Foreword

IF THERE ARE TURNING-POINTS IN HISTORY, periods marked by increasing contradictions between old trends and new forces, times exhibiting sharp contrast between the heritage of the past and the promise of the future, the year 1987 was certainly one of them. Numerous conflicts persisted in the world, as well as serious economic and social hardship. But the climate of international relations had begun to change, and a new awareness was emerging of the common interest of nations in meeting global challenges. It was then that the first steps were taken towards a revitalization of multilateral co-operation.

The United Nations, while continuing to face serious financial difficulties, showed undeniable signs of revival, for example in the decisive action taken by the Security Council with regard to the Iran-Iraq war, the successful outcome of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and the progress made regarding the protection of the ozone layer.

Besides providing its readers with a faithful record of the Organization's efforts to build a better world, this volume of the Yearbook of the United Nations will give them the satisfaction of seeing how the steadfastness of the United Nations in striving to fulfil the aspirations of mankind was leading to positive results.

About the 1987 edition of the Yearbook

The 1987 YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS has been designed as a reference tool for use by all who might need readily available information on a particular activity of the United Nations system. It covers, during a calendar year, the main activities of the United Nations (Part One) and those of each related organization in the United Nations system (Part Two).

The book is subject-oriented. Part One, containing 49 chapters, is divided into five major sections: political and security questions, economic and social questions, trusteeship and decolonization, legal questions, and administrative and budgetary questions.

Each chapter is divided into a hierarchy of topics. The assignment of headings implies no editorial judgement about the relative importance of a topic.

Structure and scope of articles

Presented under each topical heading is a summary of pertinent United Nations activities, including those of inter-governmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities, and the views of States in written communications. The 1987 edition also gives the position of those States explaining their votes in the principal organs of the Organization. Such explanations are generally given when a recorded vote was taken. At the end of each chapter or subchapter is a list of REFERENCES, linked by numerical indicators to the text. These references indicate document symbols, previous yearbook volumes supplying additional information, and previous resolutions and/or decisions by the principal United Nations organs. The Yearbook covers the following:

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, where applicable, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council, with information on their adoption, are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. Where mention is made of other resolutions and decisions, highlighted in bold-face type, the full text or summary can be found by using the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS at the end of this volume.

Major reports. Most 1987 reports of the Secretary-General, along with selected reports from other United Nations sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly. The document symbols of all reports cited appear in the REFERENCES.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For all major activities financed outside the United Nations regular budget, information is given on contributions and on expenditures. Financial data are generally obtained from the audited accounts prepared for each fund, and cover the 1987 calendar year unless otherwise specified.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized under the most relevant topic.

All substantive debates in the Security Council have been analysed and their main points can be found under the pertinent topic(s). Users wishing details on the position of individual States in the principal organs of the United Nations or any of their main/sessional committees should refer to the meeting numbers to be found at the end of the summaries of procedural action following resolution/decision texts.

Related intergovernmental organizations. Part Two of the Yearbook briefly describes the 1987 activities of each specialized agency, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, based on information prepared by them.

Texts

The Yearbook reproduces the texts of all resolutions and decisions of a substantive nature adopted in 1987 by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council. These texts are followed by the procedural details giving: date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, with document symbols of drafts, approved amendments and committee reports; and a list of sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and relevant meeting numbers. Details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole also follow the text. The texts of resolutions and decisions of a purely procedural nature are not reproduced, but are summarized and their numbers given in bold type.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references; they have no official standing.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The 1987 edition has been designed to enable the user to locate information on United Nations activities in a number of ways.

By subject: Broad subjects may be located in the table of contents on pages vii-xiv. Each chapter opens with an introduction highlighting the main developments. Where a main topic is subdivided, shorter introductions may precede such subchapters. Cross-references give chapters for related information. The SUBJECT INDEX may be used to locate individual topics and specific references to the bodies dealing with each.

By body: Although the Yearbook is oriented mainly by subject rather than by body, surveys of the work of many bodies appear under the topic of their main concern. For the principal organs, APPENDIX IV gives the agenda for each 1987 session. The members, officers, and date and place of sessions of each body are given in APPENDIX III. The SUBJECT INDEX lists bodies by the key word(s) of their formal title: "Apartheid, Special Committee against".

By resolution and decision number: A numerical list of all resolutions and substantive decisions adopted in 1987 by the principal organs, with page numbers for their text, appears in the final pages of this volume.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References at the end of each article in Part One of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1987 on the topic, arranged in the order in which they are referred to in the text. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/42/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the forty-second session, beginning with A/42/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1987/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1987 sessions, beginning with E/1987/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, Mowed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/C.1/-, E/C.2/- and E/C.3/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, the First (Economic), Second (Social) and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees, respectively; E/CN.5A refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/CN.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1987/1); and one for decisions, beginning, since 1983, with 101 (decision 1987/101).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals, e.g. resolution 2185(LIV) of the fifty-fourth session. The Council's decisions are not numbered.

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Co-ordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
LOS/PCN/-	Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme
UNITAR/-	United Nations Institute for Training and Research

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/CEPAL/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/CN.14/-, E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.87.V.4; E/F/R.87.II.E.8; E.87.IX.3.

United Nations

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly and dated 9 September 1987. The Assembly took note of it on 13 October (decision 42/404).

Over the past year, in the midst of continuing regional strife and economic and social hardship, there have been occasions in which a greater solidarity among nations was evident in addressing serious problems with global implications, within the multilateral framework of the United Nations. This development, while limited and fragmentary, could prove of broad significance, for I believe it has its origins in what I would call the growing commonality factor in international affairs. By this I mean a commonly accepted interest in meeting successfully certain vital global challenges, including achievement of the conditions for sustained economic development, the preservation of a hospitable global environment, the elimination of the most egregious infringements of human rights, the eradication of threats to the health of societies and of individuals that respect no national borders, and, by no means least, the avoidance of nuclear destruction. Countries of disparate political orientations and economic systems have begun to deal with problems of an interdependent world with a new pragmatism in awareness of the dangers of immobility. This can provide a promising basis for broadened multilateral co-operation and increased effectiveness of the United Nations. It is as if the sails of the small boat in which all the people of the earth are gathered had caught again, in the midst of a perilous sea, a light but favourable wind.

The United Nations has been an important catalyst for consensus on global problems and, at the same time is itself, I believe, the object of a greater commonality of view than when I last reported to the General Assembly. It remains prey to a financial crisis of very damaging dimensions. Yet, there has been a perceptible rallying to the Organization prompted, in part, by recognition that it was in serious jeopardy but, more decisively, I am convinced, by changes in the international political, economic and social situation which evidenced with persuasive clarity the need for, and the unique value of, the United Nations and other multilateral organizations.

These months sometimes seemed dominated by financial crisis and administrative reform. I believe that, in the circumstances, it is especially important to recognize the inherent strength shown by the United Nations in bringing nations together in pursuit of common objectives ranging from ending the war between Iran and Iraq to protection of the environment and combating illicit narcotics. From such recognition can come new champions and the greater support that the United Nations needs in extending the favourable trend perceptible on certain problems across a wider spectrum of issues related to the achievement of a world at peace.

In highlighting certain positive developments of recent months, I would not wish to underestimate the highly unsatisfactory state of world conditions or the magnitude of the tasks that lie ahead. Even if the favourable wind felt this year prevails, our global vessel will need skilful piloting and the assistance of dedicated oarsmen to navigate the many shoals and reach safe landfall in the next century. What developments have suggested these past months is that it can be done—that in the face of great challenges nations can, as at times in the past, work together. The result, I believe, can be fuller realization of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and, ultimately, a new chance for peace.

I

The international security situation during the past year has been far from static. While major conflicts have persisted and neither the number nor the lethal quality of arms has yet been reduced, initiatives have been taken, negotiations have been carried forward, and the Security Council has acted in ways that in themselves constitute hopeful change. I sense a broadened appreciation that present regional conflicts, beyond the intrinsic suffering they cause, entail unacceptable risks for the larger international community and that the number of nuclear weapons at present deployed is, from every point of view, unwarranted.

The war between Iran and Iraq has lasted now for almost eight blood-stained years, endangering the entire region and threatening larger strife. Last year, these protracted hostilities showed signs of dangerous escalation and expansion, pointing to the urgent need for a new United Nations effort to end the bloodshed. In January, I called for the Security Council to consult, possibly at the level of foreign ministers, on action to halt the war, having already in 1985 suggested to the parties eight points that could serve as a basis for terminating hostilities and opening the way to peace. The Council acted decisively, adopting unanimously a resolution ordering immediate implementation of the cease-fire called for earlier and defining steps to be taken by the two countries in order to establish a basis for peace. The five permanent members have served as the motor force in the Council's action, exercising the responsibility from which their special status derives. The Security Council's resolution is an unmistakable manifestation of the deep desire of the international community to bring an end to this strife. It lays down a carefully crafted basis for addressing the legitimate concerns of both belligerents. The resolution assigns me a clear mandate which, at the time of this writing, I am attempting to implement in its many dimensions through intensive discussions with the two Governments. This will now take me to Iran and Iraq. Given the co-operation of the parties, we must hope for an early comprehensive settlement which will satisfy the demands of justice and honour.

At the beginning of this year, I undertook a special effort to pursue the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East. With the widespread support of the international community, I held numerous consultations with the parties and the members of the Security Council. These consultations focused on both the principle of a conference and questions of procedure. The views expressed to me differed in nuance and detail, but it was generally hoped that they could be sufficiently narrowed to make possible the convening of a conference at which the more difficult substantive issues could be tackled in a constructive spirit. Unfortunately, it has not yet proved possible to obtain the agreement of all the parties to the principle of an international conference and this has hindered my efforts to make progress on the procedural issues. Bilateral efforts to promote the peace process have also apparently run into difficulties. In spite of these set-backs the search must by all means be sustained for a comprehensive settlement through a negotiating process, under United Nations auspices, in which all parties would participate.

It has now been 20 years since the Security Council adopted unanimously resolution 242(1967), which at the time was viewed as a major first step towards a settlement of all aspects of the Arab-Israel conflict. During this period, the inhabitants of the region have been subjected to two major wars. A continuation of the status quo is contrary to the interests of all the parties concerned—it hampers economic development, social stability, and freedom of choice. In the search for a comprehensive settlement, the central priority should be the achievement of a just and lasting peace, which will meet the aspirations of all the people in the region. It would seem to me that the emphasis should be more on these objectives than on questions of procedure. The right road, obviously, is that which will lead to fruitful negotiations, based on resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), and take fully into account the rights of the Palestinians. From my extensive consultations, I am convinced that the composition and agenda of a conference do not need to present insurmountable obstacles. No solution can be found without negotiations. Delay can only prolong the violence and danger that have become daily companions to life in the Middle East.

In other parts of the world, too, new opportunities are evident to settle long-standing differences and move towards more positive and fruitful relationships. Two countries in Africa, Mali and Burkina Faso, have accepted a Judgment of the International Court of Justice to resolve a border dispute between them, and in Central America, El Salvador and Honduras have submitted a similar dispute of long standing to the Court for judgement. In doing so, these countries have taken the route prescribed in the Charter for the peaceful settlement of disputes—the route of reason and peace.

Despite recurrent tensions in the area and the persistence of the conflict in Kampuchea, I believe there are also opportunities for strengthening peace in South-East Asia. The countries of the region share a deep interest in economic development and reconstruction. It is evident that a resolution of the Kampuchean problem would open significant new opportunities—indeed, it is of crucial importance. I have continued to follow this problem closely and have put forward to the countries concerned some ideas in the hope of furthering a solution. I have recently detected some signs of movement that I hope will develop in the right direction. Meanwhile, United Nations humanitarian assistance continues to reach Kampucheans, especially in the border area with Thailand.

In the case of the Western Sahara, there is also, I believe, an opportunity to move ahead. As requested by the General Assembly, the Chairman of the Organization of African Unity and I have had a number of separate meetings with the parties aimed at a solution of the problem. During these meetings, our discussions have focused on modalities governing a cease-fire and a referendum. Since an examination of these issues involves certain factual information available only in the Territory, the Chairman of OAU and I consider that it can best be gathered by the dispatch of a technical survey team to the Territory. Once the information is obtained, we will be in a position to formulate a set of proposals with the objective of providing a fair and reasonable basis for a settlement of this problem. I am confident that with the necessary flexibility and determination, further progress towards a settlement can be made.

The long-standing confrontation between North and South Korea is a remnant, in a sense, of the Second World War, which left the Korean Peninsula divided. There have been this past year a series of proposals emanating from both the North and the South for the resumption of talks on overcoming the contentious issues between the two sides. In my continuing contacts with the parties, I have made clear my readiness to be of every appropriate assistance in facilitating steps to reduce the causes of tension on the peninsula. Serious talks aimed at reducing the hardships imposed on Koreans because of separation would correspond with the pragmatic approach that increasingly influences relationships in East Asia. The agreement reached this year between China and Portugal on the return of Macao to Chinese sovereignty in 1999, like the earlier agreement between China and the United Kingdom on Hong Kong, is an example of the benefits for the international community that can come from this approach. In South Asia, yet a further example can be found in the newly formed South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation. The success that it achieves in promoting region-wide socio-economic co-operation can have a favourable impact on political relations as well.

Efforts to resolve the problem related to Afghanistan have reached an advanced stage. The lengthy, non-polemical negotiations, conducted through the good offices of the Secretary-General, are aimed at finding a realistic settlement. Significant progress has been made. For a settlement to be realized, however, the Afghans must achieve a national reconciliation that will open the way for the formation of a government where the voice of all the Afghans—those now living outside as well as inside Afghanistan—will be heard. It now remains for all concerned to reach the kind of decisions required to restore peace and to accord to the Afghan people the rights foreseen for all in the United Nations Charter. I am confident that the United Nations will, with the full support of Member States, be able to meet any tasks foreseen for it in a settlement. I need hardly emphasize again the great benefits that a neutral, independent and non-aligned Afghanistan would bring for the parties directly involved and, also, for broader international relationships on which progress on other issues heavily depends.

As conscious as I of the gravity of the tension and violence in Central America, the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States joined me late last year in making known to the countries of the region the facilities that the two organizations could provide—separately or together—to facilitate resolution of the region's problems. I have always been persuaded that such a resolution must be found by the countries of Central America themselves, but when I toured the region with the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora and Support Groups and the Secretary-General of OAS last January, I found little evidence of political will to solve the continuing conflicts. The peace plan to which they agreed last month in Guatemala on the basis of a proposal of the President of Costa Rica is all the more to be welcomed as an important breakthrough. I now feel encouraged to revise my earlier assessment. There appears to exist a genuine momentum for peace. The provisions of the peace plan show respect for the commitments made by these countries for the peaceful resolution of disputes under the Charter of the United Nations and that of the Organization of American States. For my part, I have agreed, in support of the peace process, to serve as a member of the International Committee for Verification and Follow-up, created by the Guatemala agreement of 7 August 1987, and I will extend any additional assistance in ways that are appropriate under the Charter. The support of the international community as a whole will be much needed in the further crucial negotiations that lie ahead. This opportunity for peace, created, I believe, by the leaders of the region in pragmatic response to the most basic needs of their peoples, must not pass.

Unfortunately, in southern Africa the road towards the peaceful settlement of the problems of the region continues to be difficult to traverse. To a great extent, this is a consequence of systematic racial discrimination represented by the policy of apartheid, and of the unjustified delay in the transition to independence of Namibia.

In South Africa, a human tragedy of overwhelming proportions appears imminent unless timely action is taken to prevent it. As has been particularly manifest over the past year, the policy of apartheid leads inevitably to resistance and oppression and poisons the quality of life for all the inhabitants of the country. An institutionalized system of racial discrimination that denies fundamental human rights to the great majority of the population is contrary to the most basic principles of the United Nations Charter to which all Member States have committed themselves. The destructive consequences of the imposition of this system extend beyond South Africa to encompass the region as a whole, which has been victimized by repeated acts of aggression, sabotage and destabilization. The effects have been particularly devastating in Angola and Mozambique. In the latter country, the situation became so acute that the Government requested my support in mobilizing international assistance to alleviate the hunger and suffering to which its people have been tragically subjected. The front-line States need increased support from the international community to counter economic strangulation and political destabilization.

The continued denial of independence to Namibia also breeds unending violence and suffering. I have, this past month, sent my Special Representative for Namibia to the region to explore ways of ending the impasse regarding the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978). His conversations have confirmed that, if the situation is re-examined with realism and sincere concern for the well-being of the inhabitants of the area, it should be possible to open the way for implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia.

I would appeal to all Member States to use their influence on behalf of the development of social and economic progress in freedom throughout southern Africa. This can only take place in adequate measure if apartheid disappears; if the human rights of all South Africans, and of the inhabitants of the region as a whole, are respected; and if the people of Namibia are permitted to enjoy the freedom and independence that are their right. The concerted action of the international community is needed to achieve these goals.

The Cyprus problem should lend itself to fair settlement through serious, purposeful negotiations that will meet the basic interests of both sides. Encouraging developments have, on a number of occasions, brought the two Cypriot communities to the threshold of real progress. At present, however, the state of affairs in Cyprus gives increasing cause for concern and, as I have reported to the Security Council, a potentially dangerous military buildup is taking place on the island. The possibility of serious confrontations cannot be excluded in the months ahead if present trends continue. The troop-contributing Governments, without whose generosity the peace-keeping force could not be maintained on Cyprus, are increasingly dissatisfied with both the lack of progress towards a settlement and the growing financial burden they bear. It is particularly disturbing that, in these circumstances, efforts to reactivate productive negotiations are deadlocked. I intend to continue to explore possible measures that might encourage greater confidence and make it possible for useful negotiations to resume. What is at stake is the goal of a federal republic of Cyprus, non-aligned and enjoying sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity as defined in the High-level Agreements of 1977 and 1979.

The prolongation of a regional conflict endangers far more than the parties immediately concerned. In all the problems to which I have referred—those in which positive movement has occurred and those still mired in impasse—governmental decisions will be made which, depending on their nature, can positively or negatively affect the lives and futures of the populations of their region and beyond. I would call upon all leaders in areas of conflict to be guided by this consideration when making decisions in which an added element of accommodation to the concerns of the other party can bring peace or break a sterile deadlock.

II

In the resolution of almost every regional conflict in which the United Nations is engaged, a need for United Nations peace-keeping operations can be foreseen. In the case of Namibia, the agreed United Nations plan entails both military forces and civilian staff carrying out crucial peace-keeping functions in the transition to independence. In other instances new and innovative forms of peace-keeping may be called for. Various conflicts in recent years have extended to the sea, raising the possible need for a United Nations role in ensuring the safety of civilian ships and in maintaining peace at sea as an element in bringing a war to an end. Any peace maintenance operation in the ocean area would differ in key respects from peace-keeping on land, although the same broad principles would apply. At present it would be difficult to mount such operations as quickly on an ad hoc basis as has been the case with land-based operations. There is, therefore, need to plan and be prepared for such eventualities, a process for which the advice of experts in the international academic and defence communities could usefully be sought.

In referring to possible future peace-keeping undertakings, I cannot fail to commend those who, during the past year, have maintained this noble mission for peace. Sacrifices have been a part of their services, particularly in southern Lebanon where brave soldiers of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have daily risked their lives and 21 have died in the line of duty since last August in protecting the well-being of others. The value of these operations has been repeatedly reaffirmed by the Security Council. The valour and dedication of those who serve are deeply appreciated by the entire international community.

As essential as the deployment of peace-keeping forces has been, and can be in the future, in maintaining a stable situation after the cessation of armed exchange, in the separation of forces, and in affording an opportunity for negotiations, it is not a substitute for the first function of the United Nations, which is to prevent war from breaking out. Indeed, the serious crises addressed this past year—many of which are of long standing—point to the need to take timely and effective multilateral action before problems reach crisis proportions. To continue in the future to fail to utilize fully all the preventive capacity of multilateral organizations would be foolhardy in the extreme. One of the greatest tragedies of recent years has been the outbreak of fratricidal conflict between developing countries that had at their disposal for the resolution of their differences the assistance of regional organizations, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and, of course, the United Nations itself.

I would suggest that the Security Council can in the future make fuller use of possibilities available within the meaning of the Charter, including peace-keeping forces, to head off violence and facilitate the resolution of disputes before armed conflict occurs. When a potentially dangerous situation is identified, a fact-finding mission can be quickly dispatched both to gain a detailed knowledge of the problem and to signal to the parties the concern of the United Nations as a whole. It is auspicious for this purpose that present peace-keeping operations now have the political support of all permanent members of the Council although the financial support from Member States is far from adequate. I have sought through a restructuring of the political functions in the Secretariat to strengthen our early-warning capacity.

The need for international solidarity in preventive action is by no means limited to political crises. It is especially evident in the face of such a global threat as environmental degradation. In the case of the recent food crisis in Africa, the international community, through the United Nations and other international organizations, did a great deal to mitigate the disaster. But, the disaster need not have been of such proportions. The vulnerability of the fragile ecosystems and economies of many African countries has long been widely understood. Too little preventive action was undertaken to strengthen their resistance to disaster.

In the recent past, we have seen other natural calamities of terrible impact—the volcanic eruption in Colombia, the earthquake in Mexico City, the recurrent floods in Bangladesh being among the worst. Like the drought in Africa, such catastrophes could not have been prevented, nor can they be in the future. Their destructive effect can, however, be lessened. The ability to foresee the most likely location and, to a more limited extent, the possible timing of certain types of disasters such as severe earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, floods, typhoons and drought, has grown significantly. Moreover, a substantial knowledge exists of measures that can be taken in advance to mitigate the effect of natural disasters when they do occur. I believe there is much merit in proposals that have been made to stimulate international study, planning and preparations on this subject over the next decade under the auspices of the United Nations.

III

Disarmament, achieved through balanced arms reductions with adequate verification, is an essential element in the dynamic process of building peace. It has stood, rightly, in the forefront of diplomatic activity during the past year. New attitudes and revised policies have emerged, bringing new life to the long, sterile disarmament scene. For the first time, there appears a good and early prospect of a net reduction in nuclear weapons. While an agreement between the USSR and the United States to eliminate all of their intermediate-range nuclear missiles would still leave sufficient nuclear weapons in existence to destroy the world many times over, it would none the less have real significance. Such an agreement can encourage progress in other East-West negotiations, including those on strategic weapons, and, by demonstrating the present feasibility of agreement between the USSR and the United States, give impetus to other disarmament negotiations now in progress. Moreover, it can be seen as constituting a first step, at least, towards the goal of eliminating all nuclear weapons for which these two major nuclear Powers have in principle renewed their support. There have already been new positive moves in the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva to complete the treaty—long under negotiation—banning the production and use of chemical weapons under effective verification. Progress on other agreements is overdue and, I believe, will come if the benefits of the elimination of Soviet and United States intermediate-range nuclear missiles are felt. I would point in particular to the desirability of early agreement on a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty which for many years has been seen in the United Nations as having cardinal importance. Continuation and even intensification of testing, in so far as it is directed at developing new weapons or perfecting those now deployed, will tend to mitigate the value of eliminating one present type of missile and perpetuate a competition that has been a major cause of distrust.

Verification has been a difficult element on which to find agreement in most of the disarmament negotiations now under way. This is an area in which the United Nations can make a significant contribution. The forthcoming third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament can, with thorough preparation, provide a valuable opportunity to consider how the Organization's potential in this regard can be realized. Indeed, the session will permit a timely review of the entire work of the United Nations in the field of disarmament, an area of vital importance where rationalization and innovation could permit the resources of Member States to be effectively focused on the most productive activities.

The regional dimension of disarmament merits much attention since it is in regional conflicts that weapons are actually being used for purposes of war. The acquisition of large quantities of sophisticated arms by developing countries places a severe strain on badly needed resources while adding nothing to the strength of their economies. Furthermore, it adds to external debt and creates a secondary demand for imports that increases their dependence. Improved regional security arrangements could reduce the need felt by them for expensive arms and large armed forces. The negotiations currently in progress in Vienna on confidence-building measures and troop reductions in Europe offer a new prospect for that continent. The establishment by the United Nations of regional centres for the promotion of peace and disarmament is an initiative of much promise in this regard in the developing world that merits the support of all Member States.

I am deeply persuaded that the entire world has greatly benefited from the preservation of certain regions—one, outer space, being infinitely larger than the earth itself—from the deployment of nuclear weapons or, in the case of Antarctica, from any military use at all. This year marks the twentieth anniversary of the entry into force of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, which was concluded under the auspices of the United Nations. As space technology advances and a growing number of countries become involved in space activities, the Treaty assumes ever greater relevance to the common human destiny. It is the shared responsibility of Member States to ensure compliance with the letter and spirit of the Treaty. I would call upon all countries that have a space technology capability to co-operate bilaterally and multilaterally in pursuing peaceful uses of outer space, including projects that will bring the benefits of space technology to developing countries. Let the United Nations not only help to preserve such achievements as Tlatelolco, the demilitarization of Antarctica, and the Treaty prohibiting nuclear deployment on the deep seabed, but, proceeding from their example, also seek to gain new regions exclusively for peaceful use.

IV

I have recently had occasion—in particular when addressing the Economic and Social Council and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development—to express my concerns about the problem-filled state of the world economy. It is evident from the discussions at the seventh session of UNCTAD and the preceding session of the Council that many of these concerns are shared by Member States. The world economy is growing much slower in the 1980s than in the previous two decades; the world financial system remains in the shadow of crisis because of the debt problem and volatile exchange rates; world trade in this decade has been under the greatest threat of protectionism since the 1930s, notwithstanding the wide advocacy of a liberal trading system; and international prices of primary commodities have dropped to their lowest level in real terms in the last 50 years. Economic growth, finance and trade are crucial elements for raising world standards of living; yet these elements have been faltering.

As a result, per capita incomes are lower today in the developing countries than they were at the beginning of the decade and unemployment in developed market economies in the 1980s has averaged twice the level of the 1970s. In 1986, 850 million people lived in countries that experienced no increase in per capita output.

The picture is not totally bleak. Inflation, once an almost universal scourge, has been brought under control or eliminated in a large number of countries. A few developing countries, both large and small, have been experiencing a sustained period of rapid economic growth. On the whole, however, the state of the global economy is highly unsatisfactory.

I find it important that in these circumstances a greater understanding has emerged of the interrelationship among economic and social problems. Because of this interrelationship, many of these problems cannot be successfully dealt with in isolation. The complex requirements of sustained development on which future conditions of life in both developing and developed countries so heavily depend have been the subject of intensive pragmatic examination. The report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, aptly titled "Our Common Future", prepared at the request of the General Assembly by experts of varied geographical and political backgrounds, defines with great clarity some of the interrelationships that must be taken into account in developing and implementing sound economic and social policies. There has also been movement towards greater integration of differing economic and trade systems, a distancing from rigidity in conforming with doctrine. I believe this trend is evident in a number of instances during the past months in which Member States approached problems in the economic area from a pragmatic perspective taking account of the capacities offered by the United Nations.

At the seventh session of UNCTAD, the participating countries agreed by consensus on a Final Act that constitutes a very comprehensive statement on the issues facing the world economy and on the policies and measures required to address them. The substantive results of the Conference could foreshadow a significant advance towards the revitalization of development, economic growth and international trade. A constructive outcome, I would note, was by no means a foregone conclusion. A common interest in success prevailed, strengthened by the force of reason in moving forward realistically in many ways, for example, in a growth-oriented debt strategy; in balancing the need for sustainable non-inflationary growth in the developed world and for an environment supportive of growth in the developing world; and in giving impetus to international co-operation in commodities. The purposefulness and flexibility shown by all participating groups in reaching consensus within the framework of a United Nations conference are promising signs for constructive, pragmatic multilateral co-operation in the economic field.

The results reached at the seventh session of UNCTAD can have a significant bearing not least on the critical economic situation in Africa. I must point out, in this connection, that implementation on the part of donors and creditors of the understanding reached at the thirteenth special session of the General Assembly, in 1986, on approaches to adjustment and external debt in Africa has been slow and uncertain. Many African countries have begun to make sharp and wide-ranging adjustment efforts in specific sectors, especially agriculture, and in overall economic management. But the international community has been less forthcoming with an intensified financial resource flow. Because the economic reforms were being undermined in many countries, I established, after consultations with interested Governments and the managements of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, a group of high-level advisers from various regions and charged them with reporting to me before the end of this year on concrete ways to improve the financial situation of African countries. I believe that the recommendations of this Advisory Group on Financial Flows to Africa can encourage further efforts realistically conceived for specific situations.

Other recent steps towards improving the African situation are encouraging. In the Paris Club, debt to official creditors has begun to be rescheduled on considerably more generous terms for selected countries. Proposals to increase net resource flows through the International Monetary Fund and other multilateral agencies are also being discussed with a greater sense of urgency. What we must ensure is that a comprehensive approach to the financing problem results, one that will accelerate Africa's implementation of its priority programme for adjustment and place the region on a path to more rapid development.

A highly significant agreement has been reached among a number of Member States, both signatories and non-signatories to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, settling conflicts that had occurred in the claims they had put forward for deep sea-bed mine sites. This agreement, reflecting as it does a realistic assessment of shared interests in orderly exploitation of the resources of the deep sea-bed, should contribute to wider acceptance of the Convention's sea-bed regime. The United Nations, through the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, has now taken the historic step of registering for the first time a sea-bed claim—that of India—and reserved an equivalent area for international exploitation. The Convention, which is now poised somewhat precariously at mid-point with 34 of the required 60 ratifications, has, of course, far more than economic significance. The Convention's first purpose is to prevent conflicts over the space, the uses, and the resources of the seas and oceans. The ocean-related nature of recent tensions and hostilities in several areas serves as a constant reminder of the need for full acceptance of this major legal instrument. I would hope that the same realistic assessment of common interests that led to the agreement on mining sites and opened the way for the first site registration will bring the ratification of, or accession to, the Convention by those States that have not yet done so.

I believe that it is also symptomatic of a more pragmatic approach in the fields of trade and development that Member States have increasingly sought the assistance of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in developing national legislation to facilitate their integration into the growing transnational sector of the global economy. Through its advisory and information services, the Centre actively helps countries in dealing with the various ways in which the integration process can proceed. This process would be much facilitated by the increased predictability and stability that a code of conduct for transnational corporations could bring. A large measure of agreement on a draft has existed for some time. I would hope that before another year passes a final text will be approved.

It must be a continuing purpose of the United Nations to encourage universal respect for human rights and bring to this and to other major social problems the force of international co-operation.

Respect for human rights is part—and an important part—of the dynamic process of building a peaceful world. I seek, in my capacity as Secretary-General, continually to promote such respect and to ensure that the Secretariat carries out its important responsibilities in this area with full effectiveness. I believe that the activities of the United Nations, aimed at bringing the widest compliance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the other United Nations human rights instruments, have, despite financial constraints, gathered further momentum this past year. The growing international participation in dealing with human rights issues, especially the dedicated, energetic efforts of non-governmental organizations, are having a positive effect. Open debate about situations of concern now takes place regularly in various United Nations bodies meeting at different times of the year, and fact-finding into specific situations is done on an ongoing basis. I would urge that in those cases where full co-operation has been denied the Government concerned give renewed consideration to the matter. I believe the advisory services of the United Nations with growing emphasis on national human rights systems are of special importance in this respect. Technical assistance from the United Nations has proven useful in the development of means for concrete, practical action.

With the establishment of the United Nations, respect for human rights throughout the world was recognized for the first time as the legitimate concern of the international community. In these past four decades, violations of human rights have not been eliminated, but very real progress has been achieved. The world now is alert to infringements of human rights as never before. Their occurrence in any systematic form does not go unnoticed. The United Nations is an important factor in ensuring this is the case. I believe we are seeing evidence now of the Organization's importance—also as a forum for concerted action aimed at encouraging rectification of unsatisfactory human rights situations wherever they may be. This is the direction in which we must move with a unified sense of purpose. We now are approaching the fortieth-anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. I would urge that, in order to increase yet further the benefits brought by that seminal Declaration, the complementary instruments agreed in the United Nations, further defining the rights to which all are entitled and providing procedures to encourage respect for them, be universally ratified and rigorously observed.

In the area of social concerns, I would point to two noteworthy instances in which Member States in past months have joined in constructive efforts to meet serious global threats. In June of this year, 138 nations of every political orientation and every stage of economic development gathered together at Vienna in a Conference convened by the United Nations at my suggestion to combat drug abuse throughout the world. In 10 days of harmonious, purposeful discussions, the delegates drew up a 35-point plan for a comprehensive, international attack on this scourge. The Conference was both a negotiation and a market-place of ideas and technology. It afforded a glimpse of a workable future in which nations set aside fundamental differences and polemics to face squarely a common threat. There needs now to be a sustained and well co-ordinated follow-up, nationally, internationally, and in the United Nations system, imbued with this same dedication and realism. The United Nations is already playing a major role in counter-ing drug abuse, being particularly effective in providing technical assistance to developing countries. The recent substantial growth in the resources of the Fund for Drug Abuse Control has permitted the geographical expansion of its programmes. It now receives support from all political and regional groupings—further evidence of jointly accepted responsibility to fight together against a common threat.

Drug abuse can and does undermine the fabric of societies and ruin the lives of uncounted individuals. Degradation of the environment can prejudice life itself and the means of livelihood for all. In facing this threat, too, nations are working together in common purpose within the framework of the United Nations. Spurred by the alarming discovery that there is a hole in the ozone layer over Antarctica, Member States, acting under the provisions of the Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer, adopted at Vienna on 22 March 1985, this year registered willingness gradually to phase out chlorofluorocarbons even though for some this will involve painful short-term adjustments. The benefits of this action will be felt by all the world's inhabitants for succeeding generations.

The Secretariat needs to be structured in such a way as to support with maximum effectiveness the work of the United Nations in promoting respect for human rights and encouraging broad understanding of the social dimensions of global problems. The organization of the Secretariat should reflect the importance of these issues. Having this in mind, I have, as part of the broad reform measures now under way in the Secretariat, consolidated activities on social policy and social development in the United Nations Office at Vienna and on human rights in the United Nations Office at Geneva. This should permit the United Nations to serve Member States better and speak with a clearer and more coherent voice on these issues.

I am very happy to note the recognition expressed by many Member States of the skilful assistance rendered by the Secretariat in the instances of progress that I have mentioned in both the economic and social fields, for all of which the United Nations provided the necessary framework and often the catalyst as well.

VI

The more one reflects upon many of the economic and social issues of the day, the more apparent their multi-dimensional character becomes, involving close interaction between economic, social and, sometimes, political variables. The symbiosis of development, environment and population is beginning to be appreciated. We know that the remedy for drug abuse must be composed of many elements, economic, social and legal. Arms limitation efforts are hampered in some areas by social and economic factors that frequently invite violence and instability, as well as by political tensions. The interrelationship between disarmament, development and security is being usefully highlighted by the current United Nations Conference on the subject. In playing its essential part in dealing with this web of global problems, the United Nations system will need to be more fully integrated, and better able to follow priorities established for the system as a whole. It will be of ever greater importance that tasks be rationally distributed among the organizations of the system and that their capacities be used in complementary ways in order to gain maximum benefit from available resources to meet the growing needs of an ever more demanding world.

Today, there is no representative intergovernmental body in the United Nations that is able to provide authoritative guidance to Member States and to the organizations of the United Nations system with regard to priorities of global programmes, the allocation of responsibilities, and the utilization of assistance resources. Most of the specialized agencies and some of the organizations of the United Nations itself have governing bodies that meet at the ministerial level. Yet, the Economic and Social Council, which is charged in the Charter with co-ordination and policy formulation for the economic and social activities of the system, is not constituted by representatives of such authoritative rank. I believe this should be corrected. For optimum effectiveness, the Council might become, in practice, a Council of Ministers for Economic and Social Affairs which would have the authority to review the medium-term plans or equivalent documents of all the organizations of the United Nations system, thus contributing to rational utilization of resources in the light of global priorities as defined by the Council and giving greater strength and coherence to the system as a whole. The Council, with an enhanced participation of the specialized agencies, could keep world economic and social developments under review and suggest modifications of programmes to meet changing circumstances and new exigencies. The cabinet-rank Council members, who might vary, or be augmented, according to the economic or social issue under consideration, would be able to speak with much greater authority than is the case. Given the orientation of such a Council, the present deliberative function of the Economic and Social Council might, in part or in whole, be assumed by the Second and Third Committees of the General Assembly. This would require careful analysis.

This concept, if followed, would obviously lead to a radical change in the functioning of the Economic and Social Council, but I believe it might be more consonant with the original intent of the Charter than the way in which the Council has functioned until now. I put it forward in this report because I believe events of the past year have further shown the need for greater integration of United Nations activities to correspond with the need for more integrated approaches to problems in the economic and social fields. I hope that, along with other suggestions that have been made on this subject, it will stimulate early and serious consideration by Member States of the direction in which we should move. I feel compelled to state that in recent years the effectiveness of the Council in providing intellectual leadership and the needed co-ordination of United Nations economic and social activities has been inadequate. I would add also that the incremental reforms undertaken over the years to improve the functioning of the Economic and Social Council have not had the desired effect. We need to focus on what the Council should do rather than on how it can better perform what it has been doing. It is now particularly important that the United Nations be so organized as to bring maximum benefit from what I believe is a nascent consensus among Member States in meeting global problems.

To encourage an integrated approach to problems and take advantage of the human resources of the system, I believe a small policy planning staff for development, which would include representatives of relevant specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, could also be of great value. Such a staff could consider integrated approaches to development-related problems and objectives that would take account of the capacities of the system as a whole.

VII

I am aware that the readiness of Governments to utilize the United Nations as the forum for dealing with many of the problems that I have outlined in the preceding sections of this report will depend in part upon their appreciation of its efficiency and effectiveness. Thus, I welcomed the adoption by the General Assembly, at its forty-first session, of resolution 41/213 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations—a step that could signify a major turning-point for the United Nations at this critical time. As I mentioned in my progress report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination earlier this year, the objectives put forward by the Assembly in that resolution can only be achieved if Member States and the Secretariat face together our responsibilities. My views on the direct relationship between any changes in the intergovernmental machinery and modification in the size, composition and work of the Secretariat staff are a matter of record.

The proposed programme budget for the forthcoming biennium that I have submitted to the General Assembly is 1.8 per cent less than the revised appropriation for the present biennium and reflects a number of the austerity measures that I have already taken. A rigorous programme-by-programme review has been launched in order to identify the specific functions where post reductions can best be accommodated. Secretariat structures in the political areas have been streamlined and more effectively organized, and a review of the economic and social sectors is under way. A restructuring of the Department of Administration and Management has been effected and substantial changes in the Department of Public Information are now being initiated. I am convinced that these measures will enhance the ability of the United Nations to discharge its responsibilities.

I must make clear that the necessary prolongation of austerity measures, including the freeze on staff recruitment and restrictions on meetings, has an adverse effect on programme implementation and on the Secretariat staff, although I have sought to minimize both. The mechanisms for staff-management consultations that have proven fruitful in the past have become especially important. In fact, the staff have been active partners in the search for the best means of implementing the reform measures mandated by the General Assembly. More effective communication between staff and management at the department level and at the Secretariat-wide level is still needed, however, to reinforce the co-operation shown in the face of the present critical situation.

With the staff reductions, significant financial savings to the regular budget will be realized. At the same time, these reductions can, in themselves, require special allocations of funds, and some additional resources will also be needed to strengthen the Secretariat through the provision of enhanced training, the improvement of career development prospects and the use of computer processing and office automation. We must also continue to design incentives to attract and retain highly talented staff in the service of the Organization with the equitable geographic distribution foreseen in the Charter and in the resolutions of the General Assembly. While the recruitment freeze will inevitably set back the rate of achievement of our earlier goals, special measures are being taken to ensure that competent women in the Secretariat attain senior-level positions through the promotion process. Our experience this past year has shown that much can be achieved in this manner. I have during this period appointed three women to posts at the rank of Under-Secretary-General.

The financial crisis which made necessary the austerity measures and encouraged the reforms that are now being implemented stemmed from more profound causes than dissatisfaction with the administrative efficiency of the United Nations. Deep-seated political differences gave rise to a turning away in some quarters from multilateralism and to the rejection by some Member States of adopted programmes. This led to the withholding of assessed contributions which, in combination with the late payment of assessments, brought about the present crisis. As I have described in the preceding sections of this report, there have been indications of a renewed recognition of the importance of the United Nations in facing global problems. The major contributor has reaffirmed the binding nature of budgetary assessments decided by the General Assembly. Many Member States have demonstrated their faith in the value of the United Nations by providing financial assistance, some beyond their assessed contributions, in response to the acute need of the Organization.

In the light of these developments and the reforms that are in progress, I look forward to the early restoration of the financial soundness of the Organization. I must emphasize, however, that this has not yet occurred. There is as yet no assurance that payment of assessed contributions will meet the minimum austerity operating expenses. Orderly administrative management is seriously handicapped when there is uncertainty as to receipt of a significant portion of the regular programme budget. The reforms that are being implemented will do much to bring about the efficient organization in which Member States can have confidence. The financial viability and the operational effectiveness of the United Nations will depend primarily, however, on compliance by all Member States with the financial requirements of membership.

The pragmatic approach of Member States in seeking together solutions to economic and social problems and the unity displayed by the Security Council in recent weeks are developments which restore a vision of what can be accomplished through the United Nations in bringing a safer, more equitable, and more prosperous world. It is a vision that Member States need to reclaim. It may seem contradictory to speak at the same time of pragmatism and vision. I believe, however, that a vision without the definition of realistic means of approaching it can lead to disillusionment and cynicism. That, to a certain extent, is what has happened in the years since the United Nations was founded with- a vision of peace.

The Charter of the United Nations defines the principles to be followed in gaining peace in the fullest meaning of what true peace entails. These principles have lost none of their relevance or validity. What has too often been lacking is the readiness of Member States to put aside national differences and national ambitions and work together within the United Nations in accordance with these principles towards common goals. It is my belief that the commonality factor, to which I referred as I began this report and which derives from a realistic assessment by Member States of national interests in the face of global challenges, can do much to bring this about. It is factually evident that these challenges, many of which I have mentioned, including, most important, the prevention of nuclear war, affect the security and well-being of all countries. It is a matter of their individual national interest to work together with others within a multilateral framework since the challenges cannot otherwise be successfully met. For the-most part, they are by their nature susceptible primarily to pragmatic measures. In an ideologically divided world, this can provide a basis of unity in action, as I believe it has in some cases begun to do. In my expectation, countries that have the experience of putting aside national differences in dealing realistically with global threats to economic and social well-being will more easily do the same in seeking resolutions to political problems that can equally, and even more immediately, affect conditions of life on earth. In these circumstances, the relevance and potential of the United Nations increases as the existing and natural universal instrument for international co-operation on global problems.

The United Nations in its agenda has until now kept pace with global change. Indeed, on occasion, it has set the pace for such change. In the process, it has, perhaps, expanded at times beyond the limits of its managerial capacity and the availability of resources. The budgetary and administrative reforms that are now under way should do much to correct those weaknesses that exist. There will remain, however, a need for the Organization to be ever attentive to the changing needs of a planet in flux and to be sensitive to the wisest ideas and counsel that the intellectual community of the world has to offer. For this, I am convinced that the United Nations must develop a greater capacity to associate with its global mission statesmen and scientists of the highest calibre from around the world. Such a partnership will, I believe, like the non-governmental organizations on which the effectiveness of the United Nations heavily depends, strengthen the United Nations as a vehicle through which the intellectual resources and the practical experience of the international community can be integrated in confronting the demands of the coming years. I shall do all that I can in the years ahead to develop and nurture such an association.

The peaceful resolution of problems depends more than anything else on a convergence of interests. The past year has, I believe, been a time of clarification in this respect. I have no doubt that such convergence now exists on important issues confronting the world. The beginning, evident in the past year, of the translation of this convergence into practical agreements needs to be, and can be, pursued, in sustained dialogue and negotiations, and, I would urge, expanded in undertakings that bring together the capacities of nations for the common benefit of humanity. We must see this as a major element in the dynamic process of achieving peace—a process defined in the Charter and in which the United Nations has an indispensable role.

Chapter I

Disarmament

The international community welcomed the signing, on 8 December 1987, of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles—the second arms regulation agreement since the Second World War involving the actual elimination of existing weapons, the other being the 1971 convention banning biological weapons.

The International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development (New York, 24 August-11 September) adopted by consensus a 35-paragraph Final Document, in which the 150 participating States asserted that global military expenditures were in dramatic contrast to economic and social underdevelopment and to the misery and poverty afflicting more than two thirds of humanity, and called for fostering an interrelated perspective on disarmament, development and security.

At its 1987 session, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted 62 resolutions and two decisions on a wide range of arms limitation and disarmament matters.

The 40-nation Conference on Disarmament, the multilateral negotiating body in Geneva, continued to experience differences in positions and approaches on such long-standing agenda items as a nuclear-weapon-test ban, to the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, and the prevention of an arms race in outer space. It was also unable to reach agreement on its items on radiological weapons and a comprehensive programme of disarmament. Some progress, however, was reported in its ongoing negotiations for an agreement banning chemical weapons. The Disarmament Commission, a deliberative body composed of all United Nations Member States, took on in 1987 two new agenda items—issues related to conventional disarmament and the question of verification in all aspects.

General aspects

Communications. In the course of 1987, the Secretary-General received a number of communications, from countries individually or in groups, urging greater international efforts for arms control and disarmament. Many of the communications focused on the USSR-United States negotiations on eliminating intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) (see p. 46); some others, while submitted under disarmament items, dealt with regional conflicts. (Communications on specific disarmament topics are dealt with under the appropriate heading in this chapter.)

Nicaragua, in a 13 January communiqué,⁽¹⁾ condemned the nuclear-deterrence doctrine and appealed to the United States not to conduct a first nuclear test during 1987 so that the USSR would maintain its offer of a moratorium on nuclear testing. On 19 January,⁽²⁾ Mikhail S. Gorbachev, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the USSR, reiterated the country's readiness to renew the moratorium if the United States reciprocated.

In a 16 February speech in Moscow to the International Forum for a Nuclear-Free World and the Survival of Mankind,⁽³⁾ the USSR General Secretary said the 1986 Reykjavik, Iceland, summit⁽⁴⁾ with the United States amounted to an acknowledgement that nuclear weapons no longer guaranteed security; the USSR remained willing to renounce its nuclear-Power status and to reduce all other weapons to a minimum reasonable sufficiency. On 28 February,⁽⁵⁾ he proposed singling out and concluding a separate agreement on medium-range missiles deployed in Europe, and stressed the importance of agreeing on substantial limitation and then complete elimination of strategic weapons, linking the conclusion of such an agreement with a decision to prevent weapons-deployment in outer space. Support for the USSR proposals was expressed in a 5 March letter⁽⁶⁾ by the German Democratic Republic, as well as by the Committee of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance (Moscow, 24 and 25 March),(7) which also reaffirmed its resolve to press for a 25 per cent reduction, by the early 1990s, in armed forces and conventional weapons in Europe.

On 3 March,(8) President Ronald Reagan of the United States welcomed the USSR declaration on not linking the INF agreement to other negotiations, and announced that the United States would present its draft INF treaty text in Geneva on 4 March.

The Special Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, Guyana, 9-12 March)(9) condemned the transit of vessels equipped with nuclear weapons and the foreign military presence in the region, and expressed support for a regional initiative for agreements to limit arms expenditures and make more resources available for economic and social development.

In a 10 April speech to the Czechoslovak-Soviet Friendship Meeting, at Prague,(10) the USSR General Secretary proposed, among other things, to begin discussions on reducing and subsequently eliminating 500 to 1,000-kilometre-range missiles in Europe without linking that issue to the medium-range missile question, and to withdraw from Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic missiles deployed there in response to the situation in Western Europe. He stated that the USSR had ceased producing chemical weapons and had begun constructing a special facility for destroying the stockpiles.

The heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe, at their Seventh Summit Conference (Maputo, Mozambique, 21 and 22 May),(11) welcomed the resumed disarmament negotiations between the USSR and the United States, and appealed to the nuclear Powers to adopt concrete measures to ensure that outer space and the seabed were used exclusively for peaceful purposes.

The heads of State or Government of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania—also known collectively as the Six-Nation Initiative for Peace and Disarmament—in a joint statement of 22 May,(12) urged the USSR and the United States to agree on eliminating INF as a first step towards the total elimination of nuclear weapons everywhere, reiterated their call for halting all nuclear testing and preventing an arms race in outer space, and renewed their offer to assist in nuclear-test-ban verification.

The Political Consultative Committee of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty (Berlin, 28 and 29 May)(13) urged immediate conclusion of an agreement on eliminating all USSR and United States medium- and shorter-range missiles in Europe, other negotiations concerning tactical nuclear and offensive strategic weapons, and elimination of chemical weapons. In an accompanying document on the military doctrine of the Warsaw Treaty organization, the States parties repeated those proposals and urged the simultaneous dissolution of the two military alliances.

On 9 June,(14) participants at the Venice Economic Summit (Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, United States, and the European Community (EC)) reaffirmed the continuing importance of nuclear deterrence in preserving peace, welcomed the intensification of dialogue on arms control and the emergence of more favourable prospects for reducing nuclear forces, and emphasized their determination to enhance conventional stability at lower levels of forces and to achieve the total elimination of chemical weapons. The Foreign Ministers of the 12 EC member States, in a 13 July declaration on East-West relations,(15) reiterated the commitment to eliminate chemical weapons and noted with satisfaction the favourable perspectives as regards the USSR-United States agreement on INF.

Responding to the Six-Nation appeal, the USSR General Secretary, on 12 June,(16) proposed talks with the United States to review the ratification of their bilateral treaties—Threshold Test Ban Treaty (1974) and the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty (1976)—and a substantial reduction in the threshold capacity of nuclear explosions permitted under those treaties, with a simultaneous reduction in their number, using the seismographic equipment of the two nations and monitoring facilities of the Six-Nation group.

The Foreign Ministers attending the Twentieth Ministerial Meeting of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) (Singapore, 15 and 16 June)(17) noted some encouraging developments in multilateral and bilateral disarmament efforts; appealed to all countries to negotiate for the destruction of nuclear and chemical weapons; and expressed the hope that the militarily powerful and the developed States would participate actively in the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development.

Poland, on 17 July,(18) proposed a plan for decreasing armaments and increasing confidence in Central Europe, through a gradual withdrawal and/or reduction of specified, mutually agreed types and quantities of nuclear and conventional weapons, joint efforts for strictly defensive military doctrines, and agreement on confidence- and security-building measures and verification mechanisms:

In a 21 July interview with the Indonesian newspaper Merdeka,⁽¹⁹⁾ the USSR General Secretary announced that the USSR was prepared, in its Asian part, to eliminate all its medium-range missiles, not to increase the number of nuclear-capable aircraft and to reduce naval activities, provided that the United States reciprocated. In a note verbale dated 14 August,⁽²⁰⁾ the USSR said it was prepared to reinstate the test-ban moratorium, asserted that the USSR-United States talks and the preparation of a comprehensive treaty in the Conference on Disarmament should proceed in parallel, proposed the establishment of an ad hoc group of scientific experts to recommend to the Conference the structure and functions of a monitoring system for any possible test-ban agreement, and saw a need to establish an international system for global radiation monitoring using space communications circuits. In view of the special responsibility it shared with the United States for nuclear disarmament, the USSR suggested that the test-ban treaty should allow for the possibility that, initially, only the two States concerned, and not all the nuclear Powers, should be parties to it. Having proposed full-scale talks with the United States, starting with issues related to the ratification of the 1974 and 1976 bilateral agreements, the USSR was prepared to reach an interim agreement with the United States limiting the force of underground nuclear explosions to a threshold of 1 kilotonne and the number of nuclear-weapon tests to two or three per year, and to attend a conference to expand the scope of the prohibitions laid down in the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water.⁽²¹⁾ Supporting the USSR proposals on 18 September,⁽²²⁾ the Byelorussian SSR added that the international community was prepared morally, politically and technologically for serious action to prohibit nuclear-weapon tests.

On 14 September,⁽²³⁾ the President of Romania proposed that the General Assembly, at its 1987 session, should appeal to the USSR and the United States to conclude early an INF agreement, and to all States possessing nuclear weapons to end testing.

The USSR General Secretary, in a 2 October foreign-policy statement at Murmansk,⁽²⁴⁾ said the 1986 Reykjavik summit had led to the anticipated signing of the INF agreement; suggested making the Arctic region a zone of peace; proposed consultations among member countries of the Warsaw Treaty and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) on reducing military-naval-air force operations in the Baltic, the North Sea and the Norwegian and Greenland Seas; and proposed banning naval activities in mutually agreed parts of international straits and in busy shipping lanes.

Foreign Ministers and heads of delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the Assembly's forty-second session (New York, 5-7 October)⁽²⁵⁾ hoped that the USSR-United States INF negotiations would lead to general and complete disarmament, stressed that the third (1988) special session of the Assembly on disarmament should seek to broaden the international consensus on concrete measures to halt and reverse the arms race, and urged the early establishment of international financial mechanisms to facilitate the transfer of resources released through disarmament measures for socio-economic development.

The Six-Nation Initiative for Peace and Disarmament, in a joint statement of 7 October,⁽²⁶⁾ welcomed the 18 September agreement between the USSR and the United States to seek global elimination of all land-based intermediate nuclear missiles.

The Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada, 13-17 October)⁽²⁷⁾ welcomed the progress in INF talks and hoped that they would provide impetus for progress in other areas of disarmament, particularly in conventional arms reduction and a chemical-weapons ban, and welcomed the agreement between the USSR and the United States to start verification negotiations to enable ratification of their 1974 and 1976 bilateral treaties.

The Foreign and Defence Ministers of the Western European Union (The Hague, Netherlands, 27 October)⁽²⁸⁾ stated that the fundamental problem for European security was the superior conventional, chemical and nuclear forces of the Warsaw Treaty countries; they remained committed to the strategy of deterrence and defence, arms reductions and the co-operation mechanism provided for in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

On the seventieth anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution (Moscow, 2 November),⁽²⁹⁾ the USSR General Secretary stated that the anticipated conclusion of an agreement with the United States on medium- and shorter-range missiles would eliminate for the first time an entire class of nuclear weapons, represent the first practical step towards destroying nuclear arsenals and demonstrate that such action was possible without harm to anyone.

In a 29 November "Acapulco Commitment to Peace, Development and Democracy"⁽³⁰⁾—signed by the heads of State of Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela, at the first meeting of the Permanent Mechanism for Consultation and Concerted Political Action—the participants, welcoming the prospective INF agreement, also called for strengthening the multilateral mechanisms provided for under the United Nations Charter and reaffirmed the need to prevent the introduction of nuclear weapons into the South Atlantic.

In a declaration on East-West relations, issued after a meeting of the European Council (Copenhagen, Denmark, 4 and 5 December),(31) the heads of State and Government of the 12 EC States members expressed the hope that the USSR-United States agreement on eliminating INF would give impetus to other arms control and disarmament negotiations. On the eve of a Washington, D.C., summit between the USSR and the United States, the Emir of Kuwait, in his 6 December message to the two leaders,(32) said the international community awaited steps subsequent to the agreement on eliminating INF in Europe. Also on 6 December, the Six-Nation Initiative for Peace and Disarmament(33) wished success at the summit and announced that the Six planned to meet at Stockholm, Sweden, to analyse the current progress in disarmament and to set what they saw as the next priorities.

A joint statement issued at the conclusion of the USSR-United States summit talks on 10 December(34) dealt with the INF treaty (see p. 47) and other disarmament issues, including nuclear and space talks, chemical weapons and conventional forces. With regard to strategic and space talks, the two leaders agreed to work towards completing a treaty on reducing and limiting strategic offensive arms, preferably in time for their next summit in the first half of 1988.

The Warsaw Treaty member States, meeting at Berlin on 11 December,(35) considered it significant that the USSR and the United States had agreed to halve the number of strategic offensive weapons on either side while abiding by the 1972 bilateral Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems (also known as the ABM Treaty); they agreed that the accord also opened the way for progress in other areas, notably, chemical-weapons and nuclear-test bans.

In the course of the year, various proposals for weapon-free zones were made or supported. The USSR in April(10) supported the proposals by Bulgaria, Romania and Greece for a nuclear- and chemical-weapon-free zone in the Balkans; by Poland for confidence-building measures in Europe; and by Finland and other Western European countries for a nuclear-free zone. The States parties to the Warsaw Treaty, in March(7) and in May,(13) expressed support for nuclear- and chemical-weapon-free zones in the Balkans and in the centre and the north of Europe. Czechoslovakia, on 10 June,(36) and the German Democratic Republic, on 14 June,(37) recalled their joint appeal of 3 April to the Federal Republic of Germany to discuss setting up a nuclear-weapon-free corridor in Central Europe with an initial width of some 150 kilometres on each side of the border between the three States. On 15 December,(38) ASEAN member countries agreed to intensify efforts towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South-East Asia, as well as a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality.

Malaysia transmitted a statement of the Inter-Action Council (fifth session, Kuala Lumpur, 19-21 April)(39)—comprising former heads of State or Government—in which it called on the USSR and the United States to, among other things, agree on INF elimination, reduce by 50 per cent their strategic nuclear forces, and agree on a joint interpretation of the ABM Treaty; the Council also called for the banning of chemical and nuclear weapons. By a letter dated 17 June(40) Sweden transmitted the second edition of the "Report to the United Nations from the Great Peace Journey, Five Questions to the Governments and Their Answers", a project by a Sweden-based body which had contacted United Nations Member States, by correspondence and by visits (to 97 Governments), for their peace and disarmament stances.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his 1987 annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), observed that new attitudes and revised policies had emerged in the disarmament field during the preceding year. He considered the USSR-United States INF talks significant, in that they could give impetus to other ongoing disarmament negotiations as well as constitute a first step towards the elimination of all nuclear weapons. He pointed to the desirability of early agreement on a comprehensive nuclear test-ban treaty, asserting that the continued testing for the development or improvement of nuclear weapons would mitigate the value of eliminating one current type of missile. On disarmament and development, the Secretary-General stated that the acquisition of large quantities of sophisticated arms by developing countries placed a severe strain on badly needed resources, added external debt and created a secondary demand for imports that increased their dependence; improved security arrangements could reduce the need felt by them for expensive arms and large armed forces. He felt that the General Assembly's third special session devoted to disarmament could provide an opportunity to consider how the Organization's potential in the disarmament field could be realized.

Comprehensive approaches to disarmament

In 1987, all the principal intergovernmental disarmament bodies again discussed enhancing the United Nations role in disarmament and increasing the efficiency of the existing machinery for deliberations and negotiations on the topic. In addition to the activities of those bodies, this section deals with measures taken to follow up on the decisions adopted at the 1978 and 1982 special sessions of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, along with developments relating to a proposed world disarmament conference.

Among its 1987 actions, the Assembly decided, in November, that its third special session devoted to disarmament should be held from 31 May to 25 June 1988.

UN disarmament bodies and their activities in 1987

The United Nations continued its disarmament efforts in 1987 mainly through the General Assembly and its First Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a subsidiary organ of the Assembly) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum at Geneva).

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, at its 1987 session in New York, held 11 plenary meetings between 4 and 27 May.⁽¹⁾ It also met on 1 December to organize its work and elect officers for 1988.

Its agenda included items on aspects of the arms race, particularly a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament; reduction of military budgets; South Africa's nuclear capability; review of the United Nations role in disarmament; and naval armaments and disarmament. Two new items on the 1987 agenda concerned conventional disarmament and the question of verification in all its aspects.

The Commission established a Committee of the Whole, which in turn set up a contact group to consider aspects of the arms race and elaboration of a general approach to disarmament negotiations. The group held eight meetings between 11 and 22 May under the chairmanship of Jaskaran S. Teja (India), using as a basis for its work the 1986 compilation of proposals for recommendations on that item, taking also into account a working paper submitted by a group of socialist States on "Negotiations on nuclear disarmament" and a draft text of a recommendation on zones of peace, submitted by Brazil. Unable to reach consensus on a complete set of recommendations, the group recommended that the Commission continue efforts in 1988; the 1987 compilation of proposals was annexed to the Commission's report to the Assembly.

In addition, the Commission established a consultation group each to deal with the reduction of military budgets and the naval arms race, and a working group for each of the other agenda items. None of them concluded work in 1987 and recommended that the work be continued in 1988. Details of the Commission's discussion of these questions can be found elsewhere in this chapter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/42 G without vote.

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Emphasizing again the importance of an effective follow-up to the relevant recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Taking into account the relevant sections of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions of the tenth special session,

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, 34/83 H of 11 December 1979, 35/152 F of 12 December 1980, 36/92 B of 9 December 1981, 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, 38/183 E of 20 December 1983, 39/148 R of 17 December 1984, 40/152 F of 16 December 1985 and 41/86 E of 4 December 1986,

1. Takes note of the report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Notes that the Disarmament Commission has yet to conclude its consideration of some items on its agenda, but notes also with appreciation the progress achieved on some of the items;

3. Recalls the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

4. Stresses the importance for the Disarmament Commission to work on the basis of a relevant agenda of disarmament topics, thereby enabling the Commission to concentrate its efforts and thus optimize its progress on specific subjects in accordance with resolution 37/78 H;

5. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of resolution 37/78 H, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations. at its 1988 substantive session: on the outstanding items on its agenda, taking into account the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly as well as the results of its 1987 substantive session;

6. Also requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding four weeks during 1988 and to submit a substantive special report, containing specific recommendations on the items included in its agenda, to the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament. as well as a report to the Assembly at its forty-third session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the report of the Conference on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the forty-second session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure full provision to the Commission and its subsidiary bodies of interpretation and translation facilities in the official languages, and to assign, as a matter of priority, all the necessary resources and services to this end;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

General Assembly resolution 42/42 G

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/754) without vote, 9 November (meeting 36); lo-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.45); agenda item 66 (a).

While joining the consensus, the United Kingdom said the request in paragraph 8 for provision of interpretation and translation should not apply to every informal meeting held during the session of the Commission. Further, it understood that nothing in the text constituted a request for resumption of verbatim records for the Commission.

In other 1987 resolutions, the Assembly instructed the Disarmament Commission on a number of topics, among them: South Africa's nuclear capability (42/34 B), reduction of military budgets (42/36), conventional disarmament (42/38 E, 42/38 G), naval armaments and disarmament (42/38 K), the United Nations role in disarmament (42/38 O), confidence-building measures (42/39 F) and verification (42/42 F).

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, the 40-member multilateral negotiating body, met at Geneva from 3 February to 30 April and from 9 June to 28 August 1987.(2) Holding 51 formal plenary meetings and 23 informal meetings, it considered a nuclear-test ban, cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament, prevention of nuclear war, chemical weapons, prevention of an arms race in outer space, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, radiological weapons and a comprehensive programme of disarmament.

The Conference re-established ad hoc committees on chemical weapons, assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, radiological weapons and the prevention of an arms race in outer space. Details of those questions are discussed elsewhere in the chapter.

The Conference continued to consider, but did not take action on, the possibility of increasing its membership by four States. It also set up an informal group of seven members to consider proposals for its improved and effective functioning, but no action was taken and consideration of the subject was to continue in 1988.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September,(3) the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(4) drew the attention of Member States to the 1987 consideration by the Conference on Disarmament of the participation of non-Conference members in its work.

Communication. The Committee of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty (Prague, 28 and 29 October)(5) suggested that the Conference on Disarmament focus on completing the draft convention on a chemical-weapons ban and drafting an agreement on a nuclear-weapon-test ban, and that the Assembly's third special session on disarmament examine the work of the Conference with a view to increasing its effectiveness. Further, the Foreign Ministers proposed that the Conference remain in session throughout the year with two or three breaks; involve experts and scientific centres in various countries in preliminary work on the topics considered; and hold ministerial-level sessions as appropriate. They considered that the Conference might eventually become a permanent universal organ for disarmament negotiations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted two resolutions on the report of the Conference on Disarmament (42/42 K and L), and a third on participation in the Conference's work by non-members (42/42 B).

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/42 K by recorded vote.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament
The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant portions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in particular paragraph 120,

Bearing in mind that considerable and urgent work remains to be accomplished in the field of disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, should play a central role in the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament, which the Conference adopted by consensus,

1. Takes note of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1987 session;

2. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its work in accordance with the relevant provisions set forth in paragraph 120 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

4. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 42/42 K

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 127-0-28 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/754) by recorded vote (87-0-32), 13 November (meeting 43); 14-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.61/Rev.1); agenda item 66 (b).

In favour: Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zaire.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Algeria, Angola, Brazil, Cameroon, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ghana, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mexico, Nicaragua, Peru, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Vanuatu, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Explaining its vote, Sri Lanka felt the text presented a partial picture and failed to comment on the work of the Conference or request that body to negotiate; it would have supported the draft had it provided more specific encouragement to the Conference to fulfil its responsibilities. Yugoslavia said the Assembly should request the Conference to negotiate on the priority issues of disarmament. The United States considered the draft's approach more constructive than the other proposal on the topic (see below), but felt the former still failed to be strictly procedural. Burma viewed the text as procedural and not incompatible with the other text. Nigeria also supported the text for being procedural and devoid of contentious concepts, although it was distressed by lack of progress and the routine approach to key topics in the Conference. Venezuela would have preferred the draft to contain clearer and more specific references to the Conference's negotiating responsibilities.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/42 L also by recorded vote.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 B of 11 December 1979, 35/152 J of 12 December 1980, 36/92 F of 9 December 1981, 37/78 G of 9 December 1982, 38/183 I of 20 December 1983, 39/148 N of 17 December 1984, 40/152 M of 16 December 1985 and 41/86 M of 4 December 1986,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should play the central role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament and on the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Reaffirming that the establishment of ad hoc committees offers the best available machinery for the conduct of multilateral negotiations on items on the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament and contributes to the strengthening of the negotiating role of the Conference,

Deploring the fact that, despite the repeated requests of the General Assembly and the expressed wish of the great majority of members of the Conference on Disarmament, the establishment of an ad hoc committee on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and on nuclear disarmament, as well as on the prevention of nuclear war, was once again prevented during the 1987 session of the Conference,

Expressing its deep concern and disappointment that the Conference on Disarmament has not been enabled, this year either, to reach concrete agreements on any disarmament

ment issues to which the United Nations has assigned greatest priority and urgency and which have been under consideration for a number of years,

1. Notes with satisfaction that further progress has been made in the negotiations on the elaboration of a draft convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, and urges the Conference on Disarmament to intensify further its work with a view to completing negotiations on such a draft convention;

2. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its work, to further its mandate more earnestly through negotiations and to adopt concrete measures on the specific priority issues of disarmament on its agenda, in particular those relating to nuclear disarmament;

3. Once again urges the Conference on Disarmament to continue or to undertake, during its 1988 session, substantive negotiations on the priority questions of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and other resolutions of the Assembly on those questions;

4. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to provide the existing ad hoc committees with appropriate negotiating mandates and to establish, as a matter of urgency, the ad hoc committees under item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear-test ban", on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and on the prevention of nuclear war;

5. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, without further delay, negotiations with a view to elaborating a draft treaty on a nuclear-test ban;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a special report on the status of its negotiations and its work to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament;

7. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Approved by First Committee (A/42/754) by recorded vote (104-5-14), 13 November (meeting 43); 29-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.69), orally revised; agenda item 66 (b).

In explanation of vote, the United States said the text attempted to superimpose the views of certain States on what had been collectively developed and agreed upon by consensus among the participants in the Conference. Similarly, Australia viewed the text as distorted, in that it drew selectively on the work and consensus conclusions of the Conference. The Netherlands disagreed with the language in various paragraphs and with the argument that the draft prevented some from supporting the other procedural draft that it had introduced (see resolution 42/42 K above).

Among those preferring a single resolution on the topic, Argentina supported the text that became resolution 42/42 K for substance in paragraphs 2 and 3, and 42/42 L text for its substantive approach to the problem. The USSR said the former did not dwell clearly on enhancing the effectiveness of the Conference, whereas the latter precisely stated its role and objectives, reaffirmed the political will for the full use of its potential and called for intensification of its work.

The General Assembly adopted resolution 42/42 B by recorded vote.

Review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/148 L of 17 December 1984, 40/152 J of 16 December 1985 and 41/86 J of 4 December 1986,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on this subject submitted pursuant to resolution 41/86 J,

Noting with concern that the problem identified in the above-mentioned resolutions has not been alleviated,

Firmly convinced that all States have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations,

Bearing in mind paragraph 28 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it affirmed that all States have the duty to contribute to efforts in the field of disarmament and that all States have the right to participate in disarmament negotiations, as well as paragraphs 120 (g) and (h) of the Final Document,

Recalling further its resolution 38/183 F of 20 December 1983, in which it called upon the Governments of all States to contribute substantially, inter alia, to halting and reversing the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field, and thus to reducing the danger of nuclear war,

1. Reiterates once more the right of all States not members of the Conference on Disarmament to participate in the work of the plenary meetings of the Conference on substantive questions;

2. Urges States members of the Conference on Disarmament not to misuse the rules of procedure of the Conference so as to prevent States not members from exercising their right to participate in the work of the Conference;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/42 B

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 137-1-14 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/754) by recorded vote (103-1-13), 13 November (meeting 43); 2-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.16); agenda item 66 (I). Sponsors: Iraq, Jordan.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Iran.

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Canada, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, India, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Nigeria, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of vote, Iran said the text should have been merged with others to reduce the number of resolutions; questioning the rules of procedure of the Conference would indirectly harm the credibility of that body and the rules could not be altered to suit the wishes of a single country.

Asserting that non-members should not be prevented from expressing views in the Conference plenary sessions, Sweden and the United Kingdom stressed that the issue of participation was for the Conference itself to decide. France feared that paragraph 2 could be interpreted as inviting the Conference members to renounce the rules of procedure dealing with decisions; it preferred that the Assembly express the wish that Conference members respond favourably to non-members' requests to speak in plenary meetings.

In 1987, the Assembly adopted a number of other resolutions concerning the Conference on Disarmament. It called on the Conference to take up specific topics, such as cessation of nuclear-test explosions (42/26 A), a nuclear-test ban (42/27), strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States (42/31, 42/32), an arms race in outer space (42/33), new types of weapons of mass destruction (42/35), chemical weapons (42/37 A), radiological weapons (42/38 F), nuclear weapons in all aspects (42/38 L), non-use of nuclear weapons (42/39 C), the prevention of nuclear war (42/42 A, 42/42 D), cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament (42/42 C), a comprehensive programme of disarmament (42/42 I) and negotiations on disarmament (42/42 M).

UN role in disarmament

In 1987, the General Assembly, with a view to enhancing the role of the United Nations in disarmament, recommended that the Security Council consider establishing subsidiary bodies to facilitate a solution to disarmament issues (resolution 42/39 A), requested the Disarmament Commission to recommend ways to strengthen the United Nations role in disarmament (resolution 42/38 O), and recommended measures for rationalizing the work of the First Committee (42/42 N). Further, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report annually the developments in arms limitation and disarmament, including the implementation of Assembly resolutions on the topic (42/38 J).

Disarmament Commission consideration. Pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly request,(6) the Disarmament Commission(1) continued its consideration of the role of the United Nations in disarmament. Working Group II, established on 4 May to deal with the topic, held one informal and three formal meetings between 12 and 22 May, under the chairmanship of Paul Bamela Engo (Cameroon). The Working Group set up an open-ended contact group, which held four meetings between 19 and 22 May to consider a series of proposals submitted in 1986 and 1987 and to discuss the further course of action; a working paper prepared by the contact group was subsequently annexed to the report of the Working Group to the Commission. On 22 May, the Working Group recommended that work on the topic should continue in 1988 as a matter of priority.

Communication. By a 24 October message,(7) Mongolia pledged its dedication to enhance the United Nations as a unique, irreplaceable instrument of comprehensive security for all mankind.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In an April 1987 progress report(8) on the implementation of the 1986 General Assembly resolution approving recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations,(9) the Secretary-General said he expected the results of a review under way to be implemented later in the year, to meet the Group's suggestion that the Department for Disarmament Affairs be restructured to assist Member States in following disarmament negotiations and related disarmament questions (recommendation 20). In a follow-up report in July,⁽¹⁰⁾ he reported that he had decided to assign the primary responsibility for servicing the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean to the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/38 O without vote.

Review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/151 G of 17 December 1984, 40/94 O of 12 December 1985 and 41/59 O of 3 December 1986,

Bearing in mind that the primary purpose of the United Nations is to maintain international peace and security,

Reaffirming its conviction that genuine and lasting peace can be created only through the effective implementation of the security system provided for in the Charter of the United Nations and the speedy and substantial reduction of arms and armed forces, by international agreement and mutual example, leading ultimately to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Reaffirming further that the United Nations, in accordance with its Charter, has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament,

Recognizing the need for the United Nations, in discharging its central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament, to play a more active role in the field of disarmament in accordance with its primary purpose under the Charter to maintain international peace and security,

Taking into account the part of the report of the Disarmament Commission relating to this question,

1. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its consideration of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament as a matter of priority at its next substantive session, in 1988, with a view to the elaboration of concrete recommendations and proposals, as appropriate, taking into account, inter alia, the views and suggestions of Member States as well as the aforementioned documents on the subject;

2. Further requests the Disarmament Commission to submit its report on the subject, including findings, recommendations and proposals, as appropriate, to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament: report of the Disarmament Commission".

Role of the Security Council

On 30 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/39 A by recorded vote, as recommended by the First Committee.

Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 A of 11 December 1979, 35/156 J of 12 December 1980, 36/97 K of 9 December 1981, 37/100 E of 13 December 1982, 38/73 H of 15 December 1983, 39/63 K of 12 December 1984 and 40/151 A of 16 December 1985,

Expressing the growing alarm of the world community over the dangers of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and its adverse social and economic consequences,

Noting that the present state of the international situation requires that the disarmament principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations become part and parcel of any collective efforts aimed at ensuring a truly safe world, including those undertaken by the Security Council,

Reaffirming that the United Nations under its Charter plays a central role and bears main responsibility in the area of disarmament and the strengthening of international security,

Recalling paragraph 13 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which the Assembly acknowledged that genuine and lasting peace can only be created through the effective implementation of the security system provided for in the Charter and the speedy and substantial reduction of arms and armed forces, by international agreement and mutual example,

Recalling that under Article 26 of the Charter, the Security Council is responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee, plans for establishing an arms regulation system,

Noting the fact that the Security Council, which is vested under the Charter with the principal responsibility for maintaining international peace and security, has not yet conducted any examination of the question of the adverse effects of the arms race, especially in the nuclear field, on international peace and security, as provided for in the relevant General Assembly resolutions,

1. Calls upon the Security Council, in particular its permanent members, within the framework of its main task, to contribute to establishing and maintaining international peace and security with the least possible diversion of world human and economic resources to armament, and to take the necessary steps for the effective implementation of Article 26 of the Charter of the United Nations with a view to enhancing the central role of the United Nations in facilitating solutions to the issues of arms limitation, primarily in the nuclear field, and disarmament, as well as the strengthening of international peace and security;

2. Recommends that the nuclear-weapon States, which at the same time are the five permanent members of the Security Council, hold joint meetings and provide regular information to the General Assembly, as well as to the Conference on Disarmament, about the state of affairs as regards the range of issues related to disarmament, especially in the nuclear field, the prevention of a nuclear war and the status of the current agreements in the field of arms limitation and disarmament, and about progress at those negotiations which include the participation of the nuclear Powers;

3. Recommends that the Security Council consider the question of establishing, under Article 29 of the Charter, such subsidiary bodies as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions to facilitate a solution to disarmament issues;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly".

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

In explanation of vote, the United States asserted that, despite the unique opportunities the United Nations and the Security Council provided, it did not believe that the Organization should or could play a central role in nuclear-arms reduction negotiations; further, it said the Security Council was institutionally incapable of assuming a pre-eminent role in nuclear-arms reductions and that Council debate or a new machinery under it would duplicate the work, respectively, of the existing United Nations disarmament bodies and of the Department for Disarmament Affairs. The United Kingdom questioned the appropriateness of the General Assembly directing the Security Council to take specified action and the need for new United Nations disarmament bodies.

Rationalization of the First Committee's work

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/42 N by recorded vote.

Rationalization of the work of the First Committee

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that, in order for the United Nations to discharge effectively its central role and primary responsibilities in the field of disarmament and related security questions, the necessary political will of States as well as the effective functioning of existing machinery must be demonstrated,

Convinced that the existing machinery for the consideration of disarmament and related international security questions within the framework of the United Nations can and should be reinforced through concrete measures to increase its effectiveness and efficiency,

Emphasizing the need to strengthen the effectiveness and efficiency of the activities of the First Committee as the key organ of the General Assembly for disarmament and related international security questions,

Acknowledging the valuable proposals already introduced with the above-mentioned goal in mind, including those of the group of former and present chairmen and other officers of the First Committee,

Taking into account the report of the Disarmament Commission,

1. Decides to adopt the following recommendations concerning the work of the First Committee:

(a) The agenda of the First Committee should be rationalized by grouping or merging related items to the extent possible in order to provide greater organizational clarity and without prejudging their substance;

(b) Recommendations on procedural matters should be adopted as decisions, not as resolutions;

(c) In the interest of maximum effectiveness and efficiency, draft resolutions on the same subject or under the same agenda items should be merged, whenever possible;

(d) A period of time for discussion and for organized informal consultations among delegations should be allocated in the programme of work of the First Committee;

(e) The First Committee should have a single general debate on all disarmament questions during which delegations may speak on specific issues, in order to ensure the best use of time and resources available;

(f) The deadline for the submission of draft resolutions on disarmament items should be advanced further to the extent feasible with a view to allowing sufficient time for consultations before proceeding to take action upon them;

2. Requests the First Committee to implement the above-mentioned recommendations at the forty-third session of the General Assembly.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Argentina, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Brazil, Burma, China, Cuba, Cyprus, India, Iran, Maldives, Mexico, Nepal, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Sri Lanka, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Explaining its vote, Brazil, while agreeing with most measures suggested in the draft, felt that the First Committee, by approving the text, violated the recommendation in paragraph 1 (b) for the adoption of procedural texts as decisions. Mexico, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Venezuela agreed that the Disarmament Commission should continue consideration and make recommendations on the topic to the Assembly. Yugoslavia also felt that the Commission should consider in 1988 the issues raised in the draft. Pakistan and Sri Lanka would have preferred to discuss the text's substance in a less hurried atmosphere. Venezuela said the text, to be viable and effective, should be adopted by consensus in the Committee. Bangladesh said its abstention did not mean that there was no room for rationalizing the Committee's work.

UN resolutions on disarmament

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/38 J by recorded vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 115 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which states, inter alia, that the General Assembly has been and should remain the main deliberative organ of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and should make every effort to facilitate the implementation of disarmament measures,

Mindful of the fact that the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament could be strengthened substantially through an increased effort by Member States to implement faithfully General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament,

Convinced of the importance of treating recommendations of the General Assembly in the field of disarmament with due respect in accordance with the obligations assumed by Member States under the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Deems it important that all Member States make every effort to facilitate the consistent implementation of General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament, and thus show their resolve to arrive at mutually acceptable, comprehensively verifiable and effective disarmament measures;

2. Invites all Member States to make available to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions on ways and means to improve the situation with regard to the implementation of General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, on an annual basis, a report regarding the developments in the field of arms limitations and disarmament, which would include all relevant information provided by Member States concerning the implementation of General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament, as well as their views on possible avenues to improve the situation in this respect;

4. Calls upon all Member States to render every assistance to the Secretary-General so that he may fulfil the request contained in paragraph 3 above;

5. Decides to continue its consideration of the issue of the implementation of General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament at its forty-third session.

Approved by First Committee (A/42/669/Add.1) by recorded vote (100-2-231), 11 November (meeting 40); 2-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.33/Rev.1); agenda item 62.

Sponsors: Czechoslovakia, Ukrainian SSR.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Explaining its vote, the United States said that, while the draft purported to accord all disarmament resolutions a special quasi-binding status among other Assembly resolutions, there was no basis in the Charter for such a proposition. Similarly, the United Kingdom said the Assembly resolutions were important expressions of opinion, but not legally binding. Australia saw no value in a resolution that called for implementing a whole class of resolutions; further, the annual report called for in paragraph 3 would duplicate other reports called for under individual disarmament items and thus waste the increasingly scarce United Nations resources. China said its affirmative vote did not affect the positions which it had held regarding certain disarmament resolutions. India also put on record its understanding that paragraph 1 applied only to those resolutions that it had supported. The Byelorussian SSR stressed the importance of paragraph 3.

Follow-up to the General Assembly's special sessions on disarmament

In 1987, the General Assembly adopted 25 resolutions relating to the implementation of recommendations adopted at its two special sessions devoted to disarmament—the first held in 1978 as the tenth special session,(11) and the second held in 1982 as the twelfth special session.(12) At the 1978 session, the Assembly had adopted a Final Document,(13) and in 1982, a Concluding Document.(14)

This section deals with a resolution on the preparations for the third disarmament special session (42/40) and six others concerning general follow-up questions: regional disarmament (42/39 E), confidence-building measures (42/39 F), fellowships and training (42/39 I), international co-operation for disarmament (42/42 E), verification (42/42 F) and follow-up to the tenth special session (42/42 M). Others adopted under the two agenda items and dealing with various specific issues are discussed elsewhere in the chapter.

Follow-up to the 1978 special session

Reports of the Secretary-General. Under the agenda item on follow-up to the 1978 special session, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report in August 1987, with a later addendum,(15) containing the views of six Member States on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade.(16) No proposal for action on the Declaration was forwarded to the Assembly in 1987.

Also under the item, the Secretary-General transmitted in September(17) information received from the USSR pursuant to a 1986 Assembly invitation(18) for States engaged in disarmament and arms limitation negotiations outside the United Nations framework to keep the Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament informed on the status of such negotiations (see also p. 46).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Three draft resolutions concerning the implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth (1978) special session were submitted, respectively, by the German Democratic Republic, a group of non-aligned and developing countries, and the Federal Republic of Germany. Following intensive negotiations among the drafts' sponsors to arrive at a single text, the first two were merged and subsequently approved; the draft by the Federal Republic of Germany was withdrawn.

The draft by the German Democratic Republic(19)—on the obligations of States to contribute to effective disarmament negotiations—would have had the Assembly appeal to the five nuclear-weapon States to discuss nuclear disarmament and to consider convening a special high-level meeting of the Security Council; urge the USSR and the United States to agree on eliminating their intermediate- and shorter-range missiles and reducing their strategic arms, while strengthening the ABM Treaty regime; and call on the Conference on Disarmament to negotiate on a number of nuclear disarmament issues and on the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and to finalize the draft convention on prohibition and destruction of all chemical weapons.

The draft by the Federal Republic of Germany(20)—on the constructive review and implementation of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly—would have had the Assembly express its belief that implementation of the Final Document's objectives required a comprehensive approach to security, which took due account of the legitimacy of individual and collective self-defence and of the need to keep military potentials within defensive needs. It would also have had the Assembly express its conviction that, in reviewing and implementing the Final Document, developments in disarmament and related areas since 1978 should be taken into consideration, and request Member States to pay specific attention to those areas where first substantive results had been reached and further progress could be expected.

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/42 M by recorded vote.

Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Having reviewed the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, as well as the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 34/83 C of 11 December 1979, 35/46 of 3 December 1980, 35/152 E of 12 December 1980, 36/92 M of 9 December 1981, 37/78 F of 9 December 1982, 38/183 H of 20 December 1983, 39/148 O of 17 December 1984, 40/152 N of 16 December 1985 and 41/86 O of 4 December 1986 and its decision S-12/24 of 10 July 1982,

Deeply concerned that no concrete results regarding the implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session have been realized in the course of the more than nine years since that session,

Convinced that international peace and security can be ensured only through general and complete disarmament under effective international control and that one of the most urgent tasks is to halt and reverse the arms race and to undertake concrete measures of disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, and that, in this respect, the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States have the primary responsibility,

Noting with satisfaction that the two leading nuclear-weapon States have reached an agreement in principle on the elimination of intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles,

Convinced that the conclusion of a treaty on the elimination of intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles would positively affect the overall negotiations on disarmament,

Stressing once again that the active participation of Member States in effective disarmament negotiations is necessary for discharging their responsibility to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, that all States have the right to contribute to efforts in the field of disarmament, that it is more than ever imperative in the present circumstances to give a new impetus to negotiations on disarmament, in particular nuclear disarmament, at all levels and to achieve genuine progress in the immediate future, and that all States should refrain from any actions that have or may have negative effects on the outcome of disarmament negotiations,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament,

Stressing that the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which was unanimously and categorically reaffirmed by all Member States at the twelfth special session as the comprehensive basis for efforts towards halting and reversing the arms race, retains all its validity and that the objectives and measures contained therein still represent one of the most important and urgent goals to be achieved,

1. Invites all States, particularly nuclear-weapon States and especially those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, to take urgent measures with a view to implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, as well as to fulfilling the priority tasks set forth in the Programme of Action contained in section III of the Final Document;

2. Calls upon all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take urgent measures in order to promote international security on the basis of disarmament, to halt and reverse the arms race and to launch a process of genuine disarmament;

3. Calls upon the two leading nuclear-weapon States to intensify and pursue their negotiations with determination and taking into account the interest of the entire international community, in order to halt the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race; to reduce substantially their nuclear arsenals, prevent the arms race in outer space and undertake effective measures of nuclear disarmament;

4. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to proceed urgently to negotiations on the questions of disarmament on its agenda;

5. Calls upon the Disarmament Commission to intensify its work in accordance with its mandate with a view to making concrete recommendations on specific items on its agenda;

6. Invites all States engaged in disarmament and arms limitation negotiations outside the framework of the United Nations to keep the General Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament informed on the status and/or results of such negotiations, in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session".

General Assembly resolution 42/42 M

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 142-12-3 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/754) by recorded vote (115-12-3), 12 November (meeting 42); 26-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.70/Rev.1); agenda item 66 (m).

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Japan, Norway, Spain.

In explanation of vote, Australia and New Zealand said they saw substantial improvement in the text over that of the previous year. Australia, however, felt the draft was deficient in that it ignored areas of progress made since 1978 (third preambular paragraph), ignored that the balance of forces also helped maintain peace and security at least until complete disarmament was achieved, and used language at variance with that of paragraph 19 of the Final Document, which spoke of general and complete disarmament as the ultimate objective of the disarmament process (fourth preambular paragraph); further, the implied call for the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations on all agenda items was unrealistic (paragraph 4). Noting that the revised draft was circulated only the day before the First Committee action, New Zealand suggested that, in the future, the sponsors agree on a common text before introducing drafts in the Committee. Iran, which co-sponsored the text, stated its understanding that the seventh preambular paragraph, which had been added in the revised text, concerning the right of all States to contribute to disarmament efforts should not be interpreted as any change in the rules of procedure of any disarmament negotiating body.

Work of the Preparatory Committee. The open-ended Preparatory Committee for the Third Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, established by the Assembly in 1986,(21) held its first substantive session in 1987 (New York, 26 May-5 June).(22) It had held an organizational session in December 1986.(23)

At its 1987 session, the Preparatory Committee had before it a report of the Secretary-General, with later addenda,(24) containing the views of 34 States on the agenda and other relevant questions relating to the third special session. The Committee held nine meetings and adopted, by consensus, recommendations for submission to the Assembly regarding the special session's provisional agenda, officers and committees, rules of procedure, level of representation, and the role of disarmament-related non-governmental organizations (NGOs). It suggested that the special session should be held at United Nations Headquarters in 1988 prior to the Assembly's forty-third regular session, that Member States be represented at the highest possible political level, and that the Preparatory Committee hold its next session from 25 January to 5 February 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/40 without vote.

Convening of the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the decision, contained in paragraph 66 of the Concluding Document of its Twelfth Special Session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, concerning the convening of the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/60 G of 3 December 1986, in which it decided to convene its third special session on disarmament in 1988 and to establish an open-ended Preparatory Committee for the Third Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament,

Reaffirming the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, and its conviction that disarmament remains one of the essential objectives of the United Nations,

Expressing its concern at the continuation of the arms race, which aggravates international peace and security and also diverts vast resources urgently needed for economic and social development,

Reiterating its conviction that peace can be secured through the implementation of disarmament measures, particularly for nuclear disarmament, conducive to the realization of the final objective, namely, general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Having considered the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Third Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament,

1. Decides that the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament shall be held from 31 May to 25 June 1988 at United Nations Headquarters in New York;

2. Endorses the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Third Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament and the recommendations contained therein;

3. Endorses also the recommendation of the Preparatory Committee that it meet in New York from 25 January to 5 February 1988 in order to consider substantive issues related to the session for incorporation in the document or documents to be adopted at the third special session devoted to disarmament, and any remaining organizational and procedural matters, with the understanding that the Preparatory Committee, at that session, would determine the need for a subsequent session;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the members of the Preparatory Committee for their constructive contribution to its work;

5. Requests the Preparatory Committee to submit its final report to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament;

6. Requests all Member States engaged in bilateral, regional or multilateral negotiations on disarmament issues outside the framework of the United Nations to submit appropriate information on such negotiations to the General Assembly in accordance with paragraph 27 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly before the third special session devoted to disarmament;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare necessary documentation, including background material, as may be requested by the Preparatory Committee for the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to render to the Preparatory Committee all necessary assistance for the completion of its work;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session an item entitled "Review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 42/40

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/752) without vote, 16 November (meeting 44); 33-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.68); agenda item 64.

Sponsors: Algeria, Australia, Bangladesh, Brazil, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Japan, Madagascar, Mongolia, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Tunisia, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

Explaining their position, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed reservations about certain elements in the preamble regarding stance on security, arms control and disarmament issues, and also referred to the evolution of events since the adoption of the 1978 Final Document. The United Kingdom questioned whether those elements were necessary in a procedural document. The United States hoped that the Preparatory Committee would conclude its work at its January session, and expected the Secretariat to comply with the requests in paragraphs 7 and 8 on the basis of existing resources.

International co-operation for disarmament

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/42 E by recorded vote.

International co-operation for disarmament

The General Assembly,

Stressing again the urgent need for an active and sustained effort to expedite the implementation of the recommendations and decisions unanimously adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling the Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament of 11 December 1979(25) and its resolutions 36/92 D of 9 December 1981, 37/78 B of 9 December 1982, 38/183 F of 20 December 1983, 39/148 M of 17 December 1984, 40/152 I of 16 December 1985 and 41/86 K of 4 December 1986,

Stressing the vital need to proceed to balanced, mutually acceptable, comprehensively verifiable and effective measures towards halting the arms race and attaining disarmament, particularly in the nuclear field, for the preservation of peace and the strengthening of comprehensive international security,

Bearing in mind the vital interests of all States in the adoption of concrete effective disarmament measures, which would, through conversion, release considerable material, financial and human resources to be used for peaceful purposes and, with the assistance of the respective international machinery, particularly for overcoming economic underdevelopment in the developing countries,

Convinced of the need to strengthen constructive international co-operation based on the political goodwill of States for successful negotiations on disarmament, and on the increased openness in military matters in accordance with the priorities established in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Stressing that international co-operation for disarmament should, as a matter of priority, be aimed at averting nuclear war through the gradual elimination of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, the discontinuation of nuclear-weapon tests, the prevention of an arms race in outer space and conventional disarmament on a global scale, taking into account the characteristics of the different regions, and at confidence-building as an indispensable component of relations among States,

Considering that the progress towards a nuclear-weapon-free world can be executed stage by stage in terms of both participation and armaments to be covered, with the steady strengthening of international security and stability,

Believing that a broader internationalization of all disarmament negotiations would be an important factor contributing to their success,

Noting with satisfaction an increased dynamism of the efforts of the international community to avert the nuclear threat and to make a genuine breakthrough in the field of disarmament,

Emphasizing that the two nuclear-weapon States possessing the most important nuclear arsenals should continue and further expedite their negotiations with a view to curbing the nuclear-arms race while mutually refraining from launching weapons into outer space,

Believing that all nuclear-weapon States should make their national contributions to the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free world,

Conscious that in the nuclear space age the reliable security of all countries in all spheres of international relations can be ensured only by political means, through the joint efforts of all States,

1. Invites all States further to increase co-operation and to strive actively for meaningful disarmament negotiations on the basis of reciprocity, equality, undiminished security and the non-use of force in international relations, so that they may prevent the qualitative enhancement and quantitative accumulation of weapons, as well as the development of new types and systems of weaponry, especially weapons of mass destruction, and secure a meaningful and all-embracing disarmament process;

2. Stresses the importance of strengthening the effectiveness of the United Nations in fulfilling its central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of refraining from the dissemination of any doctrines and concepts that may endanger international peace and security by justifying nuclear war;

4. Invites all States to consider, in a spirit of co-operation, ways and means to achieve a broader internationalization of the current disarmament negotiations;

5. Declares that the use of force in international relations as well as in attempts to prevent the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁽²⁶⁾ constitutes a phenomenon incompatible with the idea of international co-operation for disarmament;

6. Reiterates its profound conviction that outer space should be excluded from the sphere of military preparation and used exclusively for peaceful purposes, for the benefit of all mankind;

7. Appeals to States members of military groupings to promote, on the basis of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and in a spirit of co-operation and openness, the gradual mutual limitation of their military activities as well as the reduction of their armed forces and armaments, thus creating conditions for their dissolution;

8. Calls upon all Member States and the international organizations concerned to continue to cultivate and disseminate, particularly in connection with the World Disarmament Campaign, launched by the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, the idea of international co-operation for disarmament;

9. Calls upon the Governments of all States to contribute substantially to halting and reversing the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field, and thus to reducing the danger of nuclear war and to strengthening international peace and security.

confidence-building measures

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/39 F without vote, thereby requesting the Disarmament Commission to finalize the draft guidelines for confidence-building measures which it had provisionally approved in 1986.⁽²⁷⁾ The sponsors of the draft resolution had revised it so that the Disarmament Commission, rather than the 1988 special session, would consider the draft guidelines.

Consideration of guidelines for confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/60 C of 3 December 1986, as well as the relevant paragraphs of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Considering that growing positive and concrete experience with confidence-building measures could facilitate reaching final consensus on the draft guidelines for confidence-building measures, as contained in the 1986 report of the Disarmament Commission,

Noting with satisfaction that the concept of confidence-building as an important instrument for the strengthening of international peace and security and for promoting and facilitating the attainment of disarmament measures meets with growing acceptance among States,

Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider, at its 1988 session, the "Draft guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level", with a view to finalizing them in the most expeditious manner to be determined by that body.

Security and co-operation in Europe

Communications. The Foreign Ministers of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty (Moscow, 24 and 25 March)⁽²⁸⁾ called on the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE), at its current meeting at Vienna, to include in its mandate specific discussions on disarmament matters, with the participation of neutral and non-aligned countries in the examination of the military aspects of European security. The Foreign Ministers of the 12 EC member States, in a 13 July declaration on East-West relations,⁽²⁹⁾ insisted on the need for achieving significant and lasting progress in all fields. The Political Consultative Committee of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty (Berlin, 28 and 29 May)⁽³⁰⁾ favoured the simultaneous dissolution of the two military alliances in Europe and considered that the proposed meeting of Foreign Ministers from the CSCE countries could facilitate the start of negotiations on reducing the armed forces and conventional armaments in Europe.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION

Two draft resolutions on confidence- and security-building measures in Europe in the context of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe were submitted and withdrawn by a group of Western States and by Poland, respectively. (See also p. 50.)

The Western draft(31)—proposed by Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, Turkey and the United Kingdom—would have had the Assembly welcome again the results of the Stockholm Conference and the prospect of negotiations within the process of CSCE on confidence- and security-building measures and on conventional stability, and invite all States to consider negotiating concrete agreements that would take full account of specific regional conditions and contribute to lessening confrontation and to strengthening security.

The draft proposed by Poland(32) would have had the Assembly welcome the progress made in, and encourage all European States to continue implementing the measures envisaged by, the Conference, and invite all States, taking full account of specific regional conditions, to consider confidence-building measures so as to contribute to equitable and balanced disarmament measures without detriment to the security of any State.

Regional disarmament

In August 1987, the Secretary-General submitted a report on regional disarmament,(33) containing information on activities carried out by the United Nations Secretariat and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research in response to 1982(34) and 1983(35) Assembly resolutions. The report also contained similar information submitted by seven Member States and by the EC members.

In November, the Netherlands transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Platform on European Security Interests, which had been signed by the Foreign and Defence Ministers of the Western European Union at The Hague on 27 October.(36)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/39 E without vote.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/100 F of 13 December 1982, 38/73 J of 15 December 1983, 39/63 F of 12 December 1984, 40/94 A of 12 December 1985 and 41/59 M of 3 December 1986, relating to regional disarmament,

Reaffirming that all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, have the responsibility of halting and reversing the arms race,

Confirming the importance and potential effectiveness of regional disarmament measures taken at the initiative and with the participation of all the States concerned, in that they can contribute to the realization of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Stressing that any regional disarmament enterprise must take into account the specific conditions characteristic of each region,

Also stressing that it is for the countries themselves of a region to take appropriate initiatives in common and to prepare agreements that will allow the achievement of regional disarmament,

Further stressing that disarmament efforts in a region cannot be isolated either from the disarmament efforts in other regions or from global disarmament efforts both in the nuclear and conventional field,

Taking into account the decisions and recommendations appearing in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, particularly in paragraph 114,

Aware of those studies which have already been carried out and of the views of States which are of interest for regional disarmament,

1. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General for his report submitted pursuant to resolution 39/63 F;

2. Notes with satisfaction the importance of the regional measures that have already been adopted and the regional efforts undertaken in the field of nuclear and conventional disarmament;

3. Encourages States to consider and develop as far as possible regional solutions in the matter of arms reduction and disarmament;

4. Invites all States and regional institutions associated with regional disarmament efforts to report thereon to the Secretary-General;

5. Requests the United Nations to lend its assistance to States and regional institutions that may request it, with a view to the institution of measures within the framework of an effort for regional disarmament;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly regularly informed of the implementation of resolutions on regional disarmament and of the activities which the Secretariat, in particular the Department for Disarmament Affairs, and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research are conducting in the field of regional disarmament;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Regional disarmament: report of the Secretary-General".

General Assembly resolution 42/39 E

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/751) without vote, 11 November (meeting 40); 28-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.47), orally revised; agenda item 63 (a). Sponsors: Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Canada, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Liberia, Malaysia, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, Zaire.

In resolution 42/38 N, the Assembly expressed its firm support of all regional or subregional efforts directed to strengthening mutual confidence and to assuring the security of all States involved, making possible regional agreements on arms limitations in the future.

Fellowships and training

Following its 1985 decision⁽³⁷⁾ to consolidate three programmes—fellowships, regional disarmament training and disarmament advisory services—under the Department for Disarmament Affairs, the General Assembly decided in 1987 to rename the consolidated programme “the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme” (resolution 42/39 I).

Report of the Secretary-General. In November, (38) the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly that 20 fellows from as many countries participated in the 1987 United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament, from 6 July to 13 November.

The programme consisted of lectures, seminars, research, observing the meetings of the Conference on Disarmament at Geneva and the First Committee in New York, and a visit to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) at Vienna. The fellows also visited the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, the USSR and the United States, at the invitation of those Governments.

Since its establishment by the Assembly in 1978,⁽¹³⁾ the programme had trained 195 government officials from 97 countries in developing disarmament-related expertise.

As regards the regional disarmament training programme and the disarmament advisor services programme, first envisaged in 1985⁽³⁷⁾ and discussed in detail by him in 1986,⁽³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, due to the financial situation of the Organization, the new programmes could not be started in 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/39 I by recorded vote.

United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme and to increase the number of fellowships from twenty to twenty-five as from 1983,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained an appreciable number of public officials selected from geographical regions represented in the United Nations system, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries or Governments,

Recalling its resolutions 37/100 G of 13 December 1982, 38/73 C of 15 December 1983, 39/63 B of 12 December 1984, 40/151 H of 16 December 1985 and 41/60 H of 3 December 1986,

Recalling further that, in its resolution 40/151 H, it decided to consolidate the disarmament fellowship programme with the newly established regional disarmament training programme and disarmament advisory services programme under the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat, in the Office of the Under-Secretary-General,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme, as designed, has enabled an increased number of public officials, particularly from the developing countries, to acquire more expertise in the sphere of disarmament,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, particularly to developing countries, under the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament, will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the report of the Secretary-General approved by resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to implement the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament, including the advisory services and training programmes, within existing resources;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, the Union of Soviet-Socialist Republics and the United States of America for inviting the 1987 fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

4. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

5. Decides to rename the three programmes consolidated pursuant to paragraph 3 of resolution 40/151 H “the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme”;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on his assessment of the operations of the programme.

Approved by First Committee (A/42/751) by recorded vote (129-1), 10 November (meeting 38); 29-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.58/Rev.1); agenda item 63 (f). Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial

Against: United States.

In explanation of vote, Japan said the priority should be on restoring the number of fellowships, which had been reduced from the original 25 to 20, as and when the financial situation improved, rather than on expanding the programme as implied by the renaming. Noting that no additional appropriation would be requested, the United Kingdom asserted that the programme should be renamed only when the advisory and training services were well established. The United States said paragraph 2 explicitly endorsed the increased spending levels for the activity adopted by the Assembly in 1985 despite the fact that, even with the increased financing, the 1987 programme could accommodate only 20 fellows, rather than the scheduled 25.

Verification

Disarmament Commission consideration. In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(40) the Disarmament Commission,(1) in 1987, had on its agenda for the first time an item on verification. Working Group IV, established on 4 May to consider the topic, held eight meetings from 11 to 22 May under the chairmanship of Douglas Roche (Canada). Documents before the Group included the 1978 Final Document,(13) draft conclusions by its Chairman,(41) several working papers submitted by delegations, and a compilation of views,(42) submitted pursuant to the 1986 Assembly request,(40) by Argentina, Australia, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Japan, Nigeria, the USSR and the United States.

The Working Group, reaffirming the relevance of the basic principles on verification contained in the 1978 Final Document (paragraphs 31, 91, 92), agreed on a number of points that elaborated on or added to those principles. In addition, the Group agreed that a compilation of possible methods, procedures and techniques could be useful in facilitating a consideration of verification as an integral part of negotiations; that the United Nations had an important role to play, for example in providing assistance, advice and technical expertise to negotiators of disarmament agreements; and that, given the uneven distribution of technical verification capabilities, the United Nations should consider compiling and managing a verification data base, which could include a catalogue of procedures and methods, as well as experts who could assist in designing verification systems.

The Working Group recommended to the Commission that work should continue in 1988, with a view to elaborating concrete recommendations and proposals regarding verification in all its aspects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Two draft proposals on verification were submitted in 1987, but the one by Bulgaria, Canada, Finland and Sweden(43) was not acted on at the request of the sponsors. That draft would have had the Assembly request the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission in 1988 a preliminary report on existing capabilities and facilities within the United Nations Secretariat for establishing a computerized data base to verify compliance with international arms limitation and disarmament agreements.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/42 F without vote.

Verification in all its aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/152 O of 16 December 1985 and 41/86 Q of 4 December 1986,

Conscious of the urgent need to reach agreements on arms limitation and disarmament measures capable of contributing to the maintenance of peace and security,

Convinced that, if such measures are to be effective, they must be fair and balanced and acceptable to all parties, their substance must be clear and compliance with them must be evident,

Noting that the critical importance of verification of and compliance with agreements is universally recognized,

Reaffirming its conviction, as expressed in paragraph 91 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, adopted by consensus at that session, its first special session devoted to disarmament, that in order to facilitate the conclusion and effective implementation of disarmament agreements and to create confidence, States should accept appropriate provisions for verification in such agreements,

Reiterating its view that:

(a) Disarmament and arms limitation agreements should provide for adequate and effective measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned in order to create the necessary confidence and to ensure that they are being observed by all parties;

(b) The form and modalities of the verification to be provided for in any specific agreement depend upon and should be determined by the purposes, scope and nature of the agreement;

(c) Agreements should provide for the participation of parties directly or through the United Nations system in the verification process;

(d) Where appropriate, a combination of several methods of verification as well as other compliance procedures should be employed,

Recalling that:

(a) In the context of international disarmament negotiations, the problem of verification should be further examined and adequate methods and procedures in this field should be considered;

(b) Every effort should be made to develop appropriate methods and procedures that are non-discriminatory and that do not unduly interfere with the internal affairs of other States or jeopardize their economic and social development,

Believing that verification techniques should be developed as an objective means of determining compliance with agreements and appropriately taken into account in the course of disarmament negotiations,

Noting with satisfaction that part of the report of the Disarmament Commission relating to this question,

1. Calls upon Member States to increase their efforts towards achieving agreements on balanced, mutually acceptable, comprehensively verifiable and effective arms limitation and disarmament measures;

2. Encourages all States that have not already done so to communicate to the Secretary-General, not later than 31 March 1988, their views and suggestions on verification principles as invited by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/86 Q;

3. Urges individual Member States and groups of Member States possessing verification expertise to consider means by which they can contribute to, and promote the inclusion of, adequate and effective verification measures in arms limitation and disarmament agreements;

4. Requests the Disarmament Commission to conclude its consideration of verification in all its aspects at its 1988 substantive session, in the context of pursuing general and complete disarmament under effective international control, as a matter of critical importance in the negotiation and implementation of arms limitation and disarmament, with a view to the elaboration of concrete recommendations and proposals, as appropriate, regarding verification in all its aspects, including principles, provisions and techniques to promote the inclusion of adequate verification in arms limitation and disarmament agreements and the role of the United Nations and its Member States in the field of verification, and to report on its deliberations, conclusions and recommendations to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament and at its forty-third session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for the Disarmament Commission at its 1988 substantive session a compilation of the views received from Member States on the issue;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Verification in all its aspects".

General and complete disarmament

Under its omnibus agenda item on general and complete disarmament, the General Assembly adopted 15 resolutions and one decision, covering a wide range of topics. On the three topics dealt with in this section—information on military matters, compliance, and naval armaments and disarmament—the Assembly, in November, recommended that efforts be made to facilitate the availability of objective information on, as well as objective assessment of, military capabilities (resolution 42/38 I), and to encourage strict compliance with disarmament agreements (42/38 M). The Assembly also requested the Disarmament Commission to continue substantive consideration of naval armaments and disarmament (42/38 K).

Information on military matters

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(44) the Secretary-General issued a report in August 1987,(45) containing information received from four Member States (Bulgaria, Denmark, Sweden, United Kingdom) on measures they had taken to contribute to greater openness in military matters and, particularly, to improve the flow of objective information on military capabilities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Two proposals were submitted in 1987 concerning information on military matters, but one of them, on confidence-building and increased openness in military matters(46)—submitted by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR—was withdrawn and merged with the other text that became resolution 42/38 I. The withdrawn text would have had the Assembly recognize the need to continue efforts towards a realistic comparison of military budgets in order to limit them to levels of reasonable sufficiency, and invite all Member States to transmit to the Secretary-General their views on principles, ways and means of ensuring confidence and furthering openness in military matters. (See also p. 81.)

A related draft—entitled free exchange of views on disarmament and related international security issues(47) and submitted by Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands and the United States—was also not acted on at the request of the sponsors. The text would have had the Assembly urge all Member States to promote public dissemination of information on disarmament and related international security issues, including information concerning the relationship of their armaments programmes to the objective of arms limitation and disarmament; to facilitate broad circulation of such information through print and electronic media with a view to promoting a better understanding and well-informed public debate; and to encourage their citizens to organize and meet publicly to express freely their own views on disarmament questions. Non-aligned countries proposed amendments⁽⁴⁸⁾ which in effect, replaced the substantive parts of the draft with a call to facilitate the flow of accurate information on disarmament to and among the public so as to further the objectives of the World Disarmament Campaign and advance general and complete disarmament under effective international control. The sponsors of the original draft withdrew the text, saying that the proposed amendments would completely alter its character.

On 30 November, the General Assembly on the recommendation of the First Committee, where the draft was approved by a recorded vote requested by India—adopted resolution 42/38 I in like manner.

Objective information on military matters

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 105 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which the Assembly encourages Member States to ensure a better flow of information with regard to the various aspects of disarmament to avoid dissemination of false and tendentious information concerning armaments and to concentrate on the danger of escalation of the arms race and on the need for general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in conformity with resolution 41/59 B of 3 December 1986,

Recognizing that the adoption of concrete, confidence-building measures on a global, regional or subregional level would greatly contribute to a reduction in international tension,

Believing that the adoption of such measures would contribute to greater openness and transparency, thus helping to prevent misperceptions of military capabilities and intentions, which could induce States to undertake armaments programmes leading to the acceleration of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and to heightened international tensions,

Believing that objective information on military capabilities, in particular of nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, could contribute to the building of confidence among States and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements and thereby help to halt and reverse the arms race,

Convinced that greater openness on military activities, inter alia, through transmittal of relevant information on these activities, including on the levels of military budgets, would contribute to increased confidence among States,

Taking into account the work undertaken in the Disarmament Commission on the reduction of military budgets,

Noting that an increased number of States have provided annual reports on military expenditures in conformity with the international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures operating under the auspices of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms its firm conviction that a better flow of objective information on military capabilities would help relieve international tension and contribute to the building of confidence among States on a global, regional or subregional level and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements;

2. Recommends that those global, regional and subregional organizations that have already expressed support for the principle of practical and concrete confidence-building measures of a military nature on a global, regional or subregional level should intensify their efforts with a view to adopting such measures;

3. Recommends that all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, should consider implementing additional measures based on the principles of openness and transparency, such as, for example, the international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, with the aim of achieving a realistic comparison of military budgets, facilitating the availability of objective information on, as well as objective assessment of, military capabilities and contributing towards the process of disarmament;

4. Invites all Member States to transmit to the Secretary-General, not later than 15 April 1988, their views concerning ways and means of ensuring confidence and furthering openness and transparency in military matters for submission to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament;

5. Requests the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament to take into account all the provisions of the present resolution in its deliberations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament on the implementation of all the provisions of the resolutions on the subject;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Objective information on military matters".

Compliance

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/38 M without vote.

Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/59 J of 3 December 1986,

Conscious of the abiding concern of all Member States for preserving respect for rights and obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law,

Convinced that observance of the Charter of the United Nations, relevant treaties and other sources of international law is essential for the strengthening of international security,

Mindful, in particular, of the fundamental importance of full implementation and strict observance of agreements on arms limitation and disarmament if individual nations and the international community are to derive enhanced security from them,

Stressing that any violation of such agreements not only adversely affects the security of States parties but can also create security risks for other States relying on the constraints and commitments stipulated in those agreements,

Stressing further that any weakening of confidence in such agreements diminishes their contribution to global or regional stability and to further disarmament and arms limitation efforts and undermines the credibility and effectiveness of the international legal system,

Recognizing in this context that, inter alia, full confidence in compliance with existing agreements can enhance the negotiation of arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

Believing that compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements by States parties is, therefore, a matter of interest and concern to the international community, and noting the role that the United Nations could play in that regard,

Convinced that resolution of non-compliance questions that have arisen with regard to agreements on arms limitations and disarmament would contribute to better relations among States and the strengthening of world peace and security,

1. Urges all States parties to arms limitation and disarmament agreements to implement and comply with the entirety of the provisions of such agreements;

2. Calls upon all Member States to give serious consideration to the implications of non-compliance with those obligations for international security and stability, as well as for the prospects for further progress in the field of disarmament;

3. Further calls upon all Member States to support efforts aimed at the resolution of non-compliance questions, with a view to encouraging strict observance by all parties of the provisions of arms limitation and disarmament agreements and maintaining or restoring the integrity of such agreements;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide Member States with assistance that may be necessary in this regard;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament.

Naval armaments and disarmament

Disarmament Commission consideration. In 1987, the Disarmament Commission(1) continued consideration of naval armaments and disarmament, having before it the 1985 expert study on the naval arms race,(49) the 1986 Chairman's paper on the topic(50) and three working papers submitted in 1987, by Finland, by Sweden, and jointly by Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR.

As in 1986, the Chairman of the Commission entrusted a group, under the leadership of Ali Alatas (Indonesia), with substantive, open-ended consultations on the topic. Seven meetings were held between 11 and 22 May, resulting in a number of findings and recommendations concerning the freedom of navigation, naval confidence-building measures, multilateral agreements and nuclear weapons at sea, which were incorporated into a working paper by the Chairman(51) to form the basis of further discussions. The paper noted that naval forces were not independent of other military forces and that they should be considered in their general military context.

The United States continued to object to the Commission's consideration of naval armaments as a separate issue and abstained from participating in any discussion of the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Two draft resolutions were submitted to the First Committee in 1987 on naval disarmament, but at the request of its sponsors no action was taken on one entitled "Confidence-building measures at sea"(52)—submitted by Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. The draft would have had the Assembly request the Disarmament Commission to continue consideration of the naval disarmament question in 1988, with more attention devoted to identifying specific confidence-building measures at sea that could become the subject of consultations and eventual negotiations. Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic then joined the sponsors of the draft which was approved (see below).

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/38 K by recorded vote.

Naval armaments and disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/188 G of 20 December 1983, by which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, to carry out a comprehensive study on the naval arms race,

Recalling its resolution 40/94 F of 12 December 1985, by which it requested the Disarmament Commission to consider the issues contained in the study on the naval arms race, both its substantive content and its conclusions, taking into account all other relevant present and future proposals, with a view to facilitating the identification of possible measures in the field of naval arms reductions and disarmament, pursued within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament, as well as confidence-building measures in this field,

Recalling also its resolution 41/59 K of 3 December 1986, by which it requested the Disarmament Commission to continue, at its forthcoming session in 1987, the substantive consideration of the question and to report on its deliberations and recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-second session,

Having examined the report of the Chairman of the Disarmament Commission on the substantive consideration of the question of the naval arms race and disarmament during the 1987 session of the Commission, which met with the approval of all delegations participating in the substantive consultations and which, in their view, could form the basis of further deliberations on the subject,

1. Notes with satisfaction the report on the substantive consideration of the question of the naval arms race and disarmament by the Chairman of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue, at its forthcoming session in 1988, the substantive consideration of the question and to report on its deliberations and recommendations to the General Assembly not later than at its forty-third session;

3. Also requests the Disarmament Commission to inscribe on the agenda for its 1988 session the item entitled "Naval armaments and disarmament";

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Naval armaments and disarmament".

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Grenada, India.

Explaining its vote, Iran said it was imperative in the interest of maintaining international peace and security to limit the activities of foreign navies in waters adjacent to independent countries to protecting and defending their own national frontiers and territorial waters.

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

In 1987, no agreement was reached in the Conference on Disarmament towards a comprehensive programme of disarmament, first envisaged in paragraph 109 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly in 1978(13) and considered annually since 1980.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament(2) considered a draft comprehensive programme of disarmament between 20 and 28 April and 3 and 7 August 1987, bearing in mind the 1985 Assembly request(53) and the 1986 Assembly decision(54) urging the Conference to submit a complete draft to the Assembly at its forty-first session (which ended on 14 September 1987).

The Conference's Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament held 27 meetings and a number of informal consultations between 12 February and 20 August, under the chairmanship of Alfonso Garcia Robles (Mexico).(55) While agreement was reached on some paragraphs and new proposals were submitted, other differences persisted or additional points of disagreement arose with respect to existing texts. Following intensive work, particularly in July and August, the Committee Chairman observed that the number of brackets in the draft indicating points of disagreement had almost tripled in 1987.

On 28 August, the Conference on Disarmament adopted the report of the Ad Hoc Committee, thus agreeing to the latter's recommendation that the work be continued at the outset of the Conference's 1988 session in order to resolve outstanding issues and conclude negotiations on the programme in time for its submission to the Assembly's third special session on disarmament. The Preparatory Committee for that special session had recommended that the session's agenda include an item on the consideration and adoption of the comprehensive programme of disarmament.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In closing its forty-first session on 14 September 1987, the General Assembly, by decision 41/421 B, took note of the report of the Conference on Disarmament and decided to include in the agenda of its forty-second session the sub-item entitled "Comprehensive programme of disarmament: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

At the forty-second session, on 30 November, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/42 I without vote.

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 38/183 K of 20 December 1983, 39/148 I of 17 December 1984 and 40/152 D of 16 December 1985, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a complete draft of the comprehensive programme of disarmament,

Bearing in mind its decision 41/421 B of 14 September 1987, by which it took note of the report of the Conference on Disarmament, containing the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament concerning its work during the 1987 session of the Conference, and decided to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the sub-item entitled "Comprehensive programme of disarmament: report of the Conference on Disarmament",

Noting that, in its report, the Ad Hoc Committee agreed to recommend to the Conference on Disarmament that the Committee be re-established at the outset of the 1988 session, with a view to resolving outstanding issues and concluding negotiations on the programme in time for its submission to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament,

Noting further that the Conference on Disarmament agreed to that recommendation,

1. Regrets that the Conference on Disarmament was unable to complete the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament in 1987 and to submit a draft thereof to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

2. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to resume the work on the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament at the outset of its 1988 session with a view to resolving outstanding issues and concluding negotiations on the programme in time for its submission to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament, and, for that purpose, to re-establish its Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament.

Proposed world disarmament conference

Unlike in previous years, the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference held no session in 1987. Views of the five nuclear-weapon States remained unchanged on the convening of a conference, first endorsed by the Assembly in 1965(56) and discussed annually since 1971.

In November, the General Assembly requested the Ad Hoc Committee to remain informed of the views of States on the topic and to hold a two-day session in 1988 to prepare its report to the third special session on disarmament (resolution 42/41).

Report of the Secretary-General. By a September 1987 report,(57) the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly the views of 10 Member States—including the five nuclear-weapon States—on convening a world disarmament conference, as transmitted to the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference in response to a 1986 Assembly request.(58) The Chairman had convened a meeting of the Committee bureau on 23 April, as a result of which he sent communications to the nuclear-weapon States and the member States of the Committee, requesting such information.

In its reply, China reiterated that if the majority of the Member States favoured a conference to discuss how the two super-Powers should take the lead in drastically cutting their armaments, it would be ready to support the idea.

France confirmed its earlier position, in which it had indicated no objection to the Committee's considering spacing out its meetings. The United Kingdom continued to believe that, in the current international climate, it was not useful to prepare for a conference, and hence doubted the usefulness of further Committee meetings. The United States continued to consider it premature to convene a conference in the absence of agreement on both the conditions for, and the substantive issues to be considered at, a conference; further, it would duplicate existing forums, especially the third special session of the Assembly in 1988, and might impede rather than facilitate ongoing international negotiations; under those circumstances, and in view of the budgetary constraints on the United Nations, a world conference was unlikely to fulfil its objectives.

Reiterating its support for a conference, the USSR invited the nuclear Powers that had not responded favourably to the idea to take a more constructive position.

The five non-nuclear-weapon States that had replied to the Chairman—Bulgaria, Mexico, the Philippines, Poland and Sri Lanka—all supported convening a world disarmament conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly, as recommended by the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/41 without vote.

World Disarmament Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2833(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2930(XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3183(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3260(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3469(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/190 of 21 December 1976, 32/89 of 12 December 1977, 33/69 of 14 December 1978, 34/81 of 11 December 1979, 35/151 of 12 December 1980, 36/91 of 9 December 1981, 37/97 of 13 December 1982, 38/186 of 20 December 1983, 39/150 of 17 December 1984, 40/154 of 16 December 1985 and 41/61 of 3 December 1986,

Reiterating its conviction that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that all States should be in a position to contribute to the adoption of measures for the achievement of this goal,

Stressing anew its conviction that a world disarmament conference, adequately prepared and convened at an appropriate time, could provide the realization of such an aim and that the co-operation of all nuclear-weapon Powers would considerably facilitate its attainment,

Recalling that, in paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it was decided that, at the earliest appropriate time, a world disarmament conference should be convened, with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the world disarmament conference;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference for his consultations with the representatives of the nuclear-weapon States, as well as with all other States, as requested in resolution 41/61;

3. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to continue to maintain close contact with the representatives of the nuclear-weapon States, as well as with all other States, in order to remain currently informed of their positions on the question of convening a world disarmament conference, and to consider any relevant comments and observations that might be made, especially bearing in mind paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

5. Also requests the Ad Hoc Committee to report to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament;

6. Further requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold one session in 1988 of two days' duration for the preparation and adoption of its report to the third special session devoted to disarmament.

Nuclear disarmament

The international community remained concerned with preventing a nuclear war, but no major substantive progress was made in the multilateral disarmament forums in 1987, as they continued to explore ways to achieve nuclear-arms limitation, banning nuclear-weapon tests, freezing nuclear weapons, strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States and creating nuclear-weapon-free zones in many parts of the world.

The USSR and the United States concluded, in December 1987, the first bilateral treaty on the destruction of an entire class of nuclear weapons—their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles.

Prevention of nuclear war

In 1987, the Conference on Disarmament was again unable to establish a subsidiary body to consider effective measures for preventing nuclear war. The General Assembly, in three resolutions on nuclear-war prevention, requested the Conference to commence negotiations on the topic, including the elaboration of a legally binding international instrument laying down an obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons (42/42 A); to establish an ad hoc committee to negotiate on appropriate and practical measures for the prevention of nuclear war (42/42 D); and to commence negotiations on a draft convention on the non-use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances (42/39 C).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament(1) considered the topic of nuclear-war prevention from 16 to 20 March and from 6 to 10 July 1987. As in previous years, no consensus was reached on a mandate proposed by the group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States (Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire) for an ad hoc committee that would consider all relevant proposals, including appropriate and practical measures for preventing nuclear war.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted three resolutions (42/42 A, 42/42 D, 42/39 C) on nuclear-war prevention. One delegation explained in a single statement its votes on two of the texts (see p. 44).

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/42 A by recorded vote.

Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in accordance with paragraph 20 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority and that this commitment was reaffirmed by the Assembly as its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling also that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document, it is stated that all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States, should consider as soon as possible various proposals designed to secure the avoidance of the use of nuclear weapons, the prevention of nuclear war and related objectives, where possible through international agreement, and thereby ensure that the survival of mankind is not endangered,

Reaffirming that the nuclear-weapon States have the primary responsibility for nuclear disarmament and for undertaking measures aimed at preventing the outbreak of nuclear war,

Convinced that it is possible and necessary for mankind to block the way to a nuclear catastrophe and that the renunciation of the first use of nuclear weapons is a most urgent measure to this end,

Stressing that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Recalling that in the Political Declaration adopted at the Eighth Conference of Heads of States or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, all nuclear-weapon States were called upon to enter early into an internationally binding commitment not to be the first to use or to threaten to use nuclear weapons,

Emphasizing that for the sake of international peace and security, military concepts and doctrines must be of a strictly defensive character,

1. Considers that the solemn declarations by two nuclear-weapon States made or reiterated at the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, concerning their respective obligations not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, offer an important avenue to decrease the danger of nuclear war;

2. Expresses the hope that those nuclear-weapon States which have not yet done so would consider making similar declarations with respect to not being the first to use nuclear weapons;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations on the item "Prevention of nuclear war" of its agenda and to consider, inter alia, the elaboration of an international instrument of a legally binding character laying down the obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war".

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 125-17-12 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/754) by recorded vote (94-17-101, 10 November (meeting 38); 5-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.7); agenda item 66 (g). Sponsors: Bulgaria, Cuba, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Romania. Recording numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 3-38; plenary 84.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Fiji, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Paraguay, Samoa.

In explanation of vote, Australia said it did not believe that the aim of preventing nuclear war would be advanced by a priori and unverifiable declarations on the non-use of nuclear weapons. Nigeria wished the concepts implied in the last preambular paragraph had not been reflected in the draft, as it considered them to pertain more to the doctrines of NATO and the Warsaw Treaty. Sweden said an international instrument on the non-first-use of nuclear weapons should not contain elements not directly related to it.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/42 D on 30 November, also by recorded vote.

Prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing nuclear-arms race,

Deeply concerned by an increased danger of nuclear war as a result of the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and the serious deterioration of the international situation,

Conscious that removal of the threat of nuclear war is the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Reiterating that it is the shared responsibility of all Member States to save succeeding generations from the scourge of another world war, which would inevitably be a nuclear war,

Recalling the provisions of paragraphs 47 to 50 and 56 to 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the procedures designed to secure the avoidance of nuclear war,

Recalling also that at the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, it was stated that nuclear weapons were more than weapons of war, they were instruments of mass annihilation, and that at the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, it was stated that the accumulation of weapons, in particular nuclear weapons, constituted a threat to the survival of mankind and that, therefore, it had become imperative that States abandon the dangerous goal of unilateral security through armament and embrace the objective of common security through disarmament,

Recalling further its resolutions 36/81 B of 9 December 1981, 37/78 I of 9 December 1982, 38/183 G of 20 December 1983, 39/148 P of 17 December 1984, 40/152 Q of 16 December 1985 and, in particular, its resolution 41/86 G of 4 December 1986, in which it expressed its conviction that, in view of the urgency of the matter and the inadequacy or insufficiency of existing measures, it was necessary to devise suitable steps to expedite effective action for the prevention of nuclear war, and once more requested the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, as a matter of the highest priority, negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on appropriate and practical measures for the prevention of nuclear war,

Having considered that part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1987 session relating to this question,

Noting with grave concern that the Conference on Disarmament was once again unable to start negotiations on the question during its 1987 session,

Taking into account the deliberations on this item at its forty-second session,

Convinced that 'the prevention of nuclear war and the reduction of the risk of nuclear war are matters of the highest priority and of vital interest to all people of the world,

Also convinced that the prevention of nuclear war is a problem too important to be left to the nuclear-weapon States alone,

1. Notes with regret that, despite the fact that the Conference on Disarmament has discussed the question of the prevention of nuclear war for several years, it has been unable even to establish a subsidiary body to consider appropriate and practical measures to prevent it;

2. Reiterates its conviction that, in view of the urgency of the matter and the inadequacy or insufficiency of existing measures, it is necessary to devise suitable steps to expedite effective action for the prevention of nuclear war;

3. Again requests the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, as a matter of the highest priority, negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on appropriate and practical measures that could be negotiated and adopted individually for the prevention of nuclear war and to establish for that purpose an ad hoc committee on the subject at the beginning of its 1988 session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Prevention of nuclear war".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey.

Explaining its vote, Australia said one of the most important ways to prevent a nuclear war was through the prevention of all wars; while not certain if an ad hoc committee could undertake negotiations immediately, it supported the establishment of such a body to discuss and identify possible areas for detailed examination. Sweden said the objectives set forth in the operative part of the draft could be enhanced only if relevant positive international developments, which were not fully reflected in the preamble, were taken into account.

On 30 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/39 C by recorded vote.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind and to the life-sustaining system posed by nuclear weapons and by their use, inherent in concepts of deterrence,

Conscious of an increased danger of nuclear war as a result of the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and the serious deterioration of the international situation,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament is essential for the prevention of nuclear war and for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Further convinced that a prohibition of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Recalling that in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1987 session, was not able to undertake negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text annexed to General Assembly resolution 41/60 F of 3 December 1986,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, as a matter of priority, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the results of those negotiations.

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.
Abstaining: Greece, Ireland, Israel, Japan.

While voting in favour, Sweden expressed reservations with regard to the sixth preambular paragraph and the text's interpretation of the United Nations Charter, saying that, if the use of nuclear weapons violated the Charter, there was no need for another instrument.

Explaining its negative votes on the texts that became resolutions 42/42 A and 42/39 C, New Zealand said it did not support texts that were lacking in balance and not encouraging an accommodation of different approaches to security. In its view, the overriding need was to achieve speedy and substantial reductions in nuclear weapons and to pay attention, in the process, to imbalances in conventional forces as well as to regional security arrangements.

Nuclear arms limitation and disarmament

In anticipation of the signing, in December 1987, by the USSR and the United States of a bilateral treaty on eliminating their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles, the General Assembly called on the parties to spare no effort in seeking the attainment of all their agreed objectives in the negotiations (resolution 42/38 A, decision 42/407), and to intensify their efforts with the objective of achieving agreements in other areas, in particular, those of strategic arms and a nuclear-test ban, as a matter of urgency (42/38 D).

The Assembly also declared that bilateral and multilateral efforts for nuclear disarmament should complement and facilitate each other (42/38 H), and reaffirmed that bilateral negotiations on nuclear and space arms in no way diminished the urgent need to initiate multilateral negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament (42/42 C). It also requested the Conference to pursue consideration of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices (42/38 L).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament(1) considered the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament" in plenary meetings from 16 to 27 February and from 15 to 26 June 1987, and in six informal meetings between 30 June and 6 August. It was again unable to agree on the establishment of an ad hoc committee under the item.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/38 H without vote.

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/59 F of 3 December 1986,

Reaffirming the determination to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war as expressed in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the most acute and urgent task of the present day is to remove the threat of a world war-a nuclear war,

Recalling and reaffirming the statements and provisions on nuclear disarmament set forth in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and in particular the provisions that "effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority", contained in paragraph 20, and that "in the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament, all the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility", contained in paragraph 48,

Bearing in mind that the ultimate goal of nuclear disarmament is the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting that the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America agreed in their joint statement issued at Geneva on 21 November 1985 that "a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought" and the common desire they expressed in the same statement calling for early progress in areas where there is common ground, including the principle of a 50 per cent reduction in the nuclear arms of the Soviet Union and the United States appropriately applied,

Noting also that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have conducted intensive negotiations on various issues of disarmament,

Noting further that the Conference on Disarmament has not played its due role in the field of nuclear disarmament,

Bearing in mind that the Governments and peoples of various countries expect that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America will reach agreement on halting the nuclear-arms race and reducing nuclear weapons, so as to start the process of nuclear disarmament,

1. Welcomes the agreement in principle between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to conclude a treaty on the elimination of their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles, and calls upon the two States to make further efforts for eliminating, in accordance with the agreement in principle, all their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles at the earliest possible date;

2. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, further to discharge their special responsibility for nuclear disarmament, to take the lead in halting the nuclear-arms race and to negotiate in earnest with a view to reaching early agreement on the drastic reduction of their nuclear arsenals;

3. Reiterates its belief that bilateral and multilateral efforts for nuclear disarmament should complement and facilitate each other;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Nuclear disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 42/38 H

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/669/Add.1) without vote, 9 November (meeting 37); draft by China (A/C.1/42/L.21); agenda item 62 (d). Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 3-37; plenary 84.

On 30 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/42 C by recorded vote, as recommended by the First Committee.

Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in paragraph 11 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the Assembly stated that the nuclear-arms race, far from contributing to the strengthening of the security of all States, on the contrary weakens it and increases the danger of the outbreak of a nuclear war and that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons are more than sufficient to destroy all life on Earth,

Recalling also that, in paragraph 47 of the Final Document, the Assembly expressed the belief that nuclear weapons pose the greatest danger to mankind and to the survival of civilization, that it is essential to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race in all its aspects in order to avert the danger of war involving nuclear weapons, and that the ultimate goal in this context is the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting that, in the Political Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, it was stated that the renewed escalation in the nuclear-arms race, as well as reliance on doctrines of nuclear deterrence, had heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations, and that it was also stated that nuclear weapons were more than weapons of war, that such weapons were instruments of mass annihilation,

Noting further that, in the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, it was stated that the idea that world peace could be maintained through nuclear deterrence, a doctrine that lay at the root of the continuing escalation in the quantity and quality of nuclear weapons, was the most dangerous myth in existence,

Believing that all nations have a vital interest in negotiations on nuclear disarmament because the existence of nuclear weapons in the arsenals of a handful of States directly and fundamentally jeopardizes the vital security interests of both nuclear and non-nuclear-weapon States alike,

Welcoming proposals on the complete elimination of nuclear weapons throughout the world,

Considering that it is necessary to halt all testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons of all types and versions and their delivery systems as a first step in the process that should lead to the achievement of substantial reductions in nuclear forces, and welcoming in this context the Joint Declaration issued on 22 May 1984 by the heads of State or Government of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania, which was reaffirmed in the Delhi Declaration and the Mexico Declaration issued by the leaders of those States on 28 January 1985 and 7 August 1986, respectively,

Noting that in the Conference on Disarmament, at its 1987 session, several proposals were presented for the consideration of practical measures,

Regretting, however, that the Conference on Disarmament was unable to reach agreement on the establishment of an ad hoc committee on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament,

Convinced of the imperative need to take constructive action towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

1. Reaffirms that the existence of bilateral negotiations on nuclear and space arms in no way diminishes the urgent need to initiate multilateral negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament;

2. Believes that efforts should be intensified with a view to initiating, as a matter of the highest priority, multilateral negotiations in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

3. Again requests the Conference on Disarmament to establish ad hoc committee at the beginning of its 1988 session to elaborate on paragraph 50 of the Final Document and to submit recommendations to the Conference as to how it could best initiate multilateral negotiations of agreements, with adequate measures of verification, in appropriate stages for:

(a) Cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems;

(b) Cessation of the production of all types of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, and of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(c) Substantial reduction in existing nuclear weapons with a view to their ultimate elimination;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on its consideration of this subject;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament".

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 137-13-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/754) by recorded vote (110-13-7), 9 November (meeting 37); 11-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.25); agenda item 66 (j).

Sponsors: Argentina, Bangladesh, Cameroon, German Democratic Republic, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Romania, Sweden, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Denmark, Greece, Iceland, Israel, Japan, New Zealand, Spain.

In explanation of vote, New Zealand said some preambular paragraphs were excessively critical of the doctrine of nuclear deterrence; in its view, the problem underlying the nuclear-arms race was not deterrence as such, but rather the quantity of nuclear weaponry that had built up over the years and that needed reducing through mutual, balanced and verifiable agreements which ensured security at each step of the way.

Prohibition of nuclear weapons

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/38 L by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/91 H of 16 December 1978, 34/87 D of 11 December 1979, 35/156 H of 12 December 1980, 36/97 G of 9 December 1981, 37/99 E of 13 December 1982, 38/188 E of 20 December 1983, 39/151 H of 17 December 1984, 40/94 G of 12 December 1985 and 41/59 L of 3 December 1986, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to consider urgently the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration,

Noting that the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament for 1987 included the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects" and that the programme of work of the Conference for both parts of its 1987 session contained the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament",

Recalling the proposals and statements made in the Conference on Disarmament on those items,

Considering that the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

Considering also that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices would be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

Requests the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

USSR-United States nuclear-arms negotiations

Building up on years of negotiations, the USSR and the United States, at their summit meeting at Reykjavik, Iceland, in October 1986,(2) agreed in principle to eliminate land-based intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) in Europe. When the two parties presented their respective new positions shortly afterwards at Geneva, the main element of uncertainty was the question whether the USSR would continue to insist, as at Reykjavik, that the INF question must form part of a larger disarmament package.

On 28 February 1987, the USSR announced that it was prepared to solve the INF issue separately from the strategic nuclear forces (having a range of more than 5,500 kilometres), and the related outer space question. Welcoming the announcement, the United States, on 4 March, declared that it was putting a full text of a draft treaty on the negotiating table; on 12 March, it submitted a verification annex to its draft treaty. On 27 April, the USSR submitted its own draft treaty. On 12 June, the Foreign Ministers of the NATO countries, meeting at Reykjavik, expressed their wish to see all land-based intermediate-range missiles eliminated. On 21 July, the USSR said it was prepared to agree to eliminate all its medium- and shorter-range missiles in the Asian part of the country.

