective co-ordination of training and career planning functions; the management of training and educational institution-building; and the administration of grants and fellowships.

A national workshop held in Lesotho (1-13 June) focused on the principles and methods of educational planning and curriculum development. A regional workshop (Malawi, 5-13 November), attended by 34 officials from 17 African countries, was aimed at improving the technical know-how of curriculum planners and developers.

In December, ECA produced two technical papers, one on educational planning and curriculum development, and the other on the nature, scope and organizational arrangements for occupational testing, guidance and counselling in Africa.

On 24 April 1987, the Conference of Ministers(40) called on all African Governments to provide greater financial support to the African institutions of higher learning and to provide special incentives to minimize the brain drain. It requested the United Nations, its specialized agencies and the international community to increase their assistance to higher education in Africa.

In the area of social development, ECA carried out research and undertook an evaluation of social welfare policies in Africa in the light of the requirements of APPER and UNPAAERD. A report entitled "social policies and programmes in the context of Africa's economic recovery and accelerated development" was submitted as a regional input to the global Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes (see p. 616).

By another 24 April resolution, the Conference of Ministers(41) called on member States to give high priority in their national development plans to social development policies and programmes, and requested the Executive Secretary to provide member States with the necessary support in the formulation of their programmes for the social development of Africa.

Pursuant to that resolution, ECA offered technical advisory services to Ghana and Sierra Leone on planning and strengthening social policies to cover in particular the needs of the poor and disadvantaged social groups. A study analysing the African social situation from 1982 to 1987 was also prepared for consideration by the Conference of Ministers in 1988.

Also on 24 April, the Conference⁽⁴²⁾ took note of the efforts by the United Nations Secretary-General and the ECA Executive Secretary which, in December 1986, had culminated in the establishment of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. It appealed for financial contributions to the Institute and co-operation with it, and urgently called on member States interested in offering host facilities to indicate their interest as soon as possible so that the Institute could move to a permanent site.

Women and development in Africa

ECA continued to play a catalytic, co-ordinating and disseminating role in striving to achieve the full integration of women in development. Efforts were concentrated on research and training activities designed to increase women's capabilities to enable them to play an active and efficacious role in national development. Special emphasis was given to measures recommended by the 1984 Arusha Strategies,⁽¹¹⁾ the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women⁽¹²⁾ and UNPAAERD⁽²⁾

Advisory services were provided to Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, the Niger, Senegal and Somalia to ensure that multisectoral programmes and projects formulated at the country level reflected women's needs. Two studies were carried out, on the participation of women in development as agents and beneficiaries in Ghana, and on women in Mauritius. Both studies were designed to provide planners and decision-makers with a data base for including women's needs in development plans. A survey involving a comparative assessment of the changing socio-economic conditions of women in Africa in the context of the Nairobi Strategies was also conducted.

Particular attention was paid to improving women's management and entrepreneurial skills in order to ensure the effective involvement of women in agricultural and industrial development. The African Training and Research Centre for Women organized a two-week study tour to Ghana (1-15 December 1987) for 16 business women and women project managers from the eastern and southern African subregions who shared the experience of Ghanaian women in developing small-scale enterprises, concerned particularly with the production, processing, preservation and marketing of foodstuffs. A management training seminar was organized from 11 to 16 May for the Gisenyi MULPOC subregion.

Two women from the Comoros and one from Djibouti were sent to Kinshasa, Zaire, for training in co-operative management. A workshop on measures to improve women's management skill was held at Nairobi (19-23 January).

In connection with UNDP's fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), ECA prepared three intersectoral project proposals dealing with the women's programme in MULPOCs; the informal sector (an inter-agency project); and the promotion of African women in scientific and technical fields. The eighth meeting of the Africa Regional Co-ordinating Committee (Addis Ababa, 10 and 11 April) considered the projects and made recommendations which resulted in the mounting of a UNDP/ARCC/ECA mission to evaluate and make proposals on the future of the programme for women in MULPOCs. A study was undertaken on the implementation in Africa of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.⁽⁴³⁾

On 24 April 1987, the Conference of Ministers of ECA⁽⁴³⁾ supported the planning of United Nations activities for the integration of women in development and requested the Secretary-General to lift the freeze on the posts of women experts responsible for implementing the work programme of regional and subregional machineries for the integration of women in development and to approve the recruitment of such experts from the ECA regular budget.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1987/66 without vote.

Integration of women in development in Africa The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the findings of the study undertaken by the African Training and Research Centre for Women on the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Considering the importance of planning women's activities within the United Nations and of relating such planning to women and development system-wide through the medium-term plan,

Taking note of resolution 579(XXI) of 19 April 1986 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa on women and development in Africa,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolutions 38/106 of 16 December 1983 on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and 39/127 of 14 December 1984 on senior women's programme officers posts at the regional commissions, by which the Assembly called for some positions to integrate women in development to be funded from the regular budgets of the regional commissions after 1985, the end of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Noting the recommendations made by the meetings of the subregional committees for the integration of women in development,

Bearing in mind the recommendations contained in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery, 1986-1990, and the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

1. Recommends those States which have not yet done so to consider acceding to and implementing the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in particular those parts which have to do with education, employment and political and economic activities, and urges women themselves to co-operate with their Governments in publicizing the Convention and including it in educational programmes;

2. Notes the study on the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the recommendations of that study;

3. Supports the planning of activities for the integration of women in development taking place within the United Nations system;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to ensure that sufficient expertise is made available to the Economic Commission for Africa for the implementation of the work programme of regional and subregional machinery for the integration of women in development and that posts within the regular budget of the Commission are reassigned to that important function;

5. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to ensure that projects related to the integration of women in development are devised in consultation and co-ordination with the councils of ministers or plenipotentiaries of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Africa Regional Co-ordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/66

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/121) without vote, 3 July (meeting 23); draft by ECA (E/1987/79), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

Statistics

During 1987, ECA continued to assist African countries to develop and strengthen their censuses and surveys, as well as demographic, social, international trade and basic economic statistics.

Under the Statistical Training Programme for Africa (STPA), ECA prepared and disseminated directories of STPA and associate centres, and of non-STPA centres (second editions), as well as STPA News (Nos. 10-13). The fifth meeting of directors of centres participating in STPA (Addis Ababa, 26-30 October) made recommendations on technical and financial assistance in the field of statistical training and the work programme for 1987-1991.

A working group meeting on recommendations for the 1990 round of population and housing censuses in Africa (Addis Ababa, 18-22 May) was attended by experts from 19 African countries. A training workshop on census-taking for English-speaking African countries (Addis Ababa, 5-21

October) was attended by senior officials of statistics/census offices who were expected to play an active role in the 1990 round. Two working group meetings on organization, content and methodology of household surveys were held at Addis Ababa, one for French-speaking (9-13 November) and another for English-speaking (16-20 November) countries.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

ECA work programme, financing and staffing

On 24 April 1987, the ECA Conference of Ministers(44) endorsed the work programme and priorities of ECA for 1988-1989. It called on the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) to consider those proposals favourably and to recommend, through the Economic and Social Council, their adoption by the General Assembly at its 1987 session. It also appealed to the Secretary-General to give special consideration to ECA when implementing his savings measures, particularly by allowing more posts to be filled by recruitment and increasing the allocation for travel and consultancy services. It requested the Chairman of the 1987 ECA session to take the matter up directly with the Secretary-General and to take all other necessary measures in CPC, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

Also on 24 April, the Conference(45) appointed an open-ended ad hoc committee to look into ECA'S draft medium-term plan for 1990-1995 and prepare recommendations to be sent to the Secretary-General on its behalf.

The Executive Secretary of ECA, in his biennial report on administrative and staffing questions,(46) noted that as a result of the system-wide economy measures, the allotments received for the first six months of 1987—$9,084,500—were even lower than the reduced resources provided to the ECA in 1986; there was no reason to hope that the allotment for the second half of the year would be higher.

With regard to staffing, he noted that ECA had continued its Africanization policy. At the end of 1986, 158 (86 per cent) Professional posts subject to geographical distribution were held by Africans, while 26 (14 per cent) were held by non-Africans; in the General Service category, the number of posts occupied by Africans was 526 (96.5 per cent), as against 18 (3.5 per cent) from non-African countries.

Date and venue of 1988 sessions

On 24 April 1987, the Conference of Ministers accepted by acclamation the invitation of the Niger to host the twenty-third session of ECA/fourteenth meeting of the Conference at Niamey from 26 to 29 April 1988, preceded by the ninth meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole from 18 to 25 April. To observe the thirtieth anniversary of its establishment in 1988, the Commission proposed a programme of activities to commemorate the event at the national, subregional and regional levels.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted decision 1987/167 without vote.

Venue of the twenty-third session of the Economic Commission for Africa and the fourteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers of the Commission

At its 35th plenary meeting, on 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, taking into account paragraph 4 (f) of section I of General Assembly resolution 31/140 of 17 December 1976 and taking note with appreciation of the offer of the Government of Niger to act as host to the twenty-third session of the Economic Commission for Africa and the fourteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers of the Commission, decided that the twenty-third session of the Economic Commission for Africa and the fourteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers should be held at Niamey from 26 to 29 April 1988, in accordance with paragraph 5 of section I of Assembly resolution 31/140.

Economic and Social Council decision 1987/167

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/121) without vote, 2 July (meeting 22); oral proposal by Chairman based on Secretary-General's report (E/1987/79); agenda item 8.

Conference facilities

In a September 1987 report⁽⁴⁷⁾ on revised estimates under section 32 (Construction, alteration, improvement and major maintenance of premises) of the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget, the Secretary-General reviewed developments since 1985 in the expansion of conference facilities of ECA at Addis Ababa. On the basis of a technical assessment carried out by the Office of General Services and an ECA technical panel, a reduction of approximately 51 to 57 per cent in total seating for all conference rooms at ECA headquarters was proposed. The total project cost was calculated to be between $40 million and $45 million, with awarding of construction contracts scheduled for January-April 1990 and completion of construction scheduled for February 1993.

Multinational Programming and Operational Centres

On 24 April 1987,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Conference of Ministers supported the adoption of an economic integration approach which gave priority to structural transformation in Africa's subregions and requested MULPOCs to bring all available subregional expertise to bear on the effective implementation of subregional economic integration programmes.

In 1987, meetings of MULPOCs were held at Ouagadougou (10-17 February), Kinshasa (2-7 March), Lusaka (7-13 March), Tangier (24-28 March) and Addis Ababa (13-22 April).

Co-operation between UNDP and ECA

In a January 1987 report on technical co-operation between UNDP and the regional economic commissions,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) noted that since 1977 UNDP had maintained a Liaison Office at Addis Ababa to help ECA design and develop programmes, draft projects and work smoothly with UNDP. However, UNDP had not really involved ECA in the preparation of regional or country programmes, thus confining ECA to a peripheral role when in fact it should have been at the centre.

According to the JIU Inspector, one of the immediate consequences of the situation was that specialized agencies deluged Governments and UNDP with sectoral projects of questionable social usefulness and of a strictly national nature; this situation encouraged States to close in on their national interests rather than remaining open to regional approaches. In order to ensure ECA'S participation in the country programming process, it was necessary that the existing regulation whereby the Commission could approach Governments only at their request be reviewed and that UNDP increasingly invite the Commission to assist Governments in programme and project preparation. With regard to financing, the Inspector noted that most of the regional technical assistance programme implemented by ECA was financed from UNDP funds or other sources of financing under UNDP supervision; however, as UNDP'S programme funding had had to be cut by 55 per cent during the third programming cycle (1982-1986), a stricter management of available resources was called for.

The Inspector noted that UNDP'S Liaison Office had helped ECA understand and follow UNDP procedures and solve a number of minor practical problems; however, it was not very useful in operational matters due to a lack of responsibilities delegated to it from UNDP headquarters. The Inspector concluded that it would be useful to revise the Office's terms of reference in order to broaden its authority and make it more operational. He also urged that a greater effort be made to give UNDP resident representatives more responsibility in the area of regional programmes and projects.

The Inspector made 11 specific recommendations concerning activities of ECA and UNDP.

In his comments on them,(50) the Secretary-General agreed with the need to strengthen the capacity of the ECA Technical Assistance Coordinating Office and enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of MULPOCs. He supported the view that close contacts between ECA, UNDP and the Governments concerned were necessary to ensure a desirable consistency of programmes at the regional and national levels. He pointed out that there was an agreement between UNDP and ECA for UNDP resident representatives to assume the role of ECA representatives and that resident representatives regularly visited ECA.

The Secretary-General disagreed, however, with the recommendation that ECA should redefine its programmes and refocus its activities on its role as principal co-ordinator of development activities in Africa and on its role in designing and implementing multisectoral programmes or projects; that recommendation, the Secretary-General noted, was not in line with the existing mandate of the regional commissions. He also disagreed with the recommendation that UNDP should recognize that ECA had the main responsibility for the implementation of multisectoral projects; existing legislation, he noted, clearly stated that regional commissions acted as executing agents in areas which did not fall within the purview of the sectoral responsibilities of specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies.

With reference to the Inspector's finding that maintaining two different regional bureaux within UNDP, one for Arab States and another for Africa, made for a dispersion of efforts and resources to the detriment of ECA and its member States, the Secretary-General noted that the recommendation that UNDP should bear in mind the oneness of the African continent in terms of programming and the allocation of resources raised essentially a political question and that, from a managerial point of view, no arguments had been advanced by the Inspector which would justify a change in structure.

Co-operation between SADCC and the United Nations

In August 1987,(51) the Secretary-General outlined the various stages of co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) and reviewed steps taken by organizations of the United Nations system to develop co-operative arrangements with SADCC, including steps taken by ECA. He noted that although ECA had kept in close contact with SADCC, owing to major resource constraints only links of a consultative nature could be maintained and developed. Among other organizations maintaining close contact with SADCC was the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD). According to the Secretary-General, IFAD projects in SADCC member States to date amounted to $300 million, with $150 million contributed by IFAD. In addition, IFAD extended support to SADCC member States through its special programme for African countries affected by drought and desertification (SPA). To date, pledges by 17 industrialized countries, EEC, the Niger and Mauritania amounted to just over two thirds of the SPA target of $300 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/181 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/248 of 21 December 1982, 38/160 of 19 December 1983, 39/215 of 18 December 1984 and 40/195 of 17 December 1985, in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to promote co-operation between the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and urged intensification of contacts in order to accelerate the achievement of the objectives of the Lusaka Declaration of 1 April 1980, by which the Conference was established,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference,

Noting the significant progress made by the Conference in formulating concrete development programmes and in implementing them under its Programme of Action,

Reaffirming its recognition that successful implementation of these development programmes can be achieved only if the Conference has adequate resources at its disposal,

Concerned that the gap that still exists between the needs and the resources available to the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference continues to widen,

Deeply concerned about the deteriorating economic and security situation in southern Africa and the particularly difficult environment for regional co-operation caused by acts of destabilization committed by South Africa,

Reaffirming that increased self-reliance by States members of the Conference would contribute to the struggle against the apartheid policies of South Africa,

Welcoming the progress made by some organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in working out mechanisms for formulating and executing co-operation programmes with the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General which describes the progress made in the implementation of the resolutions of the General Assembly dealing with co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference;

2. Commends the Member States and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that have extended concrete assistance to the Conference and expresses appreciation to those that have established contacts and relationships with it;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the considerable achievements that the Conference has made since its founding in implementing projects covering all the major sectors of co-operation, in spite of difficulties due to South African destabilization policies and acts of aggression;

4. Renews its appeal to the international community to increase substantially its financial, technical and material support to the Conference in order to enable it to implement fully its expanded programmes, which now include intra-regional trade and investment in production;

5. Also appeals to the specialized agencies and other organs and organizations of the United Nations system to continue to co-operate fully in the development programmes of the Conference;

6. Invites the donor community and other co-operating partners to participate at a high level in the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference Annual Consultative Conference, to be held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, in January 1988;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Secretary of the Conference, to continue to intensify contacts aimed at promoting and harmonizing co-operation between the United Nations and the Conference;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/181

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.4) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); 28-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.55); agenda item 82 (d). Sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Austria, Botswana, Brazil, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guatemala, Italy, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Mauritania, Morocco, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 34, 38, 39, 43; plenary 96.

REFERENCES

(1)E/1987/36. (2)YUN 1986, p. 446, GA res. S-13/2, annex, 1 June 1986. (3)E/1988/60. (4)YUN 1984, p. 616. (5)YUN 1985, p. 499. (6)YUN 1980, p. 548. (7)E/ECA/CM.14/3. (8)A/42/410. (9)E/ECA/CM.13/5. (10)E/1987/36 (res. 603(XXII)). (11)YUN 1984, p. 618. (12)YUN 1985, p. 937. (13)E/1987/36 (res. 600(XXII)). (14)YUN 1981, p. 406. (15)E/1987/36 (res. 594(XXII)). (16)Ibid. (res. 595(XXII)). (17)Ibid. (res. 590(XXII)). (18)Ibid. (res. 591(XXII)). (19)Ibid. (res. 592(XXII)). (20)Ibid. (res. 593(XXII)). (21)Ibid. (res. 599(XXII)). (22)Ibid. (res. 610(XXII)). (23)Ibid. (res. 604(XXII)). (24)A/42/288-E/1987/71. (25)E/1987/C.1/L.11. (26)E/1987/46. (27)YUN 1980, p. 662, GA res. 35/66 B, 5 Dec. 1980. (28)E/1987/36 (res. 588(XXII)). (29)E/1987/129. (30)E/1987/36 (res. 589 XXII). (31)A/42/559. (32)E/1987/36 (res. 621(XXII)). (33)Ibid. (res. 620(XXII)). (34)Ibid. (res. 606(XXII)). (35)Ibid. (res. 602(XXII)). (36)YUN 1983, p. 623, GA res. 38/198, 20 Dec. 1983. (37)YUN 1985, p. 701, ESC dec. 1985/199, 26 July 1985. (38)A/42/310-E/1987/88. (39)E/1987/36 (res. 596(XXII)). (40)Ibid. (res. 614(XXII)). (41)Ibid. (res. 601(XXII)). (42)Ibid. (res. 609(XXII)). (43)YUN 1979, p. 895, GA res. 34080, annex, 18 Dec. 1979.

(43)E/1987/36 (res. 597(XXII)). (44)Ibid. (res. 616(XXII)). (45)Ibid. (res. 617(XXII)). (46)E/ECA/CM.13/44. (47)A/C.5/42/4. (48)E/1987/36 (res. 611(XXII)). (49)A/42/110. (50)A/42/110/Add.1. (51)A/42/452.

Asia and the Pacific

Marking its fortieth anniversary, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific held its forty-third session at Bangkok, Thailand, from 21 to 30 April 1987. The session concluded with the adoption of five resolutions dealing with: the fortieth anniversary of the Commission; an integrated plan of action on human resources development; implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries; the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields; and social aspects of human resources development. In its annual reports for the periods 3 May 1986-30 April 1987(1) and 1 May 1987-20 May 1988,(2) ESCAP reviewed the development of the region and appraised the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)(3) and of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries.(4) ESCAP also reviewed the implementation of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, 1985-1994,(5) and considered human resources development in the region and international trade in primary commodities.

In connection with the fortieth anniversary of its founding, the Commission reviewed progress in regional co-operation in Asia and the Pacific over the preceding 40 years and drew up policy guidelines for its future work. It noted that during those 40 years the region had for the most part achieved impressive growth⁷ and was currently a leader in world development. It further noted that an important task for the future was to find ways to maintain the momentum of relatively rapid economic growth. As a large regional commission with wide-ranging capacities, it pointed out that it could make a contribution to resolving the international monetary and financial problems of the region.

The Commission observed that, while its current priorities were prudent ones, new areas concerning other common problems also needed to be examined. There should be an expansion of activities in fields such as human resources development, the alleviation of poverty and improvement of the quality of life, all of which to a considerable degree lent themselves to a collective approach among countries. The Commission expressed optimism that it would continue to serve as a forum for addressing and resolving a number of common problems, even amid the formidable difficulties of co-operation inherent in a region of such great diversity. High regard was also expressed for the Commission's role as a provider of regional technical assistance, a source of socio-economic development information and a research facility.

The Commission declared that the occasion of its fortieth anniversary should be marked by co-ordinated efforts and new initiatives to assist in strengthening national plans and processes for economic and social development, to intensify regional economic and social co-operation, to create a more favourable external environment for all members, and to bolster intercountry arrangements to help attain self-sustained growth and economic self-reliance. It requested the Secretary-General to provide it with the means, commensurate with its status as the main economic and social development centre within the United Nations system for the Asian and Pacific region, to undertake the tasks assigned to it.

Other actions included: revision of the ESCAP work programme and priorities for 1988-1989; programme changes for 1987; general guidelines for the medium-term plan 1990-1995; and a review of its special regional projects and institutions. ESCAP committees discussed: agricultural development; industry, technology, human settlements and the environment; natural resources; population; shipping, and transport and communications; and statistics.

The membership of ESCAP in 1987 was unchanged, comprising 38 member States and 9 associate members.

Economic and social trends

The first part of the annual Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1987(6) reviewed recent economic and social developments in the region, while its second part dealt with international trade in primary commodities (see below).

The developing countries of the Asian and Pacific region, despite increasing uncertainties in the global economy, continued to achieve satisfactory growth in 1987, said the Survey. Performance varied widely, however, and the region's robust aggregate growth stemmed mainly from the much stronger performance of East Asia's newly industrializing economies and China, which pulled up the lower average growth elsewhere in the region. The real gross domestic product (GDP) growth rate of the overall ESCAP developing region was expected to have risen from 4.2 per cent in 1986 to 6 per cent in 1987. Growth prospects for 1988, however, were likely to be adversely affected by recessionary trends in the world economy, reducing average growth to 5.6 per cent.

The performance of the South-East Asian economies, which in 1985 and 1986 had dropped to its lowest levels of the 1980s owing largely to primary commodity-related problems, recovered considerably in 1987. Overall performance of the region was lifted by the resumption of growth in the Philippines and Singapore, whose 1987 expansion rates of 4.9 and 8 per cent respectively were their highest in more than five years. The increasingly robust performance of Thailand's economy, which grew by nearly 6 per cent in 1987, was second only to that of Singapore, which was recovering from a prolonged recession. China, the region's largest developing economy, recovered from a 7.8 per cent growth in 1986 to a near double-digit growth rate in 1987 (9.5 per cent).

The performance of the major South Asian economies was adversely affected by both drought (northern India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka) and floods (Bangladesh and eastern India). India's GDP growth rate, which had shown a strong upward trend in recent years, slowed to 2.4 per cent in 1987, or half that in 1986. India's slow-down was the major contributor to South Asia's growth deceleration from 5.1 to 3.2 per cent. Pakistan was less severely affected by drought, and its GDP growth rate, the highest in South Asia, rose slightly to 7.7 per cent in 1987, while Bangladesh managed to maintain the growth rate of about 4.5 per cent achieved in 1986. Nepal and Sri Lanka were hard hit by drought, and their GDP growth rates in 1987, at 2.3 and 2.5 per cent respectively, were considerably lower than in 1986.

The economic performance of the least developed countries (LDCs) and the Pacific island countries weakened perceptibly in 1987 and was the major cause for concern in the growth picture of the developing Asian and Pacific region. With the inclusion of Burma, which the General Assembly, by decision 42/428, added to the list of LDCs on 11 December, the number of such disadvantaged countries in the region stood at 11 by the end of 1987. The developing Pacific island countries generally registered poor economic performance, with real GDP growth at 3 per cent or less for most island countries in 1986, the latest year for which data were available.

As the international economic environment became more uncertain towards the end of 1987, growth prospects for the Asia and Pacific region in 1988 were generally pessimistic. World trade and output growth entered a period of heightened uncertainty after the October 1987 stock market collapse. Econometric forecasts predicted a lowering of the world GNP growth rate by 1 to 1.5 per cent compared with earlier forecasts for 1988. For developing countries of the region, that would imply a sizeable slow-down in export volume, which fuelled growth in the major East and South-East Asian economies.

Among the social issues of concern in 1987 was the growing pressure to establish formal social security arrangements in the developing ESCAP region. Despite those pressures, and progress already achieved, formal social security systems in most developing countries were still at a rudimentary stage with only limited coverage. The Survey also focused on the problems of urbanization and housing and the emergence of slums and squatter settlements in a number of cities. Among issues discussed were the changing attitudes towards urban slums, the sharp rise in land prices and the implications of the recent trend towards formalizing and commercializing the urban land and housing market.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/188 of 9 July, took note of, among other documents, a summary(7) of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1986.(8)

Activities in 1987

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

A January 1987 note by the ESCAP secretariat(9) presented a review of net inflows of capital to the region, and gave information on import capacity, gross domestic capital formation, changes in capital markets, capacity to service debt, prices of primary commodity exports, exports of manufactures, and conditions for increased net inflow of resources. At its April meeting,(1) the Commission noted with concern that progress in implementing the third International Development Strategy(3) had fallen far short of expectations. In most countries of the region, net capital inflows had either stagnated or declined, leading to a fall in their import capacity; continuing growth of protectionism in developed countries had hindered necessary structural changes and economic growth in developing countries.

The Commission urged the international community to undertake more effective measures to fulfil the underlying goals and objectives of the Strategy and urged the ESCAP secretariat to undertake an in-depth appraisal of the Strategy's implementation so as to derive the net inflow of external resources in each country of the region.

Development planning activities in 1987 included: training courses on project preparation and planning (Nepal, January, and Lao People's Democratic Republic, February/March); second meeting of consultants for the study on the feasibility of establishing an institute of public finance (Bangkok, February); regional seminar on project planning and implementation (Bangkok, March/April); seminar on economic co-operation through foreign investment among Asian and Pacific countries (phase II) (Bangkok, May); training course on a unified, comprehensive approach to rural development planning (Moscow, May/June); training course in planning science and technology (Moscow and Yerevan, September/October); workshop on development planning techniques (Bhutan, September/October); expert group meeting on development issues and policies

(Bangkok, October); national training course on project planning and statistical information compilation (Lao People's Democratic Republic, November); and a regional seminar on an interlinked country model system, sixth session (Bangkok, November).

ESCAP also provided advisory services and produced a number of studies and technical publications to assist countries of the region, including the Pacific island countries, in their economic and social development.

In 1987, the Asian and Pacific Development Centre launched its third phase (1987-1989) work programme, the four basic themes of which were: increasing the capacity of the poor to overcome poverty; strengthening the capacity of development institutions to manage national development and change; increasing the policy-making capacity of Asian-Pacific countries; and increasing the capacity of the region to adjust to the changing world environment.

Implementation of SNPA for LDCs

In a report on the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for LDCs,(10) ESCAP noted that its activities largely focused on studies and surveys, training workshops and seminars, advisory services and other technical assistance. Although the Commission continued to give high priority to activities furthering the development of LDCs, the scale of those activities remained limited; considerably larger resources would be needed, particularly since the number of LDCs in the region had increased to 11, out of a total of 41 (see p. 389), and they contained about half the population of all the world's LDCs.

The Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1987(6) stated that in most of the region's LDCs, per capita growth had been considerably lower than 2 per cent, while some of the smaller Pacific island economies had had declining per capita incomes. The flow of ODA to the region's LDCs had not registered a satisfactory increase over the first half of the decade. Net ODA flow from member countries of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development declined marginally from $1.88 billion in 1985 to $1.84 billion in 1986, expressed in constant prices with adjusted exchange rates.

On 30 April 1987,(11) the Commission called on the international community to exert every effort towards providing increased transfer of resources and commercial policy support measures to LDCs of the Asian and Pacific region. It urged donor countries whose ODA had not reached 0.15 per cent of their GNP, or which had not doubled their ODA to LDCs, to make every effort to attain those targets, as called for in SNPA. The Commission asked the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session to discuss a possible follow-up in the 1990s to SNPA (see p. 391).

Mekong River basin development

The Interim Committee for Co-ordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin held its twenty-fourth session at Bangkok from 19 to 22 January and its twenty-fifth session at Ho Chi Minh City, Viet Nam, from 11 to 18 June.⁽¹²⁾ The Committee held a workshop in Bangkok (7-9 September) to discuss the interim report on revising the Indicative Basin Plan—an overall framework for the economic development of the Mekong Basin to the year 2000, published by the Committee in 1970.⁽¹³⁾ The revision, which provided a framework for projects in the work programme that could be required for the period beyond the year 2000, would be submitted to the Committee in 1988.

The Committee's 1987 work programme included 83 projects in the areas of hydropower development, irrigation and drainage, flood control and bank protection, agriculture and watershed management, fisheries and inland navigation. It also contained a number of new basin-wide activities, including the control of soil erosion, sedimentation and flash flood hazards and an investigation into the use of ground water for irrigation.

Total expenditure in 1987 was $8.6 million, of which $8 million was spent on projects.

Technical co-operation activities

The year 1987 marked the beginning of UNDP's fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), which earmarked total resources of $1.18 billion of assistance to the region, 11 per cent higher than for the previous (1982-1986) cycle. During 1987, nine country programmes and the intercountry programme for the region were approved by UNDP'S Governing Council, leaving only one country programme (Maldives) to be approved in 1988 for the new resources cycle. The regional programme in the fourth cycle comprised 97 ongoing projects and 108 project proposals, a total of 205 projects with an approximate value of $170 million. All projects in the programme stressed the themes of technology transfer and human resources development. Projects included support to the Asia and Pacific Development Centre for activities in public administration and management, economic forecasting and in-country statistical training at the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific.

During 1987, UNDP'S global and interregional programme continued to provide support to the International Rice Research Institute (Los Baños, Philippines) and the International Centre for Research in the Semi-Arid Tropics (Hyderabad, India). Further, UNDP continued to provide resources for specific TCDC projects in the region. With UNDP support, Pakistan and Indonesia initiated intergovernmental TCDC programming exercises. Pakistan's programme would concentrate on industry and science, while Indonesia's would emphasize cooperation in the area of community self-reliance. UNDP'S multisectoral, computer-based Information Referral System continued to provide information on TCDC capacities in developing countries, with information on 3,200 institutions in 107 developing countries (24 in the Asia and Pacific region)⁽¹⁴⁾

International trade and finance

ESCAP continued in 1987 to promote the development of trade between the countries of the region on the one hand, and between the region and the rest of the world on the other. It provided assistance in the following: trade expansion and facilitation, including monetary and financial co-operation; trade promotion and development; raw materials and commodities; and assistance to LDCs and land-locked and island developing countries. In the area of trade expansion and facilitation, two workshops were organized on the use and application of the United Nations Layout Key for Trade Documents (Bangkok, 3-6 February; Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 10-13 March). National seminars on the application and benefits of trade facilitation measures were conducted in China (Beijing, 1-4 April; and Shanghai, 6-8 April). A similar workshop was conducted for the benefit of the developing Pacific island countries (Port Vila, Vanuatu, 4-12 August).

A regional workshop on export marketing for women executives, with financial support from the United Nations Development Fund for Women, was held at Bangkok from 17 to 28 August. Advisory services were provided to China to conduct seminars on trade and investment promotion (Beijing, Changchun, Dalian, Qingdao and Fuzhou, 1-26 September). Another workshop dealt with export promotion and export development for LDCs of Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, 30 November-3 December). Further, the first session of the Steering Committee for the Third Asian International Silk Fair was held at Bangkok in May in preparation for the Third Fair, scheduled for 1988.

Advisory services and training continued to be provided under a UNDP-funded project on development and strengthening of trade information services in Asia and the Pacific using modern information technology. Project activities in 1987 focused on human resources development for the computerization of trade information services, as well as on the building up of computer-based networks. In that connection, collection and dissemination of trade information was continued under the Regional Trade Information Network. A regional workshop on computerized library and documentation services for trade (Bangkok, 7 September-2 October) trained participants in the application of computer technology to information management.

At its 1987 session, the Commission observed that the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations (see PART TWO, Chapter XVIII) included complex and new issues for negotiations. It called on ESCAP to provide technical and advisory services to developing countries in the region and to conduct research and disseminate information relevant to the negotiations.

In accordance with a recommendation made at the second round (1986) of trade negotiations of the Bangkok agreement,⁽¹⁵⁾ ESCAP carried out studies on foreign investment incentive schemes adopted by Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka and Thailand.

In a report on possible causes and solutions for the debt crisis of developing members and associate members of ESCAP,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Commission analysed a number of the major causes for external payments difficulties experienced by countries of the region, including oil prices, interest rates and trade. The report stated that as the world economy was recovering at a slow pace, and protectionist policies in the industrial countries got stronger, the prospects for the exports of developing countries showed no signs of improvement.

Trade in primary commodities

The second part of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1987⁽⁶⁾ dealt with problems of international trade in primary commodities and their implications for the ESCAP region. With a few exceptions, the region's developing countries continued to depend on the production of primary commodities as a main source of income, employment and export earnings. The primary sector comprised largely agriculture, with non-fuel minerals being important in only a few countries. In LDCs and island economies of the region, the share of primary commodities in exports ranged between 60 and 100 per cent; in the other countries, with a few exceptions, it ranged between 40 and 66 per cent. Although the region had a relatively small share of total world trade in primary commodities, it had a 70-90 per cent share in such commodities as jute and jute products, rubber, copra, coconut and palm oil and tea.

Trade protectionism had affected a wide variety of export commodities from the ESCAP region; liberalizing those policies would raise prices of heavily protected commodities, such as sugar, and have favourable effects on food production in the region, although there could be short-term losses for the food-importing countries.

Even assuming an optimistic outcome of the Uruguay Round of trade negotiations, which included agricultural trade in the agenda for the first time, international measures would not bring sufficient relief from difficulties faced by ESCAP countries with their commodity export trade. Developing countries would have to pursue their own domestic policies in technological upgrading, research, marketing improvements and product diversification, both within agriculture and in processing, grading and quality control for agro-industrial products.

Transport and communications

The eleventh session of the Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications was held at Bangkok from 14 to 18 December 1987.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Committee considered issues relating to roads and road transport, railway transport, air cargo, telecommunications and tourism. In endorsing the transport and communications programme of work and priorities for 1988-1989, and the medium-term plan, 1990-1995, the Committee reiterated that high priority should continue to be accorded to the optimum utilization of railway infrastructure, development and strengthening of interregional and intraregional railway linkages and development of regional and interregional co-operation through the Asia-Pacific Co-operation Group.

The following seminars, workshops and meetings were conducted during the year: subregional seminar on maritime fraud (Pakistan, March); training on modern port equipment management (Japan, March); expert group meeting on port tariff structures (Bangkok, May); workshop on energy saving in shipping (Bangkok, Indonesia, Philippines and Singapore, May; Malaysia, June); meeting of chief executives of port authorities (Bangkok, May); subregional seminar on freight forwarding (India and Indonesia, June); country-level seminar on freight forwarding (Singapore, June); seminar on port computer usage in containerization (Netherlands, July); regional seminar on the port management information system (China, September); implementation of model port tariff structure (Australia, October); seminar on non-vessel-operating common carriers for shippers of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) (Bangkok, October); country-level workshop on maritime legislation (China, October); meeting of chief executives of national freight forwarders' associations (Singapore, November); seminar on seafarers' training and education (Philippines, November); country-level seminar on training of trainers for the Shanghai Maritime Institute (China, November/December); and seminar on port and cargo security (Bangkok, December).

A secretariat note on rail-based urban and suburban transport⁽¹⁸⁾ stated that the trend in developing countries of the ESCAP region was towards rapid urban growth as populations moved into the cities from rural areas; the task of providing adequate means of transport in and around those rapidly growing urban centres presented a major challenge. The secretariat proposed that as part of a study on urban transport problems and policies in the ESCAP region, a survey and comparative analysis be carried out on the urban transport crisis and major policy responses in the developing countries of the region. In April,(1) the Commission endorsed the secretariat proposal and urged UNDP and bilateral donors to support that initiative.

In a note on the development and strengthening of intraregional and interregional railway linkages,(19) ESCAP stated that the eventual completion of the Trans-Asian Railway network would alter the pattern of transport routes and considerably reduce overall transit time intraregionally by providing a land route for through international traffic, in competition with the all-sea routes currently used. It noted that even rail-cum-sea routes were quicker than the existing all-sea routes. That suggested that prior to the completion of the missing rail links, there would be significant time savings through use of rail-cum-sea routes. However, detailed examination of that option was required, and that solution would be considered only as an interim measure before the completion of the Trans-Asian Railway. In April,(1) the Commission agreed with ESCAP's assessment and recommended that the secretariat undertake a study of rail-cum-sea multimodal transport routes from Europe to South and South-East Asia, taking into account all economic and operational aspects. It also recommended that projects to develop rail-cum-sea transport routes be given high priority within the Transport and Communications Decade (see below).

A secretariat note on the rationalization of energy in transport(20) recommended that implementation of measures to promote rational use of energy in transport should be supported by appropriate pricing and taxing policies on the import of vehicles, for restriction of passenger car use in congested areas and for promotion of public transport. At its 1987 session,(1) the Commission recognized the importance of collecting data on energy conservation in transport as a pre-condition for any effective conservation measure and urged member countries to overcome the lack of reliable and comprehensive data. It recommended that the secretariat provide technical assistance in energy data recording and analysis and function as a centre for collecting data on energy in transport and information on pilot and demonstration projects.

Planning for tourism development was the subject of another note by the secretariat,(21) in which it was proposed that a number of activities be undertaken to enable member countries to benefit from evaluating the impact of different policies and approaches for tourism development. Those activities included: studies on the economic impact of tourism; an expert group meeting on measurement of the economic impact of tourism by input-output analysis; a seminar on tourism marketing for women executives; and a seminar on tourism development in developing countries of the ESCAP region. In April,(1) the Commission, noting that there was an urgent need to understand the socioeconomic benefits and costs of tourism, endorsed the activities outlined in the secretariat note.

Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific

In reviewing the programmes for the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994),(22) the Commission recommended,(1) among other things, that the following projects should be accorded high priority: modernization and rehabilitation of existing railways; an umbrella project on regional co-operation for the development of rural road transport infrastructure as a part of integrated rural development; a project on rationalization of energy used in transport; economic modelling of the transport and communications sector for development; projects on land-use planning; a study to promote intraregional and interregional rail-cum-sea transport; a study of the urban transport crisis in the developing ESCAP region; and modernization of railway telecommunications systems.

The Commission also suggested that ESCAP consider convening a meeting of national co-ordination committees for the Decade to identify the major areas of activity to be implemented during the latter part of the Decade. Further, the Commission felt that ESCAP should co-ordinate fully with the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Co-operation in implementing the activities for the Decade relating to maritime transport.

Shipping, ports and inland waterways

In a February note,(23) ESCAP proposed that a study be undertaken to assess trends in international trade and maritime transport and the impact of technological advances on the port and shipping industry of the ESCAP region. The proposed study would also develop and elaborate strategy options for managing maritime infrastructure and services in the region. Among the expected results of the study were: guidelines on the technological hardware that was likely to be used in moving and handling cargoes in the regional maritime sector; a regional trade flow matrix of major commodities with projections to the year 2000 analysed in terms of potential shipping and port requirements; and a computer model of regional trade flows, maritime services and facilities.

At its 1987 session,(1) the Commission noted the difficulties faced by the shipping industries of developing countries in financing fleet modernization efforts in order to secure an adequate share of international trade. It agreed that ESCAP should consider organizing seminars to prepare member countries for the 1988 review conference on the United Nations Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences and the review of the United States Shipping Act in 1989. Further, the Commission reaffirmed the need for assistance to member countries in preparing and publishing relevant and reliable maritime transport statistics.

Industrial development

In April,(1) the Commission supported the emphasis given by the Ministers of Industry and Technology at their 1986 meeting(24) to the importance of a favourable world trade and economic environment to promote further industrial growth and technical progress in the region. It supported the recommendation that ESCAP should organize meetings and seminars on such matters as industrial restructuring,- rationalization of industrial incentive systems and foreign investment, and prepare studies on specific policy issues. It also urged early initiation of follow-up action on several important recommendations made by the Ministers, such as those concerning employment-generating activities suitable for different levels of human settlements, micro-electronics, biotechnology, metallurgy and new industrial materials.

The Commission noted that the region's LDCs and island developing countries were experiencing slow industrial and economic growth; it directed ESCAP to strengthen its activities in support of technical and managerial skill development, including the development of entrepreneurial skills especially tailored to meet the needs of those countries. Further, it recommended that training programmes, seminars and workshops should be organized to improve the level of management in small- and medium-scale industries in the developing countries of the region.

Among 1987 activities related to industrial development were meetings on: industrial policy and structural adjustment (Republic of Korea, September); human resources development policy and planning for technology and development (Republic of Korea, October/November); and forecasting, planning and development of human resources for technology (China, November/December).

Transnational corporations

A February 1987 ESCAP paper(25) examined developments and some issues of current relevance with respect to the participation of transnational corporations (TNCs) in the developing Asian and Pacific region, including foreign direct investment and the activities of TNCs with regard to human resources development, the environment and the services sector. Regional and international co-operation in matters relating to TNCs were also discussed.

Among the meetings in 1987 that dealt with TNCs were an expert group meeting on environmental aspects of transnational corporation activities in the ESCAP region (Bangkok, November), and an Asia-Pacific regional workshop on monitoring foreign investment by transnational corporations (China, November).

Food and agriculture

The seventh session of the Committee on Agricultural Development was held at Bangkok from 16 to 21 November.(26) The Committee discussed, among other things: agricultural prices, trade and production linkages and their implications for the ESCAP region; regional co-operation in fertilizer marketing and activities of the fertilizer advisory, development and information network for the region; environmental aspects of production, marketing and use of pesticides; and the programme of work and priorities with regard to food and agriculture, 1988-1989, and the draft medium-term plan, 1990-1995. It also reviewed secretariat activities in food, agriculture and rural development and related issues, and the activities of the Regional Co-ordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific. In a report on the activities of the Centre,(27) the Centre's Governing Board reviewed its work during 1987 and its staffing and financial status. The Board urged that concerted efforts be made to increase country contributions and suggested that the Commission formulate appropriate strategies in that regard.

An ESCAP report(28) reviewed the accomplishments of the Regional Network for Agriculture Machinery during its first 10 years of operation, 1977-1987. The Network, an intercountry project of Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Iran, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka and Thailand, was established to increase agricultural outputs and labour productivity. Noting that 1987 marked the first year of the final phase of the project (1987-1991), the thrust of which would be towards extension work and popularization of agricultural mechanization technologies, the paper urged participating countries to involve non-governmental and other organizations dealing with farmers in its activities.

Among meetings in the food and agriculture sector held during 1987 were: a mid-term review meeting on the promotion of non-farm employment and income among rural workers (Bangkok,

May); a regional expert group meeting on pesticide data collection systems in Asia and the Pacific (Thailand, May); a national workshop on promotion of non-farm employment (Bangladesh, June); a training programme on logistics of fertilizer distribution (India, August); and a training programme for fertilizer retailers (Thailand, September and December).

Natural resources and energy

The Committee on Natural Resources (fourteenth session, Bangkok, 12 October-2 November)(29) discussed, among other things, ESCAP activities with regard to energy, water, mineral and marine resources, as well as cartography and remote sensing. The current energy situation and demand management achievements, energy issues, such as prospects for production and utilization of coal, natural gas and electricity and human resources development, and strategies required in the accelerated development of new and renewable sources of energy were also considered by the Committee.

It also reviewed activities of other international bodies in the appraisal, development and management of energy resources, as well changes in the 1988-1989 work programme and the draft medium-term plan, 1990-1995.

The Committee expressed concern over the future availability of oil resources and recommended that, to make existing resources last longer, all countries adopt measures for energy conservation and energy demand management. It also voiced concern over the alarming extent of deforestation and soil degradation and erosion resulting from increased use of fuelwood, and recommended that the use of alternative sources wherever available be enhanced.

Energy resources. The following meetings dealing with energy resources were held during 1987: seminar/training course on the evaluation, design and implementation of solar photovoltaic systems in developing countries (Indonesia, January); workshop on electric power system optimization (Malaysia, April); meeting of senior experts preparatory to the fourteenth session of the Committee on Natural Resources (Bangkok, May); Tripartite Review Conference of the Regional Energy Development Programme (Bangkok, August); workshop on energy conservation policy and measures for energy demand management (Bangkok, October); photovoltaic training course (China, November); interregional TCDC training/workshop in biogas technology (China, November); training course on the applications of solar photovoltaic technologies and remote area telecommunication systems (Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam); and regional TCDC workshop on energy conservation and new and renewable sources of energy utilization in tobacco curing (Thailand, December).

Support continued to be provided to the Regional Energy Development Programme and the Pacific Energy Development Programme (PEDP). The Regional Network on Biomass, Solar and Wind Energy and PEDP helped service a training course on the installation, operation and maintenance of photovoltaic systems (Maldives, June).

Mineral resources. In 1987, expert working group meetings on the urban geology of coastal areas (China, September) and on stratigraphic correlation between sedimentary basins of the ESCAP region, as well as a training course for senior geologists on management in mineral exploration (Malaysia, November/December) took place.

In a paper on natural resources and energy,(30) ESCAP noted that exploration activities in the area of mineral resources development were still at a low level owing to generally depressed prices and market conditions. In general, the region was known to possess substantial mineral resources, although the actual potential could be much greater than was known because large parts of the region had yet to be explored and evaluated using modern exploration techniques. Recalling the decision by the Governing Council of the Regional Mineral Resources Development Centre (RMRDC) to transfer the functions of the Centre to ESCAP, the report noted that that decision would enable ESCAP to pursue effectively the promotion of mineral exploration through advisory services and group training.

The Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in Asian Offshore Areas (CCOP)(31) submitted a proposal for Australian assistance in support of a programme that included, among other things, a study tour of the member country participants to Australia for training in mineral sand exploration and exploitation. The Committee also undertook discussions with UNESCO concerning the formation of a Quaternary Geology Centre in the CCOP region. UNDP had approved funding for programme support of CCOP for the period 1987-1991 in the amount of $3 million.

Water and marine resources. In 1987, the following meetings dealt with issues related to water and marine resources: Inter-agency Task Force on Water for Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, July and December); Typhoon Committee (Bangkok, October); and a regional expert group consultative meeting on TCDC in water resources development in the ESCAP region (Bangkok, December).

A project on flood risk analysis and mapping, funded by Japan, and another on preparation of a manual and guidelines on comprehensive flood loss prevention and management, funded by UNDP, were undertaken. In addition, information on training requirements of countries and training capabilities of institutes and agencies in the phase I activities of the Regional Network for Training in Water Resources Development was prepared and disseminated. The Commission, in considering issues related to water and marine resources, expressed support for the Regional Network and urged UNDP to provide financial support.

Cartography and remote sensing. The following meetings were held in 1987 on matters relating to cartography and remote sensing: meeting of Directors of the National Remote Sensing Centres/Programmes in the ESCAP region (Thailand, May); fourth session of the Intergovernmental Consultative Committee on the ESCAP/UNDP Regional Remote Sensing Programme (Thailand, May); workshop on the application of high resolution satellite data (Indonesia, October); working group meeting on policy administration and financial support of the Regional Remote Sensing Programme (Bangkok, November); and training course in remote sensing applications to urban surveys (India, December).

ESCAP activities on cartography and remote sensing during 1987 were implemented mainly by the Regional Remote Sensing Programme. The Programme, funded by UNDP, entered its second five-year phase (1987-1991) on 1 January.

Environment

In 1987,(1) the Commission endorsed the recommendation of a 1986 intergovernmental meeting on a regional network of research and training centres on desertification control.(32) It affirmed the central role of ESCAP in co-ordinating and implementing the activities of the regional network in close co-operation with the relevant United Nations bodies and organizations. Further, it endorsed the biennial programme of work (1987-1988) of the regional network, and recommended that the network identify areas affected and threatened by desertification and carry out research on the rehabilitation of derelict mining lands and lands affected by shifting cultivation.

The Commission recommended that industrial pollution control should receive priority in the ESCAP work programme on environment. It also recommended that ESCAP co-operate with the International Programme on Chemical Safety, jointly promoted by UNEP, ILO and WHO, in identifying areas of concern of the developing countries in the field of hazardous wastes and in developing and implementing a programme on the strategies of management and control of such wastes.

During 1987, the following meetings dealing with the environment sector took place: national seminar on environmental management for administrators (Pakistan, January); consultative meeting of environmental journalists on the media and the environment (Bangkok, April/May); subregional coastal resource management and protected area planning course (Tonga, May); training seminar on rangeland improvement in the arid and semi-arid zones and its environmental and socio-economic aspects (USSR, May/June); interministerial symposium on the coastal environmental management plan for Bangladesh (Bangladesh, June); and subregional planning course on coastal resource management (Federated States of Micronesia, July). In addition, the ESCAP/UNCTC Joint Unit on Transnational Corporations, in collaboration with UNEP, organized in November an expert group meeting on environmental aspects of transnational corporation activities in the ESCAP region.

Typhoons

In April,(1) the Commission noted the considerable improvement in the Typhoon Committee's capabilities in typhoon and flood forecasting and warning systems, and disaster prevention and preparedness. It also noted that ESCAP had provided member countries with substantive services, such as the presentation of a paper on comprehensive flood loss prevention and management at the first meeting on flood risk analysis and flood plain management in Bangkok and its vicinity, and organization of technical advisory missions on flood risk analysis and mapping to Malaysia and Thailand.

The Commission noted with appreciation that the Philippines had pledged to continue hosting the Typhoon Committee secretariat and that Japan would continue to play an active role in the Committee's programmes by providing a hydrologist to the Committee secretariat and organizing training courses on meteorology and river engineering. It was also pleased to note contributions by China and Thailand.

Science and technology

The ESCAP Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment, which held its tenth session at Bangkok from 23 to 28 September 1987(33) reached a number of conclusions with regard to the technology sector, including: assistance provided by ESCAP on contractual questions of technology transfer and joint venture contacts and associated training workshops and seminars were especially beneficial; that greater efforts should be made to complete phase I activities of the project on solar photovoltaic power systems for rural areas in Pakistan; it strongly supported the secretariat's proposal to establish a research, development and demonstration project on comprehensive urban waste utilization; and the output of the technology atlas projects would be useful for the region's developing countries. The Committee also endorsed the project activities of the Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery planned for 1987-1991.

In April,(1) the Commission endorsed the recommendations of the 1986 meeting of Ministers of Industry and Technology,(34) and identified the following areas as requiring priority attention by the secretariat: studies to identify areas for energy conservation, explore new and renewable forms of energy, and improve energy use in industries, particularly small-scale ones; providing assistance in areas of emerging technologies, such as biotechnology, micro-electronics, application of computers, information technology, and new materials; providing technical assistance in developing human resources in the technology sector, particularly for LDCs; promoting technology transfer among member countries; and co-operating closely with UNIDO in establishing a regional network on industrial consultancy, new and emerging technologies and investment promotion activities.

In July, the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (APCTT) began implementation of the UNDP-funded programme on promotion of technology utilization. The programme consisted of three major components: strengthening technology management capability; strengthening technology information systems; and development of mechanisms for technology transfer and utilization. The Centre, together with ESCAP, also organized a workshop on human resources development in policy formulation and planning for technology and development (Republic of Korea, October/November).

The Third Meeting of the Technical Advisory Committee of APCTT was held at ESCAP headquarters (Bangkok, 1-3 December).(35) The Committee expressed its satisfaction with the progress of technology transfer activities, in particular the intensified assistance to small and medium enterprises. It suggested that APCTT prepare case studies not only of successful but also of unsuccessful technology transfer and utilization for dissemination among member countries and for use at APCTT training programmes and workshops.

The Governing Board of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (second session, Bangkok, 3 and 4 December)(35) endorsed the views of the Technical Advisory Committee regarding APCTT activities. The Board noted that India had finalized its plans to relocate APCTT in New Delhi and that the Centre would be able to commence operations there in 1989.

Meetings held during 1987 in the science and technology sector included: seminar on successful implementation of joint ventures with foreign partners in Thailand (Bangkok, June); roving photovoltaic installers' training programme (Maldives, June); roving seminar on acquisition of foreign technologies and negotiation and execution of contracts (China, July/August); seminar on successful implementation of technology acquisition and joint ventures agreements (Singapore, August); seminar/consultation on joint ventures and technology transfer (China, November); and roving training course on the applications of solar photovoltaic technologies to remote area telecommunications systems (China, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Viet Nam, November).

Social and cultural development

In April,(1) the Commission recommended the formulation of a regional social development strategy for Asia and the Pacific for the year 2000 and beyond; such a strategy should incorporate the basic principles and policy goals of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade(3) and the 1969 Declaration on Social Progress and Development.(36) The Commission suggested that the regional strategy should aim to develop practical policy guidelines, planning approaches and institutional arrangements for the full participation of all social groups in the development process and the equitable sharing of the benefits of development among them. It recommended that the decisions of the Third Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Social Development(37) be given full consideration in the formulation of an effective regional strategy.

In pursuance of the Commission's directive, ESCAP prepared a project proposal entitled "A regional social development strategy towards the year 2000 and beyond".(38) The project was to be undertaken in three phases: the first would focus on an appraisal of emerging socio-economic patterns and of the manner in which social development policy and planning were influencing them; the second on the elaboration of alternative policy and planning scenarios for integrated socio-economic development; and the third would apply the results of phases one and two to the formulation of a regional strategy for integrating the social dimension into overall development policy and planning. The project was submitted to UNDP which agreed to fund it pending the endorsement of participating countries. As of the end of December, five ESCAP member Governments had formally endorsed the project.

Meetings held during 1987 which dealt with the social and cultural development sector included: workshop on evaluation of youth leadership training courses (Nepal, May); regional expert seminar to review achievements at the mid-point of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992) (Bangkok, June); seminar on the contribution of Asian and Pacific students to the development of their societies (Mongolia, June); second meeting of the Steering Group on the Establishment of a Standing Committee of Agencies and Non-Governmental Organizations on Youth (Bangkok, July); national workshop on project administration for women (Bangladesh, March; Sri Lanka, July; Pakistan, December); national workshop for the development of community-based disability prevention and rehabilitation programmes (Nepal, August; Bhutan, December); international training course for programme managers and associated personnel on skill development for out-of-school youth (Malaysia, October); inter-agency meeting on the ESCAP/WHO project on drug abuse rehabilitation in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, October); expert group meeting to review and plan youth training programmes in the ESCAP region (Thailand, November); and expert seminar on the promotion of national infrastructure for aging populations in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, December).

Women in development

In April,(1) the Commission stressed the need for further activities on issues such as: fuller participation of rural women in development; the role and status of women in the informal sector; the socio-economic implications of female-headed households as a result of internal and international migration; the role of cultural values in women's integration into development; the protection of women as consumers; and functional literacy among women. The Commission endorsed the recommendations of the 1986 Regional Seminar on the Development of a Women's Information Network for Asia and the Pacific,(39) and urged ESCAP to make every effort to fulfil its role as the regional focal point of the Network.

A report(40) on the regional implementation of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women noted that 17 countries in the ESCAP region had either signed or ratified the Convention. Legal measures to eliminate discrimination against women had been instituted in most of the countries covered in the report, in some cases even before their becoming party to the Convention. However, the report stated, unless those measures were effectively enforced, they would not improve the status and situation of women.

Meetings held during 1987 which dealt with the subject of women in development included: national workshop on project administration for women (Sri Lanka, July; Pakistan, December); seminar on the role of women in social and economic development with special reference to rural development (USSR, September); and ad hoc meeting of the Inter-agency Committee for Women in Development (Bangkok, October).

Human resources development

On 30 April 1987,(42) the Commission, recognizing the need to formulate an ESCAP integrated plan of action on human resources development, resolved that the theme of its 1988 regular session would again be human resources development so that special attention could be given to formulating the integrated plan. It requested the Executive Secretary to convene an expert group meeting to formulate guidelines for such a plan and endorsed the human resources development activities in the proposed programme of work for the biennium 1988-1989.

The Commission, again on 30 April,(43) emphasizing the pressing need to give greater attention to the social aspects of human resources development, requested the Executive Secretary to make arrangements to introduce in the Social Development Newsletter a section dealing with different social aspects of human resources development. It asked ESCAP members and associate members to submit, on a voluntary basis, national reports containing updated information on the human resources development situation in their countries and areas, articulating the problems and needs in that field.

Population

The Committee on Population (fifth session, Bangkok, 17-21 August)(44) reviewed the population situation, and population policies and programmes in the countries of the ESCAP region. Among the issues discussed were: implications of the changing age structure for current and future development planning; role of information, education and communication in solving the population problems of the region; role of the private sector and NGOs in population matters; strategies for the integration of population and development; training of population programme personnel through bilateral exchanges and other co-operative modalities among countries of the region; monitoring and evaluation of population programmes; and the relationship between rural development and urbanization.

The Committee underscored the importance of the priority areas designated in the 1988-1989 programme of work and recommended that the following areas also be accorded priority: population composition, estimates and projections; human resources development in population; improvement of skills of family planning programme personnel and researchers; the changing role of women and family planning; co-ordination of the Asia-Pacific Population Information Network (POPIN); and development of a regional population data bank. It also recommended that the Fourth Asian and Pacific Population Conference be held in 1992 in lieu of a session of the Committee, and that preparatory work for the Conference be included in the 1988-1989 programme of work, as well as in the medium-term plan, 1990-1995.

Meetings held in the population area during 1987 included: seminar on population policies for top-level policy makers and programme managers (Thailand, January); workshop on an analytical framework for population and development research and planning (Bangkok, February); interim meeting of the study directors on emerging issues of the aging of population (Bangkok, August); study directors' meeting on analytical frameworks for population and development research and planning (Bangkok, September); Asia-Pacific POPIN workshop on writing for population publications (Indonesia, September/October); final meeting of study directors on organizational issues in community participation in the context of national planning family programmes (Thailand, October); regional training course on sub-national population projections (Bangkok, November); training course on the use of microcomputers for demographic analysis, survey data processing and family planning evaluation (Bangkok, November/December).

At its 1987 session,⁽¹⁾ the Commission had before it a report on the implications of changing age structure for current and future development planning.⁽⁴⁵⁾ The Commission urged ESCAP to continue its research and assistance in that field.

Human settlements

The Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment (tenth session, Bangkok, 23-28 September)⁽³³⁾ endorsed the conclusions of a regional colloquium on shelter strategies held as follow-up to the 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (see Chapter XVI of this section). It urged member countries to adopt the concepts of the new agenda for human settlements which involved the perception of human settlements as a framework for development, and recommended that national policies should be decentralized and devolve to the local and community levels the provision, financing and management of shelter and services. The Committee urged ESCAP to support settlement development skills and management capacities at the national and local levels and recommended that, after a period of five years, ESCAP should review the progress and achievements of programmes initiated at the local, national and regional levels in pursuance of the goal of shelter for all by the year 2000.

A report on enabling strategies for human settlements development towards the year 2000⁽⁴⁶⁾

reviewed the results of a number of 1987 regional meetings dealing with human settlements issues. The report analysed issues brought out at those meetings, including: building legislation; land control and regulation; finance for human settlements and shelter; decentralization of authority; involvement of NGOs; community participation; and training and research.

The report suggested issues for future consideration by the Commission, including recognition of the importance of employment and income generation in formulating shelter policies; the development of rural centres and intermediate cities; promotion of an indigenous building materials and construction industry; and the establishment of security of land tenure as part of national shelter strategies. In addition, the report recommended that ESCAP organize training and technical assistance programmes in human settlements with the aim of exchanging knowledge and improving skills and management capacities at the national and local levels.

Meetings on human settlements issues held during 1987 included: symposium on building materials for low-income housing in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, January); International Conference on Human Settlements in Developing Countries with Emphasis on Finance and Management (India, January); meeting of the Preparatory Committee for Follow-up of the Yokohama Congress (Japan, February); Second Congress of Local Authorities for Development of Human Settlements in Asia and the Pacific (Japan, July); first working group meeting of the participating bodies in the Regional Network of Local Authorities for the Management of Human Settlements (Japan, July); World Habitat Day forum (Bangkok, October); and an international symposium on housing (Japan, October/November).

Statistics

The Committee on Statistics (seventh session, Bangkok, 24-30 November)⁽⁴⁷⁾ reviewed statistical activities in the region, the development of national statistical capabilities, development of economic statistics, development of demographic and social statistics, and government information systems. It also endorsed the proposed 1988-1989 programme of work, and recommended that a working group of statistical experts be convened late in 1988.

The Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific (SIAP) continued to train statisticians in government services. During 1987,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Institute conducted courses in general statistics and automatic data processing in which a total of 362 persons participated. It also organized, jointly with the ESCAP Statistics Division, an expert group meeting on statistical education and training.

Meetings held during 1987 in the area of statistics included: a training course on sampling and household survey methodology (India, February-May); a Pacific working group meeting on the 1990 world population and housing census programme (Cook Islands, June); and a training course on electronic data processing (New Delhi, August-December).

Activities in the Pacific

In a report on ESCAP activities in the Pacific during 1987,(49) the secretariat described progress in implementing the new subprogramme on island developing countries, formulated in 1986,(50) and implemented jointly with the ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre (EPOC) (Vanuatu). EPOC provided advisory services in the areas of social development (Northern Mariana Islands, Republic of the Marshall Islands, Samoa, Vanuatu), statistics (Cook Islands, Niue, Palau, Tonga), and physical planning (Cook Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, Kiribati, Tuvalu).

The Pacific Energy Development Programme(51) continued its work programme in the following areas: overall national energy planning assistance; electricity sector planning; petroleum policy, supply and pricing; energy management; information exchange; and training. During 1987, EPOC carried out activities in 15 countries of the Pacific subregion, including the completion of 17 solar photovoltaics courses for 371 technicians in 15 countries.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

JIU report

In a July 1987 note,(52) the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on technical co-operation between UNDP and ESCAP. The report described the instruments governing the relationship between the two organizations and covered co-ordination and co-operation at the pre-programming and programming cycles of UNDP, as well as co-operation in project implementation. The report noted that resources taken into account for the UNDP fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) for the region totalled $213.4 million. ESCAP would be the executing agency for more than $38 million, of which $25.5 million would be for 16 ongoing projects and $12.9 million for 14 new projects.

New programmes in the fourth cycle included promotion of trade-creating joint ventures, development of rural road infrastructure, modernization of railway systems, management of human settlements, inland waterways transportation activities, and assistance to national development planners.

The report noted, however, that while ESCAP was the largest executing agency for UNDP-funded regional projects in Asia and the Pacific, there were no country projects for which ESCAP was an associated agency. It concluded that there was room for improvement in terms of greater participation by ESCAP at the intercountry project identification and project formulation stage.

Fortieth anniversary of ESCAP

On 30 April,(53) the Commission adopted a declaration on the fortieth anniversary of ESCAP, declaring that the occasion should be marked by co-ordinated efforts and new initiatives to assist in strengthening national plans and processes for economic and social development and to intensify regional economic and social co-operation. The Commission called on its members and associate members to undertake programmes in human resources development, bearing in mind ESCAP'S plan of action in that sector, and to continue to work with the secretariat to implement the recommendations of ESCAP ministerial meetings. The secretariat was called on to strengthen its work on collecting, analysing and disseminating economic and social development information and data, and to organize further study of major economic and social development problems and experiences of interest to the developing countries of the region, while continuing to adopt an integrated multidisciplinary approach.

Members and associate members were also called on to bear in mind the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC(54) and the 1981 Caracas Programme of Action on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries(55) and to rededicate themselves to strengthening and expanding TCDC. International organizations were called on to extend their fullest support to ESCAP, and the Secretary-General was asked to provide the Commission with the means to carry out its assigned tasks.

In a 21 April letter,(56) Thailand transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the inaugural address by the Prime Minister of Thailand on the occasion of ESCAP'S fortieth anniversary.

Conference facilities

In a September 1987 report on revised estimates under section 32 (Construction, alteration, improvement and major maintenance of premises of the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget,(57) the Secretary-General reviewed developments since his 1985 reports on construction projects to expand the conference facilities of ESCAP at Bangkok.(58) As a result of a thorough reassessment of the space and accommodations requirements for the expansion of conference facilities at ESCAP, the Secretary-General proposed a reduction of between 41 and 48 per cent in total seating for all conference rooms. According to a revised timetable, final design approval would be granted in October/November 1988, with the award of construction contracts and commencement of construction scheduled for July-September 1989, and construction to be completed by July 1992.

Based on the requirements for a regional-level conference facility, the quantity surveyor made a tentative and preliminary estimate of the construction cost at a calculated total of between $30 million and $35 million.

Work programme for 1988-1989

In April,(1) the Commission noted that the draft programme budget represented zero growth in regular budget resources for the biennium 1988-1989. It endorsed the draft programme of work and priorities, 1988-1989,(59) with a number of modifications; the modified text of the programme was annexed to the Commission's annual report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted decision 1987/165 without vote.

Venue of the forty-fourth session of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

At its 35th plenary meeting, on 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, taking into account paragraph 4 (f) of section I of General Assembly resolution 31/140 of 17 December 1976 and taking note with appreciation of the offer of the Government of Indonesia to act as host to the forty-fourth session of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, decided that the forty-fourth session of the Commission should be held at Jakarta in 1988, in accordance with paragraph 5 of section I of General Assembly resolution 31/140.

Economic and Social Council decision 1987/165

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/121) without vote, 2 July (meeting 22); oral proposal by Chairman based on Secretary-General's report (E/1987/79); agenda item 8.

ESCAP regional institutions

In February,(60) ESCAP reported on administrative and financial issues related to the four regional training and research institutions established by the Commission as its subsidiaries: SIAP, the Regional Mineral Resources Development Centre (RMRDC), the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology, and the Regional Co-ordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific.

With the exception of SIAP, the report noted, financial targets for cash contributions for the institutional costs of the regional institutions had not been met. With regard to RMRDC, the Executive Secretary requested the Commission to take note of his decision to proceed with arrangements to the close the Centre in Bandung, Indonesia, since the financial target for contributions to the Centre had not been met.

While urging member countries to provide and increase cash contributions, the Commission, in April,(1) reiterated that financial support for the institutional costs of the regional institutions was the direct responsibility of the recipient countries and that donor countries should bear the burden of programme support. In addition to host facilities, the Commission suggested, host countries should provide cash contributions for institutional support.

Application for associate membership

On 25 August 1987,(61) the United States presented the application of the Territory of American Samoa for admission as an associate member of ESCAP. The matter was referred to the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs, which noted that the application was the required presentation under paragraph 5 of the terms of reference of ESCAP, the United States being the member of ESCAP responsible for the international relations of the territory. The Commission's secretariat was advised to proceed to formal submission of the application for associate membership to the next (1988) session of ESCAP.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/1987/34. (2)E/1988/35. (3)YUN 1980, p. 503, GA res. 35/56, annex, 5 Dec. 1980. (4)YUN 1981, p. 406. (5)YUN 1984, p. 623.
- (6)Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1987 (ST/ESCAP/585), Sales No. E.88.II.F.2 (summary, E/1988/57).
- (7)E/1987/60. (8)Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1986 (ST/ESCAP/487), Sales No. E.87.II.F.1. (9)E/ESCAP/543.
- (10)E/ESCAP/599. (11)E/1987/34 (res. 261(XLIII)).
- (12)E/ESCAP/628. (13)YUN 1970, p. 425. (14)E/ESCAP/639.
- (15)YUN 1986, p. 548. (16)E/ESCAP/548. (17)E/ESCAP/596.
- (18)E/ESCAP/554. (19)E/ESCAP/555. (20)E/ESCAP/556.
- (21)E/ESCAP/557. (22)YUN 1985, p. 623. (23)E/ESCAP/552.,
- (24)YUN 1986, p. 549. (25)E/ESCAP/551. (26)E/ESCAP/594.
- (27)E/ESCAP/621. (28)E/ESCAP/623. (29)E/ESCAP/593.
- (30)E/ESCAP/549. (31)E/ESCAP/627. (32)YUN 1986, p. 553.
- (33)E/ESCAP/592. (34)YUN 1986, p. 549. (35)E/ESCAP/620.
- (36)YUN 1969, p. 433, GA res. 2542(XXIV), 11 Dec. 1969.
- (37)YUN 1985, p. 649. (38)E/ESCAP/617. (39)YUN 1986, p. 552.
- (40)E/ESCAP/617. (41)YUN 1979, p. 895, GA res. 34/180, annex, 18 Dec. 1979. (42)E/1987/34 (res. 260 XLIII). (43)Ibid. (res. 263(XLIII)).
- (44)E/ESCAP/591. (45)E/ESCAP/559.
- (46)E/ESCAP/606. (47)E/ESCAP/595. (48)E/ESCAP/622.
- (49)E/ESCAP/636. (50)YUN 1986, p. 554. (51)E/ESCAP/624.
- (52)A/42/387. (53)E/1987/34 (res. 359(XLIII)). (54)YUN 1978 p. 467. (55)YUN 1981, p. 383. (56)A/42/293. (57)A/C.5/42/4.
- (58)YUN 1985, p. 645. (59)E/ESCAP/578 & Corr.1. (60)E/ESCAP/565. (61)E/ESCAP/642.

OTHER PUBLICATIONS

Economic Bulletin for Asia and the Pacific, vol. XXXVII, No. 1 (ST/ESCAP/461), Sales No. E.87.II.F.2; No. 2 (ST/ESCAP/513), Sales No. E.87.II.F.9. Quarterly Bulletin of Statistics for Asia and the Pacific, vol. XVI, No. 4 (ST/ESCAP/483), Sales No. E.87.II.F.3. The Triennial Review of Mineral Development Activities in the ESCAP Region, 1982-1984 (ST/ESCAP/462), Sales No. E.87.II.F.5. International Labour Migration and Remittances between the Developing ESCAP Countries and the Middle East: Trends, Issues and Policies (ST/ESCAP/471), Sales No. E.87.II.F.6. Statistical Indicators for Asia and the Pacific, vol.

XVII, No. 1, March 1987 (ST/ESCAP/502), Sales No. E.87.II.F.7; No. 2, June 1987 (ST/ESCAP/527), Sales No. E.87.II.F.13; No. 3, September 1987 (ST/ESCAP/555), Sales No. E.87.II.F.14; No. 4, December 1987 (ST/ESCAP/579), Sales No. E.87.II.F.17. Transport and Communications Bulletin for Asia and the Pacific, No. 59 (ST/ESCAP/SER.E/59), Sales No. E.87.II.F.8. Quarterly Bulletin of Statistics for Asia and the Pacific, vol. XVII, Nos. 1 and 2, March and June 1987 (ST/ESCAP/526), Sales No. E.87.II.F.10; No. 3, September 1987 (ST/ESCAP/549), Sales No. E.87.II.F.12; No. 4, December 1987 (ST/ESCAP/565), Sales No. E.87.II.F.16. Water Resources Development in Asia and the Pacific: Some Issues and Concerns, Water Resources Series No. 62 (ST/ESCAP/SER.F/62), Sales No. E.87.II.F.15. Economic Bulletin for Asia and the Pacific, vol. 38, No. 1/2, June/December 1987 (ST/ESCAP/642), Sales No. E.88.II.F.11. The Triennial Review Of Mineral Development Activities in the ESCAP Region, 1985-1987 (ST/ESCAP/764), Sales No. E.89.II.F.16. Small Industry Bulletin for Asia and the Pacific, No. 22 (ST/ESCAP/SER.M/40), Sales No. E.88.II.F.4.

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe observed its fortieth anniversary in 1987, when it held its forty-second session at Geneva from 31 March to 10 April. In its annual reports covering 28 April 1986 to 10 April 1987(1) and 11 April 1987 to 21 April 1988(2) the Commission reviewed the economic situation in Europe, discussed its contribution to United Nations programmes and the work of its subsidiary bodies and approved plans for future work. On 10 April, it adopted a resolution and 15 decisions pertaining to various aspects of its work.

By the resolution,(3) the Commission, called on member Governments to continue to take full advantage of its potential as an instrument for dialogue and for strengthening economic relations and multilateral co-operation in the region. It requested the Committee on the Development of Trade to pursue its activities aimed at the development of East-West trade and industrial co-operation, bearing in mind new developments in the ECE region, and called on all member Governments to increase efforts to promote favourable conditions for the development of trade and industrial co-operation.

Economic trends

Economic growth in the ECE region slowed down in 1987, from just over 3 per cent in 1986 to about 2.5 per cent. According to a summary of the Economic Survey of Europe in 1987-1988,(4) only North America maintained steady growth, at around 3 per cent, while in Western Europe average gross domestic product growth was about 2.25 per cent, and in the centrally planned economies the increase in the aggregate net material product (NMP) (national product excluding most services and depreciation of capital goods) slowed from over 4 per cent in 1986 to about 2.5 per cent.

In the market economies, a major factor behind the weak performance was the deterioration of net exports, but private consumption was also weaker than in 1986 and fixed investment remained subdued. In the United States, on the other hand, GNP growth not only remained fairly strong but its composition changed decisively in the direction required to correct the current account deficit-domestic demand slowed down sharply, while there was a considerable improvement in the volume of net exports. Inflation rates rose slightly in 1987. Consumer prices rose on average in Western Europe by 2.6 per cent and by 3.6 per cent in the United States. If seasonal foods and energy were excluded, inflation rates continued to fall in most of Western Europe and increased only slightly in the United States. In general, the prices of services continued to rise considerably faster than those of manufactured goods.

Although trade volumes moved in the direction required for a more stable pattern of current account balances, the fall of the United States dollar throughout 1987 meant that there was virtually no improvement in nominal balances. Thus, the deficit of the United States and the surplus of the Federal Republic of Germany showed an increase. Within Western Europe, an emerging problem was the increasing deficits of a number of European Monetary System member countries with the Federal Republic of Germany.

There was only a slight improvement in labour market conditions in 1987. In Western Europe employment rose on average by 0.7 per cent, barely returning to its level before the recession of 1981-1982. Unemployment fell by about 100,000, a negligible reduction in a Western European total of over 13 million. Most of the improvement was confined to the United Kingdom and the average unemployment rate stayed at 9.7 per cent of the total population of working age. In the United States, the demand for labour continued to be more buoyant than in Western Europe: employment rose 2.5 per cent, and unemployment fell to just over 6 per cent of the working age population.

In the countries of Eastern Europe and in the USSR, growth slowed down considerably in 1987. In contrast to the early 1980s, when energy supplies and shortages of some major intermediate inputs were the main constraints, smaller than expected efficiency gains together with weak export demand and deteriorating terms of trade in Western markets seem to have been the main reasons behind the slow-down in 1987. In Eastern Europe, NMP increased by 3.2 per cent, as compared with 4.6 per cent in 1986. In the USSR, NMP grew by 2.3 per cent, compared with 4.1 per cent in 1986.

On the production side, agriculture seemed to have been mainly responsible for holding back overall growth in the centrally planned economies. Its aggregate rate of expansion fell by almost 6 percentage points in Eastern Europe. In the USSR, agricultural output growth also decelerated sharply, from 5.3 per cent in 1986 to 0.2 per cent in 1987. In the industrial sector, growth rates in 1987 were also below those of 1986, though the slow-down was less pronounced than in agriculture. In the USSR, gross industrial production increased 3.8 per cent, while in Eastern Europe it was 3.5 per cent.

East-West trade stagnated in 1987, reinforcing a tendency towards sluggishness or even contraction in most of its major components. Eastern Europe's exports to the West expanded by only 1 per cent; its net debt continued to rise, from some $65 billion to an estimated $75 billion at the end of 1987, most of the increase arising from the valuation effect of the depreciating United States dollar on the stock of the debt. The current account surplus of the USSR rose markedly in 1987 to almost $7 billion. However, as that arose almost exclusively from trade with developing countries and apparently yielded little cash, there was no corresponding reduction in its net debt. On the contrary, exchange rate effects raised the debt from almost $23 billion to about $25 billion in 1987.

As to the outlook for 1988, the summary predicted that growth in the market economies of North America and Western Europe was unlikely to exceed 2 per cent. In the centrally planned economies, the growth of NMP was expected to be little more than 3 per cent.

Activities in 1987

Regional economic co-operation

The Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments (twenty-third session, Geneva, 16-20 February)(5) discussed the economic situation in the market economies and centrally planned economies, and reviewed the preparation of the overall economic perspective to the year 2000.(6) They also reviewed selected medium- and long-term economic issues, including international trade in services and the evolution of working time as it related to employment and productivity in the market-economy countries.

The Advisers agreed to convene at Budapest, Hungary, in 1988 an ECE symposium on long-term prospects in ECE countries and approved the programme of work for 1987-1991.

Co-operation among Mediterranean countries

In April,(7) ECE requested the Executive Secretary to continue to co-operate with the Executive Secretaries of ECA and ESCWA and other relevant United Nations bodies and to pursue his contacts with the other non-ECE Mediterranean countries on subjects within the competence of ECE of common interest to those countries.

International trade

The Committee on the Development of Trade (thirty-sixth session, Geneva, 7-11 December)(8) reviewed recent and prospective trends, policies and problems in intraregional and interregional trade, as well as compensation trade in the ECE region. It discussed practical measures to examine obstacles to intraregional trade and to promote and diversify trade, including long-term agreements on economic co-operation and trade, and trade promotion through industrial co-operation. The Committee also considered the development and transparency of market information, marketing techniques and improved business contacts, as well trade problems of ECE members that were developing from the economic point of view.

The Committee adopted the programme of work for 1987-1992 which included a number of continuing activities such as analysis and review of trade trends, promotion and diversification of East-West trade, and the promotion of trade through industrial co-operation.

Other 1987 meetings dealing with trade issues included: the Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures (23-27 March); the Group of Experts on Data Elements and Automatic Data Processing (24 and 25 March); the Group of Experts (6-8 July) and the Working Party (30 November-2 December) on International Contract Practices in Industry. The Commission published a guide on drawing up international contracts for services relating to maintenance, repair and operation of industrial and other works.(9)

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee (forty-eighth session, Geneva, 2-6 February)(10) reviewed the status of application of international transport agreements of interest to ECE Governments, analysed the transport situation in ECE member countries and emerging development trends, and addressed specific issues related to road, rail and inland water transport.

Groups of experts met on the transport of dangerous goods (March, May, November/December), customs questions affecting transport (March, July, November), the construction of vehicles (March, June, October), the development of a European railway network (March), road traffic safety (April, May, September, October) and the standardization of rules of the road and signs and signals in inland navigation (February) and of technical requirements for vessels and of ships' papers (April, September).

In April, ECE requested the Inland Transport Committee to pay appropriate attention to a continuing assessment of the development of transport in the region and adequate conclusions for an efficient transport system, in particular questions concerning the transport economy.(11) It also declared the safe carriage of dangerous goods to be one of the transport priority objectives, and requested the Executive Secretary to regard the work of expert groups on the transport of dangerous goods as a priority task and to allocate to it the necessary available resources.(12)

Industry

The Chemical Industry Committee (twentieth session, Geneva, 7-9 October)(13) considered the draft annual review of the chemical industry (1986) and agreed that it should be published in early 1988. It also discussed market trends and outlook for selected chemical products, as well as the report of the first ad hoc meeting on regulations and legislation on environmental applications of biotechnology. The Committee adopted its work programme for 1987-1992 and agreed on topics for future study: automation and robotics in the chemical industry, application of lasers and radiation in chemical processes, the effects of chemical production on environment and health, possibilities and limitations of technology transfer in the chemical industry, East-West trade in chemical products among ECE member countries, and trends in energy requirements. A seminar on the role of the chemical industry in food production (Moscow, 18-22 May) was followed by a study tour in the USSR (23-30 May) to look into new developments in the production and application of chemicals, including fertilizers, plastics, and food and feed additives.

The Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation (seventh session, Geneva, 25-27 February)(14) reviewed the medium- and long-term assessment of engineering industries within national, regional and global economies, as well as the medium- and long-term impact of automation on the economy and its industrial sectors. It took note of the 1985 annual review of engineering industries and automation, and considered the draft annual review for 1986. The second ad hoc meeting for a study on the long-term assessment of the role and place of engineering industries in national and world economies preceded the Working Party session.

In April, (15) ECE approved the programme of work for 1987-1991 and the calendar of meetings of the Working Party.

The Steel Committee (fifty-fifth session, Geneva, 11-13 November)(16) reviewed short- and medium-term trends in the steel market. It endorsed the report of the Working Party on Steel Statistics (November), a study conducted by the fifth ad hoc meeting for a study on structural changes in international steel trade (June), the report of an ad hoc meeting for a study of the importance of the iron and steel industry in the economic activity of ECE member countries (February) and the report of a seminar on the economic aspects of secondary steel-making (Dresden, German Democratic Republic, 15-19 June).

Energy resources

In April,(17) ECE decided that, at their sixth session in 1988, the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Energy were to review, among other things, ECE activities in the field of general energy and the energy situation in the region, as well as the general energy work programme for 1988-1992. Among meetings dealing with general energy issues during 1987 were a symposium on the long-term impact of energy efficiency improvements (Budapest, 6-10 April), an ad hoc meeting of the Joint Working Group on Energy (Geneva, 18 and 19 May), a symposium on the status and prospects of new and renewable sources of energy in the ECE region (Sophia Antipolis, France, 29 June-3 July) and a preparatory meeting for a symposium on the optimum use of primary energy resources in final heat consumption (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 10 and 11 November).

The Coal Committee (eighty-third session, Geneva, 28 September-1 October)(18) continued its review of world coal trade up to the year 2000, including a survey, updated in April 1987, which concluded that by the year 2000 the international coal market would have grown to 500 million metric tons-only 10 per cent of global production-and would be supplied mainly by eight countries, four within and four outside ECE. The Committee also discussed matters relating to scientific and technical co-operation in the preparation and utilization of coal, and decided to postpone until 1990 a symposium on new coal utilization technologies, since no country had offered to host it. Also during the year, groups of experts met on productivity and management problems in the coal industry (17-19 June) and on the utilization and preparation of solid fuels (15-17 June).

