Abstaining: Honduras.

In the Sixth Committee, two other drafts on the topic were not acted upon, at the request of the respective sponsors. A draft(58) by Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey and the United Kingdom would have had the Assembly, among other things, call on States to extradite terrorists or to submit a case to their prosecuting authorities, and to apply law enforcement measures under the relevant international conventions. A draft by Zimbabwe,(59) containing provisions similar to those in the adopted text, would have had the Assembly invite States to take national measures to eliminate international terrorism and request the Secretary-General to prepare a topical summary of views expressed in the Sixth Committee's debate.

In explanation of vote, Israel, asserting that the opposition to terrorism should be unconditional, felt that the purpose of the proposed conference was to legitimize acts of terrorism on the basis of pretexts and excuses.

A number of delegations-among them Finland, on behalf also of Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden-expressed the view that paragraph 14 gave the false impression of a linkage between terrorism and the exercise of self-determination, and stressed that the legitimacy of a cause did not justify the means. Denmark, speaking on behalf of the 12 EC member States, said the right to fight for self-determination did not include the right to resort to terrorism. Canada said nothing in paragraph 14 should be interpreted as detracting from the condemnation of terrorism in paragraph 1. The United States felt the text contained references to self-determination which were gratuitous and susceptible to misinterpretation.

Australia said paragraph 14 supported the principle of self-determination exercised in accordance with the Charter, but that did not exempt national liberation movements from the restrictions imposed on terrorism. Sharing that view, New Zealand added that the conference should be held only if there was a reasonable prospect of making progress. Uruguay supported the text on the understanding that paragraph 14 could not be interpreted as justifying any act of terrorism.

Colombia regretted that the ambiguous wording of one paragraph had necessitated a vote on the whole text, thus, in its view, weakening the moral force of the united legal condemnation of terrorism.

Mongolia felt that the text should have included a provision to prevent the use of nuclear devices or installations by individuals to commit acts of terrorism.

Draft articles on non-navigational uses of international watercourses

Continuing its work on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses, ILC(18) in 1987 took up the third report of its Special Rapporteur on the topic since 1985, Stephen C. McCaffrey (United States).(60) The report contained four chapters, which reviewed the status of work on the topic; set forth general considerations on procedural rules on the use of international watercourses; proposed six draft articles on general principles of co-operation and notification; and dealt with data and information exchange, on which the Special Rapporteur intended to submit draft articles in his next report.

The draft articles, submitted in 1987 under the heading of general principles of co-operation, notification and provision for data and information, fell into two categories: article 10 covered the general obligation to co-operate, and articles 11 to 15 set out rules on notification and consultation concerning proposed uses—11 (notification concerning proposed uses), 12 (period for reply to notification), 13 (reply to notification: consultation and negotiation concerning proposed uses), 14 (effect of failure to comply with articles 11 to 13), 15 (proposed uses of utmost urgency).

On the recommendation of the Drafting Committee, ILC provisionally adopted six draft articles based on the texts considered in 1980 and 1984: 2 (scope), 3 (watercourse States), 4 (watercourse or system agreements), 5 (parties to such agreements), 6 (equitable and reasonable utilization and participation) and 7 (factors relevant to such utilization). For lack of time, the Drafting Committee did not complete consideration of article 9 (prohibition against activities with regard to an international watercourse causing appreciable harm to other watercourse States) proposed by the previous Special Rapporteur and referred to the Committee in 1984, or articles 10 to 15 referred to it in 1987.

The articles provisionally adopted in 1987 were transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in July.

In resolution 42/156 on the work of ILC, the Assembly recommended that, taking into account government comments, ILC should continue its work on the topic.

Chapter III

States and international law

With acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives continuing in various parts of the world, the General Assembly, in December 1987, again urged States to ensure their security and suggested that they take into account the guidelines prepared by the Secretary-General in reporting on those incidents (resolution 42/154).

The International Law Commission (see p. 1085) continued to elaborate a legal instrument on State liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law. However, it did not consider, in 1987, jurisdictional immunities of States and their property or the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, pending receipt from Governments in $988 of their comments on the draft articles on the respective topics, which had been provisionally adopted on first reading in 1986. Further, although it did not consider the item on State responsibility, it appointed, on 17 June 1987, Gaetano Arangio-Ruiz (Italy) Special Rapporteur for the subject. On the same day, the Commission appointed Motoo Ogiso (Japan) Special Rapporteur for the topic on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property; he succeeded Sompong Sucharitkul (Thailand) whose term of office had expired on 31 December 1986.

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomats

As at 31 December 1987, the number of parties to the various international instruments relating to the protection of diplomats and diplomatic and consular relations⁽¹⁾ was as follows: 151 States were parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations,⁽²⁾ with Dominica succeeding and Burkina Faso and Samoa acceding in 1987; 42 States were parties to the Optional Protol concerning acquisition of nationality⁽³⁾ and 52 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes.⁽³⁾

The 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations⁽⁴⁾ had 117 parties, with Dominica succeeding and the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Samoa and Vanuatu acceding in 1987; 33 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality⁽⁵⁾ and 40 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes.⁽⁵⁾

The 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents,⁽⁶⁾ had 71 States parties, China, Democratic Yemen and Japan having acceded in 1987.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General requested States, in June 1987, to submit information covering the preceding 12 months on serious violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, and on action taken to bring offenders to justice. In August, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report with later addenda,⁽⁸⁾ containing such information, as well as a list of States parties, as at 4 August 1987, to the relevant conventions (see above). Annexed to the report were guidelines, prepared by the Secretary-General at the Assembly's 1986 request,⁽⁷⁾ embodying the relevant questions for States to consider in submitting information on a particular incident.

Australia reported the arrest and pending trial of a person charged with a November 1986 bomb attack on Turkey's Consulate-General in Melbourne, in which one person was presumed killed while setting up the 4-kilogram bomb on the premises. Belgium reported that the perpetrators of a February 1987 bomb attack on the Syrian Arab Republic's Embassy in Brussels were being sought among terrorist groups.

Chile provided information on a series of incidents taking place between July 1986 and July 1987. It reported that six unidentified persons attacked its Embassy in France, using paint bombs, spray-guns and tear-gas (July 1986). In September 1986, paint was reportedly thrown at, or political slogans written on, the buildings housing: its Embassy in Norway; Consulates-General (Salta, Argentina; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil; Frankfurt and Munich, Federal Republic of Germany; Zurich, Switzerland); and the Honorary Consulate (Amsterdam, Netherlands). Similar incidents took place in 1987 against its Embassies in the United Kingdom (April), Argentina (May) and Italy (July).

Chile also reported the occupation of its Consulates-General in Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, by a group of some 35 mostly German citizens during a protest demonstration (July 1986); in Paris, by a group of 10 unidentified persons, who also put up posters and shouted political slogans (September 1986); in Barcelona (April, July, September 1986) and Madrid (July, September 1986), Spain, allegedly by members of Spanish communist youth movements; in Madrid, by Chilean and Spanish communist youths (April 1987); and in São Paulo, Brazil, by 12 Chileans and a photographer unfurling banners with anti-Chilean Government slogans (July 1987).

Further, Chile reported that explosive devices had been placed in the private car of an attache at its Mission to the international organizations at Geneva (September 1986); in its Embassy in Peru, allegedly by the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement (September 1986); behind its Embassy in Argentina (May 1987); and at the office/residence of its Honorary Consul in Cochabamba, Bolivia (June 1987). Other incidents reported by Chile included: damage to an Embassy window in the Netherlands by an object thrown during a demonstration (July 1986); fire set to the private car of its Consul-General in Paris (November 1986); and the theft of an official car in front of its Ambassador's residence in Italy (January 1987).

Denmark reported that two persons who had exploded a bomb outside the USSR Embassy in Copenhagen in September 1986 were awaiting trial. The Federal Republic of Germany reported an arson attempt against the Embassy of Peru in Bonn in June 1987. Hungary was co-operating with Interpol (International Criminal Police Organization) in search of a gunman who had hit the Ambassador of Colombia with four bullets, severely injuring him, near his residence in Budapest in January 1987.

Israel reported explosions and property damage at its Embassy in Singapore (December 1986) and at its Honorary Consulate in Honduras (January 1987), and the neutralizing of an explosive device thrown into its Legation in Athens, Greece (March 1987).

The Netherlands stated that, in January 1987, a two-month conditional imprisonment sentence had been given to an arsonist for damaging a car near the USSR Embassy in The Hague in December 1986; in May 1987, some home-made projectiles thrown by a small group of masked men had damaged windows of the Consulate-General of the Federal Republic of Germany in Amsterdam.

Sweden reported two 1986 incidents—an assault against a Swedish guard at the Legation of South Africa and shots directed at the main entrance to the Embassy of the German Democratic Republic—the apprehension of five persons for spray-painting and damaging the guardhouse at the Embassy of the United States (May 1987), and shots directed at a Malaysian diplomat's empty car, which had been parked in the space often used by the Charge d'affaires of Chile. In addition, threats by means of mail or telephone calls had been directed against 16 diplomatic or consular missions or their personnel, and nine cases of burglary or trespass had been reported.

Following a previously reported case, Pakistan stated that the individual accused in the September 1986 murder of a USSR assistant military attache in Islamabad had been sentenced to death in July 1987, and that financial compensation had been awarded to the heirs of the deceased. Turkey reported on the nationalities of two of the alleged attackers on its diplomats in 1986 incidents.

Austria, Burkina Faso, Canada, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Lesotho, Mexico, New Zealand, Poland, Qatar, Sierra Leone and the United Kingdom informed the Secretary-General that they had no serious incidents to report. Views on measures to enhance the protection of diplomatic missions and representatives were transmitted by Austria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, the General Assembly, on 7 December 1987, adopted resolution 42/154 without vote.

Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Emphasizing the important role of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as of missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, in the maintenance of international peace and the promotion of friendly relations among States, and also the need for enhancing global understanding thereof,

Convinced that respect for the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations, in particular those aimed at ensuring the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, is a basic prerequisite for the normal conduct of relations among States and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Concerned at the continued failure to respect the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, and at the serious threat presented by such violations to the maintenance of normal and peaceful international relations, which are necessary for co-operation among States,

Also concerned at the abuse of diplomatic or consular privileges and immunities, particularly if acts of violence are involved,

Alarmed by the acts of violence against diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as against representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, which endanger or take innocent lives and seriously impede the normal work of such representatives and officials,

Expressing its sympathy for the victims of such illegal acts,

Emphasizing the duty of States to take all appropriate steps, as required by international law:

(a) To protect the premises of diplomatic and consular missions, as well as of missions to international intergovernmental organizations,

(b) To prevent any attacks on diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as on representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations,

(c) To apprehend the offenders and to bring them to justice,

Noting that, in spite of the call by the General Assembly at its previous sessions, not all States have yet become parties to the relevant conventions concerning the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Welcoming the measures already taken by States in conformity with their international obligations to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Convinced that the reporting procedures established under General Assembly resolution 35/168 of 15 December 1980 and further elaborated in later Assembly resolutions are important steps in the efforts to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Welcoming the guidelines prepared by the Secretary-General embodying the relevant questions that States may wish to consider when reporting,

Desiring to maintain and further strengthen the reporting procedures,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Strongly condemns acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, and emphasizes that such acts can never be justified;

3. Emphasizes the importance of enhanced awareness throughout the world of the necessity of ensuring the protection, security and safety of such missions, representatives and officials, as well as of the role of the United Nations in this regard;

4. Urges States to observe and to implement the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations and, in particular, to take all necessary measures in conformity with their international obligations to ensure effectively the protection, security and safety of all diplomatic and consular missions and representatives officially present in territory under their jurisdiction, including practicable measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts against the security and safety of such missions and representatives;

5. Calls upon States to take all necessary measures at the national and international levels to prevent any acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, and, in accordance with national law and international treaties, to prosecute or extradite those who perpetrate such acts;

6. Recommends that States should co-operate closely through, inter alia, contacts between the diplomatic and consular missions and the receiving State, with regard to practical measures designed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and with regard to exchange of information on the circumstances of all serious violations thereof;

7. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the instruments relevant to the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

8. Calls upon States, in cases where a dispute arises in connection with a violation of the principles and rules of international law concerning the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, to make use of the means for peaceful settlement of disputes, including the good offices of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General to offer, when he deems it appropriate, his good offices to the States directly concerned;

9. Requests:

(a) All States to report to the Secretary-General as promptly as possible serious violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as missions and representatives with diplomatic status to international intergovernmental organizations;

(b) The State in which the violation took place and, to the extent possible, the State where the alleged offender is present to report to the Secretary-General as promptly as possible on measures taken to bring the offender to justice and eventually to communicate, in accordance with its laws, the final outcome of the proceedings against the offender, and to report on measures adopted with a view to preventing a repetition of such violations;

(c) The States so reporting to consider using or taking into account the guidelines prepared by the Secretary-General;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To circulate to all States, upon receipt, the reports received by him pursuant to paragraph 9 above, unless the reporting State requests otherwise;

(b) To draw the attention, when appropriate, of the States directly concerned to the reporting procedures provided for in paragraph 9 above, when a serious violation has been reported pursuant to subparagraph 9 (a) above;

(c) To address reminders to States where such violations have occurred if reports pursuant to subparagraph 9(b) above or follow-up reports pursuant to subparagraph 9(b) above have not been made within a reasonable period of time;

(d) To send, in due time before the issuance of his yearly report on the present item, a circular note to all States requesting them to indicate whether they have any such violations, as referred to in subparagraph 9 (a) above, to report for the preceding twelve months;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite States to inform him of their views with respect to any measures needed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report containing:

(a) Information on the state of ratification of, and accessions to, the instruments referred to in paragraph 7 above;

(b) The reports received and views expressed pursuant to paragraphs 9 and 11 above;

13. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session any views he may wish to express on the matters referred to in paragraph 12 above;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives: report of the Secretary-General".

State liability

The International Law Commission, at its 1987 session,⁽¹⁾ continued consideration of draft articles on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law. It had before it the second report of the Special Rapporteur on the topic, Julio Barboza (Argentina), held over from 1986,⁽²⁾ and his third report⁽³⁾ containing six draft articles dealing with the scope (article 1), use of terms (article 2), various cases of transboundary effect (article 3), liability (article 4), relationship to other international agreements (article 5) and absence of effect on other rules of international law (article 6).

In view of the extensive debate in the Commission, the Special Rapporteur expressed preference to introducing new draft articles in 1988, rather than referring the current text to the Drafting Committee. He concluded from the debate that the Commission must aim at regulating activities which had or might have transboundary physical consequences adversely affecting persons or objects, that the draft articles on the topic should not discourage development of science and technology, that the topic dealt with both prevention and reparation, and that certain general principles, such as respect for sovereignty, should apply.

The General Assembly, by resolution 42/156 adopted in December, recommended that the Commission continue its work on State liability.

Chapter IV

International organizations and international law

In 1987, the United Nations continued to emphasize the underlying need to strengthen its role in the maintenance of international peace and security, with the General Assembly calling on the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization to accord priority to that question in all its aspects in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations, in particular the Security Council (resolution 42/157).

The Assembly, having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country, urged that country, the United States, to take all necessary measures to continue to prevent criminal acts, including harassment and violations of the security of missions and the safety of their personnel or infringements of the inviolability of their property (resolution 42/210 A).

The Assembly reiterated that the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations in New York was covered by the provisions of the 1947 Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, and requested the host country to abide by its treaty obligations under the Agreement and, in that connection, to refrain from taking any action that would prevent the Observer Mission from discharging its official functions (resolution 42/210 B).

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

The Secretary-General, in his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), stated that over the past year, in the midst of continuing regional strife and economic and social hardship, countries of disparate political orientations and economic systems had begun to deal with problems of an interdependent world with a new pragmatism. That new approach could provide a promising basis for broadened multilateral co-operation and increased effectiveness of the United Nations.

The United Nations remained prey to a financial crisis of very damaging dimensions, the Secretary-General cautioned. Yet, there had been a perceptible rallying to the Organization, prompted in part by recognition that it was in serious jeopardy but, more decisively, by changes in the international political, economic and social situation which evidenced with persuasive clarity the need for, and the unique value of, the United Nations and other multilateral organizations.

The Charter of the United Nations defined the principles to be followed in gaining peace in the fullest meaning of what true peace entailed, the Secretary-General stated. What had too often been lacking was the readiness of Member States to put aside national differences and national ambitions and work together within the United Nations in accordance with those principles towards common goals. He suggested that the Security Council in the future make fuller use of possibilities available within the meaning of the Charter, including peace-keeping forces, to head off violence and facilitate the resolution of disputes before armed conflict occurred.

The Organization had thus far kept pace with global change, the Secretary-General stated. Indeed, on occasion, it had set the pace for global change. In the process, it had perhaps expanded at times beyond the limits of its managerial capacity and the availability of resources. The budgetary and administrative reforms that were under way should do much to correct existing weaknesses. In the mean time, the Organization must develop a greater capacity to associate with its global mission statesmen and scientists of the highest calibre from around the world. Such a partnership would strengthen the United Nations as a vehicle through which the intellectual resources and the practical experience of the international community could be integrated in confronting the demands of coming years.

Activities of the Special Committee

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization,⁽¹⁾ meeting in New York from 9 to 27 February 1987, continued its discussion of a number of proposals dealing with the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, along with its consideration of the maintenance of international peace and security and the rationalization of existing procedures of the United Nations, as requested by the General Assembly in 1986.(2)

The Committee's Working Group discussed a third revised version(3) of a working paper on prevention and removal of disputes and situations that might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, to which an additional paragraph was proposed by China.(4) The paper was first submitted in 1984(5) by Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, New Zealand and Spain. The Group also continued consideration of a working paper submitted in 1986(6) by Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and Poland on the role of both Member States and the United Nations in that respect.

Two other working papers were considered: one, a second revised version, on the rationalization of the existing procedures of the United Nations,(7) first submitted by France and the United Kingdom in 1985;(8) the other, on the resort to a commission of good offices, mediation or conciliation within the United Nations, submitted by Romania.(9)

In addition, the Working Group examined and took note of a report, prepared by the Secretary-General(10) in response to a 1986 Assembly request,(2) on the progress of work on the draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States.

Communications. The Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the forty-second session of the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October), by a final communication transmitted by Zimbabwe on 23 October,(11) recalled that the principles of refraining from the threat or use of force and of peaceful settlement of disputes remained central to the philosophy of peaceful coexistence advocated by non-aligned countries. It urged all non-aligned countries to adhere to and implement Security Council and Assembly decisions and fully utilize the procedures for the amicable settlement of disputes envisaged in the Charter.

Mongolia, on 24 October,(12) stated its belief that strict compliance with the Charter by all concerned was the most important condition for the strengthening of universal peace and security, and that it would continue to strive to enhance the United Nations as a unique, irreplaceable instrument of comprehensive security for all mankind.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, adopted resolution 42/157 without a vote.

Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization

Noting with satisfaction that tangible progress has been achieved in the Special Committee on the proposal concerning the resort to a commission of good offices, mediation or conciliation within the United Nations,

Mindful of the efforts made in the elaboration of a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,

Recognizing the importance that pre-session consultations among the members of the Special Committee and other interested States may have in facilitating the smooth conduct of the work of the Special Committee towards the fulfilment of its task, especially as regards the composition of the Bureau and the organization of work, mediation or conciliation within the United Nations, with a view to completing it and submitting conclusions thereon to the General Assembly at the earliest possible date;

- (ii) To examine the report of the Secretary-General on the elaboration of a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States;
4. Requests the Special Committee to keep the question of the rationalization of the procedures of the United Nations under active review;
5. Also requests the Special Committee to be mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement whenever that has significance for the outcome of its work;
6. Decides that the Special Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States, including in the meetings of its working groups;
7. Requests the Secretary-General to render all assistance to the Special Committee;
8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, on a priority basis, the preparation of a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, on the basis of the outline elaborated by the Special Committee and in the light of the views expressed in the course of the discussions in the Sixth Committee and in the Special Committee, and to report to the Special Committee at its session in 1988 on the progress of work, before submitting to it the draft handbook in its final form, with a view to its approval at a later stage;
9. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;
10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

Host country relations

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country continued to consider in 1987 various aspects of relations between the United Nations diplomatic community and the United States, the host country. Summaries of discussions held at six meetings between March and November and summaries of communications from Member States on the security of their missions were contained in the Committee's report to the General Assembly. (1)

In March, April and July, the Committee resumed consideration of a demand by the host country for a reduction in the combined staff size of the permanent missions of the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR to 170 permanently assigned personnel (150 for the USSR and 10 each for the others) by 1 April 1988.⁽²⁾ Citing the 1986 Assembly resolution⁽³⁾ that had urged the parties concerned to hold consultations with a view to reaching solutions, the USSR stated that it was awaiting a response to its declared willingness to carry out consultations with the host country, with the participation of the Secretary-General or his representative. The United States advised that, on several occasions, it had indicated to the USSR its readiness to discuss implementation of the reductions in a co-operative manner with a minimum of disruption, but would not negotiate concerning the level of reductions it had called for, maintaining that the large size of the Soviet missions was not warranted for the conduct of official United Nations business and that its call for a more reasonable size, based on its determination to protect its national security, had been taken after careful consideration.

In October, Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) drew the Committee's attention to a proposed legislation pending in the United States Senate rendering it unlawful for PLO to maintain office premises or other facilities in New York. In this connection, it referred to a 29 January 1987 letter from the Secretary of State to the Senate, noting that: the PLO Observer Mission had been established as a consequence of a 1974 Assembly resolution,⁽⁴⁾ which had invited PLO to participate as an observer in the Assembly sessions and work; the Observer Mission represented PLO at the United Nations, was in no sense accredited to the United States, and its personnel were in the United States solely in their capacity as invitees of the United Nations within the meaning of the 1947 Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations (Headquarters Agreement).⁽⁵⁾ More importantly, the letter recognized that the United States was under an obligation to permit such personnel to enter and remain in the United States to carry out their official functions at the United Nations. The Legal Counsel noted that that opinion was shared by the Organization.

The United States made clear that its Executive Branch held the position that closing the PLO Observer Mission would violate United States obligations under the Charter and the Headquarters Agreement. In the Committee's opinion as expressed by the Chairman, that position was what governed the issue. PLO and the United States shared the hope, unanimously expressed in the Committee, that the proposal before the Senate would not become law.

Complaints by PLO, Afghanistan and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya about host country delays in granting entry visas for their observers and representatives were also considered. To the PLO suggestion that either the waiting period be reduced or multiple-entry visas be issued, the United States responded that single-entry visas for PLO observers were mandated by the relevant statute and United States security considerations that were not likely to change. The United States reiterated that a period of 10 to 15 working days for the issuance of a visa was not excessive, but that action could be expedited in medical or other emergency cases. It assured the Committee that it would look into alleged denials of visas to any United Nations invitees.

Other matters brought before the Committee included: exemption from taxes; the possibility of establishing a commissary at United Nations Headquarters for the diplomatic community; housing for diplomatic personnel and Secretariat staff; public relations of the United Nations community in the host city; and the responsibility of permanent missions in resolving their financial indebtedness, which, according to the host country, amounted to more than $2 million, owed to United States property owners, hospitals, doctors, hotels, banks, service stations, contractors and other suppliers of essential goods and services.

In addition, Singapore, on 30 September, (6) complained of a series of incidents of disrespectful treatment of the head and the alternate head of its delegation to the 1987 Assembly session by United States security agents. Cyprus, on 14 October, drew attention to difficulties created by the same source regarding access to the Headquarters building during the visit of the United States President to the United Nations.

By recommendations and conclusions approved on 20 November, the Committee, among other things, urged the host country to continue taking all measures necessary to prevent criminal acts violating the security of missions and safety of their personnel, or inviolability of their property; renewed its request to the parties concerned, in response to the request and action by the host country to reduce the size of their missions, to follow consultations with a view to reaching solutions in accordance with the Headquarters Agreement; called on the host country to avoid actions not consistent with effectively meeting its obligations in accordance with international law in relation to the privileges and immunities of Member States, including those relevant to their participation in the work of the United Nations; called on the missions to co-operate fully with federal and local United States authorities in cases affecting the security of missions and their personnel; suggested that the Secretariat and others work together to solve outstanding difficulties concerning the unpaid bills of certain missions; and stressed the importance of a positive perception of the Organization's work.

Communications. On 12 October 1987,(7) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on behalf of the Arab Group, protested against United States Senate Bill No. 940, which sought to amend the law concerning the powers of accreditation of Ministries of Foreign Affairs. It regarded the Bill as a hostile act against the Palestinian people, as running counter to the process of establishing a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, as a violation of the freedom of expression of Arab parties and Arab-Americans and, if adopted, as a contradiction of the Headquarters Agreement. It requested the Secretary-General to approach the parties concerned in order to clarify the United Nations position and ensure observance of the Headquarters Agreement and of the Organization's rights.

Further, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 14 December,(8) protested the host country's persistence in imposing restrictions on the official use of the residence of the Libyan head of mission at Englewood, New Jersey. It requested implementation of the provisions of the Headquarters Agreement concerning recourse to international arbitration to resolve the

On 17 December 1987, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted two resolutions on the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country. The first, resolution 42/210A, was adopted without vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations,

Recalling further that the problems related to the privileges and immunities of all missions accredited to the United Nations, the security of the missions and the safety of their personnel are of great importance and concern to Member States, as well as the primary responsibility of the host country,

Noting with deep concern the continued acts violating the security and the safety of the personnel of the missions accredited to the United Nations,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Considering further the issues raised by certain States Members of the United Nations in response to the request and to action by the host country to reduce the size of their missions;

Conscious of the increased interest shown by Member States in participating in the work of the Committee,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 83 of its report;

2. Strongly condemns any criminal acts violating the security of missions accredited to the United Nations and the safety of their personnel;

3. Urges the host country to take all necessary measures to continue to prevent criminal acts, including harassment and violations of the security of mission; and the safety of their Personnel or infringements of the inviolability of their property, in order to ensure the existence and functioning of all missions, including practicable measures to prohibit illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts and activities against the security and safety of such missions and representatives;

4. Renews its request to the host country and the Member States that raised the issues in response to the request and to action by the host country to reduce the size of their missions to follow consultations with a view to reaching solutions to this matter, in accordance with the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations;

5. Stresses the importance of a positive perception of the work of the United Nations, expresses concern about a negative public image and, therefore, urges that efforts be continued to build up public awareness by explaining, through all available means, the importance of the role played by the United Nations and the missions accredited to it in the strengthening of international peace and security;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country and to continue to stress the importance of effective measures to avoid acts of terrorism, violence and harassment against the missions and their personnel, as well as the need for any pertinent legislation adopted by the host country to be in accord with the Headquarters Agreement and its other relevant obligations;

7. Decides to consider at its forty-third session the question of the composition of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country;

8. Requests the Committee on Relations with the Host Country to continue its work, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

General Assembly resolution 42/210 A

17 December 1987 Meeting 98 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/42/878) without vote, 11 December (meeting 62); draft by Cyprus (A/C.6/42/L.23); agenda item 136.

Resolution 42/210 B was adopted by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and its relevant provisions,

Guided also by the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, of 26 June 1947,

Taking note of the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Having been apprised of the action being considered in the host country, the United States of America, which might impede the maintenance of facilities of the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations in New York, which enables it to discharge its official functions,

Recalling its resolutions 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and 3375(XXX) of 10 November 1975,

Taking note with appreciation of the Secretary-General's position on the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations, as described in the statement of 22 October 1987, which reads: "The members of the Palestine Liberation Organization Observer Mission are, by virtue of resolution 3237(XXIX), invitees to the United Nations. As such, they are covered by sections 11, 12 and 13 of the Headquarters Agreement of 26 June 1947. There is therefore a treaty obligation on the host country to permit Palestine Liberation Organization Observer Mission personnel to enter and remain in the United States to carry out their official functions at United Nations Headquarters."

1. Reiterates that the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations in New York is covered by the provisions of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations and should be enabled to establish and maintain premises and adequate functional facilities, and that the personnel of the Mission should be enabled to enter and remain in the United States to carry out their official functions;

2. Requests the host country to abide by its treaty obligations under the Agreement and in this connection to refrain from taking any action that would prevent the discharge of the official functions of the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take effective measures to ensure full respect for the Agreement and to report, without delay, to the General Assembly on any further development in this matter;

4. Decides to keep this matter under active review.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte D'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Israel reiterated that PLO was a terrorist organization, which, by the terms of its covenant and continued actions of terror, remained committed to the destruction of Israel, a State Member of the United Nations; PLO had no place in or outside the Organization.

Denmark, on behalf of the 12 States members of the European Community, said they fully shared the view previously expressed by the host country's Secretary of State and upheld by the Legal Counsel that the United States was under an obligation to permit PLO Observer Mission personnel to enter and remain in the United States to carry out their official functions at United Nations Headquarters. Singapore also shared that view.

Canada voted affirmatively out of concern that the measures being contemplated by the legislative branch of the host Government would set a dangerous precedent for the status of observer missions, which had come to be accepted as a useful means of enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations. The USSR called on the host country to comply with its obligations under the Charter and the Headquarters Agreement, and to ensure the inviolability and normal conditions of operation of the PLO Observer Mission.

The United States did not participate in the vote because it was unnecessary and inappropriate, since the resolution addressed a matter still under consideration within the United States Government.

PLO said Israel had again singled itself out, as it had in every kind of violation of all kinds of laws and conventions; in this case, it had again repeated its position of violating, disrespecting and acting out of contempt. It noted that 145 Member States had reiterated that the Headquarters Agreement covered PLO and asked the Secretary-General to ensure full respect for that Agreement, of which he was the custodian.

On 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 42/460, decided to retain on the agenda for its resumed forty-second session a number of items, including the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country.

Chapter V

Treaties and agreements

In 1987, the Secretariat continued its depositary functions for bilateral and multilateral agreements deposited with the Secretary-General. Also during the year, 13 States and 10 international organizations signed or ratified the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations, while the International Law Commission continued its discussion of relations between States and international organizations.

Treaties involving international organizations

The 1986 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations⁽¹⁾ was signed by an additional 13 States and 10 international organizations and ratified by Austria and Senegal during 1987.⁽²⁾

Relations between States and international organizations

In 1987, the International Law Commission (ILC)⁽³⁾ had before it the third report of its Special Rapporteur, Leonardo Díaz-González (Venezuela), on relations between States and international organizations (second part of the topic).⁽⁴⁾ Also before it was a Secretariat document setting out the replies received from international organizations to a questionnaire concerning their status, privileges and immunities.⁽⁵⁾ The first part (dealing with the status, privileges and immunities of representatives of States to international organizations) had been completed in 1975 with the adoption of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character. ⁽⁶⁾

The third report analysed the 1985 debates on the topic in the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee and in ILC, drawing a number of conclusions. It also included a schematic outline of the subject-matter to be covered by the draft articles to be prepared. ILC held an exchange of views on such aspects as the scope of the future draft, the relevance of the outline submitted and the methodology to be followed. It requested the Special Rapporteur to continue his study in accordance with the guidelines laid out in the outline and in the light of the opinions expressed on the topic at the current ILC session.

Registration and publication of treaties by the United Nations

During 1987, some 20 international agreements and subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 293 registrations of formalities concerning agreements for which the Secretary-General performs depositary functions.

The texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded are published in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages, with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1987, the following volumes of the Treaty Series covering treaties registered or filed in 1978, 1979 and 1980 were issued:

International economic law

Legal aspects of international economic relations continued to be considered in 1987 by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee.

After more than 15 years of work, UNCITRAL submitted to the General Assembly, in 1987, the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes. In December, the Assembly requested States to submit their observations on the draft Convention for consideration by a Sixth Committee working group in 1988 (resolution 42/153). In addition, the Assembly took note of the completion by UNCITRAL of the Legal Guide on Drawing Up International Contracts for the Construction of Industrial Works (42/152), and recommended that an appropriate forum in the Sixth Committee should complete the elaboration of the process of codification and progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order (42/149).

Topic related to this chapter. Development policy and international economic co-operation: proposed new international economic order.

General aspects

Report of UNCITRAL

The twentieth session of UNCITRAL (Vienna, 20 July-14 August 1987)(1) focused on the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes; the draft Legal Guide on Drawing Up International Contracts for the Construction of Industrial Works, as part of its work relating to the new international economic order; the status of conventions resulting from its previous work; and its programmes of training and assistance. The Commission also took note of reports on a number of topics, without holding a substantive debate on them: draft articles of uniform rules on the liability of operators of transport terminals, as dealt with by its Working Group on International Contract Practices in 1986;(2) the work of international organizations on the legal implications of automatic data processing, as reported by the Secretary-

General;(3) and a secretariat report on its preparatory work on international procurement.(4)

In discussing its draft medium-term plan for 1990-1995, the Commission agreed that increased priority should be given to efforts by the secretariat to promote the adoption and use of the texts prepared by UNCITRAL, and that means be found to collect and disseminate information on the interpretation given by courts and arbitral tribunals to UNCITRAL conventions as they came into force.

As in previous years, UNCITRAL's report was forwarded to the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for comments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 42/152 without vote.

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twentieth session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic co-operation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Having regard for the need to take into account the different social and legal systems in harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Stressing the value of participation by States at all levels of economic development, including developing countries, in the process of harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twentieth session,

Considering that legally sound, balanced and equitable international contracts for the construction of industrial works are important for all countries,

Being of the opinion that the Legal Guide on Drawing Up International Contracts for the Construction of Industrial Works adopted by the Commission at its twentieth session, which identifies the legal issues to be dealt with in such contracts and suggests solutions to those issues, will be helpful to all parties in concluding such contracts,

Noting that the Convention on the Limitation Period in the International Sale of Goods, of 14 June 1974, will come into force upon the deposit of one additional ratification or accession,

Being aware that the United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea, of 31 March 1978, was prepared at the request of developing countries,

Being convinced that widespread adherence to the conventions emanating from the work of the Commission would benefit the peoples of all States,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twentieth session;

2. Commends the Commission for the progress made in its work and for having reached decisions by consensus;

3. Calls upon the Commission to continue to take account of the relevant provisions of the resolutions concerning the new international economic order, as adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions;

4. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to co-ordinate legal activities in this field in order to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law, and, in this connection, recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, should continue to maintain close co-operation with the other international organs and organizations, including regional organizations, active in the field of international trade law;

5. Reaffirms also the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with training and assistance in the field of international trade law and the desirability for it to sponsor seminars and symposia, in particular those organized on a regional basis, to promote such training and assistance, and, in this connection:

(a) Expresses its appreciation to those regional organizations and institutions which have collaborated with the secretariat of the Commission in organizing regional seminars and symposia in the field of international trade law;

(b) Welcomes the initiatives being undertaken by the Commission and its secretariat to collaborate with other organizations and institutions in the organization of regional seminars;

(c) Invites Governments, international organizations and institutions to assist the secretariat of the Commission in financing and organizing regional seminars and symposia, in particular in developing countries;

(d) Invites Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations, institutions and individuals to make voluntary contributions to allow the resumption of the programme of the Commission for the award of fellowships on a regular basis to candidates from developing countries to enable them to participate in such seminars and symposia;

6. Takes note with appreciation of the completion by the Commission of the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes;

7. Notes with particular satisfaction the completion and adoption by the Commission of the Legal Guide on Drawing Up International Contracts for the Construction of Industrial Works;

8. Recommends that all efforts should be made so that the Legal Guide becomes generally known and available;

9. Invites those States which have not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the following conventions:

(a) Convention on the Limitation Period in the International Sale of Goods, of 14 June 1974;

(b) Protocol amending the Convention on the Limitation Period in the International Sale of Goods, of 11 April 1980;

(c) United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea, of 31 March 1978;

(d) United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods, of 11 April 1980;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to make increased efforts to promote the adoption and use of the texts emanating from the work of the Commission and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a report concerning the status of the conventions;

11. Recommends that the Commission should continue its work on the topics included in its programme of work;

12. Expresses its appreciation for the important role played by the International Trade Law Branch of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, as the substantive secretariat of the Commission, in assisting in the structuring and implementation of the work programme of the Commission, and invites the Secretary-General to consider taking whatever measures may be necessary, within existing resources, to provide the Commission with adequate substantive secretariat support.

International trade law

In 1987, UNCITRAL completed and submitted to the General Assembly the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes, and began preparing model rules on electronic funds transfers. In December, the Assembly decided that, in 1988, a Sixth Committee working group would consider observations and proposals made by States on the draft Convention.

Draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes

The Commission adopted in 1987(1) the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes, which had been prepared from 1972 to 1987 and considered at sessions of the UNCITRAL Working Group on International Negotiable Instruments. The Commission had decided in 1971(2) to proceed with preparing uniform rules applicable to a special negotiable instrument for optional use in international transactions so as to overcome the divergencies resulting from two main existing systems of law governing negotiable instruments.

The draft Convention comprised 91 articles in nine chapters dealing with the sphere of application and form of the instrument; interpretation; transfer; rights and liabilities; presentment, dishonour by non-acceptance or non-payment, and recourse; discharge; lost instruments; limitation (prescription); and final provisions. The Secretary-General was designated as the depositary for the Convention.

The Commission's adoption of the draft instrument followed a review of the 1987 work of its Working Group (fifteenth session, New York, 17-27 February),(3) comments of Governments and international organizations on the draft, and the work of its drafting group. On 14 August, the Commission agreed by consensus to submit the draft Convention to the General Assembly for adoption or any other action to be taken. At the time of the Commission's action, France stated that its joining the consensus did not prejudice its position on the future of the draft Convention; in its view, the text contained shortcomings and would have adverse consequences for States not wishing to accede to the new system to be established.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 42/153 by recorded vote.

Draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with the object of promoting the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade,

Reaffirming its conviction that divergencies arising from the laws of different States in matters relating to international trade constitute one of the obstacles to the development of world trade,

Being aware that the Commission, at its fourth session in 1971, decided to proceed with work directed towards the preparation of uniform rules applicable to a special negotiable instrument for optional use in international transactions in order to overcome the divergencies arising out of the existence of two main systems of law governing negotiable instruments,

Recalling that, in its resolution 41/77 of 3 December 1986, it requested the Commission to complete, at its twentieth session, the work on the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes and decided to consider the draft Convention during its forty-second session with a view to its adoption or other appropriate action,

Taking note of the draft Convention adopted by the Commission at its twentieth session,

Recognizing that Governments should be given sufficient time to study the draft Convention,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the work achieved by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law in the preparation of the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to draw the attention of all States to the draft Convention, to ask them to submit the observations and proposals they wish to make on the draft Convention before 30 April 1988 and to circulate these observations and proposals to all Member States before 30 June 1988;

3. Decides to consider, at its forty-third session, the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes, with a view to its adoption at that session, and to create to this end, in the framework of the Sixth Committee, a working group that will meet for a maximum period of two weeks at the beginning of the session, in order to consider the observations and proposals made by States.

7 December 1987 Meeting 94 114-0-40 (recorded vote)

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/42/836) by vote (80-0-46), 25 November (meeting 58); 2-nation draft (A/C.6/42/L.15), amended by 17 nations (A/C.6/42/L.21); agenda item 132.

Sponsors of draft: Egypt, Rwanda.

Sponsors of amendments: Brazil, Burkina Faso, Central African Republic, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, France, Guinea, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Niger, Portugal, Rwanda, Senegal, Spain, Togo.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 6th Committee 3-6, 55, 58; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Iraq, Italy, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Barbados, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Samoa, Singapore, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Viet Nam.

The text approved by the Sixth Committee incorporated a number of amendments to the original draft, which had been submitted by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Cyprus, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United States.

The amendment to the fifth preambular paragraph, approved by 66 votes to 33, with 20 abstentions, replaced the original wording, "Taking note of the unanimous adoption of the draft Convention by the Commission at its twentieth session". The insertion of paragraph 2 was approved by 71 votes to 33, with 19 abstentions; and, by 68 votes to 36, with 20 abstentions, paragraph 3, by which the Assembly would have decided to consider and adopt the Convention at its forty-third session and to open it for signature on 1 January 1989, was replaced.

Rejecting the amendments, Australia and Austria felt that the draft Convention, which the Commission had adopted by consensus, had been extensively discussed and refined, that comments by Governments had been requested twice in 1982 and 1986 and that creating a working group had financial implications for Governments and the United Nations. The Netherlands shared these views, as did the United Kingdom, which upheld the rights of States to sign a convention. The USSR and the United States, also noting the financial implications of a working group, asserted that Governments had been given ample opportunity to comment on the draft Convention and that all States had the right to decide whether or not to sign it.

Following adoption of the amendments, the original sponsors withdrew their sponsorship; the amended text was then sponsored by Egypt and Rwanda.

Electronic funds transfers

After completing work on the draft Convention on bills of exchange and promissory notes (see p. 1081), the UNCITRAL Working Group on International Negotiable Instruments—which was renamed the Working Group on International Payments—began preparing model rules on electronic funds transfers sixteenth session, Vienna, 2-13 November 1987). ¶(4) In entrusting the Working Group with that task, UNCITRAL, in 1986,(5) had decided that the model rules should be flexible and not dependent on specific technology, accommodate differences in banking systems, and deal with the relationship between banks as well as that between banks and their customers.

As suggested by UNCITRAL, the Group began its work by considering a list of legal issues set forth in the final chapter of the UNCITRAL Legal Guide on Electronic Funds Transfers,(5) and considered the scope of application; definitions and general provisions; obligations of parties; error, fraud and liability; and finality. The Group requested the secretariat to prepare draft provisions based on the discussions, and recommended that its next session be held in New York in July 1988.

Training and assistance

UNCITRAL continued to co-operate and participate in seminars and symposia on international trade law. It organized a symposium in co-operation with the Latin American Federation of Banks (Mexico City, 1-3 June) and provided three interns with training in the UNCITRAL secretariat.

It was noted, in the discussion in conjunction with UNCITRAL'S 1990-1995 medium-term plan, that training and assistance should receive a higher priority than previously and that efforts should be made to obtain a regular budget allocation, or financing from other extrabudgetary sources, for such activities.

In resolution 42/152, the General Assembly reaffirmed the importance of such training and assistance and called for contributions to help finance seminars and symposia, particularly in developing countries.

Legal aspects of the new international economic order

In its continuing consideration of the legal aspects of the new international economic order (see also p. 378), the General Assembly welcomed UNCITRAL'S adoption in 1987 of the Legal Guide on Drawing Up International Contracts for the Construction of Industrial Works, and recommended that the Sixth Committee complete the elaboration of the process of codification and progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order.

Construction of industrial works

On 14 August 1987, UNCITRAL adopted the Legal Guide on Drawing Up International Contracts for the Construction of Industrial Works,(1) which had been prepared by its Working Group on the New International Economic Order. The Group, established in 1978 and composed of all UNCITRAL members, had discussed relevant issues, before requesting the secretariat in 1982, in accordance with a 1981 Commission decision,(2) to commence drafting a legal guide; the Group had worked on the draft during its fourth (1983) to eighth (1986) sessions.

The Guide was intended to identify the legal issues involved in contracts for the supply and construction of large industrial works, and to assist the parties, in particular those from developing countries, in their negotiations. In recommending the draft Guide for adoption by the Commission, the Working Group, at its ninth session (New York, 30 March-16 April 1987),(3) stressed the importance of the Guide's widespread and timely distribution and also recommended that the Commission consider the possibility of revising the Guide in the future.

The Guide comprised 29 chapters, divided in two parts dealing, respectively, with matters arising before the contract was prepared, and the drawing up of specific provisions. The chapters covered: pre-contract studies; choice of contracting approach; selection of contractor and conclusion of contract; general remarks on drafting; description of works and quality guarantee; transfer of technology; price and payment conditions; supply of equipment and materials; construction on site; consulting engineer; subcontracting; inspections and tests during manufacture and construction; completion, take-over and acceptance; passing of risk; transfer of ownership of property; insurance; security for performance; delay, defects and other failures to perform; liquidated damages and penalty clauses; damages; exemption clauses; hardship clauses; variation clauses; suspension of construction; termination of contract; supplies of spare parts and services after construction; transfer of contractual rights and obligations; choice of law; and settlement of disputes. The Guide also contained an analytical index.

The General Assembly, in resolution 42/152, noting with satisfaction UNCITRAL's adoption of the Guide, recommended its wide dissemination.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an August 1987 report with later addenda,(4) the Secretary-General transmitted the views of seven Member States on the 1984 study by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) on the progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order.(5)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 42/149 by recorded vote.

Progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the General Assembly is called upon to initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also its resolutions 34/150 of 17 December 1979 and 35/166 of 15 December 1980, entitled "Consolidation and progressive development of the principles and norms of international economic law relating in particular to the legal aspects of the new international economic order", and its resolutions 36/107 of 10 December 1981, 37/103 of 16 December 1982, 38/128 of 19 December 1983, 39/75 of 13 December 1984, 40/67 of 11 December 1985 and 41/73 of 3 December 1986, entitled "Progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order",

Bearing in mind the urgent need to adopt measures to reactivate the process of international economic co-operation and the negotiations undertaken for that purpose, particularly in view of the economic difficulties encountered by the developing countries,

Considering the close link between the establishment of a just and equitable international economic order and the existence of an appropriate legal framework,

Recognizing the need for the codification and progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order,

Recalling the analytical study submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,

1. Notes with appreciation the views and comments submitted by Governments pursuant to resolutions 40/67 and 41/73;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to seek proposals of Member States concerning the most appropriate procedures to be adopted with regard to the consideration of the analytical study, as well as the codification and progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order;

(b) To include the proposals received in accordance with subparagraph (a) above in a report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

3. Recommends- that the task of completing the elaboration of the process of codification and progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order should be undertaken in an appropriate forum within the framework of the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order”.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Introducing the draft, the Philippines said the sponsors would have preferred a more specific approach but they had been flexible in order to be non-controversial; the revised draft represented modest progress in the Sixth Committee's work. Explaining its abstention, Canada considered the recommendation in paragraph 3 to be neither desirable nor possible since it was premature to try to codify the topic while the international community had not agreed on the main principles applicable in that area. Similarly, Denmark, speaking on behalf of the 12 member States of the European Economic Community, said the UNITAR study had shown that the legal principles and norms relating to the topic had not been sufficiently identified or accepted to be codified. Japan also considered the penultimate preambular paragraph and paragraphs 2 and 3 inappropriate. The United States stated that if there was to be any progressive development of the principles, it was crucial to have political agreement.

Chapter VII

Other legal questions

Work on the progressive development and codification of international law continued in the International Law Commission (ILC), which held its thirty-ninth session at Geneva from 4 May to 17 July 1987; its 34 members commenced a new five-year term of office on 1 January. In December, the General Assembly recommended that the Commission carry on working on all the topics in its current programme (resolution 42/156).

The twenty-third session of the International Law Seminar was also held at Geneva. Other seminars and training courses were offered as part of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law. The Assembly urged all potential donors to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme (42/148).

International Law Commission

Starting a five-year cycle of membership, ILC (thirty-ninth session, Geneva, 4 May-17 July)(1) had on its agenda for 1987 the same topics it had considered in recent years. It also set a tentative work programme for the cycle (see below).

The Commission again took up the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind (see p. 1058), the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses (see p. 1065), international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law (see p. 1070) and relations between States and international organizations (second part of the topic) (see p. 1077). The Secretary-General subsequently transmitted to the General Assembly the draft articles provisionally adopted by ILC in 1987, on the first two topics.(2)

The Commission did not consider, however, the topics of jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, and State responsibility (see p. 1067).

The Commission held 52 public meetings; in addition, its Drafting Committee held 39 meetings, the Enlarged Bureau of the Commission, 3, and the Bureau's Planning Group, 11.

ILC continued to co-operate with the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the European Committee on Legal Co-operation and the Inter-American Juridical Committee.

In accordance with an annual Assembly request, the Secretariat prepared for ILC's attention a topical summary of the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee discussion in 1986(3) and 1987(4) on the ILC report for the corresponding year.

On 13 March 1987,(5) Sweden, transmitting its comments on the 1986 report of ILC,(6) hoped they might help shorten the Sixth Committee's time-consuming debate on ILC's work.

ILC work programme and working methods

On the basis of recommendations of the Planning Group of its Enlarged Bureau, the Commission, on 17 July, expressed its views on the planning of activities, work methods, the duration of its session and documentation.

Having ascertained from Special Rapporteurs their work plans on respective topics, the Commission concluded that it would endeavour to complete, in the course of the five-year term (1987-1991), the second reading of the draft articles on two topics—the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier (1988) and jurisdictional immunities of States and their property (1989)—provided that written comments from Governments were available on time. It would also try to complete by 1991 the first reading of the draft articles on the Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind and on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses, and would try to make substantial progress in other topics on its work programme. As to the possibility of staggering the consideration of some topics, as suggested by the Assembly in 1986,(7) the Commission felt that decisions in that respect could best be taken on a year-to-year basis.

The Commission, taking into account the recommendations of the Working Group on Methods of Work which its Planning Group had established at the current session, also expressed its views on the working conditions, composition and measures to facilitate the work of the Drafting Committee. It reiterated that the nature of its task and the magnitude and complexity of the topics on its agenda made it essential that its annual sessions continued to run for 12 weeks, if it was to abide by its proposed work plan. As timely distribution of the reports of Special Rapporteurs was indispensable for a systematic and meaningful consideration of topics, the Commission said it would not discuss reports made available less than two weeks prior to a session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly, on 7 December 1987, adopted resolution 42/156 without vote.

Report of the International Law Commission The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirty-ninth session,

Emphasizing the need for the progressive development of international law and its codification in order to make it a more effective means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and to give increased importance to its role in relations among States,

Recognizing the importance of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics that might be submitted to the International Law Commission, and of enabling the Sixth Committee and the Commission further to enhance their contributions to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling the need to keep under review those topics of international law which, given their new or renewed interest for the contemporary international community, may be suitable for the progressive development and codification of international law and therefore may be included in the future programme of work of the International Law Commission,

Considering that experience has demonstrated the usefulness of structuring the debate on the report of the International Law Commission in the Sixth Committee in such a manner that conditions are provided for concentrated attention on each of the main topics dealt with in the report, and that this process is facilitated when the Commission indicates specific issues on which expressions of views by Governments are of particular interest for the continuation of its work,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirty-ninth session;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the International Law Commission for the work accomplished at that session;

3. Recommends that, taking into account the comments of Governments, whether in writing or expressed orally in debates in the General Assembly, the International Law Commission should continue its work on the topics in its current programme, bearing in mind the desirability of reaching the goals indicated in paragraph 232 of its report;

4. Expresses its satisfaction with the establishment within the International Law Commission, in order to increase its effectiveness, of a Working Group on Methods of Work, and with the conclusions and intentions of the Commission concerning its procedures and methods of work, as set forth in chapter VI, section D of its report;

5. Requests the International Law Commission:

(a) To keep under review the planning of its activities for the term of office of its members, bearing in mind the desirability of achieving as much progress as possible in the preparation of draft articles on specific topics;

(b) To consider further its methods of work in all their aspects, bearing in mind that the staggering of the consideration of some topics might contribute to the attainment of the goals referred to in paragraph 3 above and also to a more effective consideration of its report in the Sixth Committee;

(c) To indicate in its annual report, for each topic, those specific issues on which expressions of views by Governments, either in the Sixth Committee or in written form, would be of particular interest for the continuation of its work;

6. Recommends the continuation of efforts to improve the ways in which the report of the International Law Commission is considered in the Sixth Committee, with a view to providing effective guidance for the Commission in its work, and to this end decides that the Sixth Committee shall hold consultations at the commencement of the forty-third session of the General Assembly, including, inter alia, consultations on the question of establishing a working group, the character and mandate of which are to be determined, to meet during the debate on the report of the International Law Commission in order to allow for a concentrated discussion on one or more of the topics on the agenda of the Commission;

7. Takes note of the comments of the International Law Commission on the question of the duration of its session, as presented in paragraph 243 of its report, and expresses the view that the requirements of the work for the progressive development of international law and its codification and the magnitude and complexity of the subjects on the agenda of the Commission make it desirable that the usual duration of its sessions be maintained;

8. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning the increased role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and those concerning the summary records and other documentation of the International Law Commission;

9. Urges Governments and, as appropriate, international organizations to respond in writing as fully and expeditiously as possible to the requests of the International Law Commission for comments, observations and replies to questionnaires and for materials on topics in its programme of work;

10. Further urges Governments to give full attention to the request of the International Law Commission, transmitted through the Secretary-General, for comments and observations before 1 January 1988 on the draft articles on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property and on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, adopted on first reading by the Commission;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to update in a timely manner the "Survey of International Law" of 1971(8) and to make the updated version available to the International Law Commission, and to bear in mind the desirability of updating it every five years thereafter;

12. Reaffirms its wish that the International Law Commission continue to enhance its co-operation with intergovernmental legal bodies whose work is of interest for the progressive development of international law and its codification;

13. Expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with the sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the opportunity to attend those seminars, and appeals to States that can do so to make the voluntary contributions that are urgently needed for the holding of the seminars;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the debate on the report of the Commission at the forty-second session of the General Assembly and to prepare and distribute a topical summary of the debate.

UN Programme for the teaching and study of international law

International Law Seminar

The twenty-third session of the International Law Seminar-for postgraduate students and junior professors or government officials dealing with international law-was held at Geneva from 1 to 19 June 1987, with 23 participants, of different nationalities and mostly from developing countries; one observer also attended. The participants attended ILC meetings and lectures organized for them. Argentina, Austria, Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Sweden made voluntary financial contributions, thus allowing 15 participants from developing countries to receive fellowships. Since 1964, fellowships had been awarded to 255 of the 518 participants, representing 121 nationalities.

The General Assembly appealed for voluntary contributions to the seminars in resolutions 42/148 and 42/156.

Other activities

A number of additional training courses were offered in 1987 as part of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law⁽⁹⁾ (see also p. 1079). Under the annual joint United Nations-United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) fellowship programme, 18 middle-grade governmental legal officers and young teachers of international law attended courses at the Hague Academy of International Law (Netherlands), along with seminars organized by UNITAR. Several fellows also received practical training at legal offices of the United Nations and related organizations.

In 1987, the second award of the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea was made; no financial contributions were received in 1987 (see p. 111).

In response to a 1985 Assembly request⁽¹⁰⁾ for recommendations on executing the Programme in 1988 and 1989, the Secretary-General suggested that all ongoing activities be continued.⁽⁹⁾ As regards the United Nations—UNITAR fellowship programme, he suggested that in addition to a minimum of 15 fellowships awarded each year under the United Nations regular budget, more might be awarded from the Trust Fund of the Programme, subject to the status of voluntary contributions. He also advised caution in allocating sums from the Trust Fund to finance the Programme's administration and other expenses and urged maximum use of existing resources of the Organization in view of its financial crisis. He also reported on the administrative and financial implications of United Nations participation in the Programme, for 1986-1987 and 1988-1989.

The Secretary-General, in an October note to the Sixth Committee,⁽¹¹⁾ made suggestions based on past practice on procedures for appointing the new membership of the Advisory Committee on the Programme for 1 January 1988 to 31 December 1991. The Advisory Committee held its twenty-second session on 28 October 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/148 without vote.

United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law

The General Assembly,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law and the recommendations made by the Secretary-General and adopted by the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, which are contained in that report,

Considering that international law should occupy an appropriate place in the teaching of legal disciplines at all universities,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by States at the bilateral level to provide assistance in the teaching and study of international law,

Convinced, nevertheless, that States and international organizations and institutions should be encouraged to give further support to the Programme and to increase their activities to promote the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, in particular those activities which are of special benefit to persons from developing countries,

Recalling its resolutions 2464(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2550(XXIV) of 12 December 1969, 2838(XXVI) of 18 December 1971, 3106(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, 3502(XXX) of 15 December 1975, 32/146 of 16 December 1977, 36/108 of 10 December 1981 and 38/129 of 19 December 1983, in which it stated that in the conduct of the Programme it was desirable to use as far as possible the resources and facilities made available by Member States, international organizations and others, as well as its resolutions 34/144 of 17 December 1979 and 40/66 of 11 December 1985, in which it also expressed the hope that, in appointing lecturers for the seminars to be held within the framework of the fellowship programme in international law sponsored jointly by the United Nations and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, account would be taken of the need to secure representation of major legal systems and balance among various geographical regions,

1. Approves the recommendations of the Secretary-General contained in section III of his report, on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, in particular those designed to achieve the best possible results in the administration of the Programme within a policy of maximum financial restraint;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to carry out in 1988 and 1989 the activities specified in his report, including the provision of:

(a) A minimum of fifteen fellowships each in 1988 and 1989, at the request of Governments of developing countries;

(b) A minimum of one scholarship each in 1988 and 1989 under the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, subject to the availability of new voluntary contributions made specifically to the fellowship fund;

(c) Assistance in the form of a travel grant for one participant from each developing country who will be invited to the regional courses to be organized in 1988 and 1989;

and to finance the above activities from provisions in the regular budget, when appropriate, as well as from voluntary financial contributions earmarked for each of the activities concerned, which would be received as a result of the requests set out in paragraphs 10, 11 and 12 below;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his constructive efforts to promote training and assistance in international law within the framework of the Programme in 1986 and 1987, in particular for the organization of the twenty-second and twenty-third sessions of the International Law Seminar, held at Geneva from 20 May to 6 June 1986 and from 1 to 19 June 1987, respectively, and for the participation of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and its Codification Division in the conduct of the fellowship programme in international law sponsored jointly by the United Nations and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, as well as for the activities related to the award of the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for its participation in the Programme, particularly for its efforts in the organization of regional courses and in the administration and organization of the fellowship programme in international law jointly sponsored and conducted by the United Nations and the Institute;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for its participation in the Programme, in particular for the efforts it has made to support the teaching of international law;

6. Also expresses its appreciation to the Government of Thailand for its willingness to co-sponsor the regional training and refresher course for Asian and Pacific countries, held at Bangkok from 24 November to 4 December 1986, and to the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific for providing facilities for the course;

7. Further expresses its appreciation to the Hague Academy of International Law for the valuable contributions it has made to the Programme by enabling international law fellows under the sponsorship of the United Nations and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to attend its annual international law courses and by providing facilities for seminars organized under the fellowship programme in international law in conjunction with the Academy courses, and for its constructive efforts in organizing the regional training and refresher courses held at Buenos Aires in 1986 and at Beijing in 1987;

8. Notes with appreciation the contributions made by the Hague Academy of International Law to the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, and calls upon Member States and interested organizations to give favourable consideration to the appeal of the Academy for a continuation of, and, if possible, an increase in their financial contributions in order to enable the Academy to carry on with the above-mentioned activities;

9. Urges all Governments to encourage the inclusion of courses on international law in the programmes of legal studies offered at institutions of higher learning;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to publicize the Programme and periodically to invite Member States, universities, philanthropic foundations and other interested national and international institutions and organizations, as well as individuals, to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme or otherwise to assist in its implementation and possible expansion;

11. Reiterates its request to Member States and to interested organizations and individuals to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme, in particular for the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea and for the International Law Seminar, and expresses its appreciation to those Member States, institutions and individuals that have made voluntary contributions for this purpose;

12. Urges in particular all Governments to make voluntary contributions with a view to covering the amount needed for the financing of the daily subsistence allowance for up to twenty-five participants in each regional course organized by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, thus alleviating the burden on prospective host countries and making it possible for the Institute to continue to organize the regional courses;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the Programme during 1988 and 1989 and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, to submit recommendations regarding the execution of the Programme in subsequent years;

14. Decides to appoint the following thirteen Member States as members of the Advisory Committee for a period of four years beginning on 1 January 1988: Bangladesh, Cyprus, France, Ghana, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, the Netherlands, Romania, Turkey, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Venezuela and Zaire;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law".

Administrative and budgetary questions

United Nations financing

The General Assembly adopted a number of resolutions in 1987 relating to the financing of the United Nations. Chief among them was the approval of the final budget appropriations in the amount of $1,711,801,200 for the 1986-1987 biennium, together with the final income estimates of $304,745,100 (42/213 A and B); the initial 1988-1989 programme budget containing appropriations of $1,769,586,300 and income estimates of $337,330,200 (42/226 A and B); and the specifications for the financing of the appropriations for 1988 (42/226 C).

The continuing financial crisis of the Organization and the economy measures undertaken to alleviate it were the subject of reports by the Secretary-General. Responding to his appeal for the restoration of the Organization's financial soundness and to measures he had recommended in anticipation of a possible funding shortfall in 1988, the Assembly called on all Member States, in fulfilment of their obligation under the Charter of the United Nations, to pay all their assessed contributions in full and on time (42/212); it established the Working Capital Fund for 1988-1989 at the $100 million level (42/228); and authorized the Secretary-General to meet, under specified limitations, unforeseen and extraordinary expenses arising during or subsequent to the biennium (42/227).

The status of the reform measures recommended by the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18), as endorsed by the Assembly in 1986, was also reported on by the Secretary-General. Reiterating that the reform process must not have an adverse effect on mandated activities and programmes, the Assembly stressed the imperative of dispelling the current financial uncertainties for the reform process to be successful (42/211).

In addition, the Assembly considered the inclusion of a contingency fund in the programme budget, in accordance with the new budget process approved in 1986; it approved the guidelines for such a fund (42/211) and decided to consider in 1988 the question of the fund in the context of the second year of the 1988-1989 biennium (42/225, section VIII).

The Committee on Contributions continued work on the methodology for drawing up the scale of assessments for 1989/1991. The Assembly requested the Committee to recommend to it in 1988 a scale for those years based on the current methodology, but to continue working on an improved methodology for future scales (42/208).

Of the $1,014,139,938 million in contributions to the United Nations regular budget payable as at 1 January, $660,709,117 were collected from Member States by 31 December 1987, leaving $353.4 million outstanding. Assessments for 1987 totalled $756.3 million, while $257.8 million related to previous years.

The accounts and financial statements for either the year or the biennium ending 31 December 1986 of six United Nations development and humanitarian assistance programmes were accepted by the Assembly, along with the audit opinions by the United Nations Board of Auditors (42/206).

Financial situation

In his report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General stated that the proposed programme budget for the 1988-1989 biennium reflected a number of austerity measures. A rigorous programme-by-programme review had been launched in order to identify specific functions where post reductions could best be accommodated. Secretariat structures in the political area had been streamlined and more effectively organized, and a review of the economic and social sectors was under way.

The necessary prolongation of austerity measures, including the freeze on staff recruitment and restrictions on meetings, had an adverse effect on programme implementation and on the staff, although the Secretary-General had sought to minimize both. With the staff reductions, significant financial savings to the regular budget would be realized; at the same time, those reductions could, in themselves, require special allocations of funds and some additional resources would be needed to strengthen the Secretariat.

The financial crisis which made the austerity measures necessary and encouraged the reforms in progress stemmed from more profound causes than dissatisfaction with the Organization's administrative efficiency; deep-seated political differences gave rise to a turning away in some quarters from multilateralism and to the rejection by some Member States of adopted programmes. That had led to the withholding of assessed contributions which, in combination with late payment of assessments, brought about the current crisis. There had been, however, indications of a renewed recognition of the importance of the United Nations in facing global problems; the major contributor had reaffirmed the binding nature of budgetary assessments decided by the General Assembly, and many Member States had demonstrated their faith in the value of the United Nations by providing financial assistance, some beyond their assessed contributions, in response to the Organization's acute need.

In the light of those developments, the Secretary-General looked forward to the early restoration of the Organization's financial soundness which, however, had not yet occurred. There was as yet no assurance that payment of assessed contributions would meet the minimum austerity operating expenses. Orderly administrative management was seriously handicapped when there was uncertainty as to the receipt of a significant portion of the regular programme budget. The reforms under way would do much to bring about an efficient organization in which Member States could have confidence.

The essentially political roots of the financial crisis and the call for reform must both be reflected in the solutions, the Secretary-General stated in his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations;(1) implementation of the 1986 Group of 18 recommendations (see below) was only one dimension of the necessary action. To enable an institution made up of sovereign States with varying national interests to function more effectively, Member Governments must define with clarity the issues to be collectively addressed in the coming decades.

Financial crisis

On 14 September 1987, at its resumed forty-first (1986) session, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its forty-second (1987) session items on the current financial crisis of the United Nations (decision 41/466 B) and on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations (decision 41/471).

Communications. The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 developing countries, by a declaration adopted at their eleventh annual meeting (New York, 28 September-1 October 1987),(2) expressed deep concern over the ongoing financial crisis of the United Nations as a reflection of attempts to undermine multilateralism which, they said, endangered the Organization's ability to fulfil the purposes for which it was created; they urged Member States to comply with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular those related to their financial obligations.

Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 General Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October), in a final communique transmitted by Zimbabwe on 23 October,(3) considered that the crisis confronting the Organization had its origins in the erosion of the commitment to the Charter principles and deplored the withholding of assessed contributions aimed at altering the Organization's basic character and purpose. They noted the need to implement the 1986 resolution on the review of the United Nations administrative and financial functioning(4) in a timely, orderly, integrated and well co-ordinated fashion that would take into account the developing countries' interests so as not to jeopardize the development-oriented programmes and activities.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In May 1987,(5) the Secretary-General reported on implementation of economy measures, with particular attention to their programmatic implications (see Chapter II of this section). He stated that the savings achieved in 1986 due to economy measures totalled $82.7 million, or $15.8 million more than originally foreseen.(6) The largest components of that total were savings realized under the following items of expenditure: salaries and common staff costs—approximately $37.1 million ($9.5 million more than originally planned due to a higher-than-expected rate of separations and to the recruitment freeze); major alteration, maintenance and construction—$15 million; supplies, furniture and equipment—$10.3 million; general operating expenses—$7.4 million, or some $6 million more than anticipated, of which over half had been realized under utilities and about one fourth ($1.6 million) under rental and maintenance of premises. Further savings were achieved in the areas of travel ($6.3 million), contractual services ($3.2 million) and consultants ($2.3 million), with savings in the consultant and travel accounts exceeding those forecast by approximately $1 million net.

On 1 December 1987,(7) the Secretary-General stated his grave concern about the continuing financial crisis and on funding prospects for 1988. He pointed out that, of the total 1987 budget assessments of $756 million, $279.2 million (36.9 per cent) remained unpaid as at 16 November. Cumulative unpaid assessments amounted to $456.4 million, of which $342.8 million was owed by one Member State, which had advised that it would pay $90 million shortly.

Reserves, defined for this purpose as the Working Capital Fund (see below) and the Special Account and totalling $203 million, were exhausted.

Should the timing and amount of payments in 1988 be similar to those of 1987, cash depletion must be anticipated in August 1988, notwithstanding an extremely tight budget proposed for 1988-1989; even if all 1988 assessments were paid in full, cash depletion could not be avoided unless those assessments, or substantial arrears, were also paid early in the year. Reductions in expenditures of a magnitude to sustain the Organization's bare solvency would inevitably result in an intolerable disruption of programmes mandated by Member States and of the staff and structure of the United Nations itself.

The Secretary-General expected that the economy measures implemented during the current biennium would reduce expenditures by some $113.6 million by the end of 1987, or by about 7.8 per cent of the net revised appropriations (excluding staff assessment) of $1,450.5 million; that amount excluded a balance of $18 million which, although not disbursed in 1986/87, was to be transferred to the construction-in-progress account in December 1987. The estimated reductions, together with the absorption of the effects of inflation and currency exchange fluctuations in 1987, more than met the original reduction target of $146 million net.

As in 1986, the biggest part of the 1987 reductions had been effected in salaries and staff-related expenditures. The reductions were achieved through a freeze on recruitment and deferrals of cost-of-living adjustments, as well as reductions in overtime, staff travel and the use of consultants (see Chapter III of this section). Reductions were also achieved by curtailing contractual services by more than 22 per cent, general operating expenses by almost 10 per cent, and supplies, furniture and equipment by more than 36 per cent. Major construction projects and alterations of about $25 million were not carried out or were deferred.

Summing up his observations, the Secretary-General stressed that the only solution to the financial crisis was the payment by all Member States of their assessed contributions in full and on time; experience in that regard, however, had been disappointing. He expected that the Organization would enter 1988 with cash to meet barely two weeks of commitments, unless additional income was forthcoming in December. Accordingly, he requested Member States able to do so to make advance payments on their estimated 1988 assessments and urged all Members to pay their 1988 assessments in January or as early as possible thereafter.

Facing a possible funding shortfall in 1988, including a projected cash depletion by August 1988, he felt obliged to request the Assembly to increase the Working Capital Fund by $100 million to a level of $200 million, effective 1 January 1988, to bring the Fund to the level identified in 1981 as that required to meet the estimated cash shortages (see below); to authorize him, should the Working Capital Fund prove inadequate, to resort to commercial borrowing in the open market up to an amount of $50 million, pending the receipt of contributions; and also to authorize him to issue certificates of indebtedness in the amounts of the arrears, secured by an assignment of those accounts receivable and repayable without interest upon payment of the arrears in full. Such certificates of indebtedness would be open to subscription by Member States and international entities and would, in fact, constitute borrowing from Member States.

The Secretary-General emphasized that the United Nations must enjoy financial stability for it to serve effectively the social, economic and political needs of the world of today and of the next century; to that end, the Charter prescribed that the Assembly must consider and approve the Organization's budget and decide the scale of assessments according to which each Member should pay its portion of the expenses. The fundamental requirement for financial stability remained for Members to pay their assessments fully, promptly and predictably, as a basic, unaltering obligation of membership. In accordance with that obligation and in the interest of a strong world organization, it was essential that all arrears be paid and that assessments for 1988 to cover the budget agreed on by the Assembly be met in full and in a timely fashion; without those steps, the financial crisis that placed the future of the United Nations in jeopardy could not be overcome, nor could the Organization's political, institutional and financial viability be assured.

The Secretary-General's November report on the financial emergency⁽⁸⁾ estimated the combined short-term deficit projected to 31 December 1987 at $351.6 million. The report reviewed the practices of other United Nations organizations for achieving prompt and full payment of assessed contributions, including advancing the dispatch date of assessment letters; following up with reminders; issuing quarterly or more frequent reports to Member States on the status of contributions; and personal solicitations by senior personnel. A number of organizations offered incentives for prompt payment, while two imposed penalties (charging interest, forfeiture of voting rights at meetings and conferences) for late payment. As to the United Nations, the Assembly in 1981⁽⁹⁾ and 1985⁽¹⁰⁾ had considered a range of options to alleviate the Organization's financial difficulties, but had decided not to pursue the question of, inter alia incentive or penalty schemes, as the system's experience with such schemes did not provide a basis for evaluating their effectiveness.

The report also showed an estimated $59.6 million as the maximum amount expected to be realized as a result of the suspension of the provisions of regulations 4.3, 4.4 and 5.2 (d) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations in respect of surpluses existing at the end of 1972 and of the 1980-1985 period.

CPC consideration. Following consideration of the Secretary-General's May report, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC)(11) expressed concern that implementation of the economy measures had adverse effects on the delivery of certain programmes, but noted that the exact nature of those effects would not be fully known until completion of the programme performance report for 1986-1987. CPC welcomed the Secretary-General's initiative to seek the guidance of relevant intergovernmental bodies when programme adjustments appeared necessary. It was proposed that the Assembly should give precise guidance to the Secretary-General on how to cope with the continued financial crisis; to that end, it was further proposed that he report in 1988 to the Assembly, through CPC and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), on measures that could enhance his management of the crisis in a structured way.

ACC action. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), on 11 November 1987,(12) asked its Chairman to address the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee at the current General Assembly session, on the basis of a statement it had approved on 23 October. By the statement, ACC, noting that the current financial situation facing the majority of the organizations of the United Nations system was unprecedented, said it threatened the foundation of multilateral co-operation. The system operated on the basis of the constitutional obligations of Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time. Violation of this principle rendered programme delivery and the effective management of operations and finances extremely difficult, even impossible. The main factor was the substantial shortfall in payment of assessed contributions by a major contributor—a problem that the United Nations and most other organizations of the system faced, aggravated by the delayed payment of contributions by a number of other contributors.

ACC concluded that the current situation had disrupted the system's work and output. Of particular concern was the serious impact on programme and budgetary planning, made extremely difficult by the great uncertainty as to how much and when payments would be received, if at all.

Programme adjustments not only had reduced finite output under regular programmes but had also caused the decline of backstopping services to technical co-operation activities. Also, uncertainty had had an impact on staff, no less than on programmes. Far more than diminishing levels of emoluments, or deteriorating conditions of service, staff morale had been undermined by a widespread feeling that there was an attempt to resolve current financial difficulties through the erosion of staff entitlements by applying criteria other than those commonly accepted for their determination.,

ACABQ action. ACABQ(13) examined the Secretary-General's May report on implementation of economy measures and their programme implications, in connection with its review of the proposed programme budget for the 1988-1989 biennium (see below). Its findings led ACABQ to emphasize its recommendation on the need to refine programme presentation by identifying elements and outputs to be financed from the regular budget and those to be totally or partially financed from extrabudgetary resources. The refinements would also facilitate the monitoring of budget and programme implementation. For example, ACABQ observed, it was unable to discern from the Secretary-General's report which postponements were due solely to the financial crisis and which to other developments, including to non-receipt of extrabudgetary funding.

ACABQ(14) noted the main points made by the Secretary-General in his December report on the current financial crisis and funding prospects for 1988. His representatives, who met with ACABQ, updated information to 3 December 1987 with respect to the 1987 budget assessments and cumulative assessments that remained unpaid.

While sharing the Secretary-General's concern over the gravity of the crisis and concurring with him on its ultimate long-term solution, ACABQ recommended against increasing the Working Capital Fund (see below). It continued to believe that borrowing in the open market was not prudent, reiterating that it would involve what could be substantial interest payments and thus impose additional burdens on all Member States. ACABQ had no objection in principle to the issue of certificates of indebtedness, on the understanding that it would be on a one-time voluntary basis, that it would not entail additional cost to the regular budget, and that, after consultations with Member States and other potential subscribers, the actual amount and modalities would be established with prior ACABQ concurrence.

On 8 December, commenting on the Secretary-General's report on the financial emergency before the Fifth Committee, ACABQ(15) observed that it was not clear from the report whether there was a definite proposal that the specific financial regulations it had cited should be suspended in respect of any regular budget surpluses existing at the end of the 1986-1987 biennium. In view of the situation described by the Secretary-General, however, ACABQ recommended that those regulations should indeed be suspended for that biennium, adding that, should the situation with respect to unpaid assessments improve, the Assembly could at that time decide on the disposition of the amounts held in suspense.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/212 without vote.

Current financial crisis of the United Nations

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and, in particular, Article 17,

Recalling also its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

Deeply concerned about the current financial crisis, caused by the non-fulfilment by some Member States of their obligations under the Charter, which threatens the financial solvency, stability and work of the Organization,

Reaffirming the need for a durable, reliable and lasting financial foundation for the Organization, in accordance with the Charter,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the current financial crisis of the United Nations and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking note also of the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee on the current financial crisis of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms the obligation of all Member States, under the Charter of the United Nations, to finance the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly, and calls upon them to pay all their assessed contributions in full and in a timely manner;

2. Concurs with the recommendations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report on the current financial crisis of the United Nations;

3. Requests the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with the Secretary-General and the chairmen of the regional groups, to keep under consideration the possibility of resuming the forty-second session of the Assembly, at an appropriate moment in 1988, to address the financial situation of the Organization;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to communicate to all Member States the latest information on the magnitude of the current financial crisis facing the Organization and, taking into account the views of Member States on the financial situation of the Organization, to prepare a summary of those views together with an updated report on the financial situation of the Organization, for the consideration of the General Assembly.

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/909) without vote, 19 December (meeting 67); draft by Zimbabwe for non-aligned countries (A/C.5/42/L.21), orally revised; agenda item 43.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 12, 14-21, 23-25, 56, 57, 59-61, 65-67; plenary 99.

Also on 21 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 42/216 A without vote.