On 18 September, the USSR and the United States, at the conclusion of a meeting of their Foreign Ministers (Washington, D.C., 15-17 September), stated that they had agreed in principle to conclude a treaty on intermediate-range and shorter-range nuclear forces. A follow-up meeting was held in Moscow on 22 and 23 October, and bilateral nuclear disarmament negotiations continued at Geneva.

On 8 December, the parties signed, at Washington, D.C., the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, under which intermediate-range (1,000-5,500 kilometres) missiles would be eliminated in two phases no later than three years after the Treaty's entry into force, and the shorter-range (500-1,000 kilometres) missiles would be eliminated within 18 months. Each party had the right to conduct on-site inspections for 13 years following the Treaty's entry into force, within both the territory of the other party and that of basing countries. The Treaty,⁽³⁾ consisting of a preamble and 17 articles, also included as its integral part the Protocol on Elimination, the Protocol on Inspection and the Memorandum of Understanding regarding the Establishment of the Data Base for the Treaty, which contained data exchanged by the parties, current as at 1 November 1987, on intermediate- and shorter-range missiles, launchers and support structures and equipment.

In a joint statement issued at the conclusion of the summit talks on 10 December,⁽⁴⁾ the heads of Government of the two States called the Treaty historic both for its objective—the complete elimination of an entire class of their nuclear arms—and for the innovative character and scope of its verification provisions. Their statement also covered several other key areas of their bilateral negotiations (see p. 18).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted a decision in October and two resolutions in November on bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations. A number of delegations explained in single statements their positions on the two resolutions (see p. 49).

A draft resolution entitled nuclear disarmament, submitted by Romania,⁽⁵⁾ was withdrawn after Romania expressed satisfaction at the consensus achieved on a draft decision presented by the Committee Chairman (see below). The draft by Romania would have had the Assembly appeal to the USSR and the United States to conclude their treaty at the earliest possible date in 1987, call on all European and other interested States to assist in the negotiation process and its successful conclusion, and further call on all States to take concrete measures to halt the arms race and proceed to disarmament, first of all nuclear disarmament, and to contribute to the policy of detente and international co-operation.

The Assembly adopted decision 42/407 without vote.

General and complete disarmament

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 21 October 1987, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, having noted the joint statement released by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America at the end of the meeting between the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Secretary of State of the United States of America held in Washington, D.C., from 15 to 17 September 1987, urged the Governments of those two States to spare no effort in concluding, in accordance with the agreement in principle reached at that meeting, at the earliest possible date, a treaty on the elimination of their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles to be signed at a summit meeting to be held in the fall of 1987 between General Secretary Gorbachev and President Reagan, as it was agreed, and to make a similarly intensive effort to achieve a treaty on a 50 per cent reduction in their strategic offensive arms within the framework of the Geneva nuclear and space talks.

General Assembly decision 42/407

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/669) without vote, 20 October (meeting 13); draft by Chairman (A/C.1/42/L.3); agenda item 62. Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 3-13; plenary 46.

In explanation of its position, Venezuela said it did not participate in the consensus due to technical and other difficulties with the draft. The Federal Republic of Germany stated that it interpreted the words "intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles" to mean missiles with a range of between 500 and 5,500 kilometres.

The General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/38 A by recorded vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at their meeting at Geneva in November 1985 the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America committed themselves to the objective of working out effective agreements aimed at preventing an arms race in space and terminating it on Earth,

Noting that in their joint statement of 8 January 1985 the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America agreed that the subject of the negotiations was a complex of questions concerning space and nuclear arms, both strategic and intermediate-range, with all these questions considered and resolved in their interrelationship,

Noting with satisfaction that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have reached an agreement on the total elimination of their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles,

Noting also with satisfaction the agreement of the two Governments that a similarly intensive effort will be made to achieve a treaty on a 50 per cent reduction in their strategic offensive arms within the framework of the Geneva nuclear and space talks,

Noting further with satisfaction that, at their forthcoming meeting, the leaders of the two countries will consider thoroughly the development of instructions to delegations on a future treaty on a 50 per cent reduction in United States and Soviet strategic offensive arms and on the observance of and non-withdrawal from the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems for an agreed period,

Believing that, through negotiations pursued in a spirit of flexibility and with full account taken of the security interests of all States, it is possible to achieve far-reaching and effectively verifiable agreements,

Firmly convinced that an early agreement in these negotiations, in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments, would be of crucial importance for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Further convinced that the international community should encourage the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America in their endeavours, taking into account both the importance and complexity of their negotiations,

1. Welcomes the agreement between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to conclude a treaty eliminating their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles;

2. Notes with satisfaction that President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev have agreed to meet in the United States beginning on 7 December 1987 and that a further meeting in the Soviet Union is envisioned between them in the first half of 1988;

3. Calls upon the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to spare no effort in seeking the attainment of all their agreed objectives in the negotiations, in accordance with the security interests of all States and the universal desire for progress towards disarmament, in particular early achievement of a treaty implementing the agreement to reduce their strategic offensive arms by 50 per cent, which could be signed during President Reagan's visit to Moscow;

4. Invites the two Governments concerned to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in the negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

5. Expresses its firmest possible encouragement and support for the bilateral negotiations and their successful conclusion.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of vote, Nigeria said the text contained concepts unrelated to the vital subject it dealt with. Zimbabwe felt the text did not reflect the depth of international concern over nuclear war and ignored important elements in the quest for nuclear disarmament, such as the issue of a comprehensive test ban. For Uruguay, the text over-emphasized the security interests of States and groups of States, while all disarmament negotiations, in its view, should aim at maintaining and strengthening international security.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/38 D, also by recorded vote on 30 November.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/18 of 18 November 1985 and 41/86 N of 4 December 1986,

Recalling also the Harare Appeal on Disarmament, adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, and the final communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the forty-second session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 5 to 7 October 1987,

Gravely concerned about the continuing escalation of the arms race, especially in nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, despite the fact that this increases the risk of nuclear war and endangers the survival of humanity,

Convinced that the alternative today in the nuclear age is not between war or peace, but between life and death, which makes the prevention of nuclear war the principal task of our times,

Further convinced that international peace and security can be ensured only through general and complete disarmament under effective international control and that one of the most urgent tasks is to halt and reverse the arms race and to undertake concrete measures of disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament,

Noting that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America reached an agreement in principle, during the meeting held in Washington, D.C., from 15 to 17 September 1987, on the elimination of intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles,

Convinced also that in the interest of mankind as a whole, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, in their bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations, should continue their endeavours with the ultimate objective of achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

1. Welcomes the agreement in principle between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to sign a treaty on intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles in the autumn of 1987, to make intensive efforts to achieve a treaty on a 50 per cent reduction in strategic offensive arms within the framework of the Geneva nuclear and space talks, and to begin nuclear-test-ban negotiations before 1 December 1987;

2. Calls upon the two Governments concerned to intensify their efforts with the objective of achieving agreements in other areas, in particular, the areas of strategic arms and a nuclear-test ban, as a matter of urgency;

3. Invites the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to keep the Conference on Disarmament duly informed of progress made in their negotiations.

Abstaining: Belgium, Chile, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Explaining its vote, the United States felt that parts of the draft portrayed the bilateral negotiations in a distorted and unbalanced manner. It objected to the reference to a document which it said contained abusive characterization of United States policy, asserted that general and complete disarmament under effective international control was not the only avenue available, and considered the draft's reference to nuclear-test-ban negotiations to be inconsistent with the stated objectives of the negotiating parties for stage-by-stage negotiations on nuclear-testing issues. It added that the invitation to keep the Conference on Disarmament informed was inappropriate, if only for procedural reasons.

Canada, Ghana and Nigeria expressed concern over the failure of the Committee to merge the two texts. Ghana feared that the existence of two texts on the same subject might weaken the impact of the Assembly's action. Venezuela said that, while both texts referred to the same topic, the underlying motivations and approaches were different in that the nonaligned text saw bilateral negotiations as one step towards general and complete disarmament, and the draft by Western European and other States, by seeking to evaluate events connected with bilateral negotiations, prejudged the international opinion about agreements whose terms were not yet known; further, as regards the fifth preambular paragraph of the latter text, it was not for the United Nations to concern itself with what instructions Governments should give to delegations participating in negotiations. In the plenary Assembly, the United Republic of Tanzania asserted that the First Committee should endeavour to rationalize its work by avoiding duplication.

In resolution 42/38 H, the Assembly welcomed the agreement in principle between the USSR and the United States to conclude a treaty on the elimination of their intermediate- and shorter-range missiles, and urged the two States to negotiate with a view to reaching early agreement on the drastic reduction of their nuclear arsenals.

Cessation of nuclear-weapon tests

In 1987, the General Assembly adopted four resolutions on a nuclear-test ban: the work of the Conference on Disarmament on a test ban (42/26 A, 42/27), the possibility of converting the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (also known as the partial test-ban Treaty)(6) into a comprehensive test-ban treaty (42/26 B), and notification of tests (42/38 C).

No proposals were submitted under the 1987 agenda item on the implementation of the Assembly's 1986 resolution on the immediate cessation and prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests.(7) The Assembly took note of the First Committee's report(8) on the item on 30 November (decision 42/412).

Outside the United Nations framework, the USSR and the United States commenced bilateral negotiations at Geneva in November, agreeing to focus first on verification measures to enable ratification by the United States of two bilateral treaties—the Threshold Test Ban Treaty (1974) and the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty (1976)—proceeding thereafter to negotiating further intermediate limitations on nuclear testing and leading ultimately to its complete cessation, as part of an effective disarmament process.

In 1987 communications to the Secretary-General, many countries stressed the importance of banning nuclear-weapon tests (see p. 15). On 15 July,(9) Iraq transmitted to the Secretary-General an article entitled "Namibia uranium may fuel Iran's A-bomb", which appeared in the 17 May edition of the British weekly The Observer.

Note by the Secretary-General. By a 14 September note,(10) prepared in response to a 1986 Assembly request,(11) the Secretary-General reported that no Member State had provided him, as at that date, with information on nuclear explosions conducted. In an addendum issued on 1 December,(12) the Secretary-General transmitted the information provided by the USSR on 18 nuclear explosions it had conducted in 1987 up to 15 November.

Disarmament Commission consideration. In 1987, the Disarmament Commission,(13) as part of its compilation of proposals for recommendations on an agenda item on various aspects of the arms race and questions relating to both nuclear and conventional disarmament, was again unable to agree on any of the draft texts it had considered in 1986(14) on the cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, and the texts remained within brackets to signify the lack of consensus.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In 1987, the Conference on Disarmament considered the question of a nuclear-test ban from 16 to 27 February and from 15 to 26 June.(1)

The Conference again could not agree on the mandate of an ad hoc committee on the topic, with the group of 21 (see p. 41), supported by the socialist States, calling for an immediate beginning of multilateral negotiation of a treaty, and Western States maintaining that no consensus existed on the mandate. In addition to several informal proposals for a compromise mandate, a formal proposal was put forward jointly by Indonesia, Kenya, Mexico, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela and Yugoslavia,(15) but was not put to a decision. During the Conference discussion, China said it would be flexible with regard to the mandate and that it was willing to participate in the subsidiary body. The USSR proposed that the Conference set up a group of scientific experts to recommend a verification system for a test-ban agreement (see also p. 17).

Working papers submitted to the Conference in 1987 included those by: Canada, on proceedings of an October 1986 Ottawa workshop on seismic wave-form data exchange; the German Democratic Republic, on a nuclear-test ban; Norway, on verification of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban using a modern seismic data exchange system; and Australia and New Zealand, on an agreement signed between them on 30 May 1987 on seismic monitoring co-operation. Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania and the USSR submitted two working papers—one on a nuclear-test ban and the other on basic provisions of a treaty banning nuclear-weapon tests.

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events held two sessions at Geneva in 1987 (twenty-third session, 2-13 March;(16) twenty-fourth session, 27 July-7 August)(17) under the chairmanship of Ola Dahlman (Sweden). The experts envisaged the exchange of wave-form (Level II) data and an up-to-date communication system, including satellite links; they also informed the Conference of their preparations for a large-scale experiment on seismic data exchange, planned for 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted four resolutions on a nuclear-test ban. A number of delegations explained, in single statements, their votes on the four texts (see p. 55).

Two of the resolutions were entitled "Cessation of all nuclear-test explosions". The Assembly adopted resolution 42/26 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, which has been examined for more than thirty years and on which the General Assembly has adopted more than fifty resolutions, is a basic objective of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament, to the attainment of which it has repeatedly assigned the highest priority,

Stressing that on eight different occasions it has condemned such tests in the strongest terms and that, since 1974, it has stated its conviction that the continuance of nuclear-weapon testing will intensify the arms race, thus increasing the danger of nuclear war,

Recalling that the Secretary-General, addressing a plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 12 December 1984, after appealing for a renewed effort towards a comprehensive test-ban treaty, emphasized that no single multilateral agreement could have a greater effect on limiting the further refinement of nuclear weapons and that a comprehensive test-ban treaty is the litmus test of the real willingness to pursue nuclear disarmament,

Taking into account that the three nuclear-weapon States that act as depositaries of the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear-Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water undertook in article I of that Treaty to conclude a treaty resulting in the permanent banning of all nuclear-test explosions, including all those explosions underground, and that such an undertaking was reiterated in 1968 in the preamble to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, article VI of which further embodies their solemn and legally binding commitment to take effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear-arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Bearing in mind that the same three nuclear-weapon States, in the report they submitted on 30 July 1980 to the Committee on Disarmament after four years of trilateral negotiations, stated, inter alia, that they were "mindful of the great value for all mankind that the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon test explosions in all environments will have" as well as "conscious of the important responsibility placed upon them to find solutions to the remaining problems", adding furthermore that they were "determined to exert their best efforts and necessary will and persistence to bring the negotiations to an early and successful conclusion",

Noting that the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, in its Final Declaration adopted on 21 September 1985, called on the nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty to resume trilateral negotiations in 1985 and on all the nuclear-weapon States to participate in the urgent negotiation and conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, as a matter of the highest priority, in the Conference on Disarmament,

Recalling that the leaders of the six States associated with the five-continent peace and disarmament initiative affirmed in the Mexico Declaration, adopted on 7

August 1986, that they "remain convinced that no issue is more urgent and crucial today than bringing to an end all nuclear tests", adding that "both the qualitative and the quantitative development of nuclear weapons exacerbate the arms race, and both would be inhibited by the complete abolition of nuclear weapons testing",

Taking note with satisfaction of the progress made in the Conference on Disarmament by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events on the seismic verification of a comprehensive test ban,

Bearing in mind that the multilateral negotiation of such a treaty in the Conference on Disarmament must cover all the various interrelated problems that it will be necessary to solve in order that the Conference may transmit a complete draft treaty to the General Assembly,

1. Reiterates once again its grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing continues unabated, against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the highest priority;

3. Reaffirms also its conviction that such a treaty would constitute a contribution of the utmost importance to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race;

4. Urges once more the three depositary Powers of the Treaty Banning Nuclear-Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, in particular the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, to abide strictly by their undertakings to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to expedite negotiations to this end, keeping the Conference on Disarmament regularly informed of their negotiations;

5. Appeals to all States members of the Conference on Disarmament, in particular to the three depositary Powers of the Treaty Banning Nuclear-Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to promote the establishment by the Conference at the beginning of its 1988 session of an ad hoc committee with the objective of carrying out the multilateral negotiation of a treaty on the complete cessation of nuclear-test explosions;

6. Recommends to the Conference on Disarmament that such an ad hoc committee should comprise two working groups dealing, respectively, with the following interrelated questions: contents and scope of the treaty, and compliance and verification;

7. Calls upon the States depositaries of the Treaty Banning Nuclear-Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, by virtue of their special responsibilities under those two Treaties and as a provisional measure, to bring to a halt without delay all nuclear-test explosions, either through a trilaterally agreed moratorium or through three unilateral moratoria, which should include appropriate means of verification;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Cessation of all nuclear-test explosions".

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 137-3-14 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/738) by recorded vote (116-3-14), 13 November (meeting 43); 13-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.29); agenda item 49. Sponsors: Finland, Indonesia, Ireland, Kenya, Mexico, Pakistan, Peru, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, Zambia.

Explaining its vote, the Federal Republic of Germany said it could not support a unilateral test moratorium or hastening into full-fledged multilateral negotiations without the necessary groundwork having been laid. The Netherlands did not consider a moratorium to be an adequate way to achieve an effectively verifiable test-ban agreement, and felt that the text did not reflect important new developments. Zambia abstained because of the text's reference to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,⁽¹⁸⁾ to which it was not a party. Japan attached priority to a comprehensive test ban and to the commencement of substantive work in an ad hoc committee on the item.

Australia feared the text could be interpreted as sanctioning so-called peaceful nuclear explosions, and stressed that no moratorium arrangements should substitute the goal of ending all nuclear testing. New Zealand would have liked the text to have placed more emphasis on the responsibilities of nuclear-weapon States non-parties to the partial test-ban Treaty, and to have contained no possible ambiguity about the ban's application to all nuclear tests. The importance of establishing an ad hoc committee was expressed by, among others, Denmark, which found paragraph 5 to be a movement in the right direction; by India, which regarded the commencement of negotiations as the "acid test" of commitment to the objective; and by the USSR, which also supported setting up two working groups. The text, for Argentina, clarified the mandate to the Conference to initiate action, and for Norway, specified interrelated questions which could be dealt with by a nuclear-test-ban committee in the Conference. India also felt that, pending the conclusion of a treaty, all nuclear-weapon States should suspend nuclear-weapon testing.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/26 B, also by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the determination, proclaimed since 1963 in the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, to seek to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to continue negotiations to this end,

Bearing in mind also that in 1968 the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons recalled such determination and included in its article VI an undertaking by each of its parties to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race at an early date,

Recalling that in its resolution 2028(XX) of 19 November 1965, adopted unanimously, it had stressed that one of the basic principles on which the treaty to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons should be based was that such treaty, which was then to be negotiated, should embody an acceptable balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations of the nuclear and non-nuclear Powers,

Recalling also that the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, in its Final Declaration adopted by consensus on 21 September 1985, expressed its deep regret that a comprehensive multilateral nuclear-test-ban treaty had not been concluded so far and called for the urgent negotiation and conclusion of such a treaty as a matter of the highest priority,

Noting that article II of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water provides a procedure for the consideration and eventual adoption of amendments to the Treaty by a conference of its parties,

1. Recommends that the non-nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water formally submit an amendment proposal to the depositary Governments with a view to convening a conference at the earliest possible date to consider amendments to the Treaty that would convert it into a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

2. Requests that the States parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the progress of their efforts.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Samoa, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, Zambia.

In explanation of vote, Denmark and Norway deemed the idea of amending the 1963 partial test-ban Treaty to be neither feasible nor practical. Norway added that the Treaty should be strengthened through additional accessions. For the Netherlands, the proposed approach amounted to denying 25 years of comprehensive test-ban negotiations and detracted from more realistic work leading to a test ban. New Zealand would support the avenue most likely to yield practical and useful results, and preferred, therefore, to trust the Conference's ability to make progress towards negotiating a treaty. Australia remained committed to direct negotiations on a comprehensive treaty. Zambia abstained because of the text's reference to the non-proliferation Treaty, to which it was not a party.

Argentina preferred negotiating on a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty in the Conference on Disarmament, since it was a multilateral forum in which all five nuclear-weapon States were represented—conditions which did not exist when the 1963 Treaty was drafted. The USSR reiterated its readiness to take practical steps regarding the extension of the Treaty to underground tests.

Also on 30 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/27 by recorded vote.

Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Convinced that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Convinced of the consequent urgent need for an end to the nuclear-arms race and the immediate and verifiable reduction and ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons,

Convinced, therefore, that an end to all nuclear testing by all States in all environments for all time is an essential step in order to prevent the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear weapons and further nuclear proliferation and to contribute, along with other concurrent efforts to limit and reduce nuclear arms, to the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming the joint statement of 17 September 1987 by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America that they have agreed to commence negotiations in 1987 on nuclear-testing issues,

Recalling the proposals by the leaders of the six-nation initiative to promote an end to nuclear testing, and other recent initiatives to this end,

Convinced that the most effective way to achieve the discontinuance of all nuclear tests in all environments for all time is through the conclusion, at an early date, of a verifiable, comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty open to and capable of attracting the adherence of all States,

Reaffirming the particular responsibilities of the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States in all environments for all time is a matter of fundamental importance;

2. Urges, therefore, that the following actions be taken in order that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty may be concluded at an early date:

(a) The Conference on Disarmament should initiate substantive work on all aspects of a nuclear-test-ban treaty at the beginning of its 1988 session;

(b) States members of the Conference on Disarmament, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, and all other States should co-operate in order to facilitate and promote such work;

(c) The nuclear-weapon States, especially those which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, should agree to appropriate verifiable interim measures with a view to realizing a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(d) Those nuclear-weapon States which have not yet done so should adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water;

3. Also urges the Conference on Disarmament:

(a) To take immediate steps for the establishment, with the widest possible participation, of an international seismic monitoring network with a view to the further development of its potential to monitor and verify compliance with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(b) In this context, to take into account the progress achieved by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, including the exchange of wave-form data, and other relevant initiatives by individual States and groups of States;

(c) To initiate detailed investigation of other measures to monitor and verify compliance with such a treaty, including an international network to monitor atmospheric radioactivity;

4. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on progress made;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty".

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 143-2-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/739) by recorded vote (122-2-8), 13 November (meeting 43); 29-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.77); agenda item 50.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United States.

Abstaining: Angola, Argentina, Brazil, China, Cuba, India, Israel, United Kingdom.

In the First Committee, paragraph 3 was approved by a recorded vote of 114 (including the United States) to none, with 15 abstentions (including France and the United Kingdom).

The United States, asserting that the text was in fundamental conflict with its policy, said its negotiations with the USSR were under way, focusing first on agreement on verification measures, and a comprehensive test ban had to be viewed in the context of a time when nuclear deterrence was no longer needed to ensure international security and when the international community had achieved broad and verifiable arms reductions, substantially improved verification capabilities, expanded confidence-building measures and greater balance in conventional forces. It regarded reducing the number of deployed nuclear weapons as far more urgent than achieving a comprehensive test ban, and supported further work on an international seismic monitoring network to make it operational.

Argentina said the text did not call explicitly for the immediate initiation of negotiations. Similarly, India felt the text had failed to mention the formation of an ad hoc committee in the Conference on Disarmament.

Belgium supported the prospect of limiting the number of nuclear tests, considered the draft to be constructive and realistic, and would have liked the bilateral negotiations to be stressed even more. While welcoming the new bilateral negotiations, Mexico feared that the procedure involved might produce results only in the next century. Venezuela felt the Conference on Disarmament should focus on initiation of substantive negotiations; it wondered, therefore, how that body would perform the tasks stipulated in paragraphs 3 (a) and (c).

New Zealand expressed disappointment that most major nuclear-weapon States did not support the test-ban resolutions. The Federal Republic of Germany supported the text, and the draft that became resolution 42/38 C, to demonstrate its commitment to a comprehensive nuclear-test ban and its earliest possible realization; it was convinced that the technical problems related to verification could be solved. The USSR believed that the work in the Conference should begin without delay, taking into account the socialist proposal on the basic provisions of a treaty.

On 30 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/38 C by recorded vote.

Notification of nuclear tests

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/59 N of 3 December 1986, in which it called upon each of the States conducting nuclear explosions to provide the Secretary-General with specific data on nuclear explosions conducted by them,

Noting that, despite the continuation of nuclear explosions, no such data have been submitted to the Secretary-General,

1. Calls upon all States to comply with resolution 41/59 N;

2. Again urges each of the States conducting nuclear explosions to provide to the Secretary-General within one week of each nuclear explosion such data referred to in paragraph 1 of resolution 41/59 N as they may have available;

3. Invites all other States to provide to the Secretary-General any such data on nuclear explosions they may have available;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make this information immediately available to all Member States and to submit to the General Assembly annually a register of the information provided on nuclear explosions during the preceding twelve months.

Against: France.

Abstaining: Angola, Brazil, China, India, Mexico, Nicaragua, United Kingdom, United States.

The United States was unable to support the text's objective of accelerating the drive towards a comprehensive test ban, and urged States to work together towards reducing nuclear arms and thus creating an appropriate context for such a ban; it added that it routinely released information on its nuclear explosions and did not rule out the idea of confidence-building measures involving the reciprocal exchange of information on such tests. The USSR reaffirmed that it would send the United Nations information through its TASS publications.

Czechoslovakia voted affirmatively with the understanding that notification of tests was not an end in itself but one of the measures towards the final goal of reaching a comprehensive test-ban treaty. Similarly, Denmark felt the measure in question would be conducive to both the technical and the political drive towards a comprehensive nuclear-test ban.

A number of States explained their positions in single statements covering all four proposals. France, voting against all four drafts, held that a nuclear-test ban had to be part of an effective nuclear disarmament process and could happen only when progress was such that a ban would not jeopardize international security; that a test ban could not be regarded as a prerequisite, even a priority, given the need for reductions in the largest nuclear arsenals; and that, accordingly, it would keep its deterrent force to the minimum required to maintain its security.

Albania said the drafts failed to point out the responsibility of the two super-Powers for intensifying the nuclear-arms race and continuing the nuclear-weapon testing, thus increasing the dangers of a nuclear war.

Nuclear-weapon freeze

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted two resolutions calling for a freeze on nuclear weapons. Two States explained in single statements their positions on the texts (see p. 56).

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/39 B by recorded vote.

Freeze on nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/100 A of 13 December 1982, 38/73 B of 15 December 1983, 39/63 G of 12 December

1984, 40/151 E of 16 December 1985 and 41/60 E of 3 December 1986 concerning a freeze on nuclear weapons,

Convinced that in this nuclear age lasting world peace can be based only on the attainment of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Further convinced that the highest priority objectives in the field of disarmament have to be nuclear disarmament and the elimination of all weapons of mass destruction,

Recognizing the urgent need to halt the arms race, particularly in nuclear weapons,

Recognizing further the urgent need for a negotiated reduction of nuclear-weapon stockpiles leading to their complete elimination,

Noting with deep concern that nuclear-weapon States have not so far taken any action in response to the call made in the above-mentioned resolutions,

1. Once again calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to agree to a freeze on nuclear weapons, which would, inter alia, provide for a simultaneous total stoppage of any further production of nuclear weapons and a complete cut-off in the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Freeze on nuclear weapons".

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/60 I on a nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Recalling also that, on those occasions, it pointed out that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons were more than sufficient to destroy all life on Earth and stressed that mankind was therefore confronted with a choice: halt the arms race and proceed to disarmament, or face annihilation,

Convinced of the urgency further to pursue negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of existing nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute the most effective first step to prevent the continued increase and qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations take place, and that at the same time it would provide a favourable environment for the conduct of negotiations to reduce and eventually eliminate nuclear weapons,

Firmly convinced that at present the conditions are most propitious for such a freeze, since the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America are now equivalent in nuclear military power and it seems evident that there exists between them an overall rough parity,

Conscious that the application of the systems of surveillance, verification and control already agreed upon in some previous cases would be sufficient to provide a reasonable guarantee of faithful compliance with the undertakings derived from the freeze,

Convinced that it would be to the benefit of all other States possessing nuclear weapons to follow the example of the two major nuclear-weapon States,

1. Urges once more the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to proclaim, either through simultaneous unilateral declarations or through a joint declaration, an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would be a first step towards a comprehensive programme of disarmament and whose structure and scope would be the following:

- (a) It would embrace:
 - (i) A comprehensive test ban of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
 - (ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
 - (iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
 - (iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;
- (b) It would be subject to appropriate measures and procedures of verification, such as those that have already been agreed by the parties in the case of the SALT I and SALT II treaties, those agreed upon in principle by them during the preparatory trilateral negotiations on the comprehensive test ban held at Geneva and those contemplated in the document on verification measures issued at the Mexico Summit on 7 August 1986 and would draw upon the results of the work of the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, in the Conference on Disarmament;

(c) It would be of an initial five-year duration, subject to prolongation when other nuclear-weapon States join in such a freeze, as the General Assembly urges them to do;

2. Requests the above-mentioned two major nuclear-weapon States to submit a joint report or two separate reports to the General Assembly, prior to the opening of its forty-third session, on the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 42/39 H on a nuclear-arms freeze".

Abstaining: China, Spain.

Speaking on the two texts, France stated that a freeze would make existing situations permanent and give any State that had significantly increased its weapons a lasting advantage over others, and could undermine the willingness of a country benefiting from a freeze to negotiate on arms reduction. Similarly, Japan held that a nuclear freeze, unless immediately followed by a balanced reduction in nuclear weapons, could lead to the preservation of a real or perceived nuclear superiority of one side over the other. Both Japan and France believed that a freeze would be difficult to verify.

Strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament⁽¹⁾ considered, from 6 to 10 April and from 27 to 31 July, effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons-also known as negative security assurances. It re-established an ad hoc committee, which held 10 meetings between 7 July and 21 August under the chairmanship of Paul von Stülpnagel (Federal Republic of Germany).

Nigeria, in an effort to break the impasse on the question, submitted a proposal⁽¹⁹⁾ suggesting elements for use in forming a generally acceptable agreement according to the military situation in which the non-nuclear-weapon States found themselves.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Ad Hoc Committee reaffirmed the need for effective security assurances and stated that agreement could not be reached due to persistent specific difficulties relating to differing perceptions of security interests and the complexity of the issues. It was generally agreed that the Ad Hoc Committee should be re-established in 1988 to continue exploring ways to overcome the difficulties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in two 1987 resolutions adopted on the recommendation of the First Committee, again called for negotiations on international arrangements on negative security assurances.

On 30 November, it adopted resolution 42/31 by recorded vote.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced of the need to take effective measures for the strengthening of the security of States, and prompted by the desire shared by all nations to eliminate war and prevent nuclear conflagration,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of such weapons,

Noting with satisfaction the determination of non-nuclear-weapon States in various parts of the world to prevent nuclear weapons from being introduced into their territories and to ensure the complete absence of such weapons from their respective regions, including through the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the regions concerned, and being anxious to encourage and contribute to the attainment of this objective,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its numerous resolutions on this subject, as well as the relevant part of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament* submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Noting that the Conference on Disarmament considered in 1987 the item entitled "Effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons", as reflected in its report, where it is stated that discussions on the conclusions that could be drawn from the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on this item, including consideration of the possibilities for interim measures and alternatives, once again proved inconclusive,

Noting further that during that consideration the importance of making progress on this issue was underlined in the light of the forthcoming third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament,

Recalling the proposals submitted on the subject to the General Assembly and in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention, and the widespread international support for the conclusion of such a convention,

Aware that additional proposals on the substance of the issue of security assurances with respect to non-nuclear-weapon States were submitted in the Conference on Disarmament in 1987, as reflected in its report,

Aware also that the work on the substance of the effective arrangements and discussion on various aspects and elements of an interim solution revealed that specific difficulties relating to differing perceptions of security interests persisted and that the complex nature of the issues involved continued to prevent agreement on a "common formula",

Recognizing the need for fresh approaches to the solution of urgent security issues in the nuclear age, many of which relate to the security of non-nuclear-weapon States as well,

Aware of the wide support in the Conference on Disarmament for continuing the search for a "common formula", which could be included in an international legally binding instrument to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming once again the solemn declarations made by some nuclear-weapon States concerning non-first use of nuclear weapons, and convinced that if all nuclear-weapon States were to assume obligations not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, that would be tantamount in practice to banning the use of nuclear weapons against all States, including all non-nuclear-weapon States,

Considering that the non-nuclear-weapon States having no nuclear weapons on their territories have every right to receive reliable, uniform and unconditional international legal assurances against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

1. Reaffirms once again the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons and to find a common approach acceptable to all;

2. Considers that the Conference on Disarmament should continue to explore ways and means of overcoming the difficulties encountered in carrying out negotiations on this question;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate political will and to exercise the flexibility necessary to reach agreement on a "common formula", which could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding nature;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue active negotiations on this subject and to establish for this purpose the relevant ad hoc committee at the beginning of its 1988 session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

*The Committee on Disarmament was redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Also on 30 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/32 by recorded vote.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Deeply concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Taking into account the principle of the non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned about the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 3261 G (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 31/189 C of 21 December 1976,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Recalling its resolutions 33/72 B of 14 December 1978, 34/85 of 11 December 1979, 35/155 of 12 December 1980, 36/95 of 9 December 1981, 37/81 of 9 December 1982, 38/68 of 15 December 1983, 39/58 of 12 December 1984, 40/86 of 12 December 1985 and 41/52 of 3 December 1986,

Further recalling paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Noting the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note of the decision of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communiqué of the Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Fez, Morocco, from 6 to 10 January 1986, calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Further noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate the political will necessary to reach agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula which could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding nature;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including in particular those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Only Argentina explained its position on both texts. It abstained on the nine-nation draft because it considered that the text was not confined to the topic but also dealt with other extraneous matters. While supporting Pakistan's draft, Argentina stated that its decision to not produce nuclear weapons and to carry out its nuclear programme exclusively for peaceful purposes gave it the right to request nuclear-weapon States to provide unconditional negative security guarantees.

Nuclear non-proliferation

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

In 1987, the international community continued to discuss the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in Africa, the Middle East and South Asia, as well as implementation of a treaty establishing such a zone in Latin America. References were also made to informal proposals for such zones in the Balkans and northern and Central Europe (see p. 18).

In addition, many States welcomed the entry into force, in December 1986,⁽²⁰⁾ of the South Pacific Nuclear-Free-Zone Treaty, which had been prepared by the South Pacific Forum in 1985;⁽²¹⁾ as at 31 December 1987, the Treaty had nine parties.⁽³⁾ The Forum, in the final communique of its eighteenth session (Apia, Samoa, 29 and 30 May 1987),⁽²²⁾ welcomed Solomon Islands as the eleventh signatory to the Treaty. It also welcomed the signing of Protocols 2 and 3 by China and the USSR, calling on the latter not to enter any reservations or statement of interpretation when it ratified the Protocols; called on France, the United Kingdom and the United States to sign the Protocols; and expressed profound concern that France continued to test nuclear devices in the South Pacific and called on it to cease doing so. Mongolia, on 5 March,⁽²³⁾ welcomed the Treaty's entry into force and, noting the signing of Protocols 2 and 3 by China and the USSR, called on all other nuclear-weapon States to follow suit.

Africa

Since 1964, when the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa was adopted by the Organization of African Unity,⁽²⁴⁾ the General Assembly had annually called for its implementation. In 1987, as in previous years, the Assembly adopted two resolutions—one on the implementation of the Declaration and the other on the nuclear capability of South Africa.

Disarmament Commission consideration. The Disarmament Commission ⁽¹³⁾ continued consideration in 1987 of the question of South Africa's nuclear capability, in response to a 1986 Assembly request. ⁽²⁵⁾ The Commission established Working Group I, which, basing its work on a 1984 working paper, ⁽²⁶⁾ held eight meetings between 8 and 22 May under the chairmanship of Juan Enrique Fischer (Uruguay) in an effort to draft conclusions and recommendations. While the Group reported significant progress in its work, no consensus was possible on the text as a whole, and it recommended that the Commission continue consideration of the topic in 1988.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In February 1987, ⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretary-General drew the Security Council's attention to the Assembly's 1986 resolution on South Africa's nuclear capability, ⁽²⁵⁾ in which the Assembly requested the Council to take action aimed at, among other things, prohibiting all forms of nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

In an October report, ⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, informing the Assembly that he had continued to follow relevant developments in South Africa, also provided: updated information furnished by the Director General of IAEA, including the text of communications between him and South Africa concerning a safeguards agreement on a semi-commercial enrichment plant; two resolutions on South Africa's nuclear capability—one adopted by the IAEA Board of Governors on 12 June and the other by the IAEA General Conference on 25 September; and a statement by South Africa, circulated at the General Conference, announcing its readiness to negotiate with the nuclear-weapon States regarding the possible signing of the non-proliferation Treaty ⁽¹⁸⁾ and safeguards arrangements under the Treaty conditions. The Director General reported, among other things, that South Africa had signed and deposited, on 10 August, instruments of ratification of the Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency (see pp. 581 and 1188).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted two resolutions relating to the denuclearization of Africa—implementation of the 1964 Declaration and the nuclear capability of South Africa. A number of States explained in single statements their positions on the two texts (see p. 62).

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/34 A by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling its resolution 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, its earliest on the subject, as well as its resolutions 2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, 31/69 of 10 December 1976, 32/81 of 12 December 1977, 33/63 of 14 December 1978, 34/76 A of 11 December 1979, 35/146 B of 12 December 1980, 36/86 B of 9 December 1981, 37/74 A of 9 December 1982, 38/181 A of 20 December 1983, 39/61 A of 12 December 1984, 40/89 A of 12 December 1985 and 41/55 A of 3 December 1986, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling that in its resolution 33/63 it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Bearing in mind the provisions of resolution CM/Res.1101(XLVI)/Rev.1 on the denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987,

Having taken note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability", undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, as well as the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Noting the actions taken by those Governments which have taken measures to restrict co-operation with South Africa in nuclear and other fields,

Expressing regret that, despite the threat that South Africa's nuclear capability constitutes to international peace and security and, in particular, to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Disarmament Commission, although it made some progress during its substantive session in 1987, failed once again to reach a consensus on this important item on its agenda,

1. Strongly renews its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

2. Reaffirms that the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity would be an important measure to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security;

3. Expresses once again its grave alarm at South Africa's possession and continued development of nuclear-weapon capability;

4. Condemns South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist regime that enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, which seeks to keep Africa free from nuclear weapons;

5. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to desist from further collaboration with the racist regime that may enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

6. Demands once again that the racist regime of South Africa refrain from manufacturing, testing, deploying, transporting, storing, using or threatening to use nuclear weapons;

7. Appeals to all States that have the means to do so to monitor South Africa's research on and development and production of nuclear weapons and to publicize any information in that regard;

8. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance that the Organization of African Unity may seek regarding the modalities and elements for the preparation and implementation of the relevant convention or treaty on the denuclearization of Africa;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa".

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/34 B, also by recorded vote.

Nuclear capability of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear capability,

Recalling its resolutions 34/76 B of 11 December 1979, 35/146 A of 12 December 1980, 36/86 A of 9 December 1981, 37/74 B of 9 December 1982, 38/181 B of 20

December 1983, 39/61 B of 12 December 1984, 40/89 B of 12 December 1985 and 41/55 B of 3 December 1986,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling that, in paragraph 12 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it noted that the massive accumulation of armaments and the acquisition of armaments technology by racist regimes, as well as their possible acquisition of nuclear weapons, present a challenging and increasingly dangerous obstacle to a world community faced with the urgent need to disarm,

Recalling also that, in its resolution 33/63 of 14 December 1978, it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Bearing in mind the provisions of resolution CM/Res.1101(XLVI)/Rev.1 on the denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987,

Noting with regret the non-implementation by apartheid South Africa of resolution GC(XXX)/RES/468 adopted on 3 October 1986 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency during its thirtieth regular session,

Having taken note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability",⁽²⁹⁾ undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity,

Expressing regret that, despite the threat that South Africa's nuclear-weapon capability constitutes to international peace and security and, in particular, to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Disarmament Commission, although it made some progress during its substantive session in 1987, failed once again to reach a consensus on this important item on its agenda,

Alarmed that South Africa's nuclear facilities, particularly those that remain unsafeguarded, enable it to develop and acquire the capability of producing fissionable material for nuclear weapons,

Gravely concerned that South Africa, in flagrant violation of the principles of international law and the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, has continued its acts of aggression and subversion against the peoples of the independent States of southern Africa,

Strongly condemning the continued military occupation by South African troops of parts of the territory of Angola in violation of its national sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity, and urging the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African troops from Angolan soil,

Expressing its grave disappointment that, despite repeated appeals by the international community, certain Western States and Israel have continued to collaborate with the racist regime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and that some of these States have, by a ready recourse to the use of veto, consistently frustrated every effort in the Security Council to deal decisively with the question of South Africa.

Recalling its decision taken at the tenth special session that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the implementation of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa,

Stressing the need to preserve peace and security in Africa by ensuring that the continent is a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear capability;

2. Condemns the massive buildup of South Africa's military machine, in particular its frenzied acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability for repressive and aggressive purposes and as an instrument of blackmail;

3. Further condemns all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist regime of South Africa, in particular the decision by some Member States to grant licences to several corporations in their territories to provide equipment and technical and maintenance services for nuclear installations in South Africa;

4. Reaffirms that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the racist regime constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States and increases the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

5. Expresses its full support for the African States faced with the danger of South Africa's nuclear capability;

6. Commends the actions taken by those Governments which have taken measures to restrict co-operation with South Africa in nuclear and other fields;

7. Demands that South Africa and all other foreign interests put an immediate end to the exploration for and exploitation of uranium resources in Namibia;

8. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals terminate forthwith all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist regime;

9. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider once again as a matter of priority during its substantive session in 1988 South Africa's nuclear capability, taking into account, inter alia, the findings included in the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on South Africa's nuclear capability;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all the necessary assistance that the Organization of African Unity may seek regarding the modalities and-elements for the preparation and implementation of the relevant convention or treaty on the denuclearization of Africa;

11. Commends the adoption by the Security Council of resolutions 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 and 591(1986) of 28 November 1986 on the question of South Africa, with a view to blocking the existing loopholes in the arms embargo so as to render it more effective and prohibiting, in particular, all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa in the nuclear field;

12. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to follow very closely South Africa's evolution in the nuclear field and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 140-4-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/747) by recorded vote (113-4-14), 9 November (meeting 37); draft by Madagascar, for African Group (A/C.1/42/L.63, part B); agenda item 58.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Spain, Uruguay.

Explaining its vote, Australia objected to the singling out of States by name, notably in the thirteenth preambular paragraph, and considered the reference in the ninth preambular paragraph to South Africa's nuclear-weapon capability to be unsubstantiated and not helpful.

Several countries explained, in single statements, their votes on the two texts. France said they failed to distinguish between the peaceful and military uses of nuclear energy, and the assertion of South Africa's nuclear military capability went beyond what it considered to be useful. Declaring that it had no nuclear collaboration with South Africa, the United Kingdom upheld, at the same time, the right of all States to apply and develop programmes for the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, adding that the drafts contained judgments that were insufficiently substantiated or were more properly matters for the Security Council. Israel said it was unfairly named in the preamble, reiterated its condemnation of apartheid and repeated its categorical denial of the alleged nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

Iceland, on behalf of the Nordic countries, considered that the texts failed to take into account the proper division of competence between the Council and the Assembly, that they inappropriately and selectively named countries, and that the Assembly should call on Governments rather than on private citizens and enterprises for action.

Speaking of the zone concept in general, Japan reiterated that the establishment of such a zone should result from the initiatives and consensus of the States in the region and nuclear-weapon States, and should strengthen the peace and security of the region and beyond. Albania maintained that it was for the countries concerned to decide on the creation of nuclear-weapon-free zones.

In related action, the Assembly, by resolution 42/92, called on all States, particularly the Security Council members, to promote the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger that the nuclear capability of South Africa constituted to the African States, in particular the front-line States, as well as to international peace and security.

Latin America

The General Assembly remained seized in 1987 of the item on the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco), concerning the application of the Treaty to territories in the region for which outside States had de jure or de facto responsibility, such as the colonial Powers. The Treaty's Additional Protocol II—which committed nuclear-weapon States parties to respect the denuclearized status of the zone—had been ratified by the five nuclear-weapon States by 1979.⁽³⁰⁾

Communications. In a 14 April letter submitted in connection with the 1986 International Year of Peace, the United Kingdom⁽³¹⁾ stated that it had complied at all times, and would continue to comply, with its obligations under the Additional Protocols to the Tlatelolco Treaty, in not deploying nuclear weapons in territories for which it was internationally responsible within the Treaty's zone of application and in territories for which the Treaty was in force.

The Special Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, Guyana, 9-12 March), in its final communiqué,⁽³²⁾ stressed the need for creating conditions conducive to the accession by all States of the region to the Treaty and for the nuclear-weapon States to abide by the provisions of the Additional Protocols: the Ministers strongly condemned the introduction of nuclear weapons into the region by any nuclear-weapon States.

In a 4 September statement, the text of which was subsequently transmitted to the Secretary-General,⁽³³⁾ the President of Brazil announced that its scientists had succeeded in uranium enrichment by the ultracentrifugal method, adding that the objectives of its nuclear programme were exclusively peaceful and that it abided by the Treaty of Tlatelolco.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/25 by recorded vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/45 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 3262(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3473(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 32/76 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/58 of 14 December 1978, 34/71 of 11 December 1979, 35/143 of 12 December 1980, 36/83 of 9 December 1981, 37/71 of 9 December 1982, 38/61 of 15 December 1983, 39/51 of 12 December 1984, 40/79 of 12 December 1985 and 41/45 of 3 December 1986 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Taking into account that within the zone of application of that Treaty, to which twenty-three sovereign States are already parties, there are some territories which, in spite of not being sovereign political entities, are nevertheless in a position to receive the benefits deriving from the Treaty through its Additional Protocol I, to which the four States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for those territories may become parties,

Considering that it is not fair that the peoples of some of those territories are deprived of such benefits without being given the opportunity to express their opinion in this connection,

Recalling that three of the States to which Additional Protocol I is open—the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the United States of America—became parties to the Protocol in 1969, 1971 and 1981, respectively,

1. Deplores that the signature of Additional Protocol I by France, which took place on 2 March 1979, has not yet been followed by the corresponding ratification, notwithstanding the time already elapsed and the pressing invitations which the General Assembly has addressed to it;

2. Once more urges France not to delay any further such ratification, which has been requested so many times and which appears all the more advisable, since France is the only one of the four States to which the Protocol is open that is not yet party to it;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 42/25 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

Approved by First Committee (A/42/737) by recorded vote (127-0-6), 9 November (meeting 37); 16-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.52); agenda item 48.

Sponsors: Bahamas, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Argentina, Central African Republic, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, France, Guinea, Guyana.

Explaining its vote, France objected to being named when other countries within the area of application of the Treaty had not signed or ratified it, nor had they applied to themselves the clause that admitted the Treaty's entry into force even before all countries of the region had become parties; France would act in due course in the light of the status of ratification of the Treaty itself. Cuba could not renounce the right to defend itself with appropriate weapons as long as the only nuclear Power in the hemisphere maintained hostile and aggressive policy against it and a military base on its territory.

The United States observed that there were States in the region eligible to join the Treaty, but for which it was not in force; some of the States concerned were developing sensitive nuclear technologies outside international safeguards. The Netherlands was disappointed that the Treaty had not entered into force for two Latin American countries possessing developed nuclear technologies; as long as the zone of application of the Treaty did not cover the entire area, its effectiveness could be undermined. Albania had reservations concerning the effectiveness of nuclear-weapon-free zones in general.

Middle East

In a July 1987 report,⁽³⁴⁾ submitted in response to a 1986 Assembly request,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the views of nine Member States—Bangladesh, Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Israel, Oman, Panama, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United States—on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/28 without vote, on a recommendation of the First Committee.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985 and 41/48 of 3 December 1986 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing further the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Invites those countries, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with the relevant paragraph of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

4. Further invites countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

5. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and spirit of the present resolution;

6. Extends its thanks to the Secretary-General for his report containing the views of parties concerned regarding the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

7. Takes note of the above-mentioned report;

8. Requests those parties that have not yet communicated their views to the Secretary-General to do so;

9. Welcomes any further comments from those parties that have already communicated their views to the Secretary-General;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/740) without vote, 9 November (meeting 37); draft by Egypt (A/C.1/42/L.8); agenda item 51.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 3-37; plenary 84.

In explanation of position, Israel reiterated that the establishment of the proposed zone could take place only through direct and free negotiations among the sovereign States of the region. Iraq considered that the first essential step was for all the States of the region, especially Israel, to renounce the possession of nuclear weapons and accede to the non-proliferation Treaty. Iran held that the international community must exert pressure on Israel to make it submit to IAEA safeguards and adhere to the non-proliferation Treaty. The United States, referring to a preambular paragraph, stressed that the question of additional legal protection against military attacks on nuclear facilities should be considered separately from that of a radiological-weapons ban. Albania expressed reservations about the effectiveness of nuclear-weapon-free zones in view of the existing nuclear arsenals possessed by the two super-Powers.

Israeli nuclear armament

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in 1987 an update of the 1981 Study on Israeli Nuclear Armament.⁽³⁷⁾ The 1987 report⁽³⁸⁾ contained seven chapters: introduction, United Nations concern with questions of Israeli nuclear armament and related matters, views of Member States (Bangladesh, Iraq, Israel and the Arab Group), nature of information on Israeli nuclear armament, Israel's nuclear development (facilities, activities and resources; application of international safeguards), Israel's nuclear-weapon potential, and summary. In preparing the report, the Secretary-General used, in addition to replies from Member States and IAEA, publicly available information covering the period since the 1981 study.

The Secretary-General concluded that, although the United Nations had no conclusive proof that Israel possessed nuclear weapons, circumstantial evidence and other factors seemed to indicate that it had developed the necessary technology and had the capability to manufacture nuclear weapons, if it so chose.

In related action, the Secretary-General, in February 1987,⁽³⁹⁾ drew the Security Council's attention to the 1986 Assembly resolution on the topic,⁽³⁶⁾ in which the Assembly had requested the Council to ensure that Israel placed all its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards and to investigate Israel's nuclear activities and the collaboration of other parties in them.

Communications. In March,⁽⁴⁰⁾ Kuwait transmitted the texts of the final communiqué and resolutions adopted by the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January). In one resolution, the Summit condemned again the Israeli "aggression" against the Iraqi nuclear installations, Israel's refusal to comply with the United Nations and IAEA resolutions, and Israel's "persistent threat to repeat its aggression against Iraq and to attack peaceful nuclear installations in other Islamic States"; it also called for the adoption of legal steps to prohibit such attacks.

In a 29 July letter to the Secretary-General,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Syrian Arab Republic, in its capacity as current Chairman of the Group of Arab States, stated that abundant information existed on Israel's capability to manufacture, and its possession of, nuclear weapons; that Israel continued to receive supplies from certain States; and that the United Nations should remove the nuclear danger and guarantee the peace and security of the States in the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/44 on 30 November by recorded vote.

Israeli nuclear armament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its previous resolutions on Israeli nuclear armament, the latest of which is resolution 41/93 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling its resolution 41/48 of 3 December 1986, in which, inter alia, it called for placing all nuclear facilities in the region under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981, in which, inter alia, the Council called upon Israel urgently to place all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Noting that only Israel has been specifically called upon by the Security Council to place its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Taking note with apprehension of the report of the Secretary-General on Israeli nuclear armament,

Noting with grave concern Israel's persistent refusal to commit itself not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons, despite repeated calls by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Taking into consideration resolution GC(XXXI)/RES/470 adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which the General Conference called upon Israel to place all its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards,

Deeply alarmed by recent information in regard to the continuing production, development and acquisition of nuclear weapons by Israel,

Aware of the grave consequences that endanger international peace and security as a result of Israel's development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and Israel's collaboration with South Africa to develop nuclear weapons and their delivery systems,

Deeply concerned that the declared Israeli policy of attacking and destroying nuclear facilities devoted to peaceful purposes is a part of its nuclear armament policy,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of Israel's refusal to renounce any possession of nuclear weapons;
2. Reiterates also its condemnation of the co-operation between Israel and South Africa;
3. Requests once more the Security Council to take urgent and effective measures to ensure that Israel complies with Council resolution 487(1981);
4. Calls upon all States and organizations that have not yet done so to discontinue co-operating with and giving assistance to Israel in the nuclear field;
5. Reiterates its request to the International Atomic Energy Agency to suspend any scientific co-operation with Israel which could contribute to its nuclear capabilities;
6. Requests also the International Atomic Energy Agency to inform the Secretary-General of any steps Israel may undertake to place its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards;
7. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely Israeli nuclear activities and to report, to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;
8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Israeli nuclear armament".

30 November 1987 Meeting 85 97-2-52 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/756) by recorded vote (86-3-44), 9 November (meeting 37); 20-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.15); agenda item 68. Sponsors: Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bolivia, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malta, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Portugal, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Samoa, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Zaire.

The Assembly adopted, by separate recorded votes, the seventh preambular paragraph (84 to 10, with 37 abstentions), the last preambular paragraph (80-22-33), and paragraphs 2 (84-18-37), 4 (80-23-36) and 5 (83-22-35). The First Committee had likewise approved those paragraphs: seventh preambular paragraph (80-10-33), last preambular paragraph (73-23-25) and paragraphs 2 (76-20-27), 4 (72-25-24) and 5 (74-24-25).

Commenting on the draft, Israel said it was committed to non-proliferation through the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone based on free negotiations and mutual agreement among the partners, adding that adherence to the non-proliferation Treaty was no guarantee against local wars. Listing its objections to specific paragraphs in the draft, Israel said paragraph 1 asked Israel to give assurances which none of the draft's co-sponsors had ever given; paragraph 2, despite Israel's declaration to the contrary, alleged co-operation with South Africa; paragraph 3 ignored the sovereign right of any State to determine its non-proliferation stance; paragraphs 4 and 5 ran counter to the United Nations Charter and that of IAEA; and paragraphs 6 to 8 invited the First Committee to continue closing in on Israel rather than question the motives and acts of the sponsoring States. Further, the Assembly request for investigation of Israel's nuclear potential, resulting in the Secretary-General's report, had been patently discriminatory; among other things, it ignored the 1985 IAEA resolution expressing satisfaction with Israel's assurances on the inviolability of nuclear installations dedicated to peaceful purposes.

In explanation of vote, Australia and Venezuela said the assertion in the last preambular paragraph lacked substantiation; Australia and Japan hoped Israel would accede to the non-proliferation Treaty. Australia felt the requests in paragraphs 4 and 5 for suspending collaboration with Israel had possible implications for Israel's rights and privileges of membership in IAEA, contrary to Australia's belief in the universality of membership of international organizations. Japan had reservations and could not make a judgement on several paragraphs because of the lack of objective information. Venezuela abstained on the seventh preambular paragraph, to be consistent with its vote on the IAEA-resolution mentioned therein, and on paragraph 5, in the belief that the question had been adequately considered.

South Asia

In an August 1987 report, with a later addendum,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly, 'pursuant to its 1986 request⁽⁴³⁾ the views of Bangladesh, Maldives, Pakistan and Sri Lanka on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia. Pakistan requested the Secretary-General to draw the attention of other South Asian States and the nuclear-weapon States to its desire for early consultations aimed at preventing nuclear proliferation in the region, and explained its views on the rationale, form, scope, undertakings by the States concerned and the verification arrangements relating to the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region. Those points were reiterated in a 1 September statement made by its Foreign Minister at the International Conference on Nuclear Non-Proliferation in South Asia, organized by the Institute of Strategic Studies at Islamabad.'⁽⁴⁴⁾

On 24 September, Pakistan's Prime Minister proposed in the plenary Assembly that a conference on nuclear non-proliferation in South Asia be convened as soon as possible, under United Nations auspices, with the participation of the regional and other interested States. (See also p. 18.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/29 by recorded vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981, 37/76 of 9 December 1982, 38/65 of 15 December 1983, 39/55 of 12 December 1984, 40/83 of 12 December 1985 and 41/49 of 3 December 1986 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures which can contribute effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will assist in the strengthening of the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting with appreciation the declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States that are developing their peaceful nuclear programmes reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Welcoming the recent proposal for the conclusion of a bilateral or regional nuclear-test-ban agreement in South Asia,

Taking note of the proposal to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, a conference on nuclear non-proliferation in South Asia, as soon as possible, with the participation of the regional and other concerned States,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the views of the States of South Asia contained therein,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective;

3. Calls upon those nuclear-weapon States that have not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to extend the necessary co-operation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to communicate with the States of the region and other concerned States in order to ascertain their views on the issue and to promote consultations among them with a view to exploring the best possibilities of furthering the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia".

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 114-3-36 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/741) by recorded vote (95-3-33), 9 November (meeting 37); 2-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.24); agenda item 52. Sponsors: Bangladesh, Pakistan.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 3-37; plenary 84.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bhutan, India, Mauritius.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ethiopia, France, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Norway, Poland, Seychelles, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

Explaining its vote, India said no consensus existed among the States of the region on the zone's establishment; it doubted the efficacy of such measures in the light of the new findings on nuclear winter and asserted that nuclear weapons proliferated in the vicinity of the proposed zone. Bhutan stressed the need for adequate prior consultations and agreement among the States directly concerned.

Indonesia was of the view that the countries of South Asia were still in the process of achieving agreement on the issue. For Sweden, it was apparent that not all the States concerned were prepared to support the draft. Sri Lanka subscribed to the view regarding nuclear-weapon-free zones as expressed in the 1978 Final Document.

In the plenary Assembly, Maldives called it premature to bring in new elements or specific ideas, as suggested in the fifth and sixth preambular paragraphs, and added that no useful purpose was served by mentioning South Asia in the last preambular paragraph as the 1986 resolution⁽⁴³⁾ had not called for comments from the States of the region alone.

Speaking on the zone concept in general, Albania had reservations concerning the zones' effectiveness, saying that the non-possession of nuclear weapons by a country, a region or a continent did not reduce the threat posed by the existing nuclear arsenals possessed by the USSR and the United States. Japan, focusing on the texts dealing with Africa and South Asia, reiterated that the establishment of such zones required a number of conditions—that it be agreed on the initiative of the countries in the region and by all the countries concerned, and that it should strengthen the peace and security of the region and of the world—and considered it desirable that all countries in the region concerned adhered to the non-proliferation Treaty.

Prohibition or restriction of other weapons

Progress was made in 1987 in the Conference on Disarmament in elaborating a convention banning the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons. In addition to conventional disarmament, efforts to prevent an arms race in outer space continued to receive major attention both within and outside the United Nations.

Chemical and biological weapons

In 1987, the Conference on Disarmament made progress in elaborating a convention banning chemical weapons, agreeing, among other things, that all chemical weapons must be destroyed without allowance for diversion. Further, general understanding emerged that all chemical weapons should be fully declared, including their location and verified when the convention entered into force; and provisions were drafted for the verification of the declarations, closure and elimination of production facilities.

In November, the Assembly urged the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its negotiations on a convention (resolution 42/37 A) and requested the Secretary-General to investigate alleged use of chemical weapons (42/37 C). The Assembly (42/37 B) also noted that, in follow-up to the Second Review Conference held in 1986, the modalities for the exchange of information and data had been agreed for use by the States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction.(1)

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In 1987, the Conference on Disarmament⁽²⁾ continued negotiations on a convention banning chemical weapons, from 23 March to 3 April and from 13 to 24 July.

New documents were submitted by Canada on a verification method and jointly with Norway on verification of alleged use; France on non-production of chemical weapons and on maintenance of a security balance among parties to the convention during a 10-year period of destruction of chemical-weapons stocks; Iran on use of chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq conflict; Pakistan on article X (assistance) of the draft convention; the United Kingdom on preparations for entry into force of the convention; and the United States on verification of elimination of production/filling facilities. In addition, Canada submitted compendia on chemical weapons, comprising plenary statements and working papers from the 1986 session of the Conference. Documents were also submitted by two non-members of the Conference: Finland, three documents on monitoring for verification, and Norway, three documents on verification of alleged use, as well as a report from the Holmenkollen Symposium on the Chemical Weapons Convention (Oslo, 26 and 27 May 1987).

As agreed in 1986,⁽³⁾ the Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons resumed negotiations on a convention, from 12 to 30 January 1987.

The Ad Hoc Committee, re-established by the Conference on 5 February, held 29 meetings from 9 February to 26 August, under the chairmanship of Rolf Ekéus (Sweden), who also held informal consultations. The Committee had before it a report on its inter-sessional work in January. At the Chairman's suggestion, the Committee took up in groups, each under a co-ordinator, a cluster of issues covering the subject-matter contained in articles I to IX of the draft convention-cluster I, on chemical-weapons stocks; cluster II, on production facilities; cluster III, on non-production; and cluster IV, on organization and functions of a consultative committee as well as issues concerning consultation, co-operation and fact-finding, including challenge inspection. In addition, the Chairman undertook consultations on the issue of challenge inspection.

The Ad Hoc Committee recommended to the Conference that further negotiation and drafting of the convention make use of the appendices to the 1987 report of the Ad Hoc Committee-draft text of a convention and documents reflecting the results of the work undertaken on issues in clusters I, III and IV-and other relevant existing and future documents of the Conference. It also suggested that open-ended consultations be held in November/December 1987; that the Committee resume its work for a session of limited duration in January 1988; and that it be re-established at the outset of the Conference's 1988 session, with the decision on chairmanship and mandate to be taken at that time. The report of the Ad Hoc Committee was incorporated into that of the Conference⁽²⁾ to the General Assembly.

Communications. During the year, the Secretary-General received a number of communications on alleged use of chemical weapons in Kampuchea and in the context of the ongoing conflict between Iran and Iraq (see Chapter VII of this section).

The Committee of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty (Moscow, 24 and 25 March)⁽⁴⁾ objected to plans to produce and deploy in Europe a binary type of chemical weapon, supported the proposals for chemical-weapon-free zones in Central Europe and the Balkans, and urged efforts to complete drafting the chemical-weapons-ban convention during 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on banning chemical weapons, as recommended by the First Committee. The text adopted as resolution 42/37 C incorporated some elements proposed in two other drafts which were withdrawn or not put to a vote at the request of the respective sponsors.

A draft by Iran⁽⁵⁾ would have had the Assembly urge the Conference on Disarmament to accelerate its negotiations on a multilateral convention; call on States in the mean time, to co-operate in preventing the use of chemical weapons and in establishing the facts in cases of reported use; request the Secretary-General to take appropriate action for investigating alleged chemical-weapons use; and condemn violations of the 1925 Geneva Protocol prohibiting the use of chemical weapons. Another draft, submitted by a group of 26 Western and non-aligned States,⁽⁶⁾ would have had the Assembly call for compliance with existing international prohibitions on chemical and biological weapons; urge the Conference on Disarmament to accelerate negotiations on a multilateral convention; and call on all States, in the mean time, to co-operate in preventing chemical-weapons use and in investigating reported use, and to be guided in their national policies by the need to curb the spread of such weapons.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/37 A without vote.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and to their destruction,

Reaffirming the urgent necessity of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Taking note of the Final Document of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted by consensus on 26 September 1986, and in particular of article IX of the Final Declaration of the Conference,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament, which incorporates, inter alia, the report of its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, and noting that following the precedents set over the past three years, consultations are continuing during the inter-session period, thus increasing the time devoted to negotiations,

Convinced of the necessity that all efforts be exerted for the continuation and successful conclusion of negotiations on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

Noting the bilateral and other discussions, including the ongoing exchange of views between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in the framework of the multilateral negotiations, on issues related to the prohibition of chemical weapons,

Noting further with appreciation the efforts made at all levels by States to facilitate the earliest conclusion of a convention and, in particular, the concrete steps designed to promote confidence and to contribute directly to that goal,

Wishing to encourage Member States to take further initiatives to promote confidence and openness in the negotiations and to provide further information to facilitate prompt resolution of outstanding issues, thus contributing to an early agreement on the convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the work of the Conference on Disarmament during its 1987 session regarding the prohibition of chemical weapons, and in particular appreciates the progress in the work of its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons on that question and the tangible results recorded in its report;

2. Expresses again none the less its regret and concern that notwithstanding the progress made in 1987, a convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction has not yet been elaborated;

3. Urges again the Conference on Disarmament, as a matter of high priority, to intensify, during its 1988 session, the negotiations on such a convention and to reinforce further its efforts by, inter alia, increasing the time during the year that it devotes to such negotiations, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives, with a view to the final elaboration of a convention at the earliest possible date, and to re-establish its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons for this purpose with the mandate to be agreed upon by the Conference at the beginning of its 1988 session;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the results of its negotiations.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/37 C, also without vote.

Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925

Geneva Protocol and to support the conclusion of a chemical weapons convention
The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and other relevant rules of customary international law,

Recalling also the necessity of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Reiterating its concern about reports that chemical weapons have been used and over indications of their emergence in an increasing number of national arsenals, as well as about the growing risk that they may be used again,

Noting with satisfaction that the Conference on Disarmament is actively engaged in negotiating a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, including detailed provisions for the on-site verification of compliance with the convention, and expressing its support for the early and successful conclusion of those negotiations,

Noting also that prompt and impartial investigation of reports of possible use of chemical and bacteriological weapons would further enhance the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol,

Expressing its appreciation for the work of the Secretary-General, and noting the procedures available to him in support of the principles and objectives of the 1925 Geneva Protocol,

1. Renews its call to all States to observe strictly the principles and objectives of the 1925 Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, and condemns all actions that violate this obligation;

2. Urges all States to be guided in their national policies by the need to curb the spread of chemical weapons;

3. Recognizes the need, upon the entry into force of a chemical weapons convention, to review the modalities available to the Secretary-General for the investigation of reports of the possible use of chemical weapons;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out investigations in response to reports that may be brought to his attention by any Member State concerning the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons that may constitute a violation of the 1925 Geneva Protocol or other relevant rules of customary international law in 'order to ascertain the facts of the matter, and to report promptly the results of any such investigation to all Member States;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified experts provided by interested Member States, to develop further technical guidelines and procedures available to him for the timely and efficient investigation of such reports of the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons;.

6. Also requests the Secretary-General, in meeting the objectives set forth in paragraph 4 above, to compile and maintain lists of qualified experts provided by Member States whose services could be made available at short notice to undertake such investigations, and of laboratories with the capability to undertake testing for the presence of agents the use of which is prohibited;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General, in meeting the objectives of paragraph 4 above:

(a) To appoint experts to undertake investigation of the reported activities;

(b) Where appropriate, to make the necessary arrangements for experts to collect and examine evidence and to undertake such testing as may be required;

(c) To seek, in any such investigation, assistance as appropriate from Member States and the relevant international organizations;

8. Requests Member States and the relevant international organizations to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the above-mentioned work;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Follow-up to the 1986 review conference

In pursuance of a decision of the Second (1986) Review Conference ⁽⁷⁾ of the States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, an Ad Hoc Meeting of Scientific and Technical Experts from 39 States parties, under the chairmanship of Bo Rybeck (Sweden), held seven plenary meetings and a number of informal sessions at Geneva from 31 March to 15 April 1987. The Meeting adopted by consensus a report⁽⁹⁾ finalizing the procedure for exchanging information and data under the following headings: exchange of data on research centres and laboratories, exchange of information on outbreaks of infectious diseases and similar occurrences caused by toxins, encouragement of publication of results and promotion of use of knowledge, active promotion of contacts, procedural modalities and additional considerations. The Meeting suggested that, following a first exchange not later than 15 October 1987, information covering the previous calendar year should be provided annually to the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs by 15 April for dissemination to all States parties and the World Health Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/37 B without vote.

Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2826(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, in which it commended the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction and expressed the hope for the widest possible adherence to the Convention,

Recalling its resolution 39/65 D of 12 December 1984, in which it noted that, at the request of a majority of States parties to the Convention, a second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention would be held in 1986,

Recalling that the States parties to the Convention met at Geneva from 8 to 26 September 1986 to review the operation of the Convention with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble to and the provisions of the Convention, including the provisions concerning negotiations on chemical weapons, were being realized,

Recalling also its resolution 41/58 A of 3 December 1986, in which it, inter alia noted with appreciation that on 26 September 1986, the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction adopted by consensus a Final Declaration,

Noting with satisfaction that, at the time of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention, there were more than a hundred States parties to the Convention, including all the permanent members of the Security Council,

1. Notes with appreciation that, in accordance with the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, an Ad Hoc Meeting of Scientific and Technical Experts from States parties to the Convention was held at Geneva from 31 March to 15 April 1987, which adopted by consensus a report finalizing the modalities for the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration, thus enabling States parties to follow a standardized procedure;

2. Notes that the Ad Hoc Meeting of Scientific and Technical Experts from States parties to the Convention agreed in its report that the first exchange of information and data should take place not later than 15 October 1987 and that thereafter information to be given on an annual basis should be provided through the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat not later than 15 April;

3. Notes with satisfaction that the first such exchange of information and data has commenced;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services as may be required for the implementation of the relevant parts of the Final Declaration;

5. Calls upon all signatory States that have not ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so without delay, and also calls upon those States which have not yet signed the Convention to join the States parties thereto at an early date, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention and to international confidence.

New weapons of mass destruction, including radiological weapons

In 1987, divergent views persisted towards the general ban on the development and manufacture of new weapons of mass destruction. Socialist States and many non-aligned countries continued to stress that the emergence of new types of such weapons would destabilize the military strategic situation. Western States maintained that there were no indications that such types of weapons were imminent; thus there was no need for action by the Conference on Disarmament.

In November, the General Assembly adopted resolutions aimed at banning new weapons of mass destruction-on the general subject of such weapons (resolution 42/35), on radiological weapons (42/38 B) and on armed attacks against nuclear facilities (42/38 F).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament (2) considered the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons" from 13 to 17 April and from 27 to 31 July 1987.

The Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons, re-established by the Conference on 10 February, held seven meetings between 3 April and 10 August, under the chairmanship of David Meiszter (Hungary), who also held informal consultations. After five meetings devoted to the conduct of work, the Ad Hoc Committee, breaking away from its past practice of dealing with two aspects of the question together, established contact group A, on radiological weapons in the "traditional" sense, and contact Group B, on attacks on nuclear facilities. Each group, holding six meetings, discussed possible elements for a convention dealing with the aspect assigned to it, without prejudice to the eventual position of delegations regarding the question of linkage.

In its report to the Conference, the Ad Hoc Committee concluded that its work in 1987 had contributed further to a better understanding of the different approaches to the two aspects under consideration, and recommended that it be re-established at the beginning of the Conference's 1988 session. On 25 August, the Conference adopted the Committee's report as part of its own report to the General Assembly.

Communications. On 20 November, (9) Iran informed the Secretary-General that its Bushehr nuclear power plant which carried fissionable material, had been attacked by Iraq twice since 17 November, and that it expected effective action by the United Nations and other international forums to prevent the recurrence of such attacks. Annexed to the letter was the text of a 19 November message from the President of the Atomic Energy Organization of Iran to the Chairman of the Board of Governors of IAEA, reiterating Iran's previous request that IAEA send to the nuclear plant a mission of safeguard inspectors as well as nuclear safety and radiation protection experts.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council a 26 November letter addressed to him by the IAEA Director General, (10) containing the texts of messages exchanged between Iran and IAEA in November concerning the alleged incident; IAEA requested that Iran provide information on the state of the nuclear material at the plant, together with Iran's own initial assessment of the situation.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September 1987 report, (11) prepared in response to a 1986 Assembly request, (12) on the progress made in the Conference on Disarmament on an agreement prohibiting military attacks against nuclear facilities, the Secretary-General referred Member States to the work of the Conference's Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted three resolutions aimed at banning new weapons of mass destruction.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/35 by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Recalling also the decision contained in paragraph 77 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, to the effect that, in order to help prevent a qualitative arms race and so that scientific and technological achievements might ultimately be used solely for peaceful purposes, effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction based on new scientific principles and achievements and that efforts aimed at the prohibition of such new types and new systems of weapons of mass destruction should be appropriately pursued,

Noting that in the course of its 1987 session the Conference on Disarmament considered the item entitled "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons",

Taking into consideration the section of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to this question, Convinced that all ways and means should be utilized to prevent the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Determined to prevent modern science and technology from leading to the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction that have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of weapons of mass destruction identified in the definition of weapons of mass destruction adopted by the United Nations in 1948,

1. Reaffirms, on the basis of the common desire of the international community, the necessity of prohibiting the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, in the light of its existing priorities, to keep constantly under review, with appropriate expert assistance, the question of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons with a view to making, when necessary, recommendations on undertaking specific negotiations on the identified types of such weapons;

3. Calls upon all States, immediately following the identification of any new type of weapon of mass destruction, to renounce practical development of such a weapon and to commence negotiations on its prohibition;

4. Once again urges all States to refrain from any action that could lead to the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;

5. Calls again upon all States to undertake efforts to ensure that ultimately scientific and technological achievements may be used solely for peaceful purposes;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

7. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit to the General Assembly for consideration at its forty-third session a report on the results achieved;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 42/35

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Among those abstaining, Australia stated that the only weapons specifically mentioned under the agenda item in the Conference on Disarmament were radiological weapons; since no other weapons of mass destruction had been conceived, and the question of radiological weapons was considered under Assembly agenda item 62 (a) (see below), agenda item 59 and the draft submitted under it were superfluous and diverted attention from higher priority tasks. The United Kingdom expressed disappointment that the text could not be improved further, despite the changes incorporated to make it less objectionable than in the past; it hoped more flexibility would be shown the following year to enable a consensus resolution on the topic. Sharing that sentiment, the Netherlands said it had difficulties with the sixth preambular paragraph and paragraph 2; it maintained that negotiations on multilateral agreements would be feasible only if they concerned well-defined and identified weapons, and there were no current indications that such weapons were imminent.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/38 B without vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/59 A of 3 December 1986,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1987 session that deals with the question of radiological weapons, in particular the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons;

2. Recognizes that the Ad Hoc Committee in 1987 made a further contribution to the clarification and better understanding of different approaches that continue to exist with regard to both of the important subjects under consideration;

3. Takes note of the recommendation of the Conference on Disarmament that the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons should be re-established at the beginning of its 1988 session;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue its negotiations on the subject with a view to a prompt conclusion of its work, taking into account all proposals presented to the Conference to this end and drawing upon the annexes to its report as a basis of its future work, the result of which should be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

5. Also requests that the Secretary-General transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all relevant documents relating to the discussion of all aspects of the issue by the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons".

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/669/Add.1) without vote, 9 November (meeting 36); 5-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.5); agenda item 62 (a).

Sponsors: Australia, Hungary, Indonesia, Japan, Sweden.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 3-36; plenary 84.

The Assembly adopted resolution 42/38 F by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/99 C of 13 December 1982, 38/188 D of 20 December 1983, 39/151 J of 17 December 1984, 40/94 D of 12 December 1985 and 41/59 A and I of 3 December 1986 on, inter alia, the conclusion of an agreement prohibiting military attacks against nuclear facilities,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on this subject submitted pursuant to resolution 41/59 I,

Gravely concerned that armed attacks against nuclear facilities, though carried out with conventional weapons, could be tantamount to the use of radiological weapons,

Recalling also that Additional Protocol I of 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 prohibits attacks on nuclear electricity-generating stations,

Deeply concerned that the destruction of nuclear facilities by conventional weapons causes the release into the environment of huge amounts of dangerous radioactive material, which results in serious radioactive contamination,

Firmly convinced that the Israeli attack against the safeguarded nuclear facilities in Iraq constitutes an unprecedented danger to international peace and security,

Recalling further resolutions GC(XXVII)/RES/407 and GC(XXVII)/RES/409, adopted in 1983 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which the General Conference urged all member States to support actions in international forums to reach an international agreement that prohibits armed attacks against nuclear installations devoted to peaceful purposes,

1. Reaffirms that armed attacks of any kind against nuclear facilities are tantamount to the use of radiological weapons, owing to the dangerous radioactive forces that such attacks cause to be released;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify further its efforts to reach, as early as possible, an agreement prohibiting armed attacks against nuclear facilities;

3. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to provide the Conference on Disarmament with the technical studies that would facilitate the conclusion of such an agreement;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of vote, Israel, maintaining that all States must refrain from attacking or threatening to attack nuclear facilities devoted to peaceful purposes, said it voted against the text because of what it viewed as a completely unjustified reference to Israel in the penultimate preambular paragraph.

Venezuela said that it was excessive to make a general assertion equating an attack on a nuclear facility with the use of radiological weapons; that the drafting of an agreement on banning such attacks should be examined in a diplomatic conference, rather than in the Conference on Disarmament; and that the statements made in the third preambular paragraph and in paragraph 1 could influence the work entrusted to the Conference.

Iran attached importance to the fifth preambular paragraph, and claimed that its nuclear facilities for peaceful uses, in Bushehr in the south, had been subjected to aerial attacks. Jordan declared that attacks against peaceful nuclear facilities constituted an unprecedented threat to international peace and security. Welcoming the mandate given to the Conference on Disarmament, Peru stated that attacks on nuclear facilities should be examined also from the humanitarian angle because of their possible repercussions on civilian populations. While voting in favour, Sweden remained critical of several elements in the text, as it believed resolutions on the topic should promote the possibility of reaching early agreement in the Conference on Disarmament.

In the plenary Assembly on 30 November, the United Republic of Tanzania explained that it had abstained in the vote on the text that became resolution 42/38 F because the Assembly had already adopted 42/38 B without vote; it felt that the subject of the former would be dealt with adequately under agenda item 28, on armed Israeli aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations. (On 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 42/460, suspended the forty-second session, retaining six items, including item 28, on its agenda.)

Conventional weapons

Concern continued to be expressed over the increasing destructiveness of conventional armaments, which were currently estimated to account for over 80 per cent of total annual global military expenditure.

In addition to adopting, in 1987, texts concerning conventional disarmament in general (resolution 42/38 G), conventional disarmament on a regional scale (42/38 N) and regional disarmament (42/39 E), the General Assembly requested the Disarmament Commission to continue consideration of the question of conventional disarmament (42/38 E) and urged States to accede to the Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons (42/30).

At its request, no action was taken on a draft submitted by Italy on the transfer of conventional armaments.⁽¹³⁾ The draft would have had the Assembly call on Governments which were major suppliers and buyers of armaments to consult on limiting international transfers of conventional weapons. The Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to carry out a study on creating a United Nations committee, subdivided into regional committees, to monitor the arms-trade trends and establish a code of conduct for suppliers and buyers.

Conventional disarmament

Disarmament Commission consideration. In addition to its annual consideration of general disarmament issues, the Disarmament Commission⁽¹⁴⁾ had for the first time on its agenda, in 1987, an item concerning substantive consideration of issues related to conventional disarmament, including the recommendations and conclusions contained in the 1984 United Nations Study on Conventional Disarmament.⁽¹⁵⁾

Working Group III, established by the Commission on 4 May to deal with the item, held nine meetings between 11 and 26 May, under the chairmanship of Skjold G. Mellbin (Denmark). Working papers were submitted by China, Denmark, Hungary, India and the United Kingdom, and the Group held an extensive exchange of views on substantive issues. However, the Group was unable to complete its discussions with agreement on a draft report on the topic, and it recommended that the work be continued in 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/38 E without vote.

Conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/151 C of 17 December 1984, 40/94 C of 12 December 1985 and 41/59 C of 3 December 1986,

Having examined the report of the Disarmament Commission,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report on the consideration of the question of conventional disarmament during the 1987 session of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Recommends that the report should provide a basis for further deliberations on the subject by the Disarmament Commission;

3. Requests the Disarmament Commission to include in the agenda of its 1988 session the item entitled "Substantive consideration of issues related to conventional disarmament, including the recommendations and conclusions contained in the Study on Conventional Disarmament";

4. Also requests the Disarmament Commission to continue at its 1988 session the consideration of the question of conventional disarmament with a view to facilitating the identification of possible measures in the fields of conventional arms reduction and disarmament and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to draw the present resolution to the attention of the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament".

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/669/Add.1) without vote, 12 November (meeting 41); 2-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.12/Rev.1); agenda item 62 (c). Sponsors: Denmark, Zaïre.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 3-41; plenary 84.

Also on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/38 G without vote.

Conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war expressed in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and particularly its paragraph 81, which provides that together with negotiations on nuclear disarmament measures, the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons should be resolutely pursued within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament, and which stresses that States with the largest military arsenals have a special responsibility in pursuing the process of conventional armaments reductions,

Also recalling that the same document declares, inter alia, that priorities in disarmament negotiations shall be: nuclear weapons; other weapons of mass destruction, including chemical weapons; conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects; and reduction of armed forces, and that it stresses that nothing should preclude States from conducting negotiations on all priority items concurrently,

Further recalling that the same document states that effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority, and that real progress in the field of nuclear disarmament could create an atmosphere conducive to progress in conventional disarmament on a world-wide basis,

Aware of the dangers to world peace and security originating from wars and conflicts fought with conventional weapons, as well as of their possible escalation into a nuclear war in regions with a high concentration of conventional and nuclear weapons,

Also aware that with the advance in science and technology, conventional weapons tend to become increasingly lethal and destructive,

Believing that resources released through disarmament, including conventional disarmament, can be used for the social and economic development of people of all countries, particularly the developing countries,

Bearing in mind its resolution 36/97 A of 9 December 1981 and the Study on Conventional Disarmament conducted in accordance with that resolution, as well as its resolutions 41/59 C and 41/59 G of 3 December 1986 and the consideration by the Disarmament Commission at its 1987 session of the question of conventional disarmament,

Bearing in mind also the efforts made to promote conventional disarmament and the related proposals and suggestions, as well as the initiatives taken by various countries in this regard,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the efforts aimed at resolutely pursuing the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament;

2. Believes that the military forces of all countries should not be used other than for the purpose of self-defence;

3. Urges the countries with the largest military arsenals, which bear a special responsibility in pursuing the process of conventional armaments reductions, and the member States of the two major military alliances to continue negotiations through various forums on conventional disarmament in earnest, with a view to reaching early agreement on the limitation and gradual and balanced reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons under effective international control in their respective regions, particularly in Europe, which has the largest concentration of arms and forces in the world;

4. Encourage all States, while taking into account the need to protect security and maintain necessary defensive capabilities, to intensify their efforts and take, either on their own or in a regional context, appropriate steps to promote progress in conventional disarmament and enhance peace and security;

5. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider further, at its 1988 substantive session, issues related to conventional disarmament;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 42/38 G

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/669/Add.1) by recorded vote (126-0-1), 10 November (meeting 39); draft by China (A/C.1/42/L.18); agenda item 62 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 3-39; plenary 84.

Explaining its vote in the First Committee, Australia said the 1978 Final Document had recognized the need for both nuclear and conventional disarmament, and that the emphasis on nuclear disarmament in the fourth preambular paragraph of the resolution had to be interpreted in the broader context of war prevention and disarmament.

Regional approach to conventional disarmament

On 30 November, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/38 N by recorded vote.

Conventional disarmament on a regional scale

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 40/94 A of 12 December 1985,

Taking note of the final communique of the Special Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean, held at Georgetown from 9 to 12 March 1987,

Taking into account its resolution 41/59 M of 3 December 1986,

1. Reiterates its adherence to resolution 40/94 A relating to conventional disarmament on a regional scale;

2. Expresses its firm support of all regional or subregional endeavours, taking into account the characteristics of each region and when the regional situation so permits, as well as unilateral measures, directed to strengthening mutual confidence and to assuring the security of all States involved, making possible regional agreements on arms limitations in the future;

3. Further reiterates the primary responsibility of the militarily significant States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, for halting and reversing the arms race, and the priority assigned to nuclear disarmament in the context of the advances towards general and complete disarmament.

Against: None.

In explanation of vote, Ghana said the text overlooked that some States, as parties to military agreements with major Powers, enjoyed advantage over others in a region; further, successful regional disarmament implied an obligation on third parties to refrain from transferring arms or stationing troops in countries that claimed commitment to regional disarmament.

Australia felt that the emphasis in paragraph 3 on nuclear disarmament detracted from the text's recognition of the need to attach concurrent priority to conventional disarmament; as regards paragraph 2, it did not think unilateral actions would lead to durable disarmament measures, while regional initiatives could contribute to limiting arms transfers. Agreeing that regional conventional disarmament had to be viewed in conjunction with nuclear disarmament and in a global context, Cuba added that the regional approach should not detract from the security of any State. Democratic Yemen said its affirmative vote did not imply a change in its policy with regard to negotiations with a regime in its region which it did not recognize. Iran asserted that the resolution could be implemented only if outside Powers refrained from taking advantage of a situation or imposing their presence on a region.

In resolution 42/39 E, the Assembly encouraged States to consider and develop as far as possible regional solutions in disarmament matters.

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and its Protocols

The number of States parties increased to 28 as at 31 December 1987⁽¹⁸⁾ to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and its three Protocols (dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; and incendiary weapons)⁽¹⁷⁾ due to ratification by Cuba, acceptance by the Netherlands and accession by Tunisia during 1987. The Convention and Protocols had entered into force in 1983.⁽¹⁸⁾

The Secretary-General submitted, in response to a 1986 Assembly request,⁽¹⁹⁾ a report containing information on actions taken with respect to the Convention and Protocols between 1 August 1985 and 31 August 1987.⁽²⁰⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/30 without vote.

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977, 35/153 of 12 December 1980, 36/93 of 9 December 1981, 37/79 of 9 December 1982, 38/66 of 15 December 1983, 39/56 of 12 December 1984, 40/84 of 12 December 1985 and 41/50 of 3 December 1986,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption, on 10 October 1980, of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, together with the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III),

Reaffirming its conviction that general agreement on the prohibition or restriction of use of specific conventional weapons would significantly reduce the suffering of civilian populations and of combatants,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Notes with satisfaction that an increasing number of States have either signed, ratified, accepted or acceded to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, which was opened for signature in New York on 10 April 1981;

2. Further notes with satisfaction that, consequent upon the fulfilment of the conditions set out in article 5 of the Convention, the Convention and the three Protocols annexed thereto entered into force on 2 December 1983;

3. Urges all States that have not yet done so to exert their best endeavours to become parties to the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto as early as possible, so as ultimately to obtain universality of adherence;

4. Notes that, under article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to consider amendments to the Convention or any of the annexed Protocols, to consider additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing annexed Protocols, or to review the scope and operation of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to consider any proposal for amendments to the Convention or to the existing Protocols and any proposals for additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing Protocols;

5. Requests the Secretary-General as depositary of the Convention and its three annexed Protocols to inform the General Assembly from time to time of the state of adherence to the Convention and its Protocols;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

In its continuing efforts at preventing an arms race in outer space, the General Assembly in 1987 considered four draft proposals on the topic, adopting one of them as resolution 42/33.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament⁽²⁾ considered the item on preventing an arms race in outer space from 2 to 13 March and from 29 June to 3 July 1987.

The Ad Hoc Committee, re-established by the Conference on 26 February, held 18 meetings from 13 March to 24 August under the chairmanship of Aldo Pugliese (Italy), with a mandate to continue examining and identifying relevant issues through substantive and general consideration.

New documents submitted under the item included one by Argentina, India, Mexico and Sweden (joint statement of 22 May by the heads of State or Government of those countries and of Greece and the United Republic of Tanzania (see also p. 16)),⁽²¹⁾ another by Canada (summary report of an outer space workshop, Montreal, 14-17 May),⁽²²⁾ and one by the German Democratic Republic and Mongolia (provisions of a treaty on the prohibition of anti-satellite weapons).⁽²³⁾

Western States continued to maintain that multilateral disarmament measures could not be considered independently of developments at the bilateral level. Non-aligned countries continued to hold that the Conference on Disarmament had the primary role in negotiating a multilateral agreement or agreements on preventing an arms race in outer space. Along with socialist countries and China, they asserted that current developments in space science and technology, coupled with ongoing military space programmes, underscored the urgent need to supplement and amplify the existing legal instruments on the topic.

A preliminary consideration was given to a number of proposals and initiatives-including the possibilities of setting up an international inspectorate and a group of experts-for preventing an arms race in, and ensuring the exclusively peaceful uses of, outer space. Since there was general recognition of the importance and urgency of the topic and readiness to contribute to that objective, the Ad Hoc Committee recommended that it be re-established by the Conference with an adequate mandate at the beginning of the 1988 session.

On 28 August, the Conference adopted the report of the Committee as part of its own report to the Assembly.

Communication. The USSR transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a TASS interview of 5 January 1987 with the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of that country,⁽²⁴⁾ in which the official explained a 1986 USSR proposal for the peaceful uses of outer space and for the establishment of a world space organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Of four draft resolutions introduced in the General Assembly's First Committee in 1987, three of them-submitted, respectively, by Western and other States, Eastern European and other States, and China-were not put to a vote at the request of the sponsors; a fourth, sponsored by 23 mainly non-aligned States, was approved.

The draft by Belgium, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Turkey and the United Kingdom(25) would have had the Assembly consider that relevant issues needed further examination and identification before a level of agreement could be reached to permit joint definition of the scope and specific objectives of the multilateral efforts to prevent an arms race in outer space; stress the need to prevent the erosion of the relevant treaties in force; and call for intensified bilateral negotiations at Geneva on reducing nuclear weapons, strengthening international stability and preventing an arms race in outer space.

The draft by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR(26) would have had the Assembly emphasize the urgent need for prohibiting, halting the development of and destroying anti-satellite weapons, and for prohibiting the deployment of weapons in outer-space; and call on all States engaged in space activities to facilitate the development and strengthening of an international inspection system for maintaining peace in outer space.

The draft proposed by China(27) would have had the Assembly request the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee with a view to initiating negotiations for concluding an international agreement or agreements on the topic; and urge the USSR and the United States to refrain from developing, testing and deploying outer-space weapons, and to conduct serious bilateral negotiations on preventing an arms race in outer space.

On 30 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/33, as recommended by the First Committee.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space The General Assembly,

Inspired by the great prospects opening up before mankind as a result of man's entry into outer space,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming further the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes,

Recalling that the States parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, have undertaken, in article III, to carry on activities in the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding,

Reaffirming, in particular, article IV of the above-mentioned Treaty, which stipulates that States parties to the Treaty undertake not to place in orbit around the Earth any objects carrying nuclear weapons or any other kinds of weapons of mass destruction, install such weapons on celestial bodies or station such weapons in outer space in any other manner,

Reaffirming also paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that, in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its resolutions 36/97 C and 36/99 of 9 December 1981, as well as resolutions 37/83 of 9 December 1982, 37/99 D of 13 December 1982, 38/70 of 15 December 1983, 39/59 of 12 December 1984, 40/87 of 12 December 1985, and 41/53 of 3 December 1986 and the relevant paragraphs of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986,

Gravely concerned at the danger posed to all mankind by an arms race in outer space and, in particular, by the impending threat of the exacerbation of the current state of insecurity by developments that could further undermine international peace and security and retard the pursuit of general and complete disarmament,

Mindful of the widespread interest expressed by Member States in the course of the negotiations on and following the adoption of the above-mentioned Treaty in ensuring that the exploration and use of outer space should be for peaceful purposes, and taking note of proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Noting the grave concern expressed by the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at the extension of an arms race into outer space and the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations, in particular the General Assembly, and also to the Committee on Disarmament,

Convinced that further measures are needed for the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Recognizing that, in the context of multilateral negotiations for preventing an arms race in outer space, bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America could make a significant contribution to such an objective, in accordance with paragraph 27 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Noting with satisfaction that bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have continued since 1985 on a complex of questions concerning space and nuclear arms, both strategic and intermediate-range, and in their relationship, with the declared objective, endorsed in the joint statement of their leaders on 21 November 1985, of working out effective agreements aimed, inter alia, at preventing an arms race in outer space,

Anxious that concrete results should emerge from these negotiations as soon as possible,

Taking note of that part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to this question,

Welcoming the re-establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space during the 1987 session of the Conference on Disarmament, in the exercise of the negotiating responsibilities of this sole multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, to continue to examine and to identify through substantive and general consideration issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Noting that the work accomplished in 1987 by the Ad Hoc Committee has contributed to a fuller identification of issues and a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

1. Recalls the obligation of all States to refrain from the threat or use of force in their space activities;

2. Reaffirms that general and complete disarmament under effective international control warrants that outer space shall be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it shall not become an arena for an arms race;

3. Emphasizes that further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space should be adopted by the international community;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and to take immediate measures to prevent an arms race in outer space in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding;

5. Recognizes, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal régime applicable to outer space, as such, is not sufficient to guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, the significant role that the regime plays in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, the need to consolidate and reinforce the régime and to enhance its effectiveness, and the importance of strict compliance with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

6. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

7. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

8. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, taking into account all relevant proposals, including those presented in the Ad Hoc Committee at the 1987 session of the Conference and at the forty-second session of the General Assembly;

9. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate at the beginning of its 1988 session, with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

10. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to pursue intensively their bilateral negotiations in a constructive spirit aimed at reaching early agreement for preventing an arms race in outer space, and to advise the Conference on Disarmament periodically of the progress of their bilateral sessions so as to facilitate its work;

11. Calls upon all States, especially those with major space capabilities, to refrain, in their activities relating to outer space, from actions contrary to the observance of the relevant existing treaties or to the objective of preventing an arms race in outer space;

12. Takes note of the fact that the study on disarmament problems relating to outer space and the consequence of extending the arms race into outer space, called for in resolution 41/53, has been prepared by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research and that, after a final meeting of the group of experts held in September 1987, the report was finalized and being prepared for publication in autumn 1987;(28)

13. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the views of Member States on all aspects of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

14. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report on its consideration of this subject to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this subject by the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Other disarmament issues

The International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, meeting in New York in 1987, adopted by consensus a Final Document aimed at fostering an interrelated perspective on disarmament, development and security. The question of reducing military budgets continued to draw the attention of various disarmament bodies, notably the Disarmament Commission, where work continued on the text of principles to govern further actions of States in that regard (see also p. 90).

During its two sessions in 1987, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean was unable to make definitive progress in preparing and finalizing the dates for the envisaged Conference on the Indian Ocean.

Reduction of military budgets

Differences remained unresolved in 1987 over the last outstanding paragraph of the proposed principles governing the freezing and reduction of military budgets, and the General Assembly again requested the Disarmament Commission to conclude its work on the text, including the paragraph on transparency (resolution 42/36).

Disarmament Commission consideration. In May 1987, the Disarmament Commission(I) again considered two aspects of reducing military budgets: harmonizing views on their gradual, agreed reduction and reallocating resources being used for military purposes to economic and social development; and examining and identifying ways to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures in a balanced manner.

The Commission had before it the text of governing principles as elaborated in 1986—comprising 15 paragraphs, including one (paragraph 7, dealing with transparency, information disclosure and comparability) on which proposals had been submitted that year by a group of 11 States and, individually, by the German Democratic Republic, Pakistan, Sweden and the USSR. (2)

A Consultation Group—established by the Commission on 4 May 1987—held seven meetings between 12 and 22 May, under the chairmanship of Gheorge Tinca (Romania). At its final meeting, the Group received two new proposals for the text of paragraph 7—one jointly by the German Democratic Republic and the USSR, and the other by Sweden, to replace their respective 1986 proposals—which could not be discussed because of time constraints.

The Group recommended to the Commission that it transmit to the General Assembly, for decision on the future course of action, the existing text of the principles, with the understanding that, in the absence of agreement on paragraph 7, there was no final agreement on the remaining ones. Annexed to the principles were four proposals for paragraph 7—two submitted in 1986, by the group of 11 States and by Pakistan, and the two submitted in 1987 (see above).

Report of the Secretary-General. In October, with a later addendum,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on military expenditures in standardized form reported by 25 States. As in previous years, a majority of the responding States used the standard reporting instrument, consisting of a matrix designed to show how much each force group (such as land, naval and air forces) spent in each resource category (such as personnel, procurement and operations).

Communication. By a letter dated 14 April,⁽⁴⁾ the USSR transmitted to the Secretary-General a proposal from the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty to their NATO counterparts to declare a reciprocal moratorium on military expenditure increases, in line with the former's annual proposal since 1983 to negotiate on the non-increase, and subsequent reduction, of military expenditures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/36 without vote.

Reduction of military budgets

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the ever-spiralling arms race and growing military expenditures, which constitute a heavy burden for the economies of all nations and have extremely harmful effects on world peace and security,

Reaffirming once again the provisions of paragraph 89 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, according to which the gradual reduction of military budgets on a mutually agreed basis, for example, in absolute figures or in terms of percentage, particularly by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, would contribute to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities for the reallocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Convinced that the freezing and reduction of military budgets would have favourable consequences on the world economic and financial situation and might facilitate efforts made to increase international assistance for the developing countries,

Recalling that at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, all Member States unanimously and categorically reaffirmed the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, as well as their solemn commitment to it,

Recalling also that in the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second United Nations Disarmament Decade, it is provided that during this period renewed efforts should be made to reach agreement on the reduction of military expenditures and the reallocation of resources thus saved to economic and social development, especially for the benefit of developing countries,

Recalling first the provisions of its relevant resolutions, in which it considered that a new impetus should be given to the endeavours to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain, in a balanced manner, military expenditures, including adequate measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned,

Aware of the various proposals submitted by Member States and of the activities carried out so far within the framework of the United Nations in the field of the reduction of military budgets,

Considering that the identification and elaboration of the principles that should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets and the other current activities within the framework of the United Nations related to the question of the reduction of military budgets should be regarded as having the fundamental objective of reaching international agreements on the reduction of military expenditures,

Noting that the Disarmament Commission, at its 1986 substantive session, agreed upon the above-mentioned principles except one, on which various alternatives were proposed by Member States,

1. Declares again its conviction that it is possible to achieve international agreements on the reduction of military budgets without prejudice to the right of all States to undiminished security, self-defence and sovereignty;

2. Appeals to all States, in particular to the most heavily armed States, pending the conclusion of agreements on the reduction of military expenditures, to exercise self-restraint in their military expenditures with a view to reallocating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries;

3. Reaffirms that the human and material resources released through the reduction of military expenditures could be reallocated for economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries;

4. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue the consideration of the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets" and, in this context, to conclude, at its 1988 substantive session, its work on the last outstanding paragraph of the principles that should govern further actions of States in the field of freezing and reduction of military budgets, and to submit its report and recommendations to the General Assembly not later than at the forty-third session of the Assembly;

5. Draws anew the attention of Member States to the fact that the identification and elaboration of the principles that should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets could contribute to harmonizing the views of States and creating confidence among them conducive to achieving international agreements on the reduction of military budgets;

6. Urges all Member States, in particular the most heavily armed States, to reinforce their readiness to co-operate in a constructive manner with a view to reaching agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets".

Conference on the relationship between disarmament and development

The International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, convened in August/September 1987, considered the relationship in all its aspects, the implications of the level and magnitude of continuing military expenditures, and ways and means of releasing additional resources through disarmament measures. It adopted by consensus a Final Document,⁽⁵⁾ aimed at fostering an interrelated perspective on disarmament, development and security, and promoting multilateralism and strengthening the central role of the United Nations in that regard.

In November, the General Assembly welcomed the adoption of the Final Document, requested the Secretary-General to implement the Document's action programme, and requested the Preparatory Committee for the Assembly's third (1988) special session on disarmament to include a relevant item on that session's agenda (resolution 42/45).

In a related action, a group of consultant experts held two sessions in 1987 to update a 1982 study on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures (see p. 91).

Communications. The heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe, in the final communique adopted at their Seventh Summit Conference (Maputo, Mozambique, 21 and 22 May),⁽⁶⁾ reaffirmed their conviction that the vast amount of human and material resources spent on the arms race could contribute to eradicating underdevelopment which affected large portions of the planet. By a letter of 12 June to the Secretary-General,⁽⁷⁾ the German Democratic Republic transmitted the text of a document, adopted by the Political Consultative Committee of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty (Berlin, 28 and 29 May), on the elimination of underdevelopment and the establishment of a new international economic order, in which the parties asserted that practical steps towards arms reduction and disarmament were essential to preserve peace and resolve the economic problems.

Other 1987 communications on disarmament, addressed to the Secretary-General, also dealt with the topic (see p. 15).

Work of the Preparatory Committee. The Preparatory Committee for the Conference held its fourth session in New York from 21 April to 1 May 1987. Among the documents before it were working papers by Belgium on behalf of the 12 EC States members,⁽⁸⁾ containing their views and comments on the topic and on the Conference, and by China,⁽⁹⁾ on elements for inclusion in the final document.

The Committee, in seven open-ended informal meetings, focused on preparing the draft final document of the Conference, using as a basis of its work the elements agreed on in 1986.⁽¹⁰⁾ On the basis of the discussion, the Chairman prepared a revised draft, but the Committee, not having time to discuss it, decided to transmit it to the Conference for consideration.

On 1 May, the Committee unanimously adopted its report to the Conference,⁽¹¹⁾ containing the draft final document.

The Committee also requested the Secretary-General of the Conference to publicize the Conference as a major global political undertaking, and recommended that the moderator of the Panel of Eminent Personalities on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development—which had met in 1986⁽¹⁰⁾—be invited to present the panel's joint declaration at the Conference.

Work of the Conference. The International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, proposed by the General Assembly in 1984,⁽¹²⁾ met in New York from 24 August to 11 September 1987, with 150 States participating (for participants and officers, see APPENDIX III).⁽¹³⁾ In addition, Namibia was represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia. The Holy See and the Palestine Liberation Organization participated as observers. Among other participants and observers were seven specialized agencies and IAEA, six intergovernmental organizations, seven other interested United Nations bodies and 183 NGOs.

The Conference was originally scheduled to meet in Paris from 15 July to 2 August 1986,⁽¹⁴⁾ but had been postponed in June 1986⁽¹⁵⁾ and rescheduled in December 1986.⁽¹⁶⁾

The Committee of the Whole of the Conference held nine meetings from 26 August to 9 September, basing its work on the draft final document submitted by the Preparatory Committee. Its three working groups each held five closed meetings and considered the three substantive items on the Conference agenda: the relationship between disarmament and development in all its aspects and dimensions; implications of the level and magnitude of military expenditures, in particular those of the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily important States, for the world economy and the international economic and social situation, particularly for developing countries; and ways and means of releasing additional resources, through disarmament measures, for development purposes, in particular for developing countries. On 9 September, the Committee of the Whole took note of the working groups' reports and decided by consensus to recommend the draft final document to the Conference for adoption.⁽¹⁷⁾

Declaring disarmament and development to be the foundations on which enduring international peace and security could be built, the 35-paragraph Final Document asserted that the continuing arms race was absorbing far too great a proportion of the world's human, financial, natural and technological resources; that the global military expenditures were in dramatic contrast to economic and social underdevelopment and to the misery and poverty afflicting more than two thirds of humanity; and that there was a commonality of interests in seeking security at lower levels of armaments and finding ways of reducing those expenditures.

In addition to exploring the three areas considered by the working groups, the Final Document contained an action programme aimed at, among other things, fostering an interrelated perspective on disarmament, development and security; promoting multilateralism in that context; and strengthening the central role of the United Nations in the interrelated fields of disarmament and development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 30 November, adopted resolution 42/45 without vote.

Relationship between disarmament and development The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 38/71 B of 15 December 1983, 39/160 of 17 December 1984 and 40/155 of 16 December 1985 and its decisions 40/473 of 20 June 1986 and 41/422 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling also the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, related to the relationship between disarmament and development,

Stressing that the holding of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development in New York from 24 August to 11 September 1987 constituted a significant development in the process of the multilateral review, at a political level, of the relationship between disarmament and development,

1. Welcomes the adoption of the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development;

2. Decides to have the report of the Conference brought to the attention of the Preparatory Committee for the Third Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament;

3. Requests the Preparatory Committee to include in the agenda of the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament an item entitled "Relationship between disarmament and development, in the light of the action programme adopted at the International Conference";

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take action through the appropriate organs, within available resources, for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference.

The United States said disarmament and development were two distinct issues that could not be considered in terms of an interrelationship. Therefore, it had declined to participate in the Conference and in the First Committee debate and action on the topic, and it did not consider itself bound or committed by either the declarations in the Final Document or by the Assembly resolution.

Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

In 1987, the General Assembly requested the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean to hold three preparatory sessions in 1988, including the possibility of one session at Colombo, Sri Lanka, for the Conference on the Indian Ocean to be convened not later than 1990 (resolution 42/43).

Activities of the Committee on the Indian Ocean. The Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean held two sessions in 1987 (New York, 23 March-3 April, 22 June-10 July)(18) as it continued to study practical measures for achieving the objectives of the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace (19)

In the course of 17 formal and a number of informal meetings, working papers were submitted by groups of States members of the Committee—one by the non-aligned States on stages of the Conference, and the other by the socialist States on confidence-building measures in the Indian Ocean. The open-ended Working Group, under the chairmanship of Nihal Rodrigo (Sri Lanka), held 11 meetings, taking up an informal paper presented by him to facilitate its discussion on substantive issues relating to the zone's establishment.

Sri Lanka made a formal offer to host, at Colombo, one of the sessions of the Ad Hoc Committee in 1988.

On 10 July, the Committee adopted by consensus its report to the General Assembly.

Communications. In the final communique of their Seventh Summit Conference (Maputo, 21 and 22 May),(6) the heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe reaffirmed their support for transforming the Indian Ocean into a denuclearized zone.

In a 21 July interview with the Indonesian newspaper Merdeka,(20) the USSR General Secretary said the time had come to establish international guarantees for the safety of shipping, and air communications in the Indian Ocean region.

The Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Vancouver, 13-17 October)(21) reiterated the importance of convening the envisaged Conference no later than 1990 and called for full and active participation in the Conference of all permanent members of the Security Council and major maritime users. Sharing that view, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the forty-second session of the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October)(22) expressed concern over the great-Power military presence in the Indian Ocean area and asserted that such activities endangered the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and peaceful development of the States in the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 42/43, on the recommendation of the First Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Information and studies

As in previous years, the World Disarmament Campaign—launched by the General Assembly in 1982 at the start of its second special session devoted to disarmament(1)—continued to inform, educate and generate public understanding and support for the disarmament objectives of the United Nations.

The fifth United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was convened in New York during Disarmament Week, and the Assembly decided to hold a sixth conference in 1988 (resolution 42/39 G). Three resolutions relating to regional centres for peace and disarmament—in Togo, Peru and Nepal—were adopted by consensus (42/39 J, K and D).

World Disarmament Campaign

In 1987, activities of the World Disarmament Campaign were carried out in a more limited manner than in the past, due to the Organization's financial constraints.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1987,⁽²⁾ in his annual report on implementing the Campaign's objectives, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly of activities carried out by the United Nations system, including information materials, special events and publicity programmes. The Department for Disarmament Affairs organized a regional conference for Asia and the Pacific in Beijing, China (23-27 March), and a United Nations Meeting of Experts, at Dagomys, USSR (8-12 June). The Department of Public Information (DPI) continued to inform the public of United Nations activities in the disarmament field, by disseminating information materials and organizing events at Headquarters and information centres around the world.

Financing

The fifth United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was convened in New York on 26 October, with 57 delegations participating.

Either during the Conference or at other times during the year, the following pledges were earmarked for the Campaign, Australia ($A30,000), Austria ($10,000), Canada ($Can 25,000), China (88,250 yuan renminbi), Finland (50,000 markkaa), Greece ($5,000), Indonesia ($5,000), New Zealand ($10,000), Philippines ($500), Sweden (100,000 kronor); for the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR), Australia ($A 20,000), Bahamas ($1,000), Canada ($Can 25,000), Greece ($5,000), USSR (200,000 roubles and $20,000); for the regional centre in Africa, Federal Republic of Germany ($11,000), Norway ($10,000); for the regional centre in Latin America, Colombia ($1,000), Jamaica ($1,000), Norway ($10,000), Peru ($10,000 for fiscal year 1987 and $25,000 for fiscal year 1988), Uruguay ($500).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In the First Committee, one of the two draft proposals submitted on the topic was withdrawn at the request of the sponsors, to facilitate the adoption of a single text. The withdrawn draft⁽³⁾—sponsored by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam—would have had the Assembly invite mass peace and disarmament movements, NGOs and others to express their views and suggestions on the tasks and results of the third special session of the Assembly on disarmament; urge Governments, in formulating their disarmament policies, to take into account the demands of the mass peace and disarmament movements; and consider it necessary to pay more attention to the active involvement of children and youth in Campaign activities.

On 30 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/39 G, on a recommendation of the First Committee.

World Disarmament Campaign

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in paragraph 15 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it declared that it was essential that not only Governments but also the peoples of the world recognize and understand the dangers in the present situation and stressed the importance of mobilizing world public opinion on behalf of disarmament,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/152 I of 12 December 1980, 36/92 C of 9 December 1981, 37/100 I of 13 December 1982, 38/73 D of 15 December 1983, 39/63 D of 12 December 1984, 40/151 B of 16 December 1985 and 41/60 B of 3 December 1986, as well as the reports of the Secretary-General of 17 September 1981, 11 June 1982, 3 November 1982, 30 August 1983, 4 October 1985, 19 September 1986 and 28 September 1987,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign by the United Nations system during 1987 and the activities contemplated for 1988, as well as its main financial aspects,

Having also examined the part of the report of the Secretary-General dealing with the activities of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies relating to the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, as well as the Final Act of the 1987 United Nations Pledging Conference for the Campaign, held on 26 October 1987,

Believing that the World Disarmament Campaign has an important role to play for a positive outcome of the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament by informing, educating and generating public understanding and support for the objectives of the United Nations in the field of arms limitations and disarmament,

1. Reiterates its commendation of the manner in which, as described in the above-mentioned reports, the World Disarmament Campaign has been geared by the Secretary-General in order to guarantee "the widest possible dissemination of information and unimpeded access for all sectors of the public to a broad range of information and opinions on questions of arms limitation and disarmament and the dangers relating to all aspects of the arms race and war, in particular nuclear war";

2. Recalls that, as was also agreed by consensus in the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, it is likewise an essential requisite for the universality of the Campaign that it receive "the co-operation and participation of all States";

3. Endorses once more the statement made by the Secretary-General on the occasion of the 1984 United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign to the effect that such co-operation implies that adequate funds be made available and that consequently the criterion of universality also applies to pledges, since a campaign without world-wide participation and funding will have difficulty in reflecting this principle in its implementation;

4. Reiterates its regret that most of the States that have the largest military expenditures have not so far made any financial contribution to the Campaign;

5. Decides that at its forty-third session there should be a sixth United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign, and expresses the hope that on that occasion all those Member States which have not yet announced any voluntary contribution may do so;

6. Reiterates its recommendation that the voluntary contributions made by Member States to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund should not be earmarked for specific activities inasmuch as it is most desirable that the Secretary-General enjoy full freedom to take the decisions he deems fit within the framework of the Campaign previously approved by the General Assembly and in exercise of the powers vested in him in connection with the Campaign;

7. Notes with appreciation that the Secretary-General has given permanent character to his instructions to the United Nations information centres and regional commissions to give wide publicity to the Campaign and, whenever necessary, to adapt, as far as possible, United Nations information materials to local languages;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in carrying out the activities of the Campaign contemplated for 1988, to give particular attention to the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report covering both the implementation of the programme of activities of the Campaign by the United Nations system during 1988 and the programme of activities contemplated by the system for 1989;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "World Disarmament Campaign".

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 146-1-9 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/42/751) by recorded vote (119-1-10), 12 November (meeting 42); 14-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.50/Rev.1); agenda item 63 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 3-42; plenary 84.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom.

In explanation of vote, the United States said the text contained objectionable language of an unrealistic nature, and observed that one third of the current funding for the Campaign came from assessed contributions, despite the Assembly decision in 1982 to finance the Campaign solely from voluntary contributions.

France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom objected to paragraph 4. France stressed that it had participated in the Campaign by contributing over $2 million to UNIDIR activities since its establishment. The Federal Republic of Germany considered it unfortunate that a text on a worthy cause should be burdened with non-consensus language and the questioning of the principle of voluntary contributions to the Campaign. The United Kingdom-as a contributor to just under 5 per cent of the United Nations regular budget, part of which was used to fund the Campaign-said it, therefore, had contributed about $75,000 to the Campaign budget during the 1986 and 1987 financial years; it had also devoted a substantial sum of money to disarmament information activities of its own, which were consistent with the aims of the Campaign.

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

On 30 November, the Assembly adopted three resolutions concerning regional centres for peace and disarmament-one in Africa, in operation since 1986; a second in Latin America, which became operational in 1987; and a third to be established in Asia.

In the First Committee, a number of delegations, among them Australia, the United Kingdom and the United States, expressed concern that a proliferation of such regional centres could duplicate the work of other organizations, and stressed their understanding that the centres were to be funded entirely by voluntary contributions and from existing resources.

Africa

In October 1987, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa,(4) which had been inaugurated in 1986, at Lomé, Togo.(5) The Centre's activities during the first year of its operation included the development of contacts, setting up of a reference and documentation service, and participation in disarmament-related conferences within and outside Africa. The Secretary-General reaffirmed the continuing need for voluntary contributions to ensure the viability and functioning of the Centre, and reported that consultations were under way between the Department for Disarmament Affairs and DPI on consolidating the administration of the Regional Centre and the United Nations Information Centre at Lomé in the interest of economy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/39 J without vote.

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/151 G of 16 December 1985 and 41/60 D of 3 December 1986,

Taking note of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, in which the heads of State or Government, inter alia, reaffirmed the need to strengthen the role of the regional bodies in mobilizing support for the World Disarmament Campaign and, in this regard, welcomed the establishment of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa at Lomé,

Bearing in mind resolution AHG/Res.164(XXIII), adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-third ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 27 to 29 July 1987, by which it, inter alia, endorsed the Lomé Declaration on Security, Disarmament and Development in Africa and the Programme of Action for Peace, Security and Co-operation in Africa,

4. Appeals once again to Member States, as well as to international, governmental and non-governmental organizations, to make voluntary contributions in order to strengthen the effective operational activities of the Centre;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Latin America

As agreed by the General Assembly in 1986,(6) the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America was established on 1 January 1987 and inaugurated at Lima, Peru, on 9 October.

In a September report to the Assembly on the establishment and functioning of the Centre,(7) the Secretary-General stated that the Centre had been located, on an interim basis, within the United Nations Information Centre at Lima, with the Information Centre Director acting also as the Director of the Regional Centre. Extrabudgetary funds were to be provided to the Regional Centre to hire a local information assistant and to meet some expenses needed for the initial phase. The Secretary-General also reported that in response to his February invitation to Member States for contributions to a trust fund for the Centre, Peru pledged funds worth $8,000 as well as a plot of land in Lima for the future construction of the Centre's premises. The Secretary-General emphasized that, due to the financial crisis of the Organization, no savings could be realized from the regular budget to finance the Centre and that therefore voluntary contributions were needed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/39 K without vote.

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/60 J of 3 December 1986 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Welcomes the inauguration at Lima on 9 October 1987 of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America;

2. Also welcomes the promptness with which the Secretary-General has taken the necessary administrative measures to ensure the functioning of the Centre, and requests him to continue to give the Centre all necessary support;

3. Expresses its thanks to the host Member State for its valuable contribution to the functioning of the Centre;

4. Believes that, in carrying out its activities, the Centre will seek to promote relations of mutual trust and security between the countries of the region in a spirit of harmony, solidarity and co-operation for the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament, and for the promotion of economic and social development in Latin America;

5. Recommends that the Centre hold, in 1988, a conference of experts on the strengthening of political co-operation in Latin America in the areas of peace, disarmament, development and security in the context of the World Disarmament Campaign;

6. Again calls upon Member States and international, governmental and non-governmental organizations to make voluntary contributions to the Centre;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit that appeal to all Member States in order to ensure the normal functioning of the Centre;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asia

In November 1987, Nepal proposed the establishment of a regional centre for peace and disarmament at its capital, Kathmandu, and announced its preparedness to contribute $10,000 over a two-year period to meet the local cost involved.

A note by the Secretariat⁽⁸⁾ concerning the requests made to the Secretary-General in Nepal's draft resolution (see below) stated that, while no regular budget resources were available, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was willing to have its Resident Representative at Kathmandu serve as Director of the Regional Centre on an interim basis, without bearing financial responsibility. Extrabudgetary resources available in the trust funds administered by the Department for Disarmament Affairs could be used to finance specific projects and activities of the proposed centre; a review of the centre's future was recommended at the end of the two-year period in the light of the available voluntary resources at its disposal.

The Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs subsequently informed the First Committee that an arrangement had been made by which a member of the United Nations Information Centre at Kathmandu, assisted by local staff, would take charge of the regional centre on an interim basis at the Information Centre premises, with UNDP providing administrative and logistic services.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/39 D without vote.

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/63 J of 12 December 1984, in which it requested the Secretary-General to provide assistance to such Member States in the regions concerned as might request it with a view to establishing regional and institutional arrangements for the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, on the basis of existing resources and of voluntary contributions that Member States might make to that end,

Reaffirming its resolutions 37/100 F of 13 December 1982, 38/73 J of 15 December 1983 and 39/63 F of 12 December 1984 on regional disarmament,

Bearing in mind resolutions 40/151 G of 16 December 1985, which established the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, and 41/60 J of 3 December 1986, which established the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America,

1. Decides to establish the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia with headquarters at Kathmandu, on the basis of existing resources and of voluntary contributions that Member States and interested organizations may make to that end;

2. Decides also that the Centre shall provide, on request, substantive support for the initiatives and other activities mutually agreed upon by the Member States of the Asian region for the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament, through appropriate utilization of available resources, and shall co-ordinate the implementation of regional activities in Asia under the World Disarmament Campaign;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures to ensure the establishment and functioning of the Centre, including, to that end, the possible utilization of the existing United Nations infrastructure at Kathmandu with a view to the full employment of available resources;

4. Invites Member States and interested organizations to make voluntary contributions to the Centre;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Stressing the vital importance of eliminating the threat of a nuclear war, ending the nuclear-arms race and bringing about disarmament for the maintenance of world peace and security,

Emphasizing anew the need for and the importance of wide and continued mobilization of world public opinion in support of halting and reversing the arms race, especially the nuclear-arms race, in all its aspects,

Taking into account the aspirations of the world public to prevent an arms race in space and to terminate it on Earth and to eliminate nuclear weapons and other types of weapons of mass destruction,

Urging all Member States not to interfere with the rights of their citizens to organize and participate in the anti-war and anti-nuclear-weapon-threat demonstrations and movement, bLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of position in the Committee, Denmark on behalf of the 12 EC member States said they had difficulties with paragraph 5 and would abstain, asserting that the Assembly should focus on making maximum use of the existing disarmament machinery of the United Nations rather than encourage the specialized agencies to engage in activities that were likely to detract from their specifically mandated tasks. After the Committee approved the draft without vote, Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Israel, the Netherlands, Norway and Turkey stated that, had the draft been put to a vote, which many of them had expected, they would have abstained. The United Kingdom and the United States added that they expected the plenary Assembly to vote on the text, which it subsequently did.

Disarmament studies and research

In 1987, work commenced on two studies—one on the climatic and potential physical effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter, and the other on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures, deferred in 1986. No new studies were initiated during the year.

Note by the Secretary-General. In June 1987,(10) the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly that the Group of Consultant Experts to help him update the 1982 study entitled Economic and Social Consequences of the Arms Race and of Military Expenditures (11) held two sessions in 1987 (first session, New York, 16-20 March; second session, Geneva, 30 November-11 December). The Assembly had requested the Secretary-General, in 1985,(12) to update the 1982 study, which, in turn, had updated a 1977 report on the topic.(13) However, because of the financial difficulties of the United Nations, work on the report had been deferred until 1987, and the Assembly, in 1986,(14) had asked the Secretary-General to make a progress report in 1987 and to submit the study in 1988.

At its first session, the experts, selected from 13 Member States, adopted an outline for the study covering the following main subject areas: dynamics of the arms race (nuclear aspect, military research and development, arms production, arms transfers); resources and the arms race (natural, human and financial resources, technology and conversion); military outlays and socio-economic development (impact on economic development, employment, inflation, finances and the environment, and socio-cultural consequences); international consequences of the arms race (security and economic stability, socio-economic vulnerability and security). The Group decided to invite Governments, specialized agencies, other international organizations and institutions and NGOs to provide it with quantitative and qualitative information relevant to the work.

Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies held two sessions in New York in 1987 (sixteenth, 27 April-1 May; seventeenth, 21-25 September)(15) and considered the United Nations studies on disarmament, implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign and the current disarmament situation. It also continued to act as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR.

The Board approved UNIDIR'S programme of work for 1988 and recommended a subvention of $169,700 from the United Nations regular budget to meet the costs of the Institute staff (Director, Deputy Director and two General Service support personnel) for 1988 in the light of UNIDIR's critical financial situation.

In October, the Secretary-General(16) reported to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee accordingly, and the Assembly approved the subvention on 21 December (resolution 42/226 A).

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

In October 1987, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of UNIDIR for the period from September 1986 to September 1987.(17) In addition to the ongoing research projects, the Institute organized a conference on the interrelationship of bilateral and multilateral negotiations on disarmament (Baku, USSR, 2-4 June 1987). As part of a pilot project on a computerized disarmament data base, it set up a subject file on the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

The Institute, whose Director had remained absent from his duties throughout 1986,(18) gained a new Director in 1987, when the Secretary-General, on the recommendation of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies, appointed Jayantha Dhanapala to the post for an initial period from 1 July 1987 to 31 December 1988.

UN disarmament studies programme

Report of the Secretary-General. In June 1987, the Secretary-General submitted a report, with a later addendum,(19) containing the views and proposals submitted by five Member States individually and by one on behalf of the 12 EC members on how United Nations work regarding disarmament studies could be further improved.

Report of the Advisory Board. Also in June,(20) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a report, prepared by the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies in response to a 1985 Assembly request,(21) containing the views, conclusions and recommendations of the Board on United Nations disarmament studies and the role and functions of UNIDIR.

The Advisory Board—established in 1978(22) to advise the Secretary-General on various aspects of United Nations studies on disarmament and arms limitation—reported that 23 disarmament studies, involving experts from a total of 58 countries, had been made by the Secretary-General since 1979 pursuant to mandates from the Assembly; two more studies currently pending dealt with the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures, and with the climatic and potential physical effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter (see above). With the exception of two studies—on nuclear-weapon-free zones(23) and on military use of research and development(24)—all studies had ended with the adoption of an agreed final report. The Board concluded that the studies had successfully served one or more of the following: to assist in ongoing negotiations, to identify possible new areas of negotiation, and to promote public awareness of the problems involved in the arms race and disarmament.

The Board observed that there might have been a trend in the Assembly mandates towards appointing "governmental" rather than "consultant" experts, with the result that the studies had often reflected authoritative views and, when a consensus had been reached on substance, the studies might have indicated an opening towards genuine negotiations.

The Board made several recommendations concerning the size and composition of study groups, the principle of consensus approval of study reports, selection of subjects for study, financial considerations and the need for review and follow-up of studies. The Board considered it desirable for Member States to present study proposals to the Secretary-General by 1 September annually, rather than to the First Committee later in the year, and for the Board to recommend whether the work should be carried out by a group of experts or as part of the ongoing work programme of UNIDIR. The Board added that savings might be made in substantive and conference-servicing costs by entrusting UNIDIR with the updating of an existing study or with research and drafting. Appendices to the report contained a list of the 25 completed and ongoing studies, publications of UNIDIR, and some observations on experience gained and thoughts for the future conduct of disarmament studies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 42/42 J without vote.

United Nations disarmament studies

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/152 K of 16 December 1985 and 41/86 C of 4 December 1986,

Reaffirming the valuable contribution that United Nations studies can make to the discussion and consideration of disarmament issues,

Noting with appreciation the views of Member States contained in the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking into consideration that the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies also functions as the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research,

Noting that the establishment of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research offers new opportunities regarding research in the field of disarmament,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies;
2. Affirms that the final decision on how United Nations disarmament studies should be prepared rests with the General Assembly;
3. Takes note of the conclusion of the Advisory Board that consensus should be the normal practice in study groups, but that the expression of differing opinions where views cannot be reconciled should be permitted;
4. Invites Member States to take note of the conclusions and recommendations of the Advisory Board in presenting proposals for disarmament studies or research.

General Assembly resolution 42/42 J

30 November 1987 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/754) without vote, 13 November (meeting 43); 11-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.60/Rev.2); agenda item 66 (h).

Sponsors: Cameroon, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Norway, Poland, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 3-43; plenary 84.

The text as adopted incorporated some of the proposals put forward by Zimbabwe on behalf of the non-aligned countries,(25) mainly paragraph 3 replacing the original expression of support for the Board's recommendation that Member-States submit their study proposals to the Secretary-General by 1 September so that the Board could recommend the best means of carrying them out. The non-aligned countries had also proposed that Member States be invited to submit their views on the Board's report.

Parties and signatories to disarmament agreements

In October 1987, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report on the status of multilateral disarmament agreements,(26) based on information received from the States depositaries of those instruments. Listing the parties to and signatories of agreements as at 31 July 1987, the report also contained similar information on the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques, the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, and the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (see p. 77), of which the Secretary-General was the depositary.

As at 31 December 1987, the following numbers of States had become parties to the multilateral agreements covered in the Secretary-General's report (listed in chronological order, with the years in which the were initially signed or opened for signature). (27)

Chapter II

Peaceful uses of outer space

During 1987, international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space continued to be considered by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space), by its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and Legal Sub-Committee, and by the General Assembly.

The Committee on outer space held its thirtieth session in New York from 1 to 11 June and, in December, the Assembly endorsed its recommendations in resolution 42/68. The Assembly again urged all States, particularly those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space, as an essential condition for promoting international co-operation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: arms race in outer space. Other administrative and management questions: communications satellite. International Telecommunication Union.

Science, technology and law

Space science and technology

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space held its twenty-fourth session in New York from 17 to 27 February 1987.⁽¹⁾ In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ the Sub-Committee established a Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Second (1982) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82).⁽³⁾

The Sub-Committee also recommended approval of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1988 and reviewed the co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system. It continued to consider the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, questions relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites, space transportation systems and their implications for future space activities, and the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit. The Sub-Committee paid special attention during its session to the theme

“space communications for development”. In addition, it took up matters relating to life sciences, including space medicine; progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme; planetary exploration; and astronomy. The Sub-Committee’s recommendations were acted on by the Committee on outer space in June. (4)

UN Programme on Space Applications

In 1987, the United Nations Programme on Space Applications focused on providing long-range fellowships for in-depth training and technical advisory services to Member States and regional institutions; organizing regional and international training courses and technical expert meetings; and promoting co-operation between developed and developing countries.⁽⁵⁾

Thirty-one fellowship offers were awarded. Two one-year (1987/88) fellowships in microwave technology were offered by Austria at the Technical University of Graz; 10 nine-month fellowships in remote-sensing technology, of which 8 were awarded, were offered by Brazil at the Instituto de Pesquisas Espaciais (São José dos Campos, state of São Paulo); three one-year fellowships, in basic space sciences, satellite geodesy and remote sensing, were offered by the German Democratic Republic at the Central Institute for Astrophysics and the Central Institute for Physics of the Earth, Potsdam; 20 fellowships, of which 15 were awarded, were offered by the USSR, each for five years, with an additional year for study of the Russian language, at the Moscow Engineering Institute for Geodesy, Cartography and Aerial Photography; and three one-year fellowships were offered by the European Space Agency (ESA) at the European Space Research and Technology Centre (Noordwijk, Netherlands), the European Space Research Institute (Frascati, Italy) and the European Space Operations Centre (Darmstadt, Federal Republic of Germany) for studies in communications engineering, remote sensing and meteorology, respectively.

As part of the technical advisory mandate of the Programme, assistance was offered to the Economic Commission for Africa in developing a project document on a remote-sensing information programme for Africa. A proposal emphasizing the development of indigenous capability in remote-sensing technology was submitted to the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia. The Outer Space Affairs Division of the Secretariat assisted in developing a project proposal for the establishment of a national technological development centre for the application of satellite communications to rural education in China.

The Interministerial Committee of the Indian Ocean Marine Affairs Co-operation considered the recommendations of a 1986 expert meeting on space technology applications in the Indian Ocean region.(6) A number of activities—three pilot projects on the use of remote-sensing technology to enhance the efficiency of fishing and a United Nations workshop on oceanographic/marine space information systems—were approved by the Committee, funds for which were to be provided by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

One expert meeting, one seminar and three training courses were conducted in 1987. A United Nations (interregional) Meeting of Experts on Space Science and Technology and Its Applications within the Framework of Educational Systems (Lagos, Nigeria, 27 April-1 May) was attended by 59 participants from 22 countries and six international organizations.(7)

The United Nations International Seminar on Space Communications, co-sponsored by the USSR, was attended by 15 participants from 15 countries (Moscow, Sochi and Dubna, 3-15 June). (8)

The Twelfth United Nations/Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) International Training Course on the Applications of Remote Sensing to Marine Fisheries was organized in co-operation with Italy (Rome, 11-30 May);(9) 22 participants from 22 developing countries attended. A Training Course on Remote Sensing Applications to Geological Sciences, co-sponsored by the German Democratic Republic (Dresden, 6-23 October), was attended by 13 participants from 13 developing countries.(10) The Fourth United Nations/World Meteorological Organization/FAO/ESA International Training Course on the Applications of Remote Sensing to Operational Agrometeorology and Hydrology, organized in co-operation with Indonesia (Jakarta, 13-30 October), was attended by 24 participants from 12 developing member countries of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.(11)

Co-operation in space science and technology among developed and developing countries was promoted by the Second Latin American Symposium on Remote Sensing and the second meeting of the Joint Board on Remote Sensing Activities, both of which were held at the Instituto Geográfico Agustín Codazzi (Bogota, Colombia, 16-20 November). The Symposium addressed data acquisition by various remote sensors, image processing, space cartography, geoinformation systems, cartographic technology and international co-operation in remote-sensing. The Board considered joint documentation of remote-sensing literature and information retrieval.

Programme activities were supported in 1987 with assistance from Australia, Austria, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Italy, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, the USSR and the United States.

Under the United Nations regular budget, $226,000 was approved by the General Assembly in 1987 for implementing the Programme's 1988-1989 activities. The Sub-Committee noted the appeal of the United Nations Expert on Space Applications to Member States and international organizations either to provide support for the Programme as a whole or to identify the specific activities they would like to support.

The Committee on outer space(4) expressed its appreciation to the Expert for the effective manner in which he had implemented the Programme with the limited funds at his disposal. In resolution 42/68, the General Assembly endorsed the 1988 Programme, as proposed by the Expert to the Committee.

Co-ordination in the UN system

Noting the progress achieved in co-ordinating programmes on outer space activities within the United Nations system, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee continued to stress the necessity of ensuring consultations and co-ordination and the avoidance of duplication of work.(1) The Committee on outer space(4) supported that view and endorsed the Sub-Committee's position that the United Nations should continue seeking the support of UNDP and other institutions in implementing UNISPACE-82 recommendations (see below).

The ninth Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities (London, 7-9 October),(12) convened by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), found that the existing machinery for consultation and co-ordination in applying space technology had worked satisfactorily and that there were no major questions to bring to ACC's attention. However, the Meeting agreed on the need for an in-depth review of co-operation in some specific areas; it decided to undertake as a first step a review of remote-sensing applications within the United Nations system and that an ad hoc group (United Nations, FAO, WMO and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) should work out the programme for the review. The Meeting also examined a draft of the annual report of the Secretary-General on the co-ordination of outer space activities in 1988 and future years in such areas as remote sensing, communications, meteorology, navigation and disaster management.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 Conference on outer space

In 1987, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee reaffirmed that the United Nations, in implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82,(3) should continue to seek the support of UNDP and other international funding institutions and reiterated its request to the Secretariat to take note of and operate within UNDP funding procedures.

The Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82, meeting between 19 and 26 February, expressed concern as to how the activities of the Space Applications Programme could be implemented, since the Programme's budget for 1986-1987 had been reduced to less than half of its original appropriation of $216,600. The Group also noted that many of the recommendations had not been fully implemented. It proposed, among other things, that the Space Applications Programme emphasize long-term (minimum 6-12 months) project-oriented on-the-job training in specific areas in remote sensing and space communications; that the Committee on outer space request all States to inform the Secretary-General about space activities which could be the subject of greater international co-operation; that a programme of higher education on space-related subjects be established, with the collaboration of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs); that all States in a position to do so consider what additional resources they could make available for outer space activities; that financial institutions and resource-development bodies be alerted to the importance of programmes of space communications, remote sensing and meteorology; that account be taken, in formulating co-operative programmes, of the possible participation of international financial institutions; that multilateral programmes in space science and technology be developed with the aim of promoting regional activities; that experimental and theoretical scientists promote wider application of the results of scientific research; and that NGOs be encouraged to facilitate and co-ordinate the space activities of scientific organizations.

In addition, the Working Group proposed that the Committee invite Member States to report annually on techniques resulting from medical studies carried out in outer space, and request the Outer Space Affairs Division of the Secretariat to survey existing space information services (see p. 97), with a view to establishing an international information system, and to update the report on existing regional training centres. The Group further proposed that the Committee request the Division to prepare a report on measures to improve space educational systems in developing countries and to examine measures which might be taken by the Committee to enhance the use of remote sensing, space communications and meteorology for developing countries (see below); and invite the International Astronautical Federation (IAF) and the Committee on Space Research (COSPAR) of the International Council of Scientific Unions to study approaches that the United Nations might take in assisting developing countries to realize the benefits of space technology and to follow up the COSPAR study on the environmental effects of space activities,(13) with emphasis on space debris (see p. 97).

The Working Group recommended that it be reconvened in 1988. The Group's report was endorsed by the Sub-Committee and its' recommendations were endorsed by the Committee on outer space.(4)

The Secretary-General, in an August report on implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82,(14) provided information about progress made in such areas as inter-agency and regional co-operation, studies, the Programme on Space Applications, strengthening the Outer Space Affairs Division and voluntary contributions.

Twelve countries (Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Colombia, Finland, Greece, Indonesia, Kenya, Mexico, Netherlands, Poland, Sweden, United States)(15) presented their views on the extent to which the findings of five studies on the applications of space technology for the benefit of mankind were being put into practice. The studies had been recommended by UNISPACE-82 and conducted in 1984(16) and 1985.(13)

In response to proposals by the Working Group, a number of reports were presented to the Committee on outer space in December. The Outer Space Affairs Division suggested measures to enhance the use of space applications (remote sensing, space communications and meteorology) for development; the measures included education and training activities, information and studies, technical assistance and co-ordinating international co-operative activities.(17)

The Division also indicated the actions necessary to improve space technology educational systems in developing countries. (18) It considered space developments and the needs of developing countries; current United Nations activities relating to education in space technology; and measures to improve education, including the introduction of space science and technology into curricula, a fellowship programme, space research programmes, general public education and tele-education programmes. It concluded that the proposed measures were practical and achievable, noting that a number of them were currently in operation in some form in different parts of the world.

COSPAR and IAF submitted a study on approaches that the United Nations might take in assisting developing countries to benefit from space technology.(19) The study covered the initiation and strengthening of space programmes, information exchange, graduate and postgraduate education, research, scientist-to-scientist contacts, training of engineers and technicians, and development of infrastructure. It suggested that the United Nations: make use of its global relations with professional and international organizations to mobilize and co-ordinate expert advice; explore with international bodies the promotion of space programmes in developing countries; popularize space research through videos, films and lectures as part of the planned International Space Year (1992); set up a modest special fund to provide seed money for critical activity in developing countries; and consider publishing a document on space technology benefits and a space news periodical.