The Committee on Electric Power (forty-fifth session, Geneva, 26-29 January)(19) discussed preparations for seminars on the utilization of geothermal energy for electric power production and space heating and on the impact of atmospheric protection measures on thermal power stations. Groups of experts discussed the rational use of electricity and electric distribution outside the major urban areas (May), problems of planning and operating large power systems (May), electric power stations (November), and the relationship between electricity and the environment (November). A seminar on comparison of models of planning and operating electric power systems was held in Moscow (June).

The Committee on Gas (thirty-third session, Geneva, 19-22 January)(29) discussed current developments and medium- and long-term prospects of the gas situation and the natural gas markets. It reviewed the work of its groups of experts, including those on the use and distribution of gas, the transport and storage of gas, and gas statistics and forecasting problems. The Committee also reviewed the development of international co-operation in the field of liquid purified gas (LPG) and decided, due to economy measures, not to establish a group of experts on LPG and to request its groups of experts on the use and distribution of gas and on the transport and storage of gas to consider incorporating into their work programmes issues related to LPG.

Water

In April,(21) ECE adopted the "Principles on co-operation in the field of transboundary waters" and recommended to member Governments that they apply the principles in formulating and implementing water policies. The principles addressed issues regarding control and prevention of transboundary water pollution and flood management in trans-boundary waters.

The Committee on Water Problems (eighteenth session, Geneva, 10-13 February)(22) discussed, among other things, the rational use of water in industrial processes, monitoring and evaluation of water pollution, waste-water treatment and water management systems. Other 1987 meetings included the Working Party on Water Problems (first session, December), an ad hoc meeting to review the draft guidelines on ground-water management (December) and a seminar on protection of soil and aquifers against non-point source pollution (Madrid, Spain, 5-9 October).

Agriculture and timber

The Committee on Agricultural Problems (thirty-eighth session, Geneva, 9-13 March),(23) reviewed European trade in agricultural products and the market situation of selected commodities, including grains, livestock and meat and milk and dairy products. It also reviewed the work of its subsidiary bodies, including those dealing with the standardization of perishable produce, the mechanization of agriculture, and agrarian structure and farm rationalization.

The ECE Timber Committee (forty-fifth session) and the FAO European Forestry Commission (twenty-third session) held a joint session in 1987 (Geneva, 12-16 October).(24) They reviewed market developments in 1987 and prospects for 1988, as well as European timber trends and prospects to the year 2000 and beyond. They also considered the activities of Timber Committee teams of specialists on energy derived from wood and on the implications of air pollution damage to forests. Seminars were held on the small-scale logging operations and machines (June), the impact of acute forest damage on harvesting and silvicultural operations (September), and extension activities for owners of small woodlands (September/October).

Science and technology

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology (fifteenth session, Geneva, 21-25 September)(25) reviewed, among other things, current developments in science and technology policies, medium- and long-term perspectives and transfer of technology, as well as biotechnology and economic development.

In April,(26) ECE noted with satisfaction the progress made in preparation for a symposium on implications of new technologies for management training programmes and methods. The symposium (Geneva, 17-19. November)(27) recommended that ECE and ILO act as a focal point and strengthen their collaboration to further East-West and North-South co-operation in the field of management development and training, and that they convene an intersecretariat working group to review the outcome of the symposium and elaborate practical recommendations for international collaboration and action. The group was to meet in February 1988.

Environment

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems (fifteenth session, Geneva, 3-6 March)(28) discussed the results of the 1986 ad hoc meeting on the long-term strategy for environmental protection and rational use of natural resources in ECE member countries.(29) As decided by the Advisers, the ad hoc meeting reconvened (Vienna, 27-30 October) in order to finalize the strategy. The Advisers also reviewed implementation of the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution and the work of the Working Party on Air Pollution Problems. A seminar on environmental impact assessment was held at Warsaw, Poland, from 21 to 25 September. At an ad hoc meeting (23-25 November), a Declaration on the Protection of Flora, Fauna and Their Habitats was finalized.

In April,(30) ECE called on the Senior Advisers to take all necessary efforts for the implementation of the Declaration on Low- and Non-Waste Technology and Reutilization and Recycling of Waste, and to continue their work in the field of treatment and final storage of hazardous wastes.

Human settlements

The Committee on Housing, Building and Planning (forty-eighth session, Geneva, 15-18 September)(31) discussed the human settlements situation and related current trends and policies, as well as urban renewal and modernization policies. It also reviewed work accomplished in relation to the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (see p. 715), human settlements problems in southern Europe, urban and regional planning, housing policies and human settlements statistics. Also held during the year were a seminar on new techniques to collect and process land-use data (Gavle/Stockholm, Sweden, 19-24 January) and a seminar on regulations and technologies for construction and land development (Paris, 22-26 June).

ECE, in April,(32) took note of the Committee's work on the preparation of an ECE compendium of model provisions for building regulations.(33)

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (thirty-fifth session, Geneva, 15-19 June)(34) discussed regional statistical co-operation, including the promotion of co-ordination of the statistical activities in Europe of intergovernmental organizations, and the methodological development and harmonization of economic, social and demographic and environmental statistics. It agreed to convene in 1988, jointly with the Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation, a meeting on questions of statistics in engineering industries and automation, and to convene with ILO a work session on manpower statistics to review draft versions of the Labour Accounting System prepared by countries and international organizations.

Other 1987 meetings dealt with the integration of social and demographic statistics (May), food and agricultural statistics (September, jointly with FAO), computer-related aspects of population and housing censuses (October) and transport statistics (December).

Standardization

In April,(35) ECE decided to convene a further session of the Group of Experts on Standardization Policies (see below) and a Tenth Meeting of Government Officials Responsible for Standardization Policies in 1988. It also reiterated its invitation to all ECE members to introduce summer time and recommended that summer time be standardized over the longest possible period of time but not less than three years.(36)

The Group of Experts on Standardization Policies (fourteenth session, Geneva, 25-27 May)(37) set up an ad hoc working group to update the ECE Standardization List, and endorsed the recommendation of its ad hoc working group on metrology that a one-day seminar on metrology be held during the Tenth Meeting of Government Officials.

Other activities

Population

The Regional Meeting on Population and Development (Budapest, 24-27 February),(38) organized in collaboration with UNFPA, reviewed recent demographic trends in the ECE region and their implications for economic and social development, and regional and international co-operation in the field of population. It also discussed a number of major policy and research issues, including development of population policies, reproduction and the family, population distribution and internal migration, international migration and population structure.

Women

In April,(39) ECE took note of the Executive Secretary's report(40) on the Commission's contribution to the follow-up of the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women(41) and requested him to continue to assess developments with respect to the economic role of women in the ECE region.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

In April,(42) ECE set up an Ad Hoc Committee for the Review of the Structure and Functions of ECE. It requested the Committee to examine the ECE work programmes in order to ensure a more effective use of resources.

The Ad Hoc Committee (Geneva, 1-3 June and 5-9 October)(43) agreed in general that measures could be taken to improve efficiency and to secure economies with respect to the programme of work, structure of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies, calendar of meetings, and documentation and publications. A report elaborated by the Committee,(44) for submission to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (see p. 949), was approved by ECE at a special session held on 9 and 10 November.

In April,(3) ECE reaffirmed the need further to increase efficiency in the use of its resources, through developing and strengthening concentration and integration of its programme of work. It approved its work programme for 1987-1988 and endorsed in principle, subject to review at its 1988 session, its long-term programme for 1987-1991. The Commission (45) also amended its rules of procedure concerning the election of officers.

Membership

In June 1987, the Executive Secretary of ECE reported to the Economic and Social Council(46) on his consultations with member States on the question of admitting Israel to the Commission. Of the 34 ECE members, 24 either supported Israel's admission or declared that they were not opposed, 8 were opposed to or not in favour of its admission and 2 did not respond.

On 8 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/164, took note of the Executive Secretary's report and decided to defer consideration of a draft decision on the question to its second regular session of 1988.

The draft decision,(47) which had been presented to the Council in 1986 but deferred to 1987 (48) would have the Council amend the ECE terms of reference by adding Israel to the list of members.

REFERENCES

(1)E/1987/33. (2)E/1988/36. (3)E/1987/33 (res. 1(42)). (4)Economic Survey of Europe in 1987-1988, Sales No. E.88.II.E.1 (summary, E/1988/52). (5)ECE/EC.AD29. (6)YUN 1986, p. 556. (7)E/1987/33 (dec. J(42)). (8)ECE/TRADE/161. (9)Guide on Drawing up International contracts for Services relating to Maintenance, Repair and Operation of Industrial and Other Works ECE/TRADE/154, Sales No. E.87.II.E.2. (10)ECE/TRANS/68 and Add.1. (11)E/1987/33 (dec. C(42)). (12)Ibid. (dec. D(42)). (13)ECE/CHEM/67. (14)ECE/ENG.AUT/28. (15)E/1987/33 (dec. M(42)). (16)ECE/STEEL/60. (17)E/1987/33 (dec. G(42)). (18)ECE/COAL/113. (19)ECE/EP/74. (20)ECE/GAS/89. (21)E/1987/33 (dec. I(42)). (22)ECE/WATER/47. (23)ECE/AGRI/92. (24)ECE/TIM/38. (25)ECE/SC.TECH/33. (26)E/1987/33 (dec. O(42)). (27)ECE/SEM.7/3. (28)ECE/ENV/52. (29)YUN 1986, p. 559. (30)E/1987/33 (dec. F(42)). (31)ECE/HBP/72. (32)E/1987/33 (dec. H(42)). (33)ECE/HBP/55. (34)ECE/CES/30. (35)E/1987/33 (dec. K(42)). (36)Ibid. (dec. E(42)). (37)STAND/GE.1/29. (38)ECE/AC.16/2. (39)E/1987/33 (dec. L(42)). (40)E/ECE/1142. (41)YUN 1985, p. 937. (42)E/1987/33 (dec. B 42)). (43)ECE/AC.17/2, ECE/AC.17/4. (44)E/ECE/1150/Rev.1. (45) E/1987/33 (dec. A(42)). (46)E/1987/108. (47)E/1987/L.32. (48)YUN 1986, p. 559, ESC res. 1986/67, 23 July 1986.

OTHER PUBLICATIONS

1987 Quarterly Bulletin of Steel Statistics for Europe, vol. XXXVIII, No. 2. Environment Statistics in Europe and North America: An Experimental Compendium, Sales No. E.87.II.E.28. National Strategies and Policies Air Pollution Abatement, Sales No. E.87.II.E.29. Structural Changes in International Steel Trade, Sales No. E.87.II.E.33. The Telecommunication Industry, Growth and Structural Change, Sales No. E.87.II.E.35. Effects and Control of Transboundary Air Pollution, Sales No. E.87.II.E.36. Recommendations for the 1990 Censuses of Population and Housing in the ECE Region, Sales No. E.87.II.E.38. Annual Bulletin of Electric Energy Statistics for Europe, 1987, vol. XXIII, Sales No. E/F/R.88.II.E.8. Annual Bulletin of Housing and Building Statistics Europe, 1987 vol. XXXI, Sales No. E/F/R.88.II.E.9. Statistics of World Trade in Steel, 1987 Sales No. E/F/R.88.II.E.10. Annual Bulletin of Transport Statistics for Europe, 1987, Sales No. E/F/R.88.II.E.12. Prices of Agricultural Products and Selected Inputs in Europe and North America 1986/87 Sales No. E.88.II.E.19. Agricultural Review for Europe, No. 30, 1986 and 1987 vol.I, General Review, Sales No. E.88.II.E.21; vol. II, Agricultural Trade, Sales No. E.88.II.E.22; vol. III, The Grain Market, Sales No. E.88.II.E.23; vol. IV, The Livestock and Meat Market, Sales No. E.88.II.E.24; vol. V, The Milk and Dairy Products Market, Sales No. E.88.II.E.25. Annual Review of Engineering Industries and Automation, 1987, vols. I & II, Sales No. E.88.II.E.36. Annual Review of the Chemical Industry 1987, Sales No. E.89.II.E.2. Bulletin of Statistics on World Trade in Engineering Products, 1987, Sales No. E/F/R.89.II.E.5. Annual Bulletin of General Energy Statistics for Europe, 1987, vol. XX, Sales No. E/F/R.89.II.E.10.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, at the invitation of the Government of Mexico,(1) held a Special Conference at Mexico City from 19 to 23 January to address the pressing economic problems connected with the severe economic crisis affecting the region since 1982. In accordance with its biennial calendar of meetings, ECLAC did not hold a formal session in 1987. The biennial report for the period 26 April 1986 to 27 April 1988(2) covered the Commission's activities, as well as those of its subsidiary bodies and special committees.

The Committee of the Whole (nineteenth session, United Nations Headquarters, New York, 13 and 14 August) discussed the handling of the economic crisis in the region and, in response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(3) the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields. The Committee adopted a resolution(4) on the latter subject in which it recommended that the Commission's existing structure should be maintained but that two sessional committees-water and human settlements-should be abolished. It emphasized the important role that ECLAC was called on to play and stressed the need to strengthen intergovernmental relations between the Commission and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) in view of the latter's new responsibilities under the 1986 Assembly resolution.(3)

The Committee of High-level Government Experts (CEGAN) (thirteenth session, New York, 11-13 August) adopted a resolution on support by ECLAC for the Central American countries, in which it declared, among other things, that ECLAC should continue to support the process of Central American integration. It reaffirmed ECLAC's commitment, as an organ of the United Nations, to grant assistance and economic co-operation to all the Central American countries so that they may attain their objectives of normalizing and reactivating their economies.

Economic trends

In 1987, the acute economic crisis in Latin America and the Caribbean which had confronted the region since the beginning of the decade worsened, according to the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1987(5). At the same time as the rate of economic growth fell, inflation increased markedly, and the results achieved by the external sector, albeit more satisfactory, were limited to a very small number of countries.

The region's gross domestic product (GDP) rose by 2.5 per cent, a lower figure than that recorded in the previous three years, and one which represented an increase of barely 0.3 per cent in per capita product. The latter was consequently 5.3 per cent lower than in 1980 - the year preceding the crisis-and equivalent to the figure already attained in 1978.

The decline in the standard of living which had affected most of the relatively poorest economies of the region since the beginning of the decade continued in 1987. Between 1980 and 1987, per capita product fell by 28 per cent in Guyana, 26 per cent in Bolivia, 20 per cent in Guatemala, 17 per cent in Nicaragua, 16 per cent in Haiti and 14 per cent in El Salvador and Honduras. During the same period, it also fell sharply in countries with considerably higher levels of income and development, such as Trinidad and Tobago (26 per cent), Venezuela (20 per cent), Argentina (15 per cent) and Mexico (9 per cent). Notwithstanding the lower rate of economic growth, the average rate of open unemployment fell slightly in the region as a whole, primarily because of the sharp reduction in unemployment in Chile, Colombia, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The sluggishness in economic activity went hand in hand with a pronounced upturn in inflation. The average rate of consumer price increases in the region as a whole, weighted by population, which had fallen from 275 per cent in 1985 to 65 per cent in 1986, returned to almost 200 per cent by the end of 1987.

Moreover, the rise in inflation was quite widespread; consumer prices rose more rapidly than in 1986 in 16 of the 27 economies for which figures were available. In particular, inflation reached extraordinary levels in Nicaragua (1,339 per cent) and revived sharply in Brazil (366 per cent), Argentina (175 per cent) and Peru (115 per cent). It intensified for the third year running in Mexico (159 per cent) and rose considerably, although from far lower levels, in Venezuela (40 per cent) as a result of which price increases in both countries attained historical highs. Inflation remained high in Uruguay (57 per cent), although a slight downward trend could be discerned; it increased slightly in Barbados, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador and Trinidad and Tobago, and rose more sharply in the Dominican Republic. In contrast, inflation rates fell for the second year running in Bolivia, remained generally stable in the Bahamas, Costa Rica and Paraguay, fell considerably in El Salvador, Guatemala and Jamaica, and remained extremely low in Dominica, Honduras and Panama.

There was, however, an improvement in external accounts. On account of the recovery of the international price of petroleum, as well as the upturn in the prices of minerals and other commodities, together with the rapid growth of exports of manufactured goods in a number of countries-and despite the sharp fall in the international price of coffee-the total value of Latin America's external sales of goods rose by 14 per cent.

The increase in exports was accompanied by an 11 per cent rise in the value of imports, which continued to improve on the huge slump of over 40 per cent that occurred in 1982-1983. The growth of imports was widespread, declining in volume only in El Salvador, Haiti, Honduras and Nicaragua; the last was the only country in which the shrinkage was noteworthy (-22 per cent). In contrast, the volume of imports grew by 10 per cent or more in eight countries, and in five of those-Chile, Ecuador, Guatemala, Paraguay and Uruguay-the real increase in external purchases exceeded 20 per cent.

Since the value of exports grew more rapidly than that of imports, a slight improvement occurred in the terms of trade, following its decline over the previous two years. After having attained a historic high of $39.4 billion in 1984, a figure which was cut in half in the two following years, the surplus rose to $22.5 billion in 1987. However, far from signifying a generalized trend, the increase was almost exclusively due to the extremely high rises which occurred in Mexico, where the trade surplus almost doubled, from $4.6 billion in 1986 to $9 billion in 1987, Venezuela, where it rose from $800 million to more than $2 billion, and Brazil, where it increased from $8.3 billion to $11.2 billion.

In the remaining countries, with the exceptions of Chile (whose surplus increased by 13 per cent), Haiti, Nicaragua and Paraguay (which successfully reduced their deficits), the performance of trade in goods was less satisfactory than in 1986. The deterioration was particularly marked in Argentina, where the trade surplus fell by $1.5 billion, in Ecuador, where the $550 million surplus earned in 1986 was replaced by a $60 million deficit, in Costa Rica and Guatemala, which experienced a similar turnaround, and in Bolivia, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Panama and Peru, where the trade deficit increased sharply.

The increase in the trade surplus and a decline in net payments for services led to a drop in the current account deficit from $15.2 billion in 1986 to $9.3 billion in 1987. However, the decline was almost exclusively attributable to changes in three countries: Mexico, which earned a $4 billion surplus after having recorded a $1.45 billion deficit in 1986; Brazil, which reduced its deficit from $4 billion to $1.1 billion; and Venezuela, whose deficit fell from $2 billion to $300 million. In contrast, in all the remaining countries, except Chile, Nicaragua and Panama, the current account deficit increased.

In 1987, net capital inflow rose for the second year running, after having fallen to an extremely low level in 1985. The nominal figure of over $13 billion was, however, equal to less than half that received by the region before the onset of the debt crisis and in real terms represented an ever lower proportion. That increase, together with the slight shrinkage in payments of interest and profits, led to a decrease in the transfer of resources abroad to $16.9 billion, 24 per cent lower than in 1986 and equivalent to slightly more than half the figure recorded on average in the period 1983-1985.

The gradual growth of the region's external debt continued, reaching an estimated $410 billion at the end of 1987 or an increase of 4.4 per cent over 1986. However, in real terms, the debt expanded by less than the 2 per cent recorded in the previous year, possibly because the value of the dollar in which the external debt was traditionally valued fell heavily against the currencies of other creditor countries. One of the countries most affected by that change in 1987 was Brazil, whose debt "rose" by at least $3 billion because of the increase in the value of the yen and the major European currencies against the dollar.

Because of the slow growth of the debt, the lower level of international interest rates between the middle of 1986 and the middle of 1987, and the recovery in the value of the exports of Latin America and the Caribbean, indicators of the external debt burden for the region as a whole improved over 1986. They nevertheless remained at critical levels, and in most of the countries of Latin America, external debt servicing continued to constitute the main restriction to any return to economic growth.

As the rate of growth of the value of exports was treble that of the debt, the regional debt/export coefficient fell from 415 per cent in 1986 to 382 per cent in 1987. The coefficient remained significantly higher than the already high coefficient recorded during the period 1982-1985 and some 50 per cent higher than those customary before the onset of the debt crisis. Moreover, the fall in the debt/export coefficient was not a generalized phenomenon; for the petroleum-exporting countries it was exclusively attributable to the sharp drop which occurred in Mexico and Venezuela, while the coefficient continued to rise in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru, mainly because of the fall in exports.

A significant improvement also occurred in the interest/export ratio, another principal indicator of the debt burden. For the region as a whole, the coefficient fell from 37 per cent in 1986 to 30 per cent in 1987. The decline was more pronounced in the petroleum-exporting countries (from 35 per cent to 27 per cent) than in the other economies in the region (38 per cent to 32 per cent). While those coefficients were the lowest recorded since the onset of the debt crisis, they were nonetheless almost double those recorded in the period 1978-1979.

By decision 1987/188 of 9 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of, among other documents, the summary of the survey of Latin America and the Caribbean.⁽⁶⁾

Activities in 1987

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

ECLAC continued to examine the short-term economic evolution of the countries of the region and to analyse and propose economic policies and strategies to promote strong, sustained, equitable and autonomous development.

Several studies focused on the analysis of economic policies to deal with the crisis and on alternative debt management policies aimed at securing an expansionary adjustment and bringing down inflation without recession. They provided the basis for a paper on Latin American and Caribbean development: obstacles, requirements and options,⁽⁷⁾ presented at the Special Conference of ECLAC in January (see above).

Activities were carried out in the area of economic projections for evaluating the medium- and long-term development prospects of Latin America and the Caribbean. They provided the basic material for prospective studies of the Latin American economy. Projections were regularly updated to take account of the prevailing international economic situation and shifts in the internal situations of the countries of the region.

Information and documentation for economic and social development, carried out by the Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation, provided the countries of the region with technical support in those areas. A new series on special development issues delivered publications on external debt, regional co-operation, water resource planning, environmental planning and regional integration.

The Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) - which commemorated its twenty-fifth anniversary in 1987 - continued its activities in the areas of planning and co-ordination of public policies, in both the economic and social spheres, including advisory services, training and applied research.

ILPES also continued to function as the technical secretariat of the System for Co-operation and Co-ordination among Planning Bodies in Latin America and the Caribbean and, among its activities in this field, organized the Sixth Conference of Ministers and Heads of Planning of Latin America and the Caribbean (Cuba, March). The central topic discussed at the meeting was the relationship of reactivation and integration with planning.

With the support of UNDP, joint activities were carried out with the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development. A four-year project approved by UNDP on the elaboration and dissemination of new techniques for planning and programming public policies was initiated in 1987. There was valuable interaction with several United Nations specialized agencies. For the execution of a number of technical co-operation operations, meaningful contacts were also maintained with regional international organizations.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

By a letter to the Secretary-General dated 14 August 1987,(8) Mexico and Peru requested that a supplementary item, "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System", be added to the agenda of the 1987 General Assembly. An explanatory memorandum annexed to that letter stated that the purpose of the Latin American Economic System (SELA) was to promote regional co-operation, co-ordination and consultation among the countries of the region. It had been accorded observer status by the General Assembly in 1980.(9) By a 21 August letter,(10) Uruguay, as Chairman of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States, informed the Secretary-General that the Group supported the request of Mexico and Peru. Bolivia also, by a 14 September letter,(11) supported inclusion of the item in the agenda.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/12 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the Convention establishing the Latin American Economic System, signed on 17 October 1975, created a permanent body for intraregional co-operation and consultation and co-ordination among Latin American and Caribbean States,

Considering that, in accordance with the Convention, the activities of the Latin American Economic System are carried out in keeping with its principles that correspond to those of the United Nations such as equality, sovereignty and independence of States, solidarity, non-intervention and respect for the economic, social and political systems freely chosen by States,

Recalling that, in accordance with the Convention, co-operation as well as consultation and co-ordination activities promoted by the Latin American Economic System are carried out in the spirit of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974,

Bearing in mind its resolution 35/3 of 13 October 1980, in which it granted observer status to the Latin American Economic System in the General Assembly, and that several organs and agencies of the United Nations system participate on the same basis in the Latin American Council, the supreme organ of the Latin American Economic System,

Taking into account the fact that the Secretary-General of the United Nations is represented at sessions of the Latin American Council by a special representative,

Considering that the Latin American Economic System has entered into agreements or understandings regarding the conduct of co-operation with organs and agencies of the United Nations system, such as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the International Labour Organisation, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the International Telecommunication Union,

Recognizing the need to strengthen and broaden co-operation between the Latin American Economic System, as a regional forum of the Latin American and Caribbean countries, and the United Nations, and the desirability of the two bodies maintaining permanent liaison, continuing to hold consultations on matters of common interest, exchanging information between their secretariats and increasing co-operation in different spheres,

Taking note of the communiqué issued at the thirteenth session of the Latin American Council, in which it was agreed that an annual dialogue at the level of Ministers for External Relations would be held prior to regular sessions of the General Assembly of the United Nations, in order to examine the international situation and its repercussions on the region, as well as actions to strengthen Latin American unity,

Recalling those Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage regional co-operation activities for the purpose of promoting the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

1. Acknowledges with satisfaction the efforts made by the Latin American Economic System to promote co-operation among Latin American and Caribbean countries and consultation on and co-ordination of their positions, as well as to stimulate their economic and social development;

2. Decides to strengthen and broaden co-operation between the United Nations system and the Latin American Economic System through permanent liaison which will allow for ongoing consultation on matters of common interest, exchange of information between secretariats and increased co-operation, so as to improve the capacity of the two organizations for the attainment of their goals and objectives;

3. Emphasizes the importance of close co-operation between the United Nations system and the Latin American Economic System for the implementation of the new international economic order in keeping with the relevant resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly and the Latin American Council;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to strengthen and broaden co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System;

5. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to continue to intensify their co-operation in the activities of the Latin American Economic System;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the evolution of co-operation between the United Nations system and the Latin American Economic System.

General Assembly resolution 42/12

28 October 1987 Meeting 51 Adopted without vote

31-nation draft (A/42/L.14 & Add.1): agenda item 143.

Sponsors: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Chile, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Meeting number. GA 42nd session: plenary 51.

Caribbean area

The Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee (CDCC) (tenth session, Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, 27-29 October)(12) considered, among other things, the implementation of its work programme for the period 1985-1987, the work programme for the biennium 1988-1989, the medium-term plan 1990-1995, its programme of activities in support of small island developing countries and promotion of technical co-operation among CDCC member countries.

CDCC adopted a resolution on the programme of support for small island countries (13), by which it asked the CDCC secretariat to work with the secretariats of other agencies and organizations in developing its programme of action.

The World Bank and other financial agencies were urged to reconsider graduation of those States from concessionary funds and to develop alternative modalities of concessionary financing for their development. CDCC commended UNDP for assisting those countries to overcome some of their constraints and problems and called on other United Nations agencies and other organizations to consider developing special programmes to assist them. It urged its secretariat to examine the access of non-independent Caribbean countries to United Nations programmes and activities. The Economic and Social Council and ECLAC were urged to consider ways to obtain financial assistance for the special programme's implementation. CDCC asked ECLAC to work through the Council to bring the international community's attention to the problems faced by those small countries, including their vulnerability to natural disasters. The CDCC secretariat was asked to present the plan of action to member Governments for consideration with a view to presenting it to ECLAC at its 1988 session.

International trade and finance

The activities of ECLAC's International Trade and Development Division, with a view towards more effective intraregional integration, focused on the assessment of the impact of the world crisis on the external economic relations of Latin America and the execution of activities designed to promote concerted action by the region in order to achieve tangible results from the measures taken.

With regard to basic commodities, four studies were carried out on the performance of markets for the basic products exported by Latin America and the possibilities of raising the value of commodity exports. The studies were presented at the Regional Conference on Basic Commodities, held in conjunction with SELA (Guatemala, 14-17 January).

With the Latin American Integration Association (ALADI), ECLAC co-sponsored the third meeting of officials responsible for foreign trade of member countries of ALADI (Mexico City, 25 and 26 May).

Technical co-operation

In 1987, the UNDP Governing Council approved 24 country programmes from Latin America and the Caribbean and the programme for the eastern Caribbean within the limits of their illustrative indicative planning figures for UNDP's fourth planning cycle (1987-1991). It also took note of the intercountry programme for Latin America and the Caribbean (see also Chapter II of this section).

During the first half of 1987 a start was made on activities to co-ordinate efforts in respect of technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) by a number of international and regional agencies such as UNDP, SELA, UNESCO and others, and the activities of a project designed to promote TCDC by strengthening links between national co-ordinating centres in Latin America and the Caribbean were initiated.

Support continued for the execution of the ECLAC/UNDP/Argentina project designed to strengthen the latter country's TCDC activities in Latin America and in Africa.

Transport

ECLAC continued its activities as part of a project on the institutional and economic efficiency of the Chilean transport system, carried out in collaboration with the Chilean Ministry of Transport and Telecommunications and funded by the World Bank. At the request of Ecuador, ECLAC collaborated in a multidisciplinary effort to assess the damage caused to the transport infrastructure by the earthquake which struck the country in 1986.

ECLAC also organized the second technical meeting between Latin American countries on urban transport, in conjunction with the Metropolitan Transport Division of the Argentine Department of Transport (Argentina, November); the second meeting of the Latin American Maritime Transport Commission, organized in conjunction with SELA, on structural changes in land transport and the growing links with maritime transport and their implications for the formulation of policies in the countries of Latin America (Venezuela, August); and the third meeting of the maritime authorities of South America, Mexico and Panama and of the Operational Network for Regional Co-operation between the Maritime Authorities of South America, Mexico and Panama (Mexico, May).

At the request of the Meeting of Ministers of Public Works and Transport of the Southern Cone countries, collaboration was provided in preparing a draft international agreement on the transport contract and the civil liability of the carrier in international land cargo transport. A draft agreement was submitted for consideration to the Meeting of Ministers in 1987.

Industrial development

Activities under the joint regional programme of ECLAC and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) were designed to provide a deeper understanding and interpretation of the processes of industrialization in the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean. These activities were also designed to promote co-operation with the Governments of the region in analysing trends in the reorganization of world industry and their repercussions on national productive structures, in redirecting their industrial development and in designing appropriate policies for facing new challenges and the difficulties of financing investment.

As part of the Regional Programme on Industrial Reorganization, initiated in 1985 in conjunction with UNIDO, a special expert group meeting on strategies and policies for industrialization was held (Uruguay, November/December) to analyse the diagnosis and the strategic guidelines of the industrial sector. A start was made on the design of analytical systems to facilitate a better understanding of the region's industrialization processes, advisory assistance continued to be provided and two issues of the periodic report on industrialization and technological development were published.

The first Latin American co-ordination meeting of institutions linked to the capital goods sector was organized (Venezuela, July) in conjunction with SELA and UNIDO. In addition, the fourth expert meeting on capital goods industries in Latin America and the Caribbean was held in conjunction with UNIDO (Santiago, November). The expert group meeting examined national promotion policies, financing mechanisms, the repercussions of new technologies and mechanisms for regional co-operation. ECLAC also organized an expert group on industrialization strategies and policies (Santiago, November).

Natural resources, energy and environment

ECLAC continued to promote and support co-operation among the countries of the region in developing their natural resources, including mineral, water and ocean resources. Activities in the area of mineral resources concentrated on support for the work programme of the Latin American Mining Organization (OLAMI) in two areas: the establishment of an ECLAC/OLAMI regional Mining Information System and the analysis of the possibility of establishing machinery for technology transfer among mining enterprises.

In water resources, the main activities revolved around two projects for promoting co-operation among the countries of the region in water management: river basins in the Altiplano of the Andes and the management of complex water systems. A number of reports were prepared on progress in the region in various areas of water management. Ocean resources activities mainly involved support of activities undertaken by Governments, the Permanent Commission for the South Pacific and other United Nations agencies in relation to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (1982)(14) and assessment of the environmental impact and future prospects of marine mineral resources.

During the year, ECLAC organized the following meetings: seminar on marine bottoms, their mineral resources, exploration, exploitation and environmental implications, in conjunction with UNEP and the Permanent Commission for the South Pacific (Colombia, September); first Latin American and Caribbean Conference on Mining Law (Argentina, October); consultative workshop on strategies for the development of the mining resources of Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, December); and an expert meeting on horizontal co-operation in water resources management in Latin America and the Caribbean, in conjunction with the Federal Republic of Germany (Santiago, May).

In the energy sector, activities centred on energy assessment for Latin America and integrated development of the electricity sector in Central America.

The Commission's activities in the area of the environment, carried out by the Joint ECLAC/UNEP Development and Environment Unit, aimed at giving a more concrete character to proposals for incorporating the environmental dimension into development. Together with the UNEP Regional Office for Latin America and the Caribbean, ECLAC assumed responsibility for co-ordinating a programme on planning and the environment.

During the year, ECLAC organized a seminar on technologies for human settlements in the wet tropics (Brazil, April) and a seminar/workshop on environmental and economic aspects of industrial waste management, organized by the Joint ECLAC/UNEP Unit together with ILPES, the Carl Duisberg Foundation and the Municipal Council of Buenos Aires (Argentina, September).

Food and agriculture

The food and agriculture programme, implemented with support from the ECLAC/FAO Joint Agriculture Division, covered four areas of activity: the crisis, the adjustment process and specific policies for agriculture; agricultural policies and rural development; food policy within the context of economic policy; and support for agricultural planning.

The first activity area involved preparing eight national case studies and a document providing a synthesis of regional coverage, and culminated with the holding of the ECLAC/FAO Round Table on the Crisis, Adjustment Policies and Agriculture in Latin America (Santiago, May).

Activities in the area of agricultural policies and rural development included the preparation of case studies of 12 countries in order to analyse new agricultural structures which had emerged as a result of agricultural reform and to examine the process of agricultural modernization based on the most dynamic producers: the new class of agricultural entrepreneurs. Attention was focused on the design and application of policies to guide the economic behaviour of those producers.

Social and cultural development

The programme on social development and humanitarian affairs continued in 1987 to focus on styles of development and social change in Latin America and the integration of women in development.

Meetings on social change and development, held in conjunction with other United Nations and regional entities, included: meeting on social policies, change and development in Latin America (Uruguay, June/July); seminar on planning and communications policies in Latin America (Santiago, March); and an international symposium on -aging and development (Santiago, August). ECLAC also organized a course on social problems and policies in Latin America (Santiago, August).

The subprogramme on women in development continued to review of the achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985). ECLAC organized the seventh meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico, October), and a course was given by ILPES on women, development and planning in the Andean region (Ecuador, November).

With regard to drug abuse and illicit trafficking in the region (see Chapter XXI of this section), the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1987/34 of 26 May, asked the Secretary-General to adopt measures and provide resources for holding a Latin American and Caribbean regional meeting of national drug law enforcement agencies at ECLAC headquarters or at the capital of any State in the region wishing to host the meeting. The first Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Latin America and Caribbean Region, was held at Santiago from 28 September to 2 October.

Population

During 1987, the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE) provided advisory services to States in the region in connection with the analysis of population trends, their causes and their economic and social implications; the integration of demographic variables into development planning; and the incorporation of population-related factors into plans and policies directed at specific groups.

CELADE continued to collaborate with the countries of the region in the collection and analysis of data from various sources, particularly with respect to the evaluation of the 1980 census round and preparations for the 1990 censuses, with a view to adapting them to the needs of development planning. The Centre provided special assistance to Guyana in connection with the retrospective demographic survey intended to provide data for estimating the demographic components required for planning. At a July seminar held in Georgetown, Guyana, Government officials and CELADE experts examined the results of the survey.

The Centre also conducted studies on changes in the status of women and in fertility and research into the social and economic implications of the aging of populations. A seminar on the age structure of the population was held at CELADE headquarters (Santiago, September). Further, the first technical seminar on methods for incorporating demographic inputs into planning (Santiago, March) examined the usefulness and limitations of population and development models and procedures for improving them.

In the field of population information, CELADE advised countries on processing their censuses, surveys and other population data. It also undertook an analysis of appropriate technologies for processing data from the 1990 census round and created a system for the retrieval of census data for small areas by microcomputer. A number of seminars on that system were organized during the year: Chile (September); Costa Rica, for Central America, Mexico and the Spanish- and French-speaking Caribbean countries (October); and Dominica for the English-speaking Caribbean countries (November).

A seminar on population information for development, organized jointly by CELADE and the Latin American Programme for Population Activities (Santiago, July), examined needs and problems relating to population information and recommended that a population information network be established for Latin America and the Caribbean.

During 1987, CELADE teaching and training activities included: workshop on quantitative methods and the use of models for problem analysis in the field of population and development (Costa Rica, January); national course on population and development (Honduras, January/February); and intensive regional courses on demography (Chile and Costa Rica, August/September; Uruguay, July-October). In addition, an 11-month post-graduate course on population was first offered in February 1987.

Statistics

ECLAC'S statistics programme continued in 1987 to reinforce a system of regional co-operation between the Directors of Statistics of each of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean. To that end, it organized a meeting at ECLAC headquarters (Santiago, September) at which the progress of 10 regional co-operation activities embarked on during the preceding two years was reviewed, and five further areas of co-operation were identified.

The introduction of new technologies enjoyed the support of UNDP; through a project on statistics for the development of Latin America and the Caribbean, under way since September, computer systems in the following areas of statistics were being transferred to the region: automatic data clearing and entry; construction of data banks; and tabulations and metadata.

Progress was made in organizing information on the region's external trade in accordance with the International Standard Industrial Classification of all Economic Activities. Close links were maintained in that area with subregional integration organizations; for example, a seminar on external trade statistics (Mexico, September) was organized in conjunction with the European Economic Community and the National Statistical Institute of Spain.

The Commission continued its training activities as a means of providing support for the statistical development of the countries of the region. In 1987, a training workshop was held at Santiago on the use of computer packages for processing statistics with technical assistance from Hungary. In addition, the Statistics Division collaborated with ILPES in a course on national accounts within the regular training programme of the Institute in 1987.

In conjunction with other United Nations bodies and regional organizations, ECLAC organized the following meetings: seminar on household income and expenditure surveys (Costa Rica, March); seminar on the improvement and expansion of the programme of household surveys (Santiago, June); workshop on foreign trade statistics (Mexico, September); meeting of Directors of Statistics of the Americas (Santiago, September); meeting on foreign trade data bases (Santiago, October); and a regional seminar on national accounts (Santiago, November).

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

JIU report

By a May 1987 note,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a JIU report on technical co-operation between UNDP and ECLAC. JIU reviewed instruments covering the relationship between UNDP and ECLAC, co-ordination/co-operation in the pre-programming and programming of regional projects, and co-operation/co-ordination in the implementation of regional projects. JIU concluded, its report by stating that it considered co-operation between UNDP and ECLAC to be satisfactory.

By decision 42/446 of 11 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the JIU report.

Venue of 1988 session

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1987/166 without vote.

Venue of the twenty-second session of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

At its 35th plenary meeting, on 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council decided that the twenty-second session of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean should be held in Brazil in 1988, in accordance with Council decision 1986/173 of 22 July 1986, and that additional expenditures for the session, if any, should be financed from the regular budget of the Commission through a reallocation of funds.

Economic and Social Council decision 1987/166

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/121) without vote, 2 July (meeting 22); oral proposal by Chairman based on Secretary-General's report (E/1987/79); agenda item 8.

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1986, p. 567. (2)E/1988/38. (3)YUN 1986, p. 1024, GA res. 41/213, 19 Dec. 1986. (4)LC/G.1479 (PLEN.19/4) (res. 489 (PLEN.19)). (5)Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean 1987, Sales No. E.88.II.G.14 (summary, E/1988/61). (6)E/1987/55. (7)LC/G.1440(Conf.79/3). (8)A/42/192. (9)YUN 1980, p. 469, GA res. 35/3, 13 Oct. 1980. (10)A/42/192/Add.1. (11)A/42/192/Add.2. (12)LC/G.1495. (13)Ibid. (res.21(x)). (14)YUN 1982, p. 178. (15)A/42/305.

PUBLICATIONS

Statistical Yearbook for Latin America and the Caribbean, 1987 Edition (LC/G.1503-P & Corr.1), Sales No. E/S.88.II.G.1. Annual Bulletin of Trade in Chemical Products - 1984 Sales No. E.88.II.E.35.

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia held its fourteenth session at ministerial level at Baghdad, Iraq, on 4 and 5 April 1987.(1) The Commission adopted nine resolutions concerning progress made in the implementation of the work programme for 1986-1987, strengthening of national household survey capabilities, the programme of work and priorities for 1988-1989, the medium-term plan for 1990-1995, the holding of ESCWA sessions on a biennial basis, the quorum for meetings of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies, economic and social conditions of the Palestinian people, vacancies in the ESCWA secretariat, and the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social sectors (see p. 000).

The Technical Committee (fifth session, 31 March-2 April),(2) considered the draft programme of work and priorities for the biennium 1988-1989 and other items on the agenda of the Commission's 1987 session.

Economic and social trends

Political instability prevailing in the ESCWA region continued to hamper development and growth in 1987, according to a summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1987.(3) Further, unfavourable developments at the international level, particularly those affecting the oil sector, declining prices of primary commodities and rising protectionism compounded the obstacles to economic development in the open economies of the region.

Though overall economic performance in the region was moderately better in 1987 than in 1986, it remained generally worse than in 1985. After a very poor showing in 1986, in which the real gross domestic product (GDP) for Western Asia as a whole declined by 6 per cent, growth resumed at an estimated rate of 2.5 per cent in 1987. Nevertheless, the aggregate GDP for the region and most ESCWA countries remained significantly below levels achieved in 1985. Moreover, with a relatively high population growth rate, per capita GDP stagnated in 1987.

The major stimulus for the improved economic performance in Western Asia during 1987 was the rebound of prices in the international oil market and consequently in the oil revenues of the oil-exporting countries. Another contributing factor was the various adjustment policy measures pursued by several countries to cope with the prevailing recessionary conditions.

Complementing the recovery in the oil sector in 1987 was a moderate improvement in the performance of other sectors. Preliminary estimates indicated a significant increase in agricultural output in Egypt, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic. Nevertheless, the region as a whole and most individual countries continued to depend heavily on agricultural imports to satisfy domestic consumption. For most countries, the manufacturing sector showed significant improvement in 1987, particularly in Jordan and Egypt. In other ESCWA countries, the sector performed poorly, particularly in the Syrian Arab Republic.

Tourism contributed significantly to the foreign exchange earnings of several countries in the region, primarily Egypt, and to a lesser extent Bahrain and Jordan. Egypt's foreign exchange earnings from tourism during 1987 were estimated to have been twice as large as those received in 1986 ($850 million). The construction sector showed small improvements in 1987 compared with the dismal performance of the previous year, but was not expected to contribute to economic growth at rates anywhere near those attained in the 1970s and early 1980s.

Exports of non-oil products increased in several ESCWA countries in 1987. Meanwhile, higher oil revenues, coupled with the continuation of import curtailment for the fifth consecutive year, resulted in narrowing current account deficits for some countries and the recording of surpluses in others. Information on international reserves available for 10 ESCWA countries as at the end of November 1987 showed partial recovery from 1986, with net additions to reserves of $3.76 billion. At the country level, performance was mixed. The additions went mostly to Saudi Arabia ($3.38 billion), followed by the United Arab Emirates ($0.86 billion), Egypt ($0.58 billion) and Oman ($0.25 billion). In contrast, losses were reported for Kuwait ($0.72 billion) and Bahrain ($0.41 billion).

The external debt position of the ESCWA countries remained virtually unchanged in 1987. For the region's most heavily indebted countries, the servicing of their external debt remained an obstacle to economic growth and development, despite the rescheduling of some debt-servicing payments. For example, according to International Monetary Fund calculations, Egypt, which took into account its debt payments rescheduling arrangements negotiated in 1987, had to pay $24.9 billion in servicing its external debt during the five fiscal years 1987/88-1991/92. Of that amount, $15.7 billion, or 63 per cent, were interest charges.

One of the most important factors affecting the social situation in the region had been the ongoing conflicts in its various parts. However, in spite of those conflicts, educational expansion and improvements continued to be a major characteristic of social development. For the region as a whole, the illiteracy rate was believed to have fallen to the 50 per cent mark and the gross enrolment ratio in primary education had surpassed 85 per cent; that ratio was close to 100 per cent in some 9 of the 13 ESCWA countries.

On 9 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/188, took note of the summary of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1986.(4)

Activities in 1987

International trade and finance

In 1987, ESCWA completed a study on growth and balance-of-payments implications for ESCWA countries of trade in services.(5) The study covered services in the national economy, international trade in services and services in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations (see PART TWO, Chapter XVIII). It concluded that being essentially an importer of services, the region's basic interests lay in having access to such services on conditions and at a cost that responded to the national concerns and development priorities of its member countries. As exporters of services, the countries of Western Asia should seek preferential treatment in the markets of developed market economies on a non-reciprocal basis.

A review of current developments and trends in the monetary and financial sectors in the ESCWA region(6) noted that the most important economic development seen in the region in 1987 was the relative stabilization of oil prices at about $15 a barrel. However, that improvement was by no means sufficient to remove the economic and financial problems, especially the external debt, confronting ESCWA countries. Total ESCWA region external debt increased from $48.2 billion in 1980 to $123.6 billion in 1987. As for the banking industry, the stabilization of oil prices and therefore an increase in economic activities and consequently in banking business, the net foreign position of ESCWA banks improved by $15.8 billion.

Technical co-operation

During 1987, ESCWA received favourable responses and general interest from ECA and ESCAP for projects on development of informatics applications in the Arab countries and computer Arabization research.(7) ECA foresaw the activities of both projects as having definite relevance and direct benefit to a number of institutions in North Africa currently undertaking similar work and suggested that the planned activities of ESCWA should complement the work of those African institutions as potential co-operating agencies and participants. ESCAP expressed interest only in the project on development of informatics applications and submitted proposals to ESCWA for consideration.

ESCWA activities in information technology included the organization of a symposium on computers and electronics for the service of the handicapped, a workshop on computers in education and the publication of an Arabic informatics newsletter. It also established a regional Arabic network on informatics.

Transport and communications

In a November 1987 report on development and prospects of air transport in Western Asia,(8) the Commission reviewed the operations of commercial airlines in the region, airport operations, passenger traffic, cargo operations and air transport regional co-operation. It recommended the adoption of a number of regional policy measures that included co-operation in ground facilities, the establishment at Amman, Jordan, of a regional civil aviation training institute, establishment of common standards for certificates and licences, and joint airline operations. It also recommended a more liberal attitude towards granting traffic rights and a flexible fare-fixing system.

Railway links in Western Asia was the subject of another study by the Commission.(9) The study reviewed railway development plans in the region and future options. It recommended a number of steps towards the integration of rail networks, including standardization of operational rules and regulations and of technical specifications, application of relevant conventions on international railway traffic and the establishment of a clearing-house for settlement of payments among the member railways of the integrated network.

Industrial development

ESCWA activities in the industrial development sector focused on three subprogrammes: national planning and regional co-ordination of the industrial sector; trade in manufactured products and financing of industrial development; and development of selected industrial branches and identification of regional projects.(10) In co-operation with the Arab Industrial Development Organization, a study on the development of technological capabilities in the petrochemical industry was undertaken, as was a similar study on the iron and steel industry in the region. Work on a study reviewing agro-industries in the region was in progress.

Energy

In 1987, the energy programme focused on strengthening energy institutions in the least developed countries, the establishment of a regional network for new and renewable sources of energy in the ESCWA region, and energy conservation and efficiency.(10)

A progress report on establishing the Renewable Energy Sources Information Network for Western Asia (RESINWA) outlined the strategy pursued by the Commission in establishing the information network system and made proposals for future action that would lead to effective regional participation in RESINWA. A study on energy conservation in the housing sector provides an assessment of energy consumption in the existing housing schemes and proposals for appropriate styles of architecture aimed at reducing energy consumption. Work on a case-study on Egypt was in progress in connection with generating energy from urban and rural waste.

Food and agriculture

ESCWA members continued in 1987 to pursue the expansion of food and agricultural production. On the whole, agriculture was progressing at a slow pace; since its rate of growth was lower than the rate of population growth, food and agricultural production was declining on a per capita basis, -reflecting a continuous worsening of the state of food security in the region.(11)

ESCWA prepared an economic analysis of projects for arid zones as part of its activities in support of the fight against desertification.(10) Other activities included assistance in agricultural planning and training, promotion of food security arrangements, development of an early warning system on crop production, and support to agrarian reform and rural development.

Science and technology

The 1987 ESCWA in science and technology was oriented towards intensifying the development of national capacities and encouraging the upgrading of technical skills and managerial talents in science and technology. Activities in the information technology area covered training in computer-aided design and manufacture in engineering industries, establishment of a software technology centre and support for research in Arabic computational linguistics. Other activities included research into the role of financial institutions and development of endogenous scientific and technological capabilities.

In 1987, the Commission prepared a report on education for high-level scientific and technological manpower.(12) It examined the patterns of higher-level education and the training of personnel in the field of science and technology in selected ESCWA countries, the extent to which education and training institutions in the industrialized countries were willing and able to alter the content and form of education and training offered to students from the region, and the extent to which the production sector of advanced economies could be induced to provide appropriate forms of specialized education and training.

Population

The population programme continued to focus on four areas: demographic data collection and analysis; population and development policy; population education and information; and employment promotion and manpower development. During 1987, preparations began for a meeting on population dynamics and the prospects for coping with basic needs of populations in ESCWA member countries. Also during the year, work continued on studies on the manpower and employment situation in the ESCWA labour-sending countries, the standardization of concepts of economic activity in the region, and manpower planning in the petrochemical sector, focusing on Egypt and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Population Bulletin of ESCWA continued to be published twice a year, in June and December.

Human settlements

ESCWA activities in the human settlements field focused on integration of physical planning with economic and social planning, city management and building materials.

An Expert Group Meeting on Energy-Efficient Materials for Low-Cost Housing (Amman, 14-19 November 1987) formulated guidelines for the building materials industry in the region and for the future work of the Commission.(13). It recommended, among other things, that Governments encourage the production and use of energy-efficient building materials by providing incentives, such as special loans for factories producing those materials and attractive mortgages on buildings constructed with them.

Statistics

An assessment of existing environmental statistics in the region was presented to the Second Meeting of Heads of Central Statistical Organizations in the ESCWA Region (March 1987). Environmental statistics from Egypt, Jordan and Kuwait were assessed and a plan for the development of such statistics in the region was proposed.

On 5 April,(14) ESCWA stressed the importance of continuing the regional household survey project to the end of 1991, while calling on UNDP to continue to contribute to the project and to provide funding at a level no lower than that of its current contribution and requesting ILO to appoint a regional adviser within the framework of the project. It also urged international organizations, funding agencies and Arab funds to provide financial and technical support to ESCWA members in the implementation of their national household survey programmes.

Palestinian people

On 5 April,(15) the Commission, taking into consideration the destruction, starvation and expulsion of population to which Palestinian camps in Lebanon were being subjected, requested the Executive Secretary to pay particular attention to the economic and social conditions of those camps in the light of their current troubles and ways of finding appropriate solutions thereto.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

Work programmes

On 5 April 1987, the Commission adopted three resolutions concerning its programme of work. By one,(16) it noted with appreciation the progress made in implementing the work programme for 1986-1987 and adopted modifications thereto proposed by the Executive Director. By another,(17) the Commission, on the recommendation of its Technical Committee, adopted the programme of work and priorities for the period 1988-1989, while taking into consideration the limited resources available and the United Nations programming regulations in effect. By the third,(18) it approved the general framework and priorities of the draft medium-term plan for 1990-1995 and requested the Executive Secretary to ensure that the intensification of efforts in programmes concerned with the agricultural and industrial sectors and in activities relating to food security, water and mineral resources, new and renewable sources of energy, science and technology, social development and the development of human resources and administrative capabilities were among those priorities.

Amendments to rules of procedure

Sessions

On 5 April,(19) the Commission amended its rules of procedure so that its sessions would henceforth be held on a biennial basis. It also requested the Executive Secretary to prepare in those years when no session was held a detailed report on the activities, plans and programmes of the Commission for submission to the Economic and Social Council.

Quorum for meetings

The Commission also amended its rules of procedure to allow for the opening of meetings of the Commission or any of its subsidiary bodies when at least one third of the members were present.(20) The presence of a majority would be required for any decision to be taken.

Vacancies in the ESCWA secretariat

Recalling a 1984 resolution by which the General Assembly had noted the difficulties encountered by the ESCWA secretariat in recruiting qualified staff from unrepresented or under-represented States in the region,(21) the Commission, in April 1987,(22) requested the Executive Director to approach the United Nations Secretariat with proposals on, and justification for, the need to limit the applicability of both the restrictions on filling vacancies and the reduction of established posts as far as ESCWA was concerned, to permit it to reach its minimum substantive capacity in terms of human resources.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1987/68 without vote.

Human and financial resources: vacancies in the secretariat of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1984/81 of 27 July 1984 on staff and administrative questions of the Economic Commission for Western Asia and 1986/59 of 22 July 1986 on the financial status of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia,

Having considered Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia resolution 161(XIV) of 5 April 1987, entitled "Human and financial resources: vacancies in the secretariat"

Noting with concern that General Assembly resolution 39/243 of 18 December 1984 on staff and administrative questions of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia has not yet been fully implemented,

Noting the concern expressed by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-seventh session that the vacancy rate in the Commission remains inordinately high and has adversely affected implementation of the activities of the Commission,

Noting the concern of the States members of the Commission, in view of the unique situation of the Commission, about the serious shortage of the human resources that are a basic necessity if it is to carry out its mandated programme of activities, especially since the Commission, in adopting its budget, has already undertaken to cancel thirty subprogrammes because of the lack of financial and human resources,

Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to enable the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to meet its personnel requirements, as authorized by the General Assembly in its resolution 39/43.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/68

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/121) without vote, 3 July (meeting 23); draft by ESCWA (E/1987/79), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

REFERENCES

(1)E/1987/35, (2)E/ESCWA/14/5/Rev.1. (3)E/1988/59. (4)YUN 1986, p. 568. (5)Trade in Services: Growth and Balance of Payments Implications for Countries of Western Asia (E/ESCWA/DPD/87/16), Sales No. E.87.II.L.16. (6)E/ESCWA/DPD/88/7. (7)E/1987/79. (8)E/ESCWA/TCD/87/6. (9)E/ESCWA/TCD/87/7. (10)E/ESCWA/C.1/14/4(Part I)/Rev.1 & Corr.1-3. (11)Agriculture & Development in Western Asia, No. 10, Sales No. A/E.87.II.L.6. (12)E/ESCWA/NR/87/22. (13)E/ESCWA/HS/87/WG.1/2. (14)E/1987/35 res. 155(XIV). (15)Ibid. (res. 160(XIV)). (16)Ibid. (res. 154(XIV)). (17)Ibid. (res. 156(XIV)). (18)Ibid. (res. 157(XIV)). (19)Ibid. (res. 158(XIV)). (20)Ibid. (res. 159(XIV)). (21)YUN 1984, p. 643, GA res. 39/243, 18 Dec. 1984. (22)E/1987/35 (res. 161(XIV)).

Chapter VIII

Natural resources and cartography

As the world non-fuel mineral industry faced difficult circumstances in 1987, the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration continued to assist developing countries. Despite decreasing expenditures, it financed its highest number of projects in solid mineral and geothermal energy exploration. The Economic and Social Council recognized the urgent need for increased financial support for the Fund and welcomed its efforts to seek co-financing (resolution 1987/11).

The Committee on Natural Resources held its tenth session in New York in April. Acting on the Committee's recommendations, the Council adopted resolutions on water resources and progress in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan (1987/7), trends and salient issues in mineral resources (1987/8), new techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources (1987/9), application of microcomputer technology in the assessment and development of natural resources and energy (1987/10), permanent sovereignty over natural resources (1987/12) and co-ordination of programmes within the United Nations in the field of natural resources (1987/13). As to the economic and technical aspects of marine affairs, the Council asked the Secretary-General to continue to study global, regional and national developments in the context of international co-operation (1987/84).

The Eleventh United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific was held in Thailand in January. The Fifth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names was held in Canada in August.

Topics related to this chapter. Middle East: territories occupied by Israel—permanent sovereignty over national resources. Development policy and international economic co-operation: special economic areas—least developed countries. Operational activities for development. Environment.

Natural resources

The Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted by the General Assembly in December 1987 (resolution 42/186), addressed the question of the prudent management of global resources in the sections dealing with population, food and agriculture, industry, health and human settlements and institutions.

Exploration

UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

Activities

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRPNRE)—a funding and executing agency which assisted developing countries in natural resources exploration and development—continued its activities in 1987, its thirteenth year of operation. The Fund was distinguished from other forms of United Nations development assistance by the revolving nature of the assistance provided. Replenishment contributions to the Fund were required to be made from successful exploration projects, based on the proceeds of production.

In his annual report to the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on 1987 activities,⁽¹⁾ the Administrator stated that, during the year, the Fund had 10 operational projects, the most in its history. Eight were in mineral exploration (Argentina, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Haiti, Honduras, Peru, Rwanda, Sierra Leone) and two were in geothermal energy exploration (Mexico, Saint Lucia).

The first phase of a $4 million four-year work plan to explore high-grade gold and silver deposits, to which the Fund would contribute $375,000, commenced in Argentina. The work involved underground exploration, drilling and metallurgical testing. In the Congo, the Fund conducted, jointly with France, the first phase of a feasibility study to obtain more detailed information on offshore phosphate and shell deposits for use as a fertilizer and soil conditioner. Following a February review of the study's first phase, France and UNRPNRE agreed to increase their contributions to the study, the latter by $210,000 to a total of $560,000.

Preliminary work by the Fund in Côte d'Ivoire showed an extensive area of gold-bearing gravel in rivers and streams, the economic potential of which had not been assessed. Exploration in one area of Haiti also revealed gold deposits and a number of private companies submitted bids to undertake further work. A deposit in another area of Haiti was examined but considered to be of insufficient interest; that project was closed in December 1987.

Private sector contractors from developing countries participated in projects in Honduras and Peru, where the Fund carried out large, sophisticated exploration programmes, using wire line diamond drilling and reverse circulation drilling, respectively. Three areas in Honduras were explored for gold, silver and lead. Surveys and drilling in one area indicated the presence of a gold/silver-bearing vein system of more than 500,000 metric tons, while encouraging gold values were revealed in another area through the reopening and sampling of old gold workings. In Peru, the Fund continued its activities in an area where a gold-bearing gravel deposit valued at some $440 million had been outlined. The Government added two new sections to the project area in 1987; estimates of the gold in those two areas and of production costs of the already identified deposits were being made.

In Rwanda, the Fund discovered two gold-bearing veins, 700 metres long by 2 metres wide and 300 metres long by 2-3 metres wide. In Sierra Leone, a project begun in 1984 in an area where gold mineralization was known to exist was terminated in July when mineralization was deemed to be insufficient to constitute an economic deposit.

In geothermal energy exploration, projects were in progress in Mexico and Saint Lucia. The Fund would sub-contract the management contract for the Mexico project, considered to have a high chance of success, to an external agency. Still in its early stages, it was expected to last two and a half years at a cost of $5.4 million. The Saint Lucia project, in which the Fund was involved with support from the United States Agency for International Development, was a great success, with the second of two wells producing enough dry steam to provide one third of Saint Lucia's electric power consumption.

In a March 1987 report to the Governing Council,(2) the UNDP Administrator provided information on the Fund's programme management, investment follow-up activities and additional funding during 1986.

On 18 June,(3) the Governing Council noted the Administrator's approval of supplementary short-term financing for mineral exploration in Argentina and for geothermal energy exploration in Saint Lucia. It asked him to review the terms and conditions for the Fund's assistance with a view to their being made more attractive to recipient countries, without sacrificing the intention to build up a revolving fund from replenishments from successful projects, and to report in 1988. Concerned about the lack of resources to meet the demand for mineral and geothermal exploration projects in developing countries, the Council renewed its appeal to Member States to contribute to the Fund.

On 9 July, by decision 1987/184, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Administrator's March report.

Financing

Project expenditures in 1987 totalled $4.6 million compared with $6.9 million in 1986. Voluntary contributions from four countries amounted to almost $5 million, including a $4 million contribution from Japan, as against less than $0.5 million in 1986. By year's end, the Fund's balance stood at $8.7 million. Eight countries pledged a total of $347,995 for 1988.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/11 without vote.

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3167(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 and Council resolution 1762(LIV) of 18 May 1973, concerning the establishment of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 33/194 of 29 January 1979 on multilateral development assistance for the exploration of natural resources,

Recognizing the importance of the Fund as an effective instrument for assisting developing countries in the development of their natural resources,

Expressing concern at the very limited financial capacity of the Fund to fulfil its mandate,

1. Takes note of the achievements and continuing efforts of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration in the fields of mineral and geothermal energy exploration;

2. Welcomes the further efforts of the Fund to promote pre-investment follow-up to its successful mineral discoveries, in close co-operation with recipient Governments;

3. Recognizes the urgent need to increase financial support for the Fund by means of voluntary contributions so that it may fulfil its mandate;

4. Welcomes the further efforts made by the Fund to seek co-financing partners as a means of expanding its immediate funding capacity to meet the demands for projects.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/11

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/94) without vote, 18 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1987/21); agenda item 14.

New techniques for natural resources exploration and assessment

In January 1987, a report on the application of microcomputer technology in the assessment, development and planning of natural resources(*) (see below) was submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council request.(5) During the Committee's consideration of that report, the question of remote sensing was discussed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1987/9 without vote.

New techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1985/50 of 25 July 1985 on the application of microcomputer technology in the development of water, energy and mineral resources,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 41/65 of 3 December 1986 on principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from outer space,

Recognizing that, in order to optimize utilization of satellite remote sensing, developing countries require facilities and better access to data through an information referral system containing information on remote sensing data and on how to gain access to such data,

Considering that developing countries need to be apprised of the limitations and potential of commercial and non-commercial hardware and software systems for digital processing of remote sensing data and of procedures for obtaining access to such systems,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Application of microcomputer technology in the assessment, planning and development of natural resources: water, energy and mineral resources",

1. Takes note of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, within existing resources, a feasibility study on the establishment of an information referral system, showing area, coverage, type of data, quality, and how and where to secure imagery and other relevant information that can guide users in the most efficient way to obtain remote sensing data, and to submit that study to the Committee on Natural Resources at its eleventh session;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to establish, within existing resources, a remote sensing library and referral system to provide users with guidance on available commercial and non-commercial hardware and software systems for digital processing and analysis of remote sensing data;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to convene, within existing resources, a meeting of a small group of experts on hardware and software systems for remote sensing to assess properly the constraints and capabilities of such systems and provide the Committee and user countries, especially developing countries, with the results of that technology assessment meeting.

Economic and social Council resolution 1987/9

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/94) without vote, 18 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1987/21); agenda item 14.

Microcomputer technology in natural resources assessment and development

In a report on the application of microcomputer technology in the assessment, development and planning of natural resources,(*) the Secretary-General stated that there had been a virtual revolution in developing computer hardware so that microcomputers could perform tasks that previously needed much larger mainframe or minicomputers. Also, software specifically for application in the natural resources and energy sectors was continuously under development. The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) played a key role in introducing those technologies to developing countries.

For each of the major sectors-mineral, energy and water resources-the report described new developments, recent activities of DTCD and activities of other organizations and agencies of the United Nations system.

In conclusion, the report presented a summary of recommendations made by various DTCD meetings or workshops. They suggested that DTCD should: organize application-specific workshops, training and seminars at the regional or country level, preferably in developing countries; establish a software library, recommend standards for hardware and software, and distribute non-proprietary or public domain programs; consider developing software packages of common interest to developing countries; publish a newsletter informing Governments of the latest developments; establish an interregional network to link countries for the exchange of expertise, in-house software and other matters; and produce and disseminate regularly a list of hardware and software manufacturers, along with a list of consultants available to developing countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/10 without vote.

Application of microcomputer technology in the assessment and development of natural resources and energy

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1985/50 of 25 July 1985 on the application of microcomputer technology in the development of water, energy and mineral resources,

Mindful of the accelerating pace of progress in microcomputer technology and its application to the assessment, planning and development of natural resources and energy,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Application of microcomputer technology in the assessment, planning and development of natural resources: water, energy and mineral resources",

1. Takes note of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to promote the transfer and dissemination to the developing countries of microcomputer technology for the assessment, planning and development of water, energy and mineral resources;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Natural Resources at its eleventh session on the progress achieved in the implementation of the above-mentioned recommendations and in the application of microcomputer technology;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a software reference library comprising a collection of software packages developed by various organizations of the United Nations system and references to software packages available in the commercial and public sectors for use in the exploration for and development and management of natural resources, and to distribute software to developing countries through application-oriented workshops, seminars and training courses, to be organized at the regional or country level, preferably in developing countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/10

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/94) without vote, 18 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1987/21); agenda item 14.

Committee on Natural Resources

The Committee on Natural Resources held its tenth. session in New York from 6 to 15 April 1987.(6) It discussed energy, mineral and water resources; new techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources; UNRFNRE; permanent sovereignty over natural resources; co-ordination of natural resources programmes within the United Nations system; preparations for the medium-term plan for 1990-1995; review of the functions of the Committee; and the provisional agenda for its eleventh (1989) session.

The Committee recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption seven draft resolutions and one decision. Four other decisions were brought to the Council's attention.

Review of Committee's functioning. By one decision, the Committee submitted a review of its functioning to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (see p. 948).

The Committee conducted an in-depth and extensive review of the manner in which it was carrying out its mandate, its relationship to other United Nations bodies and the structure of its secretariat support system. It was of the view that its subject-matter-the exploration, development and management of energy, mineral and water resources- was of vital importance to Member States, particularly to the economic prospects of the developing countries.

The Committee listed a number of measures to improve its functioning, including: proper follow-up of its actions by other United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and Governments; increased participation by experts from States members of the Committee; a streamlined agenda; examination of reports in the light of current global concerns; improved quality and relevance of reports; increased evaluation of Secretariat programmes; receipt of documents at least three months in advance of sessions; and an increased number of inter-sessional seminars and symposia. It also recommended that: its sessions should not coincide with other high-priority intergovernmental meetings; United Nations organizations and agencies, particularly the regional commissions, should participate fully in the sessions; clear directives should be provided to the Secretariat on the content and approach expected in reports; in-session working procedures of the Committee should be reviewed to maximize effectiveness; criteria should be developed for the periodic review of its work and the implementation of its decisions; and the possibility of streamlining secretariat support structures should be studied.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/118, took note of the report of the Committee on Natural Resources and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1989 session. It decided that, in 1989, the Committee should give priority to the question of mineral resources and asked the Secretary-General to pay particular attention to that subject in preparing documentation.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources

In accordance with a 1985 Economic and Social Council request,(7) the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in January 1987 a report on permanent sovereignty over natural resources.(8) The report concentrated on the world's petroleum industry and the response of Governments and industry to the ongoing crisis, reflected in oversupply and depressed prices. It recognized the vital role in economic development played by petroleum and other fuel minerals (natural gas, coal, uranium), which represented over 70 per cent of the value of the world's mineral production.

The report addressed the impact of the international economic situation on mineral-producing developing countries in the areas of both petroleum and non-fuel minerals. The continuing period of reduced oil prices, which had plummeted in July 1986 to below the $10 per barrel benchmark, had resulted in the curtailment of new exploration and development. Private and public petroleum enterprises had been massively reducing their operating, investment and overhead costs and were becoming leaner and more streamlined. As the response of Governments and industry to the price volatility was still being formulated, it was difficult to portray precisely the evolution of the situation.

As to non-fuel minerals, the continuing decline in commodity prices was seriously affecting government revenues, foreign exchange earnings and the ability to service debt. The situation was also a challenge for countries to develop national resources as a tool of social and economic development.

With regard to strengthening national capabilities for resource development, the report stated that the crisis in both the petroleum and mineral industries indicated the benefit of a more rational and systematic approach towards government policy-making in that sector.

In the context of promoting investment in petroleum, the report discussed constraints and competition of Governments in new petroleum contracts. It also considered financial terms, revenue-sharing and remuneration, as well as petroleum financing.

Regarding the mining industry, the report noted that State-owned and private enterprises had been subject to a severe price crisis in non-fuel minerals for almost five years. It described the industry's response, to the crisis, which included restructuring, refinancing and rehabilitation.

In connection with new international arrangements for petroleum and mineral investment, the report described negotiations under way for international investment conventions and international co-operation in offshore petroleum development.

Noting that technical co-operation played an important role in achieving the goals implied by the principle of permanent sovereignty by strengthening the national capabilities of Governments for mineral development, the report gave examples of technical co-operation between centrally planned economies and developing countries, and between market economies and developing countries. United Nations technical co-operation activities, primarily those carried out by DTCD, were also described (see below).

With regard to the outlook for mineral industries and policies, the report stated that, given the unpromising situation for both energy and metal minerals, it might be a good time to pay greater attention to the potential of the more neglected minerals that could contribute to economic development; industrial minerals, construction materials and other minerals, generally produced more for local consumption than for export, might deserve more attention. The growing population of many countries and their increasing need for housing, transport infrastructure and light industries constituted a large source of demand for such minerals-the same might be true for alternative energy sources, such as small-scale hydropower, fuel-wood and non-conventional sources of energy. An administrative climate conducive to legal operations and well-planned investment with a longer perspective should be created. To improve those capabilities, a critical evaluation of national policies, regulations and administrative procedures appeared necessary to develop the great potential inherent in national human resources -available.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1987/12 without vote.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the problems that the present international economic situation causes all countries, in particular the developing countries,

Noting that it is important for all countries, in particular the developing countries, to make optimum economic use of their natural resources in order to strengthen their economic development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on permanent sovereignty over natural resources and the comments made thereon by the Committee on Natural Resources at its tenth session,

Taking into account the work done by other organs and organizations of the United Nations system regarding permanent sovereignty over natural resources,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the ongoing work of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on a code of conduct on transnational corporations, as it relates to natural resources;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a concise report on permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Committee on Natural Resources at its eleventh session, bearing in mind the comments made by the Committee at its tenth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/12

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/94) without vote, 18 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1987/21); agenda item 14.

Co-ordination of UN activities

In accordance with a 1985 Economic and Social Council request,(9) the Secretary-General, in a March 1987 report,(10) reviewed the programme activities of the United Nations system in the field of natural resources. He described the activities of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs and DTCD, and also summarized the activities of other organizations and units of the system concerned with natural resources.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1987/13 without vote.

Co-ordination of programmes within the United Nations system in the field of natural resources
The Economic and Social Council,

Having received the report of the Secretary-General on programme activities of the United Nations system in the field of natural resources,

Bearing in mind the very broad range of activities proposed for inclusion in the United Nations medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995,

Convinced of the need to increase the effectiveness and relevance of the work of the United Nations system,

Concerned that the documentation prepared for the tenth session of the Committee on Natural Resources was insufficient to allow the Committee to provide guidance on the programming and implementation of activities in the United Nations system for the development of natural resources, as called for in its terms of reference,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its eleventh session a report containing an overview of the activities of the United Nations system in water, mineral and energy resources, identifying the organs or units within the United Nations system which are mandated to carry out work in those fields and assessing the extent to which the guidelines provided by the Committee have been followed;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to identify in that report the existing priorities and objectives of the work of the United Nations system in the field of natural resources.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/13

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/94) without vote, 18 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1987/21); agenda item 14.

Mineral resources

In response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council request,(11) the Secretary-General, in a February 1987 report to the Committee on Natural Resources,(12) described trends and salient issues in mineral resources.

He described recent trends and short-term prospects, long-term consumption growth and implications for developing countries, developments in commodity agreements, exploitation and processing of co-products and by-products, and technical co-operation trends in mineral resources development in developing countries.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Secretary-General said that the prevailing circumstances of the world non-fuel mineral industry were highly unusual compared to the preceding half century. The effects of slower growth of the world economy had been compounded by decreased use of the major and base metals and by the development of substitutes for those metals. As a result, markets for many metals were overhung by large metal stocks and production capacities remained in excess of demand. Efforts to maintain economically sub-marginal mines in production were not likely to be sustainable except in the short term and closing the gap between world productive capacity and world demand would eventually be achieved through mine closings.

Development of specialty metals and metal-containing products would be needed if plastics and other metal substitutes were not to make further inroads into the traditional markets for major and base metals. A likely consequence of that would be the integration of metal-producing and manufacturing enterprises between and among developed and developing economies.

Noting that it might be premature to attempt a comprehensive analysis of a metals economy that was still adjusting to recent changes in markets, technology and finance, the Secretary-General suggested that the Committee might wish to comment on the proposal to convene a seminar on prospects for metal-mining industries to the year 2000 and beyond, which was tentatively scheduled for 1988.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Committee should take note of the continuing effort of the United Nations Secretariat to provide developing countries with advanced mineral exploration technology and training, together with advisory services, and proposed that three kinds of technical co-operation activities be stressed: integrated resource surveys using satellite-based technologies; evaluation of local mineral resources in relation to national development needs for transport, construction and agricultural industries; and evaluation of promising areas for precious, base and specialty metals.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1987/8 without vote.

Trends and salient issues in mineral resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1985/47 on small-scale mining, 1985/48 on mineral resources and 1985/54 on the rationalization of the work of the Committee on Natural Resources, all of 25 July 1985,

Recognizing the effective contribution of the mineral resources sector to the economies of developing countries,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on trends and salient issues in mineral resources,

Also taking note of the section on mineral resources contained in the note by the Secretary-General on issues in natural resources and energy for consideration in the preparation of the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995,

1. Decides that the Committee on Natural Resources, at its eleventh session, shall give priority consideration to mineral resources, subject to the concerns expressed in paragraph 3 of Council resolution 1985/54;

2. Also decides that, within the overall subject of mineral resources, special attention shall be given to small-scale mining, as defined in Council resolution 1985/47;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on small-scale mining prospects in developing countries, as called for in Council resolution 1985/47;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee, at its eleventh session, a report on trends and salient issues in the mineral sector, giving special consideration to cost-saving technologies in the mining industry and prospects for geological exploration in developing countries, with due regard to the development of industrial minerals.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/8

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/94) without vote, 18 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1987/21); agenda item 14.

Water resources

The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) continued in 1987 to promote environmentally sound management of inland waters.⁽¹³⁾ The Working Group of Experts on the Zambezi River System held its third meeting (Gaborone, Botswana, 20-23 January) to finalize a diagnostic study and an action plan, which was subsequently adopted by the Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Environmentally Sound Management of the Common Zambezi River System (Harare, Zimbabwe, 26-28 May). The Conference agreed that the action plan for the Zambezi basin should be a programme under the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference. At its fifth meeting (Vienna, 29 November-3 December), the UNEP Advisory Group on Water Resources noted the progress of the action plan and suggested that UNEP maintain direct involvement in it (see also p. 705).

UNEP in 1987 initiated preparations for an action plan for the Lake Chad basin in 1987 and discussed plans for the Nubian Sandstone Aquifer (north-east Africa), Lake Managua (Nicaragua) and the Orinoco-Apure River (Venezuela).

Under UNEP's joint project with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the third meeting of a scientific expert group was held (Paris, 2-4 September) to finalize methodological guidelines for the integrated environmental evaluation of water resources development, scheduled for publication in 1988. With the International Training Centre for Water Resources Management, UNEP developed training materials and organized training courses in the United Republic of Tanzania (September), Burundi (November) and France (November).

UNEP experts visited Uganda in January and July/August 1987, as part of a national project on strategic resources planning, to assess and evaluate the country's water resources. In their report, they suggested giving priority to establishing a reliable data base for environmentally sound water resources development. In Asia, UNEP began a project on ecologically sound development of water and land resources in the Mekong Delta.

Implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan

In response to a 1979 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in January 1987 a report⁽¹⁵⁾ on progress in implementing the Mar del Plata Action Plan for the development of water resources, adopted in 1977 by the United Nations Water Conference ⁽¹⁶⁾

The report updated information provided to previous sessions of the Committee and concentrated on: policy, planning, legislation and institutional arrangements; the development of shared water resources; water resources assessment; drinking-water supply and sanitation; water resources for agriculture; environmental aspects of water resources development; education, training and public information and participation; and research and development.

The report concluded that progress had been achieved with regard to some aspects of the Action Plan, particularly for drinking-water supply and sanitation. However, a number of serious constraints were critical to further progress: many countries had yet to develop the interrelated management systems and related legal and institutional structures needed to maximize the socio-economic benefits derived from the development and uses of water resources. Though Governments often sought to co-ordinate activities among various national organizations, water resources development was mostly carried out on a piecemeal basis. Significant progress would be achieved only if the necessary linkages were established and responsibilities clearly defined at each level of management. Human resources development and the mobilization of financial resources also remained critical as factors affecting progress.

The report stated that management systems should cover issues from identification of the demand for water as an input to human and economic activities to the actual operation and maintenance of specific projects. Starting with a definition of demands in terms of quantities, types of service and geographical coverage for water from different economic and social sectors, and a harmonization of national, regional and local objectives, the process should be integrated into river, lake and ground-water basin development programmes. In turn, that would lead to the formulation and implementation of integrated projects, as well as to the definition of requirements for human and financial resources.

In response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽¹⁷⁾ an Interregional Symposium on Improved Efficiency in the Management of Water Resources: Follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan was held in New York from 5 to 9 January 1987. In an oral report to the Committee on Natural Resources,⁽⁶⁾ a DTCTB representative said that Symposium participants had pointed out that the level of funding for water resources development was only a small fraction of estimated requirements and that developing countries would have to increase their allocations to that sector.

Participants suggested that permanent national training structures be established or strengthened, based on existing institutions where possible, to train trainers and design programmes. Training women in technical and managerial skills and training high-level engineers at regional centres was also proposed. The importance of using technology appropriate to a given situation and the need to avoid "tied aid", which often implied non-standard equipment, were stressed. Countries were encouraged to move towards technological standardization, particularly for the low-cost options. With regard to water quality, laws should be amended to control pollution; at the international level, management of water quality was necessary because of transboundary pollution. On the question of natural hazards, particularly droughts, the participants suggested contingency plans for emergency supplies, rapid communications systems and comprehensive soil and water conservation programmes. The international community could support hydrological, meteorological and agricultural research, including improved assessment of land-use systems. Both structural and non-structural measures for flood mitigation should be executed within the framework of a comprehensive, long-term, integrated land and water development plan; local-level planning and self-help civil defence programmes were encouraged. At the international level, close co-operation between States should be actively promoted in relation to the use, management and development of shared water resources.

ACC action. The Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (eighth session, New York, 8-13 April)⁽¹⁸⁾ also discussed follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan. The Group felt that a broader system-wide effort should be made to develop a comprehensive strategy for action at the national, regional and global levels in the 1990s, aiming at the preparation of specific targets based on the objectives of the Action Plan. The preparation of such a strategy would involve an in-depth assessment of the implementation of the Plan and of the ability of the various organizations to respond to the needs of Governments. It was agreed that the Group's secretariat would prepare an outline for action in the preparation of the strategy, to be discussed at the Group's next (1988) session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1987, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/7 without vote.

Water resources and progress in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/67, 1979/68 and 1979/70 of 3 August 1979, 1981/80 of 24 July 1981, 1983/57 of 28 July 1983 and 1985/49 of 25 July 1985, concerning the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Recalling also its resolution 1981/81 of 24 July 1981, concerning co-operative measures among international river and lake organizations and related activities within the United Nations system,

Noting that the Interregional Symposium on Improved Efficiency in the Management of Water Resources: Follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan was convened by the Secretary-General in New York from 5 to 9 January 1987 in order to review the recommendations of the United Nations Water Conference ten years after the Conference,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the oral report on the conclusions reached at the Interregional Symposium on Improved Efficiency in the Management of Water Resources: Follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan, made before the Committee on Natural Resources at its 196th meeting, on 14 April 1987, by the representative of the United Nations Secretariat;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate for the information of Governments the final report of the Symposium;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its eleventh session, together with his report on the follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan, a supplementary report that would include the following:

- (a) Views of Governments on the report of the Symposium;

- (b) Developments in co-operative action taken in the field of shared water resources, including specific items on co-operative action to reduce land degradation and desertification, to establish and make operational a hydrometeorological data collection network and publicize the data, to alleviate flood risks, and to prevent and control transboundary pollution;

4. Invites all Governments to continue and possibly increase their efforts to train personnel in technical and managerial skills, giving due regard to the role of women in water resources development and management;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with regional commissions and organizations of the United Nations system, to report to the Committee at its eleventh session on progress in formulating proposals for a comprehensive strategy to implement the Mar del Plata Action Plan during the decade 1991-2000 and to include an assessment of those proposals as they relate to the activities of the United Nations system.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/7

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/94) without vote, 18 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1987/21); agenda item 14.

Water situation in Africa

In response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council request,(19) the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), in a February 1987 report to the Committee on Natural Resources, (20) reviewed the development of water resources in drought-stricken countries of Africa.

Though the drought was assumed to have broken with the arrival of wetter-than-average conditions in 1985 and 1986, the famine in many countries was still apparent and the aftermath of nearly 20 years of drier-than-average conditions could be seen in widespread environmental degradation.

The report analysed the situation in the context of a threshold defined by climatic as well as socio-economic and environmental factors and the geographical limits of the drought. It suggested a number of short-term measures, including the formulation of plans with the basic components of information gathering, equipment and organization. For the medium term, it suggested a strengthening of national institutional capacity regarding water resources development; formulation or strengthening of soil and water conservation programmes; acceleration of water supply and sanitation programmes; and strengthening of co-ordination of external support activities. For the long run, it stressed the need for implementation of existing frameworks for action.

The report concluded that the key to future progress lay in the medium-term measures as elaborated in the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, adopted by the General Assembly in 1986,(21) as expanded with reference to water resources development in the ECA report. It remained for the African countries, assisted by the international community, to implement those measures as quickly and as effectively as possible. ECA suggested that long-term planning would be facilitated by increased attention to improving the planning mechanisms in the drought-stricken countries. That being done, long-term planning would largely take care of itself and it would be able to take into account the rate of progress with the medium-term measures as a tool for forecasting 10 years ahead. At the subregional level, increasing food production and the fight against drought and desertification would be most effective if groups of countries co-ordinated their efforts towards common objectives.

Financing of water resources development

In a February 1987 report,(22) submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council request(23) the Secretary-General described the financing of water resources development, giving information on the flow of resources during the preceding 10 years through the United Nations system, in terms of support for technical co-operation and loans and credit. Levels of assistance by other international organizations and bilateral aid programmes were also discussed, as was the role of Governments.