Financial emergency

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 3049 A (XXVII) of 19 December 1972, 3538 (XXX) of 17 December 1975, 32/104 of 14 December 1977, 35/113 of 10 December 1980, 36/116 B of 10 December 1981, 37/13 of 16 November 1982, 38/228 B of 20 December 1983, 39/239 B of 18 December 1984, 40/241 A and B of 18 December 1985 and 41/204 A of 11 December 1986,

Mindful of the report of the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations and of the views expressed by Member States thereon in the Fifth Committee at the thirty-second session of the General Assembly,

Reiterating earlier appeals to Member States, without prejudice to their position of principle, to make voluntary contributions to the Special Account referred to in annex VI to the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations,

Noting with concern that the short-term deficit of the Organization, although marginally reduced during the year, is expected to exceed $350 million as at 31 December 1987,

Concerned at the increasingly precarious financial situation of peace-keeping operations and its adverse impact on troop contributors, in particular on developing-country troop contributors,

Noting also with concern that delays and partial payment of assessed contributions continue to create serious cash-flow problems for the Organization,

Considering the possibility that for many Member States administrative considerations, including a calendar difference between the national fiscal year and that of the Organization, may be contributory factors in the delay in the payment of assessed contributions,

Taking into account the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee during the forty-second session,

1. Reaffirms its commitment to seek a comprehensive and generally acceptable solution to the financial problems of the United Nations, based on the principle of the collective financial responsibility of Member States and in strict compliance with the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Urges all Member States to meet their financial obligations under the Charter;

3. Renews its appeal to all Member States to make their best efforts to overcome constraints to the prompt payment early each year of full assessed contributions and of advances to the Working Capital Fund;

4. Expresses its appreciation to all Member States that pay their assessed contributions in full within thirty days of the receipt of the Secretary-General's communication, in accordance with regulation 5.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in addition to sending his official communications to the permanent representatives of Member States, to approach, as and when appropriate, the Governments of Member States for the purpose of encouraging expeditious payment in full of assessed contributions, in compliance with regulation 5.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

6. Invites Member States also to provide, in response to the Secretary-General's official communication and consistent with regulation 5.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, information regarding their expected pattern of payments, in order to facilitate the financial planning by the Secretary-General;

7. Requests the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations to keep the financial situation of the Organization under review and to report, as and when appropriate, to the General Assembly;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session detailed information relating to the extent, rate of increase and composition of the deficit of the Organization, the pattern of payments of Member States, the cash-flow situation and voluntary contributions received from Member States and other sources pursuant to Assembly resolutions 2053 A (XX) of 15 December 1965 and 3049 A (XXVII) of 19 December 1972;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to update, as necessary, the information provided in his report on the practices of other organizations of the United Nations system for achieving prompt and full payment of assessed contributions and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

10. Decides to suspend the provisions of regulations 4.3, 4.4 and 5.2 (d) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations in respect of surpluses arising at the end of the financial period 1986-1987;

11. Decides also that should the situation regarding unpaid assessments improve in the future the General Assembly would, at that time, decide on the return to Member States of the amounts held in suspense (or portion thereof);

12. Decides further to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Financial emergency of the United Nations".

General Assembly resolution 42/216 A

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/882) without vote, 19 December (meeting 67); lo-nation draft (A/C.5/42/L.25), orally amended by Yemen and German Democratic Republic and orally revised; agenda item 117.

Sponsors: Canada, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Morocco, Norway, Pakistan, Sweden.

By decision 42/460 of 21 December, the Assembly decided to retain the item on the current financial crisis on the agenda of its 1987 session.

Implementation of the 1986 recommendations of the Group of 18

The Secretary-General stated (see p. 12) that the 1986 General Assembly resolution on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations⁽⁴⁾ was a step that could signify a major turning-point for the Organization. By that resolution, the Assembly had decided that the Group of 18 recommendations should be implemented subject to certain considerations. As mentioned in his progress report to CPC earlier in the year, the objectives put forward by the Assembly in that resolution could be achieved only if Member States and the United Nations Secretariat together faced their responsibilities. The reforms under implementation would do much to bring about the efficient organization in which Member States could have confidence.

Communications. The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 developing countries, by a declaration adopted at their eleventh annual meeting (New York, 28 September-1 October 1987,⁽²⁾ emphasized the need for a balanced, timely and co-ordinated implementation of the 1986 Assembly resolution at the intergovernmental and Secretariat levels, taking into account the interests of developing countries in order not to jeopardize development-oriented programmes and activities, or pre-empt the decisions that the Assembly would take, based on the recommendations of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XXIII).

The Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, by a 15 December communiqué,⁽¹⁶⁾ expressed the conviction of the non-aligned and other developing countries that any reform process must aim at strengthening the Organization and be carried out without affecting programme delivery, particularly of programmes oriented towards the development of developing countries. All the reform elements must be carried out in a consistent and integrated manner within the established framework and timetable. Financial matters, issues related to the contents, operations and patterns of application of the proposed contingency fund, and the treatment of castings deriving from inflation and currency fluctuations (see below) deserved more detailed analysis by all Member States. The Bureau emphasized that the practice of withholding assessed contributions from the regular United Nations budget must cease, as the continuing financial uncertainty and atmosphere of perpetual crisis negated the reform efforts.

Reports of Secretary-General. In his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General outlined the reform measures that had been set in motion to implement the 1986 General Assembly resolution⁽⁴⁾ approving the Group of 18 recommendations to improve the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations. The 71 recommendations contained in the Group's 1986 report⁽¹⁷⁾ could be considered as falling into two broad, interlinked categories: those entailing structural reviews, leading to streamlining and rationalization; and those concerned with personnel and administrative matters, ranging from reduction in the number of posts to specific budgetary and administrative concerns.

To give the comprehensive programme of reforms the special impetus and careful preparation it clearly required, the Secretary-General appointed, in September 1986, a Special Co-ordinator, assisted by a small team of officials, to work in close co-operation with the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and with the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management. With the reform process well under way, the Special Co-ordinator's office was being disbanded; follow-up actions would be taken through normal channels, with the key responsibility assigned to the Under-Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General stated that probably the most important proposal in the area of administration and finance was contained in recommendation 32,⁽¹⁸⁾ which called for bringing together all Secretariat activities relating to programme planning and budgeting within a coherent structure. Accordingly, on 1 March 1987, he established an Office for Programme Planning, Budgeting, Monitoring and Evaluation in the Department of Administration and Management (see Chapter II of this section). He had also taken prompt action on the other related recommendations aimed at: simplifying the structure of the administrative and support services; reducing duplication of effort; strengthening lines of authority and suppressing hierarchical layers; and containing costs in relation to posts, travel and the hiring of consultants.

The simplification of procedures was to be addressed so as to shorten lines of communication, reduce processing delays and delegate authority, while at the same time ensuring adequate accountability and control. Changes in work methods would concentrate on further computerization and use of technological innovations. In that connection, it was proposed to improve the Department of Administration and Management, as well as executive offices of the other departments and the regional commissions. The initial phase would review the Department's overall effectiveness and efficiency, including its structure and major components, processes, roles and responsibilities, staffing levels and costs; the succeeding phase would address the development of an overall framework for administrative and financial systems, designed to ensure the availability to decision-makers of accurate and timely information, proper support for key operations and functions, and maximum utilization of available technology.

The Secretary-General observed that the current broad reforms had to be undertaken, not only to increase cost-effectiveness and rationalize the utilization of resources, but also to strengthen the United Nations. Despite difficulties and the short time that had elapsed since the adoption of the 1986 resolution, considerable advances had been made with regard to action already taken and those planned. Key changes had been introduced in the administrative section, most importantly (but not exclusively) through the merging of the programming and budgeting functions, with other changes to follow.

Other reform measures taken were in response to the call for post reductions and for alleviating the "top-heaviness" of the staffing structure (see Chapter III of this section), restructuring and rationalizing the political sector, the economic and social sectors (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL, QUESTIONS, Chapter XXIII), public information activities (see p. 354) and conference services (see Chapter IV of this section). Noting that the larger framework of the programme planning and budgeting process assured the rational and planned implementation of the reform process, the Secretary-General stated that the revised estimates for the 1988-1989 programme budget, together with the 1990-1991 budget, would reflect some of the results that had thus far emanated from the process.

CPC and ACABQ consideration. CPC⁽¹¹⁾ endorsed the Secretary-General's general approach in that improvements in the administrative and financial functioning of the Organization should be designed to make it more responsive to the increasingly complex global problems and better prepared to face future challenges. It agreed that the Secretary-General should continue with the reform process in an effective and orderly manner in accordance with the 1986 Assembly resolution, ensuring, however, that reforms did not have a negative impact on programmes. It further agreed that there must be an end to the current financial uncertainties and that, therefore, Member States should fulfil their financial obligations in accordance with the Charter.

ACABQ, in October,(19) pointed out that in the coming months the pace of reform should accelerate and that, in addition to such further organizational changes as the Secretary-General might deem necessary, work should be completed on the post reduction exercise (see Chapter III of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/211 without vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/213

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that measures to improve the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and to improve the planning, programming and budgeting process should aim at and contribute to strengthening the effectiveness of the Organization in dealing with political, economic and social issues, in order better to achieve the purposes of and respect for the principles set out in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also that all Member States must honour, promptly and in full, their financial obligations as set out in the Charter,

Emphasizing that the financial stability of the Organization will facilitate the orderly, balanced and well co-ordinated implementation of resolution 41/213 in all its parts,

Recognizing that the implementation of resolution 41/213 by all concerned—the Secretary-General, Member States and intergovernmental bodies—is a continuing process,

Recalling the relevant parts of its resolutions 37/234 of 21 December 1982 and 38/227 A and B of 20 December 1983,

Taking into account its resolutions 42/170 and 42/207 C of 11 December 1987,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General,

Having considered also the relevant parts of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-seventh session and of the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking into account the views expressed by Member States during the consideration of this item at the forty-second session,

1. Calls upon Member States to demonstrate their commitment to the United Nations by, inter alia, meeting their financial obligations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Stresses that, in order to carry out successfully the process of reform and restructuring, it is essential that the present financial uncertainties be dispelled;

3. Reiterates its support for the Secretary-General in the fulfilment of his responsibilities as chief administrative officer of the Organization;

4. Reiterates also that the implementation of its resolution 41/213 must not have an adverse effect on mandated activities and programmes;

5. Stresses the importance of the timely and successful completion of the in-depth study of the intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields being undertaken by the Economic and Social Council, as mandated by the General Assembly in section I, paragraph 1 (e), of its resolution 41/213, and reaffirms its resolution 42/170, in particular paragraphs 3 and 4 thereof;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in implementing those recommendations contained in its resolution 41/213 for which he has responsibility, to take into account the reviews, studies and decisions entrusted to the intergovernmental bodies and invites him to co-operate with those bodies as required;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in implementing those recommendations contained in its resolution 41/213 which are within his purview, to seek the approval of the General Assembly for a departure from the approved recommendations;

8. Stresses the importance of the revised estimates for the biennium 1988-1989 that the Secretary-General will submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General, in preparing those revised estimates, to reflect the state of implementation of the relevant provisions of resolution 41/213;

9. Notes that the implementation by the Secretary-General of certain recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/213, is not in accordance with the decisions of the Assembly;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in implementing further recommendations 5, 15, 19, 25, 29 and 37 of the Group, and particularly when preparing revised estimates for the biennium 1988-1989 and proposals for revision of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989, to take into account the following guidelines:

(a) Regarding recommendation 5, the General Assembly takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and invites him to proceed as necessary on both already approved projects in accordance with the provision of section I, paragraph 1 (a), of resolution 41/213, on the understanding that no additional appropriation will be required in that regard for the biennium 1988-1989;

(b) Regarding recommendation 15, on the reduction of posts in the United Nations, the Assembly stresses the importance that it attaches to the submission by the Secretary-General to the Assembly of his plans for the implementation of this recommendation in accordance with the provisions of section I, paragraph 1 (b), of resolution 41/213, and reiterates its conclusion that the Secretary-General should implement this recommendation with flexibility in order to avoid, inter alia, negative impact on programmes and on the structure and composition of the Secretariat, bearing in mind the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity of the staff, with due regard to equitable geographical distribution;

(c) Regarding the implementation of recommendation 19, on activities relating to Namibia, the Secretary-General is invited to implement this recommendation in consultation with the United Nations Council for Namibia;

(d) The Secretary-General is invited to consider the location of the functions related to liaison with non-governmental organizations in the context of the implementation of recommendation 25; the Secretary-General is further invited to review his decisions on this matter in the context of the decisions to be taken by the Economic and Social Council on the intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields, as they will pertain to the functioning and servicing of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations;

(e) Regarding recommendation 29, the Secretary-General is invited to review his decisions in the light of the debate of the Fifth Committee at the forty-second session and to reflect the results of that review in his revised estimates;

(f) Regarding recommendation 37, the General Assembly takes note of the additional information provided by the Secretary-General with regard to the reform in the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat; stresses that such reform should fully respect the mandated programme of work of the Department as detailed in section 27 of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989; takes note of the assurances by the Secretary-General in that respect, including those provided in writing; requests the Secretary-General to complete the thorough review of the functions, working methods and policies of the Department of Public Information and the review of the functions and activities of the United Nations information centres called for under recommendation 37, as a matter of priority; and further requests the Secretary-General to reflect in his revised estimates the findings of those reviews, the concerns expressed by Member States at the forty-second session and the above-mentioned assurances, when finalizing the reform and work programme of the Department of Public Information;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, a progress report on the state of implementation of resolution 41/213;

12. Concurs with the relevant observations and recommendations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report;

13. Approves the guidelines for the contingency fund as annexed to the present resolution;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, proposals for provisional procedures for the use and operation of the contingency fund based on the above-mentioned guidelines;

15. Decides to review the procedures for the use and operation of the contingency fund in the light of experience gained, no later than at its forty-seventh session;

16. Also decides to consider at its forty-third session the question of a comprehensive solution to the problem of all additional expenditures, including those deriving from inflation and currency fluctuations, on the basis of the reports to be submitted by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

17. Reaffirms the relevant provisions of resolution 41/213 concerning the role and mandate of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

18. Decides that the date for submission of the outline of the programme budget shall be 15 August of the off-budget year.

ANNEX Contingency fund

A. Criteria for use of the contingency fund

The contingency fund should be used for the following:

- (a) Additional resources that may be required as a result of the consideration of statements of programme budget implications;
- (b) Revised estimates in respect of:
 - (i) Amounts required over and above the estimates in the proposed programme budget for activities which had been included in the proposed programme budget but which were not acted upon at first reading pending the submission of additional information;
 - (ii) Additional requirements for construction related only to changes in the scope of the projects which are so urgent that the matter cannot wait to be considered in the context of the budget outline; additional requirements related to cost increases should be handled under provisions for dealing with inflation and currency fluctuations; similarly, additional requirements related to the effects of natural disasters or unforeseen obstacles should be handled on an ad hoc basis and should not be covered by the contingency fund;
 - (iii) Additional requirements resulting from legislative mandates, such as those resulting from the decisions of the Economic and Social Council.

B. Period covered and pattern of use of the contingency fund

1. The fund covers additional expenditures relating to the biennium which are based on decisions taken in the year preceding the biennium and during the biennium.

2. While prudent use of the fund requires that it should not be exhausted before the end of the period of use, no pre-determined proportion for a given year should be set, pending review of the question, in the light of experience with the actual operation of the fund.

C. Operation of the contingency fund

1. In the off-budget year, the General Assembly would decide on the size of the fund in accordance with the provisions of annex I to its resolution 41/213.

2. Starting with the budget year (i.e., the year before the commencement of the biennium) and continuing throughout the biennium, the General Assembly would decide on the actual amounts to be utilized from the fund on the basis of statements of programme budget implications and proposals for revised estimates.

3. Each statement of programme budget implications and each proposal for revised estimates should contain a precise indication of how the alternatives mentioned in paragraph 9 of annex I to General Assembly resolution 41/213 would be applied in case it is not possible to finance all or part of the additional requirements from the fund. It would be understood that each draft resolution accompanied by a statement of programme budget implications would be adopted subject to the provisions of that statement.

4. The statements of programme budget implications and proposals for revised estimates, formulated as indicated in paragraph 3 above, would be considered by the Assembly as in the past. The resolutions could be adopted by the Assembly subject to the understanding described in paragraph 3 above.

5. A deadline should be set for the consideration of statements of programme budget implications and proposals for revised estimates. After that date, the Secretary-General would prepare and submit a consolidated statement of all programme budget implications and revised estimates considered at that session of the General Assembly. The amounts in that statement would correspond to those previously recommended by the Fifth Committee upon its consideration of individual statements and proposals for revised estimates (see paras. 3 and 4 above). Should the consolidated amount be within the available balance in the contingency fund, the Assembly would proceed to appropriate the required amounts under the relevant sections of the programme budget.

6. Should the consolidated amount exceed the balance available in the fund for that year, the Secretary-General would, in his consolidated statement, make proposals for revising the amount so that it would not exceed the available balance. In so doing, the Secretary-General would be guided by the indications of alternatives included in each statement of programme budget implications and in each proposal for revised estimates. The respective legislative bodies should take action on such alternatives at the time they adopt the decision or resolution in question (see para. 3 above). The Secretary-General would also take into account any indications of relative urgency that each legislative body might wish to make regarding its resolutions and decisions. Upon consideration of the consolidated statement, the General Assembly would proceed to appropriate the funds necessary under the relevant sections of the programme budget.

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/908) without vote, 19 December (meeting 67); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.23), following informal consultations; agenda item 41.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 12, 14-21, 23-25, 56, 57, 59-61, 65-67; plenary 99.

Following the Committee's approval of the text, Denmark, speaking for the 12-member European Community (EC), said its members welcomed the fact that it had been possible to reach a consensus, since implementation of the 1986 Assembly resolution on the review of the United Nations functioning had always been likely to be as controversial as the initial agreement on that resolution itself had been; however, while opinions so far might differ on the quality of implementation, the EC members would have welcomed some recognition in the text of the efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff to proceed with the reform process, particularly in the current difficult financial circumstances. Morocco declared its full support for those efforts.

Israel said it would have voted against paragraph 10 (a) (concerning two already approved projects for the construction of United Nations conference facilities), had it been put to a vote.

The Committee Chairman, voicing an opinion from the Office of Legal Affairs, stated that that subparagraph provided the Secretary-General with guidelines for proceeding with the construction of the facilities. The Controller also stated that the Secretariat would interpret the subparagraph as instructing the Secretary-General to proceed with the work within the funds available in the construction-in-progress account, so as to be in a position to return in due course to ACABQ and the Assembly with the technical and financial information required to substantiate further resource allocations for the two projects.

The Secretary-General, referring to the 1986 Assembly resolution in connection with the United Nations financial emergency, pointed out to the Committee that the notable spirit of accommodation embodied in that resolution constituted another important element in the endeavours to establish a more durable, reliable and stable financial situation for the Organization; while it was true that all the understandings behind the resolution had not been fully realized, it was vital that the Organization's future be safeguarded. He appealed to all Member States to maintain the agreement reflected in the resolution.

Budget for 1986/1987

In a December 1987 report,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General summarized the financial results of the 1986-1987 biennium. He stated that collections against the $1,491.9 million in contributions assessed on Member States for the biennium, including collections of arrears from prior bienniums, were estimated to total $1,378.7 million by 31 December, leaving a shortfall of $113.2 million. Receipts, including miscellaneous income ($39.6 million) and principal and interest payments to the Special Account ($26.5 million), were estimated to total $1,444.8 million.

On the expenditure side, it was expected that, against the net regular budget appropriation (excluding staff assessment) of $1,450.5 million, the Organization would expend $1,336.9 million (or 92.2 per cent of the appropriation), resulting in savings of $113.6 million.

Total disbursements in 1986-1987 would not exactly match total expenditures, since disbursements relating to unliquidated obligations from 1984-1985 were made in 1986, and some obligations incurred in 1986-1987 would not be disbursed until 1988. Total regular budget disbursements in 1986-1987 were estimated at $1,331.3 million. Other disbursements were estimated at $80.1 million, including a $16 million loan to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) (see below) and $60.1 million in disbursements against the Tax Equalization Fund.

Final appropriations

In December 1987, the General Assembly maintained the amount of $1,711,801,200 ($1,407,056,100 net) appropriated by its 1986 resolution(2) as the final budget appropriation for the 1986-1987 biennium. It also approved credit transfers between budget sections, as proposed by the Secretary-General in his report on the programme budget performance of the United Nations for the biennium.(3)

Compared with the appropriations voted in 1986, the report, whose scope was solely financial, indicated a projected net expenditure of $1,289,681,800 ($1,586,766,600 gross). The projected net decrease of $117,374,300 in overall requirements was the result of reduced expenditure requirements totalling $125,034,600, offset by a projected reduction of $7,610,300 in income estimates.

Those expenditure requirements were attributable to changes as follows: inflation—$868,100; rates of exchange—$29,482,100; decisions of policy-making organs—$1,100,600; other changes—$2,082,200; and projected savings from economy measures—$158,567,600.

Normally, the net decrease would lead to a downward revision of the 1986 appropriations and income estimates. However, the Secretary-General recommended no change in the appropriation level—nor in the income level—in view of the fact that, owing to the ongoing financial crisis, the United Nations had no funds at its disposal to credit back to Member States, but proposed credit transfers required for technical reasons, totalling $313,100 and involving four programme budget sections.

ACABQ(4) concurred with the Secretary-General's approach, which was consistent with its 1986 recommendation, namely, that the appropriations for the biennium should not be revised, nor should the resultant savings revert to Member States. Having requested and examined a breakdown by object of expenditure of the projected savings, ACABQ observed that the Secretary-General had used the $2,141,700 under "other savings"—an amount that one could say should be credited to Member States—to offset the additional requirements mentioned above. In view of the pattern of expenditures projected by the Secretary-General, maintaining the 1986 appropriation level would lead to an unobligated balance of appropriations and, probably, to a significant future unliquidated balance of obligations. ACABQ drew attention in this connection to its recommendation that financial regulations 4.3, 4.4 and 5.2 (d) be suspended in respect of regular budget surpluses arising at the end of the 1986-1987 biennium (see above); should the situation regarding unpaid assessments improve, the Assembly could then decide on the disposition of the amounts held in suspense.

ACABQ recommended that the Assembly maintain without change the overall level of appropriations and income estimates voted in 1986 and approve the credit transfers between budget sections as proposed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

General Assembly resolution 42/213 A

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/880) without objection, 9 December (meeting 58); agenda item 114.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 57, 58; plenary 99.

Explaining its position in the Committee, the United States said the format used to present the budget performance made the report a very confusing document; it did not provide sufficient information to enable Member States to determine whether management decisions had been justified. The United States cited difficulty in deducing from the tabulated data the precise changes under the expenditure item "other changes", as well as the specific reasons for the increases indicated.

Belgium, saying that to understand the budget's evolution from the beginning of the biennium necessitated consulting several documents, felt it should be possible to present the information in a form that would better enable the Committee to perform its monitoring role. The United Kingdom, agreed adding that because of the biennium's financial circumstances, the sums currently held in suspense represented many millions of dollars. It reminded the Committee that Members which had fully paid their assessments while the budget had not been fully implemented were owed significant sums; hence it attached importance to the ACABQ statement concerning the future disposition of amounts held in suspense.

The USSR confirmed the reservations and objections it had expressed⁽⁵⁾ following the initial, 1985 approval⁽⁶⁾ of the 1986-1987 programme budget appropriations. Had a vote been taken on the proposal to maintain the overall level of appropriations and income estimates voted in 1986, it would have been unable to support it; Italy said it would have abstained; Israel said its decision not to request a vote was in no way to be interpreted as approval of the 1986-1987 budget, while Japan voiced reservations on it.

The USSR also shared the doubts expressed as to the practicality of considering the budget performance report in its current form; it hoped that ACABQ would give due consideration to improving it.

Italy did not approve of the ACABQ statement on the disposition of the amounts held in suspense, believing that, if the situation regarding unpaid assessments improved, the financial regulations currently suspended should be lifted. Japan confirmed its understanding that the disposition of budget surpluses arising at the end of the biennium would be subject to an Assembly decision at a future session.

Income sources

In December 1987, the General Assembly maintained the amount of $304,745,100 approved by its 1986 resolution⁽⁷⁾ as the final budget income estimates for the 1986-1987 biennium. In his report on United Nations programme budget performance for the biennium,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General had recommended not to change the overall level of income estimates (see above).

Appropriations for the United Nations programme budget for 1988-1989 totalling $1,769,586,300 gross (1,703,276,000 net) was adopted by the General Assembly in December 1987. Income estimates totalling $337,330,200 from sources other than assessments on Member States were also approved. Member States were to be assessed $1,448,256,100 for the biennium.

The Assembly action was based on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989 submitted by the Secretary-General in April(8) and updated in September 1987,(9) as modified by revised estimates.(10) Both budget documents were presented to the Assembly through CPC and ACABQ, which made their recommendations to the Assembly following an item-by-item examination of the programme budget proposals; the revisions were examined by ACABQ.

Notable among the programmatic aspects of the budget was the priority assigned to two subjects: African economic recovery and development; and the advancement of women. The most significant financial aspects were contained in the revaluation of the resource base rather than in the proposed resource growth. The two major new influences on the level of the resource base, reflected as "special adjustments", were the adjustment of the turnover deduction (a deduction in estimated staff costs based on an estimate of the vacancy rate), and the incorporation of previously non-recurrent provisions in the resource base to provide recurrent resources for activities of a perennial character.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In his introduction to the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget, the Secretary-General stated that it was a transitional budget, of notable economy. It anticipated an estimated reduction of $30.5 million, or 1.8 per cent lower than the revised appropriations for the previous biennium; the reduced level of requirements, representing a negative growth of 1.5 per cent in, real terms, was due mainly to preliminary steps taken to implement the 1986 Assembly resolution on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations. Given the extent of the reforms to be implemented during 1988-1989, further reductions could be expected. The budget, the first to be formulated and considered in accordance with the revised budgetary procedure set forth in that resolution, was based on the assumption that Member States would pay their full assessed contributions, failing which the effect on the Organization would be immediate and disruptive of the carefully planned implementation of reform measures.

The Secretary-General emphasized six main features of the budget. It reflected the Secretariat structures, as well as the number, level and distribution of posts, as at the end of 1986. The structural changes he had initiated or planned during the first part of 1987 were not incorporated because, in most cases, their precise implications in terms of programme and resources could not be elaborated in time, but would be appropriately reflected in revised estimates in 1988. Although no proposals were made for the suppression, creation or upgrading of posts, the budget took account of the staff-reduction goal set by the 1986 Assembly resolution through application of higher-than-usual turnover rate throughout the budget—12.5 per cent for the Professional and higher categories, and 7.5 per cent for the General Service and related categories.

Continuity of programmatic content was another feature of the budget, embodying as it did a complete inventory of the activities within the framework of the 1984-1989 medium-term plan. In conformity with the 1986 Assembly resolution, it incorporated estimates for activities of a perennial character that had traditionally been added annually to the initial estimates; it included reduced estimates for travel of staff and of representatives to the annual Assembly session and for consultant services. The inclusion of a contingency fund (see below), on which the Secretary-General had submitted a separate report, was to be determined by the Assembly following its review of the CPC and ACABQ reports on the subject.

The Secretary-General indicated that, given the nature, characteristics and limitations of the transitional 1988-1989 budget, the process for its consideration by legislative and expert bodies would differ from past practice (see Chapter II of this section).

As requested by CPC and ACABQ, the Secretary-General, in September, presented to the Assembly through CPC at its resumed session an updated report⁽⁹⁾ containing detailed information on programmatic aspects of reforms already implemented, with budgetary implications as they related to the initial budget presentation. The proposals outlined followed the principles of the initial budget presentation; they did not involve any net change in the overall budget level.

Revised estimates based on the latest changes and trends in currency exchange and inflation rates were reported by the Secretary-General on 15 December 1987.⁽¹⁰⁾ The new rates were applied to the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget as approved in first reading by the Fifth Committee, and to all revised estimates and statements of programme budget implications approved up to the time of reporting. The recosting resulted in a total upward revision of $139,491,300 for the budget, of which $108,690,400 accounted for currency fluctuations and $30,800,900 for inflation. The corresponding recosted income estimates amounted to $4,469,200.

The increased requirements for inflation were mainly attributable to the recommendations and decisions of the International Civil Service Commission and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board; the movement in average salary levels reflecting the aging of United Nations Secretariat staff (see Chapter III of this section); and the adjustment in 1987 actual inflation rates and projected 1988 and 1989 rates. The increased requirements attributable to currency fluctuations were largely due to the decrease in value of the United States dollar against other currencies.

CPC consideration. At the first part (April/May) of its 1987 session, CPC considered the initial presentation of the 1988-1989 proposed programme budget item by item. Its observations and recommendations were contained in its report on the session.⁽¹²⁾ At its resumed (September) session, it examined the updated information in respect of those sections experiencing programmatic changes and/or changes in estimates, which it had requested from the Secretary-General.

Commenting in general on the budget proposals, CPC expressed the view that efforts should be made to reduce the share of executive direction and management and support costs so that maximum resources would become available for substantive activities. It recommended that budget sections should comply, to the extent possible, with all the provisions of rule 104.4 of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation.⁽¹³⁾ Each budget fascicle should contain a summary table listing those elements accorded highest and lowest priority, the resources allocated to each, the percentage of total resources represented by each allocation, and the total percentage of resources within the highest and lowest priority categories. CPC expressed the view that the reduction of resources, especially for consultants, should not have a negative impact on programme delivery.

ACABQ action. ACABQ, in its first report on the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget,⁽¹⁴⁾ noted that preparation of the budget had been a highly unusual exercise, the initial estimates having been prepared during a period marked by threats to the Organization's financial viability and by a reassessment of its role and activities; that what had been proposed- was essentially a transitional budget; and that, because a period of time would be required before the measures set out by the 1986 Assembly resolution could be translated into definitive programmatic and budgetary changes, the budget had been based on Secretariat organizational structures and staffing tables as at the end of 1986.

ACABQ's detailed observations and recommendations were aimed at establishing the most appropriate base for the implementation of reform. A number of them were general, intended for application across the board so as not to prejudice the outcome of the ongoing reviews and studies. Reductions across the board were to ensure as realistic an overall level of estimates as possible. Other observations related to an improved methodology for apportioning costs, budget format and other budgeting methods (see Chapter II of this section).

While much of what the budget contained had been overtaken by events, ACABQ found the budget, as presented, to be an indispensable step in the transition to the 1990s. It stated that the initial estimates and related action on them should be the basis on which proposals for reform could be evaluated and that the next step should be a concentrated effort by the Secretary-General and policy-making bodies to complete the numerous reviews and studies in progress.

Having considered the Secretary-General's updated report, ACABQ recommended that the proposed 1988-1989 budget be reduced by $51,430,800.

On 17 December, orally reporting to the Fifth Committee on its findings on the revised estimates, ACABQ⁽¹⁵⁾ pointed out that the decrease in the value of the United States dollar against the Swiss franc and the Austrian schilling alone accounted for $95.4 million, or 87.8 per cent, of the increased requirements due to currency fluctuations. ACABQ found no technical basis for objecting to the revised estimates of $139,491,300 but recommended that it be reduced by $2,050,000 because of a recent Fifth Committee action on the Pension Board report (see Chapter III of this section).

Based on that recommendation, the Fifth Committee on 18 December approved $137,441,300 in additional appropriations and $4,469,200 in additional income estimates. It corrected, in second reading, the individual appropriations it had approved in first reading to reflect changes required by the revised estimates and appropriations required for implementation of resolutions adopted by the Assembly at its current session.

Appropriations

The $1,769,586,300 in appropriations approved by the General Assembly under the expenditure sections of the 1988-1989 budget were divided among the major areas as follows: common support services, 40.2 per cent; economic, social and humanitarian affairs, 28.1 per cent; staff assessment, 15.1 per cent; political and Security Council affairs and peace-keeping, 5.1 per cent; public information, 4.4 per cent; overall policy-making, direction and co-ordination, 2.5 per cent; trusteeship and decolonization, 1.8 per cent; international justice and law, 1.7 per cent; buildings and maintenance, 1.1 per cent; and United Nations bond issue, 0.2 per cent.

The Secretary-General's initial proposal had been for $1,681,372,400 gross ($1,344,410,800 net) in expenditures, approximately $30,428.8 less than the revised appropriations for the previous biennium. Estimates of extrabudgetary resources amounted to $2,029,420,200, comprising $196,824,700 for support services, $74,115,800 for substantive activities and $1,758,479,700 for operational projects. The estimates excluded the costs of peace-keeping operations, separately assessed (UNDOF and UNIFIL) (see pp. 290 and 292) or voluntarily funded (UNFICYP) (see p. 248); whether or not such costs would arise in 1988-1989 would depend on decisions to be taken by the Security Council.

Compared with the previous biennium, the initial proposed budget showed $6.1 million in resource growth reduction (the change in the cost of staff and other resources used by the United Nations for its programmes after discounting the effects of inflation and exchange rate changes).

The Secretary-General noted that, in accordance with established methodology, resource requirements at 1987 rates had been adjusted upwards to projected 1988-1989 rates; however, with respect to exchange rates, the estimates reflected rates as at November 1986, adjustments to which would be proposed at the 1987 Assembly session on the basis of rates prevailing in November. As to inflation adjustments, 1987 rates had been projected forward to 1988 and 1989, but, like exchange rates, would be subject to review.

ACABQ's recommendation, following its review of the Secretary-General's two budget documents, was for a 1988-1989 programme budget totalling $1,629,941,600, or $51,430,800 less than the Secretary-General's proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The USSR proposed and then withdrew the following two amendments: to replace the total appropriations by $1,711,000,000; and to add a new paragraph by which the Assembly would have requested intergovernmental bodies and the Secretary-General to make every effort not to exceed that amount, in accordance with the regulations and rules governing programme planning and budgeting in the United Nations.

The United States supported the intent of the proposed amendments; it understood, however, that the revised estimates to be submitted in 1988 would, in fact, be downward revisions.

Cameroon pointed out that ACABQ had observed that it was not possible to set an overall level for budgetary resources and that the USSR proposal would be tantamount to setting such a level.

Israel explained that it voted against the total appropriations for several reasons. Although located in Western Asia, it had been excluded from the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, in blatant violation of the principle of universality of United Nations membership. Six areas of programme activity in the budget were specifically directed against Israel and did nothing to contribute to peace and security in the region; at a time of cut-backs, additional funds had been provided for two such areas: the Division for Palestinian Rights and certain public information activities conducted by the Department of Public Information. The compromise to include a contingency fund in the budget, as called for by the 1986 Assembly resolution,⁽¹¹⁾ had not been respected; although political activities of a perennial nature had been incorporated in the budget, no provision had been made for a contingency fund (see below). Some Members seemed to think that they could support only those expenditures that were to their liking, in which case they should not expect Israel's support.

Japan said it was anxious to keep in check the overall appropriation level and to ensure that the 1988-1989 budget reflected the aims set forth by the 1986 Assembly resolution.. It regretted that

CPC had failed to establish clear guidelines for the overall level of resources for the contingency fund.

France believed that the decrease in real terms of the proposed budget over the previous one was evidence of efforts to promote rationalization. However, it voiced reservations on seven budget sections-in the recorded votes on which it had abstained-and looked forward to the revised figures to be submitted in 1988.

The Assembly, by resolution 42/211, requested the Secretary-General, in further implementing certain Group of 18 recommendations, particularly when preparing the revised 1988-1989 estimates and proposals for revising the 1984-1989 medium-term plan to take into account a number of guidelines.

Financing appropriations for 1988

In order to finance appropriations totalling $884,793,150 gross for the first year of the 1988-1989 biennium, the General Assembly specified the amounts to be obtained from each of the major income sources. Member States were to be assessed $859,638,000 gross, or $724,128,050 net of staff assessment. The balance was to come from general income and revenue-producing activities, less half of a $16 million loan to UNIDO, which was included under the income estimates but which the agency was unable to repay as originally planned (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/226 C without vote.

Financing of appropriations for the year 1988

The General Assembly

Resolves that for the year 1988:

(a) $25,155,150 being half of the difference between the following:

(i) The estimated income approved for the biennium 1988-1989 under resolution B above; and

(ii) Income from staff assessment and the amount ($16 million) estimated in income section 2 in respect of the repayment of the loan to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

(b) $859,638,000 being the assessment on Member States in accordance with General Assembly resolution 40/248 of 18 December 1985 on the scale of assessments for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988;

2. There shall be set off against the assessment on Member States, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund in the total amount of $US 135,509,950 being half

The 1988-1989 budget appropriations approved by the General Assembly in December 1987 were to be financed from three main income sources: assessments on Member States; staff assessment (an income tax levied by the United Nations on staff salaries); and sales revenues (mainly from postage stamps). The remainder was to come from miscellaneous sources classified as "general income", about half of which consisted of reimbursement for services provided to specialized agencies and others, and which included a $16 million loan to UNIDO appropriated by the Assembly in 1985,(16) to be repaid during the biennium (see below). The approval process for the income estimates, totalling $337,330,200 for 1988-1989, was the same as that for appropriations, involving proposals by the Secretary-General, analysis by ACABQ and a recommendation by the Fifth Committee.

Loan to UNIDO

On 30 November 1987, the Fifth Committee approved the ACABQ recommendations(17) concerning arrangements for repayment by UNIDO of a $16 million loan appropriated by the General Assembly in 1985 to enable UNIDO to meet its initial expenses as a specialized agency for 1986. Established in 1966 as a General Assembly organ to promote the industrialization of developing countries,(18) UNIDO had been converted into a specialized agency during 1985, in accordance with a 1979 Assembly resolution,(19) and had become fully autonomous on 1 January 1986.(20)

Although a $24 million loan had been approved, the cash needs of UNIDO in 1986 were such that only $16 million was advanced by the United Nations, to be repaid in two $8 million instalments in 1986 and 1987. Owing to financial difficulties, UNIDO could not meet the 1986 repayment,(21) nor, as it had informed the Secretary-General, would it be able to meet the 1987 one. It would only have the means to repay when it received the arrears of assessed 1986-1987 contributions from its membership and on the assumption that other measures—such as the replenishment of the Working Capital Fund (see below) and timely receipt of assessed contributions for 1988—were sufficient to maintain a positive cash flow to finance current operations. Outstanding assessed contributions were estimated to total $25.9 million at the end of 1987, and the agency had no means of financing that cash shortfall.

In the light of continued uncertainties regarding the collection of assessed contributions in 1988, UNIDO concluded that it seemed unlikely that it would be able to repay any part of the loan before the fourth quarter of 1988, and that repayment even in 1989 would depend on the level of its outstanding contributions.

In the circumstances, the Secretary-General, in an October 1987 report to the Fifth Committee,(22) said he regarded it prudent to reconsider the budgetary situation of the United Nations, whose 1988-1989 budget reflected repayment of the loan in full under the income section. Accordingly, he proposed a waiver of financial regulation 5.2 (b) (stipulating a reduction in the assessments on United Nations Member States by $8 million in 1988 and by a further $8 million in 1989) and that the loan be considered separately in the annual financing resolutions for the budget. He further proposed that the 1988 assessments not be reduced by any part of the loan and that those for 1989 be reduced only by the amount actually repaid so as not to affect adversely the United Nations cash flow.

ACABQ(17) concurred with the Secretary-General's proposals and recommended that a pragmatic and realistic modality for repayment, including a specific schedule, be negotiated and submitted to it in 1988; a decision regarding the 1989 assessments should be taken by the Assembly, also in 1988, once a modality for repayment had been approved.

Unforeseen expenditures

The General Assembly, in December 1987, authorized the Secretary-General to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, under specified limitations. The provisions were substantially the same as in the corresponding resolution for 1986-1987, adopted in 1985.(23)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/227 without vote.

1. Authorizes the Secretary-General, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and subject to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations and the provisions of paragraph 3 below, to enter into commitments in the biennium 1988-1989 to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenses arising either during or subsequent to that biennium, provided that the concurrence of the Advisory Committee shall not be necessary for:

(a) Such commitments, not exceeding a total of $US 2 million in any one year of the biennium 1988-1989, as the Secretary-General certifies relate to the maintenance of peace and security;

(b) Such commitments as the President of the International Court of Justice certifies relate to expenses occasioned by:

- (i) The designation of ad hoc judges (Statute of the Court, Article 31), not exceeding a total of $250,000;

(c) Such commitments, in an amount not exceeding $300,000, in the biennium 1988-1989, as the Secretary-General certifies are required for interorganizational security measures pursuant to section IV of General Assembly resolution 36/235 of 18 December 1981;

2. Resolves that the Secretary-General shall report to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and to the General Assembly at its forty-third and forty-fourth sessions all commitments made under the provisions of the present resolution, together with the circumstances relating thereto, and shall submit supplementary estimates to the Assembly in respect of such commitments;

3. Decides that if, as a result of a decision of the Security Council, commitments relating to the maintenance of peace and security should arise in an estimated total exceeding $10 million either before the forty-third session or between the forty-third and forty-fourth sessions of the General Assembly, a special session of the Assembly shall be convened by the Secretary-General to consider the matter.

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/910 & Corr. 1) without vote, 19 December (meeting 67); draft contained in report of Committee (A/C.5/42/L.9 (Part IV) & Corr. 1 & Add. 1); agenda item 115.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 8, 12, 14-29, 31-34, 36-50, 54, 57-60, 65-67; plenary 99.

Financing of the Working Capital Fund

The General Assembly, in December 1987, established the Working Capital Fund for the 1988-1989 biennium at a level of $100 million. The provisions of the authorizing resolution (see below) corresponded to those approved in 1985 for the previous biennium.(24) As in the past, the Fund was to be used to finance appropriations pending receipt of assessed contributions and to pay unforeseen costs.

The Secretary-General, in his December 1987 report on the current financial crisis of the United Nations and funding prospects for 1988,(1) had proposed, among other measures, that the Fund's level, currently at $100 million, be increased to $200 million with effect from 1 January 1988. This would enable the Organization to continue meeting its responsibilities pending full and timely payment of assessments and arrears, and bring the Fund to the level identified in 1981 as that required to meet estimated cash shortages.

ACABQ,(25) having examined the proposal against previous such proposals, noted that the Fund, at the $100 million level, represented 13.2 per cent of the 1982 appropriations, 12.8 per cent of the 1985 portion of the revised 1984-1985 appropriations, and 11.8 per cent of the 1987 portion of the 1986-1987 appropriations. In the opinion of ACABQ the decrease in percentage was not significant enough to warrant an increase in the Fund level and accordingly recommended against the Secretary-General's proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/228 without vote.

Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1988-1989
The General Assembly

Resolves that:

1. The Working Capital Fund shall be established for the biennium 1988-1989 in the amount of $US 100 million;

2. Member States shall make advances to the Working Capital Fund in accordance with the scale adopted by the General Assembly for contributions of Member States to the budget for the year 1988;

3. There shall be set off against this allocation of advances:

(a) Credits to Member States resulting from transfers made in 1959 and 1960 from surplus account to the Working Capital Fund in an adjusted amount of $1,025,092;

(b) Cash advances paid by Member States to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1986-1987 under General Assembly resolution 40/255 of 18 December 1985;

4. Should the credits and advances paid by any Member State to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1986-1987 exceed the amount of that Member State's advance under the provisions of paragraph 2 above, the excess shall be set off against the amount of the contributions payable by the Member State in respect of the biennium 1988-1989;

5. The Secretary-General is authorized to advance from the Working Capital Fund:

(a) Such sums as may be necessary to finance budgetary appropriations pending the receipt of contributions; sums so advanced shall be reimbursed as soon as receipts from contributions are available for the purpose;

(b) Such sums as may be necessary to finance commitments which may be duly authorized under the provisions of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, in particular resolution 42/227 of 21 December 1987 relating to unforeseen and extraordinary expenses; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates for reimbursing the Working Capital Fund;

(c) Such sums as, together with net sums outstanding for the same purpose, do not exceed $200,000, to continue the revolving fund to finance miscellaneous self-liquidating purchases and activities; advances in excess of the total of $200,000 may be made with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(d) With the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, such sums as may be required to finance payments of advance insurance premiums where the period of insurance extends beyond the end of the biennium in which payment is made; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates of each biennium, during the life of the related policies, to cover the charges applicable to each biennium;

(e) Such sums as may be necessary to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits; such advances shall be repaid as soon as credits are available in the Tax Equalization Fund;

6. Should the provision in paragraph 1 above prove inadequate to meet the purposes normally related to the Working Capital Fund, the Secretary-General is authorized to utilize, in the biennium 1988-1989, cash from special funds and accounts in his custody, under the conditions approved in General Assembly resolution 1341(XIII) of 13 December 1958, or the proceeds of loans authorized by the Assembly.

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/910 & Corr. 1) without vote, 19 December (meeting 67); draft contained in report of Committee (A/C.5/42/L.9 (Part IV) & Corr. 1 & Add. 1); agenda item 115.

Contingency fund

Under the new budget process approved by the General Assembly in 1986,(11) the programme budget was to include a contingency fund to accommodate additional expenditures for the biennium derived from legislative mandates not provided for in the proposed budget, or from revised estimates excluding those arising from the impact of extraordinary expenses and from fluctuations in exchange and inflation rates. Criteria for the fund's use and operation were put forward by the Secretary-General in an April 1987 report(26) and further elaborated upon in September.(27)

When CPC considered the proposal in May, at the first part of its 1987 session,(12) opinions were expressed to the effect that the fund should have been incorporated in the proposed 1988-1989 budget, but also that its inclusion was premature and should be postponed. There was general agreement, however, that the proposal needed further study. CPC considered the Secretary-General's further report at its resumed session in September. Views were advanced on such issues as the requirements and the level of the fund, allocation of its resources, its relation to budget appropriations, and the type of activities to be covered. CPC regarded that discussion as a useful input into the Fifth Committee's deliberations and into further consideration of the issues raised in 1988.

Taking into account the analysis provided by the Secretary-General, ACABQ in October(28) made a series of observations and recommendations on the establishment, scope and operation of the fund. It emphasized that it was only one step towards a comprehensive solution to the problem of additional expenditures and related primarily to contingencies of a programmatic nature. Still to be addressed was what appeared to be the much larger question of how to deal with additional expenditures related to cost increases, such as those due to currency fluctuations or inflation and to revisions in standard rates for salaries and common staff costs. ACABQ reiterated its position that a set of procedures for the fund should be in place at the start of the fund's operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Fifth Committee considered in 1987 the contingency fund under two different agenda items: on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations, and on the programme budget. On 21 December 1987, acting on the Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly adopted without vote section VIII of resolution 42/225.

Contingency fund in the programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989

[The General Assembly . . .]

Decides to consider at its forty-third session the question relating to the contingency fund in the context of the second year of the biennium 1988-1989.

General Assembly resolution 42/225, section VIII

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/910 & Corr. 1) without objection, 19 December (meeting 67); oral proposal by Chairman based on proposal by Zimbabwe for non-aligned countries; agenda item 115.

Also on 21 December, the Assembly, by resolution 42/211, approved guidelines for the fund and annexed them to the resolution. It requested the Secretary-General to submit in 1988 proposals for provisional procedures for use and operation of the fund based on those guidelines, and decided to review those procedures no later than 1992.

Assessment of contributions

Report of the Committee on Contributions. The forty-seventh session of the Committee on Contributions was held in New York from 18 June to 2 July 1987.(1) The Committee continued its work on the methodology for drawing up a scale of assessments for 1989-1991, as requested by the General Assembly in 1986.(2) In doing so, it examined statistical information and the issues related to the use of various statistics and their sources, and also reviewed the main elements of the current methodology, such as the statistical base period; the low per capita income allowance formula; the scheme of limits to avoid excessive variations of individual rates of assessment between successive scales; and ceiling and floor rates.

In 1981,(3) the Assembly had decided that, pending a thorough study by the Committee of alternative methods to assess the real capacity of Member States to pay, the statistical base period should be 10 years in the subsequent review of the scale of assessments; thus, a 10-year base period was used for the 1983-1985 and 1986-1988 scales. The Committee decided to retain a 10-year base for the next scale as it would provide stability and continuity in the statistical base; a frequent change in base period would entail greater distortions in the relative apportionment among Member States, and it was noted that the impact on assessment levels of individual Member States resulting from use of a shorter base period could be offset by applying the existing scheme of limits.

With regard to the low per capita income allowance formula, the Committee decided, subject to the review of data available in 1988, to retain the per capita income limit at $2,200 and the gradient at 85 per cent for the scale of assessments for 1989-1991.

The Committee also favoured retaining the scheme of limits to avoid excessive variations of individual rates of assessment between successive scales, and did not recommend any changes in the ceiling and floor rates, the former being the maximum contribution of any one Member State (which had been gradually reduced from 39.89 per cent in 1946-1949 to 25 per cent since 1974), while the latter was the minimum rate a Member State was assessed (0.04 per cent until 1973, reduced to 0.02 per cent for 1974-1977 and to 0.01 per cent in 1978).

The Chairman of the Committee on Contributions, explaining in the Fifth Committee how capacity to pay was measured under the current methodology, pointed out that in the context of the low per capita income allowance formula, per capita income determined the extent of relief to which a country was entitled. He also discussed data comparability, Member States' differing interpretations of the concept of capacity to pay, and their views on retention of the 10-year statistical base period, of the $2,200 limit for the low per capita income allowance formula and the 85 per cent gradient, and of the ceiling and floor rates of 25 and 0.01 per cent, respectively.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/208 without vote.

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the scale of assessments, particularly resolution 39/247 B of 12 April 1985,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Contributions, and noting with appreciation the efforts of the Committee,

Taking note of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee during the forty-second session,

1. Requests the Committee on Contributions:

(a) To recommend to the General Assembly, at its forty-third session, a scale of assessments for the period 1989-1991, prepared on the basis of the methodology and criteria used to prepare the current scale;

(b) In this connection, to review the limits in the scheme to avoid excessive variations of individual rates of assessment between successive scales;

2. Also requests the Committee on Contributions to continue to undertake studies in pursuance of its work on the improvement of the methodology for drawing up future scales of assessment, in the light of views expressed in the Fifth Committee during the forty-second and previous sessions, and to submit a progress report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Committee on Contributions with the facilities it requires to carry out its work, including supplementary assistance if necessary.

11 December 1987 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/852) without vote, 2 December (meeting 51); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.8), following informal consultations; agenda item 121.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 3-7, 9, 10, 13, 15, 16, 49, 51; plenary 1, 36, 97.

Explaining its position, the United Kingdom said in the Fifth Committee that although having supported the consensus, it continued to have serious reservations about the text; the United Kingdom was in favour of a simple method based on the principle of capacity to pay. Belgium endorsed the text on the understanding that the proposals concerning revised limits could not be implemented until they had been adopted by the Assembly. Poland felt that the current methodology should be further developed; it was disappointed that it had not been possible to devote more attention to issues such as the length of the base period, the low-income allowance formula and the debt-servicing relief formula. Australia emphasized that the Committee on Contributions was merely requested to consider the scheme which was supported by a clear majority of Members; if it should decide that changes were warranted, it must submit its conclusions to the Assembly.

Israel said that in addition to the scheme of limits to avoid excessive variations of individual rates of assessment between successive scales, there was a built-in mechanism for avoiding such excessive variations in the form of the 10-year statistical base period. Current economic conditions were such that the rich were becoming richer and the poor poorer; the consequent changes in the capacity of poor and developing countries to pay their assessments should be genuinely reflected in the scale of assessments. However, the Committee on Contributions must not interpret paragraph 1 (b) of the text as meaning that there should be reductions only in the limits in question. Where certain categories of countries were concerned, changes in the other direction might be appropriate; a mechanism that might favour the richer countries must not be permitted to create an obstacle to changes beneficial to the poor ones.

Denmark said it joined in the consensus on the understanding that the request in paragraph 1 (b) would not be construed as meaning that, after having reviewed the scheme of limits, the Committee on Contributions could apply a revised scheme in the preparation of the scale for 1989-1991; revised limits within the scheme or a revised scheme of limits could be applied in the preparation of the scale of assessments only after approval by the Assembly.

The USSR said it construed paragraph 1 (b) as meaning that, if the Committee on Contributions concluded that it was necessary to make certain changes in the scheme, it would make its recommendations to the Assembly; similarly, where paragraph 2 was concerned, the USSR assumed that it would do the same should it conclude that the methodology for drawing up future scales of assessments needed improving. The same would apply if the Committee concluded that the scale of assessments needed to be made more objective and fairer; in the USSR's understanding, the following scale would be prepared on the basis of the current methodology.

In Japan's view, paragraph 1 (b) would enable the Committee on Contributions to review the limits as it prepared the 1989-1991 scale; it would also give the Committee the authority to exercise discretion in reflecting the outcome of the review in its proposed scale by tightening limits, should it find it necessary and justifiable, in order to avoid an anomalous situation arising out of deficiencies in the current methodology for national income conversion and to secure more equitable burden-sharing among Member States. The text specified that the review of the limits in the scheme should be conducted in connection with the preparation of the proposed scale for the following period, quite separately from general studies on improving the methodology for drawing up future scales of assessment. The fact that the Committee was expected to submit to the Assembly at its following session only one proposed scale for approval provided further confirmation of its position.

Brazil explained that it had joined in the consensus in the hope that the following scale would be prepared on the basis of a more equitable methodology that took due account of the serious economic situation, particularly in the developing countries. It welcomed the request in paragraph 1 (b) on the understanding that the Committee would reduce all the percentage limits with a view to making the methodology more just, objective and transparent in terms of final results; it trusted that the Committee would take account of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee and would apply to the following scale the reviewed percentage limits in the same way as it had applied such limits to the 1986-1988 scale.

Bahrain said it had hoped for a more strongly worded text that took account of the economic difficulties of individual countries, including those experienced by countries whose economies were dependent on the export of a single commodity. With regard to paragraph 1 (a), Bahrain hoped that the methodology and criteria in question would be developed on the basis of that principle; concerning paragraph 1 (b), it was clear that the principle of equity should be applied to preparing the scale of assessments. As to paragraph 2, it was to be hoped that when the Committee took action with a view to improving the methodology for drawing up future scales, it would take due account of the principle of justice and fairness and the views expressed by developing countries in the Fifth Committee.

According to Bangladesh, a special approach must be taken in dealing with the least developed countries; the criteria taken into account in preparing the current methodology would continue to be relevant.

Budget contributions in 1987

Of the $1,014.1 million in contributions to the United Nations regular budget payable as at 1 January 1987, $660.7 million had been collected from Member States by 31 December, leaving $353.4 million outstanding. Total assessments for 1987, due early in the year, amounted to $756.3 million, while $257.8 million related to previous years.

In addition, eight non-member States were assessed a total of $1.9 million for their share of United Nations activities in which they participated. Of the contributions payable to the United Nations by non-member States, totalling $3.8 million (including contributions for prior years), $2.4 million had been collected as at 31 December 1987, while $1.4 million was outstanding.

At the resumption of the Assembly's 1986 session, in September 1987, the Secretary-General, by a letter of 14 September,(4) informed the Assembly President that four Members-El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Sierra Leone and South Africa-were more than two years in arrears in the payment of their budget contributions. On 15 September,(5) the Secretary-General reported arrears in the payment by two Member States, Equatorial Guinea ($62,500) and South Africa ($27,528,000). On 12 October,(6) he stated that Equatorial Guinea had made payments, bringing its arrears below the two-year limit to maintain voting privileges, as specified in Article 19 of the United Nations Charter.

The Assembly, in resolution 42/212, called on Member States to pay all their assessed contributions in a full and timely manner. It renewed its appeal in resolution 42/216 A.

Accounts and auditing

The accounts and financial statements for either the year or the biennium ended 31 December 1986 for six United Nations development and humanitarian assistance programmes were accepted by the General Assembly in 1987 along with the audit opinions of the United Nations Board of Auditors. The Assembly also endorsed the observations of the Board and of ACABQ. The Board's principal findings and conclusions for remedial action were transmitted to the Assembly in July 1987 by the Secretary-General.(1)

The programmes for which financial reports and audited financial statements were submitted were: the United Nations Development Programme(2) the United Nations Children's Fund,(3) the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,(4) the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,(5) the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees(6) and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.(7)

The Board of Auditors made recommendations and observations on various aspects of the financial management of those programmes. Among the topics considered were transactions with executing agencies and Governments, programme management and evaluation, electronic data processing, project funding, project inventories, procurement practices, financial statements, and allocation and control of funds.

In September,(8) ACABQ commented on the Board's recommendations.

As follow-up to the Assembly's 1986 resolution on the financial reports and audited statements of United Nations programmes,(9) the Secretary-General submitted a report on his investigation of the Headquarters catering and gift-shop operations (see Chapter IV of this section), and two reports on internal control procedures relating to benefits and allowances (see Chapter III).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/206 without vote.

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered the financial reports and audited financial statements for the period ended 31 December 1986 of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the audit opinions and reports of the Board of Auditors and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Having also considered the relevant reports on internal control procedures relating to the benefits and allowances received by staff members of the United Nations and on Headquarters catering and gift-shop operations,

Noting with concern that the Board of Auditors, for the reasons stated in its report, was not able to express an opinion on the financial statements of the United Nations Children's Fund and issued qualified opinions on the financial statements of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities,

Taking into consideration the views expressed by delegations, by the Board of Auditors, by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and by the organizations and programmes concerned during the debate in the Fifth Committee on this item, and the widely expressed support for measures to improve the efficiency, management, financial accountability and budgetary control of the United Nations organizations and programmes concerned,

1. Accepts the financial reports and audited financial statements and the audit opinions and reports of the Board of Auditors regarding the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities;

2. Accepts the report and conclusions of the Board of Auditors on the financial statements of the United Nations Children's Fund and requests the Board of Auditors, as agreed by the Fund and as recommended in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, to carry out an expanded audit of the financial statements of the Fund for the period ended 31 December 1986, and to submit its report in a timely manner through the Advisory Committee at its spring 1988 session, to the Executive Board of the Fund at its 1988 session and to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

3. Requests the governing bodies of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities to require the executive heads concerned to take immediate steps within their competence to correct the situations or conditions that gave rise to the qualification of the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors;

4. Endorses the concurring observations and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, as contained in their respective reports, and requests the competent governing bodies to ensure that the executive heads concerned take the necessary steps on a priority basis to implement them and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

5. Further requests the governing bodies of all audited organizations and programmes to keep under review the other observations and recommendations of the Board of Auditors that fall within each body's terms of reference, as called for by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes concerned to take without delay remedial action within their competence in response to the comments and observations of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and to report in 1988 respectively to the General Assembly and to the governing bodies of these organizations and programmes on ways to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of financial procedures and controls, including those relating to the payment of benefits and allowances to staff members, and also to improve the accounting system and related administrative and management controls;

7. Recommends that all future reports of the Board of Auditors continue to include separate sections that summarize recommendations for corrective action to be taken by the organizations and programmes concerned, with an indication of relative urgency, and that report on specific measures taken by the Secretary-General and executive heads of these organizations and programmes to implement previous recommendations of the Board and comment on the efficacy of such measures and the extent to which problems recur, giving particular attention to recurrent problems related to over-expenditures, incorrect use of funds, control procedures relating to the payment of benefits and allowances, and other instances of non-compliance with financial and budgetary regulations and rules;

8. Further recommends that the Board of Auditors in future submit to the General Assembly a concise document summarizing its principal findings and conclusions of common interest, classified by audit area;

9. Requests the Board of Auditors to initiate a study on standardization of the presentation and format of financial statements of all audited organizations and programmes and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

10. Also requests the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to continue to cover in their reviews the areas relating to the efficiency and effectiveness of the financial procedures and controls, the accounting system and the related administrative and management areas, in accordance with regulation 12.5 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, and to recommend measures, as appropriate, to strengthen financial and management controls;

11. Decides that while the Board of Auditors should continue to submit its reports in accordance with the relevant financial regulations of the audited organizations and programmes, the Board should retain the capacity to submit specific annual reports to the General Assembly and to governing bodies, should circumstances so warrant;

12. Requests, in this regard, the governing bodies of the audited organizations and programmes to keep under review the question of the periodicity of their financial reporting and its relationship to their budgetary cycles, bearing in mind the most recent reports of the Board of Auditors and the discussions in the Fifth Committee, and to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

13. Invites Governments that are represented on the governing bodies of organizations and programmes for which audited financial statements have been considered by the General Assembly to ensure that full consideration is given to the reports of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and to the related comments made in the Fifth Committee;

14. Requests the Board of Auditors to provide the General Assembly with more detailed reports on the special accounts that the audited organizations and programmes manage, such as the accounts of the non-core programmes of the United Nations Development Programme;

15. Underlines the importance of an effective internal audit function in the organizations and programmes reported on, and requests the Board of Auditors, the Secretary-General and the executive heads to ensure that close co-operation is maintained between the internal audit department of each organization or programme and the Board of Auditors, particularly with respect to planning, executing and reporting procedures.

11 December 1987 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/697) without vote, 23 October (meeting 16); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C. 5/42/L.3), following informal consultations and orally revised; agenda item 113.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 3-9, 15, 16; plenary 97.

Explaining its position, Algeria said it was not happy with the practice of adopting the Board's recommendations as a whole, but did not oppose the text on the understanding that the Fifth Committee would in future consider the Board's recommendations from a different standpoint; it noted that disagreements between the Committee and certain administrations regarding the validity of particular recommendations had become increasingly common. If the Committee were to express an opinion on the recommendations individually, before adopting them or referring back to those which required further study, it would go a long way towards resolving the existing conflict of competence between the Board and various organizations.

Chapter II

United Nations programmes

Efforts continued in 1987 to improve United Nations programme planning, budgeting and evaluation, and to follow up the 1986 recommendations by the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18).

The particular objectives and programmes established by the United Nations must further the Charter's interest, stated the Secretary-General, and progress towards their realization was in the interest of all Member States. Given the breadth of the United Nations agenda in the 1990s, priorities in selecting and implementing programmes would have to be determined and more rigorously observed than in the past. The three criteria established for determining priorities in programme planning—the importance of an objective to Member States, the Organization's capacity to achieve it, and the real effectiveness and usefulness of the results—would retain their validity. The elaboration of the medium-term plan for 1990-1995 should provide Member States with a unique opportunity to reflect and agree on a new and dynamic agenda for the 1990s; to that end, the Secretary-General would submit a plan which would embody the vision of the Organization's long-term goals and objectives and aim at strengthening its relevance to the global issues of peace, security and sound development. By the time the 1990s were under way, the United Nations would have completed far-reaching reforms intended to improve its administrative and financial functioning.

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) devoted the main part of its 1987 session to examining the programme elements of the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1988-1989. It also continued analysing and reviewing programmes of the Organization.

By resolution 42/215, the General Assembly dealt with a number of issues related to programme planning. It reiterated the importance of the medium-term plan as the principal policy directive; endorsed amendments to the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, as recommended by CPC; and stressed the necessity of further integrating evaluation into the programme planning, budgeting and monitoring cycle. Other provisions related to cross-organizational programme analyses (see pp. 596 and 833) and Joint Meetings of CPC and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (see p. 934).

United Nations programmes were inspected, reviewed or evaluated by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU). Its 1987 work programme covered broad areas of sectoral interest to the United Nations system, such as programming, budgeting, personnel, management and co-ordination, evaluation and development co-operation. In its nineteenth annual report, JIU described how its work programme was drawn up and explained its two new features: one, the identification of evaluation studies, and the other, giving advance notice of a number of future studies. Those features were introduced to comply with the 1986 recommendations of the Group of 18. The Assembly, by resolution 42/218, invited JIU to introduce the improvements the Unit had recommended in its annual report for increasing the quality and effectiveness of its studies; it put forward a number of measures to encourage a more systematic follow-up on JIU recommendations and constructive dialogue between the Unit and the various United Nations organizations.

The annual report on administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the United Nations system, prepared by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), provided comparative data on the specialized agencies and the United Nations, covering regular budgets, net contributions of Member States, established posts, regular budget contributions to technical co-operation activities, extrabudgetary funds, working capital funds, scales of assessment and collection of contributions.

Programme planning and budgeting

Renewal and reform of the United Nations must be a continuing and dynamic process, said the Secretary-General in an April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,⁽¹⁾ giving an overview of the measures taken as follow-up to the recommendations of the Group of 18 and the 1986 resolution(2) by which the General Assembly had decided on the implementation of those recommendations. The revised programme budget estimates he proposed for 1988-1989, as well as the 1990-1991 programme budget, would reflect implementation of the recommendations.

On 1 March 1987, the Secretary-General established an Office for Programme Planning, Budgeting, Monitoring and Evaluation in the Department of Administration and Management, to consolidate functions previously performed by the Office of Programme Planning and Co-ordination (in the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs) and the Budget Division of the Office of Financial Services (in the Department of Administration and Management). This was a follow-up to the proposal of the Group of 18, contained in recommendation 32,(3) calling for all Secretariat activities relating to programme planning and budgeting to be brought together within a coherent structure.

The main functions of the new Office would be to: prepare the Secretary-General's medium-term plans based on submissions by departments and offices; undertake cross-sectional and intersectoral analyses; ensure co-ordination with the specialized agencies in preparing medium-term plans; prepare the Secretary-General's proposed programme budgets and assess the programmatic implications and estimated costs of new programmes considered by the General Assembly and its committees; develop uniform planning; programming and budgeting techniques; establish monitoring systems and prepare programme performance reports; develop evaluation methods for programme managers and conduct periodic in-depth evaluations of programmes; assist in developing systems and data bases to facilitate the formulation of plans and programme budgets; provide substantive support to intergovernmental and experts bodies such as CPC, ACABQ, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee and others; and clear documents prepared by other units for possible programme budget implications. The Office was headed by an Assistant Secretary-General who reported directly to the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management. The Secretary-General believed that the reorganization would enhance the Secretariat's contribution to the programme planning and budgeting process, including the substantive servicing of the Programme Planning and Budgeting Board (an internal advisory board), but most of all the servicing of CPC, ACABQ and the Fifth Committee.

The point had been made frequently that the United-Nations should limit its activities to what it did best and that this should be added to the criteria for determining programme priorities, observed the Secretary-General in his paper on some perspectives of the work of the Organization in the 1990s, attached to a September 1987 note(4) on the next medium-term plan. However, he did not believe that this was a meaningful distinction and suggested adding the criterion that the objective sought was such that multilateral action was demonstrably important to its achievement. Even that additional criterion left open the question of which multilateral organization was best suited to undertake a particular activity; in a time of increasing demands on resources available for multilateral programmes—as he believed the 1990s would be—it was of still greater importance that tasks be rationally distributed among United Nations organizations, and capacities be co-ordinated in such a way as to gain maximum benefit from available resources. The United Nations of the 1990s would need to be a more integrated system, which could be furthered through intergovernmental consultation within the United Nations at an authoritative level that was better structured for decisions and action than currently, and through a permanent consultative structure among United Nations organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/215 without vote.

Programme planning

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 31/93 of 14 December 1976, 32/197 of 20 December 1977, 37/234 of 21 December 1982, 38/227 A and B of 20 December 1983 and 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and Economic and Social Council resolution 2008(LX) of 14 May 1976,

Recognizing the need to improve continuously the programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation process in the Organization and the need for the participation of Member States from an early stage and throughout the process,

Regulations on programme planning

In March 1987, the Secretary-General issued complete texts of Regulations of the United Nations Governing Programme Planning, the Programming Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation,⁽⁵⁾ adopted by the General Assembly in 1982,⁽⁶⁾ and the corresponding Rules formulated by him; the Regulations were the legislative directives governing planning, programming, monitoring and evaluation of all activities undertaken by the United Nations, irrespective of their financing.

In a September note,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General proposed supplementary rules and regulations to improve the planning, programming and budgeting process. Among them were a proposed revision to a regulation concerning the medium-term plan and a supplementary article concerning the budget process in budget and off-budget years. Under that article, the Secretary-General would submit, during off-budget years, an outline of the programme budget for the following biennium, containing an indication of preliminary resource estimates, priorities, real growth, and the size of the contingency fund. CPC was to consider the outline of the programme budget and submit its conclusions and recommendations to the General Assembly. On the basis of an Assembly decision, the Secretary-General would then prepare the proposed budget. ACABQ's mandate and functions were to be fully respected throughout the process. During budget years, the Secretary-General would submit his proposed budget to CPC and ACABQ; following its examination, both would submit conclusions and recommendations to the Assembly for final approval. The budget was to include expenditures related to political activities of a "perennial" character whose mandates were renewed annually, together with their related conference costs. The article was to include a section on the contingency fund and additional expenditures, the text of which remained to be inserted.

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's note, CPC⁽⁸⁾ recommended that a new article be added on the planning, programming and budgeting process, which should be governed by the following principles: strict adherence to the United Nations Charter, in particular Articles 17 and 18; full respect for the prerogatives of the principal United Nations organs with respect to the planning, programming and budgeting process, and for the authority and the prerogatives of the Secretary-General as the chief administrative officer of the Organization; and recognition of the need for Member States to participate in the budget preparation from its early stages and throughout the process. Other provisions suggested related to the medium-term plan.

ACABQ, in October,⁽⁹⁾ noted that the supplementary regulations proposed by the Secretary-General followed closely the 1986 Assembly resolution on the review of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations,⁽²⁾ as did the additions recommended by CPC. ACABQ also stated that it had been informed by the Secretary-General's representatives that it was not considered necessary to supplement the existing programme planning rules.

The Assembly, in resolution 42/215, endorsed the amendments as recommended by CPC, and stressed the need to implement fully all the regulations and rules, in particular those relating to the determination of priorities.

Programme budgeting

In the foreword to his proposed programme budget for the 1988-1989 biennium,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General noted that it was the first budget to be formulated and considered to an important extent, if not entirely, in accordance with the revised budgetary procedure agreed on by the General Assembly in 1986.⁽²⁾ The medium-term plan for 1984-1989 had been used to determine the budget content, and offices and departments had been asked to elaborate programme elements within the programme and subprogramme structure of the plan, its addenda and revisions, while giving thought at the same time to the programmes that would be needed in the 1990s, he said in the introduction to the proposed budget. Recent changes included provisions relating to the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,⁽¹¹⁾ the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,⁽¹²⁾ and the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990.⁽¹³⁾ The latest revisions to the plan included the addition of a major programme on programme planning and co-ordination as chapter 31. Other additions were two programmes under chapter 2, on special political questions and special mandates. For the first time, the Secretariat presented the activities under the regular programme of technical co-operation (section 24) in programmatic terms, rather than the retrospective format that had previously been used. African economic recovery and development, and the advancement of women were receiving priority in the proposed budget.

The proposed budget maintained mandated activities despite the reduced level of resources resulting from the financial crisis that had started in 1986 and from the Assembly's subsequent decision to reduce posts by 15 per cent by the end of 1989 while avoiding a negative impact on programmes. Thus, the volume of outputs had not been scaled down in proportion to the resource reductions in each programme; pending the completion of the restructuring of the Secretariat and the consequent reassignment of programme responsibilities at the end of 1989, and identification of priorities by Member States in the context of the medium-term plan for 1990-1995, it was the Secretariat's intention to maintain the current level of outputs as its programmatic framework. The quality of some of those outputs, however, suffered from continued resource shortages, the Secretary-General added.

In carrying out the measures foreseen by the Assembly, a period of time would be required before they were translated into definitive programmatic and budgetary changes, the Secretary-General stated; in particular, the results of the study on the structure and functioning of the intergovernmental machinery in the economic and social fields (see p. 948) would not be available before the 1988 Assembly session.

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's budget proposals, CPC(8) recommended that, in future, sections of the proposed budget should comply, to the extent possible, with all provisions of rule 104.4 (setting out standards for programme narratives for substantive activities in the programme budget) of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, and the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation.(5) It recommended that each budget fascicle contain a summary table listing those programmes accorded highest and lowest priority, the resources allocated to each, the percentage of total resources that allocation represented and the total percentage of resources within the highest and lowest priority categories; that information would allow CPC to set priorities in a responsible manner, in accordance with the regulations and rules on programme planning.

Submission of programme budget outline

In April 1987, the Secretary-General submitted a note on the timing of the outline of the programme budget,(14) following the General Assembly's 1986 request(2) that he put forward a proposal on the date for submission of the outline and on the date for final approval of the outline by the Assembly. By the same Assembly resolution, CPC was to consider the outline and submit to the Assembly, through the Fifth Committee, its conclusions and recommendations and, on the basis of a decision by the Assembly, the Secretary-General was to prepare his proposed programme budget for the following biennium; also, ACABQ was to consider the outline in accordance with its terms of reference.

Therefore, the Secretary-General said, taking account of the timing of the annual sessions of CPC and ACABQ, the outline for the following biennium should be submitted no later than 15 April of the off-budget year. In order to enable the Secretary-General to base his preparation of the proposed programme budget on the Assembly decision on the outline, he would need to know that decision as early as possible during the Assembly session in the off-budget year; he suggested 31 October as the date for final approval of the outline.

Medium-term plan

In September 1987, the Secretary-General submitted a note on the medium-term plan,(4) proposing to the General Assembly, through CPC and ACABQ, an extension of the current medium-term plan (1984-1989) and a new calendar for the preparation and adoption of the forthcoming one. He also transmitted some perspectives on the work of the United Nations during the next decade, which were intended to provide the framework for the preparation of the next medium-term plan. Following consideration of his note by CPC, ACABQ and the Assembly, the introduction to the medium-term plan would be drafted to reflect the views of Member States and would be submitted to the Assembly, through the same bodies, in 1988; a sound basis would then exist on which to proceed with the preparation of the plan itself, the Secretary-General said.

Originally, the current plan covered the period 1984-1989 and the next one the years 1990-1995, which was to be adopted by the Assembly in 1988. The Secretary-General proposed that the current plan be extended for a further two years, i.e., until 1991, and that the plan for the subsequent period be submitted to the Assembly for adoption in 1990. His proposal was based on the following considerations related to the programme planning process: instructions given to programme managers for preparing the 1990-1995 plan in December 1986 had had to be drafted prior to the adoption of the Assembly resolution on the review of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations(2) and were, therefore, essentially based on the structure of the current plan; also, since the plan was to be presented to CPC and ACABQ in April/May 1988, the initiation of the process in December 1986 had left little more than a year for the plan's completion; given the calendar of meetings of intergovernmental bodies, including efforts at biennialization, the process of consultation of those bodies on draft chapters had been initiated at the beginning of 1986, even prior to the issuance of the instructions, and some of the bodies had been requested in 1986 to consider simultaneously the programme of work to be incorporated in the 1988-1989 programme budget as well as objectives, strategies and priorities among sub-programmes for the medium-term plan; the situation with regard to consultations with intergovernmental bodies, as called for by the Assembly in 1986,(2) was such that a number of programmes in the plan would have to be proposed without such consultations; also, several internal reviews to be conducted by the Secretary-General pursuant to the 1986 Assembly resolution would not be completed before the end of 1987 and the review of the intergovernmental machinery undertaken by the Economic and Social Council was not scheduled for finalization before 1988; finally, the Organization's financial uncertainty was not conducive to finalizing a detailed plan for the 1990s.

A solution to that situation, the Secretary-General said, would need to satisfy the following basic requirements: the role of the medium-term plan as the principal policy directive of the United Nations should be not only preserved but enhanced and the activities of the Organization needed to be firmly based on a coherent set of principles and objectives; that meant that the new plan should be as meaningful as possible in terms of content, format and presentation. As emphasized by the Assembly in 1986,(2) wide and systematic consultations with Member States and with sectoral, technical, regional and central United Nations bodies, were essential for improving the programme planning and budgetary process. After the transitional budget for 1988-1989, programme budgets for the 1990s should reflect the results of implementation of the Assembly's 1986 resolution in terms of work programmes, priorities and methods. In accordance with that resolution, the Secretary-General would submit to CPC and ACABQ in 1988 an outline of the 1990-1991 budget, which was to contain proposals on priorities reflecting general trends of a broad sectoral nature. The basic reforms mandated by the Assembly in 1986, the Secretary-General felt, should be seen as finalization of the current plan and not as the beginning of the next; that would mean that the 1990-1991 programme budget, which would reflect those basic reforms, would be the culmination of the current planning period and the 1992-1993 budget would be the first to implement the new plan. That perception, the Secretary-General stated, had the added advantage of facilitating achievement of those objectives specified in the 1984-1989 plan, which might not have been achieved owing to delays in implementation of the 1986-1987 and 1988-1989 budgets, for financial and retrenchment reasons, respectively.

Having regard to the efforts made over the past years to co-ordinate the medium-term planning and budgeting cycles of the United Nations and the relevant agencies, and given the importance of continuing the synchronization achieved, the Secretary-General proposed that, exceptionally, the next medium-term plan cover the four-year period 1992-1995, rather than the prescribed six years.

Based on the Secretary-General's proposals, CPC recommended,(8) as an exceptional measure, that the Assembly consider favourably through 1991 the priorities and activities for the 1984-1989 medium-term plan, subject to as thorough and extensive revision of the plan as might be required by the legislative mandates enacted by the Assembly and by the functional and regional intergovernmental bodies within their spheres of competence. The next medium-term plan, for the period starting in 1992, would be considered by the Assembly in 1990. Should the Assembly so decide, CPC proposed that the following qualifications be attached to its decision: the revisions to the 1984-1989 plan should take into account the level of programme implementation; for that purpose, a quantitative and qualitative assessment of programme performance since adoption of the plan should be submitted to CPC in 1988. At that time, the Secretary-General should also submit to CPC a calendar of consultations with the intergovernmental bodies concerned for the preparation of the various chapters of the next plan, which should be improved in format, content and presentation; CPC should be apprised of the Secretary-General's proposals in that regard. CPC decided to defer consideration of the question of the duration of the next plan until 1988.

CPC also discussed and made recommendations on the cross-organizational review of the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system and programme analysis in the area of science and technology for development.