The Outer Space Affairs Division also issued two other documents. As at 7 December 1987, 17 institutions had replied to its questionnaire on existing space information services, providing a summary of their functions, areas of specialization, type of system, geographical coverage, language(s), target users, classes of services, training programmes, collaboration with other centres and data bases.(20) The responses were issued as a directory, Information System on Space Science and Technology, which was to be updated as necessary.

In addition, the Division issued a directory entitled Education, Training, Research and Fellowship Opportunities in Space Science and Technology and Its Applications,(21) covering the areas of basic space sciences, remote sensing, satellite communications and satellite meteorology. The directory was compiled through information from 34 Member States requested in a June 1985 questionnaire.

A preliminary status report(22) on potentially detrimental activities in space, with particular emphasis on space debris, was submitted by COSPAR. Since the launching of Sputnik I on 4 October 1957, beginning the space age, about 18,000 manufactured objects had been catalogued in space, the report stated. Space debris consisted not only of fragments of exploded rocket stages or broken-up satellites, but also, among other things, of a plethora of lens- and instrument-covers and clamps, removed prior to the operation of satellite payloads. Currently, there were about 7,000 such objects in near-earth space. In addition, there were at least 2,000 objects ranging in size from 10 to 20 centimetres, about 50,000 in the 1 to 10 cm range and estimates of millions to billions of smaller metal and paint chips. The largest concentration of fragments and debris was in the altitude range of 350 to 1,250 kilometres, where most of the satellites, the space shuttle and space stations operated. The report concluded that during the next century, our planet might become surrounded by a belt of space debris, which was not only a hazard to space activities but also detrimental to astronomical observations from the ground. International action was needed to deal with the global issue of space debris. COSPAR, together with IAF, would endeavour to prepare a comprehensive report on the question with recommendations by the end of 1988.

Remote sensing of the Earth by satellites

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee(1) welcomed the successful completion of work on the legal principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from space, adopted by the General Assembly in 1986.(23) It reiterated, that remote sensing from outer space should be carried out, taking into account the urgent need to provide appropriate and non-discriminatory assistance to developing countries, and re-emphasized the importance of the availability of remote-sensing data and analysed data at reasonable cost and in a timely manner. Further, it agreed that in 1988 the agenda item on remote sensing of the Earth by satellites should be revised and entitled "Matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites including, inter alia, applications for developing countries". The Sub-Committee could consider advances in the use of remote-sensing data for applications relevant to the needs of developing countries, such as drought early warning and monitoring, agricultural and fisheries management, and climate change monitoring.

The Committee on outer space(4) recognized the importance of continuing international efforts to ensure the continuity, compatibility and complementarity of systems for remote sensing; it agreed that the Sub-Committee should include applications for developing countries in its future consideration of the item, which should be given priority in 1988.

Nuclear power sources and safety in spacecraft

Continuing its consideration of the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, the Sub-Committee(1) welcomed two conventions adopted under the auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA): the Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident(24) and the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency (see PART TWO, Chapter I), which covered the consequences on Earth of accidents with space objects carrying nuclear power sources. The Sub-Committee stressed the need for the widest possible adherence to those Conventions; in that context, it underlined the need to elaborate the criteria for the safe use of nuclear power sources in outer space and agreed that efforts to formulate such criteria should be based on, but not limited to, texts agreed upon by the Sub-Committee or its Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space.

The Sub-Committee was of the opinion that reactors should not be activated until the space objects carrying them had reached their operating orbit and that the question should be considered further of whether nuclear reactors in space should use only highly enriched uranium as the fissionable material, in order to avoid significant problems arising from breeding or utilizing plutonium. It noted that in all phases of a mission of a space object with nuclear power sources on board, the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) where relevant should be applied. (An independent organization, established in 1928 by the Second International Congress of Radiology, ICRP considers the fundamental principles upon which appropriate radiation protection measures can be based and gives general guidance on the use of radiation sources.) The Sub-Committee agreed that most developing countries were in a peculiar situation with regard to their inability to monitor the re-entry of a malfunctioning space object with a nuclear power source on board and to institute countermeasures; therefore, it felt that it should further examine assistance to developing countries to improve their ability to cope with those problems.

A working paper on safety assessments and notification and on guidelines and criteria for safe use of nuclear power sources in outer space was submitted by Canada,(25) which proposed that States launching space objects with nuclear power sources on board proceed with a thorough safety assessment and provide specific information as soon as possible after launching as to the presence on board of a nuclear power source and its generic classification. Canada proposed that States ensure that the design, construction and use of space objects containing nuclear power sources met international guidelines for radiological protection; that reactors be used on board space objects designed to re-enter and land safely, or to disperse the radioactive material so that when the material reached the Earth the radiological hazard conformed to the recommendations of ICRP; that radioisotope generators only be used on board space objects designed to re-enter and land safely; that whether a space object with a nuclear power source on board had been designed to re-enter and land safely or to disperse the radioactive material, it should be used in a nuclear-safe orbit-sufficiently high to give time for radioactive materials to decay to a safe level in space after the end of the mission; that where a nuclear-safe orbit was not used, States undertook to employ an in-space recovery system or orbital lifetime extension technique to render the nuclear power source safe; and that reactors not be activated until the space object carrying them reached its operating altitude.

Regarding the future of the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, some delegations stated that it should be reconvened in 1988. Other delegations felt that there was no need to reconvene it as its findings so far were adequate; they also considered the question of the safe use of nuclear power sources in outer space as an aspect of establishing the general regime of the safe development of nuclear energy and that IAEA was the appropriate forum for considering such a regime.

Similar differences on reconvening the Working Group were expressed in the Committee on outer space.(4) The Committee endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that the item on the use of nuclear power sources in outer space be retained as a priority item on its 1988 agenda.

Space transportation

Developments in space transportation system programmes in China, France, India, Japan, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States and by ESA were noted by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, which stressed the importance of international co-operation in providing all countries with access to the benefits of space science and technology.(1)

The Committee on outer space(4) endorsed the Sub-Committee's decision to continue considering the matter in 1988.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

Some members of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee(1) stated, with respect to the efficient utilization of the geostationary orbit-in which communications and other satellites maintain a position some 36,000 kilometres above the Equator-that the technological options proposed for increasing the capacity of the orbit/spectrum were sophisticated, complex and costly, and would thereby reduce the possibilities for developing countries to gain access to orbital positions economically and practically. The Sub-Committee reiterated its request that the study of the physical nature and technical aspects of the geostationary orbit be updated as required. The Committee on outer space(4) endorsed that request as well as the Sub-Committee's recommendation that it continue considering the matter in 1988, taking particular account of developing countries' needs and interests.

Other questions

Special presentations by USSR and United States experts on matters relating to life sciences, including space medicine, were heard by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee.(1) USSR presentations also covered space transportation systems, solar system exploration and space astronomy projects. United States presentations discussed remote sensing, progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme, the investigation of the 1986 Challenger space shuttle accident, planetary exploration and Earth benefits from space biomedical research. France reported on the current status and planned improvements in its SPOT (Satellite Probatoire pour l'Observation de la Terre) programme, being conducted in co-operation with Belgium and Sweden, while the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States gave a joint report on the results from the Infra-Red Astronomy Satellite.

The Sub-Committee noted that studies of human physiology under conditions of manned space flight had led to important advances in medical knowledge, that global researches of the geosphere-biosphere had great significance for mankind, that major advances had been made in knowledge of the nature and evolution of the planets, asteroids and comets, and that the use of astronomical spacecraft had advanced knowledge of the universe by allowing observations in all regions of the electromagnetic spectrum.

In connection with the theme "space communications for development", the Sub-Committee noted that COSPAR and IAF had conducted a symposium in two sessions on scientific considerations, 17 February, and on systems, 17 and 18 February in New York. A meeting was held on the same theme at Columbia University, New York, on 16 February,(26) attended by representatives of 11 developing countries; presentations were made by experts from four developing countries with operating communications satellite systems—Brazil, China, Indonesia and Mexico—focusing on the uses and the technical attributes of their systems.

In a working paper submitted to the Committee on outer space,(27) Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR proposed that the Committee support and develop a recommendation of the Working Group of the Whole of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee that all States inform the Secretary-General about those space activities which could be the subject of greater international co-operation. The USSR, in a 6 January letter to the Secretary-General,(28) transmitted replies by the Chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers to questions from a TASS correspondent, in which he stated that establishment of a world space organization would help to increase international co-operation in the peaceful exploration of outer space.

Another working paper,(29) submitted by Australia, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States, proposed that the Committee establish a working group to examine the organization and methods best suited to advancing its work.

Reviewing its future role and work, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee felt that special attention could be given to the international programmes on the global environment, including the World Climate Research Programme (WCRP), the International Satellite Land-Surface Climatology Project, and the International Satellite Cloud Climatology Project of WMO. The main scientific component in WMO's World Climate Programme, WCRP was studying the extent to which climate could be predicted and the possible influence of human activities on climate, while the land climatology project examined surface radiation fluxes, surface temperature, vegetation index, soil moisture and evapo-transpiration, and the cloud climatology project observed the global distribution of clouds.

The Sub-Committee also felt that the practical applications of space communications technology could be considered in detail and that Member States and international organizations, such as INTELSAT, INMARSAT and INTERSPUTNIK, could provide information on their programmes as well as examine advances of particular interest to developing countries. Noting the interest shown in discussions on the items relating to life sciences, including space medicine, progress in the geosphere-biosphere programme, planetary exploration and astronomy, the Sub-Committee recommended that they be included on its 1988 agenda. The Committee on outer space(4) endorsed the recommendation and joined the Sub-Committee in an invitation to COSPAR and IAF to present reports and arrange a special presentation in the Sub-Committee on progress in the geosphere-biosphere programme.

Reviews of national and international space activities in 1987(30) were transmitted to the Committee on outer space by Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the USSR and the United States, while reports on the progress of space research in 1986-1987 and on highlights in space technology and applications in 1987 were submitted by COSPAR and IAF,(32) respectively.

The International Telecommunication Union (ITU) submitted to the Committee its twenty-sixth report⁽³³⁾ on telecommunication and the peaceful uses of outer space. The report covered international regulations and their application, telecommunication studies and standardization, planning, technical co-operation activities, information and documentation activities, and co-operation with other international organizations. It included 43 country reports on progress in the development of space communications.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

For General Assembly action regarding space science and technology, see resolution 42/68 on p. 102.

Space law

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-sixth session in New York from 16 March to 3 April 1987.⁽³⁴⁾ It continued to consider the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space and matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit. It also considered the choice of a new item for its agenda.

The Committee on outer space,⁽⁴⁾ recognizing that 1987 was the twentieth anniversary of the entry into force of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies⁽³⁵⁾ (Outer Space Treaty), reaffirmed the Treaty's importance as the basis of international space law and urged States that had not done so to ratify or accede to it.

The Committee also reaffirmed the importance of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space,⁽³⁶⁾ again urging States that had not ratified or acceded to it and international organizations that had not declared their acceptance of the rights and obligations provided for therein to give urgent consideration to doing so.

Legal aspects of nuclear power sources in spacecraft

On 16 March 1987,⁽³⁴⁾ the Legal Sub-Committee re-established its Working Group on the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. The Group had before it a working paper by Canada proposing five draft principles: (1) safety assessment and notification; (2) guidelines and criteria for safe use; (3) notification of re-entry; (4) assistance to States; and (5) responsibility of States. Three of them (1, 2 and 5) were revisions of those submitted to the Group in 1986, while the other two (3 and 4) were those on which consensus had been recorded at the Sub-Committee's 1986 session.

Working papers were also submitted by Argentina, by the Federal Republic of Germany, by Sweden and by Brazil, Chile, Egypt, Indonesia, Mexico, the Netherlands and Uruguay.

Following the Chairman's suggestion, the Working Group completed a preliminary first reading and further reviews of draft principles 1, 2 and 5 of Canada's working paper, the other working papers with respect to draft principles 1, 2 and 5 and suggestions made in the course of discussions.

Some delegations, while agreeing that the Group should concentrate on draft principles 1, 2 and 5, stated that principles 3 and 4 should be compared with the two IAEA Conventions—the Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency. They felt that the provisions of the draft principles should be in strict accord with those Conventions. However, some delegations were of the view that the Working Group should concentrate on draft principles 1, 2 and 5, on which no consensus had been recorded, rather than a comparative study.

Some delegations said Canada's draft principles 1, 2 and 5 formed a good basis for discussion, while others felt that there were certain provisions requiring clarification and amendment. Some considered that the proposals went beyond the consensus recorded in the 1981 report of the Working Group on nuclear power sources in outer space;⁽³⁷⁾ attention was drawn to the differences in the views of the technical experts. Those delegations were of the view that it was unrealistic to expect that consensus could be recorded on what went beyond the 1981 consensus obligations under existing international law, including the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space.

While not recording agreement on any particular provision, the Working Group felt that the discussions had been necessary and were a precondition to further work. Subsequently, Canada submitted a further revision⁽³⁸⁾ of its working paper.

The Committee on outer space⁽⁴⁾ recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee continue consideration of the item in 1988.

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

On 16 March,⁽³⁴⁾ the Legal Sub-Committee re-established a Working Group to continue considering matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways to ensure its rational and equitable use without prejudice to the role of ITU. The Working Group took note of a 1985 letter from the Secretary-General of ITU, concerning a decision reached at a 1985 World Administrative Radio Conference on the use of the geostationary-satellite orbit and the planning of space services utilizing it.⁽³⁹⁾ The Conference had declared itself not competent to deal with the subject of some specific principles concerning the demands by equatorial countries to have sovereignty/jurisdiction over the corresponding segments of the geostationary orbit superjacent to their territories as well as the preservation of such segments by those countries for the utilization of the orbit by all States, particularly the developing countries.

Several working papers submitted by States at earlier sessions were referred to during the discussions: an approach to the delimitation of airspace and outer space (USSR); draft general principles governing the geostationary orbit (Colombia, Ecuador, Indonesia, Kenya); principles governing the activities of States in the utilization of the geostationary orbit (German Democratic Republic); draft basic provisions of the General Assembly on the delimitation and definition of outer space and on the legal status of the geostationary satellite orbit (Kenya); draft basic provisions of the Assembly resolution on the delimitation of airspace and outer space and on the legal status of the geostationary satellites' orbital space (USSR); and a comparative table by Indonesia of the provisions of the working papers submitted by the German Democratic Republic and by Colombia, Ecuador, Indonesia and Kenya.

In another working paper, the USSR proposed that any object launched into outer space be considered in outer space at an altitude of 110 kilometres or more above sea level and that space objects should retain the right to fly over the territory of other States for the purpose of reaching orbit or proceeding beyond that orbit.

Discussing the definition and delimitation of outer space, some delegations considered the question a necessary step to achieve a distinction between the legal regime of airspace, with its inherent features of State sovereignty, territorial integrity and security, and that of the legal regime of outer space which was free for exploration and use by all. Others questioned the need for a definition and delimitation of outer space; they felt that the absence of a definition or delimitation had not prevented the observance of the outer space treaties, nor had it created practical problems impeding peaceful exploration of outer space. Some delegations were of the view that the question of definition and delimitation should remain on the Legal Sub-Committee's agenda and that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee might be requested to examine technical criteria in order to determine the lowest altitude of orbiting satellites for facilitating the delimitation of outer space. Others indicated that the latter Sub-Committee had examined the question, concluding that no technical criteria existed.

With respect to the question of the geostationary orbit, the Chairman recommended that the Working Group concentrate on isolating those elements in the working papers and other documents that contained ideas which were not irreconcilable. In a general exchange of views, some delegations stated that the orbit formed part of outer space and was subject to the Outer Space Treaty.⁽³⁵⁾ As such, the orbit was not subject to national appropriation by claim of sovereignty or by means of use or occupation; all States enjoyed equal rights in its utilization. Other delegations reiterated the position expressed at earlier sessions that there was a need to establish a sui generis legal regime for the geostationary orbit, which would acknowledge its being a limited natural resource to be shared equally by mankind and would recognize the interests of developing countries and the special rights of the equatorial countries in relation to the orbit. Some delegations declared that provisions regarding a legal regime should be formulated to acknowledge the rational and equitable utilization of the geostationary orbit, not as a sui generis regime but in conformity with existing space law and relevant ITU decisions.

The Working Group considered the common elements in the draft principles submitted by Colombia, Ecuador, Indonesia and Kenya and by the German Democratic Republic, and studied the Indonesian comparative table. The following basic points of convergence in the papers were identified: the geostationary orbit was a limited natural resource and therefore its utilization should be rational and equitable, taking into account the special needs of the developing countries and the geographical situation of particular countries; the development of space science and technology applied in the utilization of the orbit was of fundamental importance for the economic, social and cultural development of the peoples of all States, in particular those of developing countries; there was a need to establish a legal regime applicable to the geostationary orbit which derived from its special physical nature and other attributes; and it should be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and in the interests of promoting international co-operation.

The Committee on outer space⁽⁴⁾ recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee continue to consider the item at its 1988 session.

New agenda item

In 1986,⁽²⁾ the General Assembly had endorsed a recommendation of the Committee on outer space that the Legal Sub-Committee consider the choice of a new item for its agenda, including proposals made by the Group of 77 and others.

Several working papers were submitted to the Sub-Committee in connection with a new item. The United Kingdom suggested that it take up enhanced co-operation between States in the event of an emergency on a manned space object endangering the crew. Australia, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States proposed that the Sub-Committee consider its working methods to improve efficiency. Czechoslovakia suggested that the Sub-Committee examine the legal regulation and mechanisms of States' sharing benefits from exploration and uses of outer space; the legal status of crews on board space objects; and the legal aspects of emergency safety and rescue connected with piloted space objects. The Group of 77 asked that the legal aspects related to the access of States to benefits derived from exploring and utilizing outer space be studied. Canada, France, the Netherlands and Sweden felt that improving the procedure for registering space objects could be a new agenda item (see p. 105).

On 20 March 1987,(40) Chile submitted its general comments on exploring and using outer space, including guidelines for discussing the regulation of space activities, access to the benefits of those activities and space law.

Some delegations considered that strengthening the application of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space(36) might be an appropriate agenda item. Such an item, they explained, might involve discussing additional information to be provided concerning a nuclear power source on board a space object, the presence of astronauts on board, a time-frame for notification of a launching and significant changes in trajectories of a space object or termination of a mission. Other delegations felt that an item on enhanced co-operation between States in the event of accident or emergency on board a manned space object would be appropriate; the Sub-Committee could consider the rescue of astronauts in outer space, a subject which in their view was not sufficiently covered by the Outer Space Treaty(35) or the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space.(41) Some delegations stated that the legal status of a spacecraft crew should become a new agenda item. The Legal Sub-Committee recommended that the Committee on outer space continue consideration of the question.

In June, the Committee, after hearing similar views, recommended that consideration of a new agenda item be continued, on a priority basis, in the near future, if possible, or at the 1988 session of the Legal Sub-Committee.

In December, in resolution 42/68, the General Assembly requested the Legal Sub-Committee to finalize the choice of a new agenda item, taking into account the Group of 77 proposal and other proposals, in order to begin consideration of the item in 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/68 without vote.

General Assembly resolution 42/68

2 December 1987 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/42/812 & Corr.1) without vote, 12 November (meeting 22); draft by Austria, for SPC Working Group on International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (A/SPC/42/L.18 & Corr.1); agenda item 76.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: SPC 14, 16-20, 22; plenary 89.

In the Special Political Committee, Mexico stated that the work of the Committee on outer space during 1987 had been particularly fruitless and that the draft resolution was nothing but a carbon copy of that adopted in 1986; while that Committee was not the only body encountering difficulties which had their origin in the crisis of multilateralism, the exacerbation of the world economic situation and the unbridled arms race, Mexico could not help being concerned at the indifference shown with regard to the draft resolution.

In the Assembly, Brazil expressed disappointment that there was no agreement on a new agenda item for the Legal Sub-Committee, and said it would oppose further delays in solving that problem.

During 1987, the Assembly again considered the prevention of an arms race in outer space as a separate agenda item (see p. 78) and, in resolution 42/33, again called on States to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space.

The Assembly, in resolution 42/186 on an Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, considered outer space as an issue of global concern.

On 17 December, (42) Argentina and Chile transmitted the conclusions of a meeting of the Vatican Pontifical Academy of Sciences on the impact of remote sensing on developing countries (Rome, 16-21 June 1986).

Spacecraft launchings

At its June 1987 session, the Committee on outer space reaffirmed the importance of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space,⁽¹⁾ which had entered into force in 1976, again urging States that had not ratified or acceded to it and international organizations that had not declared their acceptance of the rights and obligations provided for in the Convention to give urgent consideration to doing so.

During 1987, six countries (Canada, France, Japan, Sweden, USSR, United States)⁽²⁾ provided information to the United Nations on the launching of objects into orbit or beyond, in accordance with a 1961 General Assembly resolution⁽³⁾ and article IV of the Convention.⁽¹⁾

Convention on registration of launchings

As at 31 December 1987,⁽⁴⁾ there were 35 States parties to the Convention on registration, representing no change from 1986. The European Space Agency had declared in 1979 its acceptance of the rights and obligations of the Convention.

Pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in March 1987 to the Committee on outer space a report⁽⁶⁾ on the past application of the Convention. Of 1,474 functional space objects launched in 1,200 launchings between 15 September 1976 and 31 October 1986, 1,438 or 97.6 per cent were registered with the United Nations. Annexed to the report were the text of the Convention, a list of the States parties to it, with an indication of the States that had furnished the United Nations with information concerning the establishment of a national registry and those that had notified it of objects launched into outer space, and a list of the functional objects launched.

In a working paper submitted to the Committee on outer space, Canada, France, the Netherlands and Sweden⁽⁷⁾ proposed that the Secretary-General remind Member States and intergovernmental organizations that conducted space activities of the importance of further ratifications of, and accessions to, the Convention. They suggested that the question of improving the procedure for registering space objects could be a new item on the Legal Sub-Committee's agenda (see p. 101). Additional information supplementing that already required by the Convention might be provided, they stated, including the technical nature of the space vehicle and its physical characteristics; expected duration of existence; the manned or automatic character of the vehicle; the type of energy production used and the possible presence on board of dangerous materials; and the identity of the operator.

Chapter III

Law of the sea

In 1987, agreement was reached settling conflicts that had arisen in overlapping claims by a number of Member States to deep sea-bed mining sites. The agreement was followed by the registration of India as the first pioneer investor in the international sea-bed "Area" (the sea-bed beyond national jurisdiction) under the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and later by the registration of France, Japan and the USSR as pioneer investors.

The Secretary-General, terming the agreement highly significant (see p. 9), stated that it reflected a realistic assessment of shared interests in orderly exploitation of deep sea-bed resources and should contribute to wider acceptance of the Convention's sea-bed regime. However, the Convention had far more than economic significance, he said. Its first purpose was to prevent conflicts over the space, the uses and the resources of the seas and oceans; the ocean-related nature of recent tensions and hostilities in several areas served as a constant reminder of the need for its full acceptance. During the year, ratifications of the Convention increased from 32 to 35.

In November, the General Assembly, by resolution 42/20, also expressed satisfaction at the successful resolution of conflicts of overlaps in the claims of applicants and potential ones for registration as pioneer investors and at the historic decision to register the first such investor.

In March, the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea was renamed the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea, with the responsibility of combining its activities in marine affairs with most of those previously carried out by other Secretariat bodies.

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

During 1987, the number of ratifications of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea increased to 35,(1) with the addition of Cape Verde, Democratic Yemen and Sao Tome and Principe. The Convention was to enter into force 12 months after receipt of the sixtieth instrument of ratification or accession.

The Convention, which was adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982,(2) had closed for signature in 1984, having received a total of 159 signatures.(3)

In an 18 August letter,(4) the Group of 77 developing countries requested the Chairman of the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea to appeal to all the countries, members of the Commission, which had not done so to ratify the Convention as soon as possible.

Developments relating to the Convention

The Secretary-General reported in November 1987(5) on developments in regard to the Convention and implementation of a 1986 General Assembly resolution.(6) The report was divided into two parts. The first reviewed the Convention's impact on State practice and related marine activities. It also reflected the activities of international organizations in marine affairs as well as those of the International Court of Justice and other tribunals dealing with the settlement of disputes concerning the law of the sea. The second part outlined the activities of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea (see p. 111).

According to the report, the Convention continued to provide a focus for ocean-related activities, attracting increasing support and exerting an immense influence on marine affairs. As States resorted increasingly to the seas and oceans to supplement their developmental needs, there had been a trend towards the establishment of maritime regimes consistent with the norms embodied in the Convention.

A historical step had been taken in respect to the international regime for deep sea-bed mining on 17 August 1987, the report noted, when the General Committee of the Preparatory Commission registered India as the first pioneer investor in deep sea-bed mining in the international sea-bed Area (see p. 109); subsequently, on 17

December, the General Committee also registered France, Japan and the USSR as pioneer investors.

The desire of States to benefit further from the uses of the sea and its resources had also led to heightened activity in many international organizations, which had developed their activities to reflect the new regime for the oceans established by the Convention.

The Convention remained the model on which States based their legislation in relation to maritime areas falling under their sovereignty: the territorial sea, the contiguous zone, the exclusive economic zone, the continental shelf and the régime of archipelagic States. It allowed for a territorial sea of up to 12 nautical miles, a further 24 miles of contiguous zone and an exclusive economic zone of up to 200 miles. The number of States claiming a territorial sea of 12 miles was currently 103, while 19 States claimed the contiguous zone and 72 had established exclusive economic zones.

With regard to the continental shelf, the Convention provided that it extended throughout the natural prolongation of a coastal State's territory to the outer edge of the continental margin or to a distance of 200 miles from the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea was measured. The Convention further provided technical criteria for the delimitation of the shelf where it extended beyond the 200-mile limit. While some States had enacted new legislation on the continental shelf, others had not done so. Certain difficulties arose in the practical implementation of the technical criteria, particularly in relation to the acquisition of geophysical and geological data concerning the continental margin which required a scientific survey.

Under certain conditions specified in the Convention, States comprising one or more mid-ocean archipelagos might draw straight baselines joining the outermost islands and drying reefs of the archipelagos (archipelagic baselines). The waters enclosed within those baselines were known as archipelagic waters and the archipelagic State exercised sovereignty over such waters, its sea-bed, subsoil and the airspace above. The following States had incorporated the concept of "archipelagic State" in their legislation: Antigua and Barbuda, Cape Verde, Comoros, Fiji, Indonesia, Kiribati, Maldives, Mauritius, Philippines, Sao Tome and Principe, Solomon Islands, Trinidad and Tobago, Tuvalu, Vanuatu.

The political map of the world had been considerably altered by the extension of maritime jurisdiction of coastal States, the report continued. The extended jurisdiction of States had necessitated the delimitation of boundaries between States with adjacent or opposite coastlines. Approximately 95 inter-State maritime boundary agreements had been concluded, representing about one third of the boundaries that needed to be settled. Most of those agreements had been negotiated during the past 15 years, largely because of the surge of interest in offshore oil and gas in the early 1970s and negotiations in the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea.

Other developments relating to the law of the sea reviewed in the report included: peaceful uses; maritime law; protection of the marine environment; marine science, technology and research; fisheries management and development; and regional co-operation.

Two new conventions were considered during 1987. The Council of the International Maritime Organization decided to convene a diplomatic conference in 1988 to consider adopting a convention on the suppression of unlawful acts committed against the safety of maritime navigation that endangered lives, jeopardized property and affected maritime services and thus were of international concern (see PART TWO, Chapter XIV).

Increasing difficulties encountered by law enforcement agencies in coping with illicit drug trafficking had led to the preparation of a new draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; it sought to prevent illicit trafficking by sea and to strengthen international co-operation among customs, police and judicial bodies, and would require commercial carriers to prevent the use of their facilities for such trafficking. Article 12 of the draft would give a State party the right to board, search and, if evidence of illicit traffic was discovered, seize a vessel flying the flag of another State, providing that prior permission had been received from the flag State. In February, the United Nations Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered a recommendation of the first (1986) Interregional Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies(7) for co-operation in suppressing drug trafficking on the high seas, in free-trade zones and where international commercial carriers were involved. The Comprehensive Outline to combat drug trafficking adopted in June 1987 by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (see p. 901) included as Targets 26 and 28 surveillance of land, water and air approaches to the frontier, and controls over ships on the high seas and aircraft in international airspace. Under Target 26, it was suggested that Governments develop, implement and co-ordinate plans for maritime surveillance, and to authorize coast guards to stop and search vessels and aircraft on suspicion of illicit carriage of drugs. Under Target 28, it was suggested that Governments permit law enforcement officials to seize a vessel unlawfully carrying drugs under certain conditions; to respond promptly when asked for permission to search such a vessel if under its registry; and to conclude bilateral and regional agreements to strengthen co-operation in that area.

Currently, the 1973 International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships(8) and the 1978 Protocol(9) (MARPOL 73/78) covered nearly 80 per cent of world shipping, with ratifications by 43 States. Optional annex III (on harmful substances in packaged form) had been ratified by 27 States (with 41.85 per cent of world tonnage) and annex IV (on sewage) by 25 States (with 36.7 per cent of the tonnage). Ships and tankers carrying noxious liquid chemicals in bulk were subject to international control under 1985 amendments(10) to MARPOL 73/78, annex II, which entered into force on 6 April 1987, along with amended codes for ships carrying dangerous chemicals in bulk. Annex II was mainly concerned with the way in which noxious liquid substances were handled, both as cargo into receiving tanks on shore and as wastes into the sea, following tank cleaning and other operations.

On 30 December 1987,(11) the United States instrument accepting annex V (on garbage) brought the number of countries accepting it to 31 with 50.22 per cent of world tonnage. The annex would thus enter into force at the end of 1988; it would apply to all vessels, including small recreational craft. One of its most important provisions was a ban on dumping into the sea of all plastics, such as synthetic ropes and fishing nets and plastic garbage bags. Some other forms of garbage might be dumped under strictly controlled conditions, some only beyond 25 miles from land and some not within 12 miles, unless treated. The minimum distance from land where dumping would be permitted was set at 3 miles. Even stricter controls would apply in special areas (the Mediterranean, Baltic and Black Seas, together with some sea areas in the Near East), where dumping of all forms of garbage except food wastes was completely banned, and even food wastes could not be disposed of into the sea within 12 miles. Parties to the Convention were obliged to provide facilities in port for reception of garbage.

Under the 1972 Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter, the responsibility and liability of a State for damage to the environment of other States or to any other area of the environment was recognized. The Convention required parties to develop procedures for the assessment of liability and the settlement of disputes regarding dumping. General questions of responsibility and liability were dealt with by the Ad Hoc Group of Legal Experts on Dumping (London, October).(11) In the Group, there was a marked divergence of views with regard to the need to develop a liability regime. Problems were also encountered with establishing the damage suffered, the limitation in time of the operator's liability and insurance coverage. The Group recommended that the parties take note of the different views and act appropriately when they met in 1988.

The dumping of radioactive wastes, suspended by the parties since 1983, was considered by the first meeting of the Intergovernmental Panel of Experts on the Disposal of Radioactive Wastes at Sea (London, October). The Panel drew up a list of issues calling for study, including international liability. Also under study was the question of whether it could be proved that any dumping of radioactive wastes and other radioactive matter at sea would not harm human life and/or cause significant damage to the marine environment.

A number of other meetings on ocean affairs were held during 1987. Thirty-four countries attended the Indian Ocean Marine Affairs Co-operation Conference (IOMAC) (Colombo, Sri Lanka, January). The Conference emphasized regional pooling of scarce scientific and technical facilities, the exchange and centralization of information and improvement of communications; it established an IOMAC secretariat and a 17-member Standing Committee. A conference of the South-East Asian Project on Ocean Law, Policy and Management (Bangkok, Thailand, April) discussed regional implementation of the Convention on the Law of the Sea and regional co-operation in ocean development and resource management. The conference called on coastal States to avoid unduly strict interpretation of their rights, especially where conflicts might develop. A symposium (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, June) requested the Secretariat's Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea to assist West and Central African States to implement the Convention, to introduce the marine dimension into their development process and to organize a training course on the development of offshore hard minerals. The Organization of Eastern Caribbean States held a workshop (Castries, Saint Lucia, September) on applying to the subregion Convention provisions dealing with the determination of baselines, the status of islands and insular formations, and the delimitation of maritime boundaries between States with adjacent and opposite coasts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

For General Assembly action with regard to the Convention, see resolution 42/20 on p. 112.

Preparatory Commission

In 1987, the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its fifth session at Kingston, Jamaica, from 30 March to 16 April, and a meeting in New York from 27 July to 21 August.⁽⁵⁾ Major issues were the implementation of resolution II⁽¹²⁾ on the registration of pioneer investors in deep sea-bed mining, adopted in 1982 by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, and the preparation of the rules, regulations and procedures relating to the organs of the Authority.

Resolution II named four States as pioneer investors—India, France, Japan and the USSR—and designated four multinational consortia as potential applicants. The consortia possessed the nationality of or were controlled by the nationals of Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States. The States named and the consortia all had to meet the condition established for granting pioneer investor status: the expenditure of at least $30 million, of which at least 10 per cent had to be spent in locating, surveying and evaluating a mining area.

Before registration, pioneer investors were to resolve any overlapping claims. The potential for overlapping claims was reasonably high due to two factors stemming from the nature of the resource itself. First, although there were extensive deposits of nodules throughout the world's oceans, scientific indicators had pointed to one Pacific region in which the nodules were of economic interest—the area between Hawaii and Baja California. Secondly, nodules were to be found in a monolayer, and consequently claim sites had to be extensive. Resolution II set an upper limit of the pioneer area at 150,000 square kilometres for each site. It also required compliance with the parallel system, under which each applicant would submit two sites of equal estimated commercial value, one of which would be selected by the Authority as a reserved site to be mined by the Enterprise (the Authority's operational arm) or by a developing country in association with the Authority. It further provided that each applicant would relinquish half of its pioneer area over an eight-year period, reducing it to no more than 75,000 square kilometres.

Following a 1986 Understanding to resolve their conflicting claims,⁽¹³⁾ the four applicants for registration were to submit revised applications to the Preparatory Commission's March/April 1987 session. However, at their request,⁽¹⁴⁾ the applicants were granted an extension of the deadline. It was agreed that a Group of Technical Experts would convene during the July/August meeting to examine the applications and that India, which had no conflicts with respect to overlapping claims, could be registered separately, but that France, Japan and the USSR would be considered and registered simultaneously.

On 3 August,⁽¹⁵⁾ Belgium, Canada, Italy, the Netherlands and the USSR informed the Commission that they had met between April and July to settle practical problems in connection with deep sea-bed areas for which they had applied or might apply. Although they had achieved a comprehensive settlement, extensive technical work was required to bring the USSR application into conformity; the USSR would submit a revised application in November. It was suggested that the revised application should then be considered immediately.

France, India, Japan and the USSR, in a letter of the same date, ⁽¹⁶⁾ stated that the revised applications of France, Japan and the USSR should be considered immediately after the submission of the revised USSR application. Meanwhile, they said, India's application should be examined by the Expert Group and the General Committee, with a view to its registration during the Commission's July/August meeting. In letters of 5 August, the Federal Republic of Germany⁽¹⁷⁾ and the United Kingdom⁽¹⁸⁾ welcomed the successful outcome of the negotiations on practical problems and associated themselves with the settlement.

On 17 August,⁽¹⁹⁾ the General Committee, acting on behalf of the Preparatory Commission, decided, based on a report by the Expert Group,⁽²⁰⁾ to register India as the first pioneer investor in the international sea-bed Area, allocating 150,000 square kilometres in the south-central Indian Ocean basin in which it received the exclusive right to carry out activities leading to the exploitation of polymetallic nodules. The Committee reserved from the Indian application an area of 150,000 square kilometres of equal estimated commercial value for development by the Authority.

The Group of Technical Experts convened from 23 November to 5 December and the General Committee from 7 to 18 December. On 17 December,⁽²¹⁾ the Committee registered France,⁽²²⁾ Japan⁽²³⁾ and the USSR⁽²⁴⁾ as pioneer investors for areas in the north-east Pacific Ocean with the same rights and obligations as those conferred on India; it also recorded the reserved areas.

On 19 October,⁽²⁵⁾ Canada transmitted to the Secretary-General the communique of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Vancouver, British Columbia, 13-17 October); on 23 October,⁽²⁶⁾ Zimbabwe transmitted the communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 session of the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October). Both meetings expressed satisfaction at the registration of India as the first pioneer investor. The Commonwealth heads also stated that they hoped action could be taken on other parts of the Convention, in particular a proposal to establish regional centres of marine research.

On 18 June,(27) Guyana forwarded the final communique of the Special Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, 9-12 March), in which the Ministers noted the progress by the Preparatory Commission towards implementation of resolution II; urged States to desist from unilateral deep sea-bed mining beyond their national jurisdiction contrary to the Convention; called on States that had not done so to ratify or accede to the Convention; and stressed the need for closer collaboration among developing countries in marine scientific research.

Meanwhile, the Preparatory Commission continued the examination of the draft rules of procedure for the Council of the Authority and completed their second reading; several of the draft rules were provisionally approved. There was a lengthy debate on the proposals of the draft rules to establish a Finance Committee and general agreement on the advisory nature of that body and the qualifications of its members. However, certain questions required further discussion, such as whether the criteria for membership of the Committee should be based on the principle of equitable geographical distribution and special interests or only on equitable geographical distribution, and whether the major contributors should constitute a special category. The Commission also completed the first reading of the draft rules of procedure for the Economic Planning Commission.

No further applications for registration as pioneer investors were received in 1987.

Special Commissions

The Preparatory Commission's four Special Commissions continued work in accordance with their respective mandates.

Developing land-based producer States

Special Commission 1 considered remedial measures for developing land-based producer States whose economies might be affected by sea-bed mineral production. The Chairman of the Special Commission told the plenary Commission that emphasis had been given to study of the establishment of a compensation fund.(28) In spite of divergent viewpoints, there was general agreement that if such States were seriously affected by sea-bed production, their difficulties should be minimized and they should be helped to make the necessary economic adjustment through assistance provided under the auspices of the Authority.

The Enterprise

Special Commission 2, preparing for the establishment of the Enterprise, discussed the provision of training for its personnel.(29) The Chairman informed the Preparatory Commission that the timing, types and costs of training had been discussed in detail. Four new working papers were submitted: the main elements of a training programme and a nucleus Enterprise, both prepared by the Secretariat; questions relating to the training of personnel for the Enterprise, prepared by the Group of 77; and the international venture, prepared by Colombia. The Special Commission agreed to set up an ad hoc working group to formulate principles, policies, procedures and guidelines for a training programme.

Sea-bed mining code

The Chairman of Special Commission 3, which was to prepare the rules, regulations and procedures for the exploration and exploitation of the deep sea-bed, reported to the Preparatory Commission that detailed consideration had begun of draft articles dealing with the financial terms of a mining contract.(30) The articles dealt with an annual fixed fee, the choice of a system of financial contribution, production charges, method of assessment of quantity of processed metals from nodules, attribution of average price to such metals, notification of market value and payment of production charge, the Authority's share of attributable net proceeds and a determination of first and second periods of commercial production for graduated taxation.

International Tribunal

Special Commission 4 was preparing for the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. The Chairman told the Preparatory Commission(31) that a headquarters agreement had been discussed based on a Secretariat working paper. Privileges, immunities and facilities of the Tribunal, its officials and those appearing before it were also discussed, as were a number of its revised draft rules of procedure.

As mandated by the Special Commission, the Chairman continued his consultations on matters relating to the seat of the Tribunal. One problem involved the fact that the host country identified in the Convention (Federal Republic of Germany) had neither signed nor acceded to the Convention. According to the introductory note to the draft convention of 1981,(32) the States envisaged as sites for institutions under the Convention should be parties to the Convention on its entry into force.

In that connection, the Federal Republic of Germany, by a 9 February 1987 letter,(33) informed the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea about the preparations made by it for the establishment of the Tribunal in Hamburg. It stated its readiness to erect an office building for the Tribunal at its own expense and to ensure temporary accommodation in the event that it was established before the completion of the new structure. In a March report,(34) the Federal Republic of Germany expressed the hope that matters concerning deep-sea mining could be cleared up so as to enable it to become a party to the Convention before it entered into force.

The Group of 77, in a 16 April letter(35) to the Chairman of the Preparatory Commission, expressed concern that the Federal Republic of Germany had not ratified or acceded to the Convention and that if prolonged the situation would increase uncertainty about the existence and timely operation of the Tribunal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

For General Assembly action concerning the work of the Preparatory Commission, see resolution 42/20 on p. 112.

Functions of the Secretary-General

Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea

The Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea was renamed the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea in March 1987. As one of the Organization's structural reforms effected by the Secretary-General and reported to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in September (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XXIII), the Office had been designated to implement the major programme on marine affairs, comprising law of the sea affairs and economic and technical aspects of marine affairs.(5) It thus combined the activities of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General with most of those previously carried out by the former Ocean Economics and Technology Branch of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, as well as certain activities formerly carried out by the Sea and Ocean Affairs Section of the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs.

During 1987, the Office was requested to provide information, advice and assistance to facilitate the ratification process of the Convention by clarifying its provisions and the interrelationship between them as they affected the rights and duties of States.

Many developing countries were incorporating the marine sector into their economies. The Office had been asked to take part in that process by preparing studies and participating in numerous meetings on marine affairs. Among the meetings were: the South Pacific Forum's management course for government officials (Kiribati); the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (Bangkok, Thailand); IOMAC (see p. 108); an International Ocean Institute management course (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania); the Institute for Documentation on Marine Research and Studies (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire); a maritime delimitation workshop for officials of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States (see p. 108); the South-East Asian Project on Ocean Law, Policy and Management (see p. 108); Pacem in Maribus XV (Valletta, Malta); a seminar relating to exploration and exploitation of mineral resources of the sea-bed (Cartagena, Colombia); and the Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in South Pacific Offshore Areas (Lae, Papua New Guinea).

The Office continued to assist in the work on ocean-related matters of United Nations agencies and bodies, other departments of the United Nations and intergovernmental bodies. Studies were carried out dealing with sea-bed mining and preparations for the Authority and the Tribunal.

The computerized Law of the Sea Information System, composed of a group of data bases, was further developed. For example, the National Marine Legislation Data Base had been expanded since its inception in 1986 from 1,060 to more than 1,440 individual national laws and regulations entries.

Two new analytical studies were completed, the first dealing with the legislative history of part X of the Convention, on the right of access of landlocked States to and from the sea and freedom of transit,(36) and the second, with part VIII, on the regime of islands.(37)

Material reflecting State practice with regard to law of the sea matters continued to be gathered and processed. The Reference Collection Library of the Office continued to expand its collection of publications, including periodicals, legislative series, loose-leaf services, treaties and newly published books. Three issues of the Law of the Sea Bulletin appeared (Nos. 9 and 10 and Special Issue No. 1).

The second Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea-established by the General Assembly in 1981(38) in honour of the first President of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea and financed by voluntary contributions-was awarded to Andy Ackim Mwandembwa, of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the United Republic of Tanzania.(11) The fellowship, approximately $20,000 in value, provided six months of postgraduate university study or research and a three-month internship with the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea.

In resolution 42/148, the General Assembly authorized a minimum of one scholarship each in 1988 and 1989, subject to new voluntary contributions to the fellowship fund, and reiterated its request for such contributions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/20.

Law of the sea

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 37/66 of 3 December 1982, 38/59 A of 14 December 1983, 39/73 of 13 December 1984, 40/63 of 10 December 1985 and 41/34 of 5 November 1986, regarding the law of the sea,

Recognizing that, as stated in the third preambular paragraph of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole,

Convinced that it is important to safeguard the unified character of the Convention and related resolutions adopted therewith and to refrain from any action to apply their provisions selectively, in a manner inconsistent with their object and purpose,

Emphasizing the need for States to ensure consistent application of the Convention, as well as the need for harmonization of national legislation with the provisions of the Convention,

Considering that, in its resolution 2749(XXV) of 17 December 1970, it proclaimed that the sea-bed and ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, as well as the resources of the area, are the common heritage of mankind,

Recalling that the Convention provides the regime to be applied to the Area and its resources,

Emphasizing that no State should undermine the Convention and related resolutions of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea,

Recognizing also the need for co-operation in the early and effective implementation by the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea of resolution II of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea,

Noting with satisfaction the progress made in the work of the Preparatory Commission since its inception, including the registration of India as a pioneer investor in the mining of the sea-bed and ocean floor and subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction,

Noting the decision of the Preparatory Commission to convene its General Committee from 7 to 18 December 1987 for the purpose of considering the applications of France, Japan and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for registration as pioneer investors,

Noting also that the Preparatory Commission has decided to hold its sixth regular session at Kingston from 14 March to 8 April 1988 and that it will decide upon the summer meeting for 1988 during its next session,

Noting further the increasing needs of countries, especially developing countries, for information, advice and assistance in the implementation of the Convention and in their developmental process for the full realization of the benefits of the comprehensive legal régime established by the Convention,

Recognizing that the Convention encompasses all uses and resources of the sea and that all related activities within the United Nations system need to be implemented in a manner consistent with it,

Taking note of activities carried out in 1987 under the major programme on marine affairs, set forth in chapter 25 of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1 in accordance with the report of the Secretary-General as approved in General Assembly resolution 38/59 and the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling its approval of the financing of the expense of the Preparatory Commission from the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking special note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in pursuance of paragraph 13 of General Assembly resolution 41/34,

1. Recalls the historic significance of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea as an important contribution to the maintenance of peace, justice and progress for all peoples of the world;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the increasing and overwhelming support for the Convention, as evidenced, inter alia, by the one hundred and fifty-nine signatures and thirty-five of the sixty ratifications or accessions required for entry into force of the Convention;

3. Calls upon all States that have not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention at the earliest possible date to allow the effective entry into force of the new legal regime for the uses of the sea and its resources;

4. Calls upon all States to safeguard the unified character of the Convention and related resolutions adopted therewith;

5. Also calls upon States to observe the provisions of the Convention when enacting their national legislation;

6. Further calls upon States to desist from taking actions which undermine the Convention or defeat its object and purpose;

7. Notes the progress being made by the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea in all areas of its work;

8. Expresses its satisfaction at the successful resolution of conflicts of overlaps that had arisen in the claim applications for registration as pioneer investors and those of certain potential applicants under resolution II of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea;

9. Further expresses its satisfaction at the historic decision of the Preparatory Commission of 17 August 1987 to register the first pioneer investor, namely India, at the decision of the Preparatory Commission to convene its General Committee from 7 to 18 December 1987 for the purpose of considering the applications of France, Japan and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for registration as pioneer investors;

10. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in support of the Convention and for effective execution of the major programme on marine affairs set forth in chapter 25 of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989;

11. Further expresses its appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General prepared in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 41/34 and requests him to continue to carry out the activities outlined therein, as well as those aimed at the strengthening of the legal régime of the sea, special emphasis being placed on the work of the Preparatory Commission, including the implementation of resolution II of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea;

12. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to assist States in the implementation of the Convention.

Against: Turkey, United States.

Abstaining: Ecuador, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Peru, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

The United States explained that it voted negatively because part XI of the Convention, governing the deep sea-bed area beyond national jurisdiction, ran counter to its policy and to that of others sharing its views about the future development of deep sea-bed resources. It also opposed the resolution because it referred to funding from the United Nations regular budget for the Preparatory Commission; those costs should be borne by the parties to the Convention. Turkey said that, although it had striven for many years for the codification of the law of the sea, it continued to have difficulties with some provisions of the Convention which ran counter to its interests.

The Federal Republic of Germany abstained as a State that was not a signatory; Peru, in keeping with its national interests; and the United Kingdom, maintaining its objection to the sea-bed régime set out in part XI.

The Assembly, in resolution 42/14 A, endorsed a decision by the United Nations Council for Namibia that it would, in the exercise of its rights under the Convention, proclaim a ZOO-mile exclusive economic zone for Namibia; and reaffirmed that Namibia's natural resources, including its marine resources, were the inviolable heritage of its people.

In resolution 42/16 the Assembly called on States to co-operate in promoting the South Atlantic as a zone of peace and co-operation and requested the United Nations system to assist their endeavours.

Chapter IV

International peace and security

The international security situation during the past year had been far from static, the Secretary-General noted in September 1987 (see p. 3). While major conflicts had persisted and neither the number nor the lethal quality of arms had been reduced, initiatives had been taken, negotiations had been carried forward and the Security Council had acted in ways that in themselves constituted hopeful change. Within the meaning of the Charter of the United Nations, the Council could in future make fuller use of possibilities, including peace-keeping forces, to head off violence and facilitate the resolution of disputes before armed conflict occurred, he stated.

The General Assembly's continuing concern with regard to the international situation was reflected in five 1987 resolutions. The Assembly urged States to prevent the further deterioration of the international situation, stressing that the effectiveness of the Security Council in maintaining international peace and security should be enhanced (resolution 42/92). It urged States to focus their efforts on ensuring integral universal security through peaceful political means, reaffirmed that they should adhere strictly to the fundamental principles of international law and called on them to strengthen the United Nations as an instrument for maintaining international peace (42/93).

The Assembly requested the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to resume work in 1988 on a comprehensive review of peace-keeping operations (42/161). It urged States to continue their efforts to implement the 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace (42/91), and urged Member States, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to persevere in developing initiatives related to the objectives of the International Year of Peace, which had been observed in 1986 (42/13).

The maintenance of international peace and security was also considered by the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament. Human rights: human rights and peace. Legal aspects of international political relations: peaceful settlement of disputes between States; good-neighbourliness between States; non-use of force in international relations; draft code of offences against peace and security. zations and international law: strengthening the role of the United Nations.

Strengthening of international security

Implementation of the 1970 Declaration

After its annual review of the implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security(1) in December 1987, the General Assembly urged all States, particularly the permanent members of the Security Council, to prevent the further deterioration of the international situation and to seek the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elimination of the focal points of crisis and tension, which threatened international peace and security.

The Secretary-General, in an October report and subsequent addendum,(2) transmitted replies from Member States to a 1986 Assembly invitation(3) to submit their views on the implementation of the Declaration. Seven States had sent substantive replies as at 10 November.

Letters received under this subject heading in 1987 dealt with a broad range of topics, including various aspects of disarmament, East-West relations, apartheid, economic development problems, the International Year of Peace (IYP) (see p. 122) and a nuclear-free zone in the South Pacific. Still other communications dealt with specific situations in certain areas or between States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/92.

Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security",

Noting with concern that the provisions of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security have not been fully implemented,

Concerned by the continued escalation of tension in the world, accompanied by the policy of competition for spheres of influence, domination and exploitation in many parts of the world, the continuation of the arms race, particularly in nuclear weapons, and the danger of its extension into outer space, by the recourse to the use or threat of use of force, military intervention and interference and foreign occupation, by the continued infringement of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of countries and by the lack of solutions to the world economic crisis, in which the deeper underlying problems of a structural nature have been compounded by cyclical factors and which has further aggravated the inequalities and injustices in international economic relations, all of which pose a grave threat to global peace and security,

Aware of the increasing interdependence among nations and of the fact that in the present-day world, there is no alternative to a policy of peaceful coexistence, détente and co-operation among States on the basis of equality, irrespective of their economic or military power, political and social systems or size and geographic location,

Convinced that a comprehensive and just solution to pressing international problems, such as achieving peace and security, disarmament and development, can be assured only through negotiations, based on the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in which all countries participate on an equal footing,

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations as an indispensable forum for negotiations and reaching agreements on measures to promote and strengthen international peace and security,

Stressing the need for the main organs of the United Nations responsible for the maintenance of peace and security, particularly the Security Council, to contribute more effectively to the promotion of international peace and security by seeking solutions to unresolved problems and crises in the world,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and calls upon all States to contribute effectively to its implementation;

2. Urges once again all States to abide strictly, in their international relations, by their commitment to the Charter of the United Nations and, to this end:

(a) To refrain from the use or threat of use of force, intervention, interference, aggression, foreign occupation and colonial domination or measures of political and economic coercion which violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of other States, as well as the permanent sovereignty of peoples over their natural resources;

(b) To refrain from supporting or encouraging any such act for any reason whatsoever and to reject and refuse recognition of situations brought about by any such act;

3. Calls upon all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take immediate steps aimed at:

(a) Promoting and using effectively the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter;

(b) Halting effectively the arms race and achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control and, to this end, to conduct serious, meaningful and effective negotiations with a view to implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and to fulfilling the priority tasks listed in the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document;

4. Invites all States, in particular the major military Powers and States members of military alliances, to refrain, especially in critical situations and in crisis areas, from actions, including military activities and manœuvres, conceived within the context of East-West confrontation and used as a means of pressure or threat to and destabilization of other States and regions;

5. Expresses its conviction that the gradual military disengagement of the great Powers and their military alliances from various parts of the world should be promoted;

6. Urges all States, in particular the permanent members of the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to prevent the further deterioration of the international situation and, to this end, to seek, through more effective utilization of the means provided for in the Charter, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elimination of the focal points of crisis and tension, which constitute a threat to international peace and security;

7. Emphasizes the role that the United Nations has in the maintenance of peace and security and in economic and social development and progress for the benefit of all mankind;

8. Stresses that there is an urgent need to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council in discharging its principal role of maintaining international peace and security and to enhance the authority and enforcement capacity of the Council in accordance with the Charter;

9. Emphasizes that the Security Council should consider holding periodic meetings in specific cases to consider and review outstanding problems and crises, thus enabling it to play a more active role in preventing conflicts;

10. Reiterates the need for the Security Council, in particular its permanent members, to ensure the effective implementation of its decisions in compliance with the relevant provisions of the Charter;

11. Considers that respect for and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms in their civil, political, economic, social and cultural aspects, on the one hand, and the strengthening of international peace and security, on the other, mutually reinforce each other;

12. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist régimes and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and urges Member States to increase their support for and solidarity with them and their national liberation movements and to take urgent and effective measures for the speedy completion of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and for the final elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid;

13. Calls upon all States, particularly the members of the Security Council, to take appropriate and effective measures to promote the fulfilment of the objective of the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger that the nuclear capability of South Africa constitutes to the African States, in particular the front-line States, as well as to international peace and security;

14. Welcomes the continuation of the process within the framework of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe;

15. Reaffirms that the democratization of international relations is an imperative necessity enabling, under the conditions of interdependence, the full development and independence of all States, as well as the attainment of genuine security, peace and co-operation in the world, and stresses its firm belief that the United Nations offers the best framework for the promotion of these goals;

16. Invites Member States to submit their views on the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the basis of the replies received;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security".

Implementation of the 1978 Declaration on societies and peace

The Secretary-General, in accordance with a 1984 General Assembly resolution,(4) submitted in November 1987 a report(5) reviewing implementation of the 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace.(6) The report included summaries of replies received from 11 States to the Secretary-General's request for information and a summary of the report of the Panel of Experts on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace.

In considering plans for further action, the Secretary-General stated that preparing societies for peace was a long-term process requiring practical guidelines and that the United Nations system should provide such guidance as one element of its efforts towards promoting peace.

Continuing its peace research and education activities, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization was to conduct a project on the role of the mass media in spreading knowledge and information relating to peace, human rights and the rights of peoples. The United Nations University had initiated a training course on preparation for life in peace through socio-economic development. There was growing concern about the importance of children's toys in shaping values; a project had been proposed by the World Association for Orphans and Abandoned Children to focus attention on the need to eliminate war toys and foster more positive approaches to life. An international project, Global Co-operation for a Better World, was planned as a continuation of the Million Minutes of Peace Appeal, an IYP project; it was designed to enable people around the world to develop positive, pragmatic visions of peace and share them with others locally, nationally and internationally.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/91.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace The General Assembly,

Recalling its Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, contained in resolution 33/73 of 15 December 1978,

Recalling also that, in its resolutions 36/104 of 9 December 1981 and 39/157 of 17 December 1984, it reaffirmed the lasting importance and validity of the purposes and principles enshrined in the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, based on the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking into account its invitation to all Governments, the United Nations and the concerned organizations of its system, and other international as well as national organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, to incorporate active promotion of the ideas of the preparation of societies for life in peace in their programmes, including those concerning the observances of the International Year of Peace, 1986,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General on the results of the International Year of Peace and General Assembly resolution 42/13 of 28 October 1987 on the achievements of the International Year of Peace, as well as the high rank that issues pertaining to the preparation of societies for life in peace were accorded in those documents,

Appreciating the need for the preparation of societies for life in peace in order to promote the pattern of peaceful relations among nations,

Aware of the important role that the idea of the preparation of societies for life in peace can play in the process of confidence-building and laying the foundations of durable international security through fostering in the minds of men and societies a perception of the right to life in peace as a fundamental human right,

Recognizing the desirability of providing for the fullest implementation of the principles contained in the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace and for their further development in a manner consistent with and corresponding to the customs and traditions of each country,

Taking into account the growing timeliness of the Declaration as well as the valuable experience gained in the course of the implementation of its principles and objectives,

Considering that the year 1988 will mark the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General, prepared in accordance with resolution 39/157,

1. Solemnly reaffirms the lasting validity of the purposes and principles enshrined in the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, based on the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms the determination of the peoples of the United Nations to establish lasting conditions of world peace, international understanding and mutually beneficial co-operation;

3. Urges all States to continue their sustained efforts towards the fullest implementation of the Declaration at the national and the international levels and towards increasing its national and international role by strictly adhering to the principles enshrined in that document;

4. Recommends that all Governments and appropriate institutions, while elaborating their policies, in particular their education programmes and school curricula, should keep in mind the principles contained in the Declaration;

5. Also recommends that the appropriate bodies of the United Nations and the specialized agencies concerned, as well as other international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, should be guided by the principles and objectives of the Declaration while preparing their programmes of work;

6. Calls upon all Governments and the United Nations and the concerned organizations of its system, as well as other international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, to inform the Secretary-General of progress made in regard to the implementation of the Declaration in all its aspects;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

In explanation of its abstention, the United States said the specific terms of the text, like its predecessors, were based on premises that it could not accept. First, it suggested that societies were not prepared for life in peace; that was not so in the United States or it presumed in the majority of other nations. Secondly, the notion that Governments should mould the thinking of their people was totally alien to societies where, as in the United States, it was the people who moulded Governments. Thirdly, the draft resolution stressed the right to life in peace but ignored other basic human rights. The text also referred to valuable experience gained in the course of the implementation of the Declaration. In that connection, the United States could not help noting that only one year after adoption of the Declaration, one of the Governments sponsoring the current draft resolution had launched, together with massive foreign forces, a brutal war on its own population, which still continued.

Comprehensive system of international peace and security

Communications. During 1987, numerous communications in regard to a comprehensive system of international peace and security were addressed to the Secretary-General. Establishment of such a system had been proposed in 1986 by a group of Eastern European States.(7)

The USSR, on 30 March,(8) transmitted a communique by the Committee of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States parties to the 1955 Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance (Moscow, 24 and 25 March 1987), declaring that they were resolved to form a comprehensive system of international peace and security in co-operation with other countries and would continue to contribute to expanding international co-operation in all areas-military, political, economic and humanitarian-with the aim of establishing such a system. The Warsaw Treaty States parties reiterated their resolve to establish that system on several other occasions: at a subsequent session of their Foreign Ministers (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 28 and 29 October);(9) following a session of their Political Consultative Committee (Berlin, 28 and 29 May);(10) and after a meeting of their leading representatives (Berlin, 11 December).(11)

Several letters from the USSR contained statements by Mikhail S. Gorbachev, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the USSR. In a 16 February speech in Moscow at the International Forum for a Nuclear-Free World and the Survival of Mankind,(12) he declared that the USSR idea of establishing a comprehensive system of international security reflected its willingness to renounce its nuclear-Power status and reduce other weapons to a minimum reasonable sufficiency. In his answers to questions on a wide variety of world problems from the Indonesian newspaper Merdeka on 21 July(13) he stated that to the USSR the idea of comprehensive security encompassed international economic security; analysing the opportunities available had convinced the USSR that the best way of achieving that was to put into practice the principle of disarmament for development.

Mr. Gorbachev explained in the Soviet press on 17 September(14) that the proposed system called for continuity and compatibility with existing institutions for keeping the peace and that it could operate on the basis of the Charter of the United Nations and within the framework of that body. Its ability to function would be guaranteed by strict compliance with the Charter and additional unilateral undertakings by States, as well as by confidence-building measures and international co-operation in all areas. Having largely established that a comprehensive system of international security in the context of disarmament was both necessary and practicable, Mr. Gorbachev, in the foreign-policy section of his address at a meeting dedicated to the seventieth anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution, held in Moscow on 2 November,(15) said that it had to be shown that movement towards that goal was also necessary and practicable.

On 18 September,(16) the Byelorussian SSR stated that the elimination of nuclear weapons would be the most important component of a comprehensive system of international security and that the efforts of States should be directed towards creating such a system.

Poland, on 23 November,(17) on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, submitted a memorandum in which they declared that a transition to a non-violent and eventually demilitarized world was a historic necessity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, following a recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/93.

Comprehensive system of international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/92 of 4 December 1986 on the establishment of a comprehensive system of international peace and security,

Emphasizing that the great political, economic and social changes and scientific progress that have taken place in the world since the adoption of the Charter of the United Nations and the most acute and urgent task of the present day—to remove the threat of a world war, a nuclear war—give increased importance to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to the need for their more effective application in the conduct of States, wherever carried on,

Convinced that in the nuclear and space age, in conditions of the indivisibility of peace and security in all parts of the world and the increasing interdependence among nations, the challenges of our times make the strengthening of multilateral co-operation in all fields and collaboration on ways and means to implement the security system provided for in the Charter indispensable,

Convinced of the need for the effective universal application of the principle of refraining from the threat or use of force in international relations and of the importance of the role of the United Nations in this regard,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of every State to choose its political, economic, social and cultural systems without interference in any form by another State,

Recognizing the common interest of all nations in promoting an effective and comprehensive approach to security, which will seek the common security of all nations, by their joint actions in all fields,

Convinced that new thinking that stems from the knowledge that States can only survive with one another, not against one another, should govern their actions,

Emphasizing that in their approach to the problems of security, States should give priority to universally accepted human values and the promotion of the rule of law among nations in accordance with the Charter,

Expressing its firm conviction that ensuring reliable security for every State and for all States together is possible only through peaceful political means, by strengthening international mechanisms, above all the United Nations,

Emphasizing that, in accordance with the Charter, universal and comprehensive security requires joint efforts of all the participants in international relations, without exception, in the crucial, essential for international security and interrelated areas of disarmament, peaceful settlement of crises and conflicts, economic development and co-operation, preservation of the environment, and promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

1. Urges all States to focus their efforts on ensuring integral universal security through peaceful political means on an equal basis and in all spheres of international relations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and within the United Nations framework;

2. Solemnly reaffirms that the collective security mechanism embodied in the Charter constitutes the fundamental and irreplaceable instrument for the preservation of international peace and security;

3. Expresses its conviction that there should be continuation and development of an effective dialogue in the United Nations and other forums in all directions and at all levels, in order to bridge different concepts and examine generally acceptable ways and means of ensuring comprehensive security in accordance with the Charter, bearing in mind the realities of the nuclear and space age;

4. Declares that the road to security lies in practical steps to strengthen trust among States on the basis of overcoming confrontational approaches and consolidating the norms of civilized conduct and the atmosphere of information of the public and openness in international relations;

5. Reaffirms that all States should adhere strictly to the fundamental principles of international law, especially respect for the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs, refraining from the threat or use of force, peaceful settlement of disputes, equality and self-determination of peoples, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, co-operation among States and compliance in good faith with their obligations assumed in accordance with the Charter;

6. Calls upon all States, including in bilateral and multilateral forums dealing with disarmament issues, to multiply their efforts in order to prevent an arms race in outer space and to halt and reverse it on Earth, to lower the level of military confrontation and to enhance global stability;

7. Calls upon States and United Nations organs, within their mandate and in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, to utilize fully the existing means of peaceful settlement of international disputes and conflicts through negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, the use of good offices, including those of the Secretary-General, or other means of their own free choice;

8. Also calls upon all States and the appropriate economic forums to use to the maximum extent all opportunities for promoting a stable and equitable world economic environment and, to that end, to strengthen international co-operation for development and to work towards a new international economic order, elaborating the necessary and mutually acceptable measures ensuring economic development and equitable co-operation;

9. Further calls upon all States to co-operate broadly with each other in the humanitarian field and to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all;

10. Considers that interaction in the ecological sphere should become an integral part of comprehensive international security;

11. Calls upon Member States to strengthen and enhance the role and efficiency of the United Nations system as an indispensable instrument for the maintenance of international peace and security with a view to solving international issues for the benefit of all States and elaborating guarantees of comprehensive security for all on an equal basis;

12. Further calls for the implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations;

13. Calls upon international and national non-governmental organizations and political and public figures in all countries to make their positive contribution to the development of a productive and meaningful international dialogue on the ways and means of promoting comprehensive security based on the Charter and within the United Nations framework;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to explore the ways and means of organizing an exchange of views on the subject among the Member States and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Comprehensive system of international peace and security".

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Bahamas, Barbados, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, Liberia, Malawi, Malta, Morocco, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Paraguay, Philippines, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Zaire.

While acknowledging that the text was an improvement over that of the previous year,⁽¹⁸⁾ the United States found it remained a vague initiative, full of generalizations which could distort the foundation of the United Nations Charter. The United States believed that the Organization and its existing associated bodies already constituted a system capable of maintaining international peace and security. The word "integral" in paragraph 1 was an attempt to establish automatic and inflexible links among various aspects of security, enabling Member States to inject non-germane issues into United Nations deliberations. Paragraphs 8, 9 and 10 underscored United States concerns about paragraph 1, and the addition of paragraph 12 in the revised draft called into question the sponsors' sincerity in their quest for consensus. It further opposed the text because the implementation of the concept would result in a major restructuring of the United Nations system, which would be duplicative, ideological and financially burdensome.

Costa Rica explained that, whereas it had supported the 1986 resolution, it opposed the current text because of the lack of certainty in the proposals and the abrupt changes in terms and concepts in its various versions. Further, its opposition was prompted by the difference it perceived between the aims of the preambular and the operative paragraphs. The preambular paragraphs seemed to support United Nations international security actions, but the operative ones had to be construed as seeking reform of the Charter through a procedure set forth in paragraph 14, although that was not clearly stated.

Denmark, speaking on behalf of the 12 member States of the European Community (EC), said that they had not been persuaded that it was necessary to establish a comprehensive system of international peace and security; that the United Nations Charter already provided the basis for the maintenance of international peace and security; and that the problem did not lie in the system but in the effective implementation of the Charter's obligations by all Member States. Sweden spoke in like manner but sympathized with many of the considerations that lay behind the draft resolution. Australia also saw no need for a new system of international peace and security; the United Nations system did not need to be replaced. Canada abstained because it viewed the draft as representing a new, more co-operative approach by the USSR to international affairs. If it had not taken that view, Canada would have opposed the draft as not representing its approach to international peace and security; Member States must work to enhance the Charter's effectiveness and other existing mechanisms and incorporate realistic measures into an ever-growing, well-founded structure. China, noting that the text failed to state clearly the relationship between the concept of comprehensive security and the Charter, abstained because the sponsors had not considered the views of others. Egypt abstained not because it objected to the draft's content, but because it contained undefined concepts. Similarly, more information, clarification and analysis were necessary for Malta to understand the meaning and scope of the proposal.

Pakistan had a number of problems with the text: the omission of mention of the threats to peace and security arising from violations of the Charter and the regional disputes which were a priority for smaller, non-nuclear countries, the lack of reference to foreign occupation of independent States, an unclear reference to universally accepted human values, and insufficient projection of the security threat arising from underdevelopment and poverty.

Ambiguities in the text disturbed Burma and the Philippines. Other abstentions were registered by Cameroon and Jamaica, which felt that new concepts might be explored if they were relevant and focused.

Although voting in favour of the draft, a number of countries expressed reservations about it. Finland stated that some of its formulations, such as "confrontational approaches", "norms of civilized conduct" and "atmosphere of information" in paragraph 4, were unduly vague. Malaysia hoped that its reservations could be met through further refinement of the ideas in the text and acknowledged that the contemporary world demanded change, but said it wished to see only change that would foster rather than destroy what had been achieved. Mexico stated that its vote should not be construed as changing the Charter's provisions in any way.

The Sudan stressed that any initiative on international peace and security should adhere to the Charter's principles; that such initiatives should remain within the framework of the United Nations, be geared to strengthening the role of the Security Council and address themselves to the root causes of current problems; and that full recognition should be accorded to the Charter's collective security system.

Uruguay supported the draft with the reservation that its implementation not depart from the objective of strengthening respect for the Charter's principles and not promote an alternative structure to the system of collective security.

Review of peace-keeping operations

The Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, established by the General Assembly in 1965,⁽¹⁾ did not meet in 1987. United Nations peace-keeping forces continued to operate in Cyprus (see p. 246) and Lebanon (see p. 277) and in the Golan Heights between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic (see p. 288).

In a 9 October note verbale to the Secretary-General,⁽²⁾ New Zealand offered to expand its contribution to United Nations peace-keeping operations through the periodic deployment of small units of all three services of its armed forces; those units were self-contained, able to operate as separate national entities and had appropriate self-defence capability. In particular, the armed forces were well-equipped to provide at short notice small groups of skilled officers and non-commissioned officers for special tasks or for logistical and truce-monitoring roles. The offer was made on the understanding that each request would be subject to prior consultations with the New Zealand Government and that in the matter of financial arrangements the United Nations would conform to established practice.

On 3 December,(3) Sweden, on behalf also of Denmark, Finland and Norway, informed the Secretary-General of the publication of the third edition of a study entitled Nordic UN Stand-by Forces which updated an earlier version submitted in 1978.(4) Based on experiences in United Nations operations up to January 1986, its aim was to give basic information about Nordic military United Nations co-operation and to serve as a handbook for training officers appointed to United Nations duty. The handbook described, within the framework of a fictitious peace-keeping mission, its launching, its maintenance and its closing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/161 without vote.

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965, 2053 A (XX) of 15 December 1965, 2249(S-V) of 23 May 1967, 2308(XXII) of 13 December 1967, 2451(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2670(XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2835(XXVI) of 17 December 1971, 2965(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3091(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3239(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3457(XXX) of 10 December 1975, 31/105 of 15 December 1976, 32/106 of 15 December 1977, 33/114 of 18 December 1978, 34/53 of 23 November 1979, 35/121 of 11 December 1980, 36/37 of 18 November 1981, 37/93 of 10 December 1982, 38/81 of 15 December 1983, 39/97 of 14 December 1984, 40/163 of 16 December 1985 and 41/67 of 3 December 1986,

Convinced that the United Nations peace-keeping operations are an integral component of enhancing the efficiency of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security,

Aware of the extremely difficult financial situation of the United Nations peace-keeping forces in the light of the heavy burden incurred by the troop contributors, especially those from developing countries,

1. Requests the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, in accordance with its mandate, to resume its work in 1988 for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects with a view to strengthening the role of the United Nations in this field, taking into account the difficult financial situation of peace-keeping operations;

2. Further requests the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects".

General Assembly resolution 42/161

8 December 1987 Meeting 95 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/42/813) without vote, 25 November (meeting 34); 2-nation draft (A/SPC/42/L.30); agenda item 77.

Sponsors: Austria, Nigeria.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: SPC 5-7, 33, 34; plenary 95.

Two other draft resolutions had been submitted to the Special Political Committee. The first was sponsored by Australia, Canada, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, Norway and Sweden.(5) The second was submitted by the Committee's Chairman,(6) following informal consultations; subsequently, he withdrew that draft. After the two-nation text was introduced in the Committee, Finland stated that the sponsors of the first draft would not put it to the Committee for a decision provided that the two-nation text was adopted without a vote.

The major difference between the two drafts which were withdrawn and the adopted text was that the latter specifically requested the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to resume its work and submit a report in 1988.

Speaking for the 12 EC members, Denmark recalled that during the debate they had expressed regret that the Special Committee had continued to find no basis for reactivating its work; they welcomed the wider international interest in peace-keeping operations which had made possible the consensus on the draft, and they reiterated the importance of collective responsibility for financing those operations.

Turkey hoped that the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations would make progress in 1988 in developing a set of universally acceptable guidelines, while Ghana hoped that it would resume its meetings early in the year in order to report to the Assembly's forty-third session. Ghana further stated that it was disturbed by the financial situation facing peace-keeping operations, which made the troop-contributing countries bear the brunt of the costs.

The Syrian Arab Republic recalled its consistent position that such operations should not assume a permanent character and that their costs must be borne by the aggressor in particular.

International Year of Peace (1986)

The impetus for declaring 1986 an International Year of Peace derived from the international situation during the early 1980s, the Secretary-General stated in an August 1987 report summarizing IYP activities.⁽¹⁾ The lack of progress in efforts to curb the arms race, the continuing tensions and conflicts threatening global security and the rapid deterioration of economic and social conditions in various areas of the world prompted global concern. Multilateralism was perceived to be losing momentum and credibility. In that context, it was the Secretary-General's intention to prepare IYP as a global programme addressing that concern and aimed at generating the participation of Governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOS), academic institutions, local groups and people.

The objectives of IYP, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽²⁾ were to stimulate action in the promotion of peace, international security and co-operation and the peaceful resolution of conflicts; to strengthen the United Nations as an instrument for peace; and to focus attention on the basic requirements of peace, in particular problems of development, disarmament, human rights, human needs and the preparation for life in peace.

Discussed in the report were the preparations for IYP, implementation of the programme for the Year, its effects—the agenda for peace in the twenty-first century—and, in annexes, financing of IYP and the Trust Fund for the Promotion of Peace, a list of States that had established national co-ordinating mechanisms for IYP, and recipients of the “Peace Messenger” award. An October addendum⁽³⁾ summarized IYP activities based on information received from Governments, NGOs and United Nations information centres.

As at 1 September, 139 Member States and seven non-member States had responded to a request from the Secretary-General for information and comments. Many Governments felt that activities and projects initiated during the Year should continue.

Many NGOS indicated their willingness to continue their co-operation with the United Nations in promoting peace, and many academic institutions stated their intention to continue their work in peace studies. Acknowledging the NGO contribution to promoting peace, the Secretary-General presented a “Peace Messenger” certificate to 315 international and national organizations and 58 cities.

The secretariat for IYP, which had co-ordinated the implementation of its programme, ceased to function at the end of the Year. In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transformed the Trust Fund for IYP into the Trust Fund for the Promotion of Peace, which as at 1 August 1987 had a balance of $68,090. Voluntary contributions to the Fund would be used to support relevant projects and activities.

The Secretary-General suggested that Member States and interested organizations be invited to inform the Secretariat of continuing initiatives. He stated that concerted action inspired by IYP in the remaining years of the century could give substance to the vision of the year 2000 as opening a new era in international relations.

In a November report⁽⁵⁾ on implementation of the 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace (see p. 116), the Secretary-General reviewed discussions on such preparation at regional seminars for IYP and summarized relevant activities during IYP.

Communications. In 1987, a number of communications were addressed to the Secretary-General regarding IYP.

The USSR transmitted an 8 January message⁽⁶⁾ from Mikhail S. Gorbachev, stating that, although IYP had not halted the arms race, it had not failed to live up to its political symbolism—never before had the world community so concentrated its attention on the problems of war and peace. The Year had also been a stimulus to practical action to rid mankind of the threat of nuclear war; the USSR was determined to press towards the goal of making peace a permanent reality.

The German Democratic Republic transmitted a 16 January address⁽⁷⁾ by Erich Honecker, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany, to the diplomatic corps, declaring that his country had contributed its share during IYP and was continuing its efforts towards restoring normalcy to international relations. On 6 April,⁽⁸⁾ the German Democratic Republic conveyed its comments on IYP and a list of its major national activities in the second half of IYP. It stated that it was imperative to follow up the various initiatives, that nations would gain nothing from massive arms build-ups and confrontation, and that they would benefit only by disarmament, detente and co-operation.

Bulgaria transmitted a 29 January⁽⁹⁾ message from Todor Zhivkov, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party, in which he stated that IYP had mobilized world public opinion, Governments, NGOS and other organizations on behalf of efforts to preserve peace and to reduce and gradually eliminate the threat of nuclear destruction.

Czechoslovakia, on 6 March,(10) forwarded appeals by participants in the Conference of the Socialist Union of Youth of the Pedagogical Faculty of Charles University, Prague, and by the pedagogues, staff members and-students of J. E. Purkyne University, Brno, pledging to support IYP and asking that it be extended to a decade of peace. Information major IYP observances in Czechoslovakia was forwarded in a letter of 20 March (11)

The Byelorussian SSR, on 19 March,(12) transmitted information on its observance, declaring that the people took an active part in IYP events, which were widely reported by the mass media, and that the world now had a deeper awareness of the danger of a military holocaust and of the need to improve international relations, end nuclear tests, disarm and achieve peaceful accords. Similarly, Indonesia (31 July),(13) Mongolia (28 March),(14) the Ukrainian SSR (21 April)(15) and Yugoslavia (11 May)(16) reported on their IYP activities.

Austria and Hungary, on 27 April,(17) submitted a Declaration on acting for disarmament and a world of security, peace, freedom and solidarity, adopted by the second World Meeting of War Veterans, Resistants and War Victims (Vienna, 1-3 December 1986), held within the framework of IYP.

On 14 April 1987,(18) the United Kingdom responded to a 1986 letter(19) from Argentina concerning its IYP activities which had referred to an international campaign organized by the Argentine Peace Council for the removal of an alleged nuclear base from the Falkland Islands (Malvinas). The United Kingdom stated that it was the long-standing practice of nuclear-weapon States neither to confirm nor deny the presence or absence of nuclear weapons in any location at any particular time. However, it had complied, and would continue to comply, with its obligations under the Additional Protocols(20) to the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco): first, in not deploying nuclear weapons in territories for which the United Kingdom was internationally responsible within the Treaty's zone of application, which included the Falkland Islands, and second, in not deploying such weapons in the territories for which the Treaty was in force.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/13 without vote.

Achievements of the International Year of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/16 of 16 November 1982, 38/56 of 7 December 1983, 39/10 of 8 November 1984, 40/3 of 24 October 1985, 40/10 of 11 November 1985 and 41/9 of 24 October 1986 on the International Year of Peace,

Recalling also that the Proclamation of the International Year of Peace by its resolution 40/3 constituted a meaningful event in the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations,

Noting that the Proclamation of the International Year of Peace has generated an enthusiastic response on the part of the international community and provided impetus for increased international co-operation towards the attainment of peace,

Considering that the Proclamation and the programme of the International Year of Peace, as well as the numerous efforts and activities stimulated within the United Nations system and the international community, have made a concrete and substantive contribution towards understanding and dialogue among nations and peoples and towards the efforts required to achieve the goal of true peace,

Recalling that the programme of the Year was designed primarily to promote activities at the international, regional and national levels aimed at bringing about a sustained increase in understanding of and support for the work of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the objectives of the Year were of assistance in stimulating action for the promotion of international peace, security and co-operation, the solution of conflicts by peaceful means and the strengthening of the United Nations as an instrument of peace,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme of the International Year of Peace;

2. Affirms that peace is a fundamental element of human existence, that its promotion is one of the primary purposes of the United Nations and that its attainment is the common ideal of all the peoples of the world;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the secretariat of the International Year of Peace for all the activities undertaken in implementation of the programme of the Year, as well as for the recognition conferred by the Secretary-General on international and national non-governmental organizations and on cities through the award to them of "Peace Messenger" certificates;

4. Expresses its appreciation to Member States, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and the international community as a whole for the enthusiastic welcome extended to the programme of the International Year of Peace and for the efforts made to promote it;

5. Urges Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the world community to persevere in those efforts, developing initiatives conducive to the objectives of the Year, and to join the United Nations in its noble purpose of ensuring that humanity reaches the threshold of the twenty-first century in the full enjoyment of a stable and lasting peace;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States and interested organizations to inform the Secretariat of their activities and initiatives in pursuit of those ends, and to submit a report on important new developments throughout the world to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session under an item entitled "Achievements of the International Year of Peace";

7. Expresses the hope that the ideals and objectives contained in the Proclamation of the International Year of Peace will continue to be an inspiration for concerted action during the closing years of this century which may materialize the vision of the year 2000 as the starting-point of a new era in international relations.

28 October 1987 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

49-nation draft (A/42/L.12 & Add.1); agenda item 26.

Although joining in the consensus, some countries-Australia, Denmark, on behalf of the 12 EC members, and Japan-stated that to continue the idea of IYP into successive sessions of the Assembly could not be justified considering the 1980 Economic and Social Council guidelines on inter-national years,(21) or that at the very least it was currently premature to decide that it should be included in the agenda for the 1989 session. Finland, for the five Nordic countries, said that although they had reservations on the resolution, they had joined in the consensus on the understanding that its implementation would comply fully with the 1980 guidelines.

Chapter V

Africa

In 1987, the United Nations continued to consider and act on a number of political issues in Africa, in particular on South Africa's apartheid policy and its aggression against neighbouring States. It was also kept informed about other conflicts among African States.

The question of apartheid was debated in particular by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Special Committee against Apartheid, but also by a number of other bodies. The Assembly adopted eight resolutions dealing with South Africa's apartheid policies, which, being similar in content to those of previous years, showed the continuing agreement among the majority of Member States on apartheid and on the Organization's role in the struggle for its abolition. The Council took up the situation in South Africa in February and, in April, expressed its concern about a South African decree restricting political protests.

After repeated Angolan charges of South African aggression against its territory, the Security Council in November condemned South Africa for its aggression and called for the immediate withdrawal of its troops from Angola. It reiterated that position in December, when it also condemned South Africa for delaying its withdrawal. The Council was further informed by other southern African States-Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia-about alleged aggressive acts of South Africa against them.

The territorial dispute between Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya continued in 1987 with each alleging aggression by the other. Ethiopia and the Sudan also exchanged charges of interference in their internal affairs.

The General Assembly reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the Indian Ocean island of Mayotte, appealed for contributions to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, which provided scholarships for students from the region, and called for continued co-operation with the Organization of African Unity.

South Africa and apartheid

South Africa's system of enforced racial separation—the policy of apartheid—continued to be of major concern to the international community throughout 1987. The General Assembly, the 'Security Council and various other United Nations bodies continued their activities aimed at pressuring the apartheid regime into dismantling its system of racial discrimination, which had been condemned as a crime against humanity. The Secretary-General argued that the policy of apartheid led to resistance and oppression and poisoned the quality of life for all of South Africa's inhabitants; as an institutionalized system of racial discrimination, it denied fundamental human rights to the great majority of the population and was therefore contrary to the most basic principles of the United Nations Charter (see p. 5). In the Assembly's view, comprehensive mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter remained the most peaceful and effective means through which the international community could exert pressure on South Africa.

As in previous years, of particular concern to the world community were the escalation of repression and State-induced terror against opponents of apartheid, the continued intransigence of South Africa demonstrated through the extension of the state of emergency, the large number of arbitrary arrests, the increased use of vigilante groups and the muzzling of the press; its acts of aggression and destabilization against neighbouring States; and the continuing illegal occupation of Namibia (see p. 984).

It was against this political background that the General Assembly in November adopted, as it had for many years, a series of resolutions aimed at sustaining and strengthening international pressure against the apartheid policies of South Africa.

Condemning the policy and practice of apartheid, and in order to create appropriate conditions for free consultations on a just and lasting solution to the conflict in South Africa, the Assembly demanded the lifting of the state of emergency, the release of political prisoners, the lifting of the ban on the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC) and other political organizations, and the elimination of apartheid laws (resolution 42/23 A). The Assembly reaffirmed that apartheid was a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security, and decided that the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions by the Security Council would be the most effective and appropriate means to bring it to an end (42/23 C). In particular, the Council was urged to impose an oil embargo against South Africa (42/23 F). Pending the imposition of such sanctions, the Assembly urged all States to adopt unilateral measures (42/23 B).

The Assembly further outlined concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid. In that context, besides calling again on the Council to impose mandatory sanctions, it listed measures that States could impose unilaterally. These included the cessation of investments, loans and oil exports; an end to all promotion of and support for trade with South Africa; and the termination of all forms of military, police and intelligence cooperation with South Africa. States were also requested to increase assistance to the front-line States, the victims of apartheid and the liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) (42/23 G). The Assembly demanded that Israel terminate its military, nuclear, economic and other collaboration with South Africa (42/23 D).

The Assembly also endorsed the proposed programme of work for the Special Committee against Apartheid and allocated $390,000 from the United Nations regular budget for special projects to be decided by the Committee, requesting States to provide financial and other assistance for those projects (42/23 E). It appealed for increased contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa (42/23 H).

The Security Council met in February to consider the question of South Africa; a draft resolution calling for the imposition of mandatory sanctions against that country was not adopted owing to the negative votes of permanent members—the United Kingdom and the United States. Subsequent to consultations in April, the Council President issued a statement expressing the members' concern about a South African decree under which nearly all forms of protest against detentions without trial or support for those detained were prohibited. They called on South Africa to free all political prisoners and detainees and, more generally, to end the oppression and repression of the black majority by bringing apartheid to an end.

During its first regular session in May, the Economic and Social Council extensively discussed the problem of apartheid. It reiterated that the continued activities of transnational corporations (TNCs) in South Africa perpetuated the system of apartheid and urged all Governments that had not done so to ensure that TNCs under their jurisdiction terminated those activities (resolution 1987/56).

Aspects of apartheid were also considered by the Commission on Human Rights, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) and the Commission on Transnational Corporations.

General aspects

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly and the Security Council,⁽¹⁾ described the situation in South Africa and the Committee's activities to intensify the international campaign against apartheid. The report, which included recommendations for further action, covered the period until August 1987; developments later in the year were described in the Committee's 1988 report.⁽²⁾

The Committee followed with grave concern the rapidly deteriorating situation in and around South Africa and the regime's mounting reign of terror in the face of an unprecedented nation-wide resistance to apartheid. The results of the whites-only elections in May and the increase in the majority of the ruling National Party were interpreted by the Committee as reflecting the fears and intransigence of most of the white minority.

The state of emergency was renewed in June; in the view of the Committee, this revealed South Africa as a police State where the security forces had almost unlimited powers of repression and where even mild political dissent could be obstructed and criminalized. The Committee reported further on the extensive use of detention without trial, the increasing number of attacks and murders committed by vigilante groups, and the severe restrictions imposed on domestic and foreign media.

The Committee reported that the resistance to apartheid in South Africa had grown and that freedom fighters had stepped up their armed and underground struggle. The black labour movement continued to play a major role in opposing apartheid, as did church leaders and religious institutions. There was also wider opposition by democratic whites, as intellectuals of stature in the National Party called for negotiations with representatives of the African majority, and some Afrikaners met with ANC representatives at Dakar, Senegal, in July to outline areas of agreement concerning the future of South Africa.

During 1987, the Committee repeatedly drew the attention of the international community to the repressive policies of the South African Government by issuing statements, especially in connection with arrests and detentions of anti-apartheid activists. It participated in conferences, seminars and other gatherings of non-governmental organizations (NGOS) or anti-apartheid groups and granted assistance in support of their campaigns and projects aimed at mobilizing public opinion in solidarity with the struggle in South Africa. The Committee Chairman held discussions with senior officials in a number of countries and addressed the Security Council.

The Committee emphasized the urgency of concerted, comprehensive sanctions and called on the international community to alleviate the suffering of detainees, women and children. It recommended that the General Assembly demand the lifting of the state of emergency, the release all political prisoners and the end of the ban on national liberation movements. The Assembly was further requested to authorize the Committee to continue mobilizing international action against apartheid through publicity, meetings, seminars, conferences, hearings, consultations, missions and other related activities.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

On 19 February, in a resolution on southern Africa,⁽³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and its national liberation movements by all means, including armed struggle, for the elimination of apartheid, and reiterated that peace in South Africa could be guaranteed only by establishing majority rule through the full exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in an undivided South Africa. On 26 February,^(*) the Commission reaffirmed the right of the South African people to self-determination, independence and enjoyment of the natural resources of their territory, as well as the right to dispose of the resources for their greater well-being and to obtain just reparation for their exploitation.

Communications. During 1987, communications on general aspects of South Africa and apartheid were sent by a number of intergovernmental organizations to the Secretary-General.

The final communique and the resolutions of the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January) were forwarded by the host country.⁽⁵⁾ In one resolution, dealing with support to the liberation struggle in South Africa, the Conference reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle, including armed struggle, and strongly condemned South Africa for its apartheid policy. It declared that that policy and minority rule in South Africa were the root-causes for the explosive situation in southern Africa and that the only basis for a just solution in that region was the eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a majority Government based on free and universal suffrage by the entire adult population in a united and non-fragmented South Africa.

Kuwait, the Chairman of the 1987 session of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, on 6 December,⁽⁶⁾ the eve of a United States-USSR summit meeting (see p. 47), issued a message to both leaders, reminding them of certain issues that concerned mankind as a whole, among them the rights of the oppressed African majority in South Africa.

The Foreign Ministers of the 12 member States of the European Community (EC) on 25 May reaffirmed that the objective of their policy towards South Africa remained the total dismantlement of apartheid and its replacement by a genuinely democratic, non-racial system of government. Calling for a process of fundamental but peaceful change, they proposed a number of steps to be undertaken to allow a national dialogue to begin. The statement to that effect was sent by Belgium.⁽⁷⁾

Malaysia, on 15 July, transmitted the final statement of the fifth session of the InterAction Council (Kuala Lumpur, 19-21 April)⁽⁸⁾—composed of some of the world's elder statesmen—suggesting a number of measures for a peaceful transition towards a peaceful, just, democratic and multiracial society in South Africa.

Samoa, the 1987 Chairman of the South Pacific Forum, forwarded the final communique of that organization's eighteenth meeting (Apia, 29 and 30 May).⁽⁹⁾ The Forum noted the unprecedented turmoil in South Africa arising directly out of the abhorrent policies of apartheid and the elections of 6 May.

The Foreign Ministers of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) (Twentieth Ministerial Meeting, Singapore, 15 and 16 June), in a joint 16 June statement,⁽¹⁰⁾ reiterated their condemnation of the repressive practices of South Africa, called for the abolishment of apartheid and reaffirmed their support for a non-racial and democratic society based on majority rule.

Canada, as host of the 1987 Commonwealth heads of Government meeting, forwarded the Okanagan Statement on Southern Africa and Programme of Action (see p. 131).⁽¹¹⁾ Zimbabwe transmitted the final communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October).⁽¹²⁾ They expressed concern at the deteriorating situation in South Africa, characterized by mass arrests and detentions and a death toll of innocents that in their view had reached genocidal proportions. They recalled the determination by successive summit meetings of the Movement that apartheid could not be reformed but had to be totally eradicated.

Ghana forwarded a 13 March communique issued at the end of a two-day visit of the Zambian President to Ghana.⁽¹³⁾ In it, the two heads of State condemned the obnoxious apartheid policy of the minority régime in Pretoria as an affront not only to the black people of South Africa but to the black race generally.

The Final Declaration of an Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference (Amman, 8-11 November) was forwarded by Jordan.⁽¹⁴⁾ It contained the renewed commitment of the Arab leaders to Afro-Arab co-operation and their condemnation of the terrorism and racial discrimination practised by South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted eight resolutions on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa. Resolution 42/23 G, adopted by recorded vote, dealt with the more general aspects of the issue.

Concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the aggravation of the situation in South Africa caused by the policy of apartheid, and in particular by the continuation of the nation-wide state of emergency,

Convinced that the root-cause of the crisis in southern Africa is the policy of apartheid,

Noting with grave concern that in order to perpetuate apartheid in South Africa the authorities there have increasingly committed acts of aggression and breaches of the peace,

Convinced that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of majority rule on the basis of the free and fair exercise of universal adult suffrage can lead to a peaceful and lasting solution in South Africa,

Noting that the so-called reforms in South Africa have the effect of further entrenching the apartheid system and further dividing the people of South Africa,

Recognizing that the policy of bantustanization deprives the majority of the people of their citizenship and makes them foreigners in their own country,

Recognizing the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community to take all necessary action for the eradication of apartheid, and, in particular, the need for increased and effective pressure on the South African authorities as a peaceful means of achieving the abolition of apartheid,

Encouraged, in this context, by the growing international consensus, as demonstrated by the adoption of Security Council resolution 569(1985) of 26 July 1985, and the increase in and expansion of national, regional and intergovernmental measures to this end,

Taking note of the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa,

Convinced of the vital importance of the strict observance of Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by which the Council instituted a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, and Council resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 concerning the import of arms, ammunition and military vehicles produced in South Africa, and of the need to make these embargoes fully effective in conformity with Council resolution 591(1986) of 28 November 1986,

Commending the national policies not to sell and export oil to South Africa,

Considering that measures to ensure effective and scrupulous implementation of such embargoes through international co-operation are essential and urgent,

Taking note, in this respect, of the efforts undertaken by the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa,

Noting with deep concern that, through a combination of military and economic pressures, in violation of international law, the authorities of South Africa have increasingly resorted to economic reprisals and aggression against, and destabilization of, the neighbouring States,

Considering that contacts between apartheid South Africa and the front-line and other neighbouring States, necessitated by geography, colonial legacy and other reasons, should not be used by other States as a pretext for legitimizing the apartheid system or justifying attempts to break the international isolation of that system,

Convinced that the existence of apartheid will continue to lead to ever-increasing resistance by the oppressed people, by all possible means, and increased tension and conflict that will have far-reaching consequences for southern Africa and the world,

Convinced that policies of collaboration with the apartheid regime, instead of respect for the legitimate aspirations of the genuine representatives of the great majority of the people, will encourage its repression and aggression against neighbouring States and its defiance of the United Nations,

Expressing its full support for the legitimate aspiration of African States and peoples, and of the Organization of African Unity, for the total liberation of the continent of Africa from colonialism and racism,

1. Strongly condemns the policy of apartheid which deprives the majority of the South African population of their citizenship, fundamental freedoms and human rights;

2. Strongly condemns the South African authorities for the killings, arbitrary mass arrests and detention of members of mass organizations as well as of individuals, the overwhelming majority of whom belong to the majority population, who oppose the apartheid system and the state of emergency, and for the detention of and use of violence against children;

3. Further condemns the overt and the covert aggressive actions, which South Africa has increasingly carried out for the destabilization of neighbouring States, as well as those aimed against refugees from South Africa and Namibia;

4. Demands that the authorities of South Africa:

(a) Release immediately and unconditionally Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners, detainees and restrictees;

- (b) Immediately lift the state of emergency;
- (c) Abrogate discriminatory laws and lift bans on all organizations and individuals, as well as end restrictions on and censorship of news media;
- (d) Grant freedom of association and full trade union rights to all workers of South Africa;
- (e) Initiate without pre-conditions a political dialogue with genuine leaders of the majority population with a view to eradicating apartheid without delay and establishing a representative government;
- (f) Eradicate the bantustan structures;
- (g) Immediately withdraw all their troops from southern Angola and end the destabilization of front-line and other States;

5. Urges the Security Council to consider without delay the adoption of effective mandatory sanctions against South Africa;

6. Further urges the Security Council to take steps for the strict implementation of the mandatory arms embargo instituted by it in resolution 418(1977) and of the arms embargo requested in its resolution 558(1984) and, within the context of the relevant resolutions, to secure an end to military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and the import of military equipment or supplies from South Africa;

7. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so, pending mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, to consider national legislative or other appropriate measures to increase the pressure on the apartheid régime of South Africa, such as:

- (a) Cessation of further investment in, and financial loans to, South Africa;
- (b) An end to all promotion of and support for trade with South Africa;
- (c) Prohibition of the sale of krugerrand and all other coins minted in South Africa;
- (d) Cessation of all forms of military, police or intelligence co-operation with the authorities of South Africa, in particular the sale of computer equipment;
- (e) An end to nuclear collaboration with South Africa;
- (f) Cessation of export and sale of oil to South Africa;

8. Appeals to all States, organizations and institutions recognizing the pressing need, existing and potential, of South Africa's neighbouring States for economic assistance:

(a) To increase assistance to the front-line States and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference in order to increase their economic strength and independence from South Africa;

(b) To increase humanitarian, legal, educational and other such assistance and support to the victims of apartheid, to the liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and to all those struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society in South Africa;

9. Appeals to all Governments and organizations to take appropriate action for the cessation of all academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations that would support the apartheid regime of South Africa, as well as relations with individuals, institutions and other bodies endorsing or based on apartheid;

10. Commends the States that have already adopted voluntary measures against the apartheid regime of South Africa in accordance with General Assembly resolution

40/64 I of 10 December 1985 and invites those which have not yet done so to follow their example;

11. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the total eradication of apartheid and for the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society in which all the people, irrespective of race, colour or creed, enjoy fundamental freedoms and human rights;

12. Pays tribute to and expresses solidarity with organizations and individuals struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

Before and after the vote, States explained their votes on the eight resolutions on apartheid. Several commented favourably on the language generally used in the texts. Denmark, speaking on behalf of the 12 EC member States, welcomed the streamlining of the resolutions and the efforts that had been made to remove contentious language. Belgium approved of the more precise and factual language and the elimination of certain criticisms. The United States recognized and appreciated the constructive change in the formulations. Ireland, too, was happy to see that some of the contentious language which had characterized earlier resolutions was deleted in 1987. Austria, Canada, Malta and Portugal made similar remarks. France, while recognizing the efforts that had been made to be more realistic, noted that the excessive language that had been maintained meant that it would not be possible for all the drafts to be adopted unanimously.

Guatemala voted in favour of all the drafts mainly out of respect for basic human rights. It proposed that the principle of free, democratic elections on the basis of one man, one vote, without distinction as to race, colour, sex, language or creed, was respected and it argued that development was impossible for a people subjected to a constant state of oppression.

Referring to resolution 42/23 G, France expressed reservations on paragraph 5, recalling that the United Nations Charter conferred on the Security Council alone powers to adopt binding decisions. Israel, which like France voted in favour of that resolution, made the same reservation. Japan and Portugal stated in general terms their difficulties with some formulations used in the text. A number of countries also noted that it was the prerogative of the Security Council to adopt binding sanctions and that therefore references to that effect in Assembly resolutions were inappropriate. Among them were Austria, Belgium, Denmark (for EC) and Iceland (on behalf of the five Nordic countries).

Some States referred to calls for ceasing sports relations with South Africa, which were also contained in other resolutions on South Africa's apartheid policies (see p. 140).

France pointed out that the voluntary measures recommended in paragraph 7 of resolution 42/23 G did not necessarily overlap action it might take to increase pressure on South Africa.

In accordance with a General Assembly decision that organizations and individuals having a special interest in the item on apartheid would, at their request, be heard by the Special Political Committee, representatives of the following addressed the Committee on 11 and 12 November: International Confederation of Free Trade Unions; National Lawyers Guild; Episcopal Churchpeople for a Free Southern Africa; Lutheran World Federation; American Committee on Africa; Earth against Apartheid Foundation, Inc.; Socialist Workers Party; Westchester People's Action Coalition; Puerto Rican Socialist Party; National Council of Churches; Danchurchaid, Copenhagen; National Baptist Convention, Inc.; Washington Office on Africa; National Conference of Black Lawyers; United States Peace Council; South African Council of Churches. Also, speaking in their personal capacity were United States Congressman George Crockett, Reverend Jesse Jackson and Reverend Evelyn Bush.

On 16 November, by decision 42/409, the Assembly took note of the Committee's report on the hearings.⁽¹⁵⁾

Other international action to eliminate apartheid

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid continued promoting an international campaign against South Africa's racial policies, and organized, assisted and participated in a number of meetings, conferences and seminars to mobilize action against the apartheid regime.⁽¹⁾ The activities were aimed in particular at promoting the international campaign for the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions as well as sports and cultural boycotts against South Africa. Other main activities were the campaign for the release of all political prisoners and the situation of women and children under apartheid.

The International Student Conference in Solidarity with the Struggle of the Students of Southern Africa (London, 31 July-3 August) was organized by the Committee. It brought together 140 representatives and leaders from national, regional and international student and youth organizations, various United Nations bodies, national liberation movements, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. Participants adopted a Declaration and a Programme of Action, which followed closely the United Nations position on the apartheid issue.

The Committee assisted in organizing, with the Association of West European Parliamentarians for Action against Apartheid, a Seminar on Support to the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and Action against Apartheid (Strasbourg, France, 13-15 May). It was attended by approximately 150 participants, about one third of whom were parliamentarians and the rest representatives of African countries, European NGOs and anti-apartheid movements. Among topics covered were the situation in South Africa, particularly in view of the 6 May elections, South Africa's efforts to destabilize neighbouring countries and the need for assistance to them, and Western sanctions against South Africa, including problems of their scope and implementation.

In the cultural field, the Committee contributed to the International Literary Symposium against Apartheid (Brazzaville, Congo, 25-30 May). It was attended by more than 200 participants who, in a declaration, appealed to the mass media and international public opinion to intensify the campaign for the eradication of apartheid and called on all States to sever relations with South Africa in accordance with resolutions of the United Nations and OAU.

The International Conference on Culture in Another South Africa (CASA) (Amsterdam, December), organized by the CASA Foundation and the Anti-Apartheid Movement of the Netherlands, in co-operation with the Amsterdam municipality and various NGOs and individuals, was supported by the Committee. The Conference reaffirmed United Nations policy on the cultural boycott of South Africa and discussed various aspects of cultural activities there.

The International Conference against Apartheid Sport (Harare, Zimbabwe, 5-7 November) was supported by the Committee and sponsored by the South African Non-Racial Olympic Committee and African sporting organizations. The Conference set strategies for South Africa's further isolation from international sports (see also p. 159).

The Committee also assisted the Conference on Peoples of the World against Apartheid for a Democratic South Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 1-4 December), attended by over 500 participants representing Governments, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, national liberation movements and the South African mass movement. The Conference adopted a Declaration and a Programme for Heightened International Action against Apartheid and for a Democratic South Africa, setting forth a plan for the international community to implement and enforce comprehensive mandatory sanctions and generally to support the struggle against apartheid;

The Special Committee also actively participated in NGO-organized campaigns as well as conferences and seminars of NGOs and anti-apartheid groups.

Other international activities. In its annual reports, the Special Committee against Apartheid also summarized action in 1987 by Member States to isolate and put pressure on South Africa. Finland, Norway and Sweden adopted comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa. An official advisory report, prepared for the United States State Department at its request and published in January, suggested that the United States Administration should join in concerted international efforts to impose sanctions on South Africa and isolate it economically. In December, the United States Government repealed tax credits for United States companies that operated in South Africa. The Committee estimated that this measure could increase the total tax burden for these companies from 57.2 per cent to 72 per cent.

The Commonwealth heads of Government meeting (Vancouver, 13-17 October) adopted the Okanagan Statement on Southern Africa and Programme of Action. With the exception of the United Kingdom, members stressed that the international community should widen and intensify economic sanctions and secure a more concentrated global programme of sanctions, with co-ordination of the implementation of measures agreed on by each member. The summit set up a Committee of Foreign Ministers to meet periodically and provide impetus and guidance in implementing the objectives. Effective 1 June,⁽¹⁶⁾ Australia prohibited the import of coal, iron, steel and agricultural products from South Africa. That action followed a commitment made at an August 1986 meeting of seven Commonwealth leaders.

According to the Special Committee against Apartheid,⁽²⁾ there was in 1987 a record number of company disinvestments and an increasing trend of divestment of shares in firms involved in business with South Africa. Between 1984 and July 1988, 339 corporations from 15 countries had disinvested from South Africa. About 50 per cent of withdrawals involved United States corporations and 29 per cent British ones, owing mainly to strong domestic anti-apartheid campaigns in those countries. However, increasing numbers of withdrawing corporations converted their links to non-equity interests covering licensing, distribution, franchising, management and trade marks. For example, of the 96 United States companies that had pulled out over the two years up to December 1987, 45 had continued to maintain ties through licensing and distribution agreements that ensured that their products were still available to South African consumers.

Special Committee's conclusions and recommendations. The Special Committee against Apartheid concluded that although the international community had taken a number of positive steps to isolate South Africa and put pressure on the authorities to dismantle apartheid, there were still loopholes in the economic measures. Divestment and disinvestment, bank loans and trade with South Africa had become dominant issues in political and business communities all over the world. The techniques adopted by some corporations to disinvest while maintaining their links with and profits from the South African market through licensing and other agreements had attracted attention and criticism.

The Committee considered the total isolation of South Africa an urgent target of the international community, since that would force it to accept the inevitable course of events and to undertake negotiations with the leaders recognized by the overwhelming majority of the people of South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 42/23 G, the General Assembly commended those States that had adopted voluntary measures against the apartheid regime, invited those that had not done so to follow their example and appealed to Governments and organizations to cease all contacts with South Africa.

Relations with South Africa

The General Assembly, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Commission on Human Rights and the Committee on colonial countries continued in 1987 to try to have States and organizations break off relations with South Africa as a means of pressuring it to abandon its apartheid system.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. As in previous years, the Special Committee against Apartheid monitored relations of States and organizations with South Africa in several areas, including military and nuclear relations, economic and trade relations, and sports and cultural ties, and made recommendations concerning such relations.⁽¹⁾ A more detailed account is contained under the respective subject headings in this chapter.

Action by the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia considered that breaking relations was the best means of pressuring South Africa to give up its illegal occupation of Namibia and to co-operate with the United Nations in bringing about Namibian independence. In its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted in May at the conclusion of extraordinary plenary meetings,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Council condemned the political, military, diplomatic, economic, financial, cultural and other collaboration between certain Western States and South Africa, and thanked Governments which, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, had taken appropriate measures to isolate South Africa. In October, the Council held a ministerial meeting and in its final communique expressed similar sentiments.⁽¹⁸⁾ (See TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III.)

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 19 February,⁽³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights called on Western and other countries with relations with South Africa to sever them, as they encouraged that regime to persist in suppressing the aspirations of people to self-determination and independence. On 4 March,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission urged all States that had not done so to cease any form of support or assistance to South Africa.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries, on 12 August,⁽²⁰⁾ called in particular on Western and other States to terminate all collaboration with South Africa and to refrain from entering into relations with it. The same day,⁽²¹⁾ the Committee condemned the continuing collaboration of certain countries with South Africa and called for its termination because it undermined the international solidarity against the apartheid regime. Also on 12 August,⁽²²⁾ the Committee noted with satisfaction that a number of States had taken measures aimed at bringing about the isolation of South Africa and called on those Governments that had not done so to take appropriate action.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 1986 resolution,⁽²³⁾ the General Assembly had appealed to States to consider national legislative or other measures to increase pressure on South Africa, such as: ceasing investments and loans; ending trade promotion and support; prohibiting the sale of South African coins; ceasing military, police or intelligence co-operation; ending nuclear collaboration; and ceasing the export and sale of oil. Forty-three States replied to the Secretary-General's request for information regarding the implementation of that resolution. The replies were forwarded to the Assembly in November 1987.⁽²⁴⁾

Twenty-eight States reported that they had implemented all the suggested measures, many indicating that they had no relations with South Africa. They were: Argentina, Barbados, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ecuador, Egypt, Guinea-Bissau, India, Indonesia, Nigeria, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Senegal, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Yugoslavia. In addition to its reply, the USSR in a 9 June note verbale stated that it maintained no economic, military or other relations with South Africa⁽²⁵⁾

Those EC members that replied (Denmark, France, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Netherlands, Portugal) referred mainly to the measures adopted by EC in 1986⁽²⁶⁾ in particular the ban on new investments, on the import of iron and steel, on the sale of krugerrand, and on nuclear, police and military co-operation. Austria, although not an EC member, reported similarly. Portugal noted that the EC measures largely coincided with the provisions contained in the 1986 resolution. Denmark, France, Greece and Italy in addition stated their adherence to the oil embargo. Italy pointed out that while it depended on coal imports from South Africa, it had reduced its exports to that country by 29 per cent over the preceding five years.

Brazil transmitted a presidential Decree prohibiting the sale of petroleum and its by-products as well as arms and related material of any kind to South Africa. Finland reported new and stricter measures, added to those in place since 1986, which included a total ban on trade with South Africa, a ban on nuclear co-operation projects and a tightening of visa restrictions for South African citizens. Israel, reporting the continuing reduction of its ties, stated that it would not enter into new defence contracts with South Africa, that it had no nuclear co-operation with South Africa, that it did not export oil to it, and that it had drastically reduced cultural ties.

Japan stated that before the adoption of the 1986 resolution it had restricted investment and financing activities, prohibited arms exports and refrained from importing arms. It had prohibited the export of computers which could assist the military or the police and had asked all concerned not to import South African gold coins. Additional measures adopted later included prohibiting imports of iron and steel. Japan also had no nuclear co-operation.

Norway summarized its March 1987 economic boycott Act against South Africa and Namibia, which included bans on all trade, on carrying crude oil, on rendering services to South Africa, on loans and investments, on the transfer of patent and production rights, and on the organization and promotion of tourism.

The Republic of Korea reported that it had suspended all official contact since 1978 and had placed an embargo on the export of all goods related to defence. It had further prohibited any trade relations which would constitute financial co-operation with South Africa by all government organizations.

Turkey reported that it had never co-operated militarily and it neither exported to nor imported from South Africa any military equipment. It refrained from any nuclear co-operation with South Africa and it had not been and was not involved in the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly in 1987, as in previous years, repeatedly called for the termination of all relations with South Africa. It condemned the policy of those States whose relations with South Africa encouraged it to persist in its suppression of the aspiration of peoples to self-determination and independence (resolution 42/95). It also condemned the continuing collaboration between certain States and South Africa in various fields, and expressed its conviction that such collaboration helped to prolong South Africa's control over Namibia (resolution 42/14 A). It requested all States effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally (resolution 42/ 74).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By resolution 1987/78, the Economic and Social Council requested the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations to isolate the apartheid regime totally.

Communication. In its final communique, the Special Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, Guyana, 9-12 March)(27) condemned South Africa's collaboration with the United States in providing logistical support and the arming of the so-called Contras fighting against the people of Nicaragua (see p. 190).

Sanctions and boycotts

The Special Committee against Apartheid reported in 1987 that the international campaign to isolate and put pressure on South Africa had intensified and was marked by new, significant developments.(1)

Most important among the measures taken by Member States was the new legislation adopted by Finland, Norway (see above) and Sweden, which imposed comprehensive sanctions against South Africa. The Committee remarked, however, that the Norwegian Act did not include a ban on the resale of cargoes of Norwegian tankers whose final destination; were determined at sea after the start of the voyage.

The Swedish sanctions bill banned all trade, with a few exceptions, with South Africa, including that passing through third countries, and banned the loading, unloading, transport or reception for storage of prohibited goods, as well as the means of transport and transport equipment and of services through third parties. The Act did not, however, call for disinvestment.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. In a message to the EC summit meeting (Copenhagen, Denmark, 4-7 December), the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid stated that the summit had a unique opportunity to adopt further collective sanctions against South Africa and stressed the need for effective implementation of measures already adopted. In its conclusions and recommendations, the Committee, while strongly supporting measures adopted by States, individually and collectively, emphasized the urgency of imposing concerted, comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, since selective and unco-ordinated sanctions gave the regime the opportunity to absorb, to a certain degree, the costs involved and to design defensive action.

Action by the Council for Namibia. In its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action,(17) the Council for Namibia reaffirmed that the adoption of comprehensive mandatory sanctions, as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter, was the most effective peaceful way of making South Africa comply with United Nations decisions on Namibia. The Council committed itself to continue its efforts with the Security Council to that end.

In the final communique adopted by the Council at its ministerial meeting (New York, October),(18) the Ministers deplored the fact that the Security Council had been prevented from imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries, on 12 August,(20) reiterated its request to all States, pending the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions, to act individually or collectively effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally and encouraged those Governments that had unilaterally taken certain measures against it to take further ones.

On the same day,(22) the Committee recommended that the Security Council act decisively against efforts to frustrate the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people by imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa and called on Member States to impose voluntary sanctions.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 26 February,(4) the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the Assembly's request that the Security Council urgently consider complete and mandatory sanctions and, on 3 March,(19) expressed the hope that the Council would be enabled, in the near future, to impose such sanctions.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (February)

On 10 February,(28) Egypt, on behalf of the Group of African States, requested that the Security Council meet urgently to consider the situation in South Africa. Consequently, the Council held seven meetings between 17 and 20 February.

Meeting numbers. SC 2732-2730.

The Council invited the following countries, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Algeria, Angola, Cuba, Czechoslovakia; Egypt, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, India, Kenya, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Morocco, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Senegal, South Africa, Sudan, Sweden, Togo, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zimbabwe.

Under rule 39a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, the Council also invited, at their request, the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Acting Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries and the Vice-President of the Council for Namibia. Under the same rule, at the request of the Congo, Ghana and Zambia, it invited Mfanafuthi J. Makatini, representative, ANC,(29) and Lesaoana Makhandia, representative of PAC;(30) at Yemen's request, Clovis Maksoud, Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States;(31) and at Kuwait's request, Ahmed Engin Ansay, Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference.(32)

A draft resolution calling for selective mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter was submitted by non-aligned members of the Council—Argentina, the Congo, Ghana, the United Arab Emirates and Zambia—on 19 February. (33)

The sanctions—which would have been imposed in accordance with Article 41—were to include prohibition of import of South African agricultural products and food, sugar, uranium, coal, iron and steel, kruggerand, military articles, and products from South African parastatal organizations.

Also prohibited would have been computer exports to South Africa; air transportation with it; the acceptance, receipt or holding of deposit accounts from the South African regime or from any agency or entity owned or controlled by it; new investment there; government procurements from South Africa; promotion of tourism to that country; government assistance to, investment in, or subsidy for trade with South Africa; and exports of crude oil and petroleum products to it. Further, the text would have had the Council prohibit nuclear trade with, co-operation with the armed forces of, and loans to South Africa, and demand the termination of tax treaties and protocols with it.

South Africa would have been strongly condemned for its persistent refusal to comply with Council decisions and General Assembly resolutions on the policies and practices of apartheid, the decolonization of Namibia and its acts of aggression against and destabilization of neighbouring independent States. The Council would have reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed South African people to eliminate apartheid and establish a free, united, non-racial and democratic society in their country, and declared that South Africa's refusal to comply with the decisions and resolutions constituted a direct challenge to the United Nations authority and a violation of the Charter.

It would have determined that the policies and practices of apartheid pursued by the Pretoria regime were the root-cause of the grave and deteriorating situation in South Africa and the region and constituted a serious threat to international peace and security; and that the continued illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as the repeated armed attacks perpetrated by South Africa and destabilization of neighbouring States, were grave acts of aggression and a violation of their sovereignty and territorial integrity.

^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

All Member States would have been called on to implement the resolution, specialized agencies requested to ensure its effective implementation, and non-member States urged to act in accordance with it. Its implementation was to be monitored by a committee of the Council. All States would have been called on to report to the Secretary-General on measures taken regarding implementation and he would have been invited to report on its implementation not later than 30 June 1987.

On 20 February, the Council voted on the draft as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Ghana, Italy, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela, Zambia.

Against: Germany, Federal Republic of, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: France, Japan.

Owing to negative votes of permanent members, the draft was not adopted.

During the debate there was general agreement among the speakers—with the exception of South Africa—that the situation there was not acceptable for the world community and that some form of United Nations action had to be taken. For the vast majority of Member States, the appropriate action was the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, as had been repeatedly requested by the General Assembly and other United Nations bodies dealing with the question of South Africa. The debate reflected the differences in opinion among Council members over whether sanctions should be mandatory or voluntary and whether they should be comprehensive or selective.

Egypt, the African Group's Chairman for February, opened the debate by outlining the Group's position on the situation, stating that 1986 had seen more carnage, bloodshed, arbitrary detention, suppression, censorship and oppression inside South Africa than previously. In addition, the South African regime persisted in its policies of aggression and terror against neighbouring independent African States, in its plans to destabilize them and in its attempts to carry out economic blackmail against them. But, Egypt added, the year also saw the mobilization of the forces of struggle against apartheid and, as before, the struggle had grown in intensity, and the march towards freedom and democracy continued. South Africa's apartheid and associated violence and terror towards its own population, as well as its actions against its neighbours, threatened international peace and security not only in southern Africa but also in distant regions.

Since, in the view of the African States, it was clear that South Africa had no intention of abandoning apartheid and that its so-called reform measures were only manoeuvres to mislead international public opinion, it was for the Security Council to pressure it into heeding the will of the international community and ending the worsening situation in southern Africa. In carrying out this responsibility, the Council would also exercise a right guaranteed by the Charter. The discharge of those responsibilities was, Egypt stated, the Council's sole raison d'être and it was called on to put into force the warning contained in its 1985 resolution(34) and to adopt the appropriate measures under the Charter—the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII. In an attempt, however, to overcome the difficulties that the Council had had in the past to act decisively, the African States had this time submitted a list of selective sanctions that many States had already adopted. Such sanctions were not an end in themselves but would rather, alongside other international efforts, expedite the end of apartheid.

ANC, similarly accusing South Africa of intensifying its brutal repression of a defenceless population and of armed aggression against its neighbours, said the philosophical underpinnings of the apartheid regime did not lend themselves to meaningful reform and therefore the international community should exert maximum pressure; the non-aligned countries' draft was a first step towards the desired international action.

PAC also supported the punitive sanctions proposed for adoption, at the same time reiterating its conviction that only comprehensive mandatory sanctions could avert an impending confrontation.

South Africa said the drive for sanctions was based on the false premise that sanctions promoted the interests of its black people and constituted a peaceful alternative to violence. South Africa's neighbours would be hardest hit by punitive United Nations actions, the consequences for them were unforeseeable, and their social and economic well-being would inevitably be retarded. Millions of people, mainly black, in southern Africa would suffer. To believe that imposing punitive measures against South Africa would somehow bring about the downfall of its Government was an illusion, since it would not be diverted from its continuing programme of controlled political and constitutional reform. It would continue to seek a new constitutional dispensation to provide fully for the aspirations of all of South Africa's people, but it would not negotiate under duress, under threat or out of fear. Far-reaching reforms had already been introduced, with much discriminatory legislation disappearing. The South African Government was striving for: stability in southern Africa; an end to violence; negotiations between it and all its communities and groups to solve South Africa's problems peacefully; and the full participation of all parties in the political process as long as they abandoned violence as a means of achieving their political objectives.

Many countries described the situation of the black South African majority under apartheid. Zimbabwe, which chaired the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries in 1987, said that the state of emergency in South Africa had resulted in over 2,500 people being killed and about 30,000 detained without trial, about 40 per cent of them under the age of 18. This went unreported in South Africa because of press censorship. Still, the Government could not completely hide its shame, because, as long as the pillars of apartheid—such as the Group Areas Act, the Bantu Authorities Act and the Population Registration Act—continued to contaminate the South African statute book, violence would be necessary to suppress the resistance of its victims. Algeria argued that by maintaining the myth of possible reform, the apartheid regime had managed to get the necessary breathing space to endow itself with the means of radicalizing its policy and imposing on South Africa a generalized state of emergency, under which thousands had died or been jailed, including children. For Mongolia, the general picture of South Africa was one of mass killings, torture, arrests, detention without trial, shooting of demonstrators and harsh censorship. In Yugoslavia's view, the South African Government, in a vain attempt to preserve domination and racial discrimination, had stepped up oppression against the black majority by reinstating the state of emergency and unleashing the new wave of terror, which included unarmed strikers and demonstrators being shot at, trumped-up charges against and trials of opponents of apartheid and those fighting for freedom and liberation being killed while in detention; the new and more brutal measures, censorship, isolation of black townships, mass arrests, increased violence and killings were proof that the Government could no longer survive without military and police protection. The United Kingdom, too, felt the new measures had each brought more sharply into question the South African Government's claim to be committed to democratic values. Most speakers in the debate described the internal situation in those or similar terms.

There was also a high degree of agreement on the aggressiveness of South Africa's foreign policy. For Angola, one of the countries most affected, South Africa was the main source of tension and war currently existing in southern Africa. Its aggressiveness was increasing and ever more violent. It had not respected the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the countries of the region, it had systematically violated the agreements and undertakings it entered into with them, and it had not respected United Nations resolutions. Nicaragua emphasized the economic aspect of South Africa's foreign relations, arguing that as long as apartheid existed, South Africa's economic relations with its neighbours could never be mutually beneficial. The dependency of neighbouring countries on the South African economy had been intensified by terrorist acts of the colonial puppets created specifically to serve imperialist interests. Aware of the importance of the means of communication to the economies of the front-line States, South Africa had concentrated on destroying that very sector. Senegal said South Africa had made aggression and invasion the principles of its dealings with its neighbours and showed its determination to continue defying the entire world by attempting to impose a "pax Sudafricana" on the region and to impose regimes to its liking on independent peoples. For Czechoslovakia, the aggressive acts, which were regularly perpetrated through subversion and punitive expeditions, indicated that the Pretoria regime would continue ignoring the norms of international law. The United Republic of Tanzania said South Africa had engaged in a strategy of weakening its neighbours politically and controlling them economically; United Nations sources revealed that some 140,000 children had died through such destabilization activities in 1986, showing that South Africa had indirectly embarked on genocide in the front-line States. Nearly all other speakers expressed similar concerns or condemned South Africa for the way it conducted its relations with its neighbours.

Some countries believed that South Africa's aggressiveness against its neighbours was caused by its internal policy of apartheid. Pakistan stated that the woes that afflicted southern Africa sprang from the philosophy of apartheid—repression at home and aggression abroad were complementary strands of the same policy of apartheid. Venezuela summarized the various statements and concluded that Council members were well aware that the cause of all the problems was apartheid. Others identifying apartheid as the root-cause of all problems in southern Africa included China, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Given the general agreement on the assessment of the situation in South Africa, and in the whole southern African region, the debate centred on the measures to be used to pressure South Africa into complying with the will of the international community.

The Federal Republic of Germany, although opposing mandatory sanctions, agreed fully with the objective of immediately abolishing apartheid, but was skeptical that economic sanctions could succeed in effectively altering the rigid mentality of apartheid, that they would promote peaceful change or that they would lead to the abolition of the apartheid system. The Federal Republic of Germany took seriously the threats voiced by South Africa that it would impose counter-sanctions against the States in southern Africa, since given the economic, transportation and geographical conditions, such countermeasures might entail serious consequences.

The United Kingdom added that imposing punitive economic sanctions would make the situation worse, as they would exacerbate the current conflict and put reform at the bottom of the South African Government's agenda and repression on the top; they would encourage a siege mentality among white South Africans, making a peaceful solution more difficult, and they would increase the unfairness and suffering without helping to abolish apartheid.

France argued against comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, believing that a gradual approach was the most effective, since it was essential to adapt the means of pressure to the evolution of the situation and to keep open the possibility of intensifying them if necessary; mandatory sanctions would fail to take account of the diversity of situations of the countries that would have to apply them.

As the United Kingdom had done before, the United States noted that during 1986 sanctions imposed by many States, including itself, had been immeasurably strengthened but that, nevertheless, the situation inside South Africa had worsened. It would therefore be irresponsible to assume that mandatory sanctions would automatically lead to the results desired. To the contrary, the United States was convinced that such action would fail to bring apartheid to an end in a peaceful manner. Those sanctions would result in the progressive destruction of the South African economy and heighten the repression. No one doubted the capacity of the South African Government to inflict much of the cost of mandatory sanctions on its own black citizens as well as on its immediate neighbours. The United States recognized that other States thought differently but it did not believe that the United Nations should mandate to all its Members what their appropriate course of action should be; each should be free to determine the form and substance of its measures aimed at eliminating apartheid. In addition, the United States believed that the suggested sanctions would be all but impossible to enforce, and the Council would be unable to agree on whether sufficient progress towards dismantling apartheid had occurred to warrant their lifting.

Japan felt that the Council should explore every way of achieving agreement on concerted international action and, as the vote had demonstrated, the draft resolution could not provide the basis for such action. Japan detailed the measures it had taken unilaterally against South Africa, including domestic regulations to ensure that Japan's private and commercial activities would not undermine the effectiveness of measures taken by other countries.

All other speakers supported the proposed selective mandatory sanctions, but many would have preferred comprehensive ones. Zimbabwe, recalling that some countries and regional groupings had adopted a number of positive measures in order to send signals to the Pretoria Government, felt those efforts should be unified to send a clear, unambiguous message.

Morocco commended the adoption of unilateral measures, but held that economic sanctions had to be fuller, more complete and mandatory if they were to be effective. For Kuwait, the draft represented the least that could be done by the Council in the light of the circumstances, while Ethiopia recalled that it had always advocated mandatory sanctions because the piecemeal and often unco-ordinated attempts made thus far had not yielded the anticipated results. Kenya, too, pointed out that the voluntary measures thus far used had only brought disappointment for the vast majority of South Africans; though it would have preferred comprehensive mandatory sanctions, it was prepared to go along with the selective ones contained in the draft.

Similarly, the Congo, reaffirming its belief that comprehensive mandatory sanctions were the only true response to apartheid, said it nevertheless supported the proposed selective ones. Togo cited a list of measures voluntarily adopted by individual States or groups of States and observed that South Africa's reaction showed that as long as the sanctions were voluntary and selective, and therefore limited, the racist minority would always be able to get around them. Ghana argued that voluntary sanctions would only give comfort to South Africa; mandatory ones would have the additional advantage of discouraging Governments, companies and individuals from rushing to take advantage of the vacuum created by those who were just enough to impose voluntary sanctions. Ghana was also among those countries that pointed out that the sanctions included in the draft resolution did not go beyond the measures already endorsed by the various legislatures of Member States, noting that the proposed sanctions were largely modelled after those adopted by the United States Congress.

Many non-aligned countries refuted the argument that economic sanctions would hurt mostly those they were intended to help—the black South African majority and the front-line States. Venezuela called this argument the most controversial point raised and pointed out that the authorized representatives of the majority in South Africa and neighbouring countries had made it clear that it was a price they were willing to pay. In addition, Venezuela drew attention to Article 50 of the Charter, according to which States that found themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of enforcement measures taken by the Council had the right to consult it regarding the solution of those problems. Thus, to Venezuela, it appeared best to consider the necessary measures to limit the ill effects that those sanctions might have on the victims of oppression and on victims of the continued aggression of the South African Government.

Zimbabwe, recalling that its people had endured United Nations comprehensive and mandatory sanctions for nearly 15 years, as championed by the United Kingdom, assured the Council that the black Zimbabweans had accepted the deprivations as a small price to pay to achieve their liberation; it had no doubt that the Africans in South Africa would feel the same way. India argued that retaliatory measures which might be taken by South Africa could not provide a pretext for avoiding sanctions. The correct conclusion to draw was rather to strengthen the economic and financial capabilities of the front-line States and the national liberation movements to cope with any such retaliatory action. Similar arguments were used by Bulgaria, the Congo, Cuba, Ghana, Guyana, Kenya, Nicaragua, Togo, Uganda, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates and Yugoslavia. The United States, taking up the argument put forward by those States, felt it was unrealistic to believe that aid from the industrialized countries would be able to cover the costs which mandatory sanctions would inevitably impose on South Africa's immediate neighbours.

Opinions were divided on the effectiveness of sanctions imposed in the past as an instrument for change in general. The United States believed that the sanctions imposed during 1986 had led to a continued deterioration of the situation in South Africa. The United Kingdom similarly observed that since the United States congressional package had gone into force in autumn 1986, the South African Government had become more intransigent both internally and externally. Zimbabwe, however, cited a contrary example: when a United States film-distributing company threatened to deny films to South African cinemas not open to all races, apartheid signboards proclaiming that right of admission was reserved were replaced by new ones proclaiming that all were welcome. The Vice-Chairman of the United Nations Council for Namibia pointed to the consternation of the South African authorities over the sanctions decided upon by the United States Congress as proof of the timeliness and effectiveness of economic sanctions.

After the Council's meetings, on 3 March, (19) the Commission on Human Rights regretted that the Council had been prevented from imposing mandatory sanctions and hoped it would be enabled to do so in the near future.

The question of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa was again considered by the Security Council in April, when it met to consider the situation in Namibia (see TRUSTEE-SHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Among the resolutions on South Africa's apartheid policies adopted by the General Assembly on 20 November, two dealt with sanctions and boycotts-resolutions 42/23 B and C. Both were adopted by recorded vote.

Application of co-ordinated and strictly monitored measures against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolutions on sanctions against South Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, in particular paragraphs 10 and 11 and 141 to 149,

Considering that measures taken by States individually and collectively, while commendable, vary in coverage and degree of enforcement, which allows the racist régime to exploit existing gaps,

Commending the action taken by labour unions, women's organizations, student groups and other anti-apartheid organizations for the total isolation of the apartheid régime,

1. Urges all States that have not yet done so, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, to adopt legislative and/or comparable measures so as to impose effective sanctions against South Africa and, in particular:

(a) To impose embargoes on the supply of all products, technologies and services that can be used for the military and nuclear industry of South Africa, including military intelligence;

(b) To impose an embargo on the supply of oil and petroleum products;

(c) To prohibit the import of coal, gold, strategic minerals and agricultural products from South Africa and Namibia;

(d) To induce transnational corporations, banks and financial institutions to withdraw effectively from South Africa and prevent them from:

(i) Investing in South Africa and Namibia;

(ii) Supplying directly or indirectly materials and technology to South Africa and Namibia;

(iii) Engaging in commercial transactions with South Africa;

(iv) Granting loans and credits to South Africa;

(e) To take appropriate measures to ensure the effectiveness of the sports and cultural boycott of the racist régime of South Africa;

2. Further urges all States to monitor strictly the implementation of the above measures and impose penalties on individuals and enterprises within their jurisdiction that are involved in violating them;

3. Encourages States to ratify the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on measures taken by States and on their implementation.

Comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolution 41/35 B of 10 November 1986,

Recalling its resolutions and those of the Security Council calling for concerted international action to force the racist regime of South Africa to eradicate apartheid,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, in particular paragraphs 138 to 150, and the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against South Africa,

Gravely concerned at the continuing defiance by the apartheid regime of the will of the international community, the regime's provocative non-compliance with resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, its escalating terror against the people of South Africa, its continuing illegal occupation of Namibia, and its acts of military aggression and political and economic destabilization against independent African States,

Expressing serious concern at the continued violation of the arms embargo against South Africa,

1. Reaffirms that apartheid is a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security, and that it is a primary responsibility of the United Nations to assist in efforts to eliminate apartheid without further delay;

2. Decides once again that the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations would be the most appropriate, effective and peaceful means to bring apartheid to an end and to discharge the responsibilities of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, which are threatened and violated by the apartheid regime;

3. Urgently requests the Security Council, therefore, to take immediate action under Chapter VII of the Charter with a view to applying comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist regime of South Africa and urges the Governments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America and others that are opposed to the application of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions to reassess their policies and cease their opposition to the application of such sanctions by the Security Council;

4. Urges the Security Council to strengthen the mandatory arms embargo imposed by its resolutions 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 and 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 in order to bring to an end the continued violations of the arms embargo.

Before the vote on the draft that became resolution 42/23 C, a recorded vote was taken on the references to the United Kingdom and the United States in paragraph 3, which were retained by 78 votes to 38, with 27 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, several speakers objected to mentioning States by name. The United States was pleased to note that, with the exception of that paragraph, explicit references to it had disappeared from the drafts. Malta gave the singling out of individual States by name as the reason for its abstention on the resolution as a whole. Canada stated that it had great difficulty with the name-calling and its negative vote on resolution 42/23 C stemmed partly from that position of principle. Zaire, also objecting to selective name-calling, considered the naming of States in paragraph 3 incomplete.

Several States pointed out that the imposition of mandatory sanctions lay exclusively within the purview of the Security Council and that the distribution of powers between it and the Assembly needed to be strictly observed. Among those making that point were Austria, Belgium, Denmark (for EC) and Iceland (for the five Nordic countries).

Of those States explaining their votes, only Iceland (for the Nordic countries) favoured comprehensive mandatory sanctions, calling them the most effective instrument to achieve the peaceful abolition of apartheid. Ireland supported the application of mandatory sanctions but doubted the wisdom of calls for comprehensive ones at that juncture, believing that the right policy for the international community was one of steady pressure for change through carefully chosen, selective, graduated sanctions properly imposed by the Security Council and implemented by all. New Zealand held that the measures applied against South Africa had to be carefully selected and targeted. Japan believed that comprehensive sanctions had to be considered with utmost care.

The United Kingdom said that peace and security in South Africa could be achieved only through genuine dialogue and fundamental change, not through the imposition of punitive economic measures attempting to isolate it. For the United States, international efforts to ravage the South African economy were not a solution to apartheid, since such efforts only hardened official resistance to change and would deprive all South Africans of the means to increase wealth and build democratic institutions. France, which voted in favour of resolution 42/23 G, would also have liked to support 42/23 B, but could not since it had a firm position against binding sanctions against South Africa. Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and Malawi also opposed the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions..

Several speakers addressed the advisability of totally isolating South Africa (resolution 42/23 C referred to paragraphs 138 to 150 of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid in which the Committee supported that action). Denmark (for EC) argued that channels of communication with South Africa had to remain open to enable the outside world to maintain and increase pressure for the establishment of a free and democratic society without racial oppression. Portugal believed that a total isolation would only hamper the initiatives of those fighting inside the country for fundamental reforms. The United States found such a course misguided. In Israel's view, isolating South Africa and imposing comprehensive sanctions against it could increase tensions and hurt the economy in a way which could inflict suffering and hardships on its people.

Swaziland said its abstentions on the texts dealing with sanctions were because of its delicate geographical position in southern Africa. Lesotho similarly drew attention to its unique geographical location. Botswana said it was incapable of imposing economic sanctions against South Africa.

With regard to the sports boycott against South Africa advocated in resolution 42/23 B, Ireland stated that the encouragement given to States to ratify the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports⁽³⁵⁾ was problematic since it contained provisions incompatible with Ireland's constitution. Austria pointed out that it would not accede to that Convention for legal reasons. New Zealand, stating that it was discouraging sporting contacts with South Africa, also had reservations about aspects of the Convention. Iceland (for the Nordic countries) noted that certain formulations of the resolutions encroached on constitutional rights of Nordic citizens and private organizations, particularly certain parts of the sports Convention; in view of the strict policy of the Nordic countries against sports contacts with South Africa, they regretted that they could not fully endorse the Convention. Denmark (for EC) stated that sports activities in EC were organized on private initiative and sports organizations were aware of Governments' opposition to competitions violating the Olympic ideal of non-discrimination.

The General Assembly also called for sanctions against South Africa in its resolutions on Namibia. In resolution 42/14 A, it urged Governments which had used their veto or cast negative votes in the Security Council on comprehensive and mandatory sanctions to support the international call to isolate South Africa. In resolution 42/14 B, the Assembly condemned the use of the veto by some Western permanent members in April which had prevented the Council from acting under Chapter VII of the Charter and it called on them to support such enforcement measures to ensure South Africa's compliance with the Council's resolutions. It also urged States, pending Council action, to impose individual and collective sanctions.

Military and nuclear relations

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. According to the Special Committee against Apartheid, South Africa had continued its military buildup and collaboration with other countries and had increased its defence budget and strengthened its defence forces.