The report stated that there was a need to continue and increase efforts by the international community to provide assistance to developing countries. However, a decreased dependence on external financing by developing countries was an essential condition to achieve long-term sustainable development. Measures were also needed to improve the planning process leading to the efficient formulation of programmes and projects, and to improve the capacity of Governments to generate internal resources and make more efficient use of existing ones. Particular attention should be given to the formulation and implementation of cost recovery policies, maintenance procedures and the choice of appropriate low-cost technologies.

Inter-agency co-ordination and co-operation

In response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council request,(24) the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in February 1987 an update of a 1985 report(25) on co-ordination and co-operation in water resources development. (26) Noting that arrangements for co-operation had not changed since 1985, the report presented information on new co-operative actions being undertaken in some specific areas: the activities of organizations concerned with the African region; the enhancement of the role of women in water resources development and utilization; the operation and maintenance of water resources installations; the establishment of a data base concerning technical co-operation activities; and consultations held in connection with technical and financial support to developing countries in the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (see below).

The ACC Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources(18) discussed the status of inter-agency co-operation in the field of water resources, proposals for action and possible approaches to the future relationship between the Group and the Steering Committee for Co-operative Action for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (see below).

International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade

In his annual report to the Governing Council on 1987 activities,⁽¹⁾ the UNDP Administrator said that progress continued to be made in realizing the goals of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990). During the first three years of the Decade, which had been declared by the General Assembly in 1980,⁽²⁷⁾ more people gained access to clean water supplies than in the preceding 10 years. Nevertheless, in 1987, more than 1.6 billion people still did not have adequate access to potable water and at least 2 billion people lacked adequate sanitation facilities.

In 1987, UNDP and the World Bank launched a programme to increase the capacity of countries to deliver water supply and sanitation services to low-income groups, using primarily low-cost, community-based approaches. Under the programme, development of the Afridev-type deep-well and Tara-type shallow-well hand-pumps provided a large number of people with low-cost, easily maintained technology.

For the remainder of the Decade and into the early 1990s, an additional thrust of the programme would be to design and implement waste management and recycling demonstration projects in urban and urban-fringe areas; waste management, a labour- and capital-intensive function, consumed, on average, 30 to 50 per cent of municipal budgets. UNDP had under way a global research project on integrated resource recovery and waste recycling, with the World Bank as executing agency. The project's objectives were to expand and improve municipal waste management services, particularly for urban low-income populations, and to minimize the adverse environmental impacts of municipal waste disposal while maximizing resource conservation.

State-of-the-art review and generic research, including technological, economic and financial assessments, were carried out on several resource recovery technologies, six of which were identified as the most promising for application in developing countries: materials recovery and recycling of municipal solid wastes; co-composting of garbage with night soil or sludge; industrial-scale community biogas plants; landfill gas recovery; wastewater reuse for effluent irrigation; and sewage-fed aquaculture.

Surveys and pre-feasibility studies were carried out to assess resource recovery activities and opportunities at Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire; Colombo, Sri Lanka; Dakar, Senegal; Douala, Cameroon; Khartoum, Sudan; and Mexico City. Technology assessment case-studies were carried out in Asia, Europe, the Middle East and the United States. As a follow-up to those research and assessment activities, a demonstration project was under way in Lima, Peru, while other demonstration projects were under preparation in Cameroon, Guatemala, Mexico, Senegal and Sri Lanka.

By the end of 1987, UNDP had disbursed $171.8 million since 1980 in the drinking-water and sanitation projects sector. It assisted five new inter-regional projects during the year. Under the demonstration programme of the promotion of the role of women in water and environmental sanitation services, six country projects received assistance (Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Thailand).

Inter-agency action. The ACC Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources⁽¹⁸⁾ noted that, while there was evidence of a slowly improving situation with regard to water supply and sanitation in both urban and rural areas, increased efforts were still needed in rural areas, especially in connection with sanitation. Figures provided by countries on the situation as at the end of 1985 indicated an improvement over earlier estimated levels, pointing to an increased pace of development since 1983. However, the numbers of persons without access to safe water and adequate sanitation in developing countries at the end of 1985 were little different from the numbers at the end of 1980, indicating that improved services were barely coping with the population increase and the effects of urbanization.

The Steering Committee for Co-operative Action for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade met at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, on 5 and 6 November 1987. It discussed the question of a Decade assessment, to be presented to the Assembly in 1990, and the need to develop a strategy for continuing the water supply and sanitation effort during the 1990s and beyond. The Committee established a Decade Assessment Working Group, which began drafting material to evaluate the impact of efforts during the 1980s on water supply and sanitation services.

An initial step towards developing a beyond-the-Decade strategy for the external support community was taken at a consultation at Interlaken, Switzerland, in October. Co-sponsored by the Swiss Development Co-operation Agency and the World Health Organization, the consultation brought together the main bilateral and multi-lateral agencies active in the sector.

Marine resources

In response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council request,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in May 1987 a report on problems and approaches in policy-making, planning and management in the development of marine areas under national jurisdiction. ⁽²⁹⁾

The report identified practical needs and problems faced by countries in developing the resources and uses of the extended marine areas under national jurisdiction (the exclusive economic zone and coastal zone) and outlined some techniques and approaches to enhance the effectiveness of national efforts in the marine field.

The Secretary-General concluded that the trend of developing countries strengthening their capabilities in the marine field was becoming more evident. He suggested that those efforts should be supported by the United Nations and recommended that the Secretariat develop a strengthened and more integrated programme of assistance to Member States for policy-making, planning and management in relation to the development and use of marine resources under national jurisdiction.

During 1987, most aspects of the Secretariat's work relating to marine matters were consolidated in the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July 1987, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/84 without vote.

Economic and technical aspects of marine affairs
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1980/68 of 25 July 1980 on co-operation in the uses of the sea and coastal area development, 1983/48 of 28 July 1983 on marine affairs and 1985/75 of 26 July 1985 on economic and technical aspects of marine affairs,

Convinced that the resources of the ocean represent an important existing and potential contribution to development,

Noting the growing interest of Member States, in particular developing countries, in developing their marine resources,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Development of marine areas under national jurisdiction: problems and approaches in policy-making, planning and management";

2. Recognizes the need for the development of national marine plans, particularly by developing countries, within a framework of an integrated and comprehensive approach, taking fully into account intersectoral aspects of marine resources development;

3. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to provide, within their mandates and terms of reference, assistance to developing countries in their assessment of the economic, scientific, technical, financial and human resources aspects of marine affairs, with a view to strengthening the capabilities for the implementation of their national marine policies and plans, particularly those relating to international co-operation in that field;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to study global, regional and national developments, in the context of international co-operation related to marine affairs;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, in his report to be submitted to the Council at its second regular session of 1989, an account of the measures taken to respond to the needs of Member States, particularly those of the developing countries, in this field.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/84

8 July 1987 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1987/128) without vote, 6 July (meeting 14); 8-nation draft (E/1987/C.3/L.14), orally revised; agenda item 15.

Sponsors: Iran, Jamaica, Morocco, Pakistan, Philippines, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic.

By decision 1987/181 of 8 July, the Council endorsed the conclusions and recommendations in the Secretary-General's report concerning the establishment of a programme of assistance to Member States, within existing resources.

Living marine resources

UNEP continued work in 1987 on its global plan of action for the conservation, management and utilization of marine mammals. The designation of the Indian Ocean as a sanctuary for whales was reassessed positively at a scientific meeting organized jointly by the International Whaling Commission, Seychelles and UNEP (Seychelles, 24-28 February). The training of graduate students and scientists in marine mammal conservation activities was initiated in the context of the Regional Seas Programme (see p. 710). UNEP also continued to distribute information about ongoing marine mammal projects.

REFERENCES

- (1)DP/1988/18 & Add.1-6. (2)DP/1987/48. (3)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/38). (4)E/C.7/1987/3. (5)YUN 1985, p. 671, ESC res. 1985/50, 25 July 1985. (6)E/1987/21. (7)YUN 1985, p. 672, ESC res. 1985/52, 25 July 1985. (8)E/C.7/1987/2. (9)YUN 1985, p. 673, ESC res. 1985/54, 25 July 1985. (10)E/C.7/1987/7. (11)YUN 1985, p. 676, ESC res. 1985/48, 25 July 1985. (12)E/C.7/1987/8. (13)UNEP/GC.15/3. (14)YUN 1979, p. 684 GA res. 34/191 18 Dec. 1979. (15)E/C.7/1987/4. (16)YUN 1977, p. 555;. (17)YUN 1985, p. 679, ESC res. 1985/49 B, 25 July 1985. (18)ACC/1987/PG/9. (19)YUN 1985, p. 678, ESC res. 1985/49 A, 25 July 1985. (20)E/C.7/1987/6. (21)YUN 1986, p. 446, GA res. S-13/2, annex, 1 June 1986. (22)E/C.7/1987/5. (23)YUN 1983, p. 667, ESC res. 1983/57, 28 July 1983. (24)YUN 1985, p. 674, ESC res. 1985/53, 25 July 1985. (25)Ibid., p. 679. (26)E/C.7/1987/10. (27)YUN 1980, p. 712, GA res. 35/18, 10 Nov. 1980. (28)YUN 1985, p. 682, ESC res. 1985/75, 26 July 1985. (29)E/1987/69.

PUBLICATIONS

Natural Resources Development in the Sahel: The Role of the United Nations System, Sales No. E.86.III.A.3. Natural Gas Clauses in Petroleum Arrangements, Sales No. E.87.II.A.3. Ground Water in North and West Africa, Sales No. E.87.II.A.8. Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries in Marine Affairs, Sales No. E.87.II.A.12. Institutional Issues in the Management of International River Basins: Financial and Contractual Considerations, Sales No. E.87.II.A.16. Non-Conventional Water Resources Use in Developing Countries: Proceedings of the Interregional Seminar (Curaçao, April 1985), Sales No. E.87.II.A.20. Triennial Review of Mineral Development Activities in the ESCAP Region, 1985-1987, Sales No. E.89.II.F.16.

Cartography

During 1987, DTCD projects in cartography (surveying, mapping and hydrography) continued in a number of developing countries. They included institution-building, transfer of technical expertise to national cartographic and hydrographic institutions and provision of training and equipment. Twenty-eight fellowships and 10 grants for study tours were awarded for studies in photogrammetry, mineral economics, cadastral systems, cartographic and photographic procedures, cartography, digital mapping, computer communications and networking, cadastral surveying and land information, geodetic science and hydrography. Technical co-operation projects in surveying and mapping were completed in Burundi, Ethiopia, Jamaica, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Nepal.

Standardization of geographical names

The Fifth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, held at Montreal, Canada, from 18 to 31 August 1987,⁽¹⁾ was attended by 106 representatives and observers from 53 countries, one specialized agency and three international scientific organizations (for participating States and officers, see APPENDIX III).

The Conference considered reports of linguistic/geographical divisions and of Governments on the situation in their regions and countries and progress made in the standardization of geographical names since the Fourth (1982) Conference.⁽²⁾ It established three committees—on national, technical and international programmes—to consider national standardization, the creation of toponymic data files, the reduction of exonyms, terminology, naming of features beyond a single sovereignty, romanization and conversion into non-Roman writing systems, the writing of names in unwritten languages, and toponymic education and practice. The Conference also considered the economic and social benefits of national and international standardization of geographical names, technical assistance and international co-operation.

The Conference adopted 26 resolutions. It recognized, in particular, the work of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names (see below) and recommended the adoption of its statute, which defined the Group's structure and activities. It recommended that a Celtic Division and an East Mediterranean Division (other than Arabic) of the Group be established and that the Group prepare a syllabus for training courses in toponymy, consider preparing guidelines for the exchange of toponymic information between computer systems, collect information on the national standardization of geographical names and establish liaison with the Pan American Institute of Geography and History to ensure optimal co-operation.

The Conference also recommended the adoption of romanization systems for the Russian Cyrillic and Greek alphabets, and, for consideration by the Group of Experts, a system for the romanization of Korean script for use in geographical names. It recommended that toponyms be differentiated from other map text, that the use of exonyms be further reduced and that precedence be given to national official forms of geographical names. It urged the establishment of national geographical names authorities and encouraged State authorities to support standardization activities and organize bilateral and multilateral meetings. DTCD was encouraged to increase its involvement in preparing and co-ordinating United Nations publications that facilitated the exchange of information and transfer of knowledge in the area of geographical names; the United Nations should publish a manual on national standardization, toponymic guidelines and a semi-annual information bulletin. The Conference also made recommendations on the uniformity of presentation of national reports to be presented at future conferences and recommended that the Sixth Conference be convened in Morocco in 1992.

Group of Experts. The United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names held its thirteenth session at Montreal on 17 and 31 August 1987.⁽³⁾ It discussed the organization of the Fifth Conference on 17 August and reviewed its recommendations on 31 August. It also reviewed its own rules of procedure and submitted amendments to the Conference for adoption.

In the light of the Economic and Social Council's establishment (decision 1987/112) of the Special Commission on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields and its request for the views of General Assembly subsidiary bodies, the Group of Experts established an ad hoc working group to review its statute. The working group concluded that the Group of Experts should: continue its activities as the only body, in the periods between Conferences, dealing with problems in the sphere of geographical names, which could be addressed only at the international level; consolidate and promote programmes benefiting national and international standardization; and create a study group to explore ways to increase effectiveness of programmes, rationalize and simplify relevant structures and functions, and co-ordinate efforts with other United Nations activities and interrelated bodies. The working group's conclusions would be considered by the Group of Experts in 1989.

UN Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

The Eleventh United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific was held at Bangkok, Thailand, from 5 to 16 January 1987. It was attended by 199 participants and observers from 34 countries and areas, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, one specialized agency and six intergovernmental and international scientific organizations. (*) (For participating States and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

The Conference reviewed the latest technology and its relationship to policy, economy and development in the cartographic fields of data acquisition, data manipulation, data depiction, and policies and management of national mapping and charting programmes. Four technical committees were established to consider those questions. The Conference also considered matters of technical assistance and transfer of technology in cartography.

The Conference adopted 23 resolutions. It recognized, in particular, the importance of the regional cartographic conferences for Asia and the Pacific and noted the interest in computerized land information and geographical information systems, and the need to evaluate the cost, reliability and utilization of information-gathering systems, and the exchange of digital cartographic data. The Conference recognized the need for studies to be continued by the United Nations, especially in the field of aerial photography and on the status of world mapping. The need for training in modern technology was recognized, and seminars on hydrographic surveying and nautical charting, as well as on toponymy, were recommended. It recommended the harmonization and co-ordination of cartographic and remote sensing activities at the national level. The Conference also considered the future of the International Map of the World on the Millionth Scale.

On 28 May 1987, by decision 1987/136, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Conference, (4) endorsed the Conference's recommendation to convene a twelfth regional conference in 1991, and asked the Secretary-General to take measures to implement its other recommendations.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/1988/22. (2)YUN 1982, p. 882. (3)ESA/RT/C/GN/11. (4)E/1987/39 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1,2.

PUBLICATIONS

Eleventh United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific, vol. I: Report of the Conference (E/CONF.78/4), Sales No. E.87.I.13; vol. II: Technical Papers (E/CONF.78/4/Add.1), Sales No. E/F.88.I.18. World Cartography, vol. XIX (ST/ESA/SER.L/19), Sales No. E.87.I.15. Fifth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, vol. I: Report of the Conference (E/CONF.79/5 & Corr.1), Sales No. E.88.I.7; vol. II: Technical Papers (E/CONF.79/5/Add.1), Sales No. E/F/S.90.1.21.

Chapter IX

Energy

In the area of energy, 1987 witnessed a decrease in investment and general hesitance in the nuclear domain in the wake of the 1986 Chernobyl accident.

On 1 January, the activities of the Energy Account of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) were merged with those of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development. During 1987, the UNDP Energy Office was implementing some 17 projects, representing a total of $15.5 million. The Account was the main channel for funding the UNDP/World Bank Energy Sector Management Assistance Programme. The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development provided some $26.3 million in technical assistance to developing countries in the energy sector during the year.

The United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy was held in March/April. The Conference recognized that nuclear energy could contribute to economic and social development but was unable to reach agreement on principles universally acceptable for international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and ways for promoting such co-operation. In November, the General Assembly urged all States to co-operate in support of efforts to foster international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy (resolution 42/24). In October, following consideration of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) for 1986, the Assembly urged States to strive for effective and harmonious international co-operation in carrying out IAEA'S work (resolution 42/6). The Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency entered into force in February.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: nuclear weapons. Peaceful uses of outer space. Regional economic and social activities: energy resources. Natural resources. Science and technology. Environment. Statistics: economic statistics.

Energy resources development

In a February 1987 report to the Committee on Natural Resources,(1) the Secretary-General analysed trends and salient issues in the development of energy resources. He focused on the developmental aspect of energy resources in keeping with the recent emphasis accorded that aspect by the General Assembly. With regard to the oil market during the preceding two years, he stated that the sharp fall in the price of oil had caused the prices of other forms of energy to decline and had had a deleterious effect on investment in the energy sector as a whole. The timing and impact differed according to the energy source and geographic region, and particular energy sources were subject to influences peculiar to themselves, which varied between market and centrally planned economies.

As to trends in the development of particular energy sources since 1985, activity in oil and natural gas development in the market economies had fallen by about 55 per cent. In the centrally planned economies, oil development slowed, while natural gas development increased. Coal development suffered from various constraints in the market economies. The generating capacity of nuclear power plants in the market economies rose, but the ordering of new reactors was slowed by lingering safety concerns exacerbated by the Chernobyl accident in 1986.(2) In centrally planned economies, both nuclear generating capacity in operation and reactors under construction increased. Progress in the development of new and renewable sources of energy was slowed by the fall in oil prices.

As regards future prospects and policies, the report said that government policies would be important determinants of the course of energy supply and demand, and that there were areas in which co-operative efforts among Governments seemed to be needed: financing energy development in developing countries and free access by those countries to world markets for petroleum products, particularly in the light of excess refining capacity

On 14 April,(3) the Committee on Natural Resources took note of the Secretary-General's report.

In a January report to the Committee,(4) the Secretary-General reviewed the application of microcomputer technology in the assessment of natural resources and energy (see p. 566). In resolution 1987/10, the Economic and Social Council asked the Secretary-General to establish a reference library of software packages for use in exploring for, developing and managing natural resources, and to distribute software to developing countries through workshops, seminars and training courses.

UNDP activities. In his annual report for 1987,(9) the UNDP Administrator said that the activities of the Energy Account had been merged with those of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD), which was established on 1 January 1987 (see also p. 599). The Energy Office/Energy Account's principal function was to identify and promote energy activities in developing countries and to provide technical advice to UNDP on energy-related projects. The Account was the main channel for funding the UNDP/World Bank Energy Sector Management Assistance Programme and was also active in other renewable energy activities, including projects co-financed by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries Fund.

In an April 1987 report to the UNDP Governing Council,(6) the Administrator said that some 17 projects, representing a value of some $15.5 million, were under implementation.

During 1987, the Energy Account received one contribution of $30,303 from New Zealand; contributions to cost-sharing and sub-trust funds totalled $5,945,868. Expenditures from the Account amounted to $2,861,000.

On 18 June,(7) the Governing Council asked the Administrator to report to it in 1988 as to what extent the new organizational arrangements for UNFSTD and the Energy Account had served to enhance UNDP'S work in science, technology and energy. Governments were urged to support the Fund and the Energy Account at the annual pledging conferences for the operational activities of the United Nations and through individual co-financing and other arrangements.

Technical co-operation activities. In a report to the UNDP Governing Council on United Nations technical co-operation activities,(*) the Secretary-General said that the level of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development budgets in the energy sector during 1987 was $26.3 million compared with $23.5 million in 1986. Budgets were allocated as follows: $10.8 million for Africa; $8.4 million for Asia and the Pacific; $3.6 million for the Americas; and $3.5 million for the Mediterranean, Middle East and interregional programmes. Technical assistance was provided in petroleum, coal, electricity, geothermal energy, energy planning and new and renewable sources of energy, and covered contract negotiations, manpower training, technology transfer and the survey and evaluation of energy resources. Governments continued to show a preference for acquiring new or updated technology, with 43 per cent of the energy technical co-operation budgets set aside for equipment. The need for highly specialized and short-term consultants constituted the second priority, with 26 per cent of budgets, and manpower training took third place with about 14 per cent.

UNEP activities. In his 1987 annual report,(9) the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) said that a pressing problem for developing countries continued to be the unsustainable use of biomass resources, leading to deforestation and desertification. In the industrialized countries, the main problems, including the acidification of the environment, arose from the continued use of fossil fuels. Both the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development (see p. 679) and the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond (see p. 661) confirmed that full integration of environmental factors into energy policy and planning was a pressing need.

During 1987, therefore, UNEP continued its three-pronged strategy: making available information on the environmental impacts of energy systems; providing guidance to Governments on the incorporation of environmental considerations into energy policy; and supporting field projects to promote environmentally sound satisfaction of energy needs in developing countries.

In the first area, a new project was started with the Beijer Institute of Stockholm, Sweden, under which information about different environmental impacts of biomass energy systems would be updated and guidance would be provided on how to manage them. The project would produce a technical study, a policy document and a book for the general public. Also in 1987, UNEP initiated the preparatory phase of a joint project with IAEA and the World Health Organization to assess and manage the health and environmental risks of energy and other complex industrial systems. Missions to the Philippines and Thailand began work on potential case-studies.

Two projects on the environmental impacts of fuelwood utilization in rural areas in Brazil and Bolivia and in Kenya neared completion in 1987. The Brazil-Bolivia project, which had not been adequately prepared with respect to involving local communities, underscored the need for close co-operation between experts and members of the community from the preparation of each field project through its implementation. Since more countries were expected to exploit their low-grade fossil fuel deposits, such as peat, lignite and oil shales, and given the associated potential environmental impacts, UNEP held a training course on their sound environmental management in December in the USSR for professionals from energy ministries in developing countries.

On 19 June,(10) the UNEP Governing Council adopted the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond (see p. 661) and recommended it to the General Assembly for adoption. The Perspective detailed issues, outlooks, goals and recommended action in six main sections, one of which dealt with energy. By resolution 42/186, the Assembly adopted the Perspective.

UNU activities. The United Nations University (UNU) continued to conduct research on integrated energy systems and the widespread diffusion of affordable, renewable sources of energy. Special attention was given to systems appropriate for use in the rural areas of developing countries. Projects in 1987 included energy planning and management, energy research and technology assessment and research support for renewable energy research networks. Under UNU sponsorship, the Integrated Rural Energy Systems Association (INRESA) co-operated with a network of research institutes in developing countries to combine traditional, upgraded and new technologies, taking account of the social, cultural and economic characteristics of their communities. A number of small-scale research projects were completed by network members in 1987, including those on solar stills, fuelwood conservation, minimum-maintenance solar pumps, enhancement of fuelwood productivity and fuel briquette production from agricultural wastes. The most important INRESA project involved seven universities and research organizations working on a simple solar water-disinfection technique.

In the field of solar, wind and bioconversion energy technologies, ASSET (abstracts of selected solar energy technology) continued to be published by UNU.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/C.7/1987/9 & Corr.1. (2)YUN 1986, p. 584. (3)E/1987/21 (dec. 10/2). (4)E/C.7/1987/3. (5)DP/1988/18/Add.1. (6)DP/1987/49. (7)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/39). (8)DP/1988/45/Add.1. (9)UNEP/GC.15/3. (10)A/42/25 (dec. 14/13).

PUBLICATIONS

Natural Gas Clauses in Petroleum Arrangements (ST/CTC/SER.B/1), Sales No. E.87.II.A.3. 1987 Energy Statistics Yearbook (ST/ESA/STAT/SER.J/31), Sales No. E/F.89.XVII.10.

New and renewable energy sources

The Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination met at Geneva from 18 to 20 March 1987(1) to consider: co-ordination of activities; preparations for a consultative meeting in the region of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia; and preparations for both the fourth (1988) session of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy and a colloquium of high-level experts on the same topic.

The colloquium of high-level experts on new and renewable sources of energy met at Castelgandolfo, Italy, from 5 to 7 October 1987.(2) It adopted conclusions and recommendations on: the status of implementation of the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy; (3) prospects of new and renewable sources of energy in the prevailing energy situation and potential for effective expansion; proposals to give a new impulse to the Nairobi Programme of Action's implementation (short-term activities); and the creation of a network of international centres in new and renewable sources of energy (longer-term options).

REFERENCES

- (1)ACC/1987/PG/10. (2)A/AC.218/14. (3)YUN 1981, p. 689.

Nuclear energy

IAEA report

During 1987, total installed nuclear power generating capacity in the world increased by about 8 per cent, reaching 297.9 gigawatts by the end of the year. Nuclear power plants accounted for more than 16 per cent of the world's electricity generation in 1987, at the end of which there were 417 such plants in operation. Twenty-two plants came on line and construction started on nine plants. No construction cancellations were reported by Member States. (See PART TWO, Chapter I, for further information on IAEA activities.)

In August 1987,(1) the Secretary-General transmitted the IAEA report for 1986 to the General Assembly.

Presenting and updating the report in the Assembly on 19 October, the IAEA Director General said that 1986 had been marked by the Chernobyl accident but also by an unprecedented level of intergovernmental co-operation within the framework of IAEA. Members had made use of the Agency for a comprehensive post-accident review, to elaborate and adopt the Conventions on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency (see p. 581), and to adopt a number of international measures in nuclear power safety.

The Agency had been in existence for 30 years and had 113 member States, among them all those States which had constructed or were constructing nuclear power stations. The programmes for nuclear power safety and radiological protection were among the major activities of the Agency. Safeguards covered 95 per cent of all nuclear material in non-nuclear-weapon States, and all five nuclear-weapon States had invited the Agency to perform safeguards inspections at all or many of their peaceful nuclear installations.

With regard to promotion of the use of nuclear energy, the Director General said that economically the most significant use of nuclear energy was for producing electricity by power reactors. That important industry had helped to reduce dependence on oil imports and the pressure on oil resources. It had also helped to reduce emissions of sulphur, nitrogen oxides and carbon dioxide into the atmosphere.

Although a few member Governments of IAEA had decided not to use nuclear power or to phase it out, the majority favoured expanded use. Several new orders for nuclear power plants had been placed since the Chernobyl accident. In addition, many developing countries, especially those having few or no fossil or hydro resources, were interested in nuclear power, but few had embarked on it. India had developed a large indigenous capacity and was planning a considerable expansion and China was engaged in a modest nuclear power programme, its main thrust for expanded electricity production lying in the use of coal. Other developing countries were hesitating, mainly because of the heavy initial investments.

While the attitude of most Governments to nuclear power development remained positive, it was clear that the Chernobyl accident had resulted in reduced public acceptance. However, the accident had prompted significant action among utilities and Governments to prevent accidents involving radioactive releases and to mitigate the consequences of any accident. Within IAEA, a substantial supplementary programme of nuclear safety had evolved since Chernobyl, including the elaboration and adoption of the Conventions on early notification and on assistance in the case of an accident.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 October 1987, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/6 without vote.

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1986,

Taking note of the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 19 October 1987, which provides additional information on the main developments in the Agency's activities during 1987,

Recalling that this year the Agency is celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of its establishment in 1957,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency to promote further the application of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, as envisaged in its statute,

Also recognizing the special needs of the developing countries for technical assistance by the Agency in order to benefit effectively from the application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes as well as from the contribution of nuclear energy to their economic development,

Conscious of the importance of the work of the Agency in the implementation of safeguards provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to achieve similar objectives, as well as in ensuring, as far as it is able, that the assistance provided by the Agency or at its request or under its supervision or control is not used in such a way as to further any military purpose, as stated in article II of its statute,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency on nuclear power, nuclear safety, radiological protection and radioactive waste management, including its work directed towards assisting developing countries in planning for the introduction of nuclear power in accordance with their needs,

Again stressing the need for the highest standards of safety in the design and operation of nuclear plants so as to minimize risks to life, health and the environment,

Welcoming the entry into force, on 27 October 1986 and 26 February 1987, of the Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency, and the fact that many States have already ratified them or consented to be bound by them provisionally pending ratification,

Noting with appreciation the entry into force on 8 February 1987 of the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material,

Bearing in mind resolutions GC(XXXI)/RES/470, GC(XXXI)/RES/472, GC(XXXI)/RES/473, GC(XXXI)/RES/474, GC(XXXI)/RES/475 and GC(XXXI)/RES/485 adopted on 25 September 1987 by the General Conference of the Agency at its thirty-first regular session,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Affirms its confidence in the role of the Agency in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

3. Urges all States to strive for effective and harmonious international co-operation in carrying out the work of the Agency, pursuant to its statute; in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of the necessary measures to strengthen further the safety of nuclear installations and to minimize risks to health; in strengthening technical assistance and co-operation for developing countries; and in ensuring the effectiveness and efficiency of the Agency's safeguards system;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency the records of the forty-second session of the General Assembly relating to the Agency's activities.

General Assembly resolution 42/6

20 October 1987 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

3-nation draft (A/42/L.6); agenda item 14.

Sponsors: Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Iraq.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: plenary 42, 43.

By resolution 42/186, the General Assembly adopted the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, which, in its section on energy, made recommendations regarding the safe production and use of nuclear energy.

Conventions

The Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency entered into force on 26 February 1987 following the deposit of instruments of ratification by the Byelorussian SSR and the Ukrainian SSR, having been signed earlier by Norway without reservation as to ratification. By the end of the year, there were 70 signatories and 16 parties.

The Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident, which had entered into force in 1986,(2) was signed and ratified by 14 States during 1987. All together, there were 72 signatories and 19 parties by the end of the year.

In a November 1987 note,(3) the Secretary-General brought to the attention of the General Assembly the fact that the two Conventions were open for accession by international organizations having competence in respect of the negotiation, conclusion and application of international agreements in matters covered by those Conventions. Given the fact that several United Nations bodies had competence in matters covered by the Conventions, the Secretary-General was of the view that United Nations accession to them would be useful and appropriate. He sought the Assembly's approval for such action.

On 11 December, the Assembly, by decision 42/443, decided to revert to the matter in 1988 in the light of additional information to be provided by the Secretary-General.

Conference on nuclear energy

The United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy was held at Geneva from 23 March to 10 April 1987,(4) following groundwork by seven sessions of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, established by the General Assembly in 1980.(5) Pre-Conference consultations were held at Geneva on 19 and 20 March to consider procedural and organizational matters.

The Conference was attended by 106 States, the United Nations Council for Namibia and representatives of concerned intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and United Nations specialized agencies and related organizations. Four national liberation movements were also represented (Palestine Liberation Organization, African National Congress of South Africa, Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, South West Africa People's Organization). (For Conference participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

The Conference established two main Committees and allocated to Committee I the agenda item on principles universally acceptable for international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and appropriate ways and means for the promotion of such co-operation, as envisaged in a 1977 General Assembly resolution on the peaceful use of nuclear energy for economic and social development,(6) and in accordance with mutually acceptable considerations of non-proliferation. The Conference reviewed the widespread and varied forms of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy that were already occurring, and reviewed existing constraints on such co-operation. It urged that international peaceful nuclear co-operation be enhanced and broadened.

Despite extensive efforts to reach agreement on principles universally acceptable for international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the Conference could not surmount differences of opinion and was unable to agree on the principles or on ways and means to promote such co-operation. It hoped that its exchange of views would lead to better appreciation of respective positions on those matters and to further mutual understanding. It also considered that IAEA and international organizations might benefit from those exchanges.

The Conference allocated two agenda items to Committee II: the role of nuclear power for social and economic development and the role of other peaceful applications of nuclear energy, such as food and agriculture, health and medicine, hydrology, industry, etc., for social and economic development. The Conference's extensive discussion of the first item covered a wide range of subjects relating to nuclear technology and applications and highlighted issues of interest to developing and developed countries and ways that nuclear energy could be useful for them. It considered that the technical reports before it and the discussions on them could be used to plan national programmes for development, use and safety of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and agreed that the technical reports should be made widely available; the Secretary-General was asked to consider publishing them within existing financial resources.

On 7 April, the Conference took note of the reports of the two Committees.

Communication. In their final communique, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly's 1987 session (New York, 5-7 October)(7) welcomed the holding of the Conference, but regretted that it was unable to reach agreement on principles for international cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy or on ways and means to promote such co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 November 1987, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/24 without vote.

United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purpose and objectives of the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy as spelt out in its resolution 32/50 of 8 December 1977,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 33/4 of 2 November 1978, 34/63 of 29 November 1979, 35/112 of 5 December 1980, 36/78 of 9 December 1981, 37/167 of 17 December 1982, 38/60 of 14 December 1983, 39/74 of 13 December 1984, 40/95 of 12 December 1985 and 41/212 A and B of 11 December 1986,

Bearing in mind the importance and potential of nuclear energy for economic and social development, especially in the developing countries,

Noting with appreciation the extensive and active involvement of the International Atomic Energy Agency in promoting the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes in accordance with articles II and III of its statute, and, in particular, recent measures taken to strengthen international co-operation in nuclear safety and radiological protection, including the adoption of the Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency,

Convinced that close and effective international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy in a climate of confidence is essential for the full realization of the fundamental twin objectives of ensuring that nuclear technology is not misused in any way and that its benefits are made available in a safe and secure manner,

Recalling that the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, held at Geneva from 23 March to 10 April 1987, provided a global forum under the auspices of the United Nations to consider specifically all relevant concerns on the role of nuclear power and of applications of nuclear techniques in such fields as food and agriculture, health and medicine, hydrology, industry, and scientific and technological research for economic and social development,

Having considered the report of the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, which mainly states that:

(a) The Conference recognized that nuclear energy could contribute to economic and social development and to the well-being of many countries, and urged that international peaceful nuclear co-operation should be enhanced and broadened;

(b) Extensive efforts were made by the Conference to reach agreement on "principles universally acceptable for international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and appropriate ways and means for the promotion of such co-operation, as envisaged in General Assembly resolution 32/50, and in accordance with mutually acceptable considerations of non-proliferation", but while reaffirming that these matters were of importance and of major concern, the Conference was unable to reach agreement on them;

(c) The Conference expressed the hope that its active and, comprehensive exchange of views would lead to a better appreciation of respective positions on these matters and to further mutual understanding, and it also considered that the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations might benefit from these exchanges;

(d) The Conference considered that the technical reports presented and the discussions that took place during the Conference on the role of nuclear power and of other peaceful applications of nuclear energy for economic and social development could be used in planning national programmes for development, use and safety of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

(e) The Conference agreed that the technical reports referred to in subparagraph (d) above should be made widely available and requested the Secretary-General to consider their publication within existing financial resources;

2. Believes that the Conference has served a useful purpose in examining the role of nuclear energy in economic and social development, and the complex problems in the promotion of international co-operation in this vital field;

3. Recognizes that the technical reports presented at the Conference could be used in planning programmes for development, use and safety of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and authorizes their publication in the official languages of the United Nations within existing financial resources, and requests that arrangements be made to make them widely available;

4. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency, as the central organization for peaceful nuclear co-operation, to continue its efforts, in close collaboration with the concerned specialized agencies and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, with the specific aim of strengthening and broadening international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy for economic and social development;

5. Urges all States to co-operate fully in support of all efforts aimed at fostering international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy for economic and social development;

6. Requests the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in the annual reports of the Agency, to continue to report on the progress made in the promotion of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy for economic and social development, especially in the developing countries.

General Assembly resolution 42/24

27 November 1987 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Draft by Egypt (A/42/L.37); agenda item 40.

REFERENCES

- (1)A/42/458 & Corr.1. (2)YUN 1986, p. 585. (3)A/C.2/42/6. (4)A/CONF.108/7. (5)YUN 1980, p. 164, GA res. 35/112, 5 Dec. 1980. (6)YUN 1977, p. 106, GA res. 32/50, 8 Dec. 1977. (7)A/42/681.

Chapter X

Food

During 1987, the World Food Programme (WFP)—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)—shipped a record amount of food, mainly due to shipments for ongoing and newly approved development projects. It received pledges of cash and commodities from 100 countries worth $1,118 million for 1987-1988, the highest amount ever. Contributions to the International Emergency Food Reserve amounted to 696,000 tons of food, of which 636,800 tons were in cereals, for a total value of $187.4 million. WFP committed more money for emergency relief than ever before—$271.3 million to provide 838,855 tons of food to 79 operations in 32 countries for needs stemming from armed conflict, poor rains and insect infestation. The value of WFP emergency assistance rose nearly 50 per cent over 1986, while the total quantity of food provided exceeded that of 1986 by 288,000 tons. The Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, WFP's governing body, held two sessions in 1987 and approved 33 new projects at a cost of $522 million.

The World Food Council—the highest international body dealing with food problems—meeting in Beijing in June, issued the Beijing Declaration which proclaimed that access to food constituted a human right, called for priority to be given to integrated rural development and urged the developed countries and major financing bodies to consider the difficulties of developing countries in repaying their debts.

In July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Beijing Declaration called on Governments and international assistance agencies to redouble their efforts to eliminate hunger and urged all States to contribute to WFP (resolution 1987/90). The Council also urged United Nations Member States and FAO members and associate members to prepare for the next WFP pledging conference in 1988 (resolution 1987/91).

The General Assembly, in December, established a $1.4 billion target for 1989-1990 voluntary contributions to WFP (resolution 42/164).

Topics related to this chapter. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief. Regional economic and social activities: Africa—food and agriculture. Health and human resources: nutrition. Environment: environmental perspective; desertification and drought control. Human rights: right to food. Women: women in rural areas. Children: nutrition. Refugees and displaced persons: assistance.

Food problems

In 1987, hunger and malnutrition persisted throughout the world. Food production declined during the year, reaching its worst level since 1983, the result of a low growth rate in developing countries and a decline in the developed ones. Famine again threatened large numbers of people in Africa, while millions in Asia and Latin America faced extraordinary food shortages, in the wake of natural disasters or civil strife. On the positive side, social concern was growing and many countries were seeking to protect the food security and well-being of their low-income people.

Increased agricultural production in sub-Saharan Africa during 1985 and 1986 was not sustained in 1987. Poor rains and severe civil disturbances affected large parts of the region. The Secretary-General discussed Africa's food problems in an October report⁽¹⁾ and, in April,⁽²⁾ he transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a report by the Director-General of FAO on the fight against the locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa. For the most critical emergency situation of the year, in Ethiopia, early warning systems which had been strengthened after the 1984-1985 famine⁽³⁾ accelerated the delivery of food aid. WFP continued to play a critical role in getting emergency food aid to people in need through its trucking operation in Ethiopia, its overland transport of food to southern Sudan and Malawi and its coastal shipping service in Mozambique. Over two thirds of total WFP emergency food assistance in 1987 was channelled to refugees and persons displaced by internal strife. The largest continuing refugee situations remained in Pakistan and Somalia, where WFP co-ordinated all food supplies to the refugees and worked to ensure a smooth flow in the delivery of commodities.

In its twelfth annual report,⁽⁴⁾ the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA) stated that WFP would continue to concentrate on areas where food aid could have the most direct impact on food and agricultural problems, including labour-intensive work programmes for soil erosion control, afforestation, construction of small irrigation works and improvement of rural transport infrastructure. Assistance to the urban as well as the rural poor particularly affected by structural and sector adjustment programmes would be considered in co-operation with the World Bank, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and other multilateral, bilateral and non-governmental agencies. WFP would intensify efforts to improve the integration of food aid into recipient countries' development plans.

By decision 1987/185 of 9 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council took note of the CFA report.

In the report on its thirteenth session (see below), the World Food Council (WFC) stated that poverty, which was at the core of the hunger problem, had become both more widespread and more severe, as many countries struggled with economic difficulties and undertook economic adjustment programmes. Large cuts in government spending on food subsidies, primary health care and other social programmes had caused further hardship.

WFC activities. The 36-member WFC held its thirteenth ministerial session in Beijing from 8 to 11 June 1987 and reviewed the global food and development situation.⁽⁵⁾ It issued the Beijing Declaration, which was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council (see p. 585). It expressed concern that the world community was moving away from the 1974 World Food Conference⁽⁶⁾ objective of a world without hunger, as the number of hungry people grew in the face of record global surpluses. In its view, a solution of the world food problem depended on improving international economic relations, establishing a new international economic order, and developing equal and mutually beneficial international co-operation. It recommended that Governments redouble their food-strategy efforts and requested that the WFC secretariat intensify its efforts to facilitate North-South and South-South co-operation in support of national and regional food strategies.

WFC noted the recommendations of the consultation on the impact of economic adjustment on people's food security and nutritional levels in developing countries, organized by the WFC secretariat with UNICEF and the International Labour Organisation (Rome, Italy, 11 and 12 May),⁽⁷⁾ which included practical steps towards improving multilateral agency co-operation in economic adjustment, while calling for closer integration of food-security, nutrition and poverty objectives into the work of World Bank consultative groups and United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) round tables.

In a broader context of economic development, WFC reviewed the food-security aspects of international agricultural trade. Growing protectionism, the decline in commodity prices, the deterioration in terms of trade and limited access to markets had had a negative impact on international agricultural trade and impeded the efforts of developing countries to overcome hunger and malnutrition. Agricultural production and stocks had grown to record levels, but not in the countries that needed them most. According to WFC, serious imbalances in agricultural trade required measures such as policy adjustment, creation of a more favourable economic environment, resolution of the debt problem, reduction of protectionism and a fruitful outcome of the multilateral trade negotiations of the Uruguay Round (for more details on the Uruguay Round, see PART TWO, Chapter XVIII).

The Council called for increased South-South co-operation in food and agriculture and welcomed efforts to strengthen such co-operation. It noted that three consultations, organized by WFC with UNDP and other agencies, in three African capitals—Lusaka (Zambia), Yaoundé (Cameroon) and Dakar (Senegal)—from 13 to 16 April,⁽⁸⁾ had indicated the will of developing countries to work more closely together. The Council supported the priority areas for South-South co-operation identified at another consultation, held at the inter-regional level with a number of African, Asian and Latin American countries at Lomé, Togo, from 11 to 14 May;⁽⁸⁾ those areas included food production, institution-building, training and management improvement, the development of agro-industries and trade. Noting that increased use was being made of technical co-operation among developing countries, WFC urged regional development banks, the regional commissions and donor countries, in liaison with WFC, to facilitate arrangements to step up the financing of technical and economic co-operation among them.

Representatives of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), WFP, FAO and UNDP reported on their activities to reduce hunger and malnutrition. WFC expressed appreciation for the continuing development of FAO'S Global Information and Early Warning System (see p. 1205), IFAD's Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification and WFP's logistical and material support to improve food aid delivery during Africa's food emergency.

As to its future work programme, the Council agreed that during the 1988-1989 biennium its activities would focus on following earlier initiatives (nutritional impact of economic adjustment policies, agricultural trade, South-South co-operation), new items (assessment of policies and programmes for reducing hunger and poverty, ecological issues) and ongoing activities (monitoring programmes for eliminating hunger and malnutrition, food strategies, external aid, activities of transnational corporations in the food sector). The Council emphasized that its role was to monitor, review and co-ordinate food policies of various agencies, to assess and analyse their consequences and to provide advice to agencies and Governments.

The Council approved the draft outline of the medium-term plan for 1990-1995.(g)

Communication. On 18 February,(10) Australia transmitted to the Secretary-General a proposal for resolving the international agricultural trade crisis. It called on Governments to halt subsidy escalation and freeze and progressively reduce the gap between administered internal prices and international market prices for farm products; reduce internal administered producer prices for 1987-1988; expedite the narrowing of the price gap by interim measures aimed at containing supplies and quarantining stockpiles in countries where internal administered prices remained significantly higher than international prices; separate farm income support measures from producer prices for farm output; and develop principles to liberalize world agricultural trade through reform of domestic agricultural policies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

A draft resolution on food and agricultural problems was originally submitted in the Economic and Social Council's First (Economic) Committee. Following oral revisions by the sponsors and owing to lack of time, the Committee decided to transmit it to the Council for consideration.

On 9 July, the Council adopted resolution 1987/90 by roll-call vote.

Food and agricultural problems

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, 39/174 of 17 December 1984 and 40/205 of 17 December 1985 on the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries and 41/191 of 8 December 1986 on food and agricultural problems,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition adopted by the World Food Conference,

Stressing the imperative need to keep food and agricultural issues at the centre of global attention,

Reaffirming the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-

1990, in which the African countries and the international community committed themselves, inter alia, to giving priority attention and increased resources to the rehabilitation and development of food and agriculture in Africa,

Reaffirming that the right to food is a universal human right which should be guaranteed to all people and, in that context, believing in the general principle that food should not be used as an instrument of political pressure, either at the national or at the international level,

Reaffirming also that the maintenance of peace and security and the strengthening of international co-operation in food and agriculture are important for improved economic conditions and enhanced food security,

Reaffirming that for most developing countries self-reliance in food and agriculture constitutes an important objective,

Recognizing the urgent need for substantial progress in stimulating food production in developing countries, and that the international agricultural commodity policies have an important bearing on the attainment of that objective,

Reaffirming that agriculture has a central impact on other sectors of the economies of the developing countries,

Concerned that growing protectionism, the decline in commodity prices, the deterioration in terms of trade and limited access to markets have had a negative effect on the situation of international agricultural trade, particularly for developing countries,

Welcoming the growing international consensus since the special ministerial session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 15 to 20 September 1986, in favour of agricultural trade reform at the earliest possible time,

1. Notes with concern that hunger and malnutrition have been increasing since the World Food Conference in 1974, that the number of people suffering from hunger and malnutrition has grown in the 1980s and that the central objective of the World Food Conference remains largely unfulfilled;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the oral report made by the Executive Director of the World Food Council on behalf of the Secretary-General, on the liberalization of international agricultural trade;

3. Welcomes the conclusions and recommendations adopted at the thirteenth session of the World Food Council, held at Beijing from 8 to 11 June 1987;

4. Endorses the Beijing Declaration of the World Food Council, reproduced in the annex to the present resolution, as a reaffirmation of the commitment of the world community to the eradication of hunger and malnutrition and as a framework to accelerate action to attain that objective;

5. Calls upon Governments and international assistance agencies to redouble national and regional food strategy efforts as part of comprehensive economic and social action to eliminate hunger and poverty;

6. Recognizes that developing countries pursuing self-reliance may be obliged to adopt policies that can protect their agricultural production;

7. Reaffirms that support measures for agricultural exports, together with other protectionist practices that certain developed countries apply in the agricultural sector, contribute to an accumulation of excess stocks on the world market and that depressed international prices do not serve the purposes of world food security in that the domestic output of developing countries may be eliminated from local and international markets;

8. Calls for the prompt and full implementation of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, particularly in view of the close link between the fall in commodity export earnings and the accumulation of debt;

9. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so to ratify the Agreement Establishing the common Fund for Commodities;

10. Welcomes the measures taken by African Governments to stimulate agriculture and food production in implementation of their commitments under the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

11. Expresses its appreciation to those developed countries that have taken specific measures in support of African efforts towards recovery and development under the Programme of Action;

12. Expresses concern that the expected foreign resources in support of African efforts at recovery and development made in accordance with the commitments of the international community under the Programme of Action have not so far materialized, and urges the international community to expedite its support for these efforts and to consider this problem further during the mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action at the forty-third session of the General Assembly;

13. Recognizes the need for more domestic and international financial resources for science and technology and agricultural training within Africa, including the support needed to tackle the massive problem of re-orienting and greatly strengthening African agricultural research and production systems and to develop and strengthen its indigenous scientific and technological capability and bring about a transition from extractive to regenerative agricultural practices;

14. Welcomes the efforts made by some members of the international community to support the fight against the locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa, and commends the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for its co-ordinating role and for establishing the Emergency Centre for Locust Operations;

15. Welcomes the encouraging progress in efforts made in support of the food and agriculture sector in many developing countries and calls on the international community to accelerate assistance for those efforts;

16. Calls upon all countries to use the opportunity of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, which is of decisive importance, to pursue vigorously the liberalization of agricultural trade and necessary policy reforms, taking into account all the general principles governing those negotiations, including the principle of differential and more favourable treatment, embodied in part IV of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and related instruments;

17. Takes note of the recommendations of the inter-regional meeting organized by the United Nations Development Programme and the World Food Council at Lomé from 11 to 14 May 1987, which identify priority areas for the enhancement of South-South co-operation in food and agriculture, and calls on Governments and national, regional and interregional organizations to work together more closely to strengthen regional and interregional food and agriculture programmes;

18. Calls upon all countries to make a greater effort to participate actively in the negotiations on the third replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and urges all contributors to the Fund to make additional efforts to contribute to the resources of the Fund with a view to ensuring the highest possible level of replenishment while preserving the institution and its unique structure;

19. Reiterates its urgent appeal to the few donor countries that have not already done so to make a contribution to the Fund's Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification, and invites the international community to make a further financial effort so that the $300 million target of the Fund can be reached at the earliest possible date;

20. Urges all States to make every effort to contribute to the World Food Programme so that it can attain, in a timely fashion, its target of $1.4 billion for the period 1989-1990, as approved by the governing body of the Programme and the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes;

21. Invites the regional development banks, the regional commissions, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and donor countries to facilitate practical arrangements to accelerate financing and technical and economic co-operation among developing countries, giving particular attention to the expansion of tripartite arrangements through which developing countries would help to finance South-South co-operative action;

22. Urges Governments to ensure and enhance the participation of women in the formulation and implementation of national food policies, plans and projects, in view of the importance accorded to food and the acknowledged role of women farmers in food production, marketing and family nutrition and in view of the consensus achieved on the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

23. Welcomes the programme of work of the World Food Council for the biennium 1988-1989 referred to in the report of the Council on the work of its thirteenth session, and requests the World Food Council to implement it;

24. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the World Food Council and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1988, a comprehensive report on the trends in the international market for agricultural products, together with suggestions on ways and means of increasing the share of developing countries in international agricultural trade;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to make a further oral report on the liberalization of international agricultural trade to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988 and to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

ANNEX

Beijing Declaration of the World Food Council

We, the Ministers of the World Food Council convened in Beijing in June 1987,

Draw the attention of all peoples to the growing number of human lives lost to hunger and malnutrition, one of the worst scourges in the world.

Thirteen years after the World Food Conference, although total food production has increased, the number of undernourished men, women and children in the world has risen.

This untenable situation has deep historical root causes and complex social and economic factors.

In the face of this disorder, which is affecting innocent human beings,

We once again proclaim that access to food constitutes a human right which must be defended by Governments, peoples and the international community;

We affirm, in the light of the experience of a number of developing countries, that humanity can feed itself if it adopts the proper means;

We proclaim that these means depend on the political will of Governments and the international community to win the common battle against hunger;

We acknowledge that the development of agricultural production requires a favourable international climate and is contingent upon the convergence of financial, economic and social policies implemented by each country within the framework of the concept of national food strategies put forward by the international community.

Moreover, we are convinced that agriculture represents a vital sector for establishing a social, economic and financial equilibrium in the developing countries.

Indeed, the debts incurred by many developing countries, especially the least developed countries, must not result in increased poverty for rural populations.

Therefore,

We call upon those responsible for national economic adjustment programmes to give priority to the requirements of integrated rural development as they affect the living conditions of both rural and urban populations;

We urge the developed countries and major financing bodies to take into consideration the great difficulties of developing countries to repay their debts and to set up the necessary financial instruments for national economic recovery;

We urge those responsible for trade negotiations to re-establish a healthy and equitable exchange of agricultural products and to allow the fair participation of developing countries;

We believe that Governments and the international organizations must further encourage regional and South-South co-operation, particularly in support of food production, agro-industries, trade, and management and institution-building;

We affirm that the support of the countries of the North for the peoples of the developing South remains essential;

We recognize that peace and stability are essential for the development of agricultural production; and

We proclaim our intention to join together and, in our united strength and interest, to eliminate the scourge of hunger forever.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/90

9 July 1987 Meeting 37 34-0-13 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Guatemala, for Group of 77 (E/1987/C.1/L.13/Rev.1), orally revised in First Committee and further orally revised in Council; agenda item 9.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bangladesh, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Egypt, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, India, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Morocco, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Norway, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

Before acting on the text as a whole, the Council adopted paragraph 6 by a roll-call vote of 34 to 3, with 10 abstentions; paragraph 8 by 36 to 2, with 9 abstentions; and paragraph 9 by 35 to 1, with 11 abstentions.

Had the text been voted on paragraph by paragraph, Australia and Canada said they would have voted for paragraphs dealing with the work of WFC, WFP and FAO and for those relating to international agricultural trade. In addition, Canada said it would have voted for paragraphs referring to Africa. Australia said paragraph 6 introduced a concept which might constitute a new element in international trade law and which prejudged the outcome of the Uruguay Round. Concerning paragraph 8, Australia believed it was inappropriate to take up a position on issues which were to be considered by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). Canada expressed similar concerns.

Regarding paragraph 6, Denmark, for the 12 member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), said EEC appreciated the need to safeguard the domestic production of developing countries pursuing self-reliance, but asserted that trade issues should not monopolize attention. They believed that paragraph 7 suggested a one-sided and misleading interpretation of the international agricultural trade issue. As to paragraphs 8 and 9, they said the fate of the Integrated Programme for Commodities and the Common Fund had been pending since 1976 and voiced concern over prejudging the outcome of UNCTAD deliberations on the Programme. EEC objected to paragraph 11 because it believed it addressed issues not strictly related to food and agriculture and because there was no way the Economic and Social Council could assess the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD)(11) since a mid-term review of the Programme of Action was not scheduled until 1988. They felt that the eleventh preambular paragraph suggested action inconsistent with that already agreed upon in other forums.

Sweden, on behalf also of Finland, Iceland and Norway, expressed difficulties with paragraphs 6 and 7.

The United States, which had requested the votes, said it had been obliged to vote against the provisions it found unacceptable; it had abstained on the text as a whole because it contained many elements which it supported.

A number of countries expressed regret that it had not been possible to reach a consensus.

Among them were Canada, Denmark, on behalf of EEC, Egypt, Guatemala, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, Jamaica, Sweden, also on behalf of Finland, Iceland and Norway, and the United States. Some countries, including Australia, Canada, Denmark, Japan, Sweden and the United States, believed that if the sponsors of the text had extended negotiations, it would have been possible to achieve a consensus.

Morocco said it was glad that paragraph 7 had not been voted on separately since it was of great importance to developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted by the General Assembly (resolution 42/186), it was stated that the quest to meet rapidly growing food needs, combined with insufficient attention to the environmental impact of agricultural policies and practices, had resulted in great environmental damage. Soil erosion had increased in all regions and reduced river flows and lake levels had lowered agricultural productivity. Excessive fishing activities had led to overexploitation of several important fish stocks and the exhaustion of some. The use of high-yielding seed varieties had led to a reduction in the genetic diversity of crops and an increase in their vulnerability to disease and pests, and the overuse of pesticides had polluted water and soil. The Assembly recommended a number of measures to achieve food security without resource depletion or environmental degradation; urged the World Meteorological Organization, FAO and the United Nations Environment Programme to play a role in developing better systems of early warning against drought and other dryland conditions; and suggested that projects should be designed and implemented to promote afforestation, agro-forestry systems, water management and soil conservation measures in areas of environmental stress.

In-depth study of the UN intergovernmental structure

By decision 1987/112 of 6 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council established a Special Commission, open to all United Nations Member States, to carry out an in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields; the study was a follow-up to recommendation 8 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18).⁽¹²⁾ The Group of 18 had recommended that the study should, among other things, identify measures to rationalize and simplify the structure, avoid duplication and consider consolidating overlapping activities and merging existing bodies in order to make the structure more responsive to current needs. The study also aimed to improve the system of reporting from subsidiary to principal organs, thereby reducing the number of reports and avoid duplication of documentation.

WFC recommended⁽⁵⁾ to the Special Commission that it should take into account that: WFC was the highest political body in the United Nations system dealing with food; it reviewed and recommended remedial action on major problems or policy issues affecting all aspects of the world food situation; it was an overall ministerial-level policy body, not an operational one, and did not duplicate the activities of other United Nations bodies concerned with food such as FAO, WFP and IFAD; and WFC had no subsidiary bodies but would encourage improved reporting and less duplication of documentation.

REFERENCES

- (1)A/42/560 & Corr.1. (2)E/1987/57. (3)YUN 1985, p. 697. (4)E/1987/80. (5)A/42/19. (6)YUN 1974, p. 488. (7)WFC/1987/2/Add.1. (8)WFC/1987/4/Add.1. (9)WFC/1987/10. (10)A/42/137-E/1987/48. (11)YUN 1986, p. 446, GA res. S-13/2, annex, 1 June 1986. (12)Ibid., p. 891.

Food aid

World Food Programme

In 1987, the World Food Programme continued to provide developing countries with food aid for development purposes and emergency relief.

CFA activities

At its twenty-third session, held at Rome from 25 May to 4 June 1987,⁽¹⁾ CFA—the WFP governing body—conducted its twelfth annual review of food aid policies and programmes, with special reference to the roles of food aid in structural and sector adjustment and the management of funds generated by food-assisted projects. It also reviewed the WFP Executive Director's annual report covering 1986 activities.⁽²⁾

CFA hoped that WFP'S purchases from food-surplus developing countries would continue to increase and that overall increases in the purchase of commodities and a better balanced distribution in developing countries could be obtained. It agreed that where food aid was appropriate, its potential role should be given adequate attention in preparing and implementing adjustment programmes. It also agreed that the circumstances of individual developing countries should be taken into account when food aid was used to assist in carrying out policy reforms. Reviewing national experience with food aid policies and programmes, CFA concluded that Pakistan, which had succeeded in combining substantial receipts of food aid with development in domestic agricultural production, should be studied by other food aid recipient countries, and that the ways in which Pakistan had coped with the problems of the Afghan refugees, the role played by food aid and the major lessons learned from that emergency operation should be examined by countries confronting similar situations (see p. 897).

CFA stressed the importance of education and training for women, as well as their employment possibilities, productivity and income levels. It endorsed policy principles to ensure greater and more systematic attention to the role of women in WFP-assisted projects and strongly supported guidelines for gender responsiveness in development projects. The Committee requested WFP to assign high priority to developing a plan of action to promote the application of such policy principles and guidelines, and asked it to report at a subsequent session on progress made.

The Committee supported WFP's emphasis on assistance to sub-Saharan Africa and the Executive Director's plans to build up the training programme for WFP staff involved in project design and planning. It hoped that the upward trend in the use of developing countries' vessels would continue. It urged WFP to continue its participation in UNDP round tables and called for its continued collaboration with multilateral financial institutions, such as the World Bank and IFAD.

At the twenty-third session, CFA approved 18 projects at a total cost of $266 million, in addition to three budget increases for approved projects, making a combined total of $274 million (equivalent to about 762,000 tons of food).

At its twenty-fourth session at Rome from 19 to 29 October, (3) CFA called on WFP for continued innovation in maintaining a response to the crisis which was developing in sub-Saharan Africa (see below) and encouraged the WFP secretariat to continue expanding its collaboration with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in assessing refugee food aid needs and in programming refugee feeding operations (see p. 883). It reviewed the European Community's experience with food aid policies and programmes, endorsing the priority given to projects and programmes that promoted food production in recipient countries. The Committee reaffirmed that WFP should continue its practice of relying on project rather than programme food aid as its main mode of operation, targeting the benefits of monetization directly on the poor.

CFA approved 15 projects, at a total cost of $256 million, and 10 budget increases for approved projects. The combined value amounted to $298 million, equivalent to about 656,000 tons of food. In addition, CFA was informed that between 1 January and 30 June 1987, the Executive Director had approved four projects of up to $1.5 million each in food value, at a total cost to WFP of $6.2 million.

WFP activities

In 1987, for the second successive year, WFP shipped a record amount of food—more than 2.4 million tons and nearly 10 per cent more than in 1986.(4) Pledges to WFP's resources totalling over $1,118 million for the 1987-1988 biennium also set a record. During the year, WFP committed $621 million to development projects, representing 1.5 million tons of food, and a record total of $271.3 million to emergency operations, for 838,855 tons of food.

WFP purchases of food in 1987 (including those on behalf of bilateral donors and United Nations organizations) reached a record 611,000 tons worth $97 million, an increase of 8 per cent over 1986. Nearly $73 million worth of the food was bought in developing countries.

Increased agricultural production in sub-Saharan Africa during 1985 and 1986 was not sustained in 1987 due to poor rains and severe civil disturbances. Development assistance commitments for sub-Saharan Africa continued at a higher level than for any other region—37 per cent of the total. WFP increased its support for UNPAAERD, participating in a series of follow-up meetings and conferences and inter-agency task forces, as well as meetings on the development uses of food aid in the region. It developed a plan of action for Africa with projected expenditures totalling more than $1.8 billion in food aid during the UNPAAERD period, 1986-1990.

In 1987, more than 100 WFP-assisted projects with a total cost of over $1.2 billion contained elements designed to overcome environmental degradation. Using project food aid, WFP worked with a number of recipient Governments to overcome such problems. Focusing on the preservation of natural resources, WFP projects supported erosion control, watershed management, terracing of fragile hillsides, reforestation, the development of wind-breaks, improvements of natural forests, rehabilitation of grazing lands, construction of conservation works, establishment of firewood plantations and anti-desertification measures.

WFP developed an international food aid information-sharing system, which was to link all organizations interested in food aid operations and statistics.

Development assistance

WFP's commitments for development projects in 1987 were down slightly from 1986, from $629

million to $621 million, representing 1.5 million tons of food.⁽⁴⁾ Tonnage dipped from the 1.8 million tons committed in 1985 and 1986, because fewer projects using very large amounts of cereals were approved in 1987, while substantial commitments were made for projects using commodities of higher value in relation to weight, such as vegetable oil, dried skim milk, butter oil, canned meat and dried fish.

Of the total, $532 million (86 per cent) financed 39 new projects and project expansions. The balance represented increases in the budgets of operational projects previously approved either by CFA or by the Executive Director, which accounted for a total of 14 per cent of all development commitments.

As in previous years, WFP concentrated its development resources on the poorest countries. Of the 1.5 million tons of food committed, 80 per cent went to low-income, food-deficit countries. The share of WFP assistance committed to the least developed countries was about 52 per cent.

By region, Africa south of the Sahara received the highest share of commitments ($227 million or 37 per cent of the total), followed by Asia and the Pacific ($205 million or 33 per cent), Latin America and the Caribbean ($110 million or 18 per cent) and North Africa and the Near East ($79 million or 13 per cent).

In 1987, $298 million went to agricultural and rural development projects, focusing on agricultural production and rural infrastructure and settlement. Human resources development commitments amounted to $323 million, with assistance to mother and child-health and primary school-feeding programmes receiving the largest share (49 per cent).

Emergency operations

During 1987, WFP committed a record 838,855 tons of food with a value of $271.3 million for 79 emergency operations in 32 countries. Emergency needs stemming from unforeseen events—a sharp increase in armed conflict, unexpectedly poor rains and sudden insect infestation—exhausted emergency resources available under the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR) and WFP regular resources. WFP appealed for increased contributions and, although additional contributions were made, it was necessary to draw in advance against 1988 contributions.

Of the 79 emergency operations—29 more than in 1986, targeted to some 15 million beneficiaries—48 were in sub-Saharan Africa, 15 in Asia and the Pacific, 11 in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 5 in the Middle East and North Africa. Sub-Saharan Africa received 53 per cent of total tonnage committed or 59 per cent of the total value of emergency operations.

Within sub-Saharan Africa, 36 of the 48 operations aided refugees and displaced persons. Of those in Asia and the Pacific, eight related to such persons, five to natural disasters and two to drought. In Latin America, eight operations were for refugees and displaced persons and three were drought-related. All the operations in the Middle East and North Africa were in support of refugees and displaced persons. That group of persons, the largest of the beneficiaries of WFP food assistance in 1987, numbered 8.5 million. WFP continued to co-ordinate the bilateral and multilateral food aid distribution to refugees in Pakistan and Somalia and the displaced persons along the Thai-Kampuchean border (see also Chapter XX of this section).

WFP began a convoy system for overland transport of emergency food from Kenya to southern Sudan during 1987. It co-ordinated the overland transport of large tonnages of maize from Zimbabwe to Malawi for refugee feeding and drought relief programmes; in the last four months of 1987, about 25,000 tons of maize were moved by road through Mozambique under military escort. In Mozambique, a second vessel was added to WFP's coastal shipping service.

WFP resources

Total net WFP commitments in 1987, for development projects, emergency operations and administrative costs, were $954 million. Total expenditures amounted to $797.2 million.

Fledges and contributions

During 1987, combined total resources contributed or pledged to WFP through regular resources or under the 1980 Food Aid Convention⁽⁵⁾ or IEFR reached $1.3 billion, including approximately 3.7 million tons of food. By 31 December 1987, 74 countries had pledged $1,052 million, or 75 per cent of the target for regular pledges for the 1987-1988 biennium set at $1,400 million.

For the sixth time since its inception, IEFR's target of 500,000 tons of cereals was exceeded in 1987. By 31 December, announced contributions to IEFR amounted to 696,000 tons of food, of which 636,755 tons were in cereals, for a total value of approximately $187.4 million. Of the total 1987 contributions, 96 per cent was channelled multilaterally through WFP. Twenty-three donors, including three developing countries, contributed to IEFR in 1987.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/91 without vote.

Target for World Food Programme pledges
for the period 1989-1990

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the comments of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes concerning the minimum target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme for the period 1989-1990,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2462(XXIII) of 20 December 1968 and 2682(XXV) of 11 December 1970, in which the Assembly recognized the experience gained by the World Food Programme in the field of multilateral food aid,

1. Submits to the General Assembly for consideration and adoption the draft resolution annexed hereto;

2. Urges States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to undertake the necessary preparations for the announcement of pledges at the Thirteenth Pledging Conference for the World Food Programme.

ANNEX

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 42/164 below.]

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/91

9 July 1987 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/122) without vote, 2 July (meeting 22); draft by CFA (E/1987/80); agenda item 9.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/164 without vote.

Target for World Food Programme pledges
for the period 1989-1990

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 2095(XX) of 20 December 1965 to the effect that the World Food Programme is to be reviewed before each pledging conference,

Recalling also the provisions of paragraph 4 of its resolution 40/176 of 17 December 1985 specifying that, subject to the review mentioned above, the next pledging conference should be convened at the latest early in 1988, at which time Governments and appropriate donor organizations should be invited to pledge contributions for the period 1989-1990, with a view to reaching such a target as may then be recommended by the General Assembly and by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Noting that the review of the Programme was undertaken by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme at its twenty-third session and by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1987,

Having considered Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/91 of 9 July 1987, and the recommendations of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes,

Recognizing the value of multilateral food aid as provided by the World Food Programme since its inception and the necessity for continuing its activity both as a form of capital investment and for meeting emergency food needs,

1. Establishes for the two years 1989 and 1990 a target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme of $1.4 billion, of which not less than one third in the aggregate should be in cash and/or services, and expresses the hope that those resources will be augmented by substantial additional contributions from other sources in recognition of the prospective volume of sound project requests and the capacity of the Programme to operate at a higher level;

2. Urges States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and appropriate donor organizations to make every effort to ensure the full attainment of the target;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to convene a pledging conference for this purpose at United Nations Headquarters early in 1988;

4. Decides that, subject to the review provided for in its resolution 2095(XX), the next pledging conference, at which Governments and appropriate donor organizations should be invited to pledge contributions for 1991 and 1992, with a view to reaching such a target as may then be recommended by the General Assembly and by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, should be convened at the latest early in 1990.

General Assembly resolution 42/164

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/820/Add.1) without vote, 4 November (meeting 28); draft recommended by Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/91 (A/C.2/42/L.14); agenda item 12.

1986 Food Aid Convention

As at 31 December 1987,(6) 11 States (Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Ireland, Japan, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland) were parties to the Food Aid Convention, 1986, which, together with the Wheat Trade Convention, 1986, constituted the International Wheat Agreement, 1986.

REFERENCES

- (1)WFP/CFA:23/22. (2)YUN 1986, p. 594. (3)WFP/CFA:24/14. (4)WFP/CFA:25/16. (5)YUN 1980, p. 691. (6)Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 31 December 1987 (ST/LEG/SER.E/G), Sales No. E.88.V.3.

Chapter XI

Science and technology

Throughout 1987, many United Nations bodies continued to direct their efforts, within the guidelines set by the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, towards strengthening the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries, by mobilizing financial resources, upgrading institutional arrangements, improving the balance of the international flow of technology and restructuring the existing pattern of international scientific and technological relations. On 1 January, the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) was established as a trust fund within the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). UNFSTD functioned as the multilateral funding mechanism for science and technology activities and as a provider of technical advisory services to UNDP in science, technology and energy matters. The United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development continued to make policy recommendations for national and international action.

Consultations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology continued. The General Assembly invited the President of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology and the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) to resolve the outstanding issues in the code (resolution 42/172). Transfer of technology continued to be a focus of operational activities of UNCTAD and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO).

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the main directing and policy-making body, held its ninth session in July/August 1987, focusing on the application of science and technology to combat drought and desertification and the impact of new and emerging areas of science and technology on developing countries. It also discussed guidelines for the harmonization of policies of organizations of the United Nations system and UNFSTD activities. The Economic and Social Council, in a July resolution on a cross-organizational review of the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system and programme analysis in science and technology for development, requested the Committee and other United Nations organizations and bodies to focus on the need to develop practical forms of co-operation in specific areas of science and technology, giving special attention to strengthening the scientific and technological capabilities of developing countries (resolution 1987/79). In December, the Assembly endorsed the Council's resolution and the resolutions and decisions adopted by the Committee (resolution 42/192).

Effective policy and planning advice to the Intergovernmental Committee on all the issues under consideration was provided by the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, which held its seventh session in February.

The Economic and Social Council, in May, called on States to ensure scientific and technological progress for the welfare of their peoples and to contribute towards eliminating economic backwardness and grave social problems in the world (resolution 1987/36).

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: peaceful uses of science and technology. Development policy and international economic co-operation: scientific-technological co-operation. Operational activities for development: technical co-operation among developing countries. Economic assistance: resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa. Regional economic and social activities. Environment: desertification and drought. Human rights: human rights and science and technology.

Development aspects of science and technology

In 1987, the United Nations University (UNU),(1) an autonomous academic institution within the United Nations system, undertook activities dealing with development and technological change. A group of country studies, focusing on third world experience with technology since the 1950s, aimed at identifying policies to facilitate the absorption of modern technology on a self-sustaining basis. A group of economists, cultural anthropologists and sociologists explored ways of separating the benefits of technological change from the social and cultural disruption which often accompanied it.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1987, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/36 without vote.

Use of science and technology in the interest of social and economic development

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is an important factor in the social and economic development of human society,

Reaffirming the objectives of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, by which States are called upon to aim for an equitable sharing of scientific and technological advances by developed and developing countries and a steady increase in the use of science and technology for the benefit of the social development of society, as well as the intensification of international co-operation in this field,

Reaffirming also the provisions of the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3384(XXX) of 10 November 1975, by which all States were called upon to promote international co-operation to ensure that the results of scientific and technological developments are used in the interests of strengthening international peace and security, freedom and independence, and also for the purpose of the economic and social development of peoples and the realization of human rights and freedoms in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Considering that the implementation of the above-mentioned declarations will contribute towards promoting the social and economic development of peoples and international co-operation in the interest of scientific and technological progress and towards strengthening peace,

Emphasizing that international co-operation of States for the promotion of scientific and technological progress is in the interest of the social and economic development of all peoples and can contribute to development and the promotion of peace,

Noting that the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development is to be held in New York from 24 August to 11 September 1987,

Convinced that, at a time of rapid scientific and technological progress, the resources of humankind and the work of scientists should be used for the peaceful economic, social and cultural development of nations and for the improvement of the living standards of all peoples,

Aware that technical co-operation, including the possibility of transfer of technology, is one of the ways of achieving better social progress in developing countries,

Recalling its resolution 1985/21 of 29 May 1985, in which it specified that the next report on the world social situation should include a more thorough analysis of the impact of new and emerging technologies on socioeconomic conditions, particularly in developing countries, and should analyse the progress made in the international diffusion of appropriate technology and application of technology in improving social conditions in developing countries,

1. Calls upon all States to promote co-operation to ensure scientific and technological progress for the welfare of their peoples, and of all humankind, as well as their social and economic development, and to contribute towards eliminating economic backwardness and grave social problems in the world, such as hunger, illiteracy, homelessness, unemployment and inadequate health protection;

2. Stresses the necessity of using scientific and technological progress for the implementation of the fundamental human rights in their entirety, including political, economic, social and cultural rights;

3. Urges all States to make every effort to utilize scientific and technological achievements for the promotion of peaceful social and economic development, and to prevent their misuse to the detriment of peoples;

4. Requests the Commission for Social Development to consider the use of science and technology in the interest of social development in connection with its review of the world social situation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/36

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action

In-depth examination of pre-selected substantive subjects was a major activity in 1987, aimed at implementing the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development.⁽²⁾ With the aim of promoting a more effective exchange of experience, the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development at its 1987 session undertook a comprehensive analysis of the application of science and technology to combat drought, desertification and other natural disasters, and the impact of new and emerging areas of science and technology on developing countries.

In its discussions, the Committee emphasized the need to apply the resources of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development (see p. 601) more effectively, primarily to the process of endogenous capacity-building for developing countries, the central theme of the Vienna Programme.

Strengthening capacities of developing countries

In a May 1987 report to the Intergovernmental Committee,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the Centre for science and technology had placed major emphasis on endogenous scientific and technological capacity-building in developing countries. He noted that, pursuant to a 1986 Intergovernmental Committee resolution,⁽⁴⁾ the Centre had accorded high priority to a pilot programme developed by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, which envisaged entrusting national institutions with undertaking a detailed study on a country's development objectives and the role played by science and technology in achieving them. In addition, the Centre had sought the financial support of potential donors to implement the programme in several countries. An international seminar on the promotion of technological development in small and medium-sized enterprises (Guangzhou, China, November), organized by the Centre, examined the factors that determined the success and failure of policies necessary for inducing technical change in those enterprises.

According to the UNDP Administrator,⁽⁵⁾ a strategy for science and technology within UNDP for endogenous capacity-building involved: formulating national science and technology strategies; introducing new technologies and upgrading traditional ones; providing access to expertise needed to acquire and adapt advanced technologies; improving commercial utilization and management of research; and strengthening the establishment and use of relevant scientific and technological information systems.

On 7 August 1987,⁽⁶⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee recommended that, pending its consideration in 1989 of UNFSTD policy and priority activities, the Fund should accord priority to pilot projects on the endogenous capacity-building of developing countries, bearing in mind the special needs of the least developed countries (for more details on the Fund, see p. 599).

The ACC Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives, at its September 1987 session, ⁽⁷⁾ emphasized the need to focus on endogenous capacity-building in developing countries to bring science and technology into the mainstream of economic policies.

Science and technology to combat drought and desertification

In a May report to the Intergovernmental Committee,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General stressed the need to reorient efforts, including the application of science and technology, to combat drought, desertification and other natural disasters, and suggested new areas of co-operation. In his conclusions and recommendations, he stated that Governments should strengthen co-operation with meteorologists, hydrologists and agricultural and social scientists. He recommended that opportunities be provided for joint research and the exchange of information among experts dealing with similar physical and socio-economic conditions. Research should follow a regional, national or site-specific approach, rather than a global one. The Secretary-General emphasized that research plans should take into account traditional systems used by local people. Regarding drought-prone areas, he observed that support systems, such as seed banks, should be improved (see p. 701).

Taking note of the Secretary-General's conclusions and recommendations, the Intergovernmental Committee, in a 7 August resolution,⁽⁹⁾ asked him to supplement his report by providing, in 1989, more details on scientific and technological research, identifying, in co-operation with the countries concerned, the endogenous capacities to be strengthened. It called on Governments, the Centre for science and technology and other United Nations bodies and organizations to accord priority to preparing programmes and projects to enhance scientific and technological capacities in dealing with drought, desertification and other natural disasters, specifically in disseminating information and advice to Governments; promoting exchanges of scientists and technologists; and promoting and formulating scientific research, technological development and training programmes for desertification control. The Committee requested the Secretary-General to facilitate, in consultation with the UNDP Administrator, the financing of such programmes and projects and to examine possibilities for promoting greater co-operation between Member States and within the United Nations system in applying new techniques to combat drought and desertification. It asked the Secretary-General to report in 1989 on the implementation of the resolution.

New and emerging areas of science and technology

In a May 1987 report to the Intergovernmental Committee on the impact of new and emerging areas of science and technology on the development of developing countries, ⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General stated that most developing countries continued to face severe constraints in utilizing and developing technologies such as micro-electronics and informatics, biotechnology and genetic engineering, new materials and new and renewable sources of energy.

Micro-electronics and informatics - computers, telecommunications and related systems-could reduce the advantage of cheap labour and cause job displacement and skill obsolescence; at the same time, those areas might be essential to maintain and develop international competitive capability. Developments in biotechnology and genetic engineering provided enormous potential for developing countries, particularly in food and agriculture, pharmaceuticals, human and animal health care and other areas, but would require substantial reorientation in education, including specialized training and research programmes. Technological advances in new basic materials, such as the replacement of copper wire by fibre optics in communications, were likely to affect developing countries because of the displacement of existing commodities exported from those countries and the changing competitive conditions arising from the development and use of new composites, alloys and polymers. The use of particular new and renewable sources of energy depended mainly on country conditions. Mini-hydropower generation, biomass, solar energy, nuclear power and geothermal, wind and ocean energy were of great relevance to developing countries requiring diversified energy bases and a consumption mix of various energy sources.

The Secretary-General stated that major technological developments required technology assessment and forecasting. He emphasized the need to make developing countries aware of the implications of new and emerging areas of science and technology through impact studies, and to concentrate on technology assessment and planning.

In 1987, UNU's programme on scientific and technological information included a project on microprocessor technology aimed at strengthening the capacity of scholars and institutions in developing countries to use computers and design new applications for their specific needs.⁽¹⁾ The project's advisory body reviewed and assessed project activities (Bangkok, Thailand, May). Under the project, UNU participated in workshops and assisted a microprocessor support unit at the Computer Science Centre at the University of Yaoundé, Cameroon; UNU also assisted in setting up a similar unit at Addis Ababa University, Ethiopia. Research areas included the development of specific instrumentation for processing agricultural products (University of Malaysia, Kuala Lumpur) and computerized systems for rural health services (University of Malaysia and the Asian Institute of Technology, Bangkok). UNU provided equipment for microprocessor training and research to the Indian Institute of Technology (Bombay, India). The Scientific Instrumentation Laboratory at the Universidad de Antioquia (Medellín, Colombia), the focal point for the project's activities in Latin America, received equipment and staff training. A UNU study tour for two Brazilian professors to India and Thailand focused on promoting South-South co-operation. A project on distance learning, a mechanism for extending the reach of educational systems, included a computerized data base containing information on more than 500 distance-teaching institutions and 800 programmes. A video network assisted uneducated people in using videotape as a development tool.

On 7 August 1987,⁽¹¹⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee requested the Centre for science and technology, in co-operation with interested Member States, UNFSTD, through the ACC Task Force, and other specialized United Nations bodies, to identify, prepare and develop new co-operative programmes and projects and further develop existing ones, aimed at endogenous capacity-building in the new and emerging areas. It requested the Secretary-General to consider activities on the new and emerging areas as a priority in the Centre's work programme and to harmonize those activities with concerned United Nations bodies. The Committee also requested the Secretary-General to prepare for its consideration in 1989 a two-part report: the first part would be a comprehensive, in-depth analysis, drawing on the work and expertise of other international organizations and bodies, on the current and prospective impact of the new and emerging areas on global development, especially the development of developing countries; the second part would be a synthesis, elaborating on the interrelationships between the new and emerging areas, growth and development. The Committee stated that the report should provide input into bringing science and technology into the mainstream of economic and social thinking in the United Nations. It further requested the Secretary-General to report in 1989 on the implementation of this resolution and subsequent follow-up action.

Tenth anniversary of the Vienna Programme of Action

The Intergovernmental Committee, on 7 August 1987,⁽¹²⁾ recommended that the General Assembly observe in 1989, at a commemorative plenary meeting, the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Vienna Programme of Action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 42/192 without vote.

Tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the continuing importance of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development in providing comprehensive guidance for the work of the United Nations system in the field of science and technology for development,

Having considered the report of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development on its ninth session,

Noting that 1989 will mark the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, and taking note of the recommendation of the Intergovernmental Committee that the General Assembly observe the anniversary at its forty-fourth session, at a commemorative plenary meeting,

Recalling that the Intergovernmental Committee, at its tenth session, will carry out an end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action,

Conscious of the need to enhance the endogenous scientific and technological capabilities of the developing countries, and aware of the impact of new and emerging areas of science and technology on the development of the developing countries,

Bearing in mind that the multi-faceted preparation of the end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action constitutes a challenge and an opportunity to contribute to a forward-looking strategy for incorporating science and technology in the development process,

1. Endorses the resolutions and decisions adopted by the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development at its ninth session;

2. Also endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/79 of 8 July 1987;

3. Emphasizes the need for careful and comprehensive preparation of the end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, in 1989, taking into account the important role that science and technology play in the development process, in particular in developing countries;

4. Reaffirms the crucial role of the United Nations in promoting and catalysing international co-operation in the field of science and technology for development, in particular in developing countries, and in helping solve global scientific and technological problems;

5. Decides to observe at its forty-fourth session, at a commemorative plenary meeting, the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, and encourages the participation of distinguished professionals in the field of science and technology;

6. Also decides that, in the light of the importance and priority accorded to science and technology for development, the general debate on the question will be conducted at its forty-fourth session in plenary meeting.

General Assembly resolution 42/192

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.8) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.70), orally revised, based on informal consultations on drafts by German Democratic Republic and Ukrainian SSR (A/C.2/42/L.31) and by Guatemala for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.43); agenda item 82 (h).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 27, 28, 43; plenary 96.