Attached to the Secretary-General's note was a paper on some perspectives on the work of the United Nations in the 1990s, outlining trends and possible responses by the Organization to it. CPC recommended that the Assembly, through its Main Committees, consider the paper at its 1987 session, together with a summary of the preliminary views expressed by CPC members, as part of the process of ensuring the full participation of Member States in the preparation of the introduction to the next medium-term plan, as mandated by the Assembly in 1986.(2) other Main Committees requesting their views.⁽¹⁵⁾ The replies were received in November.⁽¹⁶⁾ The Chairman of the First Committee stated that the Committee was not currently in a position to express definitive views and it would be in a better position to assess the situation more fully in 1988. The Special Political Committee Chairman transmitted two communications he had received in that connection:⁽¹⁷⁾ a letter of 11 November from Poland, also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam, proposing that the establishment of an international organization on co-operation in outer space be included in the medium-term plan under the chapter on political and Security Council affairs; and a letter dated 18 November from Guatemala in its capacity as Chairman of the Group of 77 developing countries. In the latter, the Group expressed the opinion that the Secretary-General's paper provided the basis for a debate on the medium-term plan, but was not a comprehensive or definitive document as it was limited in its scope and projections and did not take into account priorities in economic, social, humanitarian, political and security matters; the paper disregarded the concerns of the developing world and existing mandates of the Organization.

Two communications each were also transmitted by the Fourth Committee⁽¹⁸⁾ and Sixth Committee⁽¹⁶⁾ Chairmen. Cuba, in a 28 October letter, expressed the opinion that decolonization should be reflected in the Organization's programme for the 1990s, and the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, on 30 October, expressed serious concern at the absence of any reference to the tasks remaining in the decolonization process, especially with regard to Namibia. Argentina, as Chairman of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States, in a letter of 16 November to the Sixth Committee Chairman, said the codification and progressive development of international law should be adequately included in the medium-term plan. The United States, as Chairman of the Group of Western European and Other States, on 20 November, said the Group was not prepared at that time to comment on the plan beyond noting that it attached continuing importance to the timely publication of important documents of particular interest.

The Second Committee Chairman stated that it was the Committee's understanding that, in addition to comments reflected in the Committee's summary records, there would be an opportunity for Member States to comment further on the paper as part of the consultative process in formulating the introduction to the next medium-term plan. The Chairman of the Third Committee said there was general agreement that the Secretary-General's paper needed deeper study and that delegations would report back in 1988.

Reiterating the importance of the medium-term plan as the principal policy directive of the United Nations, the General Assembly, in resolution 42/215, requested the Secretary-General, when submitting in 1988 the draft introduction to the plan, to take into account all views by Member States on his paper. In resolution 42/211, the Assembly requested him, in implementing certain recommendations of the Group of 18 and particularly when preparing revised estimates for 1988-1989 (see p. 1104) and proposals for revision of the medium-term plan for 1984-1989, to take into account a number of guidelines put forward in the resolution.

Introduction to the next medium-term plan

As provided for by regulation 3.7 of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation,⁽⁵⁾ the medium-term plan was to be preceded by an introduction that would constitute a key integral element in the planning process and would highlight in a co-ordinated manner policy orientations, indicate plan objectives and strategy and trends reflecting priorities, and contain the Secretary-General's proposals on priorities. The General Assembly had called in 1986⁽²⁾ for submission of the introduction to the plan to Member States for wide consultations. In a September 1987 note on supplementary rules and regulations necessary for improving the planning, programming and budgeting process,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General proposed accordingly a revision to regulation 3.7 to include submission of the introduction to Member States. The amendment was endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 42/215, as recommended by CPC.⁽⁸⁾

In another September note, on the medium-term plan,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General said he believed that consultations based on the perspectives on the work of the United Nations in the 1990s, which he attached to his note, would lead to the formulation of a more meaningful and useful introduction to the next plan. Preliminary discussions in 1987 on that basis with CPC, ACABQ and the General Assembly, as well as with the specialized agencies, would lead to the preparation of a draft introduction to be submitted to CPC and ACABQ in May 1988; that draft, once reviewed, would permit the issuance of instructions to programme managers on the preparation of the next plan, which would thus be a document benefiting from a degree of political guidance not available before. Such consultations, together with the work that the programme managers had already undertaken in late 1986 and which would be most valuable for the review of the current medium-term plan so as to extend it for two more years (1990-1991), would also be useful in guiding the Secretariat in developing the proposals on the outline of the 1990-1991 programme budget.

Should the Assembly accept the proposal to defer adoption of the next medium-term plan until 1990, the sequence would be as follows: after review of the perspectives on the next decade by CPC and ACABQ, the views of ACC members would be sought; proposals for revisions of the current plan would be submitted to CPC and ACABQ in May 1988 and would then, together with CPC's and ACABQ's recommendations, be considered by the Assembly at its 1988 session, together with the outline of the 1990-1991 budget; CPC and ACABQ would consider in 1988 the draft introduction concomitantly and would also consider the Secretary-General's proposals regarding the calendar of consultations with intergovernmental bodies on the plan's major programmes. Such consultations, taking into account those taking place in 1987, would be concluded in 1988 and 1989. The plan proposals to be considered by the Assembly in 1990 would be submitted through CPC and ACABQ for substantive services, through the latter for common services, and through the Committee on Conferences and ACABQ for conference services.

At its 1987 session,(8) CPC recommended that it consider in 1988 the draft introduction to the next medium-term plan.

Programme evaluation

Following consideration of four reports by the Secretary-General-progress reports on in-depth evaluation of the human rights programme (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVII) and of the programme on development issues and policies,(2) and reports on the implementation of CPC's 1984 recommendations(3) on technical co-operation activities of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in the field of manufactures(4) and on the work of, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development(5)—CPC at its 1987 session(6) noted that much progress had been made in the development of an evaluation system within the United Nations and stressed the importance and necessity of further integrating evaluation into the programme planning, budgeting and monitoring cycle with a view to improving and strengthening programme formulation and implementation. It recommended that evaluation studies be appropriately timed in order to be relevant to the programme cycle; that evaluation methodologies be further refined; and that evaluation reports present recommendations in two separate categories—those falling within the Secretary-General's purview for implementation and those requiring consideration, approval or action by intergovernmental bodies. Those recommendations were endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 42/215.

Joint Inspection Unit

During 1987, JIU issued six reports and two notes on the inspection, review or evaluation of selected programmes of the United Nations system. The reports dealt with technical co-operation between UNDP and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC)(7) and between UNDP and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific;(8) technical co-operation activities of UNIDO;(9) autonomous research institutes of the United Nations; technical co-operation between organizations of the United Nations and the least developed countries;(11) and problems of storage and its costs in the organizations of the United Nations system.(12) The notes were on the establishment of an internal evaluation system in the International Maritime Organization (IMO)(13) and on cost-benefit of the construction of an ECLAC office. The report on UNIDO and the two notes were submitted directly to the bodies concerned, while the other five reports were the subject of written comments by the Secretary-General or ACC and were considered by the Main Committees of the Assembly or UNDP, as appropriate.

JIU activities from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987 were described in its nineteenth report to the General Assembly(15) and its activities during the second half of 1987 in its report covering 1987/88.(16) The 1986/87 report annexed a list of themes and sub-themes under which JIU reports and notes had been written.

The JIU work programme for 1987 and the nucleus of the programme for 1988-1989 were transmitted to the General Assembly in February 1987 by the Secretary-General.(17) The work programme displayed two new features: it identified studies that were evaluative and gave advance notice of a number of studies JIU planned to undertake in the forthcoming two years. The first feature would allow Member States to determine whether JIU was complying with its statute as well as with recommendation 63(18) of the Group of 18, which called on JIU to put more emphasis on the evaluation aspect of its work; the second feature would provide an occasion for Member States to make timely commentary on the nucleus of the future work programmes, thereby using one avenue to give effect to recommendation 65 of the Group, which stated that the Assembly should give JIU greater guidance on its work programme with respect to the United Nations. A third new feature, JIU said, could be a brief explanatory note to each study, describing its aims, objectives, focus and target groups.

Assessing its activities,⁽¹⁵⁾ JIU gave an overview of its work programme, the preparation and quality of its reports, follow-up procedures concerning the implementation of recommendations and the impact of its work, and suggested ways in which, with the assistance of Member States and its participating organizations, it could help bring about improvements in those areas and improve the quality of the Unit's work.

Five years before, JIU had begun a number of internal studies designed to improve its efficiency and effectiveness, examining selected past activities, suggesting improved methodology for preparing its work programme, developing standards and methods for preparing its reports, and introducing new techniques for the follow-up to its reports. The opportunity to contribute to the work of the Group of 18 and discussion with the Group Chairman, together with the recommendations of the Group,⁽¹⁸⁾ also helped cast clear light on the future orientation of the Unit's work.

With regard to the development of its work programme, JIU said the procedure for selecting studies, which had worked well in general, needed some fine tuning. A review of the sources of topics that had been included in its work programme over the past several years revealed that there was perhaps insufficient input by bodies external to the Unit; JIU would welcome more regular and frequent requests from legislative organs for specific studies arising from deliberations in those bodies, a move which, it said, would unconditionally warrant inclusion of those studies in its work programme and would encourage active participation by Member States in the consideration of JIU reports, a sine qua non for serious follow-up action.

A more studied and co-ordinated approach by the organizations participating in JIU would also upgrade the quality of its work programme; here, JIU had in mind that ACC would suggest topics that were system-wide in nature or the results of which might impact more than one organization. JIU also urged those bodies of the United Nations system concerned with budgetary control, investigation, co-ordination and evaluation to make suggestions regularly.

As important as contributions from outside JIU were, the more intensive and important effort would have to come from the Unit itself, which must continue to supply the greater share of topics and on which final responsibility for approving its work programme rested; ongoing review had led the Unit to conclude that the inclusion of studies in its work programme needed to come under much closer scrutiny by more methodical observation of its internal guidelines and by going even beyond those guidelines to adopt a more comprehensive and incisive method of investigation. It was clear, JIU stated, that many more studies would have to be carried out on efficiency, the proper use of funds, and management and methods improvement.

To give concrete expression to those ideas, JIU said it would move from an individualistic approach to a more collective one in selecting and naming inspectors to studies; to that end, the Unit would devote two weeks immediately proceeding its semi-annual meetings to a collective, detailed examination and analysis of topics proposed for its studies. Each topic would be presented in the form of a written brief, sufficiently detailed and explanatory, as that would allow the inspectors to determine its relative importance to other topics proposed and its likely contribution to the organization or organizations concerned or to the United Nations system as a whole. Proposed studies that did not meet established criteria, including the presentation guidelines, would fall by the wayside.

In preparing reports, JIU inspectors usually pursued the following lines of investigation as required for the specific type of report being prepared: determination of objectives of the entity being reviewed or evaluated; analysis of the extent to which objectives were being attained and the approved programme was being implemented; examination of the major problems troubling the entity; a determination of the suitability of staff, organizational structure, management systems and procedures, etc.; and development of optional solutions and a determination of the most feasible. JIU believed that a more collegial approach to project preparation would help improve investigations.

As an economy measure, JIU intended in future to issue notes instead of reports whenever possible; notes could be an effective medium of transmission when decisions on recommendations could be made by executive heads without governing body authorization; they were cheaper to produce because they could be submitted in one language only and action was likely to be more rapid.

Concerning follow-up reports by the Secretary-General on implementation of its recommendations, JIU proposed that they be issued earlier in the year, in July rather than in October/November, to allow for meaningful discussion in the Fifth Committee and between JIU and the Secretariat. It also suggested that all organizations report systematically to their governing bodies on implementation of JIU recommendations and that an annex to the main report be prepared in tabular form giving the disposition of recommendations.

During the year, JIU maintained contact with the International Civil Service Commission, the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions of ACC, the Panel of External Auditors, and the management and audit services of several secretariats either on general issues or on specific studies. In March, it met at Geneva with the Director of External Audit responsible for the audits of FAO, ILO, IMO, UNESCO, WFP and WHO, in accordance with recommendation 67 of the Group of 18,(18) which had suggested increased co-operation between JIU and the External Auditors.

In September 1987,(19) the Secretary-General forwarded, in accordance with procedures established by the Assembly in 1977,(20) his annual report on the implementation of previous JIU recommendations which were of interest to the Assembly. The report included information on recommendations relating to 1986 JIU reports on the location of United Nations information centres;(21) the role of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Africa;(22) structure and co-ordination of field representation of organizations of the United Nations system;(23) and co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States.(24)

ACC, in April 1987,(25) expressed the hope that JIU, in the context of its self-evaluation exercise, would consider ways to provide executive heads with information on the scope and focus of the studies to be undertaken by the inspectors, and suggested that that information could be provided in the form of annotations to the Unit's work programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/218 without vote.

Joint Inspection Unit

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/259 of 18 December 1985 and 41/213 of 19 December 1986, improvement contained in section VI thereof, and noting the observations and suggestions of Member States thereon,

Recognizing the need to avoid duplication and overlapping in the activities of subsidiary organs of the General Assembly,

Convinced that the General Assembly should give the Joint Inspection Unit greater guidance on its programme of work with respect to the United Nations, Convinced also that more systematic follow-up activity regarding the implementation of recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit would increase the usefulness of the inspection function, particularly in encouraging constructive dialogue between the Unit and the various organizations of the United Nations system,

Bearing in mind the recommendations regarding the Joint Inspection Unit in the report of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations,

1. Invites the Joint Inspection Unit to introduce immediately the improvements recommended in section VI of its report in order to increase the quality and effectiveness of its reports;

2. Calls upon the Joint Inspection Unit to adopt a more collective approach in the preparation of its programme of work, in the conduct of its work and in the writing of individual reports;

3. Requests the Joint Inspection Unit to include in its annual report a section on its findings regarding the implementation of its recommendations;

4. Invites the Joint Inspection Unit, with due regard for its other responsibilities, to include in its proposed programme of work the provision of advice to participating organizations on their methods for internal evaluation and the conduct of more ad hoc evaluations of programmes and activities;

5. Requests the Joint Inspection Unit to include in its next report the guidelines it follows for selecting, conducting and reporting on its inspections;

6. Also requests the Joint Inspection Unit to ensure that its reports are co-ordinated, as far as possible, with the programmes of work of the various bodies of the United Nations and that they are submitted in a timely manner;

7. Further requests the Joint Inspection Unit, in exercising its functions, powers and responsibilities, to take fully into account the mandates of other relevant bodies, especially the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, the Board of Auditors and the International Civil Service Commission;

8. Invites the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, within their respective mandates, to provide the General Assembly with their views on the future programme of work of the Joint Inspection Unit;

9. Requests the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to advise the General Assembly on those cases in which the Joint Inspection Unit might perform ad hoc external evaluations of programmes and activities;

10. Urges Member States to apply the highest standards in selecting candidates for appointment as inspectors, to give special emphasis to relevant experience and qualifications in the fields of personnel management, public administration, inspection and evaluation, and to give consideration to different disciplines;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the appropriate bodies of the United Nations system all reports of the Joint Inspection Unit on matters within their respective areas of competence and to include reference to all reports of the Unit in the documentation listed in the annotated preliminary agendas of the General Assembly and other United Nations bodies under the most appropriate substantive agenda item;

12. Requests all bodies of the United Nations system to examine closely those reports of the Joint Inspection Unit which are within their respective areas of competence and to comment, as appropriate, on the recommendations contained therein;

13. Requests the Joint Inspection Unit to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/884) without vote, 27 November (meeting 46); draft by Canada, for Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.6), orally revised; agenda item 119.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 6, 10-12, 15, 18, 23, 45, 46; plenary 99.

Given its 1986 decision to defer consideration of the agenda item on JIU,(26) the Assembly in 1987 considered JIU reports which had been available in 1986 and took note of them, together with 1987 reports. By decision 42/455 of 21 December, the Assembly took note of JIU's report on its activities from 1 July 1985 to 30 June 1986,(18) 1986(18) and 1987(19) reports by the Secretary-General on implementation of JIU recommendations, notes by the Secretary-General transmitting to the Assembly JIU's work programmes for 1986(18) and 1987,(17) and several 1985 and 1986 reports of JIU: on computer use in United Nations organizations at Geneva(27) and the related comments of the executive heads of the organizations as well as those of the Secretary-General;(28) on reform in the United Nations and a related note by the Secretary-General(29) and comments by ACC;(30) on management of interpretation services in the United Nations system,(31) with comments of the Secretary-General and ACC; on cash management in the United Nations and four specialized agencies, with ACC comments;(32) and two reports on internal evaluation in United Nations organizations,(33) with comments from the Secretary-General and ACC.(34)

In decision 42/446, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's notes transmitting two JIU reports, on technical co-operation between UNDP and the regional economic commissions,(35) and between UNDP and ECLAC,(36) and the Secretary-General's comments on the former.(37)

The Fifth Committee Chairman introduced a draft resolution suggesting the renaming of JIU as "Joint Inspection and Evaluation Unit";(38) however, since he had not had time to undertake the necessary consultations, he decided not to ask the Committee to take action on it.

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the UN system

In an April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,(1) the Secretary-General also dealt with harmonization of the programme budgets of United Nations organizations, called for by the Group of 18 in 1986 in its recommendation 13.(2) The General Assembly, by a 1985 resolution on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA),(3) had also recommended that further efforts be made to achieve maximum possible standardization and comparability in the budgetary and administrative practices of all organizations concerned. In 1986, owing to time constraints, the Assembly had decided to postpone consideration of the agenda item on administrative and budgetary co-ordination until its 1987 session.(4)

Agreements had been worked out under ACC auspices over the years to harmonize budgeting practices and budget presentation among the organizations of the system, the Secretary-General said. As stated by ACC in 1986,(5) those agreements constituted a solid basis for harmonizing budgeting practices and for improved transparency and comparability of budget documents, to the extent that those aims were compatible with individual governing bodies' needs for consistency in the presentation of successive budgets. As noted also by ACC,(6) the JIU work programme included a comparative study, scheduled for completion in 1987, of the budgets of the organizations of the system.

In recommendation 28,(2) the Group of 18 had recommended that the format for the presentation of resources pertaining to the regional commissions should be harmonized in future programme budgets (to include costs of administration, conference and general services for the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) budget section). Under the current arrangement, resources for administration, conference and general services for different United Nations entities at Geneva, including ECE, were combined and administered by the United Nations Office at Geneva (UNOG) and the costs were included in the sections of the programme budget dealing with UNOG; for the other regional commissions those resources were included in their regular budgets. The integrated management system had proved to be effective and more efficient than having the resources administered by each of the entities located at Geneva; in order to provide the required information without losing the advantage of integrated management, the current system would be continued in the 1988-1989 programme budget, but the resources provided in UNOG's budget relating to ECE would be indicated in the introduction to section 10 which pertained to ECE.

In accordance with recommendation 62 of the Group of 18,(7) the Secretary-General had discouraged the practice of transferring extra-budgetary posts to the regular budget; accordingly, no request for the transfer of such posts was included in his proposals for the 1988-1989 budget.

In an October 1987 report to the General Assembly on administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the United Nations system,(8) ACABQ provided comparative data and comments on the budget of the specialized agencies and the United Nations and related matters, in accordance with a 1981 Assembly decision.(9) The report contained nine tables providing comparative data on the following: total amounts of approved regular budgets, including supplementary estimates, 1979-1988; total net contributions of Member States actually payable under approved regular budgets, including supplementary estimates, 1979-1988; established posts, 1986-1988; regular budget contributions to technical co-operation activities, 1986-1988; extrabudgetary funds administered by the United Nations system of organizations, cash payments received and expenditures, 1985-1986; working capital funds, 1988; scales of assessment applicable in 1988; and collection of contributions, 1986-1987.

The regular budgets (or budget estimates) of the United Nations, specialized agencies (excluding IFAD) and IAEA for 1988 amounted to $1,980,203,391, of which $1,920,469,004 was to be covered by assessed contributions. In addition, depending on decisions by the Assembly and the Security Council, further assessed contributions for the United Nations were likely to arise in 1988 for peace-keeping operations; for the 12-month period through October 1987 the total amount assessed for that purpose was $184.7 million.

The United Nations, the specialized agencies and IAEA estimated that their regular programme of technical co-operation in 1988 would amount to $427.2 million, or 21.6 per cent of their combined regular budgets, compared to 21.7 per cent in 1987.(5)

The total number of established posts authorized or requested under the regular budgets of the specialized agencies and IAEA for 1988 was 13,597, or 175 more than the 1987 total of 13,422. The number of established posts authorized or requested under the regular budget of the United Nations for 1988 was 11,169, basically unchanged from the 1987 total. Accordingly, a grand total of 24,766 established posts for 1988 had been authorized or requested under the regular combined budgets, which represented an increase of 175 or 0.7 per cent, compared to the 1987 total of 24,591 (excluding IFAD).

In addition to those resources, the United Nations and most agencies had a substantial number of posts funded by extrabudgetary resources; combined regular budget and extrabudgetary posts totalled 54,289.

Total outstanding contributions as at 30 September 1987 equalled 65.3 per cent of total net contributions of Member States actually payable in respect of 1987, as compared to a corresponding figure of 51.4 per cent as at 30 September 1986.

An inventory of arrangements for programme co-ordination in the United Nations system was issued in November 1987.(10)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 42/454 of 21 December 1987, the General Assembly took note with appreciation of ACABQ's 1987 report, as well as its report submitted in 1986.(5) It requested the Secretary-General to refer those reports to the executive heads of the United Nations organizations, through ACC, and decided to transmit them to the Board of Auditors, the Panel of External Auditors, CPC, ICSC and JIU for information.

Chapter III

United Nations officials

In April 1987, the Secretary-General outlined measures he had taken or planned for implementing the 1986 recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18). Those recommendations had far-reaching implications for the Organization's personnel, he said; reform and renewal of the United Nations would exact the highest quality of service from the Secretariat, with the same—indeed better—results being expected from a significantly reduced staff. Rather than lowering morale, the financial crisis of the Organization (see Chapter I of this section) should provide an opportunity to reorient personnel policies and practices, within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations.

In accordance with a Group of 18 recommendation to reduce staff, particularly in the higher echelons, action was being taken towards a 25 per cent reduction in the number of regular budget posts at the levels of Under-Secretary-General (USG) and Assistant Secretary-General (ASG). The continuing shortfall in financial resources also made it necessary to extend the recruitment freeze imposed in 1986.

As at 30 June 1987, United Nations Secretariat staff members appointed for a year or more totalled 14,081; of those, 10,235 occupied regular budget posts, while 3,846 were paid from extra-budgetary sources.

The General Assembly, by resolution 42/220 A, established new desirable ranges for the geographical distribution of Professional staff, and, by resolution 42/220 C, requested the Secretary-General to consider introducing additional measures in order to achieve by 1990 the target of 30 per cent for the representation of women in Professional posts subject to geographical distribution. The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1987/19, reiterated its request to Member States to continue supporting United Nations efforts to increase the proportion of women by nominating more women candidates, and requested United Nations organs to improve the mechanisms of vacancy announcements.

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), which made recommendations and in certain instances decisions affecting United Nations personnel, held two sessions in 1987, both in New York. The Assembly, by resolution 42/221 on the report of ICSC, approved revised rates of staff assessment for staff in the Professional and higher categories and requested ICSC to continue examining the methodology for calculating the net remuneration margin of the United Nations and the best-paid national civil service. On the basis of other findings and recommendations of the Commission, the Assembly decided that the conditions of service of Professional staff should be reviewed. As an interim measure, it approved for 1988 and 1989 modifications to the post adjustment system at selected duty stations. It also approved modifications of the education grant for staff at locations where educational facilities were not available or inadequate. Following the Commission's adoption of 11 principles and guidelines for performance appraisal and recognition of merit of staff, the Assembly requested it to report in 1992 on measures taken in response to its recommendations. Expressing concern over actions by some organizations which had led to disparities in the United Nations system, the Assembly urged the organizations concerned to revise their rules and regulations so that they conformed with ICSC decisions.

The Assembly considered a report by the Secretary-General on United Nations staff detained or reported missing and, by resolution 42/219, called for scrupulous respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations system.

Based on recommendations of the Pension Board, the Assembly, by resolution 42/222, approved changes in the pension adjustment system for the years 1988 to 1990. It also approved an increase in the number of members of the Pension Board from 21 to 33.

Steps were being taken to establish a revised and simplified system of administration of justice within the Secretariat. The Assembly, by resolution 42/220 B, requested the Secretary-General to continue improving procedures for resolving disputes and appeals, and to continue reviewing the feasibility of establishing an independent office of Ombudsman. By resolution 42/217, it asked him to arrange for consultations among Member States to examine the feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal by combining the United Nations Administrative Tribunal and the Administrative Tribunal of the International Labour Organisation (ILO).

By decision 42/453, the Assembly concurred with the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on arrangements for official travel, co-operation agreements with airlines and inter-agency co-operation with regard to organization and methods of official travel. With regard to standards of accommodation for air travel, the Assembly, by resolution 42/214, decided that all individuals, with the exception of the Secretary-General and the heads of delegations of the least developed countries to Assembly sessions, would be required to travel at the class immediately below first class.

Personnel management

In 1987, the General Assembly took action on several personnel management questions, based on information provided by the Secretary-General and bodies such as ICSC, ACABQ and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). Among the issues considered were staff composition, the status of women in the Secretariat, geographical distribution of staff, recruitment policy and vacancy management, career development and training, job classification, promotion policy and performance evaluation, post reductions, staff mobility, and harmonization of staff rules and regulations.

Comments on those matters were submitted in writing to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee by representatives of the staff unions and associations, the Co-ordinating Committee for Independent Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations system (CCISUA) and the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA).

In response to recommendation 41 made in 1986 by the Group of 18,⁽¹⁾ a review was initiated of delegation of authority in personnel matters and other fields, such as financial matters, which affected human resources management, the Secretary-General stated in an April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations.⁽²⁾ The review would concentrate on delegation of authority to Secretariat departments and offices, including the regional commissions, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements. Consideration would also be given to the authority delegated to the heads of a number of subsidiary organs, which derived from Assembly resolutions or decisions. If, as a consequence of that review, it was considered desirable to make revisions to the existing delegation of authority, the Secretary-General would take the necessary initiatives.

Also in response to recommendation 41, the name of the Office of Personnel Services was changed to the Office of Human Resources Management. Other steps taken included recruitment planning, classification of posts, advertising of vacancies up to the D-1 (Principal Officer) level, competitive examinations for external recruitment at the junior Professional levels and for promotion to those levels from other categories and the development of career planning mechanisms on the basis of occupational groups. Those mechanisms were already in place for staff in the General Service and related categories at other duty stations. At the same time, the Secretary-General said, more transparent methods of selection for appointment and promotion had been introduced. For instance, the system of vacancy management and redeployment of staff recently-introduced to fill essential posts vacant as a result of the recruitment freeze ensured, in particular, that staff were selected for vacant posts through a process involving a review by the appointment and promotion machinery.

Staff composition

In October 1987, the Secretary-General presented his annual report to the General Assembly on the composition of the United Nations Secretariat—by nationality, sex and type of appointment—for the period covering 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987.⁽³⁾ Staff members appointed for a year or more totalled 14,081 on 30 June, of whom 10,235 were paid from the regular budget and 3,846 from extrabudgetary sources.

Staff in the Professional category and above numbered 3,820; staff in the General Service and related categories were 9,326; and technical co-operation project personnel numbered 935.

The suspension of recruitment introduced on 21 March 1986 as part of the response to the Organization's financial difficulties (see Chapter I of this section) had temporarily left the Secretary-General without his most important means to influence directly the composition of the staff by nationality and sex.

During the reporting period, 49 appointments had been made to posts subject to geographical distribution; they included 23 authorized exceptions to the suspension of recruitment, normally made to fill posts, including those at the upper echelon, considered indispensable for the smooth functioning of the Organization. Other appointments resulted from recruitment action initiated before the suspension of recruitment, the temporary extension of the contracts of current staff beyond one year and the regularization of the status of other staff.

On 30 June, there were 10 unrepresented Member States, compared with 12 on 30 June 1986 and 25 underrepresented Members, compared with 24 in mid-1986. Changes in representation were due not only to appointments and separations of staff but also to other factors such as changes in the status of nationals of Members concerned, introduction of new desirable ranges and suspension of recruitment.

During the reporting period, 14 women were appointed to posts subject to geographical distribution, accounting for 28.6 per cent of all appointments, compared with 18.1 per cent the previous year.

Geographical distribution of staff in the Professional category and above

The question of equitable geographical distribution was considered by ICSC in its annual report(4) in the context of recruitment policy. The Commission had before it data on unrepresented, underrepresented and overrepresented countries, particularly as they applied to the five largest organizations of the common system, i.e., the United Nations, ILO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Health Organization (WHO), which provided the basis for its recommendations on improving recruitment sources from unrepresented and underrepresented countries. ICSC concluded that the criteria used to define equitable geographical distribution could be established by the larger organizations of the system, while for the smaller ones such distribution should be set in accordance with their individual programmes and mandates. The majority of unrepresented countries tended to fall into several main categories: new States; small island States, oil-producing States, mainly in the Middle East; and least developed countries. The Commission recommended that the organizations cooperate more closely to develop a concerted programme for unrepresented countries including: launching a publicity campaign to present employment opportunities in the system; organizing inter-agency missions to unrepresented countries or regions; creating internships and fellowships for on-the-job training; encouraging the establishment of junior Professional, associate and youth programmes; and arranging the recruitment of Professional staff on a secondment basis for countries unable to spare their trained cadres for more than a few years. The Commission recommended that organizations should consider giving priority in their recruitment efforts to unrepresented and underrepresented countries along the lines established by the United Nations and WHO.

Desirable ranges

In accordance with a 1986 Assembly request,(5) the Secretary-General submitted in a September 1987 report(6) updated calculations on desirable ranges for the geographical distribution of staff in the Professional category and above, taking into account the views expressed by Member States during the 1986 Assembly session.

The existing calculation of the desirable ranges was based on a figure of 3,350 posts, set by the General Assembly in 1980.(7) In 1986,(8) the Secretary-General had informed the Assembly that he had established interim ranges, based on a figure of 3,000 posts, to take into account the reduction in the number of posts subject to geographical distribution resulting from a transfer of 350 such posts from the United Nations Secretariat to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) on 1 January 1986. In view of the 15 per cent post reduction recommended by the Group of 18, he established new interim ranges for 1987 to be used as a basis for planning recruitment, when it resumed; since the reduction in the number of posts under the regular budget was to be carried out over a three-year period, the new interim ranges were based on a figure of 2,700 posts, i.e., 10 per cent less than the 1986 base figure. On 30 June, the number of occupied posts subject to geographical distribution was 2,594.

For the following biennium, the number of posts subject to geographical distribution was estimated to be 2,842 under the regular budget and 217 extrabudgetary, i.e., a total of 3,059 posts; that figure would change as the total number of regular budget posts was reduced over the three-year period 1987-1989, in accordance with the 1986 Assembly resolution on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations.(9) For the purpose of the report and if no other changes occurred, the figure of 3,059 posts would be reduced to 2,633 posts by the end of 1989, assuming a 15 per cent reduction.

The concept of parity between the weight given to the membership and contribution factors had been introduced in 1979:(10) in 1980 the Assembly introduced new weights.(7) As a result of the admission of five new Members since 1980, there had been a small change in the relative weights of the membership and Contribution factors: membership, 36.83 per cent; contribution, 56.01 per cent; and population, 7.16 per cent.

In 1986,(11) there had been general agreement on the appropriateness of incorporating a share of the population factor into the range of each Member State and on a method of doing so. That change would make the system of ranges more rigid and would allow for less flexibility, the Secretary-General stated; in the past, the population factor had been applied to each region as a whole and was not allocated to any Member State.

Also in 1986, the Secretary-General had suggested that there might be merit in having a lesser degree of flexibility upwards from the mid-point than downwards. As more Member States became represented or came within their range, the degree to which others could be above the upper limit of their range had to decline, he said in his September 1987 report. The general feeling was that the flexibility, now 15 per cent, should be the same both upwards and downwards.

There were two procedures for adjusting the desirable ranges of Member States between general reviews, the Secretary-General said, apart from the changes resulting from changes in their assessed contributions to the budget: one took into account the admission of new Member States; and the second, introduced in 1980,(7) took into account increases in the number of posts subject to geographical distribution.

In order to demonstrate the effect of the changes being considered, the Secretary-General provided in his report new calculations for the different options put forward; they were calculated on base figures of 2,700 posts, a reduction of 10 per cent from the existing base figure following the departure of the UNDO staff, and of 2,550 posts, i.e., a 15 per cent reduction.

In response to recommendation 55 by which the Group of 18 in 1986 had stated that it was not desirable to have posts reserved for specific nationalities, the Secretary-General said in an April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations(2) that he intended to maintain adequate representation for all Member States, while ensuring that no post was regarded as the exclusive preserve of any one State.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/220 A without vote.

Composition of the Secretariat

I

Recalling Articles 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, Recalling its resolutions 35/210 of 17 December 1980, 41/206 A of 11 December 1986 and 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat,

Recognizing the importance of maintaining a qualified, independent and geographically balanced international civil service,

Concerned about the negative effect of the reduction of posts and of the recruitment freeze on the geographical distribution of the Secretariat,

1. Urges the Secretary-General to keep under review the freeze on the recruitment of external candidates with a view to lifting the freeze at the earliest possible date and to report to the General Assembly on possible alternatives to the policy of suspending such recruitment;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, whenever making appointments to posts subject to geographical distribution, to make every effort to recruit nationals of unrepresented and underrepresented Member States and candidates successful in the national competitive examinations, taking into consideration also paragraph 4 of resolution 41/206 A;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, as part of the elaboration of the career development policies and practices in the Secretariat and bearing in mind Article 101 of the Charter and resolution 41/213, to give urgent consideration to the necessity of increasing the mobility of staff in the Professional category and, in particular, the movement of such staff between Headquarters offices and offices in the field;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General, bearing in mind resolution 41/213, to conduct a comprehensive review of the career development policies and practices for all staff, in particular staff in the General Service category;

II

Recalling its resolution 41/206 B of 11 December 1986 on the composition of the upper echelons of the Secretariat and its resolution 41/213 by which it, inter alia, approved the recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations, in particular those concerning the upper echelons of the Secretariat, that is, the Under-Secretary-General and Assistant Secretary-General levels,

Reaffirming that no post should be considered the exclusive preserve of any Member State or group of States and that the Secretary-General should ensure that this principle is applied faithfully in accordance with the principle of equitable geographical distribution,

Taking note of the negative effect of the reduction of posts on the representation of Member States in the upper echelons of the Secretariat,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in order to preserve the principles of equitable geographical distribution and of rotation in the upper echelons of the Secretariat, to ensure that equal opportunity is given to candidates of all Member States when making appointments to all posts in the upper echelons;

2. Reaffirms that the Secretary-General, in making appointments to the upper echelons, should strive to appoint only a candidate from a Member State other than that of the incumbent to be replaced in order to reinforce the principle of rotation in, the upper echelons of the Secretariat, unless there are exceptional circumstances, in the light of Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to review the composition of the upper echelons of the Secretariat in the context of the relevant recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations, with particular reference to length of service in the upper echelons;

III

Recalling its resolutions 35/210, 40/258 A of 18 December 1985 and 41/206 C of 11 December 1986 and other relevant resolutions,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the system of desirable ranges for the geographical distribution of staff in the Professional category and above,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to base the desirable ranges for all Member States, with effect from 1 January 1988, on the following criteria:

(a) The base figure for the calculations will initially be 2,700;

(b) The weight of the membership factor will be 40 per cent of the base figure;

(c) The population factor, which will be allotted a weight of 5 per cent, will be directly related to the population of Member States and posts subject to this factor will be distributed among Member States in proportion to their population;

(d) The contribution factor will be based on the distribution of the remaining posts among Member States in proportion to the scale of assessments;

(e) The upper and lower limits of each range will be based on a flexibility of 15 per cent upwards and downwards from the mid-point of the desirable range, but not less than 4.8 posts up and down, the upper limit of the range being not less than 14 posts;

(f) The base figure will be adjusted whenever the actual number of posts subject to geographical distribution increases or decreases by 100, the weights of the three factors being maintained;

2. Decides to review the desirable ranges at its forty-fifth session, taking into account the concept of parity between the membership and contribution factors and the views of Member States on this concept and also giving due consideration to the requirement of raising the percentage weight of the population factor;

IV

Requests the Secretary-General to review the content and presentation of the annual report on the composition of the Secretariat, taking into account the views expressed by Member States at the forty-second session, and to include in the next report the action taken to implement the present resolution.

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/885) without vote, 19 December (meeting 67); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.24), following informal consultations; agenda item 122.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 17, 20-23, 29-32, 34, 35, 47, 50, 67; plenary 99.

In the Committee, Nigeria proposed replacing paragraph 1 (d) of section III with a provision stating that the distribution of the remaining posts among Member States would be based on the contribution factor in proportion to the scale of assessments. After several delegations expressed their views and the Vice-Chairman indicated that the proposed amendment would alter the meaning of the text and therefore upset the consensus, Nigeria withdrew its proposal.

Japan voiced serious reservations about paragraph 2 of section III; it considered it unacceptable to review desirable ranges in 1990, on the same cycle as the scale of assessments. The problem of under-represented countries was the chief concern and there was the need for stability, which would not be attained by frequent reviews. France also questioned the advisability of a review in 1990; it would take more than three years to attain a desirable geographical balance in the Secretariat. The United Kingdom saw no point in an early review and did not support the concept of parity between the contribution and membership factors; it further stressed that Member States should not become involved in the day-to-day management of the Secretariat and said that an excess of complicated and detailed personnel resolutions was impinging on the flexibility needed by the Secretary-General at a time when he was striving to restructure the Organization.

India questioned the basis for calculating the new desirable ranges saying that increasing the membership factor by 8.6 per cent, largely at the expense of the population factor, was in complete disregard of the 1979 Assembly resolution on desirable representation of Member States⁽¹⁰⁾ and the 1986 resolution on composition of the Secretariat;⁽¹²⁾ it was to be hoped that the injustices contained in the text would be remedied when the matter was reviewed in 1990. In Pakistan's view, the weight of the population factor should be 7.2 per cent, as stipulated in the relevant resolution, rather than the 5 per cent indicated in section III, paragraph 1 (c); the move towards parity between the contribution and membership factors, however small, was encouraging, but should not have been at the expense of the population factor. Had there been a vote on the text, Algeria stated, it would not have accepted paragraph 1 (b) of section III; the weight allotted to parity between the membership and contribution factors did not represent progress and a decision on parity was merely deferred until 1990. It was also regrettable that no mention was made of the 1979 resolution on desirable ranges⁽¹⁰⁾ which dealt with parity in detail; the omission could not be justified by the fact that that resolution had been adopted by vote.

The USSR said it had joined in the consensus out of a desire to address the acute problems affecting the Secretariat; it welcomed in particular paragraph 1 of section I of the text and firmly hoped that in the process of reducing posts, the Assembly's wish expressed in a 1986 resolution⁽⁹⁾ would be respected so that negative impact on programmes and on the Secretariat's structure and composition would be avoided. The principle of rotation set out in section II should be applicable not only at the USG and ASG levels, but also at the D-2 (Director) level and the views of Member States should be taken into account in the Secretary-General's review. The text was very weak and a number of its provisions were ambiguous and open to misinterpretation, the Byelorussian SSR said; the principle reaffirmed in the second preambular paragraph of section II was clearly designed to discriminate against staff members serving fixed-term contracts, a shortcoming that should be taken into account in implementing the text. Paragraph 2 of that section would likewise result in unequal treatment since permanent and fixed-term staff in the upper echelons would be subject to rotation after different lengths of service.

While some of the text's provisions were superfluous, others were positive, the Netherlands said. With respect to diverging views on desirable ranges, it called for some understanding by the majority for the minority view; it made little sense to review the new ranges in 1990 or to revise the criteria for their calculation after such a short interval and it would be preferable to wait until underrepresented countries could derive maximum benefit from the latest set of ranges.

Canada considered it unfortunate that the text did not address delegations' concerns over difficult employment conditions of General Service staff.

Status of women in the Secretariat

In a November 1987 report on improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat,(13) submitted in response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(14) the Secretary-General said that, notwithstanding the financial constraints that had led to a recruitment freeze in March 1986, the representation of women in posts subject to geographical distribution had risen from 23.1 per cent as at 30 June 1985 to 25.7 per cent as at 30 June 1987, due to various factors such as the different rates of attrition of men and women, the proportion appointed as an exception to the recruitment freeze, and the conversion of UNIDO to a specialized agency. Over the same period, there had also been a marked improvement in the representation of women at the senior levels: not only were two women appointed at the USG level in the Secretariat, but representation at the P-5 to D-2 levels had also improved.

A head count, conducted two years before, had indicated that nearly three out of four professional women occupied service-oriented posts. In 1986,(15) the Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women had recommended that all vacancies be advertised, enabling women to compete on an open basis with men for higher-level posts, and that special guidelines be issued to enhance the career development prospects of women. In response, mandatory internal advertising of vacancies was introduced in 1987 at the same time as the vacancy management system (which itself was based on a recommendation of the Steering Committee). It was too soon, however, the Secretary-General said, to evaluate the effect of this system on the career development of women.

With respect to region of origin, the representation of women in posts subject to geographical distribution remained extremely uneven; the recruitment freeze had made it virtually impossible to achieve improvements and any changes since 1985 mainly reflected attrition. The relative lack of women from Eastern Europe, as well as from Africa and the Middle East, continued to give cause for concern.

There had been notable improvement during the period from July 1986 to June 1987, at least in relative terms. Of appointments subject to geographical distribution, 28.5 per cent were women. In absolute terms, however, the number of women recruited remained low and most women in posts subject to geographical distribution were found in the service-oriented occupations, and were best represented in administration, management and conference services. Even in departments with a relatively large percentage of women, the proportion of women at the decision-making levels was small. The recruitment freeze had made it impractical to set departmental targets and plan for improvements in a structured manner or to achieve earlier targets. The percentage of women in the regional commissions remained a reason for concern, and the situation in UNCTAD and in some smaller offices and departments also called for improvement.

Despite constraints affecting the action programme announced in 1985,(16) such as a recruitment freeze and other economy measures, it had been possible to carry out most of the activities scheduled, the Secretary-General said. Among them were a series of detailed studies, for evaluation by the Steering Committee which, in turn, had submitted its findings and recommendations to the Secretary-General. On the basis of the Steering Committee's first report dealing with recruitment, training and career development, the Secretary-General had decided on a series of special measures which were set out in his 1986 report on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat.(15) The second (February 1987) Committee report, which addressed conditions of service and the grievance redress system, was approved by him in May; a summary of the Committee's recommendations was annexed to his 1987 report, as were recommendations on a monitoring process, made by the Committee in its third (August) report and approved by him in October 1987.

The decisions taken by the Secretary-General on the basis of the Steering Committee's findings and recommendations covered a wide range of issues and their implementation was a gradual process; a more complete picture would become evident as the monitoring process became operational, with the full situation known by about the end of 1988 when implementation was to have been completed, said the report.

In addition to high-level appointments, strengthened promotion guidelines and the introduction of the vacancy announcement and management system, specific results included so far: a review of women who had served the Organization for an extended period of short-term contracts, leading to a recommendation that eight of them be considered by the appointment and promotion bodies for regular fixed-term appointments; recruitment, as an exception to the freeze, of 11 women (and 11 men) successful in the 1985 competitive examinations, mainly from under-represented and unrepresented countries; review of the classification standards for the secretarial occupation in New York, leading to recommendations for corrective action in the area of job design; consolidation of the previously separate placement function for General Service staff in New York with other elements of the career development system; development of training modules that addressed the interaction of women and men in the workplace, for inclusion in both induction and management training programmes; changes in the arrangement for maternity leave so that expectant mothers could choose to work one week longer before delivery in exchange for one week's leave afterwards; proposals for inter-agency review, made to the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) of ACC at its July 1987 meeting, on providing an option to combine part-time work with maternity leave, carrying out a needs assessment for child-care throughout the common system, and strengthening inter-agency co-operation to facilitate the employment of spouses.

The next stage of the work programme should concentrate on ensuring continued implementation of the Steering Committee's recommendations and monitoring the impact on the status of women of restructuring and retrenchment measures. It was essential, both in formulating and implementing retrenchment measures, that the interests of women, including those in the General Service and related categories, were safeguarded.

In the framework of the 1988-1989 work programme, the following activities, recommended by the Steering Committee, were to be carried out by the Office of Human Resources Management in close co-operation with the Co-ordinator: introducing a comprehensive monitoring system and ensuring follow-up action; utilizing the vacancy management system to further the career development of women; developing staff rotation to ensure effective use of human resources; completing the development of a data base on skills inventories and career paths for women; further improving job design of posts in the secretarial occupation; developing occupational training programmes for General Service staff based on career path analysis; integrating the career development system for General Service staff with the examination and selection process for advancement to the Professional category; establishing a system for part-time posts and flexible working hours within the context of the restructuring and post reduction process; introducing further measures to avoid gender discrimination and sexual harassment, both in the context of staff training and of the new framework for administration of justice (see below); and following up the inter-agency negotiations on improving the conditions of service for women throughout the common system. In addition, the work programme was to include monitoring the impact of restructuring and retrenchment on women.

The Secretary-General also decided that the functions of the Co-ordinator for the Status of Women should be extended for six months, until 30 June 1988, to allow sufficient time to complete certain aspects of the work programme and to facilitate the smooth transfer of the Co-ordinator's functions to the Office of Human Resources Management.

As long as the recruitment freeze had to be maintained, the Secretary-General said in his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,(2) it was not possible to make major improvements in the proportion of women in the Professional category, but in the few cases where exceptions were granted, efforts were being made to select more women. While he was fully committed to increasing the representation of women, full support from Member States was required to achieve that goal.

ICSC, at its July 1987 session,(4) reviewed progress made in recruiting and promoting women in the organizations of the common system (see below).

The staff representatives of the United Nations system, in a November note to the Fifth Committee,(17) stated that the target of 25-per-cent representation by 1982 for women in Professional posts subject to geographical distribution, set by the General Assembly in 1978,(18) had been met only in 1987. While three women had been appointed as USG (accompanied by the loss of two women ASGs), the percentage of women at the D-2 level in 1987 (2.4 per cent) was slightly lower than in 1977 (2.5 per cent) and actual promotions showed no significant increase at the policy-making levels. Currently, 65 per cent of all women in geographical posts were at the P-3 level or below, and since mid-1986, only 2 women (and 14 men) had been appointed at the P-5 levels and above.

Moreover, while women constituted 43.9 per cent of all staff, 81.1 per cent of them were in the General Service and related categories. Any serious analysis of their advancement must be predicated on an examination of the question of mobility within the General Service and into the Professional category. They noted that the 1986 recommendations of the Steering Committee, which had been approved by the Secretary-General and whose importance had been stressed by the Assembly,⁽¹⁴⁾ had largely gone unimplemented and no action had been taken with regard to the timetables set by the Department of Administration and Management.

The staff representatives called for sustaining and building on the momentum established by the appointment of a Co-ordinator for the Status of Women in the Secretariat and revising the terms of reference of the Co-ordinator's office to go beyond standard-setting mechanisms and to become actively involved in implementing the recommendations. They further called for establishing a focal point of accountability and monitoring of the restructuring process for its impact on the status of women; they also believed that departmental targets should be set for promoting and placing women, along with concurrent monitoring of the rate of progress achieved. Where targets were not being met, they said, specific affirmative provisions should be developed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/19 without vote.

Improvement of the status of women within the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind paragraph 356 of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in which it was recommended, inter alia, that the United Nations system take all necessary measures to achieve an equitable balance between women and men staff members at the managerial and professional levels in substantive areas, as well as in field posts,

Recalling its resolution 1986/19 of 23 May 1986,

Recognizing that the participation of women within the United Nations system, in particular in the follow-up and co-ordination of the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies and at policy-making levels, is an essential means of bringing the experience of women to bear on all aspects of the policies and programmes of the organizations that shape global development,

Aware that, as at 30 June 1986, the percentage of women in the United Nations Secretariat in posts subject to geographical distribution at the executive levels of P-5, D-1 and D-2 was 9.7 per cent, 8.7 per cent and 2.3 per cent, respectively,

Concerned that, owing to the ongoing financial crisis of the United Nations, the percentage of women in posts subject to geographical distribution may be notably reduced during 1987 and 1988,

Aware that, in resolution 41/206 D of 11 December 1986, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to increase the number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution with a view to achieving, to the extent possible, an overall participation rate of 30 per cent of the total by 1990, without prejudice to the principle of equitable geographical distribution of posts,

1. Requests all organs of the United Nations system to improve the mechanisms through which vacant posts are announced, with a view to improving the access of women to them;

2. Reiterates its request to all Member States to continue to support the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to increase the proportion of women in the Professional category and above by, inter alia, nominating more women candidates;

3. Urge the Commission on the Status of Women to review the evolution of the employment of women in the secretariats of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and to monitor the progress achieved.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/19

26 May 1987 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1987/99) without vote, 13 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1987/15); agenda item 19.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/220 C without vote.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 8, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat,

Recalling the relevant paragraphs of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraphs 315, 356 and 358,

Recalling Article 8 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, by which it, inter alia, approved recommendation 46 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations that additional measures should be taken to increase the proportion of posts filled by women in the Professional category, particularly at the higher levels, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Welcoming the fact that the advancement of women is one of two subjects receiving priority in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and of his continuing efforts to improve the status of women in the Secretariat, including his decision to extend the office of the Co-ordinator for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat of the United Nations for a period of six months;

2. Invites the Secretary-General, taking into account the views expressed by Member States at the forty-second session of the General Assembly and in other relevant intergovernmental bodies, to review the situation at the end of the six-month period and to take the necessary measures to ensure the continued implementation of the action programme for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat;

3. Endorses the work programme set out in section III.A of the report of the Secretary-General, covering the implementation of measures approved by the Secretary-General, in particular the monitoring of the impact of the restructuring and retrenchment on women in the Secretariat;

4. Stresses the importance of the measures accepted by the Secretary-General on the recommendation of the Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat, regarding the introduction of a monitoring process;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts and to consider the introduction of additional measures, if necessary, in order to increase the number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution with a view to achieving, to the extent possible, an overall participation rate of 30 per cent of the total by 1990, without prejudice to the principle of equitable geographical distribution of posts, as was requested in paragraph 3 of resolution 40/258 B of 18 December 1985;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to increase his efforts to ensure an equitable representation of women from developing countries in posts subject to geographical distribution, and particularly in posts at senior and policy-formulating levels;

7. Reiterates its request to Member States to continue to support the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations to increase the proportion of women in the Professional category and above by, inter alia, nominating more women candidates;

8. Notes with satisfaction that the question of the improvement of the status of women in the secretariats of the United Nations system continues to be a standing item on the agenda of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on:

(a) Progress made in evaluating the implementation of the recommendations of the Steering Committee as outlined in its first three reports;

(b) Progress made in meeting the objectives of the work programme set out in his report, as well as those objectives of the original action programme which are still to be implemented;

(c) The outcome of his decision to extend the office of the Co-ordinator for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat of the United Nations for a period of six months and of the action called for in paragraph 2 of the present resolution; and to transmit his report on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-second session.

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/885) without vote, 19 December (meeting 67); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.24), following informal consultations; agenda item 122.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 17, 20-23, 29-32, 34, 35, 47, 50, 67; plenary 99.

Explaining its position, Canada said that in reviewing the situation and taking the measures called for in paragraph 2, the Secretary-General should be guided by the text's preamble; particular attention should be paid to Article 8 of the United Nations Charter, the 24 General Assembly resolutions on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,(19) and recommendation 46 of the Group of 18 calling for additional measures to ensure that an increasing proportion of posts in the Professional Category, particularly at the higher levels,(20) were filled by women. The Secretary-General should also bear in mind his own designation of the advancement of women as a priority during 1988-1989. The Office of the Co-ordinator and its five staff members must be maintained until all 16 objectives of the work programme were achieved and the Organization was, at last, in compliance with its own Charter.

Recruitment policy and vacancy management

In response to recommendation 15(1) by which the Group of 18 had called for a reduction of staff members, a post-by-post review was being undertaken in each department and office in light of programme priorities, legislative mandates and the restructuring of the Secretariat, to achieve the desired staffing profile for the Secretariat in 1990, the Secretary-General said in his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations.(2) Thereafter, he would consider instituting permanent mechanisms to deal with vacancies in the light of programme orientation and changing mandates, as might be decided by the legislative bodies, to ensure efficient use of resources as proposed by the Group in recommendation 56. Candidates deemed essential would be reviewed by the appointment and promotion bodies, which would establish a short list from which programme managers would select the staff member to be assigned to the vacancy in their area.

To fill Professional posts at the junior levels, competitive examinations were normally administered in a limited number of Member States each year. Until recently, those examinations had been organized mainly in underrepresented or unrepresented Member States. The scope of those examinations was being broadened, as requested by the Group of 18 in recommendation 43, to increase the participation of Members currently adequately represented. Examination standards and criteria also were being reviewed to determine how to minimize differences between internal and external examinations, while recognizing that one was a promotion exercise and the other a recruitment process. Clear criteria for selecting candidates for posts at other levels would also be established.

The basic thrust of recommendation 44 of the Group of 18 was to increase the proportion of appointments at the P-1 to P-3 levels, an objective had been taken into account, the Secretary-General said, in an overall retrenchment plan which provided for a lower percentage of reduction in P-3 level posts while increasing the number of P-2 level posts; that recommendation would be implemented fully only when the financial situation allowed.

In recommendation 45, the Group of 18 had proposed that staff members be considered for permanent appointment after three years of service; the Secretary-General believed that this recommendation should be reviewed after the retrenchment and restructuring exercises were completed. At the same time, he would need to retain flexibility to take into account other factors besides performance, such as the nature of the expertise required, the foreseen duration of functions, and the source and expected duration of funds. That would be an opportunity to review the proportion of staff on fixed-term or permanent appointments, as requested by the Group in recommendation 57 and in accordance with a 1980 Assembly resolution on personnel questions;(7) the review would be carried out in conjunction with the planning of the Organization's human resources requirements.

The Secretary-General also reported on measures taken in accordance with the recruitment freeze imposed in April 1986. A continued freeze and the resultant increase in the vacancy rate could expedite progress towards reducing the number of staff posts by 15 per cent, as recommended by the Group of 18,(1) he said. That, however, would mean that he would not be able to respond to the injunction in recommendation 15 of the Group, supported by many Member States, that recruitment should continue, especially at the junior Professional levels.

Another drawback of the recruitment freeze was that it further distorted the geographical distribution of the Secretariat, thus leading to an increasingly irrational distribution of resources in relation to programme needs. The Secretary-General remained convinced that, out of fairness to the staff, the reduction of posts must be achieved to the maximum extent through attrition.

In order to counteract the adverse effects of a continuing recruitment freeze and the process of attrition, he had introduced in December 1986 a new system of vacancy management and staff redeployment, with two main objectives-to identify vacancies which had to be filled in order to fulfil key programme mandates, and to redeploy to those essential posts staff occupying posts considered of less vital importance. While this was essentially an emergency measure to alleviate the immediate impact of the financial crisis, it could logically lead into the phased retrenchment, linked to restructuring, required by the report of the Group of 18, and would pave the way for a more rational and equitable system of career development and planned job rotation, as recommended by the Group (recommendation 49). The whole exercise was to be completed by the end of 1989.

Extensive restructuring and rationalization had already been effected in the political sector, resulting in a concomitant reduction in posts; similar steps had been taken in the economic and social sectors and more were to follow before the end of 1987; key changes had been introduced in the administrative section, most important through merging the programming and budgeting functions, and others would ensue during the rest of the year; similar actions were underway in the area of public information; continuing reviews were being undertaken in Conference Services with a view to achieving improved management, particularly through the application of new technologies; the top-heaviness of the staffing structure had been significantly alleviated by the reduction in the number of USGS and ASGs by some 15 per cent, as a first step towards the target of 25 per cent by the end of 1989; a vacancy management and staff redeployment plan had been introduced to ensure optimum distribution of the reduced staffing resources available in relation to the requirements of the mandated programmes, and to build the foundations of a more equitable and effective career development system; good progress had been made to identify posts for reduction over three years in accordance with the goal of 15 per cent; the longer-term retrenchment plan was expected to yield by the end of 1987 target staffing levels for each department and office that would guide actions in 1988 and 1989, which would then be reflected in the 1990-1991 budget.

Recruitment of women

In 1987, ICSC continued to consider progress made in recruiting women and special measures for their recruitment,(4) a subject it had first taken up in 1985.(21) On the basis of an interim report prepared by its secretariat, it examined data related to the recruitment and promotion of women in the organizations of the common system for 1985 and 1986. The report noted that most organizations were still recruiting men at higher rates than women and that most women tended to be recruited below the P-4 level. With respect to promotion, while the rate for women compared favourably with that of men, promotion took place for the most part below the P-4 level. Noting the limited progress made over the past year, ICSC reaffirmed the validity of its previous recommendations,(21,8) and decided to keep the item on its work programme, conducting extensive monitoring biennially on the basis of full progress reports and, in alternate years, on the basis of statistical data. Recruitment of women was also dealt with by the Secretary-General in his November report on improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (see above).

Career development

Staff members should be recruited and their careers developed on the basis of occupational groups, according to recommendation 48 of the Group of 18, the Secretary-General stated in an April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations.(2)

In order to ensure the effective and efficient placement of staff, a system had been designed that included grouping posts by occupation and then mapping clearly defined career paths within and between occupational groups. The emerging career development plan was to cover all occupational groups for all categories of staff. Within the framework of that plan, a rotation and mobility system was being designed to facilitate the assignment of staff to different duty stations and functions, as well as to develop proposals on rotation and mobility schemes within and across duty stations, taking into account occupational groups and duty station classifications established by ICSC. Mobility was being encouraged as part of the vacancy management and staff redeployment system.

Recalling its 1984 recommendations on career development,(22) ICSC(4) again emphasized the need for mobility of staff and noted that career development should be implemented on as wide a basis as possible. Horizontal as well as vertical mobility should be facilitated and encouraged and should be linked with career development.

Job classification

Implementation of the Master Standard (tier I)

In 1987,(4) ICSC reviewed reports on implementation of the Master Standard (tier I of a three-tiered job classification system developed by ICSC in 1979),(23) prepared by its secretariat on the basis of detailed statistics supplied by FAO, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), WHO and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). The Chairman of CCAQ noted with satisfaction that the Master Standard had been implemented throughout the common system and that the statistics provided completed the information on its implementation. The Commission decided to note: the rate of implementation of the Master Standard and confirmation of levels in UNDP, UNICEF and UNHCR; the high confirmation rate of classified levels of posts in FAO and that the implementation rate had overtaken the accumulated turnover rate; the rate of implementation of the Master Standard of 30 per cent and the high overall confirmation rate in WHO of Professional level posts, including project posts, and decided to request WHO to submit detailed statistics on further implementation in 1987. It also requested the organizations to report in detail every three years on implementation of the Master Standard, a request with which the CCAQ Chairman expressed agreement.

National Professional Officers

Based on a document prepared by the United Nations, UNDP, UNICEF and UNHCR, with statistics provided by CCAQ, ICSC(4) discussed the job classification standard and salary survey methodology for the National Professional Officers (NPO) category. It decided that the Master Standard for the classification of Professional posts was the appropriate standard for classifying NPO posts and that the organizations should make proposals on how to deal with the overlap in functions of staff in the Extended General Service Level and NPO categories. The Commission approved: a proposed survey methodology for NPOs, including the selection of survey jobs and employers; the adjustment of work-week differences; the use of weighting in data analysis on a grade-by-grade basis; and the analysis of non-pensionable allowances separately from those for the General Service category. It further approved the establishment of dependency allowances on the same basis as the General Service category and agreed that overtime and language allowance should not be payable to NPOs.

Definition of General Service work

In 1987,(4) ICSC reviewed a definition of General Service work developed by its secretariat in close consultation with the Sub-Committee on Job Classification of CCAQ; it was to be used as a step in the methodology for distinguishing between Professional and General Service work. According to that definition, General Service work was procedural, operational or technical in nature and supported the execution of international programmes. FICSA and CCISUA did not agree with the general principle of distinguishing between the two categories. The Commission decided to promulgate the definition of General Service work and adopt a two-step procedure for determining that level of work, and to note that the procedure would be included in a revised version of the Common Classification of Occupational Groups.

In a report transmitted by a November 1987 note of the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁷⁾ the staff representatives of the United Nations system noted that the continuing lack of importance given to the career growth of the General Service and related categories, which constituted more than 60 per cent of the Secretariat staff, and the severe restrictions imposed on movement to the Professional category contravened the egalitarian principles for which the United Nations stood.

Job classification standards for General Service at different duty stations

Addis Ababa

Following a review of progress reports received from several organizations on implementing job classification standards at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, ICSC(4) urged organizations that had not done so to implement the common grading standards promulgated in 1985.⁽²⁴⁾ It requested the organizations concerned to report to it in 1988 on progress made, and asked the co-ordinating committee, through the United Nations, to provide the final guidelines for implementing the conversion of the grade levels at Addis Ababa.

Baghdad

At its March 1987 session,⁽⁴⁾ ICSC reviewed a draft job classification standard for staff in the General Service category at Baghdad, Iraq, and requested that benchmark job descriptions be developed to supplement the standard. In July, the United Nations representative indicated that such descriptions would not be available until late August 1987 and requested ICSC to authorize its Chairman to approve the descriptions at that time. The Commission acted on that request and also requested the organizations concerned to provide it in 1988 with a progress report on implementation of the job classification standards.

New York

Based on a note prepared by its secretariat providing the latest information from the United Nations on implementation of the job classification of the General Service and related categories in New York, ICSC(4) decided to note that the results of the job classification were being implemented effective 1 January 1985, to reaffirm the need for benchmark job descriptions, and to repeat its request to the three organizations based in New York to develop for review in 1988, common benchmark descriptions for the General Service and related categories.

Santiago

Following consideration of a report on progress in developing classification standards for the General Service at Santiago, Chile, ICSC(4) noted with regret the lack of progress and requested the United Nations to ensure submission in 1988 of a progress report, including draft standards.

Vienna

In March 1987,⁽⁴⁾ ICSC considered the implementation of job classification standards for the General Service and related categories at Vienna, Austria, including a proposal for three additional benchmark job descriptions at the G-8 level, as well as confirmation rates of salary survey benchmark job descriptions by using the common grading standards. In July, the Commission reviewed a report on further progress in the implementation of those standards. It decided to promulgate the three additional benchmarks, took note of the progress made in implementing the standards and requested the Vienna-based organizations to provide a further progress report in 1988.

Field Service category

In 1987,⁽⁴⁾ ICSC again discussed the development of Field Service classification standards and benchmark job descriptions. Noting that several organizations were applying the Field Service job classification standards and remuneration system and that, therefore, the Field Service category applied to the common system, the Commission requested its secretariat to undertake a study to establish a basis for determining Field Service salary scales and allowances, to take into consideration United Nations job classification standards and make recommendations for amendments if appropriate, and to co-ordinate the study with the United Nations and other organizations applying the Field Service scales.

Training policy

ICSC(4) continued discussing a training evaluation model, based on a 1985 secretariat document outlining four basic approaches to such evaluation: reaction; learning; application or implementation; and impact. Expressing regret that the topic had been deferred from its 1986 session, the Commission requested its secretariat to pursue consultations at regional meetings of the CCAQ Sub-Committee on Staff Training, to be held in the autumn of 1987, as well as at the session of the entire Sub-Committee to be held in early 1988. Depending on the outcome of those deliberations, ICSC would be in a position to consider the training evaluation model in 1988.

In considering recommendation 58 of the Group of 18(25) concerning staff training, ICSC reiterated its earlier recommendations, to be used as guidelines.(26)

A comprehensive, well-thought-out and adequately funded training programme was an indispensable prerequisite to any effective effort at staff redeployment, the staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat pointed out in a November report to the Fifth Committee;(17) for the Organization to stay relevant, the individuals in its service must be exposed to new ideas and encouraged to acquire new skills on a regular basis.

Promotion policy

Regarding recommendation 51 of the Group of 18 calling for strict and clear criteria for promoting staff, ICSC(4) concluded that it was in line with its 1984 recommendations.(27) The Commission expressed reservations, however, on the Group's suggestion that appointment and promotion bodies be restructured on the basis of occupational groups; it considered rather that a single body composed of members from a number of occupational groups could ensure more consistency and fairness.

In the annex to his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,(2) the Secretary-General provided information on actions already taken in response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations.(9) He said that the criteria for promotion had been developed over the years and took into account relevant Assembly decisions as well as ICSC recommendations; those criteria were brought each year to the attention of heads of departments and offices at the beginning of the annual promotion exercise. With regard to the functions and composition of the joint appointment and promotion bodies, care was taken to ensure participation of staff from various regions and a proper balance between men and women; those bodies would be restructured along occupational lines as called for by the new career system.

In a November 1987 note to the Fifth Committee,(28) CCISUA strongly urged the Assembly to consider instituting a system of personal promotions to alleviate the problems of meritorious staff members whose careers were blocked or who had reached the maximum step of their grades with little prospect of further salary advancement.

Performance evaluation

In his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,(2) the Secretary-General stated that a new improved and simplified performance evaluation system was being formulated which would take into account the element of comparability in the rating of staff, as proposed by the Group of 18 in 1986 (recommendation 50).(1) A feasibility study on the com-puterization of data on performance evaluation reports was in progress.

ICSC recommended that the organizations of the system should take into account the eleven principles and guidelines for performance appraisal and recognition of merit, developed by its secretariat, and that they make their performance appraisal systems consistent with those principles and guidelines no later than 1 July 1992. It further recommended that they regularly appraise the performance of all staff up to the D-1 level. The organizations were requested to send their performance appraisal systems and forms to ICSC for consultations. The principles and guidelines, adopted by the Commission in July, were annexed to its annual report to the General Assembly.(4)

Post reductions

The Secretary-General, in his April 1987 report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,(2) provided information on staff reduction which had been recommended in 1986 by the Group of 18 (recommendation 15).(1) He stated that he had already taken action towards the target of a 25 per cent reduction in the number of regular budget posts at the USG and ASG levels by the end of 1989. Such posts had numbered 57 at the time when the report was issued, and a total of 14 would need to be eliminated in the stipulated period of three years. In the context of the administrative restructuring of the Organization, he had decided not to fill nine such posts.

The Group had also called for a reduction in posts at those levels funded from extrabudgetary resources. The Secretary-General had requested the heads of the organizations concerned to advise him how they proposed to implement recommendation 15, and he was pursuing the matter further by bringing the recommendation to the attention of governing bodies. In the initial replies from the organizations, it had been concluded that for various reasons, no reduction in the current level of high-level posts was possible without affecting programme delivery, and moreover, the current number and level of posts had been approved by the respective governing bodies.

The target of a 15 per cent reduction in the overall number of posts within three years, as recommended by the Group, needed to be seen both in the context of current and projected staffing and of structural reviews in various sectors, the Secretary-General said. A reduced and modified staffing table for the Secretariat would be fully reflected in his proposed 1990-1991 programme budget; he had been unable to include such changes in the 1988-1989 programme budget, which reflected the number and level of posts as approved in the 1986-1987 budget. In order to ease the transition towards an eventual post reduction of 15 per cent by the end of 1989, he had built into the 1988-1989 budget estimates (see Chapter I of this section) a vacancy rate higher than usual. As a conceptual framework, a model staffing profile had been developed; since a key objective was to achieve a more balanced and less top-heavy structure, reductions at the higher levels would have to be higher than 15 per cent, while those at lower levels would be less. Similarly, he said, the 15 per cent reduction could not be arbitrarily applied across the board to all departments and offices, but had to take into account the current situation in each, the actual vacancy rate, the capacity to fulfil key mandated programmes, and so on. While any reduction lower than the norm in one part of the Organization had to be compensated by higher decreases elsewhere, the burden must also be seen to be shared on a reasonably equitable basis.

The Secretary-General stated that because the current financial difficulties of the Organization imposed an abrupt decline in the incumbency of posts that still figured in the budget, it became critically important—and indeed unavoidable—to effect the 15 per cent reduction of actual posts simultaneously with the structural reviews.

A vacancy management (see above) and staff redeployment plan was introduced to ensure optimum distribution of the reduced staff in relation to the requirements of the mandated programmes, and build the foundation of a more equitable and effective career development system.

ACABQ, in its first report on the proposed programme budget for 1988-1989,(29) noted that a reduction by $93 million (at revised 1987 rates) for the adjustment of the turnover deduction rate was related to recommendation 15 of the Group of 18. As it had not yet been possible for the Secretary-General to indicate the exact timing, where and at what levels the required post reductions were to take place, he had instead attempted to reflect the impact of the impending reductions by an upward adjustment of the standard turnover deduction rate from 5 per cent to 12.5 per cent for the Professional and higher categories, and from 0 to 7.5 per cent for the General Service and related categories. As stated by the Secretary-General, the costing of the regular budget posts by means of those rates was on the assumption that the total number of the posts in question would be reduced considerably at the end of 1989.

The Advisory Committee was informed that, as at 31 March 1987, the vacancy rate was 13.8 per cent, while that for General Service category was 6.9 per cent. It was further informed that if existing trends continued, the projected vacancy rate as at 31 December 1987 would be 15.9 per cent for Professionals and 9.3 per cent for General Service staff.

ACABQ understood that the figures chosen represented fairly arbitrary mid-points between standard vacancy rates and those which would fully reflect the target reductions in posts. In view of prevailing rates, it concluded that the average vacancy rates that could be achieved over 1988-1989 in order to facilitate implementation of the objective set by the General Assembly in 1986(9) were likely to be significantly higher than those represented by the adjustments proposed by the Secretary-General. Under the circumstances, ACABQ recommended a further adjustment in the turnover deduction of 2.5 per cent for both Professional and General Service posts. The consequential reduction across the board would be $31.7 million gross or $26.7 million net for 1988-1989.

The staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, in a report transmitted by the Secretary-General in November 1987,(17) opposed abolition of posts, stating that if the termination of staff should be considered, it was imperative to establish a fund providing for agreed termination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/225, section V, without vote.

V

General recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions concerning the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989

[The General Assembly . . .]

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to improve the situation in the regional commissions and in those units of the Secretariat which have the highest vacancy rates and to report thereon, in the context of the revised 1988-1989 budget estimates, in the light of paragraphs 27 and 28 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to bear in mind that the across-the-board reductions under each section resulting from the recommendations of the Advisory Committee relating to the turn-over deduction and to the unutilized balances are indicative, and to consider, in implementing the recommendations of the Advisory Committee, the requirements of programmes and services of the various units in the United Nations Secretariat;

Staff mobility

As requested by the General Assembly in 1985(30) and 1986,(31) ICSC considered in 1987(4) Professional staff mobility, including the frequency and average length of assignments at different duty stations. The Commission's discussion was based on a document prepared by CCAQ on the mobility of staff serving in 19 United Nations organizations and programmes during 1980-1985. While on the whole, mobility requirements had considerably increased, that was not the case in all organizations. Six organizations and programmes had formalized rotation plans or policies which in themselves, however, did not guarantee mobility. There were three distinct types of disincentive to mobility: material disadvantages, career development constraints and family-related problems. CCAQ concluded that there were three categories of action that should be taken to encourage and compensate for mobility: measures to facilitate the resettling process; improved compensation; and joint efforts to improve local conditions. The representative of FICSA believed that mobility should be rewarded and enhanced through provisions in the remuneration package; as a first step, the assignment allowance should contain an incentive for mobility. CCISUA associated itself with the statements of CCAQ and FICSA.

Emphasizing the necessity of encouraging mobility and linking it to career development, ICSC decided to bring the information on staff reassignments in the common system to the attention of the Assembly and the legislative organs of other organizations. In view of the importance of mobility within and between organizations and the difficulties highlighted by the organizations in that regard, the Commission requested its secretariat to analyse those problems further for its consideration in 1988.

Staff rules and regulations

In an annex to his April 1987 report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,(2) the Secretary-General gave an overview of action already taken or planned in the area of general administration, in implementation of the 1986 General Assembly resolution on a review of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations(9) and the recommendations of the Group of 18.

A review of the staff rules, as called for in recommendation 42 of the Group of 18, was initiated to identify inconsistencies and ambiguities requiring amendments. While the staff rules were amended regularly to implement Assembly resolutions and consequential amendments to the staff regulations were approved by the Assembly, the review would also examine the degree to which other Assembly resolutions and decisions should be incorporated into the staff rules. The review had begun with the disciplinary and appellate procedures governed by the staff rules applicable to the Secretariat, including the staff of United Nations subsidiary organs and the Registry of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) (see below).

With regard to establishing a personnel manual in which measures to implement the staff rules and regulations were set out, as called for by the Group under the same recommendation, the Secretary-General said that the preparation of a thematic personnel manual would require substantial human resources. Currently, officials used a Personnel Administrative Handbook, a compilation of all personnel-related bulletins and instructions, which would be reproduced in a more useful format.

Amendments to staff rules

In August 1987, the Secretary-General submitted his annual report(32) containing the texts of provisional amendments made to the Staff Rules of the United Nations since the previous report in 1986.(33) The changes—applicable to all staff except technical co-operation project personnel, staff members specifically engaged for conferences and other short-term service, and special interns—concerned special leave, maternity leave and medical insurance. Revised salary scales and scales for other allowances (see below) were reflected in amendments to the appendices to the Staff Rules.

Provisional amendments were also made to some rules applicable to staffmembers specifically recruited for service with technical co-operation projects; they concerned special leave and maternity leave, salaries and other allowances. Provisional amendments to the rules applicable to conference and other short-term staff, which were last revised in 1978,(34) concerned official holidays, family relationships, participation in the Joint Staff Pension Fund, compensation for death, injury or other disability, terminal expenses, excess baggage and unaccompanied shipments, staff relations, appeals, amendment and effective date of rules.

By decision 42/456 of 21 December, the General Assembly, having noted the need periodically to review the Staff Rules and to report annually to the Assembly the full text of provisional Staff Rules and amendments, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Harmonization of staff rules and regulations

In his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,(2) the Secretary-General provided information on action taken or planned for harmonizing the staff rules and regulations, in implementation of recommendation 42 of the Group of 18, by which the Group had urged that the applicability of those rules and regulations to all United Nations entities be considered. The recommendation had been brought to the attention of ICSC and CCAQ, he said, noting, however, that other organizations had no obligation to accept rules and regulations which did not emanate from their governing bodies; at the same time, there was agreement to develop common personnel policies so as to ensure as much uniformity as was practicable concerning conditions of service. As a result of recommendations that might be expected from ICSC on common staff regulations, all organizations of the United Nations system should in time have similar provisions in their staff regulations.

ICSC decided(4) to advise the Secretary-General that it would study the issue under its proposed 1988-1989 work programme and that it understood the United Nations would co-ordinate its efforts with those of the Commission's and its own secretariat.

Noting the request of CCAQ, supported by FICSA, to postpone the item until the Commission's March 1988 session, ICSC requested CCAQ to come forward at that time with substantive recommendations.

Enhancement of the common system

The necessity of streamlining inter-agency co-ordination, as called for by the Group of 18 in recommendation 9,(35) was an objective in line with its efforts to maintain and improve the common system in eliminating disparities in the conditions of service, ICSC said in its 1987 report.(4) The Commission emphasized that the enhancement of the common system should be actively pursued through ACC and CCAQ and at the field level with the assistance of the resident co-ordinator as well as through the Commission itself.

International Civil Service Commission

The International Civil Service Commission held two sessions in 1987, both in New York: its twenty-fifth from 9 to 27 March, and its twenty-sixth from 6 to 24 July. It examined issues that derived from General Assembly decisions and resolutions as well as from its own statute.(36) A summary of its deliberations, recommendations and decisions was provided to the Assembly in its thirteenth annual report.(4) The total financial implications of the Commission's 1987 decisions and recommendations relevant for the United Nations common system were approximately $19.8 million for 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/221 without vote.