In South Africa's 1987/88 budget, defence allocation totalled 6,683 million rand, an increase of 40 per cent over the previous budget year, and the allocation was set at 4 per cent of the gross domestic product (GDP). However, as in the past, actual defence spending for the period was expected to exceed the allocated amount significantly. South Africa also increased the numerical strength of its armed forces by 27 per cent, from 83,400 in 1984/85 to 106,400 (including medical corps) in 1986/87.

In 1987, it exported arms to 23 countries for a total of $900 million, making arms the third most important export after gold and coal. It was reported to be planning to build its own submarines and to have used foreign technical expertise to upgrade additional Mirage fighter aircraft into Cheetahs.

South Africa's relations with Israel, including military ones, were covered in a separate report by the Committee (see p. 150).

On 10 February, the Committee drew the attention of the Federal Republic of Germany to information on the role of BASF-Aktiengesellschaft, a TNC headquartered in the Federal Republic, in supplying computers to the South African police. In March, the Committee Chairman travelled to Bonn to discuss the issue with the Foreign Minister as well as to discuss allegations of the involvement of the State-owned shipyard Howaldtswerke Deutsche Werft AG in providing South Africa with blueprints of a submarine.⁽³⁶⁾ On 15 July, the Committee was informed that government investigations into those matters had not been completed.

In September, the Committee requested Denmark and the Federal Republic of Germany to halt the alleged export of equipment related to an advanced X-ray system to be provided by firms under their jurisdiction to the South African Air Force. Austria was also requested to stop an Austrian corporation setting up a factory in Ciskei, South Africa, to build small planes suitable for police and military activities.

The Committee, noting that South Africa had attempted to strengthen its military power to an unprecedented degree, regretted that foreign accomplices had been found which provided South Africa with assistance critical to achieving its objectives. It called again on all States to terminate relations with South Africa, including those in the military and nuclear fields.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. According to the Council for Namibia,⁽³⁷⁾ the ever-increasing South African defence budget reflected, among other things, the development of a large internal armaments manufacturing industry as part of the overall plan to make its military-industrial complex self-sufficient. However, South Africa had not been able to achieve the intended degree of self-sufficiency in producing armaments and ammunition. The Council cited estimates that South Africa was still dependent on imports for 25 per cent of its weaponry. The Air Force was particularly dependent on imported components for maintenance and modernization. The Council stated that South Africa was able to acquire substantial quantities of vital military equipment, components, spare parts and even plants to manufacture arms and ammunition.

The Council further quoted the Chairman of the South African Armaments Corporation, the production and procurement agency of the South African armed forces, that his agency was the largest foreign exchange earner outside the mining and agricultural sectors, and the largest in the manufacturing sector, and that the Corporation spent 15 per cent of its budget abroad.

With regard to the nuclear co-operation between South Africa and other countries, the Council maintained that it had been recognized over the past few years that South Africa possessed nuclear-weapon capability. Evidence confirmed that South Africa's nuclear programme had been initiated, supported and developed to its current level as a result of the ready assistance of other countries. South Africa's role as a major uranium producer, which to a considerable extent came from illegally occupied Namibia, had given it a formidable advantage in securing support from Western countries for its own nuclear programme.

In its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Council condemned the military and nuclear collaboration maintained by certain Western countries with South Africa and demanded that it be stopped immediately.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, on 26 February,⁽⁴⁾ condemned the continuing nuclear collaboration of certain States with South Africa and urged them to cease supplying it with nuclear equipment and technology, which enabled it to develop a nuclear-weapon capability, threatened peace and international security, and obstructed efforts to eliminate apartheid. The Commission welcomed the Assembly's request that the Security Council urgently consider complete and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, including the cessation of all nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries, on 12 August,⁽²¹⁾ considered the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by South Africa a further effort to terrorize and intimidate independent States in the region into submission, while also posing a threat to all mankind. The Committee therefore condemned the continuing military and nuclear support to South Africa. It called on the States concerned to end all such collaboration and, in particular, to halt the supply to South Africa of equipment, technology, nuclear materials and related training, which increased its nuclear capability.

On the same date,(20) the Committee condemned the nuclear collaboration of certain Western and other countries with South Africa and called on those and on all other countries concerned to refrain from supplying that regime with installations, equipment or material that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

A number of the General Assembly's 1987 resolutions referred to various aspects of military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa. In resolution 42/23 B, the Assembly urged States to impose embargoes on the supply of all products, technologies and services that could be used for South Africa's nuclear and military industry, including military intelligence. In resolution 42/23 G, it urged the Security Council to secure an end to the military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and the import of military equipment or supplies from it. It further appealed to States, pending the imposition of mandatory sanctions by the Council, to end all such collaboration with that country.

In resolutions 42/34 A and B, the Assembly condemned South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with South Africa that enabled it to frustrate the objectives of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, adopted by OAU in 1964,(38) and called on all concerned to desist from further collaboration. In particular, it condemned the decision by some Member States to grant licences to corporations in their territories to provide equipment and technical and maintenance services for nuclear installations in South Africa. It commended those countries that had restricted such co-operation.

In resolution 42/92, the Assembly called on States, particularly Security Council members, to promote the fulfilment of the objective of the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger that the nuclear capability of South Africa constituted for African States, in particular the front-line States, as well as to international peace and security.

Related action was also taken by the Assembly in resolution 42/14 A, on Namibia, and in decision 42/417. In both instances the Assembly took up formulations used by the Committee on colonial countries.

Arms embargo

In 1977,(39) the Security Council had imposed a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, which covered the provision to it of arms and related matériel of all types, including the sale or transfer of weapons and ammunition, military vehicles, paramilitary police equipment and related spare parts. In 1984,(40) the Council reaffirmed the embargo and requested States to refrain from importing arms, ammunition and military vehicles produced in South Africa. Two years later,(41) the Council reaffirmed its 1977 and 1984 resolutions, clarified some of the provisions contained therein, and again requested States not to import South African arms. The Council's 1986 resolution, like that of 1984, did not establish new obligations for Member States, but contained a number of requests.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. In 1987,(1) the Special Committee against Apartheid stated that there had been reports indicating infringements of the 1977 arms embargo. It cited a report by the United States State Department which confirmed that South Africa had developed a large and sophisticated indigenous arms industry, that it imported weapons systems and subsystems when it could neither produce a weapon nor secure a licensing arrangement, and that most major weapons systems in South Africa pre-dated the 1977 arms embargo but in most cases were maintained and upgraded with the assistance of the original manufacturer. The United States report cited by the Committee mentioned the names of the countries whose companies had violated the embargo, but did not include the names of the companies involved or give any evidence suggesting the involvement of Governments, with the exception of Israel. South Africa's relations with Israel were dealt with separately by the Committee (see p. 150).

On 15 July, the Committee Chairman requested information from the Netherlands on an alleged violation of the arms embargo, as mentioned in the United States report. In reply, the Netherlands informed the Committee of the results of its investigation and reaffirmed its strict adherence to the embargo.

The Committee stated that it considered the total isolation of South Africa an urgent task of the international community and that the arms embargo constituted an integral part of the overall United Nations strategy to combat apartheid until comprehensive and mandatory sanctions were imposed by the Security Council.

Report of the Secretary-General. By a June report with later addenda,(42) the Secretary-General submitted information to the Security Council on the implementation its 1986 resolution.(41)

In his report, the Secretary-General reproduced the substantive parts of replies that States had sent him, detailing the measures they had undertaken to implement the resolution. Of 59 answers, the following 44 reported that they fully complied with the resolution's provisions, many stating that they had no relations at all with South Africa: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Mali, Mexico, New Zealand, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

Other countries elaborated on particular action they had taken. Argentina stated that it scrupulously observed the 1977 resolution and, with regard to imports, exercised strict control over currency sales, import permits and the opening of credit lines. Brazil enclosed a 1985 presidential Decree which imposed voluntary sanctions. Ireland said it strictly enforced the 1977 mandatory arms embargo and permission was not granted to import any South African weapons. Israel referred to an earlier communication to the Secretary-General (see p. 132) in which it had stated that it was continuing to reduce its ties to South Africa and that it was not entering into new defence contracts with it. Italy, also affirming strict adherence to the 1977 resolution, summarized how it implemented paragraphs 3, 4, 5 and 8 of the 1986 resolution, adding that it did not import South African arms, ammunition or military vehicles. Japan confirmed its adherence to the arms embargo and its prohibition of the export of computers to South Africa prompted by a 1985 Council resolution.(43) The Netherlands listed the measures undertaken by EC in 1985 relevant to the 1986 resolution. Switzerland, pointing out that as a non-member of the United Nations it was not bound by the Council's decisions, stated that in 1963 it had introduced a general embargo on Swiss arms exports to South Africa. Togo had ensured the embargo's effectiveness; being neither a producer nor a dealer in arms, it was doing its utmost to avoid Togolese territory becoming a transit point for weapons destined for South Africa. The United Kingdom stated that following the adoption of the 1986 resolution it had reminded British companies of their obligations in respect of the arms embargo. The United States stated that in late 1986 its Deputy Secretary of State had approved amendments to regulations relating to the embargo, taking into account the 1986 resolution. The public notice that accompanied the amendments-a copy of which was attached to the United States reply-specifically referred to the resolution.

Communication. In a 13 February press release,(44) the Prime Minister of Saint Lucia, referring to news reports that Saint Lucia Airways was transporting arms to South Africa, pointed out that Saint Lucia Airways was a private company, managed by a German national residing in the United States, carrying out charter operations from Belgium to Africa which could not be controlled or monitored by Saint Lucia; in the light of the allegations, it had requested the company to remove the name "Saint Lucia" from its registration.

Statement by Security Council Committee. Following the imposition of the 1977 mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, the Security Council established a Committee of the whole to study ways of improving the embargo and to seek information from States on its implementation.(45) Known as the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa, it issued a statement on 30 December 1987(46) in which it noted with alarm that large quantities of arms and military equipment, including highly sophisticated matériel, were still reaching South Africa directly or clandestinely. In spite of comprehensive national laws, commercial enterprises continued to evade government screening procedures. It appeared that often inadequate or even spurious export licences and shipment documents, as well as inaccurate goods descriptions, were used to evade scrutiny in the countries of origin. Furthermore, intermediary countries were sometimes used as the declared destinations of prohibited goods from which they were then forwarded to South Africa.

The Committee reiterated its appeal to all States, particularly those with a manufacturing and export capacity for military equipment, to increase their vigilance. The Committee, noting that the bulk of its work had been based on information received from private individuals and NGOs, stated that it would benefit from government reports of any possible arms embargo violations and appealed for thorough investigations of such violations.

Action by the Council for Namibia. In its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action,(17) the Council for Namibia condemned the military and nuclear collaboration maintained by certain Western countries and Israel with South Africa and demanded that an immediate stop be put to it.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 12 August,(21) the Committee on colonial countries, condemning the collaboration in similar terms, urged the Security Council to consider, as a matter of urgency, the 1980 report of its Committee,(47) and to widen the scope of resolution 418(1977)(39) to make it more effective and comprehensive. The Committee also called for scrupulous observance of the Council's 1984 resolution(40) enjoining Member States to refrain from importing South African armaments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In two of its 1987 resolutions on South Africa, the General Assembly dealt with the arms embargo. In resolution 42/23 C, it urged the Security-Council to strengthen the embargo and in resolution 42/23 G urged the Council to take steps for the strict implementation of the embargo and to secure an end to military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and the import of military equipment or supplies from it.

The Assembly, in resolution 42/95, again demanded the application of the mandatory arms embargo by all countries, particularly those that maintained military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and continued to supply it with related matériel.

Similar requests and calls were contained in resolution 42/14 A, on Namibia. In addition, the Assembly called on the Council to strengthen the embargo, to ensure strict compliance with it and to implement its Committee's 1980 recommendations (47)

In resolution 42/34 B, on the denuclearization of Africa, the Assembly commended the Council's adoption of resolutions 558(1984)(40) and 591(1986),(41) with a view to blocking the existing loopholes in the arms embargo so as to render it more effective and prohibiting in particular all forms of nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

Decision 42/417 contained a call for the end of all co-operation that violated resolution 418(1977).(39)

Economic relations

Conditions in South Africa. The Special Committee against Apartheid gave details of South Africa's economic relations and conditions there, reporting a growth rate in GDP of 2.6 per cent in 1987, compared with 1 per cent in 1986. Inflation was 14.7 per cent, down from the 1986 figure of 18.1. The foreign exchange rate of the rand recovered in 1987 and South Africa's current account showed a surplus. Thus, the Committee concluded, after years of recession and stagnation, South Africa's economic recovery continued. There were, however, increasing signs of long-term stagnation in domestic savings and investment.

Both foreign and domestic industries continued to shy away from large-scale investments because of the unfavourable political outlook.

The South African economy was heavily dependent on foreign trade. Using figures for 1985, the Committee reported that exports amounted to 30 per cent and imports to 25 per cent of GDP. Approximately 80 per cent of imports were capital and intermediate goods, imported from Western industrialized countries, that South Africa could not do without; therefore, it remained seriously exposed to international pressure.

South Africa's trade relations with its major partners continued in 1987, although there was a major realignment in the order of importance among them. Trade with the Nordic countries virtually ceased and that with the United States declined noticeably due mainly to the restrictive policies taken by those countries. On the other hand, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Spain, Taiwan and Turkey had significantly increased their trade with South Africa in 1987.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. On various occasions, the Special Committee against Apartheid expressed appreciation for activities aimed at ending economic collaboration with South Africa, among which were the withdrawal of Barclays Bank from South Africa, the analysis of the situation and the recommendations of the United States Secretary of State's Advisory Committee on South Africa, as well as the decision of the Reverend Leon Sullivan to abandon the code of conduct formulated by him in 1977 to promote racial equality in employment practices in United States companies doing business in South Africa and his call-on those companies to end all ties with that country.

The Committee provided assistance to and participated in a Seminar on Support to the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and Action against Apartheid (see p. 130), which launched initiatives in favour of economic sanctions to be taken by Western European parliaments, including a prohibition of coal imports from South Africa.

In August, the Committee Chairman drew attention to the fact that several Western European airlines were undermining the United States prohibition of air links with South Africa and appropriate letters were sent to France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States. In October, a letter was sent to Equatorial Guinea, requesting clarification of press reports on developments of relations between it and South Africa.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 26 February,(4) the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the General Assembly's request that the Security Council consider complete and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, including the cessation of all trade with it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 42/23 B, the General Assembly urged States, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, to prohibit the import of gold, coal, strategic minerals and agricultural products from South Africa. In resolution 42/23 G, it appealed to States, pending the imposition of mandatory sanctions, to consider national legislation to increase pressure on South Africa, such as an end to all promotion of and support for trade with it and the prohibition of the sale of krugerrand and other South African coins.

In resolution 42/74, the Assembly called on States to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with South Africa.

Oil embargo

The Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1986,(48) took up work in 1987 and in November reported to the Assembly.(49)

In the report, the 11-member Group recalled that an oil embargo had been recommended by the Assembly in 1977,(50) but that efforts by the Security Council to make it mandatory had failed, despite repeated recommendations by the Assembly. The potential effectiveness of an oil embargo was considered by the Group to be evident, since oil was virtually the sole strategic raw material that South Africa lacked. Owing, however, to the voluntary nature of the embargo, it had been neither strictly applied nor closely monitored and therefore had not reached its potential effectiveness.

A questionnaire was sent to all States concerning measures they had taken to prevent the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa. Fifty States replied and the Group reviewed their answers, noting that most did not respond directly to all the questions posed. In several cases they had not stipulated the introduction of legislative or other measures, and instead incorporated the embargo as a general policy within the broader policy of sanctions against the apartheid régime.

The Group also sought the co-operation of more than 800 NGOS, and commended them for providing data on the movement of ships to and from South Africa. In order to diversify its sources of information, the Group requested the Secretariat to study the possibility of acquiring data on such movement from sources within the United Nations system. In addition, preliminary contacts were made with firms handling such data. The Group, stating that it was important that it should have the support and co-operation of all Member States, particularly of oil-exporting and oil-shipping States, reported that it had already been able to establish constructive contacts with States concerned.

In its conclusions, the Group expressed its belief that an oil embargo could be one of the most effective means of pressure, short of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, to induce South Africa to end apartheid. Thus it believed that the Security Council was under a special obligation to impose a mandatory oil embargo. While recognizing the steps taken by oil-exporting States to impose such an embargo, the Group noted that South Africa continued to receive oil supplies through frequent violations of the embargo.

The Group recommended that the Assembly should request the Council to consider invoking Chapter VII of the Charter to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa. Pending such a decision, the Assembly should request Member States which had not done so to adopt unilateral measures to that effect.

Support for the Group's work was expressed by the Special Committee against Apartheid(1) and by the Council for Namibia in its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action.(17)

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 26 February,(4) the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the Assembly's request that the Security Council consider an embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic goods to South Africa. On 3 March,(19) the Commission endorsed a number of measures adopted by certain countries and organizations and commended them to the international community for adoption and implementation. Among those measures were the cessation of exports, sales or transport of oil and oil products, and co-operation with South Africa's oil industry.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 12 August,(20) the Committee on colonial countries called on those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that had not done so to take effective measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/23 F.

Oil embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa,

Recalling its resolutions on an oil embargo against South Africa, in particular resolution 41/35 F of 10 November 1986,

Noting that, while oil-exporting States have committed themselves to an oil embargo against South Africa, very few major shipping States have done so,

Concerned that the racist regime of South Africa has been able to circumvent the oil embargoes and comparable measures adopted by States,

Commending action taken by labour unions, student groups and anti-apartheid organizations against companies involved in the violation of the oil embargo against South Africa, and for the enforcement of the embargo,

Convinced that an effective oil embargo against South Africa would complement the arms embargo against the apartheid régime, and serve to curtail both its acts of aggression against the front-line States and its repression of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia,

1. Takes note of the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa;

2. Again urges the Security Council to take action without further delay to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa as well as the supply of equipment and technology to its oil industry and coal liquefaction projects;

3. Requests all States concerned, pending a decision by the Security Council, to adopt effective measures and/or legislation to broaden the scope of the oil embargo in order to ensure the complete cessation of the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa and Namibia, whether directly or indirectly, and in particular:

(a) To apply strictly the "end users" clause and other conditions concerning restriction on destination to ensure compliance with the embargo;

(b) To compel the companies originally selling or purchasing oil or petroleum products, as appropriate to each nation, to desist from selling, reselling or otherwise transferring oil and petroleum products to South Africa and Namibia, whether directly or indirectly;

(c) To establish strict control over the supply of oil and petroleum products to South Africa and Namibia by intermediaries, oil companies and traders by placing responsibility for the fulfilment of the contract on the first buyer or seller of oil and petroleum products who would, therefore, be liable for the actions of these parties;

(d) To prevent access by South Africa to other sources of energy, including the supply of raw materials, technical know-how, financial assistance and transport;

(e) To prohibit all assistance to apartheid South Africa, including the provision of finance, technology, equipment or personnel for the prospecting, development or production of hydrocarbon resources, the construction or operation of oil-from-coal plants or the development and operation of plants producing fuel substitutes and additives such as ethanol and methanol;

(f) To prevent South African corporations from maintaining or expanding their holdings in oil companies or properties outside South Africa;

(g) To terminate the transport of oil to South Africa by ships flying their flags, or by ships that are ultimately owned, managed or chartered by their nationals or by companies within their jurisdiction;

(h) To develop a system for registration of ships, registered or owned by their nationals, that have unloaded oil in South Africa in contravention of embargoes imposed;

(i) To impose penal action against companies and individuals that have been involved in violating the oil embargo;

(j) To gather, exchange and disseminate information regarding violations of the oil embargo;

4. Requests the Intergovernmental Group to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including a proposal for the strengthening of the mechanism to monitor the supply and shipment of oil and petroleum products to South Africa;

5. Requests all States to extend their co-operation to the Intergovernmental Group in the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Intergovernmental Group with all necessary assistance for the implementation of the present resolution.

During the explanations of vote on the resolutions on South Africa, a number of Member States expressed their opposition or reservations to the imposition of sanctions against it. Most of these statements, which were summarized in the context of resolutions 42/23 B and C above, applied also to the text on the oil embargo. Referring to that text, France had reservations of an institutional nature regarding paragraph 2 and recalled its refusal to accept the creation of monitoring machinery exceeding the powers conferred by the Charter on the Assembly. Belgium believed it was for the Security Council to impose the embargo, but added, as did France, that such reservations did not prevent it from applying an embargo on the supply of crude oil as imposed by EC. Canada said it had already imposed an effective voluntary embargo.

Swaziland and Lesotho stated that they could not implement the resolution due to their geographical locations.

The Assembly took related action in resolution 42/74, using the same wording used by the Committee on colonial countries (see above).

Foreign investments and loans

According to the Special Committee against Apartheid, South Africa relied heavily on trade credits. In March 1987, it agreed with its major creditors on a three-year debt rescheduling programme, which was to run into 1990. Accordingly, South Africa would pay $1.42 billion before 1990, and the rest would be serviced according to the original schedule.

The Committee reported that in 1987, the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United States, Japan, France, Switzerland, the Netherlands and Austria, in that order, had the greatest number of companies with investments in South Africa, ranging from 374 companies for the United Kingdom to 28 for Austria. The largest foreign investor was the United Kingdom, accounting for about 40 per cent of all foreign direct investment in South Africa.

In the course of the divestment campaign, as foreign corporations reduced their investments in South Africa, corporations of Taiwan increased theirs. By the end of 1987, about 80 Taiwanese factories had been established in South Africa and 20 others were under construction, most in the so-called homelands.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 26 February,(4) the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the General Assembly's request that the Security Council consider prohibiting all loans to, and all investment in, South Africa and the cessation of all trade with it. On 3 March,(19) the Commission endorsed measures adopted by some countries and organizations and commended them to the international community for adoption and implementation. Among those measures were the cessation of further investments in and loans to South Africa and of any governmental insurance guarantee of credits to that country.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 12 August,(20) the Committee on colonial countries called on States to terminate, or cause to have terminated, any loans to South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Foreign investments and loans were addressed in two of the General Assembly's 1987 resolutions on South Africa. In resolution 42/23 B, it urged States to adopt a number of unilateral measures, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions. Among other things, States were called on to induce TNCS, banks and financial institutions to withdraw effectively from South Africa and prevent them from granting loans and credits to it. As was the case in other contexts, resolution 42/23 G contained a similar call. The Assembly appealed to States to consider national legislative and other appropriate measures to increase the pressure on South Africa, such as the cessation of further investment in, and loans to, that country.

Related action was taken in resolution 42/74 when the Assembly used the same language as the Committee on colonial countries (see above).

Transnational corporations

Activities of the Commission on TNCs. Three reports of the Secretary-General, dealing respectively with activities of TNCS in South Africa and Namibia,(51) responsibilities of home countries of such corporations(52) and follow-up to the public hearings on their activities,(53) were considered by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its thirteenth session in April 1987.

Regarding the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia,(51) it was stated that since the Commission's 1986 session(54) a number of large TNCs had sold their South African affiliates or announced their intention of doing so. In most cases, however, TNCS maintained non-equity ties with South Africa and only a few were breaking all ties, including exports to it. According to the report, the changing role of TNCS in South Africa was a direct result of the weak economy and the deteriorating political situation which had been caused by the Government's refusal to make any meaningful move to abolish apartheid. TNCS had been increasingly willing to call for its abolition; however, the report concluded, the replacement of foreign direct investment by exports and other non-equity relationships was not an effective way of challenging apartheid, since goods previously produced in South Africa by the departing TNCs and their technology continued to be available to the South African economy. Based on figures up to 1986, the report stated that investment by TNCs and funds raised on international capital markets, particularly from transnational banks, had continued to play an important role as sources of capital for the South African economy. However, there seemed to be a reduction of stock of the three major investing countries, the United States, the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany. The report observed that the stock of these three countries reached its peak sometime between 1981 and 1983 and then began to decline as a result of corporate divestment decisions.

The report on the responsibilities of home countries of TNCs operating in South Africa in violation of United Nations decisions⁽⁵²⁾ summarized resolutions and decisions adopted recently by United Nations organs, measures taken by Member States (see p. 131), and measures adopted by local authorities. Annexed to the report was a table giving the divestment action by United States colleges and universities as at 12 December 1986.

The third report⁽⁵³⁾ was a follow-up to the 1985 recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons which had held public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia.⁽⁵⁵⁾ In compliance with the Panel's recommendations, the report contained a list of TNCs that had disposed of their equity interests in South Africa, those that held an equity interest of more than 10 per cent in affiliates in South Africa, those that were in the process of disposing of their equity interests there, and those that had reduced their equity interests. All information was based on public sources and each corporation had been asked at least once to confirm the information and, if necessary, to provide corrections. Analysing the figures presented for the three major investing countries, the report observed that since 1985 a very slow, if steady, process of withdrawal from South Africa and Namibia of corporations based in the Federal Republic of Germany seemed to have taken place. For the United Kingdom, the figures indicated a faster process of divestment, while TNCs based in the United States were, according to the report, by far the most willing to disinvest.

The Commission, after considering the reports, adopted a draft resolution on TNCs which was subsequently adopted by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

Meanwhile, negotiations on a draft code of conduct for TNCs continued in 1987 (see p. 507).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 26 February,⁽⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights once again called on all Governments that had not done so to take measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that owned and operated enterprises in South Africa and Namibia, with a view to putting a stop to their activities there.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1987, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/56 by vote.

Activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, in particular resolution 1981/86 of 2 November 1981, in which it requested the Secretary-General to make arrangements for the organization of public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia,

Noting with grave concern the continued deterioration of the situation in South Africa as evidenced by the escalating brutality, indiscriminate killings and mass arrests of innocent persons, including women and children, by the authorities of the racist minority regime,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of the racist minority regime in South Africa for its brutal perpetuation of the inhuman system of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia;

2. Condemns those transnational corporations that, through their covert and overt activities in South Africa and Namibia, continue their systematic and clandestine circumventing of laws and measures imposed by the Governments of home countries of transnational corporations, as well as the programmes of disinvestment of some transnational corporations, which are aimed at retaining their profitable economic links with South Africa;

3. Welcomes as an initial positive step the measures taken by the Governments of home countries of transnational corporations to impose restrictions on further investments in South Africa and bank loans to the racist minority régime;

4. Reiterates that the continued activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia and their collaboration with the racist régime of Pretoria perpetuates the system of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia;

5. Urges the Governments of home countries of transnational corporations that have not yet done so to adopt measures aimed at ensuring that transnational corporations do not contribute to perpetuating the policies of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa;

6. Notes that the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia proposed a deadline of 1 January 1987 by which significant changes in the operations of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia should be effected;

7. Notes also that that deadline has not been met and urges the Governments of home countries of transnational corporations and other bodies concerned to take appropriate measures to implement the recommendations made by the Panel of Eminent Persons;

8. Reaffirms that to eliminate apartheid and to terminate the illegal occupation of Namibia by the racist régime will require an effective, concerted programme of international action, endorsed by the entire international community, supervised in a systematic manner by Governments and other bodies concerned, and supported by monitoring and follow-up activities;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue the useful work carried out by the Secretariat on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia through the collection and dissemination of information;

(b) To report on an annual basis to the Commission on Transnational Corporations, the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution, until the abolition of apartheid and the termination of South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia have been achieved;

(c) To prepare a more detailed and consolidated study on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, in particular on the impact of their disinvestment programmes and the replacement of investment by non-equity links and on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to the transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia in violation of the relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions, bearing in mind the recommendations made by the Panel of Eminent Persons;

(d) To take all necessary steps to ensure the immediate 'implementation of the recommendations of the Panel.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/56

28 May 1987

Meeting 17

Approved by First Committee (E/1987/93) by vote (32-2-5), 22 May (meeting 10); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1987/22); agenda item 13.

Australia said it voted in favour of the draft resolution because it supported its general thrust, but it could not accept the implication of paragraph 4 that the activities of TNCs were solely responsible for the perpetuation of the régime in South Africa. It could also not support the provisions of paragraphs 7 and 9 (d), particularly in so far as they called for the violation of South African laws. Australia was also not convinced that the study requested in paragraph 9 (c) would contribute significantly to the general objectives of the resolution and regretted the additional demand made on the Secretary-General at a time when efforts were being made to limit documentation.

On behalf of the Nordic countries, Denmark said they had voted in favour of the resolution because they supported its general thrust, but that they were not in agreement with some specific elements, such as the overly general terms of paragraph 4 and the last part of paragraph 2. Paragraphs 5 and 7, moreover, raised the difficult problem of determining the extent to which the State of origin could have jurisdiction to intervene in activities that took place within the jurisdiction of another State. With regard to the request contained in paragraph 9 (c), the Nordic countries would suggest consolidating all reports into a single document in order to economize. Canada endorsed both statements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The role of TNCs in South Africa was addressed by the General Assembly in several 1987 resolutions. In resolution 42/23 B, the Assembly, urging States to adopt a number of unilateral measures, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa by the Security Council, called on States to induce TNCs, banks and financial institutions to withdraw effectively from South Africa and prevent them from investing there, engaging in commercial transactions with South Africa and supplying materials and technology to it.

In resolution 42/74, the Assembly condemned TNCs which continued to make new investments in South Africa and supply that regime with armaments, nuclear technology and other materials that were likely to buttress it and thus aggravate the threat to world peace.

In resolution 42/56, the Assembly appealed to States that had not done so to ratify or to accede to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid⁽⁵⁶⁾ without further delay, in particular those States that had jurisdiction over TNCs operating in South Africa and without whose co-operation such operations could not be halted. Taking note of the report of the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights (see p. 796), the Assembly drew the attention of all States to the Group's opinion that TNCs operating in South Africa had to be considered accomplices in the crime of apartheid.

IMF and World Bank relations with South Africa

In 1987, as in previous years, United Nations bodies called on the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank to terminate their relations with South Africa.

On 26 February,⁽⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights urgently requested all specialized agencies, particularly IMF, not to grant any loan or financial assistance to South Africa.

The Committee on colonial countries, on 14 August,⁽⁵⁷⁾ in a resolution on the role of the specialized agencies in the decolonization process, regretted that the World Bank continued its financial and technical links with South Africa and called for those links to be discontinued. It deplored the collaboration of IMF and condemned the financial support that it gave to South Africa, calling on it to end that collaboration, because the apartheid system implied a serious instability in the South African economy, including its balance of payments, and thus IMF according to its rules should not, as long as apartheid and South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia continued, extend any credits to South Africa. In its August decision on Namibia,⁽²²⁾ the Committee likewise called on all specialized agencies, particularly IMF, to terminate all collaboration with, and assistance to, South Africa, since such assistance served to augment the Pretoria regime's military capability, thus enabling it to continue its repression in Namibia and South Africa and to commit acts of aggression against independent neighbouring States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1987/78, deplored IMF's persistent collaboration with South Africa in disregard of repeated General Assembly resolutions to the contrary, and urgently called on IMF to end such collaboration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly also dealt with the relations of IMF and the World Bank with South Africa, basing its references to that issue on formulations suggested by the Committee on colonial countries. In resolution 42/75, it took up the wording contained in the related resolution of the Committee,⁽⁵⁷⁾ while in resolution 42/14 A the formulation of the Committee's decision on Namibia was used.⁽²²⁾ In addition, in resolution 42/75, the Assembly reiterated its proposal for the urgent consideration by the IMF Board of Governors of an item dealing with the Fund's relationship with South Africa.

Sports and cultural relations

As in previous years, the Special Committee against Apartheid continued trying to strengthen international efforts to curtail cultural and sporting contacts with South Africa, mainly through its regular publication of registers of entertainers, actors and sportspersons who had performed in South Africa and through supporting activities of NGOs in that regard (see also p. 126).

The Committee reported that from the beginning of 1986 until August 1987 over 70 sportspersons and 40 artists had pledged that they would no longer have any sports or cultural contacts in South Africa and thus their names had been deleted from the registers of sports contacts and of entertainers, actors and others who had performed there. Since, however, many artists still performed in South Africa, the Committee felt that much remained to be done before the boycott was fully effective.

In May, the Committee requested Bolivia to investigate a report by the South African media on cultural exchanges between Bolivia and South Africa. In reply, Bolivia reiterated its firm commitment against apartheid and communicated the results of the requested investigation.

In November 1987, five United States filmmakers, acting on behalf of 100 members of the United States-based Film-makers United against Apartheid, urged the President of the United States to support fully the United Nations cultural boycott of South Africa and to adopt stronger economic sanctions against it.

Action by other United Nations bodies. The Commission on Human Rights, on 3 March,⁽¹⁹⁾ endorsed a number of measures that had been adopted by States pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa by the Security Council. Among them was the cessation of all academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations, and of relations with individuals, institutions and other bodies endorsing or based on apartheid. Earlier, on 19 February,⁽³⁾ the Commission called on all States with cultural and sports relations with South Africa to sever them.

In its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Council for Namibia condemned a number of different forms of collaboration with South Africa, including cultural collaboration.

The Committee on colonial countries, in its decision on Namibia⁽²²⁾ and in its resolution on the role of foreign economic interests in the decolonization process,⁽²⁰⁾ called for South Africa's cultural isolation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 42/23 B, the General Assembly urged States, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, to adopt a number of measures to impose effective sanctions against South Africa. Among those measures was action to ensure the effectiveness of the sports and cultural boycott. Resolution 42/23 G contained an appeal to Governments and organizations to cease academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations that would support the apartheid regime, as well as relations with individuals, institutions and other bodies endorsing or based on apartheid. In resolution 42/14 A, the Assembly requested States that had not done so, pending comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, to take legislative, administrative and other measures individually or collectively in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally. The Assembly also condemned the continuing collaboration between South Africa and certain Western countries, including cultural contacts, stating that such collaboration helped to prolong South Africa's control over Namibia.

Israel-South Africa relations

The General Assembly in 1986 had requested the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the relations between South Africa and Israel under review and to report to the Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.⁽⁵⁸⁾ In response, the Committee submitted a report covering Israel-South Africa relations between September 1986 and September 1987.⁽⁵⁹⁾

The Committee stated that since its previous report⁽⁶⁰⁾ Israel had reduced its ties with South Africa, a policy change widely believed to have resulted from the United States Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act (October 1986), which required the United States Government to review its aid to countries that violated the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa.

Israel's policy towards South Africa was set out in a 20 March communication to the Secretary-General,⁽⁶¹⁾ in which Israel reported that its Cabinet had, on 18 March, decided to reiterate its total condemnation of apartheid and announce that it would continue reducing its ties with South Africa and that it would not enter into new defence contracts with it. The Committee reported that in a further communication of 20 August Israel added that it did not co-operate with South Africa in the nuclear field, that it did not export oil to it, and that it had drastically reduced all cultural ties. The Committee observed that Israel's decisions would still allow it covertly to continue military sales to South Africa on basically the same terms as before, since the Government had not announced an end to such top-secret arms contracts, neither had it clarified the fate of past contracts still in effect in 1987.

On 16 September, Israel decided on a package of sanctions against South Africa, an unofficial text of which was annexed to the Committee's report. The sanctions package consisted of: non-approval of new investments in South Africa; prohibiting government loans to it, the sale of oil, and the import of krugerrand; freezing iron and steel imports at current levels; no active support for tourism to South Africa; and no new scientific agreements. In addition, sports ties would be subject to the decisions of international sports associations and cultural ties would conform to Israel's basic negative view of the apartheid regime. Furthermore, Israel announced the establishment of a fund to assist the implementation of training programmes in Israel in educational, cultural and social fields, for participants from the so-called black and coloured communities of South Africa.

In the Committee's view, the steps taken by Israel were rather ambivalent, left numerous loopholes and were qualified by exceptions. Those timid first steps would acquire significance only if they were followed by concrete action, expansion to the level announced by other countries and a complete and transparent cessation of arrangements made between the two countries in the past.

Regarding military collaboration, the Committee stated that Israel was believed to be South Africa's largest arms supplier, with annual two-way sales worth more than 1,000 million rand. Strategically more important, however, was the secret technical, intelligence and research co-operation between the two countries' arms industries and the Committee gave two examples of South African weapons systems that were virtually identical to Israeli ones.

The most serious aspect of the collaboration between Israel and South Africa, in the Committee's view, was in the nuclear field. Reportedly, South African scientists had been working at Israeli nuclear facilities at Dimona and many Israeli nuclear scientists had visited South Africa frequently in the past. The nuclear collaboration was predicated on the availability of raw uranium in South Africa and on the advanced stage of Israeli nuclear technology. The Committee reported that South Africa was planning to build a runway on a remote Antarctic island which could be used to develop a site for testing nuclear missiles. Indications were that South African and Israeli military officers had visited the island and examined the airstrip.

With regard to economic collaboration, the Committee's report provided figures for 1986, according to which imports from South Africa amounted to 2.8 per cent of Israel's total imports, while exports to South Africa amounted to 0.7 per cent of Israel's total exports. Both figures excluded military sales, diamonds, gold and goods intended for re-export. Both figures were lower than they had been in 1984. The role of Israel in sanctions-busting had been a matter of concern, the Committee stated, citing as an example that a United States company had decided to pull out of South Africa, while its subsidiary in Israel continued to do business there.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Committee stated that collaboration had continuously increased for more than a decade, but for a variety of reasons, Israel was reassessing the extent of its relations with South Africa, especially military contacts. Noting Israel's March and September actions, the Committee considered them a first step towards the severance of relations with South Africa, as called for in General Assembly resolutions, but was concerned that Israel had not liquidated existing secret arms contracts, had not disclosed how long the contracts would run, and had used vague wording that could provide loopholes.

Communication. The final communique of the meeting of Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Non-Aligned Movement to the General Assembly's 1987 session⁽¹²⁾ (New York, 5-7 October) contained a condemnation of the military and nuclear collaboration between South Africa and Israel as a violation of the United Nations arms embargo.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/23 D by recorded vote.

Relations between Israel and South Africa

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions on relations between Israel and South Africa, in particular resolution 41/35 C of 10 November 1986,

Having considered the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa,

Noting the measures recently announced by the Government of Israel concerning its relations with South Africa,

1. Calls upon Israel to desist from and terminate forthwith all forms of military, nuclear, intelligence, economic and other collaboration, particularly its long-term contracts for military supplies to South Africa;

2. Further calls upon Israel to abide scrupulously by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council;

3. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue to monitor developments in the relations of Israel with South Africa, including the implementation of the measures recently announced by Israel;

4. Further requests the Special Committee to keep the matter under constant review and to report thereon to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

a. Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Explaining its vote, Israel stated that despite assurances by the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid that the Committee had in 1987 refrained from mentioning names of Member States, Israel had again been singled out. Resolution 42/23 D related to alleged unfounded relations between Israel and South Africa; Israel called on objective Member States not to support the resolution.

Belize pointed out that Israel was not the only nation that had relations with South Africa and it was therefore unfair to single it out; if in future the sponsors were not prepared to list all States having relations with South Africa, the draft should not be submitted to the Assembly. However, while it was unfair to Israel, the injustice being done to the blacks in South Africa was a greater injustice and therefore Belize supported the resolution; that support should be interpreted not as a vote against Israel, but as a vote against Support for apartheid.

Lesotho, the United States and Zaire also pointed out that Israel was not the only country maintaining relations with South Africa and that therefore they would not support the resolution.

Cameroon stated that all States knew a long list of countries that openly or secretly encouraged South Africa through trade and exchange, which induced an illusion of continuing support and it bordered on immorality to be silent about them. It would have preferred a clear appeal not only to Israel, but to all others to hasten the execution of the new policies they had declared with regard to South Africa. Israel, as was shown in the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, had made a commitment and Cameroon was looking forward to witnessing the results of the efforts made pursuant to that commitment.

Iceland, speaking on behalf of the Nordic States, said they deplored the continued practice of selectively singling out individual countries, most evident in the current text, since it would make it all the more difficult to achieve concerted action in the struggle against apartheid. Ireland also objected to the selective singling out of one Member State for condemnation. Malta, New Zealand and Saint Kitts and Nevis objected to the text for the same reason. Such singling out of Member States in general, without explicit reference to resolution 42/23 D, was criticized by Austria, Denmark (on behalf of EC), the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Malawi and Portugal.

Belgium called for the suppression of the text on relations between South Africa and Israel, which it felt was discriminatory and unacceptable. Canada felt that the text had retained its essential bias while purporting to take note of the measures taken by Israel.

Panama basically agreed with the text, but since it had abstained in the 1986 vote on the same topic, on which the 1987 text was based, it would abstain again.

Papua New Guinea, pointing out that ordinarily it would not support any text which singled out a Member State in connection with the problem of apartheid, said its affirmative vote demonstrated its frustration at the lack of progress until 1987 and was not a vote against Israel; it, too, hoped that other States would also be named in future resolutions for their continued co-operation with South Africa.

The General Assembly took related action in resolution 42/95, in which it denounced the collusion between South Africa and Israel and expressed support for the Declaration of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel.⁽⁶²⁾ Israel was among the countries condemned in this resolution for maintaining ties with South Africa that encouraged it to persist in suppressing the aspirations of peoples to self-determination and independence. In resolution 42/44 on Israeli nuclear armament, the Assembly reiterated its condemnation of the co-operation between the two countries. In resolution 42/209 B on the Middle East, the Assembly condemned the collaboration in question, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, which it said constituted a hostile act against African and Arab States and enabled Israel to enhance its nuclear capabilities, thus subjecting the States of the region to nuclear blackmail.

Situation in South Africa

General political situation. In its 1987 report,⁽¹⁾ the Special Committee against Apartheid provided information on the general political situation in South Africa. According to the report, the Government had shown no genuine inclination towards a solution of the political crisis in the country. Instead, it had tried to crush opposition by extending the state of emergency, which was designed to create an atmosphere of terror and fear in which the police, the army and vigilante groups acted with virtual impunity.

The May elections in the white South African community resulted in an increase of the majority of the ruling National Party. In a statement on the election results, the Committee Chairman said the results had shown that there was no hope for peaceful change as long as the National Party was in power. In the Committee's opinion, the call for the elections was an attempt by the Party to reassert its authority and give a semblance of legitimacy to its constitutional plan of power-sharing based on ethnicity, which was essentially a policy of coercion and co-option. It appeared to have three components: first, the emergency regulations aimed at restoring "order" in the black townships and the "homelands"; second, the implementation of socio-economic betterment projects in selected areas aimed at improving the physical conditions in those areas; and third, the constitutional power-sharing plan, in which the proposed National Statutory Council for Africans would be an advisory body and the decision-making power would continue to rest with the President and the chamber for whites in Parliament, was firmly wedded to ethnic politics. Opposition organizations had rejected the proposed Council and had called on the Government to negotiate with the leaders recognized by the majority population. No leader of stature in the black community had agreed to serve on the Council.

With regard to the critical labour situation in South Africa, the Special Report of the Director-General on the Application of the Declaration concerning the Policy of Apartheid in South Africa, published by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) in 1987, noted that South Africa's internal turmoil and uncertainty, reflected in the labour field, was a direct consequence of the Government's failure to provide positive, realistic and constructive political leadership, to recognize and come to terms with the inevitability of fundamental change and its intransigence in the face of international pressures, all of which merely compounded an already dangerous situation.

Repression of the population. In the Committee's view, the state of emergency, which was renewed in June 1987, revealed South Africa as a police State in which brutal actions of the security forces were virtually immune from prosecution. Regulations authorized the banning of meetings and gatherings of all kinds and thus enabled the authorities to criminalize even mild forms of political dissent.

The Committee reported that detention without charge or trial, even of children, and attacks and murders committed by vigilante groups were used as a weapon of intimidation against the opposition. In that climate of State-induced terror, the authorities severely restricted the foreign and domestic media.

Under cover of the state of emergency, the basic laws of apartheid continued to be enforced in South Africa. The Committee provided figures for 1986, according to which 64,000 Africans were forcibly removed, nearly 100,000 were arrested for trespassing, and most residents of the "homelands" continued to be deprived of their South African citizenship.

Resistance to apartheid. According to the report, the struggle against apartheid in South Africa grew stronger in 1987 and the national liberation movements, the black labour movement, students and youth, grass-roots organizations and white critics of the system gave new dimensions to the resistance. Freedom fighters intensified their armed struggle against the Pretoria regime. An increasing number of organizations and individuals met with the leaders of the national liberation movements, despite the Government's efforts to discredit and intimidate them. The growing popular resistance and the increased unworkability of apartheid were evident in the trend to replace the official town and village councils with new structures of "people's power", even though many activists faced detention and persecution.

The black labour movement continued to play an important role in the opposition to apartheid, fighting not only for economic but also for political objectives in actions that were often coordinated with other grass-roots organizations. A new labour federation was formed, the National Council of Trade Unions, which had about 420,000 members. The 1-million-strong Congress of South African Trade Unions encouraged the formation of one union per industry through the merger of its member unions. It launched a living-wage campaign and a drive to organize unemployed black workers. Trade unions often went on strike to press for their demands; the Committee reported that in 1986, 793 strikes took place which involved 424,135 black workers.

Black students ended their boycott of schools at the beginning of 1987 and turned to what they called "alternative education". Together with black youth, they were in the forefront of popular resistance, which also included consumer, rent and transportation boycotts. The ongoing rent boycott involved more than 50 townships and from June 1986 to April 1987 cost about 297 million rand.

The Committee reported that church leaders and religious institutions opposed apartheid more forcefully than ever. In April, the defiance campaign against the ban on calls for the release of political detainees had the support of the Anglican, Roman Catholic, and black Reformed Churches, as well as of the Southern African Catholic Bishops Conference and the ecumenical South African Council of Churches. Even the white Reformed Church, which had previously justified apartheid on biblical grounds, concluded that the theological justification for enforced racial separation was untenable.

The Committee also reported wider opposition by democratic whites, individuals and organizations such as the End Conscription Campaign, the National Union of South African Students, the Black Sash and the Detainees' Parents Support Committee. A number of Afrikaner academics issued anti-apartheid manifestos calling for power-sharing. In July, a conference of 61 whites and 17 members of ANC was organized at Dakar by the Institute for a Democratic Alternative for South Africa, which was established by white opponents to apartheid. The conference expressed preference for a negotiated solution and agreed that there was an urgent need to achieve a non-racial and democratic society in South Africa. The Dakar Declaration, adopted by the conference, was transmitted to the Secretary-General by Senegal.(63)

The General Assembly, in resolution 42/95, commended the efforts of the democratic forces within various sections of the South African society striving towards the abolition of apartheid and the creation of a united non-racial democratic society and took note with satisfaction of the Dakar Declaration. South Africa, in a statement communicated to the Secretary-General,(64) maintained that the Afrikaners present in Dakar did not represent a fraction of a percentage point of the Afrikaner. The United States, on the other hand, also in a communication to the Secretary-General,(65) stated that such communication as had taken place in Dakar should be encouraged and expanded upon.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly reaffirm the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa by all means, including armed struggle, that it demand the lifting of the state of emergency and that it emphasize that only negotiations with the genuine leaders of the oppressed people could bring about a peaceful, just and lasting settlement of the racial conflict.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary bodies. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa submitted a report to the Commission on Human Rights on policies and practices violating human rights in South Africa.(66) Having compared the so-called reforms in South Africa and the apartheid legislation in force, the Group concluded that no significant change had taken place. The major pillars of apartheid, which included the Group Areas Act and various Bantu Homelands Acts as well as all the security laws, were still intact. The Group stated that the only recommendation which, if followed, could change the human rights situation in South Africa was that the apartheid system be abolished.

After examining the report, the Commission on Human Rights, on 3 March,(19) rejected the so-called constitutional arrangements and reforms in South Africa, which it felt fell short of the termination of the state of emergency, the dismantling of the bantustans, the lifting of the ban on political organizations, the return of all political exiles and the release of political prisoners, and continued to deny the black population their full citizenship rights. Apartheid, the Commission affirmed, could not be reformed but had to be abolished. It condemned the increase of human rights violations since the imposition of the state of emergency in 1986 and—after listing a number of specific demands-demanded that South Africa immediately and completely abolish the unjust and inhumane system of apartheid. The Commission also decided to renew the mandate of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to investigate the policies which violated human rights in South Africa.

On 19 February,(3) the Commission reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people and its national liberation movements by all available means, including armed struggle, for the elimination of apartheid. It reiterated that peace could only be guaranteed by establishing majority rule through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and undivided South Africa.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, on 31 August,(67) reaffirmed that apartheid was a crime against humanity and demanded the lifting of the state of emergency, the cessation of brutal acts by South African security forces and the release of all political prisoners.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 April, the President of the Security Council issued the following statement on behalf of the Council's members:(68)

"The members of the Security Council express their deep concern about the decree issued by the South African authorities on 10 April 1987, under which nearly all forms of protest against detentions without trial or support for those detained are prohibited. They express their strong indignation at this latest measure, which is based on the June 1986 decree imposing the nation-wide state of emergency, the lifting of which was called for by the members of the Council in the statement made by the President on their behalf at the 2690th meeting of the Council on 13 June 1986.

"They call upon the South African authorities to revoke the decree of 10 April 1987, which is contrary to fundamental human rights as envisaged in the Charter of the United Nations and to the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and can only aggravate the situation further, lead to an escalation of acts of violence and further intensify human suffering in South Africa.

"Recognizing that the root cause of the situation in South Africa is apartheid, they once again strongly condemn the apartheid system and all the policies and practices, including this latest decree, deriving therefrom. They again call upon the Government of South Africa to end the oppression and repression of the black majority by bringing apartheid to an end and to seek a peaceful, just and lasting solution in accordance with the principles of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. They also call upon the Government of South Africa to set free immediately and unconditionally all political prisoners and detainees, in order to avoid further aggravating the situation.

"They urge the Government of South Africa to enter into negotiations with the genuine representatives of the South African people with a view to the establishment in South Africa of a free, united and democratic society on the basis of universal suffrage."

The South African decree was also denounced in a 14 April statement by the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid.

On 17 April,(69) South Africa informed the Council President that it rejected the standpoint contained in the statement. South Africa had to maintain law and order in the country; the limitations applied only to security-related matters and aimed at countering confrontation and violence and promoting peace and stability. The vast majority of South Africans expected the Government to take steps to advance peace and stability. ANC wanted to gain power through violence and death and did not care for democracy or human rights.

Communications. A number of communications were received by the Secretary-General regarding the situation in South Africa; all contained calls for the dismantling of apartheid.

In a 29 September statement given in New York,(65) the United States Secretary of State called apartheid morally repugnant and identified it as the primary cause of instability in southern Africa. A solution to South Africa's problems had to come from the South Africans and the role of the United States in that process was to present its view about the need for a peaceful end to apartheid and to promote change through its aid programme for black South Africans and for community self-help projects. United States individuals and organizations stimulated and challenged South Africans to question their assumptions and therefore the United States strongly supported the continuing presence of American business in South Africa. South Africa's future should be based on democracy, economic freedom and the allocation of powers between national and local authorities in keeping with South Africa's traditions. The Secretary of State offered United States political and logistic support for meetings between South Africans interested in a serious dialogue to achieve these ends.

Responding in a 30 September press statement, (64) the South African Foreign Minister said that the United States statement contained unwarranted and unsubstantiated remarks, one example of which was to ascribe the instability in southern Africa almost exclusively to South Africa's internal policies. The statement did, however, also contain positive elements, among which were the opposition to sanctions and the acknowledgement that black South Africans were moving into managerial positions and starting their own businesses in record numbers, but it was a pity that the United States had not listed the steps that South Africa had undertaken which proved the Government's commitment to the removal of racial discrimination.

An Ethiopian Foreign Ministry press release of 11 June(70) described the extension of the state of emergency as arrogant defiance of the will of the international community by the racists in South Africa, underscoring the imperative necessity of imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against it.

Thailand transmitted a 16 June joint statement(10) of the ASEAN Foreign Ministers in which they condemned the extension of the state of emergency and the May all-white election.

Zambia forwarded a 30 April communiqué(71) issued at the end of a summit of the heads of State of Angola, Mozambique, Zaire and Zambia on the rehabilitation of the Benguela Railway, which runs from the Angolan port of Benguela to southern Zaire and connects to lines going to other southern African States, including Zambia. Reviewing developments in southern Africa, the leaders expressed concern over the deteriorating situation inside South Africa as a result of mounting repression by the racist regime. Noting that the continuation of the state of emergency continued to exacerbate tension, they condemned the press censorship, the detention of innocent children, and the clamp-down on all forms of protest and resistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/23 A by recorded vote.

International solidarity with the liberation struggle in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/35 A of 10 November 1986,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, in particular paragraphs 137 to 139 and 148,

Gravely concerned at the escalating repression of and State terror against opponents of apartheid and the increasing intransigence of the racist regime of South Africa, demonstrated by the extension of the state of emergency, the vast number of arbitrary detentions, trials, torture and killing, including of women and children, the increased use of vigilante groups and the muzzling of the press,

Outraged by the racist regime's escalation of acts of aggression and destabilization against neighbouring independent African States, including assassinations and abductions of South Africans in those States, and the continuing illegal occupation of Namibia,

1. Reaffirms its full support to the people of South Africa in their struggle, under the leadership of their national liberation movements, to eradicate apartheid totally, so that they can exercise their right to self-determination in a free, democratic, unfragmented and non-racial South Africa;

2. Reaffirms further the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of South Africa and their right to choose the necessary means, including armed resistance, to attain the eradication of apartheid;

3. Condemns the policy and practice of apartheid and, in particular, the execution of patriots and captured freedom fighters in South Africa and demands that the racist regime:

(a) Stay the execution of those now on death row;

(b) Abide by the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocol I of 1977 thereto;

4. Demands again that the racist regime end repression against the oppressed people of South Africa; lift the state of emergency; release unconditionally Nelson Mandela, Zephania Mothopeng, all other political prisoners, trade union leaders, detainees and restrictees and, in particular, detained children; lift the ban on the African National Congress of South Africa, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania and other political parties and organizations; allow free political association and activity of the South African people and the return of all political exiles; put an end to the policy of bantustanization and forced population removals; eliminate apartheid laws and end military and paramilitary activities aimed at the neighbouring States;

5. Considers that the implementation of the above demands would create the appropriate conditions for free consultations among all the people of South Africa with a view to negotiating a just and lasting solution to the conflict in that country;

6. Appeals to all States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, mass media, and city and other local authorities as well as individuals to increase urgently political, economic, educational, legal, humanitarian and all other forms of necessary assistance to the people of South Africa and their national liberation movements;

7. Also appeals to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to step up material, financial and other forms of support to the front-line and other member States of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and thus assist them in resisting the aggression, terrorism, destabilization, political subversion and economic blackmail perpetrated by the racist regime;

8. Urges all States to contribute generously to the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund set up by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries with the aim of increasing support to the liberation movements fighting the apartheid regime and to the front-line States;

9. Decides to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity—namely, the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania—to maintain offices in New York in order to participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee against Apartheid and other appropriate bodies;

10. Requests Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to exert their influence towards the implementation of this resolution.

Speaking in explanation of vote, a number of countries objected to endorsing armed struggle. Denmark, for EC, stated that the 12 States remained convinced that a process of peaceful change was still possible in South Africa and that the United Nations had the obligation to promote it; therefore they could not agree to such an endorsement. Other individual EC members—France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Portugal and the United Kingdom—spoke in like manner. Iceland, for the Nordic countries, pointed out that peaceful resolution of conflicts was a fundamental Charter principle, and that paragraph 2 was therefore unacceptable. Austria made a similar point, as did New Zealand, which objected to the implication that there was no alternative to using force. The United States objected to the use of United Nations resolutions as a means to legitimize armed struggle; all sides had to understand that violence only increased the likelihood of a catastrophic outcome. Canada recalled that it had persistently condemned the circle of violence in southern Africa and that for that reason it was unable to support a text favouring armed resistance. Malta and Japan gave similar reasons for not supporting the resolution.

Besides criticizing the recognition of the legitimacy of armed resistance, France said it could not subscribe to expressions that suggested that the situation in South Africa was colonial in nature. Belgium similarly stated that the situation provoked by the apartheid policy of the South African Government was not one of decolonization.

The Assembly took similar action in resolution 42/23 G, in which it strongly condemned the policy of apartheid which deprived the majority of South Africans of their citizenship, fundamental freedoms and human rights. It demanded that the authorities immediately lift the state of emergency, abrogate discriminatory laws, lift bans on all organizations and individuals, eradicate the bantustan structures and initiate without preconditions a political dialogue with genuine leaders of the majority. In resolution 42/95, the policy of "bantustanization" was also condemned, as was the state of emergency and the holding of an all-white election. The Assembly reaffirmed that peace in South Africa could be guaranteed only by establishing majority rule through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and undivided South Africa.

Political prisoners and other detainees

The Special Committee against Apartheid continued to monitor the situation facing political prisoners and other detainees in South Africa and to campaign for their release. It reported,(1), based on information from the Detainees' Parents Support Committee, that since June 1986 30,000 persons had been detained, 40 per cent of whom were children under 18. An analysis of the detentions showed that the authorities attempted to cripple organized resistance in South Africa by systematically detaining leaders and influential members of all kinds of organizations. Reports revealed unbearable prison conditions made worse by the significant increase in the prison population owing to detentions under the state of emergency. The Committee reported that evidence showed that torture and ill-treatment of detainees were rampant. The South African Minister of Law and Order had reported that 253 persons detained in police cells since June 1986 were hospitalized between August 1986 and February 1987. The Minister of Justice had revealed that between July 1986 and July 1987 police had used tear-gas against detainees on 20 occasions. A disturbing development regarding the detention of children was the existence of secret youth camps, where children were sent straight from detention to attend courses. The Committee reported that civil rights groups suggested that the children sent to these camps might be pressured to become police informers or subjected to other forms of intimidation and coercion.

The Committee continued promoting the campaign for the release of all political prisoners and statements were issued expressing concern about the fate of two hunger-striking political prisoners (23 January), condemning the detention and torture of children (13 February), expressing concern over the arrest of two United Democratic Front members (23 July), observing the twenty-fifth anniversary of the imprisonment of Nelson Mandela (4 August), observing the tenth anniversary of Steven Biko's death in detention (11 September), noting arrests and detentions (22 October) and welcoming the release of ANC official Govan Mbeki (6 November).

As part of its support for the struggle by NGOs for the release of political prisoners, the Special Committee actively assisted the Unlock Apartheid Gaols and the Free South Africa's Children campaigns in 1987.

Communications. In messages to the Special Committee on the occasion of the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October), Brazil⁽⁷²⁾ expressed support for the efforts of those South Africans who were trying to establish a truly representative dialogue between all political forces and Venezuela⁽⁷³⁾ honoured the memory of the many South Africans who had made the ultimate sacrifice for the sake of freedom.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission. On 19 February,⁽³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights condemned South Africa for its repression and torture and killing of opponents of apartheid. It also condemned the arbitrary arrests of leaders and activists of mass organizations and demanded the release of all people detained as a result of their struggle for self determination and independence, in particular that of Nelson Mandela and Zephania Mothopeng. Again demanding their release, the Commission, on 3 March,⁽¹⁹⁾ condemned the incarceration of children and again requested its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid and other investigatory and monitoring bodies, to continue to investigate cases of torture and ill-treatment of detainees and the death of detainees in South Africa. It renewed its request to South Africa to allow the Group to make on-the-spot investigations of the living conditions in prisons in South Africa and Namibia and the treatment of prisoners.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, on 31 August,⁽⁶⁷⁾ also demanded the release of all political prisoners in South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 42/23 A, again demanded that South Africa release Nelson Mandela, Zephania Mothopeng and all other detainees, particularly children. Similarly, in resolution 42/23 G, the Assembly strongly condemned the South African authorities for the killings, arbitrary mass arrests and detentions. In resolution 42/95 it made similar condemnations and demands. In resolution 42/14 A, on Namibia, the Assembly condemned the arrest and imprisonment of leaders and members of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) and of trade unionists by South Africa and called for their immediate release. In resolution 42/124, the Assembly dealt with torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa.

Capita/ punishment of apartheid foes

The Special Committee against Apartheid reported⁽¹⁾ that at the end of August 1987, 32 persons were on death row for convictions related to unrest. On 1 September, two of them were hanged.

The Committee issued a statement on 28 August in which it deplored the arbitrary application of the death sentence as part of an ongoing campaign of persecution and brutality designed to suppress the liberation struggle. It appealed for international support to prevent the executions of the 32 prisoners on death row. On 4 November it appealed for international action to stay the execution of South African freedom fighter Mlungisi Lumphondo. The Committee also continued to be involved in trying to prevent the execution of the so-called Sharpeville Six (Oupa Moses Diniso, Duma Joshua Khumalo, Francis Don Mokgesi, Reid Melebo Mokoena, Theresa Ramashamula and Mojalefa Reginald Sefatsa), sentenced to death in 1985 for being part of a crowd that killed the deputy mayor of Sharpeville. On 7 December, the Committee Chairman urged the international community to prevent the judicial murder of the six who had been convicted and sentenced on the basis of "common purpose". Subsequently, their appeal was rejected on 1 December 1987, and they were sentenced to be hanged on 18 March 1988.

On 19 February,⁽³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights condemned South Africa for the imposition of death sentences on freedom fighters. The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, on 31 August,⁽⁶⁷⁾ condemned South Africa for imposing capital punishment on 32 opponents of apartheid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 42/23 A, the Assembly condemned the execution of patriots and captured freedom fighters, and demanded that South Africa stay the execution of those on death row and abide by the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocol I.

Apartheid in sports

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,(74) the Secretary-General reported in October 1987(75) on the status of the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports.(35) The Convention had been adopted by the Assembly in 1985 and opened for signature on 16 May 1986.(76) As of 19 October 1987, 70 States had signed the Convention, 21 had ratified it and one had acceded. Five additional ratifications or accessions were required for the Convention to enter into force.

Activity of the Committee against Apartheid. The International Conference against Apartheid Sport, held at Harare from 5 to 7 November, was organized by the Special Committee against Apartheid, in association with Zimbabwe, the South African Non-Racial Olympic Committee and African sporting organizations. The participants adopted a Declaration which was transmitted to the Secretary-General by the Committee Chairman.(77) Recognizing that there could be no normal sport in an apartheid society, they viewed the sports boycott as part of the wider struggle against apartheid. Among the tasks identified by the participants was the signature, ratification and implementation of the Convention by all States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 42/23 B, the General Assembly encouraged States to ratify the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports. In their explanations of vote (see p. 140), a number of States stated that for constitutional reasons they would not accede to it.

Aid programmes and inter-agency co-operation

United Nations aid to victims of apartheid was provided through national liberation movements and directly to individuals for education and training. Legal assistance, relief and education grants were given by the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory South African legislation. The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa offered additional educational assistance.

National liberation movements

In 1987, several United Nations organizations, notably the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), continued to provide assistance to national liberation movements recognized by OAU, namely ANC and PAC of South Africa and SWAPO of Namibia. Aid to victims of apartheid and colonialism was also provided by the Commission on Human Settlements (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVI) and educational assistance by the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see p. 181).

UNDP action. The programme proposal for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) for UNDP assistance to national liberation movements,(78) requested by the UNDP Governing Council in 1986 (79) was prepared by the Administrator, in consultation with the movements, and approved by the Governing Council on 18 June 1987.(80) It was based on an indicative planning figure of $10.2 million for the cycle, to which was added a balance of approximately $7 million from the third cycle (1982-1986). The projects were designed to assist the national liberation movements in four sectoral priorities: education and human resources development (44.28 per cent of the allocated resources); strengthening of health services and infrastructure (22.27 per cent); agricultural development and food production (9.16 per cent); and development planning, co-ordination and administration (22.37 per cent). Of the 23 projects identified in the programme proposal, 17 had been approved at the end of the year, draft documents were being awaited on four and consultations were planned on the formulation of two. The Governing Council, on 19 June,(81) requested the Administrator to continue to assist the movements and to ensure that the assistance was guided by the provisions of the programme proposal.

The Administrator reported(82) that during 1987 emphasis had continued to be placed on activities geared to promote professional expertise and overall human resources development of individuals sponsored by the movements and to foster among their followers a degree of self-reliance in countries of asylum.

There were three assistance projects directly benefiting ANC, all in the education sector. They were executed by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and accounted for $622,500 of total allocated resources for the year. PAC was the beneficiary of assistance through three projects as well. Two were education-related and the other dealt with food production on land allocated to PAC by the United Republic of Tanzania. The latter project was executed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, while the former two were executed by UNDP. The three projects accounted for a resource allocation of $358,700. Four projects, executed by UNDP and accounting for $758,600, benefited all three national liberation movements jointly; two dealt with assistance in the formulation and drafting of project documents, one provided training to health care personnel and the fourth covered the cost of participation of one delegate from each movement to the Governing Council's May/June 1987 session, as approved by the Council on 20 February(83) on the Administrator's recommendation.

UNIDO action. On 13 November,(84) the General Conference of UNIDO, taking note of a report of the UNIDO Director-General on technical assistance to the national liberation movements,(85) requested UNIDO to increase its technical assistance to ANC and PAC to establish and strengthen small-scale industries and train industrial manpower, including women, and appealed for funds-and other resources.

Action by the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid recommended that the General Assembly call on Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to extend all possible assistance to the people of South Africa and their national liberation movements.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 26 February,(4) the Commission on Human Rights appealed to all States, specialized agencies and NGOs to extend all possible co-operation to the liberation movements of southern Africa recognized by the United Nations and OAU.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 12 August,(57) the Committee on colonial countries reiterated its recommendation that the United Nations system initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with colonial peoples and their national liberation movements and review and introduce greater flexibility in their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance projects.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1987/78, the Economic and Social Council requested the organizations within the United Nations system to increase their assistance to the liberation movements in South Africa. It noted with satisfaction the arrangements made by several of those bodies which enabled representatives of national liberation movements recognized by OAU to participate as observers in their proceedings and called on those that had not done so to make such arrangements, including defraying the costs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly on a number of occasions took action on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by OAU. In resolution 42/23 A, it decided to continue the funding of the New York offices of ANC and PAC to enable them to participate effectively in the work of the Special Committee against Apartheid and other bodies. It appealed for urgent increases of the necessary assistance to the people of South Africa and their liberation movements. A similar appeal was contained in resolution 42/23 G. In resolution 42/95, the Assembly again called for a substantial increase in all forms of assistance to the victims of racism and apartheid through the movements recognized by OAU. In resolution 42/75, it recommended that the United Nations system broaden its co-operation with colonial peoples and their movements and be flexible in formulating and preparing assistance programmes. It also recommended that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements be included in the agenda of future high-level meetings between OUA and the United Nations. It echoed the call of the Economic and Social Council regarding the participation of representatives of the movements as observers in matters concerning their countries.

UN Trust Fund for South Africa

In October 1987,(86) the Secretary-General reported that the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, established in 1965(87) to provide assistance to persons persecuted under discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, made five grants totalling $3,271,000 in 1987. The Fund received $2,991,592 in voluntary contributions from Member States. The total income of the Fund since its inception was $28,307,082 and the total amount of grants was $27,092,560. The available balance was $540,875 as at 30 September 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/23 H without vote.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, in particular resolution 41/35 G of 10 November 1986,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund,

Gravely concerned at the tightening of the nation-wide state of emergency and security regulations which criminalize and stifle political dissent and protest,

Increasingly alarmed by the continued repression of leaders of democratic political mass organizations, community and church leaders, trade unionists, students, young people and children through political trials, detention without charge or trial and severe sentences, including the death penalty,

Reaffirming that increased humanitarian and legal assistance by the international community to those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia is more than ever necessary to meet the rapidly increasing needs for such assistance,

Strongly convinced that increased contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned are necessary to enable them to meet the growing needs for humanitarian and legal assistance,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;

2. EXpresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination;

3. Appeals for generous and increased contributions to the Trust Fund;

4. Also appeals for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa and Namibia;

5. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa for their persistent efforts to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, as well as assistance to their families and to refugees from South Africa.

Other aspects

Public information

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its 1987 annual report,(1) observed that the local and foreign media in South Africa were functioning under Draconian restrictions that proscribed any filming, photographing or tape-recording in areas of unrest or any reporting on actions by the security forces without the permission of the police. Newspapers believed to be promoting civil disobedience, boycotts or the image of so-called radical groups could be closed down for up to three months. The Committee continued to draw the attention of the international community to the repressive government policies, mainly by issuing statements and by supporting NGO activities. The latter was considered by the Committee to be of particular importance given that the press restrictions imposed by South Africa had succeeded in putting developments there in a secondary place in much of the world media.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 12 August,(20) the Committee on colonial countries appealed to mass media, trade unions, NGOs and individuals to co-ordinate and intensify their efforts to mobilize international public opinion against the policy of the apartheid regime and to work for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions and for encouraging a policy of systematic and genuine divestment from corporations doing business in South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 42/23 E, the General Assembly appealed to all Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, information media and individuals to co-operate with the Secretariat's Centre against Apartheid and the Department of Public Information (DPI) in disseminating information on the deteriorating situation in South Africa in order to mitigate the effects of the restraints on the press and to counteract effectively South African propaganda.

In resolution 42/74, the Assembly repeated the wording used by the Committee on colonial countries (see above).

In resolution 42/162 A, the Assembly urged the full implementation of a recommendation of the Committee on Information that DPI should continue its activities and dissemination of information on the policy and practice of apartheid, giving due attention to the unilateral measures and official censorship imposed on the local and international media in South Africa.

Non-governmental organizations

The Special Committee against Apartheid on 26 and 27 February 1987 held special consultations with anti-apartheid movements and other NGOs on developments in South Africa and the region as a whole.

In a statement adopted at the end of the consultations,(88) the participants proposed intensified public campaigns for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, especially in the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom, the United States and other Western States, as well as campaigns against TNCs involved in minerals and strategic sectors of the South African economy. They also called for the intensification of the campaign against the apartheid regime, in particular by exposing propaganda and pursuing legal action to counter it, closing South African information offices abroad, and according world-wide attention to the repressive measures used against black South African children. Another focus of attention was support for the liberation movements in South Africa and Namibia morally and materially as well as through campaigns for the release of all political prisoners. The participants also drew attention to the necessity of support to the front-line States.

During 1987, the Committee participated in or sponsored NGO conferences and seminars, and granted assistance to 20 international and national NGOs and anti-apartheid groups in support of their campaigns and projects aimed at mobilizing public opinion in solidarity with the struggle in South Africa (see p. 130).

Meetings, missions and observances

As part of its work to promote the international campaign against apartheid, the Special Committee against Apartheid organized or co-sponsored a number of meetings, missions and observances in 1987.(1)

Meetings. Among the meetings that were organized or actively supported by the Committee were the International Student Conference in Solidarity with the Struggle of the Students of Southern Africa; the Seminar on Support to the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and Action against Apartheid; the International Literary Symposium against Apartheid; the International Conference on Culture in Another South Africa; the International Conference against Apartheid Sport; and the Conference on Peoples of the World against Apartheid for a Democratic South Africa (see p. 130).

Missions. In his efforts to promote the anti-apartheid struggle, the Committee Chairman visited between 28 February and 11 March the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany and Portugal and held consultations with the authorities there. He also visited the Philippines from 8 to 10 July, meeting with the President and the Foreign Minister and addressing women's groups, university students and members of the Rotary Club, as well as diplomatic, governmental and non-governmental officials; a joint communique issued at the end of the visit by the Chairman and the Foreign Minister was transmitted to the Secretary-General.(89)

Observances. As in previous years, the Special Committee against Apartheid held commemorative meetings on the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (21 March), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa (16 June), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia (9 August) and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October).(1)

Speakers addressing the Committee on those occasions included the Secretary-General, the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council, and representatives of liberation movements and NGOs.

Work programme of the Committee against Apartheid

In its 1987 report,(1) the Special Committee against Apartheid recommended that the General Assembly authorize it to continue to mobilize international action against apartheid through publicity, meetings, seminars, conferences, hearings, consultations, missions and other related activities. In particular, the Committee asked to hold in 1988, along with other activities, an African regional students' conference, an international meeting of parliamentarians, an international seminar on the cultural boycott, a meeting of the anti-apartheid movements of EC countries and hearings on appropriate topics. It also wanted to prepare studies on national measures adopted by States and their impact, on the critical links of the South African economy with the outside world, and, in co-operation with the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the Commission on Human Rights, on divestment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/23 E by recorded vote.

Programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

1. Commends the Special Committee against Apartheid for its work in the discharge of its responsibilities, in particular the promotion of international action against apartheid;

2. Duly takes note of the report of the Special Committee and endorses the recommendations contained in paragraph 150 of the report relating to its programme of work;

3. Decides to make a special allocation of $390,000 to the Special Committee for 1988 from the regular budget of the United Nations to cover the cost of special projects to be decided upon by the Committee;

4. Requests Governments and organizations to provide financial and other assistance for the special projects of the Special Committee and to make generous contributions to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid;

5. Appeals to all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, information media and individuals to co-operate with the Centre against Apartheid and the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in disseminating information on the deteriorating situation in South Africa in order to mitigate the effects of the restraints on the press in South Africa and to effectively counteract South African propaganda.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United Kingdom said even though it did not agree with many of the elements in the Committee's report, it had abstained because the draft was couched in moderate terms. Ireland stated that it strongly supported the Committee's work but that its attitude to that body's recommendations had to be understood in accordance with Ireland's general policy on apartheid. The United States objected to allocating a large sum of money in a time of fiscal austerity for projects that in some cases interfered in its internal affairs. Belgium could not join in direct or indirect appeals for the implementation of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions.

A number of States objected to any text endorsing armed resistance. Since paragraph 150 of the Committee's report reaffirmed the use of armed struggle, Canada abstained, while Denmark (for EC) and Iceland (for the Nordic countries) said they could not accept that the United Nations make such an endorsement. New Zealand said its support for the resolution was on the understanding that it endorsed only the Committee's recommendations requesting the Assembly authorization to continue mobilizing international action against apartheid. France abstained because certain countries had been criticized by name in the Committee's report.

South Africa and the front-line and other States of southern Africa

Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, commonly referred to as the front-line States because of their proximity to South Africa, constituted a loose coalition concerned mainly with security issues. Those States, together with Lesotho, Malawi and Swaziland, pursued their economic co-operation in the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC). In 1987, further incidents of aggression by South Africa against some of the front-line States were reported.

Particularly affected was Angola, which in October and November reported a large-scale South African invasion. The Security Council took up Angola's complaint in November and, by resolution 602(1987), strongly condemned South Africa for its intensified acts of aggression, as well as for its continuing occupation of parts of Angola, again demanding that it cease its aggression and withdraw its forces immediately. In December, after Angola had charged that the number of South African troops occupying Angola had not decreased, the Council, by resolution 606(1987), reiterated its condemnation of South Africa's occupation as well as the delay in its troop withdrawal. The Secretary-General was requested to continue monitoring the total withdrawal of those forces from Angola, with a view to obtaining a timetable for withdrawal as well as a confirmation of its completion.

Also in December, the General Assembly urged the international community to assist the front-line and other States bordering South Africa to enhance their capacity to withstand the economic measures taken by or against South Africa (resolution 42/201).

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid continued in 1987 to monitor the situation in southern Africa and to report on it to the General Assembly.⁽¹⁾ According to the Committee, South Africa had intensified its acts of aggression and destabilization against neighbouring States in order to weaken their economies and thus keep them dependent on South Africa, to use them as hostages to alleviate outside pressures, to dissuade them from supporting opponents of the apartheid regime and to eliminate such opponents physically. South African forces continued to occupy southern Angola, and that country as well as Botswana, Mozambique, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe were the target of South African commando attacks. In February 1987, as part of its destabilization efforts and in retaliation to its neighbours' support for sanctions, South Africa held up the traffic of transit cargo from Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe. The Special Committee cited estimates according to which, between 1980 and 1984, South Africa's destabilization cost the nine SADCC countries more than $10 billion and by the end of 1986 the figure had risen to over $18 billion.

Most affected by South Africa's destabilization efforts were Angola, Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia (see below). In addition, the Committee reported that South Africa had deployed clandestine hit squads in Swaziland which had killed 13 known or suspected ANC members in the nine months since December 1986. There were also abductions of suspected ANC leaders by unidentified men. In May, Zimbabwe blamed South Africa for the murder of the wife of an ANC member by a rocket in Harare. South Africa's agents had even gone beyond its neighbouring States; the Committee reported that in London four men had been charged with conspiring to kidnap ANC leaders living in the United Kingdom.

Speaking out against South Africa's policy, the Committee supported the pledges made to fight the policy of repression and destabilization against the front-line States by the International Student Conference in Solidarity with the Struggle of the Students of Southern Africa and the Seminar on Support to SADCC and Action against Apartheid (see p. 130). It also reaffirmed its full support for the plan of action adopted by the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid (AFRICA) Fund of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries during its meetings at New Delhi, India, from 4 to 7 August (see p. 165).

The Special Committee recommended that the General Assembly call for all possible assistance to the front-line States.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries, on 12 August,⁽²⁾ condemned South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia, particularly for its persistent aggression against Angola and other neighbouring States. It deemed it imperative that the international community increase its support to the front-line States and the other SADCC members to enable them to resolve their economic difficulties which were largely a consequence of South African destabilization and subversion. On the same day,⁽³⁾ the Committee again condemned South Africa for its persistent aggression and subversion, particularly against Angola and Mozambique. It noted that in southern Africa a critical situation continued to prevail and that South Africa had repeatedly committed acts of armed aggression against neighbouring independent States, causing extensive loss of life and destruction of economic infrastructure. On 14 August,⁽⁴⁾ the Committee urged the United Nations system to extend, as a priority, substantial material assistance to the front-line States to enable them to support more effectively the struggle of the people of Namibia for freedom and independence and to resist the violation of their territorial integrity.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission. The Commission on Human Rights, on 19 February,⁽⁵⁾ condemned the wanton acts of aggression and destabilization perpetrated by South Africa against the front-line and other States. On 3 March,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission condemned South Africa for its military pressure and other destabilization policies towards the front-line States and for its support, encouragement and provision of material resources to armed bands and mercenaries who sought to destabilize them. It commended those States for their sacrifices to the cause of freedom and human dignity in South Africa and called on the international community to increase its support to the national liberation movements and the front-line States to enhance their capability to bring an end to apartheid and its institutions. On 26 February,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission demanded that South Africa cease forthwith its aggression aimed at undermining the economies and destabilizing the political institutions of neighbouring States.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, on 31 August,⁽⁸⁾ similarly condemned South Africa for its continuing acts of international terrorism and destabilization.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia, in its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action,(9) expressed solidarity with the front-line States and other independent countries in southern Africa and appealed to the international community to combat the use of Namibia's territory as a launching pad for South Africa's aggression against them. It called on the community to step up assistance to the front-line and other States and renewed its solidarity with the objectives underlying the establishment of SADCC, which reflected the need felt by those States to decrease their economic dependence on South Africa and to ensure their development and their collective autonomy.

In the final communique adopted at the ministerial meeting of the Council,(10) the Ministers noted with indignation the continuing deterioration of the situation in southern Africa resulting, among other things, from South Africa's continuing aggression and destabilization of the front-line States launched from Namibian territory. They urged increased international political support and material assistance to the front-line States in order to strengthen their defensive capabilities.

Communications. A number of country groups sent letters to the Secretary-General concerning the general situation in southern Africa.

Mozambique forwarded the Declaration(11) and final communiqué(12) of the Seventh Summit Conference of the Heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe, held at Maputo on 21 and 22 May. In the Declaration, South Africa was accused of promoting generalized war in southern Africa. According to the communique, the Presidents held a detailed exchange of information and views on the economic, military, political and social situation in each country and reiterated the importance of developing reciprocal co-operation among the five countries, with a view to consolidating their hard-won independence.

Canada forwarded the Okanagan Statement on Southern Africa and Programme of Action adopted by the Commonwealth heads of Government (Vancouver, 13-17 October),(13) in which they expressed their belief that the desperate plight of South Africa's neighbours called for a comprehensive international response to strengthen their capacity to resist Pretoria's policy of destabilization and destruction. They decided to initiate an enhanced assistance programme for the front-line and neighbouring States, especially Mozambique.

Zambia, as the host country, forwarded a 30 April communiqué(14) issued by the summit of heads of State (Angola, Mozambique, Zaire, Zambia) on the rehabilitation of the Benguela Railway (see p. 156). The heads of State appealed to the international community to render all possible assistance to all States in the region in the face of repeated and unprovoked aggression.

Zimbabwe transmitted the final communique of the Meeting of Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Non-Aligned Movement (New York, 5-7 October),(15) in which they expressed alarm at the sharp deterioration of the situation in southern Africa. They called for increased support to the front-line States so that they would be better able to withstand South Africa's pressure.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1987/78, requested the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in view of the acts of aggression and destabilization by the apartheid regime against States in the region, to increase their assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States.

Report of the Secretary-General. In his July 1987 report with later addenda to the General Assembly,(16) submitted in response to a 1986 Assembly resolution,(17) the Secretary-General reported on special assistance to front-line States and other bordering States. He noted that a United Nations inter-agency meeting convened in February at Gaborone, Botswana, identified a number of sectors where international assistance might be requested, including transportation and communications, reintegration and redeployment of returnee migrant workers, assistance to refugees, trade diversification, nutrition and education of children, and establishment of emergency reserves for strategic commodities such as food and fuel. Concerted action was taken by the United Nations in support of Mozambique, including the convening of an international donors' conference at Geneva in March, which raised $209 million in pledges for humanitarian assistance.

The report also contained information on assistance by specialized agencies and other bodies within the United Nations system. Also reviewed was the "AFRICA Fund" established by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries. The Fund's Committee in January adopted a plan of action and launched an appeal for contributions. The plan envisaged assistance measures in the areas of strategic relief reserve, transport and communications, trade, oil and other forms of energy, safe functioning of vital economic installations and networks, human skills and rehabilitation of migrant labour.

Bilateral assistance by 19 countries covered by the report included grants or concessional loans, project financing, technical assistance, food aid, development of infrastructure, support in the area of health, supplies of equipment, and training and development of human resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/201 by recorded vote.

Special assistance to front-line States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/199 of 8 December 1986,

Having considered the initiatives of the Secretary-General on special assistance to front-line States and other bordering States, namely the establishment of a focal point at United Nations Headquarters, the formation of an informal inter-agency consultative group and the setting in motion of a contingency planning process,

Deeply concerned at the continuing deteriorating situation in southern Africa, which has aggravated the economic problems confronting the front-line States and other bordering States, arising from the apartheid policies of the Pretoria regime,

Conscious of the responsibility of the international community to address the problems of the region,

Commending the concerted and determined efforts of the countries of the region to cope with the prevailing adverse conditions by strengthening their economic co-operation and lessening their dependence on South Africa, particularly in the areas of transportation, communications and related sectors,

Reaffirming the importance of close co-operation between the United Nations and the front-line States,

Mindful of Security Council resolutions 568(1985) of 21 June 1985, 571(1985) of 20 September 1985 and 581(1986) of 13 February 1986, by which the Council, inter alia, requested the international community to render assistance to the front-line States,

1. EXpresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts regarding assistance to the front-line States;

2. Strongly urges the international community to continue to provide in a timely and effective manner the financial, material and technical assistance necessary to enhance the individual and collective capacity of the front-line States and other bordering States to withstand the effects of economic measures taken by South Africa, or by the international community against South Africa, in accordance with their national and regional plans and strategies;

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

The United States, pointing out that it provided substantial financial aid to SADCC, could not accept the idea that such aid should compensate for the effects of economic measures taken by South Africa, or by the international community against South Africa; while it was important to remedy the economic and political effects of apartheid, it should not be done by counter-productive attempts to isolate the southern African States from South Africa, on which their economic survival depended.

The Assembly dealt with South Africa's relations with the front-line States in many other 1987 resolutions. In resolutions 42/23 A and G, 42/75 and 42/95, the Assembly condemned South Africa for its aggression against those States and called for international assistance to them and the other members of SADCC.

Similar calls were made by the Assembly in resolution 42/14 A, when it condemned South Africa for using Namibia as a springboard for armed invasions, subversion, destabilization and aggression against neighbouring African States. The Assembly, in resolution 42/106, reiterated its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to mobilize special economic assistance for African States facing grave economic difficulties, the front-line and other independent States of southern Africa to help them to withstand the effects of South Africa's aggression and destabilization, and called on the international community to provide increased assistance to southern African countries to enable them to strengthen their capacity to provide for the care of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in their countries.

In decision 42/417, the Assembly stated that continuing military collaboration with South Africa constituted a hostile action against the people of Namibia and the front-line States.

Angola-South Africa relations and South African occupation of Angola

In November and December the Security Council considered Angola's complaint of aggression by South Africa and adopted resolutions 602(1987) and 606(1987), in which it condemned that aggression and demanded the withdrawal of South African forces from Angola. The Commission on Human Rights, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the General Assembly made similar condemnations.

Activities of the Special Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid reported(1) that during 1987 South African forces continued to be stationed in southern Angola, had repeatedly carried out raids in that country and had used illegally occupied Namibia as a launching pad. It cited Angolan government reports, according to which a week before a 28 July raid, South Africa had about 7,000 troops in southern Angola, some of them supporting what the Government called bandits of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA). As a result of acts of aggression by South Africa and UNITA, which reportedly was receiving military assistance from the United States, Angola had suffered vast human and economic losses. The Committee cited newspaper reports, according to which in addition to the loss of 60,000 lives, almost one tenth of the population had become homeless and 150,000 others had become refugees in neighbouring countries. In October, South Africa sent an estimated 6,000 troops to Angola. According to the Committee, the South African forces fought in an integrated command structure with UNITA in an offensive designed to cripple irrevocably the Government of Angola.

On 19 November, the Committee Chairman called on the international community to counter South Africa's escalation of aggression against Angola. (18)

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, on 19 February,(5) demanded that South Africa immediately end its aggression and withdraw its occupation forces from Angola. On 26 February,(7) the Commission condemned South Africa for its persistent aggression and subversion and called on it to cease all such acts and withdraw. Also on 26 February(19) the Commission again demanded that South Africa unconditionally terminate all aggression against neighbouring countries, particularly Angola, and withdraw all its armed forces from that country.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia, in its Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action,(9) condemned South Africa's repeated aggression against Angola, emphasizing the gravity of that violation of the United Nations Charter for being carried out from illegally occupied Namibia. It stressed that the support by South Africa and the United States to UNITA mercenaries was an attempt to destabilize a sovereign Government and to intensify repression of the Namibian people, including those in exile.

In the final communique adopted at the ministerial meeting of the Council,(10) the Ministers noted with indignation the continuing deterioration of the situation in southern Africa, resulting among other things from South Africa's continued occupation of southern Angola.

Communications (January-November). Letters on the situation in Angola and around its border were sent to both the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council throughout 1987.

On 27 January,(20) Angola reported a massive troop buildup by South African armed forces in the Angolan province of Cunene and summarized their activities from 6 to 19 January which, it claimed, demonstrated that they were preparing another round of armed aggression on the spurious ground of pursuit of Namibian nationalists. Angola recalled that it had offered a platform for negotiations in 1984,(21) which could lead to the solution of the problems facing southern Africa. That offer still stood.

On 19 February,(22) South Africa maintained that the sources of conflict were the civil war in Angola, the presence of the Cuban expeditionary force, the violent intentions of SWAPO and Angolan support for SWAPO. South Africa remained prepared to enter into discussions with Angola to resolve the question of Cuban troop withdrawal.

On 20 October,(23) Angola transmitted two documents denouncing the continuation of what it termed the permanent aggression of racist South Africa against Angola and detailing military actions from 1 to 22 July and from 26 August to 12 October.

On 29 October,(24) South Africa replied that Angola was incapable of resolving its civil war, caused by the imposition of the Movimento Popular de Libertação de Angola (MPLA) Government against the wishes of the Angolan people and sustained only through the presence of more than 40,000 Cuban troops and USSR personnel. As long as that extra-territorial force was present, a peaceful solution to the internal situation in Angola would be frustrated. The situation was aggravated by Angola's assistance to SWAPO and ANC. South Africa was not at war with Angola, nor with any Namibian party; however, it had to protect the Namibians against terrorist incursions and accordingly acted in a protective capacity in the Territory.

On 5 November,(25) Angola expressed concern over the worsening situation in southern Africa. It summarized South African military activities, including aerial and terrestrial bombardments, reconnaissance flights and large-scale armed incursions, and stated that South African planes had flown 500 kilometres into Angola. The situation appeared likely to escalate with the possible involvement of the South African Eighth Tank Division, which was advancing in combat order under heavy air cover.

On 18 November,(26) Spain denounced South Africa's military confrontations in south-east Angola and called for measures to curtail the destabilization policy pursued by South Africa in the region.

On 18 November,(27) Angola's President said that over the preceding few days the South African army had carried out large-scale incursions in several Angolan provinces, intervening directly to rescue what Angola called the UNITA puppet group from defeat by the Angolan army.

Denmark transmitted a 23 November declaration (28) by the Foreign Ministers of the 12 EC member States, condemning South African military activities in Angola and demanding that South Africa cease hostilities and withdraw its troops.

Other communications on the Angola-South Africa situation also dealt with the Namibia question (see p. 986).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

At the urgent request of Angola(29) and Zimbabwe on behalf of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries,(30) the Security Council held five meetings between 20 and 25 November to consider the allegations of aggression by South Africa against Angola. Invited to participate in the debate, at their request, without the right to vote were Algeria, Angola, Botswana, Brazil, the Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Portugal, Sao Tome and Prin-cipe, South Africa, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe. At the request of the Congo, Ghana and Zambia, Mfanafuthi J. Makatini of ANC(31) and Theo-Ben Gurirab of SWAPO(32) were invited to participate under rule 39b of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Under the same rule, the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid was invited at his own request.

Opening the debate, the Vice-Minister for External Relations of Angola stated that since 1975 it had been the victim of an undeclared but constant war, waged by South Africa's regular army. The cause for that aggression was South Africa's apartheid ideology, which led to a policy of State terrorism that was encouraged by the support of certain Western Powers, in particular the United States. Angola recalled that on 20 October(23) and 5 November,(25) it had detailed the dangerously deteriorating situation and provided evidence that South Africa was involved in a large-scale invasion with the intention of expanding the areas occupied by its forces in the Angolan provinces of Cunene and Cuando-Cubango. A statement by the South African Defence Minister had shown that the South African army was not acting in pursuit of Namibian patriots as claimed, but rather avoiding the defeat of what Angola called South Africa's auxiliary forces, the UNITA terrorists. Angola reported that the South African President, accompanied by members of his cabinet, had illegally entered Angolan territory to visit his troops and it called on the international community to condemn that arrogant act, which was contrary to the ethics of international relations. In conclusion, Angola asked the Council to call for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Pretoria's troops.

South Africa said that the root-causes of the conflict were linked to Angola's MPLA régime which had contravened the 1975 Alvor (Portugal) Agreement in which Portugal and the three Angolan liberation movements had agreed to governmental power-sharing during the transition to Angola's independence.(33) MPLA had seized political control in 1975 despite massive opposition by the majority of Angolans, South Africa stated, avoiding free elections and enlisting the aid of Cuban forces in Angola's internal conflict. The true struggle in Angola was between the Angolan people and those who wished to impose their political will on an unwilling majority-the results were, at best, tragic for Angola and its population. SWAPO likewise was at war with the people of the region, receiving infrastructural support and military protection from the Angolan Government, and it was South Africa's duty to protect the Namibians against terrorist depredations. To that extent, South Africa acted in a protective capacity in the region. South Africa said its President's visit to the area of conflict was his duty as Commander-in-Chief of the South African defence force. The recent series of battles were described as having been led by UNITA, with South African participation limited to 5 per cent of personnel in the area. Their presence was justified by South Africa's security interests in the face of a situation in which the stability of the whole southern African region was threatened by foreign intervention and a flood of Soviet arms. South Africa stated its willingness to participate in the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Angola, and proposed that 9 December 1987 be set as the date of implementation for such an agreement.

Ghana asked if South Africa's arguments constituted a right under international law to invade Angola. In Ghana's view, matters of the Alvor Agreement, the holding of elections and the acquisition of weapons were all domestic matters and therefore could not be sufficient reason for armed intervention by any outside Power. Furthermore, the United Nations Charter prohibited the threat or use of force. As for South Africa's claim that it acted to protect the population of Namibia, Ghana recalled that Namibia was a United Nations-administered Territory and that South Africa had no mandate to mobilize forces to protect Namibians. To justify the South African intervention by claiming that security interests were threatened by the presence of Cuban and USSR forces was a misinterpretation. Cuban forces had never crossed the border into any neighbouring countries—on the contrary, South Africa's forces were in Angola. The South African President's visit was also illegal under international law, since he had no right to enter Angolan, or for that matter Namibian, territory. Ghana concluded that there had been a wilful aggression committed by South Africa against Angola in violation of the Charter.

In addition to those arguments, Sao Tome and Principe asked how long the international community was willing to see South Africa's refusal to accept the rule of law and civilized behaviour. Noting the problems that arose from using moral judgements in foreign policy, Sao Tome and Principe stated that in this case the facts were undisputed, the motives—preservation of the supremacy of one race—had been universally condemned, the means—repression and institutional violence—could not be supported by anyone, and the consequences—destruction of lives and a threat to peace and security—were well known; therefore meaningful and decisive action by the Council was called for.

Zimbabwe provided an overview of events from before Angola's independence until the time of the Council meeting, which led it to conclude that while Angola had never invaded South Africa, the apartheid State had consistently violated Angola's territorial integrity. The most recent attacks were a clear illustration of South Africa's policies of intimidation and destabilization, aimed not at combating SWAPO but rather at supporting UNITA to defeat the Angolan army.

Many speakers concurred with Zimbabwe's view that apartheid was the root-cause of the conflict in the region. Ethiopia, Mauritania and Mozambique believed that violence and aggression were inherent properties of apartheid. Similarly, the Byelorussian SSR argued that the system of apartheid was at variance with the purposes of strengthening peace and developing co-operation. Cape Verde, the Federal Republic of Germany and Malawi, speaking for the African Group, felt that apartheid was the essential cause of the unrest in the region. Italy similarly stated that the situation of Namibia and that of Angola both stemmed from apartheid and the imposition of that principle in South Africa; once the South African Government had made its choice, it was condemned to defend it within the country and outside it.

Other reasons for the conflict in the region were also put forward. Algeria stated that it was because of the hegemonic ambitions of South Africa that Angola was facing armed aggression and territorial occupation. Cuba asked what other motive there could have been for the invasion of Angola by South Africa than the pursuit of a policy of military domination and the desire to build a wall of satellite States around its borders. Bulgaria described South Africa's aggressive actions as an external safety-valve in the face of mounting internal resistance against apartheid. Egypt said that the arrogance of the rulers in South Africa had led them to escalate the bloody events in southern Angola where they had wrought havoc for years. Nicaragua likewise spoke of the arrogance of the leaders in Pretoria that knew no bounds. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya blamed the terrorist nature of the South African regime for its opposition to the interest of the people, its resort to violence and the annexation of territory by force, and its refusal to implement Security Council resolutions. It was widely acknowledged that racist regimes prospered only in times of war, by committing sabotage and through assassination and the expulsion of citizens.

The United States, however, argued that it was the presence of Cuban troops in violation of the Alvor Agreement that had led to the civil war in Angola, and it supported South Africa's call for a withdrawal of all foreign troops from the region. The United States believed that the most serious threat to Angola's independence was the steadily growing presence of an extra-continental expeditionary force and Angola's dependence on expensive foreign weaponry. It added that it was engaged in discussions with Angola and was seeking to bring about a settlement that removed all foreign forces from southern Africa and thus permitted Namibia to attain independence and Angola to resolve its differences through an internal settlement. It supported the draft resolution before the Council (see p. 172) because it shared with other members of the Council strong objections to the crossing of international borders by foreign forces; however, it had reservations about some of its language. In that connection the United States pointed out that it did not recognize the People's Republic of Angola.

The United Kingdom also believed that the solution of Angola's problems, and those of the region, would be facilitated by the withdrawal of all foreign troops, and it made clear that it did not interpret anything in the draft as endorsing the intervention of foreign combat troops; even so, the presence of outside forces in Angola at that Government's invitation was not a justification for South Africa to violate Angolan sovereignty.

India stressed that South Africa's proposal for withdrawal of all foreign forces from Angola could not compromise the sovereign right of the legitimate Government of Angola to avail itself of any form of external assistance it required, and therefore could not affect those forces which were in Angola at its express wish. Botswana shared that view, calling for a South African withdrawal without pre-conditions and adding that it was South Africa which was responsible for the invitation and continued presence of Cuban troops in Angola by its 1975 aggression. The USSR stated that the Cuban troops played a stabilizing role in Angola, helping the country to defend itself against an ever-growing threat from outside. Angola itself, speaking at the close of the Council meetings, confirmed that the Cuban presence was at Angola's invitation after the first invasion by South African troops.

The majority of the participants in the debate recognized the situation in the region and its damaging consequences for Angola. Algeria stated that, in addition to the sacrifices Angola had made to defeat colonial domination, South Africa's invasion had cost the country $12 billion in material losses and had led to 700,000 displaced persons and tens of thousands killed and wounded. Portugal said that information showed that a massive military invasion into Angola was taking place and not simply an incursion of South African troops. The Congo accused South Africa of unleashing a skilfully programmed new war against Angola. For Egypt, it was clear that South Africa was continuing its onslaught on African dignity and its massacre of women and children. The USSR was alarmed that South Africa's war of aggression was becoming more widespread year by year. While these and most other speakers concentrated on Angola's suffering, Cuba also mentioned that South Africa's military operation had to be great indeed for its Defence Ministry to have been obliged to announce 23 casualties.

Several speakers argued that South Africa had to compensate Angola. These included the Congo and the German Democratic Republic, as well as the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid. Other countries called on the international community to support and assist Angola. Among them were Algeria, Cape Verde, China, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi and Nicaragua.

Three aspects of the South African military action were of particular concern to many speakers: the troop-visit of the South African President on Angolan territory, South Africa's admission that it had acted in defence of UNITA, and its use of Namibia as a staging ground for its attack. Algeria, referring to those aspects, called them an act of defiance and a justification for punishment by the community of nations. Cape Verde similarly termed South Africa's actions an escalation that outraged the international conscience. Mauritania stated that the South African behaviour was by no means new but that it had currently taken the form of open provocation of the Security Council and the world.

Almost all countries participating in the debate sharply criticized the visit of the South African President to his troops in southern Angola, some comparing it to the behaviour of the leaders of Germany in the Second World War.

Many countries found that the use of Namibia as a staging ground for the attack on Angola made South Africa's violation of international norms even graver. Among them was Tunisia, which stated that the Pretoria regime was all the more guilty in that it had undertaken its armed attacks from Namibia, a Territory that it occupied illegally. For the same reason, Portugal described the situation as all the more unacceptable. The Congo said Namibia had been illegally transformed into a forward base from which South Africa could launch and intensify aggression against neighbouring States. China recalled that the invasion of Angola was carried out just after the Security Council had adopted resolution 601(1987) (see p. 988) dealing with Namibia and at a time when the General Assembly was considering the Namibian question; that was an undisguised provocation of the international community. Other countries which criticized the use of Namibia for launching attacks on neighbouring States were Brazil, Cape Verde, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Mozambique, Sao Tome and Prin-cipe, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania.

A large number of speakers took up South Africa's admission that it was acting in support of UNITA. With that, Algeria argued, South Africa had confirmed an established threefold truth, namely that its object was the destabilization of Angola, that the UNITA mercenaries were instruments and agents of South Africa, and that any support for UNITA was an expression of complicity in prolonging South Africa's reign of violence and terror. Mozambique noted that previously South Africa had justified its aggression in terms of hot pursuit, but now admitted that its main intention was to prop up terrorists in Angola, thus again confirming South Africa's involvement in Angola and the true nature of those terrorists—the war was not between the Angolan armed forces and Pretoria's surrogates but a clear war of invasion, aggression, occupation and destabilization. SWAPO stated that about 500 soldiers of two black battalions of the so-called South West Africa Territory Force had mutinied, refusing to wear UNITA uniforms and to fight in Angola on the side of the South Africans and the bandits. Japan also noted the admission that South African forces were fighting alongside those of UNITA and the attempt to justify that by invoking a threat to South Africa's security interests—in Japan's view, a patently false excuse. Among the countries raising similar criticism were Botswana, Brazil, Cape Verde, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, India, Mauritania, the USSR, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe (speaking for the Non-Aligned Movement).

A number of countries commented on South Africa's motives for its attacks other than the destabilization of Angola and the support for UNITA. Yugoslavia, noting that the large-scale incursions and the huge concentration of forces were evidence of South Africa's bid to protect UNITA, added that it was also an attempt to internationalize the conflict and to turn southern Africa into a region of bloc confrontation. Zimbabwe wondered if the South African President's visit to Angola had taken place because he had his eye on the forthcoming presidential elections in the United States, wishing to implicate the United States in the Angolan imbroglio to such an extent that whoever won would be already so committed that he could not back out. ANC similarly argued that the visit, taken in conjunction with South Africa's assertion that it was stepping up its war to prevent a UNITA defeat, was without doubt intended to involve the United States, which supported UNITA, more deeply and extensively in Pretoria's war against southern Africa.

Western support for South Africa was often criticized. Mozambique argued that South Africa had found comfort in the support by a handful of its allies in the West—a situation likely to change in the 12 months following the Security Council meeting, and South Africa was therefore frantically trying to inflict as much damage as possible on southern Africa while the going was good. Nigeria appealed in the name of decency to those Member States that collaborated with apartheid South Africa to stop. The USSR, noting that it was generally known that the United States was providing UNITA with military, logistical and diplomatic support, stated that Washington was helping to enlarge the scale of military actions in southern Angola. Czechoslovakia accused some Western countries of maintaining contacts with South Africa for purely selfish economic and other interests, thus creating obstacles to effective international pressure against Pretoria. Among the other countries criticizing Western support for South Africa were Argentina, Botswana, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Zambia and Zimbabwe (for the Non-Aligned Movement).

Many countries called on the Security Council to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa to enforce its compliance with United Nations resolutions. Among them were Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the Congo, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Mauritania, Nicaragua, the Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe (for the Non-Aligned Movement). Others called in more general terms on the Council to act decisively and speedily. It was pointed out that the Council's failure to prevent South Africa's aggression on earlier occasions was one factor that had led to the recent escalation of the conflict. ANC blamed the sabotage of certain permanent members for the failure of the Council to adopt measures to compel South Africa to comply with the norms of international law, which in turn was interpreted by South Africa as permission and encouragement to proceed apace on its criminal war-path. The USSR argued that the cynicism and studied brazenness of Pretoria's conduct could only be explained by the fact that it had been allowed to get away with aggression; it was no secret that the Council had been unable to discharge its functions because of the open connivance of certain Western States, which prevented it from applying the relevant Charter provisions against the South African racists through the use of their veto. Venezuela noted that hardly a month had passed since the Council adopted resolution 601(1987) on Namibia. That resolution had not called for collective mandatory measures and the result was obvious: South Africa had received the wrong signal and felt it could safely continue to flout that and other resolutions and intensify its attacks on its neighbours. Egypt said that the grave deterioration of the situation in southern Angola came as no surprise, since there was a lack of decisiveness and sanctions in United Nations resolutions and the stance of the international community. The United Arab Emirates regretted that the Council could not go beyond condemnation and denunciation because all draft resolutions of substance which aimed at tightening the rope round the throat of the racist racist were doomed to failure through the use of the veto. It nevertheless co-sponsored the draft resolution submitted as a further test of the credibility of those States which continued to co-operate with South Africa and act as its apologists. The United Kingdom made it clear that it did not interpret the draft resolution as falling within the provisions of Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

On 25 November, the Security Council adopted resolution 602(1987) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Having considered the request by the Permanent Representative of the People's Republic of Angola to the United Nations contained in document S/19278 of 19 November 1987,

Having heard the statement by Mr. Venancio de Moura, Vice-Minister for External Relations of the People's Republic of Angola, Gravely concerned at the continuing acts of aggression committed by the racist regime of South Africa against Angola,

Deeply concerned at the tragic loss of human life and the destruction of property resulting from such acts, Communications (November/December). In a 25 November statement on resolution 602(1987),⁽³⁴⁾ South Africa's Foreign Minister reiterated South Africa's position as stated before the Council and pointed out that the majority of those who participated in the Council's debate did not attempt to reply to the argument that the civil war in Angola was the direct result of MPLA's violation of the 1975 Alvor Agreement. With the ink barely dry on that document, clashes between MPLA and the Frente Nacional para a Libertação de Angola had begun, resulting in MPLA being put into power by Cuban and USSR forces. In the event of the occupation of the southern Angolan region by Cuban and USSR-supported forces, the entire border would be activated and Botswana and Zambia would be sucked into the conflict with incalculable results. South Africa, rejecting the Council's decision, stated that it would remove its troops only when all foreign troops and military advisers were withdrawn from Angola or when its security interests were no longer threatened. South Africa would welcome a visit by the Secretary-General to the area, so that he could ascertain for himself the extent of the Cuban and USSR involvement in MPLA's military actions.

In a 5 December statement,⁽³⁵⁾ the Chief of the South African Defence Force stated that the withdrawal of the Force from Angola had begun; the withdrawal was being made under operational conditions and, to ensure the safety of the soldiers, no specific details could be provided.

Report of the Secretary-General. Following consultations of the Council on 10 December, the deadline for submission of the Secretary-General's report was extended by 10 days and it was presented to the Council on 18 December(36) in pursuance of resolution 602(1987). He reported that in response to his request that South Africa inform him of the manner in which it intended to meet the requirements of paragraph 4 of the resolution, South Africa on 4 December had given him a copy of its statement before the Council, a copy of the 25 November statement by its Foreign Minister,(34) and an advance copy of the 5 December statement by the Chief of its Defence Force (35) South Africa reiterated its willingness to withdraw its forces if its interests were secured or if all foreign forces were also withdrawn. The Secretary-General did not consider that to be a formal response to resolution 602(1987) and requested South Africa to provide him with a definitive response as soon as possible.

He then detailed the activities of a mission he sent to Angola from 12 to 16 December. The mission held talks with the Angolan President as well as with the Foreign and Defence Ministers. They stated that South African forces were not withdrawing, but were reinforcing their positions. The mission visited the headquarters of the Fifth Military Region in Lubango for talks with its Commander and with local commanders of the forward areas. They all reiterated that South Africa had not commenced its withdrawal and was still carrying out military operations in the area.

On 18 December, South Africa confirmed to the Secretary-General that its troops were being withdrawn from Angola and that it had nothing to add to the 5 December statement.

The Secretary-General noted that despite the South African statements, Angola maintained that South African troops were still present in Angola and engaged in active hostilities. Thus far, he had not been provided with a timetable for their withdrawal or other relevant details. In those circumstances, he again urged South Africa to act expeditiously and in accordance with resolution 602(1987).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 22 December,(37) the Security Council's African members-the Congo, Ghana and Zambia-requested, pursuant to paragraph 7 of resolution 602(1987), an urgent Council meeting to consider the Secretary-General's report. Accordingly, the Council met on 23 December and invited Angola, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

That day, the Council adopted resolution 606(1987) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 602(1987), which, inter alia, mandated the Secretary-General to monitor the withdrawal of the South African military forces from the territory of the People's Republic of Angola and to report thereon to the Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Gravely concerned at the continued occupation by the South African military forces of parts of the territory of Angola,

1. Strongly condemns the racist regime of South Africa for its continued occupation of parts of the territory of the People's Republic of Angola and for its delay in withdrawing its troops from that State;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue monitoring the total withdrawal of the South African military forces from the territory of Angola, with a view to obtaining from South Africa a time-frame for total withdrawal as well as confirmation of its completion;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the implementation of this resolution at the earliest date;

4. Decides to remain seized of this matter.

Security Council resolution 606(1987)

23 December 1987 Meeting 2778 Adopted unanimously

5-nation draft (S/19379/Rev.1).

Angola, the only speaker, again accused South Africa of reinforcing its positions while claiming that it was withdrawing. Only a small number of troops had been withdrawn, but they had been replaced and the overall number illegally occupying Angolan territory had not decreased. Angola continued to believe that the Council and its mandatory resolutions were the best chance for a peaceful solution to the problem of the illegal presence. After the vote, Angola expressed the hope that the Secretary-General would soon report on a timetable for the South African withdrawal and obtain confirmation of its completion.

Communication (December). In a 23 December statement,(38) South Africa's Foreign Minister reiterated that all foreign forces and military personnel must be withdrawn from Angola, and described the Secretary-General's report as one-sided, based only on the version of events provided by MPLA. Instead, the Secretary-General should have been able to determine the facts on the ground, including the origin and nature of the Soviet equipment used by Angola, the identity of the advisers, instructors and commanders, and the troop strengths of the various fighting forces. Such facts should have been reflected to give the Council and the world a true, balanced picture of what was occurring in Angola. As far as the South African withdrawal was concerned, the Foreign Minister said it was continuing under operational conditions and he again recalled the 5 December statement to that effect.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly took action on the relations between South Africa and Angola on several occasions in 1987. In resolution 42/23 G, it demanding that South Africa immediately withdraw all its troops from southern Angola. In resolution 42/95, it strongly condemned the persistent, hostile and unprovoked acts of aggression and sustained armed invasions carried out by South Africa, which violated the sovereignty, airspace and territorial integrity of Angola. A similar condemnation was contained in decision 42/417, when the Assembly additionally emphasized the particular gravity of such attacks for being carried out from illegally occupied Namibia. It declared Angola's destabilization and its occupation to be an extension of the hegemonistic scheme of apartheid on which the continuing illegal occupation of Namibia was based.

Botswana-South Africa relations

In addition to the partial border blockade by South Africa against Botswana (see p. 164), the Special Committee against Apartheid reported⁽¹⁾ that in January 1987 South African agents had killed a woman and injured five soldiers in a raid on Botswana, and that a bomb explosion at Gaborone on 8 April was blamed on South Africa.

Communications. The Secretary-General received copies of an exchange of communications between Botswana and South Africa, in which each charged the other with responsibility for an increase in tension in their relations.

South Africa forwarded a message it had sent to Botswana on 8 April.⁽³⁹⁾ Similar messages had been sent to Mozambique (see p. 175), Zambia (see p. 176) and Zimbabwe. South Africa stated that it had learned that ANC was planning to infiltrate South Africa and disrupt its May general elections through violence. Several groups of heavily armed terrorists had assembled in Zambia from where some had already left on their way to South Africa via Botswana, Zimbabwe and Mozambique. South Africa urged Botswana to prevent the terrorists from passing through, warning that it could be forced to act to protect its people and borders; it added, however, that that should not be construed as a threat.

On 14 April,⁽⁴⁰⁾ Botswana transmitted a press release concerning the 8 April bomb explosion at Gaborone. According to the release, the bomb had exploded in a South African-registered automobile, killing a woman and two children, injuring seven people and causing extensive property damage. Also transmitted was a government statement responding to South Africa's 8 April message. Botswana reiterated that it did not allow itself to be used as a base or as a transit route for armed infiltration into neighbouring countries, including South Africa. Consequently, it had asked South Africa for details of its allegations. Suggesting that South African raids on Botswana were usually intended to serve some internal political purpose, Botswana saw a connection between the accusations and threats and the forthcoming white elections in South Africa. Botswana urged South Africa to avoid blaming its neighbours for its problems and to address seriously the root of those problems, which was apartheid.

In a further press release, dated 22 April,⁽⁴¹⁾ Botswana stated that it had received two further messages from South Africa, on 17 and 22 April, repeating the allegation about ANC, but without giving the requisite details.

In another press release, dated 9 June,⁽⁴²⁾ Botswana detailed developments in the investigation into the Gaborone bomb explosion. Botswana alleged that the South African police had installed a monitoring device in the vehicle and had detonated its explosive device by remote control, because they feared that the vehicle might end up in the hands of the Botswana police after it had been driven out of the monitoring range stipulated to the driver, who was one of their agents and resided in Pretoria. Botswana had protested to South Africa and demanded an explanation concerning the role of its police in the matter.

In its 11 June reply to Botswana,⁽⁴³⁾ South Africa denied that its police were in any way involved in the explosion. The person mentioned by Botswana had, according to South Africa, been used by ANC to transport terrorist weaponry from Botswana to South Africa. The South African police had installed a tracing device in the vehicle after they learned that the suspect was to take it to Botswana for it to be equipped by ANC with a remote-controlled explosive device. South Africa found it unacceptable that Botswana had tried to implicate the South African police while ignoring the grave danger arising from the presence of ANC on its territory.

Botswana, by a press release of 12 June,⁽⁴⁴⁾ affirmed that it stood by its 9 June statement, adding that it was significant that South Africa had admitted installing a tracing device on the vehicle. Botswana officials had been to Pretoria on 11 June and had received no information or material supporting the claim that ANC was responsible.

South Africa, in a 23 June note to Botswana,⁽⁴⁵⁾ recalled that on 11 June it had offered to provide evidence placing the suspect's association with ANC and his part in the Gaborone explosion beyond doubt. Botswana's officials had chosen not to avail themselves of the offer and instead decided on a version of the events that suited them and their ANC guests. South Africa reiterated its willingness to provide proof of ANC intentions and announced that it would have to make the evidence public if Botswana maintained its position.

In a 15 June communique by its Foreign Ministry,⁽⁴⁶⁾ Argentina conveyed its deep concern regarding South African acts of aggression against neighbouring States, including Botswana.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 42/95, strongly condemned the unprovoked and unwarranted military attacks of 1985(47) and 1986(48) on the capital of Botswana and demanded that South Africa pay full compensation to Botswana for the loss of life and property damage.

Mozambique-South Africa relations

The Special Committee against Apartheid(1) reported that Mozambique was the target of relentless South African attacks. By January 1987, such aggression had cost Mozambique about $5 billion, more than 100,000 of its people had lost their lives, millions were seriously short of food, and about 500,000 had fled to neighbouring countries. According to a statement of the President of Mozambique, South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization were aimed at damaging Mozambique's economy and thus making the other neighbouring countries more dependent on South Africa as they lost the access to the sea provided by Mozambique's roads, railways and ports. In addition to a South African commando assassination team that made an incursion into Maputo in May and other similar attacks, South Africa provided full support to what the Committee referred to as the bandits of the Resistência Nacional de Mozambique (RENAMO), who frequently sabotaged vital infrastructure. In that context,(18) the Committee quoted a report commissioned by the United States State Department, which concluded that the violence perpetrated by RENAMO was systematic and co-ordinated and did not constitute isolated incidents by undisciplined combatants. Primary schools, health centres and production units were among the targets of destruction chosen by RENAMO. Mozambique also faced the expulsion of its migrant workers from South Africa, a measure that would seriously affect the social and economic fabric of the country because it would—according to ILO—exacerbate rural and urban unemployment, undermine rural trade and transport in the southern provinces, and sharply reduce the foreign exchange reserves.

Communications. A number of countries addressed letters to the Secretary-General concerning allegations of South African aggressive acts against Mozambique and other aspects of the relations between the two States.

In an 8 April message to Botswana,(39) South Africa expressed concern that ANC was planning to infiltrate South Africa via, among other States, Mozambique and disrupt the May general elections in South Africa through violence (see p. 174).

On 1 June,(49) Mozambique reported a 29 May attack on Maputo by a South African commando team which had murdered a Mozambican couple and a guard of a house of South African refugees in transit. Also attacked were the ANC offices and the residence of a Tanzanian citizen. The attackers escaped by sea. This was the first South African direct aggression against Mozambique since the signing of the Nkomati Accord in 1984.(50)

Statements condemning the Maputo attack were forwarded by Argentina,(46) Belgium on behalf of the 12 EC member States,(51) Japan,(52) Nicaragua(53) and Thailand. (54)

On 22 July,(55) Mozambique gave details of an 18 July attack on a southern Mozambican village that left 380 dead. It stated that the recurrence of the criminal activities of armed bandits in the south of Mozambique took place after a massive infiltration of armed bandits coming directly from South Africa and was preceded by re-supply operations by air from South Africa. Mozambique, stating that the massacre fell under South Africa's destabilization strategy against the countries of the region aimed at impeding their development in order to maintain their dependence on South Africa, appealed to the international community for increased help to enable it to face the consequences of South Africa's aggression.

The Prime Minister of India, in a message sent to the President of Mozambique and copied to the Secretary-General on 31 July,(56) expressed outrage over the massacre and added that that act of terrorism, perpetrated with the encouragement and support of South Africa, deserved the strongest condemnation.

On 2 October,(57) South Africa forwarded its reaction to allegations made in the General Assembly by the President of Mozambique on 1 October who, when speaking about the death of former Mozambican President Samora Machel and 35 others in a plane crash in October 1986, had said that he was convinced that an unregistered radio beacon that had diverted the President's plane from its normal route had been installed and operated with criminal intent. South Africa stated that the findings of an independent panel of international experts refuted those allegations in respect of facts, interpretation and conclusion. South Africa annexed a copy of the panel's report.

Mozambique transmitted the Declaration(11) and final communiqué(12) of the Seventh Summit Conference of the Heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe (Maputo, 21 and 22 May). The Declaration dealt with the many problems associated with the South African regime and its apartheid policy, including the aggressive acts against the front-line States. The communique summarized the positions of the five leaders on a variety of economic and political issues in southern Africa and other regions. In this context, they commended the peace policy of Angola and Mozambique, as well as their efforts to preserve their independence, national sovereignty and territorial integrity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 42/95, the General Assembly strongly condemned the escalation of massacres of defenceless people and the continuing destruction of economic and social infrastructures perpetrated against Mozambique by armed terrorists, who were an extension of the South African army of aggression.

South Africa-Zambia armed incidents

In its 1987 report,⁽¹⁾ the Special Committee against Apartheid, after detailing the South African aggression against Angola and Mozambique (see pp. 167 and 175), stated that other countries in the region had not been spared. Among the incidents described was an attack by South African forces on Zambia, killing five people and destroying several buildings.

Communications. Communications dealing with South Africa-Zambia relations were sent to the Secretary-General by the two countries concerned as well as a number of other States.

In an 8 April message⁽³⁹⁾ to Botswana, South Africa expressed concern that ANC was planning to infiltrate South Africa via, among other States, Zambia and disrupt the May general elections through violence (see p. 174). It added that several groups of heavily armed terrorists had assembled in Zambia from where some had already left on their way to South Africa.

On 27 April,⁽⁵⁸⁾ Zambia stated that on 25 April a South African commando raid had taken place in the Zambian border town of Livingstone, during which innocent and defenceless Zambian civilians were killed. Zambia strongly condemned the attack, calling it a desperate attempt to divert attention from the ever growing internal and international resistance to the system of apartheid.

Zambia, as the host country, forwarded a communiqué⁽¹⁴⁾ issued on 30 April by the summit of heads of State (Angola, Mozambique, Zaire, Zambia) on the rehabilitation of the Benguela Railway (see p. 156). They expressed outrage at the violation of the territorial integrity of Zambia, the murder of innocent citizens and the destruction of property.

Communications condemning the military raid on Zambia were also sent by Argentina, ⁽⁴⁶⁾ Belgium (on behalf of EC),⁽⁵⁹⁾ Democratic Kampuchea ⁽⁶⁰⁾ Ghana⁽⁶¹⁾ and Indonesia. ⁽⁶²⁾

Chad-Libyan Arab Jamahiriya dispute

The territorial dispute between Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya continued in 1987, with each party making charges of aggression against the other through letters to the Secretary-General or the President of the Security Council.

Communications. On 2 January,⁽¹⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya rejected allegations of aggression made by Chad in December 1986⁽²⁾ and reiterated that the current confrontation in Chad was an internal struggle. It placed responsibility for the conflict on Hissein Habré, who was acting with the support of France and the United States. The escalation of the fighting was jeopardizing the security of the southern border of the Jamahiriya. Chad had turned its back on OAU's efforts to promote reconciliation between the antagonistic factions there-efforts supported by the Jamahiriya.

On 13 January,⁽³⁾ Chad informed the Security Council of a series of acts of aggression attributed to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya from 11 December 1986 to 7 January 1987. This account, Chad stated, provided proof that the Jamahiriya had been engaged in unwarranted aggression against Chad for many years, in violation of the 1983 Council statement calling on both sides to settle their differences peacefully.⁽⁴⁾

Referring to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's 2 January letter, Chad, on 14 January,⁽⁵⁾ contended that it was no longer correct to speak of an internal struggle in Chad, because the supposed transitional government of national unity behind which the Jamahiriya could conceal itself in the past had turned into straw. As a result, there was total and complete national reconciliation in Chad and the fighting in the north was between Islamic Legion mercenaries and soldiers of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on the one hand, and the National Armed Forces of Chad on the other. Because of the aggression against it, Chad had called on friendly countries for assistance, under Article 51 of the United Nations Charter.

On 16 January,(6) Chad transmitted the text of a motion addressed to the Secretary-General by the representatives of mass organizations on the occasion of a demonstration held at N'Djamena on 6 January to condemn the aggression. The organizations called on the United Nations, OAU, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and friendly countries to support Chad and to denounce the Jamahiriya.

On 13 February,(7) Chad transmitted a document on the January battle of Fada, containing photographs and statistics. In Chad's view, the document provided irrefutable proof of aggressive acts by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Chad called on the Security Council to assume its responsibility and to ensure that the Jamahiriya withdrew its troops and respected Chad's territorial integrity.

On 19 February,(8) Chad transmitted a further document, listing the prisoners it had captured and detailing engagements from 11 December 1986 to 21 January 1987. Chad stated that the document again provided proof of the Jamahiriya's aggression against Chad's independence and territorial integrity. Chad remained willing to engage in a dialogue to find a peaceful solution to the conflict, even though the sole requisites for peace between the two countries were the withdrawal of the invasion troops from Chad and the recognition of its borders by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

On 29 April,(9) Chad submitted a document on the 22 March battle of Ouadi-Doum, containing photographs and statistics of soldiers and matériel which Chad claimed to have captured from a base of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on Chadian territory. Chad described this as additional proof of the expansionist and hegemonic policies of the Tripoli regime. Chad stated that the Jamahiriya still occupied Chadian territory, in particular 114,000 square kilometres commonly known as the Aouzou Strip.

On 7 August,(10) Chad transmitted a 5 August communique informing public opinion of the preparations for a new military offensive by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in violation of OAU resolutions and the 1983 Security Council statement.(4) Chad expressed concern over the Jamahiriya's troop movements in northern Chad and cautioned the Sudan against allowing those forces to operate from its territory.

On 11 August,(11) Chad's Foreign Minister described an attack on its army on 8 August, ending with the liberation of Aouzou, a Chadian town 100 kilometres south of the frontier between Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. The Foreign Minister stated that while determined to defend itself, Chad remained ready for all international initiatives for a peaceful solution, particularly through OAU.

In a 10 August letter,(12) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya claimed that on 8 August its territory had been subjected to military aggression on its southern international frontier by an alliance of imperialist, colonialist and reactionary forces.

On 13 August,(13) Chad described the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's version of the 8 August events as false, maintaining that the Aouzou Strip, some 550,000 square kilometres throughout the Borkou-Ennedi-Tibesti Prefecture, was Chadian territory that had been illegally occupied since 1973. Chadian forces had regained control of the area, except for the Aouzou Strip, and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was trying to disguise its aggression by reversing, against all evidence, the roles of aggressor and victim. Chad called on the Security Council to demand that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya halt its indiscriminate bombardments, using fragmentation and napalm bombs against civilians.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 17 August,(14) disputed Chad's 7 August assertion as a ploy to justify its aggression. Chad had invented the so-called border dispute as an excuse for aggression against the Jamahiriya, while the true nature of the Chadian problem was the imperialist military presence there and conflict between the various Chadian factions. It had become evident that Chad was being transformed by the imperialist States into a base for aggression against the Jamahiriya and an area of tension which threatened the whole region. The Council was urged to maintain international peace and security.

On 20 August,(15) Chad termed the charges misrepresentations and reiterated its version of the 8 August events. The border with the Jamahiriya was, as far as Chad was concerned, the border it had inherited at the time of independence, and the occupation of the so-called Aouzou Strip by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was a violation of the principle of the immutability of the frontiers inherited from the colonial period, a principle sanctioned by OAU.

Also on 20 August,(16) Chad submitted the French text of a book entitled "Qaddafi/Chad: interference, aggression, occupation", stating that the book clarified the status in international law of the conflict between Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and presented evidence of the Libyan aggression. On 9 December,(17) it submitted an English version.

On 3 September,(18) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, recalling its 10 August charge of Chadian aggression, stated that as it was not possible to end the aggression peacefully, it had no alternative but to defend itself. Accordingly, on 28 August, Arab armed forces advanced on the Libyan village of Aozou and liberated it. Those actions were covered by the United Nations Charter. The Jamahiriya had no ambitions to occupy territories not its own, but neither would it permit anyone to threaten its territory. Sophisticated French and United States weapons found on the battlefield provided what the Jamahiriya considered clear evidence of outside involvement.

On 8 September,(19) the Jamahiriya condemned continued aggression on its southern frontier, specifically an attack against the Ma'tan as Sara civilian airport on 5 September. It again alerted the Security Council to the extremely dangerous situation posed by the intervention of France and the United States and called for the withdrawal of their forces because they constituted the principal reasons for the escalation and intensification of the conflict in the region.

On 11 September,(20) Chad termed the Jamahiriya's allegations of 3 September misleading and refuted the claim that Aouzou was in Libyan territory. Stating that the Jamahiriya received counsel from friends outside Africa, Chad asked what one was to make of non-African nationals, taken prisoner or shot down in the cockpits of USSR-made aircraft, who daily bombed Chadian civilians. Chad also recorded that the Jamahiriya had bombed Ounianga Kebbir on 25 August.

Chad, on 14 September,(21) refuted the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's 8 September charge and said that it had attacked the army and air force base of Ma'tan as Sara as an act of self-defence and under the right of pursuit, since that base was the bridgehead from where bombers operated daily missions to Chad. Chad claimed that mercenaries of all nationalities and foreign military advisers were participating in the Jamahiriya's attacks.

On 21 September,(22) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya announced that the war between the two States was officially over, that the attackers had been driven out of Libyan territory and that the border to Chad had been closed, leaving Chad to the Chadians. The Jamahiriya, stating that international public opinion had welcomed its positive position, was surprised that its peace proposals had been rejected by Chad, which had announced that the war was not yet over. Chad claimed all the southern territory of the Jamahiriya as an extension of northern Chad. The Jamahiriya held France and the United States responsible for the Chadian position and for encouraging a resumption of war.

On 23 September,(23) Chad objected to the announcement as a distortion of fact, noting that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had always maintained that it was not waging and imposing war on Chad. Moreover, by stating it was leaving Chad to the Chadians, the Jamahiriya recognized the fact of its occupation and aggression. The only peace proposal made to Chad had come from OAU. That proposal had been accepted by Chad and it had proclaimed a cease-fire on 11 September, although the Jamahiriya continued to occupy parts of Chad.

On 9 November,(24) the Jamahiriya, referring to an announcement by the United States that it would supply Chad with Stinger missiles, interpreted the decision as a direct threat to the Jamahiriya's security and proof of direct intervention.

On 10 November,(25) Chad commented that the supplies were defensive weapons, that the military co-operation between Chad and the United States was in conformity with Charter Article 51, and that the Jamahiriya had been acquiring weaponry and recruiting mercenaries from non-African countries.

Similarly, the United States, on 13 November,(26) affirmed the defensive nature of the missile system and the legality of its weapons transfer; it emphasized United States support of OAU's peace efforts and rejected the allegation that it had entered the war.

On 27 November,(27) Chad transmitted a 25 November message from its President to OAU, alleging that on the night of 21/22 November the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had violated the OAU-sponsored cease-fire in force since 11 September. The Jamahiriya was accused of entering Chadian territory from the Sudan and attacking Chadian positions in the region of Koulbous. Intensified military activities in the Sudanese province of Darfour, violation of Chadian airspace and large-scale recruitment of mercenaries by the Jamahiriya were also noted. In addition, Chad accused the Sudan of complicity.

On 3 December,(28) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a letter it had sent to OAU, stating that it had not violated the cease-fire, that it had not participated in an attack from the Sudan and that such claims were instigated by Powers outside the continent.

On 4 December,(29) Chad reiterated that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had not respected the cease-fire and that Chad was an independent State defending its existence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION

On 2 March,(30) Chad requested that a new item entitled "Aggression against and occupation of Chad by Libya" be included in the General Assembly's provisional agenda. In an explanatory memorandum, Chad summarized what it termed aggression and occupation by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

Accordingly, the item was included in the draft agenda which was referred to the General Committee for consideration. The Committee recommended the item's inclusion by a vote of 13 to 6, with 7 abstentions, after rejecting Nicaragua's proposal to amend the title to "Dispute between Chad and Libya" to bring it into line with the formula adopted by OAU.(31) It also recommended that the item be considered directly in plenary meeting.

The Assembly took up the General Committee's report on 18 September and, after a procedural debate, the President ruled that the Assembly would defer consideration of whether or not the item should be included in the agenda and of what its exact title would be. No further decision on the matter was taken in 1987.

Burkina Faso-Mali dispute

The International Court of Justice continued in 1987 to deal with a frontier dispute between Burkina Faso and Mali (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I). On 11 March 1987,(1) the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the Court's January 1986 Order had ceased to be operative on delivery of its December 1986 Judgment(*) and that the provisional measures had lapsed at the same time.

Ethiopia-Sudan dispute

Armed incidents involving Ethiopia and the Sudan were brought to the attention of the Secretary-General through letters from the two States.

On 1 December,(1) the Sudan's Foreign Minister described bombardments by heavy artillery and rockets from Ethiopian territory on the Sudanese border town of Al-Kurmuk on 10 and 12 November. Later, the forces of what the Sudan referred to as Sudanese outlaws marched into the town. The Sudan added that Ethiopian war-planes had conducted several reconnaissance flights, helping to direct the artillery; that heavy weapons were used which the Sudanese outlaws did not possess, but which could be found in the hands of the Ethiopian Armed Forces; that the bombing was concentrated on civilian targets; and that the events were identical to those that had taken place at the Sudanese border town of Al-Gikaw in June. The Sudan asserted that the two events provided evidence that Ethiopia supported the mutiny movement, which called itself the Sudan People's Liberation Movement and the Sudanese People's Liberation Army, by allowing the use of Ethiopian territory and supplying a wide variety of facilities. The Sudan claimed that such behaviour constituted direct interference in its internal affairs and a violation of its national sovereignty and territorial integrity.

On 11 December,(2) Ethiopia's Foreign Minister responded by denying that Ethiopia had been involved in the capture of Kurmuk, and suggested that the Sudan was seeking to use Ethiopia as a scapegoat to divert attention from the impasse between the parties to the conflict in the Sudan itself. Ethiopia recalled that it had consistently maintained that the Sudanese people should peacefully resolve their own problems, and 'countercharged that the Government of the Sudan had been engaged in a number of hostile actions against Ethiopia.

Comorian island of Mayotte

In 1987, the question of Mayotte—one of a group of four islands in the Indian Ocean Comoro Archipelago—remained before the United Nations. After a 1974 referendum in which the majority of the population had voted for independence, independence had been granted by France to three of the islands, but not to Mayotte, whose inhabitants had voted to remain associated with France.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1986,(1) the Secretary-General reported in October 1987 on developments concerning Mayotte.(2) Information from the Comoros, France and OAU was included in the report.

The Comoros stated that the status of the question had not changed since the French Prime Minister's meeting with an OAU delegation in June 1986, his visit to the Comoros in October 1986 and France's decision not to hold another referendum in Mayotte.(3) The Comoros had raised the problem at every opportunity with the French authorities at the highest level and had continued to campaign on the issue in international organizations. It would be grateful if the United Nations Secretariat could make every effort to have

France comply with the relevant resolutions of the international community

France said that since December 1976 Mayotte had been a territorial community of the French Republic. France was committed to strengthening its close relationship with the Comoros and, within that framework, the Comorian President met regularly with French authorities, such as during his official working visit to France in April 1987. France pointed out that, in July, OAU had stressed the efforts which had already been made and the impetus resulting from a meeting of an OAU committee with French authorities.

OAU said that in July 1987 its Council of Ministers had reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte, reiterating the legitimacy of the demands of the Comorian Government for Mayotte's reintegration into the Comorian State. The Council had also appealed to all OAU member States and to the international community to reject all new forms of consultation on the island's international legal status, which might be organized by France in Mayotte, as the referendum on self-determination held in 1974 was the only valid consultation applicable to the entire archipelago.

In his concluding remarks, the Secretary-General stated that he maintained close contact with all parties and had informed them of his readiness to make his good offices available in the search for a peaceful solution.

Communications. In 1987, three intergovernmental organizations conveyed to the Secretary-General their policy on Mayotte. OAU put forward its position in a July resolution(*) (see above). The Organization of the Islamic Conference, at its Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January 1987),⁽⁵⁾ reaffirmed the territorial unity of the Comoros and its sovereignty over Mayotte; called on France to fulfil its commitments made on the eve of the 1974 self-determination referendum to respect the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros; and appealed to Islamic Conference members to use their influence with France to expedite negotiations with the Comoros for the return of Mayotte to that country. The non-aligned countries expressed a similar position in the final communique of the meeting of their Foreign Ministers and heads of delegation to the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October).⁽⁶⁾ They also considered Mayotte, which was still under French occupation, to be an integral part of the Comoros, called on France to respect the just claim of the Comoros to Mayotte and rejected any new form of consultation which France might hold in Mayotte.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 November 1987, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/17 by recorded vote.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979, 35/43 of 28 November 1980, 36/105 of 10 December 1981, 37/65 of 3 December 1982, 38/13 of 21 November 1983, 39/48 of 11 December 1984, 40/62 of 9 December 1985 and 41/30 of 3 November 1986, in which it, inter alia, affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli,

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements between the Comoros and France, signed on 15 June 1973, concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Convinced further that a speedy solution of the problem is essential for the preservation of the peace and security which prevail in the region,

Bearing in mind the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to that problem,

Taking note of the repeated wish of the Government of the Comoros to initiate as soon as possible a frank and serious dialogue with the French Government with a view to accelerating the return of the Comorian island of Mayotte to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the decisions of the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference on this question,

1. Reaffirms the sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte;

2. Invites the Government of France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the referendum on the self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago of 22 December 1974 concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros;

3. Calls for the translation into practice of the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to the question of Mayotte;

4. Urges the Government of France to accelerate the process of negotiations with the Government of the Comoros with a view to ensuring the effective and prompt return of the island of Mayotte to the Comoros;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to maintain continuous contact with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity with regard to this problem and to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful negotiated solution to the problem;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte".

General Assembly resolution 42/17

During the debate, the Comoros reiterated its position that Mayotte was a Comorian land, sharing the same language, history, culture and religion. That had never been disputed during the more than a century of France's presence in the Comoros and had been recognized by France on the eve of the 1974 referendum. None of the islands was called upon to take a separate stand on its destiny in 1974 and 95 per cent of Comorians had favoured independence. The problem bore the seeds of a future explosion which could harm the good relations with France.