End-of-decade review

On 7 August 1987,⁽¹²⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee decided to devote its entire 1989 session to an end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action. The Committee requested the Secretary-General to submit to that session a report on implementation of the Programme in the context of the review, including an account of the progress and constraints encountered by the United Nations system. It requested the Advisory Committee and its task forces to assist the Secretary-General in preparing his report and to provide views on possible future orientations of science and technology for development. The Committee invited Member States to prepare reports on their experiences and any constraints encountered in mobilizing science and technology for development in the implementation of the Programme, as well as on their priority areas for bilateral and multilateral co-operation, and to submit their reports to the Centre for science and technology before the end of April 1988. It asked the Centre to encourage the participation of national focal points (see p. 601) in preparing those reports and to make suggestions on their format and the areas to be covered in them. It recommended that the General Assembly authorize the Advisory Committee to convene a maximum of four ad hoc meetings during 1988 and 1989, on the understanding that no more than two meetings would be held each year and that each meeting would last no longer than one week.

Co-ordination and harmonization

Cross-organizational review and programme analysis

Responding to a 1986 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General, in April 1987,⁽¹⁴⁾ submitted a report on the cross-organizational review of the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system and programme analysis in the area of science and technology for development. The report, which was to be reviewed by the Council and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), focused on the endogenous capacity-building of developing countries. It centred on activities undertaken during 1984-1985, since financial uncertainties had cast some doubt on planned programme activities for 1986-1987. Thirty-one United Nations bodies and organizations had reported activities during that period. A total of 1,716 activities were identified for an estimated cost of some $1,116 million.

The report concluded that, although many activities were undertaken, co-operation was not widespread. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council and CPC might wish to recommend that the Intergovernmental Committee: balance its broad policy role by indicating specific priorities more amenable to follow-up action; improve communication with other governing bodies of the United Nations system; exercise its function more vigorously in harmonizing science and technology policy; recommend that the 1990-1995 medium-term plans focus on programmable goals and targets; balance its broad policy considerations with a more focused and pragmatic approach when undertaking the end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action; provide guidance to harmonize the approaches of United Nations organizations in the area of science and technology policies; recommend the development of guidelines to define activities addressing endogenous capacity-building; and further consider a 1984 proposal to establish a data base on activities of the United Nations system in science and technology for development.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Secretary-General stated that CPC might wish to recommend that intensive prior consultations on 1990-1995 medium-term plans and 1990-1991 programme budgets take place before those plans and budgets were completed and that programme concerns be included regularly in the ACC Task Force agenda.

Also in April,⁽¹⁶⁾ CPC endorsed the Secretary-General's first five recommendations to the Intergovernmental Committee and the specific recommendation to CPC on 1990-1995 medium-term plans and 1990-1991 programme budgets. It expressed disappointment that the Intergovernmental Committee, owing to various circumstances, had been unable to fulfil the co-ordinating role assigned to it under the Vienna Programme. In spite of the existence of the ACC Task Force, co-ordination still needed improvement. CPC recommended that science and technology activities should focus on promoting practical co-operation in specific areas, with special attention to strengthening the capabilities of developing countries and to building their endogenous capacities.

By resolution 42/215, the General Assembly endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of CPC.

Policy guidelines

In a June 1987 report to the Intergovernmental Committee on policy guidelines for the harmonization of science and technology activities of the organizations of the United Nations system,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General advocated guidelines comprising broad overall objectives, standardized programme classification for use in medium-term plans, guidelines for selected fields such as policy-making and planning, and enhanced co-operation at the country level. Co-ordination, he said, should involve impact assessment, the results of which should be used in formulating programmes such as UNDP country programmes. The broad objectives of the United Nations system might be to: assist in developing Member States' national scientific and technological capacities; assist in economic, social and cultural development; promote international co-operation in science and technology; optimize United Nations resources for science and technology; and promote global problem solving and access to and dissemination of information.

Standardized programme classification might be based on the eight major programme areas of the operational plan for the implementation of the Vienna Programme. Two of those programme areas - "science and technology policies and plans" and "choice, acquisition and transfer of technology" - should be considered priorities for co-ordination. Concerning the focus of harmonization and co-ordination of science and technology activities in the United Nations system, the Secretary-General proposed that the Intergovernmental Committee endorse a concept based on synergism and complementarity in responding to the needs of Member States. The formulation, adaptation and implementation of the guidelines could be greatly facilitated if relevant intergovernmental organs other than the Committee were actively involved. The Secretary-General proposed that the report, after it was revised in accordance with the Committee's decisions, should be referred to the ACC Task Force and submitted to some of the intergovernmental bodies dealing with science and technology for their comments and guidance.

In its annual overview report for 1987,⁽¹⁹⁾ ACC stated that the Secretary-General's report represented a major effort to bring about greater coherence, synergism and complementarity in the overall objectives and approaches among the organizations of the United Nations system, as well as to shift the focus more towards concrete issues and to the specific conditions of individual countries.

The Intergovernmental Committee, on 7 August,⁽²⁰⁾ welcomed the ideas contained in the Secretary-General's report and invited other United Nations intergovernmental bodies to comment on it. It requested the Secretary-General, together with the ACC Task Force, to revise the report in the light of: proposals on the cross-organizational review of the medium-term plans and programme analysis made by CPC (see above) and contained in an Economic and Social Council resolution (see below); views expressed during the Committee's 1987 session; comments made by other intergovernmental bodies; and results obtained from national pilot studies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, adopted resolution 1987/79 without vote.

Cross-organizational review of the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system and programme analysis in the area of science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the cross-organizational review of the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system and programme analysis in the area of science and technology for development and part one of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on its twenty-seventh session,

1. Invites the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development to give due consideration at its ninth session to the cross-organizational review of the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system and programme analysis in the area of science and technology for development, as well as to the assessment and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

2. Urges the Intergovernmental Committee to exercise the co-ordinating role assigned to it under the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and by the General Assembly in resolution 34/218 of 19 December 1979 and to consider co-ordination questions at each of its sessions;

3. Decides to strengthen its co-ordinating function in the field of science and technology to assist the organizations and organs of the United Nations system in harmonizing their efforts, taking into account the need to avoid overlap and duplication;

4. Also decides that the discharge of its functions with regard to co-ordination in the field of science and technology should be linked to its consideration of the substantive issues in that field;

5. Requests the Intergovernmental Committee and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, to focus their activities in the field of science and technology on the need to develop practical forms of co-operation in specific areas, giving special attention to strengthening the scientific and technological capabilities of developing countries and taking note of the discussion at the second regular session of 1987 of the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/79

8 July 1987 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1987/128) without vote, 3 July (meeting 13); 2-nation draft (E/1987/C.3/L.7), orally revised; agenda item 15.

Sponsors: German Democratic Republic, USSR.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 42/192, the General Assembly endorsed Council resolution 1987/79.

Unresolved issues

Pursuant to a 1986 Intergovernmental Committee request,(21) the Secretary-General, in May 1987,(22) reported on issues left unresolved by the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development in 1979.(23) Several of the unresolved issues were related to or covered by issues under negotiation in the proposed codes of conduct on technology transfer (see p. 603) and transnational corporations (see p. 507), as well as by issues being negotiated for a revision of the 1883 Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; the status of the negotiations was periodically reported to the Committee. The Secretary-General noted that little progress had been made in the negotiations on those three international agreements. The issues not directly covered by them were identified and grouped into three broad categories. The first group comprised issues relating to scientific and technological information and had been discussed by the Committee in 1985.(24) The second group was made up of issues relating to financial arrangements, an area that the Committee had considered in the context of the mobilization of resources for science and technology for development and in discussions on UNFSTD. The third group consisted of issues never examined by the Committee. A complete list of the unresolved issues was annexed to the report.

Taking note of the Secretary-General's report and considering that little progress had been made on some of the unresolved issues, the Intergovernmental Committee, on 7 August 1987,(25) requested the Secretary-General to monitor developments on those issues and to report in 1989.

REFERENCES

- (1)A/43/31. (2)YUN 1979, p. 636. (3)A/CN.11/77. (4)YUN 1986, P. 597. (5)DP/1988/47. (6)A/42/37 (res. 5(IX)). (7)ACC/1987/14. (8)A/CN.11/79. (9)A/42/37 (res. 2(IX)). (10)A/CN.11/80. (11)A/42/37 (res. 3(IX)). (12)Ibid. (res. 1(IX)). (13)YUN 1986, p. 603, ESC dec. 1986/110, 7 Feb. 1986. (14)E/1987/51. (15)YUN 1984, p. 683. (16)A/42/16. (17)A/CN.11/84. (18)YUN 1986, p. 604. (19)E/1988/42. (20)A/42/37 (res. 4(IX)). (21)YUN 1986, p. 599. (22)A/CN.11/83. (23)YUN 1979, p. 633. (24)YUN 1985, p. 709. (25)A/42/37 (dec. 1(IX)).

Financial resources for science and technology

Resource mobilization

Pursuant to the Intergovernmental Committee's 1986 consideration of the mobilization of financial resources for science and technology in developing countries,(1) the Secretary-General submitted in June 1987 a report on the subject.(2) He stressed that the technological dependence of developing countries could be eased only through a long-term strategic approach, including national and international efforts and explicit financial resources. He pointed out that, although the United Nations system had channelled significant resources into developing countries in support of science and technology, there was a need to focus those resources to create and strengthen endogenous scientific and technological capacities. The General Assembly's 1986 decision(3) to terminate the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development and es-establish the Fund (see below) pointed to the need to strengthen the structure of financing so that funds could become available from a variety of national, regional and international sources. The Secretary-General noted that the Fund, a facility within UNDP, had assumed new responsibilities, such as providing technical support to countries and UNDP field offices and assisting in co-ordinating inputs from UNDP, other multilateral funding sources and donor Governments.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By resolution 1987/67, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to consider making proposals to the General Assembly that would be relevant to an international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa.

UN Fund for Science and Technology for Development

On 1 January 1987, the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development, a trust fund within UNDP, became operational. Its main responsibilities were to help finance, design and implement activities to strengthen the endogenous scientific and technological capacities of developing countries and strengthen inter-country co-operation; collaborate with multilateral and bilateral programmes and non-governmental entities to support national capacity-building efforts in developing countries; assist in mobilizing financial and other resources; and serve as a focal point for science and technology within UNDP.

As requested by the UNDP Governing Council in 1986,(4) the UNDP Administrator, in an April 1987 report,(5) described the Fund's organizational structure, staffing and 1988-1989 budget. The UNDP Energy Office and Account were brought under the Fund's management, with the Account remaining a separate funding mechanism (see also p. 577). UNFSTD also had management responsibilities for two volunteer services to developing countries - the short-term advisory services and the transfer of knowledge through expatriate nationals (TOKTEN) (see p. 605). Within that structure, the Fund would focus on programme operations and advisory services. Programme operations would: provide support to countries/UNDP field offices in identifying, developing and negotiating science, technology and energy-related projects for possible funding; formulate and appraise project proposals; monitor the implementation of projects; maintain liaison on field operations with host Governments, UNDP resident representatives and executing agencies; and ensure co-ordination with other UNDP bureaux at headquarters, donor Governments and other concerned organizations. The advisory services programme would assist in providing technical inputs in the programming and implementation of UNDP-funded science, technology and energy projects, and give greater coherence to those areas in overall development efforts. As agreed to by the Assembly in 1986,(3) the Administrator would, when identifying projects to be financed from the Fund, take into account the Intergovernmental Committee's guidance on policies and priorities.

Approximately one half the number of staff authorized for science, technology and energy functions in 1986 was planned for the 1988-1989 biennium, the cost of which was estimated at $1.2 million annually. The 1988-1989 budget was estimated at $3.2 million.

Co-operative arrangements with agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, the Administrator stated, would continue through bilateral working arrangements and the co-ordinating mechanism of ACC. UNFSTD was establishing contacts with scientific and technical bodies, such as research institutes and laboratories, professional and technical societies and private sources of such knowledge.

The Administrator recommended that the Fund might focus on: formulating science policies, policy instruments and plans to strengthen endogenous capacities, particularly in the least developed and small island countries; enhancing knowledge to upgrade traditional technologies to meet the special needs of rural communities and disadvantaged groups; providing access to expertise needed to acquire and adapt selected advanced technologies, where appropriate; improving the management of scientific research and development and its commercial utilization; and strengthening relevant scientific and technological information systems and formulating information policy. In addressing those areas, emphasis would be placed on practical training programmes or technical workshops, preferably in developing countries, with UNDP supplementing inputs.

In May 1987,(6) the Administrator submitted a report to the Intergovernmental Committee to assist it in considering the policy guidelines and priorities it was to provide to the Fund. He again described the Fund's organizational structure and suggested possible areas of concentration for applying technology to developing countries.

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(3) the Secretary-General, in a June 1987 report to the Intergovernmental Committee,(7) discussed the working relationship established between the Fund and the Centre for science and technology. He stated that they would co-operate on the conceptualization, appraisal and evaluation of projects to be funded by UNFSTD. They would also co-operate in formulating technical inputs requested by UNDP on science- and technology-related activities, implementing the Vienna Programme of Action and developing project portfolios emphasizing endogenous capacity-building in developing countries. As to the Advance Technology Alert System - an experimental programme established in 1984 to alert developing countries to the positive and negative implications of new technologies(8)- and projects related to science and technology information, technology for agricultural development, drought and desertification, the impact of advanced technologies and other substantive themes that might be defined by the Intergovernmental Committee, the Fund and the Centre would co-operate closely. The two would also work together to seek extrabudgetary funds to implement jointly developed projects. As to the Advisory Committee, the Fund and the Centre would jointly bring to its attention programme options and directions for mobilizing and utilizing resources.

UNDP action. On 18 June 1987,(9) the UNDP Governing Council took note of the organizational arrangements made by the Administrator for the establishment of UNFSTD and of the objectives and functions assigned to the merged programmes. The Council requested the Administrator to inform it in 1988 of the extent to which the new arrangements had enhanced UNDP's work on science, technology and energy, and urged Governments to support the Fund and the Energy Account at annual pledging conferences and through individual co-financing arrangements and other means of co-operation.

Intergovernmental Committee action. The Intergovernmental Committee, on 7 August,(10) recommended that, pending its further consideration of the Fund's policy and priority activities in 1989, UNFSTD accord priority to supporting pilot projects on endogenous capability-building of developing countries, bearing in mind the special needs of the least developed countries, and activities related to the themes discussed by the Committee. It recommended that the working relationship between the Fund and the Centre be close, interacting on a daily basis, and include joint appraisal and review of programmes and projects to ensure compliance with the policy guidance and priorities recommended by the Committee. The Committee requested the Fund and the Centre to prepare jointly a report, for the Committee's review in 1989, setting out comprehensive proposals, taking into account existing and potential resources of the Fund and their co-operative arrangements. It asked all Governments to contribute generously to UNFSTD and to support it through co-financing arrangements, contributions in kind and other means of co-operation.

During its first year in operation, total expenditures of UNFSTD amounted to $2977,882 and income to $1,219,202. Voluntary contributions from Governments amounted to $907,014, almost the same as those to the Financing System in 1986. At $6.5 million, the Fund's balance at the end of 1987 was almost halved from that of the 1986 Financing System.

Operational activities

During its transitional year of operations, the Fund provided technical advisory services to UNDP-funded science and technology projects and small strategic amounts of seed money to initiate high-risk activities, which could be followed up by UNDP or other multilateral and bilateral sources.(11) In addition, it developed science and technology projects for special-purpose trust funds and management services.

In 1987, under technical advisory services, the Fund responded to more than 50 requests from UNDP regional bureaux and field offices. In the area of science and technology policy and planning, it reviewed national projects in Ethiopia, Kenya and the Republic of Korea and regional projects in Africa, Asia and the Caribbean, designed to integrate science and technology activities more fully with national and regional development plans. Assistance was provided to research and demonstration capabilities in Albania, Guyana and Nigeria. In the Caribbean, assistance was provided to strengthen industry and the dissemination of commercially viable research findings; similar projects were reviewed for countries in Africa and Asia. The Fund reviewed, appraised and reformulated new and emerging advanced technology projects dealing with plant biotechnology, the development of vaccines for tropical diseases, composite materials and industrial automation for Bulgaria, China, India and the Republic of Korea. It conducted a survey to assess the likely growth in demand for UNDP assistance in high-technology fields.

The Technological Information Pilot System - linking 10 developing countries through existing telecommunication techniques to exchange technology information - carried out in November 1987 a users' survey, which showed that information flows started in May were useful in generating business inquiries about the acquisition of products and processes. Under a new initiative, UNFSTD examined the feasibility of adapting the business incubator modality-a facility which provided management guidance and shared services to develop small companies-to set up technology-related enterprises in China, Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon and Trinidad and Tobago. In facilitating access to new and emerging technologies, the Fund assisted Brazil in completing high-quality carbon fibre adaptation and development using local material. In China, UNFSTD supported the establishment of the National Food Technology and Quality Centre, which carried out research aimed at improving food quality control and packaging, as well as diet through an increased intake of soya bean derivatives. The Fund also supported a computer-based management training project in China.

REFERENCE

(1)YUN 1986, p. 599. (2)A/CN.11/86. (3)YUN 1986, p. 601, GA res. 41/183, 8 Dec. 1986. (4)Ibid., p. 600. (5)DP/1987/49. (6)A/CN.11/82. (7)A/CN.11/86. (8)YUN 1984, p. 682. (9)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/39). (10)A/42/37 (res. 5(IX)). (11)DP/1988/47.

Institutional arrangements

Intergovernmental Committee

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development held its ninth session in New York from 27 July to 7 August 1987.⁽¹⁾ It adopted five resolutions on: science and technology to combat drought, desertification and other natural disasters (see p. 594); new and emerging areas of science and technology for development (see p. 595); activities of the Centre for science and technology (see below); guidelines for the harmonization of activities of the United Nations system in science and technology for development (see p. 597); and policy guidance and priority for UNFSTD activities (see p. 600).

By decision 1987/192 of 1 October 1987, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Intergovernmental Committee's report. ⁽¹⁾

Advisory Committee

The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, established to provide policy and planning advice to the Intergovernmental Committee, held its seventh session at Petropolis, Brazil, from 2 to 9 February 1987.⁽²⁾ It focused on endogenous capacity-building in science and technology, including the role of women, factors leading to or impeding the process of innovation in developing countries and the capacity of those countries to select, procure, maintain and repair scientific equipment; the impact of new and emerging areas of science and technology on developing countries; drought and desertification; the end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action; and the work programme of the Centre for science and technology

The Advisory Committee suggested that it focus on: selected policy-related topics; assisting developing countries in policy formulation; supporting the harmonization of science- and technology-related activities in the United Nations system; improving the visibility of the Vienna Programme and its instruments; strengthening its links to scientific communities; and achieving a shift from general to specific in its work orientation and making it relevant to the implementation needs of Member States and regions. The Committee had selected three major parameters for its work: endogenous capacity-building, innovation in the context of developing countries, and national and international resource flows. It also had established task forces in each of those parameters.

Centre for science and technology

Serving as the secretariat for the Intergovernmental Committee, the Advisory Committee and the ACC Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, the Centre for Science and Technology for Development continued in 1987 to provide support for the implementation of the Vienna Programme.

The Centre continued its efforts to establish and maintain an up-to-date registry of national focal points for science and technology for development. As requested by the Intergovernmental Committee in 1982,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General presented a list of national focal points updated as at July 1987⁽⁴⁾ and including additional information since March 1983,⁽⁵⁾ when the initial registry had been compiled. The registry listed the 159 Member States of the United Nations and the five non-member States maintaining permanent observer missions at Headquarters (Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Holy See, Monaco, Republic of Korea, Switzerland).

In a May report,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General described the current and prospective activities of the Centre. Pursuant to a 1986 Intergovernmental Committee request,⁽⁷⁾ the activities of the Centre underwent significant reorientation in 1987. With a view to implementing effectively the Vienna Programme, major emphasis was placed on activities designed to have substantial impact on scientific and technological development at the national and regional levels. The Committee's recommendations were translated into programmes dealing with: information systems for science and technology; agricultural development and food security; drought and desertification; new and emerging technologies; endogenous capacity-building; the Advance Technology Alert System (ATAS); co-ordinating and harmonizing science and technology activities within the United Nations system; bringing science and technology into the mainstream of economic and social thinking in the United Nations; scientific and technological innovation in developing countries; and preparations for the end-of-decade review of the Vienna Programme. The Centre would continue to focus on those activities during the 1988-1989 biennium.

Taking note of the Secretary-General's report, the Intergovernmental Committee, on 7 August,(8) recommended that, in addition to its tasks related to the end-of-decade review and support for the Advisory Committee, the Centre should have the following overall priorities in 1988-1989: studies on helping Member States identify a portfolio of country-specific activities in science and technology for development to strengthen their endogenous capacities; the development of ATAS to identify and formulate country, regional and multilateral activities in new and emerging areas of science and technology; promotion of the development of infrastructure to facilitate the adaptation, application, commercialization, diffusion and absorption of technological innovations; and the implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women in science and technology for development (see p. 830). The Committee further recommended that those activities be carried out through: co-ordinated and harmonized approaches to science and technology for development through close consultation with United Nations bodies and organizations concerned and the ACC Task Force; the provision of information and referral services to interested Member States on sources of advice for effective development of national information systems; and collaboration, via national focal points, with the scientific community, non-governmental organizations and the media.

REFERENCES

- (1)A/42/37 & Corr.1. (2)A/CN.11/78. (3)YUN 1982, p. 936. (4)A/CN.11/INF/10 & Corr.1. (5)YUN 1983, p. 712. (6)A/CN.11/77. (7)YUN 1986, p. 603. (8)A/42/37 (res. 1(IX)).

PUBLICATIONS

ATAS Bulletin, No. 4, Technology Assessment and Development (ST/STD/ATAS/4), Sales No. E.87.II.A.1. ATAS Bulletin, No. 5, Materials Technology and Development (ST/STD/ATAS/5), Sales No. E.87.II.A.2.

Technology transfer

Questions related to the transfer of technology continued to be dealt with by several United Nations bodies throughout 1987, particularly UNCTAD, UNDP, UNIDO and UNU.

UNCTAD activities. A major emphasis in the work of the UNCTAD secretariat in 1987, described in a report to the Trade and Development Board,(1) concerned action pursuant to a 1986 resolution of the Committee on Transfer of Technology on various aspects of technology transfer and development. (2)

The secretariat conducted research on technology issues in specific sectors and areas of critical importance to developing countries, such as capital goods and industrial machinery, energy, food processing and the role of research and development institutes in technological innovation. Regarding new and emerging technologies, studies focused on ways in which developing countries could benefit from them or overcome their possible negative effects. Under legal policies, the secretariat analysed the impact of technological and commercial changes on legislation and their implications for the transfer of technology and prepared periodic reports on laws and regulations. In December, it convened an informal meeting on issues relating to the evolving legal structure for the development and transfer of technology as well as those arising from new trends in the protection of technological assets. The secretariat carried out studies on the promotion and encouragement of technological innovation, paying particular attention to assessing the role of research and development activities and to industrial property protection.

The Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology (ASTT), the institutional basis of UNCTAD for technical and operational assistance in the field of technology, accorded priority to human resources development and training programmes in 1987. An interregional symposium on co-operation among developing countries' engineering and consultancy organizations for technology transfer (New Delhi, India, 20-25 April) was organized jointly by UNCTAD, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the International Association of State Trading Organizations of Developing Countries and the International Centre for Public Enterprises of Developing Countries. At the regional level, a seminar on technology transfer and development (Helsinki, Finland, 4-20 May) was intended to contribute to the development of skills of personnel from 12 developing countries in Asia. The seminar was held in co-operation with the Helsinki School of Economics and financed by Finland. A regional seminar on technology and development perspectives in Latin America (Lima, Peru, 17 November-3 December) was attended by 27 high-level officials from financing and development organizations.

ASTT assisted Ghana and Zimbabwe in developing further their institutional infrastructure. A mission to Argentina provided support in areas relating to policies dealing with trade in new technologies.

UNCTAD continued to intensify its co-operation with other United Nations organizations and participated in the ACC Task Force on Science and Technology for Development.

In its Trade and Development Report, 1987,(3) UNCTAD examined trends in the evolution of international technology flows since the 1960s, with particular reference to their incidence and impact on developing countries during the 1980s. One of the report's main conclusions was that, while the sources and forms of technology transfer were becoming diversified, the international flow of technology to developing countries had been declining.

UNDP activities. UNDP's science and technology programme focused on technology transfer and export promotion. In Indonesia, UNDP supported a project to modify and adapt foreign-built machinery to local conditions. Adaptation of a foreign-designed food processor and opto-electronic grain selector was expected to permit small farmers to process and standardize their agricultural products, thus enabling them to compete in urban and international markets. Other activities ranged from studies that analysed export capabilities and markets to assistance in improving the technological capabilities of small and medium-sized industries in order to meet international marketing standards. About 70 per cent of technologies transferred to developing countries moved through the private sector.

UNIDO activities. On 3 July, the Industrial Development Board requested the UNIDO Director-General to submit to it in 1988 a report on UNIDO work relating to development and transfer of technology (For details of UNIDO's activities in this area, see PART TWO, Chapter XVII.)

UNU activities. Under a UNU project for the transfer of scientific knowledge, the Communications Centre for Scientific Knowledge (Madras, India), established in 1984 under UNU auspices, produced simple, illustrated instruction manuals to convey information on health, food and income-generation for distribution in India in local languages.

Communication. In its Plan of Action, the Extraordinary Ministerial Conference of Non-Aligned Countries on South-South Co-operation (Pyongyang, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, 9-13 June)(4) called for the continued co-ordination of national science and technology policies and the development of interregional and intraregional co-operation to facilitate the exchange and transfer of technology. The Conference welcomed a proposal by India to host a conference of experts on new and high technologies during 1988, which would, inter alia, consider the feasibility of establishing a technology pool and arrangements for preferential exchange and sharing of technology among non-aligned and other developing countries.

Draft code of conduct

In response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(5) the UNCTAD Secretary-General reported on progress made in the negotiations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology.(6) The draft consisted of a preamble and nine chapters on: (1) definitions and scope of application; (2) objectives and principles; (3) national regulation of transfer-of-technology transactions; (4) restrictive practices; (5) responsibilities and obligations of parties to transfer-of-technology transactions; (6) special treatment for developing countries; (7) international collaboration; (8) international institutional machinery; and (9) applicable law and settlement of disputes. Most of the issues still outstanding concerned chapters 4 and 9.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General reported that, pursuant to the 1986 resolution, a Consultative Group on a Code of Conduct was set up to deal with outstanding issues. At the Group's first meeting (11-14 May), issues concerning the chapeau of chapter 4, containing the introductory provisions to the subject of restrictive practices in transfer-of-technology transactions, were the main focus of the discussions among regional groups and interested Governments. Divergences continued to prevail among regional groups regarding the manner in which such practices should be treated in an international code. At the second meeting (30 September-2 October), Governments discussed issues outstanding in the preamble and in chapters 1, 5, 8 and 9. On all the issues, except for chapter 9, the positions of Governments appeared to be closer; they continued to hold divergent approaches to the issue of applicable law.

The President of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology and the UNCTAD Secretary-General continued their consultations with interested Governments. The UNCTAD Secretary-General also invited a group of experts to provide their advice on the difficulties encountered in the negotiations.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General concluded that in the light of the status of the negotiations, Governments might consider reconvening the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology; requesting UNCTAD's Committee on Transfer of Technology to keep developments concerning the code under review; or pursuing consultations within UNCTAD to identify solutions to the issues outstanding in chapters 4 and 9 and reporting to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 42/172 without vote.

International code of conduct on the transfer of technology

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/166 of 5 December 1986 on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the consultations held in 1987 relating to the negotiations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology;

2. Notes that the consultations could not be finalized in 1987 and that a number of suggestions were made in the course of the consultations concerning the possible solution to the issues outstanding in the draft code of conduct;

3. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the President of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology to complete their consultations with regional groups and interested Governments with a view to identifying appropriate solutions to the issues outstanding in the draft code of conduct;

4. Further invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session if sufficient progress is made in the consultations referred to in paragraph 3 above, and to recommend, in the light of the consultations, any further action relating to the negotiations on a code of conduct, including the possible reconvening of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology.

General Assembly resolution 42/172

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.1) without vote, 17 November (meeting 39); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.56), based on informal consultations; agenda item 82 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 38, 39; plenary 96.

REFERENCES

(1)TD/B/C.6/147 & Add.1. (2)YUN 1986, p. 605. (3)Trade and Development Report, 1987 (UNCTAD/TDR/7), Sales No. E.87.II.D.7. (4)A/42/411. (5)YUN 1986, p. 607, GA res. 41/166, 5 Dec. 1986. (6)A/42/678.

PUBLICATION

Transitional Corporations and Technology Transfer: Effects and Policy Issues (ST/CTC/86), Sales No. E.87.II.A.4.

Brain drain

In 1987, UNCTAD and UNDP continued to search for solutions to the problem of the outflow of skilled personnel from developing countries, known as the reverse transfer of technology or brain drain.

UNCTAD activities. In response to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a study on the brain drain⁽²⁾ and a related bibliography.⁽³⁾ The study stated that, owing to a scarcity of statistics, it was difficult to draw a complete picture of the migration of skilled personnel from developing countries. The most complete statistics were those of the United States and Canada, the two main countries of destination, which together had admitted about 825,000 such personnel over the past 25 years.

In countries of origin, a lack of educational manpower and planning had resulted in a surplus of high-level professionals and shortage of skills at middle level, thereby creating pressure for the reverse transfer of technology. Other contributing factors included a lack of well-developed scientific and technological infrastructure and career development opportunities, including unattractive working conditions. In countries of immigration, selective policies to control the inflow of skilled personnel from developing countries were dictated by changing manpower needs in various sectors of the economy. In addition, access to postgraduate and other specialized training in developed countries attracted talented people from developing countries, hampering the return to their home countries where specialized jobs were generally lacking. Developing countries pursued regulatory, indigenization and incentive policies to stem the outflow of their skilled personnel. Measures taken by a few developed countries included the adoption of a bilateral approach to immigration control and the provision of aid and technical assistance to strengthen developing countries' institutes. Proposals relating to initiatives to establish an international labour compensatory facility⁽⁴⁾ and international funds for vocational training and manpower resources had been made by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and UNDP. Further efforts were needed, such as monitoring the skilled outflow from developing countries and paying attention to the implications for the brain drain of the diffusion of new and emerging technologies.

The Fourth Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Reverse Transfer of Technology, originally scheduled to be held in August, did not meet in 1987. In October, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board rescheduled the meeting for an unspecified date.⁽⁵⁾

Inter-agency group meeting. The Inter-Agency Group on Reverse Transfer of Technology, established in 1984⁽⁶⁾ to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations system in responding to the needs of the countries concerned, met on 9 and 10 March 1987 at Geneva. The meeting, held under the chairmanship of UNCTAD, was convened in pursuance of a 1985 General Assembly request.⁽¹⁾ The Group's report⁽⁷⁾ summarized information provided by IAEA, ILO, ITU, UNESCO, UPU, UNIDO, UNCTAD, the United Nations Centre on Transitional Corporations and the United Nations Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. In its conclusions, the Group emphasized that its meetings should play a catalytic role in the co-ordination of efforts and stressed that its 1984 conclusions⁽⁶⁾ constituted a framework for co-operation. It noted that UNDP had undertaken joint projects with the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration, an example of steps being taken to improve co-ordination of efforts within the United Nations system.

By decision 42/445 of 11 December 1987, the General Assembly took note of the Group's report.

UNDP activities. UNDP supported a project for TOKTEN, which enabled developing countries to recapture some of the skills and experience they had lost through the brain drain. Since its inception in 1977, the project had funded 1,770 expert voluntary consultancies, of which 342 were completed in 1987. TOKTEN was operational in 25 countries.

REFERENCES

- (1))YUN 1985, p. 720, GA res. 40/191, 17 Dec. 1985.
- (2)TD/B/AC.35/16. (3)TD/B/AC.35/17. (4)YUN 1977, p. 545.
- (5)A/42/15, vol. II (dec. 351(XXXIV)). (6)YUN 1984, p. 694.
- (7)A/42/317.

Chapter XII

Social and cultural development

A greater understanding had emerged of the interrelationship among economic and social problems. the Secretary-General stated in his 1987 report 'on the work of the Organization (see p. 3). Because of that interrelationship, many of those problems could not be successfully dealt with in isolation. The complex requirements of sustained development, on which future conditions of life in both developing and developed countries so heavily depended, had been the subject of intensive pragmatic examination.

In a report on the world social situation in 1987, the Secretary-General discussed recent developments and current issues, with a special focus on Africa. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1987/52, called on Member States to promote economic development and social progress by inter-related policy measures, and, in resolution 1987/39, appealed to the international community to increase assistance to improve the infrastructure necessary for sustained social development in Africa.

The Commission for Social Development held its thirtieth session at Vienna from 23 February to 4 March 1987. On its recommendation, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolutions on social aspects of rural development (1987/40), national policies for families (1987/46) and national experience in promoting the co-operative movement (1987/47).

In addition, the Council adopted resolutions on United Nations work in crime prevention and criminal justice (1987/53), preparations for the eighth United Nations congress on crime (1987/49) and improvement of the work of the Commission for Social Development (1987/50).

Both the Council and the General Assembly adopted resolutions on the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development (1987/38 and 42/48, respectively), national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes (1987/35 and 42/50), protection of and assistance for the family (1987/42 and 42/134), and an Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes (1987/48 and 42/125).

The Assembly also adopted resolutions on the achievement of social justice (42/49), the improvement of social life (42/145) and crime prevention and criminal justice (42/59).

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization continued to promote the return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin, as mandated by the 1970 Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property. The General Assembly requested States parties to the Convention to supply information on its implementation (42/7).

Topics related to this chapter. Development policy and international economic co-operation: economic and social trends and policy; rural development; special economic areas. Health and human resources: disabled persons; the role of national personnel in development. Human rights: popular participation; right to development; rights of migrant workers. Women: women-and-development. Statistics: social and demographic statistics.

Social aspects of development

World social situation

In pursuance of a 1985 Economic and Social Council resolution,(1) the Secretary-General submitted a report(2) on the world social situation 1987, highlighting recent developments and current issues. Such reports had been issued at varying intervals since 1952,(3) serving as the basis of periodic discussions in the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission for Social Development and other forums.

While the 1985 report had underlined the loss of momentum in international co-operative efforts for the development of all nations and groups, the 1987 report stated that the situation had changed somewhat with an increasing realization of the global and interrelated nature of many major social issues. The report considered social progress and international economic issues and trends in addressing some major social issues. Among the economic issues discussed were aggregate levels and distribution of income, changes in the employment situation and in employment policies, social expenditure and agricultural policies. Trends in addressing such questions as international migration, refugees, environment, drug trafficking and abuse, medical research and related ethical problems, the homeless and education were analysed.

Recent years had been marked by developments that would continue to have an impact on the world economy. They included the large disparities in socio-economic performance and policies that had brought about sharply contrasting trends in real incomes and living standards; the increasing interdependency of countries, which meant that the international economic environment had a larger significance in shaping domestic socio-economic conditions; and significant changes in long-standing socio-economic policies throughout the world.

A major change had occurred in the employment situation in many parts of the world; the most striking feature of that change had been a sharp increase in unemployment and underemployment, both in developed market economies and in developing countries. Social expenditure by Governments had been the subject of much debate, which had two main themes: total public sector expenditure and the linkage between social expenditure and the growth of public expenditure. The recent recession had forced many countries to pay increasing attention to agriculture and food policies, though at the global level the food situation appeared favourable.

International migration was becoming a major social issue. Labour migration was increasingly raising social and political problems. The refugee problem was beginning to exceed the capacity of the systems designed to cope with it in the immediate post-war years. The environment had been established as a subject for concern and action, and the problem of drug trafficking and abuse was gaining increasing attention at national and international levels. As medical research progressed, new ethical problems were being raised; guidelines were being sought in genetic engineering and prenatal medicine. The increasing incidence of homelessness affected many millions of people in all parts of the world; in a sense, homelessness demonstrated the weakness, and often the failure, of priority-setting processes. Rapid expansion of education had often crystallized disparities between demand for education and employment opportunities, which had led to longer basic education, the strengthening of science education and expansion of vocational education courses.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1987, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/52 by recorded vote.

World social situation

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1983/8 of 26 May 1983 and 1985/21 of 29 May 1985,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 34/152 of 17 December 1979, 37/54 of 3 December 1982 and 40/100 of 13 December 1985,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further General Assembly resolutions 39/29 of 3 December 1984 on the critical economic situation in Africa and S-13/2 of 1 June 1986 containing the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Recognizing that social progress and development are founded on respect for the dignity and value of the human person,

Bearing in mind that the ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and the fair distribution of the benefits therefrom, and that the pace of development in the developing countries as a whole should be accelerated substantially to enable them to achieve this goal,

Mindful that the existing inequalities and imbalances in the international economic system are widening the gap between developed and developing countries and thereby constitute a major obstacle to the development of the developing countries and adversely affect international relations and the promotion of world peace and security,

Conscious that each country has the sovereign right freely to adopt the economic and social system that it deems the most appropriate and that each Government has a primary role in ensuring the social progress and well-being of its people,

Reaffirming that economic growth must go hand in hand with qualitative and structural changes, the reduction of social and economic disparities and the adoption of measures to ensure the effective participation of all peoples in the preparation and execution of their national policies for economic and social development.

Reaffirming the existence of the interrelationship between peace, disarmament and development and therefore the imperative need to halt the arms race, thereby releasing valuable resources that could be used for the development of the developing countries and could contribute to the well-being and prosperity of all,

Convinced of the necessity rapidly to eradicate colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and all forms of racial discrimination, apartheid, terrorism in all its forms, aggression, foreign occupation and alien domination and all forms of inequality, exploitation and subjugation of peoples, which constitute major obstacles to economic and social progress as well as to the promotion of world peace and security,

Reaffirming that the primary responsibility for their development rests with the developing countries themselves and that the commitment from other countries to support these efforts is of vital importance for achievement of this aim,

1. Notes with deep concern the continuing deterioration of the economic and social situation of the world, in particular of the developing countries, whose position has been further worsened by sharp fluctuations in exchange rates, high real rates of interest, the severe fall in commodity prices, serious deterioration in the terms of trade of developing countries, increased protectionist pressures, the reverse transfer of resources from developing countries, crushing debt burdens, the restrictive adjustment process demanded by financial and development institutions, the decline in official development assistance in real terms and the severe inadequacy of resources experienced by multilateral development and financial institutions;

2. Notes also with deep concern that the economic and social situation in Africa continues to be critical and that it has been exacerbated by the world recession and by famine, drought and desertification;

3. Calls for full implementation of General Assembly resolutions 39/29 on the critical economic situation in Africa and S-13/2 containing the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

4. Notes with great concern the slow progress in the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and in the attainment of the objectives and overall development goals adopted and reaffirmed in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

5. Reaffirms that the social aspects and goals of development are an integral part of overall development and that it is the sovereign right of each country freely to determine and implement appropriate policies for social development within the framework of its development plans and priorities;

6. Emphasizes the importance, for the achievement of social progress, of the establishment of the new international economic order;

7. Reaffirms the urgent need to implement the socio-economic development objectives set out in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, as well as the need to implement the socio-economic objectives of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

8. Emphasizes again that the rapid socio-economic progress of developing countries requires substantially enhanced multilateral and bilateral financial support and advanced technological assistance to national development efforts, rendered within the framework of the development plans of developing countries;

9. Calls upon all Member States to promote economic development and social progress by the formulation and implementation of an interrelated set of policy measures to achieve the goals and objectives established within the framework of national plans and priorities in the fields of employment, education, health, nutrition, housing facilities, environment, crime prevention, the well-being of children, equal opportunities for the disabled and the aged, full participation of youth in the development process and full integration and participation of women in development;

10. Calls upon the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to take measures aimed at improving social conditions and achieving the main objectives set out in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

11. Calls upon Member States to make all efforts to promote the accelerated and complete elimination of such fundamental elements hindering economic and social progress and development as colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, and all forms of racial discrimination, apartheid, terrorism in all its forms, aggression, foreign occupation, alien domination and all forms of inequality and exploitation of peoples, and to take effective measures to lessen international tensions and to halt the arms race and redistribute released resources in order to promote social and economic development;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue monitoring the world social situation in depth on a regular basis and to submit the next full report on the world social situation to the General Assembly in 1989, for consideration at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council and the Commission for Social Development;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda for its first regular session of 1989 the item entitled "World social situation".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/52

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 39-1-12 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98/Add.1) by recorded vote (39-1-12), 22 May (meeting 19); 8-nation draft (E/1987/C.2/L.7), orally amended by Guatemala, for Group of 77; agenda item 18.

Sponsors: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bangladesh, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Haiti, India, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Norway, Spain, United Kingdom.

Speaking before the vote, the United States said it would not vote for a resolution which sought to impose on the world economy a system that would only impede the development of poorer countries; the text implied that the arms race was the main obstacle to economic and social progress and the only source of resources available for redistribution, which was not the case. The United States believed that economic growth would lead to the reduction of disparities, not magnify them. Economic growth could be attained by freedom, especially that which came through the respect of basic human rights.

In explanation of vote, Belgium, on behalf of the European Economic Community, stated that several paragraphs of the resolution gave an unbalanced picture of the world economic situation. It was not correct that no progress had been made in recent years. For various reasons, several paragraphs had been added with no possibility of debate; such an approach was not a useful one.

Critical social situation in Africa

The Secretary-General, in his report on the world social situation,⁽²⁾ focused particularly on Africa. He stated that recent data showed that real gross domestic product per capita had declined in 28 African countries (out of 32 surveyed), and the cumulative decline over the period 1980-1985 exceeded 10 per cent in 16 cases. The African food situation required continued external support and attention to domestic policies, with the aim of increasing production and ensuring adequate food supplies to all sectors of the population. The current world total of refugees numbered about 12 million, with more than 5 million in Africa.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/39 without vote.

Critical social situation in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, which provides the framework for international co-operation in the field of social development,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 39/29 of 3 December 1984 and 40/40 of 2 December 1985, which led to the convening of the thirteenth special session of the General Assembly, devoted to the critical economic situation in Africa, at which the Assembly adopted by consensus the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Alarmed at the acceleration in the deterioration of social conditions in most African countries,

Noting with concern the gravity of the continued acts of violence committed by the racist régime in South Africa against its people, Namibia and neighbouring States, which have resulted in a particularly disquieting social situation in the southern African countries,

Noting that in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990, the Governments of African States reaffirmed their primary responsibility for the economic and social development of their countries, identified areas for priority action, and undertook to mobilize and utilize domestic resources for achievement of their priority objectives,

Reiterating that the African social and economic crisis is a development crisis that concerns the international community as a whole and that greater realization of the rich physical and human potential of the continent is an integral part of a common strategy to promote the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Noting that the prospects for concerted implementation of Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990 are being affected by an unfavourable external economic environment and stagnation in the flow of developmental finance, particularly that of a concessionary nature,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Highlights of the world social situation 1987: recent developments and current issues";

2. Requests the Secretary-General, within the framework of the United Nations system, to continue to pay special attention to the implementation of the social aspects of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

3. Appeals to the international community, the States members of the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to increase their co-operation and assistance to establish or improve the infrastructure necessary for sustained social development in Africa;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, as part of the forthcoming report on the world social situation, a comprehensive annex to the report, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Commission for Africa and the African Development Bank, providing information on the critical social situation in Africa, paying particular attention to the obstacles to the attainment of the objectives contained in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, including the impact of structural adjustment policies on the social situation in Africa, for submission to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session;

5. Decides that the information contained in the above-mentioned annex shall be considered by the Commission at its thirty-first session in the context of its review of the world social situation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/39

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

Social aspects of rural development

On 28 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1987/40 without vote.

Social aspects of rural development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, containing the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, containing the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Concerned at the reversal of the development process in most developing countries, particularly in the rural sectors,

Emphasizing the necessity of intensifying efforts to implement comprehensive rural development programmes to raise the living standards of the rural populations in many countries,

Recognizing that debt-servicing problems constitute a severe and continuing burden that restricts the economic and social development of many developing countries,

Convinced that a major infusion of external resources, effective growth-oriented structural adjustment policies, including effective debt relief, improvement in the terms of trade and an acceleration in the volume of world trade under internationally accepted rules and principles could both speed growth and help reduce poverty and improve living conditions in the developing countries,

1. Agrees that early implementation of the elements for addressing the problems of external indebtedness of developing countries, contained in General Assembly resolution 41/202 of 8 December 1986, could significantly contribute to controlling the serious deterioration in the social situation of the developing countries, particularly in rural areas, which is described in the Supplement to the 1985 Report on the World Social Situation;

2. Invites the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system to incorporate the social dimension of development in their country programmes and to co-ordinate those efforts through the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination;

3. Reacts the Secretary-General, in consultation with Governments and within the framework of General Assembly resolution 41/202, to include in the 1989 report on the world social situation a section on the impact of structural adjustment, including debt, on the social development of developing countries;

4. Calls upon Governments to give special attention to social aspects in their rural development policies and programmes;

5. Invites the regional commissions to give particular attention to the social aspects of rural development;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of holding an interregional seminar on national experience related to the social aspects of rural development, to be financed from extrabudgetary resources;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to give special emphasis in the 1989 report on the world social situation to the social aspects of rural development.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/40

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

Social progress and development

Implementation of the 1969 Declaration

In a January 1987 note,(4) the Secretary-General discussed a draft framework for his report on the implementation of the 1969 Declaration on Social Progress and Development.(5) The report would analyse the relationships between the mandates, strategies and policies of United Nations organs, bodies and organizations and the main provisions of the Declaration. It would be considered by the Commission for Social Development in 1989.

On 4 March 1987,(6) the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's note.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1987/38 without vote.

Twentieth anniversary of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 42/48 below.]

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/38

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1987, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 42/48.

Twentieth anniversary of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, based on the Charter of the United Nations and solemnly proclaimed on 11 December 1969 in its resolution 2542(XXIV) of the same date,

Recalling also its resolutions 2543(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 32/117 of 16 December 1977, 34/59 of 29 November 1979 and 41/142 of 4 December 1986 on the implementation of the Declaration,

Convinced of the continuing need to achieve the full realization of the principles and objectives contained in the Declaration, which will contribute to peaceful and friendly relations between nations,

Noting that 1989 marks the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration,

1. Reaffirms the lasting validity and importance of the principles and objectives contained in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development;

2. Decides to observe in 1989 the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration;

3. Invites all States, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take appropriate measures, such as those set forth in the annex to the present resolution, which are based on the measures recommended by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/150 of 4 December 1986 on the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and to support appropriate activities aimed at encouraging the promotion of human rights and social justice;

4. Invites all States to inform the Secretary-General of their views and comments concerning the impact of the Declaration, since its adoption, on the formulation and implementation of the national policies and measures of their Governments, as well as the way in which the principles, objectives, means and methods set forth in the Declaration are taken into account in their policies, plans and programmes and in their bilateral and multilateral relations in the field of development;

5. Invites all States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views and comments on possible ways and means of increasing the contribution of the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to achieving the full realization of the principles and objectives contained in the Declaration;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to include the information received pursuant to paragraphs 4 and 5 above in the report requested in paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 41/142, to be submitted to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures for the observance of the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration, bearing in mind the recommended possible measures contained in the annex to the present resolution, in order to draw attention to and emphasize the importance of the Declaration, and the role played and the work done by the United Nations to ensure the effective fulfilment of the objectives of the Declaration;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "Twentieth anniversary of the proclamation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development";

9. Also decides to devote one plenary meeting during its forty-fourth session to the observance of the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration, which falls on 11 December 1989, and requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary preparations for the programme of that meeting.

ANNEX

Recommended possible measures for the observance of the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development

1. The following measures are recommended for possible action at the national level:

(a) Formal proclamation of 11 December 1989 as Social Progress and Development Day;

(b) Issuance of special messages on 11 December 1989 by heads of State or Government or other prominent civil personalities;

(c) Special meetings of parliamentary and other public and private institutions on Social Progress and Development Day;

(d) Establishment or strengthening of national or local institutions for the promotion of social progress and development and social justice, and the encouragement or teaching programmes on social progress and development at various educational levels;

(e) Dissemination of the text of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development in national languages;

(f) Issuance during 1989 of social progress and development postage stamps, first-day covers and special cancellations;

(g) Participation by non-governmental organizations in the observance of the anniversary, and the organization of activities by such organizations;

(h) Organization of activities within the framework and in support of current United Nations decades and international years being prepared on social development.

2. It is recommended that the following measures, among others, should be taken by the Secretary-General at the United Nations level:

(a) Issuance by 11 December 1989 in all the official languages of the United Nations of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development;

(b) Organization of commemorative events, according to standard practice, at United Nations Headquarters and at the United Nations Offices at Geneva and Vienna, as well as at Nairobi and at United Nations information centres, on or around 11 December 1989.

General Assembly resolution 42/48

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/770) without vote, 3 November (meeting 32); draft recommended by ESC resolution 1987/38 (A/C.3/42/L.3); agenda item 88.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 14-22, 28, 32; plenary 85.

Social progress

In response to 1985 resolutions of the Economic and Social Council(7) and the General Assembly(8) the Secretary-General submitted in 1987 a report(9) on national experiences in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress. Following a request for information on their experience in implementing social policy, 15 Member States had replied as of 30 September 1986. Austria, Denmark, Egypt, Guatemala, Iraq, the Netherlands and Norway described a number of issues and means related to their social policy; the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, the German Democratic Republic, Mauritius, Romania and the USSR provided information on their social policies in relation to changes and strategies of development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1987, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/35 without vote.

National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress

The Economic and Social Council,

Guided by the desire to promote a higher standard of life, full employment and conditions for economic and social progress and development,

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 3273(XXIX) of 10 December 1974, 31/38 of 30 November 1976, 36/19 of 9 November 1981, 38/25 of 22 November 1983 and 40/23 of 29 November 1985, in which the Assembly reaffirmed the importance for every State to carry out fundamental social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress and the necessity of studying national experience in this field,

Noting with concern the findings on the economic and social situation in many parts of the world, contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Highlights of the world social situation 1987: recent developments and current issues",

Desirous of securing a speedy and complete removal of major obstacles to the economic and social progress of peoples, as defined in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Noting the proposal of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to act as host to the interregional seminar on the national experience of developing and developed countries in carrying out far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress called for in paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 38/25,

1. Reaffirms that further exchange of national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress would contribute to the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

2. Notes that the Secretary-General is making arrangements for holding in 1988 the interregional seminar called for in paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 38/25, within the resources allotted to the programme for sectoral and regional advisory services;

3. Invites all States to submit to the Secretary-General national reports on their experience in carrying out far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with all States, a report on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress, taking into account the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 36/19, 38/25 and 40/23, and to submit it to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council;

5. Requests the Commission for Social Development to consider at its thirty-first session the issue of national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/35

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

Also on 28 May, the Council, by decision 1987/133, took note of the report of the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 42/50 by recorded vote.

National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress

The General Assembly,

Guided by the desire to promote a higher standard of life, full employment and conditions for economic and social progress and development,

Recalling its resolutions 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, as well as its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also its resolutions 3273(XXIX) of 10 December 1974, 31/38 of 30 November 1976, 36/19 of 9 November 1981, 38/25 of 22 November 1983 and 40/23 of 29 November 1985, in which it reaffirmed the importance for every State to carry out fundamental social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress and the necessity of studying national experience in this field,

Taking note with concern of the findings on the economic and social situation in many parts of the world, contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Highlights of the world social situation 1987: recent developments and current issues",

Desirous of securing the speedy and complete removal of major obstacles to the economic and social progress of peoples, as defined in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Taking note of the proposal of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to act as host to an interregional seminar on the national experience of developing and developed countries in carrying out far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress, as called for in paragraph 3 of resolution 38/25,

1. Reaffirms that further exchange of national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress would contribute to the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress;

3. Appreciates that the Secretary-General is making arrangements to hold, in 1988, the interregional seminar called for in paragraph 3 of resolution 38/25, within the resources allotted to the programme for sectoral and regional advisory services;

4. Invites Member States to submit to the Secretary-General reports on their national experience in carrying out far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with Member States, a report on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress, taking into account the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 36/19, 38/25 and 40/23, and to submit it to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council;

6. Requests the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council to consider at their next sessions the question of national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress".

General Assembly resolution 42/50

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 144-1-10 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/770) by recorded vote (106-1-11), 3 November (meeting 32); 16-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.24); agenda item 88. Sponsors: Afghanistan, Angola, Benin, Burkina Faso, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Poland, Viet Nam. Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 14-22, 28, 32; plenary 85.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Motambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal,^a Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of Israel, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, United Kingdom.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

The United States said it would vote against the text because it referred to a multitude of documents which contained ideas, principles and language unacceptable to it and which it had opposed in the past.

Improvement of social life

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/145 by recorded vote.

Improvement of social life

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the Members of the United Nations have undertaken in the Charter to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Recalling the principles proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Mindful of the need to establish a harmonious balance between scientific, technological and material progress and the intellectual, spiritual, cultural and moral advancement of mankind,

Considering that the improvement of social life must be based on respect for and the promotion of all human rights and particularly on the elimination of all forms of discrimination,

Recognizing that social progress and development are founded on respect for the dignity and value of the human person,

Considering that healthy recreational, cultural and sports activities contribute to the achievement of a proper level of physical and mental health,

Cons&ring also that the improvement of social life must take place in a continuous and uninterrupted manner,

Mindful that the existing inequalities and imbalances in the international economic system are widening the gap between developed and developing countries and thereby constitute a major obstacle to the development of the developing countries and adversely affect international relations and the promotion of world peace and security,

Conscious that each country has the sovereign right freely to adopt the economic and social system that it deems the most appropriate and that each Government has a primary role in ensuring the social progress and well-being of its people,

Convinced of the urgent necessity rapidly to eradicate colonialism, neocolonialism, racism and all forms of racial discrimination, apartheid, foreign aggression, occupation and domination and all forms of inequality, exploitation and subjugation of peoples, which constitute major obstacles to economic and social progress as well as to the promotion of world peace and security,

Recalling its resolutions 40/100 of 13 December 1985 and 41/152 of 4 December 1986,

1. Acknowledges that the progress achieved in the world social situation is still inadequate despite the efforts made and that efforts should therefore be redoubled;

2. Notes with great concern the slow progress in the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development;

3. Reaffirms that the social aspects and goals of development are an integral part of the overall development process and that it is the sovereign right of each State freely to determine and implement appropriate policies for social development within the framework of its development plans and priorities;

4. Emphasizes the importance, for the achievement of social progress, of the establishment of the new international economic order;

5. Calls upon Member States to make all efforts to promote the speedy and complete elimination of such fundamental elements hindering economic and social progress and development as colonialism, neocolonialism, racism and all forms of racial discrimination, apartheid, foreign aggression, occupation and domination and all forms of inequality and exploitation of peoples, and also to undertake effective measures to lessen international tensions;

6. Reiterates that it is the right of everyone to enjoy the greatest possible degree of physical and mental health;

7. Emphasizes that participation in cultural, sports and recreational activities and the use of leisure without discrimination of any kind promotes the improvement of social life;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the improvement of social life in the world, taking into account the observations made by Member States in accordance with the present resolution;

9. Decides to resume consideration of the question of the improvement of social life at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/145

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 129-17-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/803/Add.1) by recorded vote (111-18-7), 27 November (meeting 61); 6-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.86), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cuba, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nicaragua, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 51-53, 55-61; plenary 93.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, Malta, Spain, Sweden.

The United States said the text contained elements which obliged it to vote against; moreover, it failed to reflect the general interest in contributing to recreational and cultural activities.

In Canada's view, the text contained an implicit imbalance between the fundamental objective of the Charter of the United Nations and the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights(10) and particular concepts concerning economic and social inequalities.

Achievement of social justice

On 30 November 1987, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/49 without vote.

Achievement of social justice

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the pledge of States Members of the United Nations under the Charter of the United Nations to take joint and separate action to promote higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, social progress and development shall be founded on respect for the dignity and value of the human person and shall ensure the promotion of human rights and social justice,

Taking into account recommendations made by the Secretary-General on some perspectives on the work of the United Nations in the 1990s, contained in the annex to the note on the preparation of the next medium-term plan,

1. Considers that the common purpose of the international community must be to forge from varied economic, social and political conditions a global environment of sustained development, full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, social justice and peace;

2. Recognizes that social justice is one of the most important goals of social progress;

3. Reaffirms the importance of co-operation among countries in promoting a climate conducive to the achievement by individual countries of the goals of development and social justice and progress;

4. Considers that such co-operation should continue to be a major focus of activities of the United Nations in accordance with the principles of the Charter;

5. Calls upon Member States, in elaborating their national policy in the field of social development, to take into consideration the importance of achieving social justice for all.

General Assembly resolution 42/49

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/770) without vote, 3 November (meeting 32); draft by Ukrainian SSR (A/C.3/42/L.23), orally revised; agenda item 88.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 14-22, 28,32; plenary 85.

Migrant workers

In accordance with a 1985 Economic and Social Council resolution,(11) the Secretary-General reported to the Commission for Social Development in 1987(12) on progress made in strengthening programmes to improve the social situation of migrant workers and their families and in meeting the needs resulting from the changing conditions of international migration. He described programmes and services provided in the home country to assist migrant workers and their families, and analysed the changing conditions of international migration and emerging problems. He also discussed the increasing proportion of women and young people in the overall migrant population, the magnitude of non-documented migration arising from restrictive measures adopted by receiving countries, and the increasing hostility directed at migrant workers in receiving countries.

The Secretary-General observed that some countries applied stringent restrictions on immigration from specific areas and encouraged voluntary repatriation of migrant workers. Some social arrangements had been made for migrant workers and their families in most industrialized receiving countries, but such arrangements were still insufficient. Migrants needed increased protection and better guarantees regarding their rights. Further national and international attention was required to deal with a particular dimension of irregular international migration-the growing scale of organized illicit and clandestine trafficking across national frontiers.

Decisions on migrant issues also needed to take into account more fully the fact that migrants were often illiterate, had an oral tradition and generally had only a vague knowledge of legislative measures that regulated migration. The irregular nature of most migration in Africa and expulsions in response to domestic economic and other difficulties had brought hardships and greater uncertainty and created tensions between countries; Governments could significantly improve the position of migrants through mutually acceptable agreements between sending and receiving countries on the status of migrants.

On 4 March,(13) the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Popular participation

The Secretary-General reported in January 1987(14) on the role of popular participation in the formulation and implementation of strategies and policies for social integration. Submitted in response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,(15) the report examined popular participation in decision-making, in the elimination of social disparities and in cultural development.

Experiences in several countries showed that popular participation, especially of disadvantaged groups, would be insufficient without consultation with them in the formulation and implementation of strategies and policies for social integration. More effective social integration of these people might affect the position of privileged groups, which in turn tend to protect their interests. Policy makers therefore should take into account the interests of different social strata and strive to support social integration through popular participation.

On 4 March,(13) the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Social welfare

Social welfare policies and programmes

In response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council resolution,(16) the Secretary-General, in a report submitted to the Commission for Social Development in 1987(17) reviewed the background and preparations made for an Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes, which was to be held in September (see below). The report traced the evolution of concepts and approaches reflected in global and regional conferences since the 1968 International Conference of Ministers Responsible for Social Welfare(18) and the 1969 Declaration on Social Progress and Development.(5) It included a summary of comments by Governments on the draft provisional agenda for the Consultation and an outline of the documentation to be submitted.

The Secretary-General concluded that a global review of social policies and programmes, including social welfare, undertaken within the framework of the Consultation, could provide guidelines for the further evolution of developmental social policies and programmes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/48 without vote.

Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1983/22 of 26 May 1983 and 1985/26 of 29 May 1985, by which the Secretary-General was requested, inter alia, to proceed with the organization of the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes, to be held, within existing budgetary resources, at Vienna, at an appropriate policy-making level, in the autumn of 1987,

Recalling also its resolutions 1979/18 of 9 May 1979 and 1981/20 of 6 May 1981 on strengthening developmental social welfare policies and programmes,

Mindful of the relevance of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development to the Interregional Consultation, and reaffirming that the aim of the Interregional Consultation is to find some practical ways of implementing the provisions of the Declaration,

Convinced of the need to follow up the 1968 International Conference of Ministers Responsible for Social Welfare, and to reassess social welfare policies in the light of past experience and present issues,

Taking note of the action taken relevant to the Interregional Consultation at the Fourth Conference of African Ministers of Social Affairs, held at Addis Ababa from 18 to 26 March 1985, the Third Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Social Development, held at Bangkok from 9 to 15 October 1985, the Arab Regional Conference on Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Arab World, held at Tunis under the auspices of the League of Arab States from 12 to 15 October 1985, and at the thirteenth session of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, held at Baghdad, from 19 to 24 April 1986,

Taking note also of the preparations for the Conference of European Ministers Responsible for Social Affairs, to be held at Warsaw from 6 to 11 April 1987, and the Intergovernmental Meeting of Ministers Responsible for Social Welfare, to be held at Montevideo in June 1987,

Recognizing the importance of taking an integrated, family-oriented and cost-effective approach to the design and delivery of social welfare services and related social security arrangements, and other relevant social issues, especially in the context of implementing the conclusions of recent global events concerning women, youth, the disabled, the aging, the homeless, drug addicts, population and other areas significant to social welfare,

Taking into account the fact that the Interregional Consultation would also identify procedures to facilitate international co-operation in the implementation of its decisions,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes;

2. Approves the revised draft agenda for the Interregional Consultation contained in the report of the Secretary-General incorporating the change made by the Commission for Social Development at its thirtieth session, namely, that item 7 shall be entitled "Guiding principles for social welfare policies and programmes in the near future" instead of "Goals in the social field for the year 2000";

3. Calls upon States to participate in the Interregional Consultation at an appropriate policy-making level, for example, at the ministerial or other high decision-making level;

4. Calls upon intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies and regional commissions to participate actively in the Interregional Consultation at a high decision-making level;

5. Calls upon non-governmental organizations in the field of social welfare having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to participate in the Interregional Consultation and its follow-up activities;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs for the work already performed in spite of budgetary and human resource constraints, and requests that a focal point within the Centre be identified to prepare for and follow up the activities of the Interregional Consultation and related activities in developmental social welfare policies and programmes;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to redeploy resources to ensure adequate preparations for and appropriate follow-up to the Interregional Consultation, and to provide for the follow-up of the Interregional Consultation in the proposed programme budget for 1988-1989 and, in the proposed medium-term plan for 1990-1995, for activities concerning developmental social welfare policies and programmes;

8. Calls upon all bodies within the United Nations system to avoid duplication in those areas, bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, in particular duplication of the work of the Interregional Consultation and the Commission for Social Development;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account, to the extent possible, in the documentation for the Interregional Consultation, the conclusions reached at the various regional preparatory meetings;

10. Decides that the Commission shall review at its thirty-first session the results of the Interregional Consultation, paying particular attention to technical co-operation activities in developmental social welfare for developing countries, and that specific actions shall be referred to the appropriate functional commissions of the Council;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the provisional agenda of the forty-second session of the General Assembly an item entitled "Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/48

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

Interregional Consultation. The Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes (Vienna, 7-15 September 1987)(19) was attended by 91 States, United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and a large number of non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

The Consultation considered social policy in the context of changing needs and conditions; developmental social welfare policies and programmes; and guiding principles for such policies and programmes in the near future. There was general agreement on a number of general principles: social programmes needed to be seen in the context of the goals of the 1969 Declaration on Social Progress and Development; social welfare and related social support systems needed to be reoriented to make a more positive contribution to overall development; social programmes were forms of investment similar to investments in economic infrastructure; internationally supported economic adjustment programmes needed to be designed with a long time-frame to allow adjustment in a context of growth, avoiding social dislocation; greater attention must be given to equal benefits to women and men in all areas of social development; adaptation to changing conditions would be easier in a context of respect for human rights; and new social welfare programmes were to emphasize the promotion of initiative and the self-reliance of individuals.

Special attention needed to be given to community and family viability and to support the vulnerable and disadvantaged in articulating their needs. There was a need to strengthen the contribution of NGOs, private entities and the people themselves in enhancing social services. Social cohesion might be strengthened by introducing national minima of social protection appropriate to the level of resources. Understanding of social welfare in different countries and its role in social development needed to be promoted. National efforts to enhance social welfare would be strengthened by more extensive regional and interregional co-operation between Governments, NGOs and social interest groups. Maintaining peaceful conditions and improving international co-operation would help Member States to concentrate on social policy and welfare.

In addition, the Consultation prepared recommendations for follow-up action by Governments, the United Nations, intergovernmental organizations, communities, NGOs and other bodies dealing with developmental social welfare.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/125 without vote.

Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1985/26 of 29 May 1985 and 1987/48 of 28 May 1987 concerning preparations for an Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes,

Conscious of the considerable contribution made to the preparations for the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes by the regional conferences of the ministers responsible for social welfare and the Commission for Social Development acting as preparatory body for the Interregional Consultation, as well as by specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system, Member States and non-governmental organizations,

Welcoming the positive response to and support by Member States for the Interregional Consultation and the formulation of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future,

Convinced that more extensive regional and inter-regional co-operation among Governments and non-governmental and voluntary organizations is important in strengthening national efforts to promote social progress and enhance social welfare,

Mindful of the importance of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future,

Persuaded of the importance of taking measures to ensure system-wide co-ordination within the United Nations in order to develop a comprehensive and integrated approach to the issues of developmental social welfare, including better integrated and mutually supportive economic and social development policies,

Noting with appreciation the decision of the Secretary-General to consolidate all social policy and social development activities at the United Nations Office at Vienna,

Having reviewed the report of the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes, held at Vienna from 7 to 15 September 1987,

1. Takes note of the report of the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes;

2. Endorses the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future contained in the report and adopted by consensus at the Interregional Consultation;

3. Calls upon Governments to make continuous efforts to implement the principles and recommendations contained in the Guiding Principles adopted by the Interregional Consultation in accordance with their national structures, needs and objectives;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to ensure the implementation of, and follow-up action to, the Guiding Principles as well as to maintain the momentum generated by the Interregional Consultation, taking into account the central role of the Commission for Social Development in the review of issues related to the implementation of the Guiding Principles;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to implement the recommendations concerning international co-operation with regard to developmental social welfare, using the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as the focal point, bearing in mind the responsibility of the specialized agencies;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to strengthen, within existing resources, the United Nations Office at Vienna as a nucleus for all issues and reports relating to social policy and social development, including its research capabilities;

7. Invites the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions to give appropriate consideration to the Guiding Principles in the formulation of the respective regional work programmes and in the planning of regional intergovernmental conferences on social welfare and social development;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to give particular attention to increasing the effectiveness of technical co-operation activities to assist Governments, particularly of the developing countries and of the least developed countries, in formulating appropriate policies and effective programmes in the social welfare field, as indicated in the report of the Interregional Consultation, paying particular attention to the objectives and priorities of national developmental programmes;

9. Reaffirms the decision of the Economic and Social Council that the Commission for Social Development shall review, at its thirty-first session, the results of the Interregional Consultation;

10. Requests the Economic and Social Council to take the necessary measures including, as appropriate, further interregional consultations to ensure, on a periodical basis, the reviewing and updating of the developmental social welfare policies and programmes in view of the rapidly changing socio-economic situation and conditions;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the progress achieved in implementing and following up the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future.

General Assembly resolution 42/125

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/776) without vote, 3 November (meeting 32); 23-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.21), orally revised; agenda item 141.

Sponsors: Argentina, Austria, Bolivia, Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Indonesia, Italy, Norway, Philippines, Poland, Sudan, Ukrainian SSR, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 14, 15, 17-22, 29, 32; plenary 93.

The family

National policies for families

In response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council request, (20) the Secretary-General submitted in 1987 a report on national family policies,(21) discussing the preliminary conclusions of a study on the relationship of national family policies to the role of the family in the development process, and analysing the factors shaping family policies. Those factors included existing and new policies; perception of the problems affecting families; establishment and implementation of policy objectives and participation in that process; and problems in policy formulation and implementation. After examining implications of the experience available for the formulation of family policies and surveying national family policies, the report stated that family policies should promote the well-being of society through measures of support for the family; foster wider recognition of the family as a critical source of emotional and material support for its members; further the economic self-reliance of families and seek to support them through broader access to services; reflect the value of an equitable relationship between family members and the specific goal of a more equitable relationship between men and women; and encourage a pluralistic perspective so as to ensure that certain types of families were not discriminated against.

Discussing a draft framework for the 1989 report on the world social situation,(2) the Secretary-General suggested that the report also examine recent trends and views concerning the family.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/46 without vote.

National policies for families

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the Declaration on Social Progress and Development recognized the value of the family as a basic unit of society and the natural environment for the growth and well-being of all its members,

Recalling its resolutions 1983/23 of 26 May 1983 on the role of the family in the development process and 1985/29 of 29 May 1985 on the family,

Taking note of the fact that the Secretary-General is conducting a survey of national policies for families,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on developments concerning national family policies,

Affirming the importance of the family as a basic unit of society,

Aware of the need for co-ordination of the range of activities carried out within the United Nations system on behalf of families,

Recalling chapter II of the 1982 Report on the World Social Situation on the family,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake discussions within the framework of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the family-related activities of the other organizations in the United Nations system, within available resources;

2. Invites Member States to respond to the best of their ability to the survey of national policies for families;

3. Welcomes the proposal contained in paragraph 111 of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Highlights of the world social situation 1987: recent developments and current issues" to include a section in the 1989 report on the world social situation on recent views and trends concerning the family, making use of the survey of national policies for families;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session on the results of the survey of national policies for families.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/46

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

International co-operation to protect and assist the family

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/42 without vote.

Need to enhance international co-operation in protection of and assistance for the family

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[Same text as General Assembly resolution 42/134 below, except for operative paragraph 3.)

"3. Decides to consider that report as a matter of high priority, and to take appropriate decisions on it at its forty-third session, under an item of the provisional agenda entitled 'Families in the development process'."

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/42

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/134 by recorded vote.

Need to enhance international co-operation in the field of the protection of and assistance for the family

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the resolve of the peoples of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, with a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being, which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations between nations,

Recalling that, in accordance with the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the widest possible protection and assistance should be accorded to the family which is the natural and fundamental group unit of society,

Recalling also the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, which provides that the family, as a basic unit of society and the natural environment for the growth and well-being of all its members, particularly children and youth, should be assisted and protected so that it may fully assume its responsibilities within the community,

Convinced of the urgency of meeting the diverse needs of the family, both as a beneficiary of and as an active participant in the development process,

Recognizing the necessity of consolidating the efforts of all States in carrying out specific programmes concerning the family, in which the United Nations may have an important role to play,

Aware of the international consensus on the importance of the role of the family as an agent of positive change in society,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1983/23 of 26 May 1983 and 1985/29 of 29 May 1985,

Convinced that appropriate measures should be taken at the local, national, regional and international levels to mobilize efforts on behalf of the family,

Recalling, in this connection, its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 concerning the guidelines for international years and anniversaries,

1. Invites all States to make their views known concerning the possible proclamation of an international year of the family and to offer their comments and proposals thereon to the Secretary-General before 30 April 1988;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a comprehensive report, based on the comments and proposals of Member States, on the possible proclamation of such a year and other ways and means to improve the position and well-being of the family and intensify international co-operation as part of global efforts to advance social progress and development;

3. Decides to consider that report and to take appropriate decisions thereon at its forty-third session, under an item of the provisional agenda entitled "Families in the development process".

General Assembly resolution 42/134

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 145-2-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/803/Add.1) by recorded vote (124-3-8), 27 November (meeting 62); 7-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.5), as recommended by ESC resolution 1987/42, orally amended by Sweden; agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Austria, Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of, Mongolia, Poland, Portugal, Ukrainian SSR.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 51-53, 55-62; plenary 93.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Denmark, Finland, France, Iceland, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden.

The Assembly resolution was the same as the text recommended by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1987/42, except for paragraph 3; Sweden orally proposed the deletion of "as a matter of high priority" from that paragraph.

The Netherlands submitted amendments by which the words "and family-like group units of society" would be added after "family" in the fifth preambular paragraph and paragraph 2.(22) Egypt orally proposed a sub-amendment by which the words "if they are based on values of religion and morality" would be added after "society" in both amendments. In view of objections and reservations by several countries, the Netherlands withdrew its amendments. Egypt orally proposed and later withdrew other amendments, by which the words "and peoples" and "based on the values and morality which developed through ages of human sufferings and the fight against all types of vices and evils" would be added at the end of the first and second preambular paragraphs, respectively; in the fifth preambular paragraph, the words "morally oriented" would be inserted after "specific programmes".

Regretting the negative reception accorded to its amendments, the Netherlands said that a resolution on the topic should take into account the diversity of norms, values and beliefs represented in a universal organization; the amendments' opponents wished to focus the text on the nuclear family to the exclusion of non-nuclear units. Egypt voted for the text with reservations, saying Member States represented different cultures and should focus on what united them rather than divided them.

The United States said it voted against the text because of its intent rather than its wording; also, the multiplicity of causes for which international years had been proclaimed caused suspicion that such proclamations trivialized the subjects.

Similarly, Sweden, speaking also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway, said they doubted the value of international years, effort and expenditure for which were rarely commensurate with results; international years should be celebrated mainly in the context of specific long-term plans of action. Austria stressed that it voted in favour because it recognized the role of the family as a basic unit of society, not because it was convinced of the value of another international year. New Zealand believed that it was the prerogative of each State to interpret "family" in the context of the resolution according to its own laws and customs; it would have voted for the amendment of the Netherlands which made it clear that the international year of the family, if proclaimed, would encompass all the societies represented in the United Nations.

Co-operatives

In a report(23) submitted in response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council resolution,(24) the Secretary-General discussed national experience in promoting the co-operative movement. Based in part on information submitted by 33 Member States, specialized agencies and NGOs, the report discussed the role of co-operatives in social and economic development, in the production, marketing and consumption of food and related goods and services, and in promoting development in urban areas. It examined the participation of people in co-operatives; the role of government support; training and educational programmes; difficulties faced by countries in the establishment and development of co-operatives; and progress made in strengthening movement-to-movement activities and in promoting membership in and growth of co-operatives.

The report concluded that Member States might wish to strengthen their commitment to co-operatives, preserving the autonomy and democratic character of those organizations; and enhance the role of co-operatives in the production, marketing and consumption of food, and in developing urban areas and small-scale and medium-scale industry, States might encourage co-operative activities among the poorest elements of society, notably landless peasants; reconsider the forms of government support of co-operatives; support efforts to strengthen movement-to-movement activities among co-operatives, in particular by channelling a greater proportion of overseas development assistance towards those activities; and encourage educational programmes to increase public awareness of co-operatives.

A seminar on the role of government in promoting the co-operative movement was organized by the United Nations (Moscow, 18-22 May). The seminar agreed that in most developing countries government played an important role in promoting the co-operative movement. By supporting co-operatives, greater popular participation in development could be promoted. Co-operatives should have access to government financial, technical, economic and other benefits. Financial support could be in the form of grants and guarantees of loans to co-operatives from lending institutions. Proposing model legislation, the seminar recommended that co-operatives be recognized as a distinct form of economic and social organization, having rights comparable to those of business organizations in the public and private sectors.

At the international level, the seminar recommended that the International Labour Organisation consider transforming its Recommendation 127 on the role of co-operatives in developing countries, adopted in 1966,(25) into a binding convention, that the United Nations consider declaring a Year of Co-operative Development, and that the United Nations and specialized agencies increase their support to strengthen co-operative movements.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/47 without vote.

National experience in promoting the co-operative movement

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2459(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 3273(XXIX) of 10 December 1974, 31/37 of 30 November 1976, 33/47 of 14 December 1978 and 36/18 of 9 November 1981, and Council resolutions 1983/15 of 26 May 1983 and 1985/22 of 29 May 1985,

Desiring to promote the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Bearing in mind the importance of the establishment and growth of co-operatives as a democratic instrument for the full economic, social and cultural development of all members of society,

Reaffirming the important role played by co-operatives in the socio-economic development of developing countries,

Recognizing the necessity of training and educational programmes at various levels for the growth, diversification and professionalization of the management of co-operatives,

Convinced that the exchange between countries of national experience relating to the co-operative movement plays an essential role in strengthening co-operatives for the benefit of their members and in overcoming difficulties in the development of various co-operatives,

Noting with satisfaction the offer of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to act as host to a seminar on the role of government in promoting the co-operative movement, to be held in May 1987,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement;

2. Invites the regional commissions and specialized agencies concerned to make further efforts to promote the co-operative movement as an effective instrument for the improvement of the well-being of all people;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to include pertinent information and data on the co-operative movement in developing and developed countries in relevant periodic United Nations publications;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, with particular attention to developing countries, in consultation with Member States, appropriate organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, and drawing on the work already in progress elsewhere in the United Nations system, a comprehensive report on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement, paying special attention, inter alia, to the following aspects of the question:

(a) The participation of peasants, including landless peasants, and nomadic populations in co-operatives;

(b) The role of co-operatives and organizations similar to co-operatives in promoting development in urban areas;

(c) The participation of all people, including women, youth, disabled persons and the aging, in co-operatives;

(d) The role and extent of government support in promoting co-operatives;

(e) Programmes to help co-operatives to adopt new technologies to increase production and marketing in the agricultural, commercial and industrial spheres;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit that report, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session for consideration under the item entitled "National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/47

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

On 30 November, the General Assembly, by decision 42/413, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Institutional machinery

Commission for Social Development

In the report on its thirtieth (1987) session (26) the Commission for Social Development recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of 14 draft resolutions and one decision.

The resolutions covered national experience in achieving social and economic changes (Council resolution 1987/35), science and technology in development (1987/36), the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987/37), the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development (1987/38), the critical social situation in Africa (1987/39), social aspects of rural development (1987/40), the International Plan of Action on Aging (1987/41), protection of and assistance to the family (1987/42), the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1987/43), the enjoyment by youth of human rights (1987/44), youth in the contemporary world (1987/45), national policies for families (1987/46), national experience in promoting the co-operative movement (1987/47) and the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes (1987/48).

On 28 May, the Council, by decision 1987/132, took note of the report of the Commission and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its thirty-first (1989) session.

Improvement of the Commission's work

In response to a 1986 Economic and Social Council request,(27) the Commission for Social Development adopted proposals for the improvement of its work.(28) Recognizing that its current agenda was too broad to permit a thorough exploration of issues, the Commission stated that a selective focus could best be achieved by limiting in-depth discussion to a few subjects not dealt with by other intergovernmental forums. The first agenda item would be a general review of the world social situation and the second an in-depth consideration of specific subjects, while the third would include monitoring of international plans and programmes of action, the results of international conferences, the work of the United Nations on social development and the work of autonomous institutions. Other proposals covered preparation for Commission deliberations, the frequency and length of meetings and Secretariat support.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an April 1987 report,(29) the Secretary-General reviewed the work of the Commission since 1950 and discussed measures for strengthening its work. He stated that the steps being taken by the Commission, as expressed in its proposals, constituted important innovations. Actions to be taken by the Secretariat would consist of the following: adapting its research programme to the themes chosen for in-depth consideration; finding ways to present national experience and link ad hoc expert groups to the Commission's agenda; preparing concise reports for the Commission; maintaining a balanced presentation of views and concentrating on possible conclusions which the Commission might consider; and preparing the documents in time for study by Commission members in advance of the session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/50 without vote.

Improvement of the work of the Commission for Social Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Conscious of the evolving world social situation and the pressing demands for international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural and humanitarian character,

Aware of the need for a comprehensive and integrated approach to socio-economic development,

Bearing in mind the principles, objectives, means and methods set forth in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, based on the Charter of the United Nations and solemnly proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969,

Recalling its resolutions 10(II) of 21 June 1946 on the Temporary Social Commission, 830 J (XXXII) of 2 August 1961 on the strengthening of the work of the United Nations in the social field and 1139(XLI) of 29 July 1966, in which it adopted the present mandate and present designation of the Commission for Social Development,

Taking into account its resolution 1985/36 of 29 May 1985 on the progress of work of the Commission for Social Development,

Noting General Assembly resolution 40/98 of 13 December 1985 on improvement of the role of the United Nations in the field of social development,

Recalling its resolution 1986/14 of 21 May 1986 on improvement of the work of the Commission for Social Development,

Having considered Commission for Social Development resolution 30/2 and the measures for improvement of its work contained in the annex thereto,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the improvement of the work of the Commission for Social Development,

Mindful of the role of the Commission for Social Development as the central specialized intergovernmental body concerned with social issues,

Recalling its decision 1987/112 of 6 February 1987, by which it requested all subsidiary bodies of the Council to submit to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields their views and proposals on achieving the objectives envisaged in recommendation 8 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

Conscious of the need to ensure that the frequency and duration of the meetings of the functional commissions of the Council enable them to discharge properly their important functions,

1. Approves the proposals adopted by the Commission for Social Development on the improvement of its work, as contained in the annex to its resolution 30/2;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for Commission for Social Development resolution 30/2 to be submitted to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council;

3. Decides to consider, on the basis of the discussion and recommendations of the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session, the question of membership in the Commission and the frequency and duration of its meetings at its first regular session of 1989, taking into account the conclusions of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/50

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 18 May (meeting 14); 2-nation draft (E/1987/C.2/L.6), orally revised; agenda item 18. Sponsors: Argentina, Poland.

Trust funds

As at 31 December 1987, the Trust Fund for Social Development, which financed training and research activities, totalled $125,522, Income amounted to $27,500, while expenditures totalled $6,220. The Trust Fund for European Social Development, having received no contributions during the year, had a balance available of $2,554.

Co-ordination

At its March 1987 session,(30) the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ(PROG)) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) discussed co-ordination and co-operation on social issues, based on a note on the elements of social policy contained in meeting reports of ACC subsidiary machinery in 1986.