United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission The General Assembly, Having considered the thirteenth annual report of the International Civil Service Commission and other related reports,

Reiterating the importance of maintaining and strengthening the United Nations common system of salaries, allowances- and personnel standards,

Concerned by the lack of transparency and simplicity in the present remuneration system and by the growing number of ad hoc measures that further add to its complexity and weaken its internal consistency, and stressing the need to improve this situation,

Stressing the need for the Commission to continue to improve its reporting so that in future its recommendations and decisions are presented with comprehensive background information and statistical evidence, with a view to facilitating comprehension by the general reader,

Recalling its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, and taking note of the views of the Commission as reflected in paragraphs 44 to 46 of its thirteenth annual report,

Recalling that in its resolution 40/244 of 18 December 1985, it approved the range of 110 to 120, with a desirable mid-point of 115, for the net remuneration margin, on the understanding that the margin would be maintained at a level around the desirable mid-point of 115 over a period of time, and considering that the margin range should be maintained for some time,

Recalling also that the recommendation of the International Civil Service Commission which led to the adoption of the margin range of 110 to 120 related to the methodology used then for margin calculations,

1. Decides to maintain the methodology described in annex I to the report of the International Civil Service Commission submitted to the General Assembly at its fortieth session for the calculation of the margin between the net remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories of the United Nations and that of the comparator civil service, which should continue to be applied for the time being;

2. Requests the Commission to continue its examination of the methodology for calculating the net remuneration margin and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

3. Further requests the Commission to continue reporting annually to the General Assembly on the net remuneration margin calculated in accordance with the methodology referred to in paragraph 1 above and to ensure that the margin is maintained at a level around the desirable mid-point of 115 over a period of time;

4. Takes note of the discussion referred to in paragraphs 97 to 104 of the report of the Commission and requests the Commission to develop a methodology regarding total entitlements and to present its recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

II

Noting the projected deficit in the Tax Equalization Fund by the end of 1987,

Approves, with effect from 1 April 1988, the revised rates of staff assessment for staff in the Professional and higher categories to be used in conjunction with gross base salaries and gross amounts of separation payments; also approves the maintenance of the current rates of staff assessment for staff members with a dependent spouse or dependent child for purposes of pensionable remuneration and pensions; and consequently approves, with effect from 1 April 1988, the amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution, to replace, for staff in the Professional and higher categories, the present scale of staff assessment and the scale of net and gross salaries;

Noting that the post adjustment system is based on the concept of parity of purchasing power,

Mindful of the effects of currency fluctuations on the level of take-home pay of staff in the Professional and higher categories at different duty stations,

Noting the decision of the International Civil Service Commission in paragraph 174 of its report to establish a working group to study the problems connected with the separation of the effects of inflation and currency fluctuations in the post adjustment system,

Noting further the recommendation of the Commission in paragraph 178 of its report that for the time being post adjustment should be maintained at the base of the system,

Stressing the need to improve the response by the organizations of the United Nations common system to requests from Member States for assistance, through the continued provision of staff of the highest efficiency, competence and integrity, particularly in the field,

Taking note of the statistics on the mobility of staff of different organizations provided in section VII.D of the report,

1. Decides that a comprehensive review of the conditions of service of staff in the Professional and higher categories should be undertaken in order to provide a sound and stable methodological basis for their remuneration, having due regard to:

(a) The need for securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity in recruiting staff with due regard being paid to equitable geographical distribution;

(b) The need for greater transparency and simplicity in the concepts and administration of the remuneration system;

(c) The need for sufficient flexibility to respond to varying requirements resulting from different types of appointments and changing circumstances;

(d) The relativity of benefits among duty stations as a factor in staff mobility;

(e) The need for long-term improvement in the operation of the post adjustment system, including the separation of the effects of inflation and currency fluctuations and a simpler and more accurate reflection of differences in cost of living between the base of the system—New York—and field duty stations;

2. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a preliminary report on the comprehensive review described in paragraph 1 above, containing an analysis of the subject together with an outline of one or more possible alternatives, and to complete its review for presentation to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

3. Approves, as an interim measure for 1988 and 1989, the modifications to the post adjustment system recommended in paragraph 197 of the report of the Commission for application at selected duty stations outside Europe and North America, while recognizing that this measure would not constitute an acquired right;

4. Takes note of the action taken by the Commission to introduce into the assignment allowance a financial incentive for mobility, for phased implementation with effect from 1 January 1988;

IV

1. Approves the modification recommended by the International Civil Service Commission in paragraph 153 of its report of existing education grant provisions for staff serving at locations where educational facilities are not available or are deemed inadequate, to enable them to claim reimbursement of 100 per cent of boarding costs up to $1,500 per year as an amount additional to the current maximum grant of $4,500 per year, and requests the Commission to report to the General Assembly annually, starting in 1988, on the number of such cases in the common system and on the related costs;

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/886) without vote, 17 December (meeting 65); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.18), following informal consultations; agenda item 123.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 26, 35, 39, 43, 44, 54, 55, 64, 65; plenary 99.

ICSC mandate

Concerning implementation of recommendation 53 of the Group of 18 that the mandate of ICSC, which was responsible for establishing standards in matters dealing with personnel management, be modified so that it could also monitor the implementation of such standards, the Commission decided to recommend against changing the mandate saying that there was no need to do so as its monitoring function was already clearly covered by articles 1, 9, 13, 14 and 17 of its statute.(36) It nevertheless expressed the hope that the Secretary-General would report annually to the General Assembly not only on action taken by the United Nations in response to the Commission's recommendations and decisions, but also in his capacity as Chairman of ACC on action taken through ACC to promote harmonized and co-ordinated action by all participating organizations in the common system regarding conditions of service.

ICSC meetings

With regard to recommendation 4 of the Group of 18,(37) by which the Group had called for strict enforcement of the principle that United Nations bodies should meet at their headquarters, as provided for in a 1985 General Assembly resolution,(38) ICSC(4) noted a discrepancy with rule 4 of its rules of procedure(36) which made it possible to meet anywhere at the invitation of a participating agency and expressed the view that it had the flexibility to propose holding a meeting at a non-headquarters duty station if appropriate. The Committee on Conferences, which also considered the discrepancy (see Chapter IV of this section) stated that ICSC could request the Assembly for authorization again to meet away from the headquarters of its participating organizations should the need arise.

Review of rules of procedure

In 1987,(4) ICSC also carried out a review of rules 17, 30, 32, 33, 36 and 37 of its rules of procedure,(36) which was called for following a June 1986 United Nations Administrative Tribunal Judgment(39) concerning suspension of the class 12 post adjustment index in New York as at 1 December 1984 and the question of a general ad hoc time limit, which had arisen in connection with the implementation of the remuneration correction factor by the United Nations in 1986; those issues involved the annotations to rules 32 and 33, respectively. In that connection, the ICSC secretariat reviewed all rules with annotations and submitted amendments to those rules and annotations to the Commission for its consideration.

ICSC decided: to maintain rule 17 (stipulating that all substantive determinations of the Commission should be made available in the official United Nations languages) and its annotation (stating that this obligation would not apply to routine decisions) as they stood; to retain the principle of eight affirmative votes under rule 30 and to delete the annotation to that rule; to delete an annotation to rule 32 on voting without meeting, stipulating that the provision was approved but on the understanding that it would not be utilized for the time being; to apply an appropriate time limit in each future case of receipt of responses from organizations and include reference to that in rule 33, incorporating the annotation into that rule; to amend rules 5, 6, 8, 22, 36 and 37 to reflect the participation of CCISUA; and to amend the annotations to rules 36 and 37 by removing the references to review or revision in the light of experience.

Implementation of ICSC recommendations and decisions

As decided by the Commission in 1984, the ICSC secretariat was requested to report annually on implementation of its recommendations and decisions by the organizations of the common system. This was also in line with recommendation 53 of the Group of 18, by which the Group had called for monitoring of implementation of personnel management standards. The Commission requested those organizations that had deviated in implementation of recommendations in respect of effective dates to harmonize their practices with other organizations in accordance with the dates recommended. It reiterated its recommendations on personnel policies, particularly with respect to recruitment policy, and requested organizations to make every effort to implement them and, when taking such action, to inform the ICSC secretariat in time to enable it to report to the Commission at the following session. It also requested organizations that had not done so to send to the ICSC secretariat copies of relevant resolutions, decisions and reports on meetings of legislative bodies.

In October 1987,(40) FICSA expressed satisfaction that ICSC had agreed to revise its working methods to make the statutory consultation process with the representatives of the executive heads and the staff more meaningful than in the past.

Staff-management relations

In his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,(2) the Secretary-General stated that an overall review of the framework for staff-management relations would be undertaken, in implementation of recommendation 59 of the Group of 18 suggesting the establishment of clear guidelines for the role and functions of the staff union; such a review would include organizational arrangements and an administrative document consolidating texts regulating staff-management relations would be issued.

ICSC noted that the issue of the role, functions, and financing of staff unions fell more within the purview of individual organizations. It also noted that it had not specifically addressed the issue of staff-management relations, but had nevertheless done so implicitly through its recommendations in related areas such as promotion policy and performance evaluation.

Full participation of employees' representatives in all decisions touching on their conditions of service was essential in modern labour relations, FICSA said in October 1987;(40) the situation in the United Nations system was not satisfactory in many respects. FICSA requested the Committee to permit staff representatives to participate in its working groups, with the right to speak and to submit documents.

Privileges and immunities

In October 1987, the Secretary-General submitted, on behalf of ACC, a report on United Nations personnel who had been detained or reported missing between 1 July 1986 and 30 June 1987.(41) Of a total of 123 such cases reported to the United Nations Security Co-ordinator during that period, the organizations concerned were successful in 110 cases in obtaining the release of the detainee or were able to determine that no question of immunity was at issue. The remaining cases concerned 12 locally recruited staff members of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) and one local contractor providing interpretation services to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon whose case did not fall within the report's purview.

The Secretary-General stated that he had been unable to obtain any further information regarding Alec Collett, a British journalist on assignment for UNRWA, who had been detained by one of the militia groups or unknown elements in Lebanon in March 1985 and reportedly executed in 1986.(34) He also reported on the case of Mr. Liviu Bota, a staff member of Romanian nationality, whose contract with the United Nations as Director of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research had expired on 31 December 1986 and who had been prevented by Romanian authorities from returning to his assignment at Geneva.(42) A list of staff members under detention or reported missing as of 30 June 1987 was annexed to the report, as was information from the Economic Commission for Africa, FAO and UNRWA.

The report also dealt with other issues relating to the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations system, such as travel restrictions. Restrictions on duty travel of a number of UNRWA staff members remained in effect in the West Bank and Gaza Strip despite repeated efforts of the Agency to obtain their removal. In the United States, the private travel of officials of certain nationalities was subject to prior notification and approval. Arrangements for seasonal permits to certain designated recreational areas were discontinued by the United States in August 1987.

In view of the worsening global security situation and the number of staff members arrested or detained, an ad hoc inter-agency meeting on security matters was convened at Geneva on 30 and 31 July.(43) The meeting considered existing security arrangements and other security matters, including the sharing among organizations of information gained from review missions, greater use of regional security advisers, reimbursement levels for residential security measures, evacuation allowances and insurance coverage for staff required to work in dangerous situations.

On the basis of proposals made at the meeting, ACC in October(44) approved amendments to the United Nations Security Handbook. In accordance with the first of those amendments, the Secretary-General would call on the heads of organizations to suspend all operations in any country that violated the privileges and immunities of United Nations staff, and to cancel future missions to such a country until the situation was resolved. The second amendment concerned strengthening the role of the designated official in co-ordinating action, and called on all country representatives to collaborate closely with the designated official and co-ordinate all action directly related to the security and protection of the staff.

Following consideration of a note prepared by CCISUA addressing the problem of arbitrary arrest and detention of United Nations staff members at duty stations around the world and containing proposals as to how organizations should react in such cases, ICSC decided in July(4) to request its secretariat to carry out a study of the security and independence of the international civil service and to report to it at its next session.

In November,(28) CCISUA expressed the hope that ICSC would go beyond a mere review of the problem. FICSA,(40) CCISUA and the staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat(17) endorsed the amendments made by ACC to the Security Handbook; CCISUA and the Secretariat representatives urged that the newly adopted provision be expanded to include suspension of recruitment of nationals from such a country and suspension of the use of national contractors, including national airlines. Both FICSA and CCISUA welcomed the action taken by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities which, on 3 September, had adopted a resolution on detained United Nations staff members (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVII).

In the context of administration of justice (see below), CCISUA said a staff member's contract should be continued until such time as charges against him or her had been proved in a fair trial.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/219 without vote.

Respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations
The General Assembly,

Recalling that, under Article 100 of the Charter of the United Nations, each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities,

Recalling that, under Article 105 of the Charter, all officials of the Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Member States such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the Organization,

Recalling the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies, the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Development Programme Standard Basic Assistance Agreements,

Recalling also its resolution 76(I) of 7 December 1946, in which it approved the granting of the privileges and immunities referred to in articles V and VII of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations to all members of the staff of the United Nations,

Reiterating the obligation of all officials of the Organization in the conduct of their duties to observe fully the laws and regulations of Member States,

Mindful of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General to safeguard the functional immunity of all United Nations officials,

Mindful also of the importance in this respect of the provision by Member States of adequate and timely information concerning the arrest and detention of staff members and, more particularly, their granting of access to them,

Bearing in mind the wider considerations of the Secretary-General to guarantee minimum standards of justice and due process to United Nations officials,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions, in particular resolution 41/205 of 11 December 1986,

1. Takes note with concern of the report submitted by the Secretary-General, on behalf of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, and of a number of developments indicated therein, in particular those regarding new cases of arrest and detention and those regarding previously reported cases under this category;

2. Also takes note with concern of the information provided by the Secretary-General in his report regarding other questions involving the status, privileges and immunities of officials;

3. Further takes note with concern of the restrictions on duty travel of officials as indicated in the report;

4. Deplores the growing number of cases where the functioning, safety and well-being of officials have been adversely affected, including cases of detention in Member States and abduction by armed groups and individuals;

5. Also deplores the increasing number of cases in which the lives and well-being of officials have been placed in jeopardy during the exercise of their official functions;

6. Calls upon all Member States scrupulously to respect the privileges and immunities of all officials of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and related organizations and to refrain from any acts that would impede such officials in the performance of their functions, thereby seriously affecting the proper functioning of the Organization;

7. Also calls upon all Member States currently holding under arrest or detention officials of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and related organizations, as spelt out in the Secretary-General's report, to enable the Secretary-General or the executive head of the organization concerned to exercise fully the right of functional protection inherent in the relevant multilateral conventions and bilateral agreements, particularly with respect to immediate access to detained staff members;

8. Further calls upon all Member States otherwise impeding officials of the United Nations, specialized agencies and related organizations in the proper discharge of their duties to review the cases and to co-ordinate efforts with the Secretary-General or the executive head of the organization concerned to resolve each case with all due speed;

9. Calls upon the staff of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations to comply with the obligations resulting from the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, in particular regulation 1.8, and from the equivalent provisions governing the staff of the other agencies;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General to use all such means as are available to him to bring about an expeditious solution of the cases still pending, which were referred to in the report;

11. Also calls upon the Secretary-General, as chief administrative officer of the United Nations, to continue personally to act as the focal point in promoting and ensuring the observance of the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations by using all such means as are available to him;

12. Urges the Secretary-General to give priority, through the United Nations Security Co-ordinator and his other special representatives, to the reporting and prompt follow-up of cases of arrest, detention and other possible matters relating to the security and proper functioning of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to review and appraise the measures already taken to enhance the proper functioning, safety and protection of international civil servants and to modify them where necessary.

Staff costs

Salaries and allowances

Salaries

In 1987, ICSC continued to advise the General Assembly on staff salaries and allowances and, in its report,(1) recommended a revised salary scale for Professional and higher categories. In accordance with its mandate, the Commission continued to review the relationship between the levels of net remuneration of the United Nations and the comparator service, the United States federal civil service. In 1985(2) and 1986(3) the Assembly had requested ICSC to develop further the methodology for calculating the margin based on net remuneration. Following past practice, the Commission compared the remuneration of the two civil services with a dependent spouse but no children and between the headquarters of the two systems, i.e., New York for the United Nations common system and Washington, D.C., for the United States federal civil service. Cost-of-living differences between the two cities were also taken into account in the margin calculations, and grade equivalencies, as approved by the Assembly in 1979.(4) The calculations were averaged over a 12-month period, 1 October 1986 to 30 September 1987.

ICSC decided to apply the 1988 income tax rates and the corresponding estimates of tax statistics for netting down United States federal civil service salaries, and took note of the margin level of 116 for the period 1 October 1986 to 30 September 1987, calculated on the basis of the existing methodology. In 1985,(2) the Assembly had set a range of 110 to 120 (with a desirable mid-point of 115) for the margin. The establishment of a fixed margin range had the effect of freezing United Nations salaries which were at the time above the desirable mid-point. By mid-1987, however, the margin had dropped to a level just slightly above mid-point, and it was expected that at the beginning of 1988, it would fall below. The Commission recommended that the existing net remuneration margin calculation methodology, with some of the modifications agreed on in 1986,(5) continue to be applied for the following three years, after which it would be reviewed.

ICSC also reviewed a number of issues relevant to the continued use of the total compensation methodology in the context of comparisons of remuneration of officials of both systems. It had carried out total compensation comparisons based on non-expatriate benefits since 1981 and had recommended comparison methodologies in connection with net remuneration and pensions; the Assembly had requested the Commission to report annually on the results of those comparisons. The Commission noted that the total compensation margin based on non-expatriate benefits stood at 113.7. It further noted that the margin included the effect of the changes in the benefit formula applicable to the United Nations common system staff hired on or after 1 January 1983 and that the effect of the Washington/New York cost-of-living differential was applied only to the salary component of the total compensation package. Except for those two modifications, that total compensation margin was consistent with those reported previously to the Assembly.

In view of a projected deficit in the Tax Equalization Fund by the end of 1987, which was expected to reach approximately $14 million by 1991 if no action was taken, the United Nations requested consolidation of at least 20 points of post adjustment into net base salary, effective 1 January 1988. The Commission also considered an alternative, suggested by its secretariat, of establishing a special scale of staff assessment for Professional and higher categories that would be used solely for determining gross base salaries, while the existing scale, effective 1 April 1987, would remain applicable for all other purposes. Following a discussion of both suggestions, ICSC recommended to the Assembly that it should maintain the current scale of staff assessment for staff members with a dependent spouse or child for purposes of pensionable remuneration and pensions, and approve revised rates of staff assessment to be used in conjunction with gross base salaries and the gross amounts of separation payments, with one set of rates applying to staff members with a primary dependant and another set for staff members without such a dependant. The proposed rates, along with the rates for purposes of pensionable remuneration and pensions effective 1 April 1987 and the proposed base salary and separation payments scales, were shown in annexes to the Commission's report. ICSC recommended that the proposed changes in the staff assessment scale, as well as the consequent changes in the base salary and separation payments scales, be introduced with effect from 1 April 1988. The Commission emphasized that the sole objective of the proposed change was to increase the revenues of the Tax Equalization Fund. In view of the concern expressed by several of its members, the Commission further recommended that application of the measure be monitored closely to ensure that it had no unexpected consequences. It considered the proposed change less disruptive than consolidation, however, and strongly appealed to the Assembly to take the necessary action to avoid a recurrence of difficulties of the Tax Equalization Fund.

ICSC further discussed various issues related to the ongoing grade equivalency study. It decided to: use average Senior Executive Service salaries in remuneration comparisons; keep under study the equivalency of ASG/USG levels; exclude translator positions from remuneration comparisons; note the more satisfactory rate of agreement of the validity check; conclude the review of the effect of career lengths on average salaries, noting the lack of data on which to base an appropriate evaluation; and to use the square root weighting technique in calculating the comparison.

The financial implications of the advances in post adjustment for the organizations of the common system as a whole were estimated by the Commission at $2,850,000 for 1988, and the corresponding financial implications for the United Nations regular budget were estimated at $1,260,000, of which $1,200,000 related to New York.

Among other matters related to salaries and post adjustment, ICSC reiterated its 1984 recommendations to the United Nations, ILO and WHO to introduce one additional step into the salary scales for Professional staff at the P-1 to P-5 levels⁽⁶⁾ who had had at least 20 years of service with United Nations organizations and had been at the top step of their grade for five years or more. The Commission also reiterated its 1982 recommendation to UNDP, UNESCO and the World Intellectual Property Organization to link grades. In October,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General estimated the financial implications for the United Nations regular budget at $90,000 each for the years 1988 and 1989, if a long-service step for Professionals at P-1 to P-5 levels was introduced with effect from 1 January 1988.

Comments of staff representatives. In an October 1987 note,⁽⁸⁾ FICSA said that United States federal pay scales were not competitive, particularly at the higher grades that corresponded to Professional jobs in the United Nations system. With regard to the methodology for calculating the net remuneration margin, the establishment of a margin range in 1985 in order to control the level of post adjustment and salaries had made it imperative that the margin be calculated with utmost precision. Both FICSA and CCISUA⁽⁹⁾ supported the Commission's recommendations on the margin methodology. FICSA agreed with the Commission on the feasibility and usefulness of the total compensation comparison, including expatriate benefits.

The staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, in November,⁽¹⁰⁾ stated that the proposed reductions of entitlements could only serve to make it more difficult for the United Nations to attract and retain staff of the requisite competence.

ACC action. At its April 1987 session,(11) ACC decided to hold a special session at Geneva in June to consider ways of remedying the deterioration in conditions of service of staff within the common system. In view of the possibility of further cuts in entitlements, as recommended by the Group of 18, ACC called on CCAQ to prepare a series of position papers on key elements of conditions of service. Those papers, presented to ACC at the special session, took as their central thesis the need for the remuneration package to attract and retain highly qualified staff. The papers were endorsed by ACC and served as the basis for presentations to ICSC.

In the area of Professional salaries, ACC's attention focused on the freeze of Professional remuneration. In the light of a possible drop in the margin level as of 1 January 1988, ACC pressed strongly for the early lifting of the freeze; in particular, it opposed the exclusion from margin calculations of the existing 5 per cent cost-of-living differential between Washington and New York. The removal of that differential would have the effect of prolonging the freeze, it said. A second area of concern was the comparison of United Nations net salaries and those of the United States federal civil service which, in ACC's view, was too restrictive. ACC considered it more realistic to compare the total of emoluments and benefits.

ACABQ recommendations. In a November 1987 report(12) ACABQ commented on the financial implications of the ICSC proposals, as presented by the Secretary-General in October.(7) It noted that on the basis of an anticipated increase in the salaries of United States federal civil service employees as at 1 January 1988, the effect of applying the proposed methodology, as modified in 1986,(5) would be to advance the granting of the next class of post adjustment in New York by some five months to 1 January, with consequential changes in post adjustment levels at some other duty stations. It also noted that the salary costs used to prepare the 1988-1989 programme budget already reflected, based on inflation assumption, the movement to the next class of post adjustment in New York as of 1 January 1988, and that Baghdad was the only duty station for which an adjustment (with cost implications of $60,000, according to the Secretary-General) would have to be made.

Calculations to determine the average level of the margin were done prospectively for a 12-month period, i.e. from October 1987 to September 1988. Should the salaries of United States federal civil service employees be increased as at 1 January 1988, the margin would drop to a level below 115; the granting of the next class of post adjustment in New York would restore the margin level to approximately 115, which was expected to be the average level for the period October 1987-

September 1988 barring changes in other variables. If the comparator service's salaries were not increased, the current estimated margin level of 115 would not change and consequently there would be no cause for a post adjustment increase at the base of the system (New York); that in turn would involve a consequential reduction in the 1988 salary costs, an adjustment that would, however, be offset in part by the higher rate of inflation anticipated for 1989.

ITU action. By a resolution on conditions of service, adopted at its June 1987 session, the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) Administrative Council invited ITU members to draw the attention of their Governments to the deterioration in conditions of service of ITU staff at Geneva. The Council instructed the ITU Secretary-General to continue studying the problem and to propose steps to protect the Union's interest in offering its staff appropriate conditions of service, and to take action in ICSC and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF) to help find remedial steps. The resolution was transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Fifth Committee in October.(13)

Revised salary scale for General Service and related categories at Vienna

Based on a survey it had conducted of the best prevailing conditions of service for General Service and related categories at Vienna, ICSC(1) recommended revised salary scales as at 1 March 1987. It estimated the financial implications of those recommendations at approximately $4 million per annum.

The Secretary-General, in an October statement on the administrative and financial implication of ICSC'S decisions and recommendations,(7) estimated that full implementation of ICSC'S recommendations as of 1 March 1987 would result in additional costs of $535,000 in 1987. As part of the economy measures approved in 1987, it had been decided to defer implementation of up to 5 per cent of any increase due to staff in the General Service and related categories during that year, he added; accordingly, the 2 per cent cost-of-living increase due in Vienna as of 1 February 1987 had been deferred. The scale recommended by ICSC would result in an increase, on average, of 7.8 per cent over the February scale. The Secretary-General stated that his intention to defer 3 per cent of the increase due under the recommended scale which, together with the 2 per cent cost-of-living increase already deferred, would mean a deferment in total of 5 per cent; consequently, there would be a 4.8 per cent average increase as of 1 March 1987 at an estimated cost. of $260,000 for the current year. Full implementation of the scale was planned for 1988 and 1989 at an estimated cost of $580,000 per year; there would also be a concurrent increase in staff assessment estimated at $410,000 for 1987 and $860,000 each for 1988 and 1989, to be offset by increases in equal amounts under the income section of the budget.

Allowances and benefits

Internal control procedures

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,(14) the Secretary-General submitted in August 1987 a review of internal control procedures relating to benefits and allowances received by United Nations staff members.(15) He noted that in recent years, a number of improvements had been introduced to streamline processing, increase efficiency and strengthen those procedures. The Internal Audit Division regularly reviewed and reported on the adequacy of internal controls. Specific improvements had been taken with regard to education grant payments and income tax reimbursements. The system of internal control for three additional entitlements or benefits-rental subsidies or deductions, dependency allowances, and medical insurance claims-was currently under review.

The United Nations, UNDP and UNICEF had established, on a continuing basis, an interdisciplinary working group with the mandate to develop improved procedures and internal control systems for specific entitlements.

Responses to the Assembly's 1986 request(14) for reports on measures taken to improve internal control procedures were received from 10 United Nations organizations and programmes; they were annexed to an August 1987 note of the Secretary-General.(16)

Post adjustment

The six-member Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions (ACPAQ), established by ICSC in 1976,(17) held its twelfth session at Turin, Italy, from 5 to 12 May 1987. ACPAQ'S report to the Commission dealt with various issues related to post adjustment, including cost-of-living methodology, the rental subsidy scheme for both headquarters and field duty stations, the separation of the effects of inflation and currency fluctuations (see below), the elimination of the post adjustment at the base (New York) (see below) and the out-of-area price progression factor and multiple exchange rates.

ICSC(1) approved several recommendations made by ACPAQ on a revised methodology for the cost-of-living survey, to incorporate changes dealing with costs of education, domestic service and housing, measurement of out-of-area non-consumption expenditures and automobile purchases.

Inflation and currency fluctuations

In view of losses in net take-home pay (defined as base salary plus post adjustment less pension contribution) in local currency terms, experienced by staff members in the Professional category at duty stations where the local currency had sharply appreciated in relation to the United States dollar, ICSC(1) decided to introduce, in addition to the remuneration correction factor (RCF) established in 1986,(18) and with effect from 1 April 1987, a local currency "floor" protection to be applied in countries where the dollar had devalued by more than 20 per cent since the last place-to-place cost-of-living survey.

The Commission also introduced some refinements in computing the out-of-area price progression factor in the post adjustment index to be applied as of 1 September 1987, which would also be reflected in the calculation of RCF for those duty stations at which the RCF procedure applied. As of the same date, the Commission decided on a "ceiling" for local currency take-home pay which would be applicable in countries where "floor" protection measures applied; the "ceiling" was determined by reference to the rate of exchange resulting from a revaluation of 20 per cent of the United States dollar as compared to the exchange rate in effect at the time of the last place-to-place survey.

In an October statement,(7) the Secretary-General estimated the financial implications of those measures-applicable at Geneva, The Hague and Vienna - at $810,000 for 1987, and $475,000 for each year of the 1988-1989 biennium.

ICSC(1) also approved for implementation effective 1 August 1987 the ACPAQ recommendations on special measures for high inflation and for continuous and steady devaluation of local currency, which were intended to harmonize the post adjustment methodology and streamline procedures. The Commission noted that the financial implications of its decision would be $250,000 per annum.

FICSA expressed support for ICSC'S recommendations on out-of-area expenditures and wished to be closely involved in a proposed working group on the separation of the effects of inflation and currency fluctuation on post adjustment. CCISUA noted that while the RCF recognized the problem posed by the decrease in take-home pay due to the decline of the value of the dollar, the scheme was arbitrary and did not provide for a balanced approach; on the one hand, the lower limit at which the RCF was triggered was based on an appreciation of 20 per cent or more of local currency, on the other, the upper limit was set at the exchange rate prevailing at the time of the last survey. It was imperative to develop a scheme that would remove uncertainty, stabilize the system and enable staff in the Professional and higher categories to undertake normal, long-term planning.

Possible elimination of post adjustment in New York

In response to a 1985 General Assembly request,(2) ICSC considered the possible elimination of post adjustment in New York, the base of the post adjustment system.(1) It examined a detailed study by ACPAQ and noted that the advantages would be far outweighed by the disadvantages. It also noted that the Assembly had made its request to study the possibility of eliminating post adjustment in New York at a time when it was concerned about the level of the margin; a range for the margin had since been established and a procedure was in place which enabled the Commission to operate the post adjustment system within that range and which had produced desirable results. Consequently, the elimination of the post adjustment at the base would not appear to be warranted for the time being. The Commission therefore recommended to the Assembly that the post adjustment be maintained at the base of the system.

During ICSC deliberations, the CCAQ Chairman noted that the organizations of the common system were firmly against eliminating the post adjustment at the base, which would result in negative post adjustment at a large number of duty stations and would compound operational and managerial problems. Elimination of the post adjustment at the base was also opposed both by CCISUA and FICSA.

ICSC requested its secretariat, in consultation with United Nations organizations and staff representatives, to undertake a comprehensive study of conditions of service in the field, including a study of various alternatives to the existing system of salaries, allowances and benefits for United Nations officials in the Professional and higher categories. In the meantime, given the serious difficulties experienced by organizations in attracting and retaining staff at field duty stations with very low and negative post adjustment, ICSC decided to recommend to the General Assembly measures to be applied on an interim basis at selected duty stations outside Europe and North America.

The Commission(1) recommended that effective 1 January 1988: an index corresponding to the remuneration in New York adjusted downward by 15 per cent should be calculated; for all field duty stations with a post adjustment index lower than that, only 75 per cent of the difference between the downward adjusted index and the actual post adjustment index of the duty station should be applied; and the lowest level of the post adjustment multiplier should be minus 5 (instead of minus 20).

The financial implications of those modifications were estimated by the Commission to be some $3.86 million annually. For the United Nations alone, the cost of the measure, which would apply at Santiago (Chile), Mexico, Nairobi (Kenya) and Bangkok (Thailand), were estimated by the Secretary-General at $850,000 per year for 1988 and 1989.

FICSA(8) said that ICSC's recommendations did not go far enough; negative post adjustment should be eliminated altogether and the absolute lowest limit should not be multiplier minus 5 but rather class O. Elimination of negative post adjustment was also called for by CCISUA.(9)

Education grant

Based on two documents prepared by CCAQ, ICSC reviewed the education grant.(1) Because of the financial difficulties facing the United Nations, the Commission decided to defer consideration of the overall level of the grant and related provisions to its July 1988 session. However, it recommended to the General Assembly that the existing education grant provisions for staff serving at locations where educational facilities were not available or deemed to be inadequate should be modified as from the school year in progress on 1 January 1988 to enable them to claim reimbursement of 100 per cent of boarding costs up to $1,500 per year in addition to the maximum grant of $4,500. The annual cost of that recommendation was estimated at $75,000 per annum system-wide.

ICSC(1) recommended that the entitlement for education grant for post-secondary education be retained. In 1986, the Group of 18 had called for eliminating that grant.(19) The Commission's recommendation was supported by the Chairman of CCAQ on behalf of ACC, FICSA and CCISUA, the latter believing that the grant should not only be retained but that a considerable increase in its level was warranted.

Other allowances and entitlements

Rental subsidy

In 1987,(1) ICSC reviewed the impact of suspending the implementation of increases in the post adjustment level at the base of the system (New York), on the rental subsidy scheme applicable to staff in the Professional and higher categories serving at selected duty stations in Europe and North America. Because of the "freeze" on the post adjustment level in New York and its corresponding impact at other duty stations, the regressive (over time) reimbursement rates for rental subsidy had resulted in actual reduction in take-home pay for newcomers serving at duty stations where rents were substantially higher than the average reflected in the post adjustment. Consequently, the Commission decided that, with effect from 1 August 1987, the reimbursement rates should be reinstated at the level applicable either when the freeze was applied (1 December 1984) or when the staff member entered into service, whichever was later. It further decided that, when the post adjustment freeze in New York ended, the normal operation of the scheme should be resumed at all duty stations affected.

The Commission also decided to modify, as of the same date, the procedure for computing rental subsidy thresholds by eliminating both extreme rents at field duty stations and rents for staff members who had been at selected duty stations in Europe and North America for less than five years. The revised procedure also entailed establishing a maximum margin of 20 per cent over the average rent to be computed on a graduated scale rather than the straight 25 per cent currently applicable, which resulted in lower thresholds for rental subsidy purposes at certain duty stations.

In an October statement,(7) the Secretary-General said that the two measures decided on by ICSC entailed financial implications for the United Nations regular budget of $155,000 for 1987, $260,000 for 1988, and $130,000 for 1989.

Financial incentives for field service

Based on proposals made by a working group composed of CCAQ, staff representatives and the ICSC secretariat, the Commission in 1987 considered financial incentives for field service staff.(1) It decided to establish new financial incentive levels (equivalent to two months' net salary at the P-4 level, step VI, at the base in New York) with effect from 1 July 1987: at level I, the financial incentive would amount to $5,400 with dependants and $2,700 without; at level II, the corresponding amounts would be $7,200 and $3,600. The Commission estimated the financial implications of the measure at $1.4 million.

ICSC also decided to review the levels of financial incentives whenever there was a change in net salary at the base in New York and to retain restrictions on additional education grant entitlements and the requirement that duty stations receiving entitlements would be reviewed every three years, or sooner if so decided by the ICSC secretariat or requested by staff at the duty station.

The Commission approved: changes recommended by the working group in respect of a questionnaire on conditions at duty stations to ascertain the degree of hardship; proposed revisions to the thresholds for determining entitlements, with estimated financial implications of $27,000 a year for the common system; and the working group's recommendations to provide accelerated home leave entitlements for staff experiencing temporary housing shortages, on the understanding that the entitlement would be limited to those unable to find permanent housing and that there would be strict monitoring and certification by the United Nations resident co-ordinator. It decided to review again in two years the system for providing accelerated home leave entitlements.

Assignment allowance

In response to a FIGSA request, ICS(1) reviewed the assignment allowance for staff in the Professional and higher categories, focusing on the need to provide adequate incentives to enhance mobility of staff towards duty stations in the field. The Commission decided to introduce, as of 1 January 1988, a revised, two-tier system of assignment allowance in duty stations outside Europe and North America. Staff members assigned to serve at their second or subsequent duty station, and who had five or more years of uninterrupted service with the common system, would be entitled to the level of allowance which incorporated a mobility element of a fixed period of up to four years for each assignment. The period of entitlement could be extended for another year if the organization concerned decided that the staff member must remain at the duty station.

The Commission also decided to introduce as of the same date transitional measures to permit the payment of the level of the assignment allowance which incorporated a mobility element, to staff members who were working at their third or subsequent duty station, and who had five years of uninterrupted service in the common system, and less than four years at their current duty station.

It also decided to raise, as of 1 January 1988, the basic amounts of assignment allowance for staff at the P-1 and P-2 levels assigned to duty stations in Europe and North America to $1,800 for those with dependants and to $1,425 for those without. Consequently, as was the case for field duty stations, the same amounts of assignment allowance would be applicable to all P-1 to P-4 staff assigned to duty stations in Europe and North America.(7)

The Commission noted that the financial implications of the revised assignment allowance system, in accordance with the phasing-in procedures, would amount to $16.17 million for the years 1988-1992. The Secretary-General estimated the costs for the United Nations regular budget at $220,000 for 1988 and $515,000 for 1989.

Financial incentive for staff at Beirut

ICSC(1) decided to increase, with effect from 1 April 1987, the temporary financial incentive for internationally recruited staff stationed at Beirut, Lebanon, from $550 to $1,100 per month, and to revise the bonus paid to locally recruited staff required to report to work at Beirut from 20 to 30 per cent of their net base salary. The incentive/bonus system would be discontinued by the ICSC Chairman as soon as the situation at Beirut so warranted.

The Secretary-General, in an October statement to the Fifth Committee,(7) estimated the financial implications of those measures for the United Nations regular budget at $50,000 for 1987 and $65,000 each for 1988 and 1989, if the arrangements remained in effect throughout those years.

Annual leave

ICSC recommended in 1987(1) that the existing annual leave entitlement of 30 days per annum should not be changed. During the discussion in the Commission, the Chairman of CCAQ restated ACC's firm position that the annual leave entitlements should remain unchanged. A similar view was expressed by CCISUA and FICSA. In 1986,(19) the Group of 18 had recommended a four-week annual leave system for all staff members.

Supplementary payments by Governments

In 1987,(1) ICSC again reviewed the issue of supplementary payments made by some Governments to certain of their nationals in the international civil service.

Information had been requested from 155 Member States whose nationals served in the common system, as well as from United Nations organizations. As the majority had not yet supplied information, the Commission decided to pursue the matter and report further to the General Assembly in 1988. However, it had informed the Assembly of its concerns in two areas: the growing practice of countries providing assistance to their nationals on an individual basis while employed by the United Nations, which conflicted with staff regulation 1.6 of the United Nations and corresponding staff rules; and loan agreements whereby staff were made available to organizations on national (expatriate) conditions of service, the costs either being reimbursed or not to Member States. The Commission recalled that in previous years(20) it had made recommendations for appropriate measures to remedy the situation and that the Assembly in 1982(21) had drawn Member States' attention to the fact that the practice of supplementary payments or deductions from salaries was inconsistent with the staff regulations and inappropriate.

Emoluments of top echelon officials

In a December 1987 report,(22) ACABQ noted that if revised rates of staff assessment were introduced with effect from 1 April 1988, to be used in conjunction with gross base salaries and the gross amounts of separation payments for staff in the Professional and higher categories, as recommended by ICSC (see above), it would be necessary to increase at the same time the gross salary of the Secretary-General from $131,161 to $144,615. Because of the linkage between pensionable remuneration and net remuneration, the Advisory Committee recommended that the Secretary-General's current maximum retirement allowance of $81,650, as well as the amounts currently paid to a former Secretary-General and to a widow of a former Secretary-General, be maintained.

Also, as a consequence of the reverse application of the new staff assessment rates recommended by ICSC, the gross salaries of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) and for the UNDP Administrator would also have to be increased from $119,429 to $131,981, with effect from 1 April 1988. The Advisory Committee stated that the increases in the gross salaries of the Secretary-General and Director-General of DIEC would result in an estimated increase in expenditure for staff assessment of $45,500 for 1988-1989; that increase would be offset by an increase in the same amount in respect of income from staff assessment. In view of the fact that no change was involved on a net basis, ACABQ recommended that these amounts would be incorporated in the first performance report on the 1988-1989 programme budget.

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/910 & Corr.1) without vote, 19 December (meeting 67); draft contained in report of Committee (A/C.5/42/L.9 (Part IV) & Corr. 1 & Add.1); agenda item 115.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 8, 12, 14-29, 31-34, 36-50, 54, 57-60, 65-67; plenary 99.

Pensions

During 1987, the principal of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF), providing retirement, death, disability and related benefits for staff upon cessation of service with the United Nations, increased from $5,055,100,094 to $6,113,333,746, while the number of participants decreased from 54,289 in 1986 to 53,968. Investment income during the year amounted to $1,052,467,461 ($1,046,609,776 net). From that amount, the Fund paid $396,950,723, including 9,056 retirement benefits totalling $199,442,276. In addition, it paid 4,433 early retirement and 4,810 deferred retirement benefits, 3,265 widows' and widowers' benefits, 4,770 children's benefits, 537 disability benefits and 49 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the year, it also paid 3,528 lump-sum withdrawal and other settlements.(23)

The 21-member Pension Board held its thirty-seventh session from 3 to 7 August at Geneva.(24) The major items dealt with at that session were: the (nineteenth) actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1986; rate of contribution to the Fund; operation of the two-track pension adjustment system; inequalities of benefits caused by different dates of separation, particularly the impact of the recent depreciation of the United States dollar in relation to certain currencies on the initial local-currency-track pensions; and the size and composition of the Board. In view of the financial crisis of the United Nations, the Board's session was limited to one week, and it was decided that the next session would be held in 1989 rather than in 1988.

Before the Fifth Committee, the Board Chairman said that the actuarial evaluation as at 31 December 1986 showed a reversal of the trend of progressive reductions in actuarial imbalance, which had increased from 3.01 per cent of pensionable remuneration as at 31 December 1984 to 4.4 per cent as at 31 December 1986. At the end of 1982, the imbalance had reached a peak of 8.41 per cent and a number of economy measures had been taken, including an increase in the rate of contribution and a reduction in the scale of pensionable remuneration in 1985 and again in April 1987. The imbalance, however, had begun to increase again owing to events such as a decline in the rate of growth of participants, interest accruing to the actuarial imbalance, a decline in value of the United States dollar, and the considerable loss of income to the Fund due to reductions in pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories.

To help correct the imbalance, the Board and the Committee of Actuaries believed it essential to increase the rate of contribution and the Board recommended an increase to 22.5 per cent. ACABQ reiterated its agreement with that recommendation; if implemented, the financial implications of that measure for all organizations of the system would be $2.3 million. The Board also reaffirmed its previous recommendation that the contribution rate should reach 24 per cent by 1990.

In 1985(25) and 1986,(26) the Assembly had deferred consideration of any further increases, the first slice of a rate increase from 21 to 24 per cent, to take place over four bienniums, as recommended by the Board in 1983,(27) having been implemented on 1 January 1984. The revised scale of pensionable remuneration which had gone into effect on 1 April 1987 would yield savings estimated at $9 million a year, the Board Chairman stated; the Board considered it indispensable for the long-term health of the Fund that appropriate resources be provided for the pension system. The Fund's participants had incurred the main burden of previous measures taken to reduce the imbalance and their pension benefits had been significantly reduced.

In response to a 1986 Assembly resolution,(26) the Board continued to monitor the operation of the two-track pension adjustment system, under which a local-currency-base amount as of the retirement date was established for participants who provided proof of residence in a country other than the United States. The system also provided that, where the local currency amount equivalent to the United States dollar track exceeded the local currency amount on the local track, the amount payable was no more than 120 per cent of the latter. As in 1986,(28) the Board recommended that the 120 per cent cap be maintained; lowering it would yield minimal financial savings and require new transitional measures that would further complicate the system and possibly bring additional administrative expenses.

With reference to inequalities in benefits resulting from different dates of separation from service, the period of stability envisaged by the Assembly in 1986(26) had been disrupted by recent economic developments, the Chairman noted. In a number of locations, the 36-month average exchange rates used to determine the initial amount of the local-currency-track pension had significantly declined, in some locations at the rate of 1 per cent per month. That had happened at a time when, because of reductions in pensionable remuneration and the accompanying transitional measures, the United States dollar pension amounts were static or decreasing, and it had led to a substantial and continuing decline in the prospective local-currency-track pensions of participants in the Professional and higher categories who had recently retired or would retire in certain countries.

In its report,(24) the Board indicated the extent of the decline which had already taken place, as well as the projected annual decline up to 1 January 1991 in six countries, which accounted for some 78 per cent of beneficiaries being paid on the local track. The situation had the consequence that staying in service longer could result in a lower pension entitlement; to prevent that from happening, staff members had been making greater use of the early retirement option. ACC had expressed its concern to the Board that that anomaly, coupled with the recent erosion of pension benefits, would continue to induce an increasing number of staff to take early retirement. ICSC, faced with a similar problem of declining take-home pay in local currency in certain locations, had taken action to mitigate the situation (see above), and the Assembly should do no less in respect of pensions, the UNJSPB Chairman said.

As the next review of pensionable remuneration would not be undertaken until 1990, the Board decided to recommend interim measures applicable until the end of that year and aimed at placing a "floor" under the initial local-currency pension amount for staff members in the Professional and higher categories retiring during 1987-1990, in order to protect the initial local-currency pension from being eroded beyond tolerable limits by the depreciation of the United States dollar at a time of static or decreasing dollar pension amounts.

The Consulting Actuary estimated that the interim measures would increase the current imbalance by 0.11 per cent of pensionable remuneration. He also indicated that they would produce some offsetting savings to the extent that they reduced the incidence of early retirement.

On 21 June,(29) ACC called on the Board to devise urgent measures to deal with declining pension benefits in local currencies and ensure that inequalities in pension benefits caused by different dates of separation from service were reduced. An increase in the rate of contribution, to offset additional costs, should be implemented without further delay, with effect from 1 January 1988.

ACABQ, in an October report,(30) recommended acceptance of the Board's recommendation to increase the rate of contribution to 22.5 per cent. With regard to inequalities of benefits caused, by different dates of separation, ACABQ concurred with the interim measures recommended by the Board, such as the establishment of a "floor" for the relationship between the base amount of the United States dollar pension and the initial local-currency-track pension under the two-track system applicable to beneficiaries who had provided proof of residence in a country other than the United States. The Advisory Committee also concurred with the Board's recommendation that the 120 per cent cap be maintained and that the situation continue to be monitored.

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/887) without vote, 17 December (meeting 65); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.19), following informal consultations and orally corrected; agenda item 124.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 21, 25, 35, 39, 43, 54, 55, 65; plenary 99.

Explaining its position, the USSR said it had not objected to the adoption of the text since it wanted to see the broadest possible agreement on all questions having financial implications. Although the text was highly unsatisfactory, individual provisions, particularly those in section I, paragraph 2, reflected the widespread view that the Board ought to be able to deal with the actuarial deficit without seeking Member States' assistance; moreover, given the unprecedented level of the Fund's resources, it was to be expected that the Board could solve its problems in a manner that raised no additional financial implications. The USSR hoped that the decision to expand the Board would enable it to take the views of Member States on contribution levels fully into account and facilitate its operations.

Mexico had reservations on the way the agreement had been reached and on the text; protracted negotiations had taken place to accommodate the views of a minority, with the result that the final text differed significantly from the Board's original recommendations endorsed by ACABQ. Many delegations had presented outdated and extraneous arguments; such a process called the very expertise of the Board into question.

Sweden believed that an increase in the rate of contribution should have been effective as of 1 January 1988; its support for the consensus was based on the understanding that the increase scheduled to take effect on 1 July 1988 would not be reconsidered by the Assembly.

Canada supported the Board's recommendation that the contribution rate be increased to 22.5 per cent as of 1 January 1988, saying that such an increase would have sent an important message of support for the international civil service. It had joined the consensus on the understanding that the 0.3 per cent increase scheduled for implementation on 1 July 1988 would not be reconsidered by the Assembly in 1988.

In Italy's view, the phased increase was important because it demonstrated the international community's concern about the Fund's actuarial balance.

Pension Fund investments

The assets of the Pension Fund represented a market value of $6,642 million as at 30 October 1987, 5.3 per cent down from $7,016 million on 31 March, but still $1,029 million more than a year earlier. Of the Fund's portfolio, 48 per cent were invested in United States dollars and 52 per cent in other currencies, a balance which provided protection against currency fluctuations; at the same time, in order to provide greater stability, the fixed-income sectors-bonds, real estate and short-term investments-had been increased. Efforts continued to increase investments in developing countries in response to requests by the Assembly; development-related investments as at 30 June 1987 represented 18.1 per cent ($990.5 million) of the total book value of the Fund, up from $783.5 million in the previous year.

In an October report on the Fund's investment,(31) the Secretary-General stated that the return for the year ending 31 March had been 24.7 per cent which, after adjusting for inflation, represented a real rate of return of 22 per cent. He pointed out that it was unlikely that favourable investment conditions would continue and it was therefore possible that rates of return would in future be lower or even negative. The Fund had accordingly adopted a defensive strategy by realizing profits, primarily from the equity sector, and putting those profits in short-term investments or bonds; since 1985, $1.6 billion of capital gains had been so invested, a strategy that had contributed to the comparatively good position of the Fund.

ACABQ(30) noted the Secretary-General's report and discussion by the Board of the Fund's investments,(32) stating that it had no comments on them.

Administrative expenses

In 1987,(24) the Pension Board submitted revised estimates for 1986-1987 of $18,386,600, i.e. $472,000 (net) more than the initially approved estimates of $17,895,700 for the biennium; the revised estimates consisted of administrative costs of $5,670,300 and investment costs of $12,698,300. Estimates of expenses for 1988-1989 amounted to $22,927,400, of which $6,598,900 was for administrative costs and $16,328,500 for investment costs. Those expenses were charged entirely to the Fund and did not involve the budgets of the United Nations or of other member organizations.

Administrative costs for 1986-1987 corresponded to 0.14 per cent of the total pensionable remuneration as at 31 December 1986, the limit set by the 1960 Pension Review Group, while estimated administrative costs for 1988-1989 amounted to 0.16 per cent. In the actuarial valuation as at 31 December 1986, the allowance for administrative expenses was increased to 0.18 per cent. The Committee of Actuaries concluded that an allowance of 0.2 per cent of pensionable remuneration could be justified in the light of developments over the past 25 years, such as a higher ratio of retired to active participants, the growing complexity of the pension system, and the reduction in the scale of pensionable remuneration of Professional and higher-level staff. However, as a spur to financial stringency and efficiency in the central secretariat, the Committee recommended that the limit for administrative expenses be set for the time being at 0.18 per cent.

ACABQ recommended approval of the revised estimates for 1986-1987.(30) For 1988-1989 expenses, chargeable to the Fund, it recommended the amount of $22,877,400 (net), $50,000 less than requested by the Board; it also recommended that $100,000, instead of the $150,000 proposed, be provided for consultancy services to undertake a comprehensive study of the administrative and operational capacities of the Fund's secretariat.

Amendments to the Fund's Administrative Rules

Three amendments to the Administrative Rules of the Fund were made by the Board in 1987. The amendments, which related to eligibility for a disability benefit, entitlement to a child's benefit, and delegation of discretionary authority to the Secretary of the Board to waive recovery of all or part of an indebtedness to the Fund, were annexed to the Board's annual report.(24)

Emergency Fund

In its 1987 report(24), the Board recommended authorization to contribute up to $200,000 to the Emergency Fund during 1988-1989. The Emergency Fund had been established by the Board in 1973(33) from voluntary contributions of member organizations, staff associations and individual contributors, to alleviate the distress of recipients of small pensions caused by currency fluctuations and cost-of-living increases; since 1975, it had been used to relieve hardship by providing aid in individual cases of proven emergency due to illness, infirmity or similar causes.

The General Assembly(34) in 1975 had authorized the Board to supplement voluntary contributions to the Emergency Fund by an amount of up to $100,000 a year. The bulk of the money had been used to assist in paying medical expenses, including hospitalization, and related expenses not reimbursable from other sources. In some instances, payments were made to help cover funeral expenses. Total payments made from 1975 to June 1986 were about $363,300; expenditures during 1986 totalled $45,047, compared to $18,816 in 1985.

The Assembly, in resolution 42/222, gave authorization for the Board to contribute up to $200,000 to the Fund in 1988-1989, after ACABQ, in an October report,(30) had stated no objection.

Pension Board size and composition

At its 1987 session,(24) the Pension Board proposed increasing the number of its members from 21 to 33, with consequential changes in the size and composition of the United Nations Staff Pension Committee, effective from 1 January 1988. In doing so, the Board was attempting to address all of the concerns expressed in the Committee and in the governing bodies of other member organizations, 14 of which, responding to a 1985 invitation of the Assembly,(25) had submitted their views on the subject, which were annexed to the Board's report.(24)

The Assembly, in resolution 42/222, approved the changes with effect from 1 January 1989. The regulations of the Pension Fund were amended accordingly. The Assembly requested the Board to keep under review its composition, as well as the proportionate representation of the Assembly and of the governing bodies of the Board's other member organizations, and to report to it in 1991.

Admission of WTO

Concerning the application of the World Tourism Organization (WTO) for membership in the Pension Fund, the Board noted that, in September 1987, the Secretary-General of WTO would submit to the General Assembly of that organization proposals to revise its staff regulations and rules and bring them in line with the common system of salaries, allowances and other conditions of service. The UNJSPB Chairman, in a November statement before the Fifth Committee,(32) said that those revisions had been adopted and a recommendation on WTO'S application for membership would be made to the United Nations General Assembly in 1988. In 1987, 15 United Nations organizations were members of the Fund, in addition to the United Nations proper.

Administration of justice

As requested by the General Assembly in 1984(1) and 1985,(2) as well as in follow-up to a recommendation of the Group of 18 in 1986,(3) steps were being taken to establish a revised and simplified system of administration of justice by early 1988, the Secretary-General said in his April 1987 report on reform and renewal in the United Nations.(4) Meanwhile, emergency measures had been taken to eliminate the backlog of appeals before the joint Appeals Board and to diminish the case-load of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal.

A working group had been set up in January to review the United Nations' appellate and disciplinary processes. In a November report,(5) the Secretary-General said that at formal consultations during a special session of the Staff-Management Co-ordination Committee on 14 and 15 October, proposals were put forward based on the need for a qualitative improvement in administrative decision-making and the resolution of disputes as quickly and informally as possible, thus, where practicable, avoiding formalized complaints and triggering the adjudicative process. In that connection, the emphasis of the redress had to be shifted back from its current focus on litigation to a search for administrative settlements in accordance with fairness and equality of treatment and adjudication regarded as the last resort. Where the settlement process failed, however, swift and decisive justice had to be applied.

The Secretary-General said that renewed efforts had been made to negotiate the settlement of indefensible cases before the Administrative Tribunal and the joint Appeals Board. A marked improvement was achieved in the backlog of cases requiring administrative review and in complying with procedural time-limits." Administrative measures were taken to ensure the availability of adequate numbers of Board members. While reports of the Board continued to be advisory to the Secretary-General, it was decided that unanimous reports would, as a matter of practice, be accepted, provided that they did not impinge on major questions of law or principle.

In accordance with that new procedure, intended as part of a series of measures to raise the status of the joint Appeals Board, 49 out of 52 reports had so far been approved in 1987 by the Secretary-General. In February, the USG for Administration and Management requested the Board to give priority to hearing disciplinary appeals. As an interim measure, it was decided to make available support for the voluntary work? conducted through the panel of counsel, of advising and assisting staff members with contractual problems 'While those measures had had some impact on the situation, it became increasingly clear during the year, the Secretary-General said, that more far-reaching changes were required.

With regard to staff-management consultations, a series of further decisions was taken to shorten and simplify the administrative process and to expedite the appellate stage, as well to ensure a mandatory and substantive administrative review of grievances. The USG would assume direct responsibility for the appellate process. The proliferation of joint appeals boards would cease and the existence of those away from Headquarters would be reappraised. Remaining boards would report directly to the USG who would consult as necessary with the Legal Counsel, the Controller and the ASG, Office of Human Resources Management, when questions of law or of principle arose. The composition, structure, functioning and procedures of the joint appeals boards would be revised.

Without prejudice to that review, rosters of Board members and of alternative secretaries would be established to ensure the availability of qualified personnel to clear the current backlog. Procedural time-limits would be strictly enforced, and a joint working group established to consider whether and how to amalgamate other specialized appeal bodies with the joint Appeals Board. Concerning disciplinary procedures, which had occasionally been delayed because of the lack of personnel, it had been decided to assign a qualified staff member as full-time secretary for as long as necessary to clear the backlog and to reinforce the membership of the joint Disciplinary Committee with a number of new appointments. As agreed at the Staff-Management Co-ordination Committee session in October, another joint working group would be established to consider drawing up a new disciplinary code, together with the necessary procedural standards. Provisions would be made for appeals from the joint Disciplinary Committee to go directly to the Administrative Tribunal rather than to the joint Appeals Board.

Discrimination and Grievance Panels would also be reviewed, as in many instances they had not functioned as intended; consideration would be given to whether their procedures could be reformed to provide objective and useful means of informal dispute settlement or whether some other means, such as mandatory conciliation or some form of Ombudsman system, should replace them. All aspects of the question would be studied further, the Secretary-General said.

Speaking before the Fifth Committee,@) he stated that a just and speedy system of dealing with grievances was not only necessary, but an indispensable aid to staff/management relations and to upgrading management practices. Some of the proposed measures would require changes in the Staff Rules. Within the current strict financial constraints, and in the framework of a reduction of staff by 15 per cent, means would continue to be sought to expedite the adjudication of claims and of disciplinary allegations. He would report to the Assembly in 1988 on further action taken.

Introducing the Secretary-General's report in the Committee, the USG for Administration and Management said that, regarding the institution of an Ombudsman, which had been the subject of 1986 reports of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU)(3) and of the Secretary-General(7) following up a 1985 study,(8) there was no consensus for the time being and although the idea had not been abandoned, it was important to make the existing machinery work first.

In an oral report to the Fifth Committee,(9) the ACABQ Chairman said that few tangible achievements had been cited by the Secretary-General. Under the circumstances, the Advisory Committee recommended that he report again to the Assembly in 1988, providing specific information on what had already been done to simplify rules and procedures and on steps taken to identify those aspects of staff administration which gave rise to an inordinate number of appeals, as well as on the steps taken to provide for a quick settlement of minor disputes prior to the appeals stage and to establish a mechanism to reject frivolous applications for review. He should also propose steps for a more efficient handling of cases that reached the judicial bodies, provide information on the results of consultations between staff and the administration with regard to establishing an office of Ombudsman, including a complete statement of administrative and financial implications, and indicate what steps had been taken to correct deficiencies in the established process for disciplinary action.

ICSC also planned to study the administration of justice in the common system, within its proposed work programme for 1988-1989, and to report to the General Assembly in 1989.(10)

The staff unions and associations of the United Nations Secretariat, in a note transmitted to the Fifth Committee in November 1987,(11) stated that the only way to counteract inequities was for everyone to be afforded a full hearing before the Joint Disciplinary Committee. They believed that no additional joint disciplinary committees should be constituted and advocated amending the Staff Rules concerning other aspects of alleged misconduct eliminating suspension without pay except in cases where a staff member's presence at work was a danger to persons or property, or when he might destroy evidence related to alleged misconduct. A code, they said, should be developed to set out in a public record a number of matters relating to disciplinary action.

Concurring in general with the JIU's proposal(3) regarding setting up a two-stage judicial procedure to deal with all staff appeals of administrative decisions, the staff representatives said the Joint Appeals Board in New York should be transformed into a court of first instance, and decisions should be appealable, both by administration and staff, to the Administrative Tribunal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/220 B without vote.

Administration of Justice in the Secretariat
The General Assembly,

Noting the importance of a just and efficient system for the administration of justice in the Secretariat,

Having considered the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the administration of justice in the United Nations, the comments of the Secretary-General thereon and the report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of an office of Ombudsman in the Secretariat and the streamlining of the appeals procedures,

Recognizing the efforts made by the Secretary-General in that area,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to improve the procedures for resolving disputes and appeals by taking steps which would ensure their objective and expeditious resolution;

2. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to review the feasibility of the establishment of an independent office of Ombudsman in the Secretariat;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to present his recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/220 B

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/885) without vote, 19 December (meeting 67); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.24), following informal consultations; agenda item 122.

UN Administrative Tribunal

The United Nations Administrative Tribunal delivered 29 judgements during 1987 in cases brought by staff members against the Secretary-General of the United Nations or the executive heads of other organizations in the United Nations system to resolve disputes involving the terms of appointment and related regulations and rules. They concerned such personnel management matters as compensation and/or damages, implementation of new scales of pensionable remuneration, cost-of-living increment for General Service staff, pensions, assignment allowance, repatriation grant, rental deductions, classification and reclassification of posts, promotion, non-renewal or termination of appointment, and rescindment of disciplinary measures.

The Tribunal met in annual plenary session in New York on 6 November 1987 and held two panel sessions - 4 May to 5 June (Geneva) and 12 October to 13 November (New York). In keeping with past practice, the Secretary-General submitted a note to the General Assembly outlining the Tribunal's activities for the year.(12) In that note, the Tribunal expressed concern at the increasing volume of litigation which caused it to meet at each session for longer periods of time and which might in future require it to meet more often.

Feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal

In June 1987,(13) the Secretary-General submitted a report on the feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal, by combining the two administrative tribunals of the common system, the United Nations Administrative Tribunal and the ILO Administrative Tribunal. The report, the latest in a series prepared since the General Assembly in 1978(14) had requested him to study the matter, was virtually unchanged from previously submitted reports, consideration of which had been deferred by the General Assembly in 1985(15) and in 1986.(16)

The statute of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, as adopted in 1949(17) and amended in 1953(18) and 1955,(19) together with the proposed changes was annexed to the Secretary-General's report, as were the corresponding provisions of the ILO Administrative Tribunal, similarly indicating the existing text and proposed modifications. Also annexed was a proposed draft resolution on the harmonization and further development of the statutes, rules and practices of both tribunals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/217 without vote.

Feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal",

Noting that the International Labour Organisation has under consideration proposals corresponding to those appearing in the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To arrange for consultations among Member States to take place in New York during the first part of 1988 for the purpose of examining the proposals included in his report entitled "Feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal", bearing in mind the technical, legal and administrative aspects of the matter;

(b) To invite the Director-General of the International Labour Office to be represented at such consultations;

(c) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the outcome of such consultations and to present proposals designed to enable the Assembly to conclude its consideration of this item at that session;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session under the item entitled "Administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency" a sub-item entitled "Harmonization of the statutes, rules and practices of the administrative tribunals of the International Labour Organisation and of the United Nations".

Travel

Official travel

In November 1987,(1) ACABQ considered a 1986 JIU follow-up report on organization and methods of official travel(2) and comments on it by the Secretary-General.(3) Since then, the Advisory Committee said, a request for proposals and bids in respect of a full service agreement, an in-plant travel agency arrangement, a cost plus management fee arrangement, or any arrangement in the interest of the United Nations, had been submitted to a number of travel agencies. ACABQ said it had further been informed that the bids/proposals were due momentarily and that it was hoped that the evaluation process would be completed before year end so that a decision concerning future arrangements could be taken prior to the expiration of the contract of the travel agent at Headquarters, which had been extended to the end of January 1988.

The Advisory Committee noted that the contract between the United Nations Office at Geneva and Thomas Cook S.A. had not been terminated as had been recommended by JIU, since the Office would have been left without a travel agency; the current contract expired at the end of March 1988 and requests for proposals similar to those prepared by Headquarters had been submitted by the Geneva Office.

The Advisory Committee had been informed that approximately 10 airlines transported the majority of United Nations travellers, three of them carrying a significant volume; two of those three carriers had now signed incentive and bonus mileage agreements with the Organization with regard to New York-originating travel, and the total number of agreements negotiated by Headquarters had increased from 17 in July 1986 to 22. ACABQ welcomed that turn of events and requested the Secretary-General to pursue his negotiations with the remaining "top carrier" as well as other airlines; at the same time, it was of the view that the Organization should re-examine its position towards airlines that did not co-operate. ACABQ pointed out that benefits deriving from incentive, bonus mileage and other agreements were considerable.

The Secretary-General also had discussed inter-agency co-ordination; in that connection, ACABQ noted that UNDP's Inter-agency Procurement Services Unit had successfully negotiated discounts for the system as a whole with two airlines; the Advisory Committee believed that such negotiations should be extended and hoped that additional agreements' with airlines would be reached.

The General Assembly, by decision 42/453 of 21 December 1987, took note of the 1986 JIU report and the Secretary-General's comments on it, as well as of ACABQ's report. It concurred with the Advisory Committee's observations and requested the Secretary-General to report in 1988 on developments in the matter.

Standards of accommodation for air travel

In response to recommendation 6 of the Group of 18,(4) the Secretary-General stated in his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations(5) that he intended to include in the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget a reduction for travel of representatives to the General Assembly and make provision for one first class and four economy tickets for each of the 40 Member States included in the list of least developed countries (LDCs) (see p. 389). The 1971 Rules Governing Payment of Travel Expenses and Subsistence Allowances in respect of Members of Organs or Subsidiary Organs of the United Nations would be revised to reflect the Group's recommendation. However, due to the financial crisis, reimbursement for travel of representatives to the 1987 Assembly session would be further limited to one first class and two economy tickets for representatives of each LDC. ACABQ, in its first report on the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget,(6) recommended extending that principle to subsidiary bodies of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

ACABQ also considered a November 1987 report(7) submitted in the context of the 1986-1987 programme budget, in which the Secretary-General provided information on all first-class travel and exceptions made to the rules on standards of accommodation for all air travel for the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987. The Secretary-General also indicated reasons for the exceptions and the resulting additional costs.

The Advisory Committee noted that 43 exceptions- as compared to 56 for the previous reporting period-had been made to the rules; of those, 41 involved first-class travel and 2 business class, incurring additional costs of $35,650 to the Organization.

ACABQ also noted that, as stated in the Secretary-General's report, the Board of Auditors, in March 1986, had questioned the validity of extending first-class travel to members of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation (UNSCEAR), as had been the practice. According to the Secretary-General, the scientists designated by Governments to be their representatives on the Committee served in their individual capacities and were thus entitled to first-class air accommodation, in accordance with a 1966 Assembly resolution on air travel standards.(8) The Auditors, however, concluded that the scientists were government representatives and as such only entitled to economy-class accommodation (or the class immediately below first, for flights exceeding nine hours). In ACABQ's opinion, it would appear that an error had been made by including UNSCEAR's name on the list of organs or subsidiary organs whose members served in their individual capacity. With regard to the assumption set forth in the Secretary-General's report that the Committee members had dual status as scientific experts and government representatives, ACABQ noted that a similar claim could be made for members of other committees; it, therefore, concurred with the Auditors' conclusion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/214 without vote.

Standards of accommodation for air travel

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/198 of 21 December 1977, 35/217, section X, of 17 December 1980 and 37/237, section III, of 21 December 1982, on first-class travel in the United Nations,

Also recalling resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, by which it approved, inter alia, recommendation 38 (2), as contained in the report of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations, which states that as a rule, first-class air travel should be limited to the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on standards of accommodation for air travel and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides that all individuals, with the exception of the Secretary-General and the heads of delegations of the least developed countries to the regular and special sessions of the General Assembly, whose travel is financed by United Nations organizations and programmes and who were previously entitled to first-class accommodations, will be required to travel at the class immediately below first class;

3. Authorizes the Secretary-General to exercise his discretion in making exceptions to allow first-class travel on a case-by-case basis;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly on the implementation of the present resolution, noting all exceptions made under paragraph 3 above, and the reasons for those exceptions.

Travel expenses and subsistence payments

In his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal of the United Nations,(5) the Secretary-General reported that two measures had been taken to reduce overall travel of staff, as requested by the Group of 18:(4) a procedure established in 1985, requiring staff to obtain prior authorization of the Secretary-General's Executive Office for all official travel to conferences and meetings, had been strengthened, and other measures introduced in January 1986, which provided for a withholding of 20 per cent of the appropriations approved for travel of staff, were extended to 1987. The proposed 1988-1989 programme budget would also reflect reductions for travel. As set out in a 1983 administrative instruction, the Secretary-General added, classes other than first class would continue to be the basic entitlement for both the Secretariat and members of ICJ as covered by a 1982 Assembly resolution.(9)

ACABQ noted that the proposed 1988-1989 budget showed a combined estimate of $21.6 million for travel of staff to service meetings and on official business, a 13.6 per cent reduction compared to $25 million in the 1986-1987 budget; in view of the requirement to reduce official travel by 20 per cent, the Committee recommended a further reduction of $1.6 million for 1988-1989.(6)

Having made a number of recommendations regarding the allowances of eligible members of boards, committees, commissions, etc., in its 1986 report on the financial reports and audited financial statements and reports of the Board of Auditors,(10) ACABQ recommended further that the payment of an allowance ($10 or its equivalent in local currency) to members who attended meetings at the place of residence or duty station be discontinued with effect from 1 January 1988. Should the Assembly accept the Advisory Committee's recommendation, its decision should be reflected in an amendment to the rules governing payment of travel expenses and subsistence allowances in respect of members of organs or subsidiary organs of the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/225, section VI, without vote.

Recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and budgetary questions contained in paragraphs 79 and 4.14 of its first report on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989

(The General Assembly...)

Having considered paragraphs 79 and 4.14 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Accepts the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions concerning subsistence payments, as contained in paragraph 79 of its report;

2. Decides to consider at its forty-third session the question raised in paragraph 4.14 of the report of the Advisory Committee and requests the Secretary-General to prepare appropriate information thereon;

Other UN officials

Experts and consultants

In November 1987,(1) the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on the use of consultants and participants in ad hoc expert groups in the United Nations, providing data on former staff over 55 who were re-engaged in any capacity during 1986. In addition, detailed information about those individuals was made available to ACABQ. Further information on the subject for the 1986-1987 biennium was to be made available to the Assembly in 1988. The Group of 18, in 1986,(2) had recommended that the amount spent on outside consultants be reduced by 30 per cent and that the practice of hiring retired staff members be abolished.

In his April 1987 progress report on reform and renewal in the United Nations,(3) the Secretary-General stated that for 1987, expenditures for consultants were being curtailed by approximately 35 per cent as part of the economy measures to deal with the Organization's financial crisis. Concerning the hiring of retired staff members, he recalled his view that an absolute prohibition of that practice might not be in the interest of Member States, since such staff members often provided specific expertise in a more effective and less costly manner than could otherwise be obtained; that was particularly true in the case of language services.

The Secretary-General noted in his November report that there were 376 cases of former staff over 55 re-engaged in 1986 at all duty stations throughout the Secretariat, involving a total of 335 persons. In 81 cases, an annual payment of over $12,000 was made, which was the limit determined as an interim measure by the General Assembly in 1982(4) for emoluments of former staff members in receipt of periodic benefits under UNJSPF, and confirmed by the Assembly in 1984.(5)

In November 1987,(6) ACABQ noted that the Secretary-General's report provided information only on former staff members over 55. The total number of former staff re-engaged as consultants, contractors and temporary staff who received more than $12,000 in 1986 while in receipt of a Pension Fund benefit was 3, 7 and 48, respectively. According to additional information provided to it, regular staff members and project personnel who received more than $12,000 in 1986 were either not in receipt of a United Nations pension benefit, had become participants in the Pension Fund but had not previously received a benefit, or had again become participants in the Fund and thus had payments of previous benefits suspended.

The majority of instances (47 temporary staff members and 6 contractors) involving former staff who earned more than $12,000 while in receipt of a United Nations pension benefit without again becoming participants in the Pension Fund, related to language functions. The Advisory Committee did not concur with the Secretary-General's statement that he must be able to engage former staff members in language functions without any limitation as to their maximum remuneration in any calendar year, nor did it agree with his proposal to report in future only to ACABQ and only on former-staff over 55 years of age in receipt of periodic pension benefits who were engaged as consultants or individual contractors and who received more than $12,000. The Committee believed that the Secretary-General should take all possible measures to ensure that the intent of the 1982 Assembly resolution(4) was not circumvented; notwithstanding the Secretary-General's reasons for not applying the $12,000 limit to language staff, the Assembly had not envisaged exceptions and any departure from the principle should occur only in exceptional circumstances and should be fully explained.

ACABQ therefore recommended that the Secretary-General report on all exceptions, i.e., on all staff members who were re-engaged by the Organization in whatever capacity and who, while in receipt of a United Nations pension benefit, earned more than $12,000 a year. At the same time, it recommended that the Secretary-General submit all of that information in the context of his biennial report on the use of consultants and participants in ad hoc expert groups. Additional details on former staff members re-engaged by the Organization and exceptions to the 1982 Assembly resolution should continue to be provided to the Advisory Committee, albeit on a biennial basis. In that connection, the Committee requested that the detailed report contain a separate listing of all former staff re-engaged for language functions.

The General Assembly, by decision 42/452 of 21 December 1987, took note of the Secretary-General's report and his reports submitted in the two previous years(7) and decided to revert to the subject in 1988.

Chapter IV

Other administrative and management questions

In 1987, the Committee on Conferences continued efforts towards organizing a more evenly distributed calendar of United Nations conferences and meetings, ensuring the best use of conference-servicing resources and limiting documentation. Bolstering those efforts were the related measures taken, as reported by the Secretary-General, in implementation of the 1986 General Assembly resolution approving the recommendations of the High-level Intergovernmental Group of Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18).

The Committee began revising its terms of reference in response to an Assembly request and a Group of 18 recommendation that it be reconstituted into a permanent intergovernmental body. To allow for the formulation of a final recommendation, the Assembly renewed the Committee's mandate for a further year, through 1988 (resolution 42/207 A).

The Assembly authorized meetings of a number of subsidiary organs during its 1987 session (decision 42/403), approved the 1988-1989 calendar of conferences and meetings (resolution 42/207 B), and requested the Secretary-General to ensure conference services with adequate personnel and equal treatment of all United Nations official languages (resolution 42/207 C). The Assembly concurred with the Secretary-General's decision to continue the joint conference services at the Vienna International Centre, but to keep under review the possibility of unifying those services (resolution 42/225, section VII). It approved the 1988 budget estimates for the International Computing Centre (ICC) (resolution 42/225, section I).

In addition, the Assembly took note of two 1986 reports by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), together with the relevant comments of the Secretary-General and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC): on the storage problem in the United Nations system (resolution 42/225, section III) and on the management of the system's interpretation services (decision 42/455). Noting that the project on the issue of special postage stamps on the social and economic crisis in Africa was almost completed, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General for a final financial report on the project (resolution 42/216 B).

Also in 1987, three reports were submitted to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

(CPC) at its request: a progress report by ACC on the status of a register of United Nations development activities, taken note of by the Economic and Social Council (decision 1987/183); and a report on Secretariat mailing lists and an evaluation of the programme on electronic data processing and information systems services, both by the Secretary-General.

Conferences and meetings

In 1987, the Committee on Conferences examined the draft calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations for the 1988-1989 biennium. It considered requests for additions or changes to the approved 1987 calendar,⁽¹⁾ as well as requests to meet during the General Assembly session. It discussed the pattern of meetings of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies and of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC). It sought ways of implementing the 1985 Assembly request⁽²⁾ to convene no more than one special conference at a given time and no more than five such conferences in any given year. In addition, it reviewed meetings statistics with a view to improving the utilization of conference-servicing resources and discussed the question of interpretation services management.

(For the Committee's consideration of matters relating to the control and limitation of documentation, see p. 1176.)

The Committee held two series of substantive meetings in New York, between 23 and 27 March and between 24 August and 2 September.

In its report to the Assembly,⁽³⁾ the Committee submitted two draft resolutions and the draft calendars for 1988 and 1989, which served as the bases for Assembly resolutions 43/207 A and B.

Report of the Secretary-General. In April 1987,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the progress of implementation of the 1986 General Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁾ approving the recommendations of the Group of 18 to improve the Organization's administrative and financial functioning. Referring to the calls for a strengthened Committee on Conferences with broadened responsibilities (recommendation 1),(6) for a significant reduction in the number of conferences and meetings, and for the enforcement of the principle that United Nations bodies meet at their established headquarters (recommendations 2 and 4),(7) the Secretary-General pointed out that these required action by Governments, acting individually or collectively.

In the mean time, the Department of Conference Services had submitted a number of draft recommendations concerning the strengthening of the Committee; it had also issued reminders to all relevant bodies on the need for reducing the frequency and cost of meetings with a request for specific proposals.

In addition, the Secretary-General noted that the United Nations Secretariat had issued an administrative instruction providing guidelines to officials responsible for finalizing agreements with host Governments for meetings held away from Headquarters to ensure that those Governments bore the additional costs entailed, all of which were to be accounted for and determined in a consistent manner.

Mandate of the Committee on Conferences

During 1987, the Committee on Conferences(3) undertook a detailed study of all aspects involved in changing its status to a permanent intergovernmental body. This was as recommended by the Group of 18 (see above) and in response to a General Assembly request in 1986.(8)

The Committee reached agreement on draft revised terms of reference, by which it would: advise the General Assembly on all matters pertaining to the organization of United Nations conferences; plan and co-ordinate conferences and meetings; present the draft calendar for the coming year or biennium and act for the Assembly on departures from the approved calendar involving financial implications; ensure the best use of conference facilities and services; advise the Assembly on requirements for conference services, facilities and documentation and recommend to it ways to ensure improved co-ordination of conferences; monitor implementation of Assembly resolutions on conference organization, servicing and documentation; monitor publications policy; and report yearly to the Assembly.