France, regretting that the Mayotte question was again on the Assembly's agenda, opposed the resolution, particularly paragraph 1. Like the Comoros, France also hoped that a just and lasting solution could be found as soon as possible and was committed to an active search that did not exclude any resolution which was in accordance with the French Constitution and the wishes of the people involved.

The Assembly took related action in resolution 42/95, by which it noted the contacts between the Comoros and France in the search for a just solution to the problem of Mayotte's integration into the Comoros.

Malagasy islands question

In 1987, the General Assembly did not debate the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India (islands north and west of Madagascar). The Assembly had not taken action on the item since 1980(1) when it reaffirmed its first action in 1979,(2) inviting France to negotiate the reintegration of the islands with Madagascar and calling on it to repeal measures which infringed Madagascar's sovereignty.

The non-aligned countries expressed their position in the final communique of the meeting of their Foreign Ministers and delegation heads (New York, 5-7 October 1987).(3) They emphasized that it was imperative that Madagascar's unity and territorial integrity be safeguarded and they therefore appealed to all parties concerned to begin negotiations without delay in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations, OAU and the Non-Aligned Movement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October, the Special Political Committee's Chairman informed the Committee that he had held consultations with interested delegations, particularly France and Madagascar, and in view of the ongoing periodic contacts between the two, it was requested that the Committee postpone consideration of the item until 1988. The Committee subsequently recommended that the General Assembly should include the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-third (1988) session. On 2 December, the Assembly did so in adopting decision 42/415.

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

In 1986/87, the number of scholarships granted by the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued to grow, reaching a total of 1,398. Scholarships were awarded to students from South Africa (935), Namibia (460) (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III) and Zimbabwe (3). The Programme was financed by a trust fund made up of voluntary contributions from States, organizations and individuals. Its activities were described in a report of the Secretary-General covering the period from 1 October 1986 to 30 September 1987.(1)

New scholarships were granted to students from South Africa and Namibia; assistance was continued to three students from Zimbabwe to complete courses for which grants had been made previously. For Namibians, 175 new scholarships were awarded and 285 were extended, while 57 students completed their awards. For South Africans, the figures were 382 new awards, 553 extensions and 107 completions. Students studying in Africa numbered 762, 416 were in North America, 156 in Asia, 63 in Europe and 1 in Montserrat.

The Programme, in accordance with the recommendations of its Advisory Committee, strengthened its increasingly cost-effective and mutually beneficial co-operation with scholarship agencies and educational institutions, such as the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Co-operation, the World University Service, the International Institute of Education, the Bishop Tutu Southern African Refugee Scholarship Fund, the African Education Trust Fund and the Southern Africa Freedom through Education Fund.

The Advisory Committee noted that the Programme had registered substantial progress and that full adherence to its guidelines was indicated by the increasing number of students and by their distribution by region, gender, level of study (remedial, undergraduate and graduate) and field of study (academic, vocational and technical).

In his concluding remarks, the Secretary-General again appealed for generous financial and other support to the Programme to meet the increasing demands on it.

Financial contributions

In the period under review, the Programme received $4,059,948 from 29 States. In addition to the voluntary cash contributions, the Programme received offers of scholarships for training in their own countries from 29 States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 42/76 without vote.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, in particular resolution 41/27 of 31 October 1986,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing an account of the work of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the administration of the Programme for the period from 1 October 1986 to 30 September 1987,

Recognizing the valuable assistance rendered by the Programme to the peoples of South Africa and Namibia,

Noting with satisfaction that educational and technical assistance for southern Africa has become a growing concern of the international community,

Fully recognizing the need to provide continuing educational opportunities and counselling to a greater number of student refugees from South Africa and Namibia in a wide variety of professional, cultural and linguistic disciplines, as well as opportunities for vocational and technical training and for advanced studies at graduate and postgraduate levels in the priority fields of study,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of the Programme is essential in order to meet the ever-increasing demand for educational and training assistance to students from South Africa and Namibia,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

2. Commends the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa for their continuing efforts further to promote generous contributions to the Programme and to enhance co-operation with governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental agencies involved in educational and technical assistance to southern Africa;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all those that have supported the Programme by providing contributions, scholarships or places in their educational institutions;

Co-operation between OAU and the UN system

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity was described by the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(1) in a July 1987 report with a later addendum.(2) Co-operation took place in four main areas: consultations and exchange of information; co-operation with regard to the situation in southern Africa; co-operation in economic and social development; and co-operation in information and publicity.

Communications. The statements and resolutions adopted by the Council of Ministers of OAU at its forty-fifth (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 23-28 February)(3) and forty-sixth (Addis Ababa, 20-25 July)(4) ordinary sessions were forwarded by Guinea and Madagascar respectively. Madagascar also forwarded the declarations and resolutions of the twenty-third ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Addis Ababa, 27-29 July).(4) Mozambique transmitted the Declaration and the African Common Position on Africa's External Debt Crisis adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU at its third extraordinary session (Addis Ababa, 30 November-1 December).(5)

On Peruvian-African Friendship Day (19 October), the President of Peru sent a message to the OAU Chairman,(6) reaffirming Peru's solidarity with the African people and their leaders in their ongoing struggle for development, a better standard of living, social justice, sovereignty and independence, more democratic international relations, the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, solidarity among third world nations and the strengthening of the Non-Aligned Movement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/9 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and the practical measures taken for their implementation,

Recalling also, in particular, its resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986 on the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987, and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization at its twenty-third ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 27 to 29 July 1987,

Considering the important statement made by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity before the General Assembly on 6 October 1987,

Mindful of the need for continued and closer co-operation between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and the Organization of African Unity,

Gravely concerned at the deteriorating situation in southern Africa arising from the continued domination and oppression of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia by the minority racist regime of South Africa and conscious of the need to provide increased assistance to the peoples of the region and to their liberation movements in their struggle against colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

7. Requests all Member States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and all other competent organizations within the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations, to activate and increase their programme of assistance to African subregional organizations for drought and desertification control such as the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development;

8. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts, on behalf of the international community, to organize and mobilize special programmes of economic assistance for those African States facing grave economic difficulties, the front-line States and other independent States of southern Africa to help them to withstand the effects of the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid régime of South Africa;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Organization of African Unity informed periodically of the response of the international community to those special programmes of economic assistance and to continue to co-ordinate them with all similar programmes initiated by that organization;

15. Urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations to provide material and economic assistance to African countries of asylum to enable them to withstand the heavy burden imposed on their limited resources and weak infrastructures by the presence in their countries of large numbers of refugees;

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: plenary 26, 51.

The General Assembly called for United Nations/OAU co-operation in a number of other 1987 resolutions. Among them was resolution 42/72, in which it requested the Secretary-General to continue disseminating information on decolonization, maintaining a close working relationship with OAU by holding periodic consultations and exchanging information. Chapter VI

Americas

A genuine momentum for peace, created by the region's leaders in pragmatic response to the basic needs of their peoples, appeared to exist in Central America, observed the Secretary-General in 1987. He was referring to an agreement reached in August by the Presidents of five Central American countries (Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua) on the procedure to be followed for establishing peace in the region.

The General Assembly, in October, expressed support for the agreement, called on the Presidents to continue their peace efforts, welcomed the Secretary-General's acceptance of an invitation to participate in the International Verification and Follow-up Commission set up under the agreement and requested him to afford full support to the Central American Governments (resolution 42/1). Also in October, it invited the Secretary-General to expand co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS) and urged the United Nations system to collaborate with him in that regard (resolution 42/11).

In November and December, the Assembly adopted two resolutions relating to Nicaragua: in one it called for United States compliance with the 1986 Judgment of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) in respect of military and paramilitary activities against Nicaragua (42/18); in the other it deplored the continuation of the United States trade embargo against that country (42/176).

Twenty-five Member States informed the Secretary-General that, although a previously inscribed item on the observance of the quincentenary of the discovery of America was not on the Assembly's 1987 agenda, they felt the United Nations could not remain uninvolved in the observance of the anniversary in 1992.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: nuclear-weapon-free zone—Latin America. Regional economic and social activities: Latin America. Human rights violations: Latin America. Refugees and displaced persons: Latin America and the Caribbean. Other colonial Territories: Falkland Islands (Malvinas). International Court of Justice: military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua; border and trans-border armed actions (Nicaragua v. Costa Rica), (Nicaragua v. Honduras); frontier dispute between El Salvador and Honduras.

Central America situation

In his September 1987 report on the Organization's work (see p. 3), the Secretary-General said that when he and the OAS Secretary-General had toured Central America with the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group (Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Venezuela) and Contadora Support Group (Argentina, Brazil, Peru, Uruguay), in January, he had found little political will to solve the region's continuing conflicts. However, he felt encouraged to revise that assessment following an agreement reached on 7 August at Guatemala City (see p. 188) on a peace plan based on a proposal by the President of Costa Rica. He welcomed the agreement as an important breakthrough, stressing that it was an opportunity for peace that must not pass. In support of the peace process, he had agreed to serve as a member of the International Verification and Follow-up Commission, established at Caracas, Venezuela, on 22 August in accordance with the agreement, and pointed to the need for the international community's support in the crucial negotiations that lay ahead.

Throughout 1987, numerous communications relating to the Central America situation were addressed to the Secretary-General for circulation to the General Assembly and the Security Council.

Communications (January). The Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group and its Support Group issued a communique in Mexico City at the conclusion of their peace mission to the five Central American countries between 18 and 21 January 1987.⁽¹⁾ The Ministers stated that the heads of State of those countries acknowledged the deterioration of the Central America situation, reiterated the need to achieve peace and outlined possible initiatives. They further stated that the obstacles impeding dialogue seemed to stem from differing conceptions of tackling the problems and persistent acts violating international law, and that the political will still did not exist to give effect to the conciliatory proposals that had been put forward; nevertheless, the heads of State were convinced that the Contadora forum remained the best instrument for achieving a solution to the regional conflict. The Ministers invited the parties to reactivate negotiations and reiterated their determination to maintain a dialogue with the countries directly or indirectly involved, including the United States, whose contribution was needed to resolve the conflict.

On 27 January,(2) Costa Rica, in a communique clarifying interpretations by certain information media, stressed that it continued to support the Contadora negotiating process and had engaged neither in diplomatic activities beyond that framework nor in submitting political proposals contrary to the objectives evolved by the Contadora negotiations, which, it charged, were deadlocked solely because of Nicaragua. Costa Rica reiterated its willingness to participate in a political solution to the crisis and urged the two Groups and the two Secretaries-General to persevere in their endeavours.

Report of the Secretary-General. Responding to a 1986 General Assembly request,(3) the Secretary-General submitted a 12 February 1987 report(4) giving his assessment of the situation in Central America, following the 18-21 January peace mission to the region's five countries by the Contadora and Support Groups,(1) in which he and the OAS Secretary-General had participated.

The additional separate discussions held by the Secretary-General with each head of State during the mission made him realize that, while the Governments remained committed to the basic principles underlying the Contadora approach, that commitment was being neutralized by a growing climate of distrust, the impact of external factors, difficulties in translating the desire for peace into action, a vicious circle with respect to the internal democratization process and the principles of non-interference in the internal affairs of States and non-use of force, and objections to resuming the dialogue that were purely procedural.

The Secretary-General drew attention to the natural disasters that had befallen the region—such as the earthquakes that had destroyed Managua (Nicaragua) in 1972, and San Salvador (El Salvador) in the recent past—underscoring the need for an emergency reconstruction and economic development plan, which would help solve the political crisis. He also pointed to the growing number of refugees in the neighbouring countries as a consequence of that crisis. The living conditions of those refugees, currently over 125,000 (see p. 895), could be improved without using them for political proselytism or propaganda purposes.

Central America was at a historic cross-roads, he said. It could choose either to overcome suspicions and animosities based on frequently exaggerated ideological differences, or to continue down the path towards a generalized conflict. He urged the countries of the isthmus to transcend their differences, which paled by comparison with their common enemy: underdevelopment. Overcoming underdevelopment would be the best way to guarantee peace in Central America and to dispel any security concerns that third parties might have, the Secretary-General stressed, and he pledged to spare no effort to help bring peace and development to the area.

Communications (February-September). On 4 February 1987,(5) Panama forwarded a lecture delivered by its Foreign Minister at Harvard University (Cambridge, Massachusetts) on 12 December 1986 on the Contadora Group's peace initiatives. The lecture reviewed the progress of those initiatives, begun in 1983,(6) up to the Group's completion of the June 1986 version(7) of the Act for Peace and Co-operation in Central America, first drafted in 1984 (8), and referred to as the Contadora Act. The Contadora peace process, the lecture stressed, was an answer to a Latin America problem that Latin Americans wanted to solve by themselves. While they had grounds to hope for peace, they were also aware of the link between social injustice and social unrest and had seen the negative effects of outside pressures and attempts to "decide the political evolution of the Latin American family of nations.

Venezuela, on 11 February 1987,(9) conveyed its Foreign Minister's statement, made on behalf of the Contadora Group, at the Third Conference of Foreign Ministers of the European Community (EC), Central America and the Contadora Group (Guatemala City, 9 and 10 February) on political dialogue and economic co-operation. The Group welcomed the recent entry into force of the 1985 agreement,(10) on co-operation between EC, the States parties to the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration, and Panama. Mindful of EC solidarity and support, the Group attached the utmost importance to political dialogue with EC, viewing it as another step to foster negotiated and peaceful solutions to Central America's problems.

Following the Third Conference, Guatemala, on 25 February,(11) transmitted a joint political declaration and a joint economic communique issued by the participating Ministers. In the declaration they reaffirmed the objectives of political dialogue and economic co-operation set forth in the 1985 agreement,(10) recalled that the 1986 Caraballeda Message(12) had given a new impetus to the peace process, and welcomed the 1986 Esquipulas Declaration by the five Central American Presidents(7) affirming support for the Contadora process as the best political forum for achieving peace, democracy and reduction of tensions in Central America. By the communique, the Ministers voiced their conviction that regional economic co-operation offered the best possibility of raising living standards and contributing to political and social stability in Central America; they agreed on the need to study priority projects, to restructure economic integration in trade and industry and to develop human resources as well as trade between EC and the region; EC reaffirmed its commitment to increase its aid substantially and to give attention to Central America's external debt problems.

Costa Rica transmitted a peace proposal put forward by its President at a meeting with the Presidents of El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras on 15 February 1987 at San José.⁽¹³⁾ The proposal provided for: general amnesty and dialogue with all domestic political opposition groups that had laid down their arms; a cease-fire; freedom of the press, radio and television and pluralism of political parties; free and fair elections to be held simultaneously throughout Central America in the first half of 1988; suspension of military aid to insurgents or irregular forces by Governments outside the region; the non-use of a State's territory to attack another; weapons reduction; establishment of a follow-up committee to supervise and verify compliance; progress evaluation; and adoption of economic and cultural agreements to speed development. The proposal, to be considered further at a meeting at Esquipulas (Guatemala) within 90 days, would enter into force upon ratification by the Presidents of the Central American States.

Nicaragua, by a communique of 18 February⁽¹⁴⁾ stated that the 15 February meeting at San Jose indicated that at no time had Nicaragua been an impediment to peace and that the interventionist policy of the United States had sabotaged the Central American peace proposals. It agreed that the Costa Rican peace plan should be incorporated in the Contadora negotiating process for consideration on a par with proposals advanced by the other Central American Governments. It confirmed its readiness for multilateral or bilateral negotiations and to resume within the next 90 days the dialogue begun at the 1986 Esquipulas meeting.⁽⁷⁾ Nicaragua laid down the elements it considered essential for peace in the region: cessation of the United States terrorist policy, unconditional dialogue between the United States and Nicaragua and between Central American leaders, backing for the Contadora peace efforts by the Support Group and the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and OAS, and strengthening of democracy in the region based on self-determination and political pluralism.

The Foreign Ministers of the Contadora and Support Groups, at the Third Meeting of the Council of Ministers of the Latin American Integration Association (Montevideo, Uruguay, 13 March 1987),⁽¹⁵⁾ issued a press communique stating that the January peace mission⁽¹⁾ had made it possible to identify the different positions, the difficulties that stood in the way of negotiation and the prospects offered by the complex regional panorama. They expressed satisfaction at the resumption of direct dialogue among the Central American countries at their February meeting with the EC Foreign Ministers.⁽⁹⁾ They welcomed the emergence of new peace initiatives, hoped that a genuine will to negotiate would emerge at the forthcoming Esquipulas meeting, and stated that the 1986 Caraballeda Message⁽¹²⁾ was an effective basis for achieving progress in the negotiations.

The Special Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on Latin America and the Caribbean (Georgetown, Guyana, 9-12 March),⁽¹⁶⁾ by its final communique, held that the situation in Central America was the result of centuries of domination and exploitation; it thus reiterated that the crisis there could neither be attributed to nor explained in terms of East-West ideological confrontation and pledged to prevent it from being so used; it also reaffirmed support for the diplomatic efforts of the Contadora and Support Groups.

El Salvador transmitted a communique of 26 March⁽¹⁷⁾ charging the Frente Democrático Revolucionario-Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FDR-FMLN)—the El Salvador opposition movement—with increasingly resorting to terrorist practices in the face of its inability to halt the democratic process under way in the country, and denouncing recent acts of provocation and violence, as follows: on 23 March, an attack on a civil defence patrol at Santa Fe, San Marcos, killing two of its members; on 24 March, open acts of provocation against security agents in various parts of San Salvador; on 25 March, two ambushes, also in the capital, that killed two police agents and a national guardsman, and wounded another; and, again on 25 March, the occupation of a school, with its 947 pupils and 27 teachers held hostage for several hours. In other terrorist acts during April and May, three persons were kidnapped and four murdered.

The Presidents of Guatemala and Nicaragua issued a joint communique following their meeting at Managua on 29 March,⁽¹⁸⁾ reaffirming their conviction that peace could be brought about only by respect for the coexistence of States, based on the principles of self-determination, non-use of force and dispute settlement through dialogue and negotiation. They reiterated their support for the Contadora and Support Groups and acknowledged the importance of quickly establishing a Central American Parliament as a focal point for dialogue, as agreed upon at the 1986 Esquipulas meeting.⁽⁷⁾ They decided to seek common approaches to the imbalances in their export prices, enhance bilateral trade, step up economic cooperation with EC, and give new impetus to the institutions responsible for Central American economic integration.

The Foreign Ministers of the Contadora and Support Groups, by a 13 April communiqué⁽¹⁹⁾ issued at Buenos Aires, Argentina, noted with concern that negotiations aimed at the signing of the Contadora Act had been deadlocked since 1986. Bolstered in their commitment to peace by the forthcoming June Esquipulas meeting of the Central American Presidents, they urged the countries involved to refrain from acts that might influence the meeting's outcome and pledged to co-operate to ensure its success and to implement any agreement reached towards resuming negotiations on the Act.

The Seventh Summit Conference of the heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe (Maputo, Mozambique, 21 and 22 May),⁽²⁰⁾ in its final communique, expressed concern over the continuing tension in Central America, condemned interference in Nicaragua's internal affairs and reaffirmed support for the efforts of the Contadora and Support Groups.

Nicaragua, in a 10 June note⁽²¹⁾ to the two Groups, charged that military manoeuvres, whose sole objective was military intervention against Nicaragua, were threatening peace in the region. It urged the implementation of the measures stipulated in the 1986 Caraballeda Message⁽¹²⁾ so as to end outside support for irregular forces operating in the region; the suspension of international military manoeuvres; the removal of foreign military advisers and installations; the conclusion of Central American non-aggression pacts; and the strengthening of regional and international co-operation. Convinced that peace required a United States commitment to negotiation, Nicaragua reiterated its readiness to discuss security matters with the United States.

El Salvador proposed on 13 June⁽²²⁾ that the June Esquipulas Presidential meeting be postponed to August, to give their Foreign Ministers time to consider the Costa Rican peace proposal.⁽¹³⁾ Nicaragua and Panama, by a joint communique issued at Panama City on 24 June,⁽²³⁾ informed the Contadora Group of Nicaragua's agreement to a postponement of the meeting to 6 and 7 August. Honduras reported on 24 June⁽²⁴⁾ that, owing to obstruction by certain Central American Governments, it had been obliged to cancel a proposed ministerial preparatory meeting, planned for 25 and 26 June at Tela (as had been agreed during a 16 June visit of Guatemala's President to Tegucigalpa); therefore, it suggested that the Contadora Group convene a meeting with the Central American Foreign Ministers to discuss outstanding issues.

Subsequently, the Foreign Ministers of the Central American countries and the Contadora Group met at Tegucigalpa on 31 July and 1 August, during which Honduras submitted its own peace proposals.⁽²⁵⁾ They included cessation of hostilities, measures for national reconciliation and democratization, mechanisms for national and international supervision, regional negotiations, evaluation of the pacification process, and co-operation for economic and social development.

The 12 EC countries, by a declaration transmitted by Denmark on 5 August,⁽²⁶⁾ stated that the Costa Rican peace initiative⁽¹³⁾ deserved support and expressed hope that the Central American heads of State would reach a consensus that would end violence and instability in the region.

The Presidents of the five Central American countries, at their meeting at Guatemala City on 7 August,⁽²⁷⁾ signed a document entitled "Procedure for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America". The document—which referred to that meeting as the Esquipulas II Summit—provided for steps leading to national reconciliation, including dialogue, amnesty and the setting up of a national reconciliation commission in each country; an appeal for an end to hostilities; a process of democratization that called for freedom of television, radio and the press, pluralism of political parties, revocation of states of siege or emergency, and free elections; the termination of aid for irregular forces and insurrectionist movements; a commitment to prevent the use of a country's territory for attacking other States; negotiations on security, verification and control and limitation of weapons; assistance to refugees and displaced persons; co-operation for development; international verification and follow-up; and a timetable for implementation.

Messages expressing satisfaction with the Guatemala agreement included: a 9 August communiqué⁽²⁸⁾ from the Contadora and Support Groups, which decided to meet on 22 and 23 August to examine adequate forms of response to the requests directed to them; an 11 August communique from Ecuador;⁽²⁹⁾ a 12 August statement by the USSR;⁽³⁰⁾ an EC declaration transmitted by Denmark on 13 August,⁽³¹⁾ urging the Central American countries and those with interests in the region to co-operate in translating the agreement into lasting peace and true democracy there; and a 1 September statement from Poland.⁽³²⁾

Cuba, on 20 August,⁽³³⁾ forwarded a press release on the Nicaraguan President's visit to Cuba eight days previously, characterizing the position of each of the agreement's signatories as independent but highly positive, and stating that Cuba and Nicaragua were aware of the major obstacles to be overcome to achieve the goals set by the agreement.

The Foreign Ministers of the five Central American countries and of the Contadora and Support Groups, by a communiqué issued at Caracas, Venezuela, on 22 August (34) at the end of their meeting with the OAS Secretary-General and the personal representative of the United Nations Secretary-General, resolved to set up the International Verification and Follow-up Commission as stipulated by the 7 August agreement(27) and to convene it periodically to monitor the agreement's implementation; to convene a meeting of ad hoc representatives to determine the modalities for verifying compliance; and to launch an international emergency programme of technical and economic co-operation for the five countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, responding to Costa Rica's request of 5 October 1987(35) to consider the item on the Central America situation as a matter of urgency, met on 7 October and adopted resolution 42/1 without vote.

The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 530(1983) of 19 May 1983 and 562(1985) of 10 May 1985 and its resolutions 38/10 of 11 November 1983, 39/4 of 26 October 1984 and 41/37 of 18 November 1986, as well as the initiative of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and of the Organization of American States of 18 November 1986,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 41/37,

Recognizing the far-sighted and unfailing determination, as well as the decisive contribution, of the Contadora Group and its Support Group in favour of peace in Central America,

Convinced that the peoples of Central America wish to achieve peace, reconciliation, development and justice, without outside interference, in accordance with their own decision and their own historical experience, and without sacrificing the principles of self-determination and non-intervention,

Aware that the agreement signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 by the Presidents of the Republics of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua is the outcome of the decision by Central Americans to take up fully the historical challenge of forging a peaceful destiny for Central America,

Aware also of the political will which inspires them to settle their differences by means of dialogue, negotiation and respect for the legitimate interests of all States, establishing commitments to be fulfilled in good faith, through the verifiable performance of actions aimed at achieving peace, democracy, security, co-operation and respect for human rights,

Taking note with satisfaction of the establishment, at Caracas on 22 August 1987, of the International Verification and Follow-up Commission provided for in the agreement reached by the Central American Governments and comprising, in addition to them, the countries of the Contadora Group and its Support Group and the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and of the Organization of American States,

Deeply concerned at the need to improve the conditions of life of the people of Central America,

1. Commends the desire for peace expressed by the Central American Presidents in signing on 7 August 1987 at Guatemala City the agreement on "Procedure for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America";

2. Expresses its firmest support for the agreement;

3. Calls upon the Presidents to continue their efforts to achieve a firm and lasting peace in Central America and requests the international community to lend its full support;

4. Welcomes the acceptance by the Secretary-General of the invitation from the Central American countries to participate in the International Verification and Follow-up Commission, and recognizes the importance of the initiative which he took jointly with the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States on 18 November 1986;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to afford the fullest support to the Central American Governments in their effort to achieve peace, especially by granting the assistance requested of him for the effective functioning of the machinery for the verification and follow-up of the commitments made, which was provided for in the agreement signed at Guatemala City;

6. Urges the international community to increase technical, economic and financial assistance to the Central American countries and requests the Secretary-General to promote a special plan of co-operation for Central America;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly informed of the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives".

General Assembly resolution 42/1

7 October 1987 Meeting 28 Adopted without vote

13-nation draft (A/42/L.2); agenda item 34.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: plenary 27, 28.

The United States, explaining its position, was pleased to see international support for the achievement of peace and pluralistic democracy in Central America, as embodied in the Guatemala agreement. For the initiative to succeed, all the signatories must comply with all of the agreement's terms. Citing press freedom among them, the United States said it awaited with hope the establishment of freedom for television, radio and the press in Nicaragua. It called on that country to emulate El Salvador by initiating a dialogue with its armed opposition and said it remained concerned about the predominance of Sandinist military might in Central America.

Nicaragua was encouraged that the United States had supported the resolution which might be evidence that it would not attempt to prevent success for the Guatemala agreement. Although Nicaragua was committed to peace, it had witnessed only a policy of aggression and the financing of forces against it by the United States.

In a related action, the Assembly, in resolution 42/110, expressed satisfaction at the Central American Presidents' commitments to protect and aid refugees and displaced persons, as stated in the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II Summit; appealed for increased assistance to Central American refugees, returnees and displaced persons; invited Member States to co-operate in solving the social and economic problems arising from the refugee flows; and stressed the need to co-ordinate humanitarian assistance with national development plans. In resolution 42/204, it requested the Secretary-General to send a technical mission to the countries of Central America to determine their economic and social priorities and to formulate a special plan of co-operation for the region.

In suspending its forty-second (1987) session on 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 42/460, retained on the agenda of that session the item on the situation in Central America.

Communications (October-November). The meeting of Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Non-Aligned Movement (New York, 5-7 October),(36) by a final communique transmitted by Zimbabwe on 23 October, welcomed the Guatemala agreement(27) 'and called on the United States to co-operate in its implementation by ending support for the mercenary forces destabilizing Nicaragua and threats of direct military intervention to overthrow that country's legitimate Government. It appealed to the Central American Governments to continue demonstrating their political will for peace and, in the context of the agreement, welcomed the renewal on 4 October of talks between El Salvador and FDR-FMLN, urging them to continue those talks until a political solution had been achieved.

Canada, on 19 October,(37) transmitted a communique of a meeting of the Commonwealth heads of Government (Vancouver, 13-17 October), welcoming the Guatemala agreement as a significant attempt to solve the region's problems.

Guatemala and Honduras, on 16(38) and 27 October,(39) respectively, transmitted declarations of full support for the International Verification and Follow-up Commission and stated their readiness to provide it with the facilities for the performance of its functions. The EC countries, by a declaration issued at Brussels, Belgium, on 23 November(40) and transmitted by Denmark, stated that the measures taken in the three months following the Guatemala agreement gave grounds for optimism; they urged the Central American countries to carry the peace process forward and expressed support for the Commission.

The heads of State of the newly formed Permanent Mechanism for Consultation and Concerted Political Action, composed of Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela, transmitted a document entitled "Acapulco Commitment to Peace, Development and Democracy", signed at the end of the Permanent Mechanism's first meeting at Acapulco, Mexico, on 29 November.(41) The heads of State called on the industrialized countries to join in a political dialogue aimed at surmounting the obstacles to development, to a restructuring of the world economy, and to decision-making in matters of peace and security. They outlined the impact of the international situation on Latin America and the Caribbean, the main challenges facing the region, and measures to promote peace, democracy and development, in particular with respect to the external debt problem, international trade and regional integration.

Nicaragua situation

In 1987, the Secretary-General received several communications relating to the Nicaragua situation. These included a complaint from Honduras concerning an armed incident at its border with Nicaragua and a number of letters relating to various aspects of Nicaragua's dispute with the United States.

(For information on the judicial proceedings instituted by Nicaragua in 1986 against Costa Rica and discontinued in 1987, see p. 1048.)

Honduras-Nicaragua armed incident

Honduras, by a note of 12 February 1987 from its Foreign Minister transmitted five days later,(42) protested to Nicaragua that, on that date, its Sandinist People's Army ambushed a Honduran Army patrol in El Español village, El Paraíso Department, leaving a Honduran soldier dead and three wounded. Honduras claimed that, despite repeated protests, Nicaragua had taken no action to prevent such attacks on Honduran troops guarding their common border. Honduras said it had denounced this latest attack to OAS and reserved the right to take international action to obtain appropriate compensation.

Nicaragua-United States dispute

Communications (August and December). In 1987, Nicaragua continued to charge the United States with escalating its policy of aggression against Nicaragua. That charge was reflected in the following four notes from the Nicaraguan Foreign Minister to the United States Secretary of State, the texts of which were transmitted to the Secretary-General in August and December.

On 11 August,(43) Nicaragua stated that the Guatemala agreement(27) demanded a high degree of commitment to peace; it therefore urged the United States to end its illegal policy of intervention and intimidation by force, which had been condemned by ICJ in 1986.(44) Nicaragua also charged that the United States policy of organizing, financing and leading mercenaries to attack Nicaragua constituted the chief obstacle to regional peace and called on that country to cut off all such funds and support.

In a note of 23 August,(45) Nicaragua alleged that, on the previous day, 30 mercenaries armed and directed by the United States ambushed a vehicle carrying civilians near the Mancotal dam at Pedregal, Matagalpa Department, killing five persons and wounding two. Nicaragua lodged a vigorous protest over the incident to the United States, calling on it to desist from its war of aggression against Nicaragua.

In a 28 August note,(46) Nicaragua charged the United States with behaviour calculated to frustrate implementation of the Guatemala agreement(27) and its President with reiterating his support for mercenary groups through "Radio Liberación", a secret Central Intelligence Agency radio station. The most recent expression of that policy was an attack on a peasant co-operative 35 kilometres south-east of Jinotega, which killed three persons and wounded five. Nicaragua charged other instances of illegal activities by the United States during August, including: espionage by reconnaissance flights over Nicaragua and by United States naval units stationed opposite Nicaragua's Caribbean coast; compromising Nicaragua's neighbours by airlifting supplies for mercenary forces in aircraft originating from Costa Rica and Honduras, and encouraging aerial reconnaissance over Nicaragua from the same territories. It also cited mercenary bases maintained in Honduras by the United States against the wishes of Hondurans.

On 22 December,(47) Nicaragua protested an attack by mercenaries on a Nicaraguan civil aircraft, on the Managua-Panama route, with a ground-to-air rocket, followed by rifle fire as the aircraft came down on a ranch in Costa Rica, a short distance from the Nicaraguan border. Six persons were wounded. Nicaragua denounced the action as another demonstration of United States attempts to frustrate implementation of the Guatemala agreement.

1986 ICJ Judgment

In 1987, the Secretary-General received communications from Nicaragua and the United States concerning compliance with the Judgment delivered by ICJ in June 1986(44) in the case of "Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua". The Application instituting proceedings against the United States in respect of those activities had been filed by Nicaragua in 1984.(48)

Nicaragua's Foreign Minister, on 19 October 1987,(49) referred to the 1986 General Assembly resolution(50) calling for full and immediate compliance with the Judgment. He charged that the United States persisted not only in disobeying the Judgment but in stepping up its military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua and not heeding communications regarding reparations. Citing 43,176 victims and material damage exceeding $2.8 billion as being the effects of the illegal war imposed on it, Nicaragua said it did not want that to be the price for other peoples to pay to defend their right to self-determination.

The United States, on 3 November,(51) transmitted a 1 August note sent to Nicaragua in response to its note of 12 May, as modified on 20 June, proposing bilateral discussions on the Judgment. The United States again stressed that it did not accept that ICJ had either jurisdiction or competence to resolve Nicaragua's claims and questioned whether the suit had been filed in good faith to contribute to peace in Central America. If Nicaragua was serious in its stated desire towards that end, it would terminate the behaviour that had given rise to the conflict and engage in serious negotiations within the framework of ongoing peace efforts.

In a report of 4 November 1987,(52) submitted in conjunction with the Assembly's 1986 call for compliance,(49) the Secretary-General stated that there had been no change in the situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 November 1987, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/18 by recorded vote.

Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua: need for immediate compliance
The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 530(1983) of 19 May 1983 and 562(1985) of 10 May 1985, and its resolution 41/31 of 3 November 1986,

Aware that, under the Charter of the United Nations, the International Court of Justice is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations and that each Member undertakes to comply with the decision of the Court in any case to which it is a party,

Considering that Article 36, paragraph 6, of the Statute of the Court provides that "in the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court",

Taking note of the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 in the case of "Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua".

Having considered the events that have taken place in and against Nicaragua since the Judgment was rendered, in particular the continued financing by the United States of America of military and other activities in and against Nicaragua,

Emphasizing the obligation of States, under customary international law, not to intervene in the internal affairs of other States,

1. Urgently calls for full and immediate compliance with the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 in the case of "Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua" in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly informed on the implementation of this resolution;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua: need for immediate compliance."

General Assembly resolution 42/18

12 November 1987 Meeting 68 94-2-48 (recorded vote)

Draft by Nicaragua (A/42/L.23); agenda item 30.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: plenary 67, 68.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Togo, a Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahrain, Belgium, Brunei Darussalam, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, France, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Guatemala, Honduras, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, Morocco, Niger, Oman, Paraguay, Portugal, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom, Zaïre.

aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

The States explaining their abstentions—Cameroon, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti and Luxembourg—declared their acceptance of international law, their recognition of ICJ as the highest legal body of the United Nations system and their respect for the 1986 Judgment.

Costa Rica felt, however, that the resolution did not distinguish clearly between the legal and political aspects of the issue. The first raised the question as to whether a State was compelled to comply with a decision of a court whose jurisdiction it did not recognize in a case to which it had expressly determined that it was not a party. The problem, Costa Rica noted, went to the root of international law as a non-imperative law, and pointed to a current of opinion in legal circles recognizing that a State not accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of a court was within its sovereign rights to do so. As to the second aspect, if the resolution's purpose was to ensure cessation of outside support to political forces operating in the region, it should have referred to all extraregional Powers providing such support rather than to only one.

Sri Lanka, which neither believed that the Judgment's merits should be open to debate nor wanted to interfere in a Member State's decision to abide by it or not, stated that its abstention did not detract from its acceptance that such States must function within the ambit of established international law. It appealed to the United States to rethink its attitude and lend its weight and influence to strengthen ICJ's role.

Guatemala explained, as did El Salvador, that it did not wish to cast a vote that could be interpreted as interference in the political process embodied in the Guatemala agreement,⁽²⁷⁾ to which all Central American countries were committed. The Dominican Republic placed its faith on that agreement and was joined by Luxembourg in urging reliance on dialogue and negotiation. Similarly, Haiti stressed its faith that negotiated political solutions would be found to resolve the dispute between the two States concerned and urged restraint from interfering in their internal affairs.

Canada voted affirmatively to emphasize the importance it attached to non-interference by any State in another's internal affairs and to reiterate its full support for ICJ as the system's highest judicial body. The Netherlands considered respect for the rule of law in international relations and peaceful settlement of disputes of paramount importance. Both, noting that the resolution and the opinions on it were a repetition of those of the previous year, hoped a future routine inscription of the item on the agenda could be avoided.

Trade embargo against Nicaragua

The Secretary-General, in a report of 28 September 1987,⁽⁵³⁾ summarized 18 replies to his note asking all States to provide information on action taken to help reduce the negative effects of the trade embargo which had been imposed by the United States on Nicaragua since 1985.⁽⁵⁴⁾ The report was submitted in keeping with a 1986 General Assembly request.⁽⁵⁵⁾

Nicaragua, on 4 November,⁽⁵⁶⁾ transmitted two decisions adopted by the Council of the Latin American Economic System. In the first, adopted by the Council's Fifth Special Meeting (May 1985), it repudiated the trade embargo, urged the United States to revoke it and other coercive measures against Nicaragua, and encouraged co-operative economic and technical programmes to counter those measures. In the second, adopted by the Council's Thirteenth Regular Meeting (September 1987), it declared its resolve to intensify efforts to provide Nicaragua with economic, trade and technical support, and with support for its action currently before the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to satisfy its legitimate demands.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/176 by recorded vote.

Trade embargo against Nicaragua

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/188 of 17 December 1985 and 41/164 of 5 December 1986, as well as its resolution 42/1 of 7 October 1987,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the trade embargo against Nicaragua,

1. Deplores the continuation of the trade embargo contrary to its resolutions 40/188 and 41/164 and to the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986, and once again requests that those measures be immediately revoked;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Solomon Islands, Spain, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brunei Darussalam, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial

Guinea, France, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Honduras, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Luxembourg, Mauritania, Nepal, Netherlands, Niger, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Portugal, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Second Committee, the United States stated that the draft's approval was a further example of United Nations hypocrisy; it demonstrated that the Committee, which might have served as an example for contradicting those who disparaged the United Nations system, was not ready to set aside political questions and to work for the good of all. Israel said it had more reason than any other Member to reject the embargo in question, having been a victim of a similar embargo for nearly 40 years, but had cast a negative vote because it was inadmissible for the Committee and the Assembly to condemn a particular embargo while ignoring others; Nicaragua, it continued, had the effrontery to ask for justice while, it had been imposing an embargo against Israel for several years.

Canada opposed the embargo and recalled that, in the plenary Assembly, it had urged the parties to seek a peaceful settlement of their differences. It none the less regretted the regular appearance of the embargo issue on the Committee's agenda, for it failed to see how the Committee could do any more than the Assembly.

Poland, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, found inadmissible the use of illegal economic measures to exert political pressure. Sharing the same view and complaining that it was likewise a victim of the same arbitrary and unjustifiable practice was the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

Other questions relating to the Americas

Co-operation with OAS

Honduras, by a letter of 14 August 1987,⁽¹⁾ requested the inclusion in the agenda of the 1987 General Assembly of a supplementary item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States". In the accompanying explanatory memorandum, Honduras drew attention to the absence from the Assembly's agenda of a report on the subject, especially in view of the inclusion of items on co-operation with four other intergovernmental organizations. The item would constitute recognition of a form of collaboration that should be increased. The request was supported by Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Paraguay, Saint Lucia and Venezuela on 25 August,⁽²⁾ and by Bolivia on 16 September⁽³⁾

The General Committee, on 17 September,⁽⁴⁾ recommended that the Assembly consider the item in plenary meeting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October 1987, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/11 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling that the purposes of the United Nations are, inter alia, to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends,

Bearing in mind that the Charter of the United Nations provides for the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, and other activities consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling also that the Charter of the Organization of American States reaffirms these purposes and principles, and provides that that organization is a regional agency under the terms of the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that the Charter of the Organization of American States affirms that economic co-operation is essential to common welfare and prosperity, and that that organization will put into effect the principles on which it is founded by fulfilling its regional obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking note of the standards on co-operative relations between the Organization of American States and the United Nations, its specialized agencies and other national and international organizations, adopted by the Organization of American States on 23 April 1971,

Underlining the need to strengthen the co-operation that already exists between the United Nations and the Organization of American States, especially in respect of economic and social development, as well as the recent initiative by their Secretaries-General regarding co-operation in the peace process in Central America,

Convinced of the need for more efficient and co-ordinated utilization of available economic and financial resources to promote the common objectives of the two organizations,

1. Invites the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures for promoting and expanding co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and the Organization of American States in order to increase the capacity of the two organizations for the attainment of their common objectives;

2. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in close co-ordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, to promote meetings between representatives of the two organizations for the purpose of holding consultations on policies, projects, measures and procedures which will facilitate and broaden co-operation between them;

3. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system:

- (a) To collaborate with the Secretary-General in the submission and follow-up of proposals designed to intensify and expand co-operation in all spheres between the United Nations system and the Organization of American States and its specialized agencies;

- (b) To initiate, maintain and increase consultations with the specialized agencies, organizations and related programmes of the Organization of American States responsible for development projects for the purpose of co-operating with them in the attainment of their objectives;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States".

General Assembly resolution 42/11

28 October 1987 Meeting 51 Adopted without vote

31-nation draft (A/42/L.14 & Add.1); agenda item 142.

Sponsors: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Chile, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Explaining its position before the draft's adoption, Belize stated that OAS had one shortcoming as a regional organization—the lack of universality in membership—which had caused Belize to question whether it should support the text. It referred to a provision of the 1948 OAS Charter preventing a decision on an admission request if a dispute or claim between an extra-continental State and any OAS member had not been resolved peacefully. That provision, used to deny membership to Belize, was amended in 1985 by the Cartagena Protocol, whose ratification by the required 21 OAS members would make possible the admission of Belize to membership. Belize would support the draft to demonstrate its political maturity and because with a little help from its friends it would soon become an OAS member.

Questions relating to Bolivia

Bolivia- Chile

Several letters were addressed to the Secretary-General in 1987 on a dispute between Bolivia and Chile concerning Bolivia's access to the sea.

By two communiques from its Foreign Minister, one dated 11 June and transmitted six days later⁽⁵⁾ and another transmitted on 12 October,⁽⁶⁾ Bolivia denounced Chile for abruptly breaking off the negotiations between them aimed at giving Bolivia a free and sovereign link with the Pacific Ocean. The negotiations, begun at Montevideo, from 21 to 23 April, were brought about by the latest (1986) in a series of resolutions adopted (since 1979) by the OAS General Assembly. Under negotiation was a proposal providing for a corridor from Bolivia to the Pacific Ocean running parallel to the agreed boundary between Peru and Chile—or a choice of three alternatives—the corridor to be a territorial enclave under full Bolivian sovereignty. That proposal was rejected by Chile as unacceptable on 9 June.

The communiques gave a historical background of how Bolivia had become land-locked, beginning with the loss to Chile of its coastal territory of Atacama and culminating in Chile's annexation of its port of Antofagasta—its remaining link to the sea—to which Bolivia agreed under the terms of a 1904 treaty.

Replying on 12 November,⁽⁷⁾ Chile pointed out that the United Nations General Assembly had no authority to interfere in the matters that Bolivia was trying to introduce; indeed, it was forbidden action that would affect the territorial integrity of its Members. It emphasized that no territorial or boundary problem was pending between Bolivia and Chile because the boundaries between them had been set by a 1904 treaty adopted by Bolivia's Congress and freely ratified by its people. That treaty provided for certain obligations, scrupulously honoured by Chile, and for advantages in Bolivia's favour—the granting to it in perpetuity of freedom of transit for its trade through Chile's Pacific territory and ports; port infrastructure to facilitate Bolivia's international trade to the fullest extent; and Bolivian participation in the customs control of that trade.

Chile provided its own historical background of the matter and said that the Bolivian proposal was unacceptable because it did not provide for territorial compensation in exchange for the cession of enclaves or of a corridor through Chilean territory.

Bolivia, on 14 November,⁽⁸⁾ transmitted a copy of a resolution adopted by the seventeenth session of the OAS General Assembly (Washington, D.C., 9 November), urging resumption of the talks between Bolivia and Chile so as to arrive at an equitable solution to Bolivia's land-locked status and thereby achieve a harmony that would stimulate economic and social progress in the area of the Americas affected by the consequences of that status.

On 26 November,⁽⁹⁾ Bolivia accused Chile of trying to confuse world opinion about their dispute by resorting to lies and inventions, rewriting history and altering bibliographical and cartographical documentation. It stated that its minimal rights of free transit through Chilean ports granted under the 1904 treaty, far from solving Bolivia's problems, had had the effect of Bolivia subsidizing and developing northern Chile. Harmony and co-operation between Bolivia and Chile would come about only when reparation was made for the injustice perpetrated against Bolivia more than 100 years ago.

Bolivia-Peru co-operation

On 7 August 1987,⁽¹⁰⁾ Bolivia and Peru transmitted the Puno Programme of Action for frontier development and integration between the two countries, signed by their Foreign Ministers on 15 July at the conclusion of a three-day meeting on the subject (Puno, Peru, 13-15 July). The Programme provided for, among other things, a flexible transit regime through the frontier zone, the development of the resources of Lake Titicaca and of a second phase of an ongoing project on fisheries resources evaluation, the expansion of bilateral trade and the promotion of tourism. Other areas mentioned for joint action included health, educational broadcasting, banking and reciprocal credit arrangements, hydrography and shipping services, the improvement of the economic situation of cottage-industry workers in the Altiplano, and promotion of the livestock and wool industries.

Political conditions in Haiti

Cuba, in a statement by its Foreign Ministry, transmitted on 9 December 1987,⁽¹¹⁾ expressed concern about events in Haiti since the coming to power in February 1986 of a new Government, the National Government Council. Cuba alleged that that Council, established and financed by the United States, had brutally thwarted the Haitians' aspirations for freedom and democracy that had led them to overthrow the previous regime and that the United States, even on election day on 29 November, had kept silent about the terror that reigned in Haiti. Drawing attention to statements by certain United States government officials justifying a military invasion aimed at "normalizing" Haiti's domestic situation, Cuba cautioned against any type of intervention because Haiti's internal problems were for the Haitians alone to resolve.

Referring to Cuba's statement, Haiti wrote on 18 December(12) that the National Government Council had inaugurated an era of freedom in the country, but acknowledged that the Provisional Electoral Council had violated the electoral law. Haiti condemned the violence that had taken place in connection with the elections, and had terminated the Electoral Council's activities. A new Electoral Council had been established and the electoral timetable adjusted with a view to holding free elections and to handing over power in February 1988 to a freely elected President.

Panama-United States

Two letters were addressed to the Secretary-General in 1987 concerning a United States Senate resolution of 25 June on Panama and the Panama Canal.

Panama charged, by a letter of 27 June from its Foreign Minister, transmitted on 1 July,(13) that the Senate resolution constituted interference in Panama's internal affairs. It denounced as crude jousting with concepts, hinting at the possible use of force, the resolution's pronouncements on respect for human rights and the evolution towards genuine democracy in Panama, on security and stability there as being vital to the security of all States in the continent, and to the unimpeded operation of the Panama Canal as being in the interests of Panama, the United States and the free world. Panama alleged that, while Panama and the United States were bound by the 1977 Panama Canal treaties to conduct themselves as partners in the Canal enterprise, various branches of the United States Government had been plotting since 1985 to weaken the Panamanian Government's position, domestically and internationally, and warned of its readiness to defend its sovereignty and independence.

In a 7 July communique adopted at a meeting in New York,(14) the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries deplored the Senate resolution as representing new efforts to destabilize Panama, raising concerns there over United States compliance with the Panama Canal treaties (1977 Panama Canal Treaty and 1977 Treaty concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal). It supported Panama's rights over the Canal and called for the immediate cessation of the defamatory campaign against Panamanian authorities and for adherence to the principles of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of States.

Suriname situation

Suriname, on 4 May 1987,(15) transmitted a 27 April press communication issued at Paramaribo by a delegation of the Joint Assembly of African, Caribbean and Pacific States and the European Economic Community during the delegation's visit to that country (22-28 April). The communication stated that, in keeping with a Joint Assembly resolution calling for action to promote economic and political stability in Suriname, the delegation assessed the extent of the economic crisis there, caused largely by the cessation in 1982 of aid from the Netherlands and by sabotage and guerrilla fighting during 1986; it also investigated the Government's efforts to re-establish democracy in the country.

In its preliminary observations, the delegation urged the restoration of diplomatic relations between the Netherlands and Suriname as necessary for the resumption of aid; noted progress towards the establishment of democratic institutions and expected individual and collective freedom, including freedom of the press and information, to be guaranteed; believed that the elections intended to be held would be free and fair; and called for an end to outside assistance to the rebel group operating in the eastern part of the country.

Suriname, on 9(16) and 13 July(17) reported an encounter between its National Army and a terrorist band of some 33 men on 9 July in south-eastern Suriname, about 125 kilometres from the border with French Guiana. The five-hour shootout that ensued killed and wounded many, including two white mercenaries dead, one bearing an identification card and a travel permit issued by the French Foreign Legion.

Referring to the matter on 24 July,(18) France emphasized that the mercenaries said to have taken part in the incident had no connection with the French authorities and that they could only have been acting on their own; it also reaffirmed its adherence to a strict policy of non-interference and good-neighbourliness.

Anniversary of the discovery of America

By a letter of 8 April 1987(19) to the Secretary-General, 25 Member States—Argentina, Bahamas, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Spain, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela—noted that, for administrative and budgetary reasons, the item entitled "Observance of the quincentenary of the discovery of America" was not on the 1987 agenda of the General Assembly. (The item had been first inscribed in the agenda in 1982(20) at the request of the same 25 States, together with Grenada, Haiti, Portugal, Suriname and Trinidad and Tobago, which were convinced that 1492 was a date of great historical significance that helped to bring the Indo-American and European cultures into contact, thus opening new horizons for the universality reaffirmed in the Charter of the United Nations. The item had been deferred for consideration until 1984 and had not been on the agenda since 1985.)

The 25 States stated that the spirit behind their 1982 initiative was still alive and that the United Nations could not remain uninvolved in the observance of the anniversary in 1992.

Chapter VII

Asia and the Pacific

In Asia and the Pacific, the Iran-Iraq conflict and the situations in Afghanistan and Kampuchea remained the major concerns of the United Nations during 1987.

Meantime, the United Nations Command continued to monitor the 1953 Armistice Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea. The Secretary-General reported that in the past year a series of proposals had emanated from both sides for resuming talks on contentious issues (see p. 5).

Efforts to resolve the Afghanistan situation had reached an advanced stage, according to the Secretary-General, with lengthy negotiations aimed at finding a settlement. The Secretary-General's personal representative held two rounds of talks with the Foreign Ministers of Afghanistan and Pakistan. In November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/15, reaffirming the Afghan people's right to determine their own future and calling for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan. Throughout the year, Afghanistan and Pakistan each reported armed attacks by the other.

Some signs of movement were detected by the Secretary-General towards a settlement of the Kampuchean problem. Missions of consultation were sent to the region by the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea, while Democratic Kampuchea underscored its 1986 peace proposal and Viet Nam stated that it was ready to meet with the different Kampuchean factions. In October, the Assembly, by resolution 42/3, reiterated what it saw as the principal components of a just and lasting solution of the question. Border incidents in South-East Asia, involving Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam, continued to be reported.

As for the Iran-Iraq conflict, the Secretary-General stressed that he was endeavouring to implement the Security Council's 1986 mandate calling for an immediate cease-fire. Large-scale military operations continued, as the Council addressed various aspects of the conflict four times during the year. In January, the Council's members appealed to the parties to comply with the cease-fire call. In May, following a specialists' report on the repeated use of chemical weapons, the Council demanded a halt to their use and condemned the prolongation of the conflict. In July, by resolution 598(1987), the Council again demanded a cease-fire and the withdrawal of all forces to internationally recognized boundaries to be supervised by United Nations observers. In December, the Council's members expressed their concern over the lack of progress in consultations with Iran and Iraq.

Korean question

The annual report from the United Nations Command (UNC) on the maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement was received by the President of the Security Council during 1987. He also received letters from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea regarding the situation on the Korean peninsula.

Report of the United Nations Command. A report of UNC concerning the maintenance in 1986 of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement(1) was submitted on 13 June 1987 by the United States(2) on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to a 1950 Security Council resolution. (3)

The report stated that during 1986 UNC had charged the Korean People's Army (KPA) of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with 37,214 violations of the Armistice Agreement, including firing across the Military Demarcation Line (MDL) into the UNC portion of the demilitarized zone (DMZ), introduction into DMZ of illegal heavy and automatic weapons, and the construction of fortifications in DMZ. A major incident occurred on 24 April, when a Republic of Korea navy vessel challenged a Democratic People's Republic vessel south of MDL as extended into the Sea of Japan; an exchange of fire resulted in the sinking of the North Korean boat.

On 18 January, UNC invited the military authorities of both the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the People's Republic of China to observe the annual "Team Spirit" military training exercise (February/March), which it said was necessary for defence capability.

The Democratic People's Republic retained the capability to initiate military actions against UNC and the Republic of Korea, according to the report. At a 28 January meeting of the Military Armistice Commission (MAC), established to supervise the Armistice Agreement's implementation and settle any violations of it through negotiation,⁽¹⁾ UNC detailed an offensively oriented buildup by the Democratic People's Republic of more than 80,000 commandos, 100 amphibious craft and 20 attack submarines, as well as MIG-23 aircraft and helicopters.

At the same meeting, UNC presented a four-point programme to preclude incidents and reduce tensions in the Joint Security Area at Panmunjom. The proposal included the following: that an effective system be instituted to verify continuously the compliance of both sides with the Armistice Agreement in the Area; that automatic and crew-served weapons be prohibited; that all fortified positions be prohibited; and that the number of armed guards and types of weapons be limited to those specified by the Agreement. On 29 May, the Democratic People's Republic presented a modified version of its 1985 proposals for new security arrangements in the Area⁽⁴⁾ and declared that there was a substantial difference in views on those arrangements.

On 11 June, UNC returned the remains of two soldiers of the Chinese People's Volunteers (CPV) who had been killed during the Korean War. On 19 August, UNC conveyed to the KPA/CPV side maps of 13 prisoner-of-war (POW) camps and a POW hospital in the Democratic People's Republic; a list of 291 known air crash sites involving 367 UNC casualties; a list of former UNC cemeteries in the Democratic People's Republic where 288 remains lay buried; a list of 2,233 unaccounted-for UNC POWs and 18 United Nations foreign nationals; a list of 308 UNC personnel missing in action from four UNC countries; and the name and details of death and burial of one UNC soldier not previously identified. UNC made those data available to assist the Democratic People's Republic in searching for such remains. That Republic reiterated its earlier position that it had no obligation to search for UNC remains, but said the data would be sent to the appropriate authorities.

Communications. Throughout 1987, the President of the Security Council received a number of letters from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea.

On 23 January,⁽⁵⁾ the Democratic People's Republic transmitted a proposal for national reunification, made by its President in a 30 December 1986 speech at the first session of the Eighth Supreme People's Assembly. He stated that his country deemed it necessary to hold high-level North-South political and military talks to settle the most urgent question of reunification—the deep distrust between the two sides. On 27 July,⁽⁶⁾ the Democratic People's Republic forwarded a report of the KPA/CPV side to MAC. It protested against some 44,400 alleged air, ground and sea acts committed from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987 by UNC in violation of the Agreement. It charged that UNC continued to increase its armed forces in the Republic of Korea, thereby contravening the Agreement, and that it had ceaselessly conducted military exercises such as "Team Spirit", which it said was aggressive and aimed at the Democratic People's Republic. It restated its proposals for ensuring security in and removing arms from the MAC headquarters area, taking security measures in the Joint Security Area and restricting military exercises.

On 17 November,⁽⁷⁾ the Democratic People's Republic conveyed a 5 November letter from its Foreign Minister recalling the adoption of a 1975 General Assembly resolution⁽⁸⁾ which dealt with dissolving UNC, replacing the Armistice Agreement with a peace agreement, removing the military confrontation and maintaining peace in Korea. He declared that the Democratic People's Republic had done its utmost to bring about implementation of the resolution, but had been blocked by the United States and the Republic of Korea.

The Republic of Korea conveyed a 3 August statement,⁽⁹⁾ stating that it would continue efforts to fulfil the aspiration of the Korean people for reunification, but that first the Democratic People's Republic must show sincerity in confidence-building, the basis for the consolidation of peace; it proposed talks on a non-aggression agreement, United Nations membership, cross-recognition and other matters. Responding on 6 August,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Democratic People's Republic welcomed in principle the proposal for a dialogue, and held that it was indispensable that the United States attend talks discussing disarmament; the problems of the resumption of Red Cross, economic and parliamentary talks might be solved simultaneously.

Letters on United Nations membership were forwarded by both the Democratic People's Republic and the Republic of Korea. On 1

July,(11) the Democratic People's Republic transmitted a 22 June memorandum, which discussed its stand on United Nations membership-holding that the question was inseparable from national reunification and that Korea should be admitted to the United Nations with one nomenclature after reunification-a proposal by the United States for simultaneous entry into the United Nations by the north and south of Korea, and the sophistry of Republic of Korea authorities to justify that proposal. The Republic of Korea, on 17 August,(12) asserted that the admission of both Koreas to the United Nations would increase the opportunities for dialogue and co-operation between them, enhancing the chances for peace and reunification. It described the Democratic People's Republic demand that Korea be admitted as a single State as nothing but an excuse to oppose the Republic of Korea's admission.

The Democratic People's Republic on 13 July(13) clarified its stand on measures to establish a nuclear-free peace zone on the Korean peninsula. It urged that the United States stop introducing new nuclear weapons and means of their delivery into the Republic of Korea, that Japan prevent its territory from being used as a nuclear sortie, relay and supply base, that all countries possessing nuclear weapons stop military actions which might cause a nuclear war in and around the Korean peninsula, and that the Republic of Korea withdraw nuclear weapons and bases from its area.

A number of other letters from the Democratic People's Republic related to arms reduction. On 3 August,(14) it conveyed a 23 July statement proposing that the military equilibrium of the North and South be maintained by reducing armed forces, not by increasing them; that the United States troops in the Republic of Korea be phased out; that the two Koreas keep each other informed of the progress of their military cuts; that DMZ be converted into a peace zone; and that multinational disarmament negotiations be held at Geneva in 1988 with the participation of the North and South.

On 4 August,(15) the Democratic People's Republic transmitted a 31 July KPA communique reporting the issuance of an order to reduce its strength unilaterally and discharge 100,000 officers and men by the end of December. On 2 September,(16) it forwarded a 28 August statement declaring that although more than a month had passed since its arms reduction proposal, neither the United States nor the Republic of Korea had responded affirmatively; it suggested that bilateral preliminary talks begin between the two Koreas, if the United States found it inconvenient currently to attend. On 15 December,(17) it conveyed a 14 December KPA communique regretting that the United States and the Republic of Korea had not responded affirmatively to its 31 July order reducing its forces by 100,000 men, but had stepped up their arms buildup, and that as a result, the situation on the peninsula remained strained.

Zimbabwe, on 23 October,(18) transmitted the final communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October), reiterating their concern over the continued division of Korea despite what they described as the Korean people's aspirations for peaceful reunification.

South-East Asia

Kampuchea situation

During 1987, the United Nations continued to consider the situation in and around Kampuchea.

Democratic Kampuchea reiterated the main points of its 1986 peace proposal. For its part, Viet Nam expressed readiness to take part in a meeting between different Kampuchean factions. Two missions of consultation were dispatched to five countries of the region by the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea following up its mandate to assist in seeking a settlement. In October, by resolution 42/3, the General Assembly reiterated its view of the principal elements of a settlement: withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea; restoration of the country's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity; the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny; and a commitment by all States to non-interference and non-intervention in Kampuchea's internal affairs.

Communications. During 1987, the Secretary-General received numerous communications relating to the situation in Kampuchea. Among them were letters from Democratic Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam.

On 7 January,(1) Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a 1987 New Year's Day message on the military situation in Kampuchea, Vietnamese difficulties in Kampuchea and in Viet Nam itself, an appeal to Viet Nam to end its aggression in Kampuchea and to the USSR to stop providing aid to Viet Nam, Democratic Kampuchea's 1986 eight-point peace plan⁽²⁾ for a settlement of the Kampuchean problem, and the survival of Kampuchea as a nation.

In an 8 January statement⁽³⁾ Democratic Kampuchea denounced what it called Viet Nam's manoeuvres on the so-called offer on 7 January of talks between the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Democratic Kampuchea. Again Democratic Kampuchea appealed to Viet Nam to accept its eight-point peace proposal, abandon its aggression and negotiate. On 16 January⁽⁴⁾ Democratic Kampuchea asserted that Viet Nam had no right to speak on behalf of Kampuchea or to raise any matter whatsoever relating to Kampuchea, that, in fact, since 1979, all problems relating to Kampuchea had arisen from the Vietnamese invasion and occupation, and that Viet Nam's real goal was to force the international community to accept its absorption of Kampuchea into an Indo-Chinese federation under its domination. In a 22 January statement,⁽⁵⁾ Democratic Kampuchea made clear that it could not accept a proposal by Viet Nam, made through Romania, to negotiate with what it termed the Vietnamese puppet in Phnom Penh.

On 16 January,⁽⁶⁾ Viet Nam transmitted a 22 December 1986 statement of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, charging that Thailand had recently dispatched troops to fight alongside the supporters of Pol Pot and that on 15 December Thai troops backed by artillery and aircraft had attacked and occupied a position well within Kampuchean territory, in Poi Pet district, Battambang province; it asked the Secretary-General to seek an immediate end to the Thai Government's military adventures against Kampuchea.

In a 29 January statement⁽⁷⁾ Democratic Kampuchea alleged that on 26 January Vietnamese forces had fired several artillery rounds against a refugee camp known as Site 2, killing two Kampuchean refugees and wounding another 14, in addition to killing two Thai camp guards.

Democratic Kampuchea transmitted an 18 February appeal⁽⁸⁾ to Viet Nam and the USSR to accept its eight-point peace proposal; by doing so, it said, Viet Nam would not lose face, its proteges in Kampuchea would not suffer reprisals, Kampuchea and Viet Nam would re-establish good relations and Kampuchea would not ask for war damages. In a 3 March communiqué⁽⁹⁾ concerning a tour in South-East Asia of the USSR Foreign Minister, Democratic Kampuchea declared that the USSR continued to assist Viet Nam in its occupation of Kampuchea and appealed to all countries to support the General Assembly's resolutions on Kampuchea and the eight-point peace proposal.

In a 12 April statement,⁽¹⁰⁾ Democratic Kampuchea charged that Viet Nam was putting poisonous chemicals into water sources used by the Kampucheans and alleged that between 10 and 29 March, 959 people had been killed and many hundreds seriously poisoned. It called on the United Nations, Governments and relief agencies to condemn those Vietnamese genocidal crimes and to prevent the use of poisonous chemicals in Kampuchea.

In comments made on 17 April⁽¹¹⁾ in regard to the recent naming of Nguyen Van Linh as Secretary-General of the Vietnamese Communist Party, Democratic Kampuchea declared that he had attempted to mislead international public opinion on a number of issues and that his policy towards Kampuchea was to pursue obstinately a strategy of annexing it into an Indo-China federation. Democratic Kampuchea transmitted excerpts from a 15 April statement⁽¹²⁾ on the situation in Kampuchea during the ninth dry season (October 1986 — April 1987) and its stand on a settlement of the Kampuchean problem. Militarily, it said, the Vietnamese had been driven into an impasse on the battlefield, faced mounting difficulties in Viet Nam itself and had suffered increasing isolation in the international arena.

In a 4 May statement,⁽¹³⁾ Democratic Kampuchea again alleged that the Vietnamese, facing increasing difficulties during the dry season on the battlefield, had put poisonous chemical agents into water sources. From 11 to 30 April, it charged, 1,180 Kampuchean civilians died from chemical agents and another 1,465 were in critical condition. In addition, 1,690 head of cattle died.

In a 31 May statement,⁽¹⁴⁾ Democratic Kampuchea charged that Vietnamese forces on 29 May had fired several rounds of artillery shells into the Kampuchean refugee camp at Site 2, located within Thailand, killing 7 refugees and wounding 20.

Democratic Kampuchea conveyed a 22 June statement⁽¹⁵⁾ issued in observance of the fifth anniversary of the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, declaring that it had won one victory after another over the Vietnamese aggressors, expressing gratitude to the countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) (Brunei Darussalam, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand) which, at their twentieth meeting of Foreign Ministers (see below), had reiterated their support for Democratic Kampuchea, and stating the belief that under constant pressure Viet Nam would be compelled to accept its eight-point peace proposal. In a 10 June memorandum,⁽¹⁶⁾ Democratic Kampuchea described what it called Vietnamese genocidal crimes against the Kampuchean people, including deliberately created famine, shootings, forcible enlistments, forced labour, the use of toxic chemicals, imprisonment of civilians without trial, destruction and plunder of objets d'art., relics and other cultural treasures, rape of Kampuchean girls and women, compelling Kampuchean children to learn the Vietnamese language., and the settlement of Vietnamese nationals in Kampuchea; the memorandum was accompanied by photographs.

On 31 July,(17) the Lao People's Democratic Republic, at the request of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, transmitted a joint communique issued at Warsaw on 25 July at the end of a three-day official visit of a Kampuchean delegation to Poland; the two sides signed a consulate convention and an agreement on civil aviation co-operation and declared their willingness to develop further contacts. Annexed was a 27 July statement issued in Phnom Penh on a conference (Bangkok, Thailand, 25 and 26 July) organized by a number of non-governmental organizations- with the participation of what it termed the reactionary coalition of Democratic Kampuchea; it denounced and rejected all slanderous allegations made at the meeting. On 17 August,(18) Democratic Kampuchea forwarded excerpts from a speech by Khieu Samphan, its Vice-President in Charge of Foreign Affairs, at the conference on 25 July, discussing Kampuchean issues—Viet Nam's claim that it would withdraw its troops from Kampuchea by 1990, its claim that an independent Kampuchea would threaten Viet Nam, peaceful coexistence with Viet Nam and the future political regime in Kampuchea.

On 13 August,(19) Thailand transmitted excerpts on the situation in Kampuchea and on Indo-Chinese refugees from the joint communique of the twentieth meeting of ASEAN Foreign Ministers (Singapore, 15 and 16 June) and a joint statement by the ASEAN Foreign Ministers on Indo-Chinese refugees, issued in Singapore on 14 June (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XX); ASEAN once again called for a comprehensive political settlement in Kampuchea.

Six letters were forwarded in connection with an Indonesian proposal for an informal meeting, or cocktail party, in which the two sides of Kampuchea would participate, without preconditions and with no political label. The proposal was outlined in a joint press communique issued on 29 July following a three-day visit by the Indonesian Foreign Minister to Viet Nam.(20) Viet Nam's Foreign Minister stated that he would consider the idea.

Viet Nam forwarded a 13 August agreement(21) issued in Phnom Penh by itself, the People's Republic of Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic welcoming Indonesia's idea.

On 17 August,(22) Thailand conveyed a press release issued at the conclusion of an informal meeting of the ASEAN Foreign Ministers (Bangkok, 16 August); the Ministers had discussed the result of the July talks between the Indonesian and Vietnamese Foreign Ministers; welcomed the initiative of the informal meeting, or cocktail party, as a forum for instituting a dialogue; and awaited a positive response from Viet Nam as well as from Democratic Kampuchea.

On 21 August,(23) Viet Nam transmitted the text of a press conference, held at Hanoi on 20 August by a Foreign Ministry spokesman, who regretted that the ASEAN Foreign Ministers had sought to modify the original agreement by trying to turn the dialogue between the two sides of Kampuchea into one between the Vietnamese and the Kampucheans. The spokesman declared that the ASEAN Ministers' real purpose was to return to their oft-repeated but refuted allegations that Viet Nam had invaded Kampuchea, therefore the Vietnamese must talk with the Kampucheans, and to insist on the eight-point proposal of the so-called coalition government of Democratic Kampuchea as the basis for negotiations.

Viet Nam, on 28 August,(24) stated that it, the People's Republic of Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic rejected the 16 August Bangkok communique and reaffirmed the agreement reached on 29 July between Indonesia and Viet Nam.

On 28 September,(25) Thailand forwarded an ASEAN explanatory note in regard to the July proposal, welcoming the fact that Viet Nam and Democratic Kampuchea had agreed to participate in such an informal meeting and stating that the ASEAN countries regarded their acceptance as positive and constructive.

Meanwhile, on 31 August,(26) Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a 27 August press communique issued at the end of a meeting of the three components of the Coalition Government, calling on the armed forces of the Coalition to increase their attacks against the Vietnamese, calling on the Kampuchean people and Khmer soldiers who had been forcibly enlisted to join more actively in the national liberation struggle, and calling on countries which cherished peace to support that struggle until Viet Nam accepted a political solution.

Democratic Kampuchea, on 29 August,(27) accused Viet Nam of diverting humanitarian assistance intended for the Kampuchean people to feed Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea. On 3 September,(28) the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted, at the request of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, a declaration on its policy of national reconciliation, issued in Phnom Penh on 27 August; the People's Republic of Kampuchea was prepared to meet with other groups of Khmers, except Pol Pot and his close associates, would welcome the armed elements of other factions which gave up their hostile activities, called on Thailand and international organizations to end the use of refugee camps for military and political purposes against the Kampuchean people, and appealed to Kampucheans to take part in the process of national reconciliation.

In a statement issued at the end of an official visit to China from 29 August to 2 September,(29) Democratic Kampuchea expressed gratitude for China's support of the national liberation struggle of the Kampuchean people and appealed to the international community to pressure Viet Nam at the forthcoming General Assembly session to withdraw its forces from Kampuchea. On 5 October,(30) Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a 1 October note on national reconciliation and an 18 September letter to what it called the heads of delegation of friendly countries to the 1987 Assembly session; in the note, it set out the differences between itself and Viet Nam on national reconciliation and, in the letter, it reiterated the main points of its eight-point peace proposal.

Viet Nam, in a 30 September statement,(31) voiced its readiness to participate in a meeting between different Kampuchean parties; it held that such a meeting would break the stalemate of the past eight years and open the process towards the peaceful settlement of Kampuchea's internal affairs.

On 6 October,(32) the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam transmitted the text of a joint memorandum on South-East Asia and Kampuchea, declaring that for the past eight years the Assembly resolution on the situation in Kampuchea had failed to contribute to a settlement of the question and hoping that, in view of recent developments regarding a meeting between different Kampuchean parties, the Assembly would encourage them to engage, without pre-conditions, in negotiations. Since 1982, the memorandum also said, Viet Nam had effected annual partial withdrawals of its forces from Kampuchea and, before the end of 1987, it would undertake another partial withdrawal, which for the first time would be carried out under foreign observation. In a 5 October statement on the prospective Vietnamese partial troop withdrawal,(33) Democratic Kampuchea held that the presence of observers was an attempt to have those countries rubber-stamp Viet Nam's manoeuvre and to persuade world opinion to accept the Vietnamese fait accompli in Kampuchea, and charged that at a later stage Viet Nam would send its troops back to Kampuchea, without the presence of observers.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic, on 7 October,(34) transmitted at the request of the People's Republic of Kampuchea a 9 September letter, expressing the hope that the Secretary-General would use his good offices to promote national reconciliation in Kampuchea, as well as a 28 September statement, declaring that it was ready to participate in the proposed meeting between different Kampuchean parties. In an 8 October declaration(35) transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the People's Republic of Kampuchea proposed a political solution to the Kampuchean problem. The declaration stated that the People's Republic was prepared to meet with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and the leaders of other opposition groups; that the complete withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea would be paired with the cessation of all types of intervention against Kampuchea; that, following the withdrawal of the Vietnamese army, general elections would be held, with foreign supervision; that talks should aim at making the Kampuchea-Thailand border a peaceful one and at repatriating Kampuchean refugees in Thailand; and that an international conference, attended by the opposing Kampuchean sides, the countries of Indo-China, ASEAN, China, France, India, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, should be convened to guarantee the agreements reached. On 9 October,(36) Viet Nam declared that the proposal created the practical possibility of breaking the stalemate and expressed the hope that the parties concerned would respond positively.

On 18 November,(37) Democratic Kampuchea forwarded a 30 October interview with its Vice-President, Khieu Samphan, on what it described as the successful result of the 1987 General Assembly session on the Kampuchean issue (see p. 205). The Assembly, it said, had called for the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea and had defeated manoeuvres by Viet Nam and the USSR to convene an ambiguous international conference on the problem.

Viet Nam transmitted a 13 December statement(38) supporting a 12 December statement by the People's Republic of Kampuchea in response to a decision by Thailand to withdraw a large number of its troops from the Thai-Kampuchean border. The People's Republic of Kampuchea stated that, with its consent, Vietnamese volunteers stationed along the border would withdraw 15 kilometres into Kampuchean territory, excluding some areas where the opposition Khmer forces continued to infiltrate into Kampuchean territory.

Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a 13 December statement(39) by its Army High Command, reporting that on 5 December a ship had arrived at the Kompong Som seaport from the USSR loaded with weapons and ammunition; that at the end of November, the Vietnamese had paraded three regiments through the capital in an effort to deceive the world into believing that they had partially withdrawn their troops from Kampuchea; that, also in November, the Vietnamese had withdrawn two regiments stationed at Koh Kong and Phnom Thorn in Kong Pisei district, to resist the army of Democratic Kampuchea on the Phnom Penh western front, and had moved two regiments stationed at Sisophon, Battambang province, to oppose Democratic Kampuchea's dismantling of village administrative apparatus inside the country; and that in early December, the Vietnamese had sent in fresh troops to replace the forces they had moved.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1987/155 on the right of peoples to self-determination, endorsed a February resolution of the Commission on Human Rights by which it reaffirmed that the continuing occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived Kampucheans of their right to self-determination and currently constituted the primary violation of human rights in Kampuchea. The Council expressed concern over the 250,000 Kampuchean civilians stranded in Thailand as a result of armed attacks by those forces on Kampuchean encampments along the Thai-Kampuchean border, and over continued inhuman acts perpetrated by the foreign occupying force, in particular the deliberate shelling of civilian border camps, such as those on 26 January 1987 against a camp housing 153,000 Khmers.

Activities of the Committee of the Conference on Kampuchea. During 1987, the lo-member Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea met on 14 January, 12 March, 27 April, 2 July and 3 September(40) undertook two missions of consultation, in accordance with its mandate to assist in seeking a comprehensive political settlement.(41) One mission visited Washington, D.C., on 6 April, the other, Singapore, Bangkok, Helsinki and Vienna from 15 to 24 June.

The missions held extensive consultations with the Governments concerned on the Kampuchean situation and on the prospects for a settlement. They stated that one of the main objectives of the Ad Hoc Committee was to encourage negotiations leading to the implementation of the Declaration on Kampuchea adopted in 1981 by the International Conference.(41) They expressed the view that a settlement must be based on the following principles: the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, national reconciliation, the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny and the establishment of a non-aligned and neutral Kampuchea.

In Washington, the mission briefed the United States State Department on the actions of the Ad Hoc Committee and discussed recent developments in the region. The United States expressed concern over the continuing conflict in Kampuchea, assuring the mission that it shared the Committee's objectives and that it would continue to support the efforts of the United Nations and the ASEAN countries to achieve them.

In Singapore, the mission similarly briefed the ASEAN Foreign Ministers and reported on a meeting in Pyongyang, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, of the mission Chairman with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, President of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. Mr. Sihanouk stressed that although he was taking a one-year leave of absence he remained the Coalition's President and would continue to be active in the search for a settlement.

The ASEAN Foreign Ministers, in turn, briefed the mission on the discussions held with the Foreign Minister of the USSR during his visits to Thailand and Indonesia in March and on those which had taken place during the official visit of the Thai Foreign Minister to Moscow in May. They hoped that the USSR would co-operate in the search for a political solution.

At Bangkok, the mission was informed of the problems created by the 260,000 displaced Kampucheans on the Thai side of the border. Thai officials said that incursions into Thailand had been carried out during the past few months by Vietnamese forces, especially in the area of Chong Bok Pass. While in Bangkok, the mission also met with a Coalition Government delegation, which said that the question of Kampuchea should be resolved through negotiations between Viet Nam and the Coalition, based on the 1986 eight-point proposal.(2)

At Helsinki, the mission was briefed on the Finnish position regarding Kampuchea. The Finnish authorities reaffirmed their adherence to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, stressed that the question should be resolved peacefully and indicated that Finland would continue to provide humanitarian assistance to Kampucheans.

At Vienna, the mission reported to the President of the International Conference on the Ad Hoc Committee's activities and on the mission's talks. The President informed the mission of his own discussions with the parties concerned.

The Ad Hoc Committee reiterated its appeal to those Member States which had not participated in the International Conference to co-operate with efforts to achieve the goals of the Declaration on Kampuchea. It stated its determination to continue its consultations and to consider other measures within the context of its mandate.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to a 1986 General Assembly request,(42) submitted in October 1987 a report(43) on the situation. He reported that since the beginning of 1987 he had continued to seek a peaceful resolution of the problem. He and his Special Representative, Rafeeuddin Ahmed, had maintained close contact with the States most directly concerned and other interested parties. In February, Mr. Ahmed visited Hanoi, where he met with the Vietnamese Foreign Minister and Deputy Foreign Minister. Subsequently, he visited Bangkok, where he met with the Foreign Minister of Thailand. In May, Mr. Ahmed also met in New York with the Indonesian Foreign Minister, who was the designated interlocutor of ASEAN on the issue.

In May and June, the Secretary-General raised the problem during his visits to China and the USSR. Also in June, Mr. Ahmed met in Singapore with the ASEAN Foreign Ministers on the occasion of their twentieth annual ministerial meeting.

More recently, the Secretary-General had held further discussions in New York with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk of Democratic Kampuchea, as well as the Prime Minister and the Vice-President in Charge of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea, the Prime Minister of Thailand, the Vice-President of the Council of Ministers of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Foreign Ministers of China, Indonesia and Malaysia, the Acting Secretary for Foreign Affairs of the Philippines, the Deputy Foreign Minister of Viet Nam and the President of the International Conference on Kampuchea.

The Secretary-General stated that he had discerned some signs of movement that he hoped would develop in the right direction and that that impression had been confirmed by his consultations in New York. He had explored a number of ideas which seemed to be generally acceptable and he was determined to continue the process once the implications of the recent diplomatic exchanges had been clarified. He hoped that concrete progress would soon be made in achieving a settlement, thus opening the way to the restoration of peace and stability in the region.

Meanwhile, the Secretary-General had continued to co-ordinate humanitarian relief assistance to the Kampuchean people along the Thai-Kampuchean border, within Kampuchea and within Thailand. His Special Representative for co-ordination of the programmes, Shah A. M. S. Kibria, had been in close contact with interested Member States.

There were currently some 270,000 Kampucheans under the care of the United Nations Border Relief Operation (UNBRO). In addition, there were some 24,000 Kampuchean refugees, mainly in the Khao-I-Dang holding centre, who were assisted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). Both groups were totally dependent on the relief assistance provided by the international community. The future of Khao-I-Dang had been the subject of particular attention in recent months; the Secretary-General had been in contact with UNHCR and the Thai Government on the question.

With the continued generosity of the donor countries and Thailand, the material well-being of displaced Kampuchean civilians in the border camps had been ensured for another year. Sufficient contributions in cash and in kind had been provided to allow UNBRO to provide the minimum necessities of life to the population. In addition to food, medicine, shelter and sanitary facilities, the majority of the children in the evacuation sites were receiving primary education. Taking part in the provision of assistance were the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, five national Red Cross Societies and 14 other voluntary agencies.

However, creating a secure environment for the border camps remained difficult. Although the parties involved had, to a large degree, respected the civilian nature of the evacuation sites, many incidents of shelling causing deaths and injuries continued. Despite efforts by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and by UNBRO, little progress in ending the abuses of human rights at the sites could be reported. The problem had been compounded by the lack of regular and unhindered access to four sites sheltering some 11 per cent of the total population. The Secretary-General appealed for co-operation in efforts to provide a secure and humane environment for the Kampuchean population at the border.

There had not been much progress regarding voluntary repatriation of Kampucheans, which continued to be given special attention by UNHCR and the Special Representative.

The economy of Kampuchea continued to be fragile and its ability to deal with emergencies very limited, the Secretary-General said. The recent severe drought in South and South-East Asia had hit Kampuchea particularly hard. Unless the situation improved significantly for the main monsoon crop, the population might suffer from severe food shortages. The possibility of widespread hunger could not be ruled out. The Special Representative had launched an appeal for food aid and agricultural inputs to Kampuchea. The Secretary-General would continue to monitor the situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

One 14 October, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/3.

The situation in Kampuchea

Recalling further the Declaration on Kampuchea and resolution 1(I) adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea, which offer the negotiating framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/6,

Deploping that foreign armed intervention and occupation continue and that foreign forces have not been withdrawn from Kampuchea, thus causing continuing hostilities in that country and seriously threatening international peace and security,

Noting the continued and effective struggle waged against foreign occupation by the Coalition with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as President of Democratic Kampuchea,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1987/155 of 29 May 1987 on the right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation,

Greatly disturbed that the continued fighting and instability in Kampuchea have forced an additional large number of Kampucheans to flee to the Thai-Kampuchean border in search of food and safety,

Recognizing that the assistance extended by the international community has continued to reduce the food shortages and health problems of the Kampuchean people,

Emphasizing further that no effective solution to the humanitarian problems can be achieved without a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean conflict,

Seriously concerned about reported demographic changes being imposed in Kampuchea by foreign occupation forces,

Convinced that, to bring about lasting peace in South-East Asia and reduce the threat to international peace and security, there is an urgent need for the international community to find a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean problem that will provide for the withdrawal of all foreign forces and ensure respect for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea, as well as the right of the Kampuchean people to self-determination free from outside interference,

Reiterating its conviction that, after the comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean question through peaceful means, the countries of the South-East Asian region can pursue efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia so as to lessen international tensions and to achieve lasting peace in the region,

Reaffirming the need for all States to adhere strictly to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which call for respect for the national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of States, non-recourse to the threat or use of force and peaceful settlement of disputes,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 34/22, 35/6, 36/5, 37/6, 38/3, 39/5, 40/7 and 41/6 and calls for their full implementation;

2. Reiterates its conviction that the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, the restoration and preservation of its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny and the commitment by all States to non-interference and non-intervention in the internal affairs of Kampuchea are the principal components of any just and lasting resolution of the Kampuchean problem;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea on its activities during 1986-1987 and requests that the Committee continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference;

4. Authorizes the Ad Hoc Committee to convene when necessary and to carry out the tasks entrusted to it in its mandate;

5. Reaffirms its decision to reconvene the Conference at an appropriate time, in accordance with Conference resolution 1(I);

6. Renews its appeal to all States of South-East Asia and others concerned to attend future sessions of the Conference;

7. Requests the Conference to report to the General Assembly on its future sessions;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consult with and assist the Conference and the Ad Hoc Committee and to provide them on a regular basis with the necessary facilities to carry out their functions;

9. Expresses its appreciation once again to the Secretary-General for taking appropriate steps in following the situation closely and requests him to continue to do so and to exercise his good offices in order to contribute to a comprehensive political settlement;

10. Expresses its deep appreciation once again to donor countries, the United Nations and its agencies and other humanitarian organizations, national and international, that have rendered relief assistance to the Kampuchean people, and appeals to them to continue to provide emergency assistance to those Kampucheans who are still in need, especially along the Thai-Kampuchean border and in the various encampments in Thailand;

11. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in co-ordinating humanitarian relief assistance and in monitoring its distribution, and requests him to intensify such efforts as necessary;

12. Urge the States of South-East Asia, once a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean conflict is achieved, to exert renewed efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia;

13. Reiterates the hope that, following a comprehensive political solution, an intergovernmental committee will be established to consider a programme of assistance to Kampuchea for the reconstruction of its economy and for the economic and social development of all States in the region;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "The situation in Kampuchea."

Abstaining: Algeria, Benin, Burkina Faso, Finland, Guyana, India, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Madagascar, Mexico, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

Viet Nam stated that it voted against the resolution because it did not address the substance of the problem: the reasons for the presence in Kampuchea of Vietnamese forces, which were volunteer forces helping the Kampucheans save themselves from a genocidal regime and which had been sent there in self-defence against atrocities committed by the Pol Pot troops in Viet Nam's south-western border provinces. The text, Viet Nam said, omitted any reference to the Kampuchean people's right to live free from the threat of renewed genocide, free from the return of the Pol Pot regime under any guise whatsoever, and failed to mention infiltration and sabotage operations conducted from Thai territory with the aim of paving the way for the return of that regime; it also ran counter to the trend of dialogue that was prevailing both in the world and in South-East Asia.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya welcomed the agreement reached between the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Viet Nam, which it considered a step in the right direction, but it did not believe that those who represented the Government of Kampuchea at the United Nations met the criteria for representation.

Mexico explained that it gave overriding importance to the principles of non-intervention and self-determination, which could not be divorced in their implementation. It unequivocally rejected the presence of foreign forces on Kampuchean territory, and also believed that as part of a peaceful settlement the Kampuchean people must be enabled freely to exercise their right to self-determination. As in previous years, the text did not reflect its concerns, and consequently Mexico abstained.

Burkina Faso felt that hope had been offered by the parties of reaching a negotiated settlement and that there should be a pause to test their good faith. In the circumstance, it was necessary to avoid any clash of positions. Accordingly, Burkina Faso abstained.

Although agreeing with the resolution's general thrust, Ireland said its positive vote did not imply any change in its position regarding Kampuchean representation as reflected in the fifth preambular paragraph; at the 1982 Assembly session when the question of credentials was raised, Ireland had abstained.

Similar reservations on that paragraph were voiced by Bolivia, which said it did not recognize either of the two Governments vying for power in Kampuchea. Bolivia, Panama and Peru cited the recent political and diplomatic developments in the region, which they said should have been reflected in the resolution.

Participation and representation of Democratic Kampuchea in UN bodies

The question of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials was again raised in the Credentials Committee, with respect to the General Assembly's forty-second (1987) regular session, on 7 October.

Several States expressed different opinions as to those credentials (see p. 365), which were accepted when the General Assembly on 13 October adopted resolution 42/2 A, approving the Committee's first report(44).

International security in South-East Asia

Several communications were received by the Secretary-General in 1987 dealing with the general aspects of relations among countries in South-East Asia.

Canada, on 19 October,(5) transmitted the communique of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Vancouver, British Columbia, 13-17 October), expressing great concern over the continuing armed conflict in Kampuchea, reaffirming their support for the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny free from foreign interference and calling again for the speedy withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea.

On 23 October,⁽⁴⁶⁾ Zimbabwe forwarded the final communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 General Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October), in which they warned that there was a real danger of the tensions in Kampuchea escalating over a wider area, agreed that the humanitarian problems in the area required action and urged States to undertake a dialogue that would lead to a durable peace.

Thailand, on 24 December,⁽⁴⁷⁾ forwarded a declaration issued at the conclusion of a meeting of the ASEAN heads of Government (Manila, Philippines, 15 December), announcing their agreement on political, economic and functional co-operation; continued dialogues with Australia, Canada, the European Community (EC), Japan, New Zealand and the United States; and the continual improvement of the machinery for ASEAN co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 October, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item on peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia and included it in the provisional agenda of its forty-third (1988) session (decision 42/406).

China-Viet Nam dispute

Sovereignty over an archipelago in the South China Sea continued to be disputed by China and Viet Nam in 1987. The archipelago was called Nansha by China and Truong Sa by Viet Nam and was also known as Spratly. In 1979,⁽⁴⁸⁾ China and Viet Nam had each transmitted documents to the Secretary-General in support of its claim to the islands. Both States had continued to maintain their claims since that time.

China forwarded a 15 April 1987 statement⁽⁴⁹⁾ charging that Viet Nam had recently encroached on its territorial integrity by illegally occupying Bo-jiao Island in Nansha; it condemned the invasion, demanded Viet Nam's withdrawal and reserved the right to recover the island.

Lao People's Democratic Republic-Thailand dispute

Several letters were received by the Secretary-General in 1987 concerning incidents along the Lao-Thai border.

By a 15 October letter,⁽⁵⁰⁾ referring to the General Assembly debate the day before on the situation in Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic stated that Thailand had sought to give the impression that the sovereignty of three villages in the Republic's Sayaboury province—a subject which had been before the Security Council since 1984—was a closed matter. The Republic stated that while it was true that Thai troops had withdrawn from the villages, they still occupied positions inside Lao territory. Recent negotiations between the two States, held in both Vientiane and Bangkok, had ended in failure because of what the Republic called Thai obstinacy in refusing to accept recognized boundaries. In August, matters had been made worse by fresh border incidents, and the Lao People's Democratic Republic had asked Thailand to resume negotiations as soon as possible.

Replying on 29 October,⁽⁵¹⁾ Thailand transmitted a 4 September press release concerning border incidents in May/June, during which, it charged, soldiers from the Lao People's Democratic Republic had intruded into Thai territory and captured Thai nationals. Thailand reviewed the history of the border issue, including treaties of 1904 and 1907 between France and Thailand, then called Siam, reported that the Thai detainees had been returned and said it considered that the incident was closed and that it had instructed Thai border authorities to co-operate with the Lao side to avoid conflict.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic held, in a 24 November letter,⁽⁵²⁾ that according to the maps drawn up by the Siamese-French Joint Boundary Committee, it was undeniable that the three villages were well inside its territory. Thailand's arguments that the maps did not provide sufficient details as to the boundary line were false and, moreover, indicated its desire to flout a recognized principle of international law under which boundaries inherited from the colonial era were inviolable. With regard to the frontier incidents, the current situation remained tense. On 3 November, Thai troops fired more than 100 shells at hill 1428, and the next day again attacked the hill; Lao troops repelled the attack. On 5 November, Thai troops again fired more than 100 shells at the hill.

On 17 December,⁽⁵³⁾ the Lao People's Democratic Republic alleged that on 15 December three Thai fighter aircraft violated its airspace and dropped several bombs on hills 1428, 1370, 1146 and Phou Vieng in Sayaboury province. On 15 and 16 December, it charged, Thai troops had subjected those positions to artillery fire.

In a 21 December press release⁽⁵⁴⁾ concerning incidents along the border near Romklao village, Phitsanulok province, Thailand alleged that Lao troops had made incursions into Thai territory and that its troops had driven them out. It stated that hills 1428, 1370 and 1146 lay 2 kilometres inside Thai territory, which was attested to by relevant treaty and other authoritative maps. If the Lao side had doubts about the border demarcation, it could resort to peaceful means to resolve the problem.

In a 27 December statement,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Lao People's Democratic Republic alleged Thai military attacks against its territory. Thai third army forces, it charged, launched several attacks against Lao forces at peaks 1428 and 1370 on 4, 5 and 6 December. Thai forces again launched infantry, artillery and air bombing attacks against those localities from 15 to 24 December. On 30 December,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Lao People's Democratic Republic charged that Thai forces had attacked those places once more from 25 to 27 December and that on 27 December shells filled with chemical agents had been used.

Thailand—Viet Nam dispute

Charges of incursions into Thai territory by Vietnamese troops were dealt with in several communications to the Secretary-General during 1987.

On 5 January,⁽⁵⁷⁾ Thailand charged that on 2 January a Thai air force observation plane was shot down by Vietnamese forces while over Thai territory 1 kilometre from the Thai-Kampuchean border near Ban Sanro-Cha-Ngan in Prachinburi province. The pilot was killed and another crew member seriously injured. Earlier, during November and December 1986, it was alleged that Vietnamese forces had committed 129 violations against Thailand's sovereignty, causing loss of life and destruction of property.

Responding, Viet Nam transmitted a 10 January statement⁽⁵⁸⁾ by the People's Republic of Kampuchea, rejecting the Thai allegations, declaring that the People's Republic of Kampuchea had always respected Thailand's territorial integrity, and charging that on the other hand Thai fighter and reconnaissance planes, on 40 occasions, had penetrated 8 to 10 kilometres into Kampuchean airspace over Battambang, Siemreap, Oddar Meanchey, Preh Vihear and Koh Kong provinces, while Thai artillery had fired more than 4,000 rounds on many areas of those provinces and Thai armed vessels, 500 times, illegally operated 9 to 10 miles inside Kampuchean waters.

Thailand, on 29 January,⁽⁵⁹⁾ alleged that on 21 January Vietnamese soldiers, with artillery support from inside Kampuchea, made an incursion 3 kilometres inside Thai territory at Bok Pass, Ubon Ratchathani province, and attacked a Thai outpost, killing one Thai soldier and seriously wounding two, and that on 26 January Vietnamese forces fired 17 artillery shells which landed in Site 2 camp in Taphraya district, Prachinburi province, about 5 kilometres inside Thailand, wounding nine Kampucheans.

Thailand, on 7 April,⁽⁶⁰⁾ alleged that since January Vietnamese troops had intruded into Thai territory and entrenched themselves on hills 408, 382 and 500 in Nam Yuen district, Ubon Ratchathani province; that between 25 and 30 March, Viet Nam had reinforced its entrenchment; that after a 25 March clash, the bodies of 19 Vietnamese intruders were found on Thai soil; and that from January to March, Vietnamese forces had committed more than 350 violations of Thailand's sovereignty, resulting in loss of life and property among Thai civilians.

On 22 May,⁽⁶¹⁾ Singapore, on behalf of ASEAN, transmitted an 11 May statement, stressing ASEAN's concern at the continued presence of Vietnamese troops on Thai territory. According to the statement, between January and March 1987 Thailand dislodged Vietnamese troops from Thai territory at hills 362, 382, 396 and 408, which were located as much as 5 kilometres from the Thai-Cambodian and Thai-Lao borders in the vicinity of Chong Bok Pass, Ubon Ratchathani province; Thai troops were still trying to dislodge Vietnamese troops from hill 500 in rough terrain, some 2 kilometres inside Thailand.

Thailand, on 5 June,⁽⁶²⁾ charged that on 29 May Vietnamese troops intruded into Thai territory west of Border Post 29 in Taphraya district, Prachinburi province, clashed with a Thai unit and, in support of the action, fired many gun and mortar rounds, several of which landed in the Site 2 camp, killing eight Kampucheans and wounding 22.

Western and south-western Asia

Afghanistan situation

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security was again considered by the General Assembly in 1987. The Assembly adopted resolution 42/15 in November, repeating its previous call for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and for all parties to work for a political solution. It expressed support for the steps taken by the Secretary-General in the search for a solution and requested him to continue them.

With the Secretary-General's Personal Representative acting as an intermediary, the Foreign Ministers of Afghanistan and Pakistan held two rounds of talks (Geneva, 25 February—9 March and 7-10 September). The main item of discussion was the time-frame for withdrawal of troops, although certain other questions relating to draft legal instruments, based on four elements-non-interference, return of refugees, withdrawal of foreign troops and international guarantees-also were taken up.

Communications. In 1987, many communications were addressed to the Secretary-General concerning the situation in Afghanistan. The majority, from Afghanistan and Pakistan, alleged violations of airspace and territory in the form of reconnaissance flights, bombings, shellings and other acts of aggression and provocation by one against the other. Each lodged repeated protests with the other against such acts and demanded their cessation, while rejecting each other's allegations of aggression.

On 5 January 1987,(1) Pakistan charged that Afghan armed forces on 28 December 1986 fired mortar shells in the area of Arandu, Chitral district, wounding one person, and that on 1 January 1987 14 Afghan fighter aircraft violated Pakistan airspace in the same area, dropping bombs and wounding two persons; Pakistan also rejected a charge that on 24 December 1986 a Pakistan Air Force plane violated Afghan airspace near Spinbuldak, Kandhar province.

Pakistan alleged on 8 January(2) that on 2 January two Afghan fighter aircraft violated its airspace by 30 kilometres, bombing and firing rockets in the vicinity of Khar, Torghundi and Timargara in Bajaur Agency, killing one person, and that on 3 January 10 Afghan aircraft bombed Arandu, killing five persons and wounding 14.

On 13 January(3) Pakistan charged that on 7 January four Afghan fighter aircraft penetrated its airspace; bombing Saidgai, North Waziristan Agency, killing one Afghan refugee; it rejected an allegation by Afghanistan that on 23 and 24 December 1986 and on 3 January 1987 Pakistan aircraft violated Afghan airspace in Ningrahar and Paktya provinces and that from 22 December 1986 to 3 January 1987 Pakistan armed forces fired 300 rockets at Barikot village, Kunar province. On 16 January(4) Pakistan alleged that on 11 January two Afghan aircraft bombed the Drosh area, Chitral district, wounding one person.

Afghanistan, on 13 January,(5) charged that Pakistan air force aircraft violated its airspace in the region of Maronaw on 23 December 1986, in the Zaro region of Nazim district on 24 December, and in the Wazakhwa and Orgon districts on 3 January; it further stated that Pakistan, to cover up its acts of aggression, had claimed that Afghanistan attacked the Arandu region of Chitral on 28 December 1986 and 1 January 1987.

On 23 January(6) Pakistan alleged that on 15 January Afghan armed forces fired small arms and mortar rounds at Lakka Tigga post in Kurram Agency and fired artillery rounds hitting the Shilman area, Khyber Agency, and that three Afghan fighter aircraft bombed North Waziristan Agency; that on 16 January Afghan armed forces fired anti-aircraft machine-gun rounds, which landed in the Shilman area; and that on 19 January Afghan armed forces fired artillery rounds, hitting the Chakhai area, Bajaur Agency. Pakistan, in turn, rejected an Afghan allegation that on 9 January a Pakistan aircraft violated Afghan airspace in the Zaranj area, Nemroz province.

Afghanistan, on 9 February,(7) rejected as baseless Pakistan's continuing allegations that Afghanistan had attacked the Shilman region, Meramsh and Nanbargi on 15, 16 and 19 January.

Pakistan, on 10 February,(8) charged that on 4 February four Afghan fighter aircraft bombed the Domandi area, north of Chaman, killing four persons, and that on 6 February Afghan armed forces fired some 100 artillery rounds in the same area, wounding five.

Afghanistan transmitted an 11 February letter(9) from its Foreign Minister, reporting that an Afghan civil aircraft with a crew of six and 30 passengers on a domestic flight over Khost Grant County had been shot down by what it described as extremist armed groups, killing all aboard.

Pakistan, on 25 February,(10) alleged that on 20 February eight Afghan fighter aircraft bombed the Arandu area, wounding three persons. It alleged on 2 March(11) that 16 Afghan aircraft attacked two Pakistan villages on 26 February, killing 40 persons, injuring 200 and destroying 150 shops, and that the following day six Afghan aircraft again bombed villages in the Kurram Agency, killing 50 and wounding 30 persons, including Afghan refugees; the Pakistan Prime Minister condemned the Afghan air attacks.

Afghanistan, on 4 March,(12) stated that, despite repeated protests, Pakistan was continuing its aggression against Afghan territory, in an instance of which a Pakistan fighter aircraft on 28 February had conducted reconnaissance in the Marona region, Nazian district, Nengrahar province. Pakistan rejected the allegation as baseless(13) and stated that such fictitious charges could not hide unprovoked, barbarous Afghan air attacks on Pakistan territory.

Again on 4 March,(14) Afghanistan alleged that on 1 March a Pakistan fighter plane, entering its airspace through Spin Buldak, conducted four reconnaissance flights at different altitudes; it warned that the negative consequences of such provocative acts would rest on Pakistan.

Pakistan charged on 5 March(15) that on 3 March four Afghan aircraft bombed the Kaisu refugee camp in Drosh Tehsil, Chitral, killing two Afghan refugees, wounding five and destroying a number of houses, and bombed the Langarhatt border area, killing cattle and causing other damage.

On 5 March(16), Afghanistan claimed that on 3 March a Pakistan fighter plane violated its airspace 11 times in the Spin Buldak region and that another aircraft conducted a 15-minute reconnaissance flight over Afghan territory; similarly, it alleged that on 4 March Pakistan aircraft conducted two 10-minute reconnaissance flights over the Spin Buldak region.

On 9 March,(17) Pakistan alleged that on 20 February Afghan armed forces fired artillery rounds which hit Kharlachi, Kurram Agency; that on 21 February they fired artillery rounds, hitting Chakhai, Bajaur Agency, and Ghulam Khan Killi, North Waziristan Agency, wounding two persons; that on 1 March six Afghan fighter aircraft bombed Kurram Agency, wounding one person; and that on 3 March three Afghan fighters dropped seven bombs and fired two rockets in the Chitral area, wounding two Afghan refugees and destroying property; also, Pakistan rejected as baseless the Afghan allegation that on 1 March a Pakistan aircraft had violated its airspace in the Spin Buldak area. On 11 March,(18) Pakistan also rejected the allegation by Afghanistan that on 3 March Pakistan aircraft violated Afghan airspace in the Spin Buldak area, Kandahar province, and Nazian district, Nengrahar province.

Pakistan, on 26 March,(19) alleged that on 23 March three Afghan aircraft bombed Angoor Ada village, South Waziristan Agency, killing 20 persons and wounding 22, and that later that day four Afghan aircraft bombed Teri Mangal village, Kurram Agency, killing 65 persons and wounding 101; Pakistan warned that it reserved the right to retaliate.

Afghanistan, on 27 March,(20) reported that the Pakistan armed forces shelled the Khas Kolo residential area on 16 March, the Bainkhel post from 10 to 16 March, the Barikot military post on 8 March, and Pir Koti and Mitran of Wazir tribe from 20 to 24 February; at the same time, Afghanistan rejected Pakistan allegations that its air force attacked South Waziristan on 23 March and that its army had attacked the Arando and Torkham areas on 18 and 20 March.

On 30 March,(21) Pakistan charged that on 26 March four Afghan fighter aircraft dropped bombs and fired rockets in the Teri Mangal area, killing five Afghan refugees and wounding eight, and that six Afghan fighters bombed the Zawar Chau area, South Waziristan Agency, wounding six Frontier Corps members; it rejected Afghan allegations that from 20 to 24 March it had shelled the Afghan provinces of Kunar, Paktia and Paktika.

Afghanistan stated on 30 March(22) that, in spite of protests against repeated aggressive acts by the Iranian armed forces, two Iranian aircraft violated its airspace 40 kilometres north-east of Rabat Jaali on 25 March.

On 1 April,(23) Afghanistan charged that on 30 March two Pakistan air force fighters shot down by air-to-air missiles an Afghan civilian aircraft, carrying 40 passengers and crew, while over Tsamkani County, Paktia province.

Pakistan alleged on 13 April,(24) that on 8 April Afghan armed forces fired tank rounds that hit the Khar Gali area, west of Landikotal, Khyber Agency, wounding two persons. Pakistan further charged on 28 April(25) that on 23 April Afghan armed forces shelled Shilman, wounding one person, and Ghakhai, wounding two; that on 24 April six Afghan fighter aircraft bombed and fired rockets in the Ghakhai area, wounding two members of the Bajaur Scouts; and that on 25 April six Afghan fighter aircraft bombed the area of Nawa Pass, Mohmand Agency, wounding one member of the Frontier Corps.

persons, including two refugees, and wounding eight. Pakistan alleged on 8 June(28) that on 31 May the Afghan armed forces fired 13 missiles which hit the Shalozan area, Kurram Agency, killing one Pakistan national and 12 Afghan refugees and wounding two Pakistanis, and hit the Ghaz Garhi area with 200 artillery rounds, killing seven refugees and wounding 12 others.

In a statement of 12 June,(29) Afghanistan charged that on 11 June armed extremist elements shot down, by United States-made Stinger missile, an Afghan civilian aircraft on a domestic flight from Kandahar province to Kabul, killing 53 of its 55 passengers; it declared that such acts were a component of an organized programme by the United States in collusion with Pakistan against Afghan national reconciliation (see also p. 213). Pakistan replied on 26 June(30) that the fictitious charges in the Kabul statement could not obscure the facts of the more than seven-year foreign military intervention in Afghanistan or the struggle by the Afghan people against that intervention; more than 5 million Afghans, one third of the population, had sought refuge from the conflict in neighbouring Pakistan and Iran (see also p. 216), while attacks by Afghan military aircraft on border villages and refugees in Pakistan had killed 250 persons and wounded hundreds during February and March.

On 16 July, Pakistan alleged that on 7 July Afghan fighter aircraft bombed Gabrai village, Bajaur Agency, killing five persons and injuring two, and that on 10 July Afghan armed forces fired artillery rounds which hit the Ghakhai area, killing a child; those allegations were rejected by Afghanistan as baseless on 30 July. Further, on 21 August,(35) Pakistan alleged that on 14 August Afghan forces shelled the Nukha area, east of Lakro Sar, Bajaur Agency, killing one person and wounding 13, as well as an area approximately 6 kilometres north-east of Ghakhai, wounding one person, and on 16 August shells landed 5 kilometres south of Lakka Tigga, wounding one person.

Afghanistan protested on 26 August(36) that around-to-ground missiles fired from the Shorabah region in Pakistan on 4 August hit an Afghan frontier regiment and the centre of Spin Buldak County, killing two members of the regiment and killing or wounding six civilians; at the same time, Afghanistan rejected charges by Pakistan that its forces had attacked Gerdi Bagh Ghazi on 16 and 21 July and the Darah Nawah region on 2, 5 and 8 August.

On 27 August,(37) Afghanistan rejected as baseless Pakistan charges that it had attacked the Ghazah and Nokhias regions and Laka Tekah on 14 and 16 August.

On 10 September,(38) Pakistan claimed that on 5 September Afghan forces shelled the Khar Gali area, Khyber Agency, wounding three persons, two of them refugees. On 29 September,(39) Pakistan reported that on 16 September Afghan forces fired 25 rockets in Arawali area, Kurram Agency, killing an Afghan refugee, and that on 21 September Afghan artillery hit the Fazal post of the Frontier Corps in the Ghakhai area, wounding one soldier.

Afghan authorities rejected Pakistan claims that Afghanistan opened fire on Berekzi and Shelman, Khaibar Agency, and Ghazhaki, Bajawol Agency on 8 and 23 April, on Nawa Pass on 25 April, on Nawa Pass and Chatral, Arand and Ghulamkhan in North Waziristan, and Teri Mangal, Bafara and Karghat in Chaman and Ali Mangal on 3, 4, 25, 30 and 31 May, and on Shargali area on 15 September.

On 6 October,(41) Pakistan charged that on 29 September Afghan forces shelled the Ghakhai area, killing one person, wounding four and damaging a house and a primary school, and on 30 September, shelled the Girdai Bagh area, injuring three persons. Further, on 9 October,(42) Pakistan alleged that Afghan forces on 30 September and 1 October shelled the Ghakhai area, killing two persons and wounding two, and on 19 October(43) charged that Afghan forces on 6 October fired 21 tank rounds, hitting the Landi Khana area, west of Landi Kotal, Khyber Agency, killing one person and wounding seven, including two refugees. Pakistan also rejected an Afghan protest that on 27/28 August its armed forces had shelled the Gogi Afghan Post, Paktia province.

On 22 October,(44) Afghanistan alleged that on 27 August Pakistan forces shelled Gogoy frontier post; it rejected Pakistan charges that it had fired missiles on an area near Arhowali, Korm Agency, on 16 September, and shelled Fazel Dost village, Bajawol Agency, and the Ghashi area, Korm Agency, on 22 September. Afghanistan, on 23 October,(45) protested that Pakistan military forces shelled Shamshad frontier post, Nengarhar province, on 6 October; it rejected allegations by Pakistan that its artillery units had shelled the Ghashi area on 29 and 30 September and 1 October and Gardi Bagh on 30 September.

Pakistan reported on 30 October(46) that on 19 October Afghan armed forces shelled the Teri Mangal area, wounding three Afghan refugees, and on 22 October fired mortar and machine-gun rounds that landed in the Arandu area, wounding one person.

On 6 November,(47) Afghanistan transmitted a statement reporting that, according to the Pakistani press, a number of Afghans had been arrested on various charges by Pakistan and delivered to what it called counter-revolutionary extremists; it drew the attention of international organs, especially the Commission on Human Rights and UNHCR, to those actions and demanded that Pakistan refrain from them.

On 11 November,(48) Pakistan alleged that on 28 October Afghan armed forces shelled the Teri Mangal area, killing one refugee and destroying a house. It further reported on 24 November(49) that on 18 November Afghan armed forces shelled the Ghakhai area, wounding two persons, and eight Afghan fighter aircraft bombed the same area, killing two refugees and wounding six. In addition, it claimed on 25 November(50) that on 15 November Afghan armed forces shelled Nawa Pass, damaging 100 feet of water pipeline, and fired tank rounds in the Sohe village area, Chaman sector, killing two refugees.

Afghanistan complained on 3 December(51) that on 28 November its frontier forces in Daka and the Torkham area came under ground-to-ground fire from the other side of the frontier which killed two persons and wounded eight.

On 4 December,(52) Pakistan alleged that on 22 November Afghan armed forces shelled the Kitkot area, Bajaur Agency, killing one person, and on 1 December fired tank rounds that hit the Shilman area, injuring one refugee. Pakistan further reported on 7 December(53) that on 5 December Afghan forces shelled Ashakhel, 2 kilometres north of Landi Kotal, killing four women and three children. On 10 December,(54) Pakistan protested that on 6 December Afghan armed forces shelled the Ghakhai area, wounding three persons, and fired mortar rounds which hit the Landi Kotal area, wounding one refugee, and on 7 December again shelled Landi Kotal, killing one person and wounding 21. Pakistan, on 15 December (55) charged that on 10 December six Afghan fighter aircraft bombed the Drosh area, Chitral district, wounding one person.

Also on 15 December,(56) Afghanistan reported the delivery on 10 December of a note to Pakistan, stating that in spite of its repeated protests about attacks on its border security posts, Pakistan had taken no steps to halt them; on 7 December an Afghan officer had been killed and another wounded when heavy weapons fire and ground-to-ground missiles hit Dakah in the Pacheragam area of Achin County.

Three communications were received from Afghanistan on the subject of national reconciliation. In a Declaration on National Reconciliation approved on 3 January,(57) its Revolutionary Council called for a cease-fire as of 15 January, the formation of a commission for reconciliation comprising the heads of councils of the National Fatherland Front, elders, influential personalities, imams and, in some cases, the heads of opposing armed groups, and the granting of rights and privileges to the residents of zones in which reconciliation was achieved.

A general amnesty decree, issued by the Revolutionary Council on 25 January,(58) provided for the pardoning of various categories of convicts who had committed crimes against state security; renounced the pursuance and circulation of files on those who had committed such crimes; and listed the organs which had the authority to implement the decree. The decree was not to be applicable to persons, except for those in chronic ill-health, who had committed the crimes of spying, murder or causing explosions.

In a 1 November letter,(59) Afghanistan's Foreign Minister stated that positive developments in regard to a political settlement had occurred both inside Afghanistan and during talks with Pakistan at Geneva (see p. 214); he proposed that the General Assembly call for non-interference in Afghan internal affairs and the withdrawal of foreign troops, while supporting the good offices of the Secretary-General.

In a 2 April statement,(60) Japan denounced the Afghan bombing of Pakistani territory and called for its immediate cessation. On 27 December,(61) it regretted that troops of the USSR were still stationed in Afghanistan and that there was no improvement in the situation; it reaffirmed its support for the Secretary-General's initiative on behalf of a political settlement.

Belgium, on behalf of the 12 States members of EC, conveyed a 16 March statement(62) reiterating support for the Secretary-General and expressing the hope that the Geneva talks would result in the withdrawal of Soviet troops; EC condemned the armed attacks launched from Afghanistan on 26 and 27 February, which, it charged, were deliberately directed against civilian targets in Pakistan, causing numerous casualties. Denmark forwarded an EC declaration,(63) adopted on 13 July at Copenhagen, noting that the latest round of Geneva talks had produced no results, reaffirming that troop withdrawal by the USSR was the pre-condition for ending the conflict, and stating that a political solution had to guarantee the Afghan people's right to self-determination and allow the return of the refugees.

Italy forwarded a statement issued at the Venice Economic Summit on 9 June,(64) by which the heads of State or Government of seven major industrial nations and the representatives of EC declared that they were looking for the rapid and total withdrawal of USSR forces from Afghanistan so that its people could freely determine their own future.

Thailand forwarded the documents issued at the Twentieth Ministerial Meeting of ASEAN (Singapore, 15 and 16 June),(65) among them being a joint communique which stated that the Foreign Ministers viewed a sovereign, independent and non-aligned Afghanistan as essential for regional and global peace.

Zimbabwe forwarded the final communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 5-7 October)(66) viewing the Afghan situation with particular concern calling for a political settlement, reaffirming the right of return of Afghan refugees, and stating that the discussions through the Secretary-General's intermediary were a step in the right direction.

Denmark transmitted a declaration on Afghanistan by the EC heads of State and Government, issued following a meeting of the European Council (Copenhagen 4 and 5 December).(67) In it, the Council called on the USSR to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan in 1988; agree to establishing a transitional, independent government; and recognize that the participation of the Afghan resistance was essential to a comprehensive settlement.

Other communications received during 1987 dealt with the question of Afghan refugees in Iran and Pakistan (see p. 216).

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(68) submitted in September 1987 a report(69) on the Afghanistan situation.

He stated that the negotiating process for a comprehensive settlement had reached an advanced stage, with substantial though not sufficiently sustained progress being made in the past year. Negotiations centred on two issues-the arrangements to ensure effective implementation of the settlement and the time-frame for withdrawal of troops.

Seeking agreement on those issues, the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, Diego Cordovez, visited the area from 19 November to 3 December 1986, also stopping in Iran on 27 November. On his return to New York, Mr.

Cordovez reported that agreement had been reached on an implementation assistance scheme to ensure that obligations under the settlement were fulfilled. The relevant provisions of a draft instrument on interrelationships, incorporating a consultative procedure, were finalized. Their operational aspects, involving the deployment of United Nations personnel drawn from existing United Nations operations, were set out in a Memorandum of Understanding. In approving the Memorandum, the two Governments agreed that the implementation assistance scheme should be executed by the Secretary-General under his authority to provide good offices.

In connection with the troop withdrawal time-frame, Mr. Cordovez was informed confidentially of the position of each of the Governments. He stated that on that basis a new round of talks could not produce an agreement. The two Governments re-examined the issue and urged that further talks be convened. They were held at Geneva from 25 February to 9 March 1987; present were the Foreign Ministers of Afghanistan and Pakistan. The gap between their positions on the time-frame, initially 45 months, was reduced to 11 months, and at a subsequent round (Geneva, 7-10 September) there was a further narrowing but not a closing of the gap.

The discussion made it clear that the time-frame had enormous political and other implications for both interlocutors, the Secretary-General commented. It was indispensable that innovative diplomatic approaches be utilized when the matter was taken up again; it must be evident to the two Governments that agreement on a short time-frame for troop withdrawal would give impetus to Afghan reconciliation efforts.

The USSR and the United States, the two designated guarantors, were kept informed of developments. On 29 June, the Secretary-General met in Moscow with Mikhail S. Gorbachev, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the USSR, who said his main concern was that Afghanistan should have a neutral, independent regime, not hostile to the USSR.

Afghans inside and outside their homeland were concerned about the need to begin a process that would reaffirm their right to self-determination the Secretary-General said. What the Afghans had not set in motion was a mechanism for dialogue and decision-making to implement a settlement. While his Personal Representative was ready to facilitate communication the Secretary-General underlined the particular role that all Governments in a position to do so should play in broadening the opportunities for the Afghans to chart their own destiny.

Democratic Yemen and the Syrian Arab Republic submitted amendments to the text,(70) calling for the observance of the principle of non-interference in Afghanistan and welcoming the progress at the Geneva talks. Pakistan submitted sub-amendments to those amendments,(71) declaring that the non-interference principle had been violated by the continuing presence of foreign troops and welcoming the progress so far achieved at the talks, the early and successful completion of which demanded a short time-frame for troop withdrawal. However, since the sponsors did not find a positive response to the amendments, they withdrew them. Democratic Yemen felt that an opportunity had been lost to adopt a unanimous resolution on finding a peaceful solution to the Afghan situation.

The USSR expressed the view that the amendments would have changed the current tendentiousness and one-sidedness of the resolution, and virtually ensured its adoption by consensus. However, the Pakistan sub-amendments had stalemated that process. Efforts towards a peaceful settlement of the Afghan problem had been blocked by forces which wished to see a continuance of the bloodshed and were trying to use the United Nations for their own political purposes. Poland also felt that the amendments would have provided a good basis for a balanced resolution, bringing closer the chance of a political solution.

Before the vote, Afghanistan stated that if the draft resolution was adopted it would have no moral or legal validity for Afghanistan. It had supported efforts to formulate a consensus resolution, but there had been a lack of interest by the Pakistan side. The forces that were blocking a settlement were responsible for the failure to reach a consensus.

Though it would vote in favour of the draft, Iran said that it fell short of what should be done in regard to the occupation of Afghanistan. Political considerations and rivalries between global power blocs had impeded the world body's functioning and the text had even shied away from explicitly naming the forces of the USSR as aggressor; United States imperialists should remember that Afghanistan's political destiny must be determined solely by the Afghan people. Peru would have liked the resolution to include also elements of a solution which had been recognized by all in various forms and that the United Nations should be a forum for dialogue and negotiation, rather than for rigid and static confrontation between opposing positions.

Statements regarding the credentials of the representatives of Afghanistan to the forty-second (1987) Assembly session were made in the Credentials Committee (see p. 365).

Afghan refugees

During 1987, UNHCR continued its assistance programme for Afghan refugees concentrated in Iran and Pakistan. The programme emphasized the provision of supplies and services and the encouragement of self-sufficiency (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XX).

Communications. A number of letters were sent to the Secretary-General during the year concerning Afghan refugees in Iran and Pakistan.

Afghanistan, on 19 January,(72) said that recently a great number of Afghans in Iran and Pakistan had expressed their readiness to return home. Accordingly, the Afghan Foreign Ministry on 12 and 15 January had sought permission from the Iranian and Pakistani Governments to dispatch charter flights to facilitate their return, but no replies had thus far been received; creating obstacles to their return ran counter to international law and the right of return.

On 2 February,(73) Afghanistan reiterated that no positive replies to its request had been received and declared that recent information indicated that Afghan armed groups, with the connivance of the Iranian and Pakistani armed forces, had taken strong measures to prevent the return of Afghans, the purpose being to render less effective Afghanistan's programme of national reconciliation. On 26 March,(74) Afghanistan said that further measures had been adopted by Iran and Pakistan in collaboration with Afghan opposition armed groups to intimidate those who wished to return; cases of threats, physical punishment, incarcerations and even executions had been reported. Pakistan had evaded a discussion of the issue, it added, characterizing the proposal as a propagandistic ploy.

Responding to the Afghan communications of 19 January and 2 February, Pakistan, on 2 March,(75) rejected as baseless the allegations that it was impeding the Afghan refugees' return. Such charges were belied, it contended, by the continuous flow of refugees into Pakistan, where their number currently exceeded 3 million; they had not entered Pakistan at its instigation. The recent air raids from the Afghanistan side on a refugee camp and two villages close to the border, in which 90 persons were killed and more than 230 wounded, exposed the farcical nature of Kabul's pleas for their return. The United Nations could ascertain whether the refugees wished to return under the prevailing conditions. On 8 April,(76) Pakistan stated that it would like to see the earliest return of Afghan refugees to their homes because they were a huge burden on its limited resources, that it was easy to understand why they were not willing to go back until a settlement created safe conditions, and that 7,000 to 8,000 Afghans were still pouring into Pakistan every month. Several international organizations were providing relief to refugees in 325 tent villages in the northern region of Pakistan bordering Afghanistan.

Responding on 23 April,(77) Afghanistan stated that extremists were being recruited from refugee camps in Pakistan, that the refugees had been used by Pakistan as a source of income and for propaganda against Afghanistan and the USSR, and that the refugees had welcomed their Government's call to return home, some 53,000 having already done so. Pakistan replied on 4 May(78) that, in making false accusations against Pakistan, the Kabul regime had the illusion that it could detract attention from the death and destruction being wrought in Afghanistan and from the conditions that had forced Afghans to flee their homes, in particular the military occupation of their country.

Meanwhile, on 1 May,(79) Afghanistan charged that Iran and Pakistan had increased the obstacles to the return of refugees to their country, and requested that an Afghan delegation be permitted to visit the refugee camps; such a visit would be aimed at measures for their unimpeded return. Referring to that letter, Pakistan on 21 May(80) asserted that the falsehood and propagandistic character of Kabul's allegations were exposed by its failure to respond to the offer that a United Nations delegation ascertain whether the Afghans in the refugee camps wished to return home; Pakistan would co-operate with the United Nations. Iran replied on 9 July(81) that the Afghan allegations were unfounded, that the refugees could leave Iran whenever they chose, and that the Kabul proposals were nothing but an attempt to secure legitimacy for its so-called government.

Iran-Iraq armed conflict

Fighting intensified between Iran and Iraq during 1987, as attacks continued along the battle fronts and on population centres and oil installations. Numerous actions were reported against third-party commercial shipping in the Persian Gulf. Iran charged that the United States was assisting its enemies as well as violating its territory; the United States replied that in a variety of instances it had taken defensive action against Iranian attack.

In January, the President of the Security Council, on behalf of its members, stated that they were dismayed at the large-scale military operations which were taking place and the considerable escalation of the conflict; they appealed urgently to the parties to comply with Council resolutions 582(1986) and 588(1986). In July, the Council adopted resolution 598(1987), demanding that Iran and Iraq observe an immediate cease-fire, requesting the Secretary-General to dispatch United Nations observers to supervise the cease-fire, urging that prisoners of war be released and repatriated without delay, and calling on all States to refrain from any act which might further escalate and widen the conflict. In December, the Council President, again on behalf of the members, expressed concern over the lack of progress in the implementation of the July resolution.

Iran repeatedly alleged during the year that Iraq was continuing to use chemical weapons in violation of the 1925 Geneva Protocol prohibiting their use. The Secretary-General dispatched a team of four specialists to investigate the Iranian charges. The specialists reported that chemical weapons continued to be used in the conflict and that they had found numerous Iranian civilian casualties as a result of mustard-gas attacks. In May, the Security Council President, on behalf of its members, made a statement condemning the use of chemical weapons and demanding that the Geneva Protocol be observed.

The General Assembly, at its resumed forty-first session on 14 September 1987, decided to include in the agenda of its forty-second (1987) session the item on the consequences of the conflict (decision 41/474), but did not discuss it. Suspending its forty-second session on 21 December, the Assembly decided to retain the item on its agenda to be taken up when the session resumed in 1988 (decision 42/460).

Communications (1-15 January). In the first part of January, communications received by the United Nations from Iran and Iraq showed an increase in hostilities.

Iran, on 6 January,(1) charged that on 3 January Iraqi forces had bombed the village of Ab-Shirin near Gachsaran, killing eight persons, wounding seven and damaging a school and two residences.

Iraq, on 8 January,(2) alleged that Iran had shelled the Abu al-Khasib frontier district on 30 and 31 December 1986 and 1 and 3 January 1987, killing one person, wounding two and damaging eight dwellings, and on 1 January, the Qurna district, damaging a school and a dwelling, and the Shatt al-Arab district, damaging three dwellings and a vehicle. Iraq reported on 9 January(3) that during the preceding night Iran had shelled residential neighbourhoods in Basra, killing two persons, wounding 10 and destroying two dwellings.

Iran alleged on 9 January that Iraq had that day bombed Sussangerd, killing more than 100 persons and wounding several hundred,(4) and the villages of Jateh and Bin Ja'afar near Dezful, killing one person and wounding three;(5) Iran urged that the international community adopt measures to halt what it called Iraqi criminal practices and the supplying of equipment to Iraq for its aggression.

In a 9 January statement,(6) the USSR said it was no secret that imperialist forces were using the continuation of the Iran-Iraq conflict to build up their military presence in the Persian Gulf; the earliest settlement of the conflict would be in the interests of all the countries in the region; and the basis for a settlement should be mutual respect for sovereignty, territorial integrity and non interference in internal affairs, as well as reaffirmation of the frontiers that existed between Iraq and Iran prior to the conflict.

Iraq reported on 10 January(7) that Iran had the day before launched a large-scale offensive in southern Iraq, aimed at occupying Basrah; Iraq had responded by striking at targets in Qum, Isfahan, Dezful, Ramhormoz, Nahavand and Borujerd. Iran reported on 10 January(8) that those Iraqi missile and aerial attacks had killed more than 90 persons, wounded more than 280 and destroyed several residential units; in addition, it claimed, Iraq had used chemical weapons several times within the past three days (see p. 231).

Iraq alleged on 11 January that on 10 and 11 January Iranian artillery and planes had attacked Basrah and the az Zubayr district, killing 38 persons, wounding 182 and destroying five dwellings and damaging 58;(9) and on 11 January, had fired missiles against Baghdad, causing civilian deaths and damaging dwellings and commercial premises.(10) On 12 January, (11) Iraq reported the shelling by Iran of Basrah, killing 12 persons and wounding 53, while three Iranian aircraft bombed the townships of Kalar and Agrah and the village of Sarjawah, killing 12 and wounding 54.

Iran alleged on 12 January(12) that on 10 January an Iraqi missile attack hit Borujerd, killing 100 persons and wounding 150, that on 11 January Borujerd, Isfahan, Ilam and Eslamabad-e-Gharb were hit, killing 122 and wounding 265, and that on 12 January Iraqi war-planes bombed Isfahan, killing two and wounding five, and Arak, killing 15, as well as Borujerd and Kashan. Iran, on 13 January,(13) reported that that day Iraqi war-planes had attacked Khorramabad, killing 80 and wounding 230, and Bakhtaran, killing 90 and wounding 600. On 14 January,(14) Iran called on the United Nations to take effective steps to halt Iraqi attacks on Iranian cities.

Iraq on 13 January(15) stated that, while its armed forces were resisting Iranian invasion forces in the Third Army Corps sector in southern Iraq, Iran had launched an attack on the Second Army Corps' central sector; Iraq said it would use all means to defeat the invaders. Iraq also referred on 13 January(16) to Iranian radio broadcasts which, it said, proved that the objective of the Iranian regime was to occupy southern Iraq and establish a puppet Government there. In support of that contention, Iraq said on 13 January(17) that a so-called Iranian victory conference aimed at establishing such a Government had been held from 24 to 28 December 1986, attended by 423 Iranian mercenaries, in addition to 282 Iranian officials. Two 13 January Iraqi letters(18) protested that an Iranian surface-to-surface missile had struck Baghdad that morning, causing the death of a number of persons and injuring others. A further 13 January letter(18) charged that on that day Iranian artillery shelled Basrah, killing four persons and wounding 33, and that Iranian aircraft attacked Arbil and Rawanduz and the Kalar district, killing two and wounding 69.

Iraq, on 14 January,(20) alleged that Iranian artillery had shelled Basrah, killing six persons and wounding 16, and aircraft had attacked Taslujah, in northern Iraq, wounding five.

Iran alleged on 14 January(21) that Iraqi fighters raided Qum, killing 25 persons and wounding 100. On 15 January,(22) it reported that attacks the previous day on Isfahan, Bakhtaran and Masjid Suleiman had resulted in 47 persons killed and 153 wounded.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 January 1987, Security Council members held consultations on the intensified hostilities and the Council President made the following statement on their behalf:(23)

The members of the Security Council are dismayed and profoundly concerned by the fact that, in the period which has elapsed since the statement made by the President of the Council on 22 December 1986, hostilities between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq have intensified and the risk that the armed conflict, now more than six years old, may pose a further threat to the security of the region has increased.

"The large-scale military operations which have taken place since the end of last December, and which continue at this time, and the parties' repeated allegations of serious and recurrent violations of the norms of international humanitarian law and other laws of armed conflict clearly indicate the considerable escalation in recent weeks of this conflict, which has taken the lives of countless persons, both combatants and civilians, and has caused grievous human suffering and heavy material losses. The members of the Council reiterate their serious concern over the widening of the conflict through increased attacks on purely civilian targets.

"In view of this critical situation, the members of the Council, recalling the statements made on behalf of the Council on 21 March and 22 December 1986, again issue an urgent appeal to the parties to comply with Council resolutions 582(1986) and 588(1986). In this context, they appreciate the efforts made by the Secretary-General and urged him to persevere in those efforts.

"The Security Council, on which the Members of the United Nations have conferred primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, will remain seized of the situation and will continue to make every effort to bring about the cessation of hostilities and the resolution of the conflict by peaceful means in accordance with the Charter."

Commenting on the Council's statement in a 23 January letter,(24) Iran said that, despite Iraq's massive violations of international humanitarian law, the Council had failed to take effective measures to halt them. The Council's expression of concern over the spread of the war proved to be a perfunctory performance, its failure to identify Iraq as responsible for attacks on civilians, unjustifiable. The Council was duty-bound, under the United Nations Charter, to take a decisive position in relation to the invasion of Iran by Iraq in 1980. Fulfillment of that responsibility would be the first step towards a resolution of the war.

Communications (16 January-20 July). Several communications received from mid-January to mid-July concerned the presence of United States naval forces in the region.

In a 23 January statement,(25) the United States President, Ronald Reagan, condemned the Iranian seizure of Iraqi territory and again called on Iran to join Iraq in seeking a rapid solution to the conflict; meanwhile, the United States remained determined to ensure the free flow of oil through the Strait of Hormuz and to support the self-defence of its friends in the Persian Gulf.

In a 25 February statement,(26) Mr. Reagan said he had asked the United States Secretary of State to lead an international effort to bring Iran into negotiations; the United States had recently moved naval forces to the Persian Gulf to underpin its commitment to its friends in the area.

Iran, on 9 April,(27) stated that the United States had heightened tension in the region by increasing its military presence under the guise of maintaining freedom of navigation. Iran believed that instability would increase if that presence continued and requested the Secretary-General to deal with that danger.

The USSR, on 3 July,(28) declared that there had been a dangerous increase in tension in the Persian Gulf and a sharp increase in the number of warships plying international waters. It charged that the United States was exploiting the current situation to establish military and political hegemony in the area.

Communications on the Iran-Iraq conflict were also received from regional groups of States.

The 12 EC member States in a statement issued on 26 January(29) in Brussels, Belgium, appealed for the parties to comply with Security Council resolutions 582(1986)(30) and 588(1986).(31) They reaffirmed their position on the conflict in a declaration adopted on 13 July at Copenhagen, Denmark(32)

The Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January)(33) adopted a resolution expressing its support for the Council's resolutions and calling on Iran to accept them.

Iraq transmitted a resolution on the Iran-Iraq war adopted by the Ministerial Meeting of the Council of the Arab League (eighty-seventh session, Tunis, Tunisia, 4-6 April),(34) calling on Iran to agree to a peaceful settlement on the basis of resolution 582(1986), requesting the Council to take effective and mandatory measures to establish peace, and deciding to establish a committee to present the Arab position to Council members.

The Venice Economic Summit, in a statement issued on 9 June,(35) called on both parties to negotiate an immediate end to the war, supported the mediation efforts of the Secretary-General and reaffirmed the importance of the principle of freedom of navigation in the Persian Gulf and the free flow of oil through the Strait of Hormuz.

In its final communique, the Seventh Summit Conference of the Heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe (Maputo, Mozambique, 21 and 22 May),(36) renewed its appeal to the parties to negotiate a solution to their fratricidal war.

From January to July, both parties to the conflict reported further incidents.

On 16 January,(37) Iraq alleged that Iran had attacked Basrah, Sadiq and Al-Almadiyah with artillery and by air, killing nine persons and wounding 53. On 19 January(38) Iraq charged that on 17 January Iran shelled Basrah and Khanaqin, the districts of Badrah and Halabjah, and the town of Sayyid Sadiq, killing 21 persons and wounding 41.

Iran charged in four letters of 19 January that Iraq was continuing its attacks against civilian areas. It claimed that on 14 January an Iraqi missile attack on Bakhtaran killed 10 persons and wounded 50, and that the following day Iraqi war-planes attacked Tabriz and Isfahan, killing seven and injuring 49.(39) On 16 January, it alleged, Iraq bombed Arak, Qum, Eslamabad and Isfahan, killing 15 and wounding 88,(40) and, on 17 January, attacked Ilam, Koohdasht, Teheran, Ahwaz, Tabriz and Isfahan, causing the death of 133 persons and the injury of 290.(41) Attacks were reportedly carried out on 18 January against Tabriz, Isfahan, Arak, Dehloran, Sanandaj, Masjid Suleiman, Malayer, Nahavand, Ilam, Borujerd, Khorramabad and Dezful, killing 285 and wounding 852.(42)

On 20 January,(43) Iran protested that on 18 January Iraq attacked Tabriz, Isfahan, Saqqez, Bakhtaran and Hamadan, resulting in the deaths of 65 persons and the wounding of 403.

Iraq reported on 21 January(44) that on 20 January Iran hit Baghdad with a ground-to-ground missile, killing and wounding a number of persons.

Iran stated on 21 January(45) that the toll of dead from Iraqi missile attacks between 15 and 21 January had reached 954.

Iraq claimed on 22 January(46) that from 18 to 21 January Iranian artillery and aircraft had attacked Basrah, the town of Sulaymaniyah, the Aqrah and Kwisanjag districts, the Qarah Tappah subdistrict and the Damak region in Wasit governorate, with a total of 53 dead and 232 injured.

Iraq reported on 23 January that Iranian artillery and aircraft had that day attacked Basrah, Sulaymaniyah, Rany and Khanaqin, killing 14 and wounding 122,(47) and that on 22 January a surface-to-surface missile had struck Baghdad, killing and wounding a number of persons and destroying residential and commercial buildings.(48)

On 26 January,(49) Iraq alleged that on 24 January Iranian artillery shelled Basrah, Halabjah and Sayyid Sadiq, killing 11 persons and wounding 27.

Iran charged on 26 January(50) that from 21 to 25 January Iraq carried out aerial attacks against Nahavand, Bakhtaran, Ilam, Borujerd, Doroud, Khorramabad, Malayer, Zanjan, Salmas, Tabriz, Eslamabad-e-Gharb, Isfahan, Qum and Baneh, killing 319 persons and wounding 1,219; unfortunately, it said, the Security Council lacked the political will to discharge its duty to enforce the rules of international law during war and peace and was causing the erosion of the trust placed in it. On 28 January,(51) Iran protested that Iraqi forces aerially bornbarbed Hamadan, Khorramabad, Zanjan, Nahavand, Malayer, Khomein, Ilam, Marivan and Pol-e-Dokhtar. On 29 January,(52) it reported that a total of 72 persons had died and 268 had been wounded in those attacks; it added that Isfahan had been attacked again on 29 January, with eight persons wounded. Iran stated on 29 January(53) that during the past two weeks Iraq had continuously violated the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention); and that despite a 27 January declaration by Iran that it would no longer retaliate against Iraqi economic and industrial targets, Iraq had attacked Iranian cities on that same day. Iran asked the Secretary-General to use his good offices to prevent Iraq from continuing its attacks on civilian areas.

On 2 February,(54) Iran reported that Iraq on 31 January had bombed Orumiyyeh, killing some 400 persons and wounding 1,000, and that, because of the acquiescence of international bodies with regard to Iraq's lawlessness, Iran had had to take retaliatory measures.