CCSQ(PROG) noted that each subsidiary body dealt with a narrow sector of social policy without relating it to its broader aspects and that each body operated in an isolated manner. It agreed that subsidiary bodies should be requested to improve the content of their reports and indicate policy issues more clearly; the reports should enable CCSQ(PROG) to establish linkages among them as well as among a broader range of economic and social policies. In turn, CCSQ(PROG) should provide guidance to the bodies.

At the same time, CCSQ(PROG) felt that the lack of a precise definition of social or economic issues should not be a justification for confusion and weakness in the activities of the United Nations system. Concern regarding the lack of definition reflected a desire to bring-some order to the issues. CCSQ(PROG) agreed that it would retain the question in its future work programme.

UN Research Institute for Social Development

In 1987, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) carried out research programmes on the social situation of refugees, the improvement of development data, and, in an attempt to provide research on the implications of the debt situation and economic recession in developing countries during the 1980s, on the social impact of sustained economic crisis and adjustment-related food policy.(31)

Research on refugees examined their impact on host populations in Mexico and Zambia, and on policies that influenced the capacity of refugees who returned to their home country to take care of and reintegrate themselves. One study contrasted the situation of returnees in two regions of Zimbabwe; another examined governmental and international policies influencing reintegration. UNRISD also assessed the nature and quality of existing policy-relevant statistical information dealing with living conditions and consumption patterns in India, Kenya and Morocco.

A number of publications by UNRISD in 1987 disseminated research results generated under earlier programmes on popular participation and food systems, as well as under the continuing programme on refugees.

The UNRISD research data bank continued to be updated using material from the latest statistical yearbooks and the Economic Time Series data bank. News of UNRISD activities was circulated through a periodic publication, Research Notes; a new version of it was prepared in English, French and Spanish.

Income of UNRISD in 1987 amounted to $1,599,804, including contributions by Governments of $1,113,720 and special-purpose contributions of $330,780. Expenditures amounted to $1,918,279.

On 4 March,(32) the Commission for Social Development took note of the report of the Board of UNRISD on UNRISD activities in 1985(33) and 1986.(34)

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1985, p. 722, ESC res. 1985/21, 29 May 1985.
- (2)E/CN.5/1987/2. (3)YUN 1952, p. 502. (4)E/CN.5/1987/11.
- (5)YUN 1969, p. 433, GA res. 2542(XXIV), 11 Dec. 1969.
- (6)E/1987/20 (dec. 30/102). (7)YUN 1985, p. 728, ESC res. 1985/32, 29 May 1985. (8)Ibid., p. 729, GA res. 40/23, 29

Nov. 1985. (9)A/42/57-E/1987/8. (10)YUN 1948-49, p. 535, GA res. 217 A (III), 10 Dec. 1948. (11)YUN 1985, p. 734, ESC res. 1985/24, 29 May 1985. (12)E/CN.5/1987/8. (13)E/1987/20 (dec. 30/103). (14)E/CN.5/1987/4. (15)YUN 1983, p. 729, ESC res. 1983/13, 26 May 1983. (16)YUN 1985, p. 731, ESC res. 1985/26, 29 May 1985. (17)E/CN.5/1987/5 & Add.1. (18)YUN 1968, p. 505. (19)E/CONF.80/10. (20)YUN 1985, p. 730, ESC res. 1985/29, 29 May 1985. (21)E/1987/6. (22)A/C.3/42/L.90. (23)A/42/56-E/1987/7. (24)YUN 1985, p. 733, ESC res. 1985/22, 29 May 1985. (25)YUN 1966, p. 977. (26)E/1987/20. (26)YUN 1986, p. 610, ESC res. 1986/14, 21 May 1986. (28)E/1987/20 (res. 30/2). (29)E/1987/42. (30)ACC/1987/5. (31)E/CN.5/1989/9. (32)E/1987/20 (dec. 30/104). (33)YUN 1985, p. 736. (34)YUN 1986, p. 611.

PUBLICATIONS

The Social Situation of Migrant Workers and Their Families (ST/ESA/189), Sales No. E.86.IV.11. National Family Policies: Their Relationship to the Role of the Family in the Development Process (ST/ESA/184), Sales No. E.87.IV.2. Popular Participation Policies as Methods for Advancing Social Integration (ST/ESA/190), Sales No. E.87.IV.3. Strengthening the Family: Guidelines for the Design of Relevant Programmer (ST/ESA/194), Sales No. E.87.IV.4.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

In 1987, the United Nations undertook to implement the conclusions of the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders⁽¹⁾ and carried out preparations for the Eighth Congress in 1990. The Secretary-General, in August 1987,⁽²⁾ gave an overview of steps taken by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control since the Seventh Congress's adoption of the Milan Plan of Action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/59 without vote.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

The General Assembly,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice under Economic and Social Council resolution 155(C)(VII) of 13 August 1948 and General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950, the importance of which was reaffirmed by the Assembly in its resolution 41/107 of 4 December 1986,

Bearing in mind the objectives of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, inter alia, the reduction of criminality, encouragement of more efficient and effective administration of justice, observance of all human rights and promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Recognizing the crucial functions of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in developing practical crime prevention and criminal justice policies and strategies as a standing expert body of the Economic and Social Council and as a preparatory body for the quinquennial United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

Noting with concern that the significant increase in the work-load of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, particularly in relation to the follow-up to the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, has not been matched by corresponding adjustments in the level of resources needed to discharge this work-load and to implement properly the additional work mandated by the policy-making bodies,

Acknowledging that the serious constraints on the human and financial resources available to the Secretariat for work in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice may jeopardize the progress achieved to date, as well as future activities,

Reaffirming that the quinquennial congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders are of fundamental importance to progress in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and provide unique opportunities for focusing on specific priority problems, as well as for assessing general trends and sharing perspectives, establishing norms and standards and evaluating their implementation, monitoring the results of the United Nations programme of work as a whole and setting priorities for action in the following quinquennium.

Recognizing the pivotal role of the United Nations, through its programme activities and congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, in promoting the exchange of expertise and experience and closer international co-operation in this field,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General on crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Urges Member States and the Secretary-General to make every effort to translate into action, as appropriate, the respective recommendations, policies and conclusions stemming from the Milan Plan of Action and other relevant resolutions and recommendations adopted unanimously by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and to accord priority attention to the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action through strengthening international co-operation;

3. Welcomes the results of the comprehensive review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice conducted by the Secretary-General and considered by the Economic and Social Council and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

4. Approves the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1986/11 of 21 May 1986 and 1987/53 of 28 May 1987, and requests the Secretary-General and the relevant bodies to take appropriate measures for their full and prompt implementation, paying particular attention to the elements identified in paragraph 3 of Council resolution 1987/53;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to ensure that the United Nations programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice is supported by adequate resources through, inter alia, appropriate redeployment of staff and funds, including from relevant departments at Headquarters, and to ensure that the specialized and technical nature of the programme and the high priority attached by Member States to crime prevention and criminal justice are fully reflected in the future management and staffing of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch;

6. Endorses the recommendations related to the preparation of the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held in 1990, contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/49 of 28 May 1987, and requests the Secretary-General to take immediate steps to ensure the successful and cost-effective preparation of the Eighth Congress, including the early appointment of its Secretary-General, the organization and appropriate scheduling of the interregional and regional preparatory meetings and the timely finalization and circulation of the required documentation through the provision of the necessary resources, including temporary assistance;

7. Calls upon Member States to participate actively in preparations for the Eighth Congress, particularly through involvement of the United Nations national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, the submission of relevant position papers on the different agenda items, the establishment, whenever appropriate, of national focal points and the encouragement of contributions from non-governmental organizations, academics and other experts;

8. Invites the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its tenth session to accord priority to preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and to ensure adequate follow-up to the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice undertaken by the Economic and Social Council;

9. Encourages Member States and relevant organizations, in particular the regional commissions, the United Nations Development Programme and the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat, to support and complement the activities of the United Nations regional and interregional institutes for crime prevention and control, particularly the newly established African Regional Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, as well as the United Nations Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, by providing technical and financial assistance;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to develop appropriate strategies to revitalize the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence and appeals for increased contributions from Member States, private foundations and others able to assist;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly, at its forty-third session, on the implementation of the present resolution, taking also into account the relevant recommendations of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its tenth session, providing updated information on preparations for the Eighth Congress;

12. Decides to consider this subject again, under the item entitled "Crime prevention and criminal justice", at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/59

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/775) without vote, 3 November (meeting 32); 20-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.22), orally revised; agenda item 94.

Sponsors: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bolivia, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, France, Greece, Italy, Netherlands, Philippines, Senegal, Spain, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.
Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 14, 15, 17-22, 29, 32; plenary 85.

Preparations for the Eighth (1990) Congress

Preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held in 1990, were entrusted to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control. On the basis of recommendations the Committee had made in 1986,(3) the Economic and Social Council approved in 1987 a provisional agenda and a number of preparatory activities. In an April report on a review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice,(4) the Secretary-General also dealt with Congress preparations. He said that during consultations he had undertaken, it was suggested that greater attention be paid to the selection of more precisely defined topics; in addition, one general topic important to leading policy makers should be identified, on which discussion might be limited to only part of the Congress duration. It was also suggested that the congresses adopt international conventions on priorities and review the implementation of past resolutions and conclusions, to provide the Secretariat with guidance for its future work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/49 without vote.

Preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950 the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders is to be convened in 1990,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolutions 32/59 and 32/60 of 8 December 1977 and 35/171 of 15 December 1980, in which the Assembly noted the importance of United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

Welcoming General Assembly resolution 40/32 of 29 November 1985, in which the Assembly expressed its satisfaction with the report of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and with the preparatory work carried out for it by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its seventh and eighth sessions and by the regional and interregional preparatory meetings convened in co-operation with the regional commissions, interregional and regional crime prevention institutes and interested Governments,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/45 of 25 May 1984 on the continuation of preparations for the Seventh Congress,

Recognizing the significant contributions of the congresses to the promotion and strengthening of international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Determined to improve regional, interregional and international co-operation and co-ordination to achieve further progress in the formulation and implementation of United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice policy,

Acknowledging the need to promote further governmental, professional and public awareness of the issues related to crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development, particularly during the preparatory phase of the Eighth Congress,

Conscious of the consensus expressed by the General Assembly in relation to the Milan Plan of Action and other resolutions and recommendations of the Seventh Congress of the need to keep national authorities involved in the preparations for the Eighth Congress,

Having considered the relevant recommendations made by the Committee at its ninth session and bearing in mind that, in accordance with paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 32/60, the Committee is entrusted with the function of preparing the quinquennial United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General on the preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

1. Approves the following provisional agenda for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, as recommended by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its ninth session

1. Opening of the Congress
2. Organizational matters
3. Crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development: realities and perspectives of international co-operation
4. Criminal justice policies in relation to problems of imprisonment, other penal sanctions and alternative measures
5. Effective national and international action against:
 - (a) organized crime
 - (b) terrorist criminal activities
6. Prevention of delinquency, juvenile justice and the protection of the young: policy approaches and directions
7. United Nations norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice: implementation and priorities for further standard setting
8. Adoption of the report of the Congress;
2. Decides that item 3 should be considered in plenary meeting, the remaining items being dealt with by two main committees;

3. Encourages Governments to make preparations for the Congress by all appropriate means, with a view to formulating national position papers, and to consider including national correspondents in Congress delegations;

4. Invites Member States to submit, for consideration by the Eighth Congress, information to the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Seventh Congress in order to ensure continuity between the congresses;

5. Invites also the regional commissions, national correspondents, regional and interregional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, specialized agencies and other entities within the United Nations system, concerned intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to become actively involved in the preparations for the Eighth Congress;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to ensure the successful undertaking of the preparatory activities for the Eighth Congress, as well as the success of the Congress itself, including the convening of the regional preparatory meetings and interregional meetings of experts in 1988 and 1989, and the commissioning of experts and consultants, selected with due regard to equitable geographical representation, to assist in the preparation of the necessary documentation and in the professional conduct of the proceedings of the Congress, in accordance with rule 60 of the provisional rules of procedure of the congresses and taking into account chapter IV of his report on the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in the organization of the Eighth Congress, to include the following activities:

(a) Lectures to be given by outstanding experts and scholars, taking into account the principle of equitable geographical distribution;

(b) A general meeting of national correspondents;

(c) Research workshops on appropriate topics related to the substantive items of the provisional agenda for the Eighth Congress, as an integral part of the Congress;

8. Recommends that adequate provision be made for the participation of the regional commissions in the eleventh session of the Committee and the Eighth Congress;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to facilitate the organization of:

(a) Ancillary meetings at the Congress site of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council concerning issues relating to substantive items of the provisional agenda for the Eighth Congress, in accordance with existing legislative regulations;

(b) Meetings of professional and geographical interest groups;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources to the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs in order to enable its Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to undertake, in an effective and timely manner, all the preparatory activities for the Eighth Congress;

11. Decides that the Chairman of the Committee should appoint special consultants from among the members of the Committee who may give advice on behalf of the Committee in respect of the regional and interregional preparatory meetings for the Eighth Congress;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to make available the necessary resources for the participation of the least developed countries in the regional preparatory meetings for the Congress and in the Congress itself;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide resources, as required, to ensure a wide and effective programme of public information related to the preparations for the Congress.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/49

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Committee on crime (E/1986/25), amended by 4 nations (E/1987/C2/L.9); agenda item 18.

Sponsors of amendments: Canada, Italy, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia. Financial implications. S-G, E/1986/L.18.

Review of UN functioning and programme of work

In response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in April 1987⁽⁴⁾ a review of the functioning and work programme of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice. Following a brief description of the world crime situation, he outlined current United Nations activities, examined the role of relevant United Nations bodies and reiterated the importance of international co-operation and co-ordination. He stated that priorities had been identified as follows: prevention and control of crimes of international dimensions; research and policy development in areas such as organized crime, terrorism, economic, industrial, environmental and technological offences, and drug trafficking; implementation of existing United Nations standards and formulation of new instruments; development of crime-related data bases and improved management of criminal justice systems; information sharing and dissemination, including the establishment of a global information network; and strengthening technical co-operation activities.

The Secretary-General proposed a number of recommendations as a response to the increase in crime in many parts of the world and the increasing transnationalization, drawn from a 1986 initial review,⁽⁶⁾ Economic and Social Council decisions on that review⁽⁷⁾ and subsequent inter-governmental and non-governmental consultations. The recommendations were that: Governments should accord high priority to the integration of crime prevention and criminal justice policies in national development planning; the quinquennial United Nations congresses on crime should recommend national, regional and international action; action-oriented research and the formulation of guidelines and policy options should be emphasized; technical co-operation should be strengthened through pilot projects, evaluation workshops, development of training modules and adoption by countries of joint strategies; more effective co-ordination should promote regional and interregional co-operation; closer collaboration should be pursued between the Secretariat and the regional institutes; a close working relationship should be established between the Secretariat and members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control; a global crime prevention and criminal justice network should be established; the capacity of the Secretariat should be strengthened to reflect its mandates; the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence (see p. 628) should be revitalized; closer co-operation and mobilization should be sought from NGOs and the professional community; and funding sources should be tapped more effectively.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/53 without vote.

Review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice under Economic and Social Council resolution 155 C (VII) of 13 August 1948, and General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950, the importance of which was recently reaffirmed by the General Assembly in resolution 41/107 of 4 December 1986,

Bearing in mind the objectives of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, inter alia, the reduction of criminality, encouragement of more efficient and effective administration of justice, observance of all human rights and promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Reaffirming the appeal to Member States and to the Secretary-General to make every effort to translate into action, as appropriate, the respective recommendations, policies and conclusions stemming from the Milan Plan of Action and other relevant resolutions and recommendations adopted unanimously by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and to ensure that they are adequately followed up,

Recognizing the pivotal role of the United Nations in promoting the exchange of information, experience and expertise and closer regional and interregional co-operation for more effective crime prevention and criminal justice strategies and policies,

Noting with concern that the resources available to the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat have decreased, while the commitments of the United Nations in this field have increased,

Recalling its resolutions 1986/10, 1986/11 and its decision 1986/129 of 21 May 1986, as well as General Assembly resolution 40/32 of 29 November 1985,

Bearing in mind its own responsibility to assist in establishing the necessary institutional linkages between the programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and other relevant United Nations activities,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Endorses the recommendations contained in paragraph 2 of the report and requests the Secretary-General and the bodies concerned to implement them;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, when implementing the measures and priorities in chapter III of the report:

(a) To develop the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat as a specialized body and facilitating agent in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, engaging the available resources of the United Nations system as well as relevant networks outside the United Nations;

(b) To accord priority attention to the prevention and control of the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action, including those of international dimensions;

(c) To strengthen technical co-operation projects on specific crime issues, action-oriented research and advisory services through the mobilization of the resources of the United Nations system and relevant networks outside the United Nations;

(d) To develop practical measures to assist those Member States that request it in developing crime prevention and criminal justice strategies, including the management of their criminal justice system, and in introducing crime prevention and criminal justice proposals in their national development plans;

(e) To devise strategies for the practical follow-up by the United Nations system of the decisions of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, and to assist Member States in implementing standards and norms adopted by the Organization and in evaluating their impact and effectiveness;

(f) To take measures, in co-operation with the United Nations institutes and other appropriate bodies, to establish an efficient information system on crime prevention and criminal justice which includes a mechanism for the centralization of inputs from non-governmental institutions;

(g) To develop diversified funding strategies, including recourse to voluntary and mixed multilateral and bilateral contributions for specific projects, and strengthen the involvement of the United Nations development agencies, including the United Nations Development Programme;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to ensure that the United Nations programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice is supported by adequate resources through, inter alia, appropriate redeployment of staff and funds, and to ensure that the specialized and technical nature of the programme and the high priority attached by Member States to crime prevention and criminal justice are fully reflected in the future management and staffing of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the optimal functioning of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/11 and invites the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to foster more active intersessional involvement of its members;

6. Encourages the Secretary-General to take further measures to strengthen the institutional linkages with the United Nations system between the programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and other relevant activities;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to further the already valuable co-operation with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including professional associations, taking particular advantage of their research, scientific, organizational and other resources;

8. Reaffirms the fundamental importance of the quinquennial congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders to progress in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice by providing unique opportunities for focusing on specific priority problems, as well as for assessing general trends and sharing perspectives, establishing norms and standards and evaluating their implementation, monitoring the results of the United Nations programme of work as a whole and setting priorities for action in the next quinquennium;

9. Stresses the need for adequate and cost-effective preparations for such congresses by the Secretary-General and Member States, including the appropriate scheduling of interregional preparatory meetings of experts, regional preparatory meetings and the timely circulation of papers prepared for the congresses;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to explore ways and means of supporting and further assisting the United Nations regional and interregional institutes for crime prevention and control, particularly the newly established African Regional Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, as well as the United Nations Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and of strengthening co-ordination between the institutes, and invites the United Nations Development Programme to continue to provide effective support and assistance to those institutes;

11. Invites Member States to include in the country programmes of the United Nations Development Programme indications of specific issues in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice for which they feel that assistance is needed;

12. Invites the regional commissions to consider the possibility of integrating appropriate elements of the programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice into their activities in the field of social development and strengthening their co-operation with United Nations regional institutes and other bodies that conduct regionally oriented activities in this field;

13. Invites Member States to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence in order to facilitate appropriate technical co-operation and exchange of information and experience in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1988 on the implementation of the present resolution and to provide information on crime prevention and criminal justice activities throughout the United Nations system, including activities at the regional level and those supported by extrabudgetary resources.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/53

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98/Add.1) without vote, 21 May (meeting 18); 17-nation draft (E/1987/C.2/L.10/Rev.1); agenda item 18. Sponsors: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bolivia, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, France, Greece, Haiti, Indonesia, Italy, Philippines, Spain, United Kingdom, Uruguay.

In the light of the approval of the revised text, the Second Committee decided to take no action on a draft resolution recommended by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in 1986.(3) By that draft, the Secretary-General would have been requested to recognize the need to ensure adequate resources for the United Nations programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice; to keep the Committee informed of significant changes in resources and of serious difficulties in implementing the programme; to bring forward to 1989 the Committee session scheduled for 1990, in order to enable the Committee to review the preparation of documentation for the 1990 Congress; and to review the pattern and number of other preparatory meetings, to help secure the most efficient use of resources and to incorporate expert inputs at an early stage.

UN Trust Fund for Social Defence

The United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence was established to strengthen United Nations work in social defence. In 1987, the Fund's income totalled $1,464,117, including $1,211,083 in pledged contributions. Total expenditures amounted to $1,063,827.

Noting in his April 1987 review of the functioning and work programme of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice(4) that the level of contributions to the Fund remained low, the Secretary-General said the Secretariat would explore new ways to secure more resources. Efforts would also be made to focus on the Trust Fund's potential with regard to developing an inventory of technical co-operation projects in crime prevention and criminal justice, which had been suggested in 1986 in the context of fostering more effective and practical technical co-operation modalities.

REFERENCES

- (1)YUN 1985,p. 738. (2)A/42/453. (3)YUN 1986, p. 622. (4)E/1987/43. (5)YUN 1985, p. 740, GA res. 40/32, 29 Nov. 1985. (6)YUN 1986, p. 619. (7)Ibid., p. 620, ESC res. 1986/11, 21 May 1986.

Cultural development

World Decade for Cultural Development

At its March 1987 session,(1) CCSQ(PROG) discussed co-ordination questions related to the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997), proclaimed in 1986.(2) It stated that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) was ready to act as lead agency in activities for the Decade. It noted that the United Nations system was not called upon to provide additional resources, but to identify ongoing or planned activities and programmes relevant to the objectives of the Decade. It requested organizations to designate focal points for contacts with UNESCO.

Restitution of cultural property

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1985 General Assembly request,(3) submitted in September 1987 a report(4) by the Director-General of UNESCO on the return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin.

The Director-General described UNESCO's efforts to implement the 1985 recommendations of the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation,(5) by promoting bilateral negotiations for the return or restitution of cultural property, international technical co-operation, steps to counter illicit traffic in cultural property and public information. The recommendations adopted by the Intergovernmental Committee at its fifth session (Paris, 27-30 April 1987) were appended to the report.

The Committee approved the final versions of the standard form concerning requests for return of restitutions and of the guidelines for its use. It recommended that UNESCO member States and the Director-General give priority to all activities promoting the development of museums and inventories, and it considered it urgent to prepare inventories not only of movable cultural property held by museums, religious buildings and similar institutions, but also of private collections. Means to curb illicit traffic in cultural property at the national, regional and international levels were suggested, as were activities in public information. The Director-General was asked to explore, for discussion by the Committee, the preparation of ethical standards addressed to art and antique dealers, and to consider drawing up conventions for the purpose of regional co-operation regarding the illicit movement of cultural property.

Communications. On 21 October 1987,(6) the German Democratic Republic drew attention to a statement describing continuing talks with Turkey on the return of cultural property and stating that the German Democratic Republic would return cuneiform tablets and continue negotiations on parts of a sphinx.

In their final communique, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 General Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October)(7) reaffirmed the right of all countries to protect their culture and safeguard their national heritage, and the right of non-aligned countries to the restitution of cultural property.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/7 by recorded vote.

Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3026 A (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 3148 (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3187 (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3391 (XXX) of 19 November 1975, 31/40 of 30 November 1976, 32/18 of 11 November 1977, 33/50 of 14 December 1978, 34/64 of 29 November 1979, 35/127 and 35/128 of 11 December 1980, 36/64 of 27 November 1981, 38/34 of 25 November 1983 and 40/19 of 21 November 1985,

Recalling also the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property adopted on 14 November 1970 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in co-operation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Noting with satisfaction that following its appeal other Member States have become parties to the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property,

Aware of the importance attached by the countries of origin to the return of cultural property which is of fundamental spiritual and cultural value to them, so that they may constitute collections representative of their cultural heritage,

Reaffirming the importance of inventories as an essential tool for the understanding and protection of cultural property and for the identification of dispersed heritage and as a contribution to the advancement of scientific and artistic knowledge and intercultural communication,

Deeply concerned at the clandestine excavations and the illicit traffic in cultural property that continue to impoverish the cultural heritage of all peoples,

Again supporting the solemn appeal made on 7 June 1978 by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the return of irreplaceable cultural heritage to those who created it,

1. Commends the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation on the work they have accomplished, in particular through the promotion of bilateral negotiations, for the return or restitution of cultural property, the preparation of inventories of movable cultural property, the reduction of illicit traffic in cultural property and the dissemination of information to the public;

2. Reaffirms that the restitution to a country of its objets d'art, monuments, museum pieces, archives, manuscripts, documents and any other cultural or artistic treasures contributes to the strengthening of international co-operation and to the preservation and flowering of universal cultural values through fruitful co-operation between developed and developing countries;

3. Recommends that Member States adopt or strengthen the necessary protective legislation with regard to their own heritage and that of other peoples;

4. Requests Member States to study the possibility of including in permits for excavations a clause requiring archaeologists and palaeontologists to provide the national authorities with photographic documentation of each object brought to light during the excavations immediately after its discovery;

5. Invites Member States to continue drawing up, in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, systematic inventories of cultural property existing in their territory and of their cultural property abroad;

6. Recommends that Member States should ensure that inventories of museum collections include not only the items on display but also those in storage, and that they comprise all necessary documentation, particularly photographs of each item;

7. Also invites Member States engaged in seeking the recovery of cultural and artistic treasures from the seabed, in accordance with international law, to facilitate by mutually acceptable conditions the participation of States having a historical and cultural link with those treasures;

8. Appeals to Member States to co-operate closely with the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation and to conclude bilateral agreements for this purpose;

9. Also appeals to Member States to encourage the mass information media and educational and cultural institutions to strive to arouse a greater and more general awareness with regard to the return or restitution of cultural property to its country of origin;

10. Requests States parties to the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property to keep the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization fully informed of the measures taken to ensure implementation of the Convention at the national level;

11. Welcomes the steady increase in the number of States parties to the Convention;

12. Invites once again those Member States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Convention;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin".

General Assembly resolution 42/7

22 October 1987 Meeting 47 103-0-15 (recorded vote)

20-nation draft (A/42/L.10 & Add.1); agenda item 20.

Sponsors: Benin, Central African Republic, Chad, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Egypt, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, Morocco, Oman, Rwanda, Senegal, Sudan, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Bahrain, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United Kingdom said it could not accept the principle that cultural property legitimately acquired should be returned to other countries; however, it condemned illicit trafficking in such property and was willing to discuss specific cultural property questions bilaterally with other Governments. Paragraph 2 of the text ran counter to its belief that the great international collections of art constituted a unique resource for the benefit of both the public and the international academic community.

Greece welcomed a statement by the United Kingdom that it would continue to discuss the restitution of the Parthenon marbles; as for the legality of the removal of the marbles, it was a historical question under debate among competent historians in many countries, including the United Kingdom.

The Federal Republic of Germany expressed reservations on several parts of the text; it held that UNESCO was the appropriate body to deal with the matter. France shared the fundamental objectives of the text and hoped that it could associate itself fully with the adoption of a future text.

The Syrian Arab Republic reserved its right to restore its cultural properties that had been expropriated by Israel and listed in Israeli registers in contravention of international law; it also reserved its right to demand the return of its cultural property.

Gabon proposed setting up a commission responsible for considering the legality of acquisition of cultural property; the terms and concepts concerned were so complicated that only a committee appointed to consider the matter would be capable of the necessary serious study.

REFERENCES

- (1)ACC/1987/5. (2)YUN 1986, p. 624, GA res. 41/187, 8 Dec. 1986. (3)YUN 1985, p. 758, GA res. 40/19, 21 Nov. 1985. (4)A/42/533. (5)YUN 1985, p. 757. (6)A/42/676. (7)A/42/681.

Chapter XIII

Population

World population reached more than 5 billion in 1987. Increasing by about 220,000 a day, it was expected to rise to 6 billion by the end of the century. On the "Day of the Five Billion"—11 July—the Secretary-General said there was cause for concern about the likely future of the 120 million children who would be born during the year. Nine out of 10 children were born in developing countries, those least able to provide adequate food, shelter, education and health care. Slowing population growth was a challenge which had to be met for the sake of the 5 billionth citizen and for the future of the planet.

The United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) assisted 2,756 technical co-operation projects—2,082 country and 674 regional and intercountry projects. It approved 376 new projects, amounting to $32.6 million, while completing 610 projects. Priority areas included family planning; information, education and communication; basic data collection; and the use of data for policy formulation and development planning. In April, Dr. Nafis I. Sadik was appointed as UNFPA Executive Director. Dr. Sadik became the first woman in the 41-year history of the United Nations to head one of its major voluntarily funded programmes. In December, the General Assembly approved changing the name of the Fund to the United Nations Population Fund, while retaining the abbreviation UNFPA.

In July, the Economic and Social Council asked the Secretary-General to enhance the coherence and harmonization of United Nations population activities (resolution 1987/72). It also asked him (1987/71) to strengthen interdisciplinary technical co-operation activities in the area of population, to continue monitoring world population trends and policies, and to formulate the medium-term plan on population activities for 1990-1995.

The fifth annual United Nations Population Award was presented to the President of Bangladesh and the National Family and Population Office of Tunisia.

Topics related to this chapter. Regional economic and social activities: population-Africa; Asia and the Pacific; Latin America and the Caribbean; Western Asia. Statistics: population and housing censuses.

Follow-up to the 1984 Conference on Population

Population Commission consideration. As part of the follow-up to the 1984 International Conference on Population,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1985⁽²⁾ and 1986,⁽³⁾ submitted two reports on population questions to the Council through the January/February 1987 session of the Population Commission. One report outlined the activities of the United Nations system in the field of population and the other dealt with monitoring multilateral population assistance (see p. 637).

UNFPA activities. The UNFPA Executive Director submitted to the Population Commission a review of the Fund's mandate, which gave an overview of the financial scope of its activities and examined its work programme in the context of the recommendations of the 1984 Conference.⁽⁴⁾ The report considered the following aspects of the UNFPA work programme: family planning; information, communication and education; basic data collection; utilization of population data and population research for policy formulation and development planning; and special programmes (women, aging and youth).

In conclusion, the Executive Director stated that UNFPA would continue its programme in accordance with the directives of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), focusing attention on countries given priority status in 1982.⁽⁵⁾ Criteria for selecting priority countries included an annual per capita gross national product of $500 or less, an annual population increase of 100,000 or more, a gross reproduction rate of 2.5 or more (number of daughters born to a mother), an infant mortality rate of 160 per 1,000 live births or above, and a density of two or more persons per hectare of arable land. Of the 53 countries classified as priority, 30 were in Africa, 16 in Asia and the Pacific, 5 in the Middle East and Mediterranean, and 2 in Latin America and the Caribbean.

A detailed Africa strategy paper to be submitted to the Governing Council (see p. 634) would concentrate on the requirements of the sub-Saharan countries and emphasize the need to build up a corps of trained personnel in all aspects of population work.

By sector, UNFPA would stress the need to create awareness of population levels and trends, work with countries to design and implement maternal and child health/child spacing counselling programmes and give special attention to women and population issues. The Fund would continue to utilize and strengthen local institutions and train country personnel. It would also continue to strengthen its network for co-ordinating population activities within the United Nations system with bilateral donors and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1986 Economic and Social Council request,(3) the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly, through the Council, on action taken with regard to reporting to the UNDP Governing Council and the Population Commission on population activities.(6) The report noted that the Population Commission, at its 1987 session, had considered reports by the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations system in the field of population and on the work of inter-governmental organizations and NGOs in implementing the 1974 World Population Plan of Action.(*) In 1986,(8) the UNDP Governing Council had decided to use Population Commission reports when discussing UNFPA-related questions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/72 without vote.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the International Conference on Population

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 39/228 of 18 December 1984,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 3(III) of 3 October 1946, 1985/4 and 1985/5 of 28 May 1985 and 1986/7 of 21 May 1986,

Having considered the report of the Population Commission on its twenty-fourth session and the reports of the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations system in the field of population and on the monitoring of multilateral population assistance,

Reaffirming the need to bring about a co-ordinated, effective and efficient strategy for the United Nations and the United Nations system in addressing population issues,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, on a regular basis, reports on the activities of the United Nations system in the field of population, on the work of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action and on the monitoring of multilateral population assistance;

2. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities to continue to submit to the Population Commission, on a regular basis, reports on the activities of the Fund;

3. Invites the Population Commission to review those reports, within its competence, and to transmit its views to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular sessions;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General, in order to enhance the coherence and harmonization of population activities in the United Nations system and increase the effectiveness of the work of organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in the field of population, to take the necessary steps to enable the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to review on a regular basis population activities and programmes within the United Nations system;

5. Invites the Secretary-General, with a view to securing balanced representation in the Population Commission of the various areas of technical and substantive expertise in the fields of population studies and population assistance, to consult with the Governments of the States members of the Commission, in conformity with paragraph 3 of Council resolution 3(III) and the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, before representatives are finally nominated by those Governments and confirmed by the Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/72

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/124) without vote, 2 July (meeting 22); draft by Population Commission (E/1987/16); agenda item 12.

In other action, the Council, by decision 1987/176 of 8 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report. (6)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly took note of the report in decision 42/434 of 11 December.

REFERENCES

(1)YUN 1984, 714. (2)YUN 1985, p. 762, ESC res. 1985/4, 28 May 1985. (3)YUN 1986, p. 627, ESC res. 1986/7, 21 May 1986. (4)E/CN.9/1987/5. (5)YUN 1982, p. 970. (6)A/42/302-E/1987/81. (7)YUN 1974, p. 552. (8)YUN 1986, p. 627.

UN Fund for Population Activities

UNFPA activities

The United Nations Fund for Population Activities continued in 1987 to focus on the priority areas designated by the UNDP Governing Council in 1981.(1) They included: family planning; information, education and communication; basic data collection; and the utilization of population data and research for policy formulation and development planning. Work also proceeded on such special programme interests as: women, population and development; youth; the question of aging; and acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS). The UNFPA Executive Director reported on those activities in her annual report to the UNDP Governing Council. (2)

Total UNFPA income in 1987 was $156.7 million, compared to $140 million in 1986. Project allocations totalled $133.7 million, including a $15.5 million carry-over from 1986, compared to $101.4 million in project expenditures in 1986. Expenditures were $140.6 million, compared to $132 million in 1986, and included $74.6 million for country programmes, $32.6 million for intercountry programmes, $5.6 million for field office costs and $18.7 million for the administrative budget. Agency support costs totalled $9.1 million ($8.8 million in 1986).

At year's end, UNFPA was assisting 2,756 projects—2,082 country and 674 regional and intercountry projects. In 1987, 610 projects were completed, bringing the cumulative total to 2,849.

Assistance to maternal and child health and family planning (MCH/FP) programmes totalled $73.3 million or 54.8 per cent of total allocations. While efforts were made to extend MCH/FP assistance to remote rural areas and urban slums in developing countries, the Fund gave special attention to the sub-Saharan Africa region, where the high prevalence of maternal and infant mortality required urgent international assistance. At all levels of MCH/FP programme development, UNFPA focused on training. The Regional Training Centre for Family Planning Health in Mauritius, for example, offered training programmes newly revised to include clinically oriented fertility management in both French and English.

With regard to improving contraceptive technologies, the bulk of UNFPA assistance in 1987 went to the research activities of the World Health Organization (WHO). Assistance also went to the Population Council to support the production and distribution of NORPLANT contraceptive subdermal implants. The International Organization for Chemical Sciences in Development received UNFPA assistance in its search for a male fertility regulation agent through chemical syntheses—13 laboratories world-wide were involved in the research.

In the light of the spread of the human immunodeficiency virus and its relationship with MCH/FP programmes, UNFPA was co-operating with the WHO Global Programme on AIDS. UNFPA participated in several meetings on issues such as the interaction between contraceptives and AIDS or between MCH/FP programmes and AIDS. A condom quality assurance audit was carried out during 1987 by six laboratories and the results were analysed by the Programme for the Introduction and Adaptation of Contraceptive Technology, an executing agency of UNFPA-supported programmes.

UNFPA assistance in the area of information, education and communication totalled $18.7 million or 14 per cent of all programme allocations. The main aim of such assistance was to facilitate informed decision-making regarding population issues by family members and leaders of society. The Fund was hard-pressed in 1987 to keep pace with demands for population information and education, particularly in Africa; to meet immediate needs, a number of prototype teachers' guides developed in Latin America were translated into English and French and distributed to African and Middle Eastern countries. The Fund continued to incorporate population education into agricultural extension systems in all regions, working closely with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). In that regard, a global FAO workshop was held (Rome, Italy, 18-22 May) to outline pilot projects in Egypt, Honduras, Jamaica, Kenya, Malawi, Morocco, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Tunisia. UNFPA continued to fund efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to generate communication activities in support of population programmes in some 30 countries.

Basic data collection received $10.5 million in assistance, or 7.9 per cent of all programme allocations. UNFPA support included assistance to 57 countries and territories for population censuses; to 14 countries for population surveys; to 15 countries for establishing or strengthening civil registration and vital statistics systems on pilot scales; and to 3 countries for other data collection activities. Support continued to be provided for demographic analysis and training in 1987, with UNFPA assisting 52 countries, 19 of which were in sub-Saharan Africa.

Some $24.8 million or 18.5 per cent of UNFPA assistance was devoted to programmes on population dynamics, formulation and evaluation of population policies and programmes and policy implementation. Those programme areas sought to create or strengthen the capacity of countries to undertake research and establish institutions for effective population policies. Activities included: analysis of socio-economic and demographic data; research on the determinants and consequences of fertility, mortality and migration; studies on the social and economic consequences of population trends, including migration, urbanization and employment; the interrelationship between population, environment, resources and development; the formulation and evaluation of population policies; and the integration of population factors into national development strategies.

Special programme interests—women, population and development, youth, aging and AIDS—totalled $3.6 million or 2.7 per cent of all programme allocations. In the women, population and development sector, 67 new projects were approved; most were aimed at providing women with educational training and improving their health and that of their families. The Fund assisted research into specific problems of youth, including an adolescence pregnancy survey and an inter-regional study project to help prevent adolescent pregnancies, promote reproductive health and encourage fertility-related education and service programmes. With other organizations, UNFPA was developing programmes to prevent and control AIDS among youth. The Fund continued to support a small number of projects that were examining the progressive aging of societies and the impact that it would have on their structure, functioning and development. UNFPA prepared policy guidelines in support of activities to prevent and control AIDS, including education on AIDS, increased distribution of condoms and protecting health workers from infection with the AIDS virus.

On 18 June,⁽³⁾ the UNDP Governing Council, after considering the Executive Director's report on UNFPA's 1986 activities,⁽⁴⁾ expressed satisfaction with the sound financial condition of the Fund, especially in view of the loss of the contribution from the traditional major donor, and urged all countries to increase their contributions. It noted with satisfaction the increase in both volume and percentage of UNFPA assistance to sub-Saharan Africa and its plans to assist Governments to strengthen their co-ordination machinery in the population area. It also reiterated that UNFPA should continue to allocate at least two thirds of country programme assistance to priority countries, and welcomed the Fund's intention to conduct a review of accumulated population experience within its mandate, as well as of its field and headquarters operations.

Country and intercountry programmes

In 1987, UNFPA continued to concentrate on the needs of 53 priority countries (see p. 631). Of the total resources allocated to country programmes in 1987 ($97 million), $67.8 million, or 70.2 per cent, was allocated to those countries.

Intercountry programmes (regional, inter-regional and global) totalled $37 million, or 27.7 per cent of all allocations.

On 18 June,⁽³⁾ the UNDP Governing Council approved UNFPA assistance to 31 multiyear large-scale country programmes, subject to the availability of funds. The countries were, by region: sub-Saharan Africa (Angola, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Congo, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, United Republic of Tanzania); Asia and the Pacific (Malaysia, Sri Lanka, Thailand); Latin America and the Caribbean (Honduras); Middle East and Mediterranean (Democratic Yemen, Morocco, Somalia, Sudan, Tunisia, Yemen).

The Council also approved a $3.95 million global training programme in population and development.

Strategy for sub-Saharan Africa

In response to a 1986 UNDP Governing Council request,⁽⁵⁾ the UNFPA Executive Director submitted in March 1987 a report on a strategy for UNFPA assistance in sub-Saharan Africa.⁽⁶⁾ The Council's request had been made in the light of the General Assembly's 1986 special session on the critical economic situation in Africa.⁽⁷⁾

The report stated that, of the 45 countries that made up sub-Saharan Africa, 32 were designated as priority countries for UNFPA assistance. Sub-Saharan Africa had the fastest-growing population in the world. According to United Nations estimates, its population had increased from about 224 million in 1950 to 555 million in 1985, and was projected to reach 696 million by the end of the century and 1.4 billion by the year 2025. Population in the region was expected to treble during the next 40 years, while that of other developing countries would not quite double. The average number of children per woman was 6.3 compared to 4.1 for the developing world as a whole, infant mortality was 112 per 1,000 live births compared to 85 per 1,000 and life expectancy at birth was 49 years compared to 57 years.

UNFPA proposed a strategy, the objectives of which were to: improve knowledge and understanding of population issues; encourage Governments to develop population policies and initiate effective programmes; and strengthen the capacity of countries to integrate population programmes into overall economic and social development programmes.

As part of its strategy, UNFPA selected four major goals: intensifying public information, education and communication programmes to encourage attitudinal change; encouraging the integration of population into development planning; supporting birth spacing/family planning information and service programmes; and improving the status of women.

The report concluded with the operational implications of pursuing such a strategy, focusing on such questions as programme support, programme formulation and implementation, human resources development, programme management and co-ordination, and the role of UNFPA field offices.

On 18 June,⁽⁸⁾ the Governing Council noted with satisfaction the objectives and goals of UNFPA's strategy. It asked the Executive Director to increase human and financial resources to African countries for the strategy's successful implementation and to report in 1988 on steps taken and on short- and long-term requirements. Countries were urged to increase their contributions in 1987 and future years. The Executive Director was also asked to support and strengthen African training institutions in the area of population and development and to assist Governments to set up training programmes for mid- and lower-level managers at national and subregional levels. At the request of African Governments, the Executive Director was further asked to increase support for innovative projects initiated or implemented by NGOs, particularly national NGOs.

Work programmes

In her report on the work plan for 1988-1991 and request for approval authority,⁽⁹⁾ the UNFPA Executive Director took the 1987 estimated income of $145 million as the base and assumed a constant annual increase of 6 per cent for the four-year period. Under that scenario, a total income of $672.4 million was expected—$153.7 million for 1988, $163 million for 1989, $172.7 million for 1990 and $183 million for 1991. After deductions for operational costs and additions to the operational reserve, programmable resources were expected to total $502 million for the four years ($114.9 million for 1988, $122.2 million for 1989, $128.7 million for 1990 and $136.2 million for 1991).

The income estimates for the period did not include a contribution from the United States, which had withdrawn support from UNFPA starting in 1986.

In another report,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Executive Director gave the status of financial implementation of Governing Council-approved UNFPA country programmes and projects, including details of expenditures and allocations to those programmes and projects by year, region and country.

On 18 June,⁽³⁾ the UNDP Governing Council approved the work plan for 1988-1991. It also authorized the net additional approval authority in accordance with the work plan in the amounts of: $30 million for 1988, to bring the total for 1988 to 100 per cent of the 1988 level, or $153.7 million; $32.8 million for 1989, to bring the total for 1989 to 75 per cent of the 1988 level, or $115.3 million; $35.7 million for 1990 to bring the total for 1990 to 50 per cent of the 1988 level, or $76.9 million; and $38.4 million for 1991 to bring the total for 1991 to 25 per cent of the 1988 level.

Women, population and development

In response to a 1986 UNDP Governing Council request,⁽⁵⁾ the UNFPA Executive Director submitted in March 1987 a report on an implementation strategy to strengthen the capacity of the Fund to deal with issues concerning women, population and development. (11) The report provided background information on the conceptual issues concerning the interrelationship between efforts to improve the situation of women and those to achieve population and general development objectives, and gave examples of the Fund's past activities in that area.

Describing the new strategy, the report said it would cover the period 1987-1990 and would involve every aspect of the work of the Fund and its headquarters and field staff. The objective was the complete integration of women's concerns into all population activities and the increased participation of women in Fund-supported projects. Training for all levels of staff, participation of all organizational units within the Fund and increased co-operation and joint activities with other United Nations agencies were identified as essential elements.

UNFPA said its strategy should be considered only as a framework for action, since government decisions invariably took into account differing political and socio-economic conditions, cultural and traditional attitudes, availability of resources and national capability to implement the decisions. At the same time, the Fund planned to initiate a dialogue with Governments to enhance their understanding of the importance of women's involvement for the success of their population policies and programmes, of the effects of those policies on women and of the Fund's willingness to assist in developing policies and implementing them.

The report outlined a work plan for each year of the strategy and described required inputs: management support, strengthening of the Special Unit for Women, and resource requirements for the period 1988-1990, estimated at $500,000 for each year.

On 18 June,⁽³⁾ the Governing Council endorsed the proposed four-year work plan and the Executive Director's decision to give the Special Unit for Women an adequate status in the Fund's organizational structure. The Executive Director was urged to ensure the accountability of all staff for the strategy's implementation and to take measures to facilitate its full and prompt implementation, including providing human and financial resources to the Unit and ensuring heightened awareness and training of the Fund's entire staff. The Council asked the Executive Director to report in 1989 and 1991 on the strategy's implementation.

Programme planning and evaluation

During 1987, a number of independent, in-depth evaluations were undertaken of UNFPA-assisted projects and programmes.⁽¹²⁾ The country programme for the United Republic of Tanzania was evaluated by a January/February mission; the results were fed directly into the preparation of the second country programme, which was a proved by the Governing Council in June.(3) A June/July mission evaluated the UNFPA-supported WHO interregional programme 1984-1986 comprising seven projects, of which four were analysed. Two comparative evaluations were also carried out during the year. In May/June, a mission visited Brazil, Honduras, Mexico and Panama to evaluate the UNFPA contribution to MCH/FP training in Latin America and the Caribbean. A mission visited Bangladesh, China, Fiji, New Caledonia and Thailand in August/September to evaluate population and development planning in Asia and the Pacific; other regional reports on the subject and a global study would follow.

In a February 1987 report,(13) prepared in response to a 1986 Governing Council request,(14) the Executive Director described procedures for feedback and follow-up of evaluations of individual projects and outlined a proposed system for analysis and use of results. A system had been developed that would include: collection of reports; analysis and identification of potential lessons; classification of the lessons; computerization; analysis and synthesis of lessons; feedback of results; and follow-up and use of results. After about a year of operation, it was expected that there should be sufficient information in the evaluation data base to make possible meaningful analyses of the results.

On 18 June,(3) the Governing Council endorsed the proposed system for feedback and use of evaluation results, and requested the Executive Director to provide resources for the finalization of the system by the end of 1987 and to report on its finalization and initial implementation in 1988.

Financial and administrative questions

Financial situation

On 1 January 1987, UNFPA's balance was $15,489,054. During the year, the Fund received income of $156,050,357 and had expenditures of $140,476,802, which resulted in an excess of income over expenditures of $15,573,555. The Fund's balance as at 31 December was $24,062,609; unspent 1987 allocations totalled $26,707,852.

Budget for 1988- 1989

In April 1987,(15) the UNFPA Executive Director submitted to the UNDP Governing Council the budget estimates for administrative and programme support services for the 1988-1989 biennium.

The total biennial budget amounted to $55.3 million compared to $49 million in 1986-1987, an increase of 12.8 per cent reflecting cost increases of $4 million at headquarters and $2.3 million in the field.

On 19 June,(16) the Council approved appropriations of $59,523,700 gross to finance the 1988-1989 biennial budget for administrative and programme support services and agreed that overhead credits available in the amount of some $3,800,000 and miscellaneous income from trust funds for support services of $400,000 should be used to offset gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $55,323,700. The Executive Director was authorized to transfer credits between programmes within reasonable limits, with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), and was asked to report thereon to the Council.

Contributions

During 1987, 77 countries and Territories paid a total of $149.4 million in voluntary contributions to UNFPA, compared with $156.4 million from 78 countries and Territories in 1986. This figure, together with additions and adjustments to pledges for prior years, exchange-rate and currency revaluation adjustments, interest, donations and other miscellaneous income, gave a total 1987 income of $156 million. Pledges for 1988 and future years totalled $132 million from 83 countries and Territories.

On 18 June,(3) the UNDP Governing Council noted the sound financial condition of the Fund in 1986, especially in view of the loss of its traditional major donor's contribution. It urged all countries able to do so to increase their contributions in 1987 and future years and to make their payments as early as possible.

Accounts for 1986

The Board of Auditors made a number of observations and recommendations following its audit of the UNFPA financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1986.(17)

On 11 December, by resolution 42/206, the General Assembly accepted the UNFPA financial report. UNFPA was asked to take steps to correct the situations that gave rise to the qualified opinion of the Board of Auditors.

Staffing

In her biennial budget estimates for the administrative and programme support services for the 1988-1989 biennium,(15) the UNFPA Executive Director said that ACABQ comments and the directions of the UNDP Governing Council on the rationalization of staffing at headquarters and in the field had been taken into account. Accordingly, during the 1986-1987 biennium, UNFPA had striven to finalize the regularization of its staffing patterns.

The Fund had reduced the ratio of administrative and support service costs to total programme costs, cutting its headquarters and Geneva Professional staff from 103 to 95 and proposing the transfer of two headquarters posts to field offices in Africa in 1988-1989. That would yield a net reduction of almost 10 per cent of the staff at headquarters and Geneva. The Fund had also reduced its General Service staff at headquarters from 138 to 124.

On 19 June,⁽¹⁶⁾ the UNDP Governing Council approved the transfer of 31 General Service temporary posts at headquarters to the category of established, regular posts in the administrative and programme support services budget as well as the establishment, in that budget for the biennium 1988-1989, of nine international programme officer posts in countries in which a deputy UNFPA representative had been posted. The Council also decided to include in that budget, on a temporary basis, 289 local posts, with all corresponding posts currently financed by project funds to be abolished. The Executive Director was asked, bearing in mind field programme priorities, particularly assistance to sub-Saharan Africa, to undertake and submit in 1988 a review of overall staffing requirements in the field and at headquarters. The Council approved the results of a UNFPA/UNDP job classification exercise and decided that its implementation, effective from 1 January 1988, should be subject to the outcome of the overall staffing review.

Change of name

On 18 June,⁽¹⁸⁾ the UNDP Governing Council proposed to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, as suggested by the UNFPA Executive Director, that the formal title of UNFPA be changed to the United Nations Population Fund, while retaining the acronym UNFPA.

On 8 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/175, recommended that the Assembly approve the name change.

On 11 December, the Assembly approved the change in decision 42/430.

Tribute to Rafael M. Salas

On 28 May,⁽¹⁹⁾ the UNDP Governing Council noted with sorrow the death of Rafael M. Salas on 3 March 1987. Mr. Salas had been Executive Director of UNFPA since its operations began in 1969. The Council acknowledged his unique contribution to the acceptance world-wide of population as an integral component of development plans and programmes, and expressed its condolences to his family

(1)YUN 1981, p. 782. (2)DP/1988/32 (Parts I & II). (3)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/30). (4)YUN 1986, p. 628. (5)YUN 1986, p. 629. (6)P/1987/37. (7)YUN 1986, p. 442. (8)E/1987/25 dec. 87/32. (9)DP/1987/34. (10)DP/1987/35. (11)DP/1987/38. (12)DP/1988/36. (13)DP/1987/39. (14)YUN 1986, p. 631. (15)DP/1987/41 & Corr.1. (16)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/31). (17)A/42/5/Add.7. (18)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/33). (19)ibid. (dec. 87/29).

Other population activities

Population Commission

The Population Commission, at its twenty-fourth session in New York from 28 January to 6 February 1987,⁽¹⁾ considered the implementation of the recommendations of the 1974 World Population Conference,^(*) follow-up of the recommendations of the 1984 International Conference on Population,⁽³⁾ the programme of work in population for 1988-1989 and implementation of the programme budget for 1986-1987. Issues discussed included world demographic analysis, demographic estimates and projections, population policies, population and development, monitoring of population trends and policies, factors affecting patterns of reproduction, dissemination — of population information, technical co-operation and demographic statistics.

On 8 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/177, took note of the Commission's report on its twenty-fourth session and, by decision 1987/174, approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its twenty-fifth (1989) session.

Population work programme

In response to a 1986 Economic and Social Council request,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an overview of population activities carried out by various organizations of the United Nations system.⁽⁵⁾

The overview covered socio-economic development, the environment and population; the role and status of women; development of population policies; population goals; and the promotion of knowledge and policy. The institutional framework and legislative background, organizational structure and resources, and co-ordination of population activities within the United Nations system were described.

In a report on the monitoring of multilateral population assistance,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the proposed monitoring system would be based on the current United Nations Standard Classification of Population Activities, a set of substantive categories of operational activities.

Eight areas were used as primary descriptors: basic data collection activities; population dynamics (mainly demographic research and training); formulation and evaluation of population policies and programmes; implementation of population policies; family planning; population information, education and communication; special programmes (for women, youth, the aged); and multisector activities. Population assistance was defined as assistance undertaken for its expected impact on population growth and distribution or age structure. The first monitoring report, covering 1985-1988 and presenting assistance by substantive area and by geographical regions and subregions, was planned for 1989.

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Population Commission reports on the progress of work of the United Nations Secretariat in the area of population, 1985-1986. One report,⁽⁷⁾ describing progress achieved by the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, covered its activities in world demographic analysis, demographic projections, population policies, population and development, monitoring and review and appraisal, factors affecting patterns of reproduction and dissemination of information. The other report⁽⁸⁾ gave an account of technical co-operation activities carried out by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1986. It considered support of projects in: training in demography and population; evaluation and analysis of population and demographic data; and population policy planning and development planning. Analysis and evaluation of technical co-operation activities were also considered. In addition, DIED participation in follow-up activities to the 1984 International Conference on Population⁽³⁾ was outlined. Those activities were carried out with the financial support of UNFPA and UNDP.

Technical co-operation

The Secretary-General, in a report to the UNDP Governing Council on the 1987 technical co-operation programme of DTCD,⁽⁹⁾ said the Department had 98 population projects with total budgets of $8.5 million under execution during the year. Of the total budgets, 34 per cent were for Africa, 22 per cent for Asia and the Pacific, 9 per cent for the Americas and 35 per cent for the Mediterranean, Middle East and interregional programmes.

Population and development training and related research included activities at the country level and at the Cairo Demographic Centre and the United Nations/USSR Interregional Training and Research Programme in Population and Development. The use of microcomputer software for demographic analysis increased the ability of country programmes to conduct policy-oriented research.

In population dynamics, increased use was also made of computers in completing the analysis of the 1980 round of censuses and in preparing population projections. The dissemination of census results through publications, meetings of policy-makers, technical seminars and workshops was made an integral part of the census analysis programme. Computer packages assembled and distributed by DTCD were used extensively to evaluate data, estimate fertility and mortality levels, construct life-tables and compute population projections. Projects also provided on-the-job training to many nationals through their participation in census analysis, preparation of analytical reports and seminars, leading to an improvement in the capacity of Governments to execute their own projects in population dynamics.

In the area of population policy and development, DTCD assisted some 25 countries to analyse the relationship between demographic variables and socio-economic factors, to define population policies and to integrate population variables into the national development planning process. A number of seminars and workshops at national and interregional levels in population policy and development were organized in the context of country projects, including a training seminar at the Institute of Political Science in Paris for French-speaking participants and an interregional symposium in Rwanda.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/71, without vote.

Work programme in the field of population

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3344(XXIX) and 3345(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, concerning the recommendations of the World Population Conference, and 39/228 of 18 December 1984 on the International Conference on Population,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1981/28 of 6 May 1981 on the strengthening of actions concerned with the fulfilment of the World Population Plan of Action, 1985/3 on population structure, 1985/4 on the implications of the recommendations of the International Conference on Population, 1985/5 on the work programme in the field of population and 1985/6 on the status and role of women and population, all of 28 May 1985, and 1986/7 of 21 May 1986 on population questions,

Stressing the supportive role of the work programmes of the United Nations system in the field of population in the attainment of the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and the pursuit of goals of economic co-operation,

Having reviewed the preamble, the section on peace, security and population, and the other sections of the recommendations for the further implementation of the World Population Plan of Action adopted by the International conference on Population, at which it was reaffirmed that the principles and objectives of the World Population Plan of Action remained fully valid and that creating conditions for international peace and security was of great importance for the achievement of the goals of population policies and economic and social development and at which emphasis was placed on a number of issues in the field of population that should continue to be included in the work programme, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the important role of the Population Commission as the advisory body of the Economic and Social Council on population matters,

Taking note of the report of the Population Commission on its twenty-fourth session and the views expressed therein on the progress made in implementing the work programme for the biennium 1986-1987 and the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989,

1. Notes with satisfaction the progress made in implementing the work programme for the biennium 1986-1987 and the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to formulate the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995 taking into account, as appropriate, the views expressed at the twenty-fourth session of the Population Commission and, inter alia, the guidelines for the work programmes of the United Nations Secretariat contained in paragraphs 3 and 4 below;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue vigorously the monitoring of world population trends and policies and to prepare the review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action;

(b) To continue the work programmes on the following:

- (i) Socio-economic development and population;
 - (ii) Interrelationships between the status and role of women and population;
 - (iii) Population policies, including the Sixth Population Policy Inquiry among Governments;
 - (iv) Analytical studies with respect to demographic target-setting;
 - (v) Estimates and projections of population;
 - (vi) Mortality analysis;
 - (vii) Fertility and family planning;
 - (viii) Urbanization and internal and international migration;
 - (ix) Consequences of changes in population and household structure;
 - (x) Development of the Population Information Network (POPIN), including information services on available software;
- (c) To continue to work closely with Member States, other organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, in the implementation of programmes;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue and to strengthen interdisciplinary technical co-operation activities in the field of population in the following areas:

- (i) Training in demography and population-and-development matters, including short-term specialized training, particularly in the use of microcomputer programmes;

- (ii) Evaluation and analysis of basic population data, particularly with respect to the 1990 round of population censuses, use of computer programs, and dissemination of data and their utilization in national development planning;
- (iii) Formulation of population policy and its integration in development planning, especially through the strengthening of national institutional mechanisms for research, in-service training and documentation;

(b) To continue to analyse, evaluate and publish studies on experience with technical co-operation activities in population;

5. Re-emphasizes the importance of maintaining the scope, effectiveness and efficiency of the global population programme and of continuing to strengthen co-ordination and collaboration among the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, the regional commissions, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and other organizations of the United Nations system in the planning and execution of their population programmes, as well as the need for organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen collaboration and co-ordination as appropriate, with other intergovernmental, non-governmental and national organizations concerned.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/71

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/124) without vote, 2 July (meeting 22); draft by Population Commission (E/1987/16); agenda item 12.

Population trends and policies

In response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council request, (10) the Secretary-General submitted, through the Population Commission, a concise report on the monitoring of population trends and policies. (11) Trends discussed included population growth, fertility, mortality, population structure, urbanization and internal migration, international migration and the implications of population growth for development. Changes in selected demographic indicators, 1985-2025, were projected in a statistical annex.

By decision 1987/176 of 8 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

The Population Commission also had before it a note by the Secretary-General (12) on the preparations for the third review and appraisal of progress towards implementation of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action, (13) scheduled for 1989. The note provided information on the legislative background and the objectives of and arrangements for the review and appraisal and discussed a number of activities relevant to them that were being carried out within the United Nations system.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1987/71, asked the Secretary-General to continue to monitor world population trends and policies and to prepare the review and appraisal of the Plan of Action.

Population and the environment

By resolution 42/186 of 11 December, the General Assembly adopted the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond. The Perspective contained a section on population issues and recommended action to be taken at the national and international levels.

UN Population Award

In a note to the General Assembly,(14) the Secretary-General transmitted a report by the UNFPA Executive Director on the 1987 United Nations Population Award. A total of 19 nominations had been received by the Committee for the Award. On 13 February 1987, the Committee announced that the President of Bangladesh, Hussein Muhammad Ershad, and the National Family and Population Office of Tunisia had been chosen as recipients of the 1987 Award. The Secretary-General presented a diploma, a gold medal and $10,000 to each of the recipients on 10 June in New York.

The Trust Fund for the United Nations Population Award stood at $447,922 as at 1 January 1987. Interest income amounted to $32,283 during the year, while expenditures totalled $24,066.

As at 31 December 1987, the Fund balance stood at $456,139.

On 26 May, the Economic and Social Council, in the light of a 1986 General Assembly decision,(15) adopted decision 1987/129, amending the rules of procedure of the Committee for the Award so that, if the Committee should decide to make the Award to more than one nominee, it should select no more than two individuals, or no more than two institutions, or no more than one individual and one institution.

REFERENCES

- (1)E/1987/16. (2)YUN 1974, p. 550. (3)YUN 1984, p. 714. (4)YUN 1986, p. 627, ESC res. 1986/7, 21 May 1986. (5)e/1987/4. (6)E/1987/5. (7)E/CN.9/1987/3. (8)E/CN.9/1987/3/Add.1. (9)DP/1988/45/Add.1. (10)YUN 1985, p. 762, ESC res. 1985/4, 28 May 1985. (11)E/1987/3. (12)E/CN.9/1987/2. (13)YUN 1974, p. 552. (14)A/43/336. (15)YUN 1986, p. 633, GA dec. 41/445, 5 Dec. 1986.

PUBLICATIONS

World Population Policies, vol. I (ST/ESA/SER.A/102), Sales No. E.87.XIII.4. Demographic Yearbook, 1987 (ST/ESA/STAT/SER.R/17), Sales No. E/F.88.XIII.1. World Population Trends and Policies, 1987 Monitoring Refmrt-Special Report—Special Topics: Fertility and Women's Life Cycle and Socio-economic differentials in Mortality (ST/ESA/SER.A/103), Sales No. E.88.XIII.3. Population Bulletin of the United Nations, 23/24—1987 (ST/ESA/SER.N/23-24), Sales No. E.88.XIII.5.

Chapter XIV

Health and human resources

United Nations bodies and agencies continued in 1987 to promote health issues and human resources development.

Health issues included effects of pollution, diseases and undernutrition; an estimated 1 billion people were exposed to high air pollution levels, while the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)-continuing its dramatic spread-was projected to strike 3 million people by 1992. Following the adoption of a global strategy on AIDS by the World Health Assembly in May, the Economic and Social Council, in July, called on States to take active measures to prevent and control AIDS in line with the strategy (resolution 1987/75). The General Assembly, in October, confirmed that the World Health Organization (WHO) should continue to direct and co-ordinate the urgent global battle against AIDS (resolution 42/8). In December, the Assembly decided to observe the fortieth anniversary of WHO in 1988 in a manner befitting its achievements and future role in international health (42/168).

Efforts continued to implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons. In May, the Council urged the Secretary-General to enable a global meeting of experts to evaluate progress at the mid-point of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992) (1987/43). The meeting, which took place in August, made a number of recommendations for action during the remainder of the Decade. The Assembly, in November, requested Member States and relevant United Nations organs and bodies to submit their comments on those recommendations; it reaffirmed the validity of the Programme of Action and urged Member States to rededicate themselves to its implementation (42/58).

The Council, in July, reaffirmed the need for an integrated and multidisciplinary approach to all aspects of the development of human resources in the United Nations programme of work (1987/81). The Council also took note of a proposal by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to observe an international literacy year (1987/80). In December, the Assembly proclaimed 1990 as International Literacy Year (42/104).

The United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) remained in a difficult financial situation in 1987. In December, the Assembly, stressing that every effort should be made to continue UNITAR's activities, requested the Secretary-General to restructure the Institute to make training the main focus of its activities, with the core training programme to concentrate on international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy (42/197). In the light of the restructured programme, the Institute's management, staff and administrative and financial arrangements were to be reorganized.

At the United Nations University (UNU), a new Rector took office in September. UNU continued its research and training activities under nine programme areas covering a wide spectrum of subjects.

Topics related to this chapter. Regional economic and social activities: Africa-human resources development. Environment: environment and health; protection against harmful products. Human rights: human rights of disabled persons. Women: women and development.

Health

Human and environmental health

A vast number of pollutants-chemical, physical and biological-continued in 1987 to create serious hazards for human and environmental health, a question dealt with by several United Nations bodies and agencies, including WHO, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO).

According to a WHO/UNEP study, an estimated 600 million people lived in areas where the level of sulphur dioxide was unacceptable from a health point of view, while 1 billion people were exposed to high levels of suspended particle matter caused by pollutants from the combustion of coal, wood and oil and dust from motor traffic. A result of the WHO/UNEP Global Environmental Monitoring System (see p. 696), the study was based on information on air quality available from 50 countries, representing a cross-section of climatic, development and pollution situations.

In June,⁽¹⁾ the Governing Council of UNEP called for co-operation with WHO, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and other relevant United Nations organizations to develop methodologies for evaluating the role of health and environment protection in production and productivity strategies. The Council requested the Executive Director to continue to give high priority to activities related to health and the environment.

WHO set out a global strategy to control environmental health hazards at an interregional meeting at Geneva in May. Suggesting action to strengthen national capabilities for pollution control and to solve specific environmental problems affecting health, the global strategy was also used to develop an eastern Mediterranean strategy. Priorities were outlined for the African region, and in South-East Asia WHO initiated an inter-country project for the control of environmental pollutants and toxic chemicals with support from UNDB. In Europe, WHO sponsored studies on the neurotoxicity of lead in children, on the health effects of polychlorinated biphenyls, dioxin and related compounds in human milk, and on the health effects of long-term exposure to organophosphorus pesticides. Studies on exposure to indoor air pollution from the use of biomass fuels were carried out in the Gambia and Kenya in relation to respiratory infections. The use of epidemiology in the control of environmental hazards was promoted at seminars and consultations during which plans were also developed for new activities at the regional level. An environmental epidemiology network was established, linking some 500 researchers in over 50 Member States.

Following the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear accident, (*) FAO, in January 1987, issued recommendations for acceptable levels of radioactive contamination of food in international trade. A WHO task group, meeting at Geneva in September, finalized guidelines on derived intervention levels to control exposure from contaminated food aimed at strengthening national authorities' ability to cope with widespread radioactive contamination resulting from a major accident. A network of WHO collaborating centres was being established for the provision of emergency assistance to over-exposed persons, and the environmental radiation monitoring network was expanded to cover emergency events. A WHO working group (Geneva, November) explored mechanisms for harmonizing public health action in relation to nuclear accidents among the European countries.

The WHO/ILO/UNEP International Programme on Chemical Safety continued to concentrate on evaluating the risks to human health and the environment of exposure to potentially toxic chemicals, with a view to enabling Member States particularly the rapidly industrializing developing ones to identify, assess and manage the risks associated with the growing use of chemicals. Under the Programme, WHO published in 1987 nine new reports in the environmental health criteria series, providing a basis for regulatory activities.

UNEP'S International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (see p. 698) continued to facilitate access to information on chemicals for hazard assessment, risk evaluation and their subsequent elimination and control, involving partners in Governments, research establishments, international and non-governmental organizations and industry.

The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts for the Exchange of Information on Potentially Harmful Chemicals in International Trade, in particular pesticides, at its third session, adopted the London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade (see p. 697). The UNEP Governing Council, in June, endorsed the Guidelines. (3)

The Joint ILO/WHO Committee on Occupational Health, at its tenth session, discussed the epidemiology of work-related accidents and diseases. ILO also published codes of practice on safety, health and working conditions in the transfer of technology to developing countries and on radiation protection of workers.

The World Commission on Environment and Development, in its report entitled "Our Common Future", transmitted to the General Assembly in August, (4) stated that good health was the foundation of human welfare and productivity, and that a broad-based health policy was essential for sustainable development. Links between development, environmental conditions and health included air pollution and the respiratory illnesses it caused, the impact of housing conditions on the spread of tuberculosis, the effects of carcinogens and toxic substances and the exposure to hazards in the workplace and elsewhere. The Commission recommended that WHO's Global Strategy for Health for All by the Year 2000 be broadened beyond the provision of medical workers and clinics, to cover health-related interventions in all development activities.

By resolution 42/187, the General Assembly welcomed the report of the World Commission. By resolution 42/186, it adopted the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, detailing issues, outlooks and goals and recommending action in six main sections, one of which dealt with health and human settlements.

Health and nutrition

During 1987, UNU (see p. 658) continued its programme on food, nutrition, biotechnology and poverty. Work aimed to strengthen the scientific data base for research on nutrition-related issues, analyse the social and economic effects of inadequate nutrition and develop tools for the evaluation of nutrition policies and programmes. Priority was given to research in biotechnology, designed to address specific needs in developing countries. Through its training and publications programme, UNU sought to strengthen the capacity of institutions in those countries to carry out research, training and policy formulation in food and nutrition.

UNU continued to investigate the social and economic effects of chronic undernutrition, estimated by WHO to affect some 600 million to 800 million people world-wide. Data collected in 1987 in UNU research projects in China, Colombia, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand documented a decrease in physical activity in undernourished persons and analysed some of the consequences. The International Dietary Energy Consultative Group met for the first time in August, sponsored by UNU and the Sub-Committee on Nutrition of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). Representatives of WHO and FAO participated in the meeting, along with leading researchers from 16 countries. In a joint project with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), UNU enlisted scientists to study the effects of nutrition and primary health care programmes on the knowledge, attitudes and health-seeking behaviour of people in developing countries. During the year, researchers working in 15 countries tested and refined a set of methodologies for field assessments. A workshop held in Sri Lanka finalized a publication on the project's methodology. Through the international network of food data systems (INFOODS), UNU, with the Sub-Committee on Nutrition, WHO and FAO, sought to implement a comprehensive approach to the problem of the quantity, quality and availability of food composition data. It published the first issue of a new quarterly, Journal of Food Composition and Analysis, and four issues of the INFOODS Newsletter as well as a directory for researchers, Food Composition Data: A User's Perspective.

Jointly with the Fundación Cavendes of Venezuela, UNU organized a workshop on nutritional guidelines (Caracas, November). A workshop (Bangkok, Thailand, February) reviewed the progress of research in four projects, comprising UNU activity in biotechnology.

ACC activities. The ACC Sub-Committee on Nutrition continued in 1987 to monitor the five priority areas of its work: the report on the world nutrition situation, nutritional surveillance, co-ordination of an agreement on research priorities to tackle the major nutrient deficiencies, the proposed convening of an international symposium on nutrition programmes, and improvement of exchange of information.⁽⁵⁾ The Sub-Committee met in Washington, DC., from 2 to 6 March,⁽⁶⁾ holding as part of its thirteenth session symposia on urbanization and nutrition and on co-ordination of nutrition programmes in practice. It urged that United Nations bodies and bilateral and non-governmental organizations be encouraged to support developing countries in incorporating nutrition concerns into their adjustment policies, and that research institutions in all countries be encouraged to promote studies that would further the understanding of the relationship between adjustment policies and their impact on the nutritional status of different population groups. The Sub-Committee also endorsed a 10-year programme for prevention and control of iodine-deficiency disorders. In the absence of a lead agency, it decided to set up a tripartite working group to help launch the programme. Following the Sub-Committee's decision to give priority to the topic of nutritional surveillance, a proposal for a five-year programme with a budget of $10 million was noted by the UNICEF Executive Board in March. The Report on the World Nutrition Situation, reviewed by the Sub-Committee, was issued in November.

The Inter-agency Programme in Nutritional Surveillance, implemented by FAO, UNICEF and WHO, with the Sub-Committee acting as focal point for co-ordination for the first two years, aimed at supporting institutions in 40 developing countries to improve the availability and use of nutritional information for national policy-making and programming. The information was also to be used to monitor nutritional effects of economic adjustment to raise awareness of that issue.

AIDS prevention and control

On 15 May 1987, the World Health Assembly endorsed WHO's special programme on AIDS and the global strategy and programme structure to combat it. It appealed to bilateral and multilateral agencies and non-governmental and voluntary organizations to support the world-wide struggle against AIDS and requested the Director-General to continue developing effective strategies to prevent its spread. In June,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Economic and Social Council of the Health Assembly's action.

During 1987, WHO established two advisory bodies to support and guide the special programme - a global commission on AIDS and a management committee - and formed a special public information service. Co-operation with member States was intensified as the year saw a dramatic increase in the number of reported AIDS cases and of countries reporting the disease. As of 1 November, 62,811 cases from 127 countries had been reported to WHO, which projected that up to 3 million people might be affected by 1992. In support of national medium-term plans, WHO mobilized $21 million in 1987 by means of five country donor meetings, held in Uganda (May), Kenya, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania (July), and Ethiopia (August). Guidelines for the development of national programmes were drawn up and published as the first in the WHO AIDS series.

Over 350 laboratory workers from 103 countries were trained in human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) antibody testing procedures at workshops held in the Americas and the African, eastern Mediterranean and western Pacific regions. Activities in Africa included a round-table-discussion on laboratory services in peripheral areas, at which alternative methods for HIV diagnosis were examined (Brazzaville, Congo, October), and a workshop on the counselling of HIV-infected persons and their families (Nairobi, Kenya, September). In the Americas, WHO organized the first Pan American Teleconference on AIDS (Quito, Ecuador, September) and concluded a $5 million contract with the United States National Institutes of Health for a collaborative research programme covering four major areas: seroprevalence, natural history of HIV and related retroviruses, and heterosexual and perinatal transmission of AIDS. In South-East Asia, a national meeting on AIDS surveillance and a national workshop on the diagnosis of the disease were held in November at New Delhi, India, and Bangkok, Thailand, respectively. In Europe, WHO concentrated activities on surveillance, patient care and prevention. It organized two meetings in the Federal Republic of Germany, on AIDS diagnosis and control (Munich, March) and on training needs for personnel at drug abuse treatment centres (Bremen, August). AIDS and the newborn was the subject of a consultation at Copenhagen, Denmark, in April. The exchange of information and the development of national programmes were stimulated at a ministerial meeting of representatives from the South-East Asia and western Pacific regions, co-sponsored by Australia and WHO (Sydney, July). Japan and WHO co-sponsored a conference on an integrated strategy for the control of AIDS and other human retroviral infections and hepatitis B (Tokyo, October).

WHO also convened consultations on international travel and HIV infection (March), criteria for HIV infection screening programmes (May), contraceptive methods and the control of HIV infection (June), HIV and routine childhood immunization (August), the prevention and control of AIDS in prisons (November) and the interrelationship of AIDS and tropical diseases (December).

Continuing its co-operation with other United Nations bodies and agencies, WHO also collaborated extensively with non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Jointly with the International Union of Immunological Societies, it organized a working group on the immunology of AIDS (Geneva, February). A workshop on modelling the spread of HIV infection and the demographic impact of AIDS (Washington, D.C., October) concluded that no single approach could be selected, owing to the lack of data on sexual practices and the limited understanding of the natural history and patterns of HIV infection.

Some 30 WHO collaborating centres were designated to provide support to the special programme on AIDS, particularly in the area of research. A meeting of representatives of the collaborating centres (Washington, D.C., June) adopted statements on HIV transmission, HIV infection and health workers, and current and future developments in laboratory testing for the virus. A working group convened at the collaborating centre in London in July defined a strategy for the organization of a global bank of prototype virus strains and other reagents. The standardization of diagnostic techniques was considered at a consultation at the collaborating centre in Stockholm, Sweden, in December.

At Geneva, WHO held consultations to prepare guidelines for the counselling of HIV-infected individuals (April), on the effect of AIDS on family planning policies (May) and on strategies for health promotion in relation to AIDS (July).

In June,⁽⁸⁾ the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) took note of the Administrator's commitment to join WHO and other agencies in an international campaign to fight AIDS, which he had made at the Third Meeting of Participating Parties for the Prevention and Control of AIDS (Geneva, 27 and 28 April).

In December,⁽⁹⁾ the Administrator described UNDP support to AIDS programmes, which was based on the following global strategy: prevention of HIV transmission; reduction of morbidity and mortality associated with HIV infection; and reduction of the impact of AIDS on the socio-economic conditions of countries. Under UNDP's global and regional programmes, $3.5 million was allocated for the support of AIDS activities of general value and of direct relevance to country projects. Those activities included dissemination of global messages on AIDS; promotion of international consensus and exchange of information; epidemiology and impact assessment; laboratory support for research and prevention; intersectoral co-operation; preparation of guidelines and educational materials; and missions to assist developing countries in preparing and initiating country-specific AIDS plans and programmes.

Steps were being taken to establish a joint UNDP/WHO programme progressively to make blood supplies safe throughout the world by assisting with the installation of up-to-date blood screening and testing facilities; it was expected that other multi- and bilateral organizations, as well as NGOs, particularly the International Red Cross and the Red Crescent, would participate in that effort.

With regard to national programmes, the resident representatives had been requested to examine the possibility of including an AIDS component in UNDP-assisted projects and/or to design a new project dealing exclusively with AIDS. At the country level, UNDP supported programmes which included: creation of a broadly representative AIDS committee; epidemiological and resource assessments; establishment of AIDS surveillance programmes; development of laboratory capability; strengthening national health systems to diagnose and manage HIV infections and associated clinical manifestations; education programmes and services for health workers; and prevention.

In June, UNICEF and WHO co-hosted a forum on AIDS in New York to facilitate international sharing of information. Through WHO and other meetings, UNICEF monitored in 1987 the effect of AIDS on women and children and its potential interaction with specific child health interventions. UNICEF continued to ensure that its programmes did not contribute to the spread of the virus; in collaboration with WHO, it supported the development and field testing of improved injection devices and it revised guidelines for sterilizing equipment used in maternal and child health projects. A UNICEF task force was established in mid-1987 to develop policies and programmes concerning AIDS, and a senior project officer for AIDS programmes was appointed to serve as a focal point.

ACC action. In October, (10) ACC decided that each United Nations organization and agency should undertake, in its area of responsibility, a comprehensive examination of the implications of AIDS, in order to support and complement the efforts being undertaken by WHO.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/75 without vote.

Prevention and control of AIDS

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered World Health Assembly resolution WHA40.26 of 15 May 1987 on a global strategy for the prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS),

Deeply concerned to learn that this disease has assumed pandemic proportions affecting all regions and that it represents a serious threat to the attainment of health for all by the year 2000 and to social and economic development in general,

Considering that the international community should do the utmost to prevent the further spread of AIDS, bearing in mind that information is an essential element in the control of AIDS and that every individual has a responsibility,

Realizing that the world-wide emergency created by AIDS will require urgent vigorous globally directed action in prevention, control and research,

1. Draws the attention of the General Assembly to World Health Assembly resolution WHA40.26, by which the World Health Assembly endorsed the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS prepared by the World Health Organization;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the World Health Organization for taking the lead in mobilizing the international community to combat the disease;

3. Calls upon all States to take active measures to prevent and control AIDS in line with the global strategy;

4. Urges all appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, as well as bilateral and multilateral agencies and non-governmental and voluntary organizations, to support the world-wide struggle against AIDS in close co-operation with the World Health Organization in its role of directing and co-ordinating the urgent fight against AIDS and in conformity with the global strategy.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/75

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (E/1987/L.35/Rev.1); agenda item 15.
Meeting numbers. ESC 31, 35.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/8 without vote.

Prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), caused by one or more naturally occurring retroviruses of undetermined origin, has assumed pandemic proportions affecting all regions of the world and represents a threat to the attainment of health for all,

Having considered World Health Assembly resolution WHA40.26 of 15 May 1987 on the Global Strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS and Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/75 of 8 July 1987 on the prevention and control of AIDS,

Recognizing the established leadership and the essential global directing and co-ordinating role of the World Health Organization in AIDS prevention, control and education, and related research and public information and, in this context, the vital importance of the World Health Organization Special Programme on AIDS,

1. Commands the World Health Organization for its efforts towards global AIDS prevention and control and, in particular, for its support for national AIDS programmes and regional activities, including the meeting of Ministers of Asian and Pacific Governments at Sydney, and the forthcoming World Summit of Ministers of Health on Programmes for AIDS Prevention to be held in London;

2. Confirms that the World Health Organization should continue to direct and co-ordinate the urgent global battle against AIDS;

3. Commends those Governments which have initiated action to establish national programmes for the prevention and control of AIDS in line with the Global Strategy of the World Health Organization, and urges other Governments to take similar action;

4. Calls upon all States, in addressing the AIDS problem, to take into account the legitimate concerns of other countries and the interests of inter-State relations;

5. Invites the World Health Organization to facilitate the exchange of information on and promotion of national and international research for the prevention and control of AIDS through the further development of Collaborating Centres of the World Health Organization and similar existing mechanisms;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of all aspects of the problem, to ensure, in close co-operation with the Director-General of the World Health Organization and through the appropriate existing mechanisms, a co-ordinated response by the United Nations system to the AIDS pandemic, and urges all appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, bilateral and multilateral agencies and non-governmental and voluntary organizations, in conformity with the Global Strategy, to support the world-wide struggle against AIDS;

7. Invites the Director-General of the World Health Organization to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, on new developments in the global AIDS pandemic, and requests the Economic and Social Council to consider the report in accordance with its mandate.

General Assembly resolution 42/8

26 October 1987 Meeting 48 Adopted without vote

38-nation draft (A/42/L. 7/Rev.1); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominica, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Haiti, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Singapore, Spain, Sweden, Thailand, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: plenary 44, 45, 48.

Fortieth anniversary of WHO (1988)

In May 1987, the World Health Assembly recommended that the fortieth anniversary of WHO in 1988 be used as a global opportunity to inform and mobilize all concerned and show that health development was possible through international co-operation. It invited regional committees to support countries in their activities relating to the anniversary and to mark the anniversary solemnly at their sessions. It invited the WHO Executive Board to participate in planning and implementing WHO's action relating to the anniversary.