Despite sustained effort, a number of issues remained outstanding. The Committee thus recommended that the Assembly extend its current mandate and membership for a further year, from 1 January to 31 December 1988, to enable it to formulate final recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/207 A.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3351(XXIX) of 18 December 1974, 32/72 of 9 December 1977, 36/117 B of 10 December 1981, 38/32 of 25 November 1983, 40/243 of 18 December 1985, 41/177 B of 5 December 1986 and 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on Conferences for its report and its continuing efforts to achieve optimum use of conference-servicing resources within the United Nations;

2. Decides to extend the current mandate and status of the Committee on Conferences for a further year from 1 January to 31 December 1988;

3. Requests the President of the General Assembly to reappoint the current States members of the Committee for that further year, without this constituting a precedent;

4. Requests the Committee on Conferences to continue and complete its consideration of the outstanding issues with respect to its mandate and status and, taking into account the views expressed by Member States during the forty-second session, to make specific recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/42/673; S-G, A/C.5/42/11.

The adopted text incorporated amendments made in the Fifth Committee that replaced the words "reports and its efforts since its establishment" by "report and its continuing efforts" in paragraph 1; added "without this constituting a precedent" at the end of paragraph 3; inserted "and complete" in paragraph 4 and replaced the words "status, and to make" by "status and, taking into account the views expressed by Member States during the forty-second session, to make specific".

In his statement on the resolution's programme budget implications,(9) the Secretary-General indicated that the full cost of conference-servicing requirements for the Committee's proposed 1988 meetings—omitted from the draft calendar because the previous extension of the Committee's mandate had been only through 1987(8)—was estimated at $559,200. Since provision had been made in the proposed programme budget for 1988-1989 not only for meetings known at the time of budget preparation but also for those anticipated to be authorized subsequently, no additional appropriation would be requested under section 29 (Conference and library services) of the proposed budget.

Having noted the Secretary-General's statement, ACABQ(10) concluded that the Committee's conference-servicing requirements should be regarded as perennial and as such be included in initial estimates.

Calendar of meetings

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(1) the Committee on Conferences in 1987(3) took up the question of the future meetings pattern of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies. Due to the Board's failure to propose an alternative to the situation, making it necessary for it to meet yearly during the Assembly session when subsidiary organs were prohibited to meet,(6) the Committee was unable to take further action on the question.

The Committee also considered a Secretariat report(11) drawing attention to an anomaly arising from a provision of a 1985 Assembly resolution on the pattern of conferences(2) and rule 4 of the ICSC rules of procedure governing ICSC's pattern of meetings. The Assembly had reaffirmed that United Nations bodies should meet at their established headquarters, excepting ICSC, among others, which should hold its regular annual session at United Nations Headquarters and, if more than one session was required in any one year, might accept an invitation from one of its participating organizations to hold its other session or sessions at that organization's headquarters. Under rule 4, ICSC should hold its sessions at Headquarters, unless it decided that a particular session should be held elsewhere at the invitation of one of its participating organizations.

In view of ICSC's practice of accepting invitations from its participating organizations-of which 12 of a total of 14 were based in Europe-to hold its sessions not necessarily at the headquarters of the inviting organizations but at other locations with good conference facilities, the Secretariat proposed the following alternative formulation to resolve the anomaly: "The International Civil Service Commission shall hold its sessions at the Headquarters of the United Nations, unless it decides that a particular session should be held away from United Nations Headquarters at the invitation of one of the participating organizations." Owing to a lack of unanimous support, the Committee could not recommend the text to the Assembly.

Summing up, the Chairman stated that: the Committee had fully explored the legal, practical and financial aspects of the question; when the Assembly adopted its 1985 resolution,(2) it had been aware of ICSC's rule 4; the Committee might not be the best forum to reconcile the existing formulations; and ICSC could request the Assembly for authorization again to meet away from the headquarters of its participating organizations, should the need arise.

In response to the Committee's request that a mechanism be devised to assist in implementing the provision of the same 1985 Assembly resolution(2) stipulating that no more than one special conference be convened at the same time and no more than five in any given year, the Secretariat orally reported that no official definition of the term "special conferences" had ever been agreed on but that the Secretariat maintained an unofficial list of major conference-servicing events scheduled for the future.

On the Chairman's proposal, the Committee agreed that the matter could be dealt with under a 1980 Assembly resolution(12) which provided that the Committee should review all proposals affecting the schedule of conferences and meetings made at Assembly sessions when administrative or budgetary implications were being considered. Thus, any proposal for an additional special conference in a year in which five were already on schedule would come under the Committee's review.

In 1987, the Committee on Conferences(3) received no requests for additions or changes to the year's approved calendar of conferences and meetings that involved financial implications.

By letters of 2(13) and 29 September(14) and 16 October,(15) the Committee Chairman informed the General Assembly President of requests from 11 subsidiary organs to meet in New York while the Assembly was in session, among them CPC, which had requested to meet from 14 to 25 September in order to finalize its work.(16) Having received the Secretariat's assurances that in no case were administrative or financial implications involved, the Committee recommended that the meetings be authorized, on the understanding that they would be accommodated as facilities and services became available so as not to impede Assembly activities. The General Committee(17) endorsed the recommendation and, in addition, recommended that the Special Committee against Apartheid be likewise authorized to meet.

The Secretariat had earlier, on 12 February,(18) circulated a list of meetings of intergovernmental and expert bodies in the economic, social and related fields to be held in 1987. In November, the Economic and Social Council rescheduled the meeting of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa from January 1988 to December 1987 (see p. 794) and authorized the special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations to reconvene for one meeting in 1987 (see p. 508).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, acting without vote on the recommendations of the Committee on Conferences and the General Committee, adopted decision 42/403.

Meetings of subsidiary organs during the forty-second session

At its 3rd, 24th and 45th plenary meetings, on 15 September, 5 and 21 October 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the Committee on Conferences and of the General Committee in its first and second reports, decided that the following subsidiary organs should be authorized to hold meetings during the forty-second session:

- (a) Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;
- (b) Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research;
- (c) Committee on Applications for Review of Administrative Tribunal Judgements;
- (d) Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;
- (e) Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Fund for South Africa;
- (f) Committee on Relations with the Host Country;
- (g) Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People;
- (h) Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa;
- (i) Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea;
- (j) Special Committee against apartheid;
- (k) United Nations Council for Namibia;
- (l) Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

General Assembly decision 42/403

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/42/250 & Corr.1 & Add.1) without vote, 16, 17 September, 2 October (meetings 1-5); proposals by Committee on Conferences (A/42/548 & Add.1,2); agenda item 8.

The meeting dates requested by CPC were authorized by Assembly decision 41/403 B of 14 September.

Calendar for 1988-1989

At its June/July 1987 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a Secretariat note annexing the provisional calendar of conferences and meetings for 1988 and 1989.(19) On the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee,(20) the Council on 8 July approved the provisional calendar by decision 1987/178.

In August, the Committee on Conferences examined the draft calendar of conferences and meetings for 1988 and 1989, drawn up as at 1 September 1987 on the basis of established principles embodied in a 1985 General Assembly resolution(2) and in various other previous resolutions and decisions. The Committee noted that, as a result of the 1986 Assembly resolution approving the recommendations of the Group of 18,(5) the draft calendar reflected a more even distribution of meetings, making for a better utilization of conference facilities and resources and limiting the use of temporary personnel. However, it also noted a number of deviations from established practice, in particular the trend towards biennial, rather than annual, sessions. The draft calendar was submitted to the Assembly in the Committee's report.(3)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted without vote resolution 42/207 B.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Conferences,

1. Approves the draft calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations for the biennium 1988-1989 as submitted by the Committee on Conferences;

2. Authorizes the Committee on Conferences to make any adjustments in the calendar of conferences and meetings for the biennium 1988-1989 that may become necessary as a result of action and decisions taken by the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

3. Requests United Nations organs, in order to make optimum use of the conference-servicing resources allocated to them, to indicate with greater precision the actual number of meetings with conference services that they will require in their coming sessions;

4. Requests the Economic and Social Council to consider inviting the Committee on Conferences to review the Council's draft calendar of conferences and meetings and to make comments and recommendations on that draft where appropriate;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to examine the possibility of having all organizational aspects of conference-servicing in the United Nations as a whole centrally planned and co-ordinated, with a view to ensuring optimum efficiency and cost-effectiveness by, inter alia, minimizing duplication and overlapping, taking into account the outcome of the deliberations of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields and the implementation of paragraph 4 of the present resolution, and to submit his findings and recommendations to the General Assembly, through the Committee on Conferences.

11 December 1987 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/764) without vote, 12 November (meeting 29); draft by Committee on Conferences (A/42/32), amended by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.4); agenda item 120.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 5th Committee 4, 5, 7, 10-12, 20, 29; plenary 97.

Conference and meeting services

The Committee on Conferences(3) examined statistical information provided by the Secretary-General(21) showing the planned and actual utilization of conference-servicing resources in 1986 by organs regularly meeting in session in New York, Geneva and Vienna. The data included the number of meetings planned by each organ, the number actually held and the number cancelled. They also indicated: the amount of time lost due to the late starting and early ending of meetings, calculated on the basis of three hours a meeting and shown as a percentage of the number of planned meetings; and the number of meetings by other bodies taking advantage of resources that became available due to cancellations.

For 26 of the 45 organs listed, resource utilization was above the minimum acceptable level of 75 per cent, five among them having a utilization factor of 100 per cent. Seven organs had a utilization factor of or below 50 per cent.

The Committee decided again to write to those bodies failing to make adequate use of conference resources and ask for an explanation. The letter should express concern, draw attention to existing General Assembly resolutions on reducing wastage and enclose a copy of the Secretary-General's report, noting that, while technically valuable, it had necessarily omitted the political and other considerations that were often the main cause of inadequate resource use.

Accordingly, the Chairman wrote to the following: Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference, Committee on Contributions, Committee on Information, Disarmament Commission, Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations, and Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories.

The Committee further decided to recommend to the Assembly that it request organs to indicate with greater precision the actual number of meetings and conference services they required.

The Committee also had before it a comparative study⁽²²⁾ of the conference-servicing resources and the related costs provided to United Nations organs and programmes not funded by the Organization's regular budget, such as the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR). Noting that many of their meetings took place during peak periods, the Committee felt that they probably had an impact on meetings funded from the regular budget; it should thus inform the Assembly of the rate at which those bodies used the conference resources provided to them.

In the context of the 1988-1989 United Nations programme budget (see p. 1104), the Fifth Committee in December approved, without a vote, an amount of $333,779,200 for conference and library services. No additional appropriations were made under the 1986-1987 programme budget (see p. 1100). Conference-servicing requirements attributable to Economic and Social Council decisions at its first and second regular 1987 sessions, calculated on a full-cost basis for information purposes, were estimated at $770,600 for 1987 and $6,279,800 for 1988-1989. As those costs were to be absorbed, no additional appropriations were required. ACABQ, in November,⁽²³⁾ concurred with the Secretary-General's estimates and observations presented in an October 1987 report.⁽²⁴⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In his April 1987 progress report⁽⁴⁾ on implementation of the 1986 General Assembly resolution approving the recommendations of the Group of 18,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General, referring to the recommendations relating to conference services,⁽⁷⁾ stated that as a general practice the Department of Conference Services closely co-operated with the Committee on Conferences in monitoring the use of conference-servicing resources and that responses to suggestions for their efficient application had markedly improved. Action was also under way to ensure harmonization of the working procedures of all United Nations offices providing conference services.

The Secretary-General added that the technological innovations proposed in the 1988-1989 programme budget would increase still further the efficiency and productivity of virtually all aspects of conference-servicing operations.

By resolution 42/213 A, the General Assembly made appropriations of $310,763,500 for conference and library services for the 1986-1987 biennium, the same amount it had appropriated in 1986.⁽²⁵⁾ By resolution 42/226 A, it appropriated $333,779,200 for conference and library services in 1988-1989.

By resolution 42/207 B, the Assembly requested United Nations organs, in order to make optimum use of conference-servicing resources allocated to them, to indicate with greater precision the actual number of session meetings and conference services they required. It further requested the Secretary-General to examine the possibility of having all organizational aspects of conference-servicing in the United Nations as a whole centrally planned and coordinated, with a view to ensuring optimum efficiency and cost-effectiveness by, inter alia, minimizing duplication and overlapping, taking account of the outcome of the deliberations of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields (see p. 949), and submit his findings and recommendations to the Assembly through the Committee on Conferences. This provision, incorporated into the resolution as paragraph 5, constituted an amendment introduced by a Vice-Chairman in the Fifth Committee.

Language services

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 42/207 C without vote.

The General Assembly,

Aware that the diversity of languages of the United Nations is a source of general enrichment and of better understanding among States Members of the Organization,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the use of languages in the United Nations, including resolutions 2(I) of 1 February 1946, 2247(XXI) of 20 December 1966, 2292(XXII) of 8 December 1967, 3189(XXVIII), 3190(XXVIII) and 3191(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973 and resolution 36/117 B of 10 December 1981,

Recalling Also its resolutions 37/14 of 16 November 1982, 38/32 of 25 November 1983, 39/68 of 13 December 1984, 40/243 of 18 December 1985, 41/177 of 5 December 1986 and 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

Expressing the conviction that in view of the importance consistently attached by Member States to the respect for equal treatment of official languages of United Nations bodies, the provision of adequate conference services is an essential element in the efficient functioning of the Organization,

Concerned about the increasing difficulties in the provision of conference services, which are reflected particularly in delays in the distribution of documents and unequal treatment of some official languages,

1. Requests United Nations bodies and the Secretary-General to ensure respect for equal treatment of the official languages of the United Nations;

2. Affirms that the provision of adequate conference services is an essential element in the efficient functioning of the Organization;

3. Affirms further that in order to ensure the provision of adequate conference services to the United Nations, the allocation of resources for those services should be sufficient to meet requirements;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to ensure the provision of conference services to the United Nations with adequate personnel, with due respect for the equal treatment of all official languages of the United Nations;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure the full application of General Assembly resolution 36/117 B;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to implement the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 42/207 C

11 December 1987 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/764) without vote, 12 November (meeting 29); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.4); agenda item 120.

Financial implications. ACABQ, A/42/7/Add.8; 5th Committee, A/42/873; S-G, A/C.5/42/29.

Introducing the text, the Committee Vice-Chairman said that although it had received broad consensus, some countries had accepted it strictly ad referendum, thus it was possible that parts of it might be challenged. Algeria said if the text had been put to vote, it would have pressed for a number of changes. The United Kingdom joined in the consensus on the understanding that the terms of the text were in accordance with the Charter and would neither substantially affect the current rules of procedure or practices of Secretariat bodies nor entail additional expenditure. Yemen said it joined in the consensus on the understanding that discrimination against a particular language could not be justified, even in the context of financial constraints. Morocco hoped that the text would rectify the unequal treatment of some official languages. Tunisia pointed out that the text applied only to official but not to working languages.

Japan regarded paragraph 1 as ambiguous and open to misinterpretations. Brazil stressed that it joined the consensus on the understanding that the text would facilitate implementation of existing mandates relating to the use of languages without increasing administrative or conference-servicing costs. Cameroon emphasized that equality for all the official languages involved both a linguistic and a geographical balance. Cuba stated that its acceptance of the text did not imply acceptance of the Secretary-General's statement on the programme budget implications; it would oppose any attempt to relegate Spanish to an inferior status among the official languages.

Interpretation services

In January 1987,(26) the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his comments on a 1986 JIU report on the management of the interpretation services in the United Nations system(27) and, in October, he transmitted the comments of ACC.(28)

The Secretary-General, along with ACC, characterized the report as a balanced picture of a highly complex and technical operation, namely, providing intergovernmental bodies with interpretation services from and into the six United Nations official languages (Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian, Spanish) under a meetings programme subject to constant change. He underscored the unremitting efforts to provide that service with maximum efficiency and economy, but stressed that the problem was that a fixed corps of permanent staff of interpreters serviced a meetings schedule of varying intensity throughout the year.

ACC endorsed JIU's recommendation 1 that the biennial Inter-Agency Meeting on Language Arrangements, Documentation and Publications regularly include in its agenda an item on the problems of supply and demand for interpretation and other language services: editing, translating, précis-writing and verbatim reporting.

Whereas ACC felt that work-load statistics should be referred to senior management for analysis and action, rather than to governing bodies as had been recommended by JIU (recommendation 2), the Secretary-General stated that, in the case of the United Nations, such statistics were regularly under Assembly scrutiny in the context of the proposed programme budget. He pointed out that increasing the use of freelance interpreters by attracting them with higher salaries was restricted by an agreement between the United Nations and the Association of International Conference Interpreters; therefore, efforts were being directed towards improving co-ordination between headquarters locations to facilitate the temporary transfer of staff interpreters when required. According to ACC, in the organizations' experience, the use of freelance interpreters appeared to be a function of the organizations' interpretation requirements and, to a lesser extent, on headquarters or meeting locations.

As to providing summary statistics on late, cancelled and unscheduled meetings to an oversight committee for the purpose of identifying problem areas and remedial action (JIU recommendation 3), the Secretary-General noted that the Committee on Conferences had standardized statistics gathering and presentation for that purpose. He reiterated JIU's view that the long-term issue of greater control of conference calendars and meeting programmes could be resolved only by Member States. ACC mentioned that some organizations considered insignificant the time lost to late or cancelled meetings.

Review, control and scheduling to improve conference-resource use and cut costs (recommendation 4) were part of the Secretariat's continuing work. These measures notwithstanding, it was the Secretary-General's opinion that the medium- and long-term objectives in this regard should take account of Member States' expectation of a certain level of convenience. Since the recommendation mostly concerned the United Nations, ACC had no comment on the matter.

The Secretary-General stated that the possible introduction of remote conference servicing (recommendation 5) was a matter for consideration by the Secretariat's Technological Innovations Board, mandated to keep under review all technical developments deemed useful to the Organization. In this connection, ACC noted the Secretary-General's intention to equip the Interpretation Services in New York and Geneva with computers, as it did the imminent availability of computer-assisted management processes, if not already in place, in four specialized agencies.

With regard to a review of staff interpreters at lower grade levels at the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), the Secretary-General expressed doubt about the JIU suggestion to combine interpretation and translation work in the same post, stating that the practice was not normally done outside ESCAP and that P-3 was the correct level for interpreters there; he would not, however, object to a review of the matter. ACC cited three agencies and the International Court of Justice, in addition to ESCAP, where the dual function was recognized.

The Secretary-General and ACC supported JIU's recommendation gradually to increase the number of passive languages (languages from which interpretation was done) required of interpreters so as to enhance interpretation service versatility.

In August, the Committee on Conferences(3) considered the JIU report and the Secretary-General's related comments. It found recommendations in the report that coincided with Assembly resolutions governing the provision and efficient use of conference services, which the Committee could not but support. However, it regarded certain matters as controversial or outside its purview.

After considering the question of computer-assisted interpretation management, based on a Secretariat report describing among other possibilities the construction of a comprehensive conference-servicing data bank through computer use,(29) the Committee decided to return to the matter at a later time.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 42/455, the General Assembly took note of, among other documents, the JIU report and the related comments of the Secretary-General and ACC.

Unified conference services at Vienna

In keeping with a 1985 agreement(30) reached between the three Vienna-based organizations—the United Nations Office at Vienna (UNOV), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNDO) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)—a joint Advisory Committee for Conference Services at the Vienna International Centre was set up in February 1986 to undertake a comprehensive study of their conference-servicing requirements and facilities.

Meeting regularly between March 1986 and May 1987, the Advisory Committee carried out a systematic analysis of the Centre's conference services, including documents and editorial control, translation and typing, reference and terminology, printing and reproduction, documents distribution, meetings planning and servicing, and interpretation. It examined requirements against the capacity of existing resources to meet them economically and effectively and considered arrangements for co-operation and co-ordination. It based its analysis on an inventory of meeting facilities at the Centre and at Vienna, and on statistical information on meetings held in 1985 and 1986 and the related servicing resources.

The Secretary-General, in an October 1987 report to the Fifth Committee,⁽³¹⁾ noted the Advisory Committee's finding that the existing joint conference services—a Languages and Documentation Division operated by UNIDO, and a Meetings Planning and Interpretation Service managed by UNOV—were efficient, economical and preferable to separate services and that no insurmountable obstacle existed to unifying the services. He also noted that UNIDO found no reason to change the existing set-up and that IAEA was not convinced that a unified service would be more economical.

In the circumstances, while reiterating that a single conference-servicing facility under the responsibility of the United Nations represented the ideal solution from a cost-efficiency standpoint, the Secretary-General proposed continuation of the existing arrangements, on the understanding that the Advisory Committee would keep the matter under review. He made known the United Nations intention to fill the 20 established posts in the Interpretation Section of the Meetings Planning and Interpretation Service so as to make available a full team of permanent interpreters to cover service in the six United Nations official languages.

The Secretary-General raised certain issues for the Advisory Committee's consideration: the desirability of unifying the Interpretation Section of the United Nations with that of IAEA; of consolidating the meetings planning function, given the availability of the Austrian Conference Centre to serve as a single focal point for conference-servicing arrangements; and of making all meeting rooms—currently on fixed assignment to the three organizations—common and equally available.

ACABQ,⁽¹⁰⁾ which found the results of the consultations described in the Secretary-General's report disappointing, asked the Fifth Committee to recommend that the General Assembly take note of the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, the General Assembly, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 42/225, section VII.

Documents and publications

Documents limitation

Three categories of documentation-meeting records, recurrent publications and communications from Member States circulated as General Assembly documents—continued to be reviewed in 1987 in efforts to keep their production within reasonable limits. The policies laid down by the General Assembly on the control and limitation of documentation were set forth by the Secretary-General in a note of 20 April,⁽¹⁾ which took account of policy decisions adopted by the Assembly up to the end of 1986.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In his April 1987 progress report⁽²⁾ on implementation of the 1986 General Assembly resolution approving recommendations of the Group of 18 to improve the Organization's administrative and financial functioning,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the recommended curtailment of the circulation of communications from Member States as official United Nations documents (recommendation 7)(4) required action by Governments. With respect to increasing the general efficiency of the Department of Conference Services and improving the publications programme, external printing expenditures should be reduced (recommendation 34).(5) The Department was continuously seeking to keep to a minimum the resources needed to provide the documents and publications required by Governments.

In a May 1987 report(6) on implementation of economy measures to alleviate the Organization's ongoing financial crisis, the Secretary-General described the impact of those measures on the publications programme, including external printing arrangements. It had become apparent, he stated, that the servicing of meetings of intergovernmental bodies, which included providing documentation, had been maintained to the greatest extent possible in conformity with their requirements; however, the gap in delivering publications had widened in a number of instances, resulting in later publication dates than initially programmed. While it appeared that the majority of deferrals from 1986 would be published in 1987, the effect on the 1987 portion of the publications programme would be further postponements of final publication dates into the 1988-1989 biennium.

In implementing the publications programme, the Publications Board, which globally administered the external printing account, was concentrating its efforts, in collaboration with submitting departments and production services, towards optimizing the use of reduced resources, including recourse to internal reproduction in preference to contractual printing.

Activities of the Committee on Conferences. During its consideration of the control and limitation of documentation, the Committee on Conferences(7) examined the status of compliance by subsidiary organs of the Assembly with the 32-page limit for reports set in 1982,(8) based on a Secretariat report listing the supplements to the Official Records of the General Assembly issued between 1978 and 1986 and indicating the number of pages in each. The report showed that the total volume of pages for the supplements had fallen from 4,209 pages to 2,323 during that period. Reports of subsidiary organs represented about 20 per cent of Assembly documents. Although reports exceeding 32 pages continued to be submitted, largely attributable to the nature of the work of some bodies, a trend towards closer adherence to that limit could be discerned. A graph showing the overall reduction in the volume of supplements during 1978-1986 was annexed to the Committee's report. The Committee decided to request its Chairman to maintain contact with bodies whose reports exceeded 32 pages, with a view to promoting greater concision without prejudice to the reports' content.

The Committee briefly discussed a proposal concerning communications from Member States circulated as United Nations documents: either to impose a page limit or circulate summaries of those communications, making the full texts available only in their original language. The argument was raised that to limit the right of States to make known their views at the United Nations would run counter to the principles on which the Organization was founded. It was conceded, however, that an appeal for restraint from requesting such circulation would be valid. In keeping with a 1986 Assembly request,(9) the Committee would examine the matter in detail and report to the Assembly in 1988.

Meeting records

In 1987, the Committee on Conferences(7) had before it a Secretariat report(10) on action taken by the governing bodies of four United Nations organs and the Military Staff Committee in response to a 1986 General Assembly invitation(9) to reconsider their need for summary records or verbatim records.

The UNITAR Board of Trustees decided to dispense with summary records. To facilitate preparation of its session report, however, the Board would continue to receive the English sound recordings on cassette tape free of charge. The Military Staff Committee—among those affected by economy measures approved by the Assembly in 1986,(11) so that provision to it of verbatim records was suspended for 1987—decided to reserve the right to request such records when deemed necessary.

The UNDP Governing Council concluded that, from the points of view of policy, finance and effectiveness of its work, summary records should continue to be provided to it, but suggested that guidelines could be developed to shorten them. The UNICEF Executive Board would discuss the matter in depth in 1988, pending which its requirement for summary records would prevail. The Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme would take up the matter at its September/October 1987 session.

The Committee welcomed the decision of the UNITAR Board of Trustees and hoped that the other organs which had not done so would keep their requirements under review.

In related action, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1987/179 of 8 July, discontinued for a further period of two years, from 1988, summary records for its sessional committees and for 11 of its subsidiary bodies. The Assembly, by decision 42/441, approved the preparation of summary records for the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for plenary meetings only.

Recurrent publications

CPC consideration. At its April/May 1987 session,(12) CPC considered a progress report by the Secretary-General(13) describing action taken to comply with CPC's request for a review of recurrent publications, as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in 1986.(14) The review was to be undertaken by the authorizing intergovernmental bodies in the light of criteria established by the General Assembly in 1983,(15) with a view to terminating publications that failed to meet the criteria or to reducing their volume or periodicity.

To assist the intergovernmental bodies in that endeavour, they were being presented with updated information including: the titles of newly authorized recurrent publications; the authorizing resolution or decision; the date first issued, frequency of issue and average preparation time by author departments; and total print-run of each publication, broken down into the number of official distribution, stock and departmental copies, and sales record in terms of the original sales stock. Also included were the results of readership surveys and notes to publications programmes provided by author departments and/or the Publications Board that could prove useful to the review, including annotations indicating which recurrent publications appeared to be likely candidates for discontinuance and why.

CPC decided to refer the matter to the Committee on Conferences for further consideration since that Committee's terms of reference, currently under revision (see p. 1169), were to include publications questions. CPC observed that many of the statistical publications appeared to lose their usefulness owing to the time lag between compilation and publication, and that there was some duplication between Headquarters and regional commission publications. It thus suggested that the Publications Board be asked to review the publications from these sources and take appropriate action. Guidelines should be drawn up to separate and clearly identify recurrent and non-recurrent publications.

Mailing lists

By a March 1987 note,(16) the Secretary-General reported to CPC that he had issued new guidelines on the confidentiality of Secretariat mailing lists and registers on 19 March.(17) Drawn up in response to a 1986 CPC request,(18) the new guidelines established three specific criteria by which to judge what mailing lists and registers should be treated confidentially: one, whether a list was politically controversial or sensitive and whether its dissemination might cause embarrassment, harm or other negative consequences to the individuals or organizations listed; two, whether any individual or organization had indicated how information on the lists should be treated; and three, whether a specific directive had been issued by a legislative organ concerning the confidentiality of a particular mailing list or register.

In addition, the guidelines requested that master lists of participants in United Nations conferences be used only within the department. They prohibited making any list available to profit-making organizations and outlined various procedures for controlling the use of all lists. They identified security features, such as the use of physical security and passwords for lists maintained on the electronic media, including commonly used office procedures to control the use of non-electronically maintained lists. The locus of official responsibility for determining and implementing appropriate security requirements was also clearly identified.

CPC did not discuss the note in 1987.

UN premises

In his April 1987 progress report(1) on implementation of the 1986 General Assembly resolution approving the recommendations of the Group of 18 to improve the Organization's administrative and financial functioning,(2) the Secretary-General stated that, as to reducing requirements for rented premises concurrent with reducing the Secretariat's overall size (recommendation 36),(3) a major consideration in renting premises was to permit the consolidation of offices and departments into rational units. Thus, while staff reductions would in the long run reflect reduced requirements for rented premises, such premises could be neither relinquished at the cost of sacrificing rational office arrangements, nor strictly reduced concurrently with staff reductions.

In conjunction with an ongoing study of reciprocal rental arrangements between the United Nations, specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, a review was planned of the existing arrangements on rental premises.

Storage

In May 1987,(4) the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his comments on a 1986 JIU report(5) on the storage problems of the United Nations system. He transmitted ACC's comments on 20 October.(6)

The Secretary-General stated that, with regard to limiting the volume of documentation, his requests for a cut-back in standing orders for documents had not yielded significant reductions; he was thus considering revising the guidelines on documents and publications distribution so as to set limits on the numbers available to recipients, including delegations and ministries, intergovernmental organizations and United Nations officials. According to ACC, the organizations were developing workable measures to regulate their documentation at the intergovernmental and secretariat levels.

The Secretary-General and ACC shared the view that mechanically reducing documentation by using the two-column format was decisively negative in terms of legibility of the reduced print size and of the skill and time required for composition and processing. At the United Nations, the use of a cover note on all documents advising against additional requests had been tried for meetings' documents with no success, but could be reinstated in the light of the ongoing financial crisis; charging for requests beyond established quotas was impractical for document services in conference rooms but was the practice for orders above a given number, especially for large-scale users or for substantial orders to be filled after depletion of the initial stock. ACC cited that these were standard measures at the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), and that the International Labour Organisation (ILO) had reduced the official free distribution of publications, although not of conference and meeting reports.

As to storage and records management, the United Nations Publications Board had issued a revised administrative instruction governing the monitoring and disposal of stocks of official records, publications and documents, and requiring a yearly report on stock disposal. The Board had agreed to a drastic reduction in the number of materials to be retained and in storage time. A 1984 administrative instruction outlined rules and procedures for archiving at Headquarters. A study by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on records management provided useful recommendations, and FAO and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) observed strict stock review and surplus disposal. The idea of using a common archives centre was strongly endorsed by IMF, which itself had one, as did FAO.

Concerning space management in New York, the lease of storage space on Long Island was terminated as at 31 March 1987 and the stocks were removed to the Headquarters garage. Negotiations were under way with the landlord of the Park Avenue warehouse for a possible buy-out agreement and for the removal of the archives stored there to Headquarters. At Geneva, storage areas were being concentrated adjacent to the publishing services and conference rooms. Conversion of the Library basement for additional storage was planned for the 1988-1989 biennium.

With respect to conventional technology, including computer-based systems for storage purposes, the Secretary-General reported: the introduction of compactus equipment (movable shelving) in the Distribution Section and the Documentation, Reference and Terminology Section at Headquarters and in two regional commissions; extending production of microfiche archives to four languages; a computerized inventory and stock control system resident on a mini-computer that was shortly to become operational; and a new computerized purchase system in the process of being installed. At Geneva, the supply, management and inventory control system was being computerized, as was equipment inventory ACC spoke of organizations, having acquired compactus equipment and of using microform and computer-based systems.

As to the use of advanced technology and machinery, while a test project of the optical-disc technology was generally acceptable, it was the Secretary-General's opinion that, rather than concentrating on a single, costly test project at Geneva, several small, less expensive projects could be undertaken concurrently for varied applications (documentation preservation, records management, storage of multilingual terminology data) at different locations. ACC cited the World Intellectual Property Organization as actively considering installation of an optical-disc system for archiving purposes without awaiting test results and stated that the organizations had called for regular information exchange on pilot-project evaluations.

Finally, with regard to JIU's recommendations on funding, the Secretary-General noted that, in the light of the Organization's continuing financial crisis and economy measures in 1987, resource redeployment for the acquisition of an optical-based system could not be realistically contemplated. He would be grateful for some reaction on the feasibility of appealing to Member States for funding, as suggested, and whether contributions could be envisaged in cash or in kind.

To supplement its main 1986 report, JIU issued an addendum that was transmitted by the Secretary-General in November 1987.(7) It described the status of implementation of its recommendations, repeating in large part the comments of the Secretary-General and those of ACC. JIU was encouraged by the progress achieved in improving the storage situation at Headquarters and urged that the Assembly arrange for the funding of the optical-disc pilot project for Geneva.

Following its review of the foregoing comments, including the JIU addendum, and in view of assurances from the Secretary-General's representatives that the proposed small pilot projects could be carried out within existing resources, ACABQ(8) recommended that the Secretary-General proceed with a number of such projects using optical-disc technology. ACABQ expected to be kept fully informed of progress in this regard.

Catering and gift-shop operations at Headquarters

As called for by the General Assembly in 1986,(9) the Secretary-General submitted a July 1987 report(10) on the results of the Administration's investigation of the Headquarters catering and gift-shop operations. The investigation was conducted in the light of matters raised by the Board of Auditors in 1986 following its review of the United Nations accounts for the 1984-1985 biennium, among the more important of which were the weak internal controls in the contractor's operation, the consequent inaccurate financial reports and over-funding of the contractor by the United Nations. The contractor in question was the Canteen Corporation, whose contract with the United Nations was terminated on 31 March 1985; the catering operation was thereafter converted from a management to a profit-and-loss contract and awarded to a new contractor on 1 April 1985.(11)

The Administration's investigation revealed that several of the financial deficiencies specified by the Auditors were the result of the contractor and the United Nations classifying the same items differently, the unavailability of documentation at the time of audit, accounting errors and failure to record the employer's share of social security taxes.

As to the statement that no discounts were obtained for purchases made by the contractor, the investigation confirmed that the contractor took advantage of all discounts or had agreements with suppliers for the purchase of certain goods at lower than regular cost. The savings in all cases were passed on to the United Nations in the form of lower prices. However, discounts in the gift shop were not always taken, although the amounts involved were not significant in relation to the overall level of purchases.

The amount of $208,705 in accounts receivable had been recovered in full so that the Auditors' recommendation to set a cut-off date for payment no longer applied. Regarding the submission of inaccurate financial statements, most of the discrepancies had been satisfactorily resolved. As to inadequate and ineffective monitoring of the operational and financial performance of the caterer, the conversion of the catering contract into a profit-and-loss contract relieved the United Nations of further financial obligation in connection with the catering operations.

Besides addressing the points raised by the Auditors, the investigation made a complete analysis and reconciliation of all advances made to the caterer from the inception of the contract in April 1982 until March 1985. Of a total of $28,299,676 advanced over that period, $63,159 remained unreconciled. Final settlement would be determined after a review of all available documentation.

The Administration was satisfied that, because the catering operation had become a profit-and-loss contract, the problems identified by the Auditors were unlikely to recur. Also, a control procedure had been instituted whereby all purchases for the gift shop had to be approved by the United Nations before payment was made.

In reviewing the Secretary-General's report and the Board's related comments, ACABQ(12) observed that the Board, while pleased with the steps taken to resolve the accounting discrepancies it had identified, was nevertheless of the view that the $63,159 in advances remaining unaccounted for should be finally reconciled and recovered. It also recommended enhanced financial monitoring and timely audits upon termination of such contracts.

As indicated in resolution 42/206, the Assembly considered the Secretary-General's report when it considered the financial reports and audited financial statements for the period ending 31 December 1986.

Addis Ababa and Bangkok

In a September 1987 report⁽¹³⁾ on revised estimates under section 32 (Construction, alteration, improvement and major maintenance of premises) of the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget, the Secretary-General reviewed developments since his 1985 reports on the construction projects to expand the conference facilities of the Economic Commission for Africa (EGA) at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia,⁽¹⁴⁾ and of ESCAP at Bangkok, Thailand.⁽¹⁵⁾ Work on the projects, whose scope and cost had been approved in principle by the General Assembly in 1984,⁽¹⁶⁾ was suspended during 1986-1987.

As a result of the Assembly's 1985 resolution requesting United Nations bodies to meet at their respective headquarters⁽¹⁷⁾ and a 1986 resolution approving the Group of 18 recommendations,⁽²⁾ which required, inter alia, that essential economies be made as to the frequency and duration of United Nations meetings (recommendation 2)⁽¹⁸⁾ and as to the construction of United Nations conference facilities (recommendation 5)⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General revised the project proposals and the timetable for their implementation. Developed to accommodate global conferences, the projects were scaled down to accommodate regional conferences.

Information systems and computers

Report of the Secretary-General. In April 1987, the Secretary-General submitted to CPC a report on the in-depth evaluation of the programme on electronic data processing (EDP) and information systems services.⁽¹⁾ Prepared in response to a 1985 CPC request, the report contained an analysis of the relevance, effectiveness and impact of activities carried out from 1982 to 1985 by the two central EDP units—the Management Services Division at United Nations Headquarters and the Management Systems Section of the United Nations Office at Geneva. The analysis was based on information from desk reviews, replies to questionnaires and interviews with staff of the two EDP units and their users.

A series of recommendations emerged from the evaluation findings. They related to: the introduction of technological innovations; computer hardware, software and related facilities; technical advisory and information systems support services in New York and at Geneva, including access by the general public to United Nations data bases; and policy co-ordination and implementation.

It was recommended that, to ensure maximum benefit from technological innovations, the Office Automation Service of the Management Services Division and other relevant units should: study the effects of technological innovations on methods and organization of work, staff requirements, centralized versus decentralized computer operations, and cost-effectiveness of a computer-based documents distribution system; assess the needs of users for suitable microcomputers and expand maintenance coverage to all users; identify and introduce appropriate new technologies to increase productivity and achieve savings; and evaluate technologies already in place. Advanced word-processing training was to be given priority.

Telecommunication functions, currently divided between the New York Computing Service of the Management Services Division and the Communications, Archives and Records Service of the Office of General Services, were suggested for consolidation under the New York Computing Service, and the Service for separation from the Management Services Division. The Division could thus concentrate on co-ordinating the formulation and implementation of the Organization's EDP policies and guidelines. Other recommendations called for establishing a management board for the Service, recruiting three additional experienced systems programmers, creating a post of liaison with users, and operating the Service on a full cost-recovery basis with a charge-back system, to be implemented in the context of the proposed programme budget beginning with the 1990-1991 biennium.

Recommendations relating to technical advisory and support services included: the establishment of an Administration and Management Information Systems Section responsible for setting up an integrated administration and management information system and for serving user-units in this area, as well as of a General Information Systems Support Unit within the Information Management Service to assist users in other areas; and devising a plan to open access to United Nations data bases to the general public.

It was further recommended that the policy co-ordination and implementation subprogramme be formulated more clearly and its objectives more precisely defined. To that end, the question of centralization versus decentralization of hardware should be addressed as a matter of priority; co-ordination objectives for substantive sectors and for administration and management should be clearly differentiated in the programme budget since they required different approaches; and courses in information technology should be made part of staff training.

CPC(2) took note of the report and welcomed its overall quality. It agreed with the view that a critical issue, overdue for decision and to be addressed as a matter of priority, was that of centralization versus decentralization. CPC recommended that priorities be set as to implementation of the recommendations, emphasizing the importance of personnel training programmes. Attention should be given to the compatibility of information systems and equipment throughout the United Nations system and to the need for the cost-effective use of those facilities. Given the broad objective of EDP to increase productivity, CPC felt that the Organization's efficiency could be enhanced by improvements in the Department of Administration and Management and in the automation services, as envisaged in the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, the General Assembly, by decision 42/455, took note of the 1985 JIU report on management issues involved in the changing use of computers in organizations of the United Nations system at Geneva(3) and the related 1986 comments of the organizations concerned and those of the Secretary-General.(4)

Co-ordination of information systems

In 1987, the Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems (ACCIS), which met at Geneva from 23 to 25 September, continued to develop co-ordinated approaches to information systems within the United Nations system. Its activities were summarized in the 1987 ACC annual overview report(5)

ACCIS took steps to make operational a register of United Nations development activities, under development since 1984(6) (see below). It reviewed the first version of a telecommunication map giving an overview of existing telecommunication links, for eventual conversion into a practical working tool for the introduction of computer-supported telecommunication services. A study of the related financial and other implications was to be made by the International Computing

Centre (ICC). ACCIS also reviewed the findings of a survey conducted by the United Nations and the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) of the telecommunication requirements of the specialized agencies, which were interested in obtaining access to the United Nations telecommunication network but were specifically prohibited to use it by the ITU convention.

ACCIS discussed the development of common telecommunication standards and ways of co-ordinating the acquisition of computer-related equipment, software and commercial telecommunication services in order to achieve savings. The first of a series of subject-oriented guides to United Nations information sources compiled by ACCIS—Guide to United Nations Information Sources on Food and Agriculture—was published in 1987. The compilation of a second guide, on the environment, was completed by ACCIS in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme, for publication in 1988; preparations were under way for a guide on trade.

ACCIS drafted regulations for the registration of United Nations serial publications at the International Centre for the Registration of Serials, an intergovernmental organization affiliated with UNESCO and located in Paris. The regulations were set out in an ACC decision of 23 October 1987(7) approving them.

With respect to indexing vocabulary, ACCIS needed to study further the issues involved in creating a new thesaurus by merging the United Nations Macrothesaurus, the UNBIS (United Nations Bibliographic Information System) Thesaurus and the World Bank Thesaurus, possibly in consultation with the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Register of development activities

In response to a 1986 CPC request,(8) ACC submitted a May 1987 progress report(9) on the status of a proposed Register of Development Activities. As originally envisaged, the Register was to be a computer-based system providing data on development activities and related procurement in the United Nations system. The information, to be supplied in machine-readable form by the system's organizations, was to be merged, managed and serviced by a small central processing unit and made accessible on line, on magnetic media and in printed form. The intended primary users were governmental units of States members of the organizations and their planning, programming and operational units, as well as regional information services. Potential users outside the system included intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and universities.

As a result of the testing of the Register's main-frame and microcomputer prototypes and following extensive consultations with Governments and participating organizations, the proposed Register was redesigned. It would not offer on-line access initially but would be available in the form of printed reports and magnetic media copy (tape or diskette). It would be published yearly and updated every March to include year-end figures. An expanded format would permit accurate representation of data on capital transfers. The participating organizations, numbering 22 at the time of reporting, would absorb the cost of selecting, verifying and transmitting their respective data.

ACCIS would be administratively and financially responsible for establishing and operating the Register, including co-ordinating with organizations supplying data and supervising the computer service selected to merge data, create the register report and distribute magnetic media copies of the data; it would report annually to ACC on the Register's status. Participating organizations would be responsible for the content and accuracy of the data they supplied since there would be no validation process at the computer merging facility.

Data to be included in the Register's first version would be those considered absolutely necessary to make it a useful tool and those that organizations could reasonably supply. The working language would be English and all amounts would be expressed in United States dollars. All activities supporting economic and social development would be recorded in the Register. Each organization would report on the basis of the most suitable unit of development activity, to be described by the following data elements: unique identifiers, type of activity, geographic scope, executing and associated executing agencies, sources and amount of funding, title, ACC programme classification, status, start/approval date, completion date, budget/expenditure information, maturity period for capital transfers, principal amounts of capital transfers, agency contact, and descriptors.

The costs associated with producing the Register were estimated as follows: a start-up cost of $14,000 per organization, or of $308,000 for 22 organizations; the yearly costs would be $3,300 and $72,600, respectively. The estimated operating costs to be borne by ACCIS were a start-up cost of $40,000 for software and a yearly total of $84,000 in staff, computer and publication costs.

CPC(2) took note of the ACC progress report and agreed to transmit it to the Economic and Social Council at its June/July 1987 session. The Council took note of the report by decision 1987/183 of 8 July.

Other activities. During 1987, the United Nations continued to operate several information systems concerned with special aspects of development. These included a comprehensive information system on transnational corporations (see p. 511), the Global Environmental Monitoring System, the Global Resource Information Data Base and the International Referral System for sources of environmental information (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XV).

Budget of the International Computing Centre

In October 1987,(10) the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee the 1988 budget estimates of the International Computing Centre at Geneva, as reviewed by the United Nations and 14 other participating organizations and programmes. The United Nations share of the total estimated amount of $9,025,600 was $1,863,000.

Recommending approval of the estimates, ACABQ(11) stated that the United Nations share would be met from resources already appropriated in the proposed programme budget for 1988-1989. On 25 November 1987,(12) the Fifth Committee likewise recommended approval of the estimates.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 42/225, section I, on 21 December 1987.

UN Postal Administration

In 1987, gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration (UNPA) from the sale of philatelic items at United Nations Headquarters and at overseas offices totalled more than $14 million. Revenue from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes was retained by the United Nations. Under the terms of an agreement between the United Nations and the United States, revenue from the sale of United States dollar-denominated stamps used for postage from Headquarters was reimbursed to the United States Postal Service. Similarly, postal agreements between the United Nations and Switzerland and the United Nations and Austria required that revenue derived from the sale of Swiss franc-denominated stamps and Austrian schilling-denominated stamps for postage use be reimbursed to the Swiss and Austrian postal authorities, respectively.

Six commemorative stamp issues, four definitive stamps and two souvenir cards were released by UNPA during the year.

The first commemorative issue, released on 30 January in denominations of 22 United States cents, 1.40 Swiss francs (SwF), and 8 Austrian schillings (S), reproduced a portrait by Harald Dal of the first Secretary-General, Trygve Lie. Two definitive stamps in denominations of SwF 0.90 and 1.40 were issued on the same date.

On 13 March, a set of six commemorative stamps were released in recognition of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, in denominations of 22 and 44 cents, SwF 0.50 and 0.90, and S 4 and 9.50. A souvenir card accompanied this issue.

The third commemorative issue, carrying the slogan "Yes to Life—No to Drugs", was released on 12 June. The stamps were in denominations of 22 and 33 cents, SwF 0.80 and 1.20, and S 5 and 8. Two definitive stamps in denominations of S 2 and 17 were also issued on the same date.

On 18 September, the eighth group of 16 stamps in the commemorative "Flag Series" was released, each stamp denominated in 22 cents.

"United Nations Day" (24 October) was celebrated by a six-stamp commemorative issue released on 23 October. The denominations were 22 and 39 cents, SwF 0.35 and 0.50, and S 5 and 6.

The sixth and final commemorative issue was released on 20 November, together with a souvenir card. The stamps, denominated in 22 and 44 cents, SwF 0.90 and 1.70, and S 4 and 9.50, were on the theme of "Immunize Every Child!"

A total of 41,132,837 stamps of the 1987 commemorative issues were reported to be in circulation by UNPA. In the same year, a total of 2,624,077 envelopes received first-day-of-issue cancellations.

Special postage stamps

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General included in his November 1987 analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations a status report on special postage stamps on the social and economic crisis in Africa.⁽²⁾

The Secretary-General stated that, although no revenue was generated by the stamps of this issue sold for postage, they had been used by the United Nations, whenever possible, on mailings throughout the United States and the rest of the world, thus giving the issue maximum exposure. For added publicity and to increase revenue, it was decided to keep the stamps on sale until 31 January 1988, instead of withdrawing them on 31 January 1987 as previously planned. Additional promotion campaigns were launched through the philatelic press and mailings were made to prospective customers, while a number of radio and press interviews highlighted the United Nations efforts to alleviate the crisis in Africa. The expenses in promoting the issue totalled $630,224.

As of 31 July 1987, gross sales amounted to $924,601, yielding a net profit of $294,377. It was expected that a total net revenue of $300,000 would be achieved on the issue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly on 21 December 1987 adopted resolution 42/216 B.

Issue of special postage stamps

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 41/204 B of 11 December 1986,

Recognizing that, pending a comprehensive settlement of the differences that have given rise to the financial emergency of the Organization, partial or interim steps could enhance the liquidity of the Organization and alleviate its financial difficulties to some extent,

Noting with satisfaction that the project on the issue of special postage stamps on the social and economic crisis in Africa is almost completed,

1. Recalls that it decided, by its resolution 39/239 A of 18 December 1984, to place one half of the revenue earned therefrom at the disposal of the Secretary-General for the implementation of objectives as detailed in the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, adopted by the General Assembly on 3 December 1984, and to place the remaining half in a special account;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a final financial report on the project to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

21 December 1987 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/882) without vote, 19 December (meeting 67); lo-nation draft (A/C.5/42/L.25); agenda item 117.

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

In 1987, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) marked its thirtieth anniversary, its statute having entered into force on 29 July 1957.^a Activities of IAEA during the year continued to be influenced by the 1986 accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Ukrainian SSR. Lessons learned from the accident caused an upsurge in global awareness of nuclear safety and radiological protection. A gradual shift in emphasis was initiated towards promoting improvements in plant operation and maintenance practices, in order to reach uniformly high levels of safety, reliability and economic performance world-wide. At an IAEA conference on nuclear power performance and safety (Vienna, 28 September-2 October) some 700 experts reviewed national and international efforts.

The Convention on Physical Protection of Nuclear Material (see below) and the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency entered into force on 8 and 26 February 1987, respectively. A joint working group of legal experts of IAEA and the Nuclear Energy Agency (NEA) of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development adopted by consensus the text of a joint protocol seeking to integrate the 1960 Paris Convention on Third Party Liability in the Field of Nuclear Energy and the 1963 Vienna Convention on Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage.^b

IAEA efforts to strengthen the infrastructure for nuclear power projects in its developing member States continued through interregional and national training courses, seminars, workshops, technical co-operation projects, advisory missions, guidebooks, manuals and technical committee meetings. An expert group study on mechanisms to help developing countries promote and finance their nuclear power programmes resulted in recommendations for intensified IAEA activities.

During the year, IAEA continued to foster research and development in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and the exchange of scientific and technical information, to establish and administer safeguards, to provide technical assistance to its member States and to establish health and safety standards.

The United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy (Geneva, 23 March-10 April) endorsed the Agency's role among multinational institutions in promoting the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and supported its technical co-operation programme, its safeguards system and its work in nuclear safety. The Conference recognized that nuclear energy could contribute to economic and social development and to the well-being of many countries, and urged that international peaceful nuclear co-operation should be enhanced and broadened. In November, the General Assembly requested IAEA to continue strengthening and broadening international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy for economic and social development (see p. 582).

The thirty-first session of the IAEA General Conference was held at Vienna from 21 to 25 September 1987. The Conference called for measures to strengthen international co-operation in nuclear safety and radiological protection and for sharing safety-related information. The Board of Governors met six times in 1987, once in each of February, May, June and December and twice in September.

IAEA membership remained at 113 throughout 1987.

Nuclear safety and radiation protection

In February 1987, the Convention on Physical Protection of Nuclear Material entered into force, establishing standard measures of physical protection to apply to nuclear material while being transported from country to country. Under the Convention, parties were to provide for punishment of defined serious criminal offences involving nuclear material and to co-operate in preventive measures and information exchange regarding theft, sabotage and extortion.

During the year, 10 operational safety review team (OSART) missions carried out in-depth reviews of management programmes, plant operation, maintenance, personnel training, technical support, plant chemistry, radiological protection and emergency capability at nuclear power plants in seven countries (Canada, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Mexico, Netherlands, Spain, United States). OSART guidelines were published and a report was prepared on OSART findings based on the results of missions through May 1987.

^bYUN 1963, p. 595.

Under the operational safety indicators programme, a set of plant-specific indicators, which helped identify key areas for in-depth investigation, were developed to facilitate OSART reviews. The number of reports to IAEA's incident reporting system on unusual operating, surveillant; and maintenance events at nuclear power plants increased from 266 to 421.

An IAEA symposium on safety aspects of nuclear power plant aging and maintenance (29 June-3 July) completed a report for publication in 1988. A document was drafted on the management of severe accidents as part of IAEA's efforts to assist member States in understanding severe accident phenomena. Work continued on an in-service inspection manual based on operating practices in countries with broad experience in nuclear power. The International Nuclear Safety Advisory Group neared the end of its work in formulating basic principles for the safety of existing and future nuclear power plants. In 1987, IAEA sent a questionnaire on regulatory practices to 64 member States operating or planning to operate nuclear power plants and began analysing the replies.

In October, IAEA assisted Brazil following an accident at Goiania—involving the contamination of persons resulting from the mishandling of a radioisotope source intended for medical treatment—and acted as a channel through which other countries provided their assistance; additional assistance was provided under the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency. IAEA continued to develop its ability to perform its functions under that Convention and under the 1986 Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident,^c in particular through establishing arrangements to use the World Meteorological Organization's Global Telecommunication System for the transmission of data in a radiological emergency.

In the area of radiation protection, IAEA organized an international seminar on computer applications in radiation protection (Yugoslavia), an interregional training course on radioactive materials transport (United Kingdom) and general radiation protection courses in Argentina, Egypt, France and the German Democratic Republic. In addition, four meetings on radiation protection were sponsored under IAEA's regional co-operative arrangements for the promotion of nuclear science and technology in Latin America (ARCAL). During the year, IAEA and the World Health Organization (WHO) co-sponsored meetings on epidemiological methodology in connection with a USSR study of possible long-term effects of radiation on persons affected by the Chernobyl accident. An IAEA meeting on the handling of skin lesions due to high-level accidental radiation considered experience gained from that accident.

National radiological data provided in response to a joint request by IAEA and WHO were collated by IAEA for use by the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation in assessing the radiological impact of the Chernobyl accident. The IAEA Laboratory at Seibersdorf, Austria, performed various environmental, food and human contamination measurements, also in connection with the accident. Radiation protection advisory teams reviewed infrastructures in eight countries (Colombia, Jordan, Peru, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanzania) to determine priorities and recommend long-term programmes. Other radiation protection missions were organized to Egypt, Jordan, Nigeria and Viet Nam. Support in radiation protection was provided by 94 technical co-operation projects.

Nuclear power

The total installed nuclear power-generating capacity in the world increased by about 8 per cent during 1987, reaching 297.9 gigawatts (electrical) by the end of the year. At that time, there were 417 nuclear power plants in operation, accounting for more than 16 per cent of the world's electricity generation and representing an accumulated operating experience of about 4,600 reactor years.

Twenty-two nuclear power plants came on line during the year in Bulgaria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, Hungary, Japan, Spain, the USSR and the United States and construction work started on nine plants in Bulgaria, China, India and Japan; no construction cancellations were reported by member States. In some member States where opposition to nuclear power was strong, the slow-down or suspension of nuclear power programmes continued; most others, however, reasserted their commitment to proceed with extensive nuclear power programmes.

IAEA continued to help strengthen nuclear power planning in developing member States through advisory missions, training courses and guidebooks. In August, a report was published to assist developing countries promote and finance their nuclear power programmes; the report contained recommendations by experts from 15 member States and the World Bank laying down activities to be taken by IAEA in the areas of energy and nuclear power planning, public acceptance, project preparation and implementation, and nuclear power financing.

IAEA advisory teams, in connection with feasibility studies and infrastructure development projects, visited Malaysia, Morocco, Peru and Tu-

nia. Various training courses were held in Argentina, China, Indonesia, Morocco and the Republic of Korea.

Support was provided to technical co-operation projects in 10 countries. Large multiyear projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in the area of manpower development for nuclear power were supported in Argentina and China.

At the end of 1987, IAEA's Power Reactor Information System (PRIS) contained data for about 3,400 years of power reactor operation and on some 24,000 outages. An analysis of nuclear power plant load and availability factor trends during the 1980s showed a steady increase both in world-wide average values and in the number of plants with good or excellent performance records.

Meetings, safety guides, research co-ordination programmes and technical committees focused on quality assurance and control, fission reactor systems, advanced light-water reactors and nuclear fusion.

Using PRIS data, IAEA published a further edition of Nuclear Power Reactors in the World and completed a report on operating experience with power reactors in member States during 1986. A guidebook, Energy and Electricity Demand Forecasting for Nuclear Power Planning in Developing Countries, intended to serve as a manual for interregional training courses, as background material during IAEA advisory missions and as a reference source for persons responsible for energy, electricity and nuclear energy planning in developing countries, was finalized during the year.

Nuclear fuel cycle

IAEA fuel cycle technology activities in 1987 focused on uranium resources and production, processing and production of nuclear and reactor materials, reactor fuel design, fabrication and performance, and spent fuel management. Sixty-five member States were involved in such activities, with more than 750 specialists from 50 countries participating in meetings on subjects ranging from uranium geology to spent fuel management. Technical assistance was provided to 33 member States.

In collaboration with NEA, IAEA issued the twelfth edition of Uranium Resources, Production and Demand. To improve data input to this publication, a group of consultants continued work on a manual for appraisal of undiscovered uranium resources.

At an IAEA/NEA symposium on the back-end of the nuclear fuel cycle: strategies and options (Vienna), participants exchanged information on spent fuel management strategies and options and on various technical, safety, economic, environmental, legal and regulatory aspects of spent fuel and high-level waste management.

Radioactive waste management

During 1987, IAEA's radioactive waste management programme increased its practical help to member States, providing support for technical co-operation projects in Algeria, Bangladesh, Chile, China, Egypt, Indonesia, Mexico, Peru, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand and Turkey. The Waste Management Advisory Programme was launched, with four missions to developing countries during the year.

Work on the formulation of standards and criteria for the management of radioactive wastes continued and the preparation of a document proposing international standards for the disposal of radioactive wastes in deep geological formations entered its final stage.

Co-ordinated research programmes continued on the evaluation of low- and intermediate-level solid waste forms and packages, the retention of iodine and other airborne radio-nuclides during abnormal and accident conditions, and the performance of solidified high-level waste forms and engineered barriers under repository conditions.

In co-operation with the University of California (United States) and the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, IAEA organized two large conferences on waste management, held in the United States and Hong Kong. A symposium on the decommissioning of nuclear facilities, sponsored by the United States Department of Energy in co-operation with IAEA and NEA and held in Pennsylvania, United States, was attended by 625 participants from 19 countries.

A report was published on methods for reducing occupational exposures during decommissioning. Two reports were prepared—one on the decontamination and demolition of concrete structures and the other on recycling and reuse of components arising from decommissioning.

Food and agriculture

Under a joint programme with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, IAEA continued to assist developing member States in improving their agriculture and food production through the application of isotopes, ionizing radiation and related techniques. The programme co-ordinated 30 research programmes involving 480 research contracts and agreements dealing with the use of nuclear and related techniques to solve food production and protection problems.

Some 200 technical co-operation projects were carried out in 62 developing member States; there were also 13 regional and interregional projects. Research projects and training courses—carried out under technical co-operation projects under ARCAL in Latin America and the regional cooperative agreement for research, development and training related to nuclear science and technology (RCA) in Asia and the Pacific-focused on soil fertility, irrigation and crop production, plant breeding and genetics, animal production and health, insect and pest control, agrochemicals and residues, and food preservation.

Training courses or seminars were held on the use of isotopes and nuclear techniques in studies of soil-plant relationships (Austria and the German Democratic Republic); production of doubled haploids of cereals (Latin America); mutation induction and aseptic plant tissue culture (Austria); use of radioimmunoassay and related techniques in animal reproduction studies (Venezuela); use of the sterile-insect technique (Austria); use of nuclear techniques in pesticide research (United States); and food irradiation (Argentina).

Activities of the International Consultative Group on Food Irradiation continued to gain momentum in the areas of acceptance, process control and public information. At the end of 1987, there were 33 countries in which one or more irradiated food items had been approved for human consumption; there were 30 demonstration/commercial irradiators available for treating food in 20 countries. During 1987, Canada, China, Cuba and France installed at least one such facility and others were under construction in China, France and the United States.

Life sciences

In collaboration with WHO and other international organizations, IAEA continued to assist member States in the application of nuclear techniques in medicine, biology and health-related environmental research. It also continued to promote greater responsibility and accuracy in radiation dosimetry for medical and industrial purposes.

Under ARCAL, a European Economic Community—supported programme was set up to promote the use of bulk reagents for radioimmunoassays. A similar project under RCA supplied bulk reagents to 10 Asian countries.

During the year training courses or seminars were held on nuclear techniques in dealing with parasitic infections (Kenya), cervical cancer brachytherapy (Egypt) and the applications of radiation-aided cytogenetic techniques (Japan).

An IAEA/WHO symposium on dosimetry in radiotherapy (Vienna) examined technical issues. Routine calibration services were provided by the Dosimetry Laboratory at Seibersdorf for member States on request, and a training course on activities of the Secondary Standard Dosime-try Laboratories was held as part of an introductory course on radiation protection services.

Physical sciences

IAEA continued to assist in introducing nuclear science programmes into university curricula in a number of developing member States, providing advice on organizing training/research laboratories and supplying equipment for laboratory demonstrations.

IAEA had established in February 1979 the International Tokamak Reactor (INTOR) workshop, on the recommendation of the International Fusion Research Council, following a proposal by the USSR that there should be international co-operation on tokamak research under the aegis of IAEA. Made up of representatives of the four major fusion programmes—the European Atomic Energy Community, Japan, the USSR and the United States—to carry out an assessment of data concerning the tokamak approach to the thermonuclear reactor, the INTOR workshop completed its work in 1987.

In March 1987, the four parties met under Agency auspices to begin a conceptual design study for an international thermonuclear experimental reactor, which would focus on producing a design for the next-step tokamak experiment. It represented an expansion of the work done through the INTOR workshop.

Co-ordinated research programmes and research contracts covered ways of improving radioisotope production in research reactors (Spain), radiation immobilization of bioactive materials (China), radiation degradation of organic materials in radiation environments (Italy) and isotope-aided hydrological investigations and the development and improvement of isotope hydrology techniques (Mexico).

Training was provided on nuclear instrumentation, small computers and nuclear equipment, X-ray fluorescence spectroscopy, the operation and maintenance of research reactors, radiation processing and nucleonic control systems.

IAEA continued to provide nuclear and atomic data services to member States and to co-ordinate the activities of a world-wide network of data centres. During 1987, it fulfilled more than 700 requests from 40 member States for experimental and evaluated data, data processing computer codes and publications. It continued to publish the semi-annual Bulletin on Atomic and Molecular Data for Fusion and the Computer Index of Neutron Data and also published an updated index to the literature on atomic collision data relevant to fusion and a Handbook on Nuclear Activation Data.

Technical assistance

During 1987, 962 projects were operational and 64 training courses were held, involving 1,808 expert assignments and training for 1,030 IAEA fellows and visiting scientists.

Of the assistance delivered in 1987, the largest portion (20 per cent) related to nuclear engineering and technology, including reactor modernization, metallurgy, nuclear instrumentation and reactor control, isotope production, radiation engineering and quality assurance. Other important fields were the application of isotopes and radiation in agriculture (18 per cent), nuclear safety and radiation protection (15 per cent), industry and hydrology (13 per cent) and nuclear physics and nuclear medicine (9 per cent each).

Total new resources for technical co-operation activities in 1987 increased by 5.5 per cent over the previous year, reaching $41.5 million. The IAEA Technical Assistance and Co-operation Fund accounted for 72.5 per cent of the total available resources, extrabudgetary funds for 13.7 per cent, UNDP for 6.2 per cent and assistance in kind for 7.4 per cent. Disbursements were highest in equipment procurement, accounting for 50 per cent of total delivery; expert services accounted for 19 per cent, fellowship training for 20 per cent, training courses for 10 per cent and sub-contracts for 1 per cent.

By region, the leading sectors were agriculture for Africa and Latin America, nuclear engineering and technology for Asia and the Pacific and for Europe, and nuclear safety for the Middle East. Most interregional assistance was in the area of nuclear safety.

Scientific research and support

IAEA's Laboratories at Seibersdorf provided services and support to programmes in food and agriculture, and physical, chemical and life sciences. They offered in-service training for individual fellows, organized training courses and supplied officers for technical co-operation projects.

Training, research and service activities were performed in such areas as soil fertility, irrigation, crop mutation, insect and pest control, pesticide analysis and formulation, animal nutrition, health and reproduction, analytical chemistry, radiation dosimetry, electronics, instrumentation and isotope hydrology. In addition, the Laboratories provided analytical services for safeguards. The Safeguards Analytical Laboratory received more than 1,000 samples of nuclear material, thus reducing the total time needed to conclude verifications by destructive analysis.

The International Laboratory of Marine Radioactivity (Monaco) provided assistance to member States through a programme for improving the quality of monitoring data on pollutants and potential pollutants, such as pesticides, chlorinated and petroleum hydrocarbons, trace metals and or-ganometallic compounds. The Laboratory conducted pilot and emergency surveys of specific marine pollutants in member States and conducted work on the transport, fate and effects of some of the pollutants in question through oceanographic cruises in the South Atlantic/Antarctic Oceans and in the Mediterranean.

The International Centre for Theoretical Physics (Trieste, Italy) continued to hold research and training activities in fundamental physics, condensed-matter physics, mathematics, physics and energy, physics and the environment, applied physics, and physics and development. Some 3,700 scientists took part in its activities in 1987, in three major projects outside Trieste and in the programme for training at laboratories in Italy.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

In 1987, as in previous years, the secretariat, in carrying out the IAEA safeguards obligations, did not detect any anomaly which would indicate the diversion of a significant amount of safeguarded nuclear material—or the misuse of facilities, equipment or non-nuclear material subject to safeguards under certain agreements—for the manufacture of any nuclear weapon or explosive device, or for any other military purpose, or for purposes unknown. It was considered reasonable to conclude that nuclear material under IAEA safeguards in 1987 remained in peaceful nuclear activities or was otherwise adequately accounted for. During the year, 2,133 inspections were carried out at 631 nuclear installations in 52 non-nuclear-weapon States and four nuclear-weapon States.

At the end of 1987, there were 166 safeguards agreements in force with 97 States, a unilateral submission agreement with Chile having entered into force in September and a safeguards agreement with Brunei Darussalam pursuant to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons^d (NPT) having entered into force in November. Spain acceded to NPT in November, bringing the total number of States parties to the Treaty at the end of 1987 to 137, including three nuclear-weapon States.

Safeguards were applied in 41 non-nuclear-weapon States under agreements pursuant to NPT or to NPT and the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco), and in one non-nuclear-weapon State pursuant to the Tlatelolco Treaty. NPT safeguards agreements were concluded with 10 of the 11 States signatories of the South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga),^e and safeguards were applied in one of them pursuant to an NPT agreement. Thirty-one safeguards agreements were in force with the following eight non-nuclear-weapon States not parties to NPT, the Tlatelolco or the Rarotonga Treaty: Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, India, Israel, Pakistan, South Africa. Safeguards were applied in seven of them pursuant to those agreements. At the end of 1987, there were 496 nuclear facilities under safeguards or containing safeguarded material in non-nuclear-weapon States and 406 locations outside facilities containing small amounts of safeguarded material and two safeguarded non-nuclear installations. There were nine facilities in nuclear-weapon States under IAEA safeguards pursuant either to voluntary-offer agreements or to safeguards transfer agreements.

In September, the IAEA General Conference, referring to its previous demands that South Africa immediately submit all its nuclear installations and facilities to Agency safeguards, resolved to decide at its 1988 regular session on the recommendation of the IAEA Board of Governors to suspend South Africa from IAEA membership. The Conference also demanded that Israel place all its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards.

Nuclear information

The International Nuclear Information System, with 75 countries and 14 international organizations participating, had a bibliographic data base on nuclear literature totalling 1,159,156 records by year's end. The data base was distributed on magnetic tape to 42 member States.

The data base of the Agricultural Information System, covering 128 countries and 14 international organizations, totalled 1.4 million references by the end of 1987.

Secretariat

At the end of 1987, the number of staff members of the secretariat was 2,026—771 in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 78 countries), 1,121 in the General Service category and 134 in the Maintenance and Operative Service category

Budget

The regular budget for 1988 was $156,182,000, of which $146,838,000 was to be financed from contributions by member States on the basis of the 1988 scale of assessment, $5,366,000 from income from work for others and $3,978,000 from other miscellaneous income.

Chapter II

International Labour Organisation (ILO)

In 1987, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) continued activities in its six major programme areas: promotion of policies to create employment and satisfy basic human needs; development of human resources; improvement of working and living conditions and environment; promotion of social security; strengthening of industrial relations and tripartite (government/employer/worker) co-operation; and the advancement of human rights in the social and labour fields. The main instruments of action continued to be standard-setting, technical co-operation activities, research and publishing.

Membership of ILO remained at 150.

Meetings

The seventy-third session of the International Labour Conference, held at Geneva from 3 to 23 June 1987, was attended by some 1,800 delegates and advisers from 138 countries. The Conference had before it the annual report of the ILO Governing Body, the report of the Director-General, focusing on the future of multilateral co-operation, and the twenty-third special report on the effect of apartheid on labour and employment in South Africa.

The Conference held first discussions on employment promotion and social security and on safety and health in construction with a view to adopting new international labour standards in 1988.

A tripartite Conference committee again examined the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by member States, and reviewed the application of ILO standards on guarding machinery and the working environment.

ILO's technical co-operation programme was reviewed in a general discussion, and a resolution was adopted reaffirming the role of operational activities as a means of complementing ILO's standard-setting work.

In another resolution, the Conference invited Governments—in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations—to intensify efforts to achieve the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987) (see p. 715), in particular by increasing housing allocations and giving priority to improving housing conditions for the poor and disadvantaged. Governments should encourage employers' and workers' organizations, co-operatives and similar organizations to contribute to the drive for low-cost housing and adopt further legislation regulating house rents and security of tenure. ILO was asked to pay special attention to the Year's objectives and to urge Governments to embark on a vigorous campaign for the creation of adequate and affordable housing in the context of the organization's work in employment and basic needs.

Marking the fortieth anniversary in 1988 of the adoption of the Convention on freedom of association and protection of the right to organize,^a the Conference adopted a resolution stating that those principles must be universally applied irrespective of national social and economic systems. It reaffirmed the necessity for strict implementation of the principles in law and practice and the obligation for all Governments to co-operate fully with ILO's supervisory bodies. States which had not ratified the Convention were urged to do so during 1988 and to seek ILO assistance rapidly when problems relating to the implementation of the principles of freedom of association were experienced or anticipated.

By a further resolution, the Conference asked Governments and employers' and workers' organizations to promote national policies for guidance and services needed to prevent, reduce and eradicate the abuse of drugs and alcohol in the workplace and elsewhere and to support programmes in the work-place in that respect. The social partners, each within its competence, should respect the dignity of the workers by ensuring confidentiality and should protect the workers' security of employment and income during medical rehabilitation to the same extent as for those workers suffering from other health or social problems. ILO was urged to give priority to activities relating to the control of drug and alcohol abuse, and to give special attention to youth.

The Conference adopted the ILO budget for 1988-1989 amounting to $324.86 million and elected members of the ILO Governing Body for a three-year term (1987-1990).

Special Conference sittings were addressed by President Raúl Alfonsín of Argentina and President Mario Soares of Portugal.

The seventy-fourth (maritime) session of the International Labour Conference (Geneva, 24 September-9 October) adopted a Convention and Recommendation on seafarers' welfare at sea and in port, ensuring that welfare facilities and services—including cultural, recreational and information services—were provided in appropriate ports and on board ship to all seafarers without discrimination. The Conference adopted a Convention on social security and sickness insurance for seafarers, providing social security protection not less favourable than that of shore workers. Another Convention aimed at providing seafarers with health protection and medical care comparable to that of workers ashore and guaranteed seafarers the right to visit a doctor in ports of call. A Convention and Recommendation guaranteed seafarers repatriation rights in a variety of circumstances, including cessation of employment, illness, shipwreck and bankruptcy of the shipowner. Resolutions adopted concerned acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS); welfare; recruitment practices; shipboard environment; the danger of armed conflict to merchant shipping; and the observance of ILO's Convention on minimum standards in merchant shipping.

Employment, labour relations, productivity and the quality of working life were the main themes of the Fourth European Regional Conference (Geneva, 15-22 September). The Conference adopted conclusions on demographic development and social security and on education and training. Its resolutions were on occupational safety and health, employment policy and environmental protection, migrant workers, co-operation with developing countries and unemployment.

Standards designed to enhance the reliability of national labour statistics were adopted by the Fourteenth International Conference of Labour Statisticians (Geneva, 28 October-6 November). The Conference adopted resolutions revising and broadening existing standards on consumer price indices, updating the International Standard Classification of Occupations and setting guidelines concerning statistics of strikes and lock-outs.

A High-Level Meeting on Employment and Structural Adjustment (Geneva, 23-25 November) called for a major effort of world-wide structural adjustment to reduce large imbalances in the world economy and for national and international action to achieve employment-generating growth and alleviate mass poverty.

Industrial committee meetings held during the year were: the Building, Civil Engineering and Public Works Committee (eleventh session, Geneva, 1-9 April), focusing on employment policy and observance of ILO standards in the sector; a Joint Meeting on Employment and Working Conditions in Water, Gas and Electricity Supply Services (Geneva, 5-13 May); and the Third Tripartite Technical Meeting for the Clothing Industry (Geneva, 2-10 December), which adopted conclusions concerning employment and income questions and manpower development. A report on the protection of salaried authors and inventors was prepared for the Tripartite Meeting on Salaried Authors and Inventors (Geneva, 24 November-2 December).

Working environment

The ILO International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment continued to assist member States in promoting occupational safety and health and improving general working conditions.

Technical co-operation activities in 13 countries included 18 major projects for promoting occupational safety and health (Indonesia, Malaysia, Morocco, Zimbabwe) or related institutions (Algeria, China, Iran, Pakistan, Poland, Singapore, Thailand, Turkey), strengthening factory inspection services (India), safety and health in mines (India, Indonesia, Turkey) and creating major hazard control systems (India, Thailand). Seminars were held in Angola, the Central African Republic, China, Malaysia, Morocco, Rwanda, the Syrian Arab Republic and Thailand, short-term consultancies assisted Algeria, Côte d'Ivoire, Jordan, Morocco and Singapore, and individual fellowships were granted in Algeria, China, Cuba, Singapore, Tunisia and Zaire.

Codes of practice were published on health and working conditions in the transfer of technology to developing countries and on radiation protection of workers. Co-operation continued with the World Health Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme and the International Atomic Energy Agency and within the International Programme on Chemical Safety. The International Occupational Safety and Health Information Centre expanded its services and introduced a new bulletin, Safety and Health at Work.

Concerning conditions of work and welfare facilities, technical co-operation activities included training for small entrepreneurs on the improvement of working conditions and productivity in Argentina, India and Indonesia; a Latin American workshop on the training of trainers in the field of working conditions and productivity in small and medium-sized enterprises; and a regional tripartite seminar on work-related welfare facilities and services in selected Asian and Pacific countries, jointly funded by Japan and ILO. Technical advisory services were given to India and the Philippines on the design of action programmes on child labour, to India on the improvement of working conditions and productivity in small and medium-sized enterprises, and to national workers' confederations in Algeria and Zaire, which were seeking to improve the welfare facilities and services set up for their affiliates. A project on welfare facilities for women workers, financed by the Netherlands, was launched in Indonesia. Also in Indonesia, training materials for the organization and management of work-related welfare facilities were developed under a United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) project.

Research was carried out on working conditions and the quality of working life in 21 countries. A major publication in 1987 was Working Hours: Assessing the Potential for Reduction.

World Employment Programme

The World Employment Programme (WEP) assisted and encouraged ILO member States to adopt and implement active policies promoting full, productive and freely chosen employment and reducing poverty. Through its action-oriented research, technical advisory services, national projects and the work of its regional teams in Africa, Asia and Latin America, WEP focused on the longer-term development problems of rural areas and the rapidly growing urban informal sector. In response to the economic crises and the growth in open unemployment during the 1980s, WEP had entered into an ongoing dialogue with social partners and other international agencies on the social dimension of adjustment, and was devoting a major part of its policy analysis and advice to achieving greater equity in structural adjustment programmes. Among the areas covered were employment and poverty monitoring; direct employment creation and income generation for vulnerable groups; linkages between macro- and micro-economic interventions; technological change; and labour market problems. At the end of 1987, the value of technical co-operation projects executed by WEP was some $58 million.

Field activities

In 1987, ILO spent $112.2 million on technical co-operation activities (an increase of 5.6 per cent over 1986) to promote employment, develop human resources and social institutions, and improve living and working conditions.

Most of this expenditure ($50.2 million) continued to be financed by UNDP. The ILO regular programme provided $13.5 million, while expenditure funded from multi-bilateral arrangements and other special programmes was $41.8 million. Activities financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) accounted for $6.8 million.

A breakdown of expenditure on technical co-operation by activity and source of funds, and by country, territory, region or organization, is shown in the tables below.

Educational activities

In 1987, ILO's training programme accounted for over one-third of technical co-operation activities, with projects in industrial and rural vocational training aimed at improving the performance of public enterprises, strengthening the small enterprise sector, assisting management development institutions, evaluating national training policies and strengthening vocational rehabilitation programmes. Some 40 per cent of these activities took place in least developed countries. Support continued to major regional vocational training centres in Asia, Africa and Latin America, and work began on a new European regional project on vocational training systems and new technologies.

The International Institute for Labour Studies at Geneva, an ILO centre for advanced labour and social studies, held its twenty-second international internship course on active labour policy development from 7 May to 4 June. Attended by 22 participants from 15 countries in Africa, Asia, the Middle East and the Caribbean, the course dealt with a wide range of social policy issues, including human rights, labour markets in rural and urban areas, social consequences of new technologies, and environment and labour policy.