Iran on 2 February listed the cities and villages attacked by Iraqi war-planes between 27 January and 1 February.(55) They were: Hormu village, Khorramabad, Zanjan, Kashan, Eslamabad, Shiraz, Arak, Houfol village, Sussangerd, Miandoab, Nahavand, Borujerd, Koohdasht, Masjid Suleiman, Gharveh, Isfahan, Miyaneh, Maragheh, Salmas, villages in the Orumiyyeh-Mehabad axis, Toyserkan and Shiraz. A total of 509 persons were killed and 1,738 wounded. In addition, Iraqi aircraft hit Bakhtaran, Dezful, Sanandaj, Ilam, Marivan and Baneh, causing a number of casualties.

Iraq charged on 2 February(56) that Iranian artillery continued to shell residential areas between 25 and 28 January. Among them were Basrah, Shahrizur, Mandali, Khanaqin, Ali al-Gharbi, Badrah, Halabjah and Sulaymaniyah; 16 persons were killed and 70 injured. Also on 2 February(57) Iraq reported that an Iranian surface-to-surface missile hit Baghdad on 31 January killing and wounding a number of persons.

On 3 February,(58) Iran alleged that Iraqi war-planes on 2 February had bombed Malayer, Nahavand, Roodbar, Tafresh, Ashtian and Orumiyyeh, killing 177 persons and wounding at least 191; other cities bombed on the same day for which the toll of casualties was incomplete included Saqqez, Bandar Gonaveh, Qum, Kashan, Arak, Khorramabad and Isfahan.

Iraq charged on 3 February(59) that that day an Iranian surface-to-surface missile hit Baghdad, killing and wounding a number of persons and destroying houses and commercial stores. On 4 February,(60) Iraq alleged that Iran had continued to shell and bomb civilian targets between 29 January and 3 February, including Basrah, Shahrizur, Badrah Suwayrah, Arbil, Khanaqin, Sayyid Sadiq, Sulaymaniyah, Sirwan, Mandali, Halabjah, Zubayr, Amarah and Aghra, resulting in 45 dead and 144 wounded.

Iran reported on 5 February(61) that between 9 and 19 January Dezful had been attacked by missiles seven times, aerially bombed 10 times, and hit by 23 rockets; more than 2,000 residential units; 4,000 commercial units, four mosques, four schools and a library had been destroyed.

Iraq claimed on 6(62) and 12 February(63) that on 6 and 11 February an Iranian surface-to-surface missile hit Baghdad causing a number of civilian casualties. Also on 6 February,(64) Iran submitted photographs of 67 children killed when Iraqi missiles struck two primary schools in Borujerd on 10 January; despite such tragic crimes, it said, the Security Council continued to maintain its silence. On 9 February,(65) Iran claimed that 80 children had been killed when Iraqi war-planes later on 10 January bombed a school for the disabled in Borujerd. Also on 9 February,(66) Iran protested that between 3 and 6 February Iraqi aerial bombardment of Khorramabad, Koozhasht, Pol-Dokhtar, Tabriz, Shooshtar, Dezful, Isfahan, Tabriz and Gachsaran killed 49 persons and wounded 130.

Iran charged on 12 February(67) that the day before Iraq had undertaken aerial attacks against Qum, Teheran, Koozhasht, Orumiyyeh, Tabriz, Nahavand, Rabat, Maragheh, Ghazvin, Isfahan, Miyaneh and Borujerd, killing 30 persons and wounding 128. Iran reported on 17 February(68) that since 16 January Iraq's attacks had left more than 4,000 persons dead and 10,000 wounded; it was incumbent on the Security Council, it stated, to consider the current Iraqi attacks on Iranian cities as a matter of highest-priority and call on all States to implement international regulations and the June 1984 undertaking(69) for the protection of civilians in wartime.

On 18 February,(70) Iraq alleged that from 4 to 16 February Iran's shelling and bombing had killed 67 civilians and wounded 213; residential areas were hit in Basrah, Amarah, Sirwan, Sayyid Sadiq, Badrah, Khanaqin, Baghdad, Sulaymaniyah, Shahrizur, Dirluk, Halabjah, Qazaniya and Arbil.

Iran alleged on 18 February that on 11 and 12 February Iraqi war-planes bombed Gharveh, Saqqez, Rabat, Qarieh-Tartang, Marivan, Gharehpanj village, 'Teheran, Malayer, Hamadan, Mahabad and Sanandaj, killing 127 persons and wounding 458,(71) and that on 14 and 15 February Iraq had bombed Rasht, Charara and Pishva villages, Salmas, Doroud, Tabriz, Aligoudarz and Havar; 63 persons were killed and 255 wounded.(72) Iran reiterated that the absence of any United Nations initiative to enforce the rules of international law rendered that law questionable.

On 19 February(73), Iraq charged that Iran on 17 and 18 February shelled Basrah, Halabjah, Khanaqin, Sayyid Sadiq, Sirwan and Sulaymaniyah, killing five persons and wounding 19. Iran alleged on 19 February(74) that Iraqi war-planes on 16 and 18 February attacked Tabriz, Dezful, Maragheh, Aligoudarz and Shiraz, killing 39 persons and wounding 77.

A number of letters were transmitted in regard to a proposal that Iraq end its bombing of Iranian towns. On 18 February,(75) Iraq related that on 17 February its President, Saddam Hussein, had received the leader of the Iranian Mojahedin-e Khalq organization and President of the National Iranian Resistance Council, who on behalf of the Iranian people and its forces fighting against what it called the oppressor Iranian regime, asked Mr. Hussein to end the bombing. That afternoon, a meeting of Iraq's Revolution Command Council and regional leaders decided that Iraq would halt its bombardment of Iranian towns for two weeks as of 19 February, provided that Iran supported the peace principles proclaimed by Iraq on 2 August 1986.(76) The suspension did not extend to military targets. Further, Iraq would release itself from its commitment if Iran shelled Iraqi towns or launched a new assault.

In a letter of 23 February,(77) Iraq charged that Iranian artillery on 19 and 20 February had shelled Basrah, Shahrizur township, Halabjah, Badrah and Sayyid Sadiq districts, and Sirwan subdistrict, killing three persons and wounding 11.

Referring to that letter, Iran on 24 February(78) reiterated that it was committed to refraining from attacks on civilian areas and that its retaliatory measures were directed at industrial and economic quarters, while Iraq maintained its policy of attacking populous civilian centres. Iran pointed out that a few Iraqis had been killed in its retaliatory attacks, but recalled that in the Iraqi bombing of Orumiyyeh alone(54) about 400 civilians had been killed and more than 1,000 others wounded.

On 24 February,(79) Iraq reported that Iran had rejected its offer to halt the bombardment of Iranian towns for two weeks if Iran accepted the principles proclaimed by Iraq in 1986. Instead, it said, Iran on 23 February had shelled Basrah, killing and wounding a number of persons, and had attacked Iraqi troops on the Jasim line, south of Fish Lake, an act of aggression against Iraqi territory.

Iran stated on 25 February(80) that Iraq's policy of linking attacks against civilians to military operations and using that policy as a bargaining mechanism illustrated the shamelessness of the Iraqi regime. Iran said on 27 February(81) that it would welcome any verifiable international initiative which would bring about strict observance of international law governing the conduct of hostilities and that it would co-operate with any effort to prevent the further weakening of the 1925 Geneva Protocol against the use of chemical weapons (see p. 231).

On 2 March,(82) Iraq transmitted statements by Iranian officials, which it contended disproved Iranian claims that Iraqi cities were being spared the effects of military operations; one of the statements was said to be a sermon by the Speaker of the Iranian Majlis, broadcast by Teheran radio on 30 January, declaring that 25 Iraqi cities were currently within range of Iranian artillery and that Iranian missiles could hit Baghdad.

Also on 2 March,(83) Iraq reported that on 28 February and 1 March Iran launched a fresh attack against its Third Army Corps sector, which Iraq said released it from the commitment it had made with respect to halting the bombardment of Iranian cities for two weeks.

On 6 March,(84) Iran forwarded a 7 February message from the Islamic Association of Iranian Physicians, declaring that Iraq, through its use of chemical weapons, intensification of the bombardment of cities, and the destruction of schools, universities, hospitals and factories, was bent on the devastation of Iran; it asked the Secretary-General to make efforts to halt the massacre of innocent people behind the front.

Iraq charged on 9 March(85) that from 22 to 28 February, as well as on 2, 5 and 6 March, Iranian artillery shelled Basrah, killing and wounding civilians. It reported on 18 March(86) that Iranian artillery shelled and damaged the Chandari residential complex on 9 March and Basrah on 16 March. On 1 April,(87) Iraq protested that Iranian artillery had shelled Basrah on 18, 19, 24, 27, 28 and 29 March, damaging dwellings and shops. It claimed on 9 April(88) that on 8 April Iranian artillery shelled Basrah, killing two persons and wounding nine and damaging one dwelling and two vehicles. In a communique of 7 April,(89) Iraq reported that it had repulsed an Iranian attack in the sectors held by its Third Army Corps. On 13 April,(90) Iraq charged that on 7 April Iran bombed residential and industrial areas in the governorate of Basrah. It complained on 17 April(81) that Iran bombarded Basrah and its outskirts from 11 to 13 April, causing damage. On 27 April,(92) Iraq provided what it said were the details of the Iranian shelling of Basrah, Al-Uzair, Qurnah and Chwartah on 29 and 31 March and between 6 and 24 April, killing five persons and wounding 14.

Iran alleged on 30 April(93) that on 28 and 29 April Iraqi war-planes bombed Shooy, Chooran, Booyin-Sofla and Chapara villages in the vicinity of Baneh, killing seven persons and wounding 16.

In letters of 4,(94) 11,(95) 14,(96) 17,(97) 18,(98) and 20 May,(99) Iraq reported that on 2, 5, 6, 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18 May, Iranian artillery shelled Basrah, resulting in the deaths of 26 persons and the wounding of 90 others.

On 21(100) and 29 May,(101) Iran claimed that from 9 to 15 May Iraq had shelled Khorramshahr and Abadan, destroying residential and commercial units and in Abadan setting fire to a hospital.

Iran, on 2 June,(102) charged that at 1940 hours on 27 May an Iranian passenger plane, flight 635 en route from Shiraz to Duha, Qatar, was threatened by a United States warship. At 2200 hours on the same day, returning from Duha to Shiraz (flight 634), Iran stated, the pilot found it a security necessity to use the airspace of the United Arab Emirates. Iran protested the threat by the United States warship as a violation of international law.

Iran reported on 4 June(103) that two persons were killed and four were injured in Shalmash village, West Azarbaijan province, as the result of an Iraqi air raid on 1 June.

Iraq, on 4(104) and 15 June,(105) claimed that Iran shelled the Qurnah district on 2, 13 and 14 June, and Basrah and Kurda Sivan village on 10 June, leaving one dead and three wounded and damaging property.

Iran charged on 17 June that Iraqi war-planes bombed Booyin-Sofla village on 16 June. (106)

Iraq alleged on 17 June(107) that Iranian artillery shelled residential neighbourhoods in Abu al-Khasib on 16 June, damaging dwellings and stores. It claimed on 21 June(108) that Iranian shelling of the town on 17 June killed one person.

On 19 June(109) Iran charged that on 17 June Iraqi forces shelled Abadan and Khorramshahr, damaging residential units.

Kuwait, on 22 June,(110) stated that it had endeavoured to improve its relations with Iran, which unfortunately had not responded; instead, Iran had escalated its propaganda campaigns and unleashed threats against Kuwait. It was natural that Kuwait should take such threats seriously, since Iran was harassing Kuwaiti ships. Kuwait demanded that the Secretary-General and the international community denounce the threats and concentrate efforts on ending the war.

Iran reported on 23(111) and 24 June,(112) respectively, that Iraqi forces on 13 June bombarded Zarab village, killing one person and wounding seven, and on 24 June bombarded Molla Sheikh and Shiveh Ebrahim villages, killing eight persons and wounding 60.

Iraq, on 29 June,(113) reported that Iran shelled Qurnah on 23 June, Abu al-Khasib on 24 June and Basrah on 27 June, damaging houses and shops. It charged on 7 July(114) that Iran shelled Basrah on 29 June, damaging more dwellings.

Iran claimed on 7 July(115) that on 20 June Iraqi forces targeted a Liberian tanker en route from Larak to Boushehr with an air-to-surface missile.

Iraq alleged on 12 July⁽¹¹⁶⁾ that on 7 July Iran shelled Abu al-Khasib, damaging houses. It alleged on 15 July⁽¹¹⁷⁾ that on 11 July Iran shelled Dira and Kudeiri villages, wounding seven persons. Iraq also transmitted on 15 July⁽¹¹⁸⁾ a copy of an article entitled 'Namibia uranium may fuel Iran's A-bomb', from the 17 May British weekly The Observer. According to the article, Iran was secretly buying uranium from the British-operated Rossing mine in Namibia; Iran reportedly had a 10 per cent shareholding in the mine.

On 20 July⁽¹¹⁹⁾ Iran alleged that on 15 July two Iranian passenger planes were threatened by United States warships in the Persian Gulf. At 1100 and 1104 hours, the planes carrying Iranian pilgrims to Mecca (Iran Air flights 1251 and 1253) received several warnings from the warships, which, Iran said, constituted a flagrant violation of international law.

On 20 July⁽¹²⁰⁾ Iraq alleged that Iranian forces on 13, 14, 16 and 18 July shelled Abu al-Khasib, Qurnah and Basra, wounding eight persons and damaging houses and other property.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

As agreed during its previous consultations, the Security Council again took up the question of the Iran-Iraq conflict at a meeting on 20 July. Iraq was invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

On the same day, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 598(1987).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 582(1986),

Deeply concerned that, despite its calls for a cease-fire, the conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq continues unabated, with further heavy loss of human life and material destruction,

Deploing the initiation and continuation of the conflict,

Deploing also the bombing of purely civilian population centres, attacks on neutral shipping or civilian aircraft, the violation of international humanitarian law and other laws of armed conflict, and, in particular, the use of chemical weapons contrary to obligations under the 1925 Geneva Protocol,

Deeply concerned that further escalation and widening of the conflict may take place,

Determined to bring to an end all military actions between Iran and Iraq,

Convinced that a comprehensive, just, honourable and durable settlement should be achieved between Iran and Iraq,

Recalling the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, and in particular the obligations of all Member States to settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered,

Determining that there exists a breach of the peace as regards the conflict between Iran and Iraq,

Acting under Articles 39 and 40 in the Charter,

1. Demands that, as a first step towards a negotiated settlement, the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq observe an immediate cease-fire, discontinue all military actions on land, at sea and in the air, and withdraw all forces to the internationally recognized boundaries without delay;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to dispatch a team of United Nations observers to verify, confirm and supervise the cease-fire and withdrawal and further requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements in consultation with the parties and to submit a report thereon to the Security Council;

3. Urges that prisoners of war be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities in accordance with the Third Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949;

4. Calls upon Iran and Iraq to co-operate with the Secretary-General in implementing this resolution and in mediation efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and honourable settlement, acceptable to both sides, of all outstanding issues, in accordance with the principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Calls upon all other States to exercise the utmost restraint and to refrain from any act which may lead to further escalation and widening of the conflict, and thus to facilitate the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to explore, in consultation with Iran and Iraq, the question of entrusting an impartial body with inquiring into responsibility for the conflict and to report to the Council as soon as possible;

7. Recognizes the magnitude of the damage inflicted during the conflict and the need for reconstruction efforts, with appropriate international assistance, once the conflict is ended and, in this regard, requests the Secretary-General to assign a team of experts to study the question of reconstruction and to report to the Council;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to examine, in consultation with Iran and Iraq and with other States of the region, measures to enhance the security and stability of the region;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed on the implementation of this resolution;

10. Decides to meet again as necessary to consider further steps to ensure compliance with this resolution.

Security Council resolution 598(1987)

20 July 1987 Meeting 2750 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18983).

Following the vote, the Secretary-General stated that, with adoption of the resolution, the work of achieving an Iran-Iraq settlement had just begun. Necessary first steps were the establishment of a cease-fire, including a halt to attacks on shipping in the region, and the deployment of observers to ensure that it held. It would be essential to develop, in consultation with the two parties and other regional States, arrangements for the long-term security and stability of the region. Further, since the assignment of responsibility for the conflict had impeded progress towards a settlement, he would endeavour to explore entrusting the question to an impartial body.

The United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom and Zambia felt that the draft resolution was carefully balanced, taking into account the concerns of both parties to the conflict.

China was concerned that recently there had been new developments in the war that increased the danger of its being internationalized. Since the outbreak of the war, it had called on the parties to cease fire and settle their disputes through negotiations, and had advocated that the United Nations make efforts in that regard. The resolution should win the co-operation of both Iran and Iraq and help the Secretary-General in his further mediation initiatives.

Other States concerned about the conflict's possible spread included Bulgaria, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United Arab Emirates.

The United Kingdom observed that the resolution, based solidly on resolution 582(1986),⁽³⁰⁾ was the culmination of many months of effort by the Council's permanent members and by the Council as a whole. It hoped that both parties would respect the Council's authority, accede to the demand for a cease-fire and withdrawal, and co-operate with the Secretary-General to negotiate a settlement.

The United States asserted that the conflict should never have started and should not be permitted to continue. The text represented forceful action by the international community to establish a framework for peace; the United States called on Iran and Iraq to comply immediately with its terms so that the United Nations might have a role in maintaining peace in the region.

The Federal Republic of Germany declared that it had condemned the war from the beginning and its continued escalation posed the danger of a widening conflict. The resolution offered important new elements capable of paving the way for a peaceful settlement. That applied particularly to the matter of clarifying the question of war guilt, to war damage and to regional security. France said the realistic and balanced text paved the way for a political solution, without victor and without vanquished and must not go unheeded.

The Congo, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States underscored the fact that the text was being adopted pursuant to Articles 39 and 40 of Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter and that therefore compliance was mandatory under international law.

Argentina was convinced of the merits of the text and of the contribution it could make to ending the war. Because Iran and Iraq could not by themselves end hostilities, Italy said, the international community must use the means provided by the Charter for restoring a just and equitable peace. Ghana stressed the Council's recognition of the magnitude of the war damage to both sides and the need for reconstruction with international assistance. Venezuela stressed that the resolution's implementation would entail difficulties and sacrifice for both sides.

The USSR believed that the resolution provided a just basis for settlement of the conflict, which it did not wish to degenerate into an international crisis. International waters were being plied by an increased number of warships belonging to States located thousands of kilometres from the area. One party was using the situation in the Persian Gulf to realize long-held plans to acquire new strongholds for its air force and navy. Warships that did not belong to the area should be withdrawn as soon as possible and Iran and Iraq should in turn refrain from threatening international shipping. Full implementation of the resolution should demonstrate the world's ability to renounce force and move towards a new kind of political thinking, in keeping with the realities of the end of the twentieth century.

Japan hoped that Member States would faithfully implement the resolution, which it believed would serve as a precedent in future efforts for the peaceful settlement of disputes.

Iraq said that it had never wanted the war imposed on it in 1980, that it had always called for a just peace and that it had accepted previous Security Council resolutions on the conflict. It welcomed the consultations conducted by the Council during the past months, and assured the Council that it would study the new resolution with care. In a 23 July letter,⁽¹²¹⁾ Iraq welcomed the resolution and said it was ready to co-operate in its implementation. It said it took the expression "without delay" in paragraphs 1 and 3 to mean, respectively, that the withdrawal of forces to internationally recognized boundaries would be completed within 10 days after a cease-fire and that prisoners of war would be released and repatriated within eight weeks.

Iran, which did not participate in the meeting, declared in a 22 July letter⁽¹²²⁾ that the resolution suffered from fundamental defects and incongruities and lacked the minimum balance necessary for future constructive activities. The United States had been forced to repair its fragile situation by a series of propagandist activities, Iran charged, and was preparing to widen the regional turbulence by strengthening its military presence in the Persian Gulf. Further, Kuwait was continuing to provide political, financial and logistical support to Iraq, and to allocate to Iraq a share of its oil revenues. Iran asked the Secretary-General and members of the Security Council to call on the United States to halt its expansionist policies; it also asked that France end its policy of arming Iraq. Iran detailed its official position on resolution 598(1987) in an 11 August letter,(123) charging that it had been formulated by the United States with the explicit intention of intervening in the Persian Gulf, that it reflected the Iraqi formulae for settling the conflict and that therefore it could not be considered impartial or practical. It warned that failure to resolve the crisis would precipitate the conflict's expansion to unpredictable dimensions.

Communications (23 July-22 December).

From mid-July to December, a number of further communications on the situation were transmitted by regional groups of States.

In a declaration issued at Copenhagen on 3 September,(124) the member States of EC supported resolution 598(1987) and condemned recent attacks on merchant ships in the Persian Gulf. In a declaration issued after a meeting of the European Council (Copenhagen, 4 and 5 December),(125) the EC heads of State and Government reiterated support for the resolution and proposed that action be taken to enforce its implementation by means of a follow-up resolution.

In its final communique, the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly (New York, 5-7 October),(126) welcomed the Security Council's recent efforts to settle the Iran-Iraq conflict and appealed to both countries, to cease hostilities.

In a communique issued following a meeting of the Ministerial Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 24 and 25 October),(127) the Council condemned Iran's acts of aggression and declared that any such act against a Council member State would be considered an act against all its members.

The communique of the Committee of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 28 and 29 October)(128) emphasized the need for the immediate implementation of resolution 598(1987), the withdrawal of foreign naval forces from the Persian Gulf and the safeguarding of freedom of navigation in the region.

In its Final Declaration, the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference (Amman, Jordan, 8-11 November)(129) condemned Iran for delaying its acceptance of resolution 598(1987), affirmed its solidarity with Iraq and Kuwait in confronting Iranian aggression, and appealed for measures to persuade Iran to respond to the call for peace.

Kuwait transmitted a 6 December message from the Chairman of the current session of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, hoping that steps would be taken to halt the Iran-Iraq conflict.(130)

Meanwhile, additional communications continued to be received from both sides to the conflict and from Kuwait.

Iran reported on 23 July(131) that on 17 July Iraqi war-planes bombed villages near Sardasht, killing three persons and wounding 12.

Iraq, on 27 July,(132) charged that Iranian forces on 23 July shelled Basrah and Halabjah, wounding six persons.

Iran alleged on 27 July(133) that on 23 July three Iraqi fighter planes bombed the vicinity of Marivan, killing three farmers and a number of cattle, and that on 25 July Iraq violated the airspace over Bakhtaran and bombed the village of Salehabad in Ilam, killing three persons and wounding 12. On 28 July,(134) Iran also protested that Iraq on 25 July launched attacks in the Meymak operational theatre and the Sumar region; it claimed that Iraqi forces retreated after suffering 1,000 casualties.

Iraq complained on 29 July(135) that on 24 July Iranian artillery shelled Basrah, damaging several dwellings, on 27 July hit Qal'at Diza, Sulaymaniyah district, killing seven persons, and Qazaniyah, wounding two, and on 28 July pounded Basrah, Qal'at Diza and Zirawah township, killing seven persons and wounding four.

Kuwait, on 29 July(136) alleged that Iran had escalated its threats against Kuwait, particularly since the adoption of Security Council resolution 598(1987). It cited statements by Iranian officials warning that, in response to what they called Kuwaiti provocations, Iran had adopted a new policy of tit-for-tat and that Kuwait would be a target for Iranian missiles. Kuwait requested the Secretary-General to act to counter those threats. Iran, replying on 14 August,(137) stated that it had called on Kuwait to maintain neutrality in the war; regrettably, not only had Kuwait financially supported Iraq but its officials had publicly acknowledged that their ports and airspace were at Iraq's disposal. Moreover, Kuwait had dragged the super-Powers into the Persian Gulf. If Kuwait observed the rules of neutrality, Iran would respond appropriately.

On 30 July,(138) Iran denied the allegations in the Iraqi letters of 7,(114) 12(116) and 15(117) July that it had shelled residential areas, and recalled that it had always been prepared to grant clearance for the United Nations team stationed in Baghdad to visit the sites and verify the truth or falsity of such charges. On 31 July,(139) Iran stated that Iraq had repeatedly made false allegations as to Iranian attacks on Iraqi residential areas, the most recent claiming attacks in north-eastern Iraq on 29 and 30 July; it was becoming clear that with those false allegations, Iraq was preparing to resume its attacks on Iranian cities, Iran said, asking the international community to take serious measures to prevent the recurrence of the war of the cities. Also on 31 July,(140) Iran reported two violations of its territory by the United States; on 11 July, it alleged, at 0645 hours, three United States F-14 aircraft entered Iranian airspace and, at 0647 hours, two F-14s entered Iranian airspace. At the same time, a United States navy vessel allegedly warned an Iranian patrol aircraft over Iranian territorial waters not to approach the ship. Iran said that the current United States policy in assisting the enemies of Iran as well as its own violations of Iranian territory revealed the nature of its so-called peace policy.

On 4 August(141) Iraq charged that Iranian forces on 1 August shelled a housing complex in the town of Qal'at Diza, killing one and wounding nine persons; on 30 July, it alleged, Iranian artillery had shelled Basrah, damaging houses, and on 29 July, shelled Zirawah and Qal'at Diza, killing seven and wounding four persons.

Iran reported on 5 August(142) that Iraq had bombarded residential areas of Sardasht on 11 and 13 July, killing one person and wounding two, and in addition, on 11 July, the township of Mirabad, killing one and wounding four.

Iraq and Iran exchanged notes verbales on 7(143) and 14 August,(144) respectively, concerning Iranian naval manœuvres in its territorial waters in the Persian Gulf and the Gulf of Oman. Iraq(143) stated that on 3 August Iran warned vessels against approaching those waters; as was known, Iranian territorial waters covered a part of the waters between the Tunb and Forur islands and a part of the Strait of Hormuz. As was known also, the Strait of Hormuz was regarded as a strait used for international navigation linking two parts of the high seas, so that navigation in it was governed by the transit passage regime (under article 38 of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea(145) or by the innocent passage regime (under article 16 of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone(146). Under both provisions, the coastal State might not suspend passage through the Strait. The Tunb and Forur islands fell under the same provisions governing international straits. The Iranian announcement, Iraq asserted, constituted a dangerous precedent, violating a fundamental principle of international law at a time when the international community had called for compliance with Security Council resolution 598(1987).

Iran replied(144) that Iraq had violated international law by starting the war against Iran and by attacking commercial shipping in the Persian Gulf. Iran's naval manœuvres, it said, were in response to United States military threats carried out in support of Iraq. The announcements in connection with the manœuvres were designed to inform non-belligerent civilian vessels and aircraft of the scale of the manœuvres and to safeguard their security; therefore, they could in no way constitute violation of the right of transit and innocent passage.

On 10 August,(147) Iraq forwarded the details of 24 alleged acts of armed aggression by Iran since the adoption of resolution 598(1987). In 13 of the incidents, Iran was alleged to have shelled civilian population centres, killing eight persons and wounding 27. Iraq asked the Secretary-General and the Security Council to assume responsibility immediately for implementing the resolution. In another letter of the same date,(148) Iraq reiterated that Iran had shelled several Iraqi cities and towns between 1 and 9 August.

Kuwait charged on 12 August(149) that on 1 August demonstrators organized by the Iranian Revolutionary Guards and some Iranian parties stormed the Kuwaiti Embassy in Teheran, burning Kuwait's flag, detaining the Kuwaiti Charge d'affaires, seizing official documents, confiscating the passports of Kuwaiti diplomats, removing telecommunications and facsimile equipment, looting the Ambassador's car, destroying other items and hoisting the Iranian flag over the Embassy. Kuwait had demanded an explanation, but there had been no response from Iran.

On 13 August(150) Iraq protested that Iran on 11 August shelled Basrah and Qal'at Diza, wounding four persons and damaging houses.

Iraq, on 16 August,(151) described what it called additional acts of armed aggression by Iran between 7 August and 15 August; among them were shellings of civilian population centres which killed three persons and wounded 10. Commenting on Iran's rejection of resolution 598(1987), Iraq called for the application of Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter against the Iranian regime. In a 19 August letter, Iraq charged that Iran shelled Basrah and Qal'at Diza on 11 August, wounding four persons, shelled the Baymalik housing complex on 13 August, wounding two persons, shelled Al-Uzair, Bayarah and Qazaniyah on 16 August, damaging dwelling-houses, and shelled Basrah, Al-Uzair and Qal'at Diza on 18 August, also damaging dwellings.

Iran forwarded two letters on 19 August, reporting that on 17 July Iraqi aircraft bombed Sardasht, killing three persons and wounding 12,(153) and that on 29 July Iraqi planes attacked the western Saleh-Abad region of Ilam, wounding three persons.(154) In another 19 August letter,(155) Iran enclosed excerpts from an article by the Iraqi Ambassador to the United States which appeared in the Christian Science Monitor of 3 August; Iran stated that the excerpts confirmed that Iraq had resorted to force to settle its disputes with Iran and that one of its aims was to topple the Iranian Government.

On 24 August,(156) Iran alleged that Iraq bombarded civilian and industrial centres on several occasions between 25 July and 21 August, killing 103 persons and wounding 296. Iran also reported on 24 August(157) that attacks by Iraq on 23 August against civilian and commercial quarters in Dorood, Tabriz and Imam Khomeini port had killed and wounded a large number of civilians and caused extensive non-military damage; it drew the United Nations attention to Iraq's continued violation of international humanitarian law. On 25 August,(158) Iran transmitted a telegram from the Chairman of the Labour and Social Affairs Committee of the Islamic Consultative Assembly, calling attention to Iraq's increasing attacks on Iranian industrial centres; hundreds of workers had been killed. The Chairman appealed to the Secretary-General to prevent further bombardment of those centres, especially during working hours.

Iraq alleged on 25 August(159) that Iran shelled Basrah on 19, 22 and 23 August and the Baymalik housing complex in Qal'at Diza on 21 August, while bombing the town of Isma'il, Dohuk governorate, a village in Sulaymaniyah governorate, and a village in Majar district, Maysan governorate, on 22 August; 33 persons were killed and 117 wounded. On 27 August,(160) Iraq charged that Iran on 24 August shelled Basrah, the Baymalik complex and the village of Nouredine, wounding three persons. Also on 27 August,(161) Iraq cited a 20 August Reuters report of a statement by the Speaker of the Iranian Parliament, declaring that Teheran could not accept Security Council resolution 598(1987) because Iraq was not described as the aggressor and that Iran would continue the war for another 20 years in order to overthrow Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. In two additional 27 August letters, Iraq quoted statements made by the Iranian Prime Minister at a 25 August Teheran press conference(162) and in a radio broadcast later the same day,(163) which, Iraq said, showed Iran's determination to continue the war and draw the region into further tragedies.

Iran, on 28 August,(164) reported 16 additional attacks by Iraq on Iranian targets, including oil installations, between 25 July and 18 August, in which 71 persons were killed and 219 wounded. In a 29 August letter,(165) the Iranian Foreign Minister stated that Iraqi attacks on Iranian oil installations in the Persian Gulf had widened the scope of the war; retaliation would be carried out in kind. The Persian Gulf, due to United States interference, had become susceptible to unlimited widening of the war. The solution to the crisis was to be found in refraining from attacks on ships, neutrality by those countries supporting Iraq and the withdrawal of foreign forces from the area.

On 29 August,(166) Iraq again called for the application of the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter to Iran; it alleged 25 Iranian acts of armed aggression between 20 July and 24 August and the shelling of civilian population centres in Iraq on 47 occasions between 20 July and 28 August. Iraq protested on 31 August(167) that Iranian artillery had shelled Basrah on 26, 27 and 28 August, wounding one person, and shelled the Baymalik housing complex on 27 August, and alleged on 1 September@8 that it had hit Basrah on 30 and 31 August, killing three persons and wounding 17, and, also on 31 August, three villages in the Kalaa Dazah district.

Kuwait charged on 1 September(169) that on 31 August an Iranian gunboat attacked the Kuwaiti freighter Jabal Ali with rockets and machine-gun fire while on its way from the seaport of Khor Fakkan to Dubai; it deplored Iran's continued acts of piracy against Kuwaiti vessels. Kuwait alleged on 4 September(170) that that day Iran fired a missile at industrial installations in the south of Kuwait, damaging them; it hoped that the Secretary-General would immediately consult with the Security Council on measures to prevent Iran from continuing to attack Kuwait. In a 7 September reply,(171) Iran rejected the Kuwaiti allegations as baseless, and stated that such fabrications were examples of the attempt by Iraq and its allies to justify the illegitimate military presence of foreign Powers in the Gulf.

In two letters of 2 September, Iran alleged that on 29 August Iraqi artillery shelled Abadan and Khorramshahr, (172) and that Iraq on 30 August attacked the cities of Hamadan and Tabriz and an industrial workers' facility; 23 persons were wounded.(173) Iran claimed on 3 September(174) that on 1 September Iraqi war-planes bombed civilian areas in Isfahan and Khuzistan provinces, killing 20 persons.

Iraq, on 2 September,(175) protested against what it called Iran's persistent attacks on the residential quarters of Basrah, charging that 26 persons had been killed and 100 wounded between 30 August and 2 September. Iraq transmitted a Reuters report of 3 September on the shelling of Basrah by Iranian artillery 20 kilometres away.(176) Iraq, on 4 September,(177) reported that Iran was continuing its shelling of civilian centres such as Qal'at Diza, Khas, Nur-al-Din, Sirwan and Basrah; 12 persons were killed and 27 wounded.

On 7 September,(178) Iran alleged that Iraq shelled Sardasht on 4 September, killing nine persons and wounding 100 others, while its war-planes bombed civilian areas in Khuzestan province, resulting in an undetermined number of casualties.

Iraq drew attention to a 30 August Agence France-Presse report,(179) referring to an Iranian

Press Agency dispatch which quoted the Iranian Minister for the Revolutionary Guards as stating that Baghdad would be crushed by Iranian missiles and that the Iraqi President would be overthrown. Iraq cited a speech by the Iranian Prime Minister over Teheran radio on 30 August,(180) which it said provided conclusive evidence of the expansionist and aggressive Iranian policy. Iraq alleged on 8 September that Iran shelled Qal'at Diza and neighbouring villages on 5 September and Basrah and Mandali, wounding one person, on 6 September. (181)

Iran transmitted on 8 September(182) a list of the violations of international law by United States forces in the Persian Gulf from 3 June to 10 July; the list consisted of 26 instances of warnings to and interceptions of Iranian sea-patrol aircraft by United States ships and aircraft. In two 8 September letters, Iran charged that on 12, 20, 21 and 22 August Iraqi war-planes attacked Imam Khomeini port, Koola village in Marivan, Arak, Haft Tappeh, Allah-o-Akbar and Dorood, killing 20 persons and wounding 227,(183) and that on 1, 2 and 3 September Iraqi aircraft bombed Isfahan, Arak, Gross Sofla, Elia and Nahavand, killing 31 persons and wounding 51.(184) On 9 September,(185) Iran reported that Iraqi war-planes bombed Dorood and violated the airspace of Arak, and on 10 September,(186) alleged that Iraqi war-planes bombed Bakhtaran, Bistoon, Sangharabad, Khorramabad and Razgari, killing 13 persons and wounding 60.

On 14 September,(187) Iraq alleged that on 11 and 12 September Iran shelled a number of population centres, killing 12 persons and wounding 16. Iraq quoted a statement by the Iranian Prime Minister on 2 September,(188) warning the United States that, if it supported Saddam Hussein, it must expect grievous blows to be delivered against it by Islamic forces. Iraq transmitted extracts from a statement by the Speaker of the Iranian Consultative Assembly at a meeting with Iranian officials of missions to Arab and African countries broadcast by Teheran radio on 7 September,(189) which it said gave proof of Iran's expansionist course against Iraq and all the countries of the Gulf. Iraq quoted excerpts from statements by the Iranian President on 28 August(190) and by the Speaker of the Iranian Majlis on 4 September,(191) which, it said, demonstrated that Iran was determined to continue the war and its expansionist policy.

Iran charged on 14 September(192) that on 10 September Iraqi war-planes bombed Bakhtaran, Eslamabad-e-Gharb, Dorood, Darreh Salbakht and Eslamabad, killing four persons and wounding 21 others, while between 10 and 12 September Iraqi artillery shelled Khorramshahr, Abadan and Sardasht, killing two and wounding 11 persons. Iran complained on 18 September(193) that the day before Iraqi forces bombarded Isfahan, Aghajari and Khuzistan.

Iraq claimed on 16 September(194) that on 14 September Iranian artillery pounded Basrah, destroying several houses. It claimed on 19 September(195) that on 17 and 18 September Iran shelled several population centres, killing 10 persons and wounding 38. On 21 September,(196) it reported that on 19 September Iran bombed residential centres, killing one person and damaging vehicles and other property.

On 22 September,(197) Iran alleged that on 16 and 17 September Iraqi war-planes bombed Alkhorshid village in Ramhormoz and two industrial units in Azna and Varazan, Lorestan province.

Iraq, on 23 September,(198) detailed Iranian acts of aggression on 21 and 22 September, and, in three 29 September letters, charged further aggression on 21,(199) 24 and 25(200) and 26, 27 and 28 September.(201) A total of 54 persons were killed and 301 wounded.

On 29 September,(202) Iran charged that Iraqi war-planes attacked Bakhtaran and Azna on 21 September, killing 21 persons and wounding 100. In another 29 September letter,(203) Iran complained that implementation of resolution 598(1987) was being blocked by Iraq and the United States.

Iraq alleged further acts of aggression by Iran in letters of 2,(204) 5,(205) 6(206) and 7 October;(207) rocket and artillery fire on 29 and 30 September and 3, 4, 5 and 6 October were said to have killed 40 persons and wounded 135 others. Also on 6 October,(208) Iraq stated that a total of 284 persons had been killed and 1,165 wounded between 20 July and 5 October; in addition, there had been large-scale destruction of dwellings, schools, mosques and hospitals.

Iran, on 8 October,(209) charged that on 16, 17, 18, 20 and 23 September Iraqi war-planes bombed Alkhorshid village in Ramhormoz, industrial units in Azna and Razan, Lorestan province, Bakhtaran and Ilam and broke the sound barrier over several cities in Khuzistan province; 10 persons were killed and 32 injured, and a technical school and residential units damaged. Iran claimed on 9 October(210) that on 8 October United States helicopter gunships and gunboats attacked Iranian patrol boats in Iranian territorial waters around Farsi Island; it condemned United States policies in the Gulf and called for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from the region.

The United States, on 9 October,(211) reported that on 8 October Iranian patrol craft fired on a United States helicopter over international waters in the Gulf; United States helicopters returned fire, sinking one of the craft, following which United States patrol craft recovered six Iranian sailors from the water, two of whom died of wounds. The others would be repatriated through a third country.

On 12 October,(212) Iraq charged that on 7 and 8 October Iran shelled Sulaymaniyah, Qal'at Diza district, killing seven persons and wounding 13 others. On 11 October,(213) it claimed that on 10 October Iran hit Baghdad with a ground-to-ground missile that killed and wounded several persons.

On 12 October,(214) Iran alleged that Iraqi forces bombarded Ilam, killing one and wounding two persons, Iraq charged in two letters of 13 October that on 10 and 11 October Iran shelled Basrah, Diyala, Qazaniyah and Sirwan subdistricts, Niniveh, Sulaymaniyah and Wasit, killing five persons and wounding 19,(215) and that on 13 October Iran destroyed a school and 16 houses in Baghdad with a ground-to-ground missile, killing 29 children and two women and wounding 196 children and 11 women.(216) On 15 October, Iraq alleged that further acts of Iranian aggression occurred on 13 and 14 October;(217) a total of 11 persons were killed and 56 others wounded. On 14 October,(218) Iraq quoted an Agence France-Presse report of a speech by the Iranian President, declaring that as long as Saddam Hussein remained in power, there would be no peace in the region.

Iran alleged on 15 October(219) that Iraqi forces on 10 and 12 October bombed Koot Abdullah, Isfahan and Sohail, wounding three persons and destroying a house. On 16 October (220) Iran charged that Iraqi military attacks had gained momentum in the preceding two months and that consequently, from 22 August to date, 134 persons had been killed and 1,086 others wounded; it stated that unfortunately the continuation of Iraqi attacks on civilian targets had not received adequate consideration from the United Nations. On 20 October,(221) Iran complained that on 6 and 19 October United States war-planes entered the airspace of Chahbahar in violation of international law.

Iraq, on 19 October(222) alleged that seven persons had been wounded on 15 October when Iranian forces attacked Basrah and Sulaymaniyah. On 28 October,(223) it charged that in the recent Iranian shelling of those cities two persons had been killed and six others wounded. On 30 October,(224) it charged that on that day Iran hit Baghdad with a ground-to-ground missile; it stated that at the precise time the Security Council was preparing to enforce resolution 598(1987) Iran was persisting in its effort to reopen the war of the cities. Iraq again charged on 9 November(225) that Iran hit Baghdad, causing 10 deaths and injuring 106 among the civilian population. On 2(226) and 6 November (227) Iraq charged that on 27, 28 and 29 October and 2 November Iran shelled Basrah, killing 11 persons and wounding 57. On 9(228) and 11 November,(229) Iraq reported that on 5, 8, 9 and 10 November Iran shelled Basrah and Sulaymaniyah, killing six and wounding 27 persons.

Iran, on 12 November,(230) drew attention to what it called violations of international law in the Persian Gulf by the United States, consisting of threats to civil airliners over the international air corridor and interference with Iranian patrol craft over Iranian territorial waters; it described 10 incidents which had allegedly occurred between 26 May and 16 August.

Iraq alleged on 16 November(231) that on 12 and 13 November Iran shelled Basrah and Sulaymaniyah, wounding two persons.

On 18 November,(232) Iran charged that on 4 November Iraqi war-planes bombed a civilian area in Khuzistan province, killing one person and injuring another, and on 15 November bombed Sarabad village, Bakhtaran province, killing one and injuring four other persons.

On 18 November,(233) Iraq charged that on 16 November Iran bombarded residential areas in Basrah and elsewhere, killing nine persons and wounding 29 others. Also on 18 November,(234) Iraq transmitted a 17 November address by the Iranian President which, it said, displayed Iran's attitude towards resolution 598(1987) and its in-the region. On 19 November,(235) Iraq alleged that on 18 November an Iranian aircraft bombed a hospital in the town of Dohuk, killing nine persons and wounding 64 others. Also on 19 November(236) Iraq transmitted statements broadcast on 13 and 14 November over Teheran radio by the Speaker of the Iranian Consultative Assembly and the Iranian Prime Minister, respectively, on mobilizing support for the war, thus demonstrating that Iranian officials were warmongers.

On 20 November,(237) Iran transmitted a note sent to the Embassy of Sweden, Interest Section of the United Kingdom in Teheran, claiming that on 10 October a British naval unit warned an Iranian sea-patrol aircraft flying over its territorial waters; Iran protested against the unjustified action, which, it said, constituted a breach of the territorial integrity of Iran, and called for an end to such behaviour.

An alleged Iraqi attack on Iran's Bushehr nuclear power plant was the subject of a number of letters. On 20 November,(238) Iran enclosed a 19 November letter from the President of the Iranian Atomic Energy Organization (AEO) to the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA); Iran stated that since 17 November Iraq had twice attacked the nuclear plant, thereby escalating the scope of the conflict and posing the threat of a nuclear disaster to the region. In the letter to IAEA, Iran said it regretted that IAEA had not, despite its past reports, taken any measures regarding persistent Iraqi attacks on the nuclear plant. Iran asked that IAEA assign a mission of inspectors as well as nuclear safety and radiation protection experts to the plant site.

On 26 November,(239)the IAEA Director General enclosed two 17 November telex messages addressed to him by the President of the Iranian AEO his 18 November reply to the Iranian representative in Vienna and a 24 November telex to the President of AEO. In its telex messages, Iran charged that in the attack on the Bushehr plant nine staff members and one foreign expert had been killed and several wounded, and serious damage had been inflicted on the plant, and requested an urgent mission of IAEA safeguards inspectors to inspect the plant's nuclear material and to advise AEO on safeguard measures. It also recalled previous Iraqi attacks on the plant, on 24 March 1984, 12 February and 5 March 1985 and 12 July 1986, and requested IAEA to prevent further attacks. In his replies to Iran, the Director General stated that IAEA was ready to dispatch an expert mission but first needed information on the state of the plant's nuclear material so it could establish the type of assistance to be provided as well as more information on the nature and quantity of the nuclear material stored at Bushehr.

On 25 November,(240)Iraq alleged that on 15 November Iran attacked Basrah and Sulaymaniyah, killing 14 persons and wounding 20. In two letters of 30 November, Iraq quoted what it said were Iranian statements broadcast over radio Teheran on 26 November(241) and 24 November(242) which, it said, proved Iraq's assertions that the Iranian regime was aggressive and expansionist. Iraq complained on 1 December(243) that on 29 November Iranian forces had bombarded Sulaymaniyah, killing one person and wounding two others. On 2 December,(244) it protested that on 30 November and 1 December Iran continued to bombard residential neighbourhoods, hitting Diyala and Wasit, destroying four houses and damaging three others. It claimed on 8 December(245) that on 1 and 2 December Iran shelled Basrah and Sulaymaniyah, wounding two persons.

In two letters, one dated 10 December(246) and the other 21 December,(247) Iran drew attention to what it described as violations of international law between 23 August and 11 November by United States forces in the Persian Gulf, which consisted of interference with Iranian sea-patrol aircraft flying over international and Iranian territorial waters, interception of Iranian patrol aircraft by United States war-planes and violations of Iranian airspace by United States aircraft.

Iraq charged on 14 December(248) that on 11 December Iran bombarded Basrah, Diyala and Wasit, killing two persons and wounding 14 others; on 20 December(249) that on 19 December Iranian troops launched an attack in the Zubaydat area within the Fourth Army Corps sector, using a force estimated at two brigades supported by tanks; and on 21 December(250) that on 16 and 17 December Iran shelled Sulaymaniyah and Diyala, killing two persons and wounding four.

On 21 December,(251) Iraq stated that in a 16 December dispatch from Nicosia, Cyprus, Reuters had reported that the Speaker of the Iranian Consultative Council had termed resolution 598(1987) unacceptable, which, it said, proved that the positions adopted by Iran in diplomatic relations were nothing but deception.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 December, the Security Council again took up the situation between Iran and Iraq, and, after consultations, its President made the following statement on behalf of the members:(252)

"The members of the Security Council take note of the assessment made by the Secretary-General to the Council on 10 December 1987 following his consultations with the emissaries of the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq concerning the implementation of resolution 598(1987) as well as of his request for a fresh and resolute impulse from the Council. They express their grave concern over the slow pace and lack of real progress in these consultations.

"Determined to bring the conflict to an end as soon as possible, they reaffirm their commitment to resolution 598(1987) as an integrated whole. They also reaffirm that the implementation of that resolution is the only basis for a comprehensive, just, honourable and durable settlement of the conflict.

"They support the Secretary-General's outline plan, as endorsed by the Council, as well as his efforts to implement resolution 598(1987).

"They consider it essential that the Secretary-General continue to fulfil the mandate assigned to him by resolution 598(1987).

"They declare their determination, in accordance with paragraph 10 of resolution 598(1987), to consider further steps to ensure compliance with this resolution."

Meeting number: SC 2779.

Communications (28-31 December). On 28 December,(253) Iraq alleged that on 22 December Iran bombarded Diyala, wounding three persons. Two additional letters were received from Iraq on the same date. One reported a statement by the Iranian Prime Minister,(254) broadcast on 27 December by Teheran radio, declaring that the Iranian Government continued to follow guidelines which called for resistance to the last drop of blood, and allocating 41 per cent of the total budget in 1988 to the war effort; Iraq said the statement confirmed that Iran was bent solely on pursuing the war. The other quoted statements by Iranian officials,(255) broadcast by Teheran radio on 24 and 25 December, asserting respectively that Iran would continue the war to victory and the overthrow of the tyrannical Iraqi Government and declaring that the Security Council's 24 December statement was false and threatening and that if it desired an end to the war its path was clear.

On 31 December,(256) Iraq stated that the Iranian Prime Minister had again provided confirmation that his regime knew no other policy than war and expansionism. In a speech on 28 December, broadcast by Teheran radio, he had denounced attempts being made in the Security Council to impose an arms embargo against Iran and had vowed to retaliate against all those threatening Iran.

Use of chemical weapons

Communications (2 January-11 May). The use of chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq conflict was again the subject of numerous communications addressed to the Secretary-General in 1987.

Iran, on 2 January,(257) charged that on 31 December 1986 Iraq used mustard gas against Iranian positions on the western fronts, injuring 400 people; Iran said that was the second time in the past week that Iraq had resorted to chemical weapons in violation of the 1925 Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare. On 5 January,(258) Iran reported that, in addition to the injured, 20 persons had been killed as a result of that use of chemical weapons; the locations of the attacks were given as a field hospital in the Sumar region and a troop concentration point in Bakhtaran province.

In another letter of 5 January,(259) Iran emphasized its intention to continue its compliance with the 1925 Protocol, but warned of the dangers stemming from the widening of the use of chemical weapons by Iraq. It asked the Secretary-General to dispatch an expert team to investigate Iraq's recent deployment of chemical weapons and to halt their use by Iraq; if necessary, Iran would assume itself entitled to resort to any measures in legitimate self-defence.

On 9 January,(260) Iran charged that in the preceding 18 hours Iraq resorted to chemical weapons in the Karbala-5 operational theatre (the Shalamchah area, the Shalamchah-Basrah road, along the border fortifications and Umm-ul-Tavil Island) and on 7 January in the Sumar region.

Iran alleged on 14 January(261) that on 9 January Iraq announced it would deploy chemical weapons in the Karbala-5 operational theatre and that later the same day Iraqi jet fighters carried out several chemical attacks against Iranian forces around Fish Lake, west of the Shalamchah area; the number of casualties was not yet available. On 15 January,(262) Iran reported that on 13 January Iraq resorted to chemical bombardment of Iranian positions in the southern theatre, wounding a number of combatants. On 19 January,(263) Iran alleged that Iraq used chemical weapons on 10 and 14 January in the southern theatre and on 18 January in the Sumar region; it was incumbent upon the United Nations, Iran stated, to take immediate steps to halt the war crimes being repeatedly committed by Iraq. On 22 January, (264) Iran reported that two Iranian combatants, Ismail Khani and Javad Hamneshin, who had been severely wounded by Iraqi chemical weapons and sent to Recklinghausen, Federal Republic of Germany, for treatment, died on 20 January; another Iranian combatant had died on 19 January.

Iran, on 26 January,(265) alleged that Iraq used chemical weapons on 16 January in Ein Khosh, in Penjvin and in the southern operational area; on 18 January in the Abadan area; on 20 January at Gharrehbalagh; and on 24 January over a wide area of the battlefronts. Details of casualties were awaited; meanwhile, Iran requested that a team of United Nations experts be dispatched to the region to document the occurrences.

Iran, on 3 February,(266) reported that a tenth Iranian combatant, Mohammad Rezaie, wounded by Iraqi chemical gases, died at Recklinghausen on 29 January. On 6 February,(267) Iran charged that on 24 January Iraq used chemical bombs and rockets in the Karbala-5 operational theatre; about 80 Iranian combatants were wounded. Similar attacks took place in the same area on 25, 27, 28 and 29 January. Iran stated that so far the Security Council had met all its reports of Iraqi use of chemical weapons with indifference; it repeated its request for the dispatch of a team of experts to document the latest Iraqi war crimes. Iran reported on 6 February(268) that on 4 February another victim of Iraqi chemical gases, Mostafa Rostampour, died in Paris, where he had been flown for treatment; he had been wounded on 31 December 1986 in the Sumar operational region.

On 9 February,(269) Iran complained that on 6 February Iraqi war-planes used chemical weapons in the area known as the Pentagon in the southern operational theatre, wounding several Iranian combatants. On 25 February,(270) Iran claimed that a captured Iraqi officer had confirmed the use of chemical weapons by Iraq; he was said to have stated that Iraq, in addition to dropping chemical bombs by plane, fired toxic gases at Iranian positions by 55 and 175 mm guns. He also said that Iraq on several occasions had mistakenly bombed its own forces during the Karbala-5 operations, resulting in heavy losses. Iran reported on 19 March(271) that a further Iranian combatant, wounded by Iraqi chemical weapons, Hassan Ali Ashraf, died on 13 March in Recklinghausen. On 7 April,(272) Iran charged that on 7 March Iraq resorted to chemical weapons in the Karbala-5 operational theatre, and on 10 April(273) protested that three times since 7 April Iraq had used those weapons in the Karbala-8 theatre, wounding a number of combatants.

On 13 April,(274) Iran charged that on 10 and 11 April Iraq deployed two artillery shells and 40 chemical rockets containing mustard gas, killing or wounding 120 persons. Iran charged on 13 April(275) that Iraq repeatedly resorted to chemical warfare on a very large scale on 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 April, striking residential areas of Abadan, Khorramshahr and Mared and wounding at least 100 persons; Iran suggested that adoption of a mandatory embargo on the export to Iraq of chemical agents and the technology for their production could prevent their further use.

On 14 April,(276) Iraq alleged that on 10 and 11 April Iranian forces, while renewing their attempts to invade Iraq, carried out chemical raids on the southern front, killing nine soldiers and wounding 376; the agent used was phosgene. Iraq charged on 16 April(277) that on 12 and 13 April Iran had used chemical agents-mustard gas as well as phosgene—in attacks on the southern front.

On 16 April,(278) Iran protested that that day Iraqi war-planes dropped chemical bombs on the villages of Kandar and Aloo near the city of Baneh, wounding 10 persons; it stated that Iraq's despicable record of chemical weapons use could not be concealed by such baseless allegations as those made on 14 April by Iraq. On 21 April,(279) Iran reiterated the serious nature of Iraq's recent use of chemical warfare against civilians, its deployment of new and more deadly chemical compounds and the establishment of extensive machinery for their production; Iraq's chemical weapon production facilities threatened the authority of the rules of international law as developed in conventions and protocols. Therefore, Iran called on the United Nations expert team, which for the first time was to visit Iraq (see below), to inspect those facilities.

Further, Iran transmitted an 18 April statement(280) concerning what it called Iraq's baseless allegations of chemical weapons use by Iran; Iraq had resorted to such propagandistic lies to lessen international pressure against it.

Iran, on 27 April,(281) charged that on 21 April Iraq deployed chemical weapons in the Baneh and Sardasht areas, injuring 60 persons. Also on 27

April,(282) Iran said that Iraqi use of chemical weapons not only had led to the injury of Iranians but had also victimized the Iraqi people themselves. Thirty-five Iraqi villagers, who were treated for chemical wounds on 26 April at a Bakhtaran hospital, were the victims of Iraqi war-planes that bombed 24 villages in Erbil province on 4 April. According to the wounded, Iraqi commanders forced the villagers to tell a United Nations team that they had been attacked by Iranian planes.

On 28 April,(283) Iran claimed that Iraqi war-planes with chemical weapons attacked Abadan on 11 April, the Kooh-E-Noori area on 15 April and Baneh and surrounding villages on 22 April. On 30 April,(284) Iran asserted that the United Nations team had an obligation to visit the sites of reported chemical attacks inside Iraq; neglect would lead to the production of an incomplete report. On 4 May,(285) Iran provided the details of alleged chemical attacks by Iraq-means of delivery, number of bombs, contaminated area, agent used-between 11 and 21 April on Shalamchah, Dolkan, Kooh-e-Rooyeh, Sakhre-Sangi and Kandeh Soor, wounding 85 persons. Iran charged on 7 May(286) that on 28 April three Iraqi war-planes attacked the Sardasht and Mavoot operational theatres with chemical bombs, and on 8 May(287) that on 7 May the Karbala-10 operational theatre came under heavy chemical attack by 10 Iraqi war-planes; the silence of the international community in the face of Iraq's war crimes would be interpreted, Iran said, as nothing but support for and condonation of its criminal behaviour. Therefore, it urged that Iraq be condemned for the illegal course it had taken during the war.

On 11 May,(288) Iran alleged that on 7 and 8 May Iraqi war-planes dropped chemical bombs on the Anjineh military base, the village of Bol Hassan in the Baneh area, the Panjwin area and the Hezar Gholleh Heights in the Sardasht area. In the Panjwin area, one square kilometre was contaminated and 10 persons were injured; blister and nerve agents were used. Iran observed that following the visit of the United Nations specialist team (see below), Iraq had become even more intent upon using chemical warfare as a routine tactic. Also on 11 May,(289) Iran conveyed 18 copies of a video cassette of the British Broadcasting Corporation's Panorama programme entitled Secrets of Samarra, which, it said, presented evidence of the production of chemical weapons in a plant at Samarra, Iraq.

Specialists' report. On 8 May, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a report(290) by four specialists who had investigated allegations of the use of chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq conflict. The investigation was a continuation of those conducted in 1984.(291) 1985(292) and 1986.(293) The Secretary-General said that the specialists had unanimously concluded that chemical weapons continued to be used in the conflict, giving rise to the fear that such use could escalate and undermine the 1925 Geneva Protocol.

The specialists visited Iran from 22 to 29 April and Iraq from 29 April to 3 May. They reported that in Iran they found numerous civilian casualties as a result of mustard gas attacks; in a Teheran hospital, they saw the effects of mustard gas on a mother and her two daughters aged two and four years, and had the distressing experience of witnessing the suffering of the four-year-old child less than two hours before her death; in addition, they saw the damaging effects of the gas on the mother, who was four months pregnant. They emphasized that chemical weapons were inhumane, indiscriminate in their action and caused long-term disabilities and suffering, and that their continued use increased the risk of their use in future conflicts. They warned that if the Geneva Protocol was irreparably weakened, it might lead in the future to the threat of the use of biological weapons.

The report covered the mission's terms of reference, review of documentation, methodology, investigations, summary of findings, conclusions and appendices, and was subsequently augmented by an addendum on civilian and military patients examined at hospitals in Iran and Iraq. A total of 46 patients were examined in Teheran. Twenty-three patients were seen at Baghdad and Basrah military hospitals; in addition, nine soldiers back on duty at the front were examined, the results of five autopsies were studied, and three cadavers were observed. Symptoms and signs indicating the use of mustard gas included conjunctival irritation, chemical irritation of the respiratory tract, cutaneous lesions, blisters and ulcerations. One group showed symptoms and signs of bronchitis and bronchiolitis with pulmonary oedema produced by an asphyxiating chemical agent, probably phosgene. Specific attack sites were visited, and soil samples and the metal components of munitions analysed.

The specialists concluded that in the areas around Khorramshahr, Iran, chemical weapons were used against Iranian positions, the main agent being mustard gas, although nerve gas probably was used on some occasions. Around Baneh, Iran, military personnel as well as civilians had been injured by mustard gas. In the Khorramshahr area, weapon fragments indicated that chemical bombs had been used against Iranian forces; moreover, it was likely that chemical rockets had also been used. In the areas around Basrah, Iraqi forces had been affected by mustard gas and possibly phosgene. In the absence of conclusive evidence of the weapons used, it could not be determined how the injuries were caused.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 May, the Security Council considered the mission's report and, after consultations, the President made the following statement on behalf of its members:(294)

"The members of the Security Council, seized with the continuing conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq, have considered the report of the mission of specialists dispatched by the Secretary-General to investigate allegations of the use of chemical weapons in the conflict.

"Deeply dismayed by the unanimous conclusions of the specialists that there has been repeated use of chemical weapons against Iranian forces by Iraqi forces, that civilians in Iran also have been injured by chemical weapons, and that Iraqi military personnel have sustained injuries from chemical warfare agents, they again strongly condemn the repeated use of chemical weapons in open violation of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 in which the use of chemical weapons in war is clearly prohibited.

"Recalling the statements made by the President of the Council on 30 March 1984, 25 April 1985 and 21 March 1986, they again emphatically demand that the provisions of the Geneva Protocol be strictly respected and observed.

"They also condemn the prolongation of the conflict which, in addition to violations of international humanitarian law, continues to exact an appalling toll of human life, to cause heavy material damage in the two States, and to endanger peace and security in the region.

"They express grave concern over the dangers of an extension of the conflict to other States in the region.

"They reiterate their call for respect for the territorial integrity of all States in the region.

"They reaffirm resolution 582(1986) and call on both parties to co-operate with the efforts of the Security Council to open the way to an early settlement of the conflict on the basis of justice and honour.

"They express support for the Secretary-General's efforts to restore peace to the peoples of Iran and Iraq and call on both States to respond positively to his efforts."

In an 18 May letter,(295) Iraq complained about the wording of both the Council's statement and the mission's report. It pointed out that both documents stated that Iraqi military personnel had been injured by chemical agents, without actually affirming that Iran had used chemical weapons.

On 21 May,(296) Iran regretted that, except for a few minor changes in wording, the Security Council deemed it sufficient in its 14 May 1987 statement simply to repeat its 21 March 1986 statement.(293) Taking such a weak position, Iran stated, meant that either the Council had not considered the specialists' report or it was incapable of discharging its duties. Concerted political efforts must be undertaken to consolidate the 1925 Geneva Protocol and to persuade Iraq not to use chemical weapons. Moreover, all States should be called on to refrain from exporting to Iraq various chemicals which could be converted to chemical weapons.

In a 25 May statement,(297) the 12 member countries of EC expressed concern that the Geneva Protocol had been repeatedly violated; they reiterated that they would continue to develop their internal arrangements to ensure that the Protocol was respected, appealed for an immediate end to the use of chemical weapons in the conflict and to all parties to exercise restraint in the Persian Gulf, and called on the belligerents to end the conflict based on Council resolution 582(1986).(30)

Additional communications (15 May-1 December). Iran, on 15 May,(298) forwarded photographs depicting the effect of chemical weapons, allegedly deployed by the Iraqi regime against the inhabitants, among them children, of Alut village near Baneh. Iran, on 2 June,(299) reported that Iraqi war-planes on 7 May dropped chemical bombs on Sarsool and Bolhassan villages in Baneh, wounding 92 persons.

Iran alleged on 10 June(300) that on 24 May Iraqi artillery subjected a brigade of the Malteh battalion at Baneh to chemical attack. On 17 June,(301) it complained that on 14 June Iraq fired chemical shells at Iranian positions in the Husseiniyeh operational theatre on the southern front. On 23 June,(302) Iran charged that Iraqi forces on 21 June twice resorted to suffocating and nerve gases in the Nasr-4 operational theatre; the chemical agents were delivered by artillery barrages and rockets in Espidarre Valley, Kulan Heights, the slopes of Qashan and the outskirts of Mawut township. About 120 persons were injured. (303)

In a 21 June letter, transmitted by Iran,(304) four Iraqi pilot prisoners of war allegedly stated that they had been threatened and coerced into using chemical weapons against Iranian troops; they believed that the Iraqi regime would embark on extensive use of those weapons against the civilian population of cities. Iraq replied on 11 September (305) that the pilots' statements were not correct and that they had been forced to speak as a result of physical and psychological torture.

On 29 June,(306) Iran alleged that on 26 June in its north-western region Iraqi helicopters fired chemical rockets to deliver suffocating and nerve gases, which injured more than 60 persons.

Iran, in 12 letters between 29 June and 10 August, reported chemical attacks against Sardasht, a city of 12,000 in western Iran, which allegedly injured more than 2,000 persons, more than 60 of whom died. Two letters of 29 June (307) alleged that attacks by Iraqi war-planes occurred on 28 and 29 June; Iran said the Security Council's reluctance to deal with Iraqi persistence in violating international humanitarian law had served to embolden Baghdad to continue its war crimes. On 30 June,(308) Iran reported that to date 12 persons had died. On 2 July,(309) Iran alleged that on 1 July Iraqi planes bombed the suburbs of Sardasht. On 6 July,(310) it claimed that the number of dead from the Sardasht attacks had reached 35, and, on 7 July,(311) that the number had risen to 60.

On 13 July,(312) Iran alleged that on 29 June two Iraqi helicopters dropped chemical bombs on Sardasht, wounding two people; also, it charged, on 1 July Iraq fired artillery chemical shells containing nerve gas at the Baneh area, injuring 10, while on 11 July, Iraqi planes chemically bombarded the Piranshahr-Sardasht road. On 16 July,(313) Iran reported that one of the civilian victims of the attack on Sardasht, Qader Karim-Vahed, had died at a military hospital in Madrid, Spain, where he was being treated. Iran, on 17 July,(314) asserted that if the Security Council had been more firm, Iraq would have halted its use of chemical weapons.

Iran, on 29 July,(315) forwarded photographs of women and children who were victims of the Sardasht bombardments, stating that it was the duty of the international community to prevent the further perpetration of such inhumanity. In a letter of 1 August,(316) the members of the Iranian medical community asked the Secretary-General to condemn the chemical bombing of Sardasht. On 10 August,(317) Iran charged that the Security Council and the Secretary-General had refrained from the least possible action in relation to the Sardasht tragedy; it was ridiculous that in its support for Iraq, the United States, which had condemned the chemical attacks, should be able to obstruct the Council's consideration of the matter. Owing to bilateral considerations, France and the United Kingdom had acted likewise. Iran addressed several questions to the Secretary-General, declaring that the answers would help Iran to evaluate the role of the United Nations in relation to the war and its various dimensions.

Iran, on 8 October,(318) alleged that between 16 and 23 September Iraqi war-planes bombed Alkhorshid, Azna, Ilam and Razan, killing at least 10 persons and injuring 32, and that on 17 and 18 September Iraqi war-planes dropped chemical bombs on the Iraqi region of Kani Massi. On 9 October,(319) Iran charged that on 8 October Iraq subjected Sumar to a large-scale chemical bombardment.

On 1 December,(320) Iran transmitted a 27 November report from Beirut, Lebanon, by Reuter, giving an account of an August 1986 fire in a secret chemical weapons factory in Beirut's Fur

El-Shebbak district. The factory allegedly used the cover of a Federal Republic of Germany pharmaceutical company to process imported raw materials into chemical weapons for Iraq; at least 19 persons were reported to have been killed in the fire and 35 others injured.

Attacks on commercial navigation and oil installations

Communications. Reports of increased attacks on commercial navigation and of attacks on oil installations were received by the Secretary-General in 1987.

Iran, on 5 January,(321) transmitted what it described as remarks by a captured Iraqi pilot on the routine use of Kuwaiti airspace to attack ships in the Persian Gulf; the pilot stated that the Iraqi aim was to create a widespread feeling of insecurity in the Gulf and block Iran's economic relations with the world. Kuwait, responding on 12 January,(322) said it had already refuted such allegations many times and affirmed that it did not permit any party or forces to use its territory or airspace.

On 13 August,(323) Iran reported that on 10 August in the Gulf of Oman off the port of Fujayrah, the United States-operated supertanker Texaco Caribbean, flying a Panamanian flag and carrying Iranian crude oil, struck a mine. It stated the occurrence indicated that Iraq and the United States had not limited their tension-creating tactics to the Persian Gulf but had extended them, and that United States policy in the Gulf was contrary to the peace process and the safeguarding of navigation in international waters. The United Kingdom, on 22 September,(324) protested that on 21 September the tanker Gentle Breeze, registered in Hong Kong and flying the British flag, was attacked by one or more Iranian naval vessels in international waters in the northern Gulf; a serious fire started and one crew member died. It had demanded an explanation and an apology from Iran and assurance that such unjustified attacks on unarmed British merchant vessels would not be repeated; it reserved the right to claim compensation.

Letters from the United States, Iran and Bahrain dealt with the seizure of an Iranian vessel. On 22 September,(325) the United States reported that in accordance with Article 51 of the United Nations Charter it had taken defensive action against an Iranian naval vessel laying mines in international waters 50 miles north-east of Bahrain. The USS Jarrett was towing the vessel to an anchorage, and the repatriation of the Iranian sailors was being facilitated. Iran, on 22 September,(326) alleged that an American helicopter gunship had attacked an Iranian commercial vessel, Iran-Ajr, on 21 September; a number of persons had been killed and the rest of the crew taken hostage. That aggression, Iran stated, was another attempt to block any constructive activity towards peace. The Security Council should put an end to such acts. On 26 September (327) Iran charged that the United States had taken the vessel to Bahrain territorial waters and blown it up; it demanded that the United States pay compensation and withdraw its forces from the region. Bahrain, on 1 October,(328) declared that the vessel had been neither brought into nor destroyed in its territorial waters.

Kuwait, on 15 October,(329) alleged that on that date Iran fired a missile at a Liberian oil tanker flying the Liberian flag in Kuwaiti territorial waters; damage was being assessed. Kuwait, on 16 October,(330) protested that on that date Iran fired another missile which fell 3 kilometres south of the Mina Al-Ahmadi oil terminal, hitting a United States-registered oil tanker anchored in Kuwaiti territorial waters; the captain and 17 crew members were wounded. The United States, on 19 October,(331) reported that the Iranian missile had struck the United States flag vessel Sea Isle City and that in response the United States had taken defensive action on 19 October, its naval vessels destroying what it described as an Iranian military ocean platform at Rashadat in international waters of the Persian Gulf. The United States charged that the military forces on the platform had engaged in a variety of actions against United States flag and other non-belligerent vessels and aircraft. Prior warning had been given to permit the evacuation of the platform.

On 20 October,(332) Iran charged that on 19 October the United States attacked two Iranian oil platforms-Resalat and Rashadat-purely economic installations, wounding a large number of civilian employees, that the United States was participating actively in the war on the side of Iraq, and that the Security Council had failed to address the violation of resolution 598(1987) by one of its permanent members.

Kuwait claimed on 22 October(333) that that day Iran fired a Silkworm missile at Kuwaiti territory, hitting an oil-loading platform, setting it ablaze and injuring a number of its workers. In a 22 October statement on the Iranian aggression against Kuwait,(334) Egypt asserted that it constituted a serious escalation of the conflict, that it was directed against a State not a party to the conflict, and that it believed the aggression compelled the Arab nation to react collectively against a policy designed to intensify the war.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 19 November,(335) transmitted a letter concerning events in the Gulf, where, it said, navigation had come under threat from the stepped-up naval presence of the United States and its European allies; it called for the withdrawal of those fleets and opening the door to peace.

Kuwait charged on 8 December(336) that on 7 December Iran launched a Silkworm missile at the southern part of Kuwait's territorial waters which fell close to Kuwaiti oil installations.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to a 1984 Security Council resolution,(337) submitted in December 1987 a report(338) on the numerous attacks on merchant vessels in the Gulf region reported by Governments and the International Maritime Organization from 1 January to 31 December 1987. He said that such incidents had increased more than 50 per cent over the previous year, with devastating effects for the shipping industry, and called again for an end to the incidents, emphasizing the urgency of upholding freedom of navigation in international waters.

Treatment of prisoners of war

Communications. The treatment of prisoners of war (POWs) was taken up in a number of letters to the Secretary-General.

Iraq reported on 4 February(339) that on 2 February the Iranian press agency had confirmed the killing of a captured Iraqi pilot whose aircraft had been shot down that day north of Arak, and urged condemnation of the crime. On 9 February,(340) Iraq reported that on 2 February Teheran radio stated that Iran officials at a round-table meeting had discussed the situation of Iraqi POWs, noting that more than 13,500 non-Muslim prisoners had embraced Islam, which Iraq termed a violation of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War. Iraq, on 18 May,(341) charged that Iran was continuing its inhuman practices in relation to Iraqi pows with the aim of modifying their political and religious beliefs.

Iran, on 3 June,(342) rejected Iraq's allegations as baseless and pointed out that the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) had concluded that Iran's treatment of Iraqi POWs had been satisfactory; on the other hand, ICRC reports indicated the inhumane treatment to which Iranian POWs had been subjected. In addition, Iran said that it had presented several proposals for the exchange of POWs which had been rejected by Iraq.

Iraq, on 6 July,(343) stated that the Iranian letter of 3 June included falsifications and distortions; Iraq had not rejected any practical proposal for the exchange of pows.

Replying to the 6 July Iraqi letter, Iran, on 14 August,(344) recalled that its proposals regarding pows had been sent to the Secretary-General in 1985,(345) but that Iraq had avoided acceptance, and, although Iraq alleged ill-treatment and torture of Iraqi prisoners of war, its reaction to Iran's proposal for a new investigation of POW conditions in both countries was silence. Since Iraq claimed that it had not seen the Iranian proposals, Iran presented them again: freeing all wounded and ill POWs, in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Convention; exchange of civilians held as prisoners and of persons held prisoner contrary to the Convention; exchange of all prisoners under 16 years old at the time of their arrest and of all persons over 60; and exchange of social workers, physicians and other groups based on humanitarian considerations. Iran was also prepared to exchange three Iraqi prisoners, as chosen by Iraq, for the ex-Iranian Oil Minister and his deputies, though they had been arrested illegally.

On 26 August,(346) Iran forwarded the names of 26 Iraqi POWs who had refused to return to Iraq and had asked for asylum in Iran; they were among 102 disabled Iraqi POWs released unilaterally by Iran in March 1987. One reason for their refusal to return was the extreme suppression that existed in Iraq, they said. They called on the Secretary-General to pressure Iraq to stop harassing their families and to inform them about their families' whereabouts.

On 21 December,(347) Iraq reported that on 16 December the Iranian news agency stated that 450 Iraqi pows had been released by Iran, had requested political asylum in Iran and would take part in the fighting against Iraq. Iraq protested against the brutal practices that Iran applied in its treatment of Iraqi prisoners and its coercing them to fight against their country.

Chapter VIII

Mediterranean

In 1987, political issues in the Mediterranean continued to centre on Cyprus and the tensions surrounding relations between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States. Concerning security and co-operation in the Mediterranean, the General Assembly expressed concern over the persistent tension there and urged all States to reduce it and promote peace in the area.

Regarding Cyprus, the Secretary-General noted that a deadlock existed in his efforts to restart effective negotiations between the Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots; distrust between the leaderships of the two communities remained deep; tension had risen over the question of Varosha; a potentially dangerous military build-up was taking place on the island; and the Governments contributing troops to the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) were increasingly dissatisfied at the growing financial burden they had to bear and at the lack of progress on the political front. The Secretary-General continued to explore with both parties certain measures that would create confidence between them, in the hope that that would make it possible to resume the negotiating process. However, at year's end both sides remained divided on how to move forward. The Secretary-General believed that at stake was the goal of a federal republic of Cyprus, non-aligned and enjoying sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity (see p. 6).

Expressing its strong support for the Secretary-General's good offices mission, the Security Council twice extended the stationing of UNFICYP.

Cyprus question

Throughout 1987 the Secretary-General continued his mission of good offices concerning Cyprus, entrusted to him by the Security Council. In February, he sent a mission to the island to explore ways of overcoming the political impasse and proposed to the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities that a round of informal, confidential and non-binding talks be initiated. The Greek Cypriot side accepted the suggestion in March, while, in May, the Turkish Cypriot community stated that it would not accept unless the other side first accepted the Secretary-General's March 1986 draft framework agreement. (I)

The Secretary-General also held consultations with Security Council members on a proposal made by President Spyros Kyprianou of Cyprus to convene, under United Nations auspices, an international conference to discuss the withdrawal of Turkish forces and international guarantees. The Secretary-General informed President Kyprianou that his consultations had revealed a lack of agreement on the proposal among the members.

In May, the Turkish Cypriot leader, Rauf R. Denktas, reaffirmed the Turkish Cypriot community's negative position regarding internationalization of the Cyprus problem and emphasized the need to deal with all issues as an integrated whole in line with the approach followed since August 1984.

The Secretary-General, meeting separately with both leaders in October, expressed concern over the persisting deadlock and continuing tensions between the two sides, and reaffirmed his determination to find a way acceptable to all of negotiating a settlement based on the 1977(2) and 1979(3) high-level agreements. Mr. Denktas repeated his readiness to negotiate all issues as an integrated whole once the Greek Cypriot side had accepted the 1986 draft framework agreement. President Kyprianou set out his proposal for the island's complete demilitarization and again proposed the convening of an international conference.

The Secretary-General believed that despite an inability on the part of the two sides to agree on the manner in which a negotiating process could be kept in being, a settlement could be concluded based on the 1977 and 1979 high-level agreements provided that both sides showed greater understanding of each other's aspirations and concerns.

In October, the Secretary-General announced his intention to appoint Oscar Camilion (Argentina) as his Special Representative in Cyprus.

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of UNFICYP on 12 June (resolution 597(1987)) and on 14 December (resolution 604(1987)) - which continued its peace-keeping and humanitarian tasks.

Although the Cyprus question was on the agenda of the General Assembly in 1987, it was not discussed.

Cyprus and Turkey addressed letters to the Secretary-General on various aspects of the situation throughout the year. Those from Turkey forwarded letters from the Turkish Cypriot community signed by Rauf R. Denktas, as "President of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", by Kenan Atakol, as "Minister for Foreign Affairs and Defence" of that "Republic", or by Ozer Koray as its "representative".

Communications (6 January-28 May). On 6 January,⁽⁴⁾ Cyprus objected to a statement by Turkey's Prime Minister, Turgut Ozal, reported in the Turkish Cypriot press on 3 January, claiming that Turkey could ignore international reactions against its 1974 invasion of the island since "presidential elections", a "referendum" and "general elections" had been held in Cyprus and the so-called Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus had been consolidated. Cyprus also conveyed the 3 January response of President Kyprianou, who said that Mr. Ozal's statement proved that what took place in the occupied part of Cyprus was being decided by Turkey in line with its partitionist and expansionist policies.

Cyprus, on 26 March,⁽⁵⁾ protested three alleged violations of its airspace by Turkish air force jet fighters. Responding on 31 March, ⁽⁶⁾ Mr. Koray stated that the overflights had taken place within what he called the sovereign airspace of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus".

Denouncing the presentation of "credentials" to Mr. Denktas by Turkey's new "ambassador" as reported in the Turkish Cypriot press, Cyprus, on 11 April,⁽⁷⁾ asserted that the action constituted a new illegality, violated 1983⁽⁸⁾ and 1984⁽⁹⁾ Security Council resolutions and undermined efforts towards finding a solution to the Cyprus problem.

On 27 April,⁽¹⁰⁾ Cyprus protested a statement by Mr. Ozal, who had said that the territories in Cyprus had already been defined and that the coexistence of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities, with different language and religion, had had no meaning. Cyprus also objected to a statement by Turkey's Foreign Minister, Vahit Halefoglu, who had said that Turkey had the defensive right to protect the Denktas régime in the Turkish-occupied part of Cyprus from military attacks.

On 13 May,⁽¹¹⁾ Cyprus said that, as reported by Reuters News Agency, Mr. Denktas had stated on 11 May that he would decline further talks on Cyprus with the Greek Cypriots, if they took what he called another one-sided resolution to the United Nations, and he had rejected parallel talks through the Organization, as proposed by the Secretary-General.

Mr. Koray, on 21 May,⁽¹²⁾ objected to an 11 March 1987 resolution of the Commission on Human Rights concerning human rights in Cyprus (see p. 807). According to Mr. Koray, the reference to refugees was a misnomer. He asserted there was no refugee problem in Cyprus. He also objected to the call for the tracing of and accounting for missing persons in Cyprus, without any reference to the autonomous Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus (see p. 241), which, he noted, had been carrying on its task since 1981. Mr. Koray believed that the resolution was political, not humanitarian.

Responding on 26 May,⁽¹³⁾ Cyprus said the Commission's text constituted a landmark resolution whose validity did not depend on what Cyprus termed the aggressor's approval or the approval of its agents in occupied areas. Cyprus asserted that it was up to the Commission's members to pronounce themselves on the situation and up to Turkey to implement the resolution's provisions.

In its final communique, the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January)⁽¹⁴⁾ expressed support for the Muslim Turkish people of Cyprus in their efforts to secure their legitimate rights and regain equal status with the Greek Cypriots.

Report of the Secretary-General (May /June). In his report to the Security Council⁽¹⁵⁾ on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering 1 December 1986 to 29 May 1987, the Secretary-General summarized UNFICYP's activities (see p. 246) and his good offices mission, and reported on the situation regarding the maintenance of the status quo.

He had sent a mission to Cyprus in early February 1987 to explore again how progress could be made, given the firm positions taken by the Greek and Turkish Cypriots on the draft framework agreement presented to them in March 1986.⁽¹⁾ The position of Mr. Denktas was that the Turkish Cypriot side accepted the draft and could not accept any other procedure, while President Kyprianou had maintained that before the Greek Cypriot side could express its views on that draft, agreement had to be reached on withdrawal of Turkish forces and settlers, effective international guarantees and the application of the three freedoms-of movement, of settlement and the right to property. Since the Secretary-General felt that his efforts to overcome the impasse could be greatly helped if both sides were to clarify their respective positions on the issues impeding progress, he had suggested initiating confidential and non-binding informal discussions between his aides and the two sides, solely to assist him and not to renegotiate any document he had presented since August 1984. The Secretary-General reported that on 17 March the Greek Cypriots accepted his suggestion but, on 15 May, the Turkish Cypriot side said it would not accept unless the Greek Cypriots first accepted the draft framework agreement.

The Secretary-General recalled that President Kyprianou on 26 September 1986 had asked him to sound out the Security Council members on the President's proposal to convene an international conference. (16) The Secretary-General pointed out that President Kyprianou had been informed in November 1986 that the soundings had revealed differing positions and a lack of agreement among the members.. On 10 March 1987(17) President Kyprianou stated that none of the arguments against his proposal were valid, and reiterated his view that the Secretary-General should endorse the proposal and make a determined effort to convince those Security Council members who were against convening such a conference under United Nations auspices. The Secretary-General informed the President on 10 April that the position remained unchanged. On 11 May, Mr. Denktas stated that the negative position of the Turkish Cypriots on the conference remained unchanged, emphasizing the need to deal with all issues as an integrated whole in line with the approach followed since August 1984. President Kyprianou on 19 May(17) reiterated his position on the holding of a conference.

A major cause of the difficulties, the Secretary-General said, was the deepening distrust between the two sides and the lack of contact, at all levels, between the two communities. He said he would continue to explore with the parties certain measures that would create confidence and appealed to them to co-operate with the efforts that UNFICYP and other United Nations agencies were making to promote normal contacts between Greek and Turkish Cypriots.

The Secretary-General pointed out that distrust had been heightened by the strengthening of Turkish forces in the north. He had repeatedly explained to Turkey that the Greek Cypriot side felt threatened and thus felt obliged to strengthen its own defences. He renewed his appeal to Turkey to reduce its forces on the island. The Secretary-General again commended to the Security Council, as well as to the two parties in Cyprus and to Turkey, the verification proposal he had first floated in 1983—which called for UNFICYP to undertake regular inspections to verify the level of forces on both sides. He added that he had instructed the Force Commander to raise that issue again with the two sides.

On 21 May,(17) President Kyprianou told the Secretary-General that some 34,000 to 35,000 Turkish troops were in Cyprus and that the number of heavy tanks had increased by 50 per cent to 300. UNFICYP estimated that while no additional units appeared to have been moved in, Turkish soldiers numbered 29,000. UNFICYP confirmed a substantial increase in tank numbers.

In mid-May 1987, Turkish authorities advised the Secretary-General that their force level in Cyprus fluctuated because of the need to train new conscripts before the troops they were to replace returned to Turkey. A modernization programme, they said, had resulted in a temporary increase in tank numbers for logistical reasons and because of the need to train crews to operate new tanks before old ones were shipped back to Turkey.

The Secretary-General reported that Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot side had expressed concern over the strengthening of the Cyprus National Guard. On 30 March, Mr. Denktas, drawing attention to an agreement reportedly signed between Cyprus and Greece for the acquisition by Cyprus of arms and armaments worth 20 million Cyprus pounds, asserted that this further proved an ongoing armsbuildup by the National Guard. Cyprus reiterated that the new equipment was for purely defensive purposes.

The Secretary-General said that developments in Varosha (a community near the port of Famagusta, just inside the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces' cease-fire line) had adversely affected the island's political climate. Students attending a university established by Turkish Cypriot authorities were being housed in buildings inside Varosha's fenced area, thus breaching the status quo in Varosha, which had provoked protests from the Greek Cypriot side. He said he had made representations to the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot authorities to restore the status quo.

In January 1987, Mr. Denktas told the Secretary-General that the students were there temporarily and that they would leave as soon as alternative accommodation was available. On 10 March,(17) President Kyprianou protested the change in the status quo at Varosha and requested that the matter be resolved without delay. Replying on 9 April, the Secretary-General told the President that he was pursuing his efforts to that end. On 11 May,(17) President Kyprianou reiterated the need for the urgent restoration of the status quo and asked for the transfer of Varosha to United Nations administration in accordance with a 1984 Security Council resolution.(9) Despite a number of representations, the Secretary-General stated, it had not been possible to obtain a date for the departure of the students.

The Secretary-General provided Turkey with a map defining the perimeter of the fenced area and the activities within it which constituted the status quo, as recorded by the United Nations, to ensure that there was a clear understanding between the United Nations and Turkey pending a settlement.

In early April, the UNFICYP Commander met with the Commander of Turkish forces in Cyprus to work out arrangements to give UNFICYP personnel the freedom of movement necessary to verify that the status quo was maintained. The Turkish Commander informed the UNFICYP Commander that the matter should be raised with the Turkish Cypriot authorities. He confirmed however that all previous arrangements and understandings with respect to UNFICYP deployment in Varosha would be observed. On 11 May, Mr. Denktas stated that there was no common understanding between the Turkish Cypriot side and the United Nations regarding that status quo. The Secretary-General said he had reiterated on several occasions to the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot authorities that the United Nations considered Turkey responsible for maintaining the status quo in Varosha's fenced area.

Cyprus repeatedly protested to the United Nations the influx of some 60,000 to 62,000 settlers from Turkey. On 7 May, the Turkish Foreign Minister stated that some Turkish Cypriots living abroad had decided to return to the island's northern part and that 14,000 temporary and seasonal Turkish and other workers also had been admitted in view of a shortage of skilled and unskilled labour. The Secretary-General reiterated that nothing should be done to change the island's demography.

Cyprus complained about the desecration of churches in the north and submitted a list of 85 religious buildings that had allegedly been desecrated. The Secretary-General considered it the responsibility of those concerned to ensure that no desecration or destruction took place.

Cyprus protested the changing of numerous place-names in the island's northern part, which the Turkish Cypriot side said had resulted from the need to bring place-names into conformity with modern Turkish usage.

The Secretary-General reported that in view of the difficult situation he regarded it as essential that UNFICYP be kept in place and recommended that the Council extend the Force's mandate for a further six months. The Governments of Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom concurred with his recommendation, while Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot community indicated that their stand would be expounded in the Council(18).

The Secretary-General stated that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued to help the displaced and the needy on the island (see p. 247). Details were also given about the Force's continuing financial difficulties (see p. 248).

The Secretary-General noted that the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus had held five sessions, including 12 formal meetings, and focused on interviewing Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot witnesses concerning those cases before it. The Committee also examined ways of speeding its investigations (see p. 807).

Communications (3-23 June). Cyprus, on 3 June,(19) alleged three further violations of its airspace by Turkish jets. Refuting the allegations, Mr. Koray, on 23 June,(20) said the military exercises had taken place within the borders and airspace of his "Republic", with prior notification to UNFICYP.

On 8 June,(21) Cyprus objected to a statement by Mr. Halefoglu, reportedly made while commenting to journalists on the increase in Turkish troops in Cyprus mentioned in the Secretary-General's report (see above), in which he said that Turkey did not have to answer to anyone regarding their numbers and military equipment. Cyprus said that Turkey had once more resorted to its well-known tactic of alleging that the Turkish occupation troops were protecting Turkish Cypriot interests.

President Kyprianou, on 3 June,(22) described what he called Turkey's persistent policy of changing the demographic character of the occupied territory of Cyprus as one of the most alarming factors seriously threatening the prospects for a solution to the Cyprus problem.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council met on 12 June to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation to extend UNFICYP'S mandate. Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation, under rule 39a of its provisional rules of procedure, to Ozer Koray.

On that day, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 597(1987).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 29 May 1987,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1987,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) and other relevant resolutions,

I. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 December 1987;

^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1987;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 597(1987)

12 June 1987 Meeting 2749 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18909).

After the vote, Cyprus said the renewal of UNFICYP's peace-keeping mandate was imperative, owing to what it called the continuing Turkish aggression and occupation. Due to the 1974 invasion by Turkey, Cyprus stated, almost 40 per cent of Cyprus remained under occupation; 200,000 Cypriots had been uprooted from their homes and had become refugees in their own country; and 1,619 Cypriots were missing. It claimed that a Turkification programme was under way involving the expulsion of Greek inhabitants from the occupied areas, the importation of 65,000 settlers to usurp the homes of those expelled, the desecration of religious shrines and the destruction of Cypriot religious and cultural heritage. Cyprus said that the Turkish army had absolute control of the occupied area, intervening whenever and wherever it chose, seizing property and suppressing the people. It asserted that for every Turkish Cypriot there was a mainland Turk. Cyprus believed that segregating its people and dividing its territory remained Turkey's policy—a policy it justified as necessary for the Turkish Cypriot community's security. Cyprus asked how the majority of Cypriots—80 per cent of whom were Greek in origin and 2 per cent of other descent—could feel secure when an army of 35,000 Turkish troops remained on the island. There was no reason to segregate its people, Cyprus asserted, except for the policy of partition, aiming at the annexation of the occupied part of Cyprus which was contrary to international law, the United Nations Charter and United Nations resolutions. Cyprus charged that Turkey believed the increased strength of its army fell within its rights to defend itself. Parallel to the increase in troop strength, the influx of Turkish settlers in the occupied areas of Cyprus continued unabated, it said.

Greece felt that the fundamental issues of the Turkish army in the island and of the international guarantees had never been addressed, resulting in Cyprus always being asked to commit itself unrealistically on constitutional aspects without knowing what Turkey's intentions were regarding its army, its settlers and the international guarantees. The stagnation of the situation should be attributed to Turkey's insistence on maintaining a large and threatening occupation force. Regarding verification Greece said that it should not entail equal treatment of occupation and government forces, nor should a verification system lead to a freeze of existing military forces and therefore to the consolidation of a situation placing Cyprus under the threat of the occupation forces. It believed that verification would be useful in monitoring an orderly and timely withdrawal of occupation forces to allay the concerns of Turkish Cypriots regarding their security.

Speaking on behalf of the Turkish Cypriot community, Mr. Koray rejected the resolution in toto; the entity referred to in the resolution as the Government of Cyprus was an anathema to the Turkish Cypriots who reserved the names of usurpers and masqueraders for that entity. Mr. Koray said there was no single political authority representing both the Turkish Cypriots and the Greek Cypriots; there was a Greek Cypriot Government and State in south Cyprus, elected only by Greek Cypriots, and there was a Turkish Cypriot Government and State in northern Cyprus, elected by Turkish Cypriots. Change could only come, he asserted, through a bicomunal, bizonal, federal republic, voluntarily entered into by the two sides, based on absolute political equality. He believed that the 1986 draft framework agreement(1) was the only medium through which a comprehensive settlement could be reached. Turkish forces were stationed within the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" Mr. Koray stated, in accordance with Turkey's commitment to the security and well-being of the Turkish Cypriots, who faced increasingly hostile Greek and Greek Cypriot forces. He asserted that the Turkish Cypriots could not accept the tendency to overlook, or to create unjustified excuses for, the persisting military buildup in southern Cyprus.

Turning to the issue of Varosha, Mr. Koray said that it was part of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" and that its status was no different from that of any other area. The fact that no common understanding existed between the Turkish Cypriot side and UNFICYP regarding the status quo in Varosha did not mean that the Turkish Cypriot side did not have exclusive sovereignty over Varosha. Concerning the so-called settlers, Mr. Koray said his side objected to the use of that misleading term, which aimed only at covering up the Greek Cypriot's own long-standing campaign to alter the island's demography by having it colonized under Greece. The Greek Cypriots had an irresistible urge to present the Turkish Cypriot people as a minority instead of their equals in the body politic of Cyprus. Regarding allegations of the destruction of the Greek cultural and religious heritage of the island, Mr. Koray said that Turkish Cypriots had never acted with vengeance against any such heritage.

Similarly, Turkey objected to elements in the resolution. Regarding what Turkey called the buildup in the south, it said that eight new battalions had been introduced, bringing the total to 53; armoured personnel carriers had been increased by 156, bringing the total to 200 as of March 1987; and the number of armoured reconnaissance vehicles had increased by 112 to a total of 213. Other increases included new artillery, anti-tank weapons, gun-boats, reconnaissance aircraft and helicopters; new rocket-launchers and missiles had been included in the Greek Cypriot arsenal. Turkey had no doubts that if northern Cyprus were left without adequate defences, the Greek Cypriot side would not hesitate to use military force. It said that Turkish forces were sent to Cyprus in 1974 to prevent Greece's annexation of the island by force and had remained there partly to safeguard the security of the Turkish Cypriots until a negotiated settlement was reached. Turkey did not understand the concern over Varosha and the effort to create an issue over the so-called status quo there, since the Greek Cypriots had rejected Turkish Cypriot proposals and those made by the Secretary-General. Turkey said Varosha was part of the "Republic" and that there could be no other status for it unless agreement was reached between the two sides on a comprehensive settlement.

Communications (24 July—24 November). On 24 July(23) Cyprus denied allegations made the day before by the Turkish Prime Minister, Mr. Ozal, accusing Cyprus of arming Kurdish insurgents seeking autonomy in Turkey and training certain subversive and separatist elements in government-controlled areas of Cyprus. Mr. Ozal had also alleged that weapons seized from rebels in south-eastern Turkey had been sent there via the Greek sector of Cyprus.

Cyprus denounced on 19 August(24) a reported statement by Mr. Ozal declaring that the Turkish armed forces would not leave Cyprus until the security of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" was fully guaranteed, and asserting that those forces originally went to Cyprus to secure peace. It also objected to a statement by Mr. Denktas concerning the opening of Varosha for settlement, indicating that if Cyprus took the issue before the General Assembly, the Turkish Cypriot side, not having the right to speak before that body, would then seek its rights through other means.

On 31 August,(25) Cyprus alleged three additional instances of violations of its airspace on 25 August by Turkey's air force.

On 22 October,(26) Mr. Denktas claimed that a 9 October statement by President Kyprianou before the General Assembly(27) indicated that the Greek Cypriots were determined to destroy progress achieved through the Secretary-General's good offices mission. According to Mr. Denktas, their aim was to seek a conclusion, not on an agreed basis, but on a basis which would reinforce what he described as their ill-gotten political superiority on the island vis-à-vis the Turkish Cypriots. Although President Kyprianou dwelled on Varosha as a separate topic, it was an integral part of a comprehensive package deal, Mr. Denktas added.

Responding on 5 November,(28) Cyprus charged Mr. Denktas with rehashing old Turkish propaganda, capitalizing on its so-called acceptance of the Secretary-General's ideas and suggestions, and the alleged negative approach by the Greek Cypriots. The Turkish side, Cyprus said, had failed to mention that it rejected the Secretary-General's suggestion to hold informal and confidential non-binding talks. Concerning Varosha, Cyprus pointed out that the Secretary-General's May report (see p. 239) stated that the United Nations considered Turkey responsible for maintaining the status quo there.

On 14 October,(29) Cyprus forwarded, for circulation to the General Assembly, a 2 September resolution on human rights violations in Cyprus, adopted by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (see also p. 807). By the text, the Sub-Commission demanded the full restoration of human rights in Cyprus, including freedom of movement, freedom of settlement and the right to property, urged the immediate tracing and accounting for missing persons there, and expressed concern at the policy and practice of implanting settlers from Turkey in the occupied territories of Cyprus.

In a 4 September letter(30) to the Sub-Commission's Chairman, Mr. Atakol contended that the resolution was one-sided, politically motivated, misleading and unjust, since the Turkish Cypriots were absent from the Sub-Commission's meetings and were considered non-existent. He objected to the resolution's wording concerning missing persons, what he termed the so-called settlers, displaced persons and the questions of freedom of movement and settlement and the right to property. Similarly, Mr. Koray, in a letter to the Secretary-General of 26 October,(31) objected to the Sub-Commission's grave concern about the gross and systematic violations of human rights in Cyprus and termed as misleading the phrases "the return of refugees to their homes" and "the full restoration of human rights". The resolution's reference to the Secretary-General's efforts to resolve the Cyprus problem, Mr. Koray said, was cynical. He asserted that the question of missing persons was being abused by the Greek Cypriots for political purposes, that the question of the so-called settlers was a product of Greek Cypriot exaggerations, and that the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces from the south and the north was a political matter directly related to a comprehensive settlement. Attached to the letter were extracts from a 28 February 1976 interview with a priest in charge of a Greek Cypriot cemetery, who allegedly witnessed the burial of truck-loads of unidentified Greek Cypriots in mass graves during the July 1974 coup, and minutes of talks between Mr. Denktas and Archbishop Makarios concerning missing persons, held on 27 January and 12 February 1977.

On 10 November,(32) Cyprus said the international community's concern about human rights violations stemmed from the continuing occupation of nearly 40 per cent of Cyprus by Turkish armed forces, which, in spite of United Nations resolutions calling for their unconditional withdrawal, had increased in numbers and improved their arms. It asserted that the humanitarian problem of missing persons remained unsolved. According to Cyprus, Turkey persistently denied 200,000 refugees the right to return to their homes, hindering freedom of movement, settlement and the right to property. Annexed to the letter were extracts from a 10 July 1976 report of the European Commission of Human Rights concerning allegations of human rights violations by Turkish armed forces in Cyprus during 1974 and 1975, and press clippings dating from 1976 to 1980 concerning refugees and missing persons in Cyprus.

In their final communique, the Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Non-Aligned Movement (New York, 5-7 October)(33) expressed concern that part of Cyprus continued to be under foreign occupation and demanded the withdrawal of all occupation forces and colonialist settlers as an essential basis for the solution of the Cyprus problem. They supported the continuation of the Secretary-General's good offices mission. The Commonwealth heads of Government (Vancouver, Canada, 13-17 October),(34) in their communique, reaffirmed support for the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and non-aligned status of Cyprus and for the good offices mission.

The Secretary-General, on 29 October,(35) informed the Security Council of his decision to appoint Oscar Camilión (Argentina) as his Special Representative in Cyprus. Mr. Camilión succeeded James Holger (Chile), who had been. Acting Special Representative since January 1985.

On 2 November,(36) Cyprus alleged that four violations of its airspace took place on 27 October by Turkish jet fighters.

The "Legislative Assembly of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", on 30 October,(37) called on Greek Cypriots to accept the Secretary-General's 1986 draft framework agreement.@ It also called on Member States to give no credence to what it said were Greece's propaganda efforts and to reject its undermining the good offices mission.

On 18 November,(38) Mr. Atakol charged that a Greek Cypriot request to debate the Cyprus problem in the General Assembly after a four-year interval was to gain Member States' support for doing away with the 1986 draft framework agreement. According to Mr. Atakol, the Greek Cypriots were taking advantage of the fact that the Turkish Cypriots did not have the right to participate in the debate on an equal footing. Protesting Mr. Atakol's statement, Cyprus, on 17 December,(39) asserted that the international community had never wavered in its solidarity with Cyprus and cited examples of such support from communiques issued by the October meetings of the Non-Aligned Movement(33) and the Commonwealth heads(34) (see above). Cyprus also cited as further examples of support resolutions concerning human rights violations in Cyprus adopted in 1987 by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission (see p. 807).

On 24 November,(40) Cyprus protested the intended visit of Turkey's President, General Kenan Evren, to the areas of Cyprus occupied by Turkey's armed forces, saying that it constituted another provocation and violation of the sovereignty of Cyprus.

Report of the Secretary-General (November). Reporting to the Security Council on operations in Cyprus covering 1 June to 30 November 1987,(41) the Secretary-General updated UNFICYP activities (see p. 246), summarized his good offices mission and reported on the question of the maintenance of the status quo.

As part of his efforts, he had met with Mr. Denktas on 1 October and with President Kyprianou on 8 October in New York, conveying to both his concern about the persisting deadlock and continuing tensions between the two sides. The Secretary-General reaffirmed his determination to pursue his efforts to find a way, acceptable to all, of negotiating a settlement based on the 1977(2) and 1979(3) high-level agreements, asking both leaders to improve the atmosphere between the two communities and urging Mr. Denktas to restore the status quo in the fenced area of Varosha. President Kyprianou reiterated his position that an international conference should be convened to give priority attention to the withdrawal of Turkish forces and settlers and to international guarantees. Mr. Denktas repeated his readiness to negotiate all issues as an integrated whole once the Greek Cypriot side had accepted the draft framework agreement. In his meeting with the Secretary-General on 8 October and again in a letter of 10 October, President Kyprianou proposed the total demilitarization of Cyprus and offered to dismantle its defences and disband the National Guard if all Turkish troops and settlers were withdrawn and the Turkish Cypriot armed forces were dissolved.

The Secretary-General expressed serious concern that negotiations had been deadlocked for 18 months and urged both parties to take advantage of the appointment of his new Special Representative, who would take up residence in Cyprus early in 1988.

The Secretary-General said tension between the two sides had continued, largely because of the military buildup and the persisting problem in Varosha, where the use of two hotels inside the fenced area to accommodate students continued unchanged; approximately the same number returned to the hotels in October, at the start of the academic year. On 1 October, he was again assured by Mr. Denktas that he had no intention of changing the status quo in Varosha, that the students were there temporarily and that the hotels would be vacated as soon as alternative accommodation had been arranged. The Greek Cypriot side again protested the matter, President Kyprianou having raised it on 8 October.

Concerning the military buildup on the island, the Secretary-General said he had pointed out to Turkey that its buildup was likely to result in similar action on the Greek Cypriot side and he had repeatedly appealed to Turkey to start by reducing its forces. He maintained that the verification scheme would be a useful way of reducing tension between the parties; while their initial reactions had been reserved, he hoped they would give it further consideration.

Referring to his recommendation that the Council extend UNFICYP's mandate for a further six months, the Secretary-General stated that Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom concurred, while Turkey, supporting the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, indicated that the draft resolution (see below) was unacceptable as a basis for UNFICYP's extension, but that its stand would be expounded before the Council.⁽⁴²⁾

The Committee on Missing Persons, at four sessions during the period under review (see p. 807), discussed the means available to accelerate the investigations and underlined a number of practical and psychological difficulties, including the time element.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council met on 14 December to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation to extend the UNFICYP mandate. Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate without the right to vote. Mr. Koray was also invited to participate under rule 39^b of the provisional rules of procedure.

The Council then unanimously adopted resolution 604(1987).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Operation in Cyprus of 30 November 1987,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1987,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 June 1988;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 31 May 1988;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 604(1987)

14 December 1987 Meeting 2771 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/19338).

After the vote, Cyprus claimed that the Turkish Cypriot community was losing its identity because of the massive importation of Turkish settlers, who, together with Turkish troops, were at least equal in numbers to the Turkish Cypriot community. Cyprus would welcome an independent committee of legal experts to investigate the issue of settlers and challenged Turkey to accept such an impartial body. There was an urgency, Cyprus asserted, to settle the issue of missing persons. Turning to Varosha, Cyprus said that it still remained under Ankara's military control, while the lawful inhabitants of the city were inhumanly and cruelly barred from resettling it. A prerequisite to any meaningful dialogue, Cyprus believed, was the urgent consideration of the withdrawal of Turkish troops and settlers, the question of international guarantees and the application of the three freedoms. Cyprus strongly supported the convening of an international conference and said it was committed to a peaceful settlement.

Greece supported those views, the Secretary-General's appeal to Turkey to reduce its forces on the island, the restoration of the status quo at Varosha and leaving the island's demography unchanged. Greece said that the withdrawal of all military forces and settlers constituted an absolute priority before arriving at a solution and urged the Council to consider President Kyprianou's proposal to demilitarize Cyprus (see above).

Mr. Koray said the Turkish Cypriot side rejected in toto the resolution as a basis for extending UNFICYP's mandate; the mere reference to the Greek Cypriot administration as the Government of Cyprus rendered it unacceptable. He charged that Cyprus had violated the fundamental principles of human rights and freedoms; it forcefully and illicitly occupied the seat of Government in total infringement of constitutional provisions and had subjected the Turkish Cypriot people to untold misery. Regarding Varosha, Mr. Koray said that it was part of the territory of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" and fell under its exclusive jurisdiction. He reminded the Greek Cypriots and others that causing false confusion over irrelevant matters would not warrant any alteration in Varosha's status. Concerning the alleged influx of settlers from Turkey, he said such propaganda terms were only formulations designed to cover up long-standing attempts by Greece and the Greek Cypriots to occupy the whole island, to alter completely its demographic structure and to have it colonized under Greece by means of armed violence and suppression. The missing persons issue would have been settled long ago had it not been for what Mr. Koray called the Greek Cypriot side's foot-dragging. He claimed that that side had spent huge amounts to purchase sophisticated weaponry, and more was being allocated for the same purpose.

Turkey objected to a number of elements contained in the resolution and could not consent to the extension of UNFICYP's mandate. Focusing on what it called some of the Greek Cypriot contentions, Turkey said the sole reason for the Turkish forces in northern Cyprus was to assure, in the absence of a comprehensive settlement, the security of the Turkish Cypriots. Turkey said it should be kept in mind that on two other islands equally afflicted by intercommunal conflict, non-island forces were the only obstacle to bloody intercommunal fighting. Turkey asked what would happen in Northern Ireland if British troops were withdrawn or in Sri Lanka if Indian forces were recalled. The level and composition of Turkish forces had to be in correlation to the military threat directed from the south, where almost daily, Turkey claimed, the Greek Cypriot press carried articles concerning purchases of advanced weapon systems. The question of settlers was an artificial issue based on exaggerations, Turkey said; it had no need to change the island's demography because Turkey's political approach to the Cyprus problem had never been based on numerical considerations but on the concept of the political equality of the two sides. Referring to the Secretary-General's report, Turkey said it was an exaggeration to establish a link between student hostels in Varosha and tensions in Cyprus.

Communications (December). On 17 December,⁽⁴³⁾ India objected to Turkey's drawing a parallel between the presence of Turkish troops in Cyprus and the Indian Peace-keeping Force in Sri Lanka, since its Force was in Sri Lanka in response to a specific request from Sri Lanka and in full conformity with international law. In addition, India fully supported the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Sri Lanka. On the same day,⁽⁴⁴⁾ Sri Lanka called the comparison misleading, citing the same arguments as India. Responding on 21 December,⁽⁴⁵⁾ Turkey said it had not contested the legality of the presence of Indian forces, but merely referred to the similarity between the political realities underlying the situations in Cyprus and Sri Lanka, and the need felt in both cases for non-island forces to prevent bloody communal fighting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 September 1987, the General Assembly, in closing its resumed forty-first session, adopted decision 41/472, by which it decided to include in the draft agenda of its forty-second (1987) session the question of Cyprus. On 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 42/460 on the suspension of the forty-second session, decided to retain the question on the agenda of that session.

Peace-keeping and humanitarian assistance

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, established by the Security Council in 1964,⁽⁴⁶⁾ continued throughout 1987 to supervise the cease-fire lines of the Cyprus National Guard and of the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces. It also provided security for civilians in the area between the lines; discharged its functions with regard to the security, welfare and well-being of the Greek Cypriots living in northern Cyprus; regularly visited Turkish Cypriots residing in the south; and supported United Nations relief operations.

The area between the cease-fire lines-the buffer zone-was kept under constant surveillance by UNFICYP through a system of 143 observation posts, 56 of which were permanently manned. The number of cease-fire violations remained at a low level. The number of shooting incidents was reduced and there were no exchanges of fire between opposing forces. UNFICYP continued to be successful in restoring the status quo ante. In Nicosia, UNFICYP continued its efforts to reduce tension at certain points where the troops of both sides continued to be in dangerous proximity to each other and where a significant number of cease-fire violations and other related incidents had occurred.

UNFICYP continued to monitor new civilian construction projects close to the lines in Nicosia to confirm their civilian nature and alleviate concerns of both sides.

Overflights of the buffer zone continued, with 22 such flights by Turkish forces or civilian aircraft and 11 from the south; all overflights were protested.

The ability of UNFICYP to monitor changes in troop strengths and equipment on both sides remained restricted, the Secretary-General reported. Its plan for verification inspections of military forces had yet to be accepted by both sides. UNFICYP remained ready to implement the plan at short notice and, in the mean time, continued by open means to monitor forces on both sides.

Temporary visits to the south by Greek Cypriots living in the north continued through the good offices of UNFICYP and 1,161 such visits were made. Twenty Greek Cypriots transferred permanently to the south, leaving 661 residing in the north. UNFICYP continued visiting Turkish Cypriots living in the south and contacting their relatives in the north; 26 reunions involving 137 persons were arranged. Seven Turkish Cypriots moved permanently from the south to the north. Frequent contacts between members of the Maronite community residing on opposite sides of the lines continued; the number remaining in the north was 299.

Emergency medical service was provided for both civilian communities. Turkish Cypriots were escorted to the south for treatment and medicines were delivered to them in the north. An anti-mosquito programme arranged by UNFICYP began in March 1987 after consultations with both parties. UNFICYP distributed 394 tons of food and other related items provided by Cyprus and the Cyprus Red Cross to Greek Cypriots in the north. Food continued to be provided by the World Food Programme to some 22,000 children and persons in social welfare institutions.

As Co-ordinator of humanitarian assistance for Cyprus, UNHCR continued to assist the displaced and needy. The 1987 programme, providing $10 million to finance 23 projects and co-ordinated by the Cyprus Red Cross Society, involved constructing medical and educational facilities and a main-trunk sewer in Nicosia, and overseas procurement of equipment and supplies for health, education, agriculture and professional training. UNFICYP continued to support the programme by delivering 602 tons of agricultural, educational and medical equipment.

Joint activities continued between the Greek Cypriot and the Turkish Cypriot communities in the framework of ongoing projects, assisted by the United Nations Development Programme. Under the Nicosia Master Plan project, both communities received training in microcomputers and produced promotional material intended for potential international funding sources. Detailed design work on two residential areas of the old walled city of Nicosia was carried out. A pre-feasibility study of the restoration of the Venetian walls and bastions was undertaken and in October a joint study tour took place with the support of the United States to study that country's experience in revitalizing inner cities.

The UNFICYP Civilian Police continued to work in close co-operation with both the Cyprus and the Turkish Cypriot police, contributing to the protection and movement of civilians between the cease-fire lines.

This information on UNFICYP was contained in two reports by the Secretary-General to the Security Council, covering 1 December 1986 to 29 May 1987(15) and 1 June to 30 November 1987.(41) In both, he recommended that the Force's mandate be extended. The Council twice in 1987 extended the mandate for a six-month period, first until 15 December 1987 and then until 15 June 1988 (see pp. 241 and 245).

Composition of UNFICYP. As at 30 November 1987, UNFICYP had a strength of 2,122, including 35 civilian police, and was composed of contingents from eight States. Military personnel came from Austria (401), Canada (575), Denmark (341), Finland (10), Ireland (8), Sweden (11) and the United Kingdom (741). Civilian police came from Australia (20) and Sweden (15).

On 12 February 1987, Sweden informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw its contingent by the end of the year, unless substantial improvements could be achieved both in the Force's financial situation, particularly through the introduction of financing by assessed contributions, and in the prospects for a political solution. It agreed to continue to provide a detachment of civilian police, the Secretary-General reported in June, (18, and had offered to maintain a small Swedish element at UNFICYP headquarters. Subsequently, Sweden withdrew its infantry battalion, resulting in a major adjustment in the deployment of the Force. The sector of the United Nations buffer zone that was vacated by the Swedish troops was incorporated into sectors covered by the Austrian and Canadian contingents whose authorities, in order to cover the additional area, had agreed to augment their units by 100 and 60 persons, respectively. Those changes resulted in a net reduction of 206 persons in the establishment of UNFICYP.

During the year ended 30 November 1987, two members of the Force died as a result of accidents, bringing total fatalities to 141 since UNFICYP's inception in 1964.

UNFICYP financing

UNFICYP continued to be financed by voluntary contributions and by troop-contributing Governments. Contributions received in 1987 from 26 countries totalled $17,745,400. Estimated 12-month costs, including United Nations operational costs and reimbursement of extra costs to Governments providing contingents, totalled some $28 million. The full 12-month cost was approximately $104 million, of which troop-contributing Governments absorbed in the order of $73 million for such items as regular pay and allowances and normal matériel expenses.

As at 30 November 1987, the accumulated deficit since the operation's inception in 1964 was in the order of $160.9 million, an increase of some $15 million in 12 months. Consequently, the claims of the troop contributors had been met only through June 1979.

On 6 March(47) and 10 September 1987,(48) the Secretary-General renewed his appeal to States for voluntary contributions to finance UNFICYP, again stressing its indispensable contribution to international peace by maintaining calm in Cyprus, a condition crucial to his mission of good offices. He expressed concern over the precarious financial situation, which continued to place an unfair burden on the troop-contributing countries. Annexed to his appeals were details on the Force's financing.

On 29 May 1987,(49) Greece accepted the Secretary-General's 1986 suggestion to the Security Council that, unless there was a more generous response to his appeals, it might wish to consider changing the financing system to one of assessed contributions.(50) On 11 December,(51) the troop contributors expressed grave concern at the growing deficit in UNFICYP's special account and disappointment at the further decline in voluntary contributions. They, too, supported the proposal to finance the United Nations share of the Force's cost from assessed contributions. On 14 December, (52) the troop contributors said they believed that there could be no alternative to the provision of funding through assessed contributions by all Member States.

Contributions received in 1987. Contributions received for UNFICYP during 1987 (53) were as follows: Australia, $100,000; Austria, $125,000; Bahamas, $3,000; Belgium, $262,700; Brunei Darussalam, $3,000; Cyprus, $650,000; Denmark, $120,000; Federal Republic of Germany, $1,537,300; Greece, $400,000; Iceland, $11,000; India, $10,000; Italy, $600,000; Jamaica, $1,000; Japan, $400,000; Luxembourg, $5,500; Norway, $610,000; Pakistan, $3,000; Sweden, $200,000; Switzerland, $1,251,000; Thailand, $1,000; Togo, $5,800; Tunisia, $3,000; United Kingdom, $2,591,600; United States, $8,806,500; Venezuela, $5,000; and Yugoslavia, $40,000.

Other questions concerning the Mediterranean region

In March 1987, Greece and Turkey sent letters to the Secretary-General regarding a dispute over the delimitation of the Aegean continental shelf between the two countries.

At various times during the year, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya complained of what it said were threats against it by the United States. The United States said those charges were an effort by the Jamahiriya to hide its terrorism and aggression.

In December, the Assembly, by resolution 42/90, again urged all States to reduce tension and promote peace in the Mediterranean region.

Greece-Turkey dispute

Turkey, on 23 March, (1) drew attention to an announcement by the North Aegean Petroleum Company (NAPC)—an international consortium operating an offshore oil field near the northern Aegean island of Thassos since the early 1970s under an agreement reached with Greece stating that at the end of March NAPC planned to drill for oil 10 miles east of Thassos, outside the 6-mile territorial waters of Greece and an area in dispute between Turkey and Greece. Turkey recalled the November 1976 Bern Agreement between the two countries, incorporating the two basic elements of a 1976 Security Council resolution(2)—the exercise of restraint and the reduction of tensions, and the resumption of direct negotiations between the two countries. Under the Agreement, Turkey said, negotiations were to reach an agreement based on mutual consent regarding the delimitation of the continental shelf; the Agreement also stated that the two parties undertook to refrain from any initiative concerning the Aegean continental shelf that might adversely affect negotiations. Turkey charged that Greece, by asserting that the Aegean continental shelf-which had not been delineated-belonged in its entirety to Greece, defied all sense of equity and disregarded a September 1976(3) International Court of Justice (ICJ) decision.

Responding on 27 March,(4) Greece said Turkey had failed to mention, even though it had been officially informed, that Greece had sought authorization from its Parliament to buy the shares of the Canadian company Denison, a member of the NAPC consortium, and thus obtain the majority of NAPC shares. The question of how, where and when drilling took place would be solely Greece's decision. Greece pointed out that the 1976 Council resolution also invited both sides to continue to take into account the contribution that judicial means, in particular the Court, were qualified to make in settling any remaining legal differences in connection with their dispute. In August 1976, Greece had instituted the Court proceedings and had requested it to proceed to the delimitation of the continental shelf between the two countries. Turkey, it said, refused to appear before the Court. Greece claimed that the dispute did not involve partitioning the continental shelf but was of a technical nature regarding its delimitation-to establish the point up to which the ipso facto and ab initio existing rights extended. On many occasions, Greece said, it had informed Turkey that the Bern Agreement had become obsolete and inoperative, since the negotiations between Greece and Turkey, to which it was solely related, had been terminated because of what Greece called Turkish intransigence. Greece said that on 26 March 1987 it conveyed to Turkey a proposal to submit the delimitation question to the Court and that such a proposal had been made many times; Greece was ready to enter into negotiations to settle the dispute.

Libyan Arab Jamakiriya-United States relations

Communications (January-September). In its final communiqué the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January)(5) condemned the 1986 United States aggression against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya(6) and called on the United States to refrain from such acts and to compensate the Jamahiriya for its human and material losses.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 25 February(7) stated that the United States had been hatching aggression against it since 1981 which included a plan to use military force. The Jamahiriya cited United States press reports which it said confirmed that the sole aim of the April 1986 armed attack on Tripoli(8) was to assassinate the Jamahiriya's President. According to the Jamahiriya, there was no link between itself and the 1985 terrorist incidents at the Rome and Vienna airports(9) or the 1986 bombing of a Berlin dischèque. (8)

In connection with a 1986(10) General Assembly resolution in which it affirmed the Jamahiriya's right to receive appropriate compensation for material and human losses resulting from the United States 1986 attack, the Jamahiriya submitted, on 17 July 1987,(11) a report listing 41 people as having been killed and 226 wounded. The report gave details of material losses suffered, including damage to, or destruction of, public and private property in Tripoli and Benghazi.

On 8 September,(12) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya rejected a 30 August letter to it from the United States, containing what it said were unfounded allegations that it was supplying mines and weapons to Iran during its war with Iraq (see p. 217) and unjustified threats of aggression against the Jamahiriya.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1986 Assembly request,(11) the Secretary-General submitted, in September 1987, a report with later addenda(13) containing information received from 12 States on the Assembly's call for the United States to refrain from the threat or use of force in settling disputes and differences with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, and for all States to refrain from extending any assistance or facilities for perpetrating acts of aggression against that country.

Communications (October-December). The United States, on 2 October,(14) protested what it said were unfounded accusations made by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on 25 September in the Assembly's general debate, including a charge that the United States was guilty of terrorism.(15) The United States, stating that the charges were an effort to hide the Jamahiriya's terrorism and aggression, annexed what it said was a selected chronology of Libyan terrorism from February 1980 to October 1986.

In their final communiqué, the Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Non-Aligned Movement (New York, 5-7 October)(16) stated that the 1986 attack endangered peace and security in the Mediterranean and hindered efforts to make that region a zone of peace. They called on the United States to provide full and immediate compensation for the losses and expressed their full support for the Jamahiriya in defending its sovereignty.

On 21 December,(17) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, referring to a United States decision to extend economic sanctions against the Jamahiriya on the charge that it supported terrorism, said it was certain that such decisions and false allegations were in preparation for further aggression against it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, the General Assembly, by decision 42/457, decided to include in the draft agenda of its forty-third (1988) session the Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the United States in April 1986.

Security in the Mediterranean

The views of 11 States on strengthening security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region were forwarded to the General Assembly in September 1987 (18). They had been submitted in reply to the Assembly's 1986 invitation for States' ideas and suggestions on their potential contribution to strengthening peace in the region.(19)

In their communique, the Foreign Ministers of the Mediterranean members of the Non-Aligned Movement (Brioni, Yugoslavia, 3 and 4 June 1987)(20) called for the non-use of foreign fleets, military bases and installations for aggression, attacks and pressure on the Mediterranean members of the Movement or for interference in their internal affairs; and for the non-exercise of military manoeuvres in the vicinity of the borders or in the territorial waters of non-aligned Mediterranean countries. By the Brioni Decision, the Ministers entrusted Yugoslavia with initiating an exchange of views with the Mediterranean and other countries of Europe, and requested it to report back to the non-aligned Mediterranean countries on the result of those contacts.

The Foreign Ministers and delegation heads of the Non-Aligned Movement (New York, 5-7 October),(16) in their final communique, reaffirmed support for the transformation of the Mediterranean into a region of peace, security and co-operation, free from conflict and confrontation, and expressed firm support for strengthening security and co-operation in the Mediterranean basin.

In its communiqué,(21) the Committee of the Foreign Ministers of the Warsaw Treaty States (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 28 and 29 October) also welcomed the efforts of the non-aligned Mediterranean countries aimed at converting that region into a zone of peaceful co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/90 without vote on 7 December 1987.

2. Takes note of paragraph 24 of the Document of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, which, inter alia, confirms the intention of the participants in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to develop good-neighbourly relations with all States of the region, with due regard to reciprocity, and in the spirit of the principles contained in the Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States, so as to promote confidence and security and make peace prevail in the region in accordance with the provisions contained in the Mediterranean chapter of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe;

Calls upon all States participating in the Vienna meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to take all possible measures and to exert every effort in order to ensure substantial and balanced results of this meeting in the implementation of the principles and goals of the Final Act, including those provisions relating to the Mediterranean, as well as the continuity of the multilateral process initiated by the Conference, which also has great significance for the strengthening of peace, security and co-operation;

4. Urges all States to co-operate with the Mediterranean States in the further efforts required to reduce tension and promote peace, security and co-operation in the region in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and with the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Encourages once again efforts to intensify existing forms and to promote new forms of co-operation in various fields, particularly those aimed at reducing tension and strengthening confidence and security in the region;

6. Reaffirm also the importance of intensifying and constantly promoting contacts in all fields where common interests exist in order to eliminate gradually, through co-operation, the causes preventing the faster social and economic development of the Mediterranean States, particularly the developing States of the region;

7. Takes note, in this regard, of the idea of the establishment of a Mediterranean forum as a multidisciplinary framework for the promotion of co-operation in the region, which would bring together not only the representatives of Governments but also of scientific, educational, cultural and other institutions, as well as prominent individuals specializing in Mediterranean studies;

8. Welcomes any further communication to the Secretary-General, from all States, of proposals, declarations and recommendations on strengthening peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

9. Renews its invitation to the Secretary-General to give due attention to the question of peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region and, if requested to do so, to render advice and assistance to Mediterranean countries in their concerted efforts to promote peace, security and co-operation in the region;

10. Invites the States members of the relevant regional organizations to lend their support to the Secretary-General and to submit to him concrete ideas and suggestions on their potential contribution to the strengthening of peace and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, on the basis of all replies received and notifications submitted in the implementation of the present resolution and taking into account the debate on this question during its forty-second session, an updated report on the strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region".

General Assembly resolution 42/90

7 December 1987 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/42/759) without vote, 25 November (meeting 57); 8-nation draft (A/C.1/42/L.90), orally revised; agenda item 71.

Sponsors: Algeria, Cyprus, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, Morocco, Romania, Tunisia, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: 1st Committee 49-57; plenary 93.

In the First Committee, the United States objected to the text's tenth preambular paragraph taking note of the Non-Aligned Movement's Brioni meeting, since that meeting's communique had twice condemned the United States by name and contained many other assertions. The United States said the addition of a new and contentious element in what had been a non-controversial text made its decision to support the text difficult. It appreciated Malta's dissociation with those aspects of the communique which condemned individual States by name.

Turkey, noting that the text referred to some meetings held and documents adopted without its participation, said its approval of the text did not mean that Turkey agreed with all the elements contained in documents adopted at those meetings. It pointed out that the text dealt with the security interests of all Mediterranean countries rather than the concerns of some.

(For other questions concerning peace and security in the area brought before the United Nations in 1987, see next chapter.)

Chapter IX

Middle East

Throughout 1987, the search for a peaceful settlement of the Middle East conflict was vigorously pursued by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other bodies of the United Nations. Despite repeated calls for an international peace conference under United Nations auspices, again endorsed by the Assembly, and a special effort towards convening it on the part of the Secretary-General at the beginning of the year, no agreement on either the principle or the procedures of such a conference had been reached by year's end.

Meanwhile, the main aspects of the Middle East situation continued to be considered, including the Palestine question, incidents and disputes involving individual Arab States and Israel, the situation of the Palestinians in the territories occupied by Israel, the United Nations peace-keeping forces that remained in place in the Golan Heights and in Lebanon, and the Palestine refugees.

The Palestine question was kept under review by the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian rights), which gave priority to the convening of the proposed conference as a means to secure United Nations objectives on the question. The Assembly endorsed the Committee's call for urgent Security Council action on its original (1976) recommendations and for constructive efforts to bring about the conference. In addition, the Assembly again determined that Israel's decision to impose its laws and administration on Jerusalem was null and void.

During the year, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), each time for a six-month period. The Council also reiterated its support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. UNIFIL remained unable to fulfil its mandate to confirm the withdrawal of Israel from Lebanon, restore international peace and security and assist the Lebanese Government to ensure the return of its effective authority in the area. In his report on UNIFIL operations, the Secretary-General stated that the main problem lay in Israel's refusal to withdraw completely from Lebanon and its insistence on maintaining its "security zone" in that country's territory for protection against attacks launched from Lebanon.

The Council similarly twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), which continued to supervise the observance of the cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic in the Golan Heights and to ensure that there were no military forces in the area of separation between the two countries. The Assembly again declared null and void Israel's 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the Golan Heights.

The Secretary-General drew attention to the chronic shortfall in contributions to the two peace-keeping forces, emphasizing the increasingly heavy burden which that situation placed on the troop-contributing States. Besides retaining the current standard rates of reimbursement to them, the Assembly in December approved appropriations for UNDOF operations up to 31 May 1988 and for UNIFIL operations up to 31 January 1988.

The territories occupied by Israel—the West Bank of the Jordan River, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights—were the subject of Assembly resolutions demanding that Israel desist from certain policies and practices, comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, desist from changing the territories' legal status and demographic composition, and rescind its expulsion of Palestinian leaders as well as its measures against Palestinian detainees and educational institutions. Israeli practices violating human rights in the territories were also the subject of action by the Commission on Human Rights.

A deteriorating situation of the Palestinian inhabitants of the territories was reported by the Committee on Palestinian rights and by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices). The Security Council convened urgently in December to consider what was described in the debate as the ongoing wave of violence or uprising in the territories; it called on Israel to desist from its policies and practices, in particular the opening of fire by its army, killing and wounding defenceless Palestinians.

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued its programme of assistance to Palestine refugees, who in 1987 numbered over 2.2 million and were living in Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, Jordan, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. The emergency conditions under which UNRWA had to operate in Lebanon owing to continual outbreaks of violence and fighting posed severe challenges. The Council issued an appeal in February for a cease-fire and another in March to all parties concerned to facilitate delivery of emergency relief to the besieged refugee camps. UNRWA operations in the occupied territories, particularly in the West Bank and Gaza, were seriously affected by developments there in December.

Also during the year, a draft programme of assistance for Palestinians was prepared, which the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to implement in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: nuclear-weapon-free zones-Middle East. International peace and security: review of peace-keeping operations. Human settlements and political, economic and social issues: homeless Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied territories, in Lebanon. Human rights: human rights violations-Middle East. Legal aspects of international political relations: non-use of force in international relations; prevention of terrorism.

Middle East situation

A continuation of the status quo in the Arab-Israel conflict was contrary to the interests of all the parties concerned as it hampered economic development, social stability and freedom of choice, the Secretary-General stated in his September 1987 report on the Organization's work (see p. 3). In the search for a comprehensive settlement, the central priority should be the achievement of a just and lasting peace, which would meet the aspirations of all the people in the region. The right road was that which led to fruitful negotiations, based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967)(1) and 338(1973),(2) and took fully into account the rights of the Palestinians. No solution could be found without negotiations and delay could only prolong the violence and danger that had become daily companions to life in the Middle East. From his extensive consultations, the Secretary-General was convinced that the composition and agenda of an international conference on peace in the Middle East did not need to present insurmountable obstacles.

In a November report, the Secretary-General noted encouraging developments during the preceding year: contacts had increased between the permanent members of the Security Council and between them and the parties to the Middle East conflict; and the idea of an international peace conference under United Nations auspices had been given high priority among the Arab parties to the conflict and had been the subject of discussion in Israel. He noted a growing international consensus in favour of the early convening of such a conference, but remarked that agreement had yet to be reached by all the parties on its principle.

In December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions dealing with aspects of the Middle East situation, by which it declared once more that peace in the Middle East must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution under United Nations auspices and on the basis of its relevant resolutions (42/209 B), and reaffirmed once again that the most appropriate means to that end was through the convening of an international Middle East peace conference (42/209 A). It also adopted a resolution under the agenda item on the Palestine question by which it noted the increasing international consensus in favour of such a conference, stressed the need for additional government efforts to convene it without delay, and requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in that regard (42/66 D).

Communications. The Arab-Israeli conflict was the subject of a number of communications addressed to the Secretary-General and to the Security Council and General Assembly Presidents during the year.

In a resolution on the question of Palestine and the Middle East, the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January 1987)(3) called on its members to exert continuous efforts to enlist international support for implementation of the 1982 Arab Peace plan adopted at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference,(4) and asked them not to establish political, economic, cultural or military relations with Israel. The Conference invited members to use their economic and financial capabilities against Zionism and racism, called a halt to Jewish immigration to Palestine and reaffirmed Palestinian rights.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the 12-member European Community (EC), in a 23 February declaration issued at Brussels, by Belgium (5) reiterated their conviction that the search for peace in the Near and Middle East remained a fundamental objective and voiced concern at the absence of progress in finding a solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

A declaration adopted at a meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Committee of Nine Non-Aligned Countries on Palestine (Harare, Zimbabwe, 14 and 15 April)(6) reaffirmed the commitment of the nine (Algeria, Bangladesh, Cuba, India, Senegal, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO)) to the search for a comprehensive, just and durable Middle East solution.

The final communique of the Seventh Summit Conference of the Heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe (Maputo, Mozambique, 21 and 22 May)(7) noted with concern the grave situation in the Middle East resulting from Israel's aggressive and annexationist policies.

By a joint communique issued on 5 June at Bucharest, Romania,(8) the Secretary-General of the Romanian Communist Party and President of Romania and the PLO Chairman summarized the conclusions of their two-day talks, which included their stand on, among other matters, the establishment of a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East based on Israel's withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories, a solution to the Palestine question that recognized the Palestinians' right to self-determination and to an independent Palestinian State, and the guaranteed sovereignty and security of all States in the area.

The EC Foreign Ministers, in a declaration adopted at Copenhagen, Denmark, on 13 July, stated their decision to pursue their contacts at all levels with all interested parties in order to contribute to the search, for a just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The Commonwealth heads of Government, by a communique issued at their 13-17 October meeting at Vancouver, Canada, expressed concern at the dangerous tensions arising from the unresolved problems of the Middle East, especially the Palestinian issue, which continued to pose a grave threat to international peace and security.

The Final Declaration of the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference (Amman, Jordan, 8-11 November)(11) declared that Arab solidarity and an effective common stand were necessary for tackling the Israeli danger threatening the entire Arab nation and placing its existence at risk. It supported an international peace conference as the only means for a just and comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, to be convened under United Nations auspices, with the participation on an equal footing of all parties concerned, including PLO and the permanent Security Council members.

By a declaration issued at the end of a meeting of the European Council (Copenhagen, 4 and 5 December), (12) the 12 EC heads of State and Government deplored the continuing absence of a resolution to the crises in the Middle East, reaffirmed their willingness to develop a political dialogue with all States in the region, and expressed the wish that the current negotiations on an economic co-operation agreement between EC and the Gulf Co-operation Council be completed rapidly. They confirmed their desire for a negotiated solution to the Arab-Israel conflict and reiterated their support for an international peace conference under United Nations auspices, welcoming the Arab Summit's endorsement of such a conference and calling for renewed efforts by all concerned to agree on convening it.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a November 1987 report on various aspects of the situation in the Middle East,(13) the Secretary-General said he was encouraged by the favourable developments in the political environment during the past year, in terms of the level and frequency of the contacts between the permanent Security Council members and between them and the parties; he was also encouraged by the fact that the idea of an international peace conference under United Nations auspices had been given high priority among the Arab parties to the conflict and had been the subject of lively discussion in Israel. Those positive trends, combined with the growing international consensus in favour of the early convening of a conference, demanded that the foundation so far established be consolidated.

Not to do so would cause increasing frustration and tension and would further aggravate an already volatile situation, the Secretary-General warned. Israel's occupation of Arab territory for over 20 years continued to be deeply resented by the inhabitants, and, as long as no settlement was reached, the situation would remain unstable. Meanwhile, the start of a negotiating process, under United Nations auspices and acceptable to all, would create a spirit of dialogue and would be a significant step in the direction of peace and stability.

In an August report, with a later addendum,(14) the Secretary-General submitted the replies received from 10 Member States to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement three 1986 Assembly resolutions relating to the Middle East situation: by two of them,(15) the Assembly had called on States to adopt a number of measures concerning military, economic, diplomatic and cultural relations with Israel; by the third (16) it had called again on States which had transferred their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem to abide by the relevant United Nations resolutions (see also below, under "Palestine question").