The Assembly invited member States to intensify during 1988 and the following years their efforts towards the global goal of health for all by the year 2000, in particular to mobilize resources, accelerate the health development process through the primary health care approach, foster still greater collaboration in health-related fields, ensure media coverage of health programmes and focus people's attention on WHO's achievements and aspirations. The Assembly's resolution was transmitted to the Economic and Social Council by the Secretary-General.(11)

In a statement before the Council in July, the WHO Director-General said that member States had worked out their own national policies for attaining health by the year 2000, to ensure more equal possibilities for the underprivileged; in order to define what that meant in practice, WHO's members had worked out the primary health care approach, which consisted of eight elements: health education; nutrition and food supply; water supply and sanitation; maternal and child health, including family planning; expanded immunization; control of major endemic diseases; medical and surgical care at the primary health care level; and access to essential drugs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/76 without vote.

Fortieth anniversary of the World Health Organization, 1988

The Economic and Social Council,

Having heard the statement by the Director-General of the World Health Organization,

Expressing its appreciation for the important achievements of the World Health Organization in fulfilling its constitutional mandate to direct and co-ordinate international health work,

Noting with satisfaction World Health Assembly resolution WHA40.36 of 15 May 1987 on the fortieth anniversary of the World Health Organization,

1. Notes that the World Health Organization intends to celebrate its fortieth anniversary during 1988, in accordance with World Health Assembly resolution WHA40.36;

2. Notes also that the World Health Organization will use the occasion of its fortieth anniversary as a global opportunity to inform and mobilize all concerned with a view to achieving the goal of health for all by the year 2000 in an atmosphere of goodwill, consensus and mutual respect;

3. Invites the General Assembly to observe, at its forty-third session, the fortieth anniversary of the World Health Organization in a manner befitting its achievements and future role in international health.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/76

8 July 1987 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (E/1987/L.39); agenda item 15.

Meeting numbers. ESC 31, 35.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/168 without vote.

Fortieth anniversary of the World Health Organization
The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/76 of 8 July 1987,

Noting that the World Health Organization intends to celebrate its fortieth anniversary during 1988 in accordance with World Health Assembly resolution WHA40.36, of 15 May 1987,

Noting also that the World Health Organization will use the occasion of its fortieth anniversary as a global opportunity to inform and mobilize all concerned with a view to achieving the goal of health for all by the year 2000 in an atmosphere of goodwill, consensus and mutual respect,

Expressing its appreciation for the important achievements of the World Health Organization in fulfilling its constitutional mandate to direct and co-ordinate international health work,

Decides to observe, at its forty-third session, the fortieth anniversary of the World Health Organization in a manner befitting its achievements and future role in international health.

General Assembly resolution 42/168

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/820/Add.2) without vote, 30 October (meeting 26); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.28), based on informal consultations; agenda item 12.

Disabled persons

Implementation of the Programme of Action

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(12) the Secretary-General reported in September 1987(13) on the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons(14) and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992).

As at 2 July 1987, replies had been received from 27 Governments to his request for information on the establishment and reinforcement of national committees as focal points for the Decade, bilateral assistance relating to projects concerning prevention of disabilities, rehabilitation and equalization of opportunities, and the Voluntary Fund for the Decade (see p. 648). On the basis of that information, the Secretary-General observed that significant progress had been made in bringing disability and its human consequences to the attention of Governments and people. It was evident, however, that the alleviation of suffering caused by disability remained an item on national and international agendas, partly due to the lack of technical and financial resources, inadequate infrastructures and support services, and the prevailing socio-economic situation, particularly in the developing countries. During the second half of the Decade and beyond, concerted efforts would be required to reinvigorate the type of activities initiated during the 1981 International Year of Disabled Persons (15)

The Secretary-General considered it essential that national disability committees and similar co-ordinating bodies, playing advocacy and supporting roles, be further strengthened through financial and technical support from both Governments and the private sector; at the same time, each national committee needed to determine how best to raise resources on behalf of disabled persons. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly renew its invitation to States to accord high priority to disability-related concerns within the framework of bilateral assistance, with special emphasis on the least developed countries; the country programmes of UNDP could serve as a frame of reference for promoting coherent and co-ordinated approaches with other forms of assistance.

The United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA), in co-operation with the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, provided short-term advisory services on disability policies and programmes to Guinea and Uganda. It also continued to support technical co-operation projects for a rehabilitation centre in Mauritania and a secretariat for the National Social Welfare Council in Somalia. ILO conducted research in Indonesia on jobs for disabled persons and helped implement a UNDP-funded project for community rehabilitation of the disabled. UNDP and ILO also provided funds to equip a rehabilitation centre at Surakarta, Java.

Co-ordination of United Nations activities was considered at the fifth inter-agency meeting on the Decade (Vienna, 18-20 February)(16) and by the ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (Geneva, 16-20 March).(17) The inter-agency meeting recommended the establishment of an information network on disability, to be located in CSDHA and linked with data banks inside and outside the United Nations system.

Global meeting of experts

As requested by the General Assembly in 1984,(18) the Secretary-General convened a global meeting of experts to review the implementation of the World Programme of Action (Stockholm, 17-22 August 1987).

In October,(19) he described the outcome of the meeting, which was attended by 23 experts in the field of disability, as well as observers from the United Nations system and from intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. The meeting was the first such occasion where the majority of the experts were persons with disabilities; it was also the first time a United Nations meeting used sign language interpretation as well as documentation in Braille and audio-cassette form.

Among the major achievements of the first half of the Decade, identified at the meeting, were the increased awareness of the problems and rights of disabled people; the growth of organizations of disabled persons; the substantial increase in the number of national population censuses or household surveys with disability-related questions; and a growing application of the concept of community-based services.

However, the experts found that the Programme of Action was not well known and had therefore not been widely implemented. The obstacles to progress in implementing it included resources constraints; insufficient information; low priority for disability-related programmes; lack of participation of disabled persons in decision-making; and lack of co-ordination. Moreover, specific reference was made to the fact that, especially in developing countries, there were no comprehensive social security systems to provide assistance to disabled persons and their families.

To reactivate the Decade and promote more vigorous implementation of the Programme of Action, the meeting recommended that the General Assembly convene a special conference on the human rights of disabled people, with the mandate to draft an international convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination, to be ratified by States by the end of the Decade. As an alternative, the Assembly could set up an inter-governmental working group to consider the steps necessary for drafting such a convention. Other actions recommended included the launching of a comprehensive public information and education campaign portraying disabled people as equal members of society; provision of United Nations material in forms suitable to disabled persons, such as reproducing, for example, the Programme of Action in ink-print, Braille and/or audio-cassette form; focusing public information on a different issue and a specific group of disabled persons each year; and setting up a system to collect, compile and distribute information on an international level.

The meeting further recommended that the United Nations set up a secretariat for the remainder of the Decade, similar to that established for the International Year of Disabled Persons, and that an advisory council of experts be established to advise CSDHA in the planning and implementation of activities for the disabled. With regard to technical co-operation activities, it was suggested that Governments include projects on disability prevention, education and training of disabled persons and their social integration in UNDP-financed programmes and that the UNDP Administrator be entrusted with the management of a mechanism to fund relevant projects and activities to promote the Programme of Action.

The meeting further urged that the United Nations take immediate action to implement one of the main issues of the Programme, i.e., consulting with organizations representing disabled people to allow them to monitor and evaluate relevant projects and activities; that a personnel policy designed to employ more disabled persons in the United Nations system be formulated and implemented, with the Secretary-General reporting annually on their status; that meetings of decision-makers from developed and developing countries be convened to emphasize the importance of the Programme of Action and to develop procedures for co-ordination; and that a series of technical meetings be organized before 1992, when a global conference, similar to that held at the end of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985),⁽²⁰⁾ should be held to develop follow-up activities.

Other action. The question of the disabled was also discussed at the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes (see p. 616). In the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, adopted at the Consultation⁽²¹⁾ it was stated that programmes in port of disabled persons should be conceived with prevention, education and training, rehabilitation and the equalization of opportunities as major objectives. They should facilitate access; emphasize the value of keeping families together; promote the ability of families to respond to the needs of disabled persons; enable the disabled to live in their community; support families and community groups working towards such goals; guarantee basic standards of social security and benefits to ensure independence; and make mechanical aids more easily available.

UN trust fund

The Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, at the mid-point of the Decade, shifted its funding emphasis from assistance to interregional and-global activities to country-specific and regional action in support of the World Programme of Action. During the 18 months ending in June 1987, the Fund received approximately 75 requests for funding, 23 of which were approved, involving a resource commitment of $659,170. Projects supported in 1987 included a seminar on organization and management for disabled leaders (Manila, Philippines, June); an international workshop of sports for disabled in favour of developing countries (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, April); a regional expert seminar to review achievements at the mid-point of the Decade, organized by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, June); a regional conference on the mid-Decade for North America and the Caribbean (Kingston, Jamaica, July); the third consultation of the International Round Table for the Advancement of Counselling (Vienna, July); international seminars on mass media and disabled persons (Warsaw, Poland, September) and on creating non-handicapping environments (Prague, Czechoslovakia, October); an NGO forum on the Decade (October); and the global meeting of experts to review the implementation of the World Programme of Action (see above).⁷ Support was also provided to the World Blind Union for the publication of an international newsletter for the deaf-blind.

The Fund's income totalled $292,310 in 1987, while expenditures were $433,738. At the 1987 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see p. 405), 11 countries pledged $175,933 to the Fund for 1988.

During the year, the managerial responsibilities for the Fund were transferred from the Under-Secretary-General for International Economic and Social Affairs to the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna, and a Trust Fund Operations Committee was set up in CSDHA to review project funding proposals.

An overview of the Fund's activities and finances in 1987 was given in two reports of the Secretary-General.^(13,22)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1987, acting on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/43 without vote.

United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 37152 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and 37153 of 3 December 1982, by which, inter alia proclaimed the period 1983-1992 United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 39/26 of 23 November 1984, by which the Secretary-General was requested to convene in 1987 a meeting of experts, consisting largely of disabled persons, to help the General Assembly at its forty-second session to evaluate the implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Recalling that the review of the World Programme of Action includes a review of the Vienna Affirmative Action Plan adopted by the World Symposium of Experts on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and Technical Assistance in Disability Prevention and Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons,

Becoming the offer of the Government of Sweden to act as host in 1987 to the above-mentioned meeting of experts, in conformity with the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 39/26, and noting with appreciation the status of the preparations for that meeting,

Mindful that the principles of full participation and equality emphasized in the World Programme of Action call for disabled persons to be fully responsible for their own development, and that the most important criteria for evaluating the implementation of the World Programme of Action are suggested by the theme of the International Year of Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, "Full participation and equality",

Affirming that well-functioning social security schemes often form one of the important pre-conditions for the introduction of de-institutionalization and independent living of persons with disabilities,

Mindful of the importance of disability prevention, stressed in the World Programme of Action, and of the principle of equalization of opportunities—that is, that the services and facilities of society should be made accessible and open to all people, including those with disabilities,

Noting with appreciation the progress made in the monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,

1. Urges the Secretary-General to take all measures within existing resources to enable the meeting of experts called for in General Assembly resolution 39/26 to evaluate progress at the mid-point of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, so that priority areas can be identified and effective international action can be launched to help translate into practice the concepts of full participation and equalization of opportunities for disabled persons;

2. Calls upon Member States, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and to stimulate efforts at all levels within the framework of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons;

3. Requests the Secretary-General launch, in conjunction with the forty-second session of the General Assembly and within available resources, a public information and awareness campaign to revitalize the Decade;

4. Inuites Member States to adopt appropriate measures to accelerate the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons during the second half of the Decade;

5. Also invites Member States to consider possibilities for adequate participation of persons with disabilities in the work of the United Nations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the premises of the United Nations are accessible to all people equally, including the disabled;

7. Again requests the Secretary-General to make all appropriate efforts to mobilize international support and action for the Decade;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons during the second half of the Decade.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/43

28 May 1987 Meeting 17 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/98) without vote, 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1987/20); agenda item 18.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/58 without vote.

Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons
The General Assembly,

Recalling all its pertinent resolutions, including resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and resolution 37/53 of 3 December 1982, by which it, inter alia proclaimed the period 1983-1992 the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons.

Recalling its resolution 41/1066 of 4 December 1986 and reaffirming all of its provisions,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/43 of 28 May 1987, in which the Council, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to make all appropriate efforts to mobilize international support and action for the Decade,

Further taking note of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, adopted by the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes, held at Vienna from 7 to 15 September 1987,

Bearing in mind that 1987 marks the mid-point of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons and that, in the review being conducted on the implementation of the World Programme of Action, the most important criteria for evaluation are suggested by the theme of the International Year of Disabled Persons, "Full participation and equality"

Nothing with satisfaction the concrete measures already carried out by the Governments of Member States, the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to implement the objectives of the World Programme of Action within the framework of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Noting the important work currently being effected by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on human rights and disability, which could serve as a useful basis for the continued efforts to ensure for disabled persons the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Noting with appreciation the steps taken by the United Nations system and by non-governmental organizations concerned to monitor the implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Reiterating the need for greater publicity to revitalize the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Recognizing the pivotal role of the United Nations in promoting the exchange of information, experience and expertise and closer regional and interregional co-operation towards more effective strategies and policies to advance the status and welfare of disabled persons,

Stressing that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat is the focal point within the United Nations for the implementation and monitoring of the World Programme of Action,

Concerned that, at the mid-point of the Decade, the resource base of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons is significantly reduced from that prevailing during the first half of the Decade, and that unless this trend is reversed, the resources of the Fund will be depleted and operational activities will lapse well before the end of the Decade in 1992,

Mindful that, since developing countries are experiencing difficulties in mobilizing resources, international co-operation should be encouraged to assist in national efforts to implement the World Programme of Action and to achieve the objectives of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Also taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the evaluation of the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons during the first half of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

1. Reaffirm the validity of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and urges Member States to rededicate themselves to its early and effective implementation;

2. Invites those Member States that have not done so to establish national committees in consultation with disabled persons and their organizations as focal points for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons;

3. Once again invites Member States to reinforce national committees as focal points for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, to stimulate activities at the national level, to mobilize public opinion on behalf of the Decade, to participate in the implementation of disability projects with regard to the International Year of Disabled Persons and to assist in monitoring and evaluating the implementation of the World Programme of Action during the second half of the Decade;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to consider convening during the second half of the Decade, within existing resources, an interregional meeting of representatives of national committees for disabled persons with a view to enhancing the capabilities of such committees through an exchange of views and information;

5. Invites Member States to incorporate in their national development plans and strategies projects to assist disabled persons and to include such projects in the country programmes of the United Nations Development Programme;

6. Renews its invitation to all States to give high priority to projects concerning the prevention of disabilities, rehabilitation and the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons within the framework of bilateral assistance;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage all organs and bodies of the United Nations system, including regional commissions, international organizations and the specialized agencies, to take into consideration the specific needs of disabled persons when elaborating their programmes and operational activities;

8. Invites the Secretary-General and Member States to encourage real involvement of disabled persons in United Nations programmes and activities, inter alia, through the provision of employment opportunities;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to consider, within existing resources, alternative structures so as to ensure that the issue of disability is accorded high visibility and to develop the Disabled Persons Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs as a specialized facilitating agent engaging the available resources of the United Nations system and relevant networks outside the United Nations;

10. Invites the Centre to expand its close collaboration with non-governmental organizations and to consult with them on a regular and systematic basis on matters relating to the implementation of the World Programme of Action;

11. Calls upon Member States, national committees, the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to assist in a global information campaign to publicize the Decade through all appropriate means;

12. Recognizes the important role of non-governmental organizations, especially those representing disabled persons, in the effective implementation of the World Programme of Action, in raising international awareness of the concerns of disabled persons and in monitoring and evaluating progress achieved during the Decade;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to administer donated funds, using them for projects under the present structure of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, and, in addition, to continue to make new provisions in order to offer a selection of projects to donor countries that may be willing to finance a particular programme under the "Special Purpose Contributions";

14. Reaffirms that the resources of the Voluntary Fund should be used to support catalytic and innovative activities in order to implement further the objectives of the World Programme of Action within the framework of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, with priority given, as appropriate, to programmes and projects of the least developed countries;

15. Invites Governments and non-governmental organizations to continue their contributions to the Voluntary Fund, and calls upon Governments and non-governmental organizations that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Fund so as to enable it to respond effectively to the growing demand for assistance;

16. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Sweden for having acted as host to the Global Meeting of Experts to Review the Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons at the Mid-Point of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, held at Stockholm from 17 to 22 August 1987, and to the experts who participated;

17. Requests Member States and all relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system to submit to the Secretary-General their comments on the recommendations outlined in paragraphs 10 to 39 of the report of the Global Meeting of Experts, as well as on the report of the Secretary-General on the evaluation of the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons during the first half of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1988;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons".

General Assembly resolution 42/58

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/774) without vote, 3 November (meeting 32); 31-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.25), orally revised; agenda item 93. Sponsors: Australia, Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Guatemala, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Romania, Senegal, Sudan, Sweden, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe. Meeting numbers, GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 14-22, 28, 32; plenary 85.

REFERENCES

- (1)A/42/25 (dec. 14/9 A). (2)YUN 1986, p. 584. (3)A/42/25 (dec. 14/27). (4)A/42/427. (5)E/1988/42. (6)ACC/1987/PG/6. (7)E/1987/109. (8)E/1987/25 (dec. 87/28). (9)DP/1988/1. (10)ACC/1987/DEC/16-27 (dec. 1987/17). (11)E/1987/107. (12)YUN 1986, p. 639. GA res. 41/106, 4 Dec. 1986. (13)A/42/551. (14)YUN 1982, p. 980. (15)YUN 1981, p. 795. (16)ACC/1987/PG/7. (18)AGC/1987/5. (18)YUN 1984, p. 733. GA res. 39/26, 23 Nov. 1984. (19)A/42/561. (20)YUN 1985, p. 937. (21)E/CONF.80/10. (22)A/43/634.

Human resources

Human resources development

As requested by the Governing Council in 1986(1) the UNDP Administrator submitted in April 1987(2) an interim report reviewing UNDP experience since 1970 in providing assistance to human resources development (HRD).

At the programme level, the review indicated a general lack of specific HRD strategies and goals in country programmes, although most programmes had significant institution-building and training components. Evaluation stressed the need for a focal point in Governments where HRD information, usually not found in national accounts and other aggregated analyses, could be processed and analysed; the strategy which would thus evolve could provide consistent direction to government agencies as well as donors on such issues as priorities among HRD projects, the use of expatriate experts and the need for overseas training. The Administrator also suggested that more attention be focused on local capacity for improvising solutions to technical problems, and that a closer relationship between government HRD programmes, the private sector and indigenous grass-roots organizations could result in opportunities for collaborative training and job creation.

Taking note of the Administrator's report and his preliminary conclusions, as well as of the recommendations made at a 1986 regional workshop on HRD in Latin America and the Caribbean(1) the Governing Council, on 18 June 1987,(3) requested that the proposed work programme include activities that generated information on the achievements of UNDP in HRD, supported by quantitative data and an assessment of the impact of UNDP-financed activities in the area. It further requested the Administrator to include specific proposals in his detailed analysis of UNDP experience in HRD, to be submitted in 1988.

The Committee for Development Planning, at its April 1987 session (see p. 385), proposed to initiate reviews of HRD by convening a working group of technical experts, and requested the Secretariat, in co-operation with the concerned international organizations, to survey their experience in the area and compile conclusions for national and international policy action.⁽⁴⁾ The working group on HRD met at Geneva from 16 to 18 November.

The seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (see p. 465), in its Final Act, stated that the fulfilment of human potential and promotion of human well-being were the ultimate goals of the development process, and that HRD, primarily the responsibility of the countries themselves, would lead to improvements in labour productivity⁽⁵⁾

Pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly resolution⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, in a May 1987 report⁽⁷⁾ dealt with the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries, summarizing information from 14 Member States and four United Nations organizations and agencies. By decision 42/446 of 11 December, the Assembly took note of the report. Responding to a 1986 Economic and Social Council request⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, by a June 1987 note⁽⁹⁾ drew to the Council's and the Assembly's attention a number of recently issued reports that provided Member States with information on United Nations activities in HRD. On 11 December 1987, by decision 42/434, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note.

ACC/CPC consideration. In accordance with a 1986 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽¹⁰⁾ the twenty-second series of Joint Meetings between ACC and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination focused on co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations system in HRD and its contribution to meeting the economic and social objectives of the developing countries. The Joint Meetings, held at Geneva on 22 and 23 June⁽¹¹⁾ recognized, according to a summing-up by the co-Chairmen, that human development was vital to the development process and the ultimate objective of all development efforts. It was suggested that the Council should play a greater role in deliberations on the economic, social and other factors relating to HRD and in the formulation of policies. The co-Chairmen further recommended that adequate priority and resources be given to HRD in international and national development programmes and policies, including adjustment policies, and that greater account be taken of the global environment in which HRD policies were formulated. The United Nations, with the co-operation of organizations of the system, should consider publishing an annual report on human conditions, containing comprehensive statistical data. HRD activities should aim at both the grass-roots and higher levels, particularly at long-term institution building, and at the provision of training for a critical mass of leaders at the national and community levels. Organizations of the system should also work together to formulate an agenda for action, including country-specific support policies and programmes related to HRD. Agreement should be reached on an operational definition of HRD, through which policy guidelines could be formulated.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July 1987, acting on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/81 without vote.

Development of human resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the crucial role of human resources in the socio-economic development process,

Bearing in mind that the long-term development process of developing countries is one of the main objectives of international co-operation and the development activities of the United Nations system and that human resources development is essential to the attainment of that objective,

Recognizing that the training of qualified national personnel is an important and integral part of human resources development,

Recalling the importance attached to the development of human resources in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 40/213 of 17 December 1985 on the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries and Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/73 of 23 July 1986 on the development of human resources,

Noting decision 87/16 on human resources development, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on 18 June 1987,

Considering that it is for each developing country to decide the possible content of a national programme for the development of human resources,

Taking into account the considerable experience and technical capacity acquired by the organizations of the United Nations system in human resources development in their respective fields of competence, and convinced of the need for greater co-ordination of such activities,

Noting the note by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations system in human resources development and its contribution to meeting the economic and social objectives of the developing countries and the views expressed in the summing-up by the Chairmen of the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,

Emphasizing its central role in co-ordinating the activities of the United Nations system in human resources development,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General on human resources development;

2. Takes note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries;

3. Reaffirms the need for an integrated and multidisciplinary approach to all aspects of the development of human resources in the programme of work of the United Nations and the other organizations of the United Nations system;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account earlier studies and the discussions held at the twenty-second series of Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, as well as the comprehensive report to be submitted to the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme at its thirty-fifth session, to submit, after consultation with the organs and organizations of the United Nations system, a comprehensive report on human resources development and the activities of the system as a whole in that field, containing conclusions and recommendations, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, for consideration and appropriate action;

5. Invites Governments of Member States to provide the Secretary-General with information on their experience in the development of human resources, including qualified national personnel, to be reflected in his report;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take the present resolution duly into account in preparing the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995;

7. Calls upon all organs and organizations of the United Nations system to implement the present resolution and to convey their views on the question to the Secretary-General.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/81

8 July 1987 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1987/128) without vote, 6 July (meeting 14); 2-nation draft (E/1987/C.3/L.10), orally revised; agenda item 15.

Sponsors: German Democratic Republic, Mongolia.

Education and literacy

International Literacy Year (1990)

The Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) (126th session, Paris, 13 May-19 June 1987) approved a set of preliminary proposals for the observance of International Literacy "Year (ILY)" and authorized the Director-General to transmit those proposals to the Economic and Social Council. The UNESCO General Conference (twenty-fourth session, Paris, 20 October-20 November) requested the General Assembly to proclaim 1990 ILY; it also approved a draft programme for the Year.

The appeal to proclaim ILY, made by the General Conference in 1985, had been approved by the Assembly in 1986. (12)

To allow for the Executive Board's approval, the Director-General, in April(13) suggested that the Council defer consideration of the question to its second regular session of 1987. In June(14) the Secretary-General transmitted the UNESCO proposals to the Council. In September(15) he gave a brief overview to the Assembly's Third Committee, listing recent action taken on ILY.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1987/111 of 6 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council decided to include in the agenda for its first regular session of 1987 the question of proclaiming 1989 the international literacy year. By decision 1987/116 of 26 May, the Council deferred the question to its second regular session of 1987.

On 8 July 1987, acting on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1987/80 without vote.

Efforts and measures to promote the eradication of illiteracy

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/118 of 4 December 1986, in which the Assembly invited the Council to consider the question of declaring an international literacy year,

Referring to decision 7.1.2 of 18 June 1987, adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its 126th session, in which the Board suggested that the General Assembly proclaim 1990 International Literacy Year,

Emphasizing that widespread illiteracy, especially in many developing countries, seriously hinders the process of economic and social development and cultural and spiritual advancement,

Convinced that the process of education can make an indispensable contribution to the achievement of social progress, mutual understanding and co-operation among nations,

Mindful that the eradication of illiteracy calls for worldwide co-operation and joint efforts,

Convinced that the elaboration of a global strategy for the elimination of illiteracy and the organization of a worldwide literacy campaign will promote deeper understanding by the world public of the various aspects of the problem of illiteracy and help to intensify efforts to spread literacy and education,

Reiterating the importance of paragraph 164 of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which identifies the need for priority programmes to overcome the special obstacles that have generally led to higher illiteracy rates among women than among men,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the proposals for the observance of an international literacy year prepared by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

2. Invites the General Assembly to proclaim 1990 International Literacy Year;

3. Appeals to all Member States to co-operate with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the preparation of the International Literacy Year and participate actively in the implementation of the activities to be organized within the framework of the Year.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/80

8 July 1987 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1987/128) without vote, 3 July (meeting 13); 22-nation draft (E/1987/C.3/L.9), orally revised; agenda item 15.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Cuba, Ethiopia, France, German Democratic Republic, Greece, Hungary, India, Iraq, Kenya, Mongolia, Morocco, Philippines, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/104 without vote.

International Literacy Year

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/118 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/80 of 8 July 1987, in which the Council recommended that the General Assembly proclaim 1990 as International Literacy Year,

Recalling that in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights the inalienable right of everyone to education is recognized,

Mindful of the fact that the eradication of illiteracy is one of the paramount objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recognizing that the elimination of illiteracy constitutes a prerequisite for ensuring the right to education,

Emphasizing that widespread illiteracy, especially in many developing countries, seriously hinders the process of economic and social development and cultural and spiritual advancement,

Emphasizing further that this situation is utterly incompatible with what is required by the great advances in the scientific and technical revolution that mankind is witnessing,

Convinced that the process of education can make an indispensable contribution to the achievement of social progress, mutual understanding and co-operation among nations,

Mindful of the fact that the eradication of illiteracy calls for world-wide co-operation and joint efforts,

Considering that the complete elimination of illiteracy in all regions of the world should be recognized as a priority objective of the international community,

Convinced that the elaboration of a global strategy for the eradication of illiteracy and the organization of a world-wide literacy campaign will promote deeper understanding by people throughout the world of the various aspects of the problem of illiteracy and help to intensify efforts to spread literacy and education,

Taking note with appreciation of the programme for International Literacy Year submitted by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Taking into account the guidelines for international years and anniversaries adopted by the General Assembly in its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980,

1. Proclaims 1990 as International Literacy Year;

2. Invites all States to ensure adequate nation-wide preparation for International Literacy Year;

3. Recommends that the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system consider in their respective forums the contributions that they could make to the success of International Literacy Year;

4. Invites interested intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to exert efforts in their respective fields to contribute adequately to the preparation and implementation of national and international programmes for International Literacy Year;

5. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to assume the role of lead organization for International Literacy Year;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "Preparation and organization of International Literacy Year".

General Assembly resolution 42/104

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/42/806) without vote, 20 November (meeting 54); 30-nation draft (A/C.3/42/L.55); agenda item 101.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cuba, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Rwanda, Samoa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 3rd Committee 39-41, 43, 46, 52-54; plenary 93.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraph 5 by a recorded vote of 155 to none, with 1 abstention. The Committee had approved it by a recorded vote of 136 to none, with 1 abstention. The United States said it abstained on the paragraph because it had withdrawn from UNESCO membership.

UN research and training institutes

In September 1987,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on autonomous research institutes of the United Nations, which covered the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (see p. 622), the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) (see p. 91), the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (see p. 834), the Latin American Demographic Centre (see p. 553), the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (see p. 557) and the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (IDEP). The report did not cover the research and training institutes of the specialized agencies, nor UNU (see p. 658), which had been the subject of an earlier JIU report.⁽¹⁷⁾

Having examined primarily the institutes' administration and financing, JIU recommended that those which had not already done so be requested to take immediate steps to set up a reserve fund equivalent to at least 2 1/2 years of expenditures, in order to create a cushion against irregular and regional funding patterns (recommendation 1). As a general rule, the autonomous research institutes should be funded through voluntary contributions; support from the United Nations general budget should be allowed only in exceptional cases for limited periods (recommendation 2). The possibility of offering income-generating services to users should be considered, such as advisory or consultancy services, studies, training courses and other tasks undertaken on behalf of United Nations agencies or other agencies (recommendation 3). Other recommendations pertained specifically to UNITAR (see below), IDEP and UNIDIR. With regard to UNIDIR, JIU recommended that because of its financial difficulties and the consequent impairment of its role and its capability to produce more and better results, UNIDIR should cease to operate as an autonomous research institute and its functions should be given to the Department for Disarmament Affairs. To assure the continuity of IDEP, it was recommended to propose to the UNDP Governing Council to have Member States of the African region pay their assessed contributions from their indicative planning figures.

JIU also proposed that more attention be directed to co-operation and co-ordination between institutes and with Secretariat units where research was undertaken, as well as with UNU.

UN Institute for Training and Research

Despite the General Assembly's having recommended in 1986 that UNITAR be restructured on the basis of a number of parameters, training being the main focus of the Institute's activities, a number of Governments, which had traditionally made significant contributions to UNITAR, chose not to contribute in 1987 to its General Fund, which resulted in further financial difficulties for the Institute. UNITAR's 1987 budget, prepared on the assumption that support from all traditional donors would continue and that negotiations would succeed with private sources of funding, had to be implemented with a significant deficit, which led the Assembly to adopt in December a resolution containing measures for further restructuring of UNITAR.

UNITAR activities

Although under financial constraints, UNITAR, an autonomous organization within the United Nations system, continued in 1987 its training and research activities, which were described by its Executive Director in a report to the General Assembly covering the period from July 1986 to June 1988.⁽¹⁸⁾

Under its training programme, UNITAR organized courses and seminars in international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy, ranging from orientation courses for new members of Member States' permanent missions to the United Nations to training of government officials in multilateral economic co-operation, international law and human rights, and the publication of a directory of European training institutions.⁽¹⁹⁾ During 1987, 308 members of permanent missions participated in UNITAR's training programmes in New York and Geneva. Through its programme on economic and social development—financed entirely through special purpose grants—UNITAR aimed at improving developing countries' capacity to organize and manage their development programmes and projects. Priority was given to training in four areas: development planning and management; debt management; management of natural resources and the environment; and planning and management of disaster relief programmes.

The year witnessed the launching of a research-cum-training programme on debt management of disaster relief programmes undertaken by UNITAR in co-operation with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the main humanitarian organizations in that field. In March and June, UNITAR organized high-level seminars for Permanent Secretaries of Ministries of Development Planning of African countries on current issues of development organization and management. During the year, UNITAR also consolidated its training seminar/workshops for the various developing regions concerning the promotion of human rights.

UNITAR's research programme, the bulk of which was financed through special purpose grants, focused on United Nations institutional issues, peace and security, as well as economic and social issues. Under the programme, studies were published, including one prepared for the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (see p. 948), another on refugees in Africa, several studies on Latin America, and research papers on training. Work continued in two UNITAR/UNDP bodies—the Information Centre for Heavy Crude and Tar Sands and the Centre on Small Energy Resources—the latter of which organized a conference on small-scale geothermal resources (Pisa, Italy, May).

UNITAR finances

Income and expenditure in 1987

In 1987, UNITAR's General Fund income—from government contributions and other sources—totalled $1,311,764, while total expenditure amounted to $1,895,863. Income of the Special Purpose Grants Fund was $2,193,729, including $1,591,026 in grants, while expenditure totalled $2,453,524.⁽²⁰⁾

Accounts for 1986

In June 1987, the United Nations Board of Auditors submitted to the General Assembly the financial statements of UNITAR for 1986.⁽²¹⁾ In July,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted a summary of principal findings and conclusions for remedial action of the Board. The Board found that the existing agreement for the funding of UNDP projects executed by UNITAR was unfavourable for the Institute and recommended that the agreement be altered accordingly. It stressed that UNITAR should apply the provisions of its policies and procedures manual, which required expenditures to be incurred on the basis of grants from donors. Prompt action should be taken to reconcile items on bank statements, and UNITAR should ensure that the final financial statements were submitted to the Board within the period stipulated in the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations. Regarding the processing of personnel actions, the Board recommended that prior consultations be held between UNITAR and the United Nations to ensure that they were completed on a timely basis.

Commenting on the Board's remarks, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in September,⁽²³⁾ noted UNITAR's intention to pursue its efforts with UNDP to obtain executing agency status. ACABQ endorsed the Board's view that existing policies and procedures must be applied to special purpose grants projects, and agreed with the recommendation on consultations between UNITAR and the United Nations regarding personnel actions.

The Assembly, in resolution 42/206, accepted the 1986 financial report and statements.

Restructuring and future status

In April 1987, UNITAR's Board of Trustees, at its twenty-fifth session, reviewed the Institute's financial and administrative arrangements and approved action taken by the Secretary-General and the Executive Director for the implementation of a 1986 General Assembly resolution on the restructuring of UNITAR.⁽²⁴⁾ At a special session in October 1987, the Board agreed to acquire title to the land currently rented by UNITAR for its headquarters building and then sell the entire property, irrespective of a final decision on the Institute's future. Such a transaction was estimated to generate $6 million net, after payment of UNITAR's debt to the United Nations; the balance was to be used as a reserve fund to continue UNITAR operations on a trial basis, with the understanding that it would have to operate strictly on the basis of paid-in government contributions and such other additional resources as might be available. In keeping with the Assembly's recommendation, the Board was reconstituted in 1987 so as to function without any cost to the General Fund (see APPENDIX III).

The Board's conclusions were endorsed by the Secretary-General in a November report,⁽²⁵⁾ in which he also noted that considerable progress had been achieved in implementing the restructuring plan outlined by the Assembly in 1986. After assessing the implications of closing UNITAR, he concluded that every effort should be made to continue its activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/197 without vote.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/172 of 5 December 1986,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing the continuing importance and relevance of the mandate of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,

Recognizing also the need for all Governments to contribute or increase their voluntary contributions, as appropriate, to the Institute,

Noting with concern the continuing lack of a sufficiently broad base of donor countries supporting the Institute,

Noting with regret that the 1987 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was unable to provide the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research with the level of resources required to maintain its current programmes and institutional structure,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 41/172;

2. Reaffirms the continuing validity and relevance of the mandate of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research;

3. Stresses that the Institute makes an important contribution to the work of the United Nations and that every effort should be made to continue its activities;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to restructure the Institute as follows:

I. Programme

A. Training

1. Training shall henceforth be the main focus of the activities of the Institute, and that focus should be duly reflected in the budget allocations;

2. The core training programme financed from the General Fund shall concentrate on training for international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy at various levels, primarily of persons from developing countries;

3. The core training programme for 1988 and subsequent years financed from the General Fund, as set out in annex I to the report of the Secretary-General, shall be reviewed by the Board of Trustees in the context of its programme and budget preparations and may be adjusted in the light of the financial resources available to the Institute; the Board of Trustees shall also, in accordance with the statute of the Institute, consider and approve any new programmes that may be proposed by the Secretary-General or Governments through the General Assembly;

4. Training programmes designed and conducted by the Institute for other United Nations bodies and specialized agencies shall not result in any financial obligations for the General Fund and shall be carried out on a fully reimbursable basis;

5. Training for economic and social development and any other training activities shall be funded from special purpose grants;

B. Research

6. Research shall remain a function of the Institute, bearing in mind that the main focus shall be on training, as outlined above; for the present, funding for research from the General Fund shall not exceed the present ratio of 13 per cent of the annual budget;

7. Current and ongoing research projects financed from the General Fund shall be concluded as soon as possible; if the long-term continuation of a project is envisaged, the appropriate United Nations body should consider financing it, or a special purpose grant should be sought for its execution;

8. Research and study falling within the mandate of the Institute may be financed from special purpose grants on a full-cost basis;

9. Research-cum-training in negotiating techniques, international law and economic and social development shall be funded from special purpose grants;

C. Projects financed from special purpose grants

10. Special purpose grants shall be welcome as long as they are made for activities that relate directly to the mandate of the Institute and do not overlap with work carried out elsewhere in the United Nations system;

11. Special purpose grants shall cover, in addition to the full costs of implementing the project (direct costs), including administrative costs, an execution fee, which should be determined by the Executive Director of the Institute on a case-by-case basis but should not be less than 13 per cent in each case;

12. The Secretary-General shall make available annually to all States, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and relevant non-governmental organizations a list of training and research projects and invite them to finance these projects through special purpose grants;

II. Finance and administration

13. In the light of the restructured programme set out above, the Secretary-General is requested to reorganize the management, staff and administrative and financial arrangements of the Institute in the following manner:

A. Staff

14. The staff, whose composition is reflected in the annex to the present resolution, shall be assigned to the programme activities of the Institute in proportion to the work-load and tasks necessary to carry out each programme activity at levels that will enable the Institute to carry them out effectively;

15. The composition and structure of the staff to be funded from the General Fund shall be reviewed by the Board of Trustees in the context of budget preparations and may be adjusted in the light of the financial resources available to, and programme activities of, the Institute, taking into account the views of all States, and all documents, formal and informal, discussed under the agenda item of the General Assembly entitled "Training and research: United Nations Institute for Training and Research";

16. The experience and expertise of the personnel of the Institute are to be fully and effectively utilized;

17. Fellows and additional staff may be financed from special purpose grants;

18. A roster shall be maintained of consultants and experts and rotating staff whose services may be needed by the Institute for the execution of projects and programmes at no cost or through financing from special purpose grants;

B. Budget

19. The use of financial resources available to the Institute shall be governed by the following principles in 1988 and subsequent years:

(a) The Institute shall operate on the basis of paid-in voluntary contributions and such other additional resources as may be available;

(b) The interest accruing from the reserve fund to be established by the Institute after the sale of the building it occupies shall be applied to the annual budgetary appropriations of the Institute;

(c) Allocations for programme and general operational costs shall correspond to the priority given to activities;

(d) General operational costs shall be reduced to a minimum;

(e) Staff costs, in relation to the overall budget, shall be minimized;

5. Approves the recommendation of the Secretary-General to proceed as rapidly as possible with the acquisition of the land and subsequent sale of the entire property of the building of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the resources to be used to repay the amounts currently due to the United Nations and the balance to be used as a reserve fund for the Institute;

6. Urges all States that have not yet contributed to the General Fund of the Institute to do so and calls upon all contributing States to increase their contributions to the Institute to enable it to continue to fulfil its mandate and to implement fully and successfully the provisions of the present resolution;

7. Appeals to all States to provide appropriate special purpose grants to enable the Institute to implement the training and research programmes that cannot be financed from its General Fund, and calls upon appropriate intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the Institute;

8. Emphasizes the urgent need for broad-based financing for the Institute and invites the traditional donors, in the light of the implementation of the present resolution, to resume or continue, as appropriate, their voluntary contributions to the Institute;

9. Requests the Board of Trustees to consider a procedure for designating alternates for Trustees who are unable to attend any meeting of the Board and for ensuring that the alternates so designated are able to participate fully in the deliberations and decision-making of the Board;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and submit to the Board of Trustees at its forthcoming session the necessary amendments to the statute of the Institute to reflect the reorganization of management, staff and administrative and financial arrangements, as well as the procedure for designating alternate representation on the Board;

11. Appeals to the Secretary-General to give priority consideration to absorbing, on an exceptional basis, within the United Nations Secretariat and other organizations of the United Nations system, the staff of the Institute who will be released as a result of the restructuring and to ensure that those who are so affected do not suffer loss of rank or benefits;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution and on any other developments that may affect the future of the Institute, including a section on how the research activities of the Institute affected by the present resolution relate to those of other United Nations bodies, with a view to better co-ordination of activities.

ANNEX

Proposed disposition of the staff of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research

Post

1. Executive Director (who will also serve as a Programme Officer)
2. Programme Officer (New York)
3. Programme Officer (Geneva)
4. Administrative and Finance Officer
5. Three General Service staff

General Assembly resolution 42/197

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/823) without vote, 4 December (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.88), based on informal consultations, orally revised; agenda item 84.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 3-9, 35, 39-41, 44, 45; plenary 96.

Following approval of the revised text in the Committee, Cameroon withdrew a draft resolution⁽²⁶⁾ by which the Assembly would have endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations and requested him to continue implementing the restructuring plan outlined in 1986 and to report on its implementation in 1988.

Explaining its position, New Zealand expressed concern at the current state of UNITAR, whose debts, it said, were much higher than those that an organization of its size should have incurred; the Institute's current structure was not appropriate in view of the financial resources obtained through voluntary contributions. The United States would have preferred the unrevised text to be adopted.

A representative of the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation stated that the United Nations would be prepared to advance funds, to be repaid in full in 1988 together with the debt currently owed to the Organization, in order to enable UNITAR to continue until the end of April 1988.

UN University

Activities and financing of UNU

In 1987,⁽²⁷⁾ the United Nations University, an autonomous academic institution within the United Nations system, carried out 75 research and additional exploratory activities, training and dissemination projects under nine programme areas: peace and conflict resolution; the global economy; energy systems and policy; resource policy and management; the food-energy nexus (FEN); food, nutrition, biotechnology and poverty (see p. 642); human and social development; regional perspectives; and science, technology and the information society. Since 1987 was the final year of UNU's medium-term perspective (1982-1987), many of the research projects were brought to conclusion, emphasis being placed on drawing conclusions, preparing publications, planning the dissemination of results and follow-up activities.

In 1987, there were 38 institutions associated with UNU which had significant roles in implementing its research and training programme. Training courses were completed by 142 UNU Fellows.

Total UNU income in 1986-1987 was $67.5 million, while expenditures amounted to $42.7 million. Unpaid pledges as at 31 December 1987 amounted to $26.6 million, while $16.7 million had been collected during the year from 20 Governments.⁽²⁸⁾

The adoption of austerity measures, which had begun in 1986 in order to compensate for the high value of the Japanese yen, continued as UNU's financial situation grew worse. In addition to a 20-per-cent cut in programme expenditures, posts were frozen to help cope with the crisis.

During the year, the UNU Rector took financial and other necessary action to initiate the operations of the Institute for Natural Resources in Africa (INRA), including its initial programme of work, and to draw up a budget. Efforts also continued to mobilize the additional financial resources required for the Institute. Plans for the construction of a permanent headquarters building for UNU also made progress. In November, the Netherlands informed UNU of its intent to contribute $23.1 million to the UNU

Endowment Fund and to provide suitable premises for the establishment of a research and training centre on new technologies at Maastricht.

Among UNU's activities in 1987 were five workshops to complete research on peace and global transformation. The University's first research and training centre, established in 1985, the World Institute for Development Economics Research, at Helsinki, Finland, continued research on hunger and poverty; money, finance and trade; and development and technological transformation. During the year, a training programme for young African scholars was initiated in collaboration with the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies.

In the final year of the FEN programme, the two main areas of work were integrated food-energy systems, on which a workshop was held in Beijing, China (October), and an alternative urban development strategies subprogramme. Under the latter and as part of the observance of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (see p. 715), a seminar on communications and urban strategies was organized with the Technological Research and Exchange Group in France; that activity was extended to regional workshops for NGOs at São Paulo, Brazil, and Nairobi, Kenya, as well as a workshop at the Habitat Forum at Berlin in June.

Projects on regional perspectives sought to bring together scholars to do research on the major social, political, economic and cultural forces shaping the development of each region. As the project on an Asian perspective drew to a close, UNU held a final meeting (Chiangmai, Thailand, December) to review its achievements and discuss ways to follow up the completed research. Since 1987 was the final year of work on the Latin American perspectives, research on all of the component topics was brought to a conclusion. The project's research output resulted in 27 network publications and four UNU publications. The major emphasis of a project on technological capacity and perspective in the third world was the formulation of a long-term research and development strategy for Latin America, with more than 50 scientists working together to study the long-term socio-economic and cultural impact of new technologies on the region. Under the project on European perspectives, a series of meetings was held in 1987, as well as two workshops (Warsaw, Poland, March) on global challenges and Eastern European responses, and on the crisis in development.

In 1987, a project on the improvement of socio-economic conditions in Arab rural areas was initiated, with funding from the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations.

In September 1987, Professor Heitor Gurgulino de Souza began his tenure as UNU Rector.

Activities of the Council

The UNU Council met twice during 1987, holding its twenty-ninth session at Helsinki from 6 to 10 July and its thirtieth session at Tokyo from 7 to 11 December.

At the July session, during which a colloquium on hunger and poverty was held, the Council reviewed UNU's first decade of work and a progress report on INRA. It discussed a feasibility study on a new research and training centre on new technologies, authorizing the Rector to proceed with preparations for the centre.

At its December session, the Council's work concentrated on the proposed programme and budget for 1988-1989. The Council took note of progress reports on INRA, the permanent headquarters building at Tokyo, and a proposed research and training centre in Japan, and of a report on external evaluation in UNU.

On 19 May 1987, by decision 1987/115, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the UNU Council on its work in 1986⁽²⁹⁾

REFERENCES

- ⁽¹⁾YUN 1986, p. 640. ⁽²⁾DP/1987/15. ⁽³⁾E/1987/25 (dec. 87/16). ⁽⁴⁾E/1987/23. ⁽⁵⁾Proceedings of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Seventh Session, Geneva, 9 July-3 August 1987, vol. I, Report and Annexes (TD/352, vol. I), Sales No. E.88.II.D.1. ⁽⁶⁾YUN 1985, p. 781, GA res. 40/213, 17 Dec. 1985. ⁽⁷⁾A/42/275-E/1987/76. ⁽⁸⁾YUN 1986, p. 640, ESC res. 1986/73, 23 July 1986. ⁽⁹⁾A/42/335-E/1987/84. ⁽¹⁰⁾YUN 1986, p. 886, ESC res. 1986/50, 22 July 1986. ⁽¹¹⁾E/1987/83. ⁽¹²⁾YUN 1986, p. 725, GA res. 41/118, 4 Dec. 1986. ⁽¹³⁾E/1987/L.19. ⁽¹⁴⁾E/1987/113. ⁽¹⁵⁾A/C.3/42/4. ⁽¹⁶⁾A/42/540. ⁽¹⁷⁾YUN 1982, p. 992. ⁽¹⁸⁾A/43/14. ⁽¹⁹⁾Directory of European Training Institutions in the Field of Bilateral and Multilateral Diplomacy, Public Administration and Management, Economic and Social Development, Sales No. E/F.87.III.K.DS/7. ⁽²⁰⁾A/43/5/Add.4. ⁽²¹⁾A/42/5/Add.4. ⁽²²⁾A/42/372 & Corr.1. ⁽²³⁾A/42/579. ⁽²⁴⁾YUN 1986, p. 641, GA res. 41/172, 5 Dec. 1986. ⁽²⁵⁾A/42/694 & Corr.1. ⁽²⁶⁾A/C.2/42/L.93. ⁽²⁷⁾A/43/31. ⁽²⁸⁾A/43/5, vol. III. ⁽²⁹⁾E/1987/26.

OTHER PUBLICATION

Human Development, Adjustment and Growth, Sales No. E.87.III.B.1.

Chapter XV

Environment

There was rapid and world-wide recognition in 1987 that environmental problems, among them the depletion of the ozone layer, global warming and desertification, called for urgent action by the international community. The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) continued its efforts to protect the Earth's environment.

In September, 24 countries and the European Economic Community signed the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, a co-operative achievement of Governments, the international community and UNEP to protect the human race from adverse environmental effects caused by man. UNEP searched for means to delay or reduce climate change and explored ways of diminishing the effects of such change. The United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office continued to combat desertification and allocated $55.97 million for projects in the region.

In June, the UNEP Governing Council approved the Cairo Guidelines and Principles for the Environmentally Sound Management of Hazardous Wastes and the London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade.

UNEP continued its action to protect the marine environment, conserve wildlife and protected areas, as well as tropical forests, monitor various aspects of the environment (climate, global resources, transport of pollutants), conduct research on genetic resources and promote the development of environmental law.

The General Assembly, by resolution 42/186, adopted an Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond as a broad framework to guide national action and international co-operation. A report of the World Commission on Environment and Development focusing on sustainable development was submitted to the Assembly, which welcomed and took action on it in resolution 42/187.

The Assembly considered international co-operation in the area of the environment (42/184), and called on Governments to sign the Montreal Protocol (42/182) as well as to co-operate in the control of illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes (42/183).

Taking up the question of desertification, the Assembly appealed to Governments to increase their support for the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office and to support the development efforts of countries stricken by desertification and drought (42/188). It further urged Governments, United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to intensify their efforts to combat desertification (42/189 A), drew the attention of the international community to the pressing need to implement the Plan of Action in the Sudano-Sahelian region (42/189 B), urged Governments to mobilize the funds required (42/189 C) and requested the Secretary-General to report to the 1988 Assembly on the implementation of those resolutions (42/189 D).

The Assembly also decided that no regular session of the UNEP Governing Council would be held in 1988, and that beginning in 1989 its regular sessions would be held only in odd-numbered years (42/185).

Comprehensive information covering all aspects of UNEP's 1987 activities was given in the Executive Director's annual report.

Topics related to this chapter. Middle East: occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief: drought-stricken areas of Africa. Regional economic and social activities: environment. Natural resources: water and marine resources. Energy resources: nuclear energy. Science and technology: science and technology to combat drought and desertification. Health and human resources: health. Human settlements. Statistics: energy, environment and industry statistics.

General aspects

Long-term environmental strategies

Out of a 1982 special session of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) Governing Council⁽¹⁾ grew an awareness of a need for far-reaching blueprints and long-term environmental strategies for achieving sustainable development to the year 2000 and beyond in the face of rapid socio-economic, political and technological change⁽²⁾ In accordance with a 1983 General Assembly resolution calling for a report on an environmental perspective to the year 2000 and beyond⁽³⁾ one report, "Our common future"⁽⁴⁾ submitted in August 1987, was prepared by an independent special commission made up of government officials, economists and scientists, which later adopted the name World Commission on Environment and Development. The other report, "The environmental perspective to the year 2000 and beyond",⁽⁵⁾ was drawn up by an Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee of the UNEP Governing Council.

The Assembly took action on both reports in 1987.

Environmental perspective

In June,⁽⁶⁾ the Governing Council of UNEP approved the Environmental Perspective and called on Governments to ensure integration of environmental objectives in sectoral and economic ministries. It decided to transmit to the General Assembly for its consideration and adoption the Environmental Perspective and a draft text,⁽⁷⁾ that, among other things, called for the adoption of the Perspective and asked the governing bodies of the organs and organizations of the United Nations system to take the Perspective into account in developing their medium-term plans and programmes. The Council called on the UNEP Executive Director to take into account the Perspective's recommendations in further developing the Environment Programme.

At its October 1987 session,⁽⁸⁾ the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) approved its annual report for submission to the Governing Council in 1988, with the understanding that the sections concerning the Environmental Perspective would be revised by the UNEP Executive Director to take into account any related action taken by the 1987 General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/186 without vote.

Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/161 of 19 December 1983 on the process of preparation of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, in which it, inter alia, welcomed the desire of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to develop the Environmental Perspective and transmit it to the General Assembly for adoption, benefiting in carrying out that function from its consideration of the relevant proposals made by a special commission, which adopted the name World Commission on Environment and Development,

Welcoming the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, prepared by the Intergovernmental Inter-sessional Preparatory Committee on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond of the United Nations Environment Programme, referred to in General Assembly resolution 38/161, considered further by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its fourteenth session and adopted in its decision 14/13 of 19 June 1987, as a basis for the further elaboration of its programme and operations, while acknowledging that different views exist on some aspects,

Appreciating that concepts, ideas and recommendations contained in the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development have been incorporated into the Environmental Perspective,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and its Intergovernmental Inter-sessional Preparatory Committee on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond in the preparation of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond;

2. Adopts the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, contained in the annex to the present resolution, as a broad framework to guide national action and international co-operation on policies and programmes aimed at achieving environmentally sound development, and specifically as a guide to the preparation of further system-wide medium-term environment programmes and the medium-term programmes of the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in the light of Governing Council decision 14/13;

3. Notes that the perceptions generally shared by Governments of the nature of environmental problems, and their interrelations with other international problems, and of the efforts to deal with them include the following:

(a) An international atmosphere of peace, security and co-operation, free from the presence and the threat of wars of all types, especially nuclear war, in which intellectual and natural resources are not wasted on armaments by any nation, would greatly enhance environmentally sound development;

(b) The imbalance of present world economic conditions makes it extremely difficult to bring about sustained improvement in the world's environmental situation; accelerated and balanced world development and lasting improvements in the global environment require improved world economic conditions, especially for the developing countries;

(c) Since mass poverty is often at the root of environmental degradation, its elimination and ensuring equitable access of people to environmental resources are essential for sustained environmental improvements;

(d) The environment puts constraints on as well as provides opportunities for economic growth and social well-being; environmental degradation, in its various forms, has assumed such proportions as can cause irreversible changes in ecosystems, which threaten to undermine human well-being; environmental constraints, however, are generally relative to the state of technology and socio-economic conditions, which can and should be improved and managed to achieve sustained world economic growth;

(e) Environmental issues are closely intertwined with development policies and practices; consequently, environmental goals and actions need to be defined in relation to development objectives and policies;

(f) Although it is important to tackle immediate environmental problems, anticipatory and preventive policies are the most effective and economical in achieving environmentally sound development;

(g) The environmental impacts of actions in one sector are often felt in other sectors; thus internalization of environmental considerations in sectoral policies and programmes and their co-ordination are essential for the achievement of sustainable development;

(h) Since conflicts of interest among population groups, or among countries, are often inherent in the nature of environmental problems, the participation of the concerned parties is essential in determining effective environmental management practices;

(i) Environmental degradation can be controlled and reversed only by ensuring that the parties causing the damage will be accountable for their actions, and that they will participate, on the basis of full access to available knowledge, in improving environmental conditions;

(j) Renewable resources, as part of complex and interlinked ecosystems, can have sustainable yields only if used while taking into account system-wide effects of exploitation;

(k) The safeguarding of species is a moral obligation of humankind and should improve and sustain human well-being;

(l) Building awareness at various levels of environmental conditions and management, through the provision of information, education and training, is essential for environmental protection and improvement;

(m) Strategies to deal with environmental challenges have to be flexible and should allow for adjustments to emerging problems and evolving environmental management technology;

(n) International environmental disputes, which are growing in number and variety, need to be resolved by peaceful means;

4. Welcomes as the overall aspirational goal for the world community the achievement of sustainable development on the basis of prudent management of available global resources and environmental capacities and the rehabilitation of the environment previously subjected to degradation and misuse, and the aspirational goals to the year 2000 and beyond as set out in the Environmental Perspective, namely:

(a) The achievement over time of such a balance between population and environmental capacities as would make possible sustainable development, keeping in view the links between population levels, consumption patterns, poverty and the natural resource base;

(b) The achievement of food security without resource depletion or environmental degradation and restoration of the resource base where environmental damage has been occurring;

(c) The provision of sufficient energy at reasonable cost, notably by increasing access to energy substantially in the developing countries, to meet current and expanding needs in ways which minimize environmental degradation and risks, conserve non-renewable sources of energy and realize the full potential of renewable sources of energy;

(d) The sustained improvements in levels of living in all countries, especially the developing countries, through industrial development that prevents or minimizes environmental damage and risks;

(e) The provision of improved shelter with access to essential amenities in a clean and secure setting conducive to health and to the prevention of environment-related diseases, which would, at the same time, alleviate serious environmental degradation;

(f) The establishment of an equitable system of international economic relations aimed at achieving continuing economic advancement for all States based on principles recognized by the international community, in order to stimulate and sustain environmentally sound development, especially in developing countries;

5. Agrees that the recommendations for action contained in the Environmental Perspective should be implemented, as appropriate, through national and international action by Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and scientific bodies;

6. Requests the Governing Council to keep under review the extent to which the long-term environmental actions recommended in the Environmental Perspective have been implemented and to identify any new environmental concerns that may arise;

7. Calls special attention to section IV of the Environmental Perspective, which spells out instruments of environmental action, to be used as support in addressing, as appropriate, problems dealt with in previous sections of the Environmental Perspective;

8. Stresses the essential role of the United Nations Environment Programme within the United Nations system in catalyzing environmentally sound and sustainable development, and agrees with the Governing Council that this role should be strengthened and that the resources of the Environment Fund should be substantially increased with greater participation;

9. Endorses the priorities and functions for the United Nations Environment Programme set out in paragraph 117 of the Environmental Perspective;

10. Decides to transmit the text of the Environmental Perspective to all Governments and to the governing bodies of the organs and organizations of the United Nations system as a broad framework to guide national action and international co-operation on policies and programmes aimed at achieving environmentally sound and sustainable development;

11. Calls upon the governing bodies of the organs and organizations of the United Nations system to consider the Environmental Perspective and take it into account in the development of their own medium-term plans and programmes as relevant to their own mandates;

12. Requests the governing bodies of relevant United Nations organizations to report regularly to the General Assembly on the progress made in achieving the objectives of environmentally sound and sustainable development in line with paragraph 114 of the Environmental Perspective;

13. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution and the relevant provisions of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond.

ANNEX

Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond

CONTENTS

	Paragraphs
I. Introduction	1-4
II. Sectoral issues	5-68

	Paragraphs
A. Population	5-9
B. Food and agriculture	10-25
C. Energy	26-35
D. Industry	36-47
E. Health and human settlements	48-59
F. International economic relations	60-68
III. Other issues of global concern	69-86
A. Oceans and seas	70-73
B. Outer space	74-75
G. Biological diversity	76-81
D. Security and environment	82-86
IV. Instruments of environmental action	87-120
A. Assessment	88-93
B. Planning	94-99
C. Legislation and environmental law	100-104
D. Awareness building and training	105-109
E. Institutions	110-120

I. Introduction

1. Awareness of environmental issues has been growing during the past decade. This awareness has emerged among and within the Governments as they have addressed environmental problems singly, bilaterally, regionally and globally. The establishment of ministries for environmental conservation and enhancement is but one sign of this growth of common concern. Much of this concern has crystallized in the decisions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme. Despite these noteworthy developments, and the emergence in the world community of many shared perceptions regarding environmental problems and actions, environmental degradation has continued unabated, threatening human well-being and, in some instances, the very survival of life on our planet.

2. To meet this challenge, the overall aspirational goal must be sustainable development on the basis of prudent management of available global resources and environmental capacities, and the rehabilitation of the environment previously subjected to degradation and misuse. Development is sustainable when it meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet theirs.

3. The following are some shared perceptions of Governments of the nature of environmental issues and their interrelations with other international problems and the efforts to deal with them:

(a) An international atmosphere of peace, security and co-operation, free from the presence and the threat of wars of all types, especially nuclear war, in which intellectual and natural resources are not wasted on armaments by any nation, would greatly enhance environmentally sound development;

(b) The imbalance of present world economic conditions makes it extremely difficult to bring about sustained improvement in the world's environmental situation. Accelerated and balanced world development and lasting improvements in the global environment require improved world economic conditions, especially in the developing countries;

(c) Since mass poverty is often at the root of environmental degradation, its elimination and ensuring equitable access of people to environmental resources are essential for sustained environmental improvements;

(d) The environment puts constraints on as well as provides opportunities for economic growth and social well-being. Environmental degradation, in its various forms, has assumed such proportions as can cause irreversible changes in ecosystems which threaten to undermine human well-being. Environmental constraints, however, are generally relative to the state of technology and socio-economic conditions, which can and should be improved and managed to achieve sustained world economic growth;

(e) Environmental issues are closely intertwined with development policies and practices; consequently, environmental goals and actions need to be defined in relation to development objectives and policies;

(f) Although it is important to tackle immediate environmental problems, anticipatory and preventive policies are the most effective and economical in achieving environmentally sound development;

(g) The environmental impacts of actions in one sector are often felt in other sectors; thus, internalization of environmental considerations in sectoral policies and programmes and their co-ordination are essential for the achievement of sustainable development;

(h) Since conflicts of interest among population groups, or among countries, are often inherent in the nature of environmental problems, participation of the concerned parties is essential in determining effective environmental management practices;

(i) Environmental degradation can be controlled and reversed only by ensuring that the parties causing the damage will be accountable for their actions, and that they will participate, on the basis of full access to available knowledge, in improving environmental conditions;

(j) Renewable resources, as part of complex and interlinked ecosystems, can have sustainable yields only if used while taking into account system-wide effects of exploitation;

(k) The safeguarding of species is a moral obligation of humankind, and should improve and sustain human well-being;

(l) Building awareness at various levels of environmental conditions and management through the provision of information, education and training is essential for environmental protection and improvement;

(m) Strategies to deal with environmental challenges have to be flexible and should allow for adjustments to emerging problems and evolving environmental management technology;

(n) International environmental disputes, which are growing in number and variety, need to be resolved by peaceful means.

4. Environmental problems cut across a range of policy issues and are mostly rooted in inappropriate development patterns. Consequently, environmental issues, goals and actions cannot be framed in isolation from the development and policy sectors from which they emanate. Against this background, and in the light of General Assembly resolution 38/161 of 19 December 1983, the present document reflects an intergovernmental consensus on growing environmental challenges to the year 2000 and beyond, in six main sectors. In addition, the document discusses briefly other issues of global concern which do not fit easily under the sectoral headings and considers instruments for environmental action, including the role of institutions in dealing with environmental issues. Throughout the Environmental Perspective, an attempt has been made to reflect consistently the interdependent and integrated nature of environmental issues. Under each sectoral heading, this document covers: the issue; the outlook; the goal to be aspired to in dealing with the issue; and recommended action. While drawing upon the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, the Environmental Perspective has sought to delineate, in an organized manner, the elements of shared perceptions, environmental issues, aspirational goals and the agenda for action envisaged for the Environmental Perspective by the Governing Council and the General Assembly.

II. Sectoral issues

A. Population

1. Issue and outlook

5. Issue: The optimum contribution of human resources for the achievement of sustainable development has not been realized. Yet population levels, growth and distribution will continue to overload the capacities of the environment in many countries. Rapid population growth, among other factors, has exacerbated poverty. The negative interaction between population and environment has tended to create social tensions.

6. Outlook: People are the most valuable asset anywhere for the betterment of economic and social conditions and the quality of life. Yet, in a number of countries, the momentum of population growth today, coupled with poverty, environmental degradation and an unfavourable economic situation, has tended to create serious disequilibria between population and environment and to aggravate the problem of "environmental refugees". Traditions and social attitudes, especially in rural areas, have been a major impediment to population planning.

7. World population may exceed 6 billion by the year 2000. Several countries have achieved population equilibrium as defined by low birth and death rates and high life expectancies. But, for a large part of the developing world, this has not happened because of unfavourable economic conditions. Over 90 per cent of the net addition to the world's population between now and the year 2025, when the world population may exceed 8 billion, will occur in the developing countries. Many of them already suffer from desertification, fuelwood deficits, and loss of forests. Population planning would help, but is not sufficient, to achieve equilibrium between population and environmental capacities. Countries have not yet related population planning to development planning, nor have they linked population and environmental action for mutually reinforcing improvements. Equally, there is the need for more concern for human progress and social justice as factors influencing human resources development and environmental improvement.

2. Goal and recommended action

8. Goal: The achievement over time of such a balance between population and environmental capacities as would make possible sustainable development, keeping in view the links between population levels, consumption patterns, poverty and the natural resource base.

9. Recommended action:

(a) Development planning which takes into account environmental considerations should be an important instrument in achieving population goals. Countries should identify the rural and urban areas with acute population pressures on the environment. The environmental problems of large cities in developing countries should receive special attention. As poverty increases, economic development decreases and population rates grow, development plans should give special attention to population-related programmes aimed at improving environmental conditions at local levels;

(b) Significant changes in natural resources should be monitored and anticipated. This information should be fed back into sub-national and national development plans and related to the planning of spatial distribution of populations;

(c) Land and water use and spatial planning should bring about a balanced distribution of population through, for example, incentives for industrial location, and for resettlement and development of intermediate-sized towns, keeping in view the capacities of the environment;

(d) Public works, including food-for-work programmes, should be designed and implemented in areas of environmental stress and population pressures, with a view to providing employment and simultaneously improving the environment;

(e) Governments and voluntary organizations should increase public understanding, through formal and non-formal education, of the significance of population planning for environmental improvement and the important role of local action. The role of women in improving the environment and in population planning should receive special attention, as social changes that raise the status of women can have a profound effect in bringing down population growth rates;

(f) Private enterprise, and industry in particular, should participate actively in the work of governmental and non-governmental organizations aimed at relieving population and environmental stress;

(g) Education should be geared towards making people more capable of dealing with problems of excessive population density. Such education should help people acquire practical and vocational skills to enable them to become more self-reliant and enhance their participation in the improvement of the environment at the local level;

(h) International agencies, notably, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the United Nations Children's Fund, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and the World Food Programme, should give priority attention to the geographical areas experiencing acute population pressures on the environment. They should reflect sensitivity to environmental improvement in the design and implementation of their population-related programmes. Multilateral and bilateral development assistance should be increased to finance innovative projects to make population programmes more effective by relating them to environmental improvement;

(i) Population policies must have a broader focus than controlling numbers. Governments should work on several fronts: to achieve and maintain population equilibrium, to expand the carrying capacity of the environment and improve health and sanitation at local levels, to develop human resources through education and training, and to ensure equitable distribution of the benefits of economic growth.

B. Food and agriculture

1. Issue and outlook

10. Issue: The shortage of food in many developing countries creates insecurity and environmental threats. The quest to meet rapidly growing food needs, combined with insufficient attention to the environmental impact of agricultural policies and practices, has been causing great environmental damage. This includes: degradation and depletion in the form of loss of soil and forests; drought and desertification; loss and deterioration of the quality of surface and ground water; reduction in genetic diversity and of fish stocks; damage to the sea floor; waterlogging, salinization, and siltation; soil, water and air pollution; and eutrophication caused by improper use of fertilizers and pesticides and by industrial effluents.

11. Outlook: While food production capabilities have increased greatly over the last three decades, self-reliance in food production has not been achieved in many countries. In the absence of proper environmental management, the conversion of forests and grassland into cropland will increase land degradation. For example, in sub-Saharan Africa desertification and frequent droughts are major concerns causing large-scale migration from rural areas. In most developing countries the pressure on the natural resources, including those in the public domain, is a serious concern. In some developed countries loss of land productivity from excessive use of chemicals and loss of prime quality land to urbanization are major concerns.

12. Soil erosion has increased in all regions: increased intensity of land use has resulted in the reduction of fallowing which, in turn, has undermined soil conservation, management of moisture and control of weeds and diseases in small holder agriculture. The main causes of soil erosion have been deforestation, overgrazing and overworking of farmland. Inappropriate patterns of land use and inadequate access to land are other factors which have been at work. Some off-site impacts have been flooding, reduction in hydro-electric capacity, reduced life of irrigation systems and declines in fish catches. The world's rivers may be carrying 24 billion tons of sediment to the seas annually. Technologies which make optimal use of natural resources, minimum tillage, fallowing and drought-, pest- and disease-resistant varieties, combined with mixed cropping, crop rotation, terracing and agro-forestry, have kept erosion under control in some places.

13. Nearly one third of all land is at risk from desertification. Over the last quarter century the population in arid lands has increased by more than 80 per cent. Since the adoption in 1977 of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, awareness of the problem has grown and so have organizational efforts to deal with it. But the basic elements of the action needed, namely, to stop the process, to rehabilitate degraded lands, and to ensure their effective management, do not yet receive the attention they urgently need. Although long-term economic returns on investments in the control of dryland degradation are high, insufficient resources are being devoted to it.

14. Forests cover approximately one third of all land. Tropical forests occupy over 1.9 billion hectares, of which

1.2 billion hectares are closed forests, and the remaining open tree formations. Although the rate of tree plantations in the tropics has accelerated recently (about 1.1 million hectares annually), it amounts to only about one tenth of the rate of deforestation. Use of forest land for agriculture through shifting or sedentary cultivation, increasing demand for fuelwood, unmanaged clearance and logging, burning and conversion for pastoral purposes are the main factors behind tropical deforestation. In semi-humid and dry climates fire can be a significant cause as well. Widespread deforestation has brought about far-reaching changes in tropical forest ecosystems, which no longer can perform well their essential functions of water retention, climate control, soil conservation and provision of livelihood.

15. Timber, an increasingly scarce commodity, has become the subject of extensive international negotiations. The International Tropical Timber Agreement, ratified in 1985, aims at promoting international trade in industrial wood and environmental management of tropical forests. The Tropical Forestry Action Plan, prepared under the auspices of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, puts forward five priority areas aimed at: forestry land use planning, forestry-based industrial development, fuelwood and energy planning, conservation of tropical forest ecosystems and institutional support for better forestry management.

16. There have been significant changes in weather patterns as a result in part of loss of forests and vegetation cover. This has reduced river flows and lake levels and also lowered agricultural productivity. Irrigation has greatly improved arability in many areas of uncertain, or inadequate, rainfall. It has also been playing a vital role in the Green Revolution. Inappropriate irrigation, however, has wasted water, washed out nutrients and, through salinization and alkalization, damaged the productivity of millions of hectares. Globally, salinization alone may be removing as much land from production as the land being irrigated, and about half of the land under surface irrigation may be saline or waterlogged. Excessive use of ground water for irrigation has resulted in lower water tables and semi-arid conditions.

17. Fisheries potential has not yet been tapped sufficiently or in such ways as to ensure sustainable yields, particularly in the developing coastal States, which do not possess the necessary infrastructure, technology or trained manpower to develop and manage fisheries in their exclusive economic zones. Excessive fishing activities have led to overexploitation of several important fish stocks and the exhaustion of some. By the year 2000, annual fish supplies may fall short of demand by about 10 to 15 million tons. Regional agreements on co-ordination of national fishing policies for licensing procedures, catch reporting, monitoring and surveillance have begun to consider sustainability of yields and use of appropriate technology. The World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development established a framework and programmes of action for fisheries management.

18. Freshwater fish farming and aquaculture now produce annually about 8 million tons of fish. In Europe and in South and South-East Asia, aquaculture has made important strides. Whether as part of a traditional way of supplementing farm incomes and protein intake or as an industry, carefully practised aquaculture holds great promise for integrated environmental management and rural development in many countries.

19. The use of high-yielding seed varieties has multiplied agricultural output but has led to a reduction in the genetic diversity of crops and an increase in their vulnerability to diseases and pests. The emerging technology of direct gene transfer, or transfer of the symbiotic nitrogen-fixing capacity of leguminous crops to cereals, can greatly increase production and reduce costs. Also, the spread of gene banks, through the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources, and the work of the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology should improve the prospects for genetic diversity, and thereby enhance agricultural productivity.

20. Overuse of pesticides has polluted water and soil, damaging the ecology of agriculture and creating hazards for human and animal health. Pesticides have to be used to increase agricultural production, but their indiscriminate use has destroyed natural predators and other non-target species and increased resistance in target pests. More than 400 insect species are believed to be resistant to pesticides and their number is increasing.

21. Use of chemical fertilizers per capita has increased fivefold between 1950 and 1983. In some countries excessive use of fertilizers, along with household and industrial effluents, has caused eutrophication of lakes, canals, irrigation reservoirs, and even coastal seas through runoffs of nitrogen compounds and phosphates. Ground water has also been polluted by nitrates in many places, and nitrate levels in rivers have risen steadily over the last two decades. Degradation of the quality of surface and ground water, caused by chemicals, including nitrates, has been a significant problem in developed and developing countries alike.

22. In North America, Western Europe and some other areas, food surpluses have accumulated as a result in part of farm price subsidization. The push to produce more in response to incentives, coupled with excessive use of fertilizers and pesticides, has led to degradation and soil erosion in some countries. Similarly, export subsidization of food grains by some countries has undermined agricultural exports of some others, and also led to environmental neglect of farmland. In some countries, however, there is a trend towards reducing the scale of farming, encouraging organic farming, restoring the natural beauty of the countryside and diversifying the rural economy.

23. In the developing countries, farmers receive too little for their produce, and production is thereby discouraged. City dwellers often buy food at subsidized prices, and peasants may receive only a fraction of the market price. In countries where farmers have begun to receive better prices for their produce, agricultural production has increased and soil and water management has improved. When equitable agricultural prices are accompanied by technical assistance for environmental management of farming, they can help improve the quality of life in the countryside as well as in cities, partly by stemming the flow of rural-urban migration. Upward adjustment of food prices is, however, a politically sensitive issue, especially in situations of low resource productivity, low income, large-scale unemployment and slow economic growth.

2. Goal and recommended action

24. Goal: The achievement of food security without resource depletion or environmental degradation, and restoration of the resource base where environmental damage has been occurring.

25. Recommended action:

(a) Policies of Governments for using agricultural land, forests and water resources should take into account degradation trends as well as evaluation of potentials. Agricultural policies should vary from region to region to reflect different regional needs, encouraging farmers to adopt practices that are ecologically sustainable in their own areas and promote national food security. Local communities should be involved in the design and implementation of such policies;

(b) Policy distortions that have caused undue pressures on marginal lands, or taken away prime farmland for urbanization, or led to environmental neglect of natural resources, have to be identified and eliminated;

(c) Governments should design and implement regulatory measures, as well as taxation and price policies and incentives, aimed at ensuring that the right of owning agricultural land carries an obligation to sustain its productivity. Long-term agricultural credits should require farmers to undertake soil conservation practices, including keeping a portion of land fallow, where appropriate;

(d) Governments should promote equity in means for food production and in distribution. Governments should design and implement comprehensive agrarian reforms to improve the levels of living of farm workers who lack land. Governments should take decisive action to turn the terms of trade in favour of farmers, through pricing policy and government expenditure reallocation;

(e) Governments should ascertain direct and indirect environmental impacts of alternative crop, forestry and land use patterns. Fiscal and trade policies should be based on such environmental assessments. Governments should give priority to establishing a national policy and to creating or strengthening institutions to restore areas where natural factors and land use practices have reduced productivity;

(f) In the national development plans and agricultural programmes of countries experiencing desertification, dryland rehabilitation and management have to figure prominently. Better systems of early warning against drought and other dryland disasters have to be developed, with the World Meteorological Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Environment Programme and the relevant regional organizations playing appropriate roles;

(g) Sound forest policies should be based on an analysis of the capacity of the forests and the land under them to perform various functions. Programmes to conserve forest resources should start with the local people. Contracts covering forest use will have to be negotiated or renegotiated to ensure sustainability. Clear-cutting of large forest areas should be avoided and replanting of logged forestry areas should be required. Portions of forests should be designated as protected areas to conserve soil, water, wildlife and genetic resources in their natural habitat;

(h) Social and economic costs of deforestation, including clear-cutting, have to be estimated and reported on in relation to the periodic national reporting on the economic performance of forestry. Similarly, the damage costs of waterlogging and salinization have to be reported in conjunction with the reporting on irrigation and agricultural production. The loss of land to deserts and its consequences for food production, trade, employment and income have to be made part of the annual reporting on economic growth. Economic policies and planning have to reflect such environmental accounting;

(i) In areas experiencing deforestation and lack of forest resources, economic and other incentives should be introduced to manage forests and woody vegetation from an environmental standpoint and to promote tree nurseries, tree farming and fuelwood plantations. Local communities should be encouraged to take major responsibility for such undertakings;

(j) Projects should be designed and implemented to promote afforestation, agro-forestry systems, water management and soil conservation measures, such as land contour-levelling and terracing, in areas of environmental stress. Such projects should respond to the needs of the local people for food, fodder and fuel, while increasing the long-term productivity of natural resources. Environmental improvement schemes should become a regular part of national relief, rural employment and income-support schemes to sustain development in regions prone to drought or other environmental stress;

(k) Within the framework of a national water policy, which should facilitate an intersectoral and integrated approach to water development and use, technical, economic and organizational means have to be geared to improving efficiency of water use in farming and animal husbandry. Emphasis on ground-water storage in drylands should improve assurance of water availability. Improvements in water application techniques to minimize wastage, co-ordination of farming patterns with water supply, and such pricing of water as would cover the cost of its collection, storage and supply, should be introduced to conserve water in scarcity areas;

(l) In the choice of technology and the scale of irrigation, environmental costs and benefits should be taken into account. Decentralized and small-scale irrigation have to receive special attention. Proper drainage to prevent salinization and waterlogging has to accompany irrigation. Development assistance has to play a vital role in improving productivity of existing irrigation, reducing its environmental damage and adapting it to the needs of small-scale, diversified agriculture;

(m) The traditional rights of subsistence farmers, particularly shifting cultivators, pastoralists, and nomads, must be protected from encroachment. Provision of infrastructure, services and information should help modernize nomadic life-styles without damaging their traditionally harmonious relationships with ecosystems. Programmes of land clearance and resettlement should be based on an assessment of their environmental, along with their social and economic, impacts. Agro-industry, mining and schemes of geographical dispersal of settlements should also aim at improving environmental conditions in rural areas;

(n) Public education, information campaigns, technical assistance, training, legislation, standard setting and incentives should be oriented toward encouraging the use of organic matter in agriculture. The use of fertilizers and pesticides has to be guided, inter alia, through training, awareness building and appropriate price policies, so as to establish integrated nutrient supply systems responsive to environmental impacts. Similarly, subsidies, which have led to the overuse or abuse of chemical fertilizers and pesticides, have to be phased out;

(o) Decentralized storage facilities, with the upgrading of traditional methods to ensure protection of stored grains, should receive attention in the planning of support services for rural and agricultural development;

(p) Where the agricultural frontier has extended in an uncontrolled manner, Governments should make special efforts to expand the area under woodland and nature reserves;

(q) Satellite imagery, aerial photography and geographical information systems of assessing and monitoring should be deployed to establish natural resource data bases. Such data should be made available, freely or at a nominal charge, to the countries in need. The United Nations Environment Programme should co-ordinate international programmes in this field. Such data collection and their socio-economic analyses should facilitate the design and implementation of land use and natural resource development plans, and improve international co-operation in the environmental management of transboundary natural resources;

(r) In international co-operation, priority should be given to schemes aimed at strengthening skills and institutional capabilities in the developing countries in fields such as applied genetics, agro-forestry, organic recycling, integrated pest management, crop rotation, drainage, soil-conserving ploughing, sand-dune stabilization, small-scale irrigation and environmentally sound management of fresh-water systems;

(s) Biotechnology, including tissue culture, conversion of biomass into useful produce, micro-electronics and information technology, should be deployed, after assessing carefully their environmental impacts and cost effectiveness, with a view to promoting environmental management of agriculture. Governments should enhance the access of farmers to such technologies through national policies and international co-operation. Research should be intensified on new technologies urgently needed in regions which have unreliable rainfall, uneven topography, and poor soils. Governments should also set up targets for the development of cadres of professionals specializing in environmental management of soil, water and forests and in biotechnology with a multi-disciplinary and integrated outlook;

(t) Aquaculture should be developed to the fullest, where possible in conjunction with farming, using low-cost, simple, labour-intensive technology. Go-operation for environmental management of marine living resources and fisheries should be intensified, through technical assistance as well as conventions and agreements;

(u) Because of women's important role in agriculture in many developing countries, they should be provided with adequate education and training opportunities. They should also have the necessary power to take decisions regarding agriculture and forestry programmes;

(v) Distortions in the structure of the world food market should be minimized, and the focus of production should be shifted to food deficit countries. In developed countries incentive systems should be changed to discourage overproduction and foster improved soil and water management. Governments must recognize that all parties lose through protectionist barriers, and redesign trade and tax policies using environmental and economic criteria;

(w) International agreements should be concluded in respect of agricultural price policies, with a view to minimizing waste and mismanagement of food and natural resources in agriculture. Such agreements should aim at bringing about an international division of labour in agriculture in conformity with the long-term capabilities of countries in agricultural production. In this context, consideration should be given to strengthening the work of the World Food Programme through the establishment of a world food bank from which countries could draw food supplies in emergency situations;

(x) Special attention should be given to protection and careful development of wetlands, particularly in view of their long-term economic value;

(y) Sustainable exploitation of living wild resources should receive special consideration in the light of its contribution to achieving food security.

C. Energy

1. Issue and outlook

26. Issue: There are vast disparities in the patterns of energy consumption. Accelerated economic growth and growing populations require a rapid expansion in energy production and consumption. Major problems in this regard include: depletion of the supplies of, and inadequate access to, fuelwood, and environmental impacts of fossil energy production, transmission and use, for example, acidification of the environment, accumulation of greenhouse gases and consequent climatic change. Although energy is crucial to the development process, there has been little concerted action to balance environmental imperatives and energy demands.

27. Outlook: About three fourths of the world's energy consumption is in the form of fossil fuels: oil, coal, and natural gas. The remainder is supplied mainly by biomass, hydropower and nuclear power. The main problems caused by fossil fuel use are: air pollution, acidification of soil, fresh water and forests, and climatic change, especially warming of the atmosphere. The costs of controlling these problems and of dealing with their environmental and health impacts have been enormous. New and renewable sources of energy, including solar, wind, ocean and geothermal, are being developed but are unlikely to make a significant contribution during the rest of this century.

28. International oil prices are fluctuating. The immediate economic impact of lower prices has been significant, yet the momentum of efforts to improve energy efficiency and to develop alternatives for fossil fuels, which began in the wake of high oil prices, may decline.

29. Though developing countries account for about one third of the world's energy consumption, many of them do not have adequate access to energy. Most of them depend on oil imports and on biomass and animal energy. Wood, which provides energy to about half of the world's people, is becoming scarce, and overcutting has devastated the environment. Some countries have made progress in developing biogas while improving the environment, but the potential of biogas remains largely untapped. Given the needs of industrialization and the trends of population growth, energy needs will increase tremendously during the coming decades. If energy efficiency measures are not put in place, it will not be possible to meet those needs.