The Institute organized a course on human resources (Harare, Zimbabwe, 21-30 September) for 22 participants from seven southern African countries, including a representative of the South African Congress of Trade Unions. The course concentrated on employment, migration and training policies in southern Africa. The Institute's new industrial organization programme completed a review of developments in the organization and the structure of small and medium-sized enterprises in nine industrialized countries. Two pilot studies of labour markets in Côte d'Ivoire and India aimed at developing a new methodology of labour market analysis to reveal the links between poverty and labour market access in developing countries. Under the workers' participation programme, the Institute prepared a reference book on global participative experiences, with special emphasis on emerging trends and new forms of participation.

Three numbers of the Institute's journal Labour and Society (in English and French) were published in 1987; two were special issues dealing with labour market flexibility and social concertation.

During 1987, the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin, Italy, organized 76 courses and seminars, attended by 1,520 participants, and administered 832 fellowships. The Centre conducted advanced programmes on the management of training institutions and focused on improving sectoral management for co-operatives and energy resources and managing small and medium-sized enterprises.

Vocational and technical training was a major part of the year's activities, increasingly conducted in the field; activities focused on the links between employment creation and training, the financing of training, its cost-effectiveness, and the relationship between education, pre-employment training, in-plant training and upgrading.

Training in the social aspects of labour, covering a comparative analysis of labour relations and the training of trainers of trade union instructors, were undertaken in Africa, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America. Tripartite training activities continued; one programme concerned the management of labour inspection systems.

Publications

Published ILO research covered a wide range of topical social and labour questions. New volumes issued in 1987 included: Annotated Bibliography on Clandestine Employment; Brazil and Peru: Social and Economic Effects of Petroleum Development; Collective Bargaining in Industrialized Market Economies: A Reappraisal; Co-operative Management and Administration (second edition); Economic Evaluations of Unpaid Household Work: Africa, Asia, Latin America and Oceania; Guidelines for the Development of Small-scale Construction Enterprises; Improving Public Enterprise Performance: Concept and Techniques; Improving Site Productivity in the Construction Industry; India and Thailand: Social and Economic Effects of Petroleum Development; Managing Change in British Industry; Microelectronics and Employment Revisited: A Review; Plantations and Plantation Workers; Productivity Management: A Practical Handbook; Public Service Labour Relations: Recent Trends and Future Prospects; Responses to Drug and Alcohol Problems in the Work-place (a multimedia resource kit); Small Enterprise Development: Policies and Programmes (second edition); Structural Adjustment in the Federal Republic of Germany; subject Guide to Publications of the International Labour Office, 1980-85; World Recession and Global Interdependence: Effects on Employment, Poverty and Policy Formation in Developing Countries.

The third volume of the World Labour Report was published, surveying the main labour issues in the world; the forty-seventh (1987) issue of the Year Book of Labour Statistics also appeared. Regular periodicals and technical series included the bi-monthly International Labour Review, the quarterly Social and Labour Bulletin and the biannual Legislative Series.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1987, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and elsewhere was 2,894. Of these, 1,332 were in the Professional and higher categories and 1,562 were in the General Service or Maintenance categories. Of the Professional staff, 574 were assigned to technical co-operation projects.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The twenty-fourth biennial session of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) was held at Rome, Italy, from 7 to 27 November 1987. The Conference approved FAO's programme of work and budget for 1988-1989 and adopted resolutions on various aspects of food and agricultural production.

The Conference reviewed the world food situation and noted that overall food production growth in 1987, with output barely increasing, was the worst since 1982 and well below the 1980-1986 average. An erratic monsoon in Asia, bringing both drought and damaging floods, and further setbacks in Africa had not been offset by a recovery in Latin America and the Caribbean. Aggregate carry-overs of cereals in developing countries were expected to fall nearly 20 per cent during the 1986-1987 biennium, to their lowest level in 10 years.

Endorsing the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women^a the Conference called on the FAO Director-General to draw up a plan of action to incorporate those strategies into FAO programmes and requested him to convene a meeting of experts to discuss ways to systematize strategies and guidelines needed to integrate women into the development process.

On the subject of pesticides, the Conference decided that the principle of prior informed consent, forbidding shipments of pesticides until the recipient country had consented to import the product, be incorporated in the International Code of Conduct on the Distribution and Use of Pesticides, adopted by the Conference in 1985. The Director-General was asked to form a working group to advise member States on how to put that principle into effect.

The Conference reviewed a revised and updated edition of the FAO global study Agriculture: Toward 2000, which found that despite impressive growth in world food production, per capita food availability was lower in 1983-1985 than in 1979-1981 in 37 of 94 countries. By the turn of the century, the study noted, some 530 million people would be seriously undernourished. Also before the Conference was FAO's second progress report on the 1979 Programme of Action of the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development (WCARRD).^b The report, based on reports from 50 countries, showed that international recession was aggravating rural poverty, that the number of landless was growing, that non-agricultural employment remained underdeveloped in rural areas and that rural women lacked access to basic resources. Agreeing on the need to strengthen FAO so that it could continue to play a leading role in world agriculture, the Conference decided that its Programme and Finance Committees should study jointly, with the assistance of experts, FAO's role, priorities, objectives and strategies in the light of trends in the world food and agriculture situation.

The Conference called for the expansion of World Food Day activities world-wide, set the target for donor contributions to the United Nations/FAO World Food Programme at $1,400 million in 1989-1990 and gave its full support to the newly established Action Committee on Latin American Co-operation and Consultation on Plant Genetic Resources.

The Conference elected Edouard Saouma (Lebanon) to a third six-year term of office as Director-General from January 1988.

During 1987, FAO membership remained unchanged at 158 countries.

Funding

FAO funds come from three main sources: contributions by member nations, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and national trust funds. While the FAO Conference in 1985 had approved a budget of $437 million for the 1986-1987 biennial work programme, FAO encountered continuing budgetary problems caused by delays in payments of assessed contributions by its members and a further drastic decline in the value of the United States dollar. To avoid a serious cash flow crisis, economy measures were taken, resulting in savings of $25 million and ensuring the continuity of FAO's work until the end of the biennium. Technical programmes were reduced by 7 per cent, slowing down several important activities such as the control of cattle disease, nutrition planning and assessment of the world's fisheries resources. In addition, some 100 meetings and 200 publications were postponed or cancelled.

In March 1987, the Director-General outlined an approach to FAO'S future work: in the short term, programmes and projects of immediate benefit to FAO's member countries were to be maintained; for the long term, FAO was to reorient some activities to meet new challenges emerging in world agriculture and act to improve its own efficiency and effectiveness.

During the year, international financing institutions approved a record $443 million in funding for agricultural investment projects in Africa with the assistance of FAO's Investment Centre (see p. 1206). On a smaller scale, FAO had allocated by March 1987 some $15 million from its technical co-operation programme through its Agricultural Rehabilitation Programme for Africa (ARPA) to provide basic agricultural inputs to low-income countries. In its two years of operation, ARPA had channelled about $200 million to some 250 essential projects.

Activities in 1987

Food emergencies and rehabilitation

Smaller harvests in sub-Saharan Africa and Asia led to an increase in the number of food emergencies in 1987. Ethiopia was again threatened by famine and the Sudan needed exceptional support to purchase and transport food to deficit areas. In Angola and Mozambique, civil strife seriously reduced plantings.

During 1987, heavy flooding in north-western Bangladesh destroyed many farmers' vegetable seed reserves. FAO's Office for Special Relief Operations (OSRO) arranged for the import and distribution of some 10 tonnes of seed, enough to produce an estimated 64,500 tonnes of vegetables. This relief effort was one of 64 emergency operations carried out by OSRO during the year. Among other activities, a mobile farm-machinery repair unit was supplied to Jordan, food storage hangars were built in Cape Verde and 133 cereal grinding mills were distributed to villages in the Gambia.

FAO's Global Information and Early Warning System on Food and Agriculture (GIEWS) issued 15 special alerts in 1987, many appealing for food aid and other assistance.

In August, GIEWS warned of impending difficulties in Ethiopia after the late arrival of rains delayed mid-year planting of wheat and barley in the north. A crop assessment mission visited Ethiopia during the November/December harvest and confirmed the forecast: in the northern provinces production of cereals and pulses was well below that of 1984/85, when famine took thousands of lives. To guarantee food supplies in the threatened areas, some 1.3 million tonnes of food aid were urgently needed. In all of Africa, localized crop failures boosted the aggregate food aid needs of 45 countries to 4.6 million tonnes—40 per cent more than in 1986.

In South Asia, GIEWS issued its first special alert in August, some weeks before harvesting began. A further alert in September noted that the monsoon rains had improved, but forecast that cereal production would be substantially lower in several countries.

In December, GIEWS closely monitored the food supply situation in Latin America after drought devastated cereal and cash crops across 1.1 million square kilometres of Brazil. Further reports indicated shortages in four Central American countries.

A $2.7 million FAO project approved in 1987 was to give early warning systems in eastern and southern Africa direct access to weather satellite data, enabling them to estimate crop conditions and forecast harvests and insect plagues. As part of FAO's efforts to set up and strengthen regional early warning systems, the project was expected to train personnel and equip centres in Nairobi, Kenya and Harare, Zimbabwe. These primary data receiving stations were to serve 16 countries. During 1987, FAO was implementing 21 projects to help African countries set up or improve their early warning systems.

The FAO Emergency Centre for Locust Operations continued its work during the year as food supplies across northern Africa continued to be threatened by desert locusts and grasshoppers. In January, it declared a state of alert as the locusts threatened the Sudan and the Red Sea coast and were poised to migrate into neighbouring croplands. By mid-year, swarms of locusts had invaded Ethiopia, the Sudan and large areas of north-eastern Chad, while major outbreaks of grasshoppers continued in the Sahel. The Centre helped to channel some $40 million in donor assistance to the stricken areas. Selective aerial and ground spraying, combined with drought in northern Ethiopia, reduced the number of locusts in north-east Africa and helped to check the grasshopper threat in 11 West African countries. But, in October, widespread breeding of desert locusts in the southern Sahara produced numerous new swarms. The locusts crossed the Sahara on a broad front and invaded Algeria, Mauritania and Morocco.

Field programmes

One of FAO's main priorities in 1987 was the protection of its field programme, made up of projects that provided developing countries with technical advice in all areas of food and agriculture, fisheries and forestry.

Despite its financial crisis, during 1987 FAO carried out 1,839 field projects for a total value of $276.3 million. They were funded by UNDP and various trust fund arrangements with donor and recipient countries. In addition, 854 projects for emergency relief, training and short-term specialized advice with a total value of $37.2 million were carried out under the technical co-operation programme.

In 1987, the FAO Investment Centre, which assisted developing countries to attract investment for agricultural development, helped to formulate 41 investment projects, which were approved by international financing institutions for total investments of $899 million.

Rural development

FAO continued in 1987 its role as lead agency in the United Nations system for rural development, supporting the 1979 WCARRD Programme of Action. It led an inter-agency mission which made recommendations aimed at helping Brazil carry out its national plan for agrarian reform. It also sponsored a WCARRD follow-up consultation in Asia and the Pacific, an expert consultation on landlessness in rural Asia and an inter-agency round table on small holdings in Latin America and the Caribbean.

FAO rural development experts, leading an inter-agency mission, helped draw up broad outlines for an agrarian reform programme in the Philippines. With funding provided through FAO's technical co-operation programme, national institutions drafted land reform legislation. Similar funding helped to organize in Manila a National Congress for People's Agrarian Reform. On 22 July 1987, the President of the Philippines signed an executive order forming the basis of the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Programme, which provided for the acquisition and transfer of 5.7 million hectares of public and private land for the benefit of almost 2.5 million farmers. FAO assistance to the Programme, with funding from its technical co-operation programme, provided training for local-level agrarian reform officials and farmers' leaders. A $6 million Italy-funded project executed by FAO assisted government departments responsible for the Programme.

FAO promoted the concept of farm-power planning, involving the formulation of a national mechanization strategy which determined the correct combination of hand tools and animal draught- and mechanically-powered equipment, their acquisition, priorities for their deployment and policies for supporting users. During the year, African, Asian and Latin American countries sought advice on strategy formulation and an FAO expert reviewed Suriname's farm machinery and visited Trinidad and Tobago to review a farm mechanization strategy.

In 1987, an FAO pilot project supported efforts by Nepal's Ministry of Agriculture to decentralize its planning system. Two agricultural economists helped to train district-level planning personnel and to prepare model district development plans, which identified weaknesses in planning procedures. Based on the project's findings, FAO executed a large-scale project to prepare district plans. It also assisted in developing a replicable model for decentralized planning procedures in Zambia and conducted studies on planning needs in Jordan and the Sudan.

The problems of small farmers and family food producers were the focus of attention on World Food Day (16 October). Small farmers constituted over half of the world's rural poor and produced about four fifths of the food supply in developing countries.

Crops

World production of cereals in 1987 fell by just over 4 per cent compared to 1986. Output dropped by 6 per cent in developed countries and by 2 per cent in the developing world. While production of all the major cereals fell, coarse grains in developed countries and paddy in Asia were particularly affected. The European Economic Community's (EEC) cereal harvest was smaller than expected and significantly less than the record year 1984. In Eastern Europe and the USSR, output fell marginally.

In 1987, total utilization of cereals exceeded production for the first time since 1983/84. In addition, coarse grains, mainly used as animal feed, represented an increasingly larger share of total cereal stocks—about 52 per cent in 1987. Nevertheless, stocks remained at 23 per cent of estimated annual consumption, a level above the 18 per cent considered by FAO to be sufficient to maintain world food security.

Despite a smaller cocoa crop, market prices continued to fall. Sugar production remained almost static, bringing supply closer to demand. Oil crops output increased marginally, while root crops stagnated at the global level.

FAO's Prevention of Food Losses (PFL) Special Action Programme, which aimed to help developing countries identify post-harvest food losses and to plan and implement national food-loss reduction programmes, in 1987 marked its tenth year with 35 projects for a total budget of $36 million under way in all developing regions. An FAO pilot project in the Dominican Republic showed rice farmers in the Santa Clara agrarian reform area how portable threshing machines could reduce their losses and helped the local farmers' association install its own rice mill and train staff. The Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau and Senegal shared information and expertise regarding their rice crops under a PFL project.

Recognizing the key role played by women in post-harvest operations, FAO funded the development of teaching materials for a home science college in Tamil Nadu, India, to train female extension workers in improved post-harvest techniques.

A successful FAO project for mushroom production in Viet Nam led to similar ventures in Bhutan, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Nepal, Papua New Guinea and Sri Lanka.

FAO trained 15 women in the remote mountain community of Mantsonyane, Lesotho in the propagation of good quality, disease-free seed potatoes which were stored for multiplication or later distribution to other farms. The Lesotho project was one of more than 140 under way world-wide in 1987 under FAO's Seed Improvement and Development Programme, which aimed to help set up or strengthen national seed programmes serving the needs of the farming community.

A $1 million FAO project to help farmers in mountainous areas of the tropics to propagate, produce and process temperate fruits was launched in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. FAO also helped set up a fruit-breeding research centre in Shaanxi province, China, and formulated an assistance project in Bhutan.

FAO staff produced a tasty bread using cassava flour, proving that a bread similar to the classic white loaf, much favoured by Africa's city dwellers, could be produced using traditional staple crops. The possibility of preparing a wheatless bread was expected to allow Governments in developing countries to move ahead with policies limiting wheat imports and encouraging production of local crops.

Livestock

In 1987, improved diagnostic methods, new vaccines and drugs for veterinary use, breed improvement and embryo transfers were an integral part of FAO's programmes in animal health, forage production, genetic resources and livestock production. FAO supported efforts to map the deoxyribonucleic acid segments responsible for the resistance of some West African cattle to the deadly disease trypanosomiasis, spread by the tsetse fly. It also provided seed money to research centres in Argentina, Brazil, China, Ethiopia, India and Senegal for studies on the feasibility of setting up regional animal gene banks for the cryogenic storage of semen and embryos from endangered livestock breeds.

During the year, FAO sent some 300,000 doses of trivalent foot-and-mouth disease vaccine to Bulgaria and Greece; Funding for the campaign, totalling $1.6 million in 1985-1987, was provided by EEC and non-EEC countries.

Fisheries

In 1987, FAO defined aquaculture as the farming of aquatic organisms, implying both interventions to enhance production and ownership of cultivated stock. FAO also assembled, for the first time, country-by-country statistics which put world aquaculture output at 10.5 million tonnes in 1985. By the year 2000, it was expected to double.

An evaluation completed in 1987 of past FAO/UNDP technical assistance suggested that greater support be given to national aquaculture planning, to regional training programmes and to disseminating marketing information. In line with these recommendations, FAO launched with Hungary a series of training courses in hatchery and fish-farm management for fisheries personnel from Africa, Asia and the Near East. FAO's Aquaculture Development and Co-ordination Programme, which helped to set up four regional training and research networks, was implementing an aquaculture programme for South Pacific countries and studying a similar venture for the Caribbean.

During the year, FAO implemented some 50 field projects for aquaculture development. It helped to plan a $63.4 million project to supply nine Chinese cities with 18,000 tonnes of fish a year. Under a new 10-year programme, FAO was to focus greater efforts on smaller-scale projects to integrate aquaculture with traditional peasant farming systems. The programme's first phase focused on southern Africa—a pilot project under way in Zambia explored ways of including aquaculture in development programmes, with emphasis on the role of women in fish-farm management.

In March 1987, five Asian countries agreed to continue the work of FAO's regional fish-marketing information and advisory service, INFOFISH, as an intergovernmental organization, following termination of FAO assistance in 1986. During the year, FAO continued to operate fish-marketing information systems in Africa, Latin America and the Near East, under the co-ordination and support of GLOBEFISH, an FAO activity which gathered and disseminated information on fisheries production and trade, supply and demand, aquaculture, joint ventures and investment. All GLOBEFISH data were computer accessible world-wide via satellite.

A series of FAO-sponsored seminars alerted countries of Latin America and the Caribbean to the need for better management of the region's 5.7 million hectares of mangrove forests. In Costa Rica, an FAO pilot project trained national personnel in mangrove management and developed wood-harvesting and fish-farming techniques which conserve the resource. FAO launched similar projects in mangrove areas of Bangladesh and Sierra Leone.

Policy-makers, fishermen and fishing industry representatives meeting at separate FAO-sponsored conferences in Pakistan and the Philippines discussed issues affecting national fisheries and formulated development policies and programmes.

The Pakistan conference produced ideas for six fisheries projects, while participants in the Philippines drafted 12 action programmes and endorsed a bill to create a department of fisheries.

During 1987, FAO helped the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) to set up an ASEAN Fisheries Development Centre secretariat in Bangkok, Thailand. It helped design and build in India new types of inshore fishing vessels in ferro-cement to try to refurbish the country's aging fleet of some 25,000 wooden vessels. Following extensive sea trials and stability verification by computer at FAO headquarters, two trawlers were handed over in 1987 to fisheries departments in Tamil Nadu and Gujarat states. The departments demonstrated them to fishermen and encouraged boat-yards to use the ferro-cement boat-building technology.

During the year, FAO's Fisheries Department provided original fishing and fish-transport boat designs to 10 developing countries. In Guinea-Bissau, for example, simple plank canoes were tested as an alternative to the traditional dug-out. Encouraged by the results, FAO formulated a longer-term programme to develop a replacement for dug-outs throughout West Africa.

The Fridtjof Nansen—a 47.5 metre fisheries research vessel operating under a UNDP project—surveyed the Pacific coast from Mexico to Colombia to estimate the total biomass of fish stocks. Its 12-month mission was planned with the help of FAO and Norwegian scientists. Scientists from eight countries participated in the surveys.

Environment

In 1987, FAO's Investment Centre worked on 30 large-scale projects with environmental components. In August, the World Bank approved funding of $20 million for a project prepared by the Centre for forestry development in northern Tunisia, where overgrazing, the taking of fuelwood and soil erosion had severely degraded farmland. Other projects prepared by the Centre and approved by financial institutions included land erosion control in Burundi and Jamaica, and water and soil conservation in Burkina Faso. The Centre was preparing an additional 22 projects involving protection of the environment.

At a high-level meeting of government leaders and international agencies, held at Bellagio, Italy, under the auspices of FAO, the World Bank, UNDP, the World Resources Institute and the Rockefeller Foundation, participants called for urgent policy reforms to save tropical forests, which were being destroyed at the rate of 11 million hectares a year. The meeting endorsed the 1986 Tropical Forestry Action Plan⁶ for which FAO was the central coordinator. A task force prepared recommendations for policies, funding strategies and implementation arrangements for review in 1988. FAO reported that funds earmarked annually for assistance to forestry in the tropics had risen to $1 billion.

In 1987, FAO launched a multi-donor trust fund to support the preservation and use of the genetic diversity in plants. The new fund, to be financed by Governments, intergovernmental agencies, private industry and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), would allow FAO to step up the collection and conservation of precious plant genetic resources for conventional plant breeding and genetic engineering.

Drawing on its experience in land and water conservation, FAO in 1987 drew up environmental impact assessment procedures to be applied in formulating and implementing field projects. It offered its services to member countries wishing to apply similar assessments within their national agricultural and rural development programmes.

Following the nuclear accident at Chernobyl, Ukrainian SSR, in 1986, FAO worked with the World Health Organization and the International Atomic Energy Agency to prepare a series of recommendations for definitive standards on radio-nuclide contamination of food in international trade. FAO also continued its campaign to regulate the misuse of agricultural pesticides, distributing 25,000 copies of its International Code of Conduct on the Distribution and Use of Pesticides.

During 1987, FAO began investigating the impact of environmental crises on rural women. A consultant held discussions with government officials, research institutes and NGOs in famine-stricken Ethiopia and the Sudan. Preliminary findings showed that drought had a particularly severe effect on rural women through increased pressures on land, water, fuelwood and other resources vital to their food production systems. The research programme was expected to develop a methodology for the collection of data on farm survival strategies and to gather further evidence of women's important role in rural development, specifically in the rehabilitation of drought-affected areas.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

In 1987, FAO organized inter-country meetings, training and study tours and sponsored the formation of technical co-operation networks. In Latin America and the Caribbean, 33 countries were participating in a system of technical co-operation networks covering agro-forestry, aquaculture, food crops, fuel, marketing and watershed management. At a regional workshop organized with FAO assistance in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, participants from 14 Caribbean and ⁶YUN 1986, p. 1118.

Latin American countries called for renewed efforts to establish a Caribbean network for tropical root crops. FAO prepared a support project for that network. Similar action was under way in Central Africa, following a workshop sponsored by FAO and the International Institute for Tropical Agriculture. FAO also worked with Latin American Governments to establish a network to share technologies for multiple ovulation and embryo transfer in livestock.

During the year, extension workers from Côte d'Ivoire were trained in Ghana in the use of low-cost fish-smoking ovens; Nepalese agronomists studied fertilizer extension programmes in India; Brazilian scientists taught at a course on agricultural education in Paraguay; and 10 Near East countries exchanged information on problems in the breeding of small ruminants.

Information

FAO has produced hundreds of publications, with simple, illustrated texts on soil conservation, animal care and better farming methods, in Arabic, Chinese, English, French or Spanish. To reach the millions of small farmers and extension workers who do not understand those languages, FAO encouraged its member countries to adapt, translate, print and distribute its publications for local use. Local-language publishing in 1987 produced a wide variety of booklets, posters and leaflets. An agricultural college in Thailand finished printing 72,000 copies of booklets from FAO's Better Farming series for distribution throughout the country. Other publications dealt with rabbit husbandry (in Malaysian), animal traction (Indonesian) and freshwater fish farming (Telugu). In Brazil, a national magazine featured material from FAO's Rural Home Techniques series in regular instalments.

During the year, FAO began printing the Better Farming series in Portuguese for distribution in Portuguese-speaking African countries. Subsidy agreements for future ventures were signed with publishing houses in Indonesia, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam.

During 1987, FAO distributed computer programme diskettes to help low-income member countries systematically process data for the 1990 world census of agriculture. The diskette and accompanying manual were intended to assist national statistical offices tabulate their census data on low-cost personal computers. FAO assisted nine countries along the Nile River basin to make a detailed survey of their potential for irrigation development. The project followed publication in 1987 of an FAO assessment of Africa's water resources and irrigable soils and a preliminary inventory of irrigated areas. The regional survey, the first of its kind in Africa, produced a series of maps and a data bank of information.

Secretariat

At the end of 1987, the number of staff employed at FAO headquarters was 3,330, of whom 1,089 were in the Professional and higher categories. Field project personnel and those in regional and country offices numbered 2,847: 1,228 in the Professional and higher categories and 1,619 in the General Service category. In addition, 303 associate experts worked for FAO, of whom 46 were at headquarters and 257 in the field or regional and country offices.

Budget

The November 1987 session of the FAO Conference approved a budget of $492.3 million for 1988-1989.

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued throughout 1987 its activities aimed at promoting co-operation among nations through education, natural and social sciences, culture and communication.

During the year, the membership of UNESCO remained at 158. Associate membership increased to three with the admission of Aruba on 20 October.

The twenty-fourth session of the UNESCO General Conference was held at UNESCO headquarters in Paris from 20 October to 20 November. The Conference adopted a draft programme for an international literacy year—subsequently proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly as 1990—as well as proposals for a plan of action to eradicate illiteracy by the year 2000. The Conference appointed Federico Mayor of Spain to a six-year term as Director-General of UNESCO. He took up office on 16 November 1987, succeeding Amadou Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal who had served in that position since 1974.

Education

In 1987, UNESCO's major programmes focused on education for all; the formulation and application of education policies; and education, training and society.

In December, the General Assembly, acting on a recommendation by the Economic and Social Council, proclaimed 1990 as International Literacy Year (see p. 653).

In its fight against illiteracy, UNESCO launched on 23 February 1987 the Asia-Pacific Programme of Education for All (APPEAL). The first issue of the APPEAL newsletter was issued at the beginning of the year and a regional workshop of APPEAL national co-ordinators (Chiang Mai, Thailand, 19-29 August) was hosted by the Thai National Commission. During the year, an international symposium was held for reflection on the preparation of an international literacy year (Ulan Bator, Mongolia, 24-29 May). Work continued on establishing a regional programme for the universalization and renewal of primary education and the eradication of adult illiteracy in the Arab States. The regional programme for the eradication of illiteracy in Africa held workshops, seminars and courses for educational planners and administrators, primary-school staff and literacy and post-literacy workers, and published four issues of the bulletin Alpha 2000 in English, French and Portuguese. The second meeting of the Intergovernmental Regional Committee for the Major Project in the Field of Education in Latin America and the Caribbean (Bogota, Colombia, 24-28 March) confirmed the system of networks and an information system as the major methods by which the regional plan of action would tackle illiteracy.

Activities concerning adult education included workshops and seminars on training methods and pilot projects to establish adult education centres. During 1986-1987, 41 travel grants were awarded to educators from 36 member States, one third of whom were women.

Action to promote access to all types and levels of education in rural areas focused on promoting the role of village schools and increasing the contribution of general and specialized education—agricultural and technical—to socio-economic development. Instructional materials were prepared and disseminated and workshops organized to develop and test curricula on technologies adapted to rural areas. During 1986-1987, training programmes were organized for some 350 agricultural science teachers, agricultural extension workers, project managers, teacher trainers, community development specialists and other educational personnel from 11 member States in Africa, the Arab States, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean. Also during the biennium, training courses were organized with institutions and professional associations of agricultural education for some 220 specialists.

To promote equality of educational opportunity for girls and women, meetings and seminars were held to identify obstacles. Projects, seminars and training focused on access by girls to primary, secondary, technical and vocational education; higher education in science and technology; and participation of parents in their children's education. Special training programmes were organized in four member States for girls who had left school prematurely.

UNESCO also promoted measures to intensify existing education and training activities for disabled persons, refugees, national liberation movements and migrant workers and their families.

Under the programme on the formulation and application of education policies, the Sixth Regional Conference of Ministers of Education and Those Responsible for Economic Planning of Member States in Latin America and the Caribbean (Bogota, 30 March-4 April) adopted a declaration and 27 recommendations. The declaration focused on the relationship between the development of education and economic and social progress. The Conference reaffirmed that priority should be given to public spending on education and that its administration should be more stringent. Activities during 1986-1987 included training for 38 trainees with the assistance of the International Institute for Educational Planning. UNESCO also organized 60 courses, workshops and seminars for some 1,500 educational planners and administrators from more than 80 member States. Other activities sought to promote educational sciences.

Activities dealing with the interaction between education and society aimed at improving the teaching of science and technology; integrating productive work into general education curricula; promoting physical education and sport; and integrating training and research activities.

Natural sciences

UNESCO continued contributing to international co-operation in science and technology for development. Training and research courses and workshops and seminars for specialists, many from developing countries, were organized on various mathematical topics, physics, chemistry, biology, biotechnology and informatics. In collaboration with national universities and institutions and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), a symposium on innovative methods in technological education was held for over 200 teachers and planners in engineering education and technician training; the symposium was preceded by a series of preparatory regional workshops and training seminars in Africa, the Arab States, Asia and Latin America. Other activities for engineers included postgraduate courses and the publication of studies. Courses, conferences and exhibitions were organized and pilot projects undertaken in renewable energies; study grants were provided for Asian energy information specialists.

Concerning informatics, activities included training seminars and courses, pilot projects, fellowships and study and travel grants. The first meeting of the Bureau of the Intergovernmental Committee for the Intergovernmental Informatics Programme (Sofia, Bulgaria, 17 and 18 May) examined 28 projects. During 1986-1987, the UNESCO regional office for science and technology in Latin America and the Caribbean at Montevideo, Uruguay, conducted studies on the introduction of software in five member States and organized training courses for 188 participants in 15 member States and meetings for 117 informatics specialists in more than 10 member States.

The Second Conference of Ministers Responsible for the Application of Science and Technology to Development in Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 6-15 July) met to determine ways of directing science and technology policies towards meeting the socio-economic needs of African communities, particularly rural ones. The Conference adopted the Kilimanjaro Declaration and 15 recommendations, including one on the implementation of the special programme of assistance to Africa in science and technology research.

The International Geological Correlation Programme, with 83 established national committees, continued to stimulate international collaboration in the earth sciences through its 51 research projects in 122 countries. The geology for development project focused on applied geological studies of special interest for regional socio-economic development, with particular attention given to reinforcing interregional co-operation between geoscientists from West Africa and Latin America involved in the study of pre-Cambrian zones. Activities concerning natural hazards included projects aimed at establishing or reinforcing hazard-monitoring network systems, particularly earthquakes and volcanoes, in various parts of the world. Post-disaster investigations were conducted on several occasions.

Under the Man and the Biosphere Programme (MAB), the MAB International Co-ordinating Council identified four new lines of research: ecosystem functioning under different intensities of human impact; management and restoration of human-impacted resources; human investment and resource use; and human response to environmental stress. The MAB Council made suggestions concerning the substance and future development of these research topics to supplement the 14 existing international research themes within MAB. During the year the network of biosphere reserves expanded and various research and training activities took place.

The International Hydrological Programme (IHP) continued its third phase (1984-1989). Postgraduate courses in hydrology and water resources were sponsored, mainly for participants from developing countries, and several seminars, training courses and workshops were offered. The Third UNESCO/world Meteorological Organization International Conference on Hydrology and the Scientific Bases of Water Resources Management (Geneva, 16-21 March) discussed ensuring complementarity between the programmes and offered suggestions for IHP's fourth phase (1990-1995).

The Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission continued its programmes, which included ocean dynamics and climate, ocean science in relation to living and non-living resources, marine pollution research and monitoring, ocean mapping, ocean observation and warning systems, and marine data and information exchange.

In the marine sciences, UNESCO emphasized improving university teaching through training courses, meetings and seminars and through fellowships and travel grants. UNESCO projects on coral reefs, mangrove areas, coastal lagoons and coastal ecosystems continued throughout the year.

As part of its contribution to the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987) (see p. 715), UNESCO worked towards the improvement of living conditions in poor housing areas through training programmes for architects, town planners and community development specialists and encouraged projects to rehabilitate housing in historic centres and their surrounding districts.

Information on environmental education was promoted in member States through various institutions to develop the human resources necessary for such education, and through the dissemination of scientific information on the rational use of natural resources relevant to UNESCO's environmental programme. The International Congress on Environmental Education and Training (Moscow, 17-21 August), jointly organized by UNESCO and the United Nations Environment Programme, decided on policy lines for future action and finalized an international strategy of action for the 1990s. The Congress also recommended that the 1990s be proclaimed the world decade for environmental action.

Social sciences

In 1987, UNESCO continued emphasizing the development of social and human sciences.

An international meeting of specialists in the social and human sciences (Paris, 14-18 December) considered ways to strengthen international co-operation in those sciences. The work of the meeting, which was attended by 30 participants and 50 observers, revolved around three themes: the social and human sciences and the challenges of modernity and development; interdisciplinarity in these sciences and their interface with the life sciences and the natural sciences; and activities to promote the global development of the social and human sciences, especially in developing regions, and to strengthen international co-operation.

UNESCO organized a meeting of 12 experts from various regions on the role of the international community in international relations, public international law and international co-operation and understanding (Valletta, Malta, 30 June-3 July), and supported a course on peace and conflict held at the University of Uppsala (Sweden, 7 April-3 June). During the year, the first Répertoire des institutions d'enseignement et de recherche en droit international was published, as was The Treatment of Prisoners under International Law. The 1987 UNESCO Prize for Peace Education was shared between the journalist/writer Laurence Deonna (Switzerland) and the Servicio Paz y Justicia en America Latina, an ecumenical non-violent organization founded in 1971 concerned with education for peace, consciousness raising, educational activities relating to human and peoples' rights and the training of community leaders.

The UNESCO Associated Schools Project continued to promote international education at the national, regional and international levels. In 1987, the project included some 2,150 institutions in 97 countries.

Activities to combat prejudice, intolerance, racism and apartheid included studies and workshops, teacher training and exchange and revision of school textbooks to eliminate discriminatory features. A meeting held in Paris (30 March-2 April) examined studies undertaken by Canada, Ecuador and Hungary on practical measures to ensure the full exercise of cultural rights within multilingual, multiconfessional or multicultural nations. UNESCO sponsored a subregional workshop on combating prejudice and intolerance through research and education (Bridgetown, Barbados, April).

Activities for youth continued to promote the development of sport, particularly for youth in rural areas; to expand voluntary work among young people; and to train leaders of youth organizations through the awarding of travel grants.

The status of women programme included the compilation of statistics on the participation of men and women in meetings organized by UNESCO or with its assistance, in order to draw to the attention of the UNESCO secretariat and member States the need for more vigorous efforts to achieve a better balance. UNESCO also focused on developing co-operation with the United Nations system, with a view to co-ordinating the implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.^a

Culture

Implementation of international campaigns for the safeguarding of cultural heritage was pursued throughout 1987. One new campaign was launched to safeguard the architectural complex of San Francisco de Lima (Peru). Activities were carried out in regard to the 22 campaigns in progress and in relation to 7 others approved by the UNESCO General Conference.

^aYUN 1985, p. 937.

Preparations were made for the launching of the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997). The plan of action for the Decade and a practical guide were finalized; statutes of the Intergovernmental Committee for the Decade were drawn up and a permanent secretariat of the Decade established.

The World Heritage Committee, established under the 1972 Convention concerning the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage, held its eleventh session (Paris, 7-11 December). It inscribed 41 additional sites on the World Heritage List, thus raising to 288 the number of cultural and natural properties protected by the Convention, to which 100 States were parties at the end of 1987. Efforts continued to promote public awareness of the Convention's objectives and to encourage contributions to the World Heritage Fund, which supports training activities and restoration work on World Heritage sites.

Studies continued on African, Latin American, Caribbean, Asian and Islamic cultures. In 1987, the first volume of the General History of Africa was published in Italian and the seventh volume in French and Spanish. An abridged edition of the first volume was published in Korean and of the second volume in French. Translations of literary works written in less widely spoken languages were published in the UNESCO Collection of Representative Works. Art reproductions were circulated as traveling exhibitions, and records of traditional music from several countries were produced. The yearly bibliography of translations in the world, Index Translationum, continued to be published. The quarterly Museum was produced in English, French, Russian and Spanish.

A new programme for safeguarding the non-physical heritage began to produce its first results through the organization of a meeting in the Saami region of northern Scandinavia of representatives of minority cultures, predominantly from industrialized countries.

Support to member States for cultural development and policies continued through the encouragement of wider participation in cultural life and through the training of personnel for cultural development.

Activities to promote the arts were pursued in 1987 with the organization of a number of regional symposia and workshops: graphic design for development (Africa); literature (Africa); contemporary music (Asia and the Pacific); handicrafts (Asia and the Arab region); visual arts and electronic culture (Europe); contemporary theatre (Latin America and the Caribbean); and the use of video in the self-promotion of indigenous peoples' cultural values (North, Central and South America). Colloquia were organized on the role of art in architecture, protection of performing artists in a technological era, and folk dances and their adaptation to the modern stage. Support was given to NGOs and member States through the Participation Programme for seminars, training courses, art and film festivals, research projects, film production and artistic publication. Fellowships and study grants were also granted to young artists. The UNESCO/International Music Council Prize for Music was awarded to Henri Dutilleux (France) and Daniel Barenboim (Israel). The UNESCO Prize for Architecture was awarded to Somsri Kriwattanapong (Thailand) and to King Mongkut's Institute of Technology (Thailand).

Communications

In 1987, UNESCO continued to focus on stimulating research of the socio-cultural impact of new communication technologies; encouraging information exchanges and intellectual co-operation on communications issues; and the strengthening of communication research and documentation capacities.

A chronological survey of documents on the new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process, was published, as was a study of the existing situations and legal framework for communication and information exchange within and between countries with different socio-political systems.

UNESCO continued to examine obstacles hindering a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information, and to strengthen information exchange and professional collaboration. Studies were undertaken on the role of the media in promoting mutual respect, international understanding and respect for human rights and peace and in the elucidation of major world problems, including the promotion of women's access to and participation in communication.

Regarding women's access, particular attention was given to training, especially in non-traditional fields such as electronic news gathering, photo-journalism, media management and economic and political reporting. Ten workshops were organized in Africa, the Arab States and Asia for women media professionals in various areas of communication skills. In addition, in order to implement the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, a regional meeting (Manila, Philippines, December) prepared a plan of activities for Asian women in the media until the year 2000. UNESCO published Women and Media Decision-making: The Invisible Barriers, a book presenting a comparative analysis of key issues, personnel policies and practices of five broadcasting organizations in Canada, Ecuador, Egypt, India and Nigeria and offering proposals to help women overcome barriers to obtaining high-level posts in the media.

UNESCO organized the Intergovernmental Conference on Communication Policies in the Arab States (Khartoum, Sudan, 19-25 July), a ministerial conference attended by 54 delegates and 31 observers. The final report included the Declaration of Khartoum and 15 recommendations containing proposals emerging from the Conference debate.

The Intergovernmental Council of the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC) (eighth session, Paris, 20-26 January) approved $2.3 million from the IPDC Special Account for 71 communication projects. IPDC continued to support regional and national news agencies, regional broadcasting unions and media training. Advisory missions were organized to assist in preparing projects for the development of community radio, news agencies, television and newspapers, and in the formulation of book and communication policies.

Training programmes and materials on communications continued to expand, with the participation of national, regional and subregional institutions. In 1987, IPDC provided assistance to the Africa Regional Film and Television Institute for a workshop on co-operation between film training institutions in Africa and supplied training equipment. In Algeria, IPDC supported the establishment of a European communications satellite broadcasting station and, in Indonesia, supplied equipment for a development-oriented feature service for the rural press. It provided assistance to improve studio production facilities at Radio Saint Lucia. Some 100 fellowships in news agency operations, television studio techniques, television production, radio engineering and broadcasting, printing technology, journalism, camera work and film production were provided to participants from developing countries.

During the year, action was taken to: increase the endogenous capacity of developing countries through the design and application of low-cost communications technology and the production and distribution of programmes, print and audio-visual materials; train communications specialists and archivists in film and tape preservation techniques; and promote book development policies and reading habits.

General Information Programme

Under the General Information Programme, which grouped together the main activities in information, libraries and archives, regional data bases were set up in nine member States and the capability of data-base creation was strengthened in 50 institutions in developing countries during 1986-1987. UNESCO was involved in creating integrated library and information services in member States and in preparing projects aimed at modernizing the management of archives. Emphasis was placed on the integrated training of information specialists, on the development of postgraduate training and on the preparation of teaching materials and publications.

Action for development

Activities under the programme on principles, methods and strategies for development focused on improving knowledge of development processes and of integrated planning and evaluation methods, paying particular attention to problems affecting women; the programme also aimed to strengthen technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC). UNESCO prepared and disseminated studies and publications on development processes and organized an interregional symposium to analyse the differences between theoretical patterns and actual experience in endogenous development (Paris, 7-11 December). The integration of women's issues in development plans was the subject of a UNESCO symposium (Paris, 5-9 October). UNESCO contributed to the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (Vienna, June) (see p. 900) and organized a three-day forum at its headquarters on problems related to the use and abuse of drugs. In co-operation with the International Social Science Council, UNESCO contributed to a subregional meeting of experts on socio-cultural parameters of rural development relating to security of food supply (Dakar, Senegal, 28 September-2 October). Regional and interregional studies and surveys aimed to identify factors which helped or hindered TCDC in UNESCO's activities, and needs, priority areas and specific actions for intellectual and technical co-operation.

During 1986-1987, UNESCO conducted 21 project identification and preparation missions organized under the UNESCO/African Development Bank co-operation programme and sent contact missions to the Asian Development Bank with a view to launching education and science and technology projects. UNESCO contributed to pilot projects on socio-economic development in Africa, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

The fortieth World Health Assembly met at Geneva from 4 to 15 May 1987 and adopted a budget of $634 million for the 1988-1989 biennium of the World Health Organization (WHO). The negative effects of exchange rate fluctuations resulted in a higher overall budget and assessed contributions for the biennium. The Assembly approved WHO's eighth general programme of work—for 1990-1995—and requested the WHO Director-General to establish an international research programme on aging. It accorded high priority to improving the health of women and reducing maternal mortality, and urged countries to intensify efforts to control diarrhoeal diseases by prevention and proper case management. Regarding the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), the Assembly confirmed that WHO should continue to direct and co-ordinate the fight against it and endorsed WHO's global strategy. Member States were urged to extend health services to meet the needs of their entire populations and to promote balanced health manpower development. The Assembly expressed deep concern at the conclusions of a second report by a management group of scientists on the effects of nuclear war on health and health services. It also reaffirmed that health was an integral part of development.

In 1987, the United Nations Economic and Social Council urged organizations of the United Nations system to support WHO in the world-wide struggle against AIDS. The General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure a co-ordinated response by the system to the AIDS pandemic and also urged the organizations to support the struggle. Further, the Assembly, acting on the Council's recommendation, decided to observe the fortieth anniversary of WHO in 1988 in a manner befitting its achievements and future role in international health. (See p. 645.)

October 1987 marked the tenth anniversary of the eradication of smallpox; health care workers found the last case of the disease on 26 October 1977.

In 1987, the membership of WHO remained at 166, with one associate member.

Co-ordination with other organizations

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF)/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy (twenty-sixth session, Geneva, January) discussed

the complementary roles of the two agencies in promoting healthy behaviour and national health development and supporting primary health care. WHO collaborated in the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (Vienna, June) (see p. 900) and in the international campaign against traffic in drugs. Representatives of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, UNICEF, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and other major non-governmental organizations (NGOs) discussed plans for the ongoing co-ordination of emergency preparedness and response at an interregional meeting (Geneva, April). WHO continued to provide emergency assistance to African countries, working with Mozambique to strengthen its capacity to co-ordinate relief and establishing a training centre at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. In May, the World Health Assembly adopted a resolution on the deteriorating health situation in Somalia caused by the recurrent drought. Close collaboration was maintained with concerned organizations of the United Nations system: with the International Labour Organisation (ILO) in a study of health problems of workers; with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in promoting AIDS education in schools; and with the World Bank in studies of the economic and demographic impact of AIDS.

Strategy for health for all

In 1987, regional committees, professional associations and educational institutions supported the WHO Director-General's 1986 initiative to develop a health-for-all leadership to narrow the gap between policy and action.^a In June, members of the African Advisory Committee for Health Development discussed a strategy for pursuing leadership development. Representatives of the Latin American and United States Associations of Schools of Public Health discussed leadership development in educational institutions. In the South-East Asia region, technical co-operation was provided to India for leadership development activities. In the European region, health-for-all policy reviews were used in several countries as opportunities for active dialogue with national policy-makers. The Regional Committee for the Eastern Mediterranean endorsed a recommendation of the regional consultative committee that 10 per cent of the funds allocated to countries for fellowships should be used for health-for-all leadership development. International health-training programmes, focusing on young professionals, began in the Americas and the western Pacific region and, to enhance leadership qualities, four members of the International Federation of Medical Student Associations were trained at WHO headquarters.

Over 400 representatives of the health, planning, development and financing sectors, bilateral and multilateral agencies, NGOs and academic institutions participated in technical discussions on economic support for national health-for-all strategies held during the May Health Assembly.

Health system infrastructure

Health system development and research

In November, the second expert committee on the tenth revision of the International Classification of Diseases, meeting at Geneva, made recommendations on a draft, incorporating comments by member States and NGOs.

A workshop on health systems research (Harare, Zimbabwe, July) brought together decision-makers and researchers from 10 member States of southern Africa, who drew up specific plans of action. In the Americas, a working group (Washington, D.C., April) developed a health systems research support programme, making preliminary proposals for workshops to promote the concept of health systems research and for networks of research information systems to be designed in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia and Mexico.

Primary health care systems

A WHO expert committee on strengthening ministries of health for primary health care (Geneva, November) reviewed and assessed the country experience illustrated by an interregional study in 10 member States in the light of the health-for-all strategy.

The planning and management of health facilities were discussed at the Twenty-fifth Biennial Congress of the International Hospital Federation (Helsinki, Finland, May) and at the Sixteenth Triennial Congress of the International Union of Architects (Brighton, United Kingdom, July).

The first interregional meeting on strengthening district health systems based on primary health care (Harare, August), sponsored by WHO, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNICEF, the Christian Medical Commission, the Danish International Development Agency and the United States Agency for International Development, adopted a declaration calling for community and national action. Nineteen countries in all WHO regions participated in the meeting.

Health manpower

In November, the WHO expert committee on health manpower management systems, meeting at Geneva, considered a study on primary health care workers and proposed strategies to solve the main problems in health manpower management. In 1987, WHO published the results of a multinational study on women as health care providers and The Community Health Worker to facilitate training throughout health systems. A global network of collaborating centres in nursing development was established in 15 member States to enhance the reorientation of nursing to the primary health care concept. Fellowships continued to play an important role in the efforts of member States to upgrade their health systems. During the 1986-1987 biennium, WHO awarded 6,809 fellowships and provided travel and subsistence allowances for 5,228 participants to attend educational meetings or national courses organized by WHO.

Public information and education for health

In the Americas, emphasis on reaching wider audiences by means of electronic media was demonstrated by the satellite transmission of the First Pan American Teleconference on AIDS (Quito, Ecuador, September), throughout the Americas and Europe. In March, WHO collaborated with the International Green Cross in convening a media briefing conference on immunization at Geneva. World Health Day 1987 (7 April) stressed the need to give equal opportunities to all children through immunization.

Health promotion and care

A November interregional meeting at Jakarta, Indonesia, focusing on the role of women's organizations in primary health care with special reference to maternal and child health and family planning, drew up a plan of action that included: promoting the reproductive health of women; developing a data base on women's health and family planning needs; advocacy; information, education and communication activities on the complementary roles of men and women; mobilizing the mass media for information, education and communication; developing women's capabilities as leaders; creating an awareness among women of their legal rights; and encouraging the equal sharing by men and women of family resources and responsibilities. Studies of women's organizations and their role in primary health care were completed in Ghana, Mali and Mexico. The role of family planning as a major means of improving the health of women and children was reviewed at the International Conference on Better Health for Women and Children through Family Planning (Nairobi, Kenya, October). In September, a conference was held at Manila, Philippines, for policy-makers advocating the concept of safe motherhood.

In 1987, WHO, UNICEF and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) agreed to harmonize and organize their approach to nutritional surveillance by combining experience and resources to ensure that Governments received appropriate and timely support.

Under their Joint Nutrition Support Programme, WHO and UNICEF collaborated with 17 member States in four regions in safeguarding and enhancing the nutritional status of children and women of child-bearing age. At a workshop on how to plan a systematic approach to the promotion of breast-feeding (Wageningen, Netherlands, February), a strategy was drawn up based on the results of a study carried out at 140 health care institutions in Europe.

A WHO study group on new approaches to the prevention of road traffic injuries (Geneva, December) reviewed world-wide traffic safety policies and proposed innovative approaches to traffic safety, especially through improved co-ordination and closer co-operation between transport and health sectors. In March, two interregional meetings held in Thailand—a WHO workshop on accident and injury prevention management at primary health care level (Pattaya) and a joint WHO/ESCAP Asian seminar on road safety (Bangkok)—reviewed recommendations on decentralized road safety policies.

Health of specific population groups

The International Conference on Safe Motherhood (Nairobi, February), sponsored by WHO, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the World Bank with support from UNDP, established a fund in support of operational research on safe motherhood, for which WHO was executing agency. The 1987 World Health Assembly called for intensified co-operation with member States in activities related to maternal health and safe motherhood.

Concerning adolescent health, WHO published a global review of the laws and policies affecting the delivery of health care to young people and of the major health issues facing them. At Geneva in October, NGOs concerned with youth met with experts on sexually transmitted diseases and sexual behaviour to consider strategies to prevent and control such diseases in young people. WHO supported the founding in 1987 of the International Association for Adolescent Health, which aimed to encourage co-operation among organizations and individuals committed to enhancing adolescent health.

The Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction continued to promote, support, co-ordinate and evaluate research in human reproduction. During 1986-1987, 75 countries, including 50 developing ones, participated in the Programme; some 500 research projects were under way at 254 centres; 26 research training courses, symposia or workshops were held; 234 research training grants were awarded to scientists from 35 countries; and some 500 scientific publications emanated from research activities supported by the Programme. In February, the Programme organized at Geneva a symposium on improving safety requirements for contraceptive steroids. On the basis of discussions at the symposium, the Programme issued guidelines for the toxicological and clinical assessment and post-registration surveillance of steroidal contraceptive drugs. A quarterly newsletter, Progress, was started in 1987.

The tenth session of the Joint ILO/WHO Committee on Occupational Health (Geneva, September) recommended a uniform system for investigating and reporting work-related diseases and injuries. Monographs were published on psychosocial factors at work, the prevention of neurotoxic illnesses in working populations and visual display terminals in relation to workers' health.

A WHO expert committee on the health of elderly people (Geneva, November) provided guidance to member States on maintaining the well-being of aging people living under different socioeconomic conditions.

Protection and promotion of mental health

With leadership skills scarce in the area of mental health, particularly in developing countries, WHO prepared guidelines and training materials. A mental health leadership course for personnel working at district level (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, August) brought together participants from neighbouring countries.

The Global Co-ordinating Group for the Mental Health Programme (Brazzaville, Congo, April) drafted a global medium-term programme for 1990-1995 and agreed on specific activities for 1988-1989. In the European region, the final report on mental health services in pilot study areas was published. The first WHO collaborating centre for training and research in methods of assessing the quality of life in relation to health care was designated in Amsterdam, Netherlands, in April.

Concerning the prevention and treatment of mental and neurological disorders, a WHO meeting of experts (Geneva, March) reviewed knowledge of Alzheimer's disease, other forms of senile dementia and the normal aging of the brain. WHO supported a national training course on infectious diseases of the central nervous system (Shanghai, China, May). A meeting of heads of the WHO collaborating centres for training and research in biological psychiatry and psychopharmacology (Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, December) reviewed trends and future directions of research carried out at 25 research institutes in all WHO regions.

Environmental health

Many of WHO's activities in connection with the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987) (see p. 715) were carried out in collaboration with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), including a consultation (Geneva, June) and a brochure on the health principles of housing, and a special issue of World Health magazine on shelter for the homeless. The 1987 World Health Assembly adopted a resolution on the Year, and a plan of action for promoting health in rural and urban development and housing was drawn up and discussed with member States.

A May interregional meeting at Geneva set out WHO's global strategy for technical co-operation with member States in controlling environmental health hazards. In the African region, priorities in environmental pollution control, chemical safety, use of pesticides and occupational health were outlined at a workshop on chemical hazards (Nairobi, September). After nearly 10 years of health-related monitoring of environmental quality through the Global Environmental Monitoring System—in collaboration with UNEP, UNESCO and WMO (see p. 696)—WHO published an assessment of global pollution. Guidelines for setting environmental standards were also published in 1987 to assist those responsible for establishing policies and regulations. The application of WHO guidelines for drinking-water quality was promoted through a series of training courses (Yerevan, USSR, May; Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, November; Khartoum, Sudan, December). A global assessment of the effect of agrochemicals on health was completed by an expert group (Tbilisi, USSR, November). A pilot edition of a bibliography on health effects of environmental hazards in developing countries, containing nearly 800 entries, was issued in 1987. A WHO working group (Geneva, November) explored mechanisms for the harmonization among European countries of public health action in relation to nuclear accidents. Two conferences on chemical accidents were organized (New Delhi, India, January; Rome, Italy, July).

In 1987, food safety remained a universal public health problem despite advances in modern technology. The first WHO training course was convened on the application of the hazard analysis critical control-point approach to domestic and small-scale commercial food preparation (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, February). A western Pacific regional working group (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, August) recommended national and inter-country food safety activities. The seventeenth session of the Codex Alimentarius Commission (Rome, June) established limits for radio-nuclides in food. The Joint FAO/WHO Expert Committee on Food Additives, at a meeting devoted entirely to veterinary drug residues in food, evaluated six substances. On the Committee's recommendation, a key monograph was published on principles for the safety assessment of food additives and contaminants. Problems associated with food contamination by biotoxins were reviewed at the FAO/UNEP/WHO International Conference on Mycotoxins (Bangkok, September).

Diagnostic, therapeutic and rehabilitative technology

An IAEA/WHO international symposium on dosimetry in radio-therapy (Vienna, September) formed part of a series aimed at intensifying co-operation among developed and developing countries. The Expert Committee on Biological Standardization in 1987 approved new requirements for Japanese encephalitis vaccines (inactivated) and interferons produced by recombinant DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) technology. The Committee also revised requirements for hepatitis B, measles, tuberculosis, yellow fever and oral poliomyelitis vaccines. A new quarterly bulletin, WHO Drug Information, was launched, containing lists of newly proposed and recommended international non-proprietary names for pharmaceutical substances. During the 1987 session of an African regional committee, a new approach, known from the meeting's venue in Mali as the Bamako Initiative, was adopted to set up a scheme to purchase essential drugs and distribute them to member States in the African region at a small profit that would go to replenish stocks.

Disease prevention and control

Immunization

Data available in July 1987 showed that, due to the Expanded Programme on Immunization, of which UNICEF was a major supporter, immunization with three doses of diphtheria/pertussis/tetanus or poliomyelitis vaccine passed the 50 per cent mark for the first time in both developing and industrialized countries, having risen from an estimated 5 per cent in 1974 when the Programme was launched.

In developing countries (excluding China) immunization was preventing more than 1 million deaths a year and over 175,000 cases of poliomyelitis. However, almost 250,000 cases of poliomyelitis and over 3 million deaths attributable to either measles, neonatal tetanus or pertussis occurred annually. Immunization coverage in developing countries was lowest for the two diseases that caused the most deaths—measles and neonatal tetanus.

Malaria

The overall malaria situation in 1987 showed no significant improvement. The latest data available indicated that 48 per cent (2,318 million people) of the world population lived in areas where malaria risk persisted but organized control was being pursued, and 8 per cent (405 million) lived in areas where malarial endemicity remained basically unchanged. WHO collaborating centres were designated for the preclinical development of antimalarial candidate compounds (Central Drug Research Institute, Lucknow, India), for biological studies of malaria parasites (Laboratory of Parasitology, State University of Leiden, Netherlands) and for the epidemiology of malaria (Institute of Parasitology, University of Rome). In the Americas, a joint meeting of directors of malaria control services and the directors-general of health services of malarious countries (Bogotá, Colombia, June) made recommendations on the integration and reorientation of malaria control activities.

Other parasitic diseases

The integration of schistosomiasis control activities into the general health care delivery systems was achieved in Botswana, the Philippines and Suriname, and control activities using a primary health care approach were under way in Madagascar and the United Republic of Tanzania. By the end of 1987, schistosomiasis control activities had been initiated on all the endemic islands off the coast of Africa and in the Caribbean. Control programmes against Chagas' disease continued in Argentina, Brazil and Venezuela, introducing new approaches such as simple means of improving housing and using insecticidal paints and fumigant cans containing insecticides. In November, an informal consultation of experts, meeting at Geneva, prepared a synthesis of control options for leishmaniasis for each WHO region. The introduction of the drug ivermectin in clinical trials in West Africa was expected to change drastically the tactics for controlling onchocerciasis (river blindness) as a result of the drug's ability to reduce transmission and relieve symptoms.

Diarrhoeal diseases

The 1987 World Health Assembly reaffirmed that the control of diarrhoeal diseases included prevention and proper case management, and that to prevent such diseases it was necessary to improve nutrition and promote breast-feeding, improved weaning practices, access to and use of safe water, personal hygiene, safe sanitation and immunization against measles. Eight countries formulated plans of operation for national diarrhoeal disease control programmes during 1986-1987, bringing the total to 112. Training continued to receive priority, with courses on supervisory skills held 147 times in 63 countries. Technical collaboration was provided to 11 countries in developing facilities for producing oral rehydration salts; local production accounted for 65 per cent or more of global production—in 1987 estimated to be some 300 million litre-equivalents. By the end of 1987, 276 surveys on diarrhoeal disease morbidity, mortality and treatment undertaken in 60 countries showed regional differences in diarrhoea-associated mortality and incidence, with the highest rates continuing to be in Africa.

Leprosy

The 1987 World Health Assembly acknowledged the increasing commitment of several member States to eliminating leprosy as a public health problem, and noted both significant progress made in recent years in leprosy treatment (including the use of new drugs) and the headway made towards the development of immunodiagnostic tests and vaccines. In November, the sixth WHO expert committee on leprosy evaluated the progress made in leprosy control during the past decade and made recommendations concerning current methods and future approaches towards leprosy control and research. In 1987, there were some 5.1 million registered cases, with 25.9 per cent of those afflicted (in 95 countries) undergoing multi-drug therapy. WHO convened a consultation on specific measures required for disability prevention within leprosy control programmes (Geneva, March).

Zoonoses

An Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations/Swedish Save the Children Fund/WHO project in Ecuador, Sri Lanka and Tunisia, which ended in November 1987, resulted in a significant decrease in the number of cases of human and canine rabies in each of the pilot zones. The WHO expert committee on the role of animal and product hygiene in salmonellosis control (Geneva, September) recommended improving intersectoral co-operation and mobilizing community resources. In January, a WHO informal consultation, meeting at Geneva with participants from FAO, elaborated guidelines for coping with the problems of bacterial resistance to antibiotics in domestic food animals.

AIDS

On 1 February 1987, the Director-General established the WHO Special Programme on AIDS. National, regional and interregional meetings, consultations and workshops focused on the implications of AIDS for international travel, contraceptive methods, and AIDS prevention in prisons. Close collaboration was maintained with organizations of the United Nations system and NGOs. By the end of the year, national AIDS committees had been established in 151 countries and 30 WHO collaborating centres had been designated to provide support to the Programme. In June, WHO launched a global public information campaign with the message "AIDS: A world-wide effort will stop it".

Cancer

In 1987, the cancer mortality rate in developing countries was approaching that of industrialized countries. Dramatic increases in lung cancer attributable to the use of tobacco were observed in a number of developing countries. The Health Assembly called on member States to celebrate 7 April 1988 as a world no-smoking day on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of WHO. WHO co-operated in developing control strategies for cancers that were rare in developed countries but common in specific areas of developing countries—such as liver cancer in the African and western Pacific regions, bladder cancer in the eastern Mediterranean region and oral cancer in the South-East Asia region. An analysis of cancer mortality trends in 28 industrialized countries showed a 19 per cent increase in cancer deaths in males over the previous 20 years, due to an increase of 76 per cent in lung cancer deaths. Lung cancer deaths in women had doubled over the previous decade. A WHO meeting (Budapest, Hungary, June) reviewed national cancer control policy development. WHO collaborating centres were designated for breast self-examination (Leningrad, USSR), community cancer care (Glasgow, United Kingdom), oral cancer (Bombay, India), quality of life (Amsterdam) and symptom evaluation in cancer care (Madison, Wisconsin, United States).

Cardiovascular diseases

In the prevention of coronary heart disease, the number of member States elaborating national action plans with time-based goals increased. In August, a meeting of national programme managers discussed smoking control and intersectoral collaboration. A WHO study group on rheumatic fever and rheumatic heart disease (Geneva, March) reviewed medical and public health practice and the advances occurring over the previous 20 years and made recommendations for improving the implementation of rheumatic fever control programmes. A manual on the prevention of cardiovascular diseases among the elderly was published and the WHO expert committee on appropriate diagnostic technology in the management of cardiovascular diseases (Geneva, November) made recommendations on diagnostic techniques at various levels of health care and socio-economic development.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1987, the total number of full-time staff employed by WHO stood at 4,389 on permanent and fixed-term contracts. Of these, 1,419 staff members, drawn from 126 nationalities, were in the Professional and higher categories and 2,970 were in the General Service category. Of the total number, 79 were in posts financed by UNDP, UNEP and UNFPA.

Budget

The thirty-eighth (1985) World Health Assembly had approved an effective working budget of $543.3 million for the 1986-1987 biennium. In the light of the financial crisis in 1987, the WHO Director-General implemented a contingency plan for programme implementation reductions of $35 million; further reductions of $9.5 million were made to meet the negative effect of exchange rate fluctuations.

The fortieth (1987) World Health Assembly approved a working budget of $634 million for the 1988-1989 biennium, divided into allocations for the WHO work programme as follows: health system infrastructure, 32 per cent; health promotion and care, 18 per cent; disease prevention and control, 14 per cent; programme support, 24 per cent; and direction, co-ordination and management, 12 per cent.

(For tables showing integrated international health programme obligations by source of financing and services and co-operation extended by WHO in 1986-1987, see YUN 1986, pp. 1133 and 1134.)

Chapter VI

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

During the fiscal year 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), continued to help developing countries to raise their living standards by channelling financial resources to them from developed countries.

Lending commitments by the Bank, credit approvals from IDA and investment commitments by a second affiliate, the International Finance Corporation (IFC), amounted to $18,594 million.

Membership in the Bank remained at 151 in 1987.

Lending operations

In the fiscal year ending 30 June 1987, the World Bank made 128 loans amounting to $14,188 million to 39 countries, an increase of $1,009 million from fiscal 1986. This brought the cumulative total of loan commitments by the Bank since its inception in 1946 to $140,287 million.

Agriculture and rural development

Continuing its commitment to agriculture and rural development, the Bank made 27 loans in fiscal 1987 amounting to $1,946.3 million to 15 countries. Brazil received $663 million, of which $171 million was to help increase agricultural production and productivity, generate employment opportunities, increase institutional capacity to provide agricultural services and promote water-resource development. Of $420 million provided to Mexico, $400 million was for a project to finance agricultural credit to improve productivity and support further reductions in interest-rate subsidies to farmers. A loan of $150 million to Tunisia supported agricultural reforms aimed at maintaining the country's agricultural growth rate; measures included improving prices and incentives, reorienting the public investment programme in agriculture, strengthening agricultural support services, improving natural resource management and increasing institutional capacity.

Development finance companies

The Bank made 12 loans totalling $2,204.9 million in fiscal 1987 to assist development finance companies in 11 countries. Mexico received $500 million to implement trade reforms to improve domestic efficiency and international competitiveness. A loan of $250 million to China aimed at upgrading the productivity and efficiency of small and medium-scale industries (SMIs) through importing modern technology and strengthening the China Investment Bank. Nigeria received $452 million to increase domestic output and restructure the productive base of its economy in order to reduce oil and import dependence. Tunisia was granted $150 million to limit growth of domestic demand, stimulate growth of non-traditional exports and improve the allocation and use of scarce economic resources. A loan of $125 million to Argentina was to provide credit to encourage modernization and increase production and productivity of SMIs.

Education

During fiscal 1987, the Bank made five loans totalling $173.5 million for education projects in five countries. Brazil received $74.5 million to improve the responsiveness of skills training to rapidly changing technologies by strengthening the National Vocation Training System and by expanding training. Turkey received $58.5 million to train some 60,000 workers with industrial and service skills with the aim of improving the labour supply for manufacturing industries and creating employment opportunities for those with limited education and training.

Energy

Twenty-one energy projects—in oil, gas, coal and power—were assisted in 12 countries during fiscal 1987 at a cost of $3,462.4 million. Of the five loans to India totalling $1,670 million, $485 million was to help finance a programme of construction, rehabilitation and consulting services to increase power-generating capacity in Delhi and the northern region. A $325 million loan was extended to Turkey to improve the efficiency of energy production and support government efforts to facilitate private-sector participation in energy development. Of the two loans totalling $330 million to China, $190 million was to address a severe power shortage in the east China power grid and support the development of a distribution-network master plan for Shanghai; the remaining $140 million was to support economic growth in east China and Fujian province through the development of a hydroelectric site on the Min River.

Industry

The Bank extended six loans for the industrial sector to five countries totalling $411.4 million. Of the two loans totalling $197.4 million extended to China, $100 million was to support the Shanghai Machine Tool Works and the Shanghai Machine Tool Corporation to help rehabilitate and modernize plants and research institutions owned by the two firms, import appropriate technology, establish a modern management structure and system, and develop and implement a training programme. Hungary received $150 million to help restructure its industry to achieve international competitiveness and increase the potential for exports to convertible-currency markets. Mexico received $48 million to support industrial-technology development.

Non-project

Eight non-project loans were extended to eight countries totalling $1,790 million. Argentina received $500 million to support the first phase of a trade-policy reform programme aimed at improving export competitiveness and increasing industry efficiency. Indonesia received $300 million to support its efforts to respond to a sharp fall in oil prices by reducing dependency on oil while regaining balance-of-payments and budget stability. The Philippines received $300 million to help support its economic recovery efforts, including tax reform, trade-policy rationalization, public investment programme restructuring and rationalization of government financial institutions.

Population, health and nutrition

Three loans in population, health and nutrition totalling $33.3 million were made during the fiscal year. Oman received $13.3 million to reduce morbidity and mortality, particularly of the 300,000 inhabitants of the rural Batinah region; the project aimed at strengthening the capacity of the Ministry of Health. Jamaica received $10 million to support its efforts towards reducing fertility and integrating population concerns in development projects. Zimbabwe received $10 million for a family-health project to provide improved maternal, child-care and family-planning services; institution-building and training measures were also included.

Small-scale enterprises

Four loans totalling $405.5 million were granted for small-scale enterprises to four countries. Mexico received $185 million to improve the quality and range of financial and technical assistance services to SMEs to help them respond to increased competitive pressure, resulting from that country's trade liberalization measures, and increase their financial viability. Indonesia received $101.5 million to develop a rural network of the Bank Rakyat Indonesia to provide non-subsidized credit to small borrowers, mobilize savings and provide other banking services. Malaysia received $65 million to provide two development finance companies with long-term capital to help finance medium- and large-scale subprojects. A $54 million loan to Pakistan provided credit and technical assistance to design a project to support government strategy for small-scale industry development.

Technical assistance

Three loans for technical assistance amounting to $15 million were made during the year. The Philippines received $10 million to undertake financial restructuring of public institutions. The Congo received $4 million to help design and implement policy measures aimed at promoting growth in sectors other than oil, and at formulating a more effective strategy to develop petroleum. Uruguay received $1 million to provide the Government with an analytical base for preparing specific action programmes and for technical assistance to implement its structural adjustment and reform programme.

The largest element of technical assistance continued to be that financed as a component of loans for other purposes. During the year, those technical assistance components totalled $1,022.3 million, compared with $1,051.7 million in 1986.

The Bank continued to serve as executing agency for projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). At the end of December 1987, the number of projects in progress stood at 149, for a total allocation of $223.9 million, compared with 150, for an allocation of $218.5 million, at the end of 1986.

Telecommunications

Five loans to five countries totalling $654.5 million were made for telecommunications projects during fiscal 1987. India received $345 million to help meet the demand for telecommunications services and improve the quality of such services by expanding and upgrading telephone and telex networks in Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and New Delhi and the long-distance links between those cities. Morocco received $125 million to expand, improve and modernize its telecommunications network. Pakistan received $100 million to help expand local, long-distance and international telephone and telex networks, while increasing the management, organizational and implementation capacity of its telegraph and telephone department.

Transportation

Twelve loans totalling $1,145.8 million were made to 11 countries during fiscal 1987 for the development of transportation systems. Of two loans totalling $274 million extended to Brazil, $174 million supported efforts by São Paulo State to improve the condition of its road network over a four-year period and to develop the transport administration to assure that the State's dominant road-transport mode would function more efficiently; the remaining $100 million was to support rehabilitation of the São Paulo Railway Company and establish conditions to operate the railway commercially. Turkey received $197 million to help the Government increase operational efficiency and financial recovery of its railways, through a programme of improved locomotive fleet maintenance, overhauling and construction of track, modernization of main-line signalling and technical assistance. Colombia received $180.3 million to help finance the 1987-1993 highway investment and maintenance programme of the Ministry of Public Works and Transport; the project included a policy reform and institutional development action plan and an investment component.

Urban development

In fiscal 1987, 13 loans totalling $1,234.6 million for urban projects were extended to 11 countries. Two loans totalling $321 million were granted to Indonesia, $270 million of which was to help sustain the Government's urban sector expenditure programme and support an action programme of longer-term reforms and improvement. Of the two loans to the Republic of Korea, totalling $200 million, a $156 million loan was to improve the housing-finance system and increase its effectiveness in expanding the supply of housing, especially for low-income population. Brazil received $200 million to improve the operating efficiency of urban transport systems in its nine-largest cities through savings in transport costs and time, to be passed on to users, mainly the urban poor; the project also encouraged energy conservation and substitution, strengthened the role of financial considerations in transport policy and provided assistance for institutional development.

Water supply and sewerage

Nine loans totalling $711 million were made to seven countries for water supply and sewerage projects in fiscal 1987. Algeria received $250 million for a national project designed to support its five-year investment plan and to continue institutional development. Turkey received $184 million to improve environmental conditions in Izmir through adequate water supply, sewerage and sewage-treatment facilities, and appropriate industrial waste-treatment policies and practices. Of two loans totalling $120 million to Morocco, half was to initiate policy reforms and measures designed to alleviate constraints facing the country's water supply; the other $60 million supported a Casablanca sewerage project, which aimed at helping the Government develop competent and financially viable institutions, adopt appropriate financial policies and tariff structures, apply appropriate technologies for sewage collection, treatment and disposal, and plan and implement adequate expansion programmes.

Economic Development Institute

Fiscal 1987 marked the mid-point of the Economic Development Institute's (EDI) five-year plan (1985-1989). The plan called for a sizeable expansion in training and institutional assistance. To promote these objectives, EDI again organized a wide range of seminars, courses and training activities.

Of the 101 courses and seminars held, 15 were senior policy seminars for decision makers and 20 were for senior staff of training institutions in developing countries. EDI organized 40 economic and sector-management seminars which elaborated on the content of senior policy seminars and covered subjects such as debt management and natural resource management.

Just under half of EDI's budget was allocated to activities for sub-Saharan Africa in fiscal 1987. EDI was associated with more than 20 training institutions in the region.

In fiscal 1987, the Bank, with grant funding from Japan, established the World Bank Graduate Scholarship Programme, administered by EDI. The programme financed graduate studies leading to a higher degree in a development-related social science and was open to applicants from member countries of the Bank, and mainly from developing countries. With an initial grant of $1 million, 35 scholarships were awarded for the 1987/88 academic year.

Co-financing of EDI activities amounted to $4.6 million in fiscal 1987, with the bulk accounted for by UNDP and the International Fund for Agricultural Development. While strong links continued with other international agencies, notably the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements and the World Health Organization, support had increased from bilateral agencies, including those of Australia, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway and the United Kingdom.

Co-financing

The total volume of co-financing rose markedly from fiscal 1986 despite difficult market conditions affecting private and export-credit flows. The significant rise in planned export-credit co-financing for operations approved in fiscal 1987 was partly explained by the rebound from fiscal 1986's exceptionally low level and reflected the normal fluctuations in co-financing over recent years. The recovery was also partly due to the introduction of a new co-financing source, the Export-Import Bank (Eximbank) (see below) of Japan's untied loan facility. The Bank's contribution during fiscal 1987 amounted to $4,994.6 million for 111 projects, an increase of $968 million over 1986. Co-financing with official development agencies remained the largest source—$2,697 million in fiscal 1987.

Twelve operations were financed with credits totalling $421 million from the Special Facility for sub-Saharan Africa. Special joint financing amounted to $191.8 million from Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Saudi Arabia, Switzerland and the United Kingdom. These sources committed a further $35 million in fiscal 1987 for four projects approved in fiscal 1985 and 1986.

In 1987, operations began with the untied loan facility of the Eximbank of Japan, a facility which provided non-concessional funds and was particularly directed towards Bank borrowers that undertook programmes of adjustment. Five operations—in Colombia, Indonesia, Mexico, the Philippines and Turkey—were concluded in fiscal 1987 totalling $1,800 million; about half of that amount was for 21 ongoing Bank-supported projects in Indonesia.

Financing activities

During fiscal 1987, the Bank borrowed the equivalent of $9,321 million, consisting of new medium- and long-term borrowings plus incremental short-term discount-note and central bank-facility borrowings outstanding on 30 June 1987. The total was made up of $3,077.9 million in United States dollars, $1,853.9 million in Japanese yen, $1,494.7 million in Swiss francs, $1,392.1 million in deutsche mark, $552.1 million in Netherlands guilders, $180.2 million in Canadian dollars, $165.4 million in Belgian francs, $161.6 million in European currency units, $153.2 million in pounds sterling, $125 million in Australian dollars, $66.1 million in Finnish markkaa, $43.1 million in Swedish kronor, $28.5 million in Austrian schillings and $26.8 million in Luxembourg francs.

Of the 56 medium- and long-term borrowing operations conducted by the Bank, 45 were in the private sector and accounted for $7,190 million, or 77 per cent of the total funds borrowed. The other medium- and long-term issues, totalling $2,121 million, or 17 per cent of the funds raised, were placed with official sources. Short-term borrowings outstanding as at 30 June 1987 amounted to $4,498 million.

As of 30 June 1987, the Bank's outstanding obligations totalled $79,420 million—an increase of $9,625 million over fiscal 1986—denominated in 22 currencies and currency units.

During fiscal 1987, the Bank continued to engage in currency swaps as a means of increasing its access to low nominal-cost currencies. It executed 33 currency-swap transactions aggregating $1,635 million—48 per cent were into Swiss francs, 32 per cent into deutsche mark, 15 per cent into Japanese yen and 5 per cent into Netherlands guilders.

Capitalization

The Bank's Articles of Agreement define the Bank's capital stock in terms of United States dollars of the weight and fineness in effect on 1 July 1944. Since the effectiveness on 1 April 1978 of the Second Amendment to the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund, currencies no longer had par values, and the basis for translating the 1944 dollar into current United States dollars no longer existed.^a ^aYUN 1978, p. 1122.

The Bank's Executive Directors decided that the words "United States dollars of the weight and fineness in effect on 1 July 1944" meant the special drawing right (SDR) as it was valued in terms of United States dollars immediately before the introduction of the basket method (the value based on a basket of 16 major currencies) of valuing the SDR on 1 July 1974 (SDR 1 = $US 1.20635). That decision went into effect on 30 June 1987.

The subscribed capital of the Bank, as of that date, totalled $85,231 million, an increase of $7,705 million from fiscal 1986.

Income, expenditure and reserves

The Bank's gross revenues, generated primarily from loans and investments, increased by $876 million or 13 per cent, to a total of $7,689 million in fiscal 1987. Net income was $1,113 million, down $130 million from the previous record high set in fiscal 1986 of $1,243 million. The sustained high net income was largely a result of the Bank's low average borrowing costs.

Expenditures totalled $6,528 million, an increase of 18 per cent over the previous fiscal year. Administrative costs amounted to $435 million, up by $50 million.

The Bank's General Reserve amounted to $6,284 million at the end of fiscal 1987.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1987, the staff of the World Bank numbered 5,977, of whom 3,816 were staff in the

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), is a multilateral development institution promoting private investment that contributes to the economic growth of its developing member countries. Its capital resources are provided by its 132 member States—including 111 developing countries—which collectively determine its policies and activities.