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1987, the General Assembly adopted, by recorded vote, resolution 42/209 B on the situation in the Middle East.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 F of 20

December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 113 December 1983, 38/180 A to D of 19 December 1983, 39/146 A to C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 A to C of 16 December 1985 and 41/162 A to C of 4 December 1986,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, 497(1981) of 17 December 1981, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 512(1982) of 19 June 1982, 513(1982) of 4 July 1982, 515(1982) of 29 July 1982, 516(1982) of 1 August 1982, 517(1982) of 4 August 1982, 518(1982) of 12 August 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, 521(1982) of 19 September 1982 and 555(1984) of 12 October 1984,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 7 May 1987, 10 August 1987 and 13 November 1987,

Reaffirming the need for continued collective support for the decisions adopted by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, reiterating its previous resolutions on the question of Palestine and its support for the Palestine Liberation Organization as the sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, and considering that the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 38/58 C and other relevant resolutions related to the question of Palestine, would contribute to the promotion of peace in the region,

Welcoming all efforts contributing towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, in accordance with the United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and to the situation in the Middle East,

Welcoming the world-wide support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation in order to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by previous resolutions of the General Assembly on the question of Palestine and on the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned that the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, still remain under Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations have not been implemented and that the Palestinian people is still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law, as reaffirmed by resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to all the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Reaffirming also all relevant United Nations resolutions which stipulate that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law and that Israel must withdraw unconditionally from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Reaffirming further the imperative necessity of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter and the principles of international law,

Gravely concerned also at the continuing Israeli policies involving the escalation and expansion of the conflict in the region, which further violate the principles of international law and endanger international peace and security,

Stressing once again the great importance of the time factor in the endeavours to achieve an early comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the question of Palestine is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories;

2. Reaffirms further that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people;

3. Declares once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem, under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of its relevant resolutions, which ensures the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and which enables the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to exercise its inalienable rights, including the right to return and the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of its independent sovereign State in Palestine, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relating to the question of Palestine, in particular General Assembly resolutions ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 36/120 A to F of 10 December 1981, 37/86 A to D of 10 December 1982, 37/86 E of 20 December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983, 39/49 A to D of 11 December 1984, 40/96 A to D of 12 December 1985 and 41/43 A to D of 2 December 1986;

4. Considers the Arab Peace Plan adopted unanimously at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, and reiterated by the Extraordinary Summit Conference of the Arab States, held at Casablanca, Morocco, from 7 to 9 August 1985, as well as relevant efforts and action to implement the Fez plan, as an important contribution towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

5. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and demands the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the territories occupied since 1967;

6. Rejects all agreements and arrangements which violate the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of a just and comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;

7. Deplores Israel's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980 and General Assembly resolutions 35/207 of 16 December 1980 and 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981; determines that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to declare it as its "capital" as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status are null and void and demands that they be rescinded immediately; and calls upon all Member States, the specialized agencies and all other international organizations to abide by the present resolution and all other relevant resolutions and decisions;

8. Condemns Israel's aggression, policies and practices against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories and outside these territories, including expropriation, establishment of settlements, annexation and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures, which are in violation of the Charter and the principles of international law and the relevant international conventions;

9. Strongly condemns the imposition by Israel of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, its annexationist policies and practices, the establishment of settlements, the confiscation of lands, the diversion of water resources and the imposition of Israeli citizenship on Syrian nationals, and declares that all these measures are null and void and constitute a violation of the rules and principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

10. Considers that the agreements on strategic co-operation between the United States of America and Israel, signed on 30 November 1981, and the continued supply of modern arms and matériel to Israel, augmented by substantial economic aid, including the recently concluded Agreement on the Establishment of a Free Trade Area between the two Governments, have encouraged Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and have had adverse effects on efforts for the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and pose a threat to the security of the region;

11. Calls once more upon all States to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic, financial and technological aid, as well as of human resources, aimed at encouraging it to pursue its aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people;

12. Strongly Condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration between Israel and the racist regime of South Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, which constitutes a hostile act against the African and Arab States and enables Israel to enhance its nuclear capabilities, thus subjecting the States of the region to nuclear blackmail;

13. Reaffirms its call for the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of its relevant resolutions, as specified in paragraph 5 of the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/58 C;

14. Endorses the call for setting up a preparatory committee, within the framework of the Security Council, with the participation of the permanent members of the Council, to take the necessary action to convene the Conference;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a comprehensive report covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Burma, Cameroon, Chile, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Japan, Liberia, Malawi, Malta, Panama, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Spain, Sweden, Togo, Uruguay, Zaire.

Before voting on the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraph 10 by a recorded vote of 64 to 33, with 41 abstentions.

Explaining its vote, the United States said the text was polemical and condemnatory with regard to its relations with other Member States. According to New Zealand, the text reflected neither the principles embodied in Security Council resolutions nor the measured approach necessary for a just and lasting solution; any Middle East settlement must take account of the rights and aspirations of the Arab people of Palestine, including their right to self-determination, as well as of Israel's right to exist as a sovereign State within recognized and secure borders, free from threats or acts of force; Israel's neighbours and PLO had to accept unequivocally that Israel had that right if there was to be a durable settlement.

In Sweden's opinion, the text—particularly paragraphs 10 and 11—suffered from a severe lack of balance. Austria could not support any formulation that could be interpreted as impinging on the principle of universality of membership in the United Nations or other elements which would not only aggravate the situation but also impede the search for peace; it did not believe that measures aimed at breaking relations with Israel, thus leading to its isolation, could bring about a solution of the Middle East problem. Turkey, which abstained on paragraph 10, felt that singling out third parties either by name or by designation and using accusatory language was inappropriate and unhelpful. Mexico felt that the judgments contained in that paragraph undermined the Assembly's jurisdiction, adding that it also had serious reservations on paragraph 6. Greece voiced opposition to paragraph 10 and strong reservations on paragraph 12—the same two paragraphs that Malta said it could not support. The Philippines also expressed reservations on some provisions, as did Bolivia, which characterized the approach in certain paragraphs as not in keeping with its position.

Egypt underlined the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force as the first and foremost element that should define any just and lasting Middle East settlement.

Iran reiterated its reservations on all terms implying any recognition of the Zionist base of terror occupying Palestine. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya voiced reservations on paragraphs implying that it recognized the de facto situation in occupied Palestinian lands, a situation which it considered a flagrant violation of the national rights of the Palestinian people.

Proposed peace conference

In his report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General said he had undertaken a special effort at the beginning of the year to pursue the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East. With the international community's support, he had held numerous consultations with the parties and the Security Council members on the principle of a conference and questions of procedure. The views expressed differed in nuance and detail, but it was hoped that those differences could be narrowed to make possible a conference at which the difficult substantive issues could be tackled. Unfortunately, it had not yet proved possible to obtain the parties' agreement to the principle of an international conference, thus hindering progress on procedural issues. Bilateral efforts to promote the peace process had also apparently run into difficulties. The Secretary-General emphasized that despite those set-backs, the search for a comprehensive settlement through a negotiating process under United Nations auspices, in which all parties would participate, must be sustained by all means.

During the December 1987 Security Council debate on the situation in the occupied territories (see p. 304), a number of speakers also advocated the convening of an international peace conference.

Communications. In a statement of 7 January 1987 (17) the Foreign Ministry of the USSR restated the USSR's position that it was essential to prepare for an international conference without delay and to form a preparatory committee within the Security Council, that the timetable for the preparations was a matter for bilateral and multilateral discussion, and that the primary task was to start untangling the knot of tensions in the Middle East.

The EC Foreign Ministers, in a 23 February declaration on the Middle East,(5) stated their support for an international conference under United Nations auspices, with the participation not only of the parties concerned but also of any party able to contribute to the restoration of peace and to the region's economic and social development. They believed that the conference should provide a suitable framework for negotiations and were prepared to contribute, individually and through EC, to bring the parties' positions closer. In the meantime, they requested the parties to avoid any action likely to worsen the situation or complicate and delay the search for peace.

By a 29 April letter transmitted by Tunisia,(18) PLO brought to the Secretary-General's attention a resolution by which the Palestine National Council expressed support for the convening of a conference with full authority and within the United Nations framework, and for the expeditious establishment of a preparatory committee.

The Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 General Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October), in its final communiqué,(19) urged the Committee of Nine Non-Aligned Countries on Palestine to continue its work towards the early convening of a conference by actively approaching Security Council members and by other appropriate ways, reaffirmed support for the Committee's endeavours to hasten the preparatory process and for the efforts of the Secretary-General, and urged all parties to cooperate fully with him.

The Committee of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Warsaw Treaty (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 28 and 29 October) issued a communiqué(20) stating that the holding of a conference under United Nations auspices, to be attended by all parties concerned, including PLO, on an equal footing, and the permanent Council members, would be of major significance for attaining an equitable and comprehensive settlement and for safeguarding a lasting peace in the Middle East.

Similar expressions of support for the early convening of a peace conference and urgings to intensify efforts towards that end were conveyed by several previously mentioned communications: a resolution of the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (26-29 January);(3) the 15 April declaration of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Committee of Nine Non-Aligned Countries on Palestine;(6) the final communique of the Seventh Summit Conference of the Heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe (21 and 22 May);(7) the joint Romania-PLO communique of 5 June;(8) and the communique of the 13-17 October meeting of the Commonwealth heads of Government.(10)

The holding of a conference was also advocated in several communications dealing with the situation in the occupied territories (see p. 297).

Report of the Secretary-General. In May 1987,(21) the Secretary-General reported on his continued efforts, in consultation with the Security Council, to promote the convening of a conference, as the Assembly had requested in 1986.(22) He said that consultations had been held with Council members individually during February-May 1987. In contrast with the experience of recent years, none of them opposed in principle the idea of an international conference under United Nations auspices. It was clear, however, that wide differences still existed as to the form it should take. The parties' positions remained far apart on a number of issues of substance and procedure, but in recent months there had been indications of greater flexibility in attitudes towards the negotiating process. The Council members agreed that a conference would have to be carefully prepared, but were divided on the proposed formal preparatory committee. Some favoured its early establishment; others felt that further consultations would be required and that the views of the parties would be of special importance in that context.

During March and April, a first round of consultations had been held in New York with the parties-Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic—and with PLO to ascertain their positions on the form of a conference and on how it should be prepared. Again, views differed on both issues, but there appeared to be general readiness to consider options for an acceptable negotiating formula.

Summing up, the Secretary-General observed that, although sufficient agreement did not exist to permit the convening of a conference, he was determined to continue his efforts to establish a negotiating process that would lead to a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. He was encouraged by the international community's increased interest in the idea of a conference under United Nations auspices on a basis acceptable to all and by the indications of greater flexibility among the parties. At the same time, it was evident that wide differences remained, to bridge which he would intensify his contacts with the parties. Those efforts, to be successful, needed the full support and understanding not only of the parties but also of the Security Council.

In his November report on the Middle East situation,(13) the Secretary-General reported on the intensified contacts he had undertaken. They included: a mission he had sent to the area in June, which held talks with leaders in Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic and with PLO in Tunisia; his meetings in July at Geneva with the President of Egypt and the Foreign Minister of Israel; and his meetings during the 1987 General Assembly session with the President of Lebanon, the Crown Prince of Jordan, the Foreign Ministers of Egypt, Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic and the head of delegation of PLO, among others. He had also pursued consultations with the Security Council, in particular with its five permanent members.

Those discussions reconfirmed his earlier observations, the Secretary-General said, noting that there was no apparent change in the positions of those parties and Council members who did not regard as an acceptable basis the guidelines in the 1983 Assembly resolution(23) endorsing the call for a conference. The major obstacle, he said, was the inability of the Government of Israel as a whole to agree on the principle of an international conference under United Nations auspices. The discussions confirmed, however, that there was widespread support for a conference that urgently needed to be convened.

Human Rights Commission action. In a 19 February 1987 resolution on the situation in occupied Palestine (see p. 819), the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed its support for an international conference as endorsed by the 1983 Assembly resolution and other relevant resolutions, appealed for further constructive efforts by all States towards convening such a conference, and called on those States negatively disposed to the idea to reconsider their attitude. In this connection, it reaffirmed the right of PLO, as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinians, to participate fully in all efforts and international conferences on the Palestine question and the future of the Palestinians.

Action by the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on Palestinian rights, in its annual report to the General Assembly,(24) reaffirmed that the convening of an international conference, in accordance with the 1983 Assembly guidelines,(23) was the most widely accepted proposal that would constitute a major United Nations contribution towards solving the Palestine question, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict. The Committee recommended that the Assembly call once again on those Member States which did not support the proposal to reconsider their position, that it call for additional constructive efforts by all Governments, in particular by those of the permanent Security Council members, and that it renew the Secretary-General's mandate to continue his efforts to promote the convening of a conference.

Other action. The Eighteenth United Nations Seminar on the Question of Palestine (see p. 264), in which the Committee on Palestinian rights participated,⁽²⁵⁾ concluded unanimously that the way to a just and lasting Middle East peace was through an international conference, to be convened under United Nations auspices and with the participation of all parties, including PLO on an equal footing, and the United States, the USSR and other concerned States, and that the Committee had an important role to play in promoting its realization.

The Seminar urged the international community to strengthen its support for the Committee's efforts to facilitate the convening of a conference and the establishment of a preparatory committee. It also urged Israel and the United States to reconsider their negative attitude towards the idea of a conference. It appealed to the permanent Security Council members to make every effort to convene the conference without further delay and welcomed PLO's unequivocal support for the conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the question of Palestine, the General Assembly on 2 December 1987 adopted resolution 42/66 D by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 38/58 C of 13 December 1983, 39/49 D of 11 December 1984, 40/96 D of 12 December 1985 and 41/43 D of 2 December 1986, in which it, inter alia, endorsed the call for the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East,

Recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 39/49 D, 40/96 D and 41/43 D, in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Security Council, to continue his efforts with a view to convening the Conference,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 7 May 1987, and of 13 November 1987, in which he, inter alia, stated that "the major obstacle at present, however, is one of a different kind, namely, the inability of the Government of Israel as a whole to agree on the principle of an international conference under United Nations auspices",

Expressing its regret that, owing to the attitudes of some Member States, the difficulties regarding the convening of the Conference have remained essentially the same, and expressing its hope that those Member States will reconsider their attitudes,

Having heard the statements made by numerous representatives, including the statement by the representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization,

Taking note of the resolutions as well as the Final Declaration of the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference, held at Amman from 8 to 11 November 1987, in which, inter alia, the Arab leaders declared that "in the context of promoting peaceful efforts and endeavours seeking to achieve a just and durable peace in the Middle East region in accordance with international legality and the resolutions of the United Nations and on the basis of the return of all the occupied Palestinian and Arab territories and the restoration of the national rights of the Palestinian Arab people, the leaders supported, as the only appropriate means of settling the Arab-Israeli conflict in a peaceful, just and comprehensive manner, the convening of the International Peace Conference under the auspices of the United Nations and with the participation, on an equal footing, of all parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian Arab people, and the permanent members of the Security Council",

Noting with satisfaction the growing international consensus in favour of convening the Conference under the auspices of the United Nations, and in conformity with its relevant resolutions, to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, including the just solution of the question of Palestine, which is the core of this conflict,

Emphasizing the need to bring about a just and comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, which has persisted for nearly four decades,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General;
2. Notes with satisfaction the ever-increasing international consensus in favour of the early convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, as reflected in the statements made during the debate;
3. Determines once again that the question of Palestine is the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict in the Middle East;
4. Reaffirms once again its endorsement of the call for convening the Conference in conformity with the provisions of resolution 38/58 C, particularly the guidelines and participation determined therein;
5. Reiterates its endorsement of the call for setting up a preparatory committee, within the framework of the Security Council, with the participation of the permanent members of the Council, to take the necessary action to convene the Conference;
6. Stresses once again the urgent need for additional concrete and constructive efforts by all Governments in order to convene the Conference without further delay;
7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Security Council, to continue his efforts with a view to convening the Conference and to report thereon to the General Assembly not later than 31 March 1988;
8. Decides to consider at its forty-third session the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present resolution.

If negotiations could be launched by way of an international conference, the United States said, it would not be the conference described in the unbalanced guidelines enumerated in the 1983 Assembly resolution endorsing the call for the convening of a conference;(23) those guidelines sought to impose a particular concept of a solution rather than to launch the parties in negotiating one. The United States could not support the text which, by tying successive Assembly resolutions back to the 1983 resolution, revealed a one-sided approach that would not advance prospects for reaching an agreed formula for negotiations.

In Norway's opinion, the text contained guidelines concerning conference format and modalities which could be construed as imposing a procedure not acceptable to all parties and prejudicial to the outcome of negotiations; it was imperative that the framework and content of negotiations be freely decided on by the parties themselves. Similarly, Denmark, speaking for the 12 EC members, considered it essential to avoid prejudging the form in which negotiations might be held; the EC members were not convinced that the text reflected the increasing international consensus in favour of the early convening of a conference in its most widely accepted terms. Australia could not endorse elements of the seventh preambular paragraph which, it felt, blurred fundamental issues and sought to prescribe the form of the conference. Canada said that efforts needed to be invested by the main parties to establish an appropriate negotiating format which would meet their concern and facilitate real progress towards lasting peace in the region. It also did not believe that an international conference was a substitute for direct negotiations between the parties; if there was to be an international framework, it must be accepted by all concerned, including Israel, in a framework that would facilitate rather than hinder direct negotiations.

Finland reiterated its reservations on the Geneva Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine.(26) Japan had reservations on some provisions, in particular paragraph 4 and the fourth preambular paragraph.

Iran did not wish to see its Palestinian brothers at any negotiating table with Zionist usurpers, nor did it support the resolutions of the November Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference at Amman.(11) The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had reservations on any references that could be taken to mean recognition of the fait accompli imposed by force in occupied Palestine and could be interpreted as taking away the rights of the Palestinians.

On 11 December, under the agenda item on the Middle East situation, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/209 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Recalling its relevant resolutions on the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East,

Recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General of 13 November 1987,

Taking note with appreciation of the resolutions of the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference, held at Amman from 8 to 11 November 1987, on the Arab-Israeli conflict and on the International Peace Conference on the Middle East,

Taking note with appreciation of the growing international consensus in favour of convening the Conference to resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict, of which the question of Palestine is the core,

1. Reaffirms once again that the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East under the auspices of the United Nations and at the invitation of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, with the participation of the five permanent members of the Security Council and all the parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, on an equal footing, is the appropriate way to a peaceful, comprehensive and just settlement of the conflict which will ensure the restoration of the occupied Arab territories and the solution of the Palestinian question in all its aspects and guarantee the realization of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian Arab people;

2. Calls upon all States that have not done so to lend their support to the convening of the Conference;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Security Council, to continue his efforts with a view to convening the Conference and to apprise the General Assembly of the results of his consultations no later than September 1988.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: plenary 86-89, 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Honduras, Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, United Kingdom.

In the view of the United States, the text did not take account of the criteria necessary for progress towards peace, or the issues already addressed by the parties. It made no mention of bilateral or direct negotiations and subsumed the universally accepted basis of negotiations—Security Council resolutions 242(1967)(1) and 338(1973)(2)—under an ambiguous umbrella formulation.

Canada regretted that the text had been modified to include language that, in its view, prejudiced the organization and outcome of the proposed conference.

New Zealand regretted the inclusion of certain elements in paragraph 1, whence its abstention. Chile had reservations on the wording of the same paragraph. So did Finland, on the grounds that it unduly prejudiced the composition of and participation in the conference; it also had doubts concerning the formulation of the fifth preambular paragraph. Sweden registered surprise that the Assembly should adopt yet another resolution on an international conference, as one such resolution had already been adopted under the agenda item on the Palestine question; it stated that its affirmative vote, cast with some hesitation, did not mean that it subscribed to every element in the text, adding that it could not support the fifth preambular paragraph as it had not had an opportunity to study an authoritative text of all the resolutions adopted at the November Arab Summit.(11) The Philippines voiced reservations on some of the text's formulations.

Iran, which did not participate in the vote, said it did not wish to see the inalienable rights of its Palestinian brothers and sisters become the subject of negotiations with the Zionist usurpers.

United Nations Truce Supervision Organization

In his November report on the Middle East situation,(13) the Secretary-General provided an overview of the three peace-keeping operations in the region: the two peace-keeping forces—UNDOF and UNIFIL (see pp. 288 and 277)—and one observer mission, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO). Apart from assisting UNDOF and UNIFIL in their tasks, UNTSO maintained two observation groups of its own, the Observer Group in Beirut (see p. 277) and the Observer Group in Egypt, where with the Government's agreement about 50 observers had remained since 1979 when the second United Nations Emergency Force was withdrawn. In addition to liaison offices at Cairo and Ismailia, the Observer Group in Egypt maintained six observation posts in the Sinai.

Credentials of Israel

By a 7 October 1987 letter to the Secretary-General,(27) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on behalf of 20 States members of the Arab Group at the United Nations and PLO, protested against the credentials of the delegation of Israel to the General Assembly's 1987 regular session on the grounds that it had failed to comply with Security Council and Assembly resolutions on Palestine, the Middle East and other related issues; that it continued its annexation of Palestinian and other Arab territories and violated human rights in those territories; that it continued its aggression against the Arab States and extended the area of its aggression to the whole of Lebanon, Iraq and Tunisia; and that it continued to co-operate with the racist regime in South Africa.

On 12 October,(28) 35 States expressed their reservations on Israel's credentials, underlining its defiance and persistent violation of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, as well as of United Nations resolutions, in particular those concerning Jerusalem, the Golan Heights and the rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to the establishment of its own State, and those declaring illegal its policy of establishing settlements in the occupied territories. They further underlined Israel's systematic resort to intimidation and use of force in the name of pre-emptive action, hot pursuit and security, and to biblical and other fallacious arguments to extend its supremacy over the neighbouring Arab countries.

Before adopting resolution 42/2 A, approving the first report of the Credentials Committee,(29) the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 80 to 39, with 10 abstentions, decided not to act on an amendment to that report by Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen(30) to reject Israel's credentials. The motion to take no action was tabled by Finland on behalf also of Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (see p. 366).

Palestine question

The question of Palestine continued in 1987 to be a concern of the General Assembly and its Committee on Palestinian rights.

By four resolutions adopted in December on the question, the Assembly endorsed the Committee's call for urgent Security Council action on its 1976 recommendations—drawing the Council's attention to the fact that such action was still awaited—and for constructive efforts to bring about the proposed international conference on peace in the Middle East (see p. 258), as a means of securing United Nations objectives on the Palestine question (resolution 42/66 A); requested resources and co-operation to enable the Division for Palestinian Rights to perform its tasks (42/66 B); and asked the Department of Public Information (DPI) to continue its special information programme on the Palestine question (42/66 C). The fourth resolution dealt with the proposed international peace conference (see p. 260). In a resolution on the Middle East situation (42/209 D), the Assembly determined that Israel's 1980 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on Jerusalem was illegal and without validity.

Various United Nations bodies continued providing assistance to the Palestinians. The Secretary-General submitted a draft programme of assistance for 1988-1990, which, by their respective resolutions on the subject, the Economic and Social Council (1987/77) and the Assembly (42/166) asked him to develop and implement in co-operation with PLO.

The International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People (29 November) was observed on 30 November 1987 at United Nations Headquarters and the United Nations Offices at Geneva and Vienna. It was also commemorated in many other cities throughout the world.

Communications. By a letter of 3 February 1987,⁽¹⁾ Israel reported that, on 1 February, a bomb exploded on a bus-load of civilian commuters en route from Haifa to Jerusalem; the blast injured nine passengers, one seriously. On 2 February, the Fatah faction of PLO headed by Yasser Arafat assumed responsibility for the attack in simultaneous broadcasts from Tunis, Tunisia, and Baghdad, Iraq. To justify that blatant act of terrorism, Israel said, PLO resorted to lying about the facts, claiming the bus was a military vehicle and its passengers enemy soldiers. Israel called the attack and distorted explanation typical PLO tactics, stating that it would continue to punish the perpetrators and expose the distortions.

On 19 February,⁽²⁾ Israel alleged further PLO targeting of civilians: a two-rocket attack on a village in western Galilee on 1 February; a Molotov-cocktail attack on a passenger bus at Hebron on 2 February; a fire-bomb attack on a passenger bus at Kalandiah on 12 February; and a failed attempt to plant a bomb in Meir Hospital at Kfar Saba on 15 February, the bomb having exploded in the terrorists' car en route to the hospital. Israel also alleged that PLO, in announcements following the attacks, described the targets as military, and the bomb intended for the hospital as having damaged a vehicle of the enemy's intelligence services. Such falsifications of the facts, including the claim that its campaign of terror was limited to Judaea and Samaria (Israel's term for the occupied territories of the West Bank) and Gaza—when in fact it extended to Haifa, Galilee, Kfar Saba and elsewhere—were implicit acknowledgement by PLO that it was engaged in condemnable criminal acts, all clearly showing its aim to be the liquidation of Israel, considered "occupied territory" in its entirety.

On 15 June,⁽³⁾ Israel charged PLO with attempted attacks on civilians and with faking the results, as when it claimed responsibility, on 9 June, for attacks on two military buses, one said to be on its way to Petach Tikva and another at Rehovot. The first turned out to be a public bus and the second the Rehovot central bus station, in which PLO had planted grenades; they were dismantled before they could explode. Israel also cited PLO attempts to launch terrorist attacks against it from Lebanese territory (see p. 276).

In a declaration adopted at their meeting at Hare on 14 and 15 April, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Committee of Nine Non-Aligned Countries on Palestine reiterated the non-aligned countries' solidarity with and firm support for the Palestinians led by PLO,⁽⁴⁾ as did the heads of State of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe in a final communiqué adopted at their Seventh Summit Conference (Maputo, 21 and 22 May).(5)

The Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 General Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October), in its final communiqué,(6) stressed that a comprehensive, just and durable Middle East solution could not be achieved without total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from all Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, and the exercise by the Palestinians of their rights to return to their homes, to self-determination and to a sovereign State in Palestine. They reaffirmed their support for PLO and emphasized that only PLO had the right to represent the Palestinians. They welcomed the outcome of the Palestine National Council meeting (Algiers, Algeria, 20-25 April) as a major victory for the Palestinians, and welcomed the efforts of the Committee of Nine Non-Aligned Countries on Palestine to resolve the Palestinian issue—the core of the Middle East crisis.

By a communiqué issued in New York on 19 October,(7) the Organization of the Islamic Conference rejected as unacceptable Amendment No. 940 recently adopted by the United States Senate, making unlawful the presence in the United States of the Permanent Observer Mission of PLO to the United Nations. It viewed the move as a denial of the Palestinians' right to present their cause in international forums, particularly in the United Nations, and an attempt to obstruct the search for peace in the Middle East. Recalling that the Mission's presence was in accordance with a 1974 Assembly resolution(8) and with the 1947 Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations (Headquarters Agreement),(9) the Conference considered Amendment No. 940 a violation of international law and the right of United Nations invitees, such as PLO. It called on the Secretary-General to declare the United Nations position on the matter and to ensure respect by the host country of the Headquarters Agreement.

A similar protest was made by the -Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 16 October).(10)

Human Rights Commission action. In a 19 February 1987 resolution on the situation in occupied Palestine (see p. 819), the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the Palestinians' inalienable rights to self-determination without external interference and to the establishment of their sovereign State on their national soil, to return to their homeland and property, and to regain their rights by all means in accordance with the Charter and United Nations resolutions.

The Commission condemned Israel for its continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories and for non-compliance with relevant United Nations resolutions, calling on it to withdraw from those territories. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit the resolution to Israel and to make available to the Commission in 1988 all information pertaining to the resolution's implementation.

Activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on Palestinian rights continued in 1987 to follow developments in the Israeli-occupied territories and actions by Israel which the Committee regarded as violations of international law or of United Nations resolutions. It brought such actions—including Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, Israeli exploitation of Arab-owned lands and other matters affecting Palestinian rights (see below, under "Territories occupied by Israel")—to the attention of the General Assembly and the Security Council.

As described in its annual report to the Assembly,(11) the Committee and, under its guidance, the Division for Palestinian Rights undertook to expand co-operation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs), in order to heighten awareness of the facts relating to the Palestine question and to create conditions favourable for full implementation of the Committee's recommendations. To that end it held regional symposia for NGOs in Asia (New Delhi, India, 8-10 June) and North America (New York, 24-26 June), and an international NGO meeting (Geneva, 7-9 September). In addition, it held its sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth regional seminars: for Asia (New Delhi, 8-12 June), North America (New York, 22 and 23 June) and Latin America (Havana, Cuba, 15-17 December).

During the period under review, the Committee noted that international understanding of the Palestine question and support for the attainment and exercise of Palestinian rights had reached new heights and that the deterioration of the situation of Palestinians had aroused widespread concern that tension and violence would increase; a new phase had thus been reached, necessitating intensified collective efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the question. To secure United Nations objectives, the Committee continued to give priority to the early convening of the proposed international peace conference on the Middle East under United Nations auspices, based on guidelines contained in the 1983(12) and 1986(13) Assembly resolutions endorsing the call for such a conference. It noted that, despite a growing international consensus in favour of the proposal, it had not yet proved possible to obtain the agreement of all the parties.

In the light of those observations, the Committee recommended that the Security Council take urgent positive action on the Committee's original recommendations submitted to (14) and endorsed by the Assembly in 1976, (15) and on those adopted by the 1983 Geneva Conference on the Palestine question, (16) again reaffirming that those recommendations, repeatedly endorsed by the Assembly, were solidly founded on fundamental and internationally accepted principles. It also recommended that the Assembly call on those Member States which had not agreed to the proposed conference to reconsider their attitude, and also call for constructive efforts by all Governments, in particular the permanent Council members, towards the early convening of the conference, and for continued efforts by the Secretary-General to achieve that objective. These recommendations were in addition to those it had submitted in 1976, reiterated yearly since for implementation.

Annexed to the Committee's report were its 1976 recommendations; the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the 1983 Conference; the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Sixteenth and Seventeenth United Nations Seminars on the Question of Palestine (see p. 264); as well as the declarations adopted by the United Nations Asian and North American Regional NGOs Symposia and by the International Meeting of NGOs on the Question of Palestine (see p. 264).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the report of the Committee on Palestinian rights, the General Assembly, in December, adopted four resolutions on the Palestine question, dealing with the Committee and its recommendations, the Division for Palestinian Rights, public information, and the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East (see p. 260).

Resolution 42/66 A was adopted on 2 December by recorded vote.

Israel, which had requested the vote, could not endorse what it felt were the quite substantial financial implications, and asserted that the meetings provided for would do nothing to advance the search for a peaceful and negotiated settlement.

Explaining in a single statement its position on resolutions 42/66 A-C, the United States said they perpetuated bodies and activities dedicated to expounding only the Palestinian perspective and were inconsistent with the effort to put forward the United Nations as sponsor of a conference to launch negotiations; United Nations auspices would have to be accepted by all sides, a goal the resolutions would not help to achieve. Speaking for the EC members, Denmark reiterated their previously stated position;(17) namely, the need to take due consideration of the Organization's financial difficulties in determining the tasks of the bodies concerned.

In Finland's view, resolutions 42/66 A and B failed to represent the balance required for a comprehensive, just and lasting Middle East settlement. Explaining its abstention on resolution 42/66 B, Canada said it had changed from its negative vote on similar resolutions of previous years to underline its concern for the tragic plight of the Palestinians. It also voiced concern that, in a period of financial restraint, duplication existed among the mandates of the Committee on Palestinian rights, the Division for Palestinian Rights and DPI, adding that, too often, the mandated activities were marred by a partisan spirit detrimental to reaching a negotiated and just solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Iran declared itself opposed in principle to any resolution, action or report that might directly or indirectly imply recognition of the Zionist base of terror occupying Palestine. The Libyan Arab Jamahiyya, whose vote reflected its belief in the national rights of the Palestinians, voiced reservations on any references in the text that could be interpreted as detracting from those rights or as recognizing the fait accompli imposed by force in occupied Palestine.

In other action, the Assembly, by resolution 42/95, reaffirmed the right of the Palestinians to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without foreign interference. It condemned those Governments not recognizing the right to self-determination and independence, notably of the Palestinians (among others). It also condemned the constant and deliberate violations of the Palestinians' rights, as well as Israel's expansionist activities in the Middle East, which were an obstacle to the Palestinians' self-determination and independence and a threat to peace and stability in the region.

Public information activities

The Committee on Palestinian rights(11) reviewed implementation of a 1986 Assembly request(18) that DPI continue its 1986-1987 special information programme on the Palestine question. The programme included press and publication activities; radio-visual coverage, and a fact-finding mission to the Middle East and national and regional encounters for journalists.

During 1987, DPI continued to disseminate, through articles and press releases, information on the Palestine question and on the related seminars and symposia organized by the Committee. Consideration of the question by the Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations bodies was reported in the UN Chronicle. While a personnel recruitment freeze precluded issuance of new publications, DPI reproduced for distribution The United Nations and the Question of Palestine and The Work of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories.

Besides providing radio coverage in all of the official United Nations languages (Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian, Spanish), DPI produced a substantial number of television news items on the question and on related Middle East events, and circulated video packages world-wide.

DPI arranged a fact-finding visit to Egypt, Jordan and Iraq, from 2 to 15 June, by a team of 12 prominent journalists and media representatives from around the world. Visits to Israel and the occupied territories were not possible since Israel had not responded to an official request for such visits.

Two regional encounters between high-level journalists and experts on Palestine were again organized: the first, for North and Latin American journalists, took place in Argentina from 20 to 23 January; the second, for Asian journalists, took place at Singapore from 6 to 9 April. Two series of national encounters, in which a team of expert panelists held in-depth press conferences with national journalists and foreign correspondents, were also organized: one for Latin America, held in Peru and Venezuela on 28 and 30 January, respectively; another for Asia, held in India, Japan and Thailand between 31 March and 13 April.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/66 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Taking note, in particular, of the information contained in paragraphs 81 to 91 of that report,

Recalling its resolution 41/43 C of 2 December 1986,

Convinced that the world-wide dissemination of accurate and comprehensive information and the role of non-governmental organizations and institutions remain of vital importance in heightening awareness of and support for the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent sovereign Palestinian State,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the action taken by the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in compliance with General Assembly resolution 41/43 C;

2. Requests the Department of Public Information, in full co-operation and co-ordination with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, to continue its special information programme on the question of Palestine during the biennium 1988-1989, with particular emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America and, in particular:

(a) To disseminate information on all the activities of the United Nations system relating to the question of Palestine, including reports of the work carried out by the relevant United Nations organs;

(b) To continue to issue and update publications on the various aspects of the question of Palestine, including Israeli violations of the human rights of the Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories as reported by the relevant United Nations organs;

(c) To expand its audio-visual material on the question of Palestine, including the production of special series of radio programmes and television broadcast;

(d) To organize fact-finding news missions to the area for journalists;

(e) To organize regional and national encounters for journalists.

The States which explained their votes on resolution 42/66 C did so when they explained their positions on resolutions 42/66 A and B (see p. 266).

Jerusalem

The General Assembly, by resolution 42/209 D, again determined that Israel's 1980 decision⁽¹⁹⁾ to impose its laws and administration on Jerusalem was illegal and therefore null and void. Applicability of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) to the Israeli-occupied territories (see p. 308), including Jerusalem, was repeatedly reaffirmed by the Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as in reports and communications dealing with the situation in the occupied territories (see p. 296).

Communications. The Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January 1987),⁽²⁰⁾ in a resolution on the city of Al-Quds Al-Sharif (Jerusalem), reiterated that: the question of Palestine and Jerusalem took priority over all other questions for all Muslims; Jerusalem was an indivisible part of the usurped Palestinian homeland and the capital of Palestine; and its return to Arab Palestinian sovereignty was the only guarantee for preserving its Arab-Islamic character, its sanctity and the freedom of worship. The Conference also reiterated the commitment of its members to employ all their capabilities in confronting Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem, including breaking political and diplomatic relations with it and ending all co-operation with any State recognizing that decision. It called on all countries, especially the United States, to refrain from dealing with Israel's occupation authorities in a manner that might suggest recognition or acceptance of the fait accompli arising from Israel's decision; and called on them not to recognize the legitimacy of Israeli measures to change the Arab-Islamic features of Jerusalem and introduce demographic changes.

In a 31 July letter,⁽²¹⁾ Jordan accused Israel with a new act of aggression against an Islamic historic landmark in Jerusalem, the Tankiziyah Madrasah. Prompted by a 21 June Israeli newspaper report on the condition of the building and after obtaining long-delayed permission from Israeli authorities, officials of the Islamic Antiquities Division, accompanied by Israel's Inspector of Antiquities, visited the building. In the only room they were allowed to inspect, they found fissures in the foundation walls and ceiling, a disintegrating floor, and damaged doors and windows—largely due, it was concluded, to persistent excavations underneath Islamic buildings that proved more extensive than had been made public. Jordan called for urgent action to ensure the preservation and integrity of Islamic historic and sacred places, and called for implementation of United Nations resolutions on Jerusalem.

Israel replied on 11 August⁽²²⁾ that excavations completed in 1984 could not cause damage to surrounding buildings, as had been confirmed by a special representative of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in 1986; and that the recent visit to the building, referred to by Jordan, determined that water seepage had caused the floor in question to sink. Israel found it astonishing that structural defects in a building nearly 700 years old could be ascribed to a "Judaization" of Jerusalem and to a deliberate obliteration of Islamic landmarks. Such imaginative language, it observed, was consistent with the selective manner in which certain States chose to voice concern over the sanctity of Islamic sites and holy places.

In a 13 October letter⁽²³⁾ detailing incidents in the Israeli-occupied territories (see p. 298), the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights drew attention to a report by the news agency Reuters that a renewed attempt by militant Jews to enter the Islamic shrine of Al-Aqsa on 11 October sparked a protest demonstration by some 2,000 Palestinians. He quoted The New York Times of 13 October as reporting that soldiers fired tear-gas at the demonstrators, injuring 25 people and arresting 12 others. Protest demonstrations over the incident followed at Ramallah, where a Palestinian woman was shot dead and six students were wounded by Israeli troops, who also arrested some 100 Palestinians and sealed off the centre of the town; general strikes were declared at Nablus, Jerusalem and elsewhere.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an August 1987 report, with a later addendum,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted replies from 10 countries to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement three 1986 Assembly resolutions on various aspects of the Middle East situation. By one of these (25) the Assembly again called on those States that had transferred their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions.

UNESCO action. The Executive Board and the General Conference of UNESCO, at their September-November and October/November 1987 sessions, respectively, examined a report on the application of the UNESCO resolutions and decisions concerning the cultural heritage of Jerusalem.

The Board, by a decision, and the Conference, by a resolution, reaffirmed previous UNESCO resolutions designed to safeguard the city's spiritual, cultural, historical and other values. They deplored actual and attempted assaults on the Islamic holy places, and the destruction and alterations to which the city's monumental heritage and traditional historical site had been subjected since occupation. Drawing attention to the state of degradation of the Islamic cultural and religious heritage, they invited the financial support of States, foundations and individuals for its maintenance and restoration. They also invited the UNESCO Director-General to continue the strict application of their resolutions on the matter so long as the city was occupied and to report on modifications to the city as a result of that occupation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the Middle East situation, the General Assembly adopted on 11 December 1987 resolution 42/209 D by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 C of 16 December 1985 and 41/162 C of 4 December 1986, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which had altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States that had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 13 November 1987,

1. Determines that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of

Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980), and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Speaking for the EC members, Denmark said their position relative to the resolution had been made known previously (most recently during the Assembly debate on the Middle East situation): the solution to the Arab-Israeli dispute should be based on Charter principles, including the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force; this implied that Israel must end the territorial occupation it had maintained since the 1967 conflict, and that its policy in East Jerusalem, among other occupied territories, was contrary to international law, so that all measures taken within that policy's framework were to be considered null and void.

Iran reiterated its reservations on all terms that implied any recognition of what it called the Zionist base of terror occupying Palestine. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya voiced reservations on any provisions that could imply a recognition of the de facto situation in the occupied Palestinian lands.

Argentina and Bolivia supported the text because it embodied the principles to which they subscribed.

In related actions, the Assembly reaffirmed the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied territories, including Jerusalem (resolution 42/160 B); again determined that Israeli measures to change the status, geographical nature and demographic composition of the territories, including Jerusalem, violated the Convention and were without legal validity (42/160 C); condemned Israel's annexation of parts of the territories, including Jerusalem, asked the Security Council to ensure Israel's compliance with the Convention and halt its practices there, and called for the reopening of the Roman Catholic Medical Facility Hospice at Jerusalem, closed in 1985,(26) so that it might resume its services to the city's Arab population (42/160 D); and asked for continued measures towards establishing a university for Palestine refugees at Jerusalem (42/69 K).

Assistance to Palestinians

Various organizations of the United Nations system continued in 1987 to provide assistance to the Palestinian people within the terms of their respective mandates. Notable among them were UNRWA, which maintained an extensive programme of education, health and relief services for Palestinian refugees (see p. 325); the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), whose programme of economic and social assistance was primarily for the non-refugee population (see below); the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), whose assistance focused on the protection and improvement of the environmental situation in the occupied territories (see p. 324); and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and UNICEF (see below). Assistance was also provided by the Secretariat's Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA), the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA), the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, UPU, ITU, WMO, IMO, WIPO and UNIDO.

In May 1987,(27) the Secretary-General submitted a draft programme of assistance for 1988-1990, outlining system-wide response to the most pressing needs of Palestinians in the occupied territories. First requested by the General Assembly in 1983,(28) the programme was based on existing assistance and took account of the agreement reached at Geneva in 1986 on the subject.(29) For its preparation, a consultant undertook a mission in February 1987 to gather information from the system's relevant entities in Geneva, New York, Rome and Vienna, supplementing it with written information from sources which could not be visited.

The programme's main objective was to rebuild the productive base of the economy in the occupied territories to enable it to absorb its own labour force, numbering an estimated 116,000 working in Israel at the end of 1986. Criteria for project selection included: productivity; absorption of surplus agricultural output, especially through the establishment of agro-industries; contribution to import substitution; project complementarity; geographical spread; and labour absorptive capacity.

The programme identified projects classified as current, planned, or suggested for future development. They were grouped under: research, analysis and organization of data; infrastructure (such as water-supply and sewage systems, human resources training, machinery and equipment, industrial zones and commercial centres); agriculture (including animal husbandry and fisheries); industry (to promote olive oil, glass and ceramics, plastics, canning and tourism, among others); employment; education and vocational training; health; social welfare; and human settlements.

Financing for the current and planned projects had been largely provided for in the regular programme budgets of the executing organizations, some of which could also draw upon special contributions and other extrabudgetary funds. Financing for the suggested projects, which were relatively costly, remained to be sought from extrabudgetary sources. For the programme's implementation, the considerable experience gained in planning, developing and implementing projects in the unique environment of the occupied territories could be drawn upon.

As requested by the Assembly in 1986,(30) the Secretary-General convened a meeting of the system's relevant programmes, organizations, agencies, funds and bodies (Geneva, 19 June 1987) to consider the draft programme of assistance. Also at the meeting were representatives of PLO and Arab host countries, as well as of intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

The meeting agreed that there was continuing system-wide commitment to provide assistance to the Palestinians, but that the draft programme, given its focus, did not reflect the contributions of the Arab host countries. It was, however, co-ordinated and took account of the priorities identified by PLO, although concern was expressed that the consultant did not include a visit to the occupied territories. It was agreed that the programme should serve as an evolving, dynamic framework for action and that its implementation required a major effort to mobilize the necessary resources, possibly to be undertaken jointly by PLO and the United Nations.

UNDP activities. The UNDP programme of assistance to the Palestinian people, in operation since 1980, had become a leading element in the economic and social development efforts in the West Bank and Gaza. Under the 1980-1986 programme, UNDP had delivered over 30 projects. Of these, 11 projects totalling $2.8 million had been completed; 18 projects amounting to $11.6 million were under implementation in 1987, with those on sewage disposal systems and effluent recycling, education and health taking the lion's share of the costs. A number of UNDP-administered projects were financed as follows: by WHO—four health projects amounting to $590,835; by UNFPA—one project providing 6 fellowships in demographic and socio-economic training for $133,200; and by ILO—five management training and consultancy projects totalling $352,242.

As described by the UNDP Administrator in a March 1987 report,(31) the projects formulated for the assistance programme for 1987-1991 were in the areas of natural resources, agriculture, industry, human settlements, health, education and employment. As updated, the projects showed notional costs totalling $56.7 million, far in excess of the $8 million approved by the Governing Council from Special Programme Resources for the fourth (1987-1991) programming cycle. Thus far, appeals for contributions had resulted only in $1 million each from the United States Agency for International Development and the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations. UNDP continued to seek additional support through cost-sharing arrangements, special voluntary contributions or financing by organizations within or outside the United Nations system.

By an 18 June decision,(32) the Governing Council, noting the achievements of the UNDP assistance programme to the Palestinians, invited financial contributions from Governments and other donors.

UNCTAD activities. Through its Special Economic Unit (Palestinian people), UNCTAD continued to prepare reports and technical publications reviewing and analysing developments in the economic conditions of the Palestinians and to propose strategies for future development. In 1987, its activities included the completion in March of an in-depth study of the financial sector in the occupied territories, undertaken in collaboration with ESCWA, which focused on Israeli policies affecting that sector. In addition, extracts from the Unit's expanded data base were scheduled for publication during the year, including a statistical series, a chronology of current economic issues and a bibliography of reference material on the Palestinian economy.

UNICEF activities. In 1987, UNICEF provided technical assistance to local health departments for the training of traditional birth attendants, funding the training of 150 such attendants and 16 supervisors (midwives) in the West Bank.(33)

In the area of early childhood development, assistance was directed towards establishing four prototype child development centres for the prevention and early detection of the most common childhood disabilities and towards providing guidance for treatment and rehabilitation. Assistance was also provided to train 652 kindergarten teachers and upgrade sanitation facilities in 60 kindergartens. Other assistance took the form of construction materials and supplies for the renovation of 20 kindergartens and basic furniture for another 120. A pre-school project for such facilities as day-care centres and kindergartens run by the private sector and NGOs covered only 12 per cent of the total pre-school age-group in the West Bank and 6 per cent in Gaza. Originally scheduled to end in 1986, the project was extended through 1987 to permit a thorough review on which to base a new programme.

Uruguay said its vote was without prejudice to its reservations on certain aspects of paragraphs 3 and 5.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

The Second Committee, before approving the draft resolution as a whole, approved paragraph 3 by a recorded vote of 115 to 1, with 3 abstentions. In the light of an oral revision of paragraph 4 by the sponsors, an amendment by Jordan, (34) as sub-amended by Democratic Yemen, (35) was not pressed for action. By the amendment, proposed to replace paragraphs 3 and 4, the Assembly would have asked the Secretary-General to develop the assistance programme, mobilize resources for it, and seek its early implementation in close co-operation with PLO and the Arab Governments concerned, when appropriate. Democratic Yemen's sub-amendment would have replaced the reference to "the Arab Governments concerned, when appropriate" by "when appropriate, outside the occupied Palestinian territories with the Arab host countries concerned".

Explaining their positions before the Committee, the United States reiterated its opposition to channelling assistance to the Palestinians through PLO. In Israel's view, the text should have deplored the fact that, with the exception of $8 million allocated by UNDP, funds for a programme of some $57 million had not been obtained, and should have urged the Governments that had expressed interest in helping the Israeli-administered territories to make contributions; it was unfortunate that the hopes raised by the amendment's reference to Arab Governments had been in vain; moreover, the text introduced irrelevant political elements by intimating that Israel was attempting to profit from the assistance programme and by assigning a role to PLO, which had done nothing but provoke bloodshed and terror.

Jordan considered it unacceptable to omit mention of the role of the Arab States concerned, whence its abstention on paragraph 3.

Denmark, speaking for the European Economic Community (EEC) members, referred to their vote as reflecting their resolve to do their utmost to meet the needs of the Palestinian people. Cameroon said the text suffered from a few imperfections but it trusted that the machinery provided for would not impede humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians. Iran's vote was in keeping with its policy of active solidarity with the Palestinians.

In resolution 42/190, the Assembly took note of the statement made by PLO on 27 October before the Second Committee. By that statement, PLO expressed regret that the draft programme of assistance for the Palestinians had been prepared not by a multi-disciplinary mission but by a single consultant who had been denied access to the territories. It welcomed the programme, which should be viewed as a dynamic framework subject to modification and improvement; it suggested that a joint United Nations/PLO mission be organized to mobilize the resources for the programme's implementation, particularly for the main priority projects (construction of a seaport, a fishing port and a cement plant; development of agro-industries; production and training centres) and for two UNCTAD projects relating to the establishment of a research centre for project identification and formulation, and to statistics.

Incidents and disputes involving Arab countries and Israel

In 1987, the 1981 armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations had again been inscribed as an item in the agenda of the General Assembly. Although it was the subject of communications from intergovernmental bodies, no Assembly action was taken on it.

Two other matters relating to the Middle East situation that occupied the attention of the United Nations during the year concerned Israel's relations with Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. Southern Lebanon remained the main focus of attention, in respect of which the Security Council issued two appeals on behalf of the civilian population there. The Council, on the Secretary-General's recommendations, also renewed the mandates of the peace-keeping forces deployed in southern Lebanon and in the Golan Heights, namely, UNIFIL and UNDOF.

Commending the United Nations peace-keeping operations, the Secretary-General stated that sacrifices had been a part of their services, particularly in southern Lebanon, where UNIFIL soldiers had daily risked their lives and 21 had died in the line of duty since August 1986 in protecting the well-being of others; the value of those operations had been repeatedly reaffirmed by the Council and the valour and dedication of those who served were deeply appreciated by the international community (see p. 6).

Iraq and Israel

The item on armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations, on the agenda of the General Assembly since 1981, following the bombing by Israel of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad,⁽¹⁾ was the subject of two communications addressed to the Secretary-General in 1987.

The Fifth Islamic Summit Conference (Kuwait, 26-29 January)⁽²⁾ reiterated its condemnation of that armed aggression and of Israel's refusal to implement the 1981 Security Council resolution⁽³⁾ (which called on Israel to refrain from such attacks or threats thereof, called on it to place its nuclear facilities under the safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), and considered that Iraq was entitled to redress for the destruction caused); it also reiterated its rejection of attempts by some States to delete the item from the Assembly's agenda.

In its final communique, the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October)(4) condemned Israel in similar terms and requested IAEA to ensure against a repetition of the strike by Israel on nuclear installations under the IAEA safeguards system in Iraq or elsewhere.

The Assembly retained the item on its agenda by decision 42/460 of 21 December on the suspension of its 1987 session.

Lebanon

The situation in Lebanon was marked by unrelenting hostilities and escalating violence throughout 1987, with dire consequences, largely for the civilian population. This was reflected in communications addressed to the Secretary-General, the majority of which were from Lebanon and Israel, with Lebanon reporting repeated Israeli attacks on its territory that inflicted heavy casualties and material damage, and Israel citing terrorist attacks against it from southern Lebanon; in UNRWA reports, which spoke of conditions of emergency and of the tragic plight of the Palestinian refugees trapped in camps under siege by militias; and in the Secretary-General's reports on developments in the UNIFIL area of operation, underscoring casualties suffered also by the peace-keeping mission at the hands of the main protagonists of the conflict in Lebanon—the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) and the South Lebanese Army (SLA) on the one hand, and the various armed resistance groups on the other.

As a result of the crisis in the besieged camps early in the year and of the mounting number of displaced persons and refugees requiring emergency relief, UNRWA in February appealed for funds to finance its emergency relief programme. The Security Council, alarmed by the suffering of the civilians inside those camps, issued an appeal in February for a cease-fire and another appeal in March to all the parties concerned to facilitate delivery of emergency food and medical supplies to the camps.

The Secretary-General assessed the situation in the UNIFIL area as one of impasse, with little realistic hope for Israel's early withdrawal from southern Lebanon and thus for the fulfilment of UNIFIL'S mandate to confirm such withdrawal and assist Lebanon in restoring its effective authority in the area. Nevertheless, at the request of Lebanon and on his recommendation, the Security Council, by resolutions 594(1987) and 599(1987), extended UNIFIL'S mandate in January and July, each time for a six-month period.

Israel and Lebanon

Communications. Throughout 1987, Lebanon addressed communications to the Secretary-General and to the Presidents of the Security Council and the General Assembly, charging Israel with persistent acts of violence against its territory and population that had left many people killed or wounded and had caused considerable property damage. Lebanon condemned those acts as savage and criminal, designed to provoke an explosive situation in southern Lebanon and thereby provide Israel with a pretext for a large-scale military aggression against it. Lebanon repeatedly warned of the consequences of those acts for peace and security in the region and the world, and appealed to the Council to ensure compliance with its resolutions calling for Israel's withdrawal from Lebanon so that Lebanon could regain sovereignty over the whole of its territory.

Lebanon, on 5 January,(5) reported that, on the previous day, Israeli combat helicopters had bombed the villages of Kabrikha and Khirbet-Salum in southern Lebanon, to the north of the so-called security zone, causing dozens of civilian casualties and destroying buildings and crops. On 12 January, (6) it reported further incidents of bombings and shelling of towns, villages and farms in southern Lebanon on 9, 11 and 12 January.

By a 29 April letter,(7) Lebanon drew attention to what it described as the explosive situation in southern Lebanon resulting from an escalation of aggression by Israel's military forces and by the so-called South Lebanese Army—portending a major military attack by Israel north of the "security zone". Annexed to the letter was a list of acts of aggression alleged to have taken place between 7 and 24 April, including: an SLA bombardment, on 21 April, of Yatar and Kafra villages that killed or injured five civilians; and Israeli air raids, on 23 April, on the outskirts of the city of Sidon, on the Ein el-Hilweh and Mieh Mieh refugee camps, and on Darb es Sim and Jebel el-Halib in the outskirts of Maghdoushe township, during which more than 30 bombs and rockets were fired, injuring a number of civilians and damaging property.

On 1 May,(8) Lebanon charged Israel with carrying out three air raids on that date: a 15-minute sortie each on Sidon's eastern outskirts, on Ein el-Hilweh and Mieh Mieh camps, and on the villages of Jinsnaya, Ain ed-Delb and el-Qarieh, killing no fewer than 14 people, wounding 37 others and destroying more than 15 houses. Lebanon also alleged Israeli attacks on the Finnish and Norwegian units of UNIFIL with heavy machine-gun fire, continued reconnaissance flights over Mount Lebanon and Beirut, and continued naval patrolling inside Lebanon's territorial waters in intensified siege of the ports of Tyre and Sidon.

On 7 May,(9) Lebanon accused Israel of having bombed Sidon's south-eastern suburbs the preceding day, aiming at a number of villages and Palestinian camps, particularly Ein el-Hilweh; counted so far were 15 civilians killed and 30 wounded. It further accused Israel of stepping up its naval blockade of the ports of Tyre and Sidon, preventing the entry of commercial vessels. On 8 May,(10) Lebanon wrote that, on that date, Sidon's outskirts and the Palestinian camps in the area had been subjected anew to indiscriminate bombing that killed seven civilians and wounded 34 and caused considerable property damage.

On 31 May,(11) Lebanon reported that an Israeli armoured force had that day penetrated deep into Lebanese territory, reaching the town of Jezzine some 10 miles north of the "security zone", where it set up quarters; and that, together with SLA, Israel had bombarded Nabatiye and its environs with artillery fire, causing an undetermined number of deaths and injuries, and extensive property damage; on 28 May, Israeli war-planes had intercepted a Lebanese reconnaissance plane, forcing it to land in Israel and subjecting the crew to a four-hour interrogation before releasing both crew and plane. Lebanon also reported that Israel's Air Force had continued to overfly southern Lebanon day and night, terrifying the population and creating an atmosphere of tension.

On 19 June,(12) Lebanon stated that, two days before, Israel had bombarded Kabrikha with five air-to-ground missiles, and Sidon's eastern outskirts, Ein el-Hilweh and Kafr Roummâne and Habbouche villages along the edge of the "security zone" with artillery fire. Casualties included three dead and six wounded, in addition to property damage. Lebanon also reported that an SLA force had advanced hundreds of metres towards Kafra, within the area of operations of the UNIFIL Nepalese unit, demolishing a deserted house with 15 missiles fired from tanks; hundreds of tank-supported Israeli forces had also penetrated 6 kilometres to the north of the "security zone", combing a number of villages and farms. Unless Security Council resolutions were implemented, Lebanon warned, the "security zone" would be used by Israel not for protecting its borders but as a base from which to promote an explosive situation in southern Lebanon to serve its own interests.

On 28 July,(13) Lebanon alleged that, on the night of 26/27 July, on the usual pretext of combating and forestalling terrorist activities mounted from Lebanon, an Israeli commando force of some 40 men had come ashore on the Lebanese coast south of Sarda, 40 kilometres north of the Israeli border; using fast boats and helicopters, they had launched an attack with missiles and machine-guns, killing seven Lebanese and wounding four before withdrawing under cover of intense sea and air bombardment. Lebanon drew attention to the seriousness of Israel's encroachment on the sovereignty of a neighbouring State, violating its territory and territorial waters with no regard for the lives or property of its inhabitants.

On 12 August,(14) Lebanon informed of continued attacks on southern Lebanon: on 9 August, an air raid on Soultaniyé village, and, during the night, an SLA mortar shelling of areas east of Sidon; and on 10 August, bombardment with machine-gun fire and air-to-ground missiles of the village of Qa'qa'iyat al-Jisr and along the Litani River by four Israeli helicopters. A civilian was killed and two were wounded in a car that had been hit, to justify which Israel claimed the car was suspect. Stating that hills and valleys had been sprayed with incendiary bombs, igniting fires in farmlands and olive orchards, Lebanon drew attention to Israel's policy of creating exclusive zones where it was impossible for farmers to work their land, as in the case of Yatar, Kafra, Jebaa, Arab-salim and Zaoutar.

On 12 October,(15) Lebanon charged that, two days before, Israel had staged a four-plane air raid on Yanta and its environs in the Bekaa, some 40 kilometres from the Lebanon-Israel border, firing over 20 rockets that inflicted many casualties and major material damage. Summing up, Lebanon stated that, since the year began, Israel had conducted 23 air raids against Lebanese territory, the most recent being the barbarous shelling of Ein el-Hilweh, which had killed more than 50 people and injured over 100.

On 30 October,(16) Lebanon presented the tragic plight of a large number of its citizens in the south and the western Bekaa bordering the "security zone", owing to what it described as the persistent inhumane practices of Israel's occupation forces. Those practices included random shooting and bombardment that killed and wounded many persons, the burning and destruction of agricultural crops with phosphorus bombs, and obstruction of villagers attempting to farm their land and harvest crops, thus depriving them of their livelihood. Lebanon asked that the Secretary-General consider practical measures to halt those practices, which were an obstacle to a solution of the Lebanon crisis.

Lebanon, on 16 December,(17) reported a series of attacks that had occurred the previous day: the bombing of a Lebanese army position in the western Bekaa that destroyed an armoured vehicle and wounded a soldier; an attack on the town of Maidoun, 21 kilometres from the Israeli frontier, that killed or wounded 25 persons, with the attacking

Israeli force, supported by tanks and helicopters, subsequently occupying the town as a new Israeli position outside the "security zone"; and the shelling of Yatar, Braachit and Kafra villages, damaging houses and agricultural crops.

On 24 December,(18) Lebanon reported the bombardment of Nabatiye and the outskirts of Habbouche on 19 December; and of the area between the Qa'qa'iyat al-Jisr valley and Habbouche, aimed mainly at Arabsalim, and of Jebaa and Arabsalim and around Ain Kana on 21 December. The bombardments took seven lives, wounded 25 and caused considerable material losses.

Israel, in several related communications, advanced the argument that it had taken such measures solely to defend and protect itself against terrorist attacks launched from Lebanese territory.

Israel claimed on 5 January 1987(19) that, on 31 December 1986, a Lebanese Shiite terrorist group closely allied to Hezbollah announced the murder of three Lebanese Jews whom it had kidnapped and held captive since 1985; over the past two years, the same group had tortured and murdered five others and was holding captive another three. Israel condemned this latest anti-Semitic atrocity, calling for its universal repudiation and for immediate action to prevent the murder of the remaining captives and to stop further kidnappings. It moreover reserved the right to seek out the perpetrators.

On 20 January,(20) Israel accused the terrorists of having killed one of their remaining captives on 12 January, calling it yet another anti-Semitic attack on innocent Lebanese civilians who had been abducted and murdered only because they were Jews and again urging repudiation of that atrocity. Israel observed that, while Lebanon repeatedly voiced concern for the safety of its citizens, it greeted the murder of Jewish citizens with complete silence.

Replying on 3 February,(21) Lebanon stressed that it spared no effort in ensuring the safety of its citizens without distinction or discrimination and condemned acts of violence against any Lebanese citizen of whatever ethnic community. It called Israel's reference to anti-Semitism an attempt to elicit international sympathy and to justify its savage air, land and sea attacks against peaceful Lebanese citizens, their property and possessions. Israel was not authorized to protect Jews irrespective of their nationality, Lebanon asserted, adding that it regarded Israel's reservation of the right to bring the perpetrators to justice-an action solely within Lebanon's competence-as a veiled threat.

On 31 March (22) Israel referred to a 28 February Amnesty International report, according to which Syrian troops, in the third week of December 1986, had entered the city of Tripoli in northern Lebanon and had slaughtered over 200 civilians including women and children; the fate of hundreds of others who had disappeared remained unknown. The troops had surrounded the Sunni district, setting up road-blocks to prevent both escape and entry, especially entry by journalists. Syrian commandos then invaded the district using machine-guns, grenades and tanks; eyewitness accounts cited by Amnesty had spoken of civilians being dragged out of their homes and summarily shot (see also p. 317).

On 15 June,(23) Israel accused PLO of terrorist attacks against its civilians (see p. 263) mounted from Lebanese territory, citing incidents involving three heavily-armed Fatah terrorists caught on 19 April following their infiltration into northern Israel to take civilian hostages, and a five-man PLO squad, ordered by Yasser Arafat on 8 May to carry out a massacre at Israel's Nahariya central bus station. The squad had been apprehended in the security zone before it could cross the border; two were killed and three taken prisoner. Israel attributed its ability to abort those wanton attacks to the security arrangements it had found necessary to put in place along its northern border, claiming there was no central Government able to prevent PLO and other terrorist groups from using Lebanon as a staging ground for aggression against Israel.

By a declaration on the Middle East adopted on 13 July at Copenhagen,(24) the EC Foreign Ministers expressed concern about the continuation of violence in Lebanon, highlighted once again by the recent assassination of its Prime Minister, by further hostage-taking and by an escalation of killings in southern Lebanon. They condemned the continuing detention of hostages and victims of kidnapping and expressed hope for moderation by all parties in order to permit the resumption of political dialogue towards national reconciliation based on respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, unity, independence and territorial integrity. Their concern was reiterated in a declaration by the EC heads of State and Government issued at their meeting in the European Council (Copenhagen, 4 and 5 December),(25) by which they also reaffirmed their support for UNIFIL, calling on all concerned to allow it to fulfil its mandate unobstructed.

In its final communique, the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October),(26) concerned over the dangerous situation that continued to confront Lebanon, demanded implementation of the 1978(26) and 1982(27) Security Council resolutions calling for Israel's immediate and unconditional withdrawal from all Lebanese territory and for the deployment of UNIFIL and Lebanon's army up to the internationally recognized boundaries. It condemned Israel's aggression against Lebanon, its continued occupation of parts of southern Lebanon and its inhuman practices there, and expressed support for the National Lebanese Resistance aimed at liberating southern Lebanon.

The Commonwealth heads of Government, in a communique adopted at their 13-17 October meeting at Vancouver,(28) conveyed their concern about the continuing violence in Lebanon, reaffirmed support for the country's territorial integrity, independence and sovereignty, and expressed the hope for continued efforts towards national reconciliation.

Israel-Lebanon border

By a letter of 6 October 1987 to the President of the Security Council, Lebanon protested against ongoing Israeli military construction projects along the international border between Israel and Lebanon, namely the building of a road and fence south-east of the village of Alma Ash-Sha'b and south of the village of Yarun. Lebanon asked that the Council hold consultations on the matter.

The Council accordingly met in informal consultations on 15 October and asked the Secretary-General to report on the situation.

Note of the Secretary-General. By a note of 24 November to the Security Council President,(29) the Secretary-General reported that the Israeli authorities had constructed a large number of military installations in that part of southern Lebanon called the "security zone", close to the Armistice Demarcation Line. An accompanying map indicated their location. The installations, referred to in the note as border encroachments, had the apparent effect of realigning the border, giving rise to concern that Israel was attempting to annex Lebanese territory. An encroachment usually resulted from the construction of a fence enclosing a piece of land on the Lebanon side of the border, varying in size from several hundred square metres to several square kilometres. A paved patrol road, with broad raked dirt strips on either side, and military installations put up by IDF were generally found within the fenced-off area. First reported to the Council in 1980, the encroachments effectively denied the inhabitants of the neighbouring villages access to their lands close to the border, often of great economic importance to them.

As confirmed by the Force Commander of UNIFIL, two new encroachments were under construction in the localities indicated by Lebanon's 6 October letter, and an existing military installation just north of the border near Rosh Haniqra was being fenced off in a manner that would create a further encroachment. These raised to 10 the number of border encroachments observed by UNIFIL along the Armistice Demarcation Line.

The Secretary-General had ascertained that Israel's position on the question-raised by the United Nations from time to time-remained consistent: it had no territorial claims to any Lebanese territory; the current arrangements on Israel's northern border had resulted from security constraints and were designed solely to protect, defend and ensure the security of its northern population centres from repeated attacks emanating from Lebanese territory; and those arrangements would be essential only in the absence of a central Lebanese authority capable of preventing such attacks. He noted that, to justify its maintenance of the "security zone" Israel had used a similar argument, which Lebanon did not accept.

The Secretary-General concluded that only the start of a process leading to full implementation of Council resolution 425(1978)(30)—calling for strict respect for Lebanon's territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence within its internationally recognized boundaries, calling on Israel to withdraw forthwith from Lebanon, and establishing UNIFIL (see below)-could create a realistic prospect of restoring peace and security along the Israel-Lebanon border.

UNIFIL

During 1987, at the request of Lebanon and on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, in January and July, each time for a six-month period. The authorizing resolutions were adopted unanimously.

Established by the Council in 1978(30) following Israel's invasion of Lebanon in March of that year,(31) UNIFIL was entrusted with confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restoring international peace and security, and assisting the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area. A second Israeli invasion, launched in June 1982,(32) radically altered the situation in which UNIFIL had to function. Shortly thereafter, the Council authorized the Force to carry out, in addition, the interim tasks of maintaining its positions in its area of deployment and providing protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population.(33)

The Force was assisted by Observer Group Lebanon (OGL), a group of unarmed military observers organized from UNTSO and under the operational control of the Force Commander. The Observer Group in Beirut, constituted from United Nations observers assigned to the Israel-Lebanon Mixed Armistice Commission, had been deployed by the Council in 1982(34) to monitor the situation in and around Beirut following west Beirut's occupation by Israelitroops. With Israel's withdrawal from that area in September 1983, the Group's activities had been reduced; its total strength, originally of 50 observers, currently stood at 18.

Communications (January). On 6 January 1987,(35) Lebanon, stating that UNIFIL remained a stabilizing factor and the best available option for peace and security in the region, requested the Security Council to extend the UNIFIL mandate, due to expire on 19 January, for another six months. Lebanon took the occasion to express gratitude to the Secretary-General and his staff and to pay tribute to UNIFIL and the troop-contributing countries for their efforts and sacrifices in the cause of peace in Lebanon and the region.

The Ministry of Defence of Ghana, by a note transmitted on 30 January,(36) protested what it called a deliberate, hostile and unwarranted act perpetrated by SLA with IDF support, namely the shelling, on 15 December 1986, of the positions of UNIFIL'S Ghanaian contingent, as a result of which a Ghanaian soldier sustained shrapnel wounds in the chest and legs.

Activities

Report of the Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on developments in the UNIFIL area for the six-month period from 11 July 1986 to 11 January 1987.(37) He characterized the period as a very difficult and precarious one for the Force, during which it had suffered heavy casualties at the hands of the main protagonists to the conflict in Lebanon: IDF, SLA and various resistance groups.

The Secretary-General stated that Israel had continued to maintain its "security zone" in southern Lebanon, manned by IDF and SLA. Although not defined, its boundaries were determined by positions maintained by those two forces and by the patrols conducted between them, embracing all of the area adjacent to the international border, parts of the UNIFIL deployment area and extensive areas to the north of it. Of the 21 positions within the UNIFIL area—located in the Nepalese, Irish, Finnish and Norwegian sectors—18 were permanently manned.

Armed resistance-groups had launched 84 attacks against IDF and SLA positions, using small arms, rocket-propelledgrenades, rockets, mortars and roadside bombs. Attacks in the UNIFIL area had become fewer but larger in scale and involved armed elements coming from elsewhere in Lebanon. One such attack, mounted on 2 January by a group of 40 or more men, had briefly captured an IDF/SLA position near Brashit, killing six of its defenders.

Fifteen villages in the UNIFIL area had come under frequent firings from SLA—and sometimes IDF—positions and patrols in the "security zone", killing four civilians and injuring some 30 others. The Force had been harassed by more than 200 such firings with serious consequences. Seven UNIFIL members had been wounded; two soldiers of the Irish contingent at Brashit had been killed, one on 6 December 1986 and another on 10 January 1987, by machine-gun rounds fired from an SLA/IDF position and from an IDF Merkava tank. The results of Israel's promised inquiry into the earlier killing had yet to be received; those for the later one were preliminary (see below). Vigorous and repeated UNIFIL protests and political efforts to get Israel to stop the unprovoked and apparently deliberate firings at villages and at the Force had been met with denials by SLA, which accused UNIFIL instead of permitting armed elements to attack IDF/SLA positions. The Secretary-General condemned all such attacks whatever their source and urged that every effort be made to get them stopped.

The Force had also suffered casualties as a result of hostile activities by armed elements. Besides the very serious August/September 1986 incidents,(38) a car bomb had exploded at a UNIFIL check-point on 20 November, killing three Fijian soldiers and three civilians, and wounding two Fijians and three civilians. Information received by UNIFIL suggested that the car bomb had not been intended for UNIFIL but was detonated by remote control when the car was held up at the check-point. On 29 November, a Finnish soldier was injured by a grenade that exploded close to the UNIFIL office in Beirut during hostilities between Amal and Palestinian armed elements in the vicinity of the Shatila refugee camp. In addition, the hostilities frequently interrupted a major supply route as well as electricity and water supply, thus hampering UNIFIL operations.

The Force continued to distribute relief funds and goods for the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) and other humanitarian agencies whenever the need arose; its medical centre and hospital at Naqoura, which had more than 300 in-patients, had treated some 2,600 Lebanese. It further made facilities available at the Norwegian battalion headquarters at Ebel es Saqi for final secondary school examinations held in August and November 1986 for some 1,400 students.

The Secretary-General reported that his efforts to achieve full implementation of Council resolution 425(1978)(30) had proved unsuccessful. The main problem, he said, remained Israel's refusal to withdraw completely and its insistence on maintaining the "security zone" on the grounds that it was necessary for protection against attacks launched from Lebanon; Israel was not prepared to change current arrangements until a period of peace and tranquillity in all or part of southern Lebanon had been achieved. Lebanon firmly rejected Israel's argument and continued to insist on its withdrawal, as did the Syrian Arab Republic. Conditions in Lebanon itself had deteriorated, particularly in the economic field, and the so-called "camps war" had been added to an already violent and complicated situation.

In the current impasse and with little realistic hope of early progress towards implementation of resolution 425(1978), the question confronting the Security Council was whether it was worth while to extend UNIFIL for a further six months, as Lebanon had requested. The Secretary-General pointed to the danger that UNIFIL efforts to prevent its deployment area from being used for hostile activities could be perceived by the local population as protecting the "security zone" and thereby condoning the continuing Israeli occupation. He was convinced, however, that UNIFIL remained an important stabilizing element, whose withdrawal would create a critical vacuum leading to even greater conflict. Accordingly, he recommended that the Council accede to Lebanon's request and extend the UNIFIL mandate for a period of 6 months and 12 days, or until 31 July 1987.

The Secretary-General felt obliged to emphasize that all in a position to help should make every possible effort to enable UNIFIL to fulfil its mandate; this of necessity implied a change in Israel's position. He warned that if the UNIFIL situation continued to deteriorate, the Council might eventually feel it no longer right to ask the troop-contributing countries to keep UNIFIL in being, for they were paying the price for the international community's wish to maintain a most important United Nations peace-keeping operation—a price expressed both in the lives of their soldiers and in costs for which they were not being fully reimbursed because certain Member States had not paid their assessed share of maintaining the Force. The United Nations and the parties concerned, he said, owed a debt of gratitude to the troop-contributing Governments, which in some cases had increased their contributions and had provided extra troops during the current mandate period.

In an addendum of 14 January 1987 to the Secretary-General's report,⁽³⁹⁾ Israel outlined the preliminary results of its inquiry into the death of the Irish corporal on 10 January. It said that the UNIFIL post had been misidentified as a terrorist position and mistakenly fired on by an IDF tank. New directives designed to prevent a recurrence of the incident had been issued to all IDF units in the area. A full report would be forwarded to the Secretary-General.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council met on 15 January 1987 to consider the Secretary-General's report. At their request, Ireland, Israel and Lebanon were invited to participate without the right to vote.

The Council adopted resolution 594(1987) unanimously

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978), 501(1982), 508(1982), 509(1982) and 520(1982), as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 12 January 1987, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 6 January 1987 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months and twelve days, that is, until 31 July 1987;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned on the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 594(1987)

15 January 1987 Meeting 2731 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18597).

The question of the renewal of UNIFIL'S mandate was a grim reminder of Israel's continuing aggression in southern Lebanon, the USSR stated, in disregard of Council demands for its immediate and unconditional withdrawal. Israel was attempting to perpetuate its occupation and establish a beach-head from which to launch new strikes deep into Lebanese territory and to destabilize the general situation in the country. The presence of UNIFIL should promote the most prompt attainment of Israel's withdrawal.

The United States believed that agreed-upon, long-term security arrangements were the best means to bring permanent stability to southern Lebanon and assure security along the Israel-Lebanon border, but that, in the interim, there appeared no real alternative to UNIFIL.

France agreed with the Secretary-General's observations, particularly those concerning implementation of resolution 425(1978) defining the mandate and role of UNIFIL, whose continued presence in southern Lebanon manifested the international community's will to see Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity restored. It should be a matter of serious concern to all, the United Kingdom observed, that, since the last renewal of UNIFIL'S mandate, no progress had been made towards implementing that resolution; it shared the belief that the main problem remained Israel's refusal to complete its withdrawal from Lebanon and its retention of the so-called security zone.

Japan urged all parties, especially Israel, to co-operate fully so that the Force could fulfil its mandate. While supporting the mandate's renewal, the Federal Republic of Germany expected that UNIFIL would at long last be given the chance to fulfil its mandate.

Italy acknowledged the stabilizing role of UNIFIL but said it could not be confined indefinitely to its worthy but marginal humanitarian activities; it should be enabled to fulfil the essential task for which it had been set up and deployed, namely to assist in ensuring the return of the Lebanese Government's authority over all of its territory—a task it could not fulfil unless Israel withdrew from the "security zone". Italy voiced the conviction that Israel had a right to protect its northern territory from cross-border violence but also hoped that Israel would review its position and recognize that its security interests would be better served if peace and stability prevailed in southern Lebanon than if the current process of deterioration was allowed to continue.

Ireland, which fully agreed with the Secretary-General's evaluation of the 10 January killing of an Irish UNIFIL soldier as a particularly irresponsible act, felt that the incident could serve to focus attention on the casual, almost arbitrary, dispensing of death. While accepting the inescapable hazards of peace-keeping, it said the peace-keepers had the right to ask that all reasonable measures be taken to reduce the dangers facing them and to demand that Israel and all other parties ensure, through the imposition of discipline and restraint, that their lives not be endangered by pointless actions.

Israel said it had again conveyed its willingness to co-operate with the United Nations to enhance UNIFIL'S security and to use its influence to prevent attacks on the Force. It stressed that simply to abandon its current security arrangements and to deploy UNIFIL southwards to the international border would neither solve the problem of southern Lebanon nor prevent terrorist attacks from there against Israel. The situation in the whole of Lebanon was deteriorating and the "battles of the camps", complicated by shifting loyalties, were intensifying; UNIFIL alone, despite its best intentions, could not stop those factional battles from spilling over Israel's borders. Observing that a stalemate in the current situation was detrimental to all concerned, Israel underscored its interest in reaching a permanent solution for the security of its border with Lebanon and reiterated its willingness to negotiate and co-operate with the Government of Lebanon or any other credible partner in that country which genuinely sought, and could ensure, peace in southern Lebanon.

In that context, Israel proposed that efforts towards a solution be based on the acceptance of the principles of trial periods and a stage-by-stage approach, beginning with an immediate and total cease-fire in the entire area for at least six months; once those principles were accepted and implemented by the parties, the territorial and binding aspects of a permanent solution could be negotiated. Those principles should constitute an accepted framework for dialogue on lines similar to those envisaged by the Council in 1967(40) and 1973;(41) Israel was ready to consider any viable proposal that would take account of the legitimate security concerns for its northern border and to work with any party in Lebanon that sought peace on both sides of the border.

Lebanon called on the Council and its members, collectively and individually, to endeavour promptly and effectively to implement the 1978 resolutions on UNIFIL(26) and all other relevant resolutions; while Israel bore direct responsibility for obstructing UNIFIL'S mission, the Council had the fundamental responsibility for removing the impediments facing it. If Israel continued its obstructionist stand, it would be incumbent on the Council to consider practical ways to secure full and unconditional implementation of its resolutions.

Communication (July). On 16 July 1987,(42) Lebanon requested the Security Council for another extension of UNIFIL'S mandate, due to expire on 31 July, for a further six months. Lebanon restated that the Force continued to be an essential factor for stability in the south of the country and again expressed gratitude to all concerned for their efforts and sacrifices in the cause of peace in Lebanon and in the region.

Report of the Secretary-General ('July). In his report on UNIFIL and the situation in its area of operation covering the period 12 January to 24 July 1987,(43) the Secretary-General stated that five members of the Force had lost their lives: a French soldier, killed by an explosion while defusing a roadside device, and four other soldiers—two Ghanaian, one Irish and one Norwegian—who had died in accidents or from other causes. Six soldiers had been wounded by hostile action. These brought the number of soldiers who had died since UNIFIL'S inception to 144 (58 by firings and mine or bomb explosions, 61 in accidents, 25 from other causes) and the wounded to more than ZOO. Another casualty, a Lebanese army captain serving as liaison officer to UNIFIL at Tyre, had been murdered on 24 June by unknown assailants.

The Secretary-General described the situation in the UNIFIL area as essentially unchanged. Israel had continued to maintain its "security zone" in southern Lebanon, with IDF and SLA manning 19 positions within the UNIFIL area. IDF strength appeared to have increased, notably at the IDF position overlooking the Akiya Bridge in the Finnish sector.

Armed resistance operations against "security zone" positions within and outside the UNIFIL area had been frequent. Most of the 56 such operations recorded by UNIFIL as having occurred within its deployment area had been limited in scope, mainly to mine-laying and ambushes. About half of these had been directed against two adjacent "security zone" positions on Tallet Huqban, overlooking Kafra and Yatar in the UNIFIL Nepalese sector; frequent firings from those positions had targeted those villages, taking the lives of three civilians and wounding four others. In addition, retaliatory firings from the "security zone" into inhabited areas had killed a man in Brashit in January and injured a boy in Kafra in March.

A number of larger, co-ordinated attacks on "security zone" positions by groups of up to 150 men, including increasingly accurate mortar fire, had also occurred, which had generally drawn heavy artillery and mortar response from IDF tanks and helicopter gunships. One of two such attacks within the Finnish sector had taken place on the night of 17/18 April, during which armed elements had overpowered two Finnish sentries at the Akiya Bridge check-point, and, by holding them hostage, had disarmed the Finnish troops pinned by cross-fire in a shelter nearby. In the Nepalese sector, following a co-ordinated ambush of an SLA convoy en route from Tallet Huqban to Sribbin on 13 June, the attacking group disarmed the UNIFIL sentries at a check-point outside Haris. The arms that had been taken from the UNIFIL troops were later returned.

UNIFIL had protested some 300 firings at or close to its positions and vehicles, from SLA, and less frequently from IDF, positions that had resulted in the wounding of three Nepalese soldiers. It had also come under 50 firings from unidentified armed elements, mainly because they had been denied passage at UNIFIL check-points. On 28 January, a building at Tibnin housing 18 Irish soldiers had been destroyed by explosive charges, injuring two soldiers; it had not been possible to determine who was responsible for that action.

In a new development, IDF patrols had attempted on five occasions, between 28 March and 7 July, to move forward of the "security zone" into the UNIFIL area, bypassing UNIFIL positions. These not only had resulted in clashes with armed elements from nearby villages but had also created tense confrontations between UNIFIL and the opposing sides when the latter had attempted breaking through UNIFIL areas or check-points and when UNIFIL had tried to dislodge armed elements that, on two occasions, had succeeded in occupying UNIFIL positions from which to engage the enemy.

On 1 July, UNIFIL, having observed SLA earthworks that appeared to be the makings of a new position on a hill some 1,200 metres forward of the current SLA position at Al Qantarrah, pre-empted the project by occupying the site without incident the following day. The Force Commander had made clear to Israeli military authorities that any extension of the "security zone" into the UNIFIL area was unacceptable and that he would set up a permanent UNIFIL position on the hill. IDF subsequently informed him that the project would not be pursued.

The Secretary-General reported that a general decline in Lebanon's economy had brought serious hardship to many families in the UNIFIL area, resulting in a rise in property crimes of which UNIFIL personnel had occasionally been the victims. On three occasions, unarmed OGL military observers had been robbed at gunpoint. In a more serious incident on 20 May, two men who had removed a load of timber from a UNIFIL position at Kafr Dunin in the Ghanaian sector had been fired upon by a UNIFIL sentry on their return to the area; both had died from their wounds.

UNIFIL had continued its humanitarian activities, distributing in May some 1,000 tons of food-stuffs and a large amount of medicines, financed by various European organizations and shipped to Tyre. Many Lebanese had been treated at its medical centres, including some 3,600 at its hospital at Naqoura, which also had more than 200 in-patients.

UNIFIL had been unable, however, to assist families of prisoners known or believed to be held in a prison at El Khiam in the "security zone" in obtaining the prisoners' release, information on their fate or visiting permits. Having professed total non-involvement with the prison, Israel had referred all requests to SLA, which had denied access to the prisoners, not only to UNIFIL but to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) among other international organizations.

The Secretary-General further stated that Lebanon had drawn to his attention the damage being done to the Tyre archaeological site by the illegal excavation and sale of antiquities—a matter taken note of by the Security Council in 1979.(44) The question had been raised as to whether UNIFIL'S mandate could be extended to include the protection of Tyre's archaeological heritage. He had had to point out that control of illegal digging was a police function not normally undertaken by a peace-keeping force; it would require much manpower at a time when UNIFIL was already stretched in carrying out its functions; and, as most of the site was outside the UNIFIL area of operation, a geographical, as well as functional, extension of its mandate would be required, which might not be acceptable to all the parties concerned. He had instructed the Force Commander, however, to discuss with the authorities what UNIFIL might be able to do within its existing manpower and priorities, without changing its mandate.

As to administrative matters relating to the Force, the Secretary-General reported that, on his instructions, the Force Commander had instituted a number of measures, as a matter of priority, to enhance UNIFIL'S effectiveness and improve the security of its personnel. These included: the introduction of revised standing operating procedures to ensure that the tasks assigned to the individual units were realistic and practicable under the prevailing circumstances in southern Lebanon and carried out as uniformly as possible; and minor readjustments to the sectors assigned to each battalion in the light of experience gained since the boundary adjustments and major redeployment at the end of 1986 (see p. 284).

In addition, the Secretary-General raised with the Lebanese authorities the increasing difficulty encountered by the Force in obtaining additional land and buildings needed for new positions. Under existing arrangements, UNIFIL rented directly from owners and the Lebanese authorities paid the rent due. However, no payments had been made since 1984. Consequently, owners had become reluctant to make additional land and buildings available to the Force.

In summary, the Secretary-General observed that the situation in southern Lebanon remained highly unstable; Israel's refusal to withdraw completely and its insistence on maintaining the "security zone" continued to thwart efforts towards the restoration of international peace and stability there. In the central part of the UNIFIL area and to the north of it, the various Lebanese resistance groups had intensified their campaign against IDF and SLA, which had often responded with great violence. The main sufferers were the civilian population, many of whom had evacuated their villages in the UNIFIL area to live as refugees elsewhere.

While the security measures and new operating procedures had contributed significantly to a decline in UNIFIL casualties, the need for vigilance remained, amidst deliberate harassment by SLA and IDF firings and cross-fires from armed exchanges between those forces and resistance groups. The Secretary-General renewed his appeal to those involved in the hostilities to treat UNIFIL with the respect due those on a mission of peace, to help them fulfil their tasks and not put their lives at risk.

He regretted that it had again proved impossible to make progress towards implementing-resolution 425(1978).(30) He pointed not only to Israel's continuing presence in southern Lebanon but also to the inability of Lebanon's central Government to exercise effective authority. He felt it a matter of great regret that the assassination of Lebanon's Prime Minister Rashid Karame on 1 June had proved a major set-back for the hoped-for national reconciliation.

Referring to Lebanon's request of 16 July,(42) the Secretary-General recommended that, for reasons previously stated, the Council should renew UNIFIL'S mandate for a further six months, or until 31 January 1988. Acceptance of that recommendation, however, meant asking the troop-contributing Governments to continue to send their nationals on a dangerous mission and to bear much of the cost of doing so. In again paying them tribute for their generous response to the Council's requests, he underlined the unfairness of a situation in which they were not being fully reimbursed for the amounts determined by the General Assembly because of the withholding by some Member States of their assessed contributions.

The Secretary-General also paid tribute to the Force Commander, Major-General Gustav Hagglund (Finland), and to those under his command and control, both military and civilian, who had faced another very difficult mandate period with courage and determination; their discipline and bearing had been of a high order and a credit to themselves, their countries and the United Nations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The Security Council met on 31 July 1987 to consider the Secretary-General's report. At their request, Israel and Lebanon were invited to participate without the right to vote.

The Council adopted resolution 599(1987) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978), 501(1982), 508(1982), 509(1982) and 520(1982), as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 24 July 1987, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 16 July 1987 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further period of six months, that is, until 31 January 1988;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned on the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 599(1987)

31 July 1987 Meeting 2751 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/19008).

The United Kingdom again expressed disappointment that there had been no change in Israel's position to allow implementation of Council resolution 425(1978).

The USSR said the need to renew UNIFIL'S mandate was dictated by the unstable situation in southern Lebanon, for which Israel bore responsibility, and underscored the Secretary-General's observation that Israel's determination to retain the so-called security zone impeded efforts to restore peace in the area. It reiterated its view that the question of guaranteeing Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity must be considered in the context of an overall Middle East peace settlement that would ensure Israel's withdrawal from all the territories it occupied; the realization of the right of all States and peoples in the region, including Israel, to peace and a secure existence; and implementation of the Palestinians' right to self-determination.

As France saw it, UNIFIL'S presence in southern Lebanon doubtless remained an essential element of stability and demonstrated the international community's will to see Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity restored and respected.

Lebanon declared that the only way to make southern Lebanon a zone of peace and security was for Israel to heed the Council's resolutions and allow UNIFIL to fulfil its mandate. It called erroneous and misleading the Secretary-General's remark about the inability of Lebanon's central Government to exercise effective authority, recalling that the regular forces it had twice dispatched to the south had been attacked by Israel's forces and its satellite militia, the so-called South Lebanese Army. The real difficulty, it said, was that UNIFIL had been rendered unable to fulfil its mission to assist Lebanon in extending its sovereignty and authority to all of its territory. In the light of the unanimous vote on the current extension of UNIFIL'S mandate, Lebanon was hopeful that the Council would take a strong stand to ensure implementation of its resolutions and fulfilment of UNIFIL's mission.

Israel agreed with the Secretary-General's assessment that UNIFIL's situation had remained essentially unchanged. Putting the matter in what it said was its proper perspective, Israel drew attention to the continued use of southern Lebanon by terrorists as a base for cross-border attacks against Israel and for infiltrating the country. The population centres in northern Israel were the direct targets, on which Katyusha rockets had landed. Faced with such threat, Israel said it would continue to safeguard the northern areas where its citizens lived. It restated that it had no designs on Lebanese territory, that the "security zone" was a temporary arrangement, and that it could contemplate no change in that arrangement until the Government of Lebanon was able effectively to control the situation in the south of the country and guarantee peace and security along Israel's northern border. Finally, it restated its readiness to consider any viable proposal that would adequately take account of its legitimate security concerns.

Special report of the Secretary-General (October). In a special report of 5 October 1987,(45) the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of two grave incidents, on 25 August and 4 October, that had caused the death of two members of the Nepalese UNIFIL contingent. He said those deaths were the first deliberate killings of UNIFIL personnel since the series of incidents that had occurred between August and December 1986.(46)

The earlier incident involved the ambush of a UNIFIL vehicle carrying five members of the Nepalese battalion—two officers including the "B" Company commander and three soldiers—on a road west of Kafra. One soldier was killed and three were wounded, one seriously. It had not been possible to identify or apprehend the assailants. The findings of the UNIFIL board of inquiry indicated, however, that the ambush had been a deliberate attempt by armed elements to assassinate the company commander, who had anonymously been threatened with death if the Nepalese battalion continued constructing wire obstacles across a track known to be used by Lebanese armed elements to infiltrate through the UNIFIL area into the "security zone".

The later incident involved SLA personnel who, with a tank and an armoured personnel carrier (APC), had tried to force their way through a UNIFIL position but were blocked by a Nepalese APC. Following negotiations, the SLA personnel returned to their positions on Tallet Huqban, from which they soon fired three rounds of light machine-gun fire at another UNIFIL position, wounding a sentry in the leg. The ambulance evacuating him to UNIFIL headquarters for treatment was then attacked with three rounds of heavy machine-gun fire, fatally wounding the sentry in the neck. -Despite a vigorous protest to IDF and a demand for a halt to further unprovoked SLA firings, intermittent mortar and machine-gun fire at or close to UNIFIL positions in the area continued for another three hours.

IDF promised a full investigation of the incident and conveyed its condolences through the Force Commander, who informed the Secretary-General that there had been no apparent reason for SLA'S actions. As previously reported, SLA positions on Tallet Huqban had for many months been responsible for unprovoked firings at inhabited areas and at UNIFIL; in August and September alone, there had been some 36 cases of firing at or close to Nepalese battalion personnel from those positions.

The Secretary-General stated that the incidents illustrated UNIFIL'S dangerous situation, deployed as it was between IDF/SLA forces in southern Lebanon and various armed Lebanese resistance groups. Such unjustifiable incidents were liable to develop whenever UNIFIL took action—as required by its terms of reference approved by the Council in 1978(47)—to ensure that its area of operation was not used for hostile activities of any kind. Those difficulties could be resolved if Israel withdrew completely from Lebanon and if the resistance groups co-operated with UNIFIL in maintaining international peace and security on the border, pending full restoration of the Lebanese Government's effective authority. The Secretary-General renewed his appeal to Council members, especially to its permanent ones, to do all in their power to get the parties to help UNIFIL carry out its mandate; only such action could justify the sacrifices that the Council continued to ask of the troop-contributing Governments.

Composition and deployment

In his reports for the periods 11 July 1986 to 11 January 1987(37) and 12 January to 24 July 1987,(43) the Secretary-General reported changes in the composition and deployment of UNIFIL.

Based on the Force Commander's recommendations, a substantive redeployment of the Force took place in December 1986 and January 1987. In addition to adjustments made to boundaries between the battalions, various positions that were particularly vulnerable and/or of limited operational value were closed and four new positions were opened; the number of permanent positions held by the Force was thus reduced from 214 to 173, making possible the reinforcement of positions previously only lightly manned.

The Lebanese army unit serving with UNIFIL maintained a strength of some 128, all ranks; the main bulk was stationed at Tyre, with the remainder attached to various battalions in the UNIFIL area. The Force Commander continued to explore with the Lebanese authorities possible ways of deploying a Lebanese army unit to the north-western part of the UNIFIL area as a first step towards the return of the Government's effective authority in the area; by July, small Lebanese army elements were stationed at Arzun, Al Yatun and Qana.

Adjustments were also made to the logistic branch of UNIFIL. That part of the French logistic unit withdrawn during 1987 was replaced by additional Swedish troops. The branch currently consisted of the Swedish logistic battalion, elements of the French composite battalion, the Norwegian maintenance company, the Ghanaian engineer company and the Italian helicopter unit, as well as certain civilian staff sections responsible for communications and vehicle maintenance.

The Force Mobile Reserve of UNIFIL, comprising elements from five (Fijian, Finnish, Ghanaian, Irish, Nepalese) of the six infantry battalions, moved into position near Qana in January. Steps were under way to add the Norwegian component to the Reserve and to bring its vehicle holdings up to strength.

As at 24 July 1987, UNIFIL had a strength of 5,778 troops, from the following countries: Fiji, 627; Finland, 528; France, 521; Ghana, 933; Ireland, 745; Italy, 48; Nepal, 850; Norway, 881; Sweden, 645.

Assisting UNIFIL was OGL (see p. 277), composed of 74 unarmed military observers as at 24 July. They manned five observation posts along the Lebanon side of the Israel-Lebanon armistice demarcation line and a post at Chateau de Beaufort; they also operated seven mobile teams in the UNIFIL area and one at Tyre.

Palestinian refugees in Lebanon

Of the 2.2 million Palestinian refugees registered with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, 278,609 (12.7 per cent) were living in Lebanon, mainly in camps; the remainder were living in Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip (see p. 325).

The 1987 activities of UNRWA on behalf of the refugees in Lebanon (see below) were described in its reports covering the periods 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987(48) and 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988.(48)

UNRWA activities. Continued fighting and the resulting conditions of emergency prevailing throughout much of Lebanon during 1987 imposed enormous demands on UNRWA and seriously affected its operations in the country. This was true for its regular services (medical care, environmental health, nutrition and supplementary feeding, and educational programmes) to three Palestinian refugee camps—Shatila and Burj el-Barajneh in the southern outskirts of Beirut, and Rashidieh near Tyre in the south—all under siege since 1985 so that normal entry of UNRWA personnel and essential food and medical supplies had not been possible. Despite continued negotiations, no relief organization, including UNRWA, could persuade those in control to permit entry of relief supplies in January, when the situation of the refugees, in the besieged camps in particular, was regarded as perilous. The Commissioner-General's appeal for a cease-fire to permit access to the camps also proved unsuccessful.

In early February, another effort to negotiate the entry of relief supplies into Burj el-Barajneh ended when the besieging militia demanded that a strategic hilltop had any Palestinians near Saida be handed over before any relief operation would be allowed—a demand beyond UNRWA'S power to meet. Also informed that relief operations would be permitted only if equal amounts of assistance were delivered to the non-refugee population around the camps also affected by the fighting, UNRWA, which was limited to assisting Palestine refugees, resolved the difficulty by associating other organizations in an operation that would reach all groups in Lebanon. A relief convoy accordingly organized was dispatched shortly to Burj el-Barajneh but ongoing gunfire prevented its entry into the camp and the supplies were stolen. The' convoy for Rashidieh was also prevented entry; Agency commodities were confiscated at Tyre and its store at Saida was looted.

On 25 February, UNRWA was finally able to deliver supplies to Burj el-Barajneh, including to needy Lebanese civilians around the camp to whom supplies provided by WFP and UNICEF were distributed; and, on 27 February, to Shatila. Further deliveries were made to Burj el-Barajneh on 3 and 14 March and 23 April and to Shatila on 10 April that included donations by Austria, France, Italy and Turkey. As at 30 June, no relief convoy had been permitted into Rashidieh, although refugees had been allowed out of the camp to obtain supplies, some furnished by UNRWA.

UNRWA engineering staff, who were permitted to survey the damage to its installations-and refugee shelters at the camps, determined that 2,390 shelters at Burj el-Barajneh and 1,530 at Shatila had been damaged, estimating $3.2 million for repairs. A later survey at Rashidieh and at El-Buss and Burj el-Shemali camps south of the Litani River estimated a further $1.2 million for repairs to some 2,100 damaged shelters there.

Emergency assistance to refugees displaced by the fighting consisted of an initial supply of blankets, kitchen kits and cleaning materials, and regular supplies of food. By May, UNRWA was extending assistance to over 47,000 displaced refugees: 21,000 in Beirut, 23,000 in Saida, 1,400 in Tripoli, 1,400 in the Bekaa Valley and 300 in Tyre. Of these, some 10,000 had been displaced as a result of damage to shelters in the besieged Beirut camps; several hundred families, under varying pressures, evacuated their camps in the south (Rashidieh and others in the vicinity of Tyre) and fled north, with some 100 families accommodated in UNRWA schools for lack of alternative shelter. Many eventually returned to their camps so that, by the end of June, the number of displaced refugees had fallen to about 32,000.

As in 1982,(50) UNRWA in 1987 extended emergency assistance to all Palestine refugees in Lebanon, regardless of whether or not they were registered with UNRWA, because of the difficulty of distinguishing between refugees directly affected by the fighting and those who found it increasingly difficult to provide for themselves. More than $8 million was spent during the year on three general distributions of rations to refugees and on other emergency supplies, hospitalization and additional international staff needed to maintain and control the Agency's activities. The first distribution reached some 245,000 refugees.

In response to UNRWA'S February appeal for funds to finance its emergency operations in Lebanon, $13.4 million—$11 million in cash and $2.4 million in kind—had been pledged or contributed by Governments, EEC, NGOS and individuals as at 30 June. The appeal was for $20.6 million, to cover such main items of expenditure as food supplies ($5.5 million); other relief supplies including blankets, mattresses and kitchen kits ($1.2 million); emergency hospitalization ($1 million); additional temporary staff ($0.4 million); repairs to local hospitals and UNRWA clinics ($1 million); repair and re-equipment of UNRWA installations ($2.5 million); repairs to refugee shelters ($7.2 million); and repair of camp infrastructure ($0.8 million).

In December, the Secretary-General issued an appeal for the funding of emergency relief programmes for non-Palestinians, based on the recommendations of an inter-agency group headed by UNDRO, which had visited Lebanon to assess immediate relief needs. In view of mounting and generalized hardships brought about by the worsening economic conditions, the Commissioner-General authorized UNRWA to provide services to all categories of Palestine refugees in Lebanon through the end of 1988. Accordingly, the expanded distribution of basic rations, which had begun in the second quarter of 1987 as a temporary emergency measure, was continued.

Despite periodic disruptions to the Agency's health services, there were no reports of major epidemics of communicable diseases, and UNRWA managed to carry out its regular vaccination programmes for refugee children without interruption. It established two mobile medical teams that operated in the Beirut and Saida areas where regular health facilities were inoperative. It resumed services at its health centre at Nabatiye in November, and, in late December, a team was able to enter Shatila for the first time in over 14 months.

UNRWA'S education programme provided schooling for some 34,000 Palestine refugee children through nine grades of elementary and preparatory education in 83 schools. Because of the country's disturbed situation, schools in many areas remained closed, but by the end of June, 65 schools had become operational. To complete the 1986/87 academic year, many schools offered only a restricted curriculum and instructions were extended through the summer vacation months to make up for lost time. While the 1987/88 school year opened more or less on time in most areas, it was deferred at Saida, where the schools remained occupied by refugee families displaced from Tyre. At Burj el-Barajneh, some pupils attended classes in schools outside the camp; those unable to leave camp attended classes organized by popular committees with Agency support.

For the 1986/87 academic year, there were 33 university scholarship holders in engineering, medicine, and arts and sciences. The UNRWA Siblin Training Centre in Lebanon, for vocational and technical education and pre-service teacher training, which had remained inoperative for four years, reopened in September 1987 with an intake of 386 trainees.

A constant concern of UNRWA was the safety of its staff members at west Beirut, Saida and Tyre, and along roads to other UNRWA areas of operation in Lebanon. For this reason it maintained its sub-office at Larnaca, Cyprus, and, from time to time, made other temporary office arrangements. Although the situation had improved since the Syrian armed forces took action in February and March to curb the militias, the staff still required special protection, including bodyguards, when going through sensitive areas. During the 1986/87 reporting period, seven staff members were killed in Lebanon and scores wounded, bringing the total killed since 1982 to 29, with hundreds kidnapped, missing and wounded; they included Alec Collett, a journalist working for UNRWA at the time he was kidnapped in 1985 and about whom there had been no news since 1986 when his kidnappers claimed that he had been executed.

Communications (3-11 February). On 3 February 1987,(51) Lebanon referred to a December 1986 communiqué(52) issued by a plenary meeting of non-aligned countries calling on the Secretary-General to provide guarantees for the protection of Palestinian refugees in Lebanon. Emphasizing its position on the matter, Lebanon asserted that it was responsible for the security of all those residing in Lebanese territory, and that nobody was authorized to act on Lebanon's behalf in that regard; it rejected any reversion to the situation prior to 1982, and any autonomy in security matters or Palestinian expansion outside the camps; it stressed that the Security Council, not the Secretary-General, was the competent authority, which, however, had never before provided such guarantees as had been called for by the communiqué.

On 11 February,(53) the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights again expressed the Committee's concern at the persistent and intensified attacks on the Palestinian refugee camps of Sabra, Shatila and Burj el-Barajneh at Beirut and Rashidieh at Tyre, which had had tragic consequences for the civilian population. Noting the recent escalation of violence and destruction causing thousands of casualties, he conveyed the Committee's concern that UNRWA had been unable to deliver food or medicine to those camps, which were surrounded and remained inaccessible and in which thousands of innocent women, children and old people were trapped, several of them ill and close to starvation. He further conveyed the Committee's urgent appeal to all interested parties to use their influence to enable UNRWA and other humanitarian organizations to deliver essential emergency relief to the refugees.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (13 February)

Following consultations, the President of the Security Council made a statement on 13 February on behalf of the Council members:(54)

"The members of the Security Council, mindful of the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon, express their profound concern at the continued escalation of violence in certain parts of Lebanon, affecting the civilian population, particularly in and around Palestinian refugee camps.

"Deeply alarmed by the tragic suffering undergone by the civilian population, particularly inside the Palestinian refugee camps, they call on the parties concerned to observe an immediate cease-fire and to permit access to these camps for humanitarian purposes.

"They also urgently appeal to all concerned to facilitate the efforts of various Governments and United Nations agencies, including the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide critically needed humanitarian assistance.

"Recalling their previous statements, they reiterate their call for a speedy return to peace and a situation of normalcy and for the safeguarding of civilian lives in Lebanon."

Further communications (18 February-12 March). On 18 February,(55) Japan transmitted a government announcement that, in the light of the Security Council President's statement, it was giving $300,000 for UNRWA relief operations in Lebanon's refugee camps.

On 20 February,(56) the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights expressed the Committee's concern that UNRWA had again been prevented from delivering food and medicine to the refugee camps at Beirut and Tyre, despite repeated and urgent international appeals. He was referring to information made public by UNRWA on 19 February that a United Nations relief convoy trying to deliver food to Rashidieh had been held up for two consecutive days; the current fighting in west Beirut had hampered all attempts to reach Burj el-Barajneh and Shatila, which were likewise cut off. In view of the desperate situation of the civilians trapped for months in those camps and on the verge of starvation, the Committee reiterated its urgent appeal that everything possible be done to enable UNRWA and other humanitarian organizations to provide emergency relief to the refugees.

Yemen, as Chairman of the Group of Arab States at the United Nations, transmitted a PLO letter of 24 February,(57) drawing the Secretary-General's attention to the continuing critical situation in and around the camps: developments during the past weekend, particularly in west Beirut, had serious implications for the safety and security of the camps, especially in the light of threats made by the Chief of Syrian Military Intelligence in Lebanon physically to liquidate camp residents supporting PLO. PLO called on the Secretary-General and the Council to take all necessary measures, including deploying United Nations observers in accordance with 1982 Council resolutions,(58) to facilitate the supply of humanitarian relief by international agencies and to end the continuing siege of the camps so as to restore a normal situation there.

By a letter of 10 March 1987, transmitted by the United Arab Emirates,(59) PLO brought to the Secretary-General's attention the deteriorating situation in the refugee camps. It quoted a recent statement by UNRWA that it had been unable to arrange for further relief convoys into the camps and had been advised against attempting entry in the next few days; that, since the deliveries to Burj el-Barajneh on 25 February and 3 March and Shatila on 27 February, no further relief had entered those camps; and that Rashidieh had received no relief at all. With the resumed shelling of the camps, the situation had reached a critical stage no longer to be tolerated by the international community. PLO called on the Secretary-General and the Council to end the suffering by all means available and to implement the Council appeals for an immediate cease-fire to permit access to the camps for humanitarian purposes.

On 12 March,(60) the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights drew attention to recent information that UNRWA had been barred from delivering medical supplies to Shatila, reported to be totally destroyed, and that Rashidieh remained isolated. Convinced that the situation was bound to deteriorate further, the Chairman reiterated the Committee's appeal that everything possible be done to enable UNRWA and other relief organizations to provide humanitarian emergency assistance.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (19 March)

On 19 March, following consultations, the President of the Security Council issued a statement on behalf of the Council members:(61)

"The members of the Security Council, mindful of the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon note with profound concern that, in spite of their previous statements, the Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon have not been receiving the necessary humanitarian assistance and that the situation in those camps remains critical.

"Alarmed by the suffering of the civilian population in the camps, they therefore again urge all parties concerned urgently to facilitate the efforts of various United Nations agencies, particularly the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as well as any other humanitarian assistance aimed at distributing food and medical supplies in the Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon and, thus, at fulfilling a critically needed mission.

"Recalling their previous statements, they reiterate their call for a speedy end to violence in and around the Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon and a return to a durable peace and a situation of normalcy and for the safeguarding of civilian lives."

Further communications (April-October). On 3 April,(62) Egypt and Iraq requested an immediate Council meeting to consider the situation in and around the refugee camps at Beirut.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Committee of Nine Non-Aligned Countries on Palestine, by a declaration adopted at a meeting (Harare, 14 and 15 April), transmitted by Zimbabwe on 5 May,(63) expressed grave concern and anguish at the escalation of fighting in and around the camps that had brought untold suffering to the civilian population in the area. They stressed the need for free access to the camps of medical supplies, food, water and fuel, for lifting the siege on the camps and for ending the fighting and destruction.

On 7 May,(64) the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights drew attention to recent Israeli air raids against refugee camps near Sidon, as reported by Agence France Presse. One raid had been carried out by four fighter-bombers on Ein el-Hilweh in the early morning of 6 May, killing eight civilians and wounding 28 others, besides destroying 10 houses and damaging 15. An earlier attack had taken place on 1 May against Mieh Mieh, killing 14 and injuring 37, also civilians. The Chairman conveyed the Committee's concern about those actions, which heightened tension in the region and posed a serious obstacle to international efforts to solve the Palestine question.

On 8 September,(65) Lebanon reported that, three days before, a squadron of Israeli war-planes had carried out three successive air raids on Ein el-Hilweh and the surrounding area, leaving at least 49 persons dead and 70 wounded; occurring at 20-minute intervals, the raids were proof of Israel's intention to cause the greatest injury to civilians, including the first-aid teams that rushed to the scene after each raid. Lebanon condemned the attack as inhumane and placed full responsibility on Israel. It again called on the Council to take urgent measures to make Israel halt its attacks forthwith and comply with Council resolutions and international law.

PLO, by a letter of 8 September, transmitted by Kuwait,(66) also drew the Secretary-General's attention to the raids on Ein el-Hilweh and what it described as the resulting carnage, updating the toll to over 100 wounded and scores of civilians missing. At the same time, it reported that, less than 24 hours after the raids, an Israeli destroyer and six gunboats bombarded Rashidieh, resulting in several civilian casualties.

On 9 September,(67) the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights said the attacks against the camp had to be seen in the context of the intensification of Israeli measures against Palestinians in the occupied territories and the recent general military escalation in southern Lebanon; the resultant explosive situation in the area could not but arouse the gravest concern.

The Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 General Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October), by its final communique,(*) expressed grave concern about the situation in the refugee camps. It strongly condemned the September raids on Ein el-Hilweh, reiterated the need to ensure the safety of all civilians in Lebanon including the Palestinian refugees, and reaffirmed United Nations responsibility for the Palestinians.

On 12 October,(15) Lebanon charging Israel with having conducted 23 air raids in 1987 against Lebanese towns and villages (see p. 275), singled out what it called the barbarous shelling of Ein el-Hilweh.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 42/69 I, adopted under the agenda item on UNRWA, the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report on protection of Palestine refugees including those in Lebanon (see p. 337), urged the UNRWA Commissioner-General, in consultation with the Government of Lebanon to provide housing to the Palestine refugees whose houses were demolished or razed by the Israeli forces and to provide emergency housing repairs for the shelters and Agency installations partly damaged or destroyed in the fighting; it called again on Israel to compensate UNRWA for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from Israel's invasion of Lebanon without prejudice to Israel's responsibilities for all damages resulting from that invasion.

Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic

In 1987, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights again dealt with the situation in the Syrian Golan Heights in the light of Israel's 1981 decision(68) to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Israeli-occupied territories (see p. 317).

UNDOF

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, established by the Security Council in 1974(69) as called for by the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic concluded that year,(70) was charged with supervising the observance of the cease-fire between the two countries in the Golan Heights area and ensuring that there were no military forces in the area of separation between their forces. UNDOF remained deployed within and close to the separation area, with its headquarters located at Damascus. Its mandate was renewed twice in 1987, in May and November, each time for a six-month period. The authorizing resolutions were adopted unanimously.

Activities

Reports of the Secretary-General. Before the expiration of the mandate of UNDOF on 31 May and 30 November 1987, the Secretary-General submitted reports to the Security Council on the activities of the Force for two six-month periods, from 13 November 1986 to 17 May 1987(71) and from 18 May to 13 November 1987.(72)

The Secretary-General stated that UNDOF had continued to perform its functions effectively with the co-operation of the parties and that the situation in the Israel-Syria sector had remained quiet, with no serious incidents. The cease-fire had been maintained, with UNDOF continuing to supervise the area of separation by means of static positions and observation posts manned 24 hours a day, foot and mobile patrols operating day and night at irregular intervals on predetermined routes, and temporary outposts and patrols on specific assignments.

Fortnightly inspections of armament and forces in the area of limitation had been conducted with the assistance of liaison officers from the parties. While UNDOF had continued receiving co-operation from the parties, both had placed restrictions on the movement and activities of its inspection teams in certain areas. In this respect, the Secretary-General noted that, whereas the Protocol to the Agreement on Disengagement provided for the freedom of movement necessary for the discharge of UNDOF'S mission, restrictions on that freedom remained. He said he would continue to exert every effort to correct the situation.

UNDOF remained concerned for the safety of Syrian shepherds who grazed their flocks close to and west of the separation line. Intensified patrolling of new mine-cleared patrol paths and the setting up from time to time of standing patrols in those areas helped to prevent incidents, as had the grazing security fence in the southern part of the area of separation. New patrol paths were under construction.

In addition, UNDOF continued its mine-clearing operations, finding and destroying, among other ammunition, 15 anti-tank and seven anti-personnel mines during the year.

Despite the current quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the Secretary-General cautioned that the Middle East situation as a whole continued to be potentially dangerous and likely to remain so, unless a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East problem was reached. Stating in each report that he considered UNDOF'S continued presence in the area to be essential, the Secretary-General, with the Syrian Arab Republic's assent and Israel's agreement, recommended that its mandate be extended for a further six months, until 30 November 1987 in the first instance and until 31 May 1988 in the second.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1987, without debate, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 596(1987).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force,

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973);

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1987;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 596(1987)

29 May 1987 Meeting 2748 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18881).

On 25 November, again without debate, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 603(1987).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force,

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973);

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1988;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 603(1987)

25 November 1987 Meeting 2769 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/19296).

Following adoption of each resolution, the President made the following statement:(73)

"In connection with the resolution just adopted on the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, I have been authorized to make the following complementary statement on behalf of the Security Council:

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 24: "Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached." That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Composition

As at 5 November 1987, UNDOF had a strength of 1,330 troops. It was composed of contingents from four countries—Austria, 531; Canada, 227; Finland, 410; and Poland, 155—and of 7 United Nations military observers detailed from UNTSO. Assisting the Force as required were UNTSO observers assigned to the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission.

Financing of peace-keeping forces

The financing of the United Nations peace-keeping operations in the Middle East—UNDOF and UNIFIL, and the UNTSO observer mission—was the subject of General Assembly consideration and, action in 1987.

In December, the Assembly approved appropriations totalling more than $35 million for UNDOF operations from 1 June 1987 to 31 May 1988 and $145.5 million for UNIFIL operations from 19 January 1987 to 31 January 1988 (resolutions 42/70 A and 42/223). In each case, the Assembly apportioned the expenses for the Forces among all Member States according to a special scale used for this purpose since 1973,(1) when the second United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF II) was established.(2) Under that arrangement, the permanent members of the Security Council were assessed more than they would have been under the scale of assessments for the United Nations regular budget, while most developing countries were assessed 80 per cent less and the least developed countries 90 per cent less than under the regular scale.

In view of the difficult financial situation of the two Forces, the Assembly authorized suspension of certain provisions of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations to enable UNDOF and UNIFIL to retain a "surplus balance" of $1.3 million and $6.8 million, respectively (resolutions 42/70 B and 42/223).

The Assembly further retained the current standard rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing States, as revised in 1980 (resolution 42/224).(3)

Appropriations for UNTSO totalling $41.4 million were included in the United Nations regular programme budget for the 1988-1989 biennium.

UNDOF financing

The Secretary-General reported(4) that, as at 30 September 1987, he had received $736 million in assessed contributions for UNDOF—for the period from its inception in 1974 to 30 November 1987—and for UNEF II (established at the end of 1973 and liquidated in 1980). The unpaid assessed balance totalled $72.5 million, consisting of $31.5 million apportioned among Member States and presumed uncollectible, and $36 million transferred to a Special Account in accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution.(5) The collectible balance was estimated to be $5 million.

The UNDOF Special Account showed a shortfall of approximately $7.9 million in respect of the period 25 October 1979 to 30 November 1987; in addition, a combined account showed an estimated shortfall of $59.6 million for both UNDOF, from its inception up to 24 October 1979, and the entire period of UNEF II. Consequently, the troop contributors had been neither paid on time nor reimbursed fully in accordance with agreed rates. They continued to convey to the Secretary-General their serious concern over the heavy burden placed on them.

Commitments for UNDOF operations from 1 December 1986 to 30 November 1987 amounted to $34,800,000.(6) For operations from 1 December onwards, the Secretary-General estimated monthly costs of $2,944,000 gross ($2,893,000 net); or, on that basis, an estimated $35,328,000 gross ($34,716,000 net) for the 12-month period from 1 December 1987 to 30 November 1988.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ),(7) in approving the estimates subject to the Security Council's renewal of the UNDOF mandate, emphasized that UNDOF requirements for the 12-month period should not exceed the estimated amounts. In the interests of good management and efficiency, ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General be permitted the usual flexibility to transfer credits between items of expenditure if necessary.

ACABQ noted that the 1986-1987 interim accounts showed, under the Special Account for UNDOF and UNEF II, a "surplus balance" of $1,331,921 for 1986, representing excess income over expenditures in accrued interests and miscellaneous credits—the income included, however, assessed contributions irrespective of collectibility. Because of the withholding of contributions by certain States, the "surplus" had been drawn upon to its full extent. ACABQ said it intended to review in detail the operation and management of the Special Account in the context of its 1988 examination of the Secretary-General's report on UNDOF financing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1987, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, simultaneously adopted two resolutions on the financing of UNDOF by the same recorded vote.

The first, resolution 42/70 A, set forth the details of the appropriations for the Force.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, by which the Council established the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 603(1987) of 25 November 1987,

Recalling its resolution 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974 on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 41/44 A of 3 December 1986,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $17,400,000 gross ($17,100,000 net) authorized and apportioned by section III of Assembly resolution 41/44 A for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1987, inclusive;

II

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of $17,664,000 for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 December 1987 to 31 May 1988, inclusive;

2. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of $17,664,000 among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in section II, paragraph 2, of Assembly resolution 41/44 A;

3. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the estimated income of $10,000 other than staff assessment income approved for the period from 1 December 1987 to 31 May 1988, inclusive;

4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of $296,000 approved for the period from 1 December 1987 to 31 May 1988, inclusive;

III

Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed $2,944,000 gross ($2,893,000 net) per month for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1988, inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 603(1987), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in section II, paragraph 2, of Assembly resolution 41/44 A;

IV

1. Stresses the need for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

The second resolution, 42/70 B, concerned the suspension of the application of certain provisions of the Financial Regulations to the UNDOF Special Account.

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 6 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, Recalling its resolution 33/13 E of 14 December 1978 and the subsequent resolutions in which it decided that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations should be suspended, the latest of which was General Assembly resolution 41/44 B of 3 December 1986,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Forces on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Forces, Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $1,331,921, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered into the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 33/13 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly.

General Assembly resolutions 42/70 A and B

3 December 1987 Meeting 90 94-3-5 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/840) by recorded vote (94-3-7), 30 November (meeting 48); 12-nation draft (A/C.5/42/L.5, parts A & B); agenda item 125 (a).

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Lebanon, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: Albania, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Syrian Arab Republic.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Cuba, Iraq, Maldives.

aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Albania objected to the dispatch of peace-keeping forces to various regions for political reasons. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya believed that their presence in the Middle East was not a practical solution to the problems there and that only the aggressor State should finance UNDOF. The presence of United Nations forces was a direct result of Zionist attacks against neighbouring countries, the Syrian Arab Republic stated, and the financial responsibility should be borne by the aggressor and the major Powers supporting it.

In Yemen's view, no United Nations peace-keeping forces would be needed in the Middle East had there been no acts of aggression there. Iraq said only Israel, as the aggressor, should bear the burden of UNDOF expenses.

Jordan stressed that its affirmative vote should not be construed as acceptance of the continued

Israeli occupation, the main source of tension in the region.

Bulgaria felt that the cost of UNDOF equipment was surprisingly high in certain cases and suggested that wider international bidding would make for a more efficient procurement of supplies. The USSR, referring to the request made of the Secretary-General to ensure UNDOF'S administration with maximum efficiency and economy, suggested, based on its understanding that reserves were available to improve the budgetary control machinery, that a practical measure would be for him to report periodically on expenditures. It welcomed ACABQ's intention to investigate thoroughly the operation of the UNDOF Special Account.

Canada, when it introduced the draft resolutions on behalf of the sponsors, said the recent announcement by one Member State of its intention to settle all its arrears was particularly encouraging.

UNIFIL financing

The Secretary-General reported(8) that, as at 30 September 1987, he had received $1,071.9 million for the operation of UNIFIL, out of $1,410.6 million apportioned among Member States for the periods from the inception of the Force in March 1978(9) to 31 January 1988. Of the unpaid balance of $338.7 million, only $94.6 million could be considered collectible, leaving a shortfall of $244.1 million, including $19.6 million due from China, transferred to a Special Account in accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution.(5)

Owing to the shortfall, UNIFIL could not meet its obligations on a current basis, particularly those due to the troop-contributing States, which had never been paid on a current and full basis in accordance with established rates. The UNIFIL Suspense Account, set up in 1979(10) to facilitate reimbursement to them for the costs of equipment and supplies to UNIFIL, had thus far not achieved that purpose; voluntary contributions to it amounted to only $34,356.

Commitments for UNIFIL operations from 19 January 1987 to 31 January 1988 totalled $145,500,000 gross ($143,064,000 net) as authorized in 1986;(11) costs for the 12-month period beginning 1 February 1988 were estimated at $141,180,000 gross ($139,416,000 net), based on an average Force strength of 5,850 troops.

In the event that future Security Council decisions on UNIFIL'S status entailed additional costs over the limit authorized by the Assembly, commitment authority would be sought from the Assembly if it was in regular session; otherwise recourse would be had, with prior ACABQ concurrence, to Assembly resolution 42/227 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1988-1989 providing for the convening of a special Assembly session to consider the matter.

As to the Special Account's administration, the Secretary-General proposed that, with effect from 1 February 1988, the special financial period of UNIFIL should be 12 calendar months, from 1 February of one year to 31 January of the next. Pursuant to a 1979 Assembly decision,⁽¹²⁾ the Account had been maintained for the periods of the UNIFIL mandates subsequent to 18 January 1979; such abbreviated financial periods, ranging from one to six months, had posed administrative difficulties in terms of the strict application of financial regulation 4.2 (providing for appropriations to be available for obligation during the financial period to which they related) and the smooth operation of the Force, particularly with regard to the international procurement of goods and services.

The Secretary-General observed that, as a result of the accumulated shortfall in the Special Account caused by the non-payment of assessed contributions, the United Nations continued to fall behind in its reimbursement of amounts due to the troop-contributing Governments for expenditures incurred by their participation in UNIFIL. He was extremely concerned about that state of affairs, which placed an unfair and increasingly heavy burden on the troop-contributing States, particularly the less wealthy ones; if not remedied, it might jeopardize the functioning of UNIFIL. He appealed in the strongest terms to all Members to pay their assessments without delay. In view of the urgency of the matter, he also appealed to Governments in a position to do so to consider making available voluntary contributions to the Suspense Account.

ACABQ⁽⁷⁾ recommended approval of the estimates corresponding to the commitments entered into for the mandate period from 19 January 1987 to 31 January 1988 and of the estimates for the 12-month period beginning on 1 February 1988. However, as it had stated in 1986,⁽¹³⁾ it believed that commitment authority should continue to be expressed as a monthly amount rather than as a lump sum for an entire 12-month period. It thus recommended that the Assembly approve commitment authority up to $11,765,000 gross ($11,618,000 net) a month for the period beginning on 1 February 1988.

ACABQ had no objection to the proposed 12-month financial period, which coincided with two consecutive six-month mandate periods, having been satisfied that such a period made for administrative efficiency with respect to the apportionment of expenses and would not change the manner in which Member States were currently assessed for the expenses of the Force, that is, at the beginning of each mandate period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1987, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 42/223 by recorded vote.

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, by which the Council established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 599(1987) of 31 July 1987,

Recalling its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978 on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 41/179 of 5 December 1986,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions, that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations, and that the States permanent members of the Security Council have special responsibilities in the financing of peace-keeping operations decided upon in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Having regard to the financial position and the administration of the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 18 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its decision 34/439 of 17 December 1979 that the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon should be maintained for the periods of its mandates subsequent to 18 January 1979,

Recalling also its resolution 34/9 E of 17 December 1979 and subsequent resolutions which suspended the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the latest of which was resolution 41/179 B,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face increasing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States, resulting from the withholding of contributions by certain Member States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Force,

Concerned further that the application of the provisions of financial regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section I, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution S-8/2 an amount of $77,932,200 gross ($76,627,400 net) authorized and apportioned by section IV of Assembly resolution 41/179 A for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon from 19 January to 31 July 1987, inclusive;

2. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of $67,567,800 gross ($66,436,600 net) authorized and apportioned by section IV of General Assembly resolution 41/179 A for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon from 1 August 1987 to 31 January 1988, inclusive;

3. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon at a rate not to exceed $11,765,000 gross ($11,618,000 net) per month for the 12-month period beginning 1 February 1988, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 599(1987);

4. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion among Member States the amount resulting from the implementation of the provisions of paragraph 3 above, in accordance with the provisions of Assembly resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955 and the scheme set out in section III, paragraph 2, of resolution 41/179 A;

5. Decides also that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $6,845,651, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 34/9 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly;

6. Decides further that the special financial period of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon shall be for 12 months, beginning on 1 February of one year and ending on 31 January of the next, effective from 1 February 1988, subject to the renewal of the mandate of the Force by the Security Council;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure that the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon shall be administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Renews its invitation to Member States to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, and also to make voluntary contributions in cash to the Suspense Account established in accordance with its resolution 34/9 D of 17 December 1979.

Speaking before the vote in the Fifth Committee, Lebanon said UNIFIL'S presence was an expression of the international will as represented by the Security Council, with specific financial obligations for Members; it was frustrating that a number of countries, including some developing ones, were being forced to shoulder the financial burden of UNIFIL because others were withholding their assessed contributions. That unfair situation undermined the very principles of international solidarity and created a regrettable precedent that might damage future United Nations peace-keeping missions. Lebanon shared the concerns of the troop-contributing States regarding UNIFIL'S financial crisis and hoped for the restoration of the necessary financial balance by prompt action of the countries concerned so that it could finally carry out its mandate.

The Syrian Arab Republic, believing that peace-keeping forces, if they became permanent, protected the aggressor, said Israel was exploiting the protection afforded by United Nations peace-keeping forces in order to persist in its aggression and occupation. It restated its belief that the aggressor should bear responsibility for the financing of the peace-keeping forces—a position taken by Iraq, as well as by Cuba, which stated that the forces had not, in any case, proved capable of dealing with the aggressor.

The USSR said it would participate in the financing of UNIFIL and was prepared to give consideration to eliminating the deficit in the budget of the peace-keeping forces. Referring to the resolution's provision requesting the Secretary-General to ensure that UNIFIL was administered with maximum efficiency and economy, the USSR said he should bear in mind ACABQ'S intention to review the operations of the UNIFIL Special Account, with particular reference to the transfer to it of undisbursed resources.

Israel said its affirmative vote was in appreciation of the task performed by UNIFIL and by United Nations peace-keeping forces in general; despite its being spuriously designated as the aggressor, the reality was that the troubles in Lebanon would cease only when the Government of that country was in a position to exercise its authority over terrorist and other forces operating in its territory.

Review of reimbursement rates to troop contributors

Pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly request,(14) the Secretary-General submitted in July 1987(15) a report on the first biennial review of the rates of reimbursement to the troop-contributing States for pay and allowances of their troops serving in UNIFIL and UNDOF. Established as from 25 October 1973 by a 1974 Assembly decision,(16) the standard rates had previously undergone three reviews—in 1977, 1980 and 1985—and were revised in 1977(17) and again in 1980.(3) As a consequence of the 1985 review,(14) the Assembly decided to retain the rates as revised in 1980: $950 per person per month for all ranks; $280 per person per month in supplementary payment for specialists, comprising 25 per cent of logistics contingents and 10 per cent for other contingents; $65 per person per month for personal clothing, gear and equipment for all ranks; and $5 per person per month for personal weaponry, including ammunition, for all ranks.

The three previous reviews had shown that the costs to troop-contributing Governments in providing troops varied widely; consequently, the current standard reimbursement rates could not fully compensate all Governments but at least provided reimbursement for the actual overseas allowances paid to their troops. The portion of the costs not compensated for and absorbed by the troop contributor was referred to as the absorption factor.

In the 1980 review, the costs to the troop contributors for troop pay and allowances, when compared with United Nations reimbursements, showed an average absorption factor of 45.9 per cent; the 1985 review showed a decrease to 34.3 per cent. An extrapolation of the 1985 review data, based on changes in inflation and currency exchange rates since then, showed a rise to 46.3 per cent as at 31 December 1986, representing a 0.4 per cent increase in the absorption factor above the 1980 level.

The Secretary-General concluded that, as the overall average absorption factor at the end of 1986 was similar to that in 1980, it appeared that the current rates were not unreasonable and therefore warranted no adjustment at this stage. Based on consultations between the Secretariat and the troop-contributing States to UNDOF (Austria, Canada, Finland, Poland) and to UNIFIL (Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, Norway, Sweden), it was proposed that the current rates be retained. It was noted, however, that, as a consequence of the continuing shortfall in the receipt of assessed contributions to the peace-keeping special accounts, troop-contributing States were not being reimbursed on a current basis or to the full extent of the established rates.

These conclusions were taken note of by ACABQ(7) in November 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/224 by recorded vote on 21 December 1987.

Review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States, submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 40/247 of 18 December 1985, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its decision of 29 November 1974, taken at its twenty-ninth session, by which it established, as from 25 October 1973, standard rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States for pay and allowances of their troops serving in the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and its decision 32/416 of 2 December 1977, by which it revised those rates of reimbursement as from 25 October 1977,

Recalling also its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978, by which it applied the same standard rates of reimbursement in effect for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force to those Governments of States contributing troops to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Recalling further its resolution 35/44 of 1 December 1980, by which it established the current standard rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States, with effect from 1 December 1980 in the case of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and from 19 December 1980 in the case of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Recalling further its decision of 15 December 1975, taken at its thirtieth session, by which it approved the principle of reimbursing troop-contributing States for the usage factor for personal clothing, gear and equipment and personal weaponry, including ammunition, issued to their troops for service in the United Nations peace-keeping forces,

1. Takes note with concern that, in consequence of the shortfall of financial contributions, troop-contributing States are not being reimbursed to the full extent of the established rates and are thus bearing considerably larger portions of the costs for their troops serving in the United Nations peace-keeping forces than those indicated by the Secretary-General in his report;

2. Takes note of the conclusions and recommendations of the Secretary-General as outlined in paragraph 7 of his report;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the evolving financial situation, to expedite, to the extent possible, the payment of arrears due to current and former troop-contributing States;

4. Decides to retain the current rates of reimbursement of $950 per person per month for all ranks, plus the allowance for specialists of $280 per person per month for 25 per cent of logistics contingents and 10 per cent of other contingents, as well as $65 per person per month for the usage factor for personal clothing, gear and equipment and $5 per person per month for personal weaponry, including ammunition;

5. Also decides that the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States shall be reviewed by the Secretary-General, in consultation with the troop-contributing States, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly, at least once every two years, if, in the light of inflation and currency-exchange fluctuations or other factors brought to the attention of the Secretary-General, these rates appreciably affect the absorption factor of two or more of the troop-contributing States.

Territories occupied by Israel

The territories occupied by Israel as a result of previous armed conflicts in the Middle East comprised the West Bank of the Jordan River (including East Jerusalem), the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights.

During 1987, the Committee on Palestinian rights observed that the deterioration of the situation of the Palestinians in those territories had aroused widespread concern that tension and violence would increase unless progress was finally made towards a negotiated settlement of the long-standing Palestine question (see p. 263). The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices) reported a similar deterioration of the situation, marked by an intensifying climate of repression and confrontation. The UNRWA Commissioner-General, describing developments in early December as they affected the Agency's operations, stated that incidents had quickly spread in the territories: what seemed a spontaneous uprising at first had turned into a broader confrontation characterized by more frequent and varied incidents between the Palestinians and occupation authorities. Numerous communications addressed to the Secretary-General throughout the year also drew attention to the Palestinians' growing resistance to Israeli occupation.

The Commission on Human Rights, in February, called on Israel to comply with its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and withdraw from the Palestinian and other Arab territories it had occupied since 1967; it condemned Israel for its policies and practices in the territories, for its refusal to apply the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) there, and for its persistent disregard for United Nations resolutions relating to occupied Syrian territory.

The General Assembly, in December, having examined the report of the Committee on Israeli practices, adopted seven resolutions by which it demanded that Israel desist from specific policies and practices in the territories (42/160 D); that it comply with the fourth Geneva Convention (42/160 B); that it rescind its arbitrary detention or imprisonment of hundreds of Palestinians and release them immediately (42/160 A); that it desist from any action that would change the legal status and demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 (42/160 C), including the Golan Heights (42/160 F); that it rescind the expulsion of Palestinian leaders and facilitate their immediate return (42/160 E); and that it rescind measures against educational institutions and ensure their freedom (42/160 G).

Also in December, the Security Council met to consider what was described in the debate as the ongoing wave of violence or uprising, which Israel claimed was organized. The Council called on Israel to desist from its policies and practices, in particular the opening of fire by its army, resulting in the killing and wounding of Palestinian civilians; it asked the Secretary-General to examine the situation and report to it in January 1988 with recommendations to ensure the protection of Palestinian civilians under occupation (resolution 605(1987)).

In addition, the Assembly, having taken note of the Secretary-General's report on a seminar in March that identified project proposals for improving the living conditions of Palestinians in the territories, asked the Secretary-General for a study on future needs in the field of infrastructure (resolution 42/190). The Economic and Social Council, which had before it a study of the financial sector undertaken by the UNCTAD Special Economic Unit (Palestinian people) in collaboration with ESCWA, requested the Secretary-General to report also on Israel's trade practices in the territories (resolution 1987/87).

Communications. In communications addressed to the Secretary-General throughout the year, Israel was charged with various measures against Palestinians, said to lead to a deterioration of the situation in the occupied territories. The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, in drawing attention to those measures, repeatedly conveyed to the Secretary-General the Committee's concern that they heightened tensions and impeded international efforts towards a comprehensive and just solution, as well as the Committee's request that he do all in his power to facilitate such a solution, in particular to promote the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East (see p. 258).

By a 14 April letter, transmitted by Tunisia,⁽¹⁾ PLO alleged that, as a result of various Israeli measures, the situation in the territories had become highly volatile and was rapidly deteriorating, necessitating an immediate response from the international community. Those measures included imposing a curfew on the Palestinian town of Qalqilia, which was being surrounded by Israeli troops and armed settler vigilantes; provoking panic among the population at Ramallah, El-Bireh, Dura' and Rafah in the Gaza Strip, where Palestinian protests continued, by settler vigilantes who attacked residents and shot at their property; administrative detention of three Palestinian intellectuals (see p. 310); and firing at protesting Palestinian students and closing down of Palestinian universities (see p. 315).

On 20 May,⁽²⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights expressed the Committee's concern about the continuing deterioration of the situation in the West Bank and Gaza, where Palestinian demonstrations against Israeli military occupation had intensified. To quell the demonstrations, Israel had resorted to armed force, six-month detentions of Palestinian leaders, arrests, closing down of universities, and expulsions (see p. 313), heightening tension in the region. The Chairman reiterated the Committee's conviction that Security Council action on its recommendations (see p. 265) would advance prospects for a just and lasting peace.

The Committee Chairman, on 3 June,⁽³⁾ drew the Secretary-General's attention to reports of 1 and 2 June by the Kuna and Reuters news agencies, according to which Israel had begun a massive detention campaign: Israeli soldiers had burst into the Balata refugee camp near Nablus, opened fire on the demonstrators, arrested 60 people, put 10 under a six-month detention without trial and imposed a curfew.

By a 9 June letter, transmitted by the Sudan,⁽⁴⁾ PLO claimed that, at the storming of the Balata camp, Israeli soldiers, in a house-to-house search, gathered every male beyond the age of 14 for questioning; they arrested 53 for further interrogation and ordered 10 to a six-month administrative detention and 1 for deportation from the West Bank. PLO further alleged Israeli harassment of Palestinian residents of Nablus, where two teen-age boys were fatally shot and a lo-year-old was shot twice in the face; a shooting rampage through Dheisheh refugee camp, on 6 June, by armed Zionist settlers from Kiryat Arba, who physically attacked men, women and children in their homes, destroyed furniture and other possessions, including vehicles, and where Israeli forces later set up road-blocks and enforced a curfew; and, on 7 June, a siege of Qalqilia—the third since the month began—where the Israeli military arrested scores of Palestinians. PLO called on the Secretary-General and the Security Council to take steps to ensure Israel's respect for the 1949 Geneva Conventions and compliance with United Nations resolutions so as to end human rights violations and repressive measures against Palestinians under Israeli occupation.

On 22 September,(5) the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights once again drew attention to what he called a steady deterioration of the human rights situation in the territories as a result of Israeli policy and practices, in particular the detention of Palestinians (see p. 309).

The Committee Chairman, on 13 October,(6) drew attention to the explosive situation in Gaza, where mass protests against actions taken by the Israeli military met with further violence. He referred to Al-Fajr (a West Bank daily) and United Press International (UPI) reports to the effect that: on 1 October, the shooting of three Palestinians by Israeli soldiers who had fired at demonstrators sparked further demonstrations and a general student strike in the Gaza Strip; on 6 October, widespread protests ensued as tensions rose following the killing of four Arab men whom Israeli authorities identified as guerrillas; on 10 October, at least 25 Palestinians were wounded by Israeli troops in various incidents, in addition to the serious wounding of two youths when an army patrol opened fire at an anti-Israel student protest at the Islamic University; and, on 12 October, as Palestinian youths burned tyres in the streets of Gaza City and hurled stones at Israeli army patrols, the latter fired warning shots into the air to disperse the crowds, forced people at gunpoint to clear away the burning mounds and also forced striking businesses to reopen by ripping shop doors off. In the West Bank, demonstrations broke out when militant Jews tried to enter the Al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem (see p. 268).

On 13 November,(7) the Committee Chairman cited press reports of further incidents between Palestinians and Israeli troops that had resulted in the death and injury of several Palestinians. They included: a Jerusalem Post report about four Gaza residents who, on their way to work on 18 October, were shot at and wounded from a road-block between the town of Deir el-Balah and Bureij refugee camp, which they claimed had not been marked by a "stop" sign; a 28 October Reuters report of a Bethlehem University student who had been shot in the head during a demonstration and later died of his wounds; a UPI account of a 16-year-old girl fatally shot on 10 November, when Israeli settlers fired on student demonstrators at Deir el-Balah; and a report by The New York Times about an Israeli driver who, on 11 November, to ward off protesters surrounding and stoning his car, fired a pistol, wounding two 14-year-old Gaza City schoolgirls, one critically.