30. Many countries have made efforts to control air pollution by setting standards and introducing appropriate equipment in factories as well as automobiles, and by developing clean technologies for cooking, space heating, industrial processes and power generation. But attempts to deal with urban and industrial air pollution have often effectively transported the problem, for example, in the form of acid deposition, to other areas and countries. At least 5 to 6 per cent of the European forests may have already died because of acidification. As a first step, some European countries have agreed on a technical co-operation programme to monitor and control long-range transmission of some air pollutants. Reducing emissions of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxides, however, is rather costly, although effective reduction technologies have been introduced in some countries. On the other hand, no effective technologies exist to control carbon dioxide accumulation which can markedly change climate. Moreover, available technology is not being fully utilized. The difficulty is to determine up to what level the damage costs of polluting fossil fuels should be accepted and how much to invest in scientific research to develop clean technologies.

31. Energy is often used in wasteful ways. The costs of this waste are being borne by all, but mostly by the poor. Moreover, part of these costs are being transferred to children, future generations and other countries. Several countries have experimented successfully over the last decade with conservation of energy for domestic use, improved efficiency of energy in industry and agriculture and adoption of energy mixes to minimize environmental damage. In some countries the nature of industrial growth has been changing in ways which economize on energy, for example, rapid growth of electronic, recreation and service industries. Consequently, there has been a noticeable delinking of economic growth from increase in energy consumption. Energy savings, renewable sources and new technologies can reduce energy consumption while maintaining the momentum of economic growth.

32. While oil exploration and coal mining have received great attention, the potential of natural gas has not been realized. Considerable quantities are being wasted in the absence of necessary infrastructure and investment. The world also has a relatively untapped capacity to develop hydropower. In the past, environmental planning has not received adequate attention in hydropower development. Decentralized small-scale hydropower schemes are not yet used on a significant scale, although they may be capable of providing economical, efficient and environmentally sound sources of energy.

33. Nuclear energy is widely used as a source of electricity, and the International Atomic Energy Agency has formulated guidelines to ensure that it is developed and used safely. The problems associated with it include the risk of accidental contamination, which can spread quickly over long distances, and the safe handling and disposal of radioactive wastes, including decommissioned nuclear reactors.

2. Goal and recommended action

34. Goal: The provision of sufficient energy at reasonable cost, notably by increasing access to energy substantially in the developing countries, to meet current and expanding needs in ways that minimize environmental degradation and risks, conserve non-renewable sources of energy and realize the full potential of renewable sources of energy.

35. Recommended action:

(a) Governments' energy plans should systematically take into account environmental requirements. Energy efficiency policies coupled with environmentally sound energy production and appropriate energy mixes should be pursued to achieve sustainable energy consumption patterns. National efforts should be supported by international co-operation, especially scientific research, establishment of standards and transfer of technology and information;

(b) Energy pricing, taxation, trade and other policies should take into account the environmental costs of all forms of energy. Subsidies for fossil fuels should be progressively phased out. Private enterprise, consumers and government institutions should be provided with economic incentives to make greater use of renewable sources of energy. Where needed, international co-operation should facilitate the exploration for and environmentally sound production of energy;

(c) Information should be made available on the harmful environmental impacts of intensive use of fossil fuels. Urban and industrial air pollution, accumulation of greenhouse gases and the attendant climatic change, as well as transfrontier transport of air pollutants in all regions must receive urgent attention, including monitoring by appropriate methods. Standards must be set and enforced within and among countries, and conventions and agreements should be concluded to deal with these problems. In this context, the "polluter pays principle" should be accepted. Governments should ensure that clean technologies are put into practice on a wider scale than in the past at the local level. The United Nations system, in conjunction with other intergovernmental bodies, should improve access to information on renewable sources of energy and on efficient energy use;

(d) In view of the significance of fuelwood, national programmes of afforestation and of environmental management of woodlands should receive increased resources. Agro-forestry programmes, tree plantations and village woodlots should receive special encouragement in countries experiencing fuelwood deficit. Commercial cutting of fuelwood should be subjected to rigorous scrutiny and control, in view of its environmental costs. Application of fuel-efficient stoves and charcoal should be encouraged. Pricing of fuelwood should be guided by the consideration of sustaining supplies consistent with needs;

(e) As biogas can be an important source of energy, the existing technology for the use of agricultural, animal and human wastes should be applied more widely by means of incentives and guidance. Technical co-operation among developing countries should play a vital part in this process, bearing in mind its sanitation and agricultural benefits;

(f) Decisions on large-scale hydropower projects should be guided by analysis of social costs and benefits in the light of likely environmental impacts. Small-scale hydropower schemes should receive particular attention since they could facilitate simultaneous attainment of environmental, economic and social objectives;

(g) Renewable energy sources should receive high priority and should be applied on a wider scale than in the past, giving full consideration to their environmental impacts. Technologies to develop renewable sources of energy, such as wind, geo-thermal and especially solar, should receive particular attention. International co-operation should facilitate this process;

(h) International co-operation should aim at the creation of a regime for the safe production and use of nuclear energy, as well as the safe handling of radioactive waste, taking into account, through appropriate mechanisms including prior consultations, the interests and concerns of countries that have decided not to produce nuclear energy, in particular concerns regarding the siting of nuclear plants close to their borders. This regime should extend globally to encompass observance of comparable standards and procedures on management of reactors and the sharing of information and technology for nuclear safety. The Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency should be complemented by bilateral and subregional agreements and should also lead to technical co-operation among countries on environmental management of nuclear energy.

D. Industry

1. Issue and outlook

36. Issue: Industrial development brings obvious benefits, but it frequently entails damage to the environment and to human health. The main negative impacts are: wasteful use and depletion of scarce natural resources; air, water and soil pollution; congestion, noise and squalor; accumulation of hazardous wastes; and accidents with significant environmental consequences. Industrialization patterns and the consequent exploitation of natural resources and environmental degradation have been markedly unbalanced. The prospect for accelerated, yet environmentally sound, world industrial development is slim in the absence of concerted international action.

37. Outlook: Although some efforts to deal with environmental problems of industry have been made, negative impacts will grow in magnitude if not addressed methodically now. A promising trend is the steadily growing awareness of industrial environmental risks throughout the world. While this awareness increasingly informs and influences public policy, environmental knowledge remains as yet markedly uneven. In the absence of mechanisms for the unhindered sharing of environmental knowledge, Governments and industry may import hazardous materials and allow establishment of processes discarded elsewhere. Inadequate knowledge at the grassroots level of changes in the environment, and of their causes as well as economic implications, impedes participation of the concerned people in decision-making on siting of industrial plants and choice of industrial technology.

38. Natural resources have been used wastefully in industry. Recently, a number of countries have made significant progress in developing and adopting low-waste and clean industrial technologies and in recovering as well as recycling scarce industrial raw materials. New materials and processing technologies have made it possible to save raw materials and energy resources and to reduce environmental stress. Nevertheless, in many countries resource-intensive processes persist in the absence of suitable policies and access to proper technology.

39. Uncontrolled industrial practices have led to unacceptably high levels of harmful or toxic substances in the air, the pollution of rivers, lakes, coastal waters and soil, the destruction of forests, and the accumulation of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases which threaten to cause climatic changes, including a global warming of the atmosphere. Sea levels may rise considerably as a result. Industrial production and emission of chlorofluorocarbons threaten a significant depletion of the ozone layer, leading to increased ultraviolet radiation.

40. Recently, there has been an increase in the seriousness of industrial accidents, particularly in the chemicals industry. Even in the developed countries, the state of preparedness to meet such contingencies has been inadequate. Also, frameworks for international co-operation in such situations have been lacking. A crucial problem has been the lack of timely warning and of full sharing of information on the nature and magnitude of the hazards at local and regional levels.

41. With industrial growth and spread, the transport, storage and disposal of chemical, toxic and radioactive wastes will pose an increasingly serious challenge. The "polluter pays principle" has been applied with good results in some countries, but in many others it is still not applied at all, so that the source of environmental damage often is not held accountable for the harm caused. In the pursuit of rapid industrialization, some polluting industries may be relocated from other countries. As many developing countries do not possess the technical or institutional capability to analyse or monitor environmental implications of industrial processes, products or wastes, they are vulnerable to industrial environmental damage.

42. Many developed countries have successfully applied technology, policies and institutional and legislative frameworks to deal with industrial pollution. Several have succeeded in innovating or applying low-waste or clean technologies. The Industry and Environment Office of the United Nations Environment Programme has produced publications with extensive and detailed information on environmentally sound technologies in specific industries. Thus, although environmental hazards of industrial processes, products and wastes persist, there is available considerable experience, expertise and technology to prevent industrial accidents and implement environmentally responsible practices.

43. Technical innovation has opened up promising opportunities for achieving mutually supportive economic and environmental objectives. Properly guided technology can transform patterns of industrialization and improve the international division of labour. Innovation in micro-electronics and opto-electronics has revolutionized information and communications industries and could lead to geographical dispersal of industry. These innovations hold promise for developing countries suffering from the twin problems of excessive industrial concentration in urban areas and relative neglect of rural areas.

44. In the decades ahead, the developing countries will depend more and more on industry, including processing of their own raw materials, for incomes and employment. In contrast, in some developed countries, the pattern of industry is changing in the direction of knowledge-intensive, energy-saving, and materials-saving activities. Moreover, leisure and service industries have begun to play a significant part in this change.

45. Countries have been coming together to forge agreements on preventive measures to contain global, regional and transfrontier environmental impacts of industrial products and processes. Examples of this encouraging trend include: conventions and protocols for the control of land-based sources of marine pollution within the frameworks of various regional seas programmes; the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer and the evolving international consensus on the control of emission of chlorofluorocarbons; the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution and its Co-operative Programme for the Monitoring and Evaluation of Long-range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe; and the Cairo Guidelines and Principles for the Environmentally Sound Management of Hazardous Wastes, sponsored by the United Nations Environment Programme. Such international co-operation can extend into many areas of industrial environmental management and many geographical regions. Moreover, industry itself, following the World Industry Conference on Environmental Management convened in 1984 by the United Nations Environment Programme, is increasingly ready to undertake environmental responsibilities.

2. Goal and recommended action

46. Goal: Sustained improvements in levels of living in all countries, especially the developing countries, through industrial development that prevents or minimizes environmental damage and risks.

47. Recommended action:

(a) Governments should implement policies to assist in the transition of economies characterized by the wasteful use of natural resources and raw materials and dependence on their export, to environmentally sound industrial development. National efforts to plan and implement environmentally sound industrial policies should be intensified. Governments should introduce incentive schemes to help establish facilities for recovery and recycling of scarce raw materials. The transfer of industrial technology and skills from developed to developing countries to arrest environmental degradation associated with industry should be internationally supported. The United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Economic Commission for Europe, and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization should intensify efforts in this direction;

(b) Governments should introduce programmes to monitor air, soil, fresh water and coastal pollution from industrial emissions and effluents, and hazardous industrial activities, where such programmes do not already exist;

(c) Governments should establish and enforce environmental standards, and should provide fiscal and other incentives to industry for the retro-fitting of equipment for pollution control. They should also ensure penalties for non-compliance, in conformity with the "polluter pays principle". International organizations should co-operate with Governments in establishing global or regional standards;

(d) Governments should require periodic reports by industries on measures implemented to protect and improve the environment, especially those industries involving high environmental and health risks;

(e) Industrial enterprises should carry out environmental impact and social cost-benefit analyses prior to the siting and design of industrial plants. Governments should ensure that such analyses are carried out and made public. Governmental policies should facilitate the location of industries in areas which would relieve urban congestion and encourage rural development. Industries which use each other's products and wastes should be located near each other;

(f) Governments and industrial enterprises should be receptive to the views of citizen groups, community associations, labour organizations and professional and scientific bodies in arriving at and implementing decisions on industrial siting, design and technologies to meet the environmental, economic and social needs of the people;

(g) Chambers of commerce and federations of industry should collaborate actively in implementing emissions standards and pollution control measures. They should establish mechanisms to bridge the gap in environmental management knowledge and capabilities among their members. Such co-operation should also be encouraged among small-scale producers;

(h) Transnational corporations should comply with the environmental legislation of the host country, while respecting similar legislation of the home country. Legislation could include requirements for public environmental audits of the activities of transnational corporations and local enterprises. In accordance with proposed international codes of conduct, transnational corporations should establish progressively in the host countries the skills and technological capabilities needed for environmentally sound management of industry, even in the absence of legislation on desirable environmental standards;

(i) International industrial collaboration, like national industry, should be subjected to environmental impact assessments;

(j) Countries, especially developing countries, should, as a matter of urgency, design and implement research, training and manpower-planning programmes to strengthen the management of hazardous industrial processes and wastes;

(k) International organizations, including the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Meteorological Organization and the International Labour Organisation, and intergovernmental organizations, such as the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, and the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance, should ensure that their programmes will progressively strengthen the capacities of the developing countries for designing and implementing industrial operations along environmentally sound lines. They should also assist in establishing or strengthening information services on environmental and health implications of industrial processes, products and wastes. In addition, access of the developing countries to information and data on environmentally benign technologies should be promoted, including risk management techniques;

(l) International co-operation for the monitoring of the accumulation of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases and of their impacts on climate and sea levels must be strengthened to encompass both the conclusion of international agreements and the formulation of industrial strategies to mitigate the environmental, economic, and social impacts of potential changes. Intergovernmental negotiations, based on the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer, should lead to agreements on the reduction of ozone-depleting substances;

(m) Within the framework of their existing legal and technical activities, United Nations organizations, especially the United Nations Environment Programme, in closer co-operation with regional organizations, should progressively establish international agreements and monitoring mechanisms to deal with spills and other industrial accidents, particularly chemical; to control the transportation, storage, management and disposal of hazardous industrial wastes; and to settle disputes involving damages and claims for compensation. United Nations and regional organizations should encourage Governments to extend the "polluter pays principle" to transboundary problems;

(n) The International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals programme of the United Nations Environment Programme should maintain and improve its assistance to Governments in assessing whether producing, marketing, distributing or disposing of any industrial substances, including chemicals and wastes, are potentially damaging to health and environment.

E. Health and human settlements

1. Issue and outlook

48. Issue: Despite considerable advances in dealing with problems of health and human settlements, the environmental basis for further improving the situation is deteriorating. Inadequate shelter and basic amenities, rural underdevelopment, overcrowded cities and urban decay, lack of access to clean water, poor sanitation and other environmental deficiencies continue to cause widespread disease and death, all-health and intolerable living conditions in many parts of the world. Poverty, malnutrition and ignorance compound these problems.

49. Outlook: Human ability to prevent disease has grown greatly over the last few decades, mainly owing to scientific achievements and better access to sanitation, clean water and safe waste disposal. In many developed countries better living conditions have helped prevent disease and have enhanced average life expectancy. In the developing countries, however, achievements have lagged behind what is technically feasible.

50. More than 4 million children under the age of five die of diarrhoea in the developing countries annually. Even when it does not cause death, diarrhoea saps vitality and stops physical and mental growth. Malaria is another water-borne disease which infects about 100 million annually. Typhoid and cholera are similarly endemic in the developing countries. Bilharzia and river blindness are other common diseases caused by mismanagement of water. Sleeping sickness, caused by the tsetse fly, effectively denies the use of vast tracts of land in Africa for pastoral or settlements development. The burning of coal, oil, wood, dung and agricultural wastes builds up dangerous concentrations of toxic gases in houses and factories, and chronic heart and lung diseases, bronchitis, emphysema and asthma are the result.

51. In warm, humid countries where storage is inadequate, aflatoxins in food cause liver cancer. On the other hand, over-use of fertilizer has caused excessive nitrate levels in ground water, endangering children's health, and nitrate run-offs have led to eutrophication of surface waters and contamination of shellfish. Phosphates in fertilizer have caused high concentrations of cadmium in food. Further, pesticides, herbicides and fungicides pose a direct threat to health in the rural areas when their use is not properly guided. Over-use of pesticides has also led to high levels of pesticide residue in food.

52. About a billion people do not have adequate shelter, and millions practically live on the streets. By the year 2000, about 2 billion people, or 40 per cent of the developing countries' population, will live in cities and towns, thereby putting pressure on city planners and Governments. Most developing countries already do not have the resources required to provide housing and services to the people who need them. The influx of refugees in some developing countries has exacerbated health, shelter and environmental conditions. Also, where rural settlements are widely dispersed, health, housing and infrastructural services become practically unattainable.

53. About one third of all city and town dwellers in the developing countries live in slums and shanties, with no help or infrastructural support whatever, and often under adverse conditions. The inexorable trend towards urbanization will ensure that by the year 2000, 15 of the world's 20 largest urban metropolitan areas will be in the developing countries. Simultaneously, rural environmental degradation reinforces migration to urban areas even when people are unable to earn incomes high enough to ensure decent housing and there is no prospect of meeting their infrastructural needs.

54. There are three main environmental aspects of urbanization: characteristics of the dwelling—living space, ventilation, sanitation, water supply, waste disposal, recreation space, domestic energy; ambient environmental situation—air pollution, water pollution, environmental risks and hazards, noise, stress and crime; and environment of the area surrounding the urban centres—deforestation, soil erosion, changes in micro-climate. Between a quarter and a half of all urban residents in the developing countries live in unhealthy and degraded dwellings. Consequently, diarrhoea, dysentery and typhoid are common, and there are periodic outbreaks of cholera and hepatitis. Tuberculosis and other respiratory diseases spread easily in ill-ventilated, damp and crowded surroundings.

55. Excessive concentrations of industry and commerce in a few urban centres often reflect a dualistic development pattern, implying a relative neglect of rural and agricultural development. Concentrations of people, settlements and income and employment opportunities often become mutually reinforcing in such a situation. People continue to migrate to the urban areas even if their expected incomes are not high enough to ensure decent housing, or there is no prospect of their infrastructural needs being met. Thus, the problems of safe disposal of toxic and hazardous wastes, control of air and water pollution, collection and disposal of domestic wastes and provision of clean drinking water assume gigantic proportions, requiring enormous finance and great organizational and technical capabilities. Photochemical smog, oxides of nitrogen and sulphur, hydrocarbons, lead, mercury, cadmium poisoning, carbon monoxide, polychlorinated biphenyls, asbestos and other particulate matter along with the respiratory and gastroenteric diseases and malnutrition, cause serious damage to public health. The consequent stress of living in such conditions contributes to social tensions and outbreaks of violence and unrest. When industrial accidents or natural disasters occur, loss of life and human suffering follow on a large scale because of the congestion, lack of organizational and technical capacities and vulnerability.

56. Heavy urban concentrations have also placed excessive demands on natural resources and polluted and degraded surrounding areas. High land prices have caused good agricultural land to be used for construction and speculation. Urban firewood demand has led to widespread deforestation, soil erosion and even changes in micro-climate.

57. The congestion of settlements near factories multiplies the health risks of chemicals production in the developing countries. The accumulation of toxic wastes and their inappropriate disposal similarly endanger the health of millions. Awareness of the risks to human health posed by environmental contamination has increased greatly. Such risks arise partly through an absence of environmental regulation and management capability. Most developed countries have succeeded in reducing environmental pollution and its risks and impacts. International co-operation has also progressed on several fronts: national programmes launched under the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, the World Health Organization/United Nations Children's Fund Programme on Primary Health Care, the Onchocerciasis Control Programme in Africa in the Volta River basin, the United Nations Environment Programme/World Health Organization/International Labour Organisation International Programme on Chemical Safety, the dissemination of information on chemicals of environmental concern through the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals of the United Nations Environment Programme, the International Code of Conduct on the Distribution and Use of Pesticides of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and its accompanying technical guidelines, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations/United Nations Environment Programme Panel of Experts on Integrated Pest Control, the United Nations Development Programme/World Bank/World Health Organization Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases, the World Health Organization/Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations/United Nations Environment Programme Panel of Experts on Environmental Management of Disease Vector Control, the specification of radiation dose limits by the International Commission on Radiological Protection, and the two recent international Conventions adopted under the auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency on exchange of information and assistance in the event of a nuclear accident, are some examples.

2. Goal and recommended action

58. Goal: The provision of improved shelter with access to essential amenities in a clean and secure setting conducive to health and to the prevention of environment-related diseases, which would, at the same time, alleviate serious environmental degradation.

59. Recommended action:

(a) Governments should make health and settlements development an integral part of environmental management of natural resources and geographically-balanced development. They should address systematically the issue of equity in development to ensure provision of basic health, housing and amenities for their people;

(b) International co-operation should be intensified in the field of scientific research to deal with the environmental conditions underlying tropical diseases;

(c) Rural development, including natural resources management and provision of drinking water and sanitation, should receive systematic attention in public policies. Governments should design and implement, with the participation of the communities concerned, integrated programmes to improve water supply and management, sanitation and waste disposal;

(d) Governments should set targets at national, provincial and district levels for such priority areas as housing, access to clean water and sanitation, and control of air pollution in urban areas;

(e) To reduce adverse environmental impacts of transportation, especially in highly populated areas, Governments should give priority to facilitating commuting between residential and working areas, enforcing emission standards for vehicles, encouraging fuel efficiency and improving traffic management policies and urban planning;

(f) Intermediate-sized towns should receive particular attention in programmes of industrial and settlement development;

(g) Governments should create an "enabling environment", in which the creativity and resources of people are mobilized to improve the health conditions, shelter and environmental information at local levels. This should include collection and disposal of domestic, agricultural and human wastes, land use planning, area development and self-help construction. Efforts should be made to encourage the participation of the private sector and non-governmental organizations;

(h) Industrial, agricultural, energy, irrigation and land development and resettlement projects should include a component which addresses environmental and health impacts, including risk assessment, which, in turn, should be influential in guiding the location, scale and choice of technology for the projects. Regulations should be established to prevent settlements development in high environmental-risk areas, such as those proximate to chemical or nuclear plants. Responsibility for enforcing such regulations should be shared with the private sector;

(i) Primary and occupational education should include information on the environment. The mass media should regularly make available information and know-how to enable people to improve sanitation, waste disposal and drinking water quality. Deterrents and incentives should be introduced at local levels to encourage people to keep their immediate environment healthy;

(j) Scientific research should be geared to the immediate improvement of the health and environmental situation of degraded settlements. Technologies for the safe disposal of wastes with minimum use of water in arid and semi-arid areas, improvement of water quality, reuse of waste water, and harvesting of rain should be developed. The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund should intensify efforts to promote the application of such technologies in the developing countries;

(k) Urban planning should receive priority attention, together with the rational management of natural resources. Staffing, finance and organizational efforts should reflect the high priority given to this issue. Urban centres should systematically provide areas to meet the needs of various income categories, for industry, business, recreation and open spaces. Technical co-operation in this field has to expand greatly under the leadership of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat);

(l) Countries hosting a large number of refugees should receive more international assistance through the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other bodies to improve environmental conditions of refugee settlements.

F. International economic relations

1. Issue and outlook

60. Issue: Inequalities in international economic relations, coupled with inappropriate economic policies in many developed and developing countries alike, continue to affect adversely sustainable development and cause environmental degradation. Deteriorating terms of trade, chronic trade deficits, which are partly caused by growing protectionism, heavy debt-service payments, and inadequate financial flows have made it very difficult to allocate resources to environmental protection and improvement, particularly in developing countries. Specific problems include: insufficient consideration of environmental impacts in development co-operation; insufficient control of trade in scarce natural resources and hazardous substances; and transnational investment and transfer of technology without adequate observance of environmental standards or information on environmental management.

61. Outlook: Awareness of the environmental aspects of international economic relations has increased, but it has not yet found adequate expression in institutional practices and national policies.

62. Development co-operation projects have not helped build significantly national capabilities to avert environmental disasters. The environmental damage resulting from the execution of some large-scale projects is now better understood than in the past. There is also a growing awareness of the need for additional resources to rehabilitate degraded environments.

63. Long-term declines in commodity prices, coupled with their inequity and instability, have adversely affected environmental management of natural resources. Furthermore, these prices do not fully reflect the environmental costs of depletion of the resource base. Good quality land, fishing areas and other natural resources are being overworked, and tropical forests are being encroached upon in order to achieve additional income. The substitution of export crops in place of subsistence crops has displaced small farmers and pastoralists from good quality land and has led to excessive pressures on marginal land and natural resources.

64. There is a growing awareness of the hazards associated with trade in chemicals, pesticides and some other products, but international practices for controlling the transport of hazardous chemical goods do not yet provide for a systematic consideration of the environment.

65. Mounting debt burdens, repayment obligations, austerity measures and reductions in financial flows to developing countries have endangered and, in some cases, blocked sustainable development, and this has had negative economic, environmental and social impacts.

66. Recent years have seen a sharp worsening of the international economic situation. Its impact has been particularly severe on developing countries. Lack of economic growth in developing countries could have devastating consequences.

2. Goal and recommended action

67. Goal: The establishment of an equitable system of international economic relations aimed at achieving continuing economic advancement for all States, based on principles recognized by the international community, in order to stimulate and sustain environmentally sound development, especially in developing countries.

68. Recommended action:

(a) In the ongoing search for concerted action to deal with international economic problems, the urgent need to improve the world environmental situation and to ensure a solid environmental foundation for sustainable development has to be recognized. Correcting the deteriorating terms of trade and stabilizing international commodity prices at equitable levels, through international commodity agreements such as the Integrated Programme on Commodities, in conjunction with appropriate environmental management practices in the producing countries, should play an important role in this regard;

(b) Especially in situations of environmental stress, development co-operation should aim at long-term improvement of natural resource productivity and environmental health. Projects that focus on the alleviation of poverty and improve the environment should receive greater attention in development co-operation. Such co-operation has to increase substantially, keeping in view the growing need for environmental rehabilitation;

(c) Development co-operation institutions should increase significantly their assistance to the developing countries for environmental restoration, protection and improvement;

(d) Country programmes and policy papers prepared by multilateral and bilateral development co-operation institutions for allocation of aid resources should provide for analyses of the environmental needs of recipient countries, with particular focus on major problems, such as desertification, deforestation and pollution. Developing countries should be assisted where necessary in preparing environmental accounting and relating it to the reporting on national economic well-being;

(e) The system of appraising development co-operation projects should provide for assessments of environmental and socio-economic impacts of alternative designs and locations. Area development programmes, in particular, should seek to establish mutual support between environmental and socio-economic objectives. Development co-operation institutions should train their staff according to these objectives;

(f) Trade in hazardous industrial products, such as toxic chemicals and pesticides, and in some other products, such as pharmaceuticals, should be subjected to regulations to ensure sharing by the contracting parties, Governments and consumers of information on their environmental and health implications and on methods for their safe use and disposal. Labelling of products should be in local languages. Governments of the exporting as well as the importing countries should collaborate in this regard. They should also agree on the selection of chemicals for priority testing;

(g) International trade and commodity agreements should provide environmental safeguards, where applicable. They should also encourage producers to take a long-term view and provide for assistance for diversification programmes, where appropriate. Governments should study the environmental impacts of their trade practices and make the findings available to their agencies responsible for trade negotiations, which should take them into account. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade should develop and apply effective policies and instruments to integrate environment and development considerations in international trade;

(h) Environmentally related regulations and standards should not be used for protectionist purposes. The International Trade Centre should assist countries to meet such requirements. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should make available information on such regulations and standards as they apply to commodities and manufactured products;

(i) Host Governments should institute policies and regulations to ensure sound environmental management of transnational investments. In agreements on transnational, including corporate, investments, Governments, through appropriate controls, should ensure that information and technology on environmental management will be provided specifying the responsibilities of the parties concerned. In accordance with the proposed code of conduct on transnational corporations of the Commission on Transnational Corporations, transnational corporations should implement programmes in the host countries to minimize the environmental hazards of their activities. These programmes should include training of personnel. The United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations should play a role in facilitating this process;

(j) The transfer of clean, low-waste and pollution control technologies should be promoted through international co-operation. The possibility of making such technologies available at concessional prices to the countries in need should be explored. Governments of recipient countries should establish procedures for ascertaining the environmental implications of imported technologies;

(k) International financial institutions, while dealing with questions of structural adjustment in developing countries and world economic reform, should link short-term financial stabilization to sustainable development.

III. Other issues of global concern

69. This section discusses briefly the major environmental issues of global concern that have not been adequately dealt with in previous sections.

A. Oceans and seas

70. Oceans and seas are being polluted extensively. The rising pollution levels and degradation of coastal ecosystems threaten the life-support capacities of oceans and seas and undermine their role in the food chain.

Efforts to monitor the state of oceans and seas, including those of the United Nations Environment Programme and other international organizations, confirm that there is cause for concern. This problem is particularly serious for coastal waters and semi-enclosed seas that border highly populated and industrialized zones. The situation will get much worse unless concerted action is undertaken now. The ongoing monitoring effort is far from comprehensive and, where it has advanced, it has not yet led to adequate change in the practices causing environmental damage.

71. The challenge is to control and decrease marine pollution, and establish or strengthen regimes of environmental management of oceans and seas through international co-operation and national action.

72. A comprehensive data base should be established over time on which action programmes to restore and preserve the environmental balance in the world's oceans and seas can be based. Among others, the Global Environmental Monitoring System, Global Resource Information Data Base and the oceans and coastal areas programmes of the United Nations Environment Programme should intensify efforts towards this end.

73. Conventions and agreements to monitor and manage human activities with a view to ensuring environmental protection of the seas and oceans should be ratified and implemented by all concerned countries. Where such legal instruments do not exist, they should be negotiated. Governments should strengthen or introduce policies and measures aimed at preventing practices harmful to marine ecosystems and ensuring environmentally sound development of inland areas. Such policies and measures should include control of the discharge of industrial effluents and sewage, dumping of wastes, including hazardous and radioactive materials, disposal of hazardous residues and operational wastes from ships, incineration at sea, and oil spills from tankers and off-shore platforms. Environmentally sound land-based technology for the disposal of hazardous wastes should be developed and promoted. The United Nations Environment Programme should continue to collaborate in this work with the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission, the International Maritime Organization, and other appropriate international organizations.

B. Outer space

74. Outer space has now become a recognized area of human activity. As activity in this area develops over the coming decades, sound management of outer space will become increasingly important. To this end, international co-operation exclusively for the peaceful use of outer space is essential, especially on the part of those countries that now have the capacity to undertake outer space activities.

75. All countries, in particular those with a major capacity to exploit the benefits of outer space, should create conditions, including specifically the maintenance of its non-militarization, for broad international co-operation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes. This should include the use of space technology to monitor the Earth's environment. The benefits of the peaceful use of outer space, including weather forecasting, remote sensing and medical benefits, should be made readily available to the world community, particularly through assistance to the developing countries.

C. Biological diversity

76. Traditional crop and livestock species are giving way to high-yielding varieties and breeds. As the genetic base of plants, animals and micro-organisms becomes narrower, some genetic material is being irretrievably lost at such a rate that the world could lose one tenth to one fifth of its 5 to 10 million species by the year 2000.

77. Over 100 countries are collaborating in the global programme co-ordinated by the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources for conserving crop genetic resources, and the global gene banks network contains over 1 million samples of crop germ plasm. Yet, in many countries, national efforts for conservation are still ill-organized and under-financed, and often do not attend systematically to the components of planning, training, education and research. International co-operation and technical assistance in this field should be further developed.

78. An international network of protected areas for conserving animal and plant genetic resources, encompassing about 10 per cent of the world's land area, should be established to reverse the trend towards depletion of species. Management plans for conserving ecosystems as reservoirs of species diversity have to be prepared.

79. Efforts to conserve crop genetic resources and the global data banks network have to be extended to cover adequately germ plasm with economic potential for providing food, fodder, fibres, waxes, oils, gums, medicines, energy and insecticides. In situ and ex situ components of conservation have to develop in a complementary manner in the light of the interdependence of nature conservation and genetic diversity.

80. Mechanisms should be established to provide information on rates of exploitation of genetic resources to facilitate selection of those to be conserved.

81. The gap between conservation of species and economic access to them should be bridged through maximum international co-operation. Agreements involving rights of possession of and access to genetic material, including research results, should facilitate such co-operation. Conserved genetic resources should be regarded as a common interest of mankind.

D. Security and environment

82. The accumulation and deployment of weapons of war and destruction present very grave risks to the environment. The use of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear, chemical and biological weapons, could bring about far-reaching, even irreversible, changes in the global environment.

83. The development and stockpiling of nuclear arms and delivery systems at current levels have made the human race technically capable of putting an end to its own existence. In addition, the growing capacity of some States to undertake deliberate manipulation of the environment represents an immense potential danger. If the material, financial and intellectual resources devoted to armaments were to be used to solve problems such as those of the human environment, food security and shelter, prospects for sustainable development would be considerably enhanced.

84. The World Charter for Nature proclaims that "Nature shall be secured against degradation caused by warfare or other hostile activities". A comprehensive system of international security is essential in order to ensure that this declaration is implemented.

85. Progressive disarmament through detente, negotiation, and avoidance of the use of force as a means of resolving conflicts should be pursued to minimize the environmental risks associated with armed conflicts. Governments should continue to pursue, in relevant negotiating forums, efforts to ban weapons that have the effect of modifying the environment.

86. One of the roles of the United Nations Environment Programme is to promote environmentally sound development in harmony with peace and security, and towards this end, issues of disarmament and security, in so far as they relate to the environment, should continue to receive appropriate attention.

IV. Instruments of environmental action

87. Sections I, II and III above largely sought to indicate how to deal effectively with environmental problems by addressing their policy sources. However, such actions need to be reinforced by the performance of certain overarching functions. This section deals with those functions.

A. Assessment

88. Environmental rehabilitation and management depend upon the availability of organized information on the state of the environment, its trends, and their relationship to social and economic factors. Decisions, however, continue to be made in ignorance of the changing state of the environment and its implications for human well-being. It is essential, therefore, that reliable environmental information, obtained and analysed using modern technology, is made available to planners and managers in a usable form. Most developing countries face the constraint of lack of access to modern technology and to the necessary expertise to collect and interpret environmental data.

89. Environmental and resource data are being collected at global and regional levels by the United Nations and international organizations working with Governments. Additional data also exist at the national level, although often in a fragmented form. The institutional mechanisms needed to relate such data sets to each other and to analyse them in the context of existing practices and policies are often lacking. Governments and intergovernmental organizations at the regional level should intensify efforts to collect and analyse data, especially data relating to common environmental problems.

90. The United Nations Environment Programme, working through the United Nations system, coordinates the collection, monitoring and assessment of selected environmental variables and distributes this information worldwide through: the Global Environmental Monitoring System, encompassing the monitoring and assessment systems relating to climate, health and natural resources and the Global Resource Information Data Base; data bases and systems for the conservation and management of genetic resources; the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals, which operates a global information exchange network to provide information and data on chemicals and their effects on health and environment through a query-response service and evaluations of the effects of chemicals on the environment; INFOTERRA, the International Referral System for sources of environmental information; and the state of the environment reports of the United Nations Environment Programme, which address major issues of topical environmental concern.

91. Through improved collection and analysis of data and its wide distribution to potential users, which should be a service to countries as well as international organizations, the United Nations Environment Programme should become, and come to be accepted as, a leading authority in environmental assessment.

92. Countries, particularly developing countries, should be assisted, through international co-operation on environmental assessment, with the participation of the United Nations system and with the United Nations Environment Programme playing a leading role, in establishing effective national monitoring systems, geographic information systems and assessment capabilities, and improving data compatibility. In order for this to take place, technical co-operation among countries regionally and globally has to increase significantly.

93. Notable environmental assessments have been carried out recently and related to socio-economic factors by non-governmental organizations in some countries. These have helped expand awareness and stimulate action to protect and improve the environment. Governments should encourage such efforts.

B. Planning

94. Environmental planning should provide a conceptual, methodological and institutional framework within which to internalize progressively the consideration of the environment in development decision-making. Every country should define its national environmental objectives and make them part of its plans for socio-economic development. Just as each country sets targets for sectoral growth, it should set time-bound targets in respect of environmental resources and indicators of major concern. Plans and policies at sub-national levels should also provide for the simultaneous pursuit of the specified environmental and development objectives.

95. Governments should establish mechanisms and procedures to facilitate interdepartmental co-ordination of policies and unified direction for integrating environmental concerns in development planning. Use of analytical methods to ascertain the environmental and socio-economic implications of alternative courses of action should inform decisions on projects and programmes. It should also help resolve conflicts of interest among departments, among population groups and among regions.

96. The allocation of investment resources of a national plan among regions and sectors has to reflect a sensitivity to environmental constraints and objectives. This should be facilitated by periodic analyses of the socio-economic significance of the changing state of natural resources and the environment at national and provincial levels. Efforts should also be made to prepare an accounting of the use of scarce natural resources, focusing particularly on the country's major environmental problems, for example desertification, and to relate it to the periodic reporting on national income and well-being.

97. Sectoral ministries should be encouraged to apply environmental impact assessments and social cost-benefit analyses in decision-making regarding development projects and programmes. Taxation and economic policies should encourage sectoral decisions that favour environmentally benign technologies and locations, recycling and safe disposal of wastes and conservation of natural resources, and should establish mutual support between environmental and economic objectives. Land and water use plans should be prepared and their implementation monitored. Already some countries have made progress in planning at the district level to reflect environmental needs.

98. There have been advances in the analytical methods of environmental impact and risk assessment, social benefit-cost analyses of environmental measures, physical planning and environmental accounting. Theoretical work on decision models with multiple objectives and constraints has also progressed. The United Nations Environment Programme, the Scientific Committee on Problems of the Environment and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development have played a useful role. This work should be strengthened so that it will have a greater impact on decision-making.

99. Environmental action and economic planning remain insufficiently related to each other in most countries. Efforts must be intensified at national and international levels to promote the application of suitable methods, procedures and institutional arrangements to make economic planning fully responsive to environmental constraints and opportunities. The guiding role of the United Nations Environment Programme in this field should include technical assistance to the developing countries. Collaborative arrangements should be made at the working level between the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Development Programme, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the United Nations Secretariat and the World Bank. They should set up, or strengthen, units to conduct environmental analyses of their projects and programmes and, in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme, assist Governments in systematically considering the environment in development planning.

C. Legislation and environmental law

100. Increasingly, environmental legislation has been providing practical frameworks at the national level for implementing environmental standards and regulating the activities of enterprises and people in the light of environmental objectives. At the international level, conventions, protocols and agreements have been providing a basis for co-operation among countries at bilateral, regional and global levels for the management of environmental risks, control of pollution and conservation of natural resources.

101. There is a need to expand the number of accessions to and ratifications of these conventions and to institute mechanisms at the national level to ensure their application. The present momentum should be maintained of concluding conventions in fields such as hazards relating to chemicals, treatment and international transport of hazardous wastes, industrial accidents, climate change, protection of the ozone layer, protection of the marine environment from pollution from land-based sources and protection of biological diversity, in which the United Nations Environment Programme has been playing an active part.

102. Groundwork has been prepared over the last 15 years under the aegis of the United Nations Environment Programme to establish legal frameworks to manage regional seas. Governments should intensify their efforts to implement legislative measures and other policies at national levels so that the policy sources of the environmental problems of the regional seas are effectively tackled. Increasingly, environmental management of rivers, lakes and forests has been posing a challenge to international co-operation. Governments, with the collaboration of the Programme and concerned international organizations, should accelerate action to establish legal regimes at international and national levels to improve significantly the environmental management of rivers, lakes and forests. The new programme for environmental management of freshwater systems, sponsored by the United Nations Environment Programme, is a promising start.

103. The Montevideo Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law, prepared under the auspices of the United Nations Environment Programme, should be implemented fully. Development of international environmental law should continue, with a view to providing a strong basis for fostering co-operation among countries. The progressive emergence of general environmental norms and principles and the codification of existing agreements could lead to a global convention on protection and enhancement of the environment.

104. Governments should settle their environmental disputes by peaceful means, making use of existing and emerging agreements and conventions. The International Court of Justice, the International Court of Arbitration and regional mechanisms should facilitate peaceful settlement of environmental disputes.

D. Awareness building and training

105. The participation of people in environmental protection and improvement depends upon their being aware of the environmental problems and possibilities, of how the changing state of the environment affects their well-being, and how their lifestyles affect the environment. People's effectiveness in dealing with environmental problems depends upon their technical and organizational capabilities to design and implement the needed measures.

106. Since the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, held at Stockholm in 1972, awareness of the interrelationship between human activities and the environment has steadily grown. Voluntary action groups at the community level, national and global non-governmental organizations, scientific bodies, schools and universities, mass media and Governments all have played a part in this process. Also the United Nations Environment Programme, through its programme and through its information activities, has helped build environmental awareness.

107. In a large number of developing countries, knowledge of proper environmental management practices still does not reach millions who suffer as a result of environmental degradation. People are the most valuable resource in development, but in order for them to participate constructively in accelerating and sustaining development, environmental information must be made available in languages they understand and in a form that can help them relate it easily to their own situation. Governments should intensify efforts to make this possible. Non-governmental organizations, with appropriate support from the United Nations Environment Programme, should play an increasingly active role in this field, especially by way of provision of requisite materials.

108. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme should ensure systematic coverage of environmental education needs at all levels of schooling, especially in the developing countries. They should also prepare and promote course materials which would include environmental components in professional training given to selected occupational groups, for example, engineers, builders, foresters, farm extension workers and managers. Training in analysing environmental considerations in relation to economic and other goals also has to receive growing attention. Governments should make environmental education and training an integral part of their education and communication policies and programmes.

109. International support for the training of personnel in environmental assessment and management, especially in the developing countries, has grown steadily. It is essential, however, to ensure that the content and modality of such instruction is relevant to the needs of the countries where it is intended that the skills be applied. International co-operation and governmental efforts should also help ensure a progressive strengthening of institutional capabilities within the developing countries themselves to make available such training.

E. Institutions

110. Consideration of the environment must be internalized in sectoral policies and practices to ensure that environmental objectives are met and sustainable development is achieved. Sectoral bodies should be made accountable for such internalization. Existing environmental problems also have to be dealt with through concerted action and allocation of resources. This is true at both national and international levels.

111. At the national level, the mandates of sectoral ministries and other governmental institutions should explicitly state their responsibility and accountability for sustainable development and environmental protection within their sectors. Their policies, functions, structures and budgetary allocations should be consistent with this. As appropriate, the same should apply at provincial and local levels. Authoritative mechanisms and procedures are needed to oversee and ensure that national environmental objectives are met throughout the Government. Governments should establish or strengthen environmental ministries to stimulate, guide, support and monitor actions to achieve these objectives. To this end, essential functions should include: environmental assessment, planning and incentives, legislative and regulatory advice, awareness-building and training, stimulation of research and application of its results. Environmental ministries should also provide leadership and co-ordination for direct action to deal with environmental problems, including rehabilitation. Bilateral and multilateral institutions and international organizations should assist developing countries in this regard.

112. International institutions, both inside and outside of the United Nations system, dealing with such areas as food and agriculture, health, industry, energy, science, trade, finance and development assistance, should reorient their policies and programmes to make steady progress towards environmentally sound development.

113. These institutions should be accountable for integrating the objectives of sustainable development into their policies, budgets and staffing strategies. Governments should ensure, through consistent policy guidance to these institutions, that their mandates and programmes meet this objective.

114. The governing bodies of all United Nations organizations should report regularly to the General Assembly on the progress made in achieving the objectives of sustainable development. Such reports should also be submitted to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme for that body to provide comments on matters within its mandate to the General Assembly. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General, should oversee effectively the inclusion of the concept of sustainable development in all programmes of the United Nations system, by reviewing and co-ordinating the efforts of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in this field, and by including this in its reports to the General Assembly and the Governing Council of the Programme.

115. The inter-agency mechanism of Designated Officials for Environmental Matters should guide, support and monitor more effectively activities within the United Nations system to ensure consistent policy.

116. In parallel with the institutional arrangements at the national level, the United Nations Environment Programme should promote, guide, support and monitor actions to achieve environmentally sound development and stimulate and co-ordinate action to deal with environmental problems.

117. The major priorities and functions of the United Nations Environment Programme should be:

(a) To provide leadership, advice and guidance in the United Nations system on restoring, protecting, and improving the environmental basis for, and in general act as a catalyst in the promotion of, sustainable development;

(b) To monitor, assess and report regularly on the state of the environment and natural resources and emerging environmental issues;

(c) To support priority scientific and technological research on major environmental and natural resource protection issues;

(d) To make available, in co-operation with other agencies where appropriate, guidance for environmental management, including the development of management techniques, criteria and indicators for environmental quality standards and guidelines for the sustainable use and management of natural resources;

(e) To initiate and support the programmes and activities worked out by the developing countries for dealing with their serious environmental problems;

(f) To initiate and facilitate the development and, upon request, the co-ordination of the implementation of action plans in the developing countries for the management of ecosystems and critical environmental problems. Such plans should be implemented and financed by the Governments concerned with appropriate external assistance;

(g) To encourage and promote international agreements on critical environmental issues and to support and facilitate the development of international laws, conventions and co-operative arrangements for environmental and natural resource conservation and protection;

(h) In co-operation with other concerned institutions, to establish and strengthen the institutional and professional capacity of developing countries, with a view to integrating environmental considerations into their development policy and planning;

(i) To promote awareness of environmental matters through education and the mass media;

(j) To co-operate with the United Nations Development Programme and other United Nations agencies, the World Bank and regional development banks, to strengthen the environmental dimensions of their programmes and technical assistance projects, inter alia, through training and personnel secondments.

118. Specialized agencies, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should more speedily assume full operational and financial responsibility for environmental programmes supported by the United Nations Environment Programme in their sectors included in the system-wide medium-term environment programme and the Environment Fund. The human and financial resources which will become available to the United Nations Environment Programme as a result should be concentrated on the priority areas listed above.

119. Environmentally sound development cannot be assured solely by actions of governmental, intergovernmental or international organizations. It requires the participation of other entities, particularly industry, non-governmental environmental and development organizations and the scientific community. Non-governmental organizations have important contributions to make in various areas, including environmental education and awareness, as well as design and implementation of programmes at the grass-roots levels. The scientific community should continue to play an important role in environmental research and risk assessment and international scientific co-operation.

120. Regional and continental co-operative arrangements are being established to deal with common environmental problems. For example, the first session of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment, held at Cairo in 1985, adopted the Cairo Programme for African Co-operation and modalities to implement it. Governments and development co-operation agencies should support such institutional arrangements and programmes.

General Assembly resolution 42/186

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.5) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.80), based on informal consultations on draft by UNEP Governing Council (A/C.2/42/L.19); agenda item 82 (e).

Meeting numbers: GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 27, 28, 32, 42, 43; plenary 96.

Report of the World Commission

On 19 June 1987,(9) the UNEP Governing Council accepted the World Commission's report^W as a guideline for further UNEP activities. It decided to transmit the report to the General Assembly and recommended that it consider and adopt a draft text⁽⁷⁾ that, among other things, called for all Governments and governing bodies of the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to consider the report's analysis and recommendations in developing their policies and programmes.

The Commission's report discussed common concerns, challenges and endeavours. Common concerns focused on the threatened future of the environment, sustainable development and the role of the international economy; common challenges cited were population and human resources, food security, species and ecosystems, energy, industry and cities; and common endeavours included managing the oceans, space and Antarctica; peace, security, development and the environment; and proposals for institutional and legal change. Proposed legal principles for environmental protection and sustainable development and the work of the Commission were summarized in annexes to the report.

At its April 1987 session,(10) ACC welcomed the report's emphasis on sustainable development, and stressed the importance of integrating such development into the activities of the United Nations system. At its October session,(8) ACC approved its annual report for submission to the UNEP Governing Council in 1988 on the understanding that the sections dealing with the World Commission's report would be revised by the UNEP Executive Director taking into account related action taken by the 1987 General Assembly. The Committee agreed to return to a more detailed consideration of the report in the light of the deliberations and conclusions of the 1987 Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/187 without vote.

Report of the World Commission on Environment and Development

The General Assembly,

Concerned about the accelerating deterioration of the human environment and natural resources and the consequences of that deterioration for economic and social development,

Believing that sustainable development, which implies meeting the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs, should become a central guiding principle of the United Nations, Governments and private institutions, organizations and enterprises,

Recognizing, in view of the global character of major environmental problems, the common interest of all countries to pursue policies aimed at sustainable and environmentally sound development,

Convinced of the importance of a reorientation of national and international policies towards sustainable development patterns,

Recalling that, in its resolution 38/161 of 19 December 1983 on the process of preparation of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond to be prepared by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, it welcomed the establishment of a special commission, which later assumed the name World Commission on Environment and Development, to make available a report on environment and the global problématique to the year 2000 and beyond, including proposed strategies for sustainable development.

Recognizing the valuable role played in the preparation of the report of the World Commission by the Intergovernmental Inter-sessional Preparatory Committee of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, as envisaged by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/161,

Recalling that in resolution 38/161 it decided that, on matters within the purview of the United Nations Environment Programme, the report of the Commission should in the first instance be considered by the Governing Council of the Programme, for transmission to the General Assembly together with the comments of the Council and for use as basic material in the preparation, for adoption by the Assembly, of the Environmental Perspective, and that on those matters which were under consideration or review by the Assembly itself, it would consider the relevant aspects of the report of the Commission,

Taking note of Governing Council decision 14/14 of 19 June 1987 transmitting the report of the Commission to the General Assembly,

Noting that the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond has taken account of the main recommendations contained in the report of the Commission,

Recognizing the instrumental role of the Commission in revitalizing and reorienting discussions and deliberations on environment and development and in enhancing the understanding of the causes of present environmental and development problems, as well as in demonstrating the ways in which they transcend institutional frontiers and in opening new perspectives on the interrelationship between environment and development as a guide to the future,

Emphasizing the need for a new approach to economic growth, as an essential prerequisite for eradication of poverty and for enhancing the resource base on which present and future generations depend,

1. Welcomes the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development entitled "Our Common Future";

2. Notes with appreciation the important contribution made by the Commission to raising the consciousness of decision-makers in Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental international organizations, industry and other fields of economic activity, as well as of the general public, in regard to the imperative need for making the transition towards sustainable development, and calls upon all concerned to make full use in this regard of the report of the Commission;

3. Agrees with the Commission that while seeking to remedy existing environmental problems, it is imperative to influence the sources of those problems in human activity, and economic activity in particular, and thus to provide for sustainable development;

4. Agrees further that an equitable sharing of the environmental costs and benefits of economic development between and within countries and between present and future generations is a key to achieving sustainable development;

5. Concurs with the Commission that the critical objectives for environment and development policies which follow from the need for sustainable development must include preserving peace, reviving growth and changing its quality, remedying the problems of poverty and satisfying human needs, addressing the problems of population growth and of conserving and enhancing the resource base, reorienting technology and managing risk, and merging environment and economics in decision-making;

6. Decides to transmit the report of the Commission to all Governments and to the governing bodies of the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, and invites them to take account of the analysis and recommendations contained in the report of the Commission in determining their policies and programmes;

7. Calls upon all Governments to ask their central and sectoral economic agencies to ensure that their policies, programmes and budgets encourage sustainable development and to strengthen the role of their environmental and natural resource agencies in advising and assisting central and sectoral agencies in that task;

8. Calls upon the governing bodies of the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to review their policies, programmes, budgets and activities aimed at contributing to sustainable development;

9. Calls upon the governing bodies of other relevant multilateral development assistance and financial institutions to commit their institutions more fully to pursuing sustainable development in establishing their policies and programmes in accordance with the national development plans, priorities and objectives established by the recipient Governments themselves;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, through the appropriate existing mechanisms, including the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to review and co-ordinate on a regular basis the efforts of all the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to pursue sustainable development, and to report thereon to the General Assembly through the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Economic and Social Council;

11. Stresses the essential role of the United Nations Environment Programme, within its mandate, in catalyzing the sustainable development efforts of the United Nations system, while fully taking into account the co-ordinating responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council, and agrees with the Commission that that role should be strengthened and that the resources of the Environment Fund should be substantially enlarged, with greater participation;

12. Considers that the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, within its mandate and with participation, when appropriate, at the ministerial level, should examine on a periodic basis the long-term strategies for realizing sustainable development, and should include the results of its examinations in its reports to be submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council;

13. Agrees that the catalytic and co-ordinating role of the United Nations Environment Programme in the United Nations system should be reinforced in its future work on environmental and natural resource issues;

14. Reaffirms the need for additional financial resources from donor countries and organizations to assist developing countries in identifying, analysing, monitoring, preventing and managing environmental problems in accordance with their national development plans, priorities and objectives;

15. Reaffirms the need for developed countries and appropriate organs and organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen technical co-operation with the developing countries to enable them to develop and enhance their capacity for identifying, analysing, monitoring, preventing and managing environmental problems in accordance with their national development plans, priorities and objectives;

16. Invites Governments, in co-operation with the regional commissions and the United Nations Environment Programme and, as appropriate, intergovernmental organizations, to support and engage in follow-up activities, such as conferences, at the national, regional, and global levels;

17. Calls upon Governments to involve non-governmental organizations, industry and the scientific community more fully in national and international activities to support efforts towards sustainable development;

18. Invites the governing bodies of the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to report, as appropriate, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly, not later than at its forty-fourth session, on progress made in their organizations towards sustainable development, and to make such reports available to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its next regular session;

19. Also invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to provide comments on matters concerning progress on sustainable development that fall within its mandate, on the above-mentioned reports and on other developments, for submission to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 and to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution and to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session a consolidated report on the same subject;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session a sub-item entitled "A long-term strategy for sustainable and environmentally sound development" under the agenda item entitled "Development and international economic co-operation".

General Assembly resolution 42/187

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.5) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.81), based on informal consultations on draft by UNEP Governing Council (A/C.2/42/L.19), orally revised; agenda item 82 (e).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 27, 28, 32, 42, 43; plenary 96.

International co-operation

UNEP co-ordinated, stimulated and catalysed environmental action primarily—but not exclusively—within the United Nations system.(2) It also worked with the international scientific community, research centres and institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) (see below).

In 1987, under the auspices of UNEP's environmental outreach programme, which was designed to create greater awareness about environmental issues, the UNEP Industry and Environment Office strengthened the links between developed and developing countries as a follow-up to the 1984 World Industry Conference on Environmental Management (WIGEM).(11) Two Japanese experts conducted accident and hazard prevention diagnostics in a chemical factory in India, and a French expert co-operated with Algeria in formulating an industrial waste management policy. With the help of Sweden, a network for industrial environmental management was set up in Asia. UNEP participated in the European Conference of Industry and Environmental Management (Interlaken, Switzerland, 12-14 October), a regional follow-up to WICEM.

Senior parliamentarians from 18 countries (Nairobi, 26-27 February) discussed progress made in implementing the recommendations of the 1984 Inter-Parliamentary Conference on Environment.(12) In 1987, UNEP started the newsletter Environmental Notes for Parliamentarians, which was to appear 10 times a year for the next two years.

Steps were taken to form national committees for UNEP in the Federal Republic of Germany, Kenya, the United Kingdom and the United States. Consultations on their establishment were held with Canada, Cote d'Ivoire, France, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, the Syrian Arab Republic and Thailand.

By decision 1987/112 of 6 February 1987, the Economic and Social Council established a Special Commission, open to all United Nations Member States, to carry out an in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields in accordance with recommendation 8 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18).(13) The Group of 18 had recommended, among other things, that the study identify measures to rationalize and simplify the structure and that consideration be given to consolidating overlapping activities and merging existing bodies in order to make the structure more responsive to current needs.

In dealing with specific issues under recommendation 8, the UNEP Governing Council, on 18 June,(14) expressed the view that UNEP's functions were unique and could not be fulfilled by other United Nations bodies. The Council had recommended to the General Assembly that it move to a biennial cycle of sessions, which would also facilitate UNEP's reporting system. Regarding its areas of responsibility, the Council stated that UNEP stressed a comprehensive approach to the development process to make it sustainable and, in addressing specific environmental issues such as desertification and deforestation, had translated its global thinking into a regional and subregional approach. The Council attached great importance to strengthening co-ordination within the United Nations system, given its own function as a co-ordinating mechanism.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/184 by recorded vote.

International co-operation in the field of the environment

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its fourteenth session,

Having also considered the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment,

Taking note of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond and the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development,

Noting the implications for the work of the United Nations Environment Programme of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and of the system-wide medium-term plan for women in development,

Aware that serious environmental problems are arising in both developed and developing countries,

Reaffirming the importance of taking fully into account the interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development in development policies and strategies,

Conscious that environmental considerations must be taken into full account by each country in framing and implementing its development plans in accordance with its development objectives,

Recognizing the importance of the international exchange of experience and knowledge and of the promotion of the transfer of technology for the protection and enhancement of the environment in accordance with respective national laws, regulations and policies,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its fourteenth session and endorses the decisions contained therein, as adopted;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the development of international co-operation in the field of the environment and the work of the United Nations Environment Programme during the fifteen years since the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, held at Stockholm from 5 to 16 June 1972, and calls for further action-oriented co-operation for the protection and enhancement of the environment;

3. Takes note with appreciation of Governing Council decision 14/13 of 19 June 1987, by which the Council adopted the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, and Council decision 14/14 of 19 June 1987, in which the Council accepted the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development as a guideline to be taken into account in further work of the United Nations Environment Programme;

4. Considers that evaluation is an integral part of the programming cycle of the United Nations Environment Programme and should be undertaken using a methodology developed in consultation with the partners of the Programme in the United Nations system and with Governments;

5. Welcomes the annual reports on the state of the world environment, in particular the report for 1987, fifteen years after the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, and requests that these reports be given wide dissemination and be drawn upon fully in the preparation of reports within the United Nations system on the world economic and social situation;

6. Agrees with the Governing Council that the United Nations Environment Programme should attach importance to the problem of global climate change and that the Executive Director should ensure that the Programme co-operates closely with the World Meteorological Organization and the International Council of Scientific Unions and maintains an active, influential role in the World Climate Programme;

7. Takes note of Governing Council decision 14/26 of 17 June 1987 regarding the rationalization of international conventions on biological diversity, in which the Council requested the Executive Director, in consultation with Governments and within available resources, to establish an ad hoc working group of experts to investigate in close collaboration with the Ecosystems Conservation Group and other international organizations the desirability and possible form of an umbrella convention to rationalize current activities in this field, and to address other areas which might fall under such a convention;

8. Welcomes the importance given by the Governing Council to forest ecosystems and, bearing in mind existing programmes and expertise in this field, welcomes section I of Governing Council decision 14/1 B of 17 June 1987, in which it took note of and welcomed the initiative of the Executive Director to pursue consultations among countries owning tropical forests and other forest ecosystems, and other interested countries, aimed at finding ways and means to consider, through the appropriate international mechanisms, including the International Tropical Timber Organization, practical collaborative action for the sustainable use and conservation of significant areas of forest ecosystems and the genetic resources they contain;

9. Expresses its appreciation for the leading role played by the United Nations Environment Programme in achieving the entry into force of the Agreement on the Action Plan for the Environmentally Sound Management of the Common Zambezi River system, the adoption of the Convention for the Protection of the Natural Resources and Environment of the South Pacific Region, the entry into force of the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region and, in particular, the adoption of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, and encourages the United Nations Environment Programme, through its Governing Council, to continue such efforts;

10. Welcomes Governing Council decision 14/30 of 17 June 1987, in which the Council approved the Cairo Guidelines and Principles for the Environmentally Sound Management of Hazardous Wastes, and the steps taken by the United Nations Environment Programme to develop a global convention on environmentally sound transboundary movement of hazardous wastes, supports the Goals and Principles of Environmental Impact Assessment adopted by the Governing Council in its decision 14/25 of 17 June 1987 and its recommendations regarding their application, welcomes the adoption by the Governing Council in its decision 14/27 of 17 June 1987 of the London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade and encourages further steps in this regard;

11. Expresses its satisfaction at the results achieved at the first and second sessions of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment, held, respectively, at Cairo, from 16 to 18 December 1985, and at Nairobi, from 4 to 6 June 1987, the first Arab Ministerial Conference on Environmental Considerations in Development, held at Tunis from 13 to 15 October 1986, and the fifth Intergovernmental Regional Meeting on the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean, held at Montevideo in April 1987;

12. Agrees with the Governing Council on the desirability of creating and operating regional networks of non-governmental environmental organizations, especially in the developing countries;

13. Reaffirms the need for additional financial resources from donor countries and organizations to assist developing countries in identifying, analysing, monitoring, preventing and managing environmental problems in accordance with their national development plans, priorities and objectives;

14. Reaffirms the need for developed countries and appropriate organs and organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen technical co-operation with the developing countries to enable them to develop and enhance their capacity for identifying, analysing, monitoring, preventing and managing environmental problems in accordance with their national development plans, priorities and objectives;

15. Also reaffirms the need for technical co-operation among developing countries in the field of the environment, and invites the appropriate organs and organizations of the United Nations system to assist, upon request of the parties concerned, in the promotion and strengthening of such co-operation;

16. Concurs with Governing Council decision 14/6 of 17 June 1987, in which the Council decided that the clearing-house mechanism within the United Nations Environment Programme should focus its efforts on strengthening the capacity of developing countries to promote sustainable development by supporting policy planning and institution building, enabling the developing countries to give adequate priority to environmental considerations, and that it should, inter alia, support a limited number of programmes of regional significance;

17. Takes note of Governing Council decision 14/10 of 18 June 1987 on the environmental impact of apartheid on Black agriculture in South Africa;

18. Recalls the essential catalytic and co-ordinating role of the United Nations Environment Programme within the United Nations system concerning the environment, requests that that role be further developed in the light, particularly, of Governing Council decisions 14/13 and 14/14, and calls upon the Designated Officials for Environmental Matters to improve their effectiveness, bearing in mind those decisions;

19. Agrees with the Governing Council on the importance it attached, in the annex to its decision 14/12 of 18 June 1987, to the preparation of the system-wide medium-term environment programme for the period 1990-1995, guided by the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, and urges the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to develop an effective way of monitoring the implementation of the system-wide programme and of evaluating critical programmes therein that involve a number of organizations;

20. Expresses its appreciation to those countries which have contributed regularly to the Environment Fund, and urges all countries that have not contributed to the Fund to do so for 1988 and in future years so that the financial base of the Fund may be expanded;

21. Urges all contributing countries to increase their contributions to the Environment Fund for 1988 and in future years so as to enable the approved programme of activities to be fully implemented.

General Assembly resolution 42/184

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 149-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.5) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.77), based on informal consultations on 37-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.44), orally revised; agenda item 82 (e).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 27, 28, 32, 42, 43; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows;

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

In the Committee, the United States said that its acceptance of paragraph 1 in no way meant that it had changed its mind about a 1987 UNEP Governing Council decision on the environmental situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories (see p. 312), to which it remained opposed. Furthermore, it reaffirmed that it did not subscribe to certain conclusions in the study on the environmental perspective to the year 2000 and beyond.

Explaining its negative vote, Israel said that paragraph 1 of the draft expressed appreciation for the Governing Council's report on its 1987 session and endorsed the decisions contained therein, including the one cited by the United States. Israel affirmed that the state of the environment in areas of confrontation was serious, but objected to the fact that only one case was singled out for a special decision despite the existence of numerous such areas. Israel could not acquiesce; it had to insist that not every United Nations body be used to carry out the war against Israel.

Co-operation with international development institutions

The Committee of International Development Institutions on the Environment (CIDIE) had met annually since 1980 to discuss issues dealing with integration of environmental concerns into development projects funded by its members, establishment of environmental units within its members' organizational structures and training of staff in environmental management and in areas such as reforestation, irrigation, pesticide use, water management, soil erosion and desertification. CIDIE served as a forum for the exchange of information on policy and institutional reforms, and in 1987 had the following membership: African Development Bank, Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa, Asian Development Bank, Caribbean Development Bank, Central American Bank for Economic Integration, Commission of the European Communities, European Investment Bank, Inter-American Development Bank, International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), Nordic Investment Bank, Organization of American States, United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), World Bank and UNEP.

At its 1987 session (Rome, 23-26 March 1987), CIDIE discussed a revised version of a report on action and interaction on environmental matters—the history and potential of CIDIE and another report on proposed patterns for integrating environmental concerns into economic development activities. CIDIE members agreed that they should influence the consideration of environmental problems in development aid programmes and projects co-financed by them.

On 17 June,(15) the UNEP Governing Council welcomed the moves taken by CIDIE members to integrate environmental considerations into their financial policies and projects and their increased emphasis on assistance to developing countries in formulating their overall development policies. The Council urged CIDIE members to continue co-operating with UNEP and requested the UNEP Executive Director to continue to provide the secretariat of the Committee. It also requested that he promote adherence to the 1980 CIDIE Declaration of Environmental Policies and Procedures

Relating to Economic Development and to report in 1989 on CIDIE's work.

Co-operation with NGOs

UNEP continued to attach importance to co-operation with NGOs in 1987, as it was through them that environmental concerns and activities reached the grass-roots level.

In Africa, UNEP worked with NGOs through the Nairobi-based Environmental Liaison Centre (ELC), which co-ordinated a network of more than 6,000 NGOs dedicated to protecting and improving the environment, and continued to support the African NGOs' Environment Network, which was the main focal point of co-ordination between some 280 African NGOs in 28 countries. Collaboration continued with the Arab Office for Youth and the Environment, with UNEP supporting an information awareness project and assisting in organizing a training workshop (Cairo, Egypt, February) for 50 young Arab journalists. Co-operation with NGOs in Asia and the Pacific led to a meeting (New Delhi, India, October) to form a network of NGOs engaged in anti-desertification activities. Through its Regional Office for Europe, UNEP collaborated with and provided financial assistance to the Friends of the Earth organizations in Portugal and Spain. In North America, UNEP participated in a large number of NGO meetings with a view to increasing awareness of the international dimensions of environmental problems and eliciting support for its activities. UNEP had 16 ongoing projects with the International Union for Conservation Nature and Natural Resources, three with the World Resources Institute, three with the Scientific Committee on Problems of the Environment, and others with the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis, the International Institute for Environment and Development, the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources, the International Centre of Insect Physiology and Ecology, the International Training Centre for Water Resources Management and the World-Wide Fund for Nature.

On 17 June,(16) the Governing Council requested the UNEP Executive Director to take steps to ensure that NGOs were involved in all relevant aspects of the environment programme, adequate staff resources were provided for co-operation with NGOs and ways were found to expand the small grants scheme, in part through UNEP regional offices. It also asked him to work towards creating a fund to be financed by foundations and individuals to help deserving organizations and individuals expand their environmental activities. The Council further requested the Executive Director to work with ELC, a global coalition for environment and development, in regionalizing its activities; continue to work with other global NGOs; assist regional and local NGOs world-wide with information and project implementation; and support the creation and operation of regional NGO networks, especially in developing countries. It requested that he report on the implementation of its decision in 1989.

In December, the General Assembly, by resolution 42/184, agreed with the Governing Council on the desirability of creating and operating regional networks of NGOs, especially in developing countries.

International conferences

African Ministerial Conference

The second session of the African Ministerial Conference of the Environment (Nairobi, 4-6 June) reviewed progress made in implementing the 1985 Cairo Programme for African Co-operation.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Conference reinforced the resolve of its members to help 150 villages (three per country) and 30 semi-arid stock-raising zones (one in each of 30 countries) in Africa to become self-sufficient in food and energy. It adopted a resolution dealing with organizational and institutional matters, operational arrangements for the Conference's committees, regional technical co-operation networks on environment and development, priority subregional activities, village and stock-raising pilot projects, its inter-agency working group, financial arrangements, and environmental education and training.

On 18 June,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Governing Council requested the UNEP Executive Director to provide technical and financial support, using available resources, to activities of the Cairo Programme selected for priority implementation.

First Arab Ministerial Conference

The first Arab Ministerial Conference on Environmental Considerations in Development, held in 1986,⁽¹⁹⁾ adopted an Arab Declaration on the Environment and set up an Arab Ministerial Council on the Environment to manage and protect the environment and an interim executive bureau to implement the decisions taken.

On 17 June,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Governing Council requested the UNEP Executive Director to extend practical support to the bodies of the Conference and to participate in the follow-up action concerning the implementation of its decisions using available resources.

Latin American conferences

The Fifth Intergovernmental Regional Meeting on the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean was held at the technical level from 6 to 8 April and at the ministerial level on 9 and 10 April in Montevideo, Uruguay. The Meeting took steps to consolidate the Intergovernmental Regional Co-operation System in Environmental Matters in Latin America and the Caribbean, including measures aimed at institutional strengthening, the relationship between economic and social matters, the application and development of environmental policies, the South-East Pacific and Caribbean environmental action plans, the Environmental Training Network for Latin America and the Caribbean and the implementation of regional and subregional environmental programmes of common interest.

The First Inter-Parliamentary Conference on the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico City, 23-25 March) examined the state of the environment in that region through national reports and considered environmental approaches, trends and prospects. Attention was given to the role legislative branches of the region played in protecting and improving the environment. The Conference adopted a Declaration and a set of recommendations.

On 18 June,⁽²⁰⁾ the Governing Council decided to give high priority to the Programme of the Environmental Training Network for Latin America and the Caribbean, the Action Plan for the Protection of the Marine Environment and Coastal Areas of the South-East Pacific and the Action Plan for the Caribbean Environment Programme. The Council requested the UNEP Executive Director to take steps to continue and strengthen the following regional and subregional programmes: development planning and environment; development of environmental legislation and institutional framework; management of wildlands, protected areas and wildlife; environmental education; and natural potential and national management of the tropical and sub-tropical forest ecosystems in Central America, Mexico and the South Cone.

In addition, it encouraged Governments to undertake natural and cultural heritage inventory and accounting programmes; called upon the organizations responsible for each regional and subregional programme to establish the working relations required to ensure cohesion, continuity and complementarity in their activities; and requested the Executive Director to carry out various supportive activities relating to regional programmes, the Environmental Training Network, environmental legislation, research programmes and the management of wildlands, protected areas and wildlife.

1984 Inter-Parliamentary Conference on Environment

The AdHoc Committee to Review the Implementation of the Recommendations of the 1984 Inter-Parliamentary Conference on Environment (Nairobi, 23-25 February) made recommendations regarding information for parliamentarians, the role of parliaments and environmental policies and actions.

On 17 June,(18) the Governing Council commended the role that parliamentarians of many countries were playing in environmental matters. It requested the UNEP Executive Director to improve the information system sponsored by UNEP, including the exchange of information about environmental laws adopted in other countries and international legal instruments. The Council, through the Inter-Parliamentary Union, appealed to parliamentarians to enhance public awareness of the environment, promote sound policies, strengthen environmental action within their constituencies and accelerate ratification of relevant international instruments.

International conventions and protocols

The Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer was adopted in 1987 and signed by 24 countries and the European Economic Community (EEC). The Protocol amplified the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer(21) by controlling both chlorofluorocarbons and halons, compounds that deplete the stratospheric ozone layer. It was expected to enter into force in 1989. (See below.)

As at 31 December 1987,(22) the Vienna Convention had been signed by 27 States and EEC and ratified, acceded to, accepted or approved by 16 States. During 1987, Australia, Austria, Guatemala, Mexico, New Zealand, Switzerland and the United Kingdom had ratified or acceded to it; France had approved it.

In February, the UNEP Executive Director submitted to the Governing Council information on developments regarding international conventions and protocols on the environment.(23) His report listed new conventions and changes in the status of existing ones.

Taking note of the Executive Director's report, the Governing Council, on 17 June,(24) authorized him to transmit it to the General Assembly. It called on States that had not already done so to sign, ratify and implement the existing conventions and protocols.

By decision 42/445, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the Executive Director's report.(25)

A November note(26) submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly on United Nations accession to the 1986 Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and the 1986 Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency(27) stated that UNEP had an important role in establishing a monitoring network which, as agreed to by the Inter-Agency Committee for the Co-ordinated Planning and Implementation of Response to Accidental Releases of Radioactive Substances, was required and would be developed under the auspices of the UNEP Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS). The Secretary-General expressed the view that United Nations accession to the two Conventions would be useful and appropriate.

A revised and updated version of the Register of International Treaties and Other Agreements in the Field of the Environment was prepared in 1987.

Rationalization of conventions on biological diversity

Stating its concern over the disappearance of plant and animal species resulting from the destruction of their habitats and their exploitation for commercial and other purposes, the Governing Council, on 17 June,(28) recognized the need for adequate protection and preservation of biological diversity. Aware of the need to avoid duplication and co-ordinate efforts, the Council requested the Executive Director to establish an ad hoc working group of experts to investigate, in collaboration with the Ecosystems Conservation Group (ECG) and other international organizations, the desirability and form of an umbrella convention to rationalize current activities in the area. The Governing Council asked the Executive Director to report in 1989 on its investigation.

REFERENCES

- a)YUN 1982, p. 1000. (2)UNEP/GC.15/3. (3)YUN 1983, p. 771, GA res. 38/161, 19 Dec. 1983. (4)A/42/427. (5)A/42/25. (6)Ibid. (dec. 14/13). (7)A/C.2/42/L.19. (8)ACC/1987/DEC/16-27 (dec. 1987/18). (9)A/42/25 (dec. 14/14). (10)ACC/1987/DEC/1-12 (dec. 1987/6). (11)YUN 1984, p. 769. (12)Ibid., p. 649. (13)YUN 1986, p. 1022. (14)A/42/25 (dec. 14/12). (15)Ibid. (dec. 14/7). (16)Ibid. (dec. 14/8). (17)YUN 1985, p. 793. (18)A/42/25 (dec. 14/1 C). (19)YUN 1986, p. 649. (20)A/42/25 (dec. 14/21). (21)YUN 1985, p. 804. (22)Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 31 December 1987 (ST/LEG/SER.E/6), Sales No. E.88.V.3. (23)UNEP/GC.14/18 & Add.1. (24)A/42/25 (dec. 14/29). (25)A/C.2/42/L.3. (26)A/C.2/42/6. (27)YUN 1986, p. 585. (28)A/42/25 (dec. 14/26).

Programme and finances of UNEP

The UNEP programme in 1987 continued to follow a triangular arrangement in keeping with the Action Plan for the Human Environment adopted at the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment(1) —environmental assessment (Earth-watch), environmental management and supporting measures, such as education and training, public information and organizational and financial arrangements (see below).

Future orientation of UNEP programme

In a January 1987 report(2) the UNEP Executive Director discussed the future orientation of UNEP's work, which was derived from his proposal of 10 goals for Governments. Those goals, which he said were achievable by 1995 with the support of the United Nations system, dealt with climate modification and atmospheric changes; fresh water shortage and degradation; desertification and soil degradation; deforestation and the loss of biological diversity, particularly in tropical forests; marine pollution and management of coastal areas; environmental hazards of industry, including the nuclear industry, toxic chemicals and hazardous wastes; integration of environmental considerations in development activities and planning; and easy access to low-waste and environmental protection policies. Twenty specific targets were selected for action by UNEP from 1987 to 1992 and beyond, and were intended to support Government implementation of the above goals. Those targets concerned the entry into force of the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer,(3) a protocol to that Convention and a legal instrument addressing climate modification and change in atmospheric conditions; establishing inland water programmes; assisting eight countries affected by soil degradation and desertification; designating tropical forest ecosystems as protected areas; assisting Governments to adopt one regional action plan and two conventions and related protocols for protecting and developing the marine and coastal environment of the east and south Asian seas regions; preparing guidelines on hazardous wastes and trade in chemicals; preparing legal instruments on notification and mutual assistance in case of industrial accidents and a programme for anticipating and preventing such accidents; preparing a legal instrument to facilitate access to low-waste technologies; implementing the Cairo Programme for African Co-operation; assessing selected environmental problems for environmental management and establishing data exchange switchboards and training centres; increasing the number of countries that incorporate environmental education into their curricula from 45 to 65; ensuring that all major financing institutions strengthened their environmental units; supporting CIDIE; and developing and promoting a declaration on CIDIE. UNEP targets proposed for developing countries focused on industrial management compatible with their environment; environmental guidelines for planning and managing human settlements; assistance in integrating environmental objectives in national development planning; formulating and implementing national conservation strategies; strengthening national environmental machineries and establishing environmental legislation; training some 15,000 nationals in environmental management; and launching specific information campaigns. The Executive Director stressed that concentration at the programme level was essential.

On 17 June,(4) the Governing Council stated that the goals and targets proposed by the Executive Director, as well as the importance of concentration at the programme level, should be kept under review and considered at a special session of the Governing Council, to be held in 1988.

UNEP clearing-house mechanism

In March,(5) the UNEP Executive Director evaluated the achievements of the clearing-house mechanism since its establishment as an experiment in 1982(6) to help developing countries relate their environmental assistance needs to available sources of technical and financial co-operation. He observed that the clearing-house had been successful, judging from the increase in the number of developing countries receiving support (35 in 1986, compared to four in 1982) and in the number of contributing Governments and institutions (from four in 1982 to 14 in 1986). Other positive factors included a reasonable rate of financing of the projects identified (one of three projects totally or partially financed) and the annual volume of funding mobilized, which amounted to $7.2 million for 1986. The Executive Director noted that in most countries where long-term programmes had been initiated, environmental problems had become significant national policy issues, and donors had reacted positively. He recommended that the clearing-house become an established feature of UNEP, with priority given to long-term environmental programmes in developing countries. In addition, more effort should be given to enlisting donor support, and efforts should be made to ensure that programmes and projects co-ordinated by the clearing-house were developed with a recognition of existing projects and international action plans. He proposed developing clear criteria for selecting projects, with priority given to reinforcing the capacity of governmental and local institutions to address environmental problems; training; projects in which local people participated; monitoring projects that improved knowledge of the state of natural resources; projects aimed at the integration of environmental considerations in development sectors; and pilot projects. The Executive Director recommended that by 1992 the clearing-house be able to support the development of two to three new long-term national or multicountry environmental management programmes annually, the mobilization of resources for 10 to 15 operational projects derived from those management programmes, and the formulation and mobilization of 10 to 15 additional projects to meet specific urgent environmental needs.

On 17 June,(7) the Governing Council, confirming the continuation of the clearing-house, decided that the clearing-house should focus on strengthening the capacity of developing countries to promote sustainable development by supporting policy planning and institution building, enabling them to give adequate priority to environmental considerations, and that it should support a limited number of regional programmes. The Council requested the Executive Director to use extrabudgetary funds to finance short-term expertise, studies and pilot projects. It urged donors to support the Executive Director in operating the clearing-house and called on Governments and international organizations to support the implementation of proposals identified by the clearing-house. It requested the Executive Director to arrange an external evaluation of the clearing-house and to report on progress made in clearing-house activities.

By resolution 42/184, the General Assembly concurred with the Governing Council's decision that the clearing-house should focus on strengthening the capacity of developing countries to promote sustainable development, thus enabling developing countries to give adequate priority to environmental considerations, and that it should support, inter alia, a limited number of regional programmes.

Environmental education and training

The International Environmental Education Programme, developed jointly by UNEP and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), was the major vehicle for promoting environmental education. During 1987, 17 workshops and seminars were held in various regions to further both the incorporation of an environmental dimension into educational systems and the training of teachers, teacher-trainers and curriculum developers to do so. The International Congress on Environmental Education and Training (Moscow, 17-21 August), jointly organized by UNEP and UNESCO, reviewed progress and trends in environmental education and considered the state of the environment and its educational and training implications. It adopted an international strategy for action in environmental education and training for the 1990s. UNEP, in co-operation with IUCN, published two studies to encourage young people to take part in restoring and improving the environment: World Conservation Strategy—a manual for youth environmental projects and Youth in environmental action—an international survey. It also supported the African Association for Literacy and Adult Education in producing a manual—Environmental education through adult education—to help train adults to recognize environmental problems and possibilities. The annual international post-graduate course on resource management and environmental impact in developing countries took place at the Technical University of Dresden, German Democratic Republic. At a workshop (Nairobi, 26-30 October), 36 officials from African ministries of planning and the environment discussed achieving sustainable development through environmental action. UNEP launched three new training networks, one each in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and western Asia. As a step towards fostering the ability of institutions to enable developing regions to provide training on consideration of the environment in development decision-making, UNEP and Podjadjaran University (Bandung, Indonesia) prepared technical materials for a 1988 seminar to be held for the Asia and Pacific region.

Public information

Substantial publicity was generated by UNEP's fifteenth anniversary celebration at Nairobi on 4 June 1987, World Environment Day, which also launched the UNEP Global 500 Awards, honouring environmental achievements around the world. Coinciding with these events was UNEP's annual Seminar for Environmental Journalists, attended by 19 newspaper, radio and television journalists from 14 countries.

The UNEP Information Service's News and Data Team issued 128 press releases and statements in English, and the radio service produced a series of programmes entitled UNEP in Action. The scope and achievements of UNEP were described in a four-colour English brochure, UNEP Profile. Environment Briefs, a series of papers on environmental issues, was launched in 1987 in English, French and Spanish. The inaugural series dealt with atmospheric pollution, desertification, tropical forests, hazardous chemicals, oceans and fresh water. Six issues of UNEP News and four of The Siren appeared in English, French and Spanish. A sales catalogue of UNEP publications was produced for the first time.

The Television Trust for the Environment (TVE) produced a one-hour video programme on the ozone layer, "The Hole in the Sky", and organized a television debate with UNEP's Executive Director on the environmental impact of development projects. A major exhibition was organized by UNEP's Regional Office for Europe to mark the European Year of the Environment.

Under its outreach project, UNEP began to approach special constituencies more systematically—youth and women's groups, parliamentarians, religious organizations and industrialists. Under a two-year comprehensive work plan, begun in 1987, 12 youth leaders from various regions were relaying up-to-date information to youth organizations. Some 40 information packages that targeted educators and young people were produced and distributed in 42 countries for use as teaching aids and in radio and television programmes. UNEP participated in the World Conference of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts (Kenya, July), a youth movement that had begun working with UNEP to incorporate environmental concerns into its merit achievement award system.