During the fiscal year ending 30 June 1987, the third year of IFC's current five-year programme, the IFC Board of Directors approved 92 investments in 41 developing countries, totalling $919.9 million. Of that amount, $789.6 million was to be invested for IFC's own account and $130.3 million would be syndicated, or sold, to other investors. Compared with the 1986 fiscal year, the total approved investments decreased by $236.1 million, mainly as a result of a decrease of $215.7 million in investments net of syndication, reflecting the timing of individual projects and the continuing reluctance of commercial banks to increase their exposure in many developing countries. Of the total dollar amount, $793 million was for loans and $127 million for equity investments. Of the latter, $20 million was approved for the exercise-of-rights issues by firms in which IFC already had equity investments. Sixteen loans, totalling $117 million, involved the restructuring of existing obligations.

IFC estimated that the total capital costs of projects it would help to finance was more than $4,343 million. Meaning, for every dollar invested by IFC for its own account, others would invest more than five.

All loans reflected market rates for an average life of seven to eight years, with a grace period of four years. The maturities of IFC loans, set to conform to the nature and needs of each project, ranged from 6 to 15 years. Over 43 per cent were priced at variable rates, with 65 per cent of United States dollar-denominated loans so priced. Some $212 million was denominated in other major currencies, including deutsche marks, Netherlands guilders and French and Swiss francs.

During the year, IFC invested in Hungary and Togo for the first time. Thirty-six investments, with a total value of $275 million, were located in countries with a per capita income below $800.

Supplementing its loans, equity and equity-like instruments, IFC also provided a broad range of other financial services, including underwritings, guarantees, stand-by arrangements and debt/equity swaps. During the year, IFC increased its fee-based activities, generating $9.1 million in income. Services relating to regular IFC investments included project structuring, appraisal and financial packaging. Free-standing financial advice provided on a market basis to private-sector clients included financial diagnosis, restructuring, strategies and packaging.

The Corporation's co-financing efforts, which became more important in the light of economic uncertainties in many countries, continued to attract commercial financing for private-sector projects through the syndication of its loans. During the year, IFC syndicated or had pending syndications amounting to $83 million of participations in the total $793 million loans approved and an additional $103 million of subscriptions by banks to equity-related investment funds. Syndicated loans or investments were negotiated with financial institutions for projects in Colombia, Ecuador, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, the Philippines, Portugal, Thailand and Yugoslavia.

The Board of Directors confirmed the main outlines of the five-year financial and operational plan covering the fiscal years 1985 to 1989, with some modifications. It confirmed the objective of a total volume of new investments to be approved in the five-year period of $6.5 billion, including loans syndicated to banks, and $4.4 billion for IFC's own account. The Board concluded that the programme's objectives had been fully achieved in terms of the number of approved investments but that the disbursed portfolio had not grown as fast as was anticipated. Disbursements were partly affected by cancellations of a number of fixed-rate loans at a time when interest rates were falling. Despite this, the disbursed portfolio increased by 6.2 per cent to a total of $1,878 million.

During the year, the Board made certain adjustments to the programme: capital markets initiatives would be further emphasized; restructuring activities would be intensified; assistance to sub-Saharan Africa would be sustained in terms of numbers of projects; and more attention would be given to innovative special services.

In 1987, under the five-year plan, IFC continued to expand its services and launched a number of initiatives. In the capital markets area, it developed two new funds, one in Malaysia and another in Thailand, to attract foreign portfolio investment, and devised mechanisms to convert debt into equity. Concerning African initiatives, the Africa Project Development Facility (APDF), providing technical assistance to small and medium-sized businesses in sub-Saharan Africa, became fully operational, with offices at Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, and Nairobi, Kenya. At the close of fiscal 1987, APDF offices were processing 11 projects to be presented to financial institutions, technical partners and potential investors. Preparations were under way for a new facility, the African Management Services Company, which would contribute experienced management to African enterprises. Under the Caribbean Project Development Facility, established under UNDP auspices, with IFC acting as executing agency, to assist small entrepreneurs in preparing development projects for which they sought financing, 17 projects were completed in 1987 having an aggregate investment cost of some $74 million. Regarding corporate promotion and syndication, efforts to attract new investment partners for joint business ventures in the developing world were under way in North America, Europe and Japan. In addition, IFC developed a technique known as GRIP (Guaranteed Recovery of Investment Principal), a means of sharing risks with foreign equity investors. Concerning the transfer and acquisition of new technology to developing countries, IFC assisted in the production of lightweight durable building panels in Tunisia, the manufacture of artificial zeolite catalysts in Brazil and the production of sponge or briquetted iron to replace scrap in steelmaking in Venezuela. Under IFC's Foreign Investment Advisory Service, assistance was provided to eight Governments. The new Business Advisory Council, which advises IFC management on the needs and views of business in connection with IFC activities, held its first meeting in May.

IFC's total borrowing for fiscal 1987 amounted to $441 million, with $200 million provided by the World Bank and $241 million borrowed in five private placements on the international markets. Three interest-rate swaps of $150 million and two cross-currency interest-rate swaps of $107.5 million were concluded, mainly to produce variable-rate United States dollar funding. In addition, IFC carried out one cross-currency swap of $12.3 million on behalf of one of its clients.

During the 1987 fiscal year, Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Benin and Kiribati joined IFC, bringing its membership to 132.

Chapter VIII

International Development Association (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA) was established in 1960 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to provide assistance for the same purposes as the Bank, but primarily to poorer developing countries and on easier terms. Though legally and financially distinct from the Bank, IDA shares the same staff.

The funds used by IDA—called credits to distinguish them from World Bank loans—come mostly from subscriptions in convertible currencies from members, general replenishments from its more industrialized and developed members, and transfers from the Bank's net earnings.

During the fiscal year 1987 (1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987), IDA continued to promote economic development, concentrating on countries with an annual per capita gross national product of less than $791 (in 1985 dollars). IDA's 116 approved credits were distributed among 44 countries and the Caribbean region in fiscal 1987. Credits are interest-free, with a service charge to cover administrative costs of 0.75 per cent on disbursed and 0.5 per cent on undisbursed balances. In March 1987, the IDA Executive Board decided to reduce IDA credit maturities from 50 to 40 years for least developed countries (those on the United Nations list, see p. 389) or IDA-only countries, and to 35 years for all other borrowers.

Unlike the World Bank, which may lend to public and private entities with government guarantees, IDA lends only to Governments. In the case of revenue-producing projects, IDA credits are repaid by the Governments on terms reflecting the local cost of capital. Therefore, IDA terms assist Governments to finance economic development without distorting the local credit structure.

At the end of fiscal 1987, IDA cumulative resources totalled $43,614 million.

With effect from 30 June 1987, the IDA Executive Directors adopted a formal interpretation of the IDA Articles of Agreement to apply the same standard of value to the 1960 dollar, referred to in the IDA Articles, as applied to the 1944 dollar in the World Bank's Articles of Agreement. (The 1944 dollar and the 1960 dollar had the same value.) (See p. 1233.)

The bulk of IDA funds for lending is provided by its Part I (industrial) member countries and several Part II (developing) countries under a series of replenishment agreements. In July 1987, IDA received the last instalment of the United States contribution of $207.5 million for the seventh replenishment of resources to provide IDA with funds for fiscal 1985-1987.^a This payment triggered the release of the remaining commitment authority from the Federal Republic of Germany, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, which had been withheld to be pro rata with the United States. These releases, together with the United States contribution, provided commitment authority for the seventh replenishment of 276 million special drawing rights (SDRs). This amount was used to cover credits already made in fiscal 1987, but approved on a conditional basis pending receipt of those resources.

The eighth replenishment of resources, which provided IDA with funds for commitment in fiscal years 1988-1990,^b became effective when IDA received notifications of participation from donors whose aggregate contributions amounted to 80 per cent of the replenishment. Under an advance contribution scheme—contributing countries could make an advance of one third of their total contributions prior to the effectiveness of the eighth replenishment. The advance contribution scheme which became effective on 24 September 1987 upon the receipt of notifications from Canada, Denmark, Japan, Kuwait, South Africa, Sweden and Turkey—provided IDA with commitment authority of SDR 1,139 million. Subsequently, France, Hungary, Iceland, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, the Republic of Korea and the United States participated in the advance contribution arrangements.

Membership of IDA rose to 136, after the admission of Saint Kitts and Nevis on 23 October 1987.

Special Facility for sub-Saharan Africa

During the year, Special Facility operations, totalling $421 million, were approved in 12 countries: Central African Republic, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Madagascar, Malawi, Mauritania, Niger, Senegal, Sao Tome and Principe, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire. As of 30 June 1987, total disbursements amounted to $604 million, with $480 million disbursed from Facility credits and $124 million under special joint financing. Of the amount committed directly from the Facility in fiscal 1986, 90 per cent was disbursed by the end of fiscal 1987, or within 18 months from the effectiveness date of the initial credits.

Lending operations (credits)

By 30 June 1987, IDA had made cumulative commitments totalling $43,307.7 million. Commitments in fiscal 1987 amounted to $3,485.8 million, of which $1,454.4 million went to six countries in South Asia and $728.6 million to 15 countries in eastern and southern Africa. India was the largest borrower with four credits amounting to $677.6 million, followed by China, with three credits ($556.2 million), and Bangladesh with five ($389 million).

Agriculture and rural development

As in previous years, in fiscal 1987 the number of credits for agriculture and rural development accounted for the largest amount of IDA lending; 32 credits totalling $984 million were committed in 22 countries.

Of credits totalling $267 million to India, $114 million increased productivity and farm incomes in existing irrigation schemes by providing low-cost infrastructural improvements to support new and more efficient operating plans. China received three credits amounting to $260.5 million, of which $150.5 million went to a project to reduce poverty in Gansu province and raise rural incomes by increasing agricultural production through land rehabilitation and irrigation development, raising productivity of the labour force through educational improvements and developing employment opportunities in light and rural industries; another $70 million helped generate some 24,000 full-time jobs and raise farm-family incomes on 20 State farms in Xingiang province by constructing irrigation works, improving rain-fed pasture and introducing improved animal breeds.

Other credits were for agricultural research and development, agro-industry, irrigation and drainage, fisheries, forestry and livestock.

Development finance companies

IDA extended four credits totalling $93 million to assist development finance companies. A $50 million credit was extended to China to upgrade productivity and efficiency of small- and medium-scale industries through imports of modern technology. Zaire received $25 million to support a package of credit, technical assistance and training tailored to the needs of small-scale enterprises. Madagascar received $16 million to support policy reforms designed to increase the efficiency and productivity of the economy. A credit of $2 million went to Tonga to provide the Tonga Development Bank with adequate long-term resources to meet investment demand, particularly in agriculture, industry and tourism.

Education

Credits totalling $266.3 million for education projects were received by eight countries and the Caribbean region during fiscal 1987.

Pakistan received $145 million for the first in a series of major educational operations to address systemic issues through policy reform, institutional and qualitative improvements, and support to expand its educational system. A credit of $34.5 million to Ghana supported educational reforms. Malawi received $27 million to help finance a three-year time slice of its education investment programme (1985-1995) aimed at improving access to, and the quality of, primary and secondary education, and strengthening the Ministry of Education and Culture.

Other credits were extended for teacher-training programmes, curriculum development and educational materials.

Energy

Ten countries received credits totalling $241.9 million for energy-related projects in fiscal 1987.

A $52 million credit was granted to Sri Lanka to finance a four-year time slice of the Ceylon Electricity Board's distribution-rehabilitation and expansion programme, aimed at improving the quality of power supply, reducing losses to more reasonable levels and meeting forecast demand for electricity. Bangladesh received $47 million to help minimize the cost of petroleum import products by financing measures aimed at refinery modification, storage and distribution. A $38 million credit to the Sudan provided additional power-generating capacity to meet the projected demand in the Blue Nile and eastern grids by 1991, and technical assistance for institutional improvements in the National Electricity Corporation.

Industry

An IDA credit of $7 million was extended to Guyana to assess the medium- to long-term economic and financial viability of the bauxite industry, and to assist in preparing a full-scale rehabilitation project.

Non-project

Seventeen non-project credits totalling $647.1 million were extended to 16 countries during fiscal 1987. Bangladesh received $190 million to provide foreign exchange to finance general imports in support of its industrial policy reform programme. A $60 million credit went to the Niger to extend its structural adjustment programme. Nepal received $50 million to support its structural adjustment and stabilization programme designed to increase investment and economic growth. Another $50 million credit to the United Republic of Tanzania supported its economic recovery programme.

Population, health and nutrition

During fiscal 1987, three countries received credits amounting to $20.8 million for population, health and nutrition projects. Malawi received $11 million for a family health project to improve primary health care and family health programmes, and increase the accessibility of child planning services. A $5.6 million credit to the Gambia financed a programme to strengthen health-sector management, financing and support systems, and an investment programme to upgrade national health care. Guinea-Bissau was granted $4.2 million to strengthen its Ministry of Public Health in planning, management and finance and to improve delivery of health and family planning services.

Small-scale enterprises

Two countries received credits totalling $16 million for small-scale enterprises. A $10 million credit to Zambia helped finance the foreign exchange portion of long-term capital investment requirements of subprojects approved by the Development Bank of Zambia. Kenya received $6 million to provide financial assistance, training and management counselling to small-scale industries.

Technical assistance

Credits totalling $88.9 million were granted to nine countries for technical assistance in fiscal 1987. China received $20.7 million to prepare studies for its eighth five-year plan and to finance technical assistance activities. A $12 million credit went to Zaire to implement its structural adjustment programme and to initiate long-term efforts to improve its capability in planning and financial management. Bolivia received $11.5 million to support the Bolivia Public Financial Management Operation, which aimed to improve the efficiency of resource mobilization and use. Ghana received $10.8 million to facilitate implementation of its structural adjustment programme.

Telecommunications

Two countries received credits amounting to $27.8 million for telecommunications projects. The United Republic of Tanzania received $23 million to rehabilitate key parts of its telecommunications network and maximize utilization capacity; the project included development of the Tanzania Post and Telecommunications Corporation. Burundi was granted $4.8 million to rehabilitate and extend its telecommunications network, and to provide institutional development and assistance to postal services.

Transportation

IDA granted 14 credits totalling $600.1 million for transportation projects during fiscal 1987. China received $125 million to help build an expressway to meet road transportation demand in the Beijing-Tianjin-Tanggu corridor, one of China's most industrial and congested areas. India was granted $119.6 million to construct all-weather roads for the rural poor and to improve rural road construction and maintenance, road planning and management in Gujarat State. Bangladesh received $102 million to reduce the transportation costs of goods and passengers by restoring the priority road network in the north-west, and to strengthen institutions concerned with road-transport infrastructure.

Urban development

In fiscal 1987, three credits totalling $234.5 million were granted for urban development.

India received $130 million to support policy adjustments, institutional strengthening, and urban shelter and infrastructure developments in Uttar Pradesh State; the project also included consultancy services, studies, training, rehabilitation and pollution-control works, and equipment for sewer-cleaning operations and river monitoring to reduce pollution of the Ganga River. China received $100 million to improve environmental conditions in Shanghai through appropriate waste-water disposal.

Water supply and sewerage

Eight countries received credits totalling $258.4 million for water supply and sewerage in fiscal 1987. Of two credits totalling $161 million extended to India, $145 million went to expand Bombay's water supply and sewerage system, provide site-specific sanitation and water supply facilities for the urban poor and strengthen Bombay's Water Supply and Sewerage Department. Bangladesh received $30 million to expand Dhaka's water supply and sewerage systems and to improve the Dhaka Water Supply and Sewerage Authority's operation and finances. Malawi received $20 million to improve the water supply system in Lilongwe and to undertake studies for the city's water disposal and sanitation systems; institution-building assistance was provided to the Lilongwe Water Board.

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

The world economy in 1987 was characterized by continued expansion in output and trade. Real economic growth in industrial countries was more than 3 per cent—somewhat faster than in 1986. At the same time, inflation remained low and external imbalances among the major industrial countries began to diminish. In developing countries, economic developments were more mixed: while many benefited from vigorous export expansion and higher primary commodity prices, others continued to suffer from low or declining growth, high inflation, and high debt-service burdens. The average growth rate in developing countries fell from 4.2 per cent in 1986 to 3.4 per cent in 1987. The economic and financial difficulties of most heavily indebted middle-income countries, low-income countries of sub-Saharan Africa and some fuel-exporting countries were particularly severe.

Despite some positive aspects in the world economic situation among major industrial countries, their external imbalances remained large. On 22 February 1987, six major industrial countries (Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, United Kingdom, United States), meeting at the Palais du Louvre, Paris, agreed to intensify efforts at economic policy co-ordination to promote more balanced economic growth and to reduce existing imbalances. In their communique, known as the Louvre Accord, the six, while noting the progress that had been made in achieving sustainable, non-inflationary expansion, agreed to co-operate to foster stability of exchange rates around current levels.

Under its Articles of Agreement, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) was charged with overseeing the international monetary system.

During the year, the Fund continued working actively to strengthen surveillance over the exchange rate policies of its members. It pursued the development of indicators as an analytical framework for promoting policy co-operation, while preserving the flexibility of the floating exchange rate system. The use of indicators—including exchange rates—was endorsed by the seven major industrial countries (Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, United States), meeting at their thirteenth economic summit (Venice, Italy, 8-10 June).

Article IV of the Fund Agreement calls for regular consultations between IMF and each member country. Consultations focused on economic developments and policies in the member countries concerned and particularly on how those policies affected the exchange rate and external accounts. In July, the IMF Executive Board adopted two modifications to the 1983 guidelines on the frequency of consultations as provided for in article IV, section 3 (b).^a This reconsideration was aimed at economizing the resources devoted to the consultation process without compromising IMF's responsibility for effective surveillance. The first modification called for the implementation of a bi-cyclic procedure, involving a full consultation every second year and a simplified interim procedure in the intervening year. The second reduced the number of countries for which a strict annual consultation was required by virtue of their substantial impact on the international monetary system. The number of consultations concluded in 1987 declined to 115 (75 per cent of membership) from a peak of 131 (85 per cent of membership) in 1985.

Access to IMF resources

The Fund's policy of enlarged access to its resources enabled it to provide supplementary financing to members whose balance-of-payments deficits were large in relation to their quotas and which needed resources in larger amounts and for longer periods than were available under regular credit tranche policies. On 4 December 1987, the IMF Executive Board decided to extend the enlarged access policy through 1988 with access limits kept unchanged at 1987 levels. Access would be subject to annual limits of 90 or 110 per cent of quota, three-year limits of 270 or 330 per cent of quota, and cumulative limits of 400 or 440 per cent of quota. Access in individual cases—which in exceptional circumstances could exceed those limits—were determined primarily on the basis of the seriousness of the member's balance-of-payments need, the strength of its adjustment efforts and its ability to repay the Fund.

Other IMF facilities

In 1987, the structural adjustment facility (SAF), set up in 1986,^b continued to provide loans on concessional terms to low-income countries facing protracted balance-of-payments problems. During the year, total IMF commitments under SAF to a number of such countries, measured in special drawing rights (SDRs)—the Fund's unit of account—amounted to SDR 0.9 billion, compared with SDR 0.5 billion committed in 1986. At the end of 1987, arrangements were in effect with 22 countries—13 more than the previous year. The increase in commitments and disbursements under SAF during 1987—as well as in the number of countries using SAF—reflected: an increase in the access limit under three-year SAF arrangements from 47 per cent of quota to 63.5 per cent as of July 1987; the more concessional nature of SAF relative to other IMF facilities; and the fact that SAF programmes emphasized growth-oriented structural adjustment, which made them appropriate for the needs of low-income countries.

In response to widespread support for an increase in resources for lending on concessional terms to low-income countries facing protracted balance-of-payments difficulties, the IMF Executive Board established on 18 December 1987 the enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF), which was to become operational in April 1988. ESAF was expected to provide new resources totalling about SDR 6 billion, drawn from special loans and contributions from several countries. Its objectives, general procedures, financial conditions and eligibility requirements were similar to those of SAF; differences between SAF and ESAF related mainly to access, monitoring, the strength and timing of structural reforms and the degree of assurances to be sought regarding the timely implementation of programme measures. Access under ESAF varied according to the strength of the programme and the member's balance-of-payments financing needs, whereas access under SAF was uniform. Access under ESAF was expected to be 150 per cent of quota, on average, over a three-year period (with maximum access at 250 per cent of quota and a provision for access of up to 350 per cent in exceptional circumstances). Disbursements under ESAF were to take place semi-annually, on approval of an annual arrangement and after the observance of performance criteria and, in most cases, the completion of a mid-year review.

Financial assistance

During the year IMF intensified its collaboration with members in balance-of-payments difficulties and the number with IMF financial arrangements rose to 36 at the end of 1987, compared with 33 in 1986. As members with arrangements in 1987 had smaller quotas, on average, than those with arrangements in 1986, IMF financial assistance in 1987 totalled SDR 3.7 billion, about the same as the previous year. Of that total, SDR 3.3 billion was disbursed in purchases from the Fund's General Resources Account—a decline of SDR 0.5 billion relative to 1986—and SDR 0.4 billion was disbursed to eligible low-income countries under SAF (see above).

Within the General Resources Account, upper credit tranche purchases (those above 25 per cent of a member's quota), which required substantial justification and were made available in instalments, subject to the observance of performance criteria, amounted to SDR 0.7 billion. Purchases under stand-by arrangements totalled SDR 1.8 billion, compared with SDR 2.7 billion in 1986, while those under extended arrangements amounted to SDR 0.2 billion, as against SDR 0.3 billion in 1986. At the end of 1987, there were 22 stand-by arrangements and two extended arrangements in effect between the Fund and its members, with a total of SDR 5.6 billion in committed resources. By comparison, 30 stand-by arrangements and one extended arrangement were in effect at the end of 1986, with a total approved value of SDR 5.1 billion. The decline in purchases under stand-by arrangements and in the number of countries using the facility reflected, in part, the progress towards balance-of-payments viability by some members that had used Fund resources under earlier adjustment programmes, and a shift by a number of low-income countries facing difficulties of a structural nature to the use of the more concessional SAF.

The decline in credit tranche purchases in 1987 relative to 1986 was partly offset by a doubling of purchases under the compensatory financing facility to SDR 1.2 billion. The compensatory financing facility was designed to compensate members for temporary shortfalls in export receipts or for sharp increases in cereal import costs that were beyond their control. Its increased use in 1987 partly reflected purchases by some members with relatively large quotas—notably Argentina and Indonesia.

In 1987, emergency purchases from the Fund, which helped members to meet foreign exchange needs arising from natural disasters, totalled SDR 40 million.

As in 1986, repurchases, or repayments, to the Fund (excluding SAF and Trust Fund repayments) exceeded purchases in 1987. Repurchases amounted to SDR 7.9 billion, compared with SDR 5.7 billion in 1986. Fund credit outstanding thus declined by SDR 4.6 billion, to SDR 28.8 billion at the end of the year. Almost all of the decline reflected repayments during the year by 10 countries—Brazil, Hungary, India, Pakistan, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, South Africa, Turkey, Yugoslavia—some of which had borrowed substantially between 1981 and 1984. The decline in Fund credit outstanding in 1986 and 1987, which reflected the revolving nature of Fund resources and the short- and medium-term nature of its financing, closely paralleled a similar decline in 1978 and 1979, following a sizeable expansion of Fund credit during 1974-1976.

Reserve tranche drawings, representing members' use of reserves held by the Fund, declined in 1987 to SDR 0.1 billion, compared with SDR 0.4 billion in 1986. Such drawings did not constitute a use of Fund credit and were not subject to repurchase requirements.

Liquidity

The Fund's holdings of usable ordinary resources rose to SDR 40.7 billion at the end of the year, from SDR 38.4 billion at the end of 1986, reflecting in part the increase in the number of members having sufficiently strong balance-of-payments and reserve positions to warrant the use of their currencies in financing purchases from the Fund. Borrowed resources available to finance the enlarged access policy totalled SDR 5.4 billion at the end of 1987, compared with SDR 6.7 billion in 1986.

During 1987, the Fund borrowed SDR 1.3 billion and repaid SDR 4.4 billion, resulting in a net decrease of SDR 3.1 billion in total outstanding borrowing to SDR 10.4 billion. All new borrowing was undertaken to finance the enlarged access policy, whereas repayments were in respect of borrowings under both enlarged access and the supplementary financing facility.

In November 1987, the Fund renewed its decision on the General Arrangements to Borrow (GAB) for the five-year period starting 26 December 1988. Established in 1962 and renewed several times, the Arrangements provided the Fund with additional liquidity to meet requests for financing the exceptional balance-of-payments situations of members that might threaten the stability of the international monetary system. GAB resources totalled SDR 18.5 billion and were provided by 10 major industrial countries and one associated lender.

SDR activity

Total transfers of SDRs rose to SDR 17.8 billion in 1987, from SDR 15.7 billion in 1986, mainly reflecting increased activities among members and official institutions authorized to hold SDRs. These transactions and operations increased to SDR 8.1 billion in 1987, from SDR 5.7 billion in 1986; they comprised SDR 5.6 billion in transactions entered into voluntarily (compared with SDR 3.4 billion in the previous year), SDR 1.1 billion in transactions with designation and SDR 1.3 billion in other operations. In 1987, the Fund transferred a total of SDR 5.2 billion to members and received SDR 4.5 billion from members; thus, its SDR holdings declined by SDR 0.7 billion over the year. The Fund provided SDR 1.7 billion to members making purchases in support of their economic adjustment programmes and paid SDR 2.9 billion to its creditor members in remuneration, loan repayments and interest payments. It sold SDR 0.6 billion to members that needed SDRs to pay charges to the Fund. It received SDR 2.3 billion in repurchases, SDR 2.1 billion in charges and SDR 0.1 billion in interest on its SDR holdings.

Policy on arrears

In 1987, IMF continued to experience delays in the payment of financial obligations by its members. The number of those in arrears by six months or more rose, by one, to eight at the end of the year, and the amounts overdue by these members reached SDR 1.7 billion—almost double the figure a year earlier. During 1987, one member was declared ineligible to use the general resources of the Fund in view of its overdue obligations to the General Department. Earlier declarations of ineligibility with respect to five members remained in effect. Those six members in ineligible status accounted for 93.6 per cent of the total overdue obligations to the Fund at the end of 1987. Following the emergence of significant arrears in 1983, the Fund adopted a number of measures aimed at improving assessments of members' capacity to repay the Fund; strengthening adjustment programmes in cases where debt-servicing difficulties might arise; and collaborating with individual debtor countries, other creditors, donors and multilateral development institutions in response to the efforts of individual members to become current on their Fund obligations. As a result of these efforts, several members eliminated sizeable arrears and thus regained access to Fund credit.

In view of the problem of overdue obligations, the Executive Board took steps to strengthen the Fund's financial position. In the financial year ending 30 April 1987, it raised the target addition to the Fund's reserves to be generated out of net income from 5 per cent of reserves to 7.5 per cent. In addition, net income was to be protected by placing to deferred income the overdue obligations of members that were six months or more overdue in settling their charges, and recovering the loss equally from creditors and other debtors. The increase in net income and the recovery of deferred income was to be financed jointly by a higher rate of charge on the use of the Fund's ordinary resources and a lower rate of remuneration on reserve tranche positions in the Fund. On 17 June 1987, the Executive Board established a Special Contingent Account, in which income for 1986/87 in excess of the target amount was placed. Explicit provision was made when fixing the rates of charge and remuneration in subsequent years for additions to the Account. Partly as a result of those measures, the Fund recorded a net income in the financial year ending 30 April 1988 of SDR 49 million, after placement of SDR 60.4 million (5 per cent of reserves at the beginning of the year) to the Special Contingent Account. This amount of net income was added to the Fund's reserves, which thus rose to SDR 1.26 billion for 1987/88, 4.1 per cent higher than in 1986/87.

Technical assistance and training

Technical assistance continued to be an important part of IMF services during 1987. Such assistance, provided either at IMF headquarters (Washington, D.C.) or through staff missions to the member country concerned, related to a wide range of subjects, including general economic policy, balance-of-payments adjustment programmes, legal matters, debt management, inflation-related problems, exchange and trade systems, public finance issues, financial sector issues, accounting, statistics and data processing.

In addition, the IMF Institute continued to offer specialized training in economic analysis and policy for officials of member countries through courses and seminars in Washington and abroad.

IMF-World Bank collaboration

Collaboration between IMF and the World Bank intensified in 1987, especially with respect to the increase in the structural policy content of IMF-supported programmes, making it necessary to ensure consistent views on the strategies and policies of borrowing countries and avoid cross-conditionality. Apart from missions related to SAF programmes, which routinely involved the participation of staff from IMF and the World Bank, IMF staff participated in 21 Bank missions during 1987 and Bank staff took part in 7 IMF missions.

IMF and the World Bank also collaborated closely in efforts to encourage the flow of resources from donor Governments to member countries and in assisting countries to obtain concerted lending packages from commercial banks.

The two institutions also collaborated in a wide range of other areas, including administrative matters, statistics, training, seminars, computer services, development committee issues and joint secretariat matters.

Publications

Publications issued by IMF in 1987 included the Annual Report of the Executive Board, the Annual Report on Exchange Arrangements and Exchange Restrictions, Balance of Payments Statistics (monthly and Yearbook), Government Finance Statistics Yearbook, International Financial Statistics (monthly, Yearbook and two supplements) and the World Economic Outlook.

Periodicals included the quarterlies Staff Papers and Finance and Development (published jointly with the World Bank), the IMF Survey (published 23 times a year) and the monthly IMF Memorandum. Also published were explanatory pamphlets on the workings of IMF and papers on subjects of interest to the international financial community.

Membership

At the end of 1987, the membership of IMF remained unchanged at 151.

Secretariat

As of 31 December 1987, the total full-time staff of IMF—including permanent, fixed-term and temporary employees—was 1,990, drawn from 105 nationalities.

Chapter X

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) facilitates the safety and efficiency of civil air transport. As an intergovernmental regulatory organization, its objectives are set down in annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, United States, 1944) which prescribe standards, recommended practices and procedures for facilitating civil aviation operations.

ICAO estimated total traffic of the world's scheduled airlines to be some 196 billion tonne-kilometres during 1987, an increase of more than 10 per cent over 1986, marking the first time in the 1980s that the world's airline industry had shown double-digit growth. For the first time in aviation history the airlines carried more than 1 billion passengers, over 8 per cent more than in 1986. The number of seats offered increased by a lower rate than the number of passengers carried, raising the estimated passenger load factor from 65 to 67 per cent. Air freight increased to some 48 billion tonne-kilometres in 1987, or by about 12 per cent. Airmail showed a small increase.

During the year, the ICAO Council held three regular sessions. In June, it decided to convene an international conference on air law at Montreal, Canada, in 1988 to consider a draft proposal making acts of violence at international airports criminal offences subject to universal jurisdiction and severe penalties. Later in the year, ICAO approved a new three-letter airline designator code replacing two-letter identifiers, for use with four-letter locator codes to route flight plans and other operational messages between civil aviation addressees. Other items considered included: abuses in computer reservation system services; hazards of low-level wind shear to aircraft in flight; a mechanism to report major volcanic eruptions hazardous to commercial air transport; air carriage of illicit drugs; the loss of aero-mobile frequency allocation; and problems associated with subsonic jet noise restrictions.

Membership of ICAO remained at 157 countries in 1987.

Activities in 1987

During 1987, ICAO's efforts in air navigation continued to be directed towards updating and implementing ICAO Specifications and Regional Plans. The Specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 18 technical annexes to the Chicago Convention, and of Procedures for Air Navigation Services. (PANS) contained in three PANS documents. Regional Plans set forth air navigation facilities and services required for international air navigation in the nine ICAO regions.

The Specifications in five annexes and in one PANS document were amended. Amendments were also made to Regional Plans.

Four air navigation meetings covering a wide range of subjects recommended changes to ICAO Specifications. To promote their uniform application, ICAO made available guidance material—new and revised technical manuals and ICAO circulars—to assist States in establishing and maintaining an up-to-date and effective aeronautical infrastructure.

ICAO regional offices assisted States in implementing Regional Plans. Their efforts were supplemented by those of experts sent to advise States on installing new facilities and services and on operating existing ones.

During the year, special attention was given to: accident investigation and prevention; aerodromes; aeronautical charts and information services; aircraft airworthiness; audio-visual training aids; aviation medicine; environmental protection; flight safety and human factors; helicopter operations; illicit transport of drugs; meteorology; operation of aircraft; personnel licensing and training; rules of the air and air traffic services; search and rescue; future air navigation systems; telecommunications; transport of dangerous goods; and safeguarding international civil aviation against acts of unlawful interference.

Air transport

ICAO continued in 1987 its programmes of economic studies, collected and published air transport statistics and promoted greater facilitation in international air transport.

The panel on fares and rates (Montreal, 8-18 September) reviewed developments and pursued several tasks initiated by the Third (1985) Air Transport Conference; it completed work on the definition of an international tariff and refunds for unused travel documents. The statistics panel (Montreal, 2-6 November) reviewed ICAO traffic flow statistics and airport financial data programmes, and made a general review of statistical activities for a meeting of the statistics division in 1989. Workshops were held on airport and route facility management (Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates, October); aviation forecasting and economic planning (Bangkok, Thailand, March; Nairobi, Kenya, July); international fares and rates (Dakar, Senegal, June; Bangkok, November); and statistics (Nairobi, June/July).

During the year, comprehensive studies were initiated on the abusive use of airline computer reservation systems and the economic implications of limiting operations of noisy aircraft.

ICAO publications in 1987 included the 1986 edition of the manual of airport and air navigation facility tariffs, the regular series of digests of civil aviation statistics, the yearbook on world civil aviation statistics, a study of regional differences in fares, rates and costs for international air transport in 1985, and a survey of international air transport fares and rates in 1986.

ICAO continued to co-operate closely with other international organizations such as the International Air Transport Association, the Airport Associations Co-ordinating Council, the Customs Co-operation Council, the World Tourism Organization and the Universal Postal Union. It also continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies—the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

Following a 1982 conference to amend the 1956 Danish and Icelandic joint financing agreements for air navigation services in Greenland and the Faeroe Islands, and in Iceland, the two agreements as amended were provisionally applied from 1 January 1983. By the end of 1987, the protocols of amendment had been accepted by 17 of the 20 Governments that were parties to the agreements.

Legal matters

As called for by the ICAO Council in 1986,^a the Legal Committee's sub-committee met at Montreal from 20 to 30 January 1987 to study the development of an instrument for the suppression of unlawful acts of violence at airports serving international civil aviation. The sub-committee prepared a draft text for consideration and final decision by the Committee at its twenty-sixth session (Montreal, 28 April-13 May). Since the Council had accorded the item the highest priority, the Committee agreed not to address any other item until work on the instrument had been completed; consequently, it did not review, inter alia, its general work programme. Based on the sub-committee's report, the Legal Committee prepared the text of a draft instrument.

In June, the Council instructed the ICAO Secretary-General to circulate the draft to member States and international organizations for comments. It also decided to convene at Montreal from 9 to 24 February 1988 an international conference on air law to consider, with a view to approving, the text prepared by the Committee for inclusion in a draft instrument for the suppression of unlawful acts of violence at airports serving international civil aviation.

The following conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices were ratified or adhered to during 1987:

Technical assistance

During 1987, ICAO provided technical assistance to 93 States or Territories, in 61 of which

there were resident missions consisting of one or more experts. In addition to resident expertise, assistance was provided in the form of equipment, fellowships and scholarships and through short missions by experts.

Twenty-two new large-scale projects, each costing more than $500,000, for which ICAO was to be the executing agency, were approved by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). One large-scale project was financed under trust fund assistance.

ICAO employed 454 experts (some in two or more programmes) from 49 countries during all or part of 1987, 335 on assignment under UNDP and 132 on trust fund projects (including seven under the associate experts programme). There were also 32 United Nations Volunteers. The number of experts in the field at the end of 1987 was 204, as compared with 216 at the end of 1986.

A total of 1,162 fellowships were awarded in 1987, as compared with 1,379 in 1986.

Equipment purchases and sub-contracts continued to represent a substantial proportion of the technical assistance programme. Fifty Governments or organizations had registered with ICAO under the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service. The total for equipment and sub-contracts committed during 1987 amounted to some $12 million.

The following countries and Territories were aided:

Included in the above, the following were aided during the year under trust fund arrangements: Argentina, Bolivia, Cape Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, Iraq, Jordan, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Maldives, Nigeria, Peru, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, Yemen, Zambia.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1987, the total number of staff members employed in the ICAO secretariat stood at 847: 308 in the Professional and higher categories, drawn from 77 nationalities, and 539 in the General Service and related categories. Of the total, 212 persons were employed in regional offices. In addition, there were 133 in the Professional category serving as technical experts on UNDP field projects.

Chapter XI

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU), established at Berne, Switzerland, in 1874 for the reciprocal exchange of postal services between nations, is one of the oldest international intergovernmental organizations. Its aim is to promote the organization and improvement of postal services and to develop international collaboration. At the request of its members, it participates in various forms of postal technical assistance.

In 1987, UPU membership remained unchanged at 168.

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, composed of all member States, is the supreme legislative authority of UPU and normally meets every five years. The most recent Congress (the nineteenth) took place at Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, in 1984 and the twentieth was scheduled to meet at Washington, D.C., in 1989.

The work of the Congress consists mainly of examining and revising the Acts of the Union based on proposals submitted by member States, the Executive Council or the Consultative Council for Postal Studies, and of making administrative arrangements for UPU activities. The Acts in force since 1 January 1986 were those of the 1984 Hamburg Congress.

Executive Council

At its 1987 session, held at Berne from 27 April to 14 May, the Executive Council—which carries out the work of UPU between Congress sessions by maintaining close contact with postal administrations, exercising control over the International Bureau (see below), promoting technical assistance and working with the United Nations and other organizations—considered administrative matters and examined studies concerning international mail referred to it by the 1984 Congress.

Among other questions reviewed by the Council were a framework agreement for international expedited mail (express mail service); remailing; streamlining the UPU International Bureau; technical co-operation; customs treatment of postal items, including the illicit transmission of narcotics by post; rate-fixing for letter-post items; postal shipment of scientific specimens containing hazardous substances; and a number of items concerning parcel post, including the revision of land and sea rates.

Consultative Council for Postal Studies

The annual meeting of the Consultative Council for Postal Studies (Berne, 19-30 October 1987) dealt mainly with the results of its studies of various technical, economic and operational problems affecting postal administrations of UPU member States, including matters of particular interest to new and developing countries. The Council also considered action to be taken on the remaining studies of the 1984-1989 work programme and ways of implementing its previous recommendations and decisions. In addition, the Council's working parties, symposia and committees studied questions relating to the 1984 Declaration of Hamburg—which stressed that UPU must "actively participate in strengthening the international postal service as a whole and in improving the standard and speed of international mail circulation and postal exchanges"—and expedited mail service. During the year, work continued on preparing the fifth edition of the Multilingual Vocabulary of the International Postal Service. The Council also dealt with technical co-operation and electronic mail services.

International Bureau

Under the general supervision of the Government of the Swiss Confederation, the International Bureau—the UPU secretariat—continued to serve the postal administrations of member States as an organ for liaison, information and consultation.

During 1987, the Bureau collected, coordinated, published and disseminated international postal service information. At the request of postal administrations, it also conducted inquiries and acted as a clearing-house for settling certain accounts between them.

As at 31 December 1987, the number of permanent and temporary staff members employed by the UPU secretariat was 140, of whom 59 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 49 countries) and 81 in the General Service category. Also, as French remained the sole official UPU language, 15 officials were employed in the Arabic, English, Portuguese, Russian and Spanish translation services.

Technical co-operation

In 1987, technical co-operation provided by UPU was financed for the most part by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); UNDP/UPU project expenditures amounted to some $1.7 million. Assistance was also provided through the UPU Special Fund (voluntary contributions in cash and kind from member States) and the regular budget. Total expenditures from these two sources in 1987 amounted to approximately $1 million. In addition, postal administrations provided bilateral and multilateral assistance.

UPU participated in the programming work concerning countries which had submitted their programmes to the February and June sessions of the UNDP Governing Council. Regional and interregional programmes concerning postal services were carried out under UNDP in Africa, Arab countries, Asia and the Pacific, the Caribbean and Latin America. Fifty-three expert missions were undertaken and 136 fellowships were awarded. Assistance in the form of equipment was provided for projects in the Central African Republic, Chad, the Congo, Guinea, Madagascar, Mali and Rwanda.

The Special Fund and the regular budget funded missions by experts and consultants, scholarships for training, instruction materials and equipment. During 1987, 58 consultants carried out technical missions in 69 postal administrations and 171 fellowships were granted for training courses and technical meetings.

Fellowships and training courses were also offered by several countries during the year.

UPU redoubled its efforts to develop technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC). During the year, the International Bureau promoted EDC activities under UNDP regional projects and under UPU's own resources.

Budget

Under UPU's self-financing system, contributions are payable in advance by member States based on the following year's budget. At its 1987 session, the Executive Council approved the 1988 budget at a total of 22,487,630 Swiss francs, to be financed by contributions from member States (see table).

Chapter XII

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

During 1987, membership of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) rose to 163 with the admission of Antigua and Barbuda on 4 February and Solomon Islands on 27 July.

Administrative Council

The forty-second session of the ITU Administrative Council, held from 15 to 26 June 1987 at Geneva, reviewed administrative and financial matters, considered reports on ITU activities and nominated 21 members to form the second Advisory Board of the Centre for Telecommunications Development (see p. 1271). The Council decided to hold the World Administrative Telegraph and Telephone Conference (WATTC) at Melbourne, Australia, from 28 November to 9 December 1988 and agreed to hold on 27 and 28 November 1989, during the second session of the Regional Administrative Conference for the planning of VHF/UHF (very high frequency/ultra-high frequency) television broadcasting in the African broadcasting area and neighbouring countries (AFBC-2), a regional conference to abrogate parts of the 1963 Geneva Agreement on African VHF/UHF broadcasting.^a It decided to hold AFBC-2 at Geneva from 13 November to 2 December 1989 and drew up the conference agenda.

The Council also discussed relations between ITU and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade on questions of trade in services, recommendations of the Independent Commission for World-wide Telecommunications Development and the changing nature of ITU technical co-operation activities.

Administrative radio conferences

The World Administrative Radio Conference (WARC) for the mobile services (Geneva, 14 September-17 October) revised provisions of the Radio Regulations governing the mobile, the mobile-satellite, the radionavigation-satellite and the radiodetermination-satellite services with a view to taking account of requirements after the year 2000. The Conference adopted all the provisions necessary for the Global Maritime Distress and Safety System (GMDSS), allocating frequencies, agreeing on operational procedures for urgency and safety communications, and adopting alert signals. The Conference also adopted provisions to enable the evolution of public correspondence on board aircraft, such as telephone and telefax, while giving priority to safely traffic and flight communications.

Procedures for the new international narrow-band direct printing telegraphy system for transmission of navigational and meteorological warnings and urgent information to ships (NAVTEX) were also adopted and included in the Radio Regulations. The Conference re-examined and modified the provisions concerning operators' certificates in the aeronautical mobile, aeronautical mobile-satellite, maritime mobile and maritime mobile-satellite services and included provisions for GMDSS personnel certificates and for public correspondence.

At its second session (Geneva, 2 February-8 March), WARC for the planning of the HF (high frequency) bands allocated to the broadcasting service recognized the need to improve the planning of short-wave broadcasting and adopted a computerized planning system to be applied in certain bands of the spectrum used for short-wave broadcasting and a consultation procedure for application in the remaining parts of the HF bands. Before adopting that approach, WARC considered it necessary to improve the computerized planning system developed at its first (1984) session for trial purposes; a conference was scheduled for 1992 to review and make a final decision on the new approach. Pending that decision, the co-ordination procedure in force would continue to apply. However, the Conference adopted planning principles, to enter into force on 1 September 1988, to ensure recognition of equal rights of all countries, equitable access to those bands and more efficient utilization of that part of the frequency spectrum.

International consultative committees

The first series of interim study group meetings (Geneva, 2 November-4 December) for the 1986-1990 International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR) study period made progress on recommendations for improved efficiency of the geostationary-satellite orbit, for digital satellite and radio-relay systems, broadcasting and mobile telecommunications. CCIR made further progress in its studies on radio-wave propagation in tropical regions and in support of the ITU propagation measurement campaign in Africa. Handbooks, special publications and microcomputer software for radio propagation and broadcasting planning were developed and made available. Technical studies were carried out for the second session (1988) of WARC on the geostationary-satellite orbit and the planning of the space services using it (see also p. 101), for the Regional Administrative Radio Conference to establish a plan for the broadcasting service in the band 1,605-1,705 kHz (kilohertz) in Region 2 (the Americas) and for AFBC-2. Concerning technical co-operation, CCIR provided assistance to developing countries with radio broadcasting problems and reviewed several project documents and reports involving radio-communications issues.

Activities of the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (CCITT) study groups and working parties focused on preparing recommendations and replies to questions referred to them by the eighth (1984) plenary assembly. Technical experts during 460 meetings prepared several new draft recommendations or modifications of existing recommendations. The Regional Plan Committee for Africa (Yaounde, Cameroon, 18-25 March) and the Regional Plan Committee for Europe and the Mediterranean Basin (Malta, 23-29 September) met to co-ordinate the development of international telecommunications and establish forecasts of international traffic. The preparatory committee for the 1988 WATTC and a special study group completed their work. WATTC was to revise telegraph and telephone regulations to provide an adequate and flexible regulatory framework for telecommunications beyond the year 2000. The special study group reviewed the CCITT structure and made recommendations aimed at making CCITT better suited to a new environment characterized by the rapid pace of technological change. Regarding technical assistance, the CCITT special autonomous groups completed studies related to developing countries for submission to the ninth (1988) plenary assembly. The subjects included economic and technical aspects of transition from an analogue to a digital network, rural telecommunications, planning data and forecasting methods, a strategy for public data networks and economic and technical aspects of -the choice of transmission systems.

At the end of 1987, 223 private companies and 34 international organizations were registered participants in CCITT, in addition to ITU member administrations.

International Frequency Registration Board

Major activities of the International Frequency Registration Board (IFRB) during 1987 included follow-up action on decisions of: the 1984 Regional Administrative Radio Conference for FM (frequency modulation) sound broadcasting in bands 87.5-108 MHz (megahertz) in Region 1 (Africa and Europe) and certain countries of Region 3 (Asia and Australasia); the 1985 Regional Administrative Conference for the planning of the MF (medium frequency) maritime mobile and aeronautical radionavigation service in Region 1; the first (1985) session of WARC on the use of the geostationary-satellite orbit and the planning of the space services using it; the first (1984) session of WARC on high-frequency broadcasting; the 1981 Regional Administrative MF Broadcasting Conference for Region 2; the first (1986) session of AFBC; the 1986 Regional Administrative Radio Conference for the broadcasting service in the band 1,605-1,705 kHz in Region 2; and preparations for the 1987 WARC.

Other IFRB activities included the publication of 20,231 monitoring observations by administrations concerning broadcasting stations; special monitoring campaigns for short-wave stations to identify the source of unauthorized emissions in the frequency band 406-406.1 MHz-that band being restricted to GMDSS to protect human life and property; the organization of meetings and seminars; and examination and recording in the Master International Frequency Register of 85,299 frequency assignment notices received from member countries. At the end of 1987, the Register contained particulars of 1,048,282 assignments, representing 4,850,557 records.

Technical co-operation

In 1987, under various ITU technical co-operation programmes in developing countries, 573 expert missions were carried out, 831 fellows were undergoing training abroad and equipment valued at $8.4 million was delivered, mainly to telecommunication training centres. Total assistance amounted to $27.4 million for 191 projects.

The following countries and Territories were aided:

Africa: Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Guinea, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Swaziland, Togo, Tunisia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

The Americas: Belize, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Saint Lucia, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela.

Asia and the Pacific: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Burma, India, Indonesia, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Mongolia, Nepal, Republic of Korea, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Tokelau, Tonga.

Europe and the Middle East: Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Greece, Hungary, Jordan, Kuwait, Malta, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Yemen.

The three main objectives of ITU technical co-operation continued to be: developing regional communications networks in Africa, the Americas, Asia, the Pacific, the Middle East and the Mediterranean Basin; strengthening the telecommunication technical and administrative services in developing countries; and developing human resources required for telecommunications.

ITU continued to promote the development of regional telecommunication networks and their integration into the world-wide telecommunication system, in accordance with objectives established by the World Plan Committee and regional plan committees.

The Pan-African Telecommunications Network (PANAFTEL), with its basic structure designed to interconnect countries without transit beyond the continent, continued to make steady progress in 1987; apart from the Central African subregion, all PANAFTEL structures had been installed. In addition to the land and submarine cable network, 41 of the 45 countries south of the Sahara had satellite earth stations. Growing emphasis was placed on maintenance of telecommunication systems and the need for national plans to improve maintenance (NPIM). By the end of 1987, 40 countries had approved such plans and were initiating their implementation. The development of NPIM for Malawi and Mozambique was initiated and a master plan for Madagascar was completed. In Mauritius, a master plan and NPIM were developed as part of a single project. Broadcasting plans were established for Botswana, Cameroon and Malawi.

In the area of strengthening national telecommunications technical and administrative services, Chad received assistance for the implementation of an HF radiocommunication network; Benin, for the preparation of a donors' meeting with a view to financing short-term projects identified in the master plan; the Gambia, for strengthening the operating agency's financial services; Rwanda, for the implementation of a rural telecommunication network; Sao Tome and Principe, for the installation of a 2 GHz (gigahertz) digital radio-relay link between its two main islands; and Senegal, for strengthening its radiocommunication services.

In March, a project office for the Regional African Satellite Communication System for the development of Africa (RASCOM) was established at ITU headquarters. RASCOM, which consisted of national and regional studies, encompassed all aspects of telecommunications requirements and examined all modes of media, terrestrial as well as space-borne. A RASCOM feasibility study, aimed at making telecommunications relevant to economic and social development in Africa, received contributions towards its estimated cost of $7.5 million from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Organization of African Unity, ITU, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, Italy, the Federal Republic of Germany and the African Development Bank. The feasibility study was expected to be completed by mid-1989 and the national studies by August 1988.

An African Telecommunications Development Conference (Tunis, Tunisia, 12-16 January) reviewed progress in African telecommunications, the causes and effects of achievements and failures and the problems requiring a new approach. It identified objectives and strategies for African telecommunications development until the year 2000.

In line with the overall strategy adopted for Africa that each country should develop its training structures according to its resources, from the basic to the highest levels, ITU continued its association with a number of national projects for the establishment or development of training centres in Algeria, Angola, Benin, Burkina Faso, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, Djibouti, Malawi, Morocco, Somalia, Togo, Tunisia, Zaire and Zimbabwe.

In the Americas, while there was no ITU-executed project aimed at the development of a regional network, ITU continued to promote development of the telecommunication network by assisting national and regional organizations responsible for such activities. Two projects aimed at improving the network of the Caribbean sub-region were prepared and were under discussion with the Caribbean Community and national authorities. During 1987, the Caribbean Telecommunication Union was created and co-operation established with ITU. Assistance continued to be provided to the TELEBRAS Research and Development Centre (Campinas, Brazil) by means of highly specialized consultants, contracts for the transfer of technology and the purchase of equipment. In the Caribbean, support continued to be given to strengthen and restructure national institutions. Nine projects relating to developing human resources were under implementation, some dedicated to introducing modern methods and technologies in producing training aids using computers.

Through a regional project completed at the end of June, ITU continued to assist six of Asia and the Pacific's least developed countries (Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Maldives, Nepal, Samoa) in upgrading telecommunication networks and services in rural areas. Assistance was also provided to meet the demands of countries for new systems and services resulting from the digitalization of the networks as well as improved maintenance and computer-aided management practices. Under a regional project started in 1987, ITU launched activities aimed at establishing a regional data base for planning purposes for the development of regional and national networks in Asia. Assistance provided under a regional project in the South Pacific included the finalization of a telecommunication master plan for Vanuatu, preparation of a master plan for Tuvalu, planning, installation and testing of radiocommunications systems in a number of countries of the subregion, planning of cable networks, installation and planning of telephone exchanges, planning of a satellite network, preparation of specifications for satellite earth stations and a review of tenders for an earth station expansion.

Assistance in the area of administrative and technical services—covering testing and development, network planning, maintenance and operations, rural and coastal communications, computer-aided billing, new services and management of telecommunication services—benefited India, Iran, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia and the Republic of Korea. A radio propagation study in Maldives continued. India, Mongolia, Nepal and the Philippines received assistance in resolving problems related to frequency management, software development, training in radio and television engineering and rural telecommunications systems.

Assistance provided under the South Pacific regional project included further development of TELMAN, a computerized telecommunications billing and management system, and its installation in a number of countries, network planning, introduction of commercial accounting practices and systems, advice on tariffs and financial matters and assistance in connection with the intended introduction of joint venture arrangements by some administrations.

Under a UNDP/ITU inter-country programme, ITU carried out a number of training-oriented projects and organized courses in 1987 including: training in the use of computers in telecommunications, undertaken in collaboration with the Asian Institute of Technology (Bangkok, Thailand); an introductory course on computer data base and software packages, attended by 26 participants from countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations; three courses on computers in outside plant records, the use of computers in radio frequency spectrum management and the use of computers in traffic engineering and network planning; a course on satellite communications; UNDP-funded training projects in Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Burma, India, Indonesia and Sri Lanka; the introduction of modern technologies, administration and instructor training in course development of the PERUMTEL Bandung Training Resource Centre (Indonesia); training on digital network and digital switching planning in Burma; strengthening the training resources of regional telecommunication training centres (RTTCS) located in India and upgrading of five of the 14 RTTCS into zonal training centres.

In 1987, a new phase of a European regional project was initiated, which aimed at providing participating countries with a more effective international telecommunications structure through the introduction of new and appropriate technologies as well as modern tools and methods for operation and maintenance; the project called for the organization of one or two symposia yearly. A symposium was held on the economic viability of telecommunication investments (Warsaw, Poland, 3-9 November). Following the translation and arabization of telecommunication terms in 1986, a glossary of the terms in Arabic, English, French and Spanish was published in November 1987. A regional project concerning the co-ordination of telecommunication development began in December 1987 in the least developed countries of the Arab region and in Ethiopia.

In addition to the contribution of regional projects towards the strengthening of technical capabilities, the following national projects were geared towards the same objectives: in Albania, planning and installation of two pilot microwave projects with Greece and Italy; in Bulgaria, expansion of the activities of a research centre in computerized maintenance and in new services; in Greece, management and manpower planning; in Kuwait, long-term planning and planning of facilities for the Ministry of the Interior; in Malta, preparation of a master plan; in Democratic Yemen, building up a modern telecommunications infrastructure; in Qatar, promotion of radio and television services and their efficient operation; in Saudi Arabia, planning telecommunication facilities for radio broadcasting and national satellite communication for the Ministry of Information, as well as assistance in frequency management; in Turkey, management and organization, emphasizing computer introduction in training; and in Yemen, assistance in implementing the second five-year development plan for telecommunications.

National projects involving training included assistance to the Jordanian Telecommunication Corporation in establishing a telecommunication college; to the Qatar telecommunication training centre in implementing an expansion programme, initiating the training of instructors, upgrading training standards and institutionalizing a management system and procedures; to Saudi Arabia in operating telecommunication training institutes in Riyadh and Jeddah; and to Yemen's Telecommunication Corporation in establishing and organizing a modern telecommunication training institute.

Training activities

By the end of 1987, 532 training courses were available through the ITU sharing system and 520 were being developed.

Regional meetings to co-ordinate training activities were held with ITU assistance by Asian and Pacific countries (Malacca, Malaysia, 22-27 June), by English-speaking African countries (Blantyre, Malawi, 22-28 July) and by the countries of the Americas (Montevideo, Uruguay, 16-21 November). In addition, a regional co-ordination meeting of the socialist countries on training in telecommunications was held (Warsaw, Poland, 25-29 May). ITU's training division held workshops in which 392 individuals participated. Nine missions to assist and advise on training questions were carried out in Greece, Indonesia, Morocco, Saudi Arabia and Thailand. Seminars were organized by countries or under ITU project activities.

The computerized data base of training opportunities was updated, reaching a total of 870 courses open to trainees.

Centre for Telecommunications Development

The Centre for Telecommunications Development (CTD), created by the ITU Administrative Council in 1985, effectively started its operations in 1987. The 1987-1989 action plan was adopted and strategic objectives approved by the Centre's Advisory Board.

In response to 37 requests for assistance, 20 field missions were organized to study the telecommunication sector and to identify requirements. Projects in planning, rural telecommunications development and management were prepared for implementation in Burma, Egypt, the Gambia, Nepal, Somalia, Sri Lanka and the United Republic of Tanzania, provided sources of financing were found. Nine other projects were under negotiation in Afghanistan, Bolivia, Chile, the Congo, Cuba, Mauritania, the Sudan and Yemen.

CTD organized a regional seminar on computer-aided modern planning methods for telecommunications networks (Montevideo, 16-18 December) for Latin America and the Caribbean. A similar seminar was under preparation for Asia and the Pacific in 1988.

Publications

In 1987, ITU's Telecommunications Economics Unit of the Technical Co-operation Department produced four publications: Benefits of Telecommunications to the Transportation Sector of Developing Countries,

Chapter XIII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

In 1987, the World Meteorological Congress, which convenes at least once every four years as the highest body of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), held its tenth session at Geneva from 4 to 28 May 1987 and adopted the second WMO long-term plan, for 1988-1997, defining overall policy and strategy, the organization's long-term objectives and plans for its scientific and technical programmes. The Tenth Congress reappointed G. O. P. Obasi (Nigeria) as WMO Secretary-General for a four-year term beginning on 1 January 1988.

The Congress focused on finding solutions to ensure WMO's financial stability and future—it established a Financial Advisory Committee and approved a series of changes to WMO's financial regulations, instituting a two-year instead of a one-year budget cycle and the use of the Swiss franc instead of the United States dollar as the WMO currency unit. The Congress adopted a formula to encourage members to pay their contributions promptly and decided that, beginning 1 January 1988, 24 members, in arrears for non-payment of contributions in excess of two full years, would forfeit their rights to vote in constituent bodies and to receive their quota of WMO publications free of charge. It allocated a budget of 170 million Swiss francs for the tenth financial period (1988-1991).

The Executive Council, which supervises implementation of Congress resolutions and regulations, held its thirty-ninth session, also at Geneva, from 1 to 5 June 1987. The Council approved the programme and budget for the first biennium of the financial period (see p. 1280). The Council's working group on long-term planning was asked to prepare recommendations on future policies, strategies and priorities and on the WMO major programme structure, in order to provide a framework for the third long-term plan (1992-2001) and the WMO Secretary-General's programme and budget proposals for the eleventh financial period (1992-1995).

WMO carried out its 1987 activities in accordance with the programme and budget for the period 1984-1987, adopted in 1983 by the Ninth Congress.

In 1987, WMO's membership rose to 160—155 States and 5 Territories—when the United Arab Emirates was admitted on 16 January 1987.

World Weather Watch

The World Weather Watch (WWW), the basic programme of WMO, continued to provide in 1987 meteorological and other environmental information required for applications and research. Its essential elements were the Global Observing System (GOS), whereby observational data were obtained; the Global Data-Processing System (GDPS), which provided for the processing, storage and retrieval of observational data and made available processed information; and the Global Telecommunication System (GTS), which offered the telecommunication facilities for the rapid collection, exchange and distribution of observational data and processed information.

The activities of GOS continued under its two sub-systems, one surface-based and the other space-based, which were directed towards improving the operation of GOS at the global, regional and national levels. The surface-based sub-system provided conventional data from regional basic synoptic networks, other observational networks of stations on land and at sea, aircraft meteorological observations, climatological stations, agricultural meteorological stations and special stations, such as ozone and radiation stations. In order to meet national needs, the surface-based sub-system included supplementary observing stations. In 1987, there were some 4,500 observing stations of this kind, of which over 500 also made pilot-balloon observations; also in operation were 325 automatic weather stations. In the space-based sub-system, meteorological satellites in both near-polar-orbiting and geostationary systems took direct observations. GOS provided members with both quantitative information, derived from instrument measurements, such as atmospheric pressure, humidity, air temperature and wind velocity, and qualitative information aimed at describing phenomena by providing information on the state of the sky, forms of clouds and types of precipitation.

Meteorological satellite systems operated by members continued to provide valuable information for meteorological and hydrological services. Progress continued to be made in developing the aircraft-to-satellite data relay system for automatic meteorological observations from wide-bodied commercial aircraft and the Automated Shipboard Aerological Programme for upper-air observations from merchant ships and drifting-buoy systems.

GDPS co-ordinated data-processing activities of member States, making available to them processed information, and prepared co-operative projects to establish specialized meteorological centres and computer networks.

GTS provided communication services for the collection, exchange and distribution of required observational data, particularly GOS data. The system comprised 241 established point-to-point circuits, including radio and satellite dissemination systems.

The Tenth Congress approved the WWW Plan and Implementation Programme for 1988-1997, which was directed at improving WWW operational components.

Tropical Cyclone Programme

The Tropical Cyclone Programme continued to establish national and regionally co-ordinated systems to minimize loss of life, disruption of economic activity and damage caused by tropical cyclones. Attention focused on meteorology and hydrology and on disaster prevention and preparedness. During the year, progress was achieved in developing regional centres for tropical cyclone forecasting and operational plans, and in training and the transfer of technology.

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific WMO Typhoon Committee (Bangkok, Thailand, October) reviewed a regional co-operation programme aimed at improving typhoon and flood forecasting and warning services, as well as disaster prevention and preparedness measures. As part of the activities of the WMO/ESCAP Panel on Tropical Cyclones, a second regional workshop on cyclone storm surge took place (Calcutta, India, December).

Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme

In 1987, the Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme conducted intercomparisons of hygrometers, ceilometers, Assmann psychrometers and solid precipitation measurements. Other activities aimed at updating regulatory and guidance material and developing algorithms for automated surface and upper-air measurements.

World Climate Programme

The Tenth Congress decided that the World Climate Programme (WCP), instituted in 1979 to aid nations in applying climate information to human activities and to warn of changes in climate that might significantly affect economic and social activities, should continue to receive high priority. The four components of WCP were: the World Climate Data Programme (WCDP); the World Climate Applications Programme (WCAP); the World

Climate Impact Studies Programme (WCIP); and the World Climate Research Programme (WCRP).

Activities under WCDP aimed at ensuring the timely availability of reliable climate data to support climate applications, impact studies and research. Progress continued to be made in developing a project for the transfer of technology in processing and applying climatological data through the provision of low-cost microcomputers. Progress was also made in developing the World Climate Data Referral Service and the data rescue project, and in expanding the network of stations from which monthly surface climatological data were transmitted over GTS.

Within WCAP, activities related to food, water and energy continued to receive priority, along with work in urban climatology, human health, transportation and tourism. A WMO Technical Conference on the Operational Aspects of Energy-Meteorology (Quito, Ecuador, 19-23 October) focused on the applications of meteorology to the assessment of requirements for energy use and conservation, use of meteorological information in various energy systems, optimal presentation of climatological data to energy decision-makers and the transfer of technology in operational energy-meteorology. A short-term mission provided advice on the measurements, analysis and use of solar-radiation data in Nicaragua; another focused on the exploration of wind-energy potential in Cuba. WMO participated in the sixth session of the United Nations Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (Geneva, 18-20 March) and was represented at a symposium on the status and prospects of such energy sources in the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) region (Sophia Antipolis, France, 29 June-3 July). WMO also participated in a workshop on aspects of energy management in Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 16-20 November), organized by the Economic Commission for Africa. A workshop on the adverse effects on climate of urbanization and environmental quality (São Paulo, Brazil, 7-11 December) discussed building climatology and activities in environmental analysis and urbanization in Brazil.

Activities under WCIP were carried out by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) in co-operation with WMO and in 1987 focused on greenhouse gases—radiatively active constituents in the atmosphere which collectively increase the temperature of the lower atmosphere. The Advisory Group on Greenhouse Gases, jointly established by the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU), UNEP and WMO, at its second session (Paris, 14-16 December), discussed climate change, the activities and report of the World Commission on Environment and Development (see p. 660) and plans for the second World Climate Conference (see below).

WCRP was conducted jointly by WMO and ICSU to determine the extent of climate predictability and the extent of man's influence on climate. Organized according to successive scientific goals or streams of climate research, each corresponding to different time scales, WCRP dealt with: the physical basis for predicting weather anomalies (on a time scale of one to two months); variability of the global climate, particularly resulting from interaction with the tropical oceans (on a time scale of several months to several years); and characterization of variations in the atmospheric climate and assessment of the potential response of climate to either natural or man-made influences (on a time scale of several decades). The main WCRP projects included: global climate analysis, research on individual climate processes, study of the tropical ocean and global atmosphere, a world ocean circulation experiment and studies of climate forcings and of changes in global ecosystems.

As decided by the Tenth Congress and the Executive Council, detailed planning started for a second World Climate Conference in 1990. The Conference was to review experience gained and the programmes undertaken during WCP's first decade, and focus on the benefits of climate applications and the global issues associated with possible climate changes.

Research and development

The Tenth Congress approved, for the WMO Research and Development Programme, priority areas identified by previous Congress sessions, which included research in weather prediction, tropical meteorology, environmental pollution, and cloud physics and weather modification. The responsibility for promoting and co-ordinating such activities lay with the Commission for Atmospheric Sciences (CAS).

The Congress recognized that CAS had contributed to promoting the use of research results in members' operational activities, in particular those regarding weather analysis and forecasting. The Executive Council commended the work of the CAS Working Group on Short- and Medium-range Weather Prediction Research for carrying out priority study projects. Participants at a WMO workshop on significant weather elements prediction and objective interpretation methods (Toulouse, France, 22-26 June) exchanged experiences and the methods used in forecasting significant weather elements; papers on the application of artificial intelligence and expert systems in weather prediction were delivered for the first time at a WMO meeting. At a WMO symposium on mesoscale analysis and forecasting (Vancouver, Canada, 17-19 August), participants exchanged results and ideas on developments in very short-range forecasting (0-12 hours).

The value of annual progress reports on numerical weather prediction and the publication of the Programme on Short- and Medium-range Weather Prediction Research report series was reiterated by the Executive Council. In 1987, the following technical reports were prepared and distributed: development of mesoscale models for weather elements prediction; Mediterranean cyclones and their influence on the weather and climate; extended abstracts of papers presented at the Toulouse workshop (see above); and papers presented at a WMO workshop on limited-area fine-mesh models for the Mediterranean region (Erice, Italy, 17-20 November 1986).

The Tenth Congress noted the progress made within the Programme on Long-range Weather Forecasting Research towards achieving a significant level of skill in long-range forecasting by the end of the decade and ensuring that the methodologies were transferred to member States. The second WMO workshop on the diagnosis and prediction of monthly and seasonal atmospheric variations over the globe, combined with a symposium on ocean-atmosphere interactions relevant to long-range forecasting (Toulouse, 15-19 June), focused on ocean-atmosphere aspects.

Under the Tropical Meteorology Research Programme, attention focused on the development of numerical weather prediction (NWP) in the tropics, including training meteorologists from tropical countries. A WMO training workshop on NWP for the tropics (Tallahassee, Florida, United States, 8-26 June) enabled participants to acquire experience with NWP theory and practice. The Steering Committee for Tropical Limited-area Weather Prediction Modelling (Tallahassee, 22 and 23 June) reviewed progress in the development of multi-level tropical limited-area models (LAMS). Following the directives of the Tenth Congress and the Executive Council, the CAS Working Group on Tropical Meteorology continued to monitor ongoing priority study projects with the collaboration of activity centres and assisted in organizing international activities including: a long-term project for Asian and African monsoon studies (New Delhi, India, and Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia); research and monitoring of moisture budget studies in the Sahel (regional training centre for agrometeorology and operational hydrology and their applications (AGRHYMET), the French Meteorological Service and the University of Reading (United Kingdom)); a study project on developing multi-level tropical LAMS (Australia, India, Japan and Malaysia); a study project on rain-producing systems in Central America (Costa Rica); radiation flux studies in the tropics (activity centres were to be determined); and tropical cyclone research (Colorado State University, United States).

The 1987 WMO Research Award for Young Scientists was conferred upon J. G. Papageorgiou (Greece) for his research work on a 3-D mesoscale model of planetary boundary layer including pollutant dispersion.

Concerning environmental pollution monitoring and research, new stations became operational in the Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network in China, Mongolia and Uruguay. A large number of stations received new sunphotometers, automatic rain-gauges and high-volume aerosol samplers. Some 50 stations participated in the high-precision monitoring of atmospheric carbon dioxide—a radiatively active trace gas. Other activities included a course on background air pollution measurements (Budapest, Hungary) and the issuance of publications.

An expert meeting (Laxenburg, Austria, 30 March-2 April) assessed the third phase (1984-1986) of the ECE/WMO/UNEP Co-operative Programme for the Monitoring and Evaluation of Long-range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe. Within UNEP's Long-term Pollution Monitoring and Research Programme in the Mediterranean, national research projects were supported and sampling equipment was provided to encourage Mediterranean countries to participate in a pilot project on the atmospheric transport and deposition of pollutants into the Mediterranean Sea. A workshop on airborne pollution of the Mediterranean (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 10-13 November) considered ongoing research and monitoring, programme proposals and recommendations for future activities.

The WMO/UNEP pilot project on integrated monitoring in temperate forest biosphere reserves continued at the Torres del Paine biosphere reserve (Chile) and Olympic National Park (United States), putting into operation sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide monitors and carrying out extensive sampling of biological material. A WMO co-sponsored session of the Group of Experts on the scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution (Rome, Italy, 30 March-3 April), considering the activities of the WMO-led Working Group on the Interchange of Pollutants between the Atmosphere and the Oceans, requested it to provide a continuous review of the air-sea material exchange and to assess and compare the pathways and fluxes of major contaminants and nutrients into the global ocean and specific regions through the atmosphere with those from river outflows.

The main objectives of the WMO Cloud Physics and Weather Modification Research Programme were to promote sound scientific foundations for weather modification based on cloud physics and other investigations, and to provide the rationale underlying all aspects of weather modification. In 1987, planning was under way for the second (1988) international cloud modelling workshop.

The WMO Applications of Meteorology Programme comprised agricultural, marine and aeronautical meteorology.

Agricultural meteorology

The Agricultural Meteorology Programme assisted members in strengthening their agrometeorological services, allowing them to make optimum use of meteorological and hydrological information in agricultural production and protection. The Commission for Agricultural Meteorology provided advice on various aspects of the programme. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations continued to co-operate with the Commission in organizing workshops, training courses and seminars.

The Tenth Congress approved a Commission recommendation to include the food aspects of fisheries in that body's terms of reference and decided that the Agricultural Meteorology Programme should continue emphasizing the transfer of knowledge to and between developing countries, as well as training and educational activities. In 1987, efforts concentrated on follow-up to the decisions of the ninth (1986) session of the Commission for Agricultural Meteorology and on training through workshops and roving seminars on operational agrometeorology, including drought and desertification. A symposium on the agrometeorology of the potato crop (Wageningen, Netherlands, 8-11 April) considered agrometeorology and potato cultivation in temperate and tropical zones, agrometeorology and potato crop pests and diseases, and agrometeorology and potato harvest, storage and transport. A workshop on the application of meteorology to agroforestry systems planning and management (Nairobi, Kenya, 9-13 February) dealt with agroforestry issues relating to macroclimate, including environmental information, component response, productivity and stability, and soils; agroforestry and climate; component interactions in agroforestry systems in relation to microclimate, including wind, water balance and rainfall, and light and radiation; and environmental monitoring in agroforestry. A workshop on techniques used in agrometeorological studies in the humid tropics (Quito, 23-27 March) agreed on an outline of a final report of an agroclimatological survey. WMO organized with the Italian Meteorological Service a workshop for teacher training on agrometeorological instruments and methods of observation (Florence, 28 October-11 November).

Regarding desertification, WMO participated at a meeting of an ad hoc Panel of Experts on the Application of Science and Technology to the Study, Prevention, Monitoring and Combating of Drought and Desertification (Ashkhabad, USSR, 13-17 January), and was represented at the sixth session of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control (Geneva, 24-27 March) and at a meeting of the United Nations Inter-Agency Working Group on Desertification (Paris, 21-23 September).

Marine meteorology

The Marine Meteorology Programme promoted services over the high seas and coastal areas and the application of marine climatological information for planning marine activities.

The Tenth Congress agreed that under the Marine Meteorology and Associated Oceanographic Activities Programme, the highest priority project for the forthcoming four-year financial period (1988-1991) remained the provision of marine meteorological services, including the basic services required in support of the safety of life and property at sea and also the more specialized services required by specific marine user groups, which were often closely related to national economic and commercial activities.

By mid-year, under the International Maritime Satellite Organization (INMARSAT) system—which collected ships' weather reports by satellite and distributed meteorological information to shipping—some 5,700 ships, including 1,082 voluntary observing ships, were equipped with ship Earth stations. Other activities during the year included the publication of the Marine Cloud Album; further developments in the use of the INMARSAT system for collecting and disseminating marine meteorological and oceanographic information; strengthening and expansion of the work of the Drifting Buoy Co-operation Panel; and the development of proposals for improved long-term training activities in marine meteorology and physical oceanography.

The Tenth Congress agreed on the importance of the Integrated Global Ocean Services System, a joint WMO/Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission programme, in providing oceanographic data and services in support of operational users and WCRP. During the year, the System continued to monitor surface and sub-surface temperature, salinity and currents.

Aeronautical meteorology

The Aeronautical Meteorology Programme—aimed at assisting members plan, establish and operate aeronautical meteorological services required to ensure the safety, efficiency and economy of air navigation—was carried out in close co-operation with the International Civil Aviation Organization and other international organizations.

Throughout the year, activities were carried out along the lines approved by the Tenth Congress, taking into account the need to assist developing countries. The Congress approved an amendment to the WMO technical regulations, which became applicable on 19 November 1987 relating to: light intensity settings used for runway visual range assessment; identification of selected aerodromes and the deletion of the requirement for temperature circles on World Area Forecast System charts; transmission time of forecasts from regional area forecast centres to users; origination and dissemination of information concerning volcanic activity and volcanic ash clouds; and inclusion of wind-speed units in examples of the aviation meteorological figure codes.

The Commission for Aeronautical Meteorology Working Group on Advanced Techniques Applied to Aeronautical Meteorology, at its first meeting (Vancouver, 20 August), agreed that ongoing work in monitoring and verifying aerodrome forecasts should continue. The Group identified the following areas as meriting further attention: cloud-layer parameters, fog, visibility, precipitation intensity, precipitation phase, runway condition and temperature, and low-level winds in complex terrain. The first co-ordination meeting between the directors of national meteorological services in Africa and representatives of the Agency for Air Safety in Africa and Madagascar (Dakar, Senegal, 16-20 March) identified problems in co-ordinating meteorological services to user groups and adopted recommendations where specific planning, operational and implementation actions should be co-ordinated to avoid unnecessary duplication.

Hydrology and water resources

The Hydrology and Water Resources Programme promoted world-wide co-operation in evaluating water resources and assisted in their development through the co-ordination of hydrological networks and services, including data collection and processing, forecasting and warnings, and supply of meteorological and hydrological data for design purposes. Its three components were: the Operational Hydrology Programme (OHP); applications and services to water resources; and co-operation with water-related programmes of other international organizations.

OHP included activities such as measuring basic hydrological elements from networks of stations, collecting, processing and publishing basic hydrological data, hydrological forecasting and developing procedures and techniques supporting those activities.

Under the Hydrological Operational Multipurpose Subprogramme, which aimed to provide an international and systematic framework for the integration of techniques and procedures for collecting and processing hydrological data, the following were organized in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP): training seminar on flood forecasting (Budapest, 1-3 June); workshop on the use of microcomputers in operational hydrology (Suva, Fiji, 13-24 July); workshop on drought and low flows in Arab countries (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, 5-10 September); training seminar on a computer program for heat and pollution forecasting in rivers (Warsaw, Poland, 7-9 September); training seminar on data processing (Brussels, Belgium, 26-30 October); and workshop on tidal hydrometry (Rangoon, Burma, 9-20 November).

A large part of the activities in hydrology and water resources was carried out through the Commission for Hydrology, which meets quadrennially (it last met in 1984), operating through working groups of experts. In 1987, working groups met in anticipation of the Commission's 1988 session.

The programme on applications and services to water resources provided technical support for the water-related activities of the Tropical Cyclone Programme and WCP. The Third United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)/WMO International Conference on Hydrology and Scientific Bases of Water Resources Management (Geneva, March) reviewed UNESCO and WMO programmes in hydrology and water resources undertaken from 1981 to 1986. In order to meet future demands, the Conference saw an urgent need to strengthen hydrological services.