On 11 December,(8) the Committee Chairman referred to press accounts of renewed acts of violence against Palestinians in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip that had again resulted in casualties. Among them were UPI and Associated Press accounts of Israeli troops who, on 9 December, shot two Palestinian youths dead and wounded 18 students protesting the death of four Palestinians in a road accident reportedly caused by an Israeli truck driver to avenge the fatal stabbing of a Jewish businessman in Gaza on 6 December; later, protesters gathered outside Shifa Hospital, where four of those injured were in critical condition, were attacked with tear-gas canisters dropped from Israeli helicopters.

The New York Times and UPI attributed the widespread protest demonstrations to clashes with Israeli soldiers and to the death by shooting of a Palestinian youth at Nablus and the wounding of at least 12 others on 10 December; the same sources reported that, at Kalandia refugee camp north of Jerusalem, 23 students were arrested for raising Palestinian flags during a demonstration and another 12 were hurt in a scuffle with police. Reuters reported that, during anti-Israel protests in the Gaza Strip, at least eight Palestinians were wounded and an 11-year-old boy died from having been shot in the head; and that, in Jerusalem, military authorities sentenced the head of the Arab Journalists' Union to six months in jail without trial and imposed a 10-day halt to the distribution of Al-Fajr in the West Bank. Reuters and UPI also reported that, on 11 December, Israeli troops opened fire on another protest demonstration at Balata camp, killing four Palestinians and injuring another 30.

The Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, by a 14 December letter transmitted by Kuwait,(9) expressed outrage and indignation at what he called Israel's terroristic policies, particularly in the West Bank and Gaza, which had resulted in the death of many innocent and unarmed men, women and children, and in injuries to many more. He called on the international community to assume its responsibility to ensure that Palestinians were not subjected to daily massacres, unlawful detention and oppression, and urged the Security Council to adopt immediate and enforceable measures to that end.

The Islamic Conference members at the United Nations, by a communique adopted at an urgent meeting on the situation in the occupied territories (New York, 15 December),(10) urged the United Nations, in particular the Security Council, to intervene immediately to stop the massacres, to send a special fact-finding mission to investigate the situation in the territories, and to take effective steps, including imposing the sanctions stipulated in Chapter VII of the Charter, so as to end the occupation of all Palestinian and other Arab territories.

The Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, by a communique issued at a meeting, also on 15 December in New York, transmitted by Zimbabwe,(11) likewise called for the dispatch of a fact-finding mission and for imposition of the same Charter sanctions. Stressing that conflict and violence would continue as long as occupation remained and Palestinians were prevented from exercising their inalienable rights in their independent homeland, the Bureau further called for a comprehensive solution of the Middle East situation, the core of which was the Palestinian problem.

By a communique issued by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 16 December,(12) Spain deplored the events and resultant tense situation in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, and condemned the actions that had already caused a large number of casualties. It called on the parties to exercise restraint so as not to aggravate the spiralling violence, and on Israel, as the de facto occupying Power, strictly to abide by the 1949 Geneva Conventions and ensure the protection, security and freedom of the population in the territories. It urged the parties to exert every effort to set in motion a peace process—the only course likely to eliminate violence and create a climate of just coexistence.

Greece, by a 17 December statement,(13) expressed concern over the seriousness of the situation, which had resulted in the death and injury of many Arab demonstrators, and in arrests and detentions contrary to international law. It denounced the violence as widening the gap between the two sides and hindering efforts to solve the problem, and called on Israel to end the situation.

By an 18 December statement from its Foreign Ministry, (14) Japan, also expressing concern about the worsening situation in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and regret over the many casualties, believed that the harsh political, economic and social conditions to which the Palestinians continued to be subjected underlay the recent disturbances. It hoped for the realization of peace as soon as possible through implementation of Security Council resolutions 242(1967)(15) and 338(1973),(16) and recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinians, including their right to self-determination.

Tunisia, by a 17 December statement,(17) stated that the Palestinian uprising was a response to Israel's policies of terrorism and repression, including arrests, deportations, torture, the use of firearms against children, women and old people, dynamiting of homes, expropriations, implantation of settlements, Judaization of towns and villages, closing of schools and universities, and desecration of the Al-Aqsa Mosque. It appealed to the international community to find a just solution to the Palestinian problem on the basis of United Nations resolutions and exhorted the Council to adopt measures to ensure protection for the Palestinians and to end Israel's policies which threatened peace and security.

Egypt, in a statement by its Foreign Ministry transmitted on 18 December,(18) voiced concern and regret over the escalating violence and the increasing number of innocent persons killed by Israeli gun-fire. It called on Israel to reconsider its policy of escalation, which constituted a real obstacle to Egypt's indefatigable efforts to promote peace and achieve a just settlement. Warning that the situation was extremely dangerous, Egypt said the world should make clear to Israel that a policy of escalation might involve the region in more extensive and dangerous confrontations.

Malaysia, by a 19 December statement,(19) condemned what it labelled Israel's atrocities that revealed a total disregard for justice and gross disrespect for human life.

Egypt, by another statement, issued by the Office of the President and transmitted on 21 December,(20) warned that Israel's random firing at civilians could only lead to more violence and tension, intensify hatred, repugnance and vengeance, and damage peace efforts. It called on Israel to respect the rights of the Palestinians—the owners of the occupied territories—as laid down in international conventions and covenants and to respond to their legitimate demands; it appealed for action without delay to end Israel's occupation and arrive at an acceptable formula for peaceful coexistence.

Indonesia, by a statement of 22 December,(21) condemned Israel's "iron fist" policy (adopted in 1985(22)) as a blatant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention; the deplorable state of affairs would continue, it feared, as long as the Palestinian people were denied their inalienable right to self-determination, including to an independent homeland in Palestine. Indonesia called on the Security Council to shoulder its responsibility and put an end to the wanton acts of brutality, which could not but seriously undermine efforts towards a Middle East settlement.

Ghana, also by a 22 December statement,(23) protested what it called the barbaric excesses of the Israeli occupation forces against the defenceless inhabitants of the territories who were only exercising their right of legitimate protest against the degrading and inhuman subjugation to which they had been reduced. Ghana called on the international community to act in consonance with the Council to bring an immediate end to the wave of Israeli atrocities. The unrest in the territories, it said, only emphasized the urgent need for an international Middle East peace conference, with full PLO participation.

The head of State of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Colonel Muammar Qaddafi, by a message transmitted on 29 December,(24) viewed what he called the maltreatment and slaughter of Palestinians as a desperate attempt by Israel to eradicate their just cause: their right to their land and to life in freedom and dignity. The world could not disregard such carnage, he said, and must halt Israel's recklessness, brutality and continuing acts of terrorism. He appealed to the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations adopted urgent and effective measures to stop Israel's crimes, punish the perpetrators and enable the Palestinians to regain their land and obtain their full freedom.

Also on 29 December,(25) the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights drew attention to the deteriorating situation in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, as reflected in press reports. These included a 24 December report by the Christian Science Monitor that live ammunition used by Israeli troops had killed at least 23 Palestinians and injured hundreds of others; a 26 December New York Times report that the number of Palestinian youths arrested for suspected involvement in the recent wave of protests had risen to 1,000, whereas the Palestine Press Service in Jerusalem put the number at more than 2,000; a New York Times account of round-the-clock pick-up of Palestinians by squads of Israeli soldiers with arrest warrants issued by the army, for detention in two makeshift prisons pending trial; and a 27 December report by the same paper that the trials were to be mass courts martial, defence lawyers had not been allowed to see the detainees, and, in the Gaza Strip, Palestinian lawyers were boycotting the trials owing to pressures on the defendants by offers of one-month prison terms to those who confessed and by threats of much longer sentences for those who insisted on a trial; a 24 December Jerusalem Post quote of a military official as saying that the army arrested and expelled where the law allowed it to do so, and that it had shut down several universities and about 800 schools in the West Bank and 92 in the Gaza Strip. The Chairman conveyed the Committee's appeal to the Secretary-General to take such measures as were possible to alleviate the sufferings of the affected Palestinians and to protect those under Israeli occupation.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, by a 19 February 1987 resolution on the question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine (see p. 819), reaffirmed that occupation was itself a fundamental human rights violation and that Israel's breaches of the fourth Geneva Convention and of the 1977 Additional Protocols(26) to the 1949 Geneva Conventions were war crimes (see p. 308). It condemned Israel's "iron fist" policy and practices violating human rights in the territories, among them the annexation of parts of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem; acts of violence against Arab civilians by Israeli settlers armed for that purpose, causing death and injury and wide-scale damage to Arab property; and mass arrests, collective punishments, administrative detention and attacks against Palestinian students. It requested that the measures under Chapter VII of the Charter be adopted by the Security Council against Israel for its persistent human rights violations in the territories.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its report to the General Assembly covering the period 10 September 1986 to 31 August 1987,(27) the Committee on Israeli practices presented information on Israeli policy developments in the occupied territories in relation to the treatment of civilians and detainees, and to annexation and settlement measures.

The report was based on monthly reports from Jordan and PLO, from November 1986 to May 1987; written statements from Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic, PLO, NGOS and individuals; the testimony of individuals with first-hand knowledge of the situation of the population in the territories; Israeli press reports of pronouncements by persons in the Government of Israel that had not been contradicted by the Government; and reports in other media, including the Arab language press in the occupied territories, in Israel and in the international press.

The Committee conducted a series of hearings between 1 and 14 June 1987 at Geneva, Amman and Damascus, at which it heard testimonies of persons living in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights. It met again at Geneva between 31 August and 4 September to examine its findings and adopt its report.

The Committee observed that the general policy of Israel remained based on the principle that the territories it occupied were part of the State of Israel. Hence it continued to establish settlements (see p. 311), expropriate property, transfer Israeli citizens to the territories and encourage Palestinians to leave their homeland. In that context and as a result of Israel's pursuit of the "iron fist" policy it adopted in 1985,(22) the prevailing climate of repression and confrontation intensified. As resistance in the territories exploded in demonstrations and strikes, and as Israeli crowd-control methods and stepped-up military presence invariably resulted in death and injury to demonstrators, more violent and widespread demonstrations were triggered, in turn triggering increased arrests, administrative detentions, harsh sentencing including of minors, and harassment and humiliation of the population. Arbitrary expulsions and deportations continued (see p. 313), as did the illegal practice of collective punishment, which in many cases penalized innocent relatives whose houses were demolished or sealed off. Denial of the right to family reunification was persistent.

Ill-treatment of detainees and harsh prison conditions (see p. 309) led to hunger strikes by several thousand Arab prisoners throughout the territories. Incidents of abuse of detainees at a new detention camp were also reported.

Freedom of movement for a number of civilians, both individually and collectively, was arbitrarily restricted. Freedom of association and of the press was curtailed by censorship, harassment of journalists and trade unionists, or closure of newspapers and trade unions. As a result of student demonstrations, freedom of education was further restricted. In addition to the continuing denial to educational institutions of adequate equipment and buildings, modification of curricula and harassment of teachers and students alike, the main Palestinian universities were also subjected to closures (see p. 315).

The living conditions of the population continued to deteriorate; in the agricultural sector, workers and farmers were subjected to harassment and adding to their difficulties was Israeli control over water resources (see p. 322). The situation in the Golan Heights was also reported as deteriorating (see p. 317).

The Committee assessed the situation in the territories as one of continuing violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and of disregard for the fourth Geneva Convention, reaffirmed by various Assembly resolutions as applicable to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967. The persistent policy of annexation, which the population met with fierce resistance, had engendered a cycle of tension and repression that seemed bound to provoke yet more dramatic events in the future. The Committee reiterated the need for the international community to assume its responsibility and adopt measures to prevent a further deterioration of the situation and provide effective protection for the rights and freedoms of the civilians in the territories.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In his November 1987 report on various aspects of the Middle East situation,(28) the Secretary-General stated that Israel's occupation of Arab territory, already over 20 years long, had always been deeply resented by the inhabitants and thus had given rise to much unrest and violence. Since December 1986, when the Security Council adopted resolution 592(1986)(29) in the wake of grave incidents in the territories, further violent incidents had occurred and more lives had been lost. He said the situation in the territories would remain unstable as long as a settlement was not reached. The start of a negotiating process, under United Nations auspices and acceptable to all, would be a significant step in the direction of peace and stability.

Responding to a 1986 General Assembly request,(30) the Secretary-General, in September 1987,(31) reported that he had made available to the Committee on Israeli practices the additional staff member and temporary staff assistance it required. DPI gave the Committee's 1987 hearings and report press-release and radio-news coverage in a number of languages, including telephone feeds. A "World Chronicle" television programme on human rights also highlighted the Committee's work. A 20-minute film entitled "The Palestinians" was scheduled for release on the occasion of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People (29 November). Several United Nations information centres highlighting the Palestine question in newsletters made mention of the Committee's work, which was also given press coverage by the Information Service at Geneva.

UNRWA operations. In his report on UNRWA activities for the period 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988 (32) the Commissioner-General stated that incidents in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in early December 1987 added greatly to the challenges facing the Agency. The incidents had spread so quickly that it soon found itself facing a new and serious situation in the territories. What had seemed a spontaneous uprising turned into a broader confrontation characterized by more frequent and varied incidents between Palestinians and occupation authorities. By the end of 1987, over 20 Palestinians had been killed and dozens wounded in clashes with Israeli security forces.

Measures taken by the occupation authorities to deal with the incidents had also had an impact on the lives of refugees and on the Agency's ability to meet their new demands for services and other assistance. Administrative detention of large numbers of refugees suspected of being involved in the demonstrations, demolition or sealing off of houses occupied by families of Palestinians accused of security violations, curfews and other restrictions on travel, expulsion of individuals considered to have had a role in directing resistance against the Israeli occupation, fines, taxation, confiscation of identity cards (without which residents of the territories could neither work nor move freely), school closures, cutting off water and electricity services, and other economic and political measures added to the difficulties confronting the residents.

Owing to substantially increased demands on health services, the 400 UNRWA-subsidized hospital beds and medical supplies proved insufficient. UNRWA health centres had to cope with significantly increased numbers of casualties, many of whom sustained severe multiple contusions and fractures from beatings, injuries from rubber bullets and live ammunition, and exposure to crowd-control gases.

The disturbances, curfews and administrative and military restrictions impeded the free movement of UNRWA staff, which adversely affected UNRWA environmental health services in the camps, among other services. They likewise delayed and, in some cases, prevented delivery of essential items of assistance to the neediest of refugees (the special hardship cases)-dry food commodities, blankets, clothing, and cash and help for shelter repair and reconstruction.

On 10 December, during the incidents, IDF forcibly entered the Kalandia Training Centre, using tear-gas bombs and truncheons; they left behind 11 severely beaten trainees and six others unconscious from tear-gas exposure. The Commissioner-General cited this as illustrative of how developments in the territories were affecting UNRWA with respect to its rights, privileges and immunities and its ability effectively to discharge its functions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/160 D on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

The Special Political Committee, before approving the draft resolution as a whole, approved paragraphs 6 and 22 by recorded votes of 78 to 21, with 23 abstentions, and by 120 to 2, with 2 abstentions, respectively. The Assembly adopted paragraph 6 by a recorded vote of 83 to 26, with 37 abstentions.

Israel said the text reproduced the false allegations put forward by the Committee on Israeli practices and completely disregarded the actual circumstances; it took no account of the principle of international law that, in addition to ensuring the welfare of the local population, administering authorities had a clear duty to protect that population, together with its own, against terrorism. Furthermore, it renewed the mandate of the Committee on Israeli practices, which had become a sinecure for its members.

The United States believed that the text could only inflame an already embittered situation. It noted with particular dismay such new charges as the "ill-treatment and torture of children and minors under detention" and objected to the expense imposed by the Committee on the United Nations budget, especially at a time of budgetary constraint when scarce resources should not be wasted on pointless exercises.

Although Sweden could support most of the text's provisions, specifically the condemnation of various Israeli policies and practices in paragraphs 8 and 9, it was not convinced that all the formulations in those paragraphs were fully justified by facts; moreover, the text went beyond the Assembly's competence. Austria, while supporting the basic thrust of the text, abstained because of certain formulations; nevertheless, it supported paragraph 22 and hoped for the vigorous pursuit of contacts between the Catholic Medical Facility Hospice at Jerusalem and the Jordanian Government so that a satisfactory solution might be found to meet the medical and social requirements of the Arab population. In Uruguay's opinion, the text contained several formulations that did not contribute to efforts towards restoring peace.

Iran stated that its vote should in no way be construed to imply recognition of the Zionist occupation of the Palestinian territories, which, it stressed, must all be liberated.

Stating their positions on their affirmative vote on the draft, as well as on the other six drafts concerning the report of the Committee on Israeli practices, Bolivia said its vote was based on its unalterable opposition to occupation, conquest or annexation of other peoples' territories, and to practices leading to the assimilation of such territories by an occupying Power; the Niger voted as it did because the Palestinian problems were a matter of international concern and required a satisfactory settlement that allowed the peoples of the region to live in peace and security; its vote notwithstanding, Argentina reserved its position regarding some of the text's terminology, which did not relate to the substance of the questions addressed and might lead to equivocal interpretations that it could not support; Mongolia, voicing condemnation of Israel's annexation policy and non-recognition of any changes in the physical character, demographic composition or legal status of the occupied territories, said Israel's unconditional withdrawal from them was essential for a just and lasting solution to the Middle East problem.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council held seven meetings between 11 and 22 December to consider the situation in the occupied territories, as requested by Democratic Yemen on behalf of the Group of Arab States at the United Nations.⁽³³⁾ The Council invited the following, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bahrain, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, German Democratic Republic, India, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zimbabwe.

Invited to participate under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure were the Permanent Observers of the League of Arab States and of the Organization of the Islamic Conference to the United Nations, at the request of the United Arab Emirates⁽³⁴⁾ and Kuwait,⁽³⁵⁾ respectively; and the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, at his own request.

Also at the request of the United Arab Emirates,⁽³⁶⁾ the Council decided, by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, United Kingdom), that an invitation to participate be accorded to a representative of PLO. The invitation, though not made pursuant to rules 37b or 39, conferred on aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

bRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(l) of the Charter."

PLO the same rights as those conferred on a Member State when invited pursuant to rule 37.

Before the vote, the United States, which had requested it, reiterated its opposition to what it called special ad hoc departures from orderly procedure and to extending to PLO the same rights to participate as if it represented a Member State; the United States did not agree with recent practice which appeared selectively to try to enhance, through a departure from the rules, the prestige of those wishing to speak in the Council. The Federal Republic of Germany said it was guided in its abstention by the Council's rules; the procedure followed in this instance was clearly designed to grant PLO a status similar to that of a Member State—a status not reflective of its true relationship to the United Nations.

Japan confirmed its position that PLO, as one of the major parties to the Middle East question, should be invited to participate when the Council deliberated on the question, including the Palestinian question.

On 22 December, the Council adopted resolution 605(1987).

The Security Council,

Having considered the letter dated 11 December 1987 from the Permanent Representative of Democratic Yemen to the United Nations, in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States at the United Nations for the month of December,

Bearing in mind the inalienable rights of all peoples recognized by the Charter of the United Nations and proclaimed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recalling its relevant resolutions on the situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories, occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and including its resolutions 446(1979), 465(1980), 497(1981) and 592(1986),

Recalling also the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Gravely concerned and alarmed by the deteriorating situation in Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Taking into account the need to consider measures for the impartial protection of the Palestinian civilian population under Israeli occupation,

Considering that the current policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied territories are bound to have grave consequences for the endeavours to achieve comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

1. Strongly deplores those policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, which violate the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories, and in particular the opening of fire by the Israeli army, resulting in the killing and wounding of defenceless Palestinian civilians;

2. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian and other

Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

3. Calls once again upon Israel, the occupying Power, to abide immediately and scrupulously by the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, and to desist forthwith from its policies and practices that are in violation of the provisions of the Convention;

4. Calls furthermore for the exercise of maximum restraint to contribute towards the establishment of peace;

5. Stresses the urgent need to reach a just, durable and peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to examine the present situation in the occupied territories by all means available to him, and to submit a report no later than 20 January 1988 containing his recommendations on ways and means for ensuring the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians under Israeli occupation;

7. Decides to keep the situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, under review.

Security Council resolution 605(1987)

22 December 1987

Meeting 2777

14-O-1

5-nation draft (S/19352/Rev.1).

Sponsors: Argentina, Congo, Ghana, United Arab Emirates, Zambia.

Meeting numbers. SC 2770, 2772-2777.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Bulgaria, China, Congo, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Italy, Japan, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Zambia.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Following the vote, the United States stated that, through the international media, it had watched with profound concern the explosion of violence in the West Bank and Gaza Strip over the preceding two weeks and had been deeply grieved by the extensive loss of life and the large number of people wounded. Its views on the use of live fire in certain circumstances were clearly known; however, the resolution went beyond deploring such use to a generalized criticism of Israeli policies and practices, ignoring the fact that Israeli lives were also at risk and that Israel's security forces had been faced by provocations and, in some cases, by life-threatening situations. It cautioned the Council against polemics in dealing with those tragic events, stressing that the challenge before it was how to assist in the search for a mutually acceptable political settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict that would enable Israelis and Palestinians, and the people throughout the region, to live in peace and security.

Speaking before the vote, Japan urged Israel to exercise utmost restraint so as to avert further casualties and demanded that it scrupulously abide by the fourth Geneva Convention and international law. It reiterated its demand for a solution based on the recognition of, and respect for, Palestinian rights, and for the early and full implementation of Council resolutions 242(1967)(15) and 338(1973)(16) requiring Israel's withdrawal from the occupied territories. Saying the core of the problem was the absence of a just and comprehensive solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict, and the harsh and depressive political, economic and social conditions in which the Palestinians lived, Japan called on all the parties to give their fullest co-operation to the Secretary-General's efforts to convene an international Middle East peace conference. With those considerations in mind, Japan said it would vote for the draft resolution.

Also before the vote, Israel objected to the draft as not a reasonable and balanced attempt to address the issues at hand and the events as they had transpired in the preceding two weeks; there was not even a minimal attempt to consider the deliberate incitements to violence that had fomented the tensions underlying the disturbances. The text purported to relate to security matters that were Israel's exclusive responsibility, interference with which it would not countenance. By entertaining such texts, the Council implicitly weakened those genuinely interested in a peaceful settlement and encouraged those who saw violence not only as a means but also as an end. Israel stressed that the conflict could be solved only through direct peace negotiations based on Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), and on mutual respect for the rights of Jews and Arabs alike. Such a political solution lay with the States concerned rather than with the Council. It further stressed that, despite the baseless accusations to the contrary, the fact remained that its security forces had reacted with the maximum restraint possible in the violent circumstances that confronted them.

During the debate, Israel presented what it said were facts showing that the wave of violence being witnessed was not spontaneous. It had begun with two incidents, it said, that were primed up by a carefully orchestrated campaign: the first involved the death by stabbing of an Israeli in an Arab market on 6 December by one of Yasser Arafat's bodyguard force; the second involved a traffic accident at Jabaliya near Gaza on 10 December in which four Arabs were struck dead by a veering Israeli truck, reported by Al-Fajr, a Jerusalem pro-PLO paper, as a deliberate assault to avenge the Israeli's death. On the same date, a PLO broadcast from Baghdad exhorted the Arab population "to increase the disturbances and to teach the enemy an unimaginable lesson". Disturbances then followed at Jabaliya on 11 December and in Balata and Kalandia camps on 12 December. Israel pointed out that in November and early December, PLO had openly incited riots organized around a succession of dates marking such events as the Balfour Declaration on 2 November, the Extraordinary Arab Summit on 8 November, the tenth anniversary of Anwar Sadat's visit to Jerusalem on 19 November and the twentieth anniversary of the founding of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine on 11 December. It also cited the anniversary of the founding of the Fatah on 1 January.

As to compliance with the fourth Geneva Convention, called for throughout the debate, Israel asserted that it neither considered itself to be an occupying Power, nor accepted the Convention's de jure applicability, since it applied in cases where the ousted Power was a legitimate sovereignty; it thus pertained neither to Judaea and Samaria, illegally annexed by Jordan for 19 years, nor to Gaza, administered by the Egyptian military during the same period. None the less, Israel had, since 1967, acted in de facto accordance with the Convention's humanitarian provisions.

PLO stated that the Council was responsible for ensuring Israel's implementation of the Convention. As Israel had not heeded the repeated calls to abide by its provisions, the Council should take stronger action, including sanctions. The dangerous situation made it incumbent on the Council to adopt an action-oriented resolution to provide for Israel's withdrawal and its replacement with United Nations peace-keeping forces, to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian citizens in the occupied territories and to dispatch a fact-finding mission.

Alarmed by the deteriorating situation and repeated confrontations, France insisted that Israel assume its duties under international law and that the Council remind it of its obligations as an occupying Power under the Convention. The United Kingdom was of the view, based on available evidence, that the use of force by the occupation authorities had been excessive and had contravened the Convention's article 27 requiring the occupying Power to treat all protected persons humanely at all times; it also rejected any attempt to cloud the issue by talking about application de facto rather than de jure. China believed it necessary for the Council to reaffirm the Convention's applicability and to adopt effective measures to ensure Israel's immediate and strict compliance. Calls for such compliance were likewise made by Afghanistan, Algeria, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, Morocco and Qatar.

Ghana suggested that the Council call anew on Israel to fulfil its responsibility towards the populations in the occupied Arab territories in accordance with the Convention and to release all persons detained as a result of the week-long riots. Nicaragua alleged that Israel refused to accept applicability of the 1949 Geneva Conventions because it had no intention of withdrawing from the territories and was trying to legitimize its occupation by increasing settlements, seizing land, annexing territory and applying collective sanctions against the lawful inhabitants. The League of Arab States said Israel's refusal to recognize its status as occupying Power, accountable under the Convention, explained the ferocity of its coercive measures in the territories; unless Israel complied with international law and the Council's resolutions, further polarization and violence would ensue.

It was widely agreed that the events in the territories were the outcome of Israel's 20-year occupation and its policies and that, therefore, a settlement of the Arab-Israeli problem was urgently needed. Jordan observed that the Palestinian Arab people, chafing under occupation, had long been frustrated and humiliated by Israel's tendency, especially in the last two years, to strengthen its actions to annex the occupied territories. Yugoslavia, along with Czechoslovakia, believed that the explosive situation and justified protests were the natural consequence of an untenable situation created by Israeli occupation and of the continuous denial of the Palestinians' legitimate rights and aspirations to self-determination and to a State of their own. In Nicaragua's view, Israeli occupation and the dislocation and dispersal of Palestinians were the source of the problem. India regarded the popular uprisings—not mere demonstrations—as a reflection of an entire people's will for an independent homeland of their own. Sharing those views were Afghanistan and Yemen, among others.

France believed that the current events indicated the precariousness of a situation that was in keeping with neither law nor justice. Iraq pointed out that Israel's persistent policy of aggression and expansion and use of force and terrorism were not likely to lead either to peace and security or to the fulfilment of its master plan to eliminate the Palestinians. The United Kingdom said its concern about the tragedy of what was happening in the territories was not only humanitarian; it arose also from the Council's duty to apply itself to the serious consequences of the Israeli occupation for international peace and security—not least in view of resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973).

In the opinion of the USSR, objective possibilities existed for ending the dangerous course of events in the Middle East. It was important, therefore, to begin moving in the direction of a comprehensive settlement that must provide for Israel's withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied since 1967 and implementation by the Palestinian Arabs of their rights to self-determination and to the establishment of their own State; it must also ensure the rights of the region's States to a safe and independent existence and development. Similarly, the League of Arab States, noting a measure of international detente stimulated by the successful summit meeting between the two super-Powers, said the atmosphere at this juncture was conducive for the Council to address the roots of the Middle East problem, of which the violent incidents in recent days were but an expression of Palestinian frustration accumulated under their 20-year occupation.

Total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories and realization of the Palestinian people's inalienable national rights were widely considered as prerequisites for restoring peace in the territories and in the region. States subscribing to that position included Afghanistan, Algeria, Bahrain, the German Democratic Republic, Nicaragua, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yugoslavia, which added respect for the rights of the region's countries, including Israel, to live in peace and security within their internationally recognized borders. Czechoslovakia held it necessary to continue all United Nations efforts towards those objectives. Cuba and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya called for decisive action to bring about Israel's withdrawal. In Tunisia's opinion, the Council must take measures to end the violence, torture and killing by treating the cause of the disease, namely, foreign occupation and violation of Palestinian rights. Pakistan warned that peace and security could not return unless Israel recognized the Palestinians' right to have a homeland of their own, while the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights warned of increased tension and violence. Democratic Yemen hoped for immediate and practical Council measures to deal with the Israeli occupation and to redress the situation perpetrated against the Palestinians for 40 years. Condemning the massacre of unarmed civilians, Iran affirmed its unreserved support for the struggle of the Palestinians to regain the whole of their territory.

In order to achieve a just and comprehensive settlement, the majority of speakers advocated the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East, under United Nations auspices, with the participation of the parties and the permanent Council members (see p. 258). The United Kingdom considered it essential that early progress be made towards convening such a conference, in a form to be agreed upon by all the parties to serve as a framework for negotiations. Ghana felt the matter should be addressed with urgency; to that end Algeria called on the Council to do everything to remove existing obstacles. China urged Israel to demonstrate the necessary political will by agreeing to such a conference. For the USSR and the Federal Republic of Germany, an international conference would give real impetus to the peace process. For France and Bulgaria, it was the most realistic and direct way to achieve a settlement, and, for the Congo, the only forum whereby the Palestine and Middle East questions could be solved. Italy said the Council was duty-bound to contribute to finding a solution, including promoting such a conference.

Similar statements of support and urgent calls for a conference were made by Afghanistan, the German Democratic Republic, Jordan, Kuwait, Morocco, Pakistan, Qatar, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe. The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights said the international community considered such a conference an urgent necessity.

To ensure Israel's compliance with Council resolutions, several speakers called for stronger measures, including sanctions, among them Afghanistan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam, Yemen and Zimbabwe. According to the United Arab Emirates, the Council was at a critical stage: it could decide either to shoulder its responsibilities under the Charter, or to shirk them and leave the outcome to be decided on the ground. Saudi Arabia said that, if condemning the Zionist authorities was sufficient for some, it was not for the Palestinian Arab people whose blood was being shed in the streets. A just verdict would, in the eyes of the Arab and Muslim peoples, enhance the credibility of the Council, which bore a fundamental responsibility to deter those authorities from committing their acts of terror, and restore justice to the Palestinians.

Among other immediate measures, several countries—including Afghanistan, India, Viet Nam and Zimbabwe—supported the dispatch to the territories of a special fact-finding mission, as had been proposed in communications of the non-aligned countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (see p. 298).

Fourth Geneva Convention

In 1987, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights again reaffirmed that the 12 August 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) applied to the Israeli-occupied territories. Continuing disregard of the Convention—the main international instrument in humanitarian law that applied to the occupied territories—was reported by the Committee on Israeli practices, which cited Israel's policy of annexation and establishment of settlements, as well as its reported ill-treatment of detainees, in flagrant violation of its obligations under the Convention.

In December, during the Security Council debate on the situation in the occupied territories (see p. 304), it was repeatedly emphasized that Israel, as the occupying Power, was obliged to abide by the Convention.

Communications. A number of communications dealing with various aspects of the situation in the Israeli-occupied territories, addressed to the Secretary-General throughout 1987, stressed the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories and charged Israel with infringing a number of its provisions. Among these were the letters of 20 May(2) and 3 June(3) by the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, by which he recalled that the Security Council—most recently in 1986(29)—had repeatedly affirmed that the Convention was applicable to the territories and had called on Israel to abide immediately and scrupulously by it.

Human Rights Commission action. In a 19 February 1987 resolution on the question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine (see p. 819), the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the applicability of the Convention to all those territories, including Jerusalem, strongly condemned Israel's systematic refusal to apply it to the territories, and called on Israel to abide by the United Nations Charter and international law. The Commission once more urged all parties to the Convention to ensure compliance with it in the territories, including Jerusalem.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 7 August 1987, (37) the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that Israel had not replied to his January request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement the 1986 Assembly resolution(38) demanding that Israel acknowledge and comply with the Convention in the occupied territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/160 B on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, in which, inter alia, the Council affirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Recalling also its resolutions 3092 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3240 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 B (XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/106 B of 16 December 1976, 32/91 A of 13 December 1977, 33/113 A of 18 December 1978, 34/90 B of 12 December 1979, 35/122 A of 11 December 1980, 36/147 A of 16 December 1981, 37/88 A of 10 December 1982, 38/79 B of 15 December 1983, 39/95 B of 14 December 1984, 40/161 B of 16 December 1985 and 41/63 B of 3 December 1986,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 7 August 1987,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention,

Noting that Israel and the Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to the Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to the Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns once again the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to acknowledge the applicability of the Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

3. Strongly demands that Israel acknowledge and comply with the provisions of the Convention in the Palestinian and other Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Belize, Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, El Salvador, Liberia, United States, Zaire.

Before voting on the text as a whole, the Assembly and the Committee adopted paragraph 1 by recorded votes of 147 to 1, with 2 abstentions, and 122 to 1, respectively.

Israel stated that, although it did not acknowledge the Convention's applicability to the areas under its administration, in fact it applied the Convention's principles to the inhabitants and even granted them privileges not laid down in the Convention; the question of applicability was a matter of legal interpretation and Israel's position was supported by acknowledged authorities in the field of international law.

The United States said it firmly supported the Convention's applicability to the territories; for that reason, it had requested a separate vote on paragraph 1 and had voted for it to underscore that position. The resolution as a whole, however, served no purpose other than to delay the solution of the very problems it claimed to address; also, the phrase "Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem" was merely demographically and geographically descriptive and not indicative of sovereignty

Explaining their affirmative votes, Uruguay said it was for strictly legal reasons, although it disagreed with certain of the text's political statements, while Bolivia based its vote on the principle of the inadmissibility of territorial acquisition by force.

PLO observed that Israel stood entirely alone in denying the Convention's applicability to the occupied territories.

Palestinian detainees

The General Assembly in 1987 again demanded that Israel immediately release all Palestinians detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination; the Commission on Human Rights made a similar request. Information on the treatment of Palestinian detainees was contained in the report of the Committee on Israeli practices. The imprisonment of Palestinian intellectuals by Israel was the subject of a number of communications.

Communications. Tunisia transmitted a letter from PLO of 9 April 1987,(39) reporting that 4,000 Palestinian detainees in Israeli gaols had been on hunger-strike since 25 March in protest over the inhuman conditions to which they were subjected, in particular against the use of torture; their other complaints included overcrowding, inadequate ventilation due to windows blocked with asbestos sheets, poor and inadequate food, and lack of proper medical care. They were also raising the issue of Israel's repressive "iron fist" policy in the territories. PLO further reported that a general strike had been in effect since 8 April in Jerusalem, Ramallah and El-Birah in support of the hunger-strike, and that demonstrations and protests had spread throughout the territories, to which Israeli troops had responded with violence, using live ammunition and tear-gas on the unarmed protesters, injuring several.

In a 14 April letter dealing with various aspects of the situation in the territories,⁽¹⁾ PLO reported the arrest of three prominent Palestinian intellectuals under Israeli administrative detention laws providing for imprisonment without charge or trial for up to six months: Faisal Hussein, President of the Arab Research Society at Jerusalem; Mamoun Al-Said, former Editor-in-Chief of the Palestinian newspaper Al-Fajr; and Salah Zaheeka, member of the Administrative Committee of the Arab Journalists' League.

By a 22 September letter,⁽⁵⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights drew attention to the continuing practice of subjecting suspected opponents of Israeli occupation to administrative detention, the latest case being that of Faisal Hussein, arrested on 12 September. According to press reports, Israel's Minister of Defence had ordered a six-month detention for Hussein, allegedly for not having changed his activities following his release two months earlier (Ha'aretz, 14 September) after a three-month detention on charges of making a statement in favour of PLO to a Jerusalem Post reporter (Ha'aretz, 8 February). Prior to his latest arrest, Hussein had been held for 10 days for his membership in an "illegal organization", but was released on 4 September.

A lawyer for Hussein stated that his recent arrest was linked to his activities in the Committee Confronting the Iron Fist Policy, a Jewish-Arab group opposed to Israeli policies in the territories. It was also reportedly linked with a recent press conference at which Hussein gave a demonstration of what he described as Israeli methods of torture used against Palestinian prisoners (The Jerusalem Post, 30 August). In addition, Hussein had been under town arrest for five years until earlier in 1987. The Chairman reiterated the Committee's concern over Israel's policy and practices, which only exacerbated tension in the region and created new obstacles to a negotiated and peaceful settlement.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, in a 19 February 1987 resolution reaffirming the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the Israeli-occupied territories (see p. 819), condemned Israel for its ill-treatment and torture of Palestinian detainees and prisoners and demanded that it cease those practices forthwith. The Commission urged Israel to grant prisoner-of-war status to all captured Palestinian fighters and requested it to release all Arabs detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and liberation of their territories and to accord them the protection envisaged in the international instruments concerning the treatment of prisoners of war. The Commission further urged Israel to co-operate with ICRC and allow it to visit all Arab detainees in Israeli prisons.

In a resolution, also of 19 February, on the question of human rights violations in the occupied territories (see p. 819), the Commission again condemned administrative detention, torture of detainees and inhuman prison conditions, as well as attacks and use of tear-gas against prisoners in the Kfar Youna, Janeed, Narha, Hebron, Ashkelon and Fara'a prisons in September and October 1986.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 10 August 1987,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reported on implementation of the 1986 resolution by which the General Assembly had called on Israel to release all Arabs arbitrarily detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and for the liberation of their territories.⁽⁴¹⁾ In reply to his January 1987 request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement the resolution, Israel stated on 17 June that it had set out its position during the debate on the resolution.⁽⁴²⁾ It explicitly rejected the release called for on the grounds that all prisoners had undergone a fair trial and their criminal guilt had been established beyond a reasonable doubt in a court of law. Equating them with those seeking political redress not only emphasized the extent to which the Assembly had fallen victim to the contorted language of extremists, but also undermined the rule of law and justice. In the light of those facts, Israel continued to view the 1986 resolution as unwarranted and devoid of substance, and as such should be dropped from the Assembly's agenda.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its 1987 report,⁽²⁷⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices considered information concerning arrests, trials and sentences. It noted that, during the reporting period (10 September 1986-31 August 1987), the general climate of tension and repression in the territories was also noticeable in the treatment of detainees. Various forms of ill-treatment, both physical and psychological, the lack of adequate sanitary facilities, nutrition and clothing, and the overcrowding of cells had led to protests by detainees in the form of widespread hunger-strikes by several thousand Arab security prisoners in most prisons and detention camps of the territories. The Committee also noted another preoccupying development: the opening of the Ansar 2 detention camp in the Gaza Strip, where various incidents involving abuse of detainees had been reported.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution

42/160 A on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 38/79 A of 15 December 1983, 39/95 A of 14 December 1984, 40/161 A of 16 December 1985 and 41/63 A of 3 December 1986,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General of 10 August 1987,

1. Calls upon Israel to release all Arabs arbitrarily detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and for the liberation of their territories;

2. Notes the initial release of Palestinian prisoners on 20 May 1985;

3. Deplores the Israeli subsequent arbitrary detention or imprisonment of hundreds of Palestinians, and demands that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind its action against the detainees and imprisoned Palestinians and release them immediately;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/160 A

8 December 1987 Meeting 95 111-2-36 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/42/811) by recorded vote (89-2-29), 25 November (meeting 34); draft by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Senegal, Yemen for Arab Group (A/SPC/42/L.23); agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: SPC 29-34; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malta, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Zaire.

The United States stated that the text went beyond the question of administrative detention and gave the totally unacceptable impression of condoning violence.

Sweden abstained mainly because of what it felt was the sweeping formulation in paragraph 1 that might lead to dubious interpretations. Austria's abstention was likewise due to its reservations on that paragraph's wording.

In resolution 42/69 I on the protection of Palestine refugees, the Assembly called on Israel to release all detained Palestine refugees, including UNRWA employees.

Israeli settlements

The Committee on Israeli practices reported in 1987 that Israel continued its policy of physical annexation of the territories by planning and establishing new Israeli settlements there and expanding existing ones. The General Assembly deplored Israel's persistence in such activities and demanded that it desist from any action that would change the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the territories. The settlement activities were condemned by the Commission on Human Rights, deplored by the UNEP Governing Council and were the subject of several communications, principally from Jordan.

Communications. On 31 March,(43) 16 April,(44) 29 June,(45) 30 July,(46) 9 September,(47) 16 October,(48) 1 December(49) and 22 December 1987,(50) Jordan transmitted information on Israeli policy and practices designed to evict the Arab population from their lands and expropriate them for the implementation of its settlement programme, in violation of international law, in particular the Hague Convention (IV) of 1907 and the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention. Jordan detailed such practices as outright land confiscation, land acquisition by deception and forgery, fragmentation of the West Bank by the building of a network of roads, attacks by armed settlers against Arabs and their property, especially the demolition and closing of houses, the burning or uprooting of hundreds of saplings and trees, and setting farmlands ablaze. Jordan said the continuation of such a policy endangered international peace and security and the prospects for peace in the region.

By a 14 September declaration issued at Brussels, transmitted by Denmark,(51) the EC member States noted with concern Israel's continuing policy of establishing new settlements in the territories, most recently at the Avnei Hefetz site on the West Bank. They reiterated their conviction that progress towards a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region depended on the creation of a climate of confidence between the parties. They believed that the opening of new settlements, as well as the disturbing increase of the number of settlers in existing ones, posed a serious risk of jeopardizing peace prospects. They considered every settlement to be in violation of international law and called on Israel to end its illegal settlements policy.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 General Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October), in their final communiqué,(52) condemned the establishment of Israeli settlements and reaffirmed that all Israeli measures to alter the political, cultural, religious, demographic and other features of the territories were illegal, null and void. They requested the United Nations to take effective steps, including sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, against Israel with a view to enforcing its immediate and total withdrawal from the territories.

Human Rights Commission action. In a 19 February 1987 resolution on the question of human rights violations in the territories (see p. 819), the Commission on Human Rights condemned Israel's administrative and legislative measures to promote and expand the establishment of settler colonies there. It specifically condemned the continuing establishment of new Israeli settlements and expansion of existing ones on private and public Arab lands, and the transfer of an alien population thereto; the arming of settlers to commit acts of violence against Arab civilians, causing injury and death and wide-scale damage to Arab property; and the confiscation and expropriation of Arab property from Palestinian owners and demolition and destruction of Arab houses.

UNEP Council action. On 18 June 1987,(53) the UNEP Governing Council stressed the importance of a 1980 Security Council resolution(54) by which the Council had determined that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 had no legal validity and that Israel's policy and practices of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those territories was a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention. The Council deplored such measures, in particular the confiscation of land and water resources, the establishment of settlements and the destruction of trees and plantations.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 7 August 1987,(55) the Secretary-General reported that no reply had been received from Israel to his January request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1986 General Assembly demand(56) that it desist from taking any action that would result in changing the legal status or demographic composition of the territories.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its 1987 report,(27) the Committee on Israeli practices stated that, according to information gathered during the reporting period, Israel continued its policy of physical annexation of the territories; settlements had continued to be planned, established and expanded by forcibly expropriat-

ing Palestinian farmlands and thus inducing the farmers to emigrate and leave their homeland. The Committee noted that that policy, which was based on the principle that the territories were a part of the State of Israel, was in violation of Israel's obligations under the fourth Geneva Convention, which stipulated that military occupation was to be considered as a temporary, de facto situation, giving the occupying Power no right over the territorial integrity of the occupied territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/160 C on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,
Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/5 of 28 October 1977, 33/113 B of 18 December 1978, 34/90 C of 12 December 1979, 35/122 B of 11 December 1980, 36/147 B of 16 December 1981, 37/88 B of 10 December 1982, 38/79 C of 15 December 1983, 39/95 C of 14 December 1984, 40/161 C of 16 December 1985 and 41/63 C of 3 December 1986,

Expressing grave anxiety and concern at the present serious situation in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 7 August 1987,

Confirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, are in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and constitute a serious obstacle to the efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and therefore have no legal validity;

2. Strongly deplores the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem;

3. Demands that Israel comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands once more that Israel, the occupying Power, desist forthwith from taking any action which would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Geneva Convention to respect and to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israel asserted that the Special Political Committee was not competent to pronounce on the legal validity of measures and actions it had taken since 1967 in the territories. The claim that its actions constituted a serious obstacle to efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace was particularly out of place; it was precisely resolutions of the type just adopted which obstructed prospects for lasting peace and harmony in the region.

The United States felt that the text diverted attention from the real task of promoting peace through direct negotiations.

Uruguay said that although it disagreed with certain political statements in the text, it voted in favour for strictly legal reasons.

Expulsion and deportation of Palestinians

In 1987, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights again called on Israel to allow expelled Palestinian leaders to return, in particular the Mayor of Halhul and the Sharia (Islamic) Judge of Hebron, so that they could resume the functions for which they had been elected and appointed. The latter two had been deported in 1980,(57) together with the Mayor of Hebron who had since died, on the ground that they had systematically engaged in inciting the local Arab population to acts of violence and subversion, abusing their public offices.

Communications. On 20 May 1987,(2) the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights expressed the Committee's concern about the deterioration of the situation in the territories due to a variety of Israeli measures to quell demonstrations, among them the recent deportation of three Palestinian youth leaders: Marwan Barghouti and Khalil Ashour, Chairmen of the Student Councils at the West Bank's Bir Zeit and An-Najah Universities, respectively, and Ahmed Abdulfatah Nasser, President of the Arab Youth Federation at Khan Yunis in Gaza—all accused of encouraging activities in opposition to Israel's military occupation. The Committee Chairman added that Barghouti and Ashour, lacking confidence in Israel's legal system, had withdrawn their appeal against the deportation order before the Military Objections Committee and were thus forced to cross the border into Jordan on 14 May.

By a 9 June letter(4) reporting various Israeli measures against Palestinians, including the storming of the Balata refugee camp (see p. 297), PLO also reported that a camp resident, Jihad Massimi, had been ordered deported from the West Bank.

Human Rights Commission action. In a 19 February 1987 resolution on the question of human rights violations in the occupied territories (see p. 819), the Commission on Human Rights condemned the deportation of Arab inhabitants. In another resolution of the same date (see p. 819), reaffirming the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories, the Commission also condemned Israel for its policy of deporting Palestinians from their homeland, citing the recent deportation of Akram Haniyeh, editor of the East Jerusalem daily Al Sha'ab. It called on Israel to refrain forthwith from deporting Palestinians and to rescind its deportation decisions so as to enable the return of deportees to their homeland and property.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 10 August 1987,(58) the Secretary-General reported on Israel's response, received on 17 June, regarding implementation of a 1986 General Assembly resolution(59) demanding that Israel rescind the 1980 expulsion of the Mayor of Halhul and the Sharia Judge of Hebron, as well as of other Palestinian leaders expelled since 1985, and facilitate their immediate return. Israel restated its position, previously set out in oral and written statements on several occasions:(60) that the continuing threat that terrorist activity posed to its security accounted for its measures to ensure the maintenance of public order as contemplated by international law. Exercised only in the most extreme cases, those measures were subject to judicial and administrative controls, in particular to a review by Israel's High Court of Justice, which a person under an expulsion order could petition at any time. The 1986 resolution, Israel asserted, was based on erroneous assumptions and displayed the most biased and distorted picture of the events surrounding the expulsions; as such, it should be dropped from the Assembly's agenda.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its 1987 report,(27) the Committee on Israeli practices stated that it had heard several statements and had received written information concerning the arbitrary practice of expelling and deporting Palestinians from the occupied territories. The Committee noted in particular the case of Akram Haniyeh, accused of hostile activity on behalf of PLO and expelled in December 1986 from Israel to Algeria, via Zurich, Switzerland, under ICRC supervision. A journalist, Haniyeh had stressed the political reasons behind his deportation, while other testimonies outlined the illegal deportation procedure and gave account of the difficult physical conditions of the deportation process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/160 E on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 468(1980) of 8 May 1980, 469(1980) of 20 May 1980 and 484(1980) of 19 December 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/147 D of 16 December 1981, 37/88 D of 10 December 1982, 38/79 E of 15 December 1983, 39/95 E of 14 December 1984, 40/161 E of 16 December 1985 and 41/63 E of 3 December 1986,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 10 August 1987,

Deeply concerned at the expulsion by the Israeli military occupation authorities of the Mayor of Halhul, the Mayor of Hebron who has since died, the Sharia Judge of Hebron and, in 1985, 1986 and 1987, other Palestinians,

Alarmed by the expulsion of many Palestinian leaders from the occupied Palestinian territories by the Israeli military occupation authorities in 1985, 1986 and 1987,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in particular article 1 and the first paragraph of article 49, which read as follows:

"Article 1

"The High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances."

"Article 49

"Individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive . . .")

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its persistent refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly;

2. Demands that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind the illegal measures taken by the Israeli military occupation authorities in expelling the Mayor of Halhul, the Sharia Judge of Hebron and, in 1985, 1986 and 1987, other Palestinian leaders and that it facilitate the immediate return of the expelled Palestinians so that they can, inter alia, resume the functions for which they were elected and appointed;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cease forthwith the expulsion of Palestinians and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 42/160 E

8 December 1987 Meeting 95 130-1-23 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/42/811) by recorded vote (108-1-16), 25 November (meeting 34); draft by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Senegal, Yemen for Arab Group (A/SPC/42/L.27); agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: SPC 29-34; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, Norway, Swaziland, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire.

Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Before approving the draft resolution, the Committee approved paragraph 1 by recorded vote of 96 to 2, with 25 abstentions.

Israel found the text unacceptable, saying the situation required it to attach utmost importance to safeguarding public order and security. Recalling the 1980 attack outside the Hadassah House at Hebron that killed six Jewish worshippers and wounded 16 others, Israel stressed that it had had to take steps to prevent the recurrence of such outrage, including the expulsion of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the Judge of Hebron, who had been systematically inciting the local Arab population to acts of violence and subversion.

The United States believed that the deportations cited in the text were contrary to the fourth Geneva Convention and that the deportees should be allowed to return; it abstained, however, because the text presented an unbalanced picture, ignoring factors that had led to the deportations.

Uruguay explained that it voted in favour for strictly legal reasons, although it disagreed with certain political statements in the text.

Israeli measures against educational institutions

Both the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights condemned what they called systematic Israeli repression of Palestinian educational and cultural institutions in the occupied territories, which included the closing of universities and restrictions on academic activities. The Assembly demanded that Israel rescind such actions. Following consideration of an expert's study, the UNESCO Executive Board and the General Conference deplored all violations of academic freedoms and repression against Palestinian educational and cultural institutions in the territories; they asked the occupation authorities to cancel measures and military orders against those institutions, as well as other acts of discrimination.

Communications. PLO, by a letter of 14 April 1987,(1) alleged that, on the preceding day, Israeli occupation troops had opened fire on protesting students from Bir Zeit University at Ramallah, killing a 23-year-old Palestinian and wounding seven others; the arrival and departure of ambulances at military check-points in the area had been delayed. Bir Zeit University was ordered closed for four months, and Al-Najah University, where several hundred Palestinian students were inside the campus, was under siege by Israeli troops and armed settler vigilantes. PLO reported other acts of violence and the administrative detention of three prominent Palestinian intellectuals (see p. 310).

On 9 June,(4) PLO further charged Israeli occupation troops with various other measures against Palestinians (see p. 297), including the storming of the Islamic University in the Gaza Strip on 7 June, during which scores of students were arrested and the University was ordered closed until further notice.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 19 February 1987 resolution on the question of human rights violations in the occupied territories (see p. 819), the Commission on Human Rights condemned what it called the systematic Israeli repression of cultural and educational institutions, especially universities, schools and institutes, including closures or the restriction and obstruction of academic activities by subjecting curricula, textbooks, educational programmes, student admissions and faculty appointments to the control of the military occupation authorities. The Commission further condemned attacks against Palestinian students, such as the shooting at Bir Zeit University students on 4 December 1986,(61) which resulted in the killing of three students and the wounding of a number of others.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 10 August 1987,(62) the Secretary-General reported on Israel's response of 17 June to his request for information on implementation of a 1986 General Assembly resolution(63) demanding that Israel rescind all actions and measures against educational institutions in the territories, ensure their freedom and refrain from hindering their effective operation. Israel stated that its position on the Assembly's demand had been fully set out in 1986, both in writing(64) and in a statement before the Special Political Committee (65)

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its 1987 report,(27) the Committee on Israeli practices noted that the situation of education in the territories had been particularly preoccupying during the reporting period. In addition to various problems that continued to affect and restrict freedom of education—the denial of adequate equipment and buildings, efforts to modify curricula, the harassment of teachers and students by administrative detention, arrest, restriction of freedom of movement and deportation—the period had been marked by particularly dramatic events leading to the death of a number of students, increased tension in the main Palestinian educational institutions, closures of those institutions and harsh repression against teachers and students.

UNESCO action. In keeping with a 1985 UNESCO General Conference request, Reverend Father E. Boné (Belgium), Professor at the Catholic University of Louvain, was appointed to carry out a study of the conditions under which academic freedoms were guaranteed and exercised in the occupied territories. Father Boné undertook a series of missions, including to the occupied territories and to Israel, and reported on his findings to the UNESCO Director-General in August 1987.

Commending the report's high quality, the UNESCO Executive Board, by a decision adopted at its September-November 1987 session, and the General Conference, by a resolution adopted at its October/November session, deplored all violations of academic freedoms in all their forms and the obstruction of and repression against Palestinian educational and cultural institutions. They asked the occupation authorities to respect the Geneva and Hague Conventions by cancelling all measures and military orders against those institutions, as well as all discrimination in respect of taxes and customs duties on imported cultural, educational and scientific material, and to preserve academic freedoms. They recognized that the co-operation given to enable Father Bone to carry out his mission impartially appeared to offer a valuable opportunity for exploring constructive action under UNESCO auspices. The Board and Conference invited the Director-General to ask Father Bone to complete his mission by examining other educational and cultural institutions in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, and to explore feasible means of facilitating and increasing UNESCO co-operation to assist Palestinian educational institutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/160 G on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply concerned at the continued and intensified harassment by Israel, the occupying Power, against educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories,

Recalling its resolutions 38/79 G of 15 December 1983, 39/95 G of 14 December 1984, 40/161 G of 16 December 1985 and 41/63 G of 3 December 1986,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 10 August 1987,

Taking note of the relevant decisions adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization concerning the educational and cultural situation in the occupied territories,

1. Reaffirms the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculties in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, especially the opening of fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Condemns the systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities and other educational and vocational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, restricting and impeding the academic activities of Palestinian universities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and educational programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control and supervision of the military occupation authorities, in clear contravention of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with the provisions of that Convention, rescind all actions and measures against all educational institutions, ensure the freedom of those institutions and refrain forthwith from hindering the effective operation of the universities and other educational institutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Abstaining: Barbados, Belize, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chile, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Grenada, Honduras, Liberia, Uruguay, Zaïre.

a) Later advised the Secretariat that it had intended to abstain.

In the opinion of the United States, the text indiscriminately condemned alleged Israeli actions in dealing with educational institutions and students in the occupied territories. No nation upheld academic freedom more strongly than the United States, which had not hesitated to address criticisms to Israel when justified; it was opposed to the text's inaccurate and inflammatory language, however, which only undermined genuine efforts to resolve disputes.

Israel said that, in view of subversive acts instigated on behalf of PLO by students and faculty members since 1979, it had been duty-bound to take appropriate measures. The issue was whether academic freedom and freedom of speech and belief could be exploited to mask incitement to violence and subversion. Israel would not interfere in academic affairs, but it expected institutions of higher education to concentrate on education, not on terrorist activities.

In Uruguay's view, the text contained formulations which did not contribute to efforts to restore peace.

In related actions, the Assembly, by resolution 42/69 K, emphasized the need to strengthen the educational system in the Arab territories, asked the Secretary-General to continue taking measures towards establishing the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" and again called on Israel to remove the hindrances it had put in the way; by resolution 42/69 D, it appealed for more grants and scholarships for qualified Palestine refugee candidates.

Golan Heights

The Committee on Israeli practices reported a continuing deterioration of the situation in the Golan Heights, part of the Syrian Arab Republic occupied by Israel since 1967. As in previous years, developments there in 1987 drew action from the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights. The Assembly condemned Israel for persisting in changing the composition of the Golan Heights and for refusing to comply with United Nations resolutions declaring null and void Israel's 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Golan.⁽⁶⁶⁾ The Assembly and the Commission called on Israel to rescind that decision and all other measures it had taken to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Arab Golan.

Communications. On 10 March 1987,⁽⁶⁷⁾ the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Syrian Arab Republic drew attention to Israel's acts of oppression and terrorism against the civilian population in the Golan Heights, which he said had reached alarming proportions and had caused the deaths of innocent citizens whose only offence had been their rejection of Israeli occupation and their declaration of adherence to their Syrian identity and loyalty to their country. He cited the savage suppression, on 12 February, of a large-scale demonstration marking the fifth anniversary of the Golan uprising against Israel's decision to annex the area; and the firing, on 8 March, at groups of unarmed demonstrators commemorating the twenty-fourth anniversary of the Syrian revolution, which resulted in the wounding of many and a woman's death. The Minister described those acts as a link in a long chain of practices of oppression and economic, political and cultural pressure, whose continuation threatened regional and international peace and security.

Israel, on 31 March,⁽⁶⁸⁾ referred to a recent accusation made by the Syrian Arab Republic that it had engaged in "oppressive" measures to disperse an illegal demonstration in the Golan Heights. Its purpose, Israel asserted, was to deflect world attention from the massacre perpetrated by Syrian troops in Tripoli, Lebanon, as reported by Amnesty International on 28 February (see p. 276).

The Syrian Arab Republic replied on 3 April⁽⁶⁹⁾ that Israel's claim was nothing more than part of a campaign to divert attention from crimes it committed daily against the population of the occupied territories. It drew attention at the same time to what it called arbitrary judgements pronounced recently by an Israeli military tribunal in the case of five Syrian nationals of the Golan Heights that were reminiscent of the punishments meted out by the racist South African regime or by the Nazis on the resistance fighters during the Second World War.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 General Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October), by their final communiqué,⁽⁵²⁾ condemned Israel for its continued occupation of the Golan Heights and reiterated that its 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Golan Heights was null and void and considered an act of aggression under Article 39 of the United Nations Charter.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 19 February 1987 resolution on human rights in occupied Syrian territory (see p. 819), the Commission on Human Rights condemned Israel for its persistent defiance of United Nations resolutions relating to occupied Syrian territory and deprecated Israel's failure to end its occupation and cease its repressive measures and human rights violations. It deplored Israel's continued refusal to allow the Committee on Israeli practices access to the territories and demanded such access.

The Commission declared once more that Israel's 1981 decision, resulting in effective annexation, was null and void and constituted an act of aggression under the Charter and a grave violation of international law. It deplored the inhuman practices that Israel continued to apply against Syrian citizens in the occupied Golan Heights to force them to carry Israeli identity cards and for their refusal to assume Israeli nationality—practices that violated the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the fourth Geneva Convention and United Nations resolutions. It called on Israel to rescind its 1981 decision and cease its acts of terrorism against Syrian citizens.

The Commission emphasized that Israel must allow the Golan evacuees to return to their homes and recover their property and residences; it further emphasized the overriding necessity of total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from all Palestinian and Syrian territories as essential for a just and comprehensive Middle East peace. It deplored the negative vote and pro-Israel position of a permanent Security Council member which had prevented the Council from adopting appropriate measures against Israel under Chapter VII of the Charter. It asked the Secretary-General to give the resolution the widest publicity.

Reports of the Secretary-General. On 10 August 1987,(71) the Secretary-General reported on replies to his request for information on action taken or envisaged to implement a 1986 General Assembly resolution relating to the occupied Golan Heights.(72) On the resolution's call on Israel to desist from repressive measures against the Golan population, Israel, on 17 June 1987, referred to its position (that it could not be expected to maintain indefinitely a military administration merely to accommodate the Syrian Arab Republic's interest in persistent conflict and that the legislation applied to the Golan Heights did not in the slightest diminish the local population's rights) as set forth in a letter that the Secretary-General conveyed in a 1981 report to the Security Council.(73) As to the call on Member States not to recognize Israeli measures purporting to alter the character and legal status of the Golan Heights, the Secretary-General reproduced in his report the replies received from the Byelorussian SSR, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Egypt, Ghana, Iraq, Kuwait and the USSR.

In another report, also of 10 August, with a 23 September addendum,(74) the Secretary-General annexed information received from 10 countries as of the later date, on their implementation of three 1986 Assembly resolutions on various aspects of the Middle East situation, among them one on Israeli policies in the Golan Heights(75) calling on States to apply a series of specific measures concerning military, economic, diplomatic and cultural relations with Israel.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its 1987 report,(27) the Committee on Israeli practices provided information on the situation in the occupied Golan Heights, as supplied in oral testimony by the Syrian Arab Republic's Deputy Foreign Minister and a former Golan resident, and as gathered from press reports. Orally described were land confiscations and the establishment of more than 40 settlements to which water resources were being diverted; deterioration of the economic infrastructure and of health services; curtailment of the freedom of expression, of association and of union rights; closure, under security pretexts, of 65 per cent of occupied Golan; and harassment of the population, in addition to murders, arrests and expulsions.

From the press were reports of convictions on charges of incitement to violence; arrests on suspicion of planning pro-Syrian demonstrations including Syrian flag-raising, terrorist attacks and violent demonstrations and clashes with Israel's security forces; serious disturbances in Mas'ada due to the detention of a secondary school student that developed into a mass anti-Israel demonstration; riots in Buk'ata and attacks on IDF soldiers by stone-throwing youths in Majdal Shams.

Underscoring a continuing deterioration of the situation in the Golan Heights, the Committee noted that the disturbances during the reporting period had led Israel to set up a new border-guard unit to maintain public order and to assist in dealing with security events (Ha'aretz, 24 April).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/160 F on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/I of 5 February 1982, 37/88 E of 10 December 1982, 38/79 F of 15 December 1983, 39/95 F of 14 December 1984, 40/161 F of 16 December 1985 and 41/63 F of 3 December 1986,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 10 August 1987,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975, 31/61 of 9 December 1976, 32/20 of 25 November 1977, 33/28 and 33/29 of 7 December 1978, 34/70 of 6 December 1979 and 35/122 E of 11 December 1980, in which it, inter alia, called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories and to withdraw from all those territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Arab Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and that all territories thus occupied by Israel must be returned,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, particularly Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan was null and void and without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Condemns the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Arab Golan are null and void and constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Strongly condemns Israel for its attempts to impose forcibly Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, and calls upon it to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the Syrian Arab Golan;

5. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israel regarded the text as yet another manifestation of Syrian propaganda and warfare against Israel, which ignored the reasons for Israel's presence in the Golan Heights: its repeated use for launching attacks against towns and villages in northern Israel.

The United States explained that it could not support any resolution that went beyond the 1981 Security Council resolution(76) that demanded the rescission of Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan Heights and determined the continued applicability to the territory of the fourth Geneva Convention. The United States nevertheless believed in the Convention's applicability to the Golan Heights and asserted that Israel, as the occupying Power, must meet its obligations under that Convention.

Uruguay stated that it voted for the text strictly for legal reasons, although it disagreed with certain political statements in it.

On 11 December, under the agenda item on the situation in the Middle East, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/209 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 November 1987,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/I of 5 February 1982, 37/123 A of 16 December 1982, 38/180 A of 19 December 1983, 39/146 B of 14 December 1984, 40/168 B of 16 December 1985 and 41/162 B of 4 December 1986,

Recalling its resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, in which it defined an act of aggression, inter alia, as "the invasion or attack by the armed forces of a State of the territory of another State, or any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from such invasion or attack, or any annexation by the use of force of the territory of another State or part thereof" and provided that "no consideration of whatever nature, whether political, economic, military or otherwise, may serve as a justification for aggression",

Reaffirming the fundamental principles of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Noting that Israel's record, policies and actions establish conclusively that it is not a peace-loving Member State and that it has not carried out its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting further that Israel has refused, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter, to accept and carry out the numerous relevant decisions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 497(1981), thus failing to carry out its obligations under the Charter,

I. Strongly condemns Israel for its failure to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981) and General Assembly resolutions 36/226 B, ES-9/I, 37/123 A, 38/180 A, 39/146 B, 40/168 B and 41/162 B;

2. Declares once more that Israel's continued occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan and its decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan constitute an act of aggression under the provisions of Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX);

3. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

4. Declares all Israeli policies and practices of, or aimed at, annexation of the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, to be illegal and in violation of international law and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Determines once more that all actions taken by Israel to give effect to its decision relating to the occupied Syrian Arab Golan are illegal and invalid and shall not be recognized;

6. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under these instruments in all circumstances;

7. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan since 1967 and its annexation by Israel on 14 December 1981, following Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, constitute a continuing threat to international peace and security;

8. Strongly deplores the negative vote by a permanent member of the Security Council which prevented the Council from adopting against Israel, under Chapter VII of the Charter, the "appropriate measures" referred to in resolution 497(1981) unanimously adopted by the Council;

9. Further deplores any political, economic, financial, military and technological support to Israel that encourages it to commit acts of aggression and to consolidate and perpetuate its occupation and annexation of the occupied Arab territories;

10. Firmly emphasizes once more its demand that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its illegal decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Arab Golan, which resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

11. Reaffirms once more the overriding necessity of the total and unconditional withdrawal by Israel from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, which is an essential prerequisite for the establishment of a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East;

12. Determines once more that Israel's record, policies and actions confirm that it is not a peace-loving Member State, that it has persistently violated the principles contained in the Charter and that it has carried out neither its obligations under the Charter nor its commitment under General Assembly resolution 273(III) of 11 May 1949;

13. Calls once more upon all Member States to apply the following measures:

(a) To refrain from supplying Israel with any weapons and related equipment and to suspend any military assistance that Israel receives from them;

(b) To refrain from acquiring any weapons or military equipment from Israel;

(c) To suspend economic, financial and technological assistance to and co-operation with Israel;

(d) To sever diplomatic, trade and cultural relations with Israel;

14. Reiterates its call to all Member States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with Israel in order totally to isolate it in all fields;

15. Urges non-member States to act in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

16. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other international organizations to conform their relations with Israel to the terms of the present resolution;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Cameroon, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Grenada, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Liberia, Malawi, Nepal, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zaire.

The United States opposed the text because of its unbalanced and harmful language and one-sidedness; its stale slogans and condemnations took the parties not one step closer to a settlement. Malta regretted the text's condemnatory language and formulations that were potentially far-reaching in their legal implications. New Zealand voted negatively because of the absence from the text of the principles for a comprehensive Middle East settlement as embodied in Security Council resolutions 242(1967)(15) and 338(1973),(16) and of the measured approach necessary for a just and lasting solution. Sweden strongly objected to a number of paragraphs, 12 to 16 in particular with respect to substantive content, and to the fact that they could not be reconciled with the division of responsibilities between the Assembly and the Council as envisaged by the Charter.

Denmark, speaking for the EC members, said their views on the principles needed to secure Middle East peace were well known and were restated during the Assembly debate on the Middle East: a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict must be based on Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and on two fundamental principles-the right of all States in the area, including Israel, to exist within secure frontiers and the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination with all that that implied; its essence must be a full, just and lasting accommodation between the two sides.

Among those abstaining, Bolivia viewed the approach in certain paragraphs as not in keeping with its position. Argentina felt that certain ideas, particularly in paragraphs 2, 9 and 12 to 14, were incompatible with the guiding principles of its foreign policy. Egypt said the text contained several elements that were difficult to endorse and lacked those that would encourage peace efforts. Austria neither believed that measures aimed at breaking relations with Israel and isolating it could bring a Middle East solution any closer, nor could it support any formulation that could be interpreted as impinging on the principle of universality in the United Nations membership. The Philippines felt that draft resolutions on complex international issues such as the Middle East conflict should be presented in a balanced manner and that the sovereign right of States to conduct their own international affairs should be upheld.

Mexico would have abstained on paragraphs 12 to 14 referring to measures falling within the Council's jurisdiction, had separate votes been taken on them. Greece expressed strong reservations on paragraphs 8, 13 (c) and (d) and 14. Turkey was of the view that neither the Assembly nor any other United Nations organ should pass value judgements on Member States' votes and so would have abstained had there been a separate vote on paragraph 8; also, it would not have voted for paragraphs 13 and 14, which it found difficult to reconcile with efforts to initiate an appropriate framework for a negotiating process.

Iran reiterated its reservations on all terms in the text that implied any recognition of what it called the Zionist base of terror occupying Palestine and its belief that the Zionist forces must withdraw unconditionally from all Palestinian territories, including those occupied prior to 1967.

Living conditions of Palestinians

Pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly request,(77) a seminar on the living conditions of Palestinians in the occupied Palestinian territories was held at Vienna from 2 to 6 March 1987. It was attended by 10 experts and by representatives of UNCTAD, CSDHA (Department of International Economic and Social Affairs), WHO, PLO and the League of Arab States.

The experts presented various project proposals related to agriculture and industry, manpower development and employment, and housing and infrastructure, which three working groups examined. It was agreed to give high priority to those projects designed to: improve, increase and diversify agricultural and industrial production; develop agro-industries for the utilization of surplus perishable agricultural produce; promote housing and related activities; increase import substitution and export potential; and improve geographical project distribution. The themes underlying these objectives were labour absorption and entrenchment of Palestinians in their homes and on their land.

In all, 16 projects were summarized in the Secretary-General's report on the seminar.(78) They ranged from the establishment of a cement company in the West Bank, a ceramics factory 'in Hebron, a seaport and a sardine-canning factory in Gaza, a co-operative food-processing factory, a marketing agency for agricultural products and a training/production centre for textiles and clothing, to the development of jojoba oil products, sheep and poultry farming, housing, energy and water resources, transport co-operatives and road networks.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the report by decision 1987/173 of 8 July.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 42/190.

Living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vancouver Declaration on Human Settlements, 1976, and the relevant recommendations for national action adopted by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements,

Recalling also its resolution 40/201 of 17 December 1985,

Gravely alarmed by the continuation of the Israeli settlement policies, which have been declared null and void and a major obstacle to peace,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories;

2. Takes note also of the statement made on 27 October 1987 by the observer of the Palestine Liberation Organization;

3. Rejects the Israeli plans and actions intended to change the demographic composition of the occupied Palestinian territories, particularly the increase and expansion of the Israeli settlements, and other plans and actions creating conditions leading to the displacement and exodus of Palestinians from the occupied Palestinian territories;

4. Expresses its alarm at the deterioration, as a result of the Israeli occupation, in the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967;

5. Affirms that the Israeli occupation is contradictory to the basic requirements for the social and economic development of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare an in-depth study on future needs in the field of infrastructure for the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote against.

Israel said the proposal for an in-depth study on the needs of Palestinians was yet another attempt to use the United Nations and its resources for services that were neither necessary nor appropriate; UNCTAD, through its Special Economic Unit (Palestinian people), was already dealing with the territories' economic development and preparing the necessary reports, and UNEP had also been asked to do a study. The text should have urged those really wishing to be useful to provide more funds to improve the Palestinians' living conditions. The assertions that Israel had put into effect plans and had taken actions intended to change the demographic composition of the territories and that living conditions there had deteriorated were false and not supported by the Secretary-General's report referred to in the text; the Palestinian population in the territories, far from diminishing, had expanded considerably; the same was true of per capita income and educational opportunities.

The United States explained that it could not support the text because of its exaggerated tone and distortion of the true situation, an approach that neither furthered the Palestinian cause nor fostered a just and equitable solution to the Palestinians' problems.

Denmark, speaking for the 12 EEC members, expressed their understanding that the study requested in paragraph 6 would bear on infrastructure for basic living conditions and take account of other studies provided for in other related resolutions and decisions.

The Syrian Arab Republic would have preferred the inclusion of a clear and forceful condemnation—not the simple rejection in paragraph 3—of the practices and actions intended to change the territories' demographic character. Iran stressed that it did not recognize the existence of the illegitimate occupying regime in Palestine and that the occupied territories were not limited to those occupied since 1967 but extended to the entire Palestine territory.

Israeli economic practices

Communications. On 26 February 1987,(79) the Syrian Arab Republic charged that Israel continued to block the export of citrus fruit from the Gaza Strip to EEC. That act threatened to create a slump in citrus production, the primary source of income in the Gaza Strip, and violated the 1949 Geneva Conventions, the United Nations Charter and resolutions, and economic rights as endorsed by the United Nations.

On 6 July,(80) Jordan charged Israel's occupation authorities with implementing a new project to gain control of ground-water resources in the occupied territories, in particular in the Bethlehem area. The plan provided for a well to be dug 1,000 metres deep in an area south-east of Bethlehem and for water to be pumped, at 18 million cubic metres a year, to the western half of Jerusalem and to Israeli settlements there. This would adversely affect the domestic water supply of Bethlehem, Beit Jala, Beit Sahur and neighbouring villages, as well as of parts of Hebron, and damage their economy.

Broached two years earlier as part of a major plan to gain control over all sources of surface and ground water in the territories, the project enjoyed the support of Israel's Ministry of Agriculture and recent approval by the Defence Minister. Official Israeli assessments indicated that 42 per cent of the water pumped out of the territories went to Israeli settlements. Wells were being dug where ground water flowed towards the Jordan Valley (east of the watershed in the occupied West Bank), in an attempt to deplete water resources there and to preserve those in areas where water flowed towards the Mediterranean Sea (west of the watershed), most of which had been under Israel's control since 1948.

Jordan said the plan violated the Hague Convention IV of 1907, the fourth Geneva Convention, the 1972 Declaration of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment⁽⁸¹⁾ and the 1982 World Charter for Nature;⁽⁸²⁾ it challenged several United Nations resolutions; and it was incompatible with the June 1987 UNEP Governing Council decision on the environmental situation in the territories (see p. 324). In view of the plan's implications and dangers, Jordan requested the Secretary-General to intervene immediately and directly to halt the project and reserved its right to request a Security Council meeting.

The Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1987 General Assembly session (New York, 5-7 October), by a final communiqué,⁽⁵²⁾ condemned Israel's exploitation of the natural resources and wealth of the territories and called on all States and international bodies to refrain from co-operating with Israel.

The EC heads of State and Government, by a declaration adopted at their meeting in the European Council (Copenhagen, 4 and 5 December),⁽⁸³⁾ reiterated their preoccupation about the living conditions in the territories. They declared that, without prejudging future political solutions, they would continue to contribute to the territories' economic and social development.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽⁸⁴⁾ the Secretary-General, in June 1987,⁽⁸⁵⁾ presented to the Economic and Social Council the conclusions and recommendations of an in-depth study of the financial sector in the occupied territories, completed by the Special Economic Unit (Palestinian people) of UNCTAD, in collaboration with ESCWA.⁽⁸⁶⁾ The study provided an overview of the territories' economy, analysing the recent performance of the main aggregates and sectoral developments; examined the various aspects of money and banking and their role in the financing of economic activities in the territories; analysed the fiscal determinants in the Palestinian economy, with emphasis on the role of the tax system; analysed external financial flows to the territories, focusing on remittances and private and official transfers; and summarized its findings and conclusions and examined feasible ways of meeting the rapidly growing financial resource needs of the Palestinian economy.

The study found the relative share of the traditional sector in domestic output in rapid decline, a virtually stagnant industrial sector and a labour force increasingly dependent on employment opportunities in Israel and elsewhere in the world. The closure of banks and other financial institutions following the 1967 occupation had deprived those and other sectors of the economy of short- and long-term sources of finance for output expansion. In trade, the territories had been transformed gradually into the largest single importer of Israeli (non-military) products with a growing balance-of-trade deficit that could only be met from workers' remittances and transfers from abroad.

The inability of domestic output to meet rising demand and the growing imports from Israel, coupled with the use of a depreciating Israeli currency as legal tender in the territories, had resulted in high price levels; domestic contribution to savings had declined as had gross capital formation; existing financial institutions were unable to absorb some liquidity injected from abroad; and investments in the economy were mainly in buildings and construction works as a hedge against rising inflation. Continued political and economic instability, lack of investment opportunities in commodity-producing sectors, and Israeli land confiscation practices had further pushed private savings into speculative activities.

In general, the economy of the territories was characterized by a high degree of fragmentation, reflecting an increasing distortion in the structure of output and income, a widening gap between domestic and national output, and a high degree of openness that rendered it vulnerable to outside economic and political forces. The lack of appropriate institutions to safeguard the interest of the local economy through various policy instruments had further compounded the problems of indigenous economic management and had led to increasing subservience of the local economy to the economy of the occupying authorities.

The study concluded that bold policy measures were needed to reverse the current state of affairs and should include initiating a policy of economic recovery and development, accelerating capital accumulation to increase agricultural and industrial productive capacity, providing incentives to local and foreign investors, easing restrictions and licensing procedures in connection with production and marketing, promoting equitable trade relations with Israel to take account of existing limitations on Palestinian agricultural exports to it, allowing local financial institutions to re-emerge and promoting their intermediation, and promoting the entrepreneurial spirit.

Several basic objectives were suggested to serve as a frame of reference for policy formulation: economic growth at a rate sufficient to sustain natural population increases and to raise per capita income; increased productivity in the neglected areas of agriculture and industry through import-substitution industries based on local raw materials, thereby reducing the foreign exchange gap and trade deficit; reduction of prices of essential commodities; employment opportunities to absorb natural increases in the labour force and migrant workers employed in Israel and elsewhere; greater expenditures for basic infrastructure and financial institutions to mobilize, allocate and manage domestic resources; and establishment of requisite institutional capabilities within public administration for the effective formulation and implementation of economic and social policy measures.

In its statement before the Assembly's Second Committee in October, later taken note of by the Assembly in resolution 42/190, PLO said it was unfortunate that the Secretary-General's report covered only Israel's financial practices, but hoped that a comprehensive report to include also its trade practices would be submitted in 1988. The current report nevertheless indicated that Israel had prevented the establishment of Palestinian commercial banks and credit institutions, while its banks operated freely in the territories and mobilized Palestinian savings for the benefit of Israel's economy; moreover, Palestinian firms were required to convert export revenue into the constantly depreciating Israeli currency, and Palestinians were forced to pay taxes that went directly to Israel's treasury and from which they did not benefit.

UNCTAD action. On 3 August 1987, the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, by a roll-call vote of 80 to 2, with 32 abstentions, adopted a resolution (169(VII)) on the economic situation in the occupied Palestinian territories.⁽⁸⁷⁾ The Conference welcomed the creation of UNCTAD'S Special Economic Unit (Palestinian people) and the EC decision to give Palestinian goods and products preferential access to its market on the basis of a Palestinian certificate of origin. It deplored Israel's obstruction of that decision's implementation and of the establishment of a commercial seaport in the Gaza Strip that would give Palestinian goods and products direct access to external markets.

Recognizing the need for a centre to market and export Palestinian goods and products, in co-operation with PLO, the Conference asked UNCTAD to provide advice on the establishment of such a centre. It urged all States to facilitate access of Palestinian goods and products to their markets, and further urged them, United Nations bodies, and governmental and non-governmental organizations to continue assisting the Palestinians, in close co-operation with PLO, to develop their national economy, including the trade sector, free of occupation. It called for the granting to UNCTAD personnel of access to the occupied territories and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to report periodically to the Trade and Development Board and the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on implementation of the resolution.

UNEP Council action. In an 18 June 1987 decision on the environmental situation in the occupied territories,⁽⁵³⁾ the UNEP Governing Council, concerned about the practices of the Israeli authorities, deplored the confiscation of land and water resources, the establishment of settlements and the destruction of trees and plantations. It requested the Executive Director to provide, within the UNEP mandate and within available resources, assistance to the Palestinians, particularly to the municipalities, in co-operation with UNDP and PLO, in order to help them protect and improve the territories' environment; it also requested him to report to the Council in 1989 on the environmental situation in the territories and on implementation of the decision.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 July 1987, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1987/87 by roll-call vote.

Israeli economic practices in the occupied

Palestinian and other Arab territories

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly decision 40/432 of 17 December 1985, by which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the financial and trade practices of the Israeli occupation authorities in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories,

Noting that the report of the Secretary-General covers only the financial practices of the Israeli occupation authorities in the occupied Palestinian territories,

Requests the Secretary-General to implement General Assembly decision 40/432 in full and to report on its implementation to the Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/87

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Denmark, Djibouti, Egypt, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guinea, Iceland, India, Iraq, Iran, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Morocco, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, USSR, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Following the vote, the Syrian Arab Republic voiced hope that the resolution would be followed up so that the Council would have no further occasion to request the Secretary-General fully to implement the 1985 Assembly decision.⁽⁸⁴⁾

Before the vote, the United States reminded the Council of the Organization's continuing delicate budget situation, saying that an obvious way to improve the efficiency of the United Nations machinery and to save money and time was to cut down the number of identical or virtually identical items inscribed on the agenda of various bodies in the same year, or on the agenda of the same body year after year. While the Council debated permanent sovereignty over national resources in occupied Palestine and other Arab territories, its sessional committees were engaged with reports on the living conditions of the Palestinian people and assistance to the Palestinians (see p. 270); it had been so at the 1986 Assembly and Council sessions, and every year for many years before that. It was doubly unfortunate that discussions of those items were politically inspired, were devoid of serious economic content and generated reports lacking objectivity. As long as such items appeared on the agenda of every meeting that came along and the Secretariat was inundated with requests for meaningless reports, the United States would continue to decline to participate in those discussions and oppose any related resolution, and urged others to do likewise as a message to their sponsors.

Palestine refugees

In 1987, more than 2.2 million Palestine refugees were beneficiaries of the UNRWA programme of assistance. The emergency conditions under which UNRWA had to operate in Lebanon, especially in the first months of the year, posed severe challenges (see p. 285). In December, its operations were seriously affected by events in the occupied territories, especially in the West Bank and Gaza (see p. 301).

UNRWA activities and various aspects of the Palestine refugee problem were addressed by the General Assembly, which in December adopted 11 resolutions on: assistance to Palestine refugees (42/69 A) and to displaced persons (42/69 C); the Working Group on the financing of UNRWA (42/69 B); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (42/69 D); Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip (42/69 E) and the West Bank (42/69 J); ration distribution to Palestine refugees (42/69 F); refugees displaced since 1967 (42/69 G); revenues from refugee properties (42/69 H); refugee protection (42/69 I); and a proposed University of Jerusalem for Palestine refugees (42/69 K).

UN Agency for Palestine refugees

As at 30 June 1987, Palestine refugees registered with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East numbered more than 2.2 million, living in and outside camps, as follows: 278,609 in Lebanon (see p. 285); 257,989 in the Syrian Arab Republic; 845,542 in Jordan; 373,586 in the West Bank; and 445,397 in the Gaza Strip. UNRWA maintained field offices in these five areas of operation and was headquartered at Vienna.

The UNRWA programme of assistance consisted of direct relief assistance to only 5 per cent of all Palestine refugees, with the bulk devoted to educating children and furnishing advanced training (see p. 332), maintaining an effective public health care service and providing basic welfare service to a largely industrious and self-supporting refugee population.

The health programme comprised both curative and preventive medical care services, environmental (sanitation) health services in camps, and nutrition and supplementary feeding for vulnerable groups. Services were dispensed through a network of some 100 health centres/points, maternal and child health clinics, specialist and special care clinics, dental clinics, laboratories, rehabilitation centres and maternity centres. During 1987, 3,025,136 visits were made to those clinics. Under the supplementary feeding programme, through which some 18,000 pre-school children normally received a full midday meal six days a week, no less than 29,000 beneficiaries received meals, served at 94 centres. Expenditures on the health programme totalled $37.3 million for the year, against a budget of $38.9 million, representing about 20 per cent of the UNRWA regular budget.

Under the first phase of the 1987-1989 medium-term plan, 37 additional medical, dental, nursing and other support staff posts were established. Construction of a new health centre at Baqa'a camp in Jordan, funded by Canada, was completed. Two additional dental clinics each were set up in the West Bank and Gaza; dental services were reorganized and facilities and equipment were upgraded.

UNRWA expenditures for hospital bed subsidies increased due to rising hospital costs and to the increase in the number of beds to meet growing demands in the Gaza and the West Bank, including Jerusalem. Donations from Canada, Denmark and Sweden enabled UNRWA to provide essential medical equipment at subsidized hospitals. The number of bed days utilized by refugees in 34 hospitals with which UNRWA had special agreements amounted to 89,736.

Preventive medical services-epidemiology, communicable disease control, maternal and child health, school health and health education—continued to be a major component of the UNRWA primary health care programme. Increasing emphasis was being placed on development of health programmes for non-communicable disease control, mental health and health care for the elderly. Successful monitoring of children, pregnant women and nursing mothers continued to be one of the major achievements of the UNRWA primary health care programme. In all five fields of operations, the camp refugee population had already improved on the target of 50 deaths per thousand live births by the turn of the century set by WHO for developing countries. In West Bank camps, where infant mortality statistics had been closely monitored for over two decades, the rate in 1987 declined to 24 per thousand, compared to 64 per thousand 10 years earlier.

Family planning was offered on a limited basis through UNRWA clinics in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic. Under the health and family life education programme, supported by the NGO Radda Barnen International (Save the Children Federation), health education was provided for teen-age girls in their third and final year of preparatory school in Gaza. A research-intervention project carried out in co-ordination with UNICEF, WHO and Radda Barnen to assess the psychological problems of refugee children at the Jabal el-Hussein and Marka camps in Jordan had been extended for two years to October 1988.

Basic community sanitation services in 61 camp locations comprised potable water supply, sanitary waste disposal, storm water drainage, latrine facilities and control of insect and rodent vectors of disease; sanitation in several camps was being steadily improved, with community participation and continued support by municipalities, local and village councils and host Governments.

UNRWA continued to provide financial and technical support for such self-help activities as construction of drains, laying of sewers and paving of pathways. Support for such projects for the West Bank was also made available by the Arab Gulf Programme for the United Nations Development Organizations and by the Fund of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC).

The Agency's relief services consisted of a programme for special hardship cases (SHC) and a general welfare programme. In 1987, 30,549 families (4.68 per cent of the registered refugees) received SHC assistance in the form of food, clothing, blankets, small amounts of cash aid, cash grants for income-generating projects, assistance in the repair or reconstruction of shelters and preferential access to vocational and teacher training. Direct cash assistance amounting to $581,548 was provided to qualified SHC and other families in the five areas of UNRWA operations. Assistance for shelter repair and reconstruction at a cost of $603,033 was given to 826 families, and $191,097 in cash grants to assist 47 families become self-supporting.

The general welfare programme comprised casework, women's activities, adult training courses, education and training of the disabled, promotion of self-support projects and assistance to refugees in emergency situations. Total 1987 expenditure on the relief services programme amounted to $22 million, against a budget of $20.4 million, representing about 10 per cent of the UNRWA regular budget.

In Jordan, the Government was providing indoor water taps to refugee shelters from recently completed water augmentation schemes at Baqa'a, Marka, Suf, Jarash and Husn camps. In the West Bank, indoor water connection facilities were provided to all shelters at Deir Ammar camp from the Israeli regional water distribution network; part of a water augmentation scheme for Dheisheh camp also was completed. An UNRWA-subsidized municipal water supply scheme for Sbeineh camp in the Syrian Arab Republic was completed and shelters were gradually being provided with indoor taps. A joint water and sewerage scheme to provide proper shelter connections was drawn up by UNICEF for Qabr-Essit camp in Damascus.

In addition, some 4,147 young men and 671 women participated in sporting, cultural and educational activities in 47 centres. The men's youth activities centres were organized and supervised by their members with support from UNRWA and the World Alliance of Young Men's Christian Associations; those for women were organized and supervised by UNRWA.

UNRWA activities and its financial situation in 1987 were described in the Commissioner-General's reports covering the periods 1 July 1986-30 June 1987(1) and 1 July 1987-30 June 1988. (2)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 A by recorded vote.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/69 A of 3 December 1986 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the Agency should be relocated to its former site within its area of operations as soon as practicable;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 September 1988;

5. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the Agency, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

6. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the Agency is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

7. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

General Assembly resolution 42/69 A

2 December 1987 Meeting 89 153-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/42/780) by recorded vote (125-0-1), 4 November (meeting 15); draft by United States (A/SPC/42/L.6); agenda item 79.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: SPC 8-13, 15; plenary 89.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Israel.

Israel said it had been forced to abstain because the text contained an interpretation of the 1948 Assembly resolution(3) referred to in paragraph 4 that did not correspond to its own interpretation; any reference to paragraph 11 of that resolution (by which the Assembly had resolved that refugees wishing to return to their homes should be permitted to do so as soon as practicable, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of or damage to property) could only place new obstacles in the way of negotiations on a comprehensive settlement based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967)(4) and 338(1973).(5)

In resolution 42/69 H, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the Conciliation Commission, for the protection and administration of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel.

UNRWA financing

The audited financial statements of UNRWA for the year ended 31 December 1987(6) showed that the UNRWA budget for 1987 amounted to $178.8 million for the General Fund. Revised budget figures for project funds were $13.7 million for funded ongoing activities and $10 million for capital and special projects (Capital Construction Fund), giving a total of $202.5 million for the General Fund and project funds.

The General Fund budget-representing minimum resources for recurrent costs for the UNRWA core programmes (education, health, relief), including costs for staff, consumable materials, transportation, contractual services, grants and subsidies-was completely funded by October 1987, even though unexpected price increases and renegotiation of certain service contracts necessitated increasing the cash budget within the Fund from $162.2 million to $163.3 million. Ongoing non-construction projects were fully funded.

Expenditure over budget for the General Fund was due primarily to the increased valuations in United States dollars attributed by donors to their in-kind contributions. Expenditure on education services, as part of funded ongoing activities, exceeded the budget by about $900,000, the result of increased contributions and expenditure for the Ramallah training centres in the West Bank. Due mainly to insufficient contributions, UNRWA expenditures on capital and special projects (Capital Construction Fund) amounted to $3.9 million, or about 40 per cent of the budget ($10 million) for that purpose.

Because the Capital Construction Fund remained largely unfunded, much needed construction had to be postponed once again, leading to a further deterioration of the standard of UNRWA schools, clinics and other buildings. However, rising exchange rates of most European currencies registered a gain UNRWA income, thus enabling it to draw on the General Fund for a limited number of the most urgently needed construction projects.

As at 31 December 1987, over $14.8 million had been received for the Lebanon Emergency Fund, in response to UNRWA'S February appeal for $20.6 million (see p. 285). Over $8.1 million was spent during the year, leaving a balance of over $6.7 million, earmarked for the repair of refugee shelters damaged during the camp wars, if and when conditions permitted in 1988.

UNRWA ended 1987, as it did the previous year, with an excess of income over expenditure under the General Fund of $2,986,143. That, however, had to be seen in relation to the large deficits of earlier years and to the Agency's need to consolidate its financial situation by rebuilding its much depleted working capital, which totalled $25.8 million by year's end, but still was not adequate in relation to the Agency's financial requirements. The excess of income over expenditure under project funds amounting to $4,101,826 was largely due to the fact that the contributions reallocated from the General Fund during the latter half of 1987 had not been spent by year's end. The reallocations, totalling $4.2 million, were made for six construction projects, three each in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic; an allocation of $212,000 was added for the purchase of equipment for the vocational training centre in Gaza.

The operating reserves (working capital) rose from $33,420,937 in 1986 to $45,269,424 in 1987, an increase of $11,848,487. More than 40 per cent of that, however, was earmarked or obligated for special purposes and could not be used to cover core programme costs.

Budget estimates for 1988 for the General Fund amounted to $188 million, of which $172.2 million represented cash expenditure and $15.8 million expenditure in donated food commodities and services-an increase of $9.2 million, or 5.1 per cent, over the approved 1987 General Fund budget.

The 1988-1990 medium-term plan, the first multi-year plan covering all Agency activities, was revised in 1987 to review the substantive parts of the programmes and provide an up-to-date forecast of the level of financing required over the next planning period. Income projections for 1988-1990 were endorsed by a meeting of major donors and host Governments, convened by the UNRWA Commissioner-General at Vienna on 6 and 7 July 1987. The medium-term plan and 1988 budget estimates were based on the assumption that all administrative and support services would be held at the same level as 1987, but envisaged an average annual increase of 4.2 per cent in regular expenditures (those financed from the General Fund) for the requirements of a steadily increasing population, for price and salary increases and for some limited qualitative improvements in services.

The Advisory Commission of UNRWA, which urged Governments and other agencies to contribute generously over and above their support for UNRWA'S regular programme to enable UNRWA to fulfil its construction programme, also recognized the Commissioner-General's concern about the implications for UNRWA of the recommendation of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations to reduce staff by 15 per cent.(7) It hoped that a way could be found to avoid such action, which could hamper the Agency's ability to administer services to the refugees. The Commission's appeal and views were transmitted to the Commissioner-General in a 27 August 1987 letter by the Commission Chairman.

Working Group on UNRWA financing

The Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA held three meetings in 1987, on 11 September and on 2 and 9 October.

In its report to the General Assembly,(8) the Group noted that UNRWA had managed a small excess of income over expenditure in 1986, enabling it to begin restoring its much depleted working capital (operating reserves). It also noted that the level of contributions was being maintained in 1987, but regretted that special contribution pledges for the construction programme had not been sufficient. The Group shared the Commissioner-General's concerns about the continued postponement of construction work and the effects of deteriorating facilities on UNRWA services, welcomed his initiative in presenting that problem to the July meeting of major donors and host Governments, and expressed readiness to support him in the matter.

Despite the relatively favourable financial situation in 1986 and 1987, the Group believed that there was no room for complacency; efforts to involve donor Governments more closely with UNRWA must be intensified to take care of the natural increase in refugee population. Moreover, as pointed out to the Group, factors beyond the Agency's control, such as fluctuations in currency exchange rates and inflation, as reflected in the salaries paid to comparable government employees of the host countries, could seriously affect the Agency's financial situation.

The Group drew to the attention of all Governments the need for additional financial support in 1988, urging them either to start contributing or to increase their contributions and to do so as early in the calendar year as possible.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 B without vote.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2964(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3090(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3330(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 D (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 C of 23 November 1976, 32/90 D of 13 December 1977, 33/112 D of 18 December 1978, 34/52 D of 23 November 1979, 35/13 D of 3 November 1980, 36/146 E of 16 December 1981, 37/120 A of 16 December 1982, 38/83 B of 15 December 1983, 39/99 B of 14 December 1984, 40/165 B of 16 December 1985 and 41/69 B of 3 December 1986,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, whereby it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and adopted the recommendations contained therein,

Having considered the report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987,

Deeply concerned at the critical financial situation of the Agency, which permits the provision of only minimum services to the Palestine refugees,

Emphasizing the continuing need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at their present minimum level, the activities of the Agency, as well as to enable the Agency to carry out essential construction,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the Agency's financial security;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Accounts for 1986

Following the audit of the UNRWA financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1986, the Board of Auditors made several recommendations,⁽⁹⁾ summarized also in a July 1987 note by the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁰⁾ They included the need for presentation of a consolidated statement of assets and liabilities covering both the General Fund and project funds, proper accountability and reporting of contributions in kind (school contributions and proceeds from canteen rentals), disclosure of inventory supplies, and tightening control over imprest funds. ACABQ, in taking note of the Board's report in September,⁽¹¹⁾ trusted that the various situations raised by the audit would be resolved expeditiously.

The General Assembly, by resolution 42/206, accepted the financial report and audited financial statements of UNRWA and the Board's audit opinion and report on them, and requested that the executive head concerned be required to take immediate steps to correct the situations that gave rise to the qualification of the audit opinion.

Claims for compensation

In 1987, UNRWA reported⁽¹⁾ that, despite its efforts, no progress had been made towards a settlement of its various claims against the Governments of: Israel (for loss and damage caused to UNRWA property during the 1967 Middle East hostilities, Israel's invasion of Lebanon in 1982 and its military action before then); Jordan (arising out of the 1967 hostilities and the disturbances of 1970 and 1971); and the Syrian Arab Republic (relating mainly to the levy of certain taxes from which UNRWA believed it was exempt under existing agreements). Those claims had been reported in 1986.(12)

In resolution 42/69 I, the General Assembly called again on Israel to compensate UNRWA for damage to its property and facilities resulting from its invasion of Lebanon, without prejudice to Israel's responsibility for all damages resulting from that invasion.

Legal matters

The number of UNRWA staff arrested and detained without charge or trial did not increase during the 1986/87 reporting period.(1) In Lebanon, however, there had been a considerable increase in the number kidnapped: arrested or detained and later released without charge or trial—52 (49 who had been kidnapped by militias and 3 understood as having been detained by the Syrian forces in Lebanon); still in detention without charge—8 (4 kidnapped by militias and 4 understood to be detained by the Syrian forces in Lebanon). UNRWA remained unable to obtain adequate and timely information on the reasons for the arrests and detentions; in the absence of such information, it could neither ascertain whether the staff members' official functions were involved nor ensure that their rights and duties flowing from the United Nations Charter, the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations(13) and the pertinent Staff Regulations and Rules of UNRWA were duly observed.

The Agency's rights, privileges and immunities, and ability to discharge its functions effectively were affected by various developments, in particular violations of its premises, since the uprising began in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in December 1987 (see p. 301). The Agency encountered increasing difficulties in its operations there as a result of procedural changes for the movement of its staff and their effects; three were being prevented from entering the occupied territories on duty travel and some had been denied entry despite possession of entry permits. Staff had also been subjected to substantial delays even when their papers were in order and had been prevented from using the UNRWA courier car to and from the West Bank terminal.

Other aspects

Displaced persons

Humanitarian assistance

In 1987, in addition to providing relief in the form of basic food commodities, blankets, clothing, shelter repair and cash grants, UNRWA continued to provide a small measure of humanitarian assistance to persons who had been displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities in the Middle East but who were not registered with UNRWA as refugees. Since talks between Egypt and Israel had not resolved the problem of refugees stranded in the Sinai peninsula since Israel's withdrawal in 1982,(14) UNRWA continued to provide essential services to 789 families there. In the West Bank, various commodities purchased by or donated to UNRWA were distributed to registered refugees and non-refugees alike; during the 1987/88 reporting period,(2) an average of 4,700 non-refugees benefited monthly from such distributions. In Lebanon, emergency assistance was extended to all Palestine refugees, including those not registered with the Agency (see p.285).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 C without vote.

Assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/69 C of 3 December 1986 and all previous resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987,

Concerned about the continued human suffering resulting from the hostilities in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 41/69 C and all its previous resolutions on the question;

2. Endorses, bearing in mind the objectives of those resolutions, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who are at present displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

3. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Repatriation of refugees

In August 1987,(15) the Secretary-General reported on the 8 July reply of Israel to the 1986 General Assembly call on it to take immediate steps for the return of all inhabitants displaced since 1967 and to desist from all measures obstructing the return of such inhabitants.⁽¹⁶⁾ Israel stated that its position on the matter had been fully set out in successive annual replies, the latest having been the subject of a 1986 report by the Secretary-General;⁽¹⁷⁾ as a result of its continued effort to review individual cases of resettlement based on the merits of each case, approximately 73,000 persons had already returned to the administered territories.

The Secretary-General reported at the same time on information from UNRWA on the return of refugees registered with it. Since UNRWA was not involved in arrangements for the return of either refugees or displaced persons not registered as refugees, its information was based on requests by returning registered refugees for the transfer of their service entitlements to their areas of return; UNRWA was not necessarily aware of the return of registered refugees who had not made such requests. Agency records indicated that, between 1 July 1986 and 30 June 1987, 175 registered refugees had returned to the West Bank and 23 to the Gaza Strip. Some of these might not have been displaced in 1967 but might be family members of a displaced registered refugee whom they had accompanied on return or later joined. Displaced refugees known by UNRWA to have returned to the occupied territories since June 1967 numbered about 11,100. It was unable to estimate the total number of displaced inhabitants who had returned, as it kept records only of registered refugees, and even those records, particularly with respect to the location of registered refugees, might be incomplete.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December 1987, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 G by recorded vote.

Population and refugees displaced since 1967

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2452 A (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2535 B (XXIV) of 10 December 1969, 2672 D (XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2792 E (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C and D (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 D of 23 November 1976, 32/90 E of 13 December 1977, 33/112 F of 18 December 1978, 34/52 E of 23 November 1979, ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 35/13 E of 3 November 1980, 36/146 B of 16 December 1981, 37/120 G of 16 December 1982, 38/83 G of 15 December 1983, 39/99 G of 14 December 1984, 40/165 G of 16 December 1985 and 41/69 G of 3 December 1986,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987, and the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and declares once more that any attempt to restrict, or to attach conditions to, the free exercise of the right to return by any displaced person is inconsistent with that inalienable right and inadmissible;

2. Considers any and all agreements embodying any restriction on, or condition for, the return of the displaced inhabitants as null and void;

3. Strongly deplores the continued refusal of the Israeli authorities to take steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants;

4. Calls once more upon Israel:

(a) To take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants;

(b) To desist from all measures that obstruct the return of the displaced inhabitants, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-third session, on Israel's compliance with paragraph 4 above.

Israel said the destructive hostility evident in paragraph 2 endangered the Middle East peace process. In Sweden's view, the wording of the text seemed to rule out the possibility of negotiations or discussions on the modalities of repatriation.

Iran stressed that its affirmative vote did not mean that it recognized the Zionist occupation of territories prior to 1967; not only the territories occupied since then but all of Palestine must be liberated.

Food aid

The General Assembly, in December 1987, again called for the resumption of the general distribution of basic food rations to Palestine refugees, which had been suspended in September 1982,(18) except in Lebanon, where it had ceased in March 1984.(19)

The Secretary-General reported in August(20) that response had not been forthcoming to the 1986 Assembly call(21) for generous contributions to meet the needs of UNRWA, particularly in the light of the interruption of its general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields. The annual cost of reinstating the basic ration for 1,730,000 refugees would be $68.3 million, including $6.25 million in cash. Since the required additional resources had not been at UNRWA'S disposal in 1987, it had not been possible to consider resuming the ration distribution; whatever income was available to UNRWA had had to be used to maintain its education, health and welfare programmes at the 1986 level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 F by recorded vote.

Resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 F of 16 December 1981, 37/120 F of 16 December 1982, 38/83 F of 15 December 1983, 39/99 F of 14 December 1984, 40/165 F of 16 December 1985 and 41/69 F of 3 December 1986 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 302(IV) of 8 December 1949,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987, and the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned at the interruption by the Agency, owing to financial difficulties, of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields,

1. Regrets that its resolutions 37/120 F, 38/83 F, 39/99 F, 40/165 F and 41/69 F have not been implemented;

2. Calls once again upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible and to offer the necessary resources to meet the needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the interruption by the Agency of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

3. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to resume on a continuing basis the interrupted general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

The United States supported efforts to use UNRWA'S scarce resources most efficiently and respected the Commissioner-General's judgements concerning the ration distribution system and its relative value as compared to other priority programmes. Without sufficient financial resources, Sweden stated, the resumption of the ration distribution would endanger the vital educational, health care and basic welfare programmes, which must be given the highest priority; it cast a negative vote, since the request to resume distribution was again formulated in such a categorical way as to leave no room for the Commissioner-General to exercise his discretion and maintain priorities.

Education and training services

Schools and teacher training centres

The UNRWA education programme provided nine grades of general education, vocational and technical training, in-service teacher training and some higher education for Palestine refugees in conformity with their educational needs, identity and cultural heritage. The curricula followed in the five areas of operations were those prescribed by the host countries-Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic-and, in the case of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, by Jordan and Egypt, respectively.

In 1987, expenditures on the education programme amounted to $108.7 million, against a budget of $111.3 million, representing about 55 per cent of the total UNRWA regular budget.

During the year, 348,639 refugee children were enrolled in the 635 UNRWA elementary and preparatory schools served by 9,991 teachers. An additional 56,692 pupils attended government and private schools. Vocational, technical and pre-service teacher training was provided to 4,223 trainees by 416 instructors at seven training centres. During the 1986-87 academic year, there were 1,000 pre-service teacher trainees at three training centres, 773 in-service teacher trainees and 385 university scholarship holders.

Schools and training centres in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic operated normally throughout the year. In the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, despite widespread disturbances in the early months of 1987, individual schools were interrupted for only relatively short periods and it was possible to make up for lost time by teaching additional periods. In the first three months of the 1987/88 academic year starting in September 1987, the centres operated with only minor interruptions; since the start of the uprising in early December, however, instruction courses were suspended, and, on 22 December, the Ramallah training centres were ordered closed for a month. The situation in Lebanon seriously affected school operations, as well as the training centre there (see p. 286).

In all areas except Lebanon, where no comparison could be made, students at UNRWA schools performed as well as or better than those in government schools in the State examination.

UNRWA continued to provide education and training for 210 disabled children in specialized institutions; of those, 106 attended the UNRWA-operated training centre for the blind in Gaza, funded largely by the Pontifical Mission for Palestine and by NGOs. The centre played an important role in the Gaza Strip in providing education and training for blind children. In Jordan, day care centres for the mentally disabled at Suf, Jerash and Husn camps, administered jointly by UNRWA and OXFAM (United Kingdom) or the Mennonite Central Committee (United States), found strong community support.

The Agency received earmarked contributions in support of its training programmes. Denmark maintained its support for the two training centres at Ramallah, and the Federal Republic of Germany and Italy continued supporting the Wadi Seer (Jordan) and Gaza training centres, respectively. Apart from providing scholarships for 15 UNRWA vocational training instructors, Japan provided experts and equipment for the Wadi Seer centre. OPEC contributed an additional $546,000 during the 1986/87 year to enable UNRWA to buy equipment and tools needed for new courses and to re-equip existing courses in all training centres, except the Siblin Training Centre in Lebanon. EC provided funds for the introduction of two new courses at the Gaza Training Centre.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

As requested by the General Assembly in 1986(22) the Secretary-General reported in June 1987(23) on the establishment of a university for Palestine refugees at Jerusalem. The proposed university, first considered by the Assembly in 1980,(24) had since been the subject of annual reports by the Secretary-General with regard to measures taken towards its establishment, including a functional feasibility study. To assist in the study's preparation, the Rector of the United Nations University had made available the services of an expert, Federico Mayor (Spain).

The Secretary-General had addressed a note verbale to Israel on 11 February 1987, stating that the expert, to carry out his task, would have to meet with the competent Israeli officials in the area, bearing in mind that Israel exercised effective authority there. The Secretary-General indicated his awareness of the questions raised by Israel and its position on the matter, which could best be addressed during the expert's visit. In view of the 1986 Assembly resolution(22) and bearing in mind his reporting obligations, the Secretary-General requested Israel to facilitate the visit at a mutually convenient date.

Replying on 22 April, Israel referred to its previous statements,(25) saying that the sponsors of the annual resolution on the proposal were exploiting higher education to politicize extraneous issues. It pointed out that the higher academic institutions in Judaea and Samaria were successfully meeting all the requirements of the inhabitants there, while improving their education standards, and that Israel had enabled the establishment of five universities, colleges and teacher training schools currently attended by more than 15,000 students. Israel could not assist in taking the matter further until it received the clarifications it required. These related to standards of eligibility for admission, the earmarking of significant amounts of limited United Nations resources for a specific group of refugees, the compatibility of such a separate institution with policies aimed at rehabilitating refugees through their integration into the general population, and how such a university could operate in the light of the principles of the Charter and of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and within the framework of local legislation relating to higher education.

The Secretary-General stated that, in view of Israel's position, it had not been possible to complete the feasibility study.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 K by recorded vote.

University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 G of 16 December 1981, 37/120 C of 16 December 1982, 38/83 K of 15 December 1983, 39/99 K of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D and K of 16 December 1985 and 41/69 K of 3 December 1986,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987,

1. Emphasizes the need for strengthening the educational system in the Arab territories occupied since 5 June 1967, including Jerusalem, and specifically the need for the establishment of the proposed university;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary measures for establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds", in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, giving due consideration to the recommendations consistent with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon Israel, the occupying Power, to co-operate in the implementation of the present resolution and to remove the hindrances that it has put in the way of establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds";

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Israel, United States.

Israel remarked that the text represented a case of special pleading, since it claimed special rights and privileges for one group of refugees-the Palestinian Arabs-who were among the most advanced in the Middle East in the field of education; the idea of setting up a university at Jerusalem exclusively for Palestinian Arab refugees did not meet the real needs for education. The United States deemed the text's approach unreasonable and impractical for meeting the educational needs of the Palestine refugees.

Scholarships

The Secretary-General reported in August 1987(26) on responses to the 1986 General Assembly appeal(27) for special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee. He also reported on further action in response to similar appeals made yearly since 1977.(28)

In 1987, United Nations agencies responding to that appeal included IMO, which enrolled 29 Palestinians in the Arab Maritime Transport Academy (Sharjah, United Arab Emirates) in a variety of training courses. WHO awarded eight regional and international fellowships to Palestine refugee health staff of UNRWA under a post-graduate training programme designed to develop the technical and managerial skills of the Agency's Department of Health and to meet future replacement needs under various health disciplines.

UNESCO awarded five fellowships as part of its long-standing agreement with UNRWA. Outside that framework, it allocated $140,000 to provide, during the 1986/87 academic year, fellowships to students and teaching staff in the occupied territories. In addition, in 1987 UNESCO set up a fund-in-trust (Special Account) made up of voluntary contributions, for the establishment of a Scholarship Fund for the Higher Education of Students of the Occupied Arab Territories, with a target budget of $2.5 million to finance 50 scholarships a year; as of October, pledges had been received from the Islamic Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Arab Organization for Industrial Development.(29) At their 1987 sessions, the UNESCO Executive Board and General Conference, by a decision and resolution, respectively, on educational and cultural institutions in the occupied territories (see p. 315), invited the Director-General to renew his appeal to States, organizations, foundations and individuals for contributions to the Account.

Among Member States responding to the Assembly's appeals, Japan provided scholarships for a further 15 UNRWA vocational training instructors to receive special training in Japan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 D by recorded vote.

Offers by Member States of grants and scholarships for higher education, including vocational training, for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 212(III) of 19 November 1948 on assistance to Palestine refugees,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, 36/146 H of 16 December 1981, 37/120 D of 16 December 1982, 38/83 D of 15 December 1983, 39/99 D of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D of 16 December 1985 and 41/69 D of 3 December 1986,

Cognizant of the fact that the Palestine refugees have, for the last three decades, lost their lands and means of livelihood,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987,

1. Urges all States to respond to the appeal contained in General Assembly resolution 32/90 F of 13 December 1977 and reiterated in subsequent relevant resolutions in a manner commensurate with the needs of Palestine refugees for higher education, including vocational training;

2. Strongly appeals to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to augment the special allocations for grants and scholarships to Palestine refugees in addition to their contributions to the regular budget of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations that responded favourably to General Assembly resolution 41/69 D;

4. Invites the relevant specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue, within their respective spheres of competence, to extend assistance for higher education to Palestine refugee students;

5. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and the United Nations University to contribute generously to the Palestinian universities in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including, in due course, the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees;

6. Also appeals to all States, specialized agencies and other international bodies to contribute towards the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees;

Against: None.

Abstaining: Israel.

Israel said certain of the resolution's formulations showed that its true purpose was not the promotion of education, but rather an unrelenting propaganda campaign against Israel. The United States did not support that part of the resolution dealing with the establishment of a university at Jerusalem.

Iran stressed that its vote for this and other resolutions on the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 did not mean that it recognized the Zionist occupation of territories prior to that date.

Property rights

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported in August 1987(30) on revenues derived from Palestine refugee properties, as requested by a 1986 General Assembly resolution.(31) He had transmitted the resolution to Israel, with a request for information on its implementation. He had also drawn to the attention of all other Member States the Assembly's call for pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel; none had replied at the time of reporting.

Israel advised on 8 July that its position on the resolution had been set out in statements to the Special Political Committee and in a 1986 report by the Secretary-General.⁽³²⁾ There was no legal basis for taking the steps proposed, as property rights within the borders of a sovereign State were exclusively subject to that State's domestic laws; the right of States to regulate and dispose of property within their territory (and of the income from that property) was a generally accepted principle. Significantly, the resolution's sponsors had not suggested that similar steps be taken regarding confiscated Jewish property in Arab countries. As a result of the 1948 war, approximately 800,000 Jewish refugees from Arab countries were resettled in Israel; the property they had left behind, estimated to be worth billions of dollars, was expropriated by the Arab countries in which they had lived. There could be no difference in law, justice or equity between the claims of Arab and Jewish property owners, Israel asserted.

Report of the Conciliation Commission. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its report covering the period 1 September 1986 to 31 August 1987,⁽³³⁾ stated that the circumstances that had limited its possibilities of action regarding compensation for Palestine refugee properties remained unchanged. The Commission continued to hope, however, that the situation and related circumstances in the region would improve, thus enabling it to carry forward its work in accordance with the 1948 resolution setting forth its mandate.⁽³⁾

Referring to prospects for implementing paragraph 11 of that resolution, by which the Assembly resolved that the refugees wishing to return to their homes should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of damage to property, the Commission noted that examination of various ways in which it might be possible to intensify its efforts towards that end had compelled the conclusion that all the ways envisaged presupposed substantial changes in the situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 H by recorded vote.

Revenues derived from Palestine refugee properties
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/13 A to F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981, 37/120 H of 16 December 1982, 38/83 H of 15 December 1983, 39/99 H of 14 December 1984, 40/165 H of 16 December 1985, 41/69 H of 3 December 1986 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, covering the period from 1 September 1986 to 31 August 1987,

Considering that the Palestine Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived therefrom, in conformity with the principles of justice and equity,

Recalling in particular its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestine Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in its twenty-second progress report, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, for the protection and administration of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for the receipt of income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners;

2. Calls once more upon Israel to render all facilities and assistance to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Calls upon the Governments of all the other Member States concerned to provide the Secretary-General with any pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel, which would assist the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Deplores Israel's refusal to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the implementation of the resolutions on the question;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israel said the text illustrated once again the abusive manner in which the Assembly was being used for an Arab political campaign against Israel; a rational examination would show that there was no logical or legal basis for the measures contained in the text. Neither the Charter nor any other instrument empowered the United Nations to intervene in the regulation of property rights in a Member State. For many years, Israel had managed with due respect for legality the derelict lands in order to bring them into productive use; it had spent vast sums on that endeavour without deriving financial profit from it. As for the income from property, reference was usually made to purely imaginary and astronomical figures. In the view of the United States, repatriation and compensation issues should be settled through direct negotiations between the parties. It was Sweden's opinion that property claims should be dealt with not in isolation but in the context of a comprehensive Middle East settlement.

In resolution 42/69 A, the Assembly noted with regret that the Conciliation Commission had been unable to achieve progress in implementing paragraph 11 of the 1948 Assembly resolution;(3) it requested the Commission to exert continued efforts towards implementing that paragraph and to report to it no later than 1 September 1988.

Refugee protection

The Secretary-General reported in August 1987(34) on implementation of a 1986 General Assembly resolution(35) holding Israel responsible for the security of the Palestine refugees in the occupied territories and calling on it to compensate UNRWA for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from Israel's invasion of Lebanon.

The Secretary-General stated that Israel, replying to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to comply with the resolution, said on 8 July 1987 that its position had been fully set out in previous statements to the Special Political Committee and in a 1986 report by the Secretary-General.(36) The resolution clearly demonstrated the hypocrisy of its sponsors, Israel stated. Despite its withdrawal from Lebanon in 1985, it was still being blamed for the "continuous suffering of Palestinians" in Lebanon and for Arab persecution of Palestine refugees. In the past two years, Syrian and Lebanese forces had killed roughly 5,000 Palestinians and wounded over 10,000 in refugee camps in Lebanon; likewise, Palestinian refugee camps in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic were the scenes of untold death, destruction and misery. The sponsors had chosen to omit those facts from the resolution. No similar attacks or anything remotely resembling them had ever taken place among any of the refugee camps in Israeli-administered territories, yet the sponsors chose to single out Israel for imaginary maltreatment of Palestinian refugees and for not providing security for them—charges as preposterous as the resolution itself.

In previous reports on the subject, the Secretary-General had referred to the constraints he had faced in undertaking the measures requested of him by the Assembly. Nevertheless, the UNRWA Commissioner-General, as the senior United Nations official responsible for providing services to the Palestine refugees, continued his efforts, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to do all that was feasible to contribute to the refugees' safety and security. His efforts in regard to Palestine refugees in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip were described in his annual report to the Assembly. (I)

Following the withdrawal of Israel's forces from the Saida and Tyre areas in February and April 1985, respectively, there was nothing further to state regarding the Palestine refugees in Lebanon in the context of the current report, the Secretary-General said. He also noted that there had been no progress on the claim against Israel by UNRWA concerning damage to its property and facilities resulting from Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 I by recorded vote.

Protection of Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 512(1982) of 19 June 1982, 513(1982) of 4 July 1982, 515(1982) of 29 July 1982, 517(1982) of 4 August 1982, 518(1982) of 12 August 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, and 523(1982) of 18 October 1982,

Recalling its resolutions ES-7/5 of 26 June 1982, ES-7/6 and ES-7/8 of 19 August 1982, ES-7/9 of 24 September 1982, 37/120 J of 16 December 1982, 38/83 I of 15 December 1983, 39/99 I of 14 December 1984, 40/165 I of 16 December 1985 and 41/69 I of 3 December 1986,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987,

Referring to the humanitarian principles of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to the obligations arising from the regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907,

Deeply concerned at the marked deterioration in the security situation experienced by the Palestine refugees as stated by the Commissioner-General in his report,

Deeply distressed at the continuous suffering of the Palestinians resulting from the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and its consequences,

Deeply distressed at the tragic situation of the civilian population in and around the Palestine refugee camps in Lebanon resulting from the fighting,

Recognizing the efforts of the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General to promote a co-ordinated programme of assistance for Lebanon by the other United Nations agencies, as reflected in paragraph 15 of the Commissioner-General's report,

Reaffirming its support for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Lebanon, within its internationally recognized boundaries,

1. Holds Israel responsible for the security of the Palestine refugees in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and calls upon it to fulfil its obligations as the occupying Power in this regard, in accordance with the pertinent provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

2. Urges the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to undertake effective measures to guarantee the safety and security and the legal and human rights of the Palestine refugees in all the territories under Israeli occupation in 1967 and thereafter;

3. Calls once again upon Israel, the occupying Power, to release forthwith all detained Palestine refugees, including the employees of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

4. Urges the Commissioner-General, in consultation with the Government of Lebanon, to provide housing to the Palestine refugees whose houses were demolished or razed by the Israeli forces;

5. Requests the Commissioner-General, in consultation with the Government of Lebanon, to provide emergency housing repairs for the shelters and Agency installations that have been partly damaged or destroyed in the fighting;

6. Calls once again upon Israel to compensate the Agency for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, without prejudice to Israel's responsibility for all damages resulting from that invasion;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-third session, on the implementation of the present resolution.

The United States said the text contained an unacceptable and one-sided condemnation of Israel, which would complicate and intensify UNRWA'S real problems. It noted that, as the United Nations Legal Counsel had pointed out in 1982 during consideration of a similar draft resolution,(37) a text calling on the Secretary-General to guarantee the safety, security and rights of the refugees in the occupied territories raised practical and legal problems owing to possible jurisdictional conflicts.

Denmark, speaking for the 12 EC members, said the text did not reflect in a balanced way the situation of the Palestine refugees in Lebanon, whose suffering resulted from a complex reality and could not be attributed to a single factor. As to paragraph 2, EC deemed that the Secretary-General should not be entrusted with guaranteeing the refugees' safety; moreover, the responsibility of Israel, as the occupying Power, vis-à-vis the civilian population must not be called into question. Noting that the financing of the UNRWA construction programme remained insufficient despite an improvement during the previous fiscal year, EC wondered whether it was advisable to set unrealistic tasks for the Commissioner-General.

Finland and Sweden likewise felt that it was not the Secretary-General's responsibility to guarantee the refugees' security in circumstances where he had no means to do so; also, the language of paragraph 3 was indefinite and too sweeping. Finland added that its understanding of paragraph 6 was that the damages mentioned would be specified in the claim that UNRWA would present to Israel.

In Canada's view, the text contained passages whose scope was too general, such as paragraph 3, calling for the release of detainees regardless of the reasons for their detention. Austria believed that that paragraph in particular could have been improved by inserting the phrase "detained for political reasons".

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

The Secretary-General reported in August 1987(38) on Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip, in accordance with a 1986 General Assembly resolution.(39) In reply to his January 1987 request for information on the resolution's implementation, Israel stated on 8 July that its position had been set out in successive annual replies, most recently in 1986.(40) The resolution was distorted, unbalanced and inaccurate, and intentionally ignored the improved living conditions in the Gaza District since 1967; it made no mention of the 120 per cent increase in the number of pupils attending school, the 25 per cent drop in the illiteracy rate, the extensive development of medical care and the improvement of environmental services, including water supply, and sewage and refuse disposal. Moreover, since 1967 community development projects initiated by Israel in the Gaza District had enabled over 10,000 families to leave refugee camps and relocate to new residential areas; those projects, part of the voluntary refugee rehabilitation programme, were becoming increasingly popular because they materially improved the refugees' living conditions; Israel's positive role in initiating those housing projects had been recognized by the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General in 1985.(41)

The Secretary-General stated that, based on information provided by the Commissioner-General for the 1986/87 reporting period, Israel had demolished 12 shelter rooms, affecting four refugee families (comprising 23 persons), as follows: on 8 July 1986—two privately built shelter rooms at Khan Yunis camp, occupied by one refugee family (10 persons), on the grounds that the construction contravened building regulations; on 11 February 1987—two Agency shelter rooms at Rafah camp and eight private rooms at Tel-es-Sultan, as a punitive action.

UNRWA followed up with the Israeli authorities the matter of rehousing refugees who remained affected by the 1971 demolitions.(42) Of 87 families previously categorized as living in hardship conditions, 14 continued to live in hardship, 18 remained inadequately housed, 37 were satisfactorily housed and 18 had previously purchased houses in Israeli-sponsored projects. The authorities continued to assure UNRWA that a solution to the situation of the 14 families living in hardship had been developed and would be implemented as soon as possible.

The Secretary-General stated that the Commissioner-General had received updated information relating to the demolition of refugee shelters on the grounds that they had been built without proper authority on State land outside camp boundaries. Regarding the group of families living on the northern perimeter of Jabalia camp(41) who had been told to remove some of their shelter extensions and against whom the High Court of Israel had ruled on the matter, their shelters had so far not been demolished but had been isolated by the bulldozing of sand around them. Of the 35 families whose shelters on the perimeter of Beach camp had been demolished in 1983,(43) 15 had received plots of land at Sheikh Radwan or the Beit Lahiya housing projects, 3 had left the Beach camp area, 1 had bought land outside the projects, 1 had moved in with relatives, and 15 were living in self-built temporary shelters on or near the Beach camp perimeter. Israel had stated its willingness to consider allocating land in a housing project for those not yet rehoused, although not at Sheikh Radwan, the nearest project. As to the status of the refugee families at Rafah camp who had agreed to relocate to the Tel-es-Sultan housing project,(40) the Secretary-General reported that, as at 30 June 1987, most of them had been allocated plots of land; pending construction, however, they remained in their shelters, currently isolated by the bulldozing of sand around them.

In addition, 20 plots of land in housing projects had been allocated by the authorities; 301 refugee families (1,854 persons) moved to 174 plots of land in housing projects, having accepted demolition of their camp shelters as a pre-condition. Another five families (33 persons) moved to five plots of land after handing over their shelters to the authorities, which were then made available to three other families, of whom two had to demolish their original shelters before moving. Among refugee families living outside the camps, 14 families (101 persons) moved to 14 plots of land and another five (36 persons) moved to five completed housing units consisting of 15 rooms; in addition, seven families (45 persons) moved prior to demolition of their shelters to seven completed housing units consisting of 22 rooms. In all, 519 shelter rooms were demolished during the reporting period, of which 260 had been built by UNRWA, 12 with UNRWA assistance and 247 without such assistance.

The Secretary-General said that, with a few exceptions, the figures were indicative of the continuing practice of requiring refugee families to demolish their shelters as a pre-condition of moving to new housing. UNRWA had objected to the practice, not only because of practical complications in cases of extended families sharing the same shelter where not everyone wanted to move, but also because of the overcrowded conditions and urgent need for accommodations. The Commissioner-General had taken the matter up with the Civil Administrator of the Gaza Strip in June 1987 and asked for a review and relaxation of the policy in that regard.

To date, Israel had allocated approximately 3,734 plots of land in the Gaza Strip for housing projects. A total of 2,496 plots had been built on by 3,507 refugee families (21,670 persons); buildings on 201 plots were under construction, 910 were still vacant and 127 had been built on by non-refugees. In addition, 2,927 families (18,052 persons) had moved into 2,661 completed housing units, consisting of 5,874 rooms.

Refugee families continued to purchase plots at subsidized rates to construct houses in projects developed by Israel in the Beit Lahiya, Nazleh and Tel-es-Sultan areas. The construction of Israeli-sponsored multi-storey apartment blocks at Sheikh Radwan, offered for sale upon completion, continued.

Speaking before the General Assembly's Special Political Committee, the Commissioner-General said that the situation confronting the refugees in the Gaza Strip was especially acute; despite some improvements, much remained to be done to provide to the camps paved roads, sewage and waste water disposal. However, increased support was being given to UNRWA in the form of special contributions from a number of Governments, EC, UNDP and NGOs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 E by recorded vote.

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2792 C (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 E of 23 November 1976, 32/90 C of 13 December 1977, 33/112 E of 18 December 1978, 34/52 F of 23 November 1979, 35/13 F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 A of 16 December 1981, 37/120 E of 16 December 1982, 38/83 E of 15 December 1983, 39/99 E of 14 December 1984, 40/165 E of 16 December 1985 and 41/69 E of 3 December 1986,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987, and the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip away from the homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

Alarmed by the reports received from the Commissioner-General that the Israeli occupying authorities, in contravention of Israel's obligation under international law, persist in their policy of demolishing shelters occupied by refugee families,

Emphasizing the statement contained in paragraph 17 of the report of the Commissioner-General, which reads as follows:

"The people of the Gaza Strip, two thirds of whom are refugees, still face the special difficulties to which I drew attention in my last report",

1. Reiterates strongly its demand that Israel desist from the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and from the destruction of their shelters;

2. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to address the acute situation of the Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and accordingly to extend all the services of the Agency to those refugees;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-third session, on Israel's compliance with paragraph 1 above.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Costa Rica, Liberia, Zaire.

In Israel's view, the text-an example of manoeuvring by certain Arab countries to promote an anti-Israel campaign in the United Nations—displayed a certain degree of cynicism towards the refugees living in the Gaza Strip and disregarded their basic housing needs: it was unreasonable to call on Israel to refrain from providing the refugees with more decent accommodations than in the camps when those concerned were eager to move and continued to retain all the privileges connected with their refugee status.

Austria said it appreciated the slightly different wording of paragraph 2 as compared to the previous year's text; however, it believed that the request it contained implied that the means available to UNRWA and the need to provide services to the Palestine refugees elsewhere would be taken into account. Finland's vote was to express support for the UNRWA services to the refugees in the Gaza Strip on the understanding that all the services would be extended within existing resources. Sweden interpreted paragraph 1 as affirming Israel's obligation to refrain from transferring and resettling refugees against their will.

Palestine refugees in the West Bank

In an August 1987 report,(44) the Secretary-General noted that, of the 373,586 refugees in the West Bank registered with UNRWA, 278,762 lived outside camps. He also stated that, in reply to his request for information on steps taken to implement the 1986 General Assembly resolution(45) calling again on Israel to refrain from removing and resettling refugees in the West Bank, Israel wrote on 8 July 1987 that its position had been set out previously.(46)

The UNRWA Commissioner-General's position remained as set out in previous reports by the Secretary-General: he would not object if refugees in the camps voluntarily sought better housing, whether by improving existing housing or moving into new housing; he would strongly object, however, if any pressure or coercion were used to make refugees move or comply with any scheme. As pointed out in earlier reports, refugees would not lose eligibility for UNRWA services by the mere fact of relocation outside the camps.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December 1987, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/69 J by recorded vote.

Palestine refugees in the West Bank

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 38/83 J of 15 December 1983, 39/99 J of 14 December 1984, 40/165 J of 16 December 1985 and 41/69 J of 3 December 1986,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987,

Alarmed also by Israel's plans to remove and resettle the Palestine refugees of the West Bank and to destroy their camps,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the West Bank away from the homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

1. Calls once again upon Israel to abandon those plans and to refrain from any action that leads to the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the West Bank and from the destruction of their camps;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to keep the matter under close supervision and to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-third session, on any developments regarding this matter.

General Assembly resolution 42/69 J

2 December 1987 Meeting 89 145-2-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/42/780) by recorded vote (121-2-4), 4 November (meeting 15); 9-nation draft (A/SPC/42/L.15); agenda item 79.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 42nd session: SPC 8-13, 15; plenary 89.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Liberia, Zaire.

Israel stated that the text made a demand contrary to fundamental human consideration, in disregard of the refugees' basic housing needs. The United States could not support the sweeping injunction restraining Israel from removing and resettling refugees, which effectively excluded implementation of any programme seeking to improve the refugees' quality of life pending an overall political settlement.

Sweden interpreted paragraph 1 as affirming Israel's obligation to refrain from transferring and resettling refugees against their will; it further noted that the definite article preceding the words "Palestine refugees" in the fifth preambular paragraph could be misleading.

Chapter X

Other political questions

Other political questions considered by the General Assembly during 1987 included issues relating to information, the South Atlantic, Antarctica and atomic radiation.

The Assembly requested that the 1987 recommendations of the Committee on Information be implemented within existing resources (resolution 42/162 A) and called on Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other groups to contribute to the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (42/162 B).

The Assembly called on all States to co-operate in the promotion of the South Atlantic as a zone of peace (42/16). It appealed to the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to exclude South Africa from their meetings (42/46 A) and called on them to impose a moratorium on the negotiations to establish a minerals regime on Antarctica until such time as all members of the international community could participate fully in such negotiations (42/46 B). It requested the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation to continue its work to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation (42/67).

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: public information. Africa: South Africa and apartheid—public information. Middle East: Palestine question—public information. General questions relating to colonial countries: the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries—information dissemination. Namibia: information dissemination. Other administrative and management questions: information systems and computers.

Information

The public information activities of the United Nations continued to focus on two broad objectives: publicizing the Organization's work and goals, and enhancing the information capacities of developing countries. Those activities were carried out by the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the Secretariat, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Joint United Nations Information Committee.

Information policies and activities also were considered by the General Assembly's Committee on Information. The Committee held in New York an organizational session on 16 March 1987 and its ninth session from 15 June to 2 July.⁽¹⁾ The Committee submitted 48 recommendations to the Assembly, most of which related to the operations of DPI.

Mass communication

UNESCO activities. Pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,^(*) the Director-General of UNESCO submitted in September 1987 a report⁽³⁾ examining two issues: implementation of the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC)—a project aimed at helping developing countries to build communication infrastructure—and the social, economic and cultural effects of the accelerated development of communication technologies.

At its eighth session (Paris, 20-26 January), the IPDC Intergovernmental Council approved contributions from the IPDC Special Account to 69 projects, including 37 current projects that required additional funding. Five of them were interregional, 26 regional and 38 national.

Africa received allocations of $726,000; Latin America and the Caribbean, $690,000; Asia and the Pacific, $395,500; the Arab States, $340,500; Europe, $30,000; and interregional projects, $88,000. Among the projects in Africa were communication training and career development for women journalists, a feasibility study for the development of a television industry and establishment of a subregional mass communication school for the Gambia, Liberia and Sierra Leone. Projects in Latin America and the Caribbean included creating an Information Service for the Evaluation of Communication Technologies, strengthening of satellite news exchange among television stations in the Caribbean and modernization of television training facilities at the Caribbean Institute of Mass Communication. Asia and the Pacific received allocations for, among other things, training in book publishing, broadcasting and print journalism, while the Arab States received allocations for a centre in Algeria for exchanges of news and features for television, and for the establishment of a network of documentation centres on communication and research policies. In Europe, Albania received an allocation to modernize its national news agency.

Interregional activities included a project by the International Radio Television University for the acquisition of equipment to improve programme exchanges in developing countries, the creation of an interregional network of women journalists, and a periodic report on the state of communication in the world.

During the year, UNESCO continued its collaborative research into the impact of new communication technologies. Twenty-four interdisciplinary studies of such technologies and their impact were in progress in all regions of the world, co-ordinated by nine research institutes or non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The studies included an assessment of the impact of direct broadcasting satellites in the Maghreb region of Africa and in various Asian countries, popular media and the new communication technologies in the Caribbean and the impact of new technologies on the endogenous cultures of Africa.

Activities of the Committee on Information. At its 1987 session,⁽¹⁾ the Committee on Information focused its attention on three substantive questions: the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order; examination of United Nations public information policies and activities in the light of the evolution of international relations; and an evaluation and follow-up to the efforts made and the progress achieved by the United Nations system in the field of information and communications. The Committee made 48 recommendations on these topics.

The Committee recommended that the United Nations system and the developed countries be urged to co-operate with the developing countries towards strengthening their information and communication infrastructures. It also stressed the need to promote access by developing countries to communication technologies, including satellites, electronic information systems, informatics and other advanced information and communication facilities.

It recommended that DPI and UNESCO explore additional ways of co-operating with the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries, with those agencies' new economic information project (Eco-Pool) and with the regional news agencies of developing countries. Further, the Committee recommended that DPI co-operate with the developing countries in the audio-visual area, especially with the Broadcasting Organization of the Non-Aligned Countries.

The recommendations were approved by the Assembly in resolution 42/162 A.

Communications. Three communications on questions relating to information were transmitted in 1987 to the Secretary-General by Zimbabwe on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

In a Plan of Action adopted by an Extraordinary Ministerial Conference of Non-Aligned Countries on South-South Co-operation (Pyongyang, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, 9-13 June),⁽⁴⁾ the Ministers recognized that the new technological revolution had reshaped the pattern of communication and stressed the need for developing countries to harness high technology. They called for co-operative multilateral scientific and technological projects among non-aligned and other developing countries in the areas of informatics and telecommunications.

The final documents of the Second Conference of the Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 10-12 June)⁽⁵⁾ included the Declaration of the Conference and an Appeal to the Mass Media, as well as resolutions in support of UNESCO, on the use of regional satellite communications systems, on the reduction of communication tariffs, on the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries, on the use of radio as an instrument of dissemination of hostile broadcasts against the non-aligned countries and in support of the mass media in southern Africa.

In its final communique, the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly's 1987 session (New York, 5-7 October)⁽⁶⁾ reaffirmed the need to intensify co-operation so as to establish a new world information and communication order based on the free and balanced flow of information and to remove disparities in communication capabilities.