Integrated approach to environment and development

UNEP continued in 1987 to work with Australia and the East-West Center (Honolulu, Hawaii) in applying social and environmental cost-benefit analysis to dryland degradation and rehabilitation as a follow-up to a 1986 international conference(8) Dryland experts and economic planners participated in a UNEP workshop (Nairobi, 20-23 January) on preparing an executive management guide, a technical manual and a case study reader on applying economic analysis to dryland degradation and rehabilitation. UNEP published an illustrated guide on that subject in 1987 and distributed it to Governments, NGOs and international development institutions.

Four volumes were published on Environmental management for local and regional development, which UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Regional Development (Nagoya, Japan) produced with Japan in 1987, encompassing guidelines and case studies on land-use planning in India, Japan, Mexico, Papua New Guinea, the Republic of Korea, Thailand and the United Republic of Tanzania. A report by the Organization of American States and UNEP, with the collaboration of Peru, concentrated on baseline data, analyses and general guidelines for physical planning, particularly guidelines on how to minimize conflicts in the use of natural resources.

UNEP and IUCN drafted a report on the integration of conservation into development programmes, including case studies of the Arenal-Tempisque Irrigation Project in Costa Rica and the Korangie-Phitti Creek Development in Pakistan.

As part of its testing and application of methods for development decision-making, UNEP continued its work with Jamaica to improve environmental management in the Hope River watershed. At the request of Nepal, UNEP held preliminary consultations on environmental objectives and development planning. As a follow-up to the 1986 Arab Ministerial Conference on Environmental Considerations in Development(9) UNEP and the Arab Planning Institute (Kuwait) discussed the preparation of technical materials and a regional training programme. With the World Food Council, UNEP worked on recommendations relating the environmental management of agriculture to food security.

Environmental management of industrial activities

UNEP continued to share its knowledge and experience on industrialization and environmental preservation through technical reviews and guidelines, the Industry and Environment review and its query-response service.

Technical reviews and guidelines described technologies in use in various industrial sectors, their environmental impact, the appropriate technologies for preventing or suppressing pollution and discharge regulations in force in various countries. The reviews and guidelines distributed by UNEP in 1987 covered the aluminium and iron and steel industries, drilling muds, diesel vehicles and transportation. Work was also carried out on petroleum refineries and terminals and on non-ferrous metals.

Four issues of Industry and Environment focused on environmental management in the petrochemical industry, environmental management of small- and medium-scale industries, the working environment and emerging technologies.

With the support of its data base, library and network of academic, industrial and government contacts, the UNEP Industry and Environment Office responded to numerous major requests for technical information on the industrial environment, in addition to simple daily requests.

UNEP sponsored the European Conference on Industry and Environment Management (Interlaken, Switzerland, 12-14 October) in collaboration with public and private institutions and firms. With the support of the International Iron and Steel Institute, the Japan Iron and Steel Federation and Japan, UNEP convened a training workshop on environmental management in the iron and steel industry (Tokyo, 14-18 December). A training workshop on hazardous waste management (Buenos Aires, 8-12 September) was held in co-operation with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the support of the Federal Republic of Germany.

A network for industrial environmental management was set up in Asia with the help of Sweden; seven Governments of the region undertook a research programme on industrial pollution control, focusing on the pulp and paper industry.

UNEP Fund

Expenditures of the UNEP Environment Fund on programme activities totalled $21.73 million in 1987, disbursed as follows: Earthwatch, $4.66 million; environmental awareness, $3.12 million; oceans, $2.8 million; health and human settlements, $2.44 million; terrestrial ecosystems, $2.43 million; environment and development, $1.71 million; arid and semi-arid lands, ecosystems and desertification control, $1.50 million; regional and technical co-operation, $1.36 million; water, $0.83 million; and the arms race and the environment, $0.11 million. In addition, $0.77 million was distributed under the reserve programme. Seventy-five new projects were approved by the Fund in 1987, as compared with 60 in 1986, and 67 projects were closed. At the end of the year, 295 projects were open.

Contributions

Of the total estimated Environment Fund contributions of $30.97 million, $30.07 million had been paid as at 31 December 1987, while another $327,490 had been pledged. The remaining $570,032 represented contributions estimated by the Executive Director in respect of countries that had made regular contributions to the Fund in the past and had paid a contribution in 1986. A total of 84 countries were expected to contribute to the Fund for 1987. Eighty-seven per cent of pledged contributions were paid in the first three quarters of the year, increasing the liquidity of the Fund and thereby avoiding delays in implementing programmes.

On 16 June(10) the Governing Council expressed its appreciation to Governments that had paid their contribution early in 1986 and 1987 and to those that had pledged to increase their contributions to the Fund. It appealed to Governments that had not yet pledged a contribution to the Environment Fund for 1987 to do so, urged them to contribute at the beginning of the year and to support Fund programme activities in which they were particularly interested by making counter-part contributions to individual projects. It further appealed for 1988-1989 pledges to be made during 1987, preferably at higher levels than in 1986-1987.

Making similar appeals to Governments, the General Assembly, in resolution 42/184, reaffirmed the need for additional resources to deal with developing countries' environmental problems.

Accounts

1984-1985

In January(11) the Executive Director informed the Governing Council that he had taken note of the comments and recommendations of the Board of Auditors(12) and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)(13) for 1984-1985 related to UNEP and generally agreed with them.

On 16 June,(10) the Governing Council took note of the Executive Director's comments on the Board of Auditors' report and on ACABQ's observations for 1984-1985.

1986-1987 accounts

The Environment Fund's expenditures for 1986-1987 amounted to $63,626,847, while income totalled $66,940,367, leaving an excess of income over expenditures of $3,313,520.

Comments and recommendations on the accounts were made by the Board of Auditors.(14)

On 16 June,(10) the Governing Council took note of the financial report and unaudited accounts of the Fund for 1986.(15)

Programme budgets

1986-1987

In March 1987,(16) the Executive Director reported on the implementation of the approved programme and programme support costs budget for 1986-1987, indicating the revisions it required. On the basis of estimated expenditures for programme and programme support costs for 1986 and 1987, the Executive Director proposed a revised budget of $23,277,300 for that biennium—a recommendation shared by ACABQ.(17) The revised budget figure represented a decrease of $2,930,400 compared to the approved appropriation of $26,207,700.(18) The estimated savings were due to exchange rate and inflation adjustments and salary and common staff cost reductions resulting from the UNEP secretariat's reorganization following the 1986 evaluation exercise.(8)

On 16 June,(19) the Governing Council approved revised appropriations for programme and programme support costs of $23,277,300 for 1986-1987.

1988-1989

The Governing Council, on 17 June,(20) approved the proposed programme budget for 1988-1989 and the activities contained therein. On 16 June,(10) it approved an appropriation of $60 million for Fund programme activities, divided between a core programme of $51 million and supplementary activities of $9 million and apportioned the funds. The Council also approved $2 million for Fund programme reserve activities for 1988-1989. The Executive Director was requested to adjust the financial reserve of the Fund in 1988 to 7.5 per cent of the total programme approved by the Council for 1988-1989.

On the same date,(19) the Council approved an appropriation of $25,846,300 for the 1988-1989 programme and programme support costs budget, as proposed by the Executive Director in March.(21)

Trust funds

At the end of 1987, the Executive Director was responsible for the administration of 22 trust funds established under the Environment Fund and one special account established by the General Assembly. The total income of those funds amounted to $8,751,589 in 1987.

In almost all cases, the programmes financed from general trust funds were held back by the fact that contributions agreed to by Governments were not paid during the year for which they were pledged. However, contributions to technical co-operation trust funds in 1987 increased over the 1986 levels, reflecting a higher level of support by Governments to programmes administered by the clearing-house.

On 16 June,(22) the Governing Council urged Governments to pay their contributions to trust funds at the beginning of the year, and confirmed the Executive Director's action in obtaining the Secretary-General's consent to establish a Trust Fund for the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals. It approved the extension of the following general trust funds: regional trust fund for the protection and development of the marine environment and coastal areas of Bahrain, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates—30 June 1989; trust fund for the protection of the Mediterranean Sea—31 December 1989; regional trust fund for the implementation of the action plan for the protection and development of the marine environment and coastal areas of the east Asian seas—31 December 1989; and the trust fund for the convention on conservation of migratory species of wild animals—31 December 1991.

Additional sources of funding

In a March 1987 report,(23) the Executive Director stated that $17.2 million in additional funding had been raised during 1985-1986. Of that, $9.5 million represented the value of contributions to projects sponsored by the clearing-house that were not managed by UNEP; $4.1 million represented cash contributions to UNEP activities either as counterpart contributions to specific projects or contributions managed as funds-in-trust; and a further $3.6 million represented an estimate of contributions in kind from various sources.

On 16 June,(24) the Governing Council requested Governments to increase their support by way of additional funds for specific UNEP activities; to encourage individuals, private and public entities and NGOs to provide financial and other support for specific activities; and to support the establishment of national environmental committees. It requested the Executive Director to increase his efforts to raise funds from non-governmental sources such as foundations and industrial corporations; secure additional funding from other sources; promote further the establishment of national environmental committees; consider further selecting internationally known and respected personalities for UNEP; and report to the Council in 1989 on its decision.

UNEP Council

1987 session

At its fourteenth session, held in Nairobi from 8 to 19 June 1987, the UNEP Governing Council adopted decisions on environmental and administrative matters that were contained in its report on the session.⁽²⁵⁾

The Council noted the UNEP Executive Director's annual reports for 1985(26) and 1986,(27) and also noted the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council calling for action by UNEP. It adopted decisions concerning desertification, protection of the ozone layer and environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes, addressed new initiatives for forest ecosystems and noted international conferences on the environment.

The Council's report on its 1987 session was noted by the Economic and Social Council on 8 July when it adopted decision 1987/170, while the General Assembly, in resolution 42/184, endorsed the decisions of the Council contained in its report.

Biennial cycle of Council sessions

The Governing Council had decided in 1983(28) to hold no 1986 session and to decide in 1987 on the frequency of its sessions.

The Executive Director, addressing the periodicity and duration of Council sessions,(29) proposed that the Council institutionalize biennial sessions and suggested that a normal Council session last for 10 working days. He further proposed that the current organization of Council sessions, with work divided between plenary meetings and one committee of the whole, not be changed. The Executive Director recommended the continuation of the Committee of Permanent Representatives, consisting of permanent representatives to UNEP and/or Government-designated officials. In view of the fact that the General Assembly took up the United Nations medium-term plan and the system-wide medium-term environment programme once every six years in an even year, he recommended the convening of a special session of the Council once every six years beginning in 1988, to take up the medium-term environment programme.

On 18 June,(30) the Council recommended to the General Assembly a draft text on the periodicity and duration of its sessions(31) that, among other things, called for holding no regular session in 1988 and convening regular sessions only in odd-numbered years beginning in 1989 (see below). The Council also decided that the Committee of Permanent Representatives should continue to meet at least four times a year with the UNEP Executive Director and requested the Executive Director to continue to issue his annual and state-of-the-environment reports annually. It requested the ACC to continue to report to the Council annually.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/185 without vote.

Biennial cycle of sessions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, by which it decided to establish the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and specified the duration of the term of office of members of the Council,

Mindful that one of the main functions and responsibilities it entrusted to the Council in resolution 2997(XXVII) was to review and approve annually the programme of utilization of resources of the Environment Fund referred to in section III of that resolution,

Recalling its decision in section I, paragraph 3, of resolution 2997(XXVII) that the Governing Council should report to the General Assembly annually through the Economic and Social Council and its request in paragraph 5 of resolution 3436(XXX) of 9 December 1975 that the Governing Council should keep the Assembly informed annually of any new international convention concluded in the field of the environment and of the status of existing conventions,

Bearing in mind its resolution 38/32 D of 25 November 1983, in which it requested its subsidiary organs to consider meeting and reporting on a biennial basis, and its resolution 40/200 of 17 December 1985, in which it welcomed the decision of the Governing Council to change to a biennial cycle of sessions on an experimental basis,

Taking note with satisfaction of Governing Council decision 14/4 of 18 June 1987 on the periodicity and duration of sessions of the Council,

Having considered the possibility of changing the duration of the term of office of members of the Governing Council in recognition of the change to a biennial cycle of sessions,

1. Decides that there shall be no regular session of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme in 1988 and that, beginning in 1989, the regular sessions of the Council shall be held only in odd-numbered years;

2. Also decides that the Governing Council shall hold a special one-week session every six years, beginning in 1988, to consider and approve the system-wide medium-term environment programme and to consider the global programme on the environment of the proposed United Nations medium-term plan;

3. Further decides that in 1988 the Governing Council shall meet to consider and approve the next system-wide medium-term environment programme and to consider appropriate changes to the global programme on the environment of the extended United Nations medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989, and that it shall, at its regular session in 1989, consider the global programme on the environment of the next United Nations medium-term plan before submitting it to the General Assembly for approval;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to conduct consultations with Governments to establish the necessary transitional arrangements for a change in the term of office of members of the Governing Council from three years to four, with half of the membership being elected every two years;

5. Decides that the reports requested of the Governing Council in section I, paragraph 3, of its resolution 2997(XXVII) and in paragraph 5 of its resolution 3436(XXX) shall be submitted biennially instead of annually.

General Assembly resolution 42/185

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.5) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.79), based on informal consultations on draft by UNEP Governing Council (A/C.2/42/L.19); agenda item 82(e).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 27, 28, 32, 42, 43; plenary 96.

Documentation for Council meetings

On 17 June,(32) the Governing Council stressed the need for concise documents setting out the issues in a manner that clearly indicated those matters on which decisions were required, and requested the Executive Director to provide future Council sessions with one single operative document for each substantive agenda item, referring to background documents as appropriate.

United Nations co-ordination

At its October session, AGC considered and approved its annual report to the UNEP Governing Council.(33) Among other things, ACC agreed to transmit to the Governing Council for the first time a proposed system-wide environment programme for 1990-1995. The programme would be a mechanism for formulating joint commitments by the United Nations system to the development and implementation of jointly agreed upon strategies.

ACC expressed the wish that the United Nations system initiate a process to assist countries in incorporating environmental dimensions into development planning and projects. Furthermore, ACC gave increased importance to the Designated Officials for Environmental Matters (DOEM) mechanism, which established the groundwork for system-wide co-operation on environmental matters. Each United Nations specialized agency and relevant body had designated a representative to DOEM, which took part in preparing the proposed system-wide environment programme.

During 1987, DOEM also contributed to preparing the cross-organizational programme analysis (COPA) on environment, a report prepared by the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (see below).

While the co-ordination of future activities was being planned by ACC and DOEM, co-ordination at the project level continued. During the year, 107 of a total of 290 UNEP projects were implemented in co-ordination with other United Nations agencies, including UNESCO (23 projects), the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) (19), the World Health Organization (WHO) (15), the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) (6), the International Maritime Organization (6), the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) (6), the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) (5), the International Labour Organisation (ILO) (4), the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission/UNESCO (4), the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) (4), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (3), the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (3), the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) (3), the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (2), the Economic Commission for Africa (2), the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) (1) and the World Bank (1). In financial terms, co-operating agencies were responsible for 19.6 per cent of the total expenditures in implementing UNEP projects in 1987.

On 18 June,(34) the Governing Council noted the importance ACC attached to the system-wide medium-term environment programme and the joint evaluation of major projects, programmes and the medium-term environment programme. It requested the Executive Director to initiate bilateral discussions with the heads of relevant United Nations agencies on joint efforts aimed at improving the role of DOEM as the effective co-ordination mechanism on environmental matters.

Cross-organizational programme analysis

COPAs were used to assess current activities of United Nations organizations in a given sector as a basis for improved co-ordination. In 1985,(35) the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) decided to consider a COPA on the environment in 1988. In March 1987,(36) the Secretary-General submitted a preliminary report on the proposed scope and approach of a COPA on environment activities of the United Nations system for consideration by CPC at its April/May 1987 session. The Secretary-General stated that a COPA could explore the actual status of the 1984-1989 system-wide medium-term environment programme in the United Nations system by analysing not only mandates but plans and programmes, which might yield a more positive picture. He stressed the need to examine the question of organization and co-ordination of the system's activities for the environment, including an analysis of internal secretariat arrangements for promoting and co-ordinating environmental action within each organization and an analysis of the pattern of co-ordination arrangements in each major area in relation to the pattern of mandates and activities.

ACC's Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) in March(37) agreed that it would be useful to convene an advisory group of experts, as suggested by UNEP, to discuss the overall approach followed in the United Nations system's environment activities, and provide a supplementary approach to that usually used in preparing COPAs.

Taking note of the Secretary-General's report, CPC, on 30 April,(38) agreed with his approach to preparing the COPA. CPC said that the approach should be applied with flexibility, considering the fact that the COPA would cover only activities with a specifically environmental objective.

UNEP-Habitat co-operation

Following a 1985 General Assembly decision to discontinue meetings between UNEP and Habitat,(39) a February progress report(40) by their Executive Directors highlighted joint activities in four areas: the assessment of environmental conditions in human settlements; environmental aspects of policies, planning and management of rural and urban human settlements; environmentally sound and appropriate human settlement technology; and research, training and dissemination of information on environmentally sound planning and management of human settlements. Co-operation on the system-wide efforts of the United Nations included the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (IYSH) (1987), joint thematic programming on training for human settlements, follow-up on the COPA on human settlements, the COPA on the environment, and follow-up on the 1985 first African Ministerial Conference on the Environment.(41) The report outlined future prospects, including the preparation by UNEP and Habitat of their 1988-1989 programme budgets, the 1990-1995 medium-term plan on human settlements and the 1990-1995 system-wide medium-term environment programme (see also below).

On 18 June,(42) the Governing Council requested the UNEP Executive Director, in consultation with the Executive Director of Habitat, to increase co-operation in support of system-wide efforts of mutual interest and on the four areas listed above.

REFERENCES

(WUN 1972, p. 322. (2)UNEP/GC.14/4/Add.4. (3)YUN 1985, p. 804. WA/42/25 (dec. 14/1 A). (5)UNEP/GC.14/4/Add.3 & Corr.1. (6)YUN 1982, p. 999. (7)A/42/25 (dec. 14/6). (8)YUN 1986, p. 648. (9)Ibid., p. 649. (10)A/42/25 (dec. 14/36). (11)UNEP/GG.14/L.4. (12)A/41/5/Add.6. (13)A/41/632. (14)A/43/5/Add.6. (15)UNEP/GC.14/L.5. (16)UNEP/GC.14/20 & Corr.1. (17)UNEP/GC.14/L.2. (18)YUN 1985, p. 797. (19)A/42/25 (dec. 14/35). (20)Ibid. (dec. 14/17). (21)UNEP/GC.14/16 & Corr.1. (22)A/42/25 (dec. 14/34). (23)UNEP/GC.14/24. (24)A/42/25 (dec. 14/33). (25)A/42/25. (26)UNEP/GC.14/2 & Corr.1. (27)UNEP/GC.14/3 & Add.1. (28)YUN 1983, p. 769. (29)UNEP/GC.14/4/Add.2. (30)A/42/25 (dec. 14/4). (31)A/C.2/42/L.19. (32)A/42/25 (dec. 14/5). (33)UNEP/GCSS.I/5. (34)A/42/25 (dec.14/2). (35)YUN 1985, p. 795. (36)E/AC.51/1987/5 & Corr.1. (37)ACC/1987/5. (38)A/42/16. (39)YUN 1985, p. 795, GA res. 40/199, 17 Dec. 1985. (40)UNEP/GC.14/7. (41)YUN 1985, p. 793. (42)A/42/25 (dec. 14/3).

Environmental activities

Environmental monitoring and assessment

The activities of Earthwatch, the environmental assessment arm of UNEP, had taken on increasing significance during the last eight years, largely owing to the depletion of the ozone layer, which shielded the planet from the more dangerous forms of radiation generated by the sun and the climatic changes arising from burning fossil fuels, the uncontrolled release of waste gases into the atmosphere and the destruction of forests—all of which were rapidly pushing global temperatures upwards.

Composed of three separate units—GEMS, the International Environmental Information System (INFOTERRA) and the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC)—Earthwatch continuously shared activities and exchanged views.

A major concern of Earthwatch was ensuring the comparability and compatibility of environmental data, as it was almost impossible to produce useful global, regional and national assessments without harmonizing data that came from different and often disparate sources.

On 18 June,⁽¹⁾ the UNEP Governing Council took note of a series of state-of-the-environment reports covering health and the environment, the state of the world environment, emerging environmental issues, environmental events and the state of the environment in developing countries.

Harmonization of environmental measurement

Recognizing the need to strengthen further international co-operation to improve the acquisition and exchange of internationally compatible environmental data and to harmonize the interpretation of such data, the Governing Council, on 17 June,⁽²⁾ called on the Executive Director to initiate action to ensure more effective co-ordination.

It requested him to convene, in 1987 or early 1988, under the auspices of Earthwatch, a meeting of experts to consider the best means of improving and harmonizing environmental measurement, to take account of the outcome of that meeting and to report on it at the Council's 1989 session.

State-of-the-environment reports

1987 state of the world environment

In response to a May 1985 Governing Council decision,⁽³⁾ the Executive Director, in April 1987, submitted a report on the state of the world environment⁽⁴⁾ focusing mainly on environmental changes that had occurred during 1981-1986. The Executive Director stated that there had been an improvement in the quality of the data base in certain fields and in the understanding of some environmental phenomena, such as the possible depletion of the ozone layer and climatic changes. At the same time, there were gaps and a lack of quantitative information about the environment in developing countries. The report covered air quality and atmospheric issues, water pollution, desertification and deforestation and animal and plant life. It examined the effects of development on the environment, including population growth, human settlements, transport and tourism, agriculture and food production, industrial development and energy. It also dealt with environmental protection measures, discussing public perceptions and attitudes and national and international responses.

Taking note of the Executive Director's report, the Governing Council, on 18 June,⁽⁵⁾ called on Governments, relevant United Nations bodies, other intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to increase their efforts to improve the environmental data base and to give high priority to studies aimed at filling the gaps in current environmental knowledge. It called on Governments to implement environmental protection measures and to refrain from using chemical and other weapons of mass destruction that threatened people and the environment. It decided that the topic for the 1988 state-of-the-environment report should be the public and environment, with emphasis on the role of women, and further decided that the 1989 report should update the 1987 report on the world environment, giving more in-depth treatment to specific subject and/or geographical areas.

The General Assembly, in resolution 42/184, welcomed the report and requested that it be given wide dissemination.

State of the environment in developing countries

In 1985,⁽³⁾ the UNEP Governing Council requested the Executive Director to assist Governments in preparing examples of national state-of-the-environment reports, for three countries from Africa, three from Asia and the Pacific and three from Latin America, each representing different eco-zones.

The Executive Director, reporting on progress made,(6) stated that UNEP had issued and distributed to all Governments a set of guidelines for preparing such reports. The national reports prepared in accordance with those guidelines would constitute a baseline against which future environmental changes could be measured. In addition, the Executive Director selected a number of countries representing different eco-zones in Africa (Kenya, Morocco and Zimbabwe), Asia and the Pacific (Indonesia, Nepal and Thailand) and Latin America and the Caribbean (Ecuador, Haiti and Mexico). Reports had been prepared by Mexico, Kenya and Zimbabwe, as well as Bahrain and Qatar.

During the year, work plans were initiated for six other national reports covering Argentina, Ethiopia, Jamaica, Malaysia, Oman and Zambia.

On 18 June,(7) the Council requested the Executive Director to continue to give high priority to assisting developing countries in preparing national state-of-the-environment reports, particularly countries that had not yet been able to prepare them.

Major environmental events (1986)

Taking note of the Executive Director's report on major environmental events in 1986,(8) the Governing Council, on 18 June,(9) encouraged him to co-operate with the relevant international agencies on the environmental aspects of those events, bearing in mind that IAEA was the principal United Nations agency responsible for nuclear matters, and to assist Governments to identify industrial hazards, develop measures to limit the risk of accidental emission of dangerous substances and provide early notification and assistance in the event of serious industrial accidents. It requested him to report in 1989 on any major hazardous environmental events.

Environment and health

The Executive Director submitted a report on the 1986 state of the environment: environment and health, to the Governing Council. (10) On 18 June,(11) the Council, endorsing the report's conclusions and recommendations, requested the Executive Director to bring those recommendations to the attention of Governments and relevant intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and to monitor their implementation. It called for government support from United Nations regional commissions, UNDP, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the World Food Programme, the World Bank, IFAD, international financial institutions and government agencies. It further requested the Executive Director to report on the implementation of those recommendations at the Council's 1989 session, and called on him to bring to the attention of WHO, Habitat and other relevant United Nations organizations the need to develop simple, cost-effective methods of evaluating the role of health and environmental protection in strategies for promoting growth in productivity and production and to test them in a limited number of countries. It requested that he accord high priority to health and environmental activities.

Emerging environmental issues

The Executive Director in February submitted a report(12) on emerging environmental issues covering aquaculture and municipal solid waste in developing countries. He also described other emerging issues, including the biological diversity crisis (see above), health risks from diesel vehicles, technology transfer and the environment and acid fog.

On 18 June,(13) the UNEP Council, taking note of the Executive Director's report, requested that it be more widely circulated. It decided on two emerging environmental issues—health risks from diesel vehicles and acid fog—for more detailed elaboration in the Executive Director's 1989 state-of-the-environment report.

Environmental impact assessment

The Working Group of Experts on Environmental Law (Geneva, 12-16 January 1987)(14) adopted goals and principles for environmental impact assessment.

The goals adopted by the Group were to establish that the competent authority should determine the effects of activities that were likely to affect the environment and to take them into account before deciding to undertake such activities; promote the implementation of appropriate procedures through which the foregoing goal might be realized in all countries; and encourage the development of information exchange, notification and consultation between States when proposed activities were likely to have significant transboundary environmental effects.

The principles adopted by the Group stated, among other things, that States should not undertake activities without first considering their environmental effects; the criteria and procedures for determining whether an activity was likely to effect the environment should be defined by legislation; significant environmental issues should be identified and studied in the environmental impact assessment process; following a decision, the activity and its effects or the provisions of the decision should be subject to supervision; States should endeavour to conclude bilateral, regional or multilateral arrangements to provide notification, exchange of information and consultation on environmental effects; when information provided as part of an environmental impact assessment indicated that the environment in another State was likely to be affected by a planned activity, the State in which the activity was planned should notify the other State, transmit any relevant information from the assessment, and enter into consultations; and appropriate measures should be established to ensure implementation of environmental impact assessment procedures.

On 17 June, (15) the Governing Council adopted the Group's goals and principles and decided that the Group had completed its task. It requested the Executive Director to bring the goals and principles and the Group's report to the attention of all States and relevant international organizations, including multilateral development banks, and to inform them of the Council's recommendation that the goals and principles be considered in preparing legislation and in co-operative international efforts. It further requested him to assist States in implementing the goals and principles, conduct a survey on their application, investigate measures that could be undertaken to further international co-operation on the subject and report to the Council on those matters in 1989.

Environment information networks

Global Environmental Monitoring System

The GEMS mandate called for co-ordinating the collection of data at the global, regional and national levels and making that information available to those responsible for managing the environment and natural resources. There were seven interrelated monitoring areas within GEMS: renewable resources, climate, health, long-range transboundary pollution, integrated monitoring (simultaneous monitoring of pollutants and ecosystems), oceans and the Global Resource Information Database (GRID) (see below).

In the area of data collection, it was agreed at a meeting (Munich, Federal Republic of Germany, December) to develop a project for improving harmonization techniques in selected areas, initially water quality and soil degradation, with a view to widening the exchange and comparison of environmental information.

Under a joint UNEP/ECE project, the first large-scale survey of forest damage attributed to air pollution in Europe was completed in 1987. The report, prepared by programme co-ordinating centres in Czechoslovakia and the Federal Republic of Germany, compared and analyzed data from 16 European countries. In June-July 1987, forestry experts from 23 countries participated in a field training course in the Black Forest area of the Federal Republic of Germany to test and harmonize damage identification and assessment methods.

Global Resource Information Data Base

GRID, established in 1985 within GEMS, responded to the need to have basic environmental data—on soils, forests, hydrology, vegetation, land use, climate and pollution—more readily available to environmental decision makers.

A pilot phase of GRID, initiated to develop methods of demonstrating the feasibility and utility of a global resource data management system, concluded on 31 December 1987. More than two dozen global and regional environmental data sets had been incorporated into the system. Under a UNEP/United Nations Institute for Training and Research programme sponsored by the Swiss Development Agency, national applications of GRID were combined with training. At the request of Uganda's Ministry of Environmental Protection, UNEP and Ugandan experts built an environmental database within GRID. In September 1987, GEMS convened an ad hoc group of specialists to evaluate the technical status of GRID computer systems and software, assess current and medium-term needs and recommend any necessary system configuration changes.

INFOTERRA

UNEP's environmental information system and the world's largest—INFOTERRA—linking national and international institutions and experts, expanded its activities in 1987. The number of government-designated INFOTERRA national focal points reached 133, four more than in 1986. User services were improved by adding nine special sectoral sources, which provided bibliographic information and documentation on priority environmental issues, and by establishing a regional service centre for Arabic-speaking countries. Some 13,300 queries, more than half from developing countries, were answered in 1987, a 10 per cent increase over 1986.

The third meeting of the INFOTERRA Advisory Committee (Canberra, Australia, April) and a concurrent meeting of the managers of the INFOTERRA regional service centres recommended pairing national focal points in developed and developing countries, establishing an INFOTERRA trust fund, examining technical means of speeding up communication by national focal points and strengthening existing links between the partner countries.

Under the INFOTERRA publications programme, a new and updated edition of the INFOTERRA International Directory of Sources was issued with a separate Cumulative Index, as was INFOTERRA

World Directory of Environmental Expertise, a reference tool for decisions makers. Other publications included a special directory on man and the atmosphere and the first volume of the Exchange of environmental experience, a new series intended to disseminate new research and development results.

On 17 June,(16) the Council called on Governments to make full use of INFOTERRA services and to strengthen their national focal points. It requested the Executive Director to consider further strengthening INFOTERRA, taking into account its Advisory Committee's recommendations.

Protection against harmful products and wastes

A vast number of pollutants—chemical, physical and biological—continued to create hazards for human and environmental health. In general, physical pollutants tended to concern the industrialized countries, while biological agents, which caused some of the most serious tropical diseases, continued to trouble developing countries; concern over chemical agents was universal.

At an FAO/UNEP/WHO International Conference on Mycotoxins (Bangkok, 28 September-4 October), delegates from 33 countries and six international organizations discussed mycotoxin control problems and requested collaboration with UNEP in the areas of training, laboratory equipment and legislation.

A joint UNEP/WHO workshop (Nairobi, Kenya, 14-18 September) reviewed and assessed chemical hazards in Africa and the ability of African countries to deal with such hazards. A joint UNEP/WHO/USSR/India travelling seminar (Moscow and Tbilisi, USSR, November; New Delhi and Nainital, India, December) discussed measures to control disease vectors in water development projects.

Safe management of chemicals

The third session of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts for the Exchange of Information on Potentially Harmful Chemicals (in Particular Pesticides) in International Trade (London, 4-10 February) adopted the London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade(14) The guidelines were aimed at improving the management of chemicals through the exchange of scientific, technical, economic and legal information. Special provisions were included regarding the exchange of information on banned and severely restricted chemicals, which called for co-operation between exporting and importing countries. The guidelines did not preclude States from instituting broader and more frequent information exchange or other systems that involved consultation with importing countries and that complemented existing instruments developed by the United Nations, WHO and the FAO International Code of Conduct on the Distribution and Use of Pesticides. Although the guidelines did not specifically address the situation in developing countries, they nevertheless provided a framework for establishing procedures for the effective use of information on chemicals in those countries.

As at 15 December 1987, 69 countries had designated national authorities to participate in implementing the London Guidelines.

The Governing Council, on 17 June,(17) adopted the London Guidelines and decided that they should replace the 1984 Provisional Notification Scheme for Banned and Severely Restricted Chemicals.(18) The Council requested the Executive Director to convene an ad hoc working group of experts to develop modalities of prior informed consent and other approaches that could supplement the London Guidelines, recommend measures for incorporating the principles of informed consent into the Guidelines, and report on the group's findings at its 1989 session. It called on developed countries to support the participation of developing countries in the group's work and asked the Executive Director to seek means to do the same. In urging States to implement the Guidelines, the Council recommended that they consider other ways of obtaining relevant experience, including more extensive information exchange and consultation with importing States on various forms of information exchange. The Council asked the Executive Director to assist States, particularly developing countries, in establishing arrangements to implement the Guidelines and in interpreting information received under them; take steps to ensure effective co-ordination in exchanging information on chemicals in international trade; and report on progress made in implementing the Guidelines at its 1989 session. It decided to review in 1989 the adoption of a more detailed set of guidelines and the possible future need for a convention on international trade in chemicals in the future.

List of harmful substances

In February 1987,(19) the Executive Director submitted to the Governing Council an updated report on the list of selected environmentally harmful chemical substances, processes and phenomena of global significance. The updated report listed six chemical substances—cadmium, lead, mercury, carbon dioxide, nitrogen oxides and photochemical oxidants and sulphur dioxide and its derivatives; three processes—production and use of coal and other fossil fuels, injudicious use of pesticides and oil pollution; and one phenomenon of global significance—eutrophication. The Executive Director described each chemical, process and phenomenon and its impact on humans and the environment and made a set of recommendations for each.

On 18 June,(20) the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to refer the updated report to Governments, relevant international organizations, industry and NGOs for further study and action and to obtain their comments. It called on them to respond to the report, including measures adopted or planned to prevent serious consequences for humans and the environment. It further requested the Executive Director to report to the Council in 1989 on progress made in implementing the recommendations and on the feasibility of adding to the list a small number of globally significant chemical substances, processes and phenomena, and to submit an updated report to the Council in 1991.

International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals

UNEP's information exchange network on chemicals, IRPTC, continued in 1987 to expand its activities, involving Governments, research establishments, international organizations, NGOs and industry. IRPTC worked through a network of 117 national correspondents from 109 countries and established national network partners in 18 countries. It operated a query-response service and regularly published information on selected chemicals in its Bulletin or as special publications. During the year, more than 300 queries on chemicals were received (44 per cent from developing countries), the largest number (i.e., 41 per cent) on agrochemicals.

IRPTC and its network partners focused on updating its computerized central files containing data on chemical analysis, treatment and disposal methods and environmental toxicity. The results of recent hazard assessments and risk evaluations were entered into the data bank. A pilot project was under way to provide national users from Government institutions in Canada with access to the files through a national telecommunication network. A feasibility study on ways to transfer IRPTC data to its world-wide network partners was completed with support from the Netherlands. The IRPTC legal file for 560 chemicals from the IRPTC working list of chemicals was published in 1987. The complete legal file then contained information on some 6,500 chemicals provided by 47 countries and six international organizations. The file was accessible on line world-wide from ECE's Environmental Chemicals Data and Information Network. Co-operation in exchanging computerized toxicity and legal data was initiated in 1987 with network partners from Canada, France and the Federal Republic of Germany. Additional co-operative projects were completed with Canada, the Netherlands and Switzerland for collecting toxicity and environmental data on pesticides used in developing countries, as well as on flame-retardant and other industrial chemicals.

A UNEP/ECE study continued to identify and describe substances easily absorbed through the skin to which workers were exposed at the workplace. IRPTC participated in an Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) workshop (Ottawa, Canada, November) aimed at improving international co-operation in assessing and controlling chemical hazards.

Throughout the year, IRPTC continued to participate in the work of the International Programme on Chemical Safety (IPCS). The Registry of Chemicals Currently Being Tested for Toxic Effects was updated and published jointly with IPCS in February and October 1987. A new data base on national chemical reviews was prepared for the October issue of the Registry.

In co-operation with the USSR, IRPTC continued to publish, in English and Russian, the Scientific Reviews of Soviet Literature on Toxicity and Hazards of Chemicals series, which by the end of 1987 totalled 112 issues. The joint IRPTC/USSR project included an international survey on using classification systems for chemicals based on their toxicity and hazards.

IRPTC continued to participate in updating the United Nations consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or not approved by Governments.(21). An updated database of chemical products and chemicals in consumer products was made available to the United Nations Secretariat in November.

IRPTC/IPCS and the USSR organized a training course in preventive toxicology focusing on industrial and household chemicals (Moscow and Leningrad, USSR). IRTPC also supported an IPSC training course on toxicology and chemical safety in rural environments: health aspects of pesticide use (Kiev, Kishinev and Odessa, USSR). In co-operation with the Federal Republic of Germany, IRPTC organized a study meeting for participants from 13 developing countries on State control of hazardous chemicals as practised in that country.

On 17 June,(22) the Governing Council called on the Executive Director to continue to give high priority to IRPTC's work and on Governments, international organizations and industry to continue participating in its work. It further requested the Executive Director to examine the financial position of IRPTC with a view to securing for it a stable financial base and to report on its decision in 1989.

Traffic in toxic products and wastes

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, which did not meet in 1987, published the fifth revised edition of its recommendations(23) and an addendum of its tests and criteria.(24)

On 28 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/54 on the work of the Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/183 without vote.

Traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes

The General Assembly,

Taking note of decisions 14/19 on the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals, 14/27 on environmentally safe management of chemicals, in particular those that are banned and severely restricted in international trade, and 14/30 on environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes, which were adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, on 17 June 1987,

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/54 of 28 May 1987 on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods,

Recognizing the useful role that the organizations of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Health Organization, could play in assisting in the prevention and control of the potentially harmful effects of traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes,

Convinced that the London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade and the Cairo Guidelines and Principles for the Environmentally Sound Management of Hazardous Wastes represent a significant step forward,

Concerned that part of the international movement of toxic and dangerous products and wastes is being carried out in contravention of existing national legislation and relevant international legal instruments, as well as internationally accepted guidelines and principles, to the detriment of the environment and public health of all countries, particularly of developing countries,

Convinced that these problems cannot be resolved without adequate co-operation among members of the international community and that the international community should adopt measures to complement and strengthen the above-mentioned guidelines and principles,

Also convinced of the need to assist all countries, particularly developing countries, in obtaining all necessary information concerning toxic and dangerous products and wastes and in reinforcing their capacity to detect and halt any illegal attempt to introduce toxic and dangerous products and wastes into the territory of any State in contravention of national legislation and relevant international legal instruments, as well as traffic not carried out in compliance with internationally accepted guidelines and principles in this field,

Welcoming the convening of a diplomatic conference in Switzerland in 1989 for the purpose of adopting a global convention on control of transboundary movement of hazardous wastes, for which a preparatory meeting was convened by the United Nations Environment

Programme and held at Budapest from 27 to 30 October 1987, in conjunction with the World Conference on Hazardous Wastes,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report on the question of illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes—that is, traffic in contravention of national legislation and relevant international legal instruments—as well as traffic not carried out in compliance with internationally accepted guidelines and principles in this field, and its impact on all countries, in particular developing countries, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, as well as a preliminary report on the question for submission to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988;

2. Invites all Governments to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution and also invites the appropriate bodies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to assist the Secretary-General in the preparation of the report;

3. Calls upon all Governments to co-operate in the prevention and control of illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes—that is, traffic in contravention of national legislation and relevant international legal instruments—as well as traffic not carried out in compliance with internationally accepted guidelines and principles.

General Assembly resolution 42/183

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.5) without vote, 27 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.78), based on informal consultations on draft by Guatemala for Group of 77 (A/C.2/42/L.42); agenda item 82 (e).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 27, 28, 32, 42, 43; plenary 96.

Management of hazardous wastes

The 1985 Cairo Guidelines and Principles for the Environmentally Sound Management of Hazardous Wastes(25) were set out in an April 1987 report(14) by the Executive Director to the Governing Council. The Guidelines, designed to assist Governments in developing policies, covered the management of hazardous wastes from their generation to their final disposal, particularly the problem of transfrontier movements of such wastes, which called for international co-operation. The Guidelines dealt mainly with administrative aspects and covered generation and management, control over disposal, monitoring, remedied action and record-keeping, safety and contingency planning, transport, liability and compensation.

On 17 June,(26) the Council approved the Cairo Guidelines and called on Governments and international organizations to use them to develop bilateral, regional and multilateral agreements and national legislation. It authorized the Executive Director to organize a series of regional workshops to discuss further co-operation between developed and developing countries in implementing the Guidelines. The Council further authorized him to convene a working group of legal and technical experts to organize a global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes, and welcomed the offer by Hungary to host an organizational meeting of the group. It requested the Executive Director to convene a diplomatic conference in early 1989 to adopt and sign a global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and welcomed the offer by Switzerland to host that conference.

The organizational meeting of the working group of legal and technical experts was held at Budapest, Hungary, from 27 to 29 October.

Ecosystems

Atmosphere

Protection of the ozone layer

In 1987, 24 countries and EEC adopted and signed the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer. The Protocol amplified the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer(27) by controlling both chlorofluorocarbons and halons, compounds that deplete the stratospheric ozone layer. The Montreal Protocol, which was expected to enter into force on 1 January 1989, would first freeze the production of the controlled substances at their 1986 level within one year of the date of entry into force. The Protocol called for a 50 per cent reduction in production and consumption of chlorofluorocarbons by mid-1988, but allowed limited production increases to meet basic domestic needs. Beginning in 1992, the consumption of halons would be frozen at 1986 levels. Developing countries, however, would have 10 years to comply with the provisions concerning freezes and reductions. The Protocol would enter into force when 11 countries, representing two thirds of the 1986 estimated global consumption of controlled substances, ratified it.

On 17 June,(28) the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to inform the Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts for the Preparation of a Protocol on Chlorofluorocarbons that it should consider the full range of potential ozone-depleting substances in determining what chemicals might be controlled under the Protocol. The Council reiterated the Working Group's request that UNEP, among other things, arrange expeditiously for improved calculations of the ozone-depletion potential of substances. It appealed to Governments to provide the financial resources to allow representatives from developing countries to participate in activities leading to the adoption of the Protocol. Welcoming the invitation of Canada to host a diplomatic conference on the Protocol, it further requested the Executive Director to report in 1989 on the status of the 1985 Vienna Convention and the protocols thereto.

A Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Protocol on Chlorofluorocarbons to the Vienna Convention was held at Montreal, Canada, from 14 to 16 September.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/182 without vote.

Protection of the ozone layer

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer adopted on 22 March 1985,

Recognizing that world-wide emissions of certain substances can significantly deplete and otherwise modify the ozone layer in a manner that is likely to result in adverse effects on human health and the environment and recognizing also the need for measures to reduce the world-wide emissions of such substances,

Noting with satisfaction the work carried out by the United Nations Environment Programme through, inter alia, its Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts for the Preparation of a Protocol on Chlorofluorocarbons to the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer,

1. Appeals to all States to consider becoming parties to the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer as soon as possible;

2. Welcomes the adoption on 16 September 1987 of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer;

3. Draws the attention of all States to the fact that the Montreal Protocol will remain open for signature at Ottawa until 16 January 1988 and subsequently at United Nations Headquarters from 17 January to 15 September 1988;

4. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so to consider signing the Montreal Protocol as soon as possible;

5. Urges all States and regional economic integration organizations to consider becoming parties to the Montreal Protocol as soon as possible so that it may enter into force in accordance with article 16 of the Protocol;

6. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation of the present resolution and any further information regarding the Montreal Protocol that the Programme may be in a position to provide.

General Assembly resolution 42/182

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.5) without vote, 20 November (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.64), based on informal consultations on 32-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.37); agenda item 82 (e).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 27, 28, 32, 42; plenary 96.

Climate-related monitoring

UNEP estimated that if greenhouse gases continued to be emitted at current rates, the mean global temperature could rise between 1.5 and 4.5 degrees Celsius by the year 2030. Two of the most serious effects would be a rise in sea level and radical shifts in crop patterns. UNEP'S approach to this issue focused on searching for means to delay or reduce climate change, exploring ways of mitigating or diminishing the effects of such a change and finding the best means to prepare society and Governments to adapt to the consequences of change.

In 1987, UNEP and the Netherlands signed an agreement to co-operate in developing an inventory of those regions most vulnerable to sea level rise and to undertake in-depth studies in the Netherlands and in vulnerable developing country regions. In addition, the University of East Anglia (Norwich, United Kingdom) undertook on behalf of UNEP a report on sea level changes and tropical storm frequency, and an international workshop on the socio-economic effects of those phenomena was held (Norwich, September).

As part of a project to develop policies to respond to climate change, one workshop (Villach, Austria, September) was held to examine technically feasible options for averting or adapting to climate change, and another (Bellagio, Italy, November) attempted to map a new agenda.

The European Workshop on Interrelated Bioclimatic and Land Use Changes (Noordwijkerhout, Netherlands, October) examined the possible socio-economic effects of climate change in Europe.

A training course on background air pollution measurements (Budapest, August/September) acquainted participants from developing countries with the measurement and interpretation of data from the Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network.

The Global Climate System (Autumn 1984-Spring 1986) was published, and the publication programme for the Climate System Monitoring monthly bulletins was maintained. UNEP completed the World Glacier Inventory; glaciers were a major baseline against which the global effects of atmospheric warming could be monitored. As part of a programme to inform the general public about climate change, UNEP published, as a volume of the GEMS/UNEP Environmental Library Series, a popular account of greenhouse gases and produced an audio-visual kit for distribution to schools.

World Climate Programme

The study of regional climatic effects possibly associated with the El Niño phenomenon, including such anomalies as droughts in Africa and Australia, poor fish catches in Chile, reduced crop yields in China, heat waves in the United States and flooding in the USSR, continued in 1987 under the World Climate Impact Studies Programme (WCIP).

Two projects were completed during the year, one focusing on integrated approaches to climate impact studies, examining the relationship between climate variability and food production, and the other on reducing the vulnerability of food systems to climate in north-eastern India.

The Inter-Agency Group on Agricultural Biometeorology emphasized the socio-economic consequences of agricultural alternatives provided by climatic conditions in the lowland humid tropics of South America. A workshop (Quito, Ecuador, March) was held on that subject.

On 18 June, (29) the Council urged the Executive Director to ensure that UNEP, in co-operation with WMO and the International Council of Scientific Unions, maintained an active role within WCIP. It welcomed his plans to convene a second World Climate Conference in 1989 or 1990 and to support the World Conference on the Changing Atmosphere being convened by Canada in 1988. It urged the Executive Director to respond positively to a WMO decision to establish an ad hoc intergovernmental mechanism to carry out scientific assessments of the magnitude, timing and potential impact of climate change. It requested the Executive Director to report to the Council at its 1989 session on the progress made on climate impact, the work of the ad hoc mechanism and the range of possible responses by Governments and international agencies to anticipated climate changes.

(For more information on climate, see PART TWO, Chapter XIII.)

Terrestrial ecosystems

Desertification and drought control

The factors contributing to desertification, mainly over-exploitation and mismanagement, continued virtually unabated in 1987. Awareness of the problem and efforts to deal with it had grown but not on a scale commensurate with its magnitude. Inadequate technical and financial resources remained a major constraint.

UNEP responded to those constraints by building a Desertification Information System (DESI) consisting of databases of institutions dealing with desertification, information on United Nations desertification control projects, a compendium of technical information on wind erosion control and a desertification thesaurus. During 1987, a plan was initiated to assist NGOs and desert research institutes in establishing information systems compatible with DESI and GRID.

In Africa, the problem of desertification intensified. Responding to the crisis, UNEP assisted 10 African countries to formulate project proposals addressing environmental degradation and food production. (For information on United Nations assistance to drought-stricken countries in Africa, see p. 453.)

The UNEP Executive Director, in an April report⁽³⁰⁾ to the Governing Council, stated that there was a need for policy guidance on UNEP'S role in implementing the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,⁽³¹⁾ Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990⁽³²⁾ and the 1985 Cairo Programme for African Co-operation⁽³³⁾ (For information on science and technology to combat desertification and drought, see Chapter XI of this section.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/188 without vote.

Countries stricken by desertification and drought in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/208 of 17 December 1984 and 40/175 of 17 December 1985, and its decision 41/454 of 8 December 1986,

Aware that the prime responsibility in the struggle against desertification and the effects of drought rests with the countries concerned, and that such action is an essential component of their long-term development,

Also aware that the problems of desertification and drought are increasingly assuming a structural and endemic character, and that real and permanent solutions must be found in a global effort based on concerted action by the stricken countries and the international community,

Recalling the commitment of African Governments, as expressed in the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, to undertake and to continue as soon as possible measures to combat drought and desertification,

Recalling the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification adopted by the United Nations Conference on Desertification, and taking note of decisions 14/15 A and B of 18 June 1987 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme concerning desertification,

Recalling with satisfaction the active support and the commitment to action expressed forcefully by the international community, including the United Nations system, at the thirteenth special session of the General Assembly, on the critical economic situation in Africa,

Welcoming the initiative of the Government of Senegal in convening the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification in the countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Economic Community of West African States, in the Maghreb countries, in Egypt and in the Sudan (COMIDES), and recalling with satisfaction the results achieved and the resolutions adopted by the Conference at its first and second sessions, held at Dakar in July 1984, and in November 1985, which set up COMIDES as a ministerial consultation mechanism,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the proposals concerning concrete measures to be taken set out in the report of the Secretary-General on the countries stricken by desertification and drought;

2. Takes note also of the sustained and praiseworthy efforts made by the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel to combat desertification and drought, and of its fruitful co-operation with Governments and the organs and bodies of the United Nations system;

3. Welcomes the progress made since the establishment by six East African countries of the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development and invites the international community to continue to support the implementation of the Plan of Action of the six countries and to furnish them with sufficient financial and technical resources for this purpose;

4. Appeals urgently to the members of the international community, particularly donor countries, while strengthening their support for the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, to continue to support the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification, the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development;

5. Reaffirms the role of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in the co-ordination of the efforts of the United Nations to help the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development to carry out their programmes;

6. Appeals to all Governments to increase their support for the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, in particular by making voluntary contributions to it at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, but also by financing directly the projects sponsored by the Office, which enable it to respond to the priority needs of the Sudano-Sahelian countries;

7. Welcomes with satisfaction the establishment of the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification by the International Fund for Agricultural Development;

8. Takes note with satisfaction of the generosity and solidarity with which the international community has responded to the assistance needs resulting from the emergency in Africa, particularly with regard to food aid and its transport, medical assistance and the threat of grasshoppers and locusts;

9. Also appeals to all members of the international community, the organs and bodies of the United Nations, regional and subregional financial institutions, and non-governmental organizations to continue to give their full support in all forms, including financial and technical aid or any other form of assistance, to the development efforts of the countries stricken by desertification and drought;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/188

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.6) without vote, 20 November (meeting 42); 52-nation draft (A/C.2/42/L.24), orally revised; agenda item 82 (f).

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, Niger, Nigeria, Philippines, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Sweden, Togo, Uganda, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 26, 27, 42; plenary 96.

The Second Committee had before it a draft resolution,(34) consideration of which had been deferred by the General Assembly in 1986.(35) In light of the Committee's approval of the draft text that became resolution 42/188, no action was taken on the deferred text.

Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

In 1987,(36) UNEP continued its efforts to implement the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.(37) In most affected countries, those efforts continued to be isolated in sectoral projects whose impact was reduced by the lack of a clearly defined framework for desertification control. National institutions for dealing with desertification were weak as a result of inadequate resources and the sectoral nature of government structures, which made co-ordination difficult. Given those circumstances, UNEP engaged donors and countries affected by desertification in a search for mechanisms to integrate desertification control programmes into overall national development plans and priorities.

Through a joint ESCWA/FAO/UNEP effort, preparatory technical assistance was provided to the Yemen Arab Republic to prepare a draft national plan for combating desertification.

The UNEP Desertification Control Programme Activity Centre assisted a number of African countries in formulating pilot projects for the rehabilitation of villages and the sustainable development of stock-raising zones in semi-arid areas. Djibouti, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Kenya, Mali, Mauritania, Senegal, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire, Zambia and Zimbabwe participated.

Concerning the need for appropriate technologies in the Sahel, UNEP, in collaboration with a French industrial firm, devised and built a prototype of an efficient animal-driven pump. After the pump was tested, a project for field testing was established in Mali, partly because that country represented conditions typical of central Sahel. Other projects dealt with restoring soil fertility, improving the water storage capacity of soils, and managing depleted soils in the Sahel.

A pilot project funded by UNEP and France sought to develop a low-cost method of assessing desertification in the southern Saharan arid, semi-arid and sub-humid eco-zones using earlier aerial photographs (some taken 30 years ago) and new ones, together with remote sensing imagery, to study the degradation of soil and vegetation and the evolution of the landscape.

An afforestation and training project in southern India, started in 1985, resulted in the production of some 3.7 million tree seedlings at five project sites and the planting of more than 1 million trees.

In addition to producing the Desertification Control Bulletin and other publications, UNEP, in co-operation with TVE, supported the production of television films in Colombia, Viet Nam and Thailand. UNEP also supported a TVE film on salinization in China, co-produced with National Geographic Television (United States).

On 18 June,(38) the Governing Council took note of the Executive Director's 1985(39) and 1986(40) annual reports on the implementation of the Plan of Action and authorized him to submit them, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly.

By decision 1987/171 of 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council took note of the reports of the Governing Council on the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.

The Secretary-General transmitted the reports to the Assembly in September.(41)

Report of the Secretary-General. Responding to a 1985 General Assembly request,(42) the Secretary-General in September submitted a report(43) on the implementation of the 1977 Plan of Action. He stated that problems such as desertification affected the interests of all countries through multiplier effects such as global aid and trade flows, food shortages and recurring famines, social upheavals, political unrest and a negative impact on world resources and recovery. The Secretary-General called on the General Assembly to address actions at the national and regional levels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolutions 42/189 A and D without vote.

A

Implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/172 of 19 December 1977, by which it approved the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, Recalling also its resolutions 33/89 of 15 December 1978, 34/184 of 18 December 1979, 36/191 of 17 December 1981, 37/220 of 20 December 1982, 38/163 of 19 December 1983, 39/168 of 17 December 1984 and 40/198 of 17 December 1985, dealing with the implementation and financing of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Recalling further its resolution S-1312 of 1 June 1986, by which it adopted the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Noting with dismay and grave concern the continuing spread and intensification of desertification in developing countries, especially in Africa, and the unprecedented human suffering, economic losses and social disruption caused by that phenomenon,

Recognizing that problems such as desertification affect all countries through world aid and trade flows, food shortages and periodic famines, political instability and, most of all, the adverse effects on resources and world recovery,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation and financing of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and the notes by the Secretary-General concerning desertification and drought,

Having also considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its fourteenth session, and Governing Council decision 14/15 of 18 June 1987 on desertification,

1. Takes note of decision 14/15 A of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme;

2. Urges Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental bodies to intensify their efforts to combat desertification, to continue to give priority to measures recommended in the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and by the Governing Council in decision 14/15, and to increase assistance to the countries concerned, with a view to the implementation of their national and regional programmes aimed at desertification control;

3. Notes the significant role that non-governmental organizations are continuing to play in efforts to combat desertification and calls upon Governments and organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental bodies to explore all possibilities for increasing their participation in these efforts;

4. Urges the Governments of countries affected by desertification to accord sustained priority to medium-term and long-term strategies and programmes for combating desertification and to ensure that these are smoothly integrated with their national development plans and the regional co-operative programmes to curb the spread of environmental degradation;

5. Requests the Governing Council to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress achieved in implementing the measures approved by the Governing Council to enhance the work of the Inter-Agency Working Group on Desertification;

6. Also requests the Governing Council to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the Plan of Action.

General Assembly resolution 42/189 A

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.6) without vote, 20 November (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.60), following informal consultations on draft by Mauritania (A/C.2/42/L.36), orally revised; agenda item 82 (f).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 26, 27, 42; plenary 96.

D

Report of the Secretary-General concerning the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

The General Assembly

Requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of resolutions A, B and C above.

General Assembly resolution 42/189 D

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.6) without vote, 20 November (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.60), following informal consultations on draft by Mauritania (A/C.2/42/L.36), orally revised; agenda item 82 (f).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 26, 27, 42; plenary 96.

Financing plan implementation

The UNEP Executive Director, in an April report(30) to the Governing Council, stated that the Special Account, established as an integral part of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification to help mobilize additional resources to implement the Plan, was short of the minimum needed to make it effective. He proposed that the Governing Council might wish to recommend that recipient Governments, especially those with national plans of action to combat desertification, set aside a percentage of their national budgetary resources for implementing anti-desertification programmes and projects and place them in a national account for desertification control. Such accounts would act as a stimulus for investments by bilateral and multilateral donors and as a catalyst in the orientation of national development activities, as well as paralleling the Special Account. As to bilateral aid, the Executive Director said that UNEP should approach donors through the OECD and other regional and subregional groupings to discuss contributing to the Special Account. A percentage (perhaps 1 per cent) of the estimated $17 billion in bilateral development assistance should be set aside as possible contributions. If the foregoing contribution levels could not be achieved, the Executive Director said, the Governing Council might consider recommending that the General Assembly discontinue the Special Account.

On 18 June,(44) the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to discuss with Governments the feasibility of adopting a new approach to contributing to the Special Account and recommended that he report on the results to the Council in 1989.

In a September report(43) on the financing of the 1977 Plan of Action, the Secretary-General recalled studies on additional means of financing the implementation of the Plan of Action undertaken in 1978,(45) 1980(46) and 1981(47). He stated that a level of approximately $1.8 billion per year for a period of 20 years was needed to support the implementation of the Plan. Concerning additional means of financing the Plan, he said that as a result of the integration of national desertification plans into overall development strategies and a more systematic application of economic analysis to dry-land rehabilitation programmes, it was possible to envisage: greater-mobilization of domestic resources through fiscal and financial measures, more efficient administration and new organizational arrangements; the granting of a higher percentage of multilateral/bilateral grants and loans to poorer countries on a concessionary basis; more systematic and sustained efforts by the World Bank; regional development banks and other multilateral financing institutions to act as intermediaries for developing countries affected by desertification; more positive consideration by Governments to create a public international corporation for financing anti-desertification programmes; and the encouragement by countries with foundations and charitable organizations to channel additional funds to training and research through tax rebates and other financial incentives.

He urged the Assembly to take concrete decisions and to play a central role in bringing the problems concerning desertification and their possible solutions to the attention of member Governments, multilateral development financing institutions, international agencies, governmental organizations, NGOs, private foundations and research institutions so that they could take decisions to raise the required funds.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/189 C without vote.

Financing and other measures in support of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/198 of 17 December 1985,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation and financing of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

2. Urges Governments as well as organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, other multilateral development-assistance institutions, non-governmental organizations and private foundations to take the necessary decisions to mobilize the funds required before the desertification process destroys more arable lands and it becomes too late to stop the process;

3. Urges relevant research institutions, as appropriate, in co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme, to give maximum priority to work in the field of desertification;

4. Takes note of the fact that the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, in its decision 14/15 D of 18 June 1987, requested the Executive Director of the Programme to discuss with Governments the feasibility of adopting a new and realistic approach that would encourage them and international financing institutions to contribute directly or indirectly to the Special Account to finance the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

5. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to examine, in the context of the evaluation called for in Governing Council decision 14/15 C of 18 June 1987, ways and means of enhancing the efficiency of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control in pursuance of its mandate as contained in the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review actions at the national and regional levels as well as the issues pertaining to the financing of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and to consult further with interested Governments on the proposals contained in his report.

General Assembly resolution 42/189 C

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.6) without vote, 20 November (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.60), following informal consultations on draft by Mauritania (A/C.2/42/L.36), orally revised; agenda item 82 (f).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 26, 27, 42; plenary 96.

Implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region

UNEP activities. In 1987, the rains failed again in most countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region, the deficiencies being most pronounced in eastern Africa. Desertification continued at an alarming rate, as did the general deterioration of the region's physical environment.

UNSO, as the agency responsible for implementing the 1977 Plan of Action in the region on behalf of UNEP and under joint UNEP/UNDP sponsorship, supported a programme of desertification control in 22 countries. As at 31 December 1987, UNSO supported a programme consisting of 64 ongoing projects with a total funding of $55.97 million. Activities concentrated on afforestation and reforestation, alternative sources of energy and fuelwood conservation, rangeland management and water resources, soil protection and sand-dune stabilization, integrated land management and planning and programming.

In Mali, UNSO provided $51,700 in 1987 to help put into operation its National Plan of Action to Combat Desertification. UNSO sent a mission to the United Republic of Tanzania to discuss potential projects; the Government identified as a priority project the establishment of a drought and desertification control division within its National Environment Management Council. A mission organized by the Permanent Inter-State Committee for Drought Control, the Club du Sahel and UNSO visited Chad to confer on a national plan of action. In Burkina Faso, the Swedish International Development Agency (SIDA) contributed some $980,000 for technical support to two projects to establish village woodlots and distribute fuel-efficient cooking stoves. A new project to develop agro-forestry through the regeneration of Acacia alba and other local species was launched in Burkina Faso with financing from Norway. The Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations was supporting a six-year project for integrated village and family afforestation in the Bazega area of Burkina Faso; as of June 1987, 500 hectares had been planted with some 400,000 seedlings. Training in nursery and planting techniques had been provided to forestry and extension workers plus some 120 villagers. Norway agreed to support a project for the regeneration of Acacia senegal plantations in Mali over a five-year period with a contribution of $1.6 million; the project got under way with a pilot project for gum tree development in the Kayes region. A joint SIDA/UNSO mission to Niger was conducted in December 1987 to formulate a three-year extension to the agro-forestry development project in the Department of Dosso; the project has been responsible for the natural regeneration of 300,000 seedlings of Acacia alba over almost 6,000 hectares and the artificial regeneration of 60,000 seedlings. UNSO embarked on a five-year project funded by the Danish International Development Agency (DANIDA) at a cost of $5.4 million aimed at protecting the Blue Nile catchment area in Ethiopia. A project to establish fuelwood plantations to meet the needs of Dese, Ethiopia, succeeded in planting 1,226 hectares of fuelwood with a total production of 4.19 million seedlings.

A pilot project to use wind energy in Cape Verde was extended until 1989 with an additional contribution of $280,560 from DANIDA. Another DANIDA-financed project to design efficient stoves produced locally was initiated in Gambia. Projects for the manufacture of fuel-efficient stoves also were under way in Burkina Faso, Mauritania, Mali and Sudan. In Niger, a World Bank project on behalf of UNSO with financing from Norway and the United Nations Development Fund for Women emphasized alternative domestic sources of energy, improved cooking stoves and studies on the role of women in marketing fuelwood.

In range management and water resources, UNSO was supporting projects involving the construction of small earth dams, ground-water development and water conservation for irrigation, household use and livestock. The aim of a project in Gambia, financed by Australia with the participation of the United Nations Capital Development Fund, was to construct a diversion weir and irrigation scheme on the Profu Bolon, a tributary of the Gambia River. Also in Gambia, a rangeland rehabilitation and livestock water development project funded by UNDP and UNEP was completed in 1987. UNSO contributed $61,560 for preliminary technical and socio-economic rehabilitation studies of 30 dams in Togo.

In Senegal, an integrated programme to stabilize secondary dunes and to protect basins in which farming was practised was extended for one more year. In Somalia, in the area of Shallambod, massive dunes were successfully fixed through vegetative techniques. The second phase of a soil protection programme in Cape Verde's Sao Joao Baptista Valley, financed by Norway, included ground-water development.

As part of new initiatives to adopt an integrated approach to land management, UNSO, in co-operation with the Co-operative for American Relief Everywhere, an NGO, developed a project in Niger aimed at improving agricultural and agro-forestry practices through extensive environmental awareness programmes, the use of ecologically sound agronomic practices in mechanized farming, the protection of forest reserves, the restocking of plantations and the strengthening of governmental forestry services.

In Mali, a six-month feasibility study was conducted with contributions of $155,000 from UNSO and $278,000 from UNDP for a Green Belt project. The project potentially covered a large area extending from the border with Mauritania through Tombouctou and on to Gao, with a loop around Mopti and Segou. Although the term Green Belt indicated an emphasis on tree-planting, the project embraced a full spectrum of land management actions. In Burkina Faso, a contribution of $5 million was being sought for a project for the development of the Sebba region, which would be part of a larger integrated development programme for the Sahelian region of the country.

On 18 June,(48) the Governing Council took note of those parts of the Executive Director's annual reports for 1985(39) and 1986(40) dealing with implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region and authorized him to submit the reports, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly; welcomed the steps taken by UNSO, on behalf of UNEP, toward implementing the Plan of Action; and urged the Executive Director and the Administrator of UNDP to intensify efforts to mobilize resources to assist the countries served by UNSO.

On 8 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/171, took note of the reports of the Governing Council on the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region.

UNDP activities. Activities for desertification control in the Sudano-Sahelian region included approval of a programme in Cameroon to promote medium-sized farms to help stabilize soils and increase agricultural productivity. In Djibouti, UNDP funding was being used to control water resources and develop irrigation methods. UNDP was contributing $4.5 mill towards a joint programme with FAO for soil and water conservation in Ethiopia. An integrated rural development project in south-eastern Fouta Djallon in Guinea focused on increasing agricultural production by developing three irrigated areas totalling 575 hectares and introducing rotational cropping. In Kenya, UNDP contributed to the School of Environmental Studies at Moi University (Eldoret) to develop research, increase awareness of environmental issues, integrate environmental education into the education-system and develop extension and consultancy services. A programme of sand-dune stabilization in Mauritania included technical assistance inputs and agro-sylvo-pastoral development. In Nigeria, allocations were made for a large project of forest management and reforestation in two southern districts; labour-intensive public works projects, including measures against desertification; and drought control through improved utilization of ground-water resources. Projects financed by other UNDP-administered funds were carried out in Burkina Faso, Chad, Mali, Mauritania and Niger.

Following consideration of a report of the UNDP Administrator on UNSO activities and United Nations assistance to other drought-stricken countries in Africa,(49) the UNDP Governing Council, on 18 June,(50) appealed to Governments to further strengthen their support for UNSO and requested the Administrator to continue to report annually on the implementation of the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region, on efforts to combat drought and desertification and on United Nations co-operation in that area.

In an October note,(51) the Secretary-General recalled a February decision of the UNDP Governing Council(52) requesting the Administrator to consolidate into a single document his report on the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region and his report on the implementation of the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/189 B without vote.

Implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the matter and, in particular, its resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, by which it adopted the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Taking note of decision 14/15 B of 18 June 1987 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Taking note also of decision 87/40 of 18 June 1987 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office and assistance to other drought-stricken countries in Africa,

Taking note further of the appropriate decisions of the Economic and Social Council on the implementation of the Plan of Action in the Sudano-Sahelian region,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Having considered the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

1. Takes note of the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

2. Notes with grave concern:

(a) The scope and complexity of the damage caused by desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region;

(b) That insufficient financial resources continue to be a serious constraint in combating desertification;

(c) That the struggle against desertification requires financial and human resources beyond the means of the affected countries;

3. Notes also the efforts that the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office has made in the face of these obstacles to assist, on behalf of the United Nations Environment Programme, the Governments of the countries of the region in combating desertification, under a joint venture between the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Development Programme;

4. Commends the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for the sustained and co-ordinated manner in which they have continued to develop the joint venture through the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office;

5. Recommends to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme that they continue, increase and intensify their efforts to mobilize resources for the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in order to make it more capable of responding adequately to the pressing needs of the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian and adjacent regions;

6. Expresses its gratitude to all Governments, and all organizations and foundations that have contributed to the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

7. Draws the attention of the international community to the pressing need to increase the efforts to implement the Plan of Action in the Sudano-Sahelian region and urges it to contribute to the implementation through appropriate means, including the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities, and to respond favourably to requests for assistance from the Governments of the countries of the region that are most affected;

8. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action.

General Assembly resolution 42/189 B

11 December 1987 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/42/821/Add.6) without vote, 20 November (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/42/L.60), following informal consultations on draft by Mauritania (A/C.2/42/L.36), orally revised; agenda item 82 (f).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 2nd Committee 26, 27, 42; plenary 96.

National plans of action to combat desertification

On 17 June, (53) the UNEP Governing Council, recommending that national plans of action and the nature of their implementation be grass-roots-oriented, requested the Executive Director to be flexible in selecting countries of concentration, taking into account regional distribution, and to evaluate the content and relevance of each country's action plan and the feasibility of integrating them into national development plans. It urged Governments to support such plans and urged UNEP to mobilize more funds through United Nations organizations and other funding agencies.

Soil management

Soil degradation, including wind and water erosion, salinization, alkalization, acidification and soil pollution was one of the major global environmental crises.

UNEP convened an ad hoc expert group meeting (Nairobi, Kenya, 18-22 May) to advise on global soil degradation assessment and its effect on land productivity. The meeting helped to finalize a joint UNEP/International Soil Reference and Information Centre project that by 1990 was to produce a study summarizing the current rate and status of world-wide soil degradation, accompanied by maps for planning and management purposes.

Fifty-nine countries responded to a survey conducted by UNEP on national soils and land-use policies and the extent to which those policies were operational. In Europe and North America, 82 per cent of the countries responding had soils policies that were firmly adhered to, while about 55 per cent of the non-industrialized countries had no operational policies.

A major element of the 1982 Plan of Action to Implement the World Soils Policy(54) was formulated in 1987, with the co-operation of FAO, to lend advisory services to Governments to formulate and implement national soils policies. Sudan and Uganda would be the first countries to receive such assistance.

Other projects promoted the rational use of soils in fragile ecosystems. Three projects dealing with the watershed of the Mona River in Jamaica focused on protecting soils against degradation, providing sustainable systems of agriculture and training local personnel in watershed management.

Guidelines were produced for applying integrated land/soil management in mountain ecosystems, based on a project sponsored by UNEP, Bulgaria, the USSR Commission for UNEP and the International Centre for Integrated Mountain Development. Another activity of the project was a workshop on model curricula and training for soil erosion control and watershed management (Kathmandu, Nepal and Dushambe, USSR, July), which examined 12 case studies from Bulgaria, China, India, Nepal, Pakistan and the United States.

In Africa, the first meeting of the Regional Coordination Unit of the Soils and Fertilizers Network took place (Accra, Ghana, October) under the sponsorship of UNEP, FAO and Ghana. Collaborating with the World Bank's Economic Development Institute, UNEP organized a seminar on managing land and water ecosystems in eastern and southern Africa (Nairobi, Kenya, 5-16 October) for 29 planners and decision makers.

Lithosphere

The International Scientific Council on Geology and Environment Problems (Moscow, November) finalized the manuscripts of three booklets to be published in 1988 under the title Geology and Environment. The booklets described ways of predicting the impact of mining and water resources development on the hydrological and geological conditions of the lithosphere and included guidelines for land-use planning in accordance with geological conditions.

Forest ecosystems

Tropical forests

The need for new agricultural lands, the effects of logging, forest fires and development schemes and the increased need for firewood, timber and other forest products were placing a great deal of pressure on natural tropical forest ecosystems.

Efforts were being made in collaboration with FAO to develop updated assessments on the loss of tropical forests through the use of satellite imagery, ground-based information and national inventories. UNEP also collaborated with FAO to reinforce the capacity of developing countries to conserve the genetic resources of indigenous forests. Pilot projects were launched in Cameroon, Malaysia and Peru. UNEP, participating in the implementation of the Tropical Forest Action Plan, contributed to an analysis of TFAP'S regional approach for Latin America and the Caribbean and supported an expert on ecosystem conservation for a mission to Peru. The Centro Agronomico Tropical de Investigación y Enseñanza, with UNEP support, identified projects for the national management of tropical and sub-tropical forest ecosystems in El Salvador, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua and Panama, while developing a management plan for the Rio Macho Forest Reserve in Costa Rica.

Mountain ecosystems

A project in Cajamarca, Peru, helped mobilize farmers to participate in training courses, construct buildings, form simple irrigation networks, develop afforestation schemes and establish soil and water conservation programmes, rescuing traditional Andean technologies and developing methods that could be replicated in other regions of that country and in other Andean countries. During 1987, more than 20 project counterparts received in-service training, while experts on the project gave lectures in co-operation with the University of Cajamarca. In addition, the project involved broadcasts on a local radio programme, Tierra y Pueblo, oriented towards isolated farmers in the northern Peruvian sierra.

Conservation of wildlife and protected areas

The loss of biological diversity, all of it irretrievable, was rapidly becoming one of the foremost international environmental issues. UNEP approached the problem by promoting the establishment of protected areas, encouraging Governments to apply to non-protected lands the conservation principles outlined in the 1980 World Conservation Strategy (WCS)(55) and promoting the integration of regional and national conservation strategies into national development plans.

During 1987, ECG, which included UNEP, FAO, UNESCO and IUCN, continued to review the status of implementation of WCS and national conservation strategies.

UNEP and Uganda worked together within WCS to improve that country's natural resource situation. An overview of the current state of its resource components, including wildlife, protected areas, wetlands and fisheries, was prepared in 10 volumes. Each volume discussed management of the resource and put forth recommendations for its restoration and conservation.

A Conference on Resource Conservation for Ghana's Sustainable Development (Accra, Ghana, 28-30 April) launched the preparation of a national conservation strategy. The Inuit Regional Conservation Strategy Steering Committee (Vancouver, Canada, May) reviewed progress on resource conservation in the Arctic. An International Symposium on Wildlife Management in Sub-Saharan Africa (Harare, Zimbabwe, October) adopted recommendations for conservation.

Throughout 1987, in co-operation with IUCN, UNEP continued to support the assessment of the distribution and abundance of wildlife species. UNEP support to UNESCO'S Man and the Biosphere Programme included expanding the biosphere reserve network, preparing management plans and training activities. UNEP supported and participated in the Fourth Wilderness Congress (Denver, United States, September), which emphasized the interrelationship between consideration of nature and development of natural resources.

Under the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals, agreements were being developed for European species of Chiroptera, western Palaearctic populations of Ciconia c. ciconia, western Palaearctic waterfowl and North and Baltic Sea populations of small cetaceans. Twenty-six experts and representatives from potential range states for European species of Chiroptera met (London, November) to consider the text of a draft agreement. During 1987, Mali, Tunisia and Pakistan became parties to the Convention, bringing the total membership to 25.

Co-operation under the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance Especially as Waterfowl Habitat was reviewed at a meeting of the conference of the contracting parties (Regina, Canada, May-June). UNEP and other international organizations participated with the country representatives. As at December 1987, the Convention had 45 contracting parties, and its list of wetlands of international importance included 383 sites covering about 27 million hectares. (See above.)

Genetic resources

With UNEP support, the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources in 1987 initiated a programme for an ecogeographical survey of the wild relatives and primitive cultivars of crop plants threatened with extinction in priority areas of developing countries and their collection and conservation. UNEP also continued to support the exploration, collection, evaluation and conservation of crop plant and tree genetic resources.

The regional environmental Microbiological Resources Centres (MIRCENS) in Brazil, Egypt, Guatemala, Kenya, Senegal and Thailand continued to carry out a number of UNEP-supported pilot projects for applying microbial resources in environmental management technologies. The Guatemala MIRCEN developed an environmentally sound technology for the bioconversion of potentially polluting by-products coffee processing (waste water and pulp) into biogas, animal feed and biofertilizers.

The International Microbial Strain Data Network became partially operational with the establishment of its secretariat at the Biotechnology Centre of Cambridge University. The Network comprised information nodes throughout the world, where data were held in a central directory from which scientists could locate microbial strains or cultured cell lines with specific characteristics for biotechnological applications. It also facilitated communication among microbiologists, cell biologists and other scientists world-wide.

Freshwater ecosystems

The UNEP programme for the environmentally sound management of inland waters (EMINWA) was a component of the general UNEP policy to promote sustainable development. The first priority was to help countries sharing a common river basin to develop their resources in harmony with one another. The EMINWA programme dealt with rivers, lakes and aquifers. To demonstrate its approach towards the sustainable development of basins, UNEP aimed at least one action plan towards each type of inland water system.

Preparation of an action plan for the Lake Chad Basin, the largest inland drainage basin in Africa, covering parts of Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, Niger and Nigeria, was initiated in 1987.

Action plan for Zambezi River system

One of the activities of the EMINWA programme was the formulation of an action plan for the Zambezi basin. The working group of experts on the Zambezi River system (Gabarone, Botswana, January) finalized the Zambezi Action Plan (ZACPLAN) for the Environmentally Sound Management of the Common River System. At a conference of plenipotentiaries (Harare, Zimbabwe, May) ZACPLAN was adopted by five basin countries-Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia.

On 17 June,(56) the Governing Council, noting the signature and entry into force of the Agreement on the Action Plan for the Environmentally Sound Management of the Common Zambezi River System, requested the Executive Director to start consultations with the Governments of the Zambezi basin countries, the Executive Secretary of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, organizations of the United Nations system and donor agencies regarding its implementation and the raising of funds to ensure that the implementation started before the end of 1987.

Marine ecosystems

Protection of the marine environment

In 1987, UNEP continued to carry out a global evaluation of the state of the art of coastal modelling; a review of the state of the marine environment; an assessment of the long-term ecological consequences of low-level marine contamination and a review of carcinogens and nutrients as marine pollutants. In collaboration with the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission and WMO, UNEP also examined the relationship between ocean dynamics and climate changes, particularly the impact of projected rises in sea level and temperature rise in the Mediterranean, the South Pacific, the Caribbean, the southern Asian seas, the eastern Asian seas and the South-eastern Pacific regions.

Under UNEP co-ordination and with the support of the sponsors of the Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution (GESAMP), work continued on a review of the health of the oceans. Drafts of 15 regional reports were prepared covering the Mediterranean; the south-eastern Pacific; the eastern Asian Seas; the southern Asian Seas; the Red Sea; the Caribbean; Western and central Africa; the South Pacific; eastern Africa; the Kuwait Action Plan region; the Black Sea; the south-western Atlantic; the Arctic; the Antarctic; and the North Pacific.

Through GESAMP, UNEP continued its work on the integrated global ocean monitoring programme, the first attempt to link marine biology, geology, chemistry and physical oceanography on a world-wide scale. UNEP also was working on a set of reference methods and guidelines for marine pollution studies in co-operation with the IAEA International Laboratory of Marine Radioactivity; to date, some 60 reference methods and 10 reference materials had been produced.

Shared natural resources and offshore mining

In May 1987,(57) the Executive Director updated progress made since 1985(58) on environmental co-operation concerning natural resources shared by two or more States and in the use of the conclusions of the 1981 study of the legal aspects concerning offshore mining and drilling within the limits of national jurisdiction.(59) The report was based on replies received from 14 Governments and 10 international organizations in response to requests for information.

On 18 June,(60) the Council, noting the Executive Director's report, authorized him to transmit the report to the General Assembly. It called on Governments and international organizations to take further action to implement the 1979 principles on natural resources shared by two or more States(61) and the conclusions of the 1981 study.

The General Assembly, by decision 42/445 of 11 December 1987, took note of the Secretary-General's note(62) drawing attention to the Executive Director's report.

Regional seas programme

The regional seas programme encompassed almost 120 countries and a network of some 250 national organizations in a strategy to protect coastal waters world-wide.

Mediterranean. Twelve years after the Mediterranean Action Plan (MAP) was adopted, the draft protocol on the protection of the Mediterranean Sea against pollution engendered by the exploration and exploitation of the continental shelf, the sea-bed and its sub-soil was elaborated by the secretariat and recommended by the contracting parties for review in preparation for consideration of the text by a plenipotentiary conference in 1989. A detailed MAP programme calendar for 1986-1995 was approved by the contracting parties. Selection criteria and an initial list of 100 coastal historic sites of common Mediterranean interest were prepared. The Priority Actions Programme of the UNEP Mediterranean Office had further developed its networks of projects and institutions in several areas. A regional programme on seismic zones had attracted the necessary outside financing, and programmes on aquaculture and soil erosion had been developed. The national Mediterranean pollution monitoring programmes covered 13 countries by the end of 1987. Effluent standards were adopted to prevent mercury pollution, environmental quality criteria for shellfish waters were established and guidelines were established to combat marine oil pollution.

Kuwait region. In 1987, UNEP carried out several activities with the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment (ROPME). Regional experts studied the causes of fish and dolphin mortality in ROPME sea areas and proposed remedial measures. UNEP assisted in planning and convening the ROPME workshop on coastal development (Kuwait, August); it also continued to coordinate IAEA assistance to ROPME in the intercalibration of analytical methods, marine pollution monitoring, identification of unknown halogenated hydrocarbons and a survey of mercury levels in fish and sediments. UNEP provided technical assistance to strengthen research capabilities in the region.

Caribbean. The UNEP Regional Co-ordinating Unit for the Wider Caribbean was established at Kingston, Jamaica, on 11 May 1987. As 11 Governments had ratified or acceded to the 1983 Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean and its Protocol Concerning Co-operation in Combating Oil Spills,(63) the Convention and its Protocol had entered into force on 11 October 1986. A Fourth Intergovernmental Meeting (Guadeloupe, October) identified four projects of regional significance: co-ordination and common costs; environmental management of coastal and terrestrial environments; assessment and control of marine pollution; and environmental training, education and public awareness.

West and Central Africa. The monitoring of pollution in the marine environment of western and central Africa continued to develop during 1987. Equipment, fellowship and attendance at meetings were financed for laboratories and scientists.

East Africa. Comoros, France, Kenya, Mozambique, Somalia and the United Republic of Tanzania informed UNEP during 1987 that they were in the process of ratifying or acceding to the 1985 Convention for the Protection, Management and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment and two protocols, one concerning protected areas and wild fauna and flora and the other concerning co-operation in combating marine pollution in cases of emergency(58) UNEP provided ad hoc technical advice to Mauritius, Mozambique, Somalia and the United Republic of Tanzania.

East Asian seas. A meeting of experts on the control of oil pollution in the region (Bali, Indonesia, October) reviewed existing and ongoing research, management and legislative activities. The meeting put forward 23 recommendations for oil pollution control measures. The second meeting of experts on the East Asian Seas Action Plan, held at Bangkok, Thailand, agreed that the destruction of coral reef and mangrove ecosystems was the gravest regional concern, followed by sewage and industrial and oil pollution.