Education and training

Educational and training activities in meteorology and operational hydrology included: promoting the maintenance of high standards in the technical and scientific training of personnel; awarding fellowships; organizing training courses, seminars and workshops; preparing training publications; supporting WMO regional meteorological training centres; providing advice and assistance to members on education and training; and collaborating with other organizations.

In June, the WMO Executive Council re-established its panel of experts on education and training, which served as the advisory body on all aspects of the education and training activities. The regional meteorological training centres continued to provide education and training to personnel from developing countries; activities included arrangements for visiting scientists to assist some centres with specific aspects of training programmes, and the provision of textbooks and other publications.

At a symposium on education and training in meteorology with emphasis on the optimal use of meteorological information and products by all potential users (Shinfield Park, United Kingdom, 13-18 July), participants agreed on a set of 10 issues to promote actions to improve production of user-oriented meteorological products and services, as well as improve the capabilities of users to derive more benefits from those products and services.

Under fellowship funds from various sources administered by WMO in 1987, 162 fellows were trained. Assistance was also provided to 87 participants in various training events; 13 such events were organized during 1987 in 12 member countries. The topics covered meteorology and operational hydrology. In addition, WMO supported 24 events along with other organizations and agencies within and outside the United Nations system, universities and education and training institutions in member countries. Three new training publications and translations of four others were issued.

Technical co-operation

In 1987, under the WMO Technical Co-operation Programme, assistance was provided to 133 countries through UNDP, the WMO Voluntary Co-operation Programme (VCP), funds-in-trust arrangements and the WMO regular budget. A major problem facing the Programme was a decrease in overhead support occasioned by the rise in the Swiss franc/United States dollar exchange rate. The Executive Council provided supplemental funds to WMO to permit the Programme's continued administration at a reduced level. UNDP assistance was provided to 121 countries at a value of $12 million. Some large-scale projects carried out during 1987 were directly related to expanding and strengthening national meteorological and hydrological services but a shift was discernible towards applications-oriented projects, such as those in agrometeorology, energy and operational hydrology. The project for assistance to drought-stricken countries in eastern and southern Africa and the project for strengthening agrometeorological and hydrological services in the Sahelian countries continued. Other large-scale projects emphasized the evaluation of water resources, flood forecasting, meteorological services for agriculture, meteorological training and research and improving facilities for detecting tropical cyclones. In 1987, under UNDP sectoral support in meteorology and operational hydrology, missions to 32 countries were undertaken at the request of UNDP resident representatives or government authorities to assist in the planning of new UNDP projects.

VCP was maintained by voluntary contributions of members, in the form of either equipment and services or cash. Support in 1987 was given mainly for WWW and training activities. The total value of aid provided under VCP in 1987 was almost $6 million.

Considerable assistance was rendered in the form of equipment and services for the development of observational and telecommunication facilities; many long-term fellowships for training were also awarded. The number of countries which received assistance under VCP in 1987 was 103. A total of 33 VCP projects, mostly in support of WWW activities, were completed during the year.

Under the WMO regular budget, 31 fellowships were awarded in 1987 and financial support was given for participants in group training, technical conferences and study tours. Under a trust fund project with Italy, several activities were undertaken in the AGRHYMET programme, including a pilot project in agrometeorology in the Niger; a telecommunication survey in the countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee for Drought Control in the Sahel; a workshop in agrometeorology for specialists from Sahelian countries; and preparation of meteorological data sets on specific situations in the Sahel for further study. Other trust funds continued with Belgium, Finland, Honduras, the Netherlands, Switzerland and the United States. The Centre for Tropical Agronomical Research and Training financed a regional project in basin management in Central America. Under the Technical Co-operation Programme, 469 fellows received training—187 under VCP, 172 under UNDP, 66 under the regular budget and 44 under trust funds.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1987, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding 34 professionals on technical assistance projects) on permanent and fixed-term contracts stood at 283. Of these, 129 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 61 nationalities) and 154 in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The year 1987 was the fourth and final year of the ninth financial period (1984-1987), for which the Ninth (1983) WMO Congress had established a maximum expenditure of $77.5 million. It had authorized additional expenditures for increases in salaries and allowances consequent upon similar increases approved by the United Nations. Also, additional expenditures of no more than $500,000 each were authorized to provide for circumstances such as losses from changes in currency exchange rates and to meet unforeseen programme activities of an urgent character. The budget for 1987 was based on an exchange rate of 1.90 Swiss francs to 1 United States dollar.

The regular budget amounted to $27,577,796, including supplementary estimates. Actual regular budget expenditure for 1987 was $24,199,197. The total regular budget expenditure for the four-year financial period (1984-1987) amounted to $80,876,125.

The 1987 budget for the technical co-operation programmes was $3,221,338. Of this, only $2,214,134 was financed from UNDP support costs reimbursements and other extrabudgetary sources.

The Tenth (1987) Congress approved significant changes in the financial regulations, including budgeting in Swiss francs (SwF) and the change from annual to biennial budgets. It established a maximum expenditure of SwF 170 million for 1988-1991.

In June, the Executive Council approved a budget of SwF 82,128,300 for the 1988-1989 biennium.

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

In 1987, the International Maritime Organization (IMO) held the fifteenth session of its biennial Assembly from 9 to 20 November at its headquarters in London, adopting 39 resolutions, the majority of which were aimed at improving maritime safety and preventing marine pollution. The Assembly adopted the 1988-1989 IMO budget and work programme and approved the long-term work plan of the organization up to 1994. In adopting the budget, the Assembly decided that it would be based on the pound sterling (see p. 1285).

IMO membership rose to 131 during 1987, following the admission of Bolivia on 6 July; the organization also had one associate member.

Activities in 1987

At its June 1987 session, the IMO Council, the organization's governing body between Assembly sessions, chose Moustafa Fawzi (Egypt) as the winner of the International Maritime Prize for 1986. The Prize is awarded annually to the individual or organization judged to have made the most significant contribution to IMO's work and objectives.

The theme for World Maritime Day, which was celebrated at IMO headquarters on 24 September, was "Maritime legislation for safer shipping and cleaner oceans".

World Maritime University

In March, the largest class since its opening in 1983—102 students—was enrolled at the World Maritime University, Malmö, Sweden. The University was established under the auspices of IMO to provide advanced training for senior personnel, mainly from developing countries, involved in maritime administration, technical management of shipping companies and maritime education. On 7 December 1987, the fourth class—85 students from 48 countries—who had joined the University in 1985 graduated.

A donation of $1 million made to the University in 1987 by Ryoichi Sasakawa, Chairman of the Japan Shipbuilding Industry Foundation, was to be used to establish a special fund known as the Sasakawa Fellowship Fund, which would provide fellowships for eight students a year from Asia and the Pacific to enrol at the University for two-year courses between 1988 and 1992. In addition, the Maritime International Co-operation Centre of Japan and IMO signed an agreement under which the Centre was to offer on-the-job training each year to four University students.

Prevention of pollution

Amendments to annex II of the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the 1978 Protocol (MARPOL 73/78), entered into force on 6 April. The amendments, dealing with the discharge of noxious liquid substances both as cargo into receiving tanks on shore and as wastes into the sea, took into account technological change made since 1973 and made the annex's implementation easier and more effective. A symposium on reception facilities for noxious liquid substances (London, 13-15 May), organized by IMO with the support of the Swedish International Development Authority, provided background information on annex II to maritime and environmental administrators, representatives of shipping and chemical industries and technical, operations and administrative managers of ports and terminals which handled bulk chemicals.

On 30 December 1987, the United States deposited its instrument of acceptance to annex V of the Convention, bringing the number of countries accepting the annex to 31 with 50.22 per cent of world tonnage. The requirement of annex V having been met, under the terms of MARPOL 73/78, it was to enter into force one year later, on 31 December 1988. The annex bans the dumping into the sea of plastics and restricts the dumping of other garbage.

An amendment designating the Gulf of Aden as a special area under annex I of MARPOL 73/78 (concerning the prevention of oil pollution) was adopted by the contracting parties attending the twenty-fifth (1987) session of the Marine Environment Protection Committee. The amendment was to enter into force on 1 April 1989.

Amendments to the International Bulk Chemical Code and the Bulk Chemical Code, extending coverage of both to pollution as well as safety aspects, entered into force on 6 April 1987.

Meeting at IMO headquarters (27 April-1 May), experts from 13 contracting and non-contracting parties to the Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter (London Dumping Convention) and from the Oslo Commission considered the efficiency and control of incinerators (land-based and at sea), the environmental impact of incinerator emissions and alternative technologies for hazardous waste treatment and disposal.

A meeting of Mediterranean coastal States (Athens, Greece, 7-11 September) adopted guidelines for co-operation in combating marine oil pollution in the Mediterranean Sea. The guidelines were prepared by the Regional Oil Combating Centre for the Mediterranean Sea (Malta), operated by IMO on behalf of the United Nations Environment Programme.

During the year, IMO participated in a number of seminars and workshops concerned with preventing marine pollution as part of its programme of technical co-operation. A training course on analytical techniques required for combating marine pollution by hydrocarbons (Jakarta, Indonesia, September/October) was organized by Lemigas Laboratory (Jakarta) and IMO, with support from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). A seminar on controlling the disposal of waste at sea (Mexico City, September/October) focused on the state of marine pollution in the wider Caribbean region and reviewed the scientific, technical and legal basis of existing national and international instruments. Classroom training was provided at a seminar on marine pollution prevention, control and response (Dakar, Senegal, November). A regional seminar on the control of waste disposal at sea (Bangkok, Thailand, 14-18 December) outlined international regulations and transferred technical experience in the handling, treatment and disposal of wastes.

Ship security and safety of life at sea

In November 1987, the IMO Assembly adopted amendments to the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1972, affecting rules dealing with vessels of special construction, vessels constrained by their draught and traffic separation schemes. Two regulations from the annex dealing with lights were also amended. The amendments were to enter into force on 19 November 1989 unless rejected by more than one third of the contracting parties.

The Assembly decided that IMO should prepare safety measures to prevent a repetition of one of the worst maritime disasters in recent years—the 6 March capsizing and sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise, a British roll-on/roll-off car ferry, off the port of Zeebrugge, Belgium, which resulted in the loss of more than 180 lives. It was expected that these safety measures would take the form of amendments to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1974 (SOLAS Convention), which were to be considered by IMO's senior technical body, the Maritime Safety Committee, in April 1988. The first group of proposed amendments to SOLAS presented to IMO by the United Kingdom included the mandatory provision of indicators to show that loading doors and other openings were closed; the remote surveillance of cargo spaces by television; ventilation arrangements for vehicle spaces; vehicle-deck operating procedures; and the provision of supplementary lighting.

Following the first reading of the draft convention on the suppression of unlawful acts against the safety of maritime navigation, the IMO Council in June approved plans for an international conference to consider the adoption of the draft. The conference was scheduled for March 1988 at Rome, Italy.

Facilitation

The IMO Facilitation Committee (seventeenth session, 14-18 September) adopted several amendments to the International Convention on Facilitation of International Maritime Traffic, 1965, affecting a number of standards and recommended practices. The amendments were to enter into force on 1 January 1989 unless prior to October 1988 they were rejected by at least one third of the contracting parties. One amendment was aimed at facilitating disaster relief work and other emergency assistance and preventing marine pollution.

The Facilitation Committee agreed that a series of seminars should be organized in African countries during the following four years to strengthen and develop maritime industries there. The project was to be funded by UNDP.

Athens Convention

The 1974 Athens Convention relating to the Carriage of Passengers and Their Luggage by Sea entered into force on 28 April 1987. The Convention established uniform international rules for providing compensation to passengers for death, personal injury or loss of luggage resulting from a maritime accident.

Publications

Among publications issued by IMO during 1987 were: Global Maritime Distress and Safety System (English, French, Russian and Spanish); IMO Search and Rescue Manual, 1987 edition (English, French and Spanish); Index of IMO Resolutions (first edition); International Code for the Construction and Equipment of Ships Carrying Dangerous Chemicals in Bulk (English and Spanish); and Manual on Chemi- cal Pollution, Section I—Problem Assessment and Response Arrangements.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1987, the IMO secretariat employed 278 full-time staff members at headquarters (excluding those on technical assistance projects). Of these, 103 were in the Professional and higher categories and 175 were in the General Service and related categories. There were 32 Professional and 14 General Service staff employed on technical assistance projects.

Budget

Although the United States dollar had been used for budget purposes since IMO became operational in 1959, some 86 per cent of its expenditure was in pounds sterling by 1987. With currency fluctuations making it increasingly difficult to manage the budget, the IMO Assembly decided that from 1 January 1988 the budget would be based on the pound.

In 1987, the Assembly adopted a budget of 21,600,000 pounds for 1988-1989, with 10,574,100 pounds for 1988 and 11,053,100 pounds for 1989.

Chapter XV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

During 1987, membership of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) increased to 117 with the accession of Paraguay. The number of States parties to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property and to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works remained at 97 and 76, respectively. Italy became party to The Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs, bringing membership to 21. The Dominican Republic and France became party to the Rome Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations, raising membership to 31. Benin became party to the Patent Co-operation Treaty (PCT), increasing membership to 40. The Republic of Korea became party to the Geneva Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms against Unauthorized Duplication of Their Phonograms, bringing the total number to 40. The Netherlands and Australia became party to the Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Micro-organisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure, bringing the number of States parties to 21. At year's end, total membership in WIPO and its various Unions, taken together, was 130.

Seventeen treaties in the two main fields of intellectual property were administered by WIPO in 1987. They are listed below in order of adoption:

Industrial property: Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; Madrid Agreement for the Repression of False or Deceptive Indications of Source on Goods; Madrid Agreement concerning the International Registration of Marks; The Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs; Nice Agreement concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purpose of the Registration of Marks; Lisbon Agreement for the Protection of Appellations of Origin and Their International Registration; Locarno Agreement establishing an International Classification for Industrial Designs; PCT; Strasbourg Agreement concerning the International Patent Classification (IPC); Trademark Registration Treaty; Vienna Agreement establishing an International Classification of the Figurative Elements of Marks; Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Micro-organisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure; Nairobi Treaty on the Protection of the Olympic Symbol.

Copyright and neighboring rights: Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; Rome Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations; Geneva Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms against Unauthorized Duplication of Their Phonograms; Brussels Convention relating to the Distribution of Programme-Carrying Signals Transmitted by Satellite.

At their eighteenth series of meetings, held at Geneva from 21 to 30 September 1987, the governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by it approved reports on activities and the programme and budget for 1988-1989.

Activities in 1987

Development co-operation activities

During 1987, WIPO co-operated with most developing countries and with intergovernmental organizations in their development projects relating to intellectual property, by providing assistance in the preparation of legislation, or establishment or modernization of national or regional institutions, including patent documentation and information services.

Three WIPO permanent programmes, supervised by intergovernmental permanent committees, provided the framework for development co-operation relating to industrial property, patent information and copyright and neighbouring rights.

Regarding industrial property and related fields, WIPO organized national, regional, subregional and interregional meetings, in co-operation with Governments and/or organizations, at its headquarters in Geneva and at Canberra (Australia), Vienna (Austria), Rio de Janeiro (Brazil), Douala and Yaoundé (Cameroon), Santiago (Chile), Beijing (China), Bogotá (Colombia), Rarotonga (Cook Islands), Abidjan (Côte d'Ivoire), Aden (Democratic Yemen), Strasbourg (France), Munich (Federal Republic of Germany), Calcutta and New Delhi (India), Jakarta (Indonesia), Amman (Jordan), Tripoli (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya), Kuala Lumpur (Malaysia), The Hague (Netherlands), Managua (Nicaragua), Niamey (Niger), Abuja (Nigeria), Islamabad (Pakistan), Asunción (Paraguay), Lima (Peru), Seoul (Republic of Korea), Madrid (Spain), Colombo (Sri Lanka), Khartoum (Sudan), Mbabane (Swaziland), Stockholm (Sweden), Damascus (Syrian Arab Republic), Bangkok (Thailand), Moscow (USSR), Washington, D.C. (United States), Montevideo (Uruguay), Hanoi (Viet Nam) and Harare (Zimbabwe).

Medals and prizes for inventors and promoters of innovation were awarded by WIPO at national and international exhibitions or contests for inventors and special ceremonies held in Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, El Salvador, France, Iraq, Japan, Paraguay, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Spain, the USSR and the United States.

Continuing a programme started in 1975, 345 state-of-the-art search reports on technology disclosed in patent documents and related literature were provided to developing countries free of charge under agreements concluded between WIPO and contributing industrial property offices in developed countries. Most of the reports were prepared by the patent offices of Australia, Austria, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, Switzerland, the USSR and the International Bureau—the WIPO secretariat.

Regarding copyright and related fields, WIPO organized national, regional, subregional and interregional meetings at WIPO headquarters, and at Canberra and Sydney (Australia), Bogota, Jakarta, Stockholm, Zurich (Switzerland) and London.

WIPO training programmes continued to grow, with 296 fellowships in industrial property granted in 1987 to nationals of 87 developing countries and 83 fellowships granted in copyright to nationals from 46 developing countries, in addition to individuals recommended by various organizations. In the industrial property sector, 28 countries, 5 intergovernmental organizations and 3 other institutions provided individual and group training. Concerning copyright, 13 countries and 1 organization provided such training.

Industrial property

The second, third and fourth consultative meetings on the revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property took place at Geneva in January, May and September, respectively, to revise the Convention by introducing new provisions and changing existing ones to meet the needs of developing countries more effectively.

The Working Group on Links between the Madrid Agreement and the Proposed (European) Community Trade Mark (third session, Geneva, June) discussed a memorandum containing the drafts of two protocols aimed at modifying the Madrid Agreement to make it acceptable to the four States members of the European Communities which were not members of the Madrid Union, and at establishing a link between the Madrid Agreement and the future Community Trade Mark, enabling the simultaneous use of the two systems. Since the degree of progress made seemed sufficient to envisage the convocation of a diplomatic conference for the adoption of texts along the lines of the proposed protocol, the Assembly of the Madrid Union decided in September that a diplomatic conference should be convened in 1989.

A symposium on the effective protection of industrial property rights (Geneva, June), organized by WIPO, dealt with the means by which industrial property rights were enforced under various laws and the possibilities of strengthening such enforcement and rendering it more effective.

In June, WIPO, in co-operation with Cornell University (United States), organized a symposium on developments concerning the legal protection of biotechnological inventions. The Committee of Experts on Biotechnological Inventions and Industrial Property (Geneva, June) held discussions taking into account replies received from Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to two questionnaires prepared by the International Bureau; the Committee analysed the existing situation with respect to the legal protection of biotechnological inventions and presented possible solutions to specific problems.

Other expert committees meeting at Geneva in 1987 dealt with issues related to intellectual property in respect of integrated circuits, protection against counterfeiting and harmonization of certain provisions in laws for the protection of inventions. In addition, work continued on updating IPC and other classifications concerning industrial designs or registration of trade and service marks.

During 1987, 9,610 international applications were filed under PCT in 28 receiving offices. The PCT Gazette was published fortnightly and a special issue was put out in July to consolidate general information. The total number of registrations of marks under the Madrid Agreement was 10,186. To that figure should be added 3,611 under the Agreement's Nice and Stockholm Acts. Registrations and renewals therefore totalled 13,797, compared with 17,409 in 1986. The total number of changes recorded in the International Register of Marks was 18,233 as compared with 18,306 in 1986.

Copyright and neighbouring rights

Activities in copyright and neighbouring rights included the convening, jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), of committees of governmental experts on copyright questions in respect of dramatic, choreographic and musical works (Paris, May), works of applied art (Geneva, October) and the printed word (Geneva, December). The Joint UNESCO/WIPO Consultative Committee on the Access by Developing Countries to Works Protected by Copyright (Geneva, December) discussed an aide-mémoire on the use of such works and a report on assistance given to developing countries in obtaining necessary authorizations to use protected works. Two other meetings were held at Geneva—the Executive Committee of the Berne Union (June) and the Intergovernmental Committee of the International Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations (July).

Publications

The International Bureau continued to issue the following publications regularly, in various languages: Copyright, Industrial Property, International Designs Bulletin, Les Marques internationales, WIPO Newsletter, PCT Gazette, Les Appellations d'origine, Intellectual Property in Asia and the Pacific and the Collection of Industrial Property and Copyright Laws and Treaties.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1987, WIPO employed 293 full-time staff members. Of these, 105 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 39 member States) and 188 were in the General Service category. In addition, 104 experts were employed by WIPO on technical assistance projects during the year.

Budget

The principal sources of the WIPO budget—approximately 99 million Swiss francs for the 1986-

1987 biennium—are ordinary and special contributions from member States and income derived from international registration services (primarily under PCT and the Madrid Agreement). Ordinary contributions are paid on the basis of a class-and-unit system by members of the Paris, Berne, Nice, Locarno, IPC and Vienna Unions and by WIPO member States not belonging to any of the Unions.

States members of the six Unions are placed in seven classes (I to VII) to determine the amounts of their ordinary contributions. WIPO States not members of any of the Unions are placed in three classes (A, B or C) for the same purposes. States in Class I or A pay the highest contributions of their group and those in Class VII or C, the lowest. The class in which a State is placed is decided solely by the State and the rights of each are the same, irrespective of the class.

The contribution class for each member State of WIPO and of the Paris or Berne Unions, together with the amount of the ordinary contribution of each State, is given in Annex I below (the class indicated for the Paris Union also applies to the Nice, Locarno, IPC and Vienna Unions). Members of one or more Unions do not pay separate contributions to WIPO; the Unions themselves contribute towards the costs of WIPO's International Bureau and programme of legal-technical assistance.

Income and expenditure

For summary figures of income and expenditure for the biennium 1986-1987, see YUN 1986, p. 1191.

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) completed its tenth year of operations in 1987, during which it continued its efforts to improve the nutritional and living standards of the rural poor in low-income, food-deficit countries through agricultural and rural development projects aimed at providing smallholder farmers, the landless, poor rural women, artisanal fishermen, nomadic herdsman and agro-pastoralists with the necessary production means and institutional support. Particular attention was given to restoring agricultural development capacity to sub-Saharan countries. The Fund endeavoured to simplify project design, seeking the active participation of beneficiaries in the projects it supported from the design stage onwards. IFAD continued to co-operate with non-governmental organizations in all its participatory and institution-building efforts. In its operations IFAD pooled resources from developing and developed countries and promoted the transfer of successful experiences and technologies among developing countries.

Membership of IFAD remained at 142 in 1987. Of these, 20 were in Category I (developed countries), 12 in Category II (oil-exporting developing countries) and 110 in Category III (other developing countries).

The IFAD Executive Board held three regular sessions in 1987 (April, September and December), approving loans for 24 projects, including six under the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification (SPA), and 39 technical assistance grants. The Board reviewed the management of IFAD's investment portfolio, approved some changes governing bond trading and revised limits affecting the cash and investment portfolio.

The Board heard oral presentations by the IFAD President on progress in the deliberations of the High-level Intergovernmental Committee on IFAD's Future Financial Basis and Structure, which met three times during 1987. In December, the Board noted the Committee Chairman's report on preliminary findings and forwarded it to the Governing Council's eleventh (1988) session. Also in December, the Board considered a proposal to establish an evaluation committee and decided to establish it for a two-year trial period, with a membership of three members from each category

During the year, a series of events and activities organized in celebration of IFAD's tenth anniversary included workshops, seminars, art exhibitions, the issuance of commemorative stamps and special messages delivered by a number of heads of State and Government.

Since 1979, approved loans have been denominated in special drawing rights (SDRS), an international unit of account. Dollar figures in this chapter are based on the SDR/United States dollar conversion rate at 31 December 1987 (SDR 1 = $1.41866). However, approximate amounts in United States dollars for loans approved since 1979 have been based on the SDR/dollar exchange rate at the time of loan negotiations.

During its first decade, IFAD committed a total of SDR 2,167.5 million ($2,529.2 million) for 220 projects and 262 technical assistance grants in 89 developing countries. This included SDR 85.9 million ($107.2 million) for 11 loans and 18 technical assistance grants approved under SPA, which was launched in 1986 in response to the critical situation of the sub-Saharan region.^a Recipient Governments provided $4,100 million and other external assistance agencies a further $3,400 million of co-financing.

Total regional lending under the Regular Programme and SPA during IFAD's first decade was SDR 651.1 million ($753.9 million) for Africa, or 31.6 per cent of total lending; SDR 785.9 million ($919.7 million) for Asia, or 38.1 per cent; SDR 292 million ($347.9 million) for Latin America and the Caribbean, or 14.1 per cent; and SDR 333.4 million ($386.9 million) for the Near East and North Africa, or 16.2 per cent. Most loans (65.4 per cent) were made on highly concessional terms, with a service charge of 1 per cent per annum, a 50-year maturity period and a 10-year grace period. Another 27.9 per cent of the loans were made on intermediate terms (at 4 per cent, 20 years maturity and five years grace) and the remaining 6.7 per cent on ordinary terms (8 per cent, 15-18 years maturity and three years grace).

Resources

billion to cover operations during 1978 to 1983. Because of delay in concluding negotiations on the second replenishment of resources, the first had to be stretched over four years (1981-1984) instead of three years. Contributions pledged for the second replenishment, which had come into effect in November 1986, amounted to $488 million for the period 1985 to 1987: Category I countries pledged $276 million, Category II $184 million and Category III $28 million.

During the year, contributions pledged to SAP reached $240 million, nearing its target of $300 million.

Investment

As at 31 December 1987, IFAD liquid assets totalled $1,081.9 million. Of this amount, $14.1 million was held on demand deposit and $608.2 million (56 per cent) was held on deposit with, or in obligations issued by, commercial banks, while the balance of $459.6 million was in bonds and similar securities issued or guaranteed by member Governments. While the maximum maturity for any of these investments was seven years, the average length of the investment portfolio was 18 months.

The Executive Board approved in late 1987 a recommendation of IFAD's management to make active portfolio management a regular part of investment activity. It also approved management's recommendation to extend the maximum remaining life-to-maturity on individual investments from 5 to 10 years providing that the average remaining life-to-maturity of the total investment portfolio did not exceed five years.

The decline of interest rates on most major currencies which began in late 1984 persisted through 1987, limiting the growth of IFAD's investment income. The average rate of return for 1987 was 7.65 per cent versus 9.25 per cent for 1986. However, IFAD's investment income was boosted in 1987 by capital gains of approximately $1.8 million equivalent earned on bond switches executed as part of the programme of active portfolio management.

Activities in 1987

The new loans approved for 24 projects in 1987 totalled SDR 164.6 million ($212.3 million), including SDR 48.8 million ($62.8 million) from SPA. The 39 technical assistance grants came to SDR 10.8 million ($14.6 million), including 12 grants of SDR 4.2 million ($5.96 million) from SPA resources.

The value of all loans and grants increased almost 55 per cent in 1987 compared with 1986. With lower resources on which to draw in 1987, the Fund was none the less able to carry out more projects than in its initial years (1978-1982), when resources were at a higher level and the Fund carried out annual operations averaging SDR 254 million ($307 million), for fewer projects (22 a year) and technical assistance grants (24 a year).

During the year, six projects under SPA and seven under the Regular Programme were approved for sub-Saharan Africa, involving SDR 90.6 million and dealing with agricultural rehabilitation, improved smallholder and artisanal fisheries production and soil and water conservation.

The six projects approved for Asia, for SDR 44.6 million, emphasized irrigation development, crop diversification and income-generating projects for marginal groups among the poor, especially women.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, five loans totalling SDR 27.4 million provided assistance for agricultural development among smallholder farmers and the landless.

One project approved in the Near East for SDR 2 million aimed at providing comprehensive extension for agricultural activities to improve the working conditions of women.

Concerning technical assistance, IFAD provided grants for agricultural research and training. In 1987, support for agricultural research programmes totalled $4.3 million, including one new research project aimed at developing and extending technology for the cultivation of azolla, a low-cost fertilizer, by rice-growing small farmers.

The Fund continued its special programming missions, which performed a major role in programme development through their policy and strategy formulation tasks. The missions also identified specific projects to strengthen the pipeline for IFAD-initiated projects and to enhance their co-financing possibilities. In 1987, five missions were carried out in Ecuador, Ghana, Nepal, the Philippines and Yemen.

Income and expenditure

Total revenue for 1987 was $93.1 million, consisting of $68.4 million of investment income, including gains on sales of investments of $1.7 million, and $24.7 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total expenses for the year amounted to $29.6 million, compared with a budget before contingency of $32.9 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year was $63.6 million.

Secretariat

At the end of December 1987, the IFAD secretariat totalled 169, of whom 71 were executive or technical staff (Professional category and above)—drawn from 38 nationalities—and 98 were support staff (General Service category).

Chapter XVII

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

In 1987, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued its activities in industrial operations, strategies and promotion. Special programmes included the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) (1980-1990), assistance to the least developed countries (LDCs), industrial co-operation among developing countries, the integration of women in industrial development and co-operation with industrial enterprises and non-governmental organizations.

The UNIDO General Conference, at its second session (Bangkok, Thailand, 9-13 November), dealt with UNIDO's work programme and finances, taking measures to alleviate the financial crisis which had been facing the agency since mid-1986 due to delayed payment of assessed contributions by some members and to a dramatic fall in the value of the United States dollar against the Austrian schilling. As member States were assessed in dollars, but most of UNIDO's spending was in schillings, the Conference adopted a split-currency system of assessing member States' contributions to the regular budget for the 1988-1989 biennium, by which they would be assessed in both currencies. The proportion was to be decided each biennium by the General Conference based on secretariat estimates of the share of regular budget spending in each currency. In addition, the Conference approved a Working Capital Fund of $9 million for 1988-1989 and a supplementary estimate of $3.1 million for 1986-1987 to cover resource shortfalls linked to the dollar's depreciation.

These actions were taken on the recommendation of the Industrial Development Board (resumed second session, 16 March; third session, 30 June-3 July; resumed third session, 12 October). The Board recommended adopting a $116.6 million net biennial regular budget, representing a negative real growth of 3.2 per cent for 1988-1989, as well as an operational budget of $34.2 million for the same period.

On 12 November 1987, the Conference approved net appropriations of $32,895,100 plus AS 1,480,937,770 (total equivalent $154,283,442) for 1988-1989, based on an exchange rate of AS 12.20 = $US 1.00.

The Conference reaffirmed the need for co-operation between the developed and developing countries to boost third world industrialization and dealt with: new concepts and approaches for cooperation in industrial development; IDDA; development of human resources and technological capabilities; finance for industrial development; alleviating the effects of external debt on industrialization; UNIDO's co-ordinating role in industrial development activities within the United Nations system; assistance to LDCs, and economic and technical co-operation among developing countries (ECDC and TCDC); technical assistance to the South African national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and to the Namibian and Palestinian peoples; and integrating women in industrial development.

As at 31 December 1987, 149 States were members of UNIDO. New members in 1987 were Costa Rica (26 October), Saint Vincent and the Grenadines (30 March) and Vanuatu (17 August). On 24 December 1987, Australia notified the Secretary-General that it intended to withdraw from UNIDO as of 31 December 1988.

Industrial strategies and operations

A total of 1,822 technical assistance projects were implemented or under implementation in 1987, at a value of $97.7 million, compared with $99.6 million for 1986. Activities were funded from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) main programmes (71.3 per cent), UNDP-administered trust funds (1.2 per cent), UNIDO and other trust funds (25.4 per cent) and the regular programme budget (2.1 per cent).

Africa, including African Arab States, accounted for 33.3 per cent of project delivery; Asia and the Pacific, 38.8 per cent; Arab States, excluding African Arab States, 12.9 per cent; the Americas, 9.5 per cent; Europe, 2.7 per cent; and global and interregional projects, 12.6 per cent.

Chemical industries accounted for $24.6 million of technical co-operation expenditures; engineering industries, $14.4 million; institutional infrastructure, $10.6 million; agro-industries, $9.4 million; metallurgical industries, $8.6 million; training, $6.1 million; industrial planning, $5.9 million; feasibility studies, $5.5 million; industrial management and rehabilitation, $4 million; and other activities, $8.6 million.

By project component, personnel accounted for $41.9 million (42.8 per cent); equipment, $24.5 million (25 per cent); fellowships and training, $14.5 million (14.9 per cent); sub-contracts, $14.4 million (14.7 per cent); and miscellaneous, $2.5 million (2.6 per cent).

UNIDO assistance to African countries focused on long-range industrial plans, feasibility studies and institutional infrastructure. In the Americas, agro-based industries were strengthened, and in Asia and the Pacific, engineering, agro-based and metallurgical industries received special attention. Chemical industries were emphasized in the Arab States.

Implementation of industrial operations

Agro-industries. Technical co-operation expenditures for agro-industries were $9.4 million in 1987, with some 58 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of the total, Africa accounted for 20.3 per cent; the Americas, 23 per cent; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 6 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 48.7 per cent; Europe, 0.5 per cent; and interregional/global, 6.1 per cent. A total of 223 projects were completed or being implemented.

Activities focused on textile and garment production, food processing and packaging, leather products, and agricultural and marine-based raw materials and meat by-products utilization.

Chemical industries. Under chemical industries, technical co-operation expenditures amounted to $24.6 million in 1987, with about 78 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 37.5 per cent; the Americas, 4.3 per cent; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 25.4 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 48.3 per cent; Europe, 3.8 per cent; and interregional/global, 5 per cent. A total of 368 projects were completed or under implementation.

Activities continued to concentrate in the broad subsectors of building materials and construction industries; petrochemical industries and basic chemicals; fertilizers; pesticides; pharmaceuticals; pulp and paper; biofuels, synthetic fuels and organic chemicals; and environmental protection in industry and recycling.

Engineering industries. In engineering industries, technical co-operation expenditures amounted to $14.4 million in 1987, with about 90 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 20.5 per cent; the Americas, 4.2 per cent; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 6.8 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 68.1 per cent; Europe, 3.8 per cent; and interregional/global, 0.6 per cent. Completed or being implemented were 193 projects, covering agricultural machinery and implements; electronic and electrical machinery and products; computer-related equipment; metalworking and machine tools; land-based or water-borne transport equipment; measuring and control instruments; and energy-related equipment.

Feasibility studies. Technical co-operation expenditures for feasibility studies amounted to $5.5 million, with some 77 per cent financed by UNDP.

Africa accounted for 49.2 per cent, the Americas, 1.7 per cent; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 16.5 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 32.7 per cent; and interregional/global, 7 per cent. During the year, 101 projects were completed or being implemented.

UNIDO continued to promote the application of a standardized methodology for preparing and evaluating pre-investment studies; projects also focused on institution-building and the organization of training programmes. Some 40 investment studies were undertaken, with noticeable achievements in the energy sector. In the area of institution building, technical co-operation was provided to 25 institutions in 19 countries in Africa and Asia. In 1987, the scope and quality of training activities on project preparation, evaluation and financing and on the application of the Computer Model for Feasibility Analysis and Reporting (COMFAR), a UNIDO software package, were expanded. Some 800 participants received training at seminars, workshops and courses held during the year.

Industrial management and rehabilitation. In line with the reorganization of the UNIDO secretariat and in accordance with the priority member States attached to the rehabilitation of existing industrial capacity in developing countries, the Factory Establishment and Management Branch was renamed in 1987 Industrial Management and Rehabilitation Branch. Technical co-operation expenditures under that heading amounted to $4 million in 1987, with about 98 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 39 per cent; the Americas, 10.4 per cent; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 13.6 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 42.3 per cent; and Europe, 7 per cent. During the year, 60 projects were completed or being implemented.

Assistance to industrial management in developing consultancy services and applying computers and management information systems continued in 1987. Efforts also focused on comprehensive rehabilitation programmes aimed at upgrading industry and on industrial energy management. During the year, projects on wood processing and products were transferred from the Agro-based Industries Branch.

Industrial planning. Technical co-operation expenditures for industrial planning amounted to $5.9 million in 1987, with about 81 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 66.2 per cent; the Americas, 21.1 per cent; the Arab State (excluding those in Africa), 5.9 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 7.8 per cent; Europe, 0.3 per cent; and interregional/global, 0.8 per cent. A total of 92 projects were completed or being implemented.

Most projects assisted developing countries either in formulating strategies, plans and policies for industrialization or in strengthening institutional infrastructure for industrial planning. In Africa, large-scale projects in formulating industrial plans and strategies included assistance in preparing master plans. In Latin America, projects aimed at replacing imported capital goods with equipment produced domestically and at increasing the ability of industry to compete in international markets. An expert group meeting on computer-aided industrial information systems for industrial planning (Riga, USSR, September/October) drew up a plan to introduce computer-aided tools and to develop international co-operation by establishing a network of specialized planning institutions.

Institutional infrastructure. Under institutional infrastructure, technical co-operation expenditures totalled $10.6 million, with 88 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 48.7 per cent; the Americas, 13.4 per cent; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 12.9 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 2.7 per cent; Europe, 2.7 per cent; and interregional/global, 3.9 per cent. During the year, 186 projects were completed or being implemented.

Technical co-operation was provided at the policy-making, institution-building and entrepreneurial levels through mutually supportive programmes in promoting and developing small- and medium-scale industries, rural industrial development, institutions for industrial research and for industrial information, quality control, standardization and metrology. In Africa and Latin America, technical services were provided to rural entrepreneurs to achieve a balance in industrialization between urban and rural areas. Other projects aimed at upgrading the industrial information services of developing countries.

Metallurgical industries. Technical co-operation expenditures for metallurgical industries amounted to $8.6 million, with 94 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 30.9 per cent; the Americas, 14.6 per cent; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 16.2 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 48.4 per cent; and Europe, 2.5 per cent. A total of 142 projects were completed or under implementation.

Emphasis continued to be placed on: identifying the processing characteristics of metallic minerals; introducing computer-based managed maintenance systems in metallurgical plants, particularly iron and steel plants; and higher added-value products such as electronic materials, high purity metals and special alloys. Assistance was also provided to strengthen centres for metallurgical technology, and in some developing countries to the foundry, forging, heat treatment, welding and metal-mechanics subsectors.

Training. Expenditures for fellowships and training components in all technical co-operation projects implemented by UNIDO totalled $14.5 million, with some 15 per cent financed by UNDP. Of that total, $9.3 million was spent on fellowships and study tours and $5.2 million on group training activities and meetings. Under the heading of training, 200 projects were completed or being implemented at a cost of $6.1 million.

The number of individual training programmes (fellowships) initiated in 1987 for managerial and technical personnel of industrial projects in developing countries was 1,532, compared with 1,598 in 1986. Of the candidates, 144 (9 per cent) came from LDCs and 191 (12 per cent) were female.

Training activities emphasized institution-building and involved the training of trainers and production of training materials. They focused on improving energy management and maintenance, textile machinery maintenance, environmental assessment and management aspects of air and water pollution from industry, pharmaceutical technology and railroad maintenance. Training projects were delivered mostly in Africa.

Research activities included new technologies in industrial training to develop techniques for computer-aided decision support and systems; groundwork was laid for computer-aided training programmes in spare parts production. A UNIDO/UNESCO research project was prepared on the development of software for engineering education and training.

Industrial promotion

In 1987, industrial promotion continued to focus on reinforcing links between activities related to industrial investment, consultations and development and the transfer of technology.

System of Consultations. The UNIDO System of Consultations, a mechanism for achieving the goals set out in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation,^a principally restructuring world industry and increasing the share of developing countries in world production, held four consultations in 1987: the First Consultation on the Fisheries Industry (Gdansk, Poland, 1-5 June); the Second Consultation on the Training of Industrial Manpower (Paris, 14-19 September); the Third Consultation on the Pharmaceutical Industry (Madrid, Spain, 5-9 October); and the First Consultation on the Non-ferrous Metals Industry (Budapest, Hungary, 30 November-4 December). Preparatory meetings were held for consultations in 1988 on the food-processing industry emphasizing sugar-cane processing and the phosphatic fertilizers and pesticides industries in Africa, and for a consultation scheduled for 1989 on small- and medium-scale enterprises including co-operatives.

Development and transfer of technology. Activities related to the development and transfer of technology in 1987 continued to assist developing countries in selecting, acquiring and developing technology, and to prepare them for technological changes by strengthening their capabilities. During the year, the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology (ICGEB) became operational, the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development accepted a plan to set up a silicon foundry in Iraq and Peru donated a small hydropower unit to Morocco. Activities of the UNIDO Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB) focused on initiating a network to establish INTIB focal points, developing training programmes for data base users and the experimental operation of a technology suppliers' data base.

Regarding technology policies, activities included the conclusion of reviews of micro-electronics application in Trinidad and Tobago, a biotechnology and genetic engineering seminar (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 5-9 December) on applications to agriculture, enhanced oil recovery and pollution clean-up, and preparations for a study on technology policy and infrastructure in Tunisia and for activities to support the formulation of technology policy in the United Republic of Tanzania. A consultative group on informatics technology for development (Vienna, 14-16 December) provided advice on programme proposals and identified applications specific to the needs of developing countries. An expert group (Vienna, 7-10 December) discussed the latest trends in the development and use of new materials and recommended activities to be carried out by UNIDO.

Published in UNIDO's "Technology trend series" were assessments of global technology trends, covering micro-electronics and information technology, genetic engineering and biotechnology, new materials, advanced manufacturing technology, telecommunications and solar photovoltaics, and a review of changes in the international technology market structure.

Concerning alternative technologies, the results of co-operative research in genetic engineering and biotechnology between Trinity College (Ireland) and the Kuwait Institute of Scientific Research were reviewed at a training workshop (Kuwait, 21-25 November). The first phase of a co-operative research and development programme between the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (United States) and the Department of Food Technology of Korea University (Republic of Korea) determined conditions for a process to develop high-protein beverages from vegetables; preparations were made for the second phase. Other genetic engineering and biotechnology projects included an assessment of the technical feasibility of bioarea-gent production in developing countries, using Thailand as an example; and a UNIDO/WHO/UNEP working group (Paris, 15-17 December) reviewed biosafety and identified ways to promote good microbiological laboratory and industrial practice in developing countries. A study on marine industrial technology identified priority areas for developing countries and a review began of the technological capabilities required for constructing offshore structures in those countries. Some 12 project proposals resulted from expert missions in Asia and Latin America to identify institutions working in solar energy research and development.

Efforts to strengthen the technological capabilities of developing countries continued to focus on biotechnology and micro-electronics. In Kuwait, an expert team assisted in preparing a draft national programme on biotechnology. Proposals were developed, in consultation with the Arabian Gulf University (AGU) (Bahrain), for co-operation in biotechnology among AGU countries. UNIDO started implementing the ICGEB interim programme; in April, the Trieste component (Italy) began working on its initial research and development programme on selected viral diseases, molecular aspects of deoxyribonucleic acid replication in human cells and microbiological degradation of lignocellulose. Work at the New Delhi component (India) was scheduled to start in April 1988, covering agribiology and parasitology. ICGEB missions were undertaken to Argentina, Brazil, Chile, China, Egypt and Venezuela. In the area of micro-electronics and informatics, advice was provided for upgrading the Fundación Instituto de Ingeniería (Venezuela) to strengthen its ability to serve the electronics industry. Preparatory assistance, funded by UNDP, began on a regional project aimed at member countries of the Regional Network for Micro-electronics in Latin America and the Caribbean. A Netherlands-financed project on food processing led to the designing of joint investment ventures in China and Thailand. Missions to Nigeria and Ghana assisted in selecting national counterpart agencies and launching a project on metalworking financed by Poland; some 70 company profiles were prepared for matching with potential partners. A project in Nigeria for developing and introducing small-scale gari (fermented cassava) processing technology was completed during the year; testing and evaluation was scheduled for 1988. Activities of the Asia and Pacific Regional Network for Small Hydropower continued at an expanded rate, focusing on co-operative research and development, training workshops, regional consultancy and information exchange.

Technological advisory services (TAS) covered selection and assessment of technical options, and advice on drafts of agreements and evaluation of offers, many in connection with major projects. Among the countries benefiting were Algeria, Bolivia, Rwanda and Venezuela. The TAS programme supplemented other UNIDO activities, such as investment promotion forums in Egypt and Mauritius. Other advisory services included assistance in negotiating collaboration agreements between enterprises in India and Sweden and in the Netherlands and Thailand based on UNIDO plant-level co-operation projects.

UNIDO organized seminars and workshops on technology acquisition and contract negotiation aimed at strengthening the negotiation capacity of developing countries. Material of interest to policy-makers and negotiators of technology was exchanged through the Licensing Executive Society International. Two studies to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of technology transfer agencies in developing countries contributed to the setting up of the Computerized Registry Information System (CORIS), designed to handle information related to the transfer of technology and as a tool for effective policy-making, strategic planning, evaluation and monitoring of contract implementation. A new version of CORIS was finalized.

Co-operation among developing countries in the acquisition of technology continued under the Technological Information Exchange System (TIES). Technical information on technology transfer agreements was provided through TIES via clearing-house services. African TIES member countries held their second annual meeting (Dakar, Senegal, 8-10 October). The third meeting of co-ordinators of the Association of South-East Asian Nations TIES (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 2-5 November) agreed to submit proposals to the ASEAN Committee on Industry, Minerals and Energy for a regional support centre for the system and a training programme in the negotiation of technology transfer contracts.

The capabilities of developing countries in industrial information were strengthened through the networking of INTIB, national focal points and nodes. By the end of 1987, 40 UNIDO members had nominated national focal points. Information networks were established to link further individual and institutional contributors with INTIB, enlarging its information base. Projects were initiated to use commercial networks to provide better communication between INTIB and its national focal points by means of electronic mail; Africa, Europe and Latin America and the Caribbean were covered by the electronic mail network, and Asia and the Pacific was covered by the Republic of Korea's DATACOM network and the satellite facilities of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Mongolia. Projects to strengthen national information organizations and their linkages with INTIB were under way in Algeria, Cameroon, Mongolia and Nigeria.

The Industrial Inquiry Service, in addition to regular replies to over 1,500 inquiries received during the year, provided supplementary replies through the INTIB networking system. Quarterly monitors for awareness on technology developments in micro-electronics, genetic engineering and biotechnology, and for materials, continued to be issued. A Technology Supplies Data Base was further developed on an experimental basis with 500 entries, and arrangements were made with 50 institutions from 28 countries to provide inputs.

A UNIDO Energy Information System was established, creating a new major data base—Industrial Energy Conservation Abstracts—which was to provide information for dissemination on energy conservation in selected industrial sectors and related activities. A UNIDO/UNESCO workshop on information networks for new and renewable sources of energy and energy conservation in small- and medium-scale industries in Asia and the Pacific, organized at the Korean Institute of Energy and Resources (Republic of Korea), made a number of recommendations for further action by UNIDO.

Publications included UNIDO's monthly Newsletter in five languages, four volumes of the Industrial Development Abstracts series and numerous technical publications. A video film, The Women of Kurasine, was produced for a project entitled "Small-scale enterprise for women entrepreneurs: textiles and garments".

Investment promotion. UNIDO promoted industrial investment in developing countries, identifying investment project proposals—rehabilitation, modernization and expansion of facilities, and setting up new facilities—and local sponsors in developing countries, as well as technical and financial partners in other countries willing to enter joint business ventures.

UNIDO published volume III of How to Start Manufacturing Industries — Technological and Investment Perspectives, containing profiles of 89 industrial processes, thus bringing to 377 the number of profiles in the three-volume series.

The UNIDO Investment Promotion Service (IPS) network helped facilitate the flow of external financial, technological and managerial resources to developing countries. In 1987, IPS concluded the promotion of 43 industrial investment projects, representing a total investment of $106 million.

In addition to services in Cologne, Paris, Tokyo, Vienna, Warsaw, Washington, D.C., and Zurich, an office was opened at Seoul, Republic of Korea, and at Milan, Italy.

In July 1987, the UNIDO/World Bank Co-operative Programme was succeeded by a broader and more flexible type of co-operation with the World Bank aimed at promoting foreign direct investment and developing small industry and industrial infrastructure, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa.

The Investment Promotion Information System contained over 9,000 records on industrial investment project proposals, potential partners, development finance institutions, investment-related institutions and project sponsors. These entries formed the basis of two booklets published in 1987 with details of some 460 new proposals.

In Africa, 144 industrial investment projects in the Comoros, Kenya, Madagascar, Mauritius, Seychelles and the United Republic of Tanzania were identified, promoted and discussed by 100 local sponsors and 62 prospective foreign partners at an investment promotion meeting (Mauritius, 25-29 May); 27 projects in Maldives and Sri Lanka were also identified and promoted. A new and renewable energy equipment project identification and promotion programme, financed by Italy, resulted in 26 investment project profiles; Ethiopia, Somalia, the Sudan, Thailand and Zimbabwe participated in the programme. Investors' guides to Mozambique and Kenya were prepared with UNDP assistance. In Egypt, 108 projects and project ideas were identified and promoted in preparation for an investment promotion meeting (Cairo, 2-5 November) at which 20 letters of intent were signed; participants included 180 foreign companies, 129 local sponsors and 24 finance institutions. An industrial investment programme for Kenya, to be implemented over a five-year period using UNDP funds, became operational in 1987.

In Asia and the Pacific, investment programmes were implemented in Bangladesh, China, Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand. The programme in Thailand focused on agro-based industries, identifying 60 projects valued at $100 million. A three-week seminar introduced 70 Chinese officials to UNIDO's approach to preparing industrial investment project profiles, and 135 investment projects were identified in Bangladesh and 78 in Indonesia.

Industrial investment promotion programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean valued at $1.3 million were implemented in Argentina, Bolivia and Ecuador.

During the year, investors' forums were held for Bangladesh, Egypt, Indonesia, Mauritius, Poland and Thailand.

Assistance to LDCs

With severe climatic conditions in LDCs leading to repeated crop failures in 1987, most of the technical co-operation provided by UNDP was channelled to agriculture. Under the Industrial Development Fund, approvals for projects in LDCs increased by 51 per cent in 1987, compared with 1986. Approvals for LDCs doubled between 1986 and 1987 under the UNDP Special Industrial Services programme, set up to respond to specific short-term, unforeseen requests of an urgent nature relating to industrial development.

Despite UNIDO efforts, project approvals for 1987 totalled $15.8 million, compared with $18.6 million in 1986. New procedures for appraisal introduced by UNDP contributed to a slow-down in the rate of approvals, resulting in several million dollars worth of project proposals awaiting approval at the end of 1987. In addition, severe budgetary constraints faced by UNIDO caused project funding for LDCs from the regular budget to dwindle from $2.5 million in 1986 to under $100,000 in 1987.

Fourteen project formulation missions were fielded and project approvals for 1987 totalled $15.9 million. The African region received $12.1 million; the Americas, $14,333; Arab States, $2.3 million; and Asia and the Pacific, $1 million. The remainder was for interregional and global projects.

During 1987, UNIDO activities in LDCs focused on creating employment through the development of small industries, processing of local raw materials, industrial infrastructure, feasibility studies and manpower development and training; emphasis was placed on industrial rehabilitation. A workshop was held on industrialization of LDCs (Bangkok, 6-14 November).

Industrial co-operation among developing countries

Preparations were finalized for solidarity ministerial meetings in favour of LDCs scheduled to take place in 1988 in Cape Verde and Democratic Yemen. Co-operation agreements reached at previous meetings resulted in numerous technical co-operation projects: experts from Yugoslavia started practical field work to establish a tannery in Burkina Faso; preparations were finalized for a feasibility study on the development of hydropower production in Burkina Faso, in co-operation with Pakistan; and a Nepalese government official's visit to Malaysia, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Thailand resulted in identifying concrete proposals for co-operation (mainly training and study programmes) and modalities for their implementation.

The 1986 Afro-Asian industrial co-operation meeting within the framework of IDDA and ECDC^b also resulted in a number of technical co-operation projects: experts from China installed two biogas digesters in Madagascar, demonstrated their use and trained cadres; experts from India evaluated the potential for using windmills for water pumping in Somalia and defined a programme of bilateral co-operation between the two countries; preparations were finalized for an expert group meeting on technologies available in developing countries and for a workshop on co-operation between Yugoslavia and African countries in agricultural machinery and food-processing industries, both to be held in Yugoslavia in 1988. In addition, action was initiated for developing co-operation between Burundi and India in essential oils, Côte d'Ivoire and India in small-scale industries, China and Somalia in farm implements and China and Guinea in hydropower mini-stations.

The Islamic Chamber of Commerce, Industry and Commodity Exchange and the Union of Chambers of Commerce, Industry, Maritime Commerce and Commodity Exchanges of Turkey jointly organized a meeting for the promotion of joint ventures among Islamic countries (Istanbul, 15-18 June). Some 110 industrial projects were examined, covering project design, rehabilitation of existing plants, equipment supply, training and provision of expert services, equity participation and provision of soft loans, and 80 co-operative projects were identified, valued at over $700 million. The meeting discussed modalities and financial arrangements for implementing these projects for the benefit of Bangladesh, Cameroon, the Gambia, Guinea, Mali, the Niger, Somalia and Yemen. Following the meeting, UNIDO established a project development facility to ensure the speedy realization of the co-operative projects.

Other ECDC/TCDC activities carried out during the year included a workshop on co-operation among developing countries in the cement, lime and related industries (Bangkok, 23-27 February) for senior officials from 15 developing countries in the African, Asian and Arab regions, and a workshop/study tour for interregional co-operation between Pacific and Caribbean island countries in the development of small- and medium-scale agro-industries, with particular emphasis on live marine resources and tropical fruits (23 September-7 October), which included visits by senior officials from seven Pacific island countries to Barbados, Jamaica, Saint Lucia and Trinidad and Tobago. Three experts from China undertook a pre-feasibility study in Nicaragua for establishing mini-plants for the production of basic nitrogen fertilizers; an Argentine official visited Yugoslavia to study the establishment and management of agro-industrial complexes; and two Ecuadorian specialists undertook a study tour to Brazil to acquire experience in converting sugar into alcohol for use as a fuel.

Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990)

In 1987, many IDDA activities initiated in 1986 were curtailed or suspended completely due to the impact of UNIDO's financial crisis (see below). The activities most affected related to the provision of technical advisory services, the establishment of pilot demonstration plants, industrial training and the promotion of intra-African industrial co-operation. Special measures to mobilize additional financial resources yielded pledges amounting to $3.24 million for IDDA-related projects for 1987 to 1989. An additional $4.64 million was pledged for other projects in Africa.

An IDDA-funded evaluation workshop (Vienna, March), held as a follow-up to the national workshops organized by UNIDO in 1986 in Africa on industrial strategies and policies, resulted in some donor countries making special-purpose contributions for financing similar national and regional workshops in Africa. Activities related to preparing industrial master plans were expanded to cover more African countries. As a result of this type of assistance, a sectoral meeting of donor countries for Senegal was held (Vienna, December).

UNIDO activities in Africa focused on industrial maintenance and rehabilitation, covering diagnoses of problems of, and direct assistance to, individual plants with emphasis on repair and maintenance, including provision of spare and replacement parts; plant management; production, process and quality control; marketing; and training of management and technical personnel.

Special attention was given to developing and utilizing human resources, including technological capabilities, for industrial development. Seminars covered topics such as project identification, preparation and evaluation, including the use of COMFAR; technology negotiations and acquisition; and management of industrial enterprises. Group training programmes were organized, some in subregional institutions in Africa.

Assistance was provided to the West African Development Bank in identifying and promoting industrial projects and to the Economic Community for Central African States in formulating its industrial programme as well as in promoting and monitoring the implementation of subregional programmes and projects. Assistance initiated with the African Regional Centre for Technology in promoting technological information exchange among African countries, including the establishment of a regional technological information exchange service, was continued. At a workshop on industrial public enterprises and their environment (Algiers, Algeria, June), African countries exchanged experiences in the management of public enterprises.

In implementing the IDDA programme, special attention continued to be paid to the priorities established in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990,^c and the United

Integration of women in industrial development

The General Conference requested the UNIDO Director-General to ensure that specific attention be paid to women in all technical co-operation and promotion activities, especially with regard to training, small-scale industry and agro-industry activities. Member States were asked for voluntary funding for activities promoting the integration of women in industrial development and the Director-General was asked to continue developing training programmes specifically designed to facilitate the acquisition by women of skills at all levels—technological, managerial, entrepreneurial—in order to ensure that integration.

In 1987, efforts continued to develop projects that would upgrade technologies traditionally used by women, increasing their productivity. An exploratory mission was undertaken to four Sahelian countries—Burkina Faso, Mali, Niger and Senegal—to look into ways of improving fruit and vegetable processing done by women; as a result, a large-scale project was elaborated which aimed at developing an improved technology for solar drying of fruit and vegetables in marketable quantities by institutionalizing co-operation between national women's organizations, food research centres and national energy research centres. UNIDO, in co-operation with the Pan African Institute for Development—East and Southern Africa (PAID-ESA), was designing a curriculum to develop managerial and entrepreneurial skills among prospective and practising women entrepreneurs in countries of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference. A needs assessment was conducted in Botswana, Malawi, Zambia and Zimbabwe and local women with experience as trainers, extension workers, practising entrepreneurs or researchers were identified to serve as resource persons in the curriculum design. In December, PAID-ESA hosted a curriculum design workshop.

An analytical approach to examine the actual and potential role of women in industry through sectoral analyses and country case-studies was developed in 1987. A sectoral analysis developed for the fisheries industry in conjunction with a survey of the fisheries industrial system led to recommendations of specific strategies and actions to enhance and promote productive options for women. The analysis was supported by country case-studies in Indonesia, Mexico and Senegal and financed by Norway. Studies were also carried out in Nepal, Sri Lanka and Zimbabwe, representing the range of lower and lower-middle income countries with different levels of industrial and human resource development. These studies led to the identification of priority areas requiring attention and identified country-level technical co-operation projects.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1987, the UNIDO secretariat totalled 1,286 staff members; 430 were in the Professional and higher categories and 856 in the General Service and related categories.

SIDFAs

Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAs) continued to assist in programming and implementing technical co-operation projects.

In June 1987, the UNDP Governing Council, recalling that financing the SIDFA programme during the fourth (1987-1991) programming cycle was a shared responsibility of UNIDO and UNDP, agreed that $6.4 million—that had been withheld by the Council pending submission of a further report on the programme—be used for 1990 and 1991 to cover the services of a maximum number of SIDFA posts. Together with $9.6 million approved by the Council in 1986, a total of $16 million would be available under UNDP sectoral support for the SIDFA programme during 1987-1991. UNIDO was represented in the field by 31 SIDFAs, working with UNDP resident representatives; 19 were financed by UNDP, 9 from the regular budget and 3 from voluntary contributions. At the end of 1987, 27 SIDFAs were on board and 8 were under recruitment.

Junior Professional Officers assisting SIDFAs in co-ordinating and monitoring UNIDO activities numbered 87 during the year for varying lengths of time. The programme was supported by Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland.

Budget

For 1987, total expenditure amounted to $173.8 million, comprising $97.7 million for technical co-operation programmes and $76.1 million for headquarters expenditures. The latter was financed largely from the regular budget ($60.7 million) and supplemented by $15.4 million derived from a 13 per cent reimbursement for overheads on technical assistance delivery.

For the 1986-1987 biennium, the UNIDO General Conference in 1985 had approved a net appropriation of $112.7 million. An estimated loss of $21.7 million due to downward movements of the United States dollar against the Austrian schilling was later reduced by cuts in the work programme amounting to $15.2 million for the biennium. Based on revised estimates resulting from an updated budget performance report for the biennium submitted by the Programme and Budget Committee to the Conference's November 1987 session, a supplementary estimate of $3.1 million was approved for 1986-1987 to cover the net shortfall in UNIDO's resources. This resulted in a final net appropriation of $115,806,804 for the biennium.

Technical co-operation activities were largely financed by UNDP. Other sources of financing include the Special Industrial Services programme, trust funds and self-financing arrangements, the Industrial Development Fund and other funds, such as the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control.

Chapter XVIII

Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment (Havana, Cuba, November 1947—March 1948) drew up a charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) and established an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO). Since the charter itself was never accepted, ITO was not established. However, while drawing up the charter, the Preparatory Committee's members negotiated on tariffs among themselves, and also drew up the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)—a multilateral treaty embodying reciprocal rights and obligations which is the only multilateral instrument that lays down agreed rules for international trade. It entered into force on 1 January 1948 with 23 contracting parties. Since then, ICITO has provided the GATT secretariat.

As at 31 December 1987, the number of contracting parties to GATT had risen to 95 with the addition of Antigua and Barbuda (30 May), Botswana (28 August) and Morocco (17 June). One other country, Tunisia, had acceded provisionally. The contracting parties conducted about 90 per cent of all international trade; 29 other countries, to whose territories GATT had been applied before their independence, maintained a de facto application of GATT pending final decisions as to their future commercial policy.

Multilateral trade negotiations

Uruguay Round

Mechanisms and procedures to carry forward negotiations in the Uruguay Round—GATT's eighth "round" of multilateral trade negotiations, launched in 1986^a—were put in place during 1987 when a number of decisions were taken in two negotiating groups (on goods and on services) and in the Trade Negotiations Committee, the body responsible for overseeing the Round in its entirety.

Trade Negotiations Committee

The Trade Negotiations Committee held three meetings. In January, it established a Surveillance Body to monitor two commitments contained in the 1986 Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round:^b a standstill—a freeze on any further restrictive trade measures inconsistent with GATT; and a rollback—the phasing out of measures inconsistent with GATT, or bringing them into conformity with GATT.

During the year, the Surveillance Body examined a number of notifications concerning alleged violations of the standstill commitment. It established an early warning system which permitted participants to call attention to possible dangers to the Uruguay Round posed by measures under consideration in various legislatures and administrations.

Reporting to the Committee, the Surveillance Body pointed out that bilateral discussions had taken place on requests for rollback of trade-restrictive measures but that there had been no undertakings on rollback. The Committee noted the respective negotiating plans adopted by the Group of Negotiations on Goods and the Group of Negotiations on Services (see below).

Group of Negotiations on Goods

On 28 January 1987, the Group of Negotiations on Goods established a negotiating structure and plans for those issues affecting trade in goods which were outlined in the 1986 Ministerial Declaration; it assessed general progress in the 14 negotiating groups which comprised the Group itself, and dealt with procedural matters.

In December, the Group reviewed the first year of the Uruguay Round, agreeing that progress had been made during the initial phase of negotiations and noting that major proposals had been made in many groups; in all, some 168 submissions had been presented to the 14 groups, representing negotiating proposals or statements of position. The activities of the negotiating groups are listed below.

Tariffs. Early meetings focused on exploring the negotiating objectives concerning especially high tariffs, the problem of tariff escalation and the need to extend the number of tariffs which were bound within GATT schedules, particularly with regard to developing countries. In the later stages of its work, the group received proposals envisaging the elimination of tariffs on all industrial goods by all developed countries. Other suggestions included the total binding of all tariffs or at least those in the industrial sector. Many other proposals envisaged intermediate positions.

Non-tariff measures. The group examined the issues to be covered in the negotiation — reducing or eliminating non-tariff measures, including quantitative restrictions—and recalled that under the rollback commitment GATT-inconsistent measures should be dismantled unilaterally. Participants discussed whether a distinction should first be made between non-tariff measures which were consistent with GATT and those which were not. They also discussed the relationship of the group with other negotiating bodies, such as those on textiles, tropical products, agriculture and natural resource-based products, where non-tariff measures would also be the subject of negotiations.

Natural resource-based products. Discussions were held on liberalization of trade in natural resource-based products, in particular fish and fisheries products, forestry products and non-ferrous metals and minerals. Participants also discussed the relationship of their work with the work of other negotiating groups, such as tariffs and non-tariff measures, whose efforts would impinge upon trade in natural resource-based products, and on the extent to which the group should negotiate as distinct from monitoring work related to natural resource products in other groups.

Textiles and clothing. Extensive background material was prepared by the GATT secretariat and information presented by developing countries on the state of textiles and clothing industries in the major developed markets. For certain textile-exporting participants in the Round, textiles were of major economic significance, having long been subject to institutionalized restrictions outside GATT. These countries asserted that the group's main task would be to negotiate the return of the textile and clothing sector to GATT, rather than the members of the Multifibre Arrangement—the Arrangement regarding International Trade in Textiles—which had been regulating such trade since 1974.^c

Agriculture. By the end of 1987, many countries, including nearly all the major agricultural trading forces, had tabled proposals for reform of agricultural trade, calling for its liberalization, reduction or elimination of government subsidies and trade barriers, and the drafting of improved or new GATT rules and disciplines.

Tropical products. After reviewing GATT's previous efforts in tropical products, participants agreed to start work on seven product groups: tropical beverages; spices, flowers and plants; certain oilseeds, vegetable oil and oilcakes; tobacco, rice and tropical roots; tropical fruits and nuts; tropical wood and rubber; and jute and hard fibres. By mid-year, two separate lists covering 300 specific products had been proposed by 13 developing countries for trade liberalization.

Review of GATT articles. In September, participants started reviewing articles of the General Agreement. Some of the articles considered dealt with rules relating to customs unions and free-trade areas, rules governing negotiations for the modification of tariff schedules, State trading enterprises, restrictions to safeguard the balance of payments, restrictions by developing countries experiencing balance-of-payments difficulties, the schedule of concessions, security exceptions and accession procedures.

Multinational trade negotiation agreements and arrangements. Discussion touched on six Tokyo Round codes, with the anti-dumping code and the agreement on technical barriers to trade drawing the greatest concern. Participants also discussed suggestions on improving the codes on import licensing, customs valuation and subsidies.

Safeguards. During the year, many participants pointed to various problems arising from the interpretation and application of article XIX, sometimes referred to as the "escape clause" of the General Agreement, which permits, in defined circumstances, emergency action to be taken against imports causing, or threatening to cause, serious injury to domestic producers of the products in question. The negotiating plan for the group called for the early tabling and discussion of specific suggestions.

Subsidies. The year was devoted to a fundamental review on the nature and operation of General Agreement article VI, governing rules on countervailing measures, and article XVI, concerning rules on the use of subsidies, and of the Tokyo Round subsidies code—a mechanism for international surveillance and dispute settlement which aims to ensure that the use of subsidies by any signatory does not harm the trading interests of others. With regard to the code, the group received a number of submissions aimed at clarifying its provisions and tightening disciplines. Participants proposed the following issues for negotiations: principles and approaches, disciplines on subsidies, measurement of the amount of a countervailable subsidy, determination of the existence or threat of material injury, definition of sale and introduction into commerce, initiation and conduct of countervailing duty investigation, imposition and duration of countervailing measures, special and different treatment for developing countries and dispute settlement procedures.

Trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights. The group requested participating countries to provide detailed submissions on the trade problems they had encountered regarding intellectual property rights and conducted a review of the relevant GATT provisions. On the general issue of trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights, the group examined specific negotiating suggestions. In other discussions, the group considered the specific question of trade in counterfeit goods, with a view to developing a multilateral framework of principles, rules and disciplines as called for by the group's negotiating objective. The group also considered the relationship between its negotiations and activities in other organizations, such as the World Intellectual Property Organization, the Customs Co-operation Council (CCC), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

Trade-related investment measures. Discussions in the negotiating group aimed at developing a better understanding of the way in which investment measures functioned, the purposes of Governments in applying them, their trade effects and the relation of their trade effects to GATT articles. The group examined submissions by some participants on the operation of GATT articles related to the trade-restrictive and distorting effects of investment measures. Various performance requirements, controls and restrictions on investors were identified and described in those submissions. The group undertook a preliminary examination of the operation of a number of GATT articles. Those which drew comment for being potentially of particular importance were articles III (on national treatment), VI (on anti-dumping and countervailing duties), XI (on quantitative restrictions) and XVII (on State trading enterprises), as well as article XVIII (on economic development).

Dispute settlement. Negotiations aimed at improvements to ensure prompt and effective resolution of disputes and compliance with adopted recommendations. Many contracting parties made specific proposals for improving GATT panel procedures.

Functioning of the GATT system. Participants explored widening the GATT surveillance functions to include regular country reviews, enhancing the decision-making procedures of GATT, and improved co-ordination with international financial organizations.

Group of Negotiations on Services

The second part of the Ministerial Declaration, covering negotiations on trade in services, envisaged establishing a multilateral framework of principles and rules for trade in services, including elaboration of possible disciplines for individual service sectors. In 1987, the Group of Negotiations on Services dealt with five areas: definitional and statistical issues; broad concepts on which principles and rules for trade in services, including possible disciplines for individual sectors, might be based; coverage of the multilateral framework for trade in services; existing international disciplines and arrangements; and measures and practices contributing to or limiting the expansion of trade in services, including barriers perceived by individual participants, to which the conditions of transparency and progressive liberalization might be applicable. The group decided that further consideration was needed of how various concepts, such as non-discrimination, national treatment and transparency, might be included in a framework agreement.

Implementation of the Tokyo Round agreements

The agreements of the Tokyo Round (1973-1979), the seventh "round" of multilateral trade negotiations, provided an improved framework for the conduct of world trade and were adopted as an integral part of the rules of GATT.

In 1987, the Committee on Tariff Concessions continued to supervise GATT tariff schedules and discuss questions related to tariffs. A number of Committee members approved the introduction of the new Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System. Established by CCC at Brussels, Belgium, and set to begin on 1 January 1988, the System was designed to serve as a single nomenclature standard for the classification of traded goods. During the year, Finland, Japan, New Zealand, Norway and Sweden concluded their negotiations and annexed their new GATT schedules expressed in the Harmonized System nomenclature.

Reports received by the Committee on Anti-Dumping Practices, covering the period 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987, indicated that among the 24 parties to the Agreement on Anti-Dumping Practices, 41 cases had been initiated in the United States (down from 63), 40 in Australia (down from 54), 24 in Canada, 17 in the European Community (EC) (down from 23), 5 in Finland and 1 in the Republic of Korea. ("Dumped" goods were broadly defined as imports which were sold at prices below those charged by the producer in his domestic market.)

In February 1987, the Committee on Government Procurement agreed to a solution to a long-standing dispute between the United States and EC over the latter's value-added tax (VAT).^d

EC agreed to reduce unilaterally its threshold by the average effective VAT rate of 13 per cent, to be implemented along with the new threshold or minimum value of individual contracts for goods covered by the Agreement on Government Procurement.

Throughout 1987, the International Meat Council, which oversaw the Arrangement regarding Bovine Meat, discussed various support and intervention mechanisms in different producer countries. According to The International Markets for Meat 1987/88, published by the GATT secretariat, the world market for bovine meat recovered strongly in 1987 from several years of depressed prices. The report examined trends in production, consumption and trade of bovine meat, pig meat, poultry meat and sheep meat, and presented forecasts for 1988.

The International Dairy Products Council, supervisor of the International Dairy Arrangement, examined the repercussions on trade in dairy products. The Arrangement's three Protocols set out minimum export prices for dairy products. In September 1987, the Committees of the Protocols raised the minimum prices for milk powders and certain cheeses. The World Market for Dairy Products 1987, published by the GATT secretariat, detected signs of market recovery in 1987 as efforts in many countries had finally ended the upward trend in milk production, which had led to surplus stocks and depressed prices. The Dairy Council expressed the hope that progress in the Uruguay Round would halt and reverse protectionism in the dairy sector.

The Committee on Civil Aircraft, which supervised the Agreement on Trade in Civil Aircraft, held two special meetings at the request of the United States to review articles 4 (government-directed procurement, mandatory sub-contracts and inducements) and 6 (government support, export credits and aircraft marketing). The request stemmed from a major dispute between the United States and EC concerning the production and sale of the Airbus airliner.

Work also continued during the year in committees overseeing the subsidies code (see p. 1311), customs valuation, import licensing and technical barriers to trade.

Other GATT activities

Contracting Parties regular session

The Contracting Parties held their forty-third regular session in December 1987, with discussions focusing on progress made during the first year of negotiations in the Uruguay Round.

Council of Representatives

The Council of Representatives, GATT's highest body between sessions of the Contracting Parties, held two special meetings in 1987 to review developments in the trading system as contained in two reports. According to the first, covering October 1986 to March 1987, one of the most serious problems in international trade was the increasing recourse to export subsidization of agricultural products, particularly grains, by the major temperate-zone producers. The report stated that in the industrial sector subsidies had been granted not only to support declining industries but to promote new industries; many Governments tended to support the same high-technology industries. The report noted that there had been considerable use of anti-dumping and countervailing actions by a few countries: 99 countervailing measures and undertakings and 555 anti-dumping duties and price undertakings were in force—an increase of about 15 per cent over the previous period.

The second report, covering April to September 1987, noted that reduction and binding of tariff levels in industrialized countries, achieved in successive GATT negotiations, had led some of them to use other commercial policy instruments more extensively, in particular countervailing duties and anti-dumping duties, and so-called "grey-area" measures—measures outside GATT dealing with import competition. The report identified 135 grey-area measures, mainly in the areas of steel, textiles, agriculture, transport equipment, electronics, footwear and machine tools.

Consultative Group of Eighteen

The Consultative Group of Eighteen—a high-level forum for discussing problems facing international trade—held an extended debate (21 and 22 September) on the economic and trade situation.

Trade and development

The Committee on Trade and Development continued to review, discuss and negotiate trade issues of interest to developing countries. It reviewed developments concerning part IV of the General Agreement, dealing with special treatment for developing countries, and of the "enabling clause", an agreement resulting from the Tokyo Round providing for differential and more favourable treatment of developing countries in various areas of trade policy. In addition, in 1987 the Committee reviewed developments in international trade and the Uruguay Round from the perspective of developing countries, and decided to reactivate the Sub-Committee on Trade of Least-Developed Countries in the context of the Uruguay Round.

Conciliation and settlement of disputes

Seven new panels were established during the year—six by the GATT Council and one by the session of the Contracting Parties—to examine disputes touching on a wide range of products and government measures. Two major disputes were settled through the adoption of dispute panel reports: the complaints by Canada, EC and Mexico against the United States "Superfund" tax on petroleum and the EC complaint about Japanese customs duties, taxes and labelling practices on imported wines and alcoholic beverages. In November 1987, the Council agreed to extend by another year the permanent roster of non-governmental panelists established by the Contracting Parties in 1984 in the context of the 1982 ministerial work programme. This roster, composed of 35 prospective panelists agreed upon by the Council in 1985, and extended by one year in 1986, could be drawn upon by the Director-General should the disputing parties fail to agree to a panel's membership through the traditional consultative procedure.

Textiles Arrangement

Members of the Multifibre Arrangement (MFA) accounted for most of the world's exports and imports of textiles and clothing. MFA had been extended for the third time in July 1986 for five years until 31 July 1991. In 1987, the Textiles Committee, which manages MFA, focused its discussions on the MFA extension and the textiles negotiations in the Uruguay Round (see p. 1311).

Technical assistance

In 1987, the GATT secretariat's Technical Co-operation Division organized missions to, or seminars in, Bangladesh, Brazil, China, Pakistan, Singapore, Thailand, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. GATT officials also participated in seminars sponsored by regional organizations.

Training programme

From 1955 to the end of 1987, a total of 1,049 officials from 113 countries and 10 regional organizations had attended GATT trade policy courses. A course in English and one in French were given in 1987.

International Trade Centre

The International Trade Centre, established by GATT in 1964 and jointly operated with UNCTAD since 1968, continued providing trade information and trade promotion advisory services to developing countries. The Centre assisted those countries with trade promotion programmes and activities aimed at self-reliance. The Centre's technical co-operation activities amounted to $21.1 million in 1987. Some 127 national, 46 regional and 79 interregional projects were under implementation throughout the year, covering one or more of the Centre's eight programme areas: institutional infrastructure for national trade promotion, specialized national trade promotion services, export market development, commodity promotion, training, import operations and techniques, trade promotion for least developed countries and activities with national chambers of commerce.

Publications

Publications issued in English, French and Spanish in 1987 included the annual volumes of GATT Activities, International Trade and Basic Instruments and Selected Documents, and the newsletter GATT Focus, issued 10 times a year. Also published were Review of Developments in the Trading System, April-September 1987, The International Markets for Meat 1986/87, The World Market for Dairy Products 1987 and background studies on aluminium and on lead.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1987, the GATT secretariat employed 362 staff members—143 in the Professional and higher categories and 219 in the General Service category.

Financial arrangements

Member countries of GATT contribute to the budget in accordance with a scale assessed on the basis of each country's share in the total trade of the contracting parties and associated Governments. The budget for 1987 was 61,122,300 Swiss francs. (The United Nations rate of exchange for December 1987 was SwF 1.36 = $US 1.00.)

² On 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

³ On 16 September 1963, Sabah (North Borneo), Sarawak and Singapore joined with the Federation of Malaya (which became a United Nations Member on 17 September 1957) to form Malaysia. On 9 August 1965, Singapore became an independent State and on 21 September 1965 it became a Member of the United Nations.

⁴ Formerly Saint Christopher and Nevis.

⁵ Tanganyika was admitted to the United Nations on 14 December 1961, and Zanzibar, on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member: the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar; it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971, and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

Chapter I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;
3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and
4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles.

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.
2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Chapter II MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco, or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations of 1 January 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

Article 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

A Member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council.

A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.
